The Bill goes on to state that this assistance will only go to those workers who lose their work as a result of a permanent reduction in the work-force. Again, who interprets what is a permanent reduction in the work-force? Sometimes it is very difficult to determine whether a lay-off or a reduction will be permanent. It could go on for months or even years and someone might consider that it is not permanent. That must be clarified. There must be a definition that will oblige the Government to enter into assistance programs if certain conditions prevail.

This Bill is a move in the right direction. It is too little, too late, but we will support it at this stage so that it will be sent to committee where it can be studied by either the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration or by a legislative committee. We want to hear testimony on the Bill. We want to hear from experts who know something about the subject.

We believe that the Government should have had a more comprehensive approach to the problems of older workers, as suggested in the many reports to which I have referred.

Workers over the age of 50 have a lot to offer. They have a lot of skills and a lot of experience. They have stability. Many of them want to continue to work but when they are laid off from a job they have had for 20 or 30 years, they need counselling, retraining and they need placement assistance. Very often they want to phase down their work from full time into part-time work. This Bill does nothing about that.

While the Bill addresses somewhat the needs of those who have to retire or want to retire because they are burned out, we believe it is not enough.

In conclusion, this is another example of the Government's approach to these matters, and another example of its broken promises. It took more than three years, February, 1986, to May, 1989, to bring in this legislation. It is another example of its laissez-faire approach to a problem that requires serious attention and a comprehensive solution. We intend to study this legislation very closely when it gets to committee.

Mr. Speller: Mr. Speaker, I want to commend my colleague for an excellent evaluation of the Bill.

Let me bring to his attention a situation in my riding, in relation to the lay-off at Lundy Steel in the town of Dunnville.

I have received letters from older workers, and I want to read part of a letter from a worker who is 58 years old. He worked there for 31 years. He said: "I have supported the community, paid taxes, paid into UIC, paid union dues all these years and now it seems there is no aid for me. The company has never been easy to negotiate with for a contract, and consequently the monthly pension we have in this area is $480".

He goes on to say that he understands that some provinces have POWAs and he keeps hearing about CSTEC programs, but these are for younger people.

He asked what programs are available for older workers in Ontario, specifically in the Dunnville area. I have met with people from Lundy Steel. Quite frankly, I have been unable to find any programs that are presently available to them. In fact, when I read this Bill I cannot see anything that states the people in Dunnville, Ontario, will be covered by this legislation.

Specifically, it states that the Minister may enter into agreements with provincial Governments. It would seem to me that if the Minister was serious about providing a program for older workers he would bring in a program that is mandatory across the board.

Why does the Member think the Government would go through this charade? Why does he believe it would provide a program that will do nothing to help the people of Lundy Steel in Dunnville, because the Government has not yet negotiated a program with the Ontario Government?

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleague is absolutely correct that there is no assurance that the community he referred to will be helped by the Bill. According to the Bill, the Minister may enter into agreements with provincial Governments, employer organizations or employee organizations or financial institutions in different parts of the country, but it is very discretionary. There is no assurance that the people with the most serious problems will be cared for, and we do not even know to what level. The Bill leaves a lot up in the air.

The budget announced so far for the program is $125 million for approximately five years. That means approximately $25 million a year is to be spread to ten provinces and two Territories.

Furthermore, while eight provinces have said they intend to participate in the program, only three have signed agreements. I believe the Hon. Member's province so far has not gone into this program at all.

These are the matters about which we are very concerned. This looks like a good program on paper, but when one reads the Bill one does not see very much. We support the Bill at this stage, so that it can go to committee where we can hear experts on the Bill and perhaps people from communities like Dunnville, who can tell us about a real life experience with older worker unemployment. We can hear from those people and get some suggestions about how we can improve the Bill.

It is my hope that the committee which deals with the Bill will amend it to make it better, and send it back to the House so we can support it with greater enthusiasm.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in today's debate on Bill C–8, an Act to amend the Department of Labour Act. It basically provides older workers adjustment assistance.

I rise in this debate as a Member who represents a number of citizens who should have been the recipients of such programs and on behalf of others who may have to rely on them in the future, assuming my Province of Ontario and the federal Government reach an agreement. I am thinking of the people of Atikokan, a small former mining community of about 6,000. In 1979, Atikokan's whole industry was shut down and 1,100 men were thrown out of work with no other opportunities within that community for them to use their skills. Many of those people, particularly those in the 45 to 65 year old age group were for a number of reasons unable to replace their employment.

These men were open–pit miners. The bodies of many of them, particularly of the older men, had been abused by the kind of work they did and the equipment they operated. While they were able to continue their employment with the companies for which they worked, either Steep Rock or Caland, their skills were not marketable. No one wanted to knowingly acquire the workers' compensation nightmares of the previous employers. Neither would they choose a man of 50 if a man of 25 is available.

Second, these men lived in a community in which they had lived for 25 or more years. They had brought up families and owned homes in this community. It would have been a great expense for them to relocate should they have found employment elsewhere. They got no help from the federal Government of the day.

A co–ordinating committee was set up and civil servants came to talk to these people. Studies were done, but the bottom line was that they got no help.

Even today, there are still men younger than 65 who have no gainful employment. The community in which they live held no other opportunities for them. They could not move to underground mines within the northwest because that required different skills. There were attempts made to give them retraining opportunities, but by and large, all society did was raise their level of expectations only to pull the rug out from underneath them.

These people live in a community that has a current unemployment rate of 25 per cent. An employment study was done of half the community two years ago. Ironically, it is only in the smaller communities that one can do a really good sampling to get a sense of unemployment levels. This study showed that one out of every two residents of Atikokan who was available or willing to work held employment during that year. A large percentage of the unemployed were in the older worker category.

These people could be helped by this legislation if they were to be laid off today. However, they will not be helped because it happened too long ago. We have to learn from that experience.

All of us who come from resource–based communities know that a mine begins to die the day the first shovel is put in the ground. The resources are finite, unlike the forestry sector which at least in theory is renewable, although the federal Government and many provincial Governments have not done what they should have done to protect those resources.

In the forestry based communities, we will also see massive lay–offs because the industry has been cutting trees farther and farther away from the pulp and paper mills or sawmills. There will come a point when lay–offs will have to be made, and we are seeing that point in northwestern Ontario these days. It is partly because of what I was talking about, the greater distance between the mill and the harvesting area. Therefore the cost of production goes up. As well, it is as a result of the policies of the Government which has given in to the United States on the softwood lumber dispute. We are the victims of that, the communities that are losing employment. The people of these communities will have to rely on the $1,100 a month maximum allowable under this program to replace decent union wages of $15 to $20 per hour, wages that could provide a man and a woman with the income to sustain a family in a northern community. Unfortunately, we will need a lot of access to this program.

I read in some of the documents I have that at the most, 5,000 people will be served by this program. Without much difficulty, I could find 5,000 men and women in northwestern Ontario who would need this program. Their employment will be taken away from them because of economic conditions, because of the high dollar and because of their inability to compete with the Americans or on the world market. They will lose their jobs because of government policy, because of a shortage of wood fibre or because the mineral body has run out. This may not happen tomorrow. It might not happen for 10, 15 or 20 years, but the great Hemlo mine will disappear and with it the boom of Marathon and surrounding communities. Those people will also be in need of a program. By the time that ore body runs out, those workers will be eligible for the Older Worker Adjustment Program.

I can find those 5,000 workers today just in northwestern Ontario. I can go to my own community of Thunder Bay and look at those who work in the grain industry in which in excess of 1,200 men and women were laid off. Add to that the people who work the boats on the Great Lakes and the people who work in the ports downstream from Thunder Bay. Many of them are in that particular age group. Will they be helped by this program? I am not so sure. It does not deal with cyclical lay-offs. It does not deal with the reality of a number of grain-handlers in Thunder Bay who have not worked enough weeks in the last two or three years to allow them to continue to receive unemployment insurance benefits. The bureaucrats will say that they cannot be eligible for this program because they are not permanently laid off. The reality is that there will be fewer and fewer permanent employees working in those elevators from here on in.

Yes, there is a seniority provision that pretty well guarantees that those who have worked there long enough will retain their jobs, although we are seeing people with 15 and 20 years seniority being laid off now. Yes, they will get called back, but there are others in the community who will not be called back, and that is also something with which we have to deal.

• (1700)

The Government of Canada has known the needs of older workers for a number of years. I am sure that in opposition the Conservatives demanded programs of the Liberals to provide protection for older workers. I know we did, because we recognized that on one hand we had an ageing population. On the other hand we recognized the unfortunate realities of how employers view older men and women as being less of a positive investment than a younger worker. We recognized that employers did not look at the quality that they would be getting. Quite frankly, many of these older workers have a lot to contribute, have a lot of knowledge and have a lot of experience.

In societies of days gone past we would look to those older workers for leadership—not just those below 65 but those well above 65—in terms of where we should be going from here, our teachers. Today we tend to put them on the slag heap and leave them to rot.

In addition to dealing with the specific lay-off problems, what we as a society should be doing is making it possible for all our people to afford to live in today's society. As part of that we should make sure that more and more people can afford to retire earlier than they do today. Yes, we have a modest step forward with the changes to the Canada Pension Plan providing for the early out option. Some people are taking advantage of it. I know that between 1984 and 1988 a number of people in the riding of Thunder Bay—Atikokan, and in fact northwestern Ontario, took advantage of it. That did help. That was a form of older worker adjustment.

People of Atikokan took advantage of it. Those who had been laid off and could find no other work were able to get some level of income. I think that we as a society have to work for the day when people can afford to leave the workforce at 55 or at 60 so that in turn those employment opportunities are available for our younger people. We must ensure that they have the income level that is appropriate for their needs and allows them to continue on as full participants in society in a volunteer capacity or whatever capacity they choose.

I do not want to go on much longer. I know that my other colleagues want to participate today. I believe it is important that we do provide these services. It is also important that we provide even more than what we are providing in this legislation. I would encourage if not demand the Province of Ontario and the Government of Canada to complete their negotiations very quickly so that the older workers of Ontario can share in these benefits, meagre as they are.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your attention. I look forward with interest to the remarks of my colleagues and completion of all studies of this Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On questions or comments, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, I appreciated the Hon. Member's remarks, but I would like to ask him a question. As he knows, this Bill is being introduced at a time when the unemployment rate is on the rise again. In the last month's statistics, the unemployment rate went from 7.5 per cent to 7.8 per cent, with over one million Canadians unemployed. The rate in all four Atlantic provinces is over 10 per cent. Despite the fact that the Ontario rate is low, in northern Ontario and in eastern Ontario it is quite high. In British Columbia, it is very high. This is also at a time when unemployment insurance is being cut back and when regional development is being cut back.

We see in this Bill terminology such as "the Minister may" enter into agreements with respect to helping older workers. It is a discretionary sort of provision. It does not define what is a permanent reduction in the workforce. It says that periodic assistance payments will be given, but it does not say what they will be.

In view of what looks like a worsening situation—and by the way the Conference Board of Canada said that the Budget was sort of a recession producing Budget; that it was going to make things worse and that the rate of unemployment was going to increase—does the Hon. Member think that this kind of discretionary legislation where the Minister may or may not and where things are not defined will really give assurance to the workers in Canada who are facing rising unemployment rates, restructuring, mergers and so on that this is going to be of any great help to them? When they read this Bill, will they get any great assurance out of it?

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Member for his questions. With this Government we have seen the reality of discretion. It tends to err not on the side of caution but seems to go to great lengths to take away from workers. I would prefer to see this legislation being very specific and saying "shall".

The Member talks about the unemployment rates. The part of Ontario that I come from is not doing as well as the Golden Horseshoe. I think that could be said for most of northern Ontario. There are large lay-offs and more to come. We will feel the brunt of the recession much more quickly than other parts of Ontario.

Certainly this Government could have been doing a lot more in terms of beefing up unemployment insurance, instead of cutting it back to match the American system. It could have been changing the unemployment insurance structure, for example. In northwestern Ontario we are all lumped together; every place from White River to the Manitoba border has one unemployment rate. Therefore, under the variable entrance requirements everybody in that area needs the same number of weeks to qualify or requalify.

What has been happening is that we will have a Dryden and a Thunder Bay doing all right and an Atikokan not doing very well with a 25 per cent unemployment rate. Yet, it is penalized because it is grouped in with northwestern Ontario. I believe it is time that the Government recognized its responsibility to ensure that we talk about local unemployment rates instead of regional unemployment rates. Even if we have to stay with the variable entrance requirements, as opposed as to the philosophy that a job is a job is a job and if you do not have one, you do not have one, you do not have one and therefore should have the same kind of access to the system, at the very least it should be moving in a direction to make the system more fair in terms of the delivery of services.

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, the plight of older workers is a very unique one. Although they are the group that experiences perhaps the lowest unemployment levels, it has a much harder time adjusting to joblessness than any other.

For instance, older workers had a much harder time than any other group of workers in recovering from jobs loss during the recession of the early 1980s. In fact, they still have not completely adjusted to the economic downturn that all Canadians experienced at that time.

In a November 1987 study Statistics Canada reports that the unemployment rate among Canadians over 55 continues to rise. They give up and stop looking for work all together, for instance among 55 to 64 year old persons. The labour participation rate has been going down very marginally, whereas with the over-all population it has been going up significantly.

The average length of unemployment also tells a sad story about older workers. Their length of unemployment is 66 per cent higher than workers unemployed between the ages of 15 and 54. We must remember that that 15 to 54 age group includes unemployed youth who, as we all know, are double the national rate.

It took the Government two and one-half years to set up the program for older worker adjustment. This is an alternative program to the Labour Adjustment Benefit Program set up by the Liberal Government in the early 1980s. The Government saw fit to let the Labour Adjustment Benefit Program for older workers lapse, to leave older workers unemployed in this economy, without a program to provide any assistance, for two and one-half years.

Certainly the Liberal Party supports the concept of the Bill, particularly because of the void that now exists with the lapsing of this program. The area of concern to Liberals is the fact that the program is not broad enough to meet the needs of older worker adjustment, particularly in light of the Free Trade Agreement. Its scope is too limited. Only a small number of older workers will benefit. It is the only program specifically designed for older workers when a range and a variety of programs are needed. Older workers with fewer years of working experience are not included.

Workers would have to exhaust severance pay and unemployment insurance benefits without finding a job before being eligible. We should remember that this is in a period of their lives when many workers are still carrying a mortgage, supporting a family, or perhaps trying to send one or two children to university. It is not simply the older worker who is negatively affected; it is the entire family and the future of that family.

We are critical of the rather arbitrary assessment criteria for receipt of benefits on a case by case basis, for instance, opportunities for alternative economic prospects, prospects of re-employment, training and mobility. Just how will they be applied and who will they leave out? The maximum benefits are inadequate for many workers at a stage in life and family life at which they find themselves.

The programs are not yet ironclad with the provinces. There is still some concern about the program. Ontario is concerned about the exhaustion of benefits. It wants a more comprehensive approach. It thinks it may do the job in a strong economy now, but with the Budget we have all heard the predictions of recession on the way. What then will happen to older workers?

We have an additional concern since the Budget. Although eight of the provinces have signed an agreement, we have a situation now where those provinces will not be receiving cost sharing programs of revenue transfers from the federal Government which they had expected in this year's Budget. One has to wonder about their ability now to meet commitments they have made under this program. An additional concern is the ability of businesses to use it as a convenient downsizing cushion to supersede their responsibility for their employees.

Various participants at the Liberal task force public forum on free trade worker adjustment representing business, labour and social agencies all said that more and better adjustment for older workers is essential, especially in light of massive lay-offs resulting from the Free Trade Agreement and particularly affecting vulnerable older workers. There is no question that the situation for older workers will only worsen as the 21st century approaches.

The Department of Employment and Immigration predicts that the Canadian labour force is ageing rapidly. The number of members aged 45 to 64 is expected to increase by almost 2 million to 6.7 million before the year 2001. The report by the Advisory Council on Adjustment, known as the de Grandpré report, states that older workers once unemployed take longer to obtain another job. It is interesting to note that the de Grandpré report itself recognizes the limitations of this program before the House today, saying that it is the only form of assistance available specifically for older workers. There is no similar support program for those older workers who do not fall under the category of major permanent lay-offs and who have not necessarily been working for 15 of the previous 20 years.

The de Grandpré report recommended that the Government examine the special needs of older workers and determine which measures they require to help them re-enter the workforce. Although it is not enough, a study of this kind would be one step toward long-term planning for long-term older worker adjustment solutions.

The council's report was a very innocuous assessment of the problems Canadians will be facing over the years to come, as a result of the trade agreement.

However, the section on older workers in the report is only two pages of a 171-page document. No concrete recommendations are made other than the suggested study mentioned earlier with this minimal recommendation. I urge the Government to look at this as an inadequate first step toward what will need to be done for older workers in the years to come. The process must be stepped up. Adjustment assistance is needed now.

The contribution plan with the provinces must be clearly laid out and the now vague guidelines clarified. This will make it easier for the provinces to take part and share the responsibility for older worker adjustment. The onus is on the federal Government to make this happen. The onus is also on the Government to follow its own guidelines on dealing with specific groups in Canada. Benefits under this program end at age 65.

The second report of the Standing Committee on Human Rights and the Status of Ageing concurred with the witnesses who appeared before it. The committee condemned mandatory retirement as an obvious instance of age discrimination, wasteful of potentially productive labour and, more pointedly, wasteful of capacities for judgment developed during long experience in the workforce. As well, it was condemned as psychologically destructive and in some cases financially destructive of those still capable of wanting and needing to continue working.

Given the committee's recommendations that the federal and provincial Governments undertake the complete abolition of mandatory retirement with the sole exception of a limited class of occupations directly involving public safety, the fact that benefits through this program are available up to the age of 65 is not in keeping with fair and humane policies for older workers as stated in the committee's recommendations.

This morning's edition of The Star reported that Metro Toronto's only retraining centre for older workers and immigrants is losing the federal Government's annual funding of $600,000. It is appalling to note that this centre has been used by the federal Government's adjustment service to help workers who lose their jobs as a result of plant closing.

Is this a sign of things to come? It is surely a sign of the Government's commitment to older worker and immigrant adjustment programs. With an inadequate program before the House, surely this is not the time to stifle community initiatives to deal with the problems of older workers. The success rate of the centre was something about which the staff members should be proud. It helped 511 workers since it opened in 1987 and statistics show as few as 14 per cent of them are still looking for work. The Government admits that there is no similar program targeting older workers and immigrants in the Toronto area.

I ask members of the Government how they can live with themselves when worth-while programs like these are being slashed in such a heartless and thoughtless manner. The callousness of this move is only an inkling of colder and harder times to come.

I want to spend a few minutes talking about the federal Government's responsibility as a major employer in this country in terms of older workers. The Government over the last few years has cajoled, bribed and virtually forced retirements of workers at least ten years before they were ready to retire, to their economic disadvantage in many cases and to the loss to the Government and to the public of Canada of many years of worth-while and wise experience gained through serving the Canadian public.

The Worker Adjustment Program put forward by the Government for its own employees is not a model that we should be encouraging the private sector to adopt. We have a unique opportunity as an employer, and again as the largest employer in Canada, to develop models within the workplace for the adjustment of workers on a continual basis.

We have the Bill before us. It is a relief after two and a half years finally to have something that deals with older workers and with the severe problems they face when they are laid off or forced out of work at a late stage in life.

I wish I could say that the kind, nice and great sounding words in the Budget talking about human resource development in this country were really recognized in the Bill before the House. I do not think they are. I think it proves again that we are dealing with empty rhetoric. When it comes to real people in real need of our help to keep their skills fresh and to be able to participate in the workforce, it just is not there or it is there inadequately.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, it was perhaps divine coincidence that I went to my office about 15 minutes ago and found on my desk a news release about Phil Latulippe, a 70 year old gentleman who is going to run across Canada. One can appreciate the abilities of older people. He is 70 years of age. I wonder what the 55 to 64 year old group can do.

For a moment I would like to talk about the antithesis of older workers. I think we often look at the two extremes of society: the plight of our young and the plight of our old. I look at my community of Sault St. Marie. We have lost 2,000 young people aged 18 to 21 in the past four years. I think that plight is quite similar for the old people, except they cannot escape to another community to seek out work as readily as the young, although both situations are probably as deplorable.

On this side of the House, we have noted that only the Minister himself has decided to speak on this particular issue. We are wondering if the Government is not terribly proud of its own legislation. It makes one wonder whether we will see it on television in the form of ads to introduce it and convince us that it is good for all Canadians.

With the young, they are either too young or inexperienced. With the old, they are too old or too set in their ways, untrainable, and perhaps too experienced.

We talk about the Free Trade Agreement. We have words like "rationalization". Just yesterday, we had a new word, "reprofiling". There is also "deregularization". These words are damaging. It is resulting in closures of long established plants, laying off people who were doing specialized labour for years and years.

These people become unwanted. In fact, I suppose they almost become outcasts, in their own minds, untouchable by the new hustling, bustling industry as introduced by this Government through the Free Trade Agreement. It is exacerbated by the Free Trade Agreement, which even the Government recognized. It suggested that displacement through free trade would be a fact of life. This legislation will perhaps help to alleviate the situation, but it is much too little to address the problem truly.

We have an ageing society, but as we age, I think we are doing it more gracefully, more energetically, more exuberantly in our zest for life. Older people are not prepared to be put out to pasture but want to be an integral part of our workforce. They do not want to be treated as an afterthought. They want to continue to be a true force in society and part of the workforce.

This particular legislation makes reference to major lay-offs only. It leads one to think about what happens to the group of two, the group of five, or the group of ten lay-offs in plants. These people will suffer the very same consequence as individuals or groups of individuals of 500 strong. They will suffer the very same consequence, but apparently their concerns will not be addressed with this legislation.

It mentions the word "proportion" as a test for qualifying for this particular legislation. What would the proportion be? Two out of one hundred to qualify? Fifty per cent? I am sure it is going to be at the upper levels of percentages before these people will qualify.

Is it universal? Is it sacred trust? It certainly will not be universal. It will be as universal as Old Age Security and family allowance, but at least those are being dismantled on a piece by piece approach. This program, which should be universal, is not. At least it makes no pretence to be.

One really has to wonder about the consultation process. If one puts a figure of $125 million up for grabs, the amount is set and then one negotiates the program around the amount. May I suggest that this is a backward approach. One should put the program in place to approach the problem and then set a figure to it.

I suppose the number of applications for this particular program will have to be divided by three, regardless of the need for the program.

A real surprise to me when I asked which Minister across the floor would be introducing this legislation was that it proved to be a man renowned as the ex-president of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities. The Minister was loud in his cry and lobbied very hard for the 1,200-plus municipalities of this country to have the Government introduce the "big fix", as it is called, which would produce 60,000 jobs in five years for young, middle aged and old people, and would bring the infrastructure of this country back into place.

I am sure he must have been saddened today when he introduced this legislation and compared it to what he previously talked about and espoused.

In 1984 the allotment was $50 million. In 1989 it is $42 million. This is obviously the antithesism of what should be in place. There is less money now and the population is ageing very quickly. In fact, the amount should be much greater.

We on this side of the House in the New Democratic Party agree with the principle of this bill. We encourage its speedy passage. We are very concerned that if we do not pass it quickly the Government might take it back, which would be very consistent with its actions as of late.

It is rather unfortunate that the senior population of this country basically has to beg for every crumb, every hand-out, and has to lobby very diligently. Indeed, it has become a very strong and effective lobby group with government. Let us get on with it. It is not exemplary or acceptable, but it is a great improvement over what we have.

Mr. David D. Stupich (Nanaimo—Cowichan): Mr. Speaker, in the northern part of my constituency some 40 years ago a major industry was closing down. One coal mine after another ceased operating, and there was great concern in that area about the economic future of the Nanaimo—Ladysmith—Chemainus part of the riding. By good luck more than by planning, I would think, it happened that we had another resource, the forest resource, and a major pulp mill was opened up just as the last of the coal mines was closing. There was no program such as this available to the workers at that time, but fortunately the new industry took on older and younger workers alike. It had an almost insatiable appetite for workers. There was no problem getting a job when that pulp mill was open. Over the course of time, it built up into a plant that employed over 2,000 people. That is one of the pulp mills in the riding which I now represent. There is another pulp and paper mill, innumerable sawmills and many logging operations, all connected with the forest industry and all providing employment, which has been good.

However, in the course of the last 10 years, while the amount of product has been increasing—the log production has increased, the lumber production has increased, pulp and paper has increased—yet there has been an increase in lay-offs in the forest industry at all levels.

For example, I mentioned the Harmac Pulp Mill at Nanaimo, which together with the salt plant, employed over 2,100 people at one time. It is now getting along with approximately half that number of people and producing more product. But it was a gradual thing that happened over the last 10 plus years.

For example, a sawmill at Uboe that at one time employed approximately 1,000 people currently employs less than 20 per cent of that number. Yet the production of lumber has increased. This is a pattern that has developed all over the riding where there has not been a major lay-off, at least not major in terms of what is happening in Canada as a whole. When a sawmill in a community closes down totally, it is major for that community. Even if it only a partial lay-off, it is certainly major for the families involved in that particular lay-off.

That is where this legislation, as much as we welcome it, does not deal with the kind of problem that we have had in the past 10 years, particularly in Nanaimo—Cowichan. It would have dealt with the situation 40 years ago when the coal mines closed down in total, but it does not deal with a gradual loss of employment. It is not a major thing in terms of what has happened in Canada. It is major, as I say, in some communities. It is certainly major in some families.

There was one forest company that was in the habit in the last 10 years of phoning me every two years or so and inviting me to have lunch with some of the directors of the company. After this happened two or three times, I knew that that it was bad news. They wanted to invite me to lunch so they could tell me how many men were going to be laid off in this particular community. I would hear it from them first, and would then be ready for the repercussions from the community and from the workers. I never once received a luncheon engagement invitation when they were providing more employment. It was always to inform me of people being laid off. It was a regular pattern, and over the last 10 years in particular.

My concern with this legislation is that it does not help people when a plant is closing down totally. Perhaps it will help when it is closing down in part, when it is a relatively large plant that is important to the people, important to the community. That is where this legislation falls down. What we need, as others have pointed out before me, is a broader and more universal approach to the needs of older workers. Some of these companies have a very good community spirit. They are trying to do what they can under this situation. They try to provide alternative employment or get the workers to move to other areas. But it is much easier for a younger worker to move to a new community knowing that he has a certain number of years to work in that occupation than it is for an older person. Older people are invited to take early retirement, and sometimes attractive packages can be made available to them which they accept. But it is the workers caught between, the ones not quite old enough for early retirement, yet too old to be as flexible in their movement as are the younger ones, that need assistance.

It is not enough to talk of retraining for them. What are they going to be retrained for in those communities? We cannot really have everybody leaving Vancouver Island looking for work and coming to the Toronto area in Ontario. There has been a lot of that. A lot of trades people, a lot of workers of all kinds have left Vancouver Island over the last 10 years to come to Ontario where things are booming. But that is not an alternative for older workers. Retraining for jobs that do not exist is not terribly appealing either. There has to be a more comprehensive approach, a way of finding alternative job opportunities that do not now exist in those communities but could exist with proper planning. Therefore we do need the broader more universal approach.

We need the earnings benefit based formula that was available under the Labour Adjustment Benefits Program. It paid two-thirds of the individual's earnings, which is not enough. Certainly when they were getting full earnings, they were not getting any more than they were spending. But to cut them back and to say it is less than two-thirds is just not good enough. We need legislative guarantees of provincial and employer participation. I told you of an example where an employer was prepared to participate, but it depended upon the goodwill of that employer. That is something that you can count on perhaps when times are good, when the employer is doing very well. But if the employer is not doing very well, they are not so anxious to voluntarily participate in this kind of program.

We need the establishment of a job protection board to evaluate lay-offs, share adequate notice and ensure that the terms of POWA are negotiated before the lay-off takes effect.

In general there is warning and time to prepare, but we need protection to make sure that this happens. We cannot always depend upon the good grace of the employer.

We need a levy grant system to ensure that the employers contribute to training. There are employers who do that and some that do not. But we want legislative protection for these older workers who have contributed the best part of their working lives and are not yet old enough for early retirement, if that is available, and yet too old to uproot and move to new communities and new job opportunities.

We support the legislation but we argue that it does not go far enough to look after today's problems for the older workers, certainly not in my riding.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a point of order, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the three Parties. I understand that the Official Opposition, the Liberal Party, probably has one more speaker that they would wish to have on this legislation, and I understand that the NDP would have either two or three more speakers to speak to this particular piece of legislation.

We have had discussions among the House Leaders and among the Parties, and I think you will find there is unanimous consent for this motion, Mr. Speaker.

That this House continue to sit beyond 6 o'clock p.m., for the purpose of concluding consideration of the second reading motion of Bill C-8, and that the sitting be then suspended to the call of the Chair to await certain messages from the Senate and for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to Bill C-14.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that the motion just moved is the result of consultations among the Parties. I would be happy to agree that leave be given to hear the motion and that it be accepted. With respect to the number of speakers, as far as I am aware, we have one more speaker. The individual in question is taking part in the committee hearing and may not be able to be back in time. If that is the case, he will obviously speak at a subsequent stage of the debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member from Thunder Bay—Atikokan on the same point of order.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I just want to confirm that, yes, there have been consultations and the approach is acceptable. I am not sure of the number of additional speakers that we have, but we certainly appreciate the co-operation of the government side in terms of allowing the debate to continue. We look forward to its conclusion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary have the unanimous consent to move his motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Sault St. Marie (Mr. Butland).

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault St. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I understand that some of my comments and criticisms earlier in my speech were inappropriate, and it was agreed upon by government Members to allow us to speak, and they agreed not to speak. So I apologize for those comments.

Mr. James: That takes care of the problem.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon).

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, as I think back to my last term as a Member of Parliament, one of the most difficult situations I faced as an MP was having groups of workers come before me from one of the long-time plants in our city, Champion Spark Plugs. During the deepest part of the recession in the early 1980s, those workers had access to the Labour Adjustment Benefits Program. That program was ultimately taken away from them in 1983. The consequence was that when the next major lay-off hit Champion Spark Plug, many older workers who were in precisely the same situation as people who had faced lay-offs two years previously, or in some cases one and a half years previously, found that they were not eligible for benefits at the same time as their colleagues had already started to receive such benefits under LAB.

That told me two things, Mr. Speaker. First, it was very important to replace the Labour Adjustment Benefits Program with a program which covered all workers, potentially at least, who would suffer significant lay-offs. It also told me that it was crucial to have flexibility built into this program, whatever came to replace LAB.

Therefore, I was very pleased in the last Parliament when, in 1986, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced in his Budget that a program for older worker adjustment was going to be established. It was something which was overdue. It was something that we certainly felt would cover the problems of workers such as those at Champion Spark Plug, and workers in other parts of the auto industry in my constituency and in adjoining constituencies in the Windsor area.

It has been with a growing sense of anger and impatience that I have waited to see this legislation actually come before the House of Commons. Again and again myself, and our employment critic at that time, kept asking questions of the Government as to when was it actually going to bring in the legislation to put into effect a promise which it had made, a solid commitment that it had made.

Again and again the answer came back to us that the Government was in the final process of coming to an agreement with the provinces. It was in the final process of doing so in 1986. It was still in the final process of doing so at the beginning of 1987. As we came close to the end of 1987, it was still in the process of coming to agreement on this plan.

Finally, we came to 1988 and our questions started to become somewhat more strident and somewhat more emotional. By that stage the LAB Program itself had run out, and it was not possible for any worker across the country, regardless of the sector of the economy within which that worker had been employed, for him or her to get access to adjustment benefits. Despite the fact that LAB had run out, we still heard precisely the same answer.

I am pleased to tell the Hon. Member that we are at the final stages of negotiation. Finally, we have the Bill in front of us, and still the Government is in the final stages of negotiation with two of the provinces. This demonstrates to me that there has not been a sense of urgency and deep human concern about this problem.

There are many of us who represent communities in which this issue is not some sort of abstraction, but a very cruel reality. Individuals came to our offices and met with us in large meetings and, in a number of cases, those individuals also met with representatives from the Ministry of Labour. They pushed very hard for something to take place. Yet again and again they had to be told that we had done everything that we could to get this legislation put before the House, and it still had not appeared.

In fact, it took the emergence of a pre-election situation for the Government to come to an agreement with the Province of Quebec, and on the basis of that agreement announced that this program was finally going to go into effect. In fact, it is not going into effect across the country because agreement has not yet been reached with the Provinces of Ontario or British Columbia. I suspect that those two provinces, together with the Province of Quebec, experience the bulk of these lay-offs.

I do not want to go on castigating the Government for neglect, because it has finally brought a Bill before us. However, the point is that this Bill which it is before us today, when negotiations are still incomplete, could have been brought before us two years ago when negotiations were still incomplete. At that stage, it would have done two things.

First, it would have applied pressure on the provinces to get agreements established with the federal Government. Second, it would have told workers throughout the country that something was going to take place very quickly. There is simply no question that, when one talks to older workers in my constituency and, I am sure, in constituencies throughout the country, that we are talking about a very serious structural problem which needs a response of urgent concern from the Government. It is simply much more difficult for older workers to make the transition to new employment. It is much more difficult for an older worker to persuade a company to let him or her into that pension plan when it is built on the basis of someone building up 30 years of seniority. It is much more difficult to persuade a company that, if training or special skills are required, once those skills are learned the five or six years remaining before retirement will be as valuable to that company as the time it takes for a 20 or 25 year old who comes into the company to build up those specialized skills and work for another 30 to 35 years.

There are two other points about this Bill that concern me greatly, as I think back to what the Government kept telling us in the last Parliament. First, the Government said it was absolutely crucial to have a system to help all older workers and not only those in specific industries, as was the case with Labour Adjustment Benefits Program. That was the Government's reason for shifting to this new approach. Yet this Bill sets up some quite arbitrary criteria. At this stage we do not even know what will be the regulations setting out these criteria, but they will require that the older worker who is helped be subject to a major lay-off, be in an area where there is a great deal of unemployment, and in a community where it is hard to shift to another job. That does not meet the commitment the Government made to see that all older workers would have access to this program.

It does not make any difference to an older worker who is facing transitional problems whether he was one of 150 workers coming from Champion Spark Plug or one of three workers coming from a small plant in Essex in my riding. He or she will still face precisely the same difficulty and precisely the same problems. I cannot, for the life of me, see the logic of the differentiation being set up in this Bill whereby the Government will help some older workers and will not help others. When this Bill goes to committee I very much hope that when we hear the testimony of older workers who have experienced what it is like to face this situation, it will persuade the Government to make amendments and change its approach.

Finally, let me deal with one part of the Bill which disturbs me a great deal. Pursuant to this legislation, the Government is setting up an economic program which is being delivered not by the Government, not by the public authorities who are responsible for it, but by private enterprise. As our critic for privatization, I must say that this is the ultimate cop-out on the part of the public authority. This program has some serious faults yet the Government is abdicating entirely its responsibility in administering it. If someone complains to the deposit institution which will administer this program that they have not received their cheque for the month, the deposit institution will not feel responsible. It will be able to say that it is the Government's fault. If the person in turn goes to his or her Member of Parliament to complain that he or she does not have the cheque, the Department of Labour will be able to say that it is the fault of the deposit institution.

A program that is the responsibility of the Government will not be run by the Government, by public servants or by people whose commitment is to serve the workers, but by people whose fundamental commitment is to make money, quite rightly, as a profit-making institution. I think this is an extremely dangerous precedent. This approach is extremely dangerous for older workers.

I hope the Government will listen to the people who will testify in front of the legislative committee on this Bill and take very seriously the complaints that I have already received with respect to the decision to put the administration of a public program into the hands of private, profit-making institutions.

On behalf of hundreds and probably thousands of older workers in my community and communities across the country, while it is good that this legislation will be passed in principle, let us get it right in detail. Let us make sure that in the legislative committee the points I talked about today, and other points that have been raised by my colleague will be taken into consideration before the Bill comes back to us for final passage.

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I think it is very appropriate that I should have the opportunity to address a few comments to the House on Bill C-8, an Act to amend the Department of Labour Act.

One of the reasons it is appropriate is that I worked for some 15 years in a plant that was designated under the ILAP, which later became the MILAP, the Modified Industry and Labour Adjustment Program, as it was applied to the workers of my constituency. That occurred following the 1984 general election.

I was the Member of Parliament for Kootenay West from 1980 to 1984, and one of the last things I was able to do as a Member before I had my four years off for good behaviour was to get the Central Kootenay Regional District designated under the ILAP program at approximately the same time as was the constituency of Nanaimo—Alberni. Those were the first two constituencies in British Columbia, and I believe in western Canada, to be designated under that program.

I was still an employee of Kootenay Forest Products sawmill in Nelson during my first term as a Member of Parliament, and up until about three weeks after the September 1984 election. About two weeks after that election, I reported back to work and two weeks later, the mill was permanently closed. We became the first industrial operation in British Columbia to be so designated and in which senior employees were able to benefit from the terms of the labour adjustment program.

Because of the actions of the Government that was elected in September of 1984, we were also the last industrial operation in British Columbia, and I believe in western Canada, to benefit from that program. I suppose that is a new version of the saying, the first shall be last and the last shall be first. In our case, that was exactly the situation.

I was some ten years too young to directly benefit from the program. It felt good to know that some of my activities and those of the former Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Alberni, Ted Miller, who along with me fought for several years to see that western resource industries would be able to benefit from the terms of the ILAP program were finally successful. I was able to see some of my long-standing fellow employees benefit from that program. While I was happy to see my fellow employees being recipients of that program, I was more than a little surprised to learn that they would be the last people in western Canada so to benefit.

When I read this Bill, an Act to amend the Department of Labour Act, I realize that it has been three years since the Government made a commitment to introduce this legislation. I have come to realize what the term "Progressive Conservative" really means, especially considering that under the former labour adjustment program, the cost was some $50 million a year, and under this program, it is to be $42 million a year, five years later. That is inverse progress. I suppose that is progress in a conservative way or even worse than a conservative way. Perhaps there is some logic to the way the Government operates after all.

The answers that I gather my colleagues received between 1984 and 1988 were that the program was under consideration, under active consideration or would be coming soon. I could not help but think of a phrase that is used in a British television program entitled Yes, Minister. Some Hon. Members who have had the good fortune to watch that program from time to time will remember certain definitions. "Under consideration" means they have lost the file. "Under active consideration" means they have lost it but they are looking for it. They lost it and they looked for it and it took them three years to put this together.

We welcome the fact that retroactively, we will receive some benefits, for a limited number of people, even though they are not as good. At least it is some progress over the vacuum there was during that three or four year period. But what did it take the Government three years to produce? I would like to read the Bill into the record so that those who read Hansard will know exactly what it took three year' work to accomplish. The Act to amend the Department of Labour Act reads:

> Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:
> 1. The Department of Labour Act is amended by adding thereto the following section:
> "5 (1) Subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, the Minister may enter into agreements with provincial governments, employers, employer organizations, employees, employee organizations, financial institutions or such other persons or entities as the Minister considers appropriate, for the purpose of making provision for periodic income assistance payments to
> (a) former employees at an establishment whose employment has been terminated at any time since December 31, 1987, by reason of a permanent reduction in the work force engaged in an identifiable economic activity at the establishment and who, at the time of the termination, were fifty-five years of age or more but less than sixty-five years of age; or
> (b) former employees at an establishment in an industry that was a designated industry on August 12, 1986 whose employment has been terminated, at any time since the industry ceased to be a designated industry, by reason of a permanent reduction in the work force engaged in an identifiable economic activity at the establishment and who, at the time of termination, were fifty-five years of age or more but less than sixty-five years of age or, in the case of a reduction taking effect before October 6, 1988, were persons less than sixty-five years of age the sum of whose age and length of service in designated industries was not less than eighty years.
> (2) In paragraph (1)(b), "designated industry" means an industry designated pursuant to section 3 of the Labour Adjustments Benefits Act".

That is all. That is what took three years of consideration, active consideration and study. Even so, there is only agreement in principle, not in any detailed way, of eight of the ten provinces, and the two richest provinces, Ontario and British Columbia, still have not even agreed in principle to this little Bill.

No wonder the Government has problems measuring productivity. I would not want to call this an elephant. It is more like a mouse, but it had the gestation period of an elephant or something very close to it. It really makes me wonder what the Department of Labour has been doing in the last three to four years. Is this the kind of priority that working people across Canada can expect from a Progressive Conservative Government? Is this the definition of urgency that we can expect from the Government? Is this what older working Canadians can expect from the Government? It does boggle the mind.

Admittedly, the previous labour adjustment program only applied to certain industries; textiles, footwear, tanning and clothing. Not only in the ridings of British Columbia but in other ridings in central and eastern Canada were we able to get specific area designations as well so that senior workers could benefit from the provisions of that program. It is not quite correct to say that only people in those industries were previously able to benefit.

Another problem with this Bill is that there is no provision for the individual older worker displaced in non-major lay-offs. There is to be a committee composed of two representatives of provincial Departments of Labour and two from the federal Department of Labour who will decide what is a major lay-off. There is no yardstick, no definition to guide them in their decision. For those of us who have had to deal over some period of time with various levels of government bureaucracy, it is a matter of some concern to see a very loose definition just left hanging for a few officials to make the actual determination.

The other problem with this program is that if we take the estimated average benefit for employees who will come under its terms at approximately $10,000, the amount of funding will provide benefits to only some 5,000 workers. Given the number of dislocations, and even the Government that sold the so-called Free Trade Agreement, and admitted that there would be major dislocations in industries right across Canada, 5,000 is a drop in the bucket. The Government is placing that kind of a limit on a program which is to benefit those senior Canadians in the workforce who really have no other option but to find some other means of income other than working for wages or salaries. Many of them will come out of blue collar industries, and I am sure that many Members are aware their numbers have been declining very rapidly over the last few years.

In the Province of British Columbia alone, in the period from 1982 to approximately 1986, the membership in my own union, the IWA, dropped from some 50,000 to some 25,000 or 30,000. That kind of decline in blue collar industry is still occurring.

In that industry or in the mining and smelting industry, the nature of the work, the occupational hazards and working environment is such that, by the time the workers are 45 or 50 if they get displaced, the chances of finding another occupation are very few, especially with other companies undergoing similar kinds of reductions and rationalizations. When companies hire they want to hire the most productive and healthy workers. If the workers have had injuries, and almost anyone who has worked in the forest industry or the mining or smelting industry for 20 or 25 years has accumulated quite a few of them, they are not in the best shape to be able to start off in a new industry or new company.

I can recall one example of a fellow that was just a few months into eligibility for the program in my hometown of Nelson. He was of Italian origin. He had only a Grade III education in Italy before coming to this country. He had put over 20 years into that particular company and into the forest industry. Even at that time in order to qualify, he had to go back to school and they wanted to teach him English. Certainly for the kind of work he had been doing he had a fairly good command of the language but only in terms of oral skills. He did not read or write English. He was going to have a great deal of difficulty. At that point in his life, having not been in a school since the third grade, to go in and start learning English just seemed like a total waste to him and the environment was entirely foreign to him. He came to me almost in tears, not only over that but for some other problems he was having because of the major cut in income. He explained that he felt like a bloody fool. This is a person who normally would be full of pride and full of vigour and certainly able to do the type of job that he had been doing but there were no more of those kinds of jobs around.

I heard at least one Member on the other side, I suppose it was the Minister, suggest that, "Well, the employment situation is much brighter now. We won't have the same kind of problems as we had during the early 1980s."

I would like to say that the unemployment picture in my own constituency of Kootenay West—Revelstoke in the period of the last four or five months has gone up in its two employment regions from either 10 per cent or 12 per cent, to 16 per cent, 17 per cent or 19 per cent. The resource recession or depression that occurred back in the early 1980s, as far as we are concerned in my part of British Columbia, is happening all over again.

We are likely to see even more of this kind of dislocation. We thought at one time we had seen the last of this at least for our working lifetime. It certainly is not a very cheering scenario for any of us.

I am glad that however long it has taken it, and however little is here, the Government has finally given birth to this amendment. It will see that those senior workers in various parts of the country and in various industries, at least up to 5,000 of them in a year will get some help. I hope it is the beginning of a stronger and larger commitment, and that we as a Parliament, representing all Parties, will begin to give a higher priority to those who have produced the wealth of this country, particularly in the more higher risk industries when dislocation or unemployment befalls them.

Back in the 1930s, Mr. Speaker, there was a song written about older workers who had been cast aside. I would just like to read it into the record:

> They put horses to pasture, they feed them on hay,
> Even machines get retired some day.
> The bosses get pensions when their days are through,
> Fat pensions for them, brother, nothing for you
> Who will take care of you,
> How'll you get by
> When you're too old to work and too young to die?

That was written some 50 years ago. Unfortunately, it describes a situation that is still all too familiar to many workers, particularly in heavy industry and in those regions of Canada that are still suffering from serious and aggravated proportions of unemployment.

It is well past time that we get our priorities straight and ensure that we provide decent retirement incomes at an appropriate age. Even Italy, in high risk industries has caught up and surpassed us immeasurably in the last few years, because people in heavy and high risk industries are able automatically to go on pensions at age 55. They do not have to wait for a closure or a lay-off. Their society has recognized that heavy industry takes its toll. We ought to begin realizing that too.

It is with some measure of satisfaction that I at least see a few more colleagues in this House of Commons who have spent a good part of their lifetime in heavy industry. When I was here previously I believe that there were two of us. Now I think we have been multiplied at least threefold or fourfold but it is still less than a dozen.

Perhaps we may over the next few months be able to implant some sense of urgency, some sense of priority to those people who spend so much of their working lives behind gates or behind barbed wire, who are not seen by the public and whose problems are not recognized by the public because of that.

If you are a retail clerk, or a bank teller, or a teacher, people tend to see you where you work. They can identify a little bit with your problems. For industrial workers, that is not the way it is. It is industrial workers who are being increasingly laid off and cast aside as we go through the various dislocations that our economy is undergoing.

I am glad that the Government has laboured, even if it has only produced a mouse. It is a welcome mouse and we will support it.

Mr. Robert D. Nault (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I rise today at this late date to address the legislation before this House, that is, Bill C-8, an Act to amend the Department of Labour Act, as it relates to the program for older worker adjustment.

We on this side of the House have been waiting for this Bill for a long time. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced this program in February of 1986. It has taken this Government over three years to get this piece of legislation before the House. In the early 1970s, the Liberal Government recognized the need for policies which would protect older workers facing lay-offs in designated industries. In 1982, all policies affecting older workers were amalgamated and the Labour Adjustment Benefits Act was passed.

When the Conservative Government announced its intention to create a new program for older worker adjustment in February 1986, it put an end to the old LAB Program. Older workers in this country have been waiting for over three years for this new program and many have suffered undue hardships as a result of delays in getting this legislation before the House.

The Government is increasingly dependent upon the provinces. We have seen program after program shifted to the provinces. The program for older worker adjustments is no different. In fact, this program is contingent on the province's participation. This is of great concern to me, given that agreements have not yet been signed with the Provinces of Ontario and British Columbia.

There are several questions which need to be answered. At what stage are the negotiations with these two provinces? Is there a reluctance on the part of Ontario and British Columbia to participate and, if so, why? What will happen to the older workers of Ontario and British Columbia if these provinces refuse to participate? Will the older workers be left out in the cold? Will this mean there will be no assistance for older workers in Ontario and British Columbia?

Workers of all ages suffered job losses in the recession of the early 1980s, but older workers have not benefited from the recovery. A study in November 1987 by Statistics Canada shows that even though young workers had returned to the workplace in 1986, the unemployment rate among Canadians over 55 years of age continued to rise. Older workers have a harder time in getting back into the labour force, and they collect unemployment insurance benefits longer than any other group.

In 1988 the average duration of unemployment for those aged 45 and over was 26 weeks compared to 12 weeks for young people. I am relieved that the Government saw fit to include a retroactive clause in this legislation which will assist older workers who fell between the cracks after the Government cancelled the LAB Program. While the legislation is long overdue this retroactive clause is most welcome.

Let us briefly look at the budget or this new program. A former Liberal Government introduced the Labour Adjustment Benefit Program in the early 1980s with a budget of $125.6 million over three years. This new program will be given a budget of $125 million over five years, cost shared with the provinces. This Government is not taking into account the annual rate of inflation or the rise in the cost of living. It has not considered the large number of older workers who will qualify under this program.

The principle behind this legislation is good. However, the program itself needs some fine tuning. I hope once it gets to committee stage Members will recommend certain changes to the program which will make it fair and equitable for all older workers.

As it stands now major permanent lay-offs will be assessed on a case by case basis. While there are some loosely worded criteria in the program outline provided by the Department such as disruption in a region, the size of a lay-off and the number of older workers affected, there are no specifics on what constitutes a major lay-off. No specifics on what kind of disruption in a region must occur and no specifics on how many older workers must be affected before qualifying for benefits under this program.

These questions must be addressed at the committee stage. There have been significant lay-offs in the softwood lumber industry in northern Ontario as a result of the imposition of the 15 per cent export tax on softwood lumber products. At the moment the softwood lumber industry in northern Ontario cannot benefit from regional development programs offered by FEDNOR. I sincerely hope that older workers who have been laid off in the softwood lumber industry will benefit from assistance under the program for older worker adjustment. I hope these workers will not be given the same treatment their employers have been given.

This legislation clearly states that the federal contribution will be contingent on a provincial financial contribution. This worries me and members of my Party a great deal, given that agreements with Ontario and British Columbia have yet to be signed. The program for older worker adjustment refers to lay-offs and the employer participating in the program. Again, what is not clear in this program is whether or not an employer laying off workers due to a plant closure will qualify under the terms of this program.

The Department's briefing on the program's financing states, and I quote: "Maximum feasible financial participation will be sought from the employer". I fail to see how employers can be asked for a maximum feasible financial contribution when this Government has already forced employers and employees to carry the burden of unemployment insurance premiums. The Government continues to shift the burden of financial responsibility to the provinces and to the employers. We do not know if older workers affected by mergers and takeovers will qualify under the terms of this program. We do not know if older workers laid off due to severe cut-backs in the VIA Rail subsidy will qualify for benefits under this program, nor do we know if older workers who have lost their jobs due to the Free Trade Agreement will receive benefits.

These are questions which must be addressed when the legislation moves to the committee stage. There are many ambiguities in this piece of legislation. Will older workers who are receiving benefits under this program and who find work after they are in the program have to requalify to at least 750 hours of work annually, should they be laid off after two or three years? Or, will they be reinstated for benefits once their unemployment insurance runs out? These are questions which really must be answered.

Finally, Hon. Members on this side of the House support the basic concepts of the program for older worker adjustment. However, we will ensure that this new program provides more assistance to older workers than the old LAB Program. There are many unanswered questions in this Bill, and we in the Liberal Party will want these questions answered. This Government must realize the hardships faced by older workers, and it must protect them from these hardships.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver East on a point of order.

Ms. Mitchell: In support of this Bill to establish a new and separate Department of Multiculturalism and Citizenship, it is appropriate at this point to have clarification from the government House Leader, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis), as to whether we might also have reconsideration of the request that has been made by many ethno-cultural groups, and which was a commitment, together with the establishment of the Department of Multiculturalism and Citizenship, to have a separate Standing Committee on Multiculturalism.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Vancouver East has raised a point which she may wish to pursue at another time.

PETITIONS

SUPPORT FOR THE PORT OF CHURCHILL

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, first I note that in yesterday's petition the Hansard reporter thought that one of the communities in Saskatchewan was Borneo. I want to indicate that Borneo is not a community in Saskatchewan, it is a country elsewhere in the world. When I indicated there were a number of communities outside the Churchill riding that supported the Port of Churchill, I did not include the country of Borneo.

However, today I have another 500 people who support the Port of Churchill. They are from the communities of Churchill, The Pas, Flin Flon, Cumberland House which is in Saskatchewan, Rose Valley, Saskatchewan, Wanless, Norway House, Cross Lake, McDowell, Prince Albert, and White Fox, Saskatchewan. Other communities include Thompson, Lynn Lake, Swan River, Waterhen, Meadow Portage, Creighton, Saskatchewan, Veregin, Saskatchewan, Pelly, Saskatchewan, Moose Lake, Cormorant, Pukatawagan, Grand Rapids, Dauphin, Garland and Winnipeg. There are no signatures from Borneo.

The people from all those different communities who have signed this petition call upon the federal Government to develop the obvious potential of Canada's only inland seaport. They call upon the House of Commons to direct the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board to ensure that, at the very least, 3 per cent of Canada's annual grain shipments be shipped through the Port of Churchill and that the Government aggressively pursue additional ways to utilize this important seaport to ship exports other than grain.

CALL FOR REVISION OF EXTRADITION LAWS

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present petitions which have been certified by the Clerk pursuant to Standing Order 36. This petition, which contains 1,150 signatures, calls upon the Government of Canada to revise the extradition laws which would allow the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) to order the extradition of fugitives either immediately or after they have been dealt with fully by the Canadian penal system. It is another group of hundreds of thousands of petitions on this subject that will be presented in the House in the course of the next month.

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36, which has been certified by the Clerk. This petition is in addition to those that have been submitted by my colleague, the Member for Vancouver North (Mr. Cook).

My petition also contains 1,150 signatures and calls upon the Government to revise the extradition laws, which would then allow the Minister of Justice to order the extradition of fugitives immediately or after they have been dealt with fully by the Canadian penal system.

These petitioners urge the Government to recognize that Canada cannot be considered a safe haven for murderers of citizens in other jurisdictions who seek refuge in this country from their own laws.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all questions stand?

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Today is the deadline for the Government to answer these questions for which we have requested a 45-day response.

We introduced a number of questions in the House on April 3. There are a fair number of questions standing in the name of a number of New Democrats and a couple of Liberals. There is a requirement, as part of the process of parliamentary reform, that the Government respond to these questions within 45 days. It has not done so.

The whole idea of parliamentary reform is that Members could insist upon getting answers to various specific questions. The first day that the House sat, after not sitting for four full months, we put down a number of questions that are very important to our Members and to Canadians right across the country. Here we are, 45 days later, and the Parliamentary Secretary has the nerve to get up and not answer any of those questions.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that we have given enough notice. I have risen a number of times when the Parliamentary Secretary has risen and said that we want answers to these questions.

The Parliamentary Secretary is one of those people who was instrumental in working for parliamentary reform. Even with all the talk of government cut-backs, it has enough people in its various Departments to answer specific questions.

Question No. 1 by the Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Althouse) deals with western diversification projects in the Province of Saskatchewan. That is something on which the Government should be able to provide information. Question No. 3, also in the name of the Member for Mackenzie, asks about contributions toward crop and drought payments. Again, that is something about which the Government has the information. We are not talking about something that requires a lot research, or about something that is new. The Government has that information.

If it were a complicated issue, and something that required a lot of research, I can understand the Government having a problem answering the questions within 45 days. However, for the sake of parliamentary reform, I believe that since we indicated when we put these questions on the Order Paper on April 3 that we wanted the information within 45 days, the Parliamentary Secretary and the Ministers, since there are 40 of them, could provide the information to the House.

I am almost tempted to go through each of the questions at this point and indicate that since we asked for the information we should have it. Question No. 8 by the Member for Regina—Lumsden (Mr. Benjamin) deals with foreign-owned corporations and tax deductions. Again, that is information the Government already has.

Mr. Speaker: I will not intervene in the Hon. Member's representation, but I do want to know something. Standing Order 39(5) states:

> A Member may request that the Ministry respond to a specific question within forty-five days by so indicating when filing his or her question.

What I need to know from the Hon. Member is that on the matter to which he is referring did the Member in fact request that the Minister respond within 45 days?

Mr. Murphy: Yes, Mr. Speaker. That is exactly the point I am making. Following the rules and the indication you have made with regard to the Standing Order, when we submitted these questions on April 3 as soon as the House of Commons sat, we indicated that we wanted answers to each and every one of the questions I referred to so far and the ones to which I will refer in a few seconds.

The point is that we did our homework. We were ready when the House finally sat. We asked a number of questions that we believe are important to our constituents and important to Canadians.

I do not understand why the Government has answered so few questions to date. Whether it is Ms. Black, Mr. Kristiansen, Mr. Gardiner, Mr. Young, Mr. Nystrom, Mr. Taylor, Mr. Whittaker, both Mr. Skellys, Mr. Riis, Mr. Angus, Mr. Fulton, Mr. Funk, Mr. Butland, Mr. Axworthy, Mr. Fisher, Mr. Karpoff, Mr. de Jong, Mr. Fulton, Mr. Taylor—

An Hon. Member: More, more!

Mr. Murphy: There is more. There are a number by Mr. Rodriguez, Mr. Gardiner—all of those people asked that their questions be responded to within 45 days. Mr. Speaker, I believe that it is not just a matter of requesting. We have a standing order which says that is something the Government should provide to the House of Commons. They know the rules. The Parliamentary Secretary that got up earlier knows the rules because he is part of the committee that called for parliamentary reform. I demand that these questions be answered. They have already broken so many rules in this House. This is a rule that does not cause them that much of a problem but it is a situation where we want information. We in the Opposition have a right to get that information. I believe that they are in contempt of Parliament by not providing that information.

• (1120)

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his intervention and to assure him that we on this side are very much concerned about parliamentary reform and have played an active role in the reforms that have such an impact on this House.

I do want to apologize to the Member for the delay in some of the answers coming. As he knows, we answered some earlier this week and we will continue to do that. We will do everything within our power to make sure that those questions are answered as quickly as possible.

Mr. Murphy: On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to belabour the point since we have to deal with the borrowing authority legislation, but it is important. My problem with the answer that the House has been given by the Parliamentary Secretary is that the questions can be answered. We are not talking about complicated information. We are talking about information that already exists in the various Departments. It is not a matter of "We will provide it when we can". The information is there. The attitude of the Government in the various Departments is to ignore Parliament and to ignore the Members of Parliament. The information is in the Departments. We have a right to get that information Whether it is a government Member or an opposition Member, we have asked for it. We have a right to receive it within 45 days. There is absolutely no excuse for not giving us the information.

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary Northeast): Mr. Speaker, I would like to emphasize what has been said. I think it is essential for the Government to respond within 45 days to a question that is put on the Order Paper.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kindy: I think we brought in parliamentary reform so that Members could really contribute to the process. Thank you.

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): We are paying the civil service to get the answers.

Mr. Speaker: This is not the first time that this matter has been brought to the attention of the Chair. I said some time ago that whatever the rule may be—and I will refer to the rule in a moment—there is no power given under the rule to the Chair to order the Government to produce an answer within 45 days. I want that clearly understood, not just by Hon. Members but by anybody who may be watching or listening.

The second thing I want to point out is that if one looks carefully at Standing Order 39 which is headed "Written Questions" and comes to paragraph 5, this is exactly what it says:

> A Member may request that the Ministry respond to a specific question within forty-five days by so indicating when filing his or question.

I draw to the attention of Hon. Members and to all others who are interested that "a Member may request". As I read that, that is not a right. It is a request. There is a distinction.

Having said that, there is no doubt in my mind that the intention of the Reform Committee in bringing about this rule was that when written questions are put forward, it is the better part of virtue for the Government to reply within 45 days if the Member has asked for that.

An Hon. Member just said something about who has to prepare the returns. Ultimately, under our system, of course the Minister is responsible. But I hope that somebody notices that the Speaker has observed that people who are in the service of the public, who have to bring these answers back, ought to take a look at this rule and realize that it does not just hang there without any purpose.

As far as I am concerned, I do not think it is appropriate that the time of this House has to be taken up by Members having to get up and ask why somebody has not given them the answer.

The Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) made it quite clear. If there is a case where something is so complicated that it is impossible for the Government to give the answer within 45 days, I think Hon. Members would be patient and understanding if the Parliamentary Secretary or Minister got up and said that that was the dilemma they found themselves in.

For the most part, there is no real reason in the world why these answers cannot be given. As I say, I cannot order them to be given because I do not have the power. But I do ask that those who are asked to prepare these answers take a look at this rule and realize that when they do not get the answer back to their Minister in time, they are putting all of us through a lot of difficulty and taking up the time of the House, because undoubtedly there will be more points of order raised on exactly this issue.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Short of the authority to order somebody to do anything, I cannot make my own feelings on this matter any more clear than I have just done.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am asking for your indulgence. I recognize the very learned ruling that Your Honour has just made, but one of the restrictions that Members are under as a result of the reform, that included the rule to which Your Honour just referred, is one that limited the number of questions that each Member could have on the Order Paper at any one time. We are only permitted four.

Perhaps Your Honour, to ameliorate the situation for Members, could turn a blind eye to that part of the rule if the Government is going to be permitted to turn a blind eye to the request of Members that the question be answered within 45 days. I am wondering if Your Honour would consider that.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Milliken) is quarrelling with the fact that the rule says that only four questions can be on the Order Paper at any one time and suggests that the Speaker should turn a blind eye to it. The Speaker cannot turn a blind eye to any rule because I am bound to interpret the rules as all other Members have asked me to do.

I made it very clear in what I said a few minutes ago that I cannot order the Government to produce those documents or the answers within 45 days, but I say to the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands that nor can I deliberately turn a blind eye to the rules as they are sent to me to enforce.

If the Hon. Member is not satisfied with that particular rule, there are various ways to enter into discussions with colleagues and to change the rule. If the rule is changed, then I of course will accept that and be bound by it. After all, the rules are here because generally speaking the majority of Members of Parliament from all Parties have agreed to them. These are the rules that are made by all of us in this place to conduct our proceedings, so these rules change from time to time.

The Hon. Member may have a suggestion for change. I would invite him to speak with some of his colleagues on both the government side and in the New Democratic Party so that perhaps a change could be made. Of course, if the change is made, then I will enforce it as I am bound to enforce the rules as they presently stand.

POINT OF ORDER

CONSIDERATION OF CHANGE TO COMMITTEE ON COMMUNICATIONS, CULTURE, CITIZENSHIP AND MULTICULTURALISM

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, on another point of order, if I may. During the introduction of a Bill by the Hon. Minister for Multiculturalism, there was a suggestion made by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) with respect to the citizenship and multiculturalism aspect of the present Committee on Communications, Culture, Citizenship and Multiculturalism.

I just want to respond very briefly to say that during the months of January to March, there was discussion among the House vis-à-vis the number of committees and streamlining them in an effort to have them work more efficiently and save money. We had excellent discussion with the Opposition Parties.

We streamlined them. We went to our various caucuses and discussed it with our Members, and the final list of committees was unanimously agreed to by this House.

Since that time, there have been submissions made with respect to only one committee. The submissions have been to split off the Citizenship and Multiculturalism from Communications, Culture, Citizenship and Multiculturalism. I just want to indicate, since the Hon. Member did make the suggestion, that we are giving it serious consideration and we hope to be able to comment publicly in the very near future.

Mr. Speaker: I probably erred on the side of generosity in allowing the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) to make the point of order, however, it seemed to me a legitimate issue. I want to thank the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) for responding.

I also want to say something which I should have said a few minutes ago and that is to the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper). The Chair does appreciate the very conciliatory way in which the Hon. Member responded to the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) on this difficult question of trying to provide answers within 45 days. I want the Hon. Member to know that the Chair does very much appreciate his courtesy.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1989-90

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, May 16, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

An Hon. Member: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Churchill. Debate.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker,the Opposition is having a good day so far, and I understand that later today the Government is going to support the Private Members' Motion standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Okanagan–Similkameen–Merritt (Mr. Whittaker).

An Hon. Member: Don't push your luck.

Mr. Murphy: I thought perhaps with the mood that is in the House and the fact that the Opposition usually gets its way on everything that perhaps we could defeat the borrowing authority at the same time.

An Hon. Member: Perhaps you would want to demonstrate generosity for a change from your side.

Mr. Murphy: Yes, and unfortunately I have only 10 minutes to speak on this very important matter. Besides that, unfortunately if we force the vote we do not get to have the vote until Tuesday by which time I suspect the Government will go back to its usual attitude on these matters.

An Hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, having the opportunity to get up and speak on the borrowing authority does give me the opportunity to be concerned with the general direction of this Government and the program that it has put forward in its Budget, because of course the whole nature of the borrowing authority is to provide the money that it needs to fund Government programs.

I come from the Province of Manitoba, as you well know, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday we had a delegation in town from Portage la Prairie, who are very concerned with the fact that their base is being closed. It is a base which is used to train pilots. It is an initial stage base that gives the initial training and also gives training for helicopter pilots. I understand from the representatives of the community of Portage la Prairie that when they met with the Minister and met with the Conservative caucus that the response they had was: "Well, we can privatize the training of military pilots." I thought that this is probably the most ironic situation in the world.

The Government of Canada says that it is committed to defence, committed to NATO and committed to enlarging our role, but for some reason it believes that the training of military pilots can be done by the private sector. The Government somehow believes that it can close the community of Portage la Prairie because that is what it is going to be doing by its Budget. The Government has no concept of how it affects that community. It has no concept of what it does to the school division, what it does to the community of Portage la Prairie, and what it does to the rural municipality of Portage la Prairie where a number of those people live and work. It has absolutely no concept of what it has done in its Budget to that area.

Although I am not someone who has promoted NATO in the past and I am certainly not going to promote it today, we have always recognized in the New Democratic Party the proper role for defence. One of the things that we have emphasized is a Canadian role and that we have an obligation within Canada. What we see from the Government is that it has exactly the opposite approach. It is closing bases right across this country. It has no concern for the communities that are affected. We know that it is not made in the best interest of Canadians as a whole. That is one of the concerns that I have as a Manitoban getting up and speaking on the borrowing authority.

Another concern which is very close to me, and I have raised the issue for three days in a row now in the House of Commons, is the Port of Churchill. I indicated today in Petitions that we have support from all communities in northern Manitoba on the Port of Churchill. Yesterday in my petition in the House of Commons, I indicated we had support from right across the country on the Port of Churchill and that we had petitions signed right from St. John's to Victoria supporting the use of the Port of Churchill.

We were told on Monday by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard), that there was no guarantee that there would be any grain whatsoever coming through the Port of Churchill this year.

It is ironic that the provincial Minister of Transportation in Manitoba knew this a week ago. He was told by the federal Minister of Transport that this was the case, and he did not make that information public. He did not tell the people of Churchill. He did not tell the people of The Pas who work on the rail lines. He did not tell any of the residents of Manitoba that our only Arctic seaport was unlikely to receive any grain this year.

I found the provincial Government had absolutely no concern with what was happening in our province. It was so concerned with the fact that it had a minority Government that it did not dare tell the people of Manitoba what its federal Conservative counterparts were doing. It is not just the federal Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker, it is the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer), the Member of the Cabinet from Manitoba. He is the Minister who is ultimately responsible for grain shipments. He is a Member of Parliament from Manitoba and he has not stood up in this House and announced what is happening. He has not gone to his own province. He has not gone to the farmers within his own province and told them what is happening. It again indicates the lack of any sense of Cabinet responsibility. He is the Minister in charge. He is the Minister from Manitoba and he has not told Manitobans what is happening with a seaport which our pioneers set up many years ago.

This is a seaport which has always had grain coming from the middle part of Saskatchewan because that is where our grain comes from for the Port of Churchill.

I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the Members of the New Democratic Party from Prince Albert—Churchill River (Mr. Funk) and the three Members from Saskatoon and the Members from MacKenzie all realize the value of the Port of Churchill. They have stood up in our caucus and supported the Port of Churchill. I find it amazing that the Saskatchewan Members in the Conservative caucus have not stood up and also spoken in favour of the Port of Churchill.

We are trying to expand trade. Here we are talking about the need to export more grain in this country. We are letting one of our few ports close without the Government showing any concern whatsoever, without the provincial Government in Manitoba even bothering to tell the people of Manitoba what had happened, without the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds telling this House what is happening.

We are not going to let this issue rest. We are going to continue this issue as we have every day so far. We are going to have a community delegation coming and meeting with the Minister of Transport and the Minister in charge of the grains and oilseeds on June 8. I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, we will not let this issue rest. It is an issue which is very important for all of the prairie provinces. It is very important in terms of our own destiny as a country. It is ironic, to use that word yet again, that other nations, particularly the Russians, are increasing their use of Arctic seaports at the very time that this Government is doing absolutely nothing to promote the North. The Government has given in on the Polar 8. It says the project is just delayed because they cannot figure out which end of the ship is the front as opposed to the rear. The Government has given up on any sense of Arctic sovereignty. Now the Government is willing to let our only Arctic seaport not have any grain whatever this year. I find that completely unacceptable.

You indicated that I only had two minutes left, Mr. Speaker. I have to tell you that there are a number of other concerns that Manitobans have outside of the closing of the base in Portage la Prairie and the fact that the Government will not make a commitment to the Port of Churchill. We are also concerned about a number of other things indicated in the Budget. For example, the Established Programs Financing is being limited by this Budget. This is the fourth move by a Government, whether the previous Liberal Government or this Conservative Government, to restrict financing for post-secondary education and health. We have had four different bills over the last seven years introduced in this House of Commons to restrict funding. Obviously, in each case it further restricts funding by the federal Government for these very important areas and that is completely unacceptable.

We know, whether it is in Ontario, Québec, Manitoba, or right across this country, that we have a problem with health services. Each time a Government introduces another piece of legislation which restricts federal contributions, it hurts each and every Canadian who needs health care. Each and every time the Government further restricts its role for post-secondary education that means another child in this country will not get the education that he or she wants. That is the net effect of restricting this money.

The Government's argument is: "Well, we cannot have it open-ended". It never has been open-ended. As I said, the Government of the day has had four different Bills in the House of Commons in the last seven years restricting funding. Each time a Government has done that, it has prevented our young people from getting the training needed.

I know, coming from the City of Edmonton, that you, Mr. Speaker, would know that every so often we have this great demand by industry to bring in trades people from England, France or other countries because we have not trained our own people. When you see, as this Budget does, another measure which restricts funding for our own universities and community colleges, in two or three years from now we will have a dilemma. We will not have the trades people we need, we will not have the educated people we need nor will we have the scientists to develop jobs and our technology for Canadians.

I realize that my time is finished, Mr. Speaker, but if I can beg the indulgence of the House to speak for one minute. There are a number of concerns of Manitobans surrounding regional development. There is the cut-back for VIA, the fuel tax, the cut-back in tourist marketing and the fact that corporate taxes have not been increased to provide that funding. People in Manitoba do not like this Budget. You can see what is happening in Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick and Newfoundland. The provincial Government in Manitoba is afraid to call an election because the federal Government is so unpopular as a result of the nature and issues in this Budget.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak to Bill C-14, the Borrowing Bill in the vernacular. This Government is into its second mandate.

Are you addressing me, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): No, I was not addressing the Hon. Member. There are no questions or comments. Under Standing Order 74 we are now in the period for 10 minute speeches. The Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) was waving to be recognized for a question or comment, and I just wanted to advise him that there are no questions or comments, just 10 minute speeches.

The Hon. Member for Mount Royal has the floor.

Mrs. Finestone: I presume, therefore, that that interjection will not cut my time, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Absolutely not.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, the Government is into its second mandate. In the cultural area this Government has had the benefit of advice from many task forces at a cost of nearly $9 million. With all of this experience behind it, with all of this time and effort it has spent, with all the Government's so-called consultations and with all of the Government's so-called standing committee work to which it was supposedly committed to listen, I believe that the Government has had no excuse for delay in facing its full responsibilities in the area of communications and culture, an area which is so important to the development of our national identity. The Government should have understood that money alone does not replace good, sound public policy. However, policy wrapped in pretty words and fancy wrapping is only rhetoric if all the necessary means to reach the expressed goals are not in place. Needless to say, financing is part of that application.

Canada's cultural community is really disheartened and, in some instances, will be decimated. Its goals or missions will certainly not be achieved with the revelations of the Government's Budget and the unveiling of its Estimates. Our cultural community deserved better. Canada's cultural community not only provides Canadians with a sense of identity and uniqueness but it distinguishes Canada from other countries on the world stage. Canada's cultural community is at the forefront of our development as a nation. As an economic force, its contribution is similar to that of education or scientific research. It is an area of innovation, creativity and resourcefulness. These intangible qualities are essential to the maintenance of Canada's economic growth, its trading status and its quality of life.

In 1985, the Canadian Conference of the Arts estimated that the cultural sector contributed some $10 billion a year to the Canadian economy. It employed 300,000 people directly and another 200,000 indirectly. In an informal analysis of the 1986 census data, preliminary findings indicated that the number of persons employed directly or indirectly in the cultural sector has increased faster than in many other sectors of our economy and has made a contribution of the arts and cultural industries to both the local, provincial and national economies, to say nothing of the quality of life in those cities.

The employment, training and job creation aspects of the cultural sector are impressive. It is labour-intensive. Its workforce is highly educated and mobile. The sector's strong contribution to tourism and economic development has resulted because of support reflected in federal, provincial and municipal policies and programs.

It is unfortunate that this Government in its latest Budget is not continuing that support. At a time when the strength of our cultural life is becoming more and more important to our independent identify as a nation, I find that this Government's pretence of support is an unconscionable smoke-screen.

The Communications Minister waxes poetically. He claims a 7 per cent over all increase while, in fact, if the truth be told it does not even cover the cost of inflation. In actual fact, the arts are in a lose-lose position over what actually was spent in 1988-89. With the minimal 3 per cent increase over the last year, in real terms a drop in spending has taken place in the communications portfolio. The way this Minister fights for budget increases he may be a banker's dream, but he is no hero to our cultural community.

It is quite interesting to note that the budget of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has an increase of 26.4 per cent, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources has and increase of 22.7 per cent while the budget for Indian and Northern Affairs is up 11.6 per cent. What was the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) doing when his colleagues spoke up in defence of their Departments and got increases? What was this Minister dreaming about? His "canned" trips? I say to the Minister, it was no time to be silent or to give the silent treatment because Canadian cultural policy cannot afford it and, at this point, cannot afford him and his defence.

The Government has repeatedly told Canadians that under the Canada-U.S. Trade Agreement, our ability to protect our cultural sovereignty and provide for the expression of our identity has been protected and can be promoted. How often did we hear through the summer months and all the other months of negotiations that culture was not on the table? As a show and a promise to Canadian voters that Canadian culture would be preserved, the Government made two very strong commitments among others: first, that postal subsidies which help many publications reach a wide number of Canadians would be maintained for at least five years, and second, that the CBC would be strengthened, that there could be equivalence in programming in English and French and that for once and for all, we could see Canadian news, national and international, from a Canadian perspective. Now that the election is over, these two promises have been broken and can be added to the list of actions the Government has taken to weaken Canadian cultural policy.

Let me give Hon. Members a few instances of the kinds of things I am referring to. The reduction of the capital cost allowance for Canadian films and television programs resulted in the loss of millions of dollars of private sector investment in the creative field. The revision of the Film Products Importation Act made a sham of the political strengthening of our Canadian film industry. Investment Canada guidelines for film distribution proposed by the 1985 film industry task force, the Raymond-Roth report, were rejected. There was a backing away from the 1985 Baie Comeau policy on Canadian ownership in book publishing and distribution.

I remind Hon. Members of the scorched earth discussions that were undertaken with the now President of the Canada Council and the then Canadian Ambassador to Washington supporting strong Canadian cultural content. With that kind of support, I think we have some serious concerns. In the book publishing policy, we have ended up with a pretend control. Look at what Gulf and Western offered with the sale of its book publishing companies. It is allowing a 51 per cent equity but a veto on the right to decision-making, and that equity was purchased by the Government at an incredibly inflated price.

There has also been rejection of key recommendations made by the House of Commons Standing Committee on Communications and Culture in its 1988 broadcasting policy and legislation which would have placed limits on the North Americanization of the Canadian Broadcasting System. These are very serious concerns about Canadian content that were not addressed.

Let us take a specific look at postal subsidies, a broken promise to the Canadian book and periodical industry. Last year, the Government promised the publishing industry that for at least the next five years, the program's funding would be maintained at approximately its current level of $220 million annually. Where have these promises gone? Is it because of American pressure that sees postal subsidies as unfair subsidies? Look at the minutes from the United States one month ago and what the Government just did in its last Budget.

The postal subsidy is to be reduced by $10 million in 1989–90, followed by a further reduction of $35 million in 1990–91. The Government is thereby reducing the total subsidy from $220 million to $175 million by 1990–91. The Government has been less than forthcoming in making clear its intent with respect to these cuts if we try to figure it out from the Budget, the double-speak and the fiscal plan.

With the Canadian magazine industry as a whole earning pre-tax profits of only 2 per cent, the implication of this cut is very serious. This is an example of the Government's view that cultural policy is so insignificant that when the Budget axe falls, nobody at the Cabinet table cares. For the Government, it is no more than a dollar and cents game.

I believe that these cuts in the cultural area show a Government willing to attack programs that support and promote our national identity. Without the arts, without distribution, without fair access, without equality across this vast land that allows us an appreciation and understanding of each other, just who are we and what do we stand for?

In one decade, the Government will have reduced the CBC's appropriation in constant dollars by close to $400 million. Across the way, I see a Government that has achieved what it failed to achieve through policy through a Budget door. Canadians have rejected the dismantling of the CBC, so the Government is now doing it through the Budget process. That is not something the Government should be proud of.

The Canada Council lobbied hard and almost received a promise for an additional $47 million in its parliamentary appropriation. It received an increase of $1.7 million, not even enough to cover the cost of inflation. The Director of the Canada Council, Joyce Zeamans, said that the effects of no increase will be that we will have a new generation of artists that is not being fully served. That will be part of the Government's legacy in its cultural portfolio.

I have one further observation to make regarding the National Arts Centre and its future. Since 1984, it has been starved by the Government. In fact, the Government cut approximately $10 million from it in today's value, to say nothing of what has happened to the status of artists who have not received fair treatment or protection. If time would allow, I would add an additional list to the litany. However, I recognize that my time is up.

I conclude my remarks by saying that this is the 20th anniversary of the Department of Communications and Culture. The Government should be ashamed of what it has given it as a present.

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on Bill C-11, the Borrowing Bill, which seeks to authorize the borrowing of $25.5 billion. Of course, this Bill is an integral part of the budgetary process, a Budget which cuts social programs and regional development, spells the death of VIA Rail and fails to deal with many of the current problems facing Canadians.

Over the last year, we have heard much of the major problem that has been preoccupying Canadians individually and in the media and that is the increasing problem of adequate, affordable housing. A number of things have happened in the last two to three years that have made housing the problem that it is today.

First, there has been a dramatic increase in the price of housing, particularly in Toronto and Vancouver. In Toronto, since 1984, the price of houses has gone up 154 per cent. In Vancouver, prices are up 88 per cent. At the same time, vacancy rates in rental accommodations are dramatically down. Toronto has a vacancy rate, by last reports, of less than .2 per cent. In Vancouver, it is less than .1 per cent.

There are other major problems that are fueling the housing crisis. There has been a decline in real family income since 1980. Family incomes for average working families have gone down $725 in buying power in that period of time while the Government has been raising taxes. This means that families have less money to put into housing. As well, 60 per cent of all single parent families headed by women have an income below the poverty level. Fully 70 per cent of elderly seniors who are poor are women, something which reflects the inadequacy of the pension programs. These people are unable to afford proper housing.

Forty per cent of all renters in Canada start with an income below the poverty level. It is impossible for them to find adequate housing, particularly with escalating housing prices and rental costs. Poverty in Canada is no longer restricted to those who are on fixed incomes and are not working. Currently in Metropolitan Toronto, 18 per cent of all families who are working rely upon food banks to sustain themselves; 18 per cent of working families in a country as affluent as Canada. We should be ashamed of ourselves. The interest rate policy of this Government has been devastating for people trying to afford homes. Real estate boards calculate that an increase of 1 per cent in mortgage interest rates means that 200,000 additional Canadians are priced out of the ability to purchase a home. We have had interest rates go up by 2 per cent, 3 per cent and 4 per cent in the last two years. If you look at the number of Canadians who cannot now afford to purchase a home but who two or three years ago could have done so, for every 1 per cent increase in the mortgage rate adds at least $100 to the average mortgage.

What has the Government's response been to this? The Minister responsible for Housing has said that we have to learn to do more with less. If we are not doing a good job, give us a blast. He has instructed CMHC to stop talking about the 30 per cent rule. It used to be considered that anybody who was paying over 30 per cent of their total income for shelter was paying too much. Before, it was 25 per cent. Now the rule is 30 per cent. The Minister has instructed them not to talk about it because many Canadians are now paying 40 per cent, 50 per cent and even 70 per cent of their gross income for shelter.

After all the nice discussions, along comes the Budget followed by this borrowing Bill. A Budget is a blueprint for the Government. It sets out the Government's plan of how it is to deal with problems, what direction it is to take, what it wants to accomplish. Yet what do we have in this Budget? We have a callous attack on affordable housing. If a government sat down and designed a budget that would ensure that Canadians could not afford housing, it could not have done a better job. What they have done is to turn a housing crisis into a deep institutionalized social problem where Canadians are being driven out of their homes onto the streets.

What in the Budget has created this situation? Let us look at it. First, the Budget has maintained the high interest rate policy, a policy which in itself significantly keeps the deficit up because of the servicing of our deficit.

Second, they brought in an immediate increase in the manufacturers' tax. This is the tax that the Minister has said would be so detrimental, and yet they have increased it to 13.5 per cent, driving up the price of housing by $500 to $700. Then the Government brought in a sales tax, or as they like to call it, a goods and service tax, which puts the price of housing up $10,000 to $20,000.

If we look at the matter of social housing, most countries in the western world have social housing programs that amount to 25 per cent or 30 per cent of their housing. Canada has 4 per cent. Even Hong Kong has 40 per cent of its housing stock in social housing. What has this Government done? First, it cuts back on its commitments on co-operative housing. It made a firm commitment to build a measly 5,000 units a year in 1986. This year they are only going to build 1,700. Provinces like British Columbia are only going to get 158 housing units. The Government has totally done away with the RRAP program which is the program that municipalities like Montreal used to upgrade housing so it would not be demolished or turned into expensive condominiums. The Government has bragged that it will spend $100 million more on housing this year. That is because of the high interest rates, because they are paying more on their mortgage subsidy programs than they have in the past.

Finally, the Government has not dealt with the whole question of municipal infrastructure. In my riding of Surrey North, we have taken 60 per cent of all the building starts in the last five years, and we are bankrupt. The municipalities and Mayors have been after the Government to help fund municipal infrastructure for schools, for sewers and for sidewalks. We have 7,000 children in portable schools. Yet the Government will not, on a tri-Party basis, look at putting in money to allow for affordable housing, to allow the municipalities to provide the services that are needed.

In closing, this Government has made much of its concern about children of future generations and what we will be leaving them. I am afraid that we are leaving them is a Canada where only the very rich can afford homes and shelter.

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to rise to this debate. As I listened to the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) give his redress to the Government's Budget on May 2, I realized that I have never been so proud and so confident that to be a Liberal in this country means that every Canadian is important, on every farm, in every town and every city from coast to coast to coast. It is the recognition of that third coast, the Arctic coast, that the federal Government has denied in this Budget. Northerners want to contribute their fair share to the fiscal policy of our country, but this Budget disproportionately hurts northerners more than residents in other parts of Canada, and that is not fair.

People in the western Arctic are already burdened with the highest cost of living anywhere in this country. Our political and social development depends on economic growth. Broadening our economy's foundation and building on our strengths will help us solve our society's problems. Settling land claims will create the stability needed for development and give aboriginal people the resources to be full partners in the economy. All northerners will benefit from the self-reliant economy and society which we build together.

However, the Government has not recognized this in its Budget. Instead, the Tories have made the possibility of northerners acquiring equality very doubtful given the already high unemployment rates, the high birth rates, the paucity of economic opportunity in many of the small and particularly northern native communities in the western Arctic. There is still an enormous amount of catching up to be accomplished before northern residents to become economically on par with Canadians south of the 60th parallel.

The Leader of the Official Opposition said on May 2, and the Governor of New York said it during the 1984 U.S. election, that the difference between the Liberals and the Conservatives is that the Conservatives believe the train will not make it all the way unless some are left behind: some of our old, some of our young, some of our weak. The strong will inherit the land. But Liberals believe that we can make it all the way with the whole family intact. So what the Budget does is crystal clear. It erodes, destroys, abandons, denies, cuts and divides regions and Canadians from coast to coast to coast. It does nothing more. There are no new initiatives. There is no creative programming. There are no improvements. There is no light at the end of the tunnel. I laughed when I heard the Minister of National Defence (Mr. McKnight) tell the world that the sovereignty of Canada's Arctic will have to be maintained by our allies.

In 1987, the Government released a White Paper on Defence which announced that one of the priorities of the Ministry was to have a three-ocean navy in recognition of threats to Canada's claims in the Arctic. The former Minister of National Defence thought that the best way to define sovereignty was to invest in $8-billion worth of nuclear submarines. Naturally, Canadians did not share the Minister's hunger for power, and did not buy his cold war rhetoric about Canada being in an extraordinarily military threat. When the government Members said that the subs were necessary to protect the Arctic, Northerners and Canadians asked, from what?

The Budget cuts in the Department of National Defence indicate more than any other reductions that the Government does not have a clear goal. It does not know in which direction to go. It does not have the ability to lead Canada to becoming a strong and independent nation.

The whole submarine escapade is a symbol of a Government without a coherent security strategy. The Tories have taken four years to release policies such as the White Paper on Defence and to indicate to Canadians their plans.

Now, almost overnight and without any consultation or recognition of these policies, a Budget is implemented and everything has changed. Universality is being destroyed, social programs are eroding, national infrastructure is being dismantled, big business is being put ahead of ordinary people, and two Canadas are being created; the rich and the poor.

The defence policy which was a priority of the Government is now a policy of economic restraint. The truth is that the reductions in defence spending are not actual cuts in expenditures. They are cuts in what the Government expected to spend.

The Minister of National Defence has stated that our allies will maintain Arctic sovereignty. I want to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, what that same Minister was presenting as policy when he was Minister responsible for northern development. In 1988 in one of his PR glossy brochures, on which the Government has no qualms about spending money, a brochure entitled: "A Northern Political and Economic Framework", the Minister confirmed the Government's commitment to the political evolution of the North. One of the so-called essential goals outlined states: "To examine the role and activities of the federal Government in the North as they relate to the northern dimension of Canadian foreign policy and the strengthening of Canadian-Arctic sovereignty".

When Northerners received this message, we thought that the Government was finally interested in the North and the vital role it plays in security for Canada. Northerners have had years of Cruise missile tests. We have also had the experience of a CFS base closure in Inuvik, thanks again to the Government, so we know what Prince Edward Island, Manitoba, and the other areas are facing. This is not a new problem to us.

When the Minister of DIAND referred to the North in relation to Canadian foreign policy, we thought the Government was going to then develop a security Green Paper.

Canada needs a defence policy, not in terms of Cruise missile tests, but in the service of an over-all security strategy emphasizing economic, environmental, and non-military elements of security. However, the Department of External Affairs has shown no initiative in this regard.

In February, I wrote to the Minister of National Defence with these positive recommendations. To date I have received no response. It is typical of the Government not to want a debate or public scrutiny on a proposed policy.

Northerners have lots of experience with sovereignty. After all, we can claim traditional use and occupancy of the Arctic and Arctic waters. We do not need nuclear submarines to make those claims known to the United States or to the Soviet Union. The federal Government has given no recognition to the North and the role it plays in enhancing Canada's foreign policy.

The Northwest Territories is a full participant in the circumpolar world. Our people and our Government are leading actors in many of the events and issues which shape international polar activities.

The Government of the Northwest Territories participates in the Canada/U.S.S.R Arctic Science Exchange. This program has shown that the Government of the Northwest Territories is well ahead of the U.S.S.R. in developing northern construction and some aspects of education.

The Government of the Northwest Territories also plays an important role in environmental issues. That Government is part of the Canadian delegation to the Convention on International Trade of Endangered Species of Wild Flora and Fauna, and is a full member of the International Union for the Conservation of Nature. We are active in international efforts to prepare a circumpolar conservation strategy. Canada's polar bear management program, largely developed by our Government, was praised as a leading international example of wildlife management at a recent conference on sustainable development in Zimbabwe.

The Government of the Northwest Territories has taken a leading role in dealing with issues which justice and education must face in a northern setting. We have hosted, and will continue to host, conferences on those topics which bring together representatives from Governments in Alaska, Yukon, Greenland, and polar nations around the world.

Northerners have much to gain from these exchanges, and the Northwest Territories will continue to be a leading participant in the circumpolar world. Our Government will continue to assist aboriginal groups, such as Indigenous Survival International, which are taking lead roles in promoting aboriginal interests throughout the world.

I had the opportunity and privilege to be involved with the North's display of traditional and modern ways of life at the British Museum in London. I applaud Northerners for an outstanding achievement in such a prestigious international event.

International links have also been actively developed by the private sector. The territorial Government helps northern businesses explore economic opportunities and overseas markets for our products. We also look for new ways to promote the Northwest Territories internationally as an exciting tourism destination, and attract international investors to work with northern residents in developing our economy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I wish to advise the Hon. Member that she is one minute over her 10 minutes, so if she would wind up, please.

Ms. Blondin: I am sure you are aware, Mr. Speaker, that we have many concerns regarding the economy and the Budget that was presented. We do not feel there is a magic solution in dealing with the Budget. However, the spirit and the intent of dealing with the needs of the youth of this country and their future, and the needs of those who have made a major investment in this country, the elderly people, are very important.

The climate the Government is creating in the North is gloom. It is a mistake to think that the Budget only restricts the development of the North's economic resources. It also inhibits the development of our most valuable resource of all, our people.

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak briefly on Bill C-11, the Borrowing Authority Act, by which the Government is asking the House to grant it the authority to borrow some $25 billion on current accounts.

Yesterday afternoon I returned from three days in Summerside, Prince Edward Island. I went there as my Party's defence critic to listen to the local people, to hear their reactions first hand to the Government's cruel and heartless announcement that it was closing down Base Summerside. This military base and air force base goes back to the days of the Commonwealth air training program of 1941-42.

I wish to say at the outset that I do not think that the mandarins here in Ottawa who advised the Minister of National Defence (Mr. McKnight) that that base should be closed down because it was no longer cost efficient realized the human factors. They did not realize the tremendous negative economic impact that that closure will have on the citizens of Prince Edward Island. It will not only affect Summerside, a town of some 8,000 people, but indeed it will affect the entire Province of Prince Edward Island. Let me emphasize at the outset that those people and that province do not deserve the treatment they are getting from the Government. Closing down that base will result in the loss of 950 direct jobs at the base. Another 250 civilian jobs will also be eliminated and, indirectly, some 1,700 jobs will also disappear.

Along with the disappearance of those jobs will go approximately $50 million a year in revenue to Summerside, Prince Edward Island and to the Province of Prince Edward Island. It will mean that the second largest employer in the entire province will go out of business. It will mean that 2.2 per cent of the province's total payroll will disappear. It will mean that jobs with wages averaging some $34,000 or $35,000 a year will disappear from the base and the average provincial job with a wage of $17,000 a year will supposedly take its place. That is not what will happen in Prince Edward Island.

The economy is extremely fragile. There is farming for a couple of months a year. There is tourism and there is some fishery. Even now, under optimum conditions, it is almost impossible to work for ten weeks at a time to get enough unemployment insurance to tide one over until another seasonal job comes along, if one is available.

In addition to closing the base at Summerside, the Government has changed the UIC rules so that now people in Prince Edward Island will have to work at least 15 to 16 weeks in order to qualify for unemployment insurance. I say to the House that that is absolutely impossible for many of the workers in that part of P.E.I.

I did not return from Prince Edward Island with only a negative attitude. I am not here today to say that the Government should keep the base open because Prince Edward Island as a province "deserves at least one military base" since every other province has at least one base, and in some cases several military bases. But I have come back with some very positive alternate suggestions.

It is about time that the Conservative Government got out of its 19th century thinking about defence posture and began to look at what modern thinkers are considering in terms of defence. The traditional meaning of defence involves arms and ammunition, but there is an increasing attitude toward soft defence, or the use of defence for paramilitary purposes. This is where Summerside has as lot to offer. The Government should keep Base Summerside open, not because it is a military base but because it is a base of operation for other related activities such as the patrolling and policing of the fishery. That is not a military operation but it is an operation that can be carried out with extreme competence by the military.

Base Summerside is an admirable site for expanding those activities. Most countries do not even know that we have an exclusive economic zone. Those that do, don't care. As the years go by we will need greater reconnaissance patrolling and surveillance of the EEZ. We have in Canada engineered, designed and produced an excellent aircraft, the de Havilland–8 with its Maritime configuration, to replace the outmoded trackers when they are finally put to rest. They can be based at Base Summerside for that surveillance purpose.

Third, we know there will be a need for increased patrolling for illegal immigration of supposed refugees to this country. We will need more patrols for that purpose.

We will need an expansion of our search and rescue operations, which again is a paramilitary activity, and for which Base Summerside is admirably suited.

Another function for that base should be for environmental protection. If ever there was an area in need of increased activity, it is the whole area of environmental protection. The House will know that in western Europe, Scandinavia, and North America, there is a growing covert activity of dumping toxic wastes into the sea. That must stop. It is such a vast area to patrol that we need more surface ships and certainly more patrol aircraft.

I have discussed six combined alternate uses for Base Summerside. Yet the short–sighted Conservative Government sitting opposite wants to shut it down, blindly, without planning ahead and realizing that just as certain as I am standing here this morning, some seven years down the road a Minister on that side of the House will stand up to announce the expansion of a certain existing base or the establishment of a new base to carry out one or all of these extended responsibilities, at a greatly inflated cost. We already have the facility at Base Summerside to fulfil those functions.

The Government owes the people of Summerside, the people of Prince Edward Island, the courtesy of at least putting Base Summerside on hold until moneys are available in the future to proceed with the expansionary measures I have mentioned. If the Government closes this base, I can assure the House that the Town of Summerside will die. I am not trying to exaggerate or be extreme. There are no alternatives. There is no private sector alternative.

Prince Edward Island is not exactly on the Windsor–Québec City corridor. It is nowhere near the Golden Horseshoe. It is nowhere near Montreal, Toronto or Vancouver. It cannot attract the private sector activity that would come near paying those wage rates, even if it did relocate to that part of the province.

At a time when ACOA is being cut back, when regional development grants are being cut back, and when unemployment insurance regulations are being tightened to the point at which very few people will qualify, the Government is essentially telling the people of Prince Edward Island, by closing down Base Summerside, that it does not care if it puts the whole of P.E.I on welfare. That is not good enough.

I implore the Minister of National Defence (Mr. McKnight) and other Ministers responsible for those agencies and activities I mentioned, that I know will have to be increased, to meet and find solutions to this problem so that that base can stay open and the people of that part of Prince Edward Island, that part of Canada, can continue to live and enjoy their environment and their way of life as Canadians and Islanders.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will recognize the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) after the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Walker).

• (1230)

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is always an important time for Members to discuss items such as borrowing legislation and borrowing resolutions from the House because it gives us an opportunity to review what the Government is trying to do. Of course every time we go looking for money or set out a Budget, we are in fact spending a lot of money on behalf of the people of Canada. It causes one to reflect upon how the money is being spent, who is being helped, and who is being hurt.

One of the travesties of the process that we have seen since the Speech from the Throne is a tremendous loss of income, of livelihood, and of support systems in the Province of Manitoba and particularly in the City of Winnipeg.

I would point out that the best allegory and best image, when you think about what is happening in this Budget, is to think of the towns of Portage la Prairie and Churchill.

I have taken Churchill first. That is a community in a remote part of Canada. It is in the northern part of Manitoba. It has struggled against all odds for several decades to establish a financial base. The Government of Canada has gradually taken away one activity after another. The military has withdrawn, they have now withdrawn the satellite program, and they are about to withdraw VIA Rail service as we now know it. Then just recently they announced that wheat will not be shipped through the port again this summer. These are devastating blows which are often lost in the grand scheme of things in this country. It is about time that we as Members paid attention to communities such as Churchill.

Second and following up the previous speaker, my colleague from British Columbia, when he spoke about what was happening in Prince Edward Island, I can only add that that is the same story for Portage la Prairie.

It is a community which has been very proud of its military base. The role of the base is very well established in traditional Canadian military policy. It is a training base. The Government has reinvested in the last five years in its health facility, its runways and in all aspects of maintenance. It is a major contributor to the economy of Portage. We now have it removed. It is these particular acts that make people very saddened and very suspicious of government financing. They wonder why they are contributing their tax money.

Let me talk about the tax money that people have to contribute. Since 1984, the Mulroney Government has dramatically increased taxes on Canadian families and individuals.

With its recent Budget, families who are at or below the poverty line are being added to the tax roles while wealthier Canadians are facing minimal tax increases. While no one enjoys paying taxes, most people will support a system that is fair and equitable. Unfortunately, this Government insists on distributing the tax burden in an unfair manner.

In particular, I would like to point out what happened in my constituency, Winnipeg North Centre. As an example, a family living in a working class neighbourhood on Lipton Street with two working parents earning a total of $23,639 this year and supporting two children will now face an additional tax burden of $341. Since 1984, taxes have increased by $1,553 for this family. This represents a total tax increase of 176.3 per cent. This is all since this Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) took office. A similar family with earnings of $100,000 will only pay an increase of 10.9 per cent. This type of discrepancy in our tax system is leading to increased despair and anxiety among Canadians that their Government is not serving their interests.

There are also many single-parent families in Winnipeg North Centre who will now be paying taxes for the first time. A single parent with two children living in an apartment on Westminster Avenue and earning an income below the poverty line will now be paying $147 in taxes when they did not have to pay any of that before. Under this Budget, tax increases for individuals will be six times the amount that taxes increase for corporations. There is a tremendous tax burden taking place right now in this country for working-class families and away from corporations.

We are often fond of talking about the fact that corporations are taxed, and I think that is quite correct. They are taxed very heavily. In reality, we ignore our greatest export. Our greatest export is profit, profit to other countries. We let that profit go out because the Government has no gumption, energy, or commitment to taxing the money that is leaving the country. It therefore is left to tax the people who can least afford it.

One of the difficulties we have in Manitoba is perhaps from a historical point of view one of the most damaging aspects to our representation of the Government. This is the first time in modern history that the City of Winnipeg has not been represented in a federal Cabinet. Gradually it is shown as the Members who supposedly represent our province fail to stand up one time after another. Our support for the borrowing bill is minimal simply because there are no benefits coming to Manitoba. In fact, local media accounts refer to it as both "the politics of punishment" and "a scorched-earth policy" of the Mulroney Government. That is very harsh language and I am not too sure that I would share it in the House, but I do think that the Government should pay attention to the increased alienation among westerners toward their activities.

In conclusion, I would like to reaffirm that this Party is very much opposed to the way Manitoba is being treated in the budgetary process and in the Speech from the Throne and therefore opposes this particular borrowing action.

The West became the country of Conservatives under the leadership of John Diefenbaker. He was very proud of the way he could advocate western interest in the House. Many of the back-benchers in the other benches should be very much appreciative of his effort because that is why they are here. They are a legacy of the Diefenbaker tradition.

If Mr. Diefenbaker were sitting here, I wonder what he would think about the closing of the Port of Churchill, which serves his part of Saskatchewan. I wonder what he would think about the closing of Portage, a community that he supported. What about VIA Rail?

One of the great ironies is that John Diefenbaker went throughout this country campaigning on the back of passenger trains. He would now find that if he wanted to campaign that way that the very friends that he helped get elected and helped establish a base have cut off the trains. He would not even be able to stand in Portage. It will be gone in a few years. He would be standing somewhere in the West, wondering what happened to the trend of his tradition and what happened to his vision of Canada.

An Hon. Member: Singing in his grave.

Mr. Walker: Absolutely. The Government has abandoned that tradition. It is with a great deal of sadness that the activities of this Government cannot be supported with any conscience by any Member of this House.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the matter before the House of Commons is Bill C-11 authorizing the borrowing authority for the Government of Canada. In speaking toward that motion, many Members have gone into a great many other matters, some of them far removed from the borrowing authority. That has caused me to respond to some of the remarks I heard. I particularly want to respond to the remarks made by the Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn), who I understand is the national defence critic for the New Democratic Party.

I want to respond in this way. In the election campaign, year after year prior to that, we heard the members of the New Democratic Party say: "Cut national defence expenditures. If you cut national defence expenditures, you can provide money for child care, you can provide money for hospitals. You can provide money for a variety of social programs if you will only cut national defence expenditures". That was the sermon that was preached by the NDP across this country over the years and over the decades. It is part of their political philosophy to cut national defence expenditures.

An Hon. Member: You cut them in the wrong place.

Mr. Crosby: Now in the fiscal year of 1989-90, there is a relatively small cut in percentage terms in national defence expenditures. It does amount to $2.7 billion over an extended period of time.

An Hon. Member: We asked you to use a scalpel, not an axe.

Mr. Crosby: So who stands up in the House of Commons but members of the New Democratic Party and ask: "What have you done to national defence expenditures? What have you done to our military force in Canada? You have undermined and destroyed our military force". What utter nonsense, Mr. Speaker. Does anybody in Canada actually listen to that diatribe from the New Democratic Party in defence of our nation's military force after they have convinced the Canadian people, with help from the Liberal Party, that we do not need to concentrate on national defence, that we do not need to devote such a large portion of public funds, almost 10 per cent of the national expenditures, to national defence? It is too late for them to come crying to this House and tell us not to cut defence expenditures, keep our Canadian forces bases intact, and keep our weapons moving, and so on.

I would like to go into that for a moment because it was the defence critic of the New Democratic Party who made those remarks about the proposed closure of CFB Summerside in Prince Edward Island.

I would like to put a few facts on the record. First, Summerside has been under threat of closure for a decade, that I am aware of. There have been units transferred to Summerside from other bases, from Shearwater, in the constituency of Dartmouth, from Greenwood in the constituency of Annapolis Valley, to keep CFB Summerside viable.

As the defence critic well knows, the aircraft at CFB Summerside have become virtually obsolete. It would cost $300 million to retrofit the fleet of aircraft. Some of those aircraft which he says are useful surveillance can only stay in the air for two hours. It takes less than that to fly from Halifax to Ottawa in the normal course of events in a commercial aircraft. There are very few of those aircraft that can remain in the air long enough to do any useful surveillance. I am sure that the defence critic of the New Democratic Party knows that. But does he come to this House and say: "Spend $300 million retrofitting the obsolete tracker aircraft." No, Mr. Speaker, he just comes to criticize the Government for taking what are clearly essential and necessary measures in order to ensure the viability of our national defence force.

Let me speak for a moment about the situation in Summerside, Prince Edward Island. I am sure all Members have the greatest sympathy for the officials of that town and for the people of the area, but the question is, can we use our national defence facilities to provide economic support to an area of the country? Is that the purpose of our national defence initiative? I think everybody has to answer very clearly, no. That is not the purpose of our national defence force to simply provide economic capacity to an area or particular part of the country.

The solution to the problem in Summerside lies in other programs that might benefit people of the area and lead to economic development and overcome the adversity that will be placed on the people in the area as a result of the closing of CFB Summerside. While I think that we should exercise great sympathy for the people of that area, there are a few facts that are important to the consideration of their plight.

For instance, there was an article in the Toronto Globe and Mail recently that referred to the $186 million windfall that Atlantic provinces have experienced as a result of the equalization program, that is payments from the Government of Canada. Do you know what those payments allow in the case of the Province of Prince Edward Island? The province had projected a budgetary deficit of $13.2 million. As a result of increases in the equalization payments, it received $14 million that wiped out the budgetary deficit of the Province of Prince Edward Island. Prince Edward Island now has a balanced budget.

The Government that I represent in this House of Commons has a budgetary deficit of $30 billion and 34 cents of all the dollars that we receive have to go to service that budget deficit. One might say: "Who has the better financial position to react to a difficult situation?' The point is that the Government of Prince Edward Island as a result of equalization payments is not without financial capability.

I think we should reflect also on some of the decisions that that Government has made in the past decade and particularly, the current premier of the province who is personally involved in the making of these decisions.

First, Prince Edward Island refused to take cheap power from the Province of New Brunswick and elected instead to utilize power that was generated by fossil fuels. That was the decision Prince Edward Island made, to the detriment I should say of public authorities in the Province of New Brunswick. It was their right and privilege to make that decision, but it had very serious economic effects. Prince Edward Island refused to have Litton Industries establish an operation in that province which would probably have employed 400 or 500 people. I am proud to say that Litton Industries is now located in the federal constituency of Halifax West and we are getting the benefit of the jobs generated by their activity.

Prince Edward Island in the interests of the people—and I do not dispute that—has embarked upon a course of action that has made economic development relatively difficult.

In the last minute available to me, Mr. Speaker, let me simply say this, and particularly to the Members of the New Democratic Party who fought nuclear submarines, who said: "Cut defence expenditures", aided and abetted by the Liberal Party.", we are now faced with exactly that situation.

It is obvious that there are going to be some dire results from any Government cut-backs. The Government is going to work very closely with the Government of Prince Edward Island and with the people of Summerside to resolve the problems that have been created, but we must act in the interest of our national defence force. We cannot be led simply by the difficulties that are created in one part or another part of the country.

Beyond that, Mr. Speaker, it should be pointed out that Prince Edward Island has taken a course of action over the years that has resulted in losses of jobs and resulted in greater expenditures in order to maintain the industries that it now has or may have in the future. That is the decision that the people of Prince Edward Island have made and I think that everybody has to live with those kinds of economic facts.

Mr. Jim Karygiannis (Scarborough—Agincourt): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure and some nervousness that I rise today to speak on the Bill before us.

I say pleasure, because it is always a pleasure to lecture the Government on its wrongdoings.

I say nervousness, because I have seen the Budget that this Government is planning and has brought forward, and I see the amount of money that this Government is planning on spending and it does make me nervous.

It also makes every right-thinking taxpayer in Canada nervous, no exceptions. Government borrowing is at the highest ever. Couple with this the exorbitant rate of taxes being imposed on small business and the average Canadian taxpayer and we end up with a recipe for disaster.

The Government is now pleading for Canadians to tighten their belts. It is even advertising it. The Government is not prepared, however, to do the same. It has to advertise the cuts on the 11 o'clock National News. The Government shows us a little dollar and how much of that goes to pay our debt. However, the Government has to advertise this as if the Canadian people do not know.

It is said, Mr. Speaker, that the average Canadian cannot comprehend $1 billion. This presents a problem because at the current rate of Government mismanagement they will soon have to comprehend $1 trillion.

The Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) has spent $190 on a coffee table book, and $9,500 on a table for his office. The new Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) has recently spent over $40,000 fixing up his office. It was reported last week that the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) spent over $150,000 on 24 Sussex Street, and then it came out that he only spent it on studies.

This Government is intent on forcing the people who can least afford it to pay for Government excesses and pay more taxes in an attempt to reduce the deficit which has grown to such monstrous proportions, due in great part to this Government's refusal to make sure that large profit-making companies in this country pay their fair share of taxes, and the Prime Minister's desire to bribe people to vote for his Party with money from all Canadians.

An example that comes to mind is the prison he had built for no other purpose than to help his re-election chances. Now we see the cancellation of the building of a prison in Newfoundland. The people of Newfoundland reacted to that and they clearly sent a message to this House.

The people of this country are tired of reading about the Government's waste and being told that they must tighten their belts to pay for it.

The Government continues to ignore the small business community, perhaps because it does not have as much money to contribute to supporting the Free Trade Agreement as the Government's friends in the boardrooms of large corporations. The Conservative Government now seems to be penalizing small business on a variety of fronts.

For example, the Government's intention to pull out of the unemployment insurance program is a serious matter for small business. This policy will have the effect of sending many small businesses into financial ruin. The Government is telling the small business community that it does not care. But this is only the beginning, Mr. Speaker. There is more, much more.

One need only look at the proposed national sales tax to realize that the Government is choking the small business community. The Government's intention to introduce a national sales tax without an agreement with the provinces puts this country squarely on the road to ruin. It is still not clear why the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was unable to get an agreement with the provinces that would have seen an integrated national sales tax.

Perhaps the Government has already given the store away to the provinces to get a Meech Lake agreement so that it has nothing left to give in exchange for an agreement on the issue of a national sales tax.

The federal national sales tax places an enormous burden on the back of the small business community. The most obvious one is the dramatic increase in the paperwork involved in the administration of the tax. Currently, business must deal only with one set of forms that involve provincial taxes. With the new federal sales tax, the Government has given small businesses a new gift, a new set of forms to fill out for the collection of this tax. For a small business of less than five employees, this amounts to a huge setback. Without the manpower to conduct this task, the small business operator is faced with a grim choice, either hire an extra employee to assist in the administration of the tax or go to an accountant to have it done for him. Both options mean that the small business operator will have to spend money that he may not even have.

The net result is nothing less than a dramatic decrease in the profitability of small businesses in Canada, along with a rise in unemployment. If this is not enough for the small business community to contend with, the Government has added insult to injury by slashing the funds available to the Federal Business Development Bank. I asked the Minister of State for Small Businesses (Mr. Hockin) about that. He replied: "We don't have to do that because our friends agree with it". Mr. Bulloch, when the Budget was being proposed, didn't agree with him then.

The cuts will adversely affect the bank's ability to assist those small businesses needing help the most. Surely the Government must be aware of the fact that program cuts must be progressive in nature. Those with the least money will feel tax increases and program cuts more than the rich. The Government is asking the small business sector to make more sacrifices than it is able to make.

Even worse, in addition to failing significantly to reduce the deficit, and in addition to putting a maximum tax burden on all Canadians, this Government has completely ignored young people, senior citizens, the homeless, and the poor.

As a Member of this House, I cannot agree with proposals designed to benefit the privileged and prosperous, while the poorest and neediest in this country must suffer.

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Portage—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address the House this afternoon following the Hon. Member for Scarborough—Agincourt (Mr. Karygiannis). Bill C-11 gives authorization to borrow some $25 billion. I want members of the Opposition from both Parties to know that everything I have heard in this House regarding the borrowing of money and the expenditure of same since this election and since we were elected in 1984 as a Government is the amount that we are borrowing today would probably have had to have been $100 million if all the desires and the wants of the two opposition Parties were brought forward. In other words, the two opposition Parties advocate spending substantially more. It is a question of "spend it no matter where". The Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) spoke earlier. All of a sudden he said "Keep all the bases open".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Karygiannis: Shame! You voted against closing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Scarborough—Agincourt has just finished his speech. I would appreciate it if I could listen to the Hon. Member for Portage—Interlake.

Mr. Holtmann: I would like to draw to the attention of the House a column from the Montreal Gazette dated April 23, 1989. I bet, Mr. Speaker, no member of the opposition Parties like this article. Its headline is "How Did We Get Into This Mess". The article dialogues very accurately for those Members opposite how this mess started under the Liberal regime in 1968. It dialogues every Budget and how the Liberals would somehow reduce the deficit and create prosperity across Canada. This article highlights every Budget by every Liberal Finance Minister. But what did we have? These Budgets increased the national debt significantly. This is what opposition Members today and tomorrow want to continue, namely, to borrow, borrow and borrow five times more than what this Government does with no responsibility.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Tax the rich.

Mr. Holtmann: Our Finance Minister in every Budget that he has brought in has tried to reduce the deficit and, in fact, has.

Mr. Milliken: He didn't succeed. He was a failure.

Mr. Holtmann: The record will show he succeeded where all others have failed. From Mr. Benson—

Mr. Milliken: He doubled the debt in four years.

Mr. Holtmann: —to the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner).

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Holtmann: I would like to remind Liberal Members opposite that it was their Leader during the last campaign who said: "If we get elected we will really make the greatest effort to reduce our national debt". But we know that the leader of the Liberal Party would never reduce the debt. He would go back to his old ways and spend more money.

Yes, we are asking to borrow $30 billion, but not $100 billion that would be required if all the actions and noise that I have heard from opposition Members were carried out. We are cutting everywhere they would not.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Holtmann: Opposition Members want to spend more money. Most certainly we have to wonder what the leader of the Liberal Party and his back-bench colleagues would cut. They have never discussed the question in this House of where and how they would reduce the deficit. Every time our Finance Minister has introduced a Budget he has created jobs, not makeshift jobs, but real ones.

Most certainly the opposition Members do not want to discuss that. There are some fingers being pointed at me because the Government came down pretty hard in my constituency. I am facing the closure of a base. But I want to inform the Members of this House, particularly those in the Opposition, that this Member of Parliament before four years are done will have more people working in his constituency than are working there now, and in Portage la Prairie. We do not sit back and cry. As a community we will make it into a far stronger economy. We will not whine and cry like Members opposite who have no concrete solution as to how they would run this country and bring down the deficit. Opposition Members would continue to spend every cent on which they can get their hands. That is all they talk about.

The other day I heard a statement in the House by a Liberal Member from Prince Edward Island who was crying that P.E.I. as a result of the cut in the dairy subsidy would lose something like $260,000. Dairy farmers will have to pay their fair share to help us bring down the deficit. The only poor dairy man is the one who forgets to get up and milk his cows. They are all doing quite well. I have been in the industry. To say that dairy farmers are unfairly hurt by this Budget is ridiculous.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I call it one o'clock, let me advise the House that the Hon. Member will have four minutes left in his debate after three o'clock.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DOBROSLAV PARAGA—HUMAN RIGHTS LEADER IN YUGOSLAVIA

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, we are honoured today to have in the House of Commons Dobroslav Paraga, a leader in the cause of human rights from the State of Croatia in Yugoslavia. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) was particularly helpful to Mr. Paraga when he was being held by the Government of Yugoslavia on specious charges and Mr. Paraga has expressed his thanks to our Government for its assistance to him.

Mr. Paraga has represented artists, intellectuals and writers in Yugoslavia, not only Croatians, but Slovenian and Albanian Yugoslavs, to make sure that their democratic rights are protected. He was instrumental in obtaining a resolution from the Parliament of Europe calling for the end of all forms of oppression and discrimination in Yugoslavia.

On behalf of my constituents of Mississauga South and Canadians generally, may I say that we welcome Dobroslav Paraga here to the House of Commons.

LEBANESE REFUGEE COMMUNITY – NEED FOR ASSISTANCE

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, as I stand here at this moment, shells are exploding and people are dying in Lebanon. The occupation of that beautiful land by foreign powers and their surrogates, and the death, destruction and terror that mark the daily life its people, is a tragedy that cries out for attention by the civilized world.

Canada must do more. The two immigration officers currently in Cyprus are not able to cope with the needs of fleeing Lebanese. Nor do these officers have the authority to deal with the crisis situation which is developing among the Lebanese refugee community in Cyprus where the cost of food and accommodation is adding to the adversity faced by these individuals.

I urge the Government to make Canada's voice heard as international pressure must be brought to bear on those powers that are providing arms to the Lebanese protagonists. I urge the Government to take extreme measures to assist those desperate people whose lives are so endangered in their homeland.

Lebanese Canadians have made an enormous contribution to this country. They have proven themselves to be industrious, entrepreneurial people. Now all Canadians share the anxiety and sorrow of our Lebanese-Canadian friends and neighbours.

I plead with the Government to ensure that Canada—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but the Hon. Member's time has expired.

MUNICIPALITIES

15TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE FOUNDING OF FERMONT

Mr. Charles A. Langlois (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, the citizens of Fermont, in the riding of Manicouagan, are celebrating their town's 15th anniversary this year.

Fermont, a mining town in northern Québec, was founded in 1974 and is home to workers for the Québec Cartier Mining Company, which exploits an iron ore deposit in Mount Wright.

For 15 years, the residents of Fermont have contributed with their labour to the development of our natural resources and the wealth of Canada.

They have participated actively in the growth and establishment of many civic, cultural and economic organizations which make community life in Fermont active and interesting.

Mr. Speaker, on the weekend, I shall join the festivity organizers and the Town Council and I would like to pass on to the Town Council and Mayor Maurice Bérubé the greetings of this House and our hearty congratulations.

TOURISM

EFFECT OF BUDGET CUTS ON TOURIST INDUSTRY

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, for the past few days, we have been celebrating National Tourism Awareness Week. As we know, tourism is Canada's fastest growing industry and is in fact our largest employer. By the year 2000, it is expected to be Canada's leading industry.

Because of its growth rate, tourism is being called Canada's opportunity industry of the future. However, the world travel trend shows that we must compete more aggressively for the overseas tourism market. That means that we cannot afford to decrease federal expenditures on foreign market advertising as proposed in the recently announced Budget.

The Government has to look at the effects the Budget will have on the tourism industry. Increases in employers' UIC premiums, tax increases on alcohol, gasoline, aviation fuel and telecommunications and a significant increase in the goods and services tax will all increase the cost of our tourism product, making Canada less competitive in the international tourism market. That spells bad news—

Mr. Speaker: I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

ENVIRONMENT

GARBAGE DUMP PROPOSED ON ENVIRONMENTALLY SENSITIVE LANDS—ONTARIO GOVERNMENT CRITICIZED

Mr. René Soetens (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, the people of the Ontario riding and in particular those from the Town of Pickering know how they have been misled by the Liberal Government of David Peterson. The Liberals pledge their concern for the environment to the media but their actions show the truth. The Liberals pledge to the media that provincial lands are designated first for housing, but their actions show the truth.

David Peterson has pledged provincial lands in Pickering for one of the largest garbage dumps in Canada. These lands include the headwaters of three environmentally sensitive creeks. The Liberals have also waived the requirements for a public hearing under the Environmental Assessment Act which would provide the affected residents of my riding their day in court.

So much for the Liberal commitment to the environment. So much for the Liberal commitment to the people who elected them. When the people next get a chance, so much for the Liberal Government of Ontario.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CLOSURE OF ROCKLIFFE BASE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the Government is showing its true colours. The Conservative Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn) predicted that the National Capital Region would be penalized for voting Liberal in the last election. I do not know if political vengeance is sweet to the Conservatives, but their dream has come true.

In fact, the Government has just closed 14 military bases, of which 9 are in Liberal ridings. Ottawa—Vanier has not been spared. The Rockcliffe military base will be closed. This closure will probably not have such harmful effects as the closure of the base in Summerside, Prince Edward Island. Nevertheless, it has terrible consequences for the 650 civilians and 1,073 military personnel who are assigned to the base or depend on it. Furthermore, it will result in annual losses of $2 million in wages and salaries and $1 million in local expenditures on goods and services.

Federal public servants, including the armed forces, are now paying the cost of a regressive budget, presented by a Government with a sick desire for vengeance. It is time for the Conservative Government to stop engaging in political patronage on the backs of Canadian citizens.

ONTARIO BUDGET

ONTARIO GOVERNMENT COMMENDED

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 31 today to commend a friend and colleague in the Ontario Legislature. Yesterday, the Hon. Robert Nixon, the Treasurer of Ontario, brought in a budget, a budget that was not leaked and a budget that will result in the lowest deficit in the Province of Ontario in 15 years. He cut $911 million from last year's deficit. Of course, a lower deficit means lower inflation.

The care and compassion of the Liberal philosophy is first and foremost in this budget, and unlike his federal counterpart, he has increased funding for health care by $13.9 billion, hospital funding is up $6 billion and social assistance is up 92 per cent from 1984–85, which were the last years of the Ontario Tory dynasty.

Education spending is up 6.1 per cent over 1988–89 and housing is up 28 per cent over last year and 172 per cent over the last Tory administration. I respectfully ask the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) of this House to contact the Hon. Robert Nixon, Treasurer of Ontario, and humbly request advice and guidance before he brings in another federal Budget.

CANADA DAY

TRIBUTE TO QUÉBEC CHAIRMAN

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State of Canada (Mr. Weiner) has released the name of the provincial chairman of the Canada Day Celebrations in Québec.

I have the pleasure to announce, on behalf of the Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport), Member for the riding of Sherbrooke (Mr. Charest), that Mr. André Viger of Fleurimont, world champion wheelchair athlete, will be our chairman.

For his dedication to community service, Mr. Viger was honoured by the International Association of Junior Chambers of Commerce as one of the seven most remarkable young people in the world.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians are proud of their champion, whose courage and determination are an example to us all. Bravo and congratulations, André Viger!

MULTICULTURALISM

EQUAL OPPORTUNITIES FOR ALL RACES URGED

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Liberal Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) was quoted as saying that he wants to challenge his party to reconsider its position on multiculturalism. Our current multiculturalism policy actually breeds racism in Canada because we are telling people they are different, he said.

Canada was built on a recognition and appreciation of wide cultural diversity of aboriginal nations, French and English settlers, and the rich influx of immigrants from many ethnic origins. Unfortunately, some Canadians have more opportunities than others. Instead of eliminating multiculturalism, we must strengthen policies to eliminate racism and insure that all Canadians have equal opportunities. Systemic discrimination against people of colour must cease. We need mandatory employment equity in both public and private jobs. We must oppose racism in all its forms. I urge the Government to establish a separate standing committee on multiculturalism as promised so that parliamentarians may monitor and enforce multicultural policies.

SPORTS

TRIBUTE TO CANADIAN AMATEUR HOCKEY ASSOCIATION

Mr. John E. Cole (York—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Government of Canada, I would like to congratulate the Canadian Amateur Hockey Association on its leadership and efforts at bringing opportunity, challenge and enjoyment to Canadian youth for 75 years. The program developed by the Association, and headed by such people as Murray Costello and Ed O'Doherty, and its branches across Canada have ensured that approximately 550,000 novice to senior players had an opportunity to become involved in the sport of hockey, one of this country's favourite national pastimes. I wish the Association and its hard-working volunteers continued growth and prosperity.

VIOLATIONS OF HUMAN RIGHTS IN ROMANIA

Mr. Tom Wappel (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to inform this House and Canadians of the serious human rights violations presently being experienced by the Hungarian national minority in the Transylvanian region of Romania. Recently, the United Nations General Assembly found these infringements of human rights so appalling that it passed a resolution to monitor and address the problem.

Thousands of people have fled Romania into their ancestral homeland of Hungary. However, this small nation simply is not able to handle the large influx of refugees. I call upon this Government to initiate a plan and carry it through in order to help those refugees who wish to settle in Canada to do so. This action will maintain both our international reputation as a home for the oppressed and our well-known historical tradition of accepting the Hungarian-speaking peoples as immigrants to our land.

THE SENATE

HOLD-UP OF GOVERNMENT PAY CHEQUES AND PENSIONS

Mr. Stan Wilbee (Delta): Mr. Speaker, yesterday many refugees fleeing countries with political and economic problems discovered to their dismay that our Liberal-dominated Senate chose to block legislation which would have permitted payment of government cheques required for food and rent. Many government-sponsored refugees depend totally on this money as they have no other source of income until they are established in Canada. Instead of receiving their cheques, they got a quick lesson in Canadian politics. When the Liberal Party is rejected by the people, they turn to the unelected Senate in an attempt to flex some political muscle.

Where has the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) been in the last few days while his Senate friends threaten to cut off veterans' pensions and RCMP pay cheques? The silence from our Liberal friends in the House in support of these Canadians has been deafening.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilbee: Perhaps they remember what happened the last time they asked Canadians to choose between the Senate and the democratically elected government, or perhaps they are confirming what many of us have suspected for quite some time, that the only power in the Liberal Party is a Senator from Nova Scotia.

TRANSPORT

PORT OF CHURCHILL—GRAIN SHIPMENTS SUSPENDED

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, on May 16 Canadians were told by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) that it was unlikely that any grain whatsoever would be shipped through the Port of Churchill this year. This deliberate neglect of one of Canada's shipping ports is absolutely inexcusable. This port, set on Hudson Bay, is actually 2,000 kilometers closer to Europe than Canada's other Atlantic shipping route through the St. Lawrence Seaway.

In The Winnipeg Free Press on May 17, the Minister of Transport called the Port of Churchill a "very difficult and expensive port to use". The Minister of Transport obviously has not done his research. If he had, he would know that despite Churchill's short shipping season it is recognized as the cheapest port in Canada through which to ship grain to Europe. The federal-provincial working group on the comparative costs of moving grain has provided excellent figures to show that, compared with the St. Lawrence Seaway route, there was actually a saving of $21.06 a tonne on grain shipped through Churchill in 1985. In many ways, the Port of Churchill is the backbone of the western economy. Without it, the Town of Churchill will be crippled, jobs will be lost at the port and on the railway throughout northern Manitoba and western Canada, and farmers of western Canada will be denied the cheapest and shortest shipping route to the markets of northern Europe.

THE ENVIRONMENT

INITIATIVES TAKEN BY INDUSTRY TO RELIEVE POLLUTION

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, when industry pollutes, it should receive the blame, but when that same industry takes steps to protect the environment, we also have a duty to bring this to the attention of the public. Noranda Mines, in order to meet the federal Government's objective to reduce sulphur dioxide emissions by 50 per cent by 1994, recently invested millions of dollars in building a pollution control plant in Rouyn-Noranda. The same company announced yesterday at a press conference that an additional $16 million would be invested to achieve a 70 per cent reduction by 1995, 20 per cent more than the standard set by the federal Government.

Mr. Speaker, this is very good news for the people of Rouyn-Noranda and for Abitibi—Témiscamingue. This is a concrete example of the leadership and determination of the federal Government encouraging industry to co-operate fully with the Government's environmental policies.

THE BUDGET

CBC TELEVISION REPORT OF INSIDE KNOWLEDGE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister, I put a question or two to the Deputy Prime Minister. The CBC television report that a group of Toronto–based people had the contents of the Budget for two full working days before millions of other Canadian taxpayers, raises serious new questions about the security, the honesty, the fairness and the competence on the part of the Minister of Finance. When the Minister announced his Budget in an emergency press conference, he said that he had to act quickly, and the reason he had to act quickly was to avoid people profiting from inside knowledge of his Budget. Clearly, according to the CBC report, some people had two full clear days Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, this is not a matter for the police. This is a matter for Parliament. I want the Deputy Prime Minister to reply to this question.of inside knowledge to profit at the expense of other Canadian taxpayers.

Does the Deputy Prime Minister, and through him the Minister of Finance, still contend that the Government was a victim of sabotage or a victim of a crime? When did the Minister of Finance become aware of the allegations of this second far more serious leak? What comment, in the absence of the Minister of Finance, does the Deputy Prime Minister have about the CBC report?

RCMP INVESTIGATION

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, as you know, there is an investigation by the RCMP into this case. It is a serious matter. I am informed by the Commissioner of the RCMP that the investigation has included, from the outset of the situation, the press story referred to. I am also informed by the commissioner that to date there has been no indication that any profiteering has resulted from advance knowledge of the Budget. The investigation is continuing, and it would be inappropriate for me to comment further on this case.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, this is not a matter for the police. This is a matter for Parliament. I want the Deputy Prime Minister to reply to this question.

INQUIRY AS TO WHEN RCMP REPORT AVAILABLE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Regarding the RCMP report, we have now had three weeks of this investigation. When are we going to get a report? When are we going to get the facts, and how are the RCMP qualified to know whether or not there was any profiteering? We have no facts before this House.

I put further questions to the Deputy Prime Minister and I expect him to answer them as the chief officer of Parliament in the House today. I am serious, and he knows I am serious.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Is this the cause of your life?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): If the security was so tight, if there was no negligence, why has it taken three weeks for this investigation to proceed? Why has it taken three weeks for charges to be laid? Exactly how many copies of this Budget were in circulation in order to give the Government and its friends an advance—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Shame, shame!

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I think this is a very important matter, and I believe we must look at the facts as they are without pointing an accusing finger. I think the RCMP is an honourable police force, and when I advised the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that the matter was being investigated and that from the outset, the investigation included the facts that were on the news yesterday. . . The Commissioner informed me, and I think this is important, Mr. Speaker, that so far, there has been no indication that prior knowledge of the Budget provided any benefit or profit whatsoever.

QUERY AS TO DATE MINISTER OF FINANCE KNEW OF ADDITIONAL ALLEGATIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): If that be so, why wasn't Parliament informed of this second set of allegations? Why wasn't the House of Commons told about these additional facts?

Mr. Valcourt: What would you do without the TV, John?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You are the Government. When was the Minister of Finance informed of this second set of allegations? If he was informed, why wasn't the House of Commons informed?

I say again to the Deputy Prime Minister that this is a parliamentary matter. I have known the Deputy Prime Minister a long time. He is snickering at this. This is a very important question, and he ought to know about it.

I want the Minister of Finance back here to reply to the House of Commons as to what is happening.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I will repeat to my Right Hon. colleague that we know what we are doing. We have a police force that is investigating the matter, and as the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has said so many times in the past, it is entirely inappropriate to comment or to intervene in any way in an investigation being conducted by the RCMP.

RELEASE OF INFORMATION – GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and concerns the leak of the Budget papers. I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister, considering the fact that the Solicitor General just admitted in this House that the Government was aware of the second Budget leak from the beginning, how he expects to explain to parliamentarians and the Canadian people that they did not tell the people of this country the whole truth and nothing but the truth. Why did they hide those facts?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, in case the Hon. Member misunderstood, I will repeat what I said. The Commissioner of the RCMP informed me that from the outset, the investigation being conducted by the RCMP included the situation that was in the news yesterday. I think that is clear enough.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member on a supplementary question.

QUERY AS TO WHEN BUDGETARY INFORMATION IN POSSESSION OF TORONTO GROUP

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear that the Government is stonewalling. The Government has an obligation to be forthright and honest with Parliament and with the people of Canada.

I specifically direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister who has an obligation to the House and to Canadians to be honest. My specific question to the Deputy Prime Minister is the following.

When was the Government aware of the second leak, specifically? When was the Government aware of budgetary information being in the hands of a group of people in Toronto?

Could the Deputy Prime Minister also indicate to the House whether he believes that the Government had an obligation to inform the House immediately about that second leak?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, we do not need to receive any lessons in honesty from any Member here.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blais: I want to repeat the following, because it is important. Those are allegations. We have been informed by the Commissioner that to date there has been no indication that any profiteering has resulted from advance knowledge of the Budget. That is clear.

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ABOUT SECOND BUDGET LEAK

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. What the Government is now revealing is not only contempt of Parliament, but it is in contempt of the people of Canada in its responses today.

Considering that the CBC report stated that the Government of Canada, not the RCMP, had been informed after the Minister of Finance learned of the Global leak, and since on the 27th and 28th of the month, and after the weekend, the Government was in the House implying time after time that there was only one Budget leak, I want the Deputy Prime Minister to tell the people of Canada when did the Government learn of the second leak and why is it not telling the people of Canada the truth now?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I repeat, and I will say it a hundred times if I have to, that when allegations were made, the Government's position remained consistent.

Allegations were made. We initiated—We asked the RCMP to start an immediate investigation of all the circumstances of this case.

If other facts are brought forward or referred to the RCMP in the course of this investigation and if, after the investigation has been terminated, charges are laid, the facts will be made public. We have nothing to hide, Mr. Speaker, absolutely nothing!

[English]

QUESTION AS TO WHY INFORMATION WITHHELD FROM PARLIAMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, this is an absolutely extraordinary performance by the Government. The Prime Minister is not here. The Minister of Finance is not here. The man who should be answering these questions and who is responsible is the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada, and he is doing nothing. Instead of smiling and smirking about this fundamental issue of integrity, I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister, when did the Government of Canada learn? Was it the night of the Global leak? If so, why did the Government not do the correct thing when it discussed the Global leak before Parliament, come clean about the whole situation, and tell us? Why did the Government not do that?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, this is another example of rank hypocrisy. If the Government decided to intervene in an investigation being conducted by the RCMP, it would be accused of interfering. We are now doing what we must do as a government, and that is, let an honourable police force conduct its investigation and wait for the results. They want the Government to intervene, but I have no intention of doing so, Mr. Speaker. I am going to let the RCMP do its job.

[English]

ALLEGATION THAT GOVERNMENT MISLEADING PARLIAMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, there are limits as to what one can get away with in Parliament. The Government is deliberately misleading the House and the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Out!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond.

EXPLANATION SOUGHT FROM MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape-Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice and the government House Leader who was intricately involved in explaining to Parliament and to Canadians what happened after the alleged leak of the Budget.

I want to ask the Minister of Justice to explain to the House why the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Justice came into the House and stated that the rationale for delivering the document on television at a press conference was because of a particular leak to Global Television. Why does the Minister of Justice not now take the opportunity to inform the House that there was in fact a second leak?

Will the Minister be honourable enough to rise in his place and explain to the House that indeed there was a second leak, that they had knowledge of the second leak, and that they deliberately misled the House of Commons?

• (1430)

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if my hon. colleague opposite would have the nerve to name one person as deliberately misleading the House.

Mr. Nunziata: Doug Lewis.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The whole Government.

Mr. Lewis: Rather than covering it with "the Government".

Mr. Nunziata: Doug Lewis.

Mr. Speaker: If Hon. Members want to argue about that, they can argue about it later. The Hon. Minister will reply to the question.

Mr. Lewis: Mr.Speaker, immediately that it was discovered that there was a Budget leak, a full criminal investigation was called for involving the RCMP. They were in charge of the entire Budget leak investigation, however many they may be.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dingwall: The plot thickens. It is clear, it is obvious to every reasonable Canadian that the Government had ample knowledge of a number of leaks but refused to inform Parliament.

SECOND BUDGET LEAK—GOVERNMENT KNOWLEDGE

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape–Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact that the Minister of Finance repeatedly said in the House that it was a leak by Global, why did he refuse to tell Parliament that there was a second leak? Why do you continue to mislead the House?

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Dingwall: Why?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I think that when these unfortunate events occurred a few weeks ago, the Government acted responsibly. We were advised of the facts just as you were, and we asked for a full investigation by the RCMP. As for any allegations about other facts, even if you knew about them, like any other Canadian, you would have to go to the RCMP and give them the information.

I think a Member of Parliament has a responsibility to respect the work done by the police. The RCMP will inform us of the results of their investigation.

[English]

REQUEST THAT RCMP REPORT BE MADE PUBLIC

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. There have been a number of references since the leaks about an RCMP report and an RCMP investigation. It is obvious in the House that there is a conflict of interest on that subject on the part of the Government, which has its own version of these facts that it wants to be validated by the RCMP report.

Therefore, I want to ask the Solicitor General to clear the air by agreeing finally that this report that has been leaked and selectively described by members of the Government will be made public today so that all of us can make up our minds about what the report says and where the responsibility lies?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I am rather surprised at the Hon. Member's question, considering the fact that he is a former solicitor general and is aware of the responsibilities of that position. The Solicitor General and Members of this House have a duty to respect investigations being conducted independently by the RCMP. I believe all solicitors general must adhere to the principle of letting the RCMP do its job.

[English]

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I certainly did not and would not make a suggestion that the RCMP was partial or—

Mr. Hawkes: You did. That is exactly what you said.

Mr. Kaplan: —biased in its investigation. I believe the RCMP has made an independent report.

REQUEST THAT RCMP REPORT BE MADE PUBLIC TODAY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): The RCMP has submitted a report to the Government, and we have received a few details. What I am asking now is to have the full report released today.

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I will say it again. My colleague, who is a former solicitor general, ought to know that when a police force conducts an investigation, it does not submit any reports to anyone while the investigation is under way. Any lawyer, any solicitor general ought to know that. It is pretty obvious. Everybody knows that. One does not intervene in an investigation. It doesn't make sense!

TIMING OF GOVERNMENT KNOWLEDGE OF SECOND LEAK

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I go one more time to the Deputy Prime Minister. In light of the fact that a Budget leak is a very serious situation, when the privileged few may have access to information ahead of the people of Canada, I want simply to know the following information: When did the Government find out about the second leak and why it did not inform Parliament immediately?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, perhaps my colleague was away just now when I answered that question. The Commissioner, Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blais: That question was answered, Mr. Speaker, and I can repeat again that the RCMP Commissioner informed me that from the beginning, the investigation included the situation referred to yesterday in the news, and we must let the RCMP do its job. You should listen and you should respect the work done by the RCMP!

[English]

PROFITEERING—GOVERNMENT KNOWLEDGE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General is hiding behind the RCMP.

Some Hon. Members: Oh,oh!

Mr. Nystrom: He says he cannot comment on when and why because there is an RCMP investigation, but he already said it to the House that the RCMP has determined that there has been no profiteering. How can he on the one hand say there has been no profiteering while on the other hand not tell the House when they found out and why they will not tell us?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I think that the point raised by my colleague is important. And that is why the Commissioner informed me that it is important to reassure Canadians that there was no profiteering from the budget leak. I think that is important: to date, no profiteering has been identified. That is why the RCMP Commissioner informed me.

[English]

KNOWLEDGE OF MINISTER OF FINANCE RESPECTING LEAKS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to put my questions again to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Government is using the RCMP as a coverup for a parliamentary problem. What we are getting from the Solicitor General and the Minister of Justice are selective citations from an RCMP investigation. In that instance, we want a full publication of that investigation report now. In light of the Minister of Justice's admission that there may well have been other leaks, he said it here on the floor of the House, we want to know when the Minister of Finance learned of these other leaks, when he informed the Prime Minister of these other leaks, and why Parliament was not informed of these other leaks?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I take it from the right hon. gentleman's question that he has no objection to the fact that there is an RCMP investigation going on. If that is the case, he should let the RCMP do its job. It would be most inappropriate to draw any conclusions or to extract in a selective way anything—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: That is what you did.

Mr. Mazankowski: —anything that pertains to the ongoing investigations.

Mr. Tobin: Who is investigating the Minister of Finance?

Mr. Mazankowski: I would ask the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to consider that it is most inappropriate for he or anyone else to draw conclusions until the full investigation is completed.

REPORT TO PRIME MINISTER BY DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I say to the Deputy Prime Minister, with respect due his office, we draw conclusions because the Deputy Prime Minister refuses to come clean with the House of Commons. I say to him once again that this is not only a police matter, but because of the budgetary implications, because of the implications of fairness, the possibility of profiteering because of premature leaks, this is a parliamentary matter and I want the Deputy Prime Minister to report to the Prime Minister and bring this to the floor of the House of Commons. That is what I want.

• (1440)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman's comments are most unfair. The Solicitor General has given the House the information that has been asked. He has explained as he has been kept informed by the RCMP and has revealed that information. I suggest again that it is most inappropriate to draw conclusions until the investigation is complete. Let the RCMP do its job.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRANSPORT

RAIL SERVICE—SAINT JOHN RIVER VALLEY

Mr. J. W. Bud Bird (Fredericton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport about rail freight service in New Brunswick. We understand that the National Transportation Agency has approved the abandonment of Canadian Pacific routes in the Saint John River Valley as a result of bridges that have been damaged in recent years at Woodstock and Perth–Andover. The fact is that the only remaining rail link is through the City of Fredericton and over the Canadian National bridge at Fredericton.

My question is this: Will the Minister of Transport request a review by the National Transportation Agency of the future of rail service in the Saint John River Valley, including reconsideration of the abandonment approval by CP, and also in the context of any future applications for abandonment of the Fredericton connection by CN?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the NTA has agreed with the abandonment of the CP Rail route for the Saint John River Valley. My colleague should know that if there is any opposition, they could appeal the decision by the NTA. We just have to refer to that decision. In line with that, there is no intention by CN to abandon the bridge used by CP at Fredericton. It could be used for rail transportation.

BUDGET LEAK

REQUEST THAT RCMP REPORT BE MADE PUBLIC TODAY

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister, who has just told us, in answer to the Leader of the Opposition, if I understood correctly, that it was wrong to draw conclusions anything until the RCMP investigation is complete. Now, Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General has just told us that in the RCMP Commissioner's opinion, no one profited from privileged information obtained before the Budget was presented. Now if the Solicitor General can draw such a conclusion in this House, does it mean that the Commissioner's investigation is complete? And if the investigation is over, why do we not have a report today in this House?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I think that the Hon. Member for Papineau—Saint-Michel understood relatively well what he was told. Yes, the facts were reported relatively accurately, except that it is still under investigation and in the RCMP's hands. In this regard, Mr. Speaker, references were just made of some (selective) citations and I would perhaps like to quote the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition himself who said, as reported here in the Toronto Star of February 22, 1987, that he was imposing rules of conduct on his own Members at that time, Mr. Speaker—

REQUEST THAT THE MINISTER RECONSIDER HIS POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): My supplementary is directed to the Solicitor General. Since he admits the investigation is not complete, how can he tell the House that no one profited from privileged information in the Budget? The Solicitor General cannot be selective and only release part of what he was told by the RCMP Commissioner. Does the Minister intend to be fair and frank in this House? Will he have the courage to table forthwith the complete report he has received so far from the RCMP?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I don't need the Hon. Member's advice either. Our Government has acted honourably throughout this case, and I certainly don't need the Hon. Member's advice. As I said before, and this is very important, the Commissioner has told me that so far, there is no indication that prior knowledge of the Budget led to profit taking. The RCMP Commissioner acted responsibly in giving me this information, and I am passing it on immediately to the House.

[English]

GOVERNMENT KNOWLEDGE AS TO SECOND LEAK

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, now that the Deputy Prime Minister has decided to answer questions, I want to say that we have no doubt that the RCMP will live up to its obligations. We want the Government of Canada to live up to its obligations. That is the issue.

I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister this: Considering that the Minister of Finance referred to a single Budget leak, considering that the Minister of Justice referred to a single Budget leak, considering that the Prime Minister himself referred to a single Budget leak and now it has been revealed, without denial by the Government, there was another Budget leak, will the Deputy Prime Minister finally tell the House of Commons the truth about this and tell us when he learned of the second leak?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if the Leader of the NDP wants the RCMP to do their job, he should not attempt to interfere with that job and he should not ask us to interfere.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I say again that the Government of Canada is using the rules of Parliament to disguise the truth instead of revealing the truth and they are deliberately misleading the people of Canada minute after minute here in the House of Commons.

KNOWLEDGE OF MINISTER OF FINANCE—SECOND LEAK

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister this: If as has been claimed recently that the Government wants to be honest and fair with the people of Canada and since we now know that according to one report, a leak existed 48 hours before the Budget came down in the Parliament of Canada, when did the Government and specifically the Minister of Finance learn of that leak and why have they not told the people of Canada about it?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I think it is a shame that the Leader of the New Democratic Party is trying to score political points on a matter of this importance. At the end of April, the Government immediately asked the RCMP to investigate what happened to the Budget, and we must let the RCMP conduct its investigation. We have been informed by the RCMP that so far there was no indication that anyone had profited. . . That is what was said. We have no information that anyone profited. And I think it is important to reassure Canadians on this score.

[English]

ACTIONS OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General would like the people of Canada to believe that the issue today is whether or not the Opposition has confidence in the RCMP. It is not the RCMP whose judgment we question today. The fact of the matter is that on April 26, the Minister of Finance of Canada took the extraordinary step of releasing his Budget via a press conference in the evening.

The additional fact is that on April 27, the Minister came to the House to explain that action and explained it by saying that there had been a single leak on Global Television.

We know today that there was more than one leak. My question to the House Leader and Minister of Justice is the following as it has been asked but not answered so far today: When did the Minister of Finance know of additional leaks? Did he know of additional leaks when he stood in the House and said that his action was taken merely because of a single leak by Global? Did the Minister of Finance mislead the House of Commons?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, when the Global Television report made it very clear that there had been a Budget leak, the RCMP were called in and asked to do a full investigation. That investigation is ongoing.

ALLEGED MISLEADING OF HOUSE OF COMMONS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice has not answered the question. The question is very straightforward. What we and the people of Canada want to know is whether or not the Minister of Finance, who on April 27 and on subsequent days in Parliament, kept referring to a single leak by Global, had knowledge of a second leak in Toronto or other leaks elsewhere. Why did the Minister of Finance of Canada, why did the Prime Minister, and indeed the Minister of Justice deliberately mislead the House of Commons and mislead the people of Canada?

• (1450)

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member knows that that is not appropriate.

Some Hon. Members: Is it true or not?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair has, I think, done everything appropriate to make sure that there has been a series of effective and searching questions. There are answers that are coming back from the Government side. It is not for me to judge them one way or the other. The Hon. Member knows that certainly it is not appropriate to say that somebody in this House is deliberately misleading the House. It is a very serious charge and I would hope that the Hon. Member would withdraw that. The Hon. Member.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I cannot withdraw it.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps we could move on to another Hon. Member at least for now. The Hon. Member for Mississauga East.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

PRIVATIZATION—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Ms. Albina Guarnieri (Mississauga East): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister responsible for Canada Post, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

At hearings held on Tuesday, Members of this House were told of systematic harassment of Canada Post workers by their supervisors. There were accounts of abuses of injured workers, pregnant women and disabled persons.

Many have been told that these punitive measures are a result of directives from senior management in order to prepare the corporation for privatization.

My question is, Mr. Speaker, what exactly is this Government's policy on Canada Post and is it encouraging and endorsing these tactics to further plans to privatize the corporation?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. William C. Winegard (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, the Minister responsible for Canada Post is away on Government business today. I will take notice of the question and make sure that he is aware of the concern.

Ms. Copps: Oh, come on!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member, a supplementary.

HARASSMENT OF POSTAL WORKERS

Ms. Albina Guarnieri (Mississauga East): I commend the Hon. Members on the opposite side of the House for being artful dodgers.

My supplementary question—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Guarnieri: —yesterday the Minister—

Mr. Speaker: I know that the Hon. Member's literary background is impressive but—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: —perhaps she could finish her question.

Ms. Guarnieri: I withdraw the comment. They are not artful.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!.

Ms. Guarnieri: My supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the Minister responsible for Canada Post said that there was an ongoing investigation at Gateway postal facility and yet he refused to commit to the protection of those workers who came forth to testify at the task force hearings.

Witnesses have already complained about intimidation because of their role in the hearings. Is the Government prepared to pledge that this harassment will not be tolerated and guarantee personal intervention of the Minister on behalf of the victims?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. William C. Winegard (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, may I say that if I had had any notice of the question I would have been happy to provide an answer. I had no notice.

An Hon. Member: Just mail the answer.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt.

An Hon. Member: We will give you written notice tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure Hon. Members would want to extend the appropriate courtesies and hear the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt.

GOVERNMENT KNOWLEDGE RESPECTING SECOND LEAK

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I want to get back to what can only be described as a scene out of Orwell, and that is the whole question of the Budget leak.

My question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I have not seen behaviour like this from this Government since the Sinclair Stevens—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Rodriguez: My question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. I want to know, when the Minister of Finance stood in this House at 5.40 on April 27, 1989, to deliver his Budget speech to this House, was the Government aware of any prior leaks other than the one by Global?

Some Hon. Members: hear, hear!

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I think the answer to that question has already been given, and in fact I am somewhat surprised that the Hon. Member remembers exactly when that took place, because I don't think a single member of his Party bothered to stay in the House to listen at that time.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that we acted responsibly and that we must now let the RCMP, which has been investigating this matter, do its job.

[English]

MINISTER'S REFUSAL TO ANSWER QUESTION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada are well aware that the Minister has refused to answer a question that is direct and simple.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: I am going to give him another opportunity to come clean with Canadian people.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: Was the Government aware, according to the record when that Budget speech was delivered to this House, of any prior leak of the Budget? Was it aware, yes or no?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, even if the Hon. Member wants to get tough, it won't change my answer. My explanation was clear and to the point. The RCMP is investigating. We asked them to do so, and we should let them carry on with it, Mr. Speaker.

REQUEST FOR ROYAL COMMISSION

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Deputy Prime Minister. Two days ago my colleagues and I listened in horror at the allegations of sexual harassment, bribery and nepotism at Canada Post. At an emotional hearing where accounts of all of these came forward, eyes filled from the tears that were coming from the witnesses and voices becoming shaky while giving their testimony. They conveyed severe loss of dignity. The people on the far side of the House must realize these are Canadians with concerns. They are members of our society. How can this Government allow this to go on without a royal inquiry?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. William C. Winegard (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, that is indeed the question that was asked of the Minister yesterday and the Minister responded. I will tell him that that same question was asked today.

SITUATION RESPECTING EMPLOYEES—INTERNAL INVESTIGATION

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): I realize the Minister is absent and I did direct my question to the Deputy Prime Minister.

An Hon. Member: He is not answering today.

Mr. Pickard: An answer that Canadians are suffering is not a reasonable answer to this House. An answer that you cannot do anything about a Crown corporation which is mistreating people is not a reasonable answer.

• (1500)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pickard: The current investigation—

Mr. Speaker: Would the Hon. Member put his question?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Spit out your question.

Mr. Pickard: The current internal investigation is like asking an accused robber—

An Hon. Member: As your question.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Pickard: The Minister must carry out a Royal inquiry. When will the Government do it?

Hon. William C. Winegard (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister responsible for Canada Post said that there was an ongoing investigation in this whole matter.

Ms. Copps: Another RCMP investigation.

PRIVILEGE

COMMENTS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising from answers that were given by Ministers of the Crown, specifically the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais), during the course of the proceedings today.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What is your point?

Mr. Broadbent: There are important questions on this side of the House concerning the timing and, in particular, details of knowledge that the Government of Canada had about an additional budget leak that was discussed in a CBC television newscast last night.

Answers we received in the House, in our view, misled the House in terms of the extent of the knowledge of the Government on this important matter. Specifically, the Solicitor General said, on the one hand, that he could not talk about an investigation by the RCMP already in progress. On the other hand, he referred quite specifically to another part of the investigation when he said that according to information he had been given by the RCMP there was no concern about profiteering.

We say two things, that the Government of Canada has an obligation to be forthright in answering questions about the timing of knowledge of leaks of the Budget. The Government conveyed information when the Budget came down that only one leak had taken place.

Second, we say that the Solicitor General has not exercised his responsibility and is denying our rights as Members when he says that he cannot comment on an RCMP report, yet he can speak selectively about that report.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the question of privilege—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What is the question of privilege?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —raised by the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). If, on deliberation, you are to find a prima facie case, I would be willing to go into it more fully.

This is a parliamentary matter, not a matter for an RCMP cover-up on behalf of the Government. Second, contradictory answers today are so flagrant that they amount to a contempt of Parliament. If you find a prima facie case, I will be glad to support this move, sir.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, let us put this in perspective.

Some Hon. Members: Please do.

Mr. Mazankowski: What we have here is the Opposition basing their questions on information that was contained in a CBC report which alleges that employees of an unnamed company somewhere in Canada had budget information. This whole question period has been used on that basis, on that particular allegation.

These and all other allegations are being investigated by the RCMP.

Ms. Copps: Are there others?

Mr. Mazankowski: Why is the Leader of the Opposition attempting to interfere with the investigation of the RCMP? He should know better of that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I have listened carefully to the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) whose intervention is supported by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). The intervention is on the basis of privilege.

This has been a very vigorous Question Period and many questions have been asked. It is quite obvious that some Members are not satisfied that they have all of the answers. That is a matter that happens often in this House. It does not take anything away from the seriousness of the issue that is being pursued, and I certainly have no comment to make on that. But I have to say that while there may well be a grievance and there may well be a complaint this is not, strictly speaking, a question of privilege, and I am so ruling.

POINTS OF ORDER

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF DOCUMENT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, in the answers that the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) gave today—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Not true.

Mr. Murphy: —he kept citing from the documents of the RCMP—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Not true.

Mr. Murphy: —and, according to Beauchesne's Citation 327, subsection (2), we find:

> It has been admitted that a document which has been cited ought to be laid upon the Table of the House, if it can be done without injury to the public interest.

Mr. Lapierre: It was in a red file.

Mr. Murphy: It goes on in subsection (5)—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): No document was cited.

Ms. Copps: How do you know? Have you seen it?

Mr. Murphy: It is Beauchesne's if you wish to find out. Some of you don't know the points of order.

Mr. Speaker: I want to bring it to the attention of Hon. Members that the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr.

Murphy), who is the Whip of the Democratic Party, is rising with a perfectly appropriate argument and is citing authorities to assist the Chair. I hope that Hon. Members will co-operate in hearing this argument.

Mr. Murphy: Subsection (5) states:

> To be cited, a document must be quoted or specifically used to influence debate. The admission that a document exists or the reading of the salutation or address of a letter does not constitute citing.

However, the Solicitor General did specifically refer and use that document—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Not true. You misunderstood.

Mr. Murphy: —in trying to influence debate in the House of Commons. He does not have to read from it, but he has to cite it and use it to influence debate. Certainly he was using the RCMP report to indicate a certain position and I believe under the rules of the House of Commons he must table that document.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I never saw a worse example of irresponsibility than this afternoon. I am not as experienced as some Hon. Members, but I have an experience of respect for the House and of responsibility towards— Yes! It is an example of responsibility that all Members of this House should have, Mr. Speaker, to the mandate of a Minister of the Crown.

I never said that I was referring "specifically" to a document. I had a note to help me answer the question and I merely said that I had been informed by the RCMP. I did not refer to a "specific" document.

I find that— I do not know what he is referring to. We can look at the blues, Mr. Speaker, to see exactly what was said. I have absolutely nothing to hide. I simply referred to and passed on what the RCMP Commissioner told me.

[English]

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, in the heat of debate during Question Period the Hon. Leader of the NDP accused the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) of deliberately misleading this House and I know he would want to withdraw those remarks.

Mr. Speaker: It may be another matter to deal with, but at the moment, I am dealing with the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy).

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, it is a fact that in this Chamber the Minister concerned said that the RCMP had reported that no one made money from the previous information out of the leak. This was a selective quote from information the Minister received and told this House.

Now, the point made by my colleague and earlier during the questions, which is relevant, but dealing strictly with the point made by my colleague and referring to Beauchesne, once the Minister refers to that report in this House, it is the rule that when he said he had been told that no one profited from the leak, he revealed he had information, and we want that information tabled in this House.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, again during Question Period the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) drew a conclusion. He drew a conclusion that there was no profiteering. Presumably he drew that conclusion as a result of some information that he was privy to from the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. If, in fact, he was being forthright with the House during Question Period then he has some information which led him to conclude that there was no profiteering. The question then becomes, how can the Solicitor General on one hand say that the investigation is continuing while saying to the House unequivocally and categorically that there was no profiteering? Either the RCMP told him directly by way of document or verbally that there was no profiteering or the Minister is deliberately misleading the House.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: The Minister, if I heard him correctly, stated unequivocally that he was not quoting from a document, that he was not referring to a document. We have had these cases in the past, and I draw that to the attention of Hon. Member. I will look carefully at the exchange and will report back to the House. Unless the Minister feels that it is necessary to argue the matter further—

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I do not want it said that I misled the House. I cannot tolerate people saying that I misled the House. Never, Mr. Speaker! I wanted—

[English]

Mr. Nunziata: You're in a conflict of interest. You're an officer of the court and you should stop being a Conservative and lead as a Solicitor General.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Get out of the gutter.

Mr. Nunziata: Go back to law school, Joe. Get a decent legal education and then you can talk about legal principles.

Mr. Speaker: I think it is time to move on to another matter.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY—INSENSITIVE ATTITUDES TOWARD WOMEN

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I rise at the earliest possible moment on a point of order arising from yesterday's proceedings under Standing Order 31. On page 1840 of Hansard, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), perhaps unintentionally but nevertheless quite unfairly, misrepresented my feelings about the equality of women. The right hon. gentleman said, as recorded on page 1840 of Hansard, the following:

> These Tory Members say, and I am also going to quote the Member from Hamilton—Wentworth, that women "aren't ambitious".

I want to put the record straight. The right hon. gentleman knows that I would never say that, let alone think that. He knows that I have fought for the equality of women for years. Surely any Member of Parliament whose electoral boundaries are surrounded by those of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Phinney), the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mrs. Martin) as well as the provincial MPP for Wentworth East, Miss Shirley Collins and the Hon. Mayor of Glanford, Helen Bell, should know that women are both ambitious and successful.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think this is a point of order. The Hon. Member has clearly made his point.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member rose quite properly, if I may suggest that to Your Honour. Yesterday, he happened to intervene for another purpose just prior to my own intervention under Standing Order 31. I inadvertently grouped him in my remarks when I meant to refer to two other Hon. Members, and I apologize to him. I in no way meant to reflect upon him.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I thank the right hon. gentleman.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, you will be glad to know that I am changing the subject. Since it is Thursday and time to find out what the Government has in store for us next week, I would like to ask the House Leader to give us the daily program for the coming week—

Ms. Copps: —and something to help make it go down!

[English]

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, today we will continue debate on Bill C-11, the borrowing authority Bill. There may be somewhat of a delay, but we have indications that the House will finish debate on this matter today. If, as and when the debate is finished and a recorded division is requested, it has been agreed that the recorded division will be deferred until 6 o'clock Tuesday next. If it is convenient to the Parties involved in private Members' hour, that private Members' hour will commence immediately if debate concludes before 5 p.m. Private Members' hour would be advanced as would any adjournment debate which were to take place after private Members' hour. The House would adjourn immediately thereafter.

The Government has no Government business today other than Bill C-11. Friday is an allotted day as is Tuesday next. Under the Standing Orders, we cannot have a vote on Friday, but if there were to be a vote called on Friday, it would also be deferred until Tuesday.

That is the menu up until Tuesday. We will be in touch with the offices of opposition Parties to inform them as to the business for Wednesday.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Portage—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, before Question Period, I was referring to the article entitled "How did we get into this mess?" I was referring to Bill C-11, the Bill that would provide authority to borrow an additional $25 billion. I was commenting on the fact that it was during the 20 years since 1968 when the Liberals achieved power that we started this absolutely horrendous deficit. Year by year, we moved gradually deeper into the deficit until 1984 when we came to power, we inherited a deficit of $38 billion. A Member of the New Democratic Party is staring me right in the face right now. He will remember that better than everyone.

The first Budget of our Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) for the first time reduced that deficit, and by 1985, according to this article, the Minister actually cut the deficit by nearly $4 billion to $34 billion. That is significant. That is what Liberal Members claimed that they too would like to do during the last federal election. They said they wanted to start reducing the deficit.

The following year, 1986, according to this article, the federal deficit was slashed another $4 billion. How can opposition Members scream at our desire to bring some sanity to the economy by reducing the deficit of Canada? In every case, they tell us that we should have spent more. I am telling the Canadian people who are not present in the House of Commons that since we were re-elected in November of 1988, opposition Members have asked the Government to spend more money. In fact, they will probably vote against this borrowing authority Bill because it does not provide for enough. They would like to throw us into a deeper deficit situation.

Mr. Murphy: Talk about the Portage base.

Mr. Holtmann: I did that. The Hon. Member says I should talk about the Portage base. If he had been in the House earlier, he would have heard me speak about the Portage base and how we will handle that problem. We will create more jobs before the four years are up. The Hon. Member should consider what will happen to Churchill and his plans to increase employment there. He ought to consider that, but I am sure he will not. He will never offer a solution for bringing prosperity to northern Manitoba. He lives in Winnipeg, he does not even live in his riding and represent it as he should.

Going on to 1988, the deficit was still too high, and I am sure Members of the New Democratic Party would also like to find ways to reduce the deficit.

However, their Member stood up and said we should have spent more on defence. He has to reckon that with his partners over in the corner. I recall that during the election campaign they were going to pull all the troops out of Europe and our NATO commitment. That is what they were going to do. They were going to give the money saved to the social welfare of this country. They found all kinds of money, and today the Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) stands there and says that they would have done it differently. Now he is spending what your back-benchers are taking away. Fantastic logic that they have over there. Do they actually have a plan on how they would reduce the deficit? Stand up in your place and tell us how you would stop putting this terrible deficit on your children. How are you going to do it? I tell you, Mr. Speaker, they have absolutely no plan.

I will close by advising every Canadian to see if they can get their Member of Parliament to send them a copy of this article from the Montreal Gazette of Sunday, April 23, 1989, as to how we got into this mess. They will find out that it is the Conservative Government that is going to get us out of this mess.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On debate, the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett).

Borrowing Authority

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, this is a Bill dealing with Her Majesty in the name of the Government of Canada borrowing $25 billion, either on the international money markets or internally in Canada.

On behalf of the Canadian Government, this Bill, which by its background and its guarantees, represents a solid tradition of government intervention in the economy for whatever the Government of the day wants. When I talk about solid intervention, it is based on a simple word, trust. Trust has to have consistency. It is ironic that while we debate this Bill related to the Budget itself, and a Bill required to implement the Budget, today we have discovered that we have not been told the whole truth about who knew what and when they knew it regarding the Budget itself. We are asked now to debate a Bill for $25 billion worth of borrowing, when an RCMP report was referred to selectively in this House by a Minister as he attempted to assure the Canadian people and this House that there had been no criminal activity proven and no one had benefited from, not the one leak, but the two leaks of the Budget.

I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, and I put it to this Chamber, how is it that we can continue with the debate on this Bill and $25 billion worth of borrowing when the House does not even know the truth about who knew what and when about the Budget that this Bill is related to?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, we are asking Canadians and international financiers to put up money, as they have in the past, on the basis of a consistently good record of the Canadian Government regardless of the political strife. In this instance, this Bill goes forward under a cloud. The cloud over this Bill is a simple fact of confusion, misinformation and indeed direct lies about who knew what and when. How can we go ahead with a Bill when that hangs over us? The honourable thing for the Government to do would be to amend the order of debate, pull this Bill off the Order Paper and ensure that everybody who may borrow money from this Government knows that their interest rates, their securities are guaranteed and that no one had an unfair advantage.

To ensure that atmosphere around it, the Minister chose to leak a portion of the RCMP report to leave the impression that no one has made any money as a result of that leak. How do we know that, Mr. Speaker? We have not seen the report. We did not get answers as to when the Government knew of the leak, and we have not seen any whit of that report.

I cannot in good conscience, Mr. Speaker, participate in a debate that has become a sham and part of a cover-up by a Government that is not telling the truth to the Canadian people.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, I watched a similar debate in this House during the Sinc Steven's affair. I thought this Government had learned a lesson, but it has not. I for one am not going to sit through another cover-up. I do not see how we can continue with this Bill until we are told the full truth.

Therefore, I move, seconded by the Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn):

That this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Barrett) which was negatived on the following division:

POINT OF ORDER

COMMENTS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, earlier today I rose on a point of order asking the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) to withdraw the remarks he made to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) which were that the Deputy Prime Minister was deliberately misleading this House. I would ask that he do the honourable thing and rise and withdraw those remarks.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If I am correct, I believe the Speaker said he would look into the matter and report back to the House.

PRIVILEGE

COMMENTS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, precisely on the same subject.

Earlier today in the House, Members of both opposition Parties were asking Ministers of the Crown to indicate exactly when they learned the information about an alleged second leak on the Budget. Time after time, for 45 minutes in the House, Ministers of the Crown refused to answer that. Right after the Question Period the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) went outside the Chamber and speaking to the media, answered the question.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

I say to your Honour that the people of Canada and their elected representatives on both sides of the House have a right to have Ministers of the Crown live up to their obligations. When they are asked questions in the House they should answer in the House and not outside before the TV cameras.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Withdraw. Show a little honour.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I am asking Your Honour if the Minister of Justice will now rise on this question of privilege and say in the House what he said outside.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not think there is a need for the Minister of Justice to reply. I know it is an important matter but I do not find that it is a question of privilege.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1989–90

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C–11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mrs. Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate today and will concentrate on two or three areas of concern.

There are many areas that I would like to discuss, such as taxes on the poor, the Atlantic Canada Opportunity Agency, the ERDA agreements and bases. I will try to concentrate my message today, however, on three areas that I find very hard to take as far as the people in Nova Scotia are concerned.

The Budget just passed did two things which I feel have disastrous consequences. These consequences will be disastrous to the universality of Government programs for all Canadians. One is in the area of transfer payments to the provinces. Under the Established Programs Financing these monetary transfers will be reduced. This means that moneys received in two very important areas, health services and post–secondary funding, will be less than anticipated by the provinces.

Between fiscal years 1986–87 to 1991–92, the Atlantic provinces will lose $779 million. Nova Scotia will lose $301.45 million. That total is one that I do not think any Nova Scotian can accept in terms of reduction of services in the Established Programs Financing as it relates to our health programs and our post–secondary funding for students at universities and other training schools.

The federal Government has attacked the old age security and the family allowances. It is able to sell the erosion of these universal programs by saying that it will only cut benefits to those pensioners and families who have over $50,000 in income. The Government implies that the rich can afford the cuts.

But the federal Government is tampering with programs that assist all Canadians. This is what we call universality. All Canadians are treated equally with respect to Government programs. Once we allow the Government to start cutting these universal programs, we will see them deteriorate.

There are, in my opinion, other areas that could have been cut by this federal Government. The Minister of Finance could have followed the advice of his think tank, the Economic Council of Canada, who prepared a report in February of this year on the taxation of income from capital in Canada. But, no, he did not do that. What were the areas the Council suggested? We did not see any of them in the Budget. They were some of the alternative approaches to tax reform as put forward by the Economic Council.

In its summary where we find these proposals, capital cost allowances that reflect as much as possible true economic depreciation at current replacement costs; indexed inventory cost accounting; a full taxation of real capital income including capital gains and complete indexation of exemptions, deductions and tax brackets at personal levels.

There are other recommendations, but this Government did not do that. It went after the biggest tax grab on the backs of the poorest people in Canada and on cut-backs to the East in one clean swoop that have never been seen before. I mention that because it will be hard on easterners. I can only think that the old saying my grandparents had that Tory times are tough times will become a reality again.

I now want to talk about the unemployment insurance program. I am glad the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) is here. Perhaps she can hear something from an easterner. This Government has decided to privatize, privatize without giving any options to those people who cannot afford the privatization of the unemployment insurance program.

What does privatize mean? To the Minister of Employment it means that employers and employees will be the only source of funding for this program. It means that with this new direction of the fund that some of the concerns which the unemployment insurance met in the past will not be looked at by the private sector. What does it mean? It means that there is a new system. It will be streamlined into one phase from three. This means there is no longer the initial phase that gives one week of insurable earnings for every week worked, up to a maximum of 25 weeks. There will be no extended benefit period that gives you one week of benefits for every two weeks worked, up to a maximum of 13 additional weeks of benefits, and no longer any regionally extended benefits. Instead, there is only one set of benefits paid based on the regional unemployment rate and the qualifying period.

In many cases the number of weeks needed to qualify has been increased and the duration of benefits has been reduced. What does it mean to an area like South West Nova? In the region of Yarmouth, one of the economic zones in Nova Scotia, the unemployment rate fluctuates between 6.5 per cent and 9.6 per cent. I want to take an average and tell you what it means in terms of next year starting January 1.

If the unemployment rate is between 7 per cent to 8 per cent, the entrance requirement is 18 weeks and benefits of 21 weeks. Under the new system, residents in Yarmouth will lose from five to seven weeks of benefits.

For example, in Yarmouth where the unemployment rate was 9.3 per cent in October, 1988, the claimant needed only 10 weeks to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits and was eligible for 32 weeks of benefits, 10 weeks of initial benefits and an additional 22 weeks of regionally extended benefits.

Under the new system the claimant must now work for 16 weeks and will only receive 27 weeks of benefits. I just took this phase because most constituents in the past year in South West Nova have had to have 16 weeks to 20 weeks of insurable earnings because of the clause concerning repeat benefits. The Minister says we are doing away with the repeater provision but it is still a hardship.

Under the new system the claimant must now work for 16 weeks and will only receive 27 weeks of benefits. In other words, there is a loss of seven weeks. In areas where the unemployment rate is 6.6 per cent, the claimant will lose more. He or she will lose six weeks of benefits, yet will have to work six additional weeks to qualify. According to Statistics Canada the average weekly payment in 1987 in Nova Scotia was $182.23. I hope the Minister listens to that because I believe it is the area that will hurt the most. A claimant in the Yarmouth region, a region with an unemployment rate of 9.3 per cent, will lose five weeks of benefits. This loss will amount to $911.15. Similarly, a reduction of six weeks of benefits amounts to a loss of $1,093.38. If the unemployment rate in the Province of Nova Scotia was 9.3 per cent, and if the workforce in 1987 was 400,000, and I could not get that figure so I based it on the population, then the loss would be about $40.6 million based on the 1987 rate.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration stated in the House that she will use the money saved to retrain people. There will be no savings for the Government from Nova Scotia. The Government is getting out of the extended and regionally extended benefit period, except in those four areas out of 48 in which the unemployment rate was over 15 per cent. She does not understand the seasonality of this country. Both she and the Minister of Finance are from Bay Street.

We are keeping Toronto business happy, as we heard in the earlier debate. What does the Minister plan to do? Does she plan to move people from seasonal areas in Nova Scotia to Toronto? We experienced that before and it did not work. The Government has to find jobs for people in the industries that are there, tourism, fisheries, forestry and farming.

I want to talk about fisheries as it relates to Nova Scotia, the people, the businesses and the well-being of a natural resource that we have taken for granted. The Nova Scotia fishery is the richest resource in the world. Unlike oil and most other resources, it is a renewable resource containing a rich protein. Both federal and provincial governments will have to address this serious matter very soon.

The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) may wish to blame a lack of fish, too many fishermen, over-fishing, too many fish plants and the foreigners, and I am getting tired of hearing all the excuses he uses, but this Government must take responsibility for the present mess. It cannot find any more whipping boys. National Sea Products is in trouble, but so is the inshore fishery and the communities dependent on that fishery. The inshore fishery has been in trouble for over a year. One need only look at the results of the last federal election. The Prime Minister should have learned his lesson and appointed a new Minister, one who would take action and understand the problems.

This Government has been in power for almost five years and we now know, as our grandparents knew, what Tory times are like. They will be tough. Wait until the unemployment insurance cuts affect those in the Atlantic. Wait until the cut-backs in essential services and cut-backs in ERDA and ACOA affect the people. These measures will soon be felt by all Nova Scotians, all Atlantic Canadians and all Canadians, particularly those in rural Canada. The Government does not seem to understand the nature of rural Canada.

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, Bill C-11, the borrowing Bill, responds directly to the Budget just brought forward, and that Budget raises serious problems for many of my constituents of Northumberland.

Northumberland, on the shores of Lake Ontario, is both a rural and an urban riding with a population of approximately 80,000 people, 17 per cent of whom are seniors. The average income in Northumberland is in the low middle-income area with women earning only slightly more than half the full-time wage of men, something that is of great concern to me. The women are largely employed in clerical and service industries while males in comparison are largely employed in manufacturing and construction.

The Budget raises very serious problems for my constituents of Northumberland. Besides being concerned over the expenditure cuts and the impact of tax increases, borrowing money for some of the expenditures supported in the Budget is also of serious concern.

That is not to say that my constituents do not agree with the need to address the debt and the continuing deficit. However, my constituents are not ignorant of the fact that the Government more than doubled the debt since 1984, and when distributing largesse prior to the fall 1988 election in order to garner support and votes, did not see the deficit and debt as a major problem. The Government belittles the intellect of the voters of my riding if it thinks they do not recognize the duplicity of the Government. They ask, as do I, why is the Government not reducing interest rates in order to control the deficit and the growing debt.

We are all concerned that the Government is permitting interest rates to rise in the last months, the heavy increases in taxes, the burden of which is borne by the poor and middle-income families in my riding, and that the short-sighted expenditure cuts all combine to hurl our country over the brink into the pit of a recession. The Government does not seem to understand that expenditure cuts are not necessarily a saving.

As I mentioned at the outset of my remarks, my riding is comprised primarily of lower and lower-middle-income families. The burden of increased taxes by this Government has fallen principally on the shoulders of this group. The logic and morality of the Government defies understanding when one realizes that most people in my riding have experienced serious increases in their tax burden since the Government came to power but those in upper income brackets have actually experienced lower tax rates.

There are other very serious Budget expenditure cut-backs which are of great concern to the people of Northumberland. On April 8, 1989, I held a public meeting in Cobourg with a large group of citizens who at that time were alarmed by the rumours of possible VIA Rail cut-backs. The Budget is now before us and we, through Bill C-11, are being asked to support the Budget, a Budget which is blindly cutting $100 million in VIA Rail's combined operating and capital expenditures.

Hundreds of constituents of Northumberland have voiced their concerns to me about the Conservative Government's cut-backs to VIA Rail passenger service. They have presented me with petitions and briefs on how our community will be adversely affected by such a move. Opportunities for affordable housing and a better quality of life depend on the growth of non-metropolitan areas, and VIA Rail was fundamental in the growth and development of Northumberland. The Government appears to be denying us opportunity.

In 1988, over 160,000 passenger rail trips originated and ended at the three station stops of Port Hope, Cobourg and Trenton Junction which serve our area. Canada's transportation system is a necessity to my riding and to the nation. Why did the Government cut back on VIA Rail at a time when VIA's service has been improving, when revenue from passengers alone has substantially risen and when the average occupancy rate is on the rise? There is no justification for cut-backs when Canadians rely on this essential service and when VIA's services have been improving.

The farmers of my riding of Northumberland are also concerned, not just with budget cut-backs in agriculture but with the Government's apparent loss of support for supply-management and marketing board programs. The dairy farmers of my riding, for example, are threatened by the fact that the federal Budget is reducing dairy programs by an estimated $14 million. These actions are contrary to the Government's own long-term dairy policy which includes a complete commitment to supply management. On top of these Budget slashes to the dairy industry, the federal Government has now decided to cap industrial milk prices until December, 1990, to implement decreases in industrial milk prices if the cost-of-production formula goes down, and will ask the provinces to extend the cap on prices of fluid milk.

The dairy industry understands that these decisions have been made as a result of the April 1989 GATT negotiations meetings, contrary to the clear advice given by the dairy farmers in Canada. To decision to cap milk prices makes no sense. Support prices respond to changes in the cost of production, and production is controlled by means of the quota system with the producer paying the cost of surplus disposal.

The dairy farmers in my riding are asking what other group in the country is being arbitrarily told that their income cannot rise. There is a serious injustice and deceit being perpetrated against the dairy farmers in Northumberland and Canada. The dairy farmers in Northumberland will be edified to learn from my colleague on the opposite side of the House who said today that the only poor dairy farmer is the one who does not get up in the morning.

There are so many other serious impacts that this Budget will foist upon the people of my riding. The Government has reneged on its commitment to increase day care in this country. The Unemployment Insurance Program is so seriously eroded as to be threatened with extinction as a national public program. The universality of the Old Age Security and family allowance programs is being thrown into jeopardy.

I wish to address my remaining remarks to the unconscionable cut-backs in official development assistance which the Conservative Government has included in its Budget. The Government of Canada traditionally directs about 3 per cent to all expenditures to official development assistance. In disregard of the overwhelming opinion of more than 70 per cent of Canadians who support Canada's prior commitment to official development assistance, government cut-backs to ODA represent 29 per cent of all expenditure cuts in the Budget. No other program has experienced the Conservative slice so drastically.

The Budget cut-backs to ODA represent the third time since 1984 that the Government has reneged on its commitment to meet the international targeted ratio of .7 per cent GNP to overseas development assistance. The fact is that that target is no longer even talked about by this Government. ODA expenditures have been cut by $360 million or 12 per cent for the year 1989-1990. Instead of spending the $3.1 billion ODA expected for this fiscal year, the expenditure will be $2.44 billion, bringing the ODA GNP ratio back to .43 per cent from its almost .5 per cent of last year. The formula to be applied to spending over the next five years will save the Government $1.8 billion.

The Government is causing Canada to lose all credibility among donor and recipient countries alike. We now join the U.S. as the only other developed nation cutting the ODA GNP ratio. We now rank last in ODA ratio expenditures when compared to other comparable countries such as the four Nordic countries, the Netherlands, France, and Belgium. Canada has had a reputation as a caring, concerned nation, a leader among nations in development assistance. We have sacrificed our national reputation in this Budget. We have told the poor that we have a debt, that we have had a drought. Their debt, their droughts are of minor concern. We regret this is just a little cut, in the words of the Minister, but the fact is that thousands of poor and starving will die because of the ODA budget cuts.

It is interesting to review just where the ODA budget cuts will be felt. Bilateral and multilateral food aid will be cut by $65 million this year. International humanitarian assistance, multilateral technical co-operation, bilateral regional programs, and international NGOs will be cut by $112 million. Yet, certain ODA budget expenditures will rise. Industrial co-operation, for example, will increase by $10 million. Salaries in CIDA will rise by $3 million, and government promotion of our Development Assistance Program gets a boost of $13 million.

Where is our credibility? What is at stake for Canada? This Government does not appreciate the threat that our ODA cut-backs pose to fragile democracies, world security, environmentally sustainable development and trade. We are the big losers. As I stated at the outset, the Government does not appreciate that expenditure cuts are not necessarily a saving. The budget policies are short-sighted, not only in terms of Canada's future well-being, but as it affects our well-being in relation to Third World countries. Therefore, I could not support Bill C-11, the borrowing Bill, as it supports the Conservative Budget.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a point of order, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions between the Parties in the House. Essentially what it amounts to is that the NDP will probably have one more speaker, the Liberal Party will have the balance of the time, and we, as the Government, will not be putting up any further speakers this afternoon on this debate.

There also would be no more dilatory motions or votes, and just prior to five o'clock we will conclude the debate which will allow us to proceed with questions and defer the votes until next week.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the proposal by the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. Is there agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to stand in the House today to speak to Bill C-11, although I am sure my message is going to be very depressing.

I wish to speak on the borrowing Bill and on the $25 billion it requires to run this country. We accept that, but we certainly do not accept the method by which the money is raised and certainly not how it is spent.

Very often we in the New Democratic Party are accused of being quite negative. We accept that criticism simply because this Government leaves us little reason to be positive. There is little reason to be optimistic. The Budget is totally negative, and I shall provide a litany of negatives in a few moments. We as politicians are all guilty of rhetoric from time to time, but the danger is when one starts to believe one's own rhetoric. My genuine fear is that this Government believes itself. I believe that if you say something often enough, loud enough, even if it is less than truthful, you start to believe it. I sincerely feel that this Government has put blinders on and refuses to see what is really happening to this country, despite the fact that everyone else can see it.

The Budget is a complete contradiction of what government members told the country in October and November, 1988. They were in their pre-election mode. These surely are not the same people who spoke then. Surely they must have dual personalities. Dr. Jekyll has indeed turned into Mr. Hyde.

As to the Budget itself, I heard a Tory Minister say that everyone is against this Budget, that nobody likes it and therefore it must be a good Budget. What sort of bizarre reasoning is that? It could only be Tory reasoning that would suggest that this is logical. They are correct that everyone is against it. We have an unlikely ally in the director of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Roger Hamel, who says that this is the biggest tax grab in Canada's history. He is against the Budget, as are the Canadian Chamber Commerce, environmentalists, foresters, women's groups, the military, people involved in transport, the unemployed, the provincial Governments, New Democrats, and Liberals, although yesterday evening the provincial Liberals in Ontario added insult to injury. They are against the federal Budget, but indeed provincial Liberals in Ontario are certainly bringing to Ontarians the same thing the Conservative Government brought to the country federally.

I could list more and more groups ad nauseam that are against this Budget, but the bottom line is that Canadians are against it. If I could be parochial for just a few moments, how does it affect northern Ontario? Everyone will have to pay more tax, but in particular the middle class and the lower class group. It was suggested by one of the Members across the way that we have closed many of the tax loopholes. That begs the question: Why not close them all immediately?

The Canadian Ontario provincial forestry agreements will die. They are being bought out. I thank the Hon. Minister of State for Forestry for his efforts. I believe that he is convinced but helpless to do what he wants to do for the forests of the country.

The insidious sea lamprey will proliferate unless we immediately receive $2 million to address the issue. One in three fish presently caught are already wounded by this parasite. I wonder how many have died. This is aggravated or complicated by the fact that millions are spent in stocking these very same waters.

Universality and the claw back on Old Age Security and family allowances have been attacked despite the Prime Minister's assurance that social programs would be enhanced by the ill-conceived, ill-negotiated, ill-contrived Free Trade Agreement. This was simply not true.

Sault Ste. Marie is a border city. Many people thought that they would benefit immediately from the Free Trade Agreement, that they could go into Michigan and buy many products at lower prices. This has obviously proven to be totally false. Grocery and food products would save each family $200 a year. That has proven to be false. One of the great supporters, Galen Weston, has suggested that indeed food prices have to go up. That is another contradiction. I had best stop myself from getting into my free trade tirade and harangue. It has already been exposed for what it is worth—nothing.

The Budget gives us double indemnity. The Government got us coming and it got us going. The Budget is full of negatives and cut, cut, cut. There is not one positive initiative in the whole document. At least the Government could have taken one initiative and said: "All right, Canadians, we are cutting you everywhere, but we are going to give you one initiative". There was none. The one I continually espouse as a municipal affairs critic is: Why does the Government not take the one-cent increase in gasoline tax and the extra one cent in 1990 and give it to the municipalities whose infrastructure is crumbling? Those municipalities can ill afford to put a further tax burden on to the citizens in the municipalities. There was not one positive step in the whole Budget.

People in northern Ontario do not need regressive taxes. In fact, we do not need regressive taxes in Canada. We require assistance, but direct government assistance with little or no strings attached. There are no strings attached, but there are very large coarse ropes attached. I speak of some of the smoke and mirror programs that have been announced across the country.

For example, I wish to speak of the much touted Community Futures Program. There is a board of directors in my community that makes decisions about initiatives. If an initiative passes that board of directors, it goes to another board of directors in Thunder Bay. If it passes that board of directors, it goes to yet another board of directors in Sudbury. If it passes that board of directors, it must go to Toronto and to the southern Ontario board of directors. If it passes that board, it then comes to Ottawa.

Mr. Lapierre: How many Tories along the way?

Mr. Butland: Every one of them is a Tory appointee. It is a shame. However, if it makes it through all the boards of directors it can still be turned down. The Minister may say: "I am sorry". Despite all those Tories saying that it is a good idea, it can still be turned down at the drop of a hat.

I could go on for hours, and I would like to. It is depressing to speak in this manner, but the Government leaves us no alternative. It is a depressing Budget. It is a depressing Government. The ads are depressing. The Minister of Finance is depressing. His message is depressing. The economy is depressing. Canadians are depressed, and very soon our whole economy will be in depression.

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the Budget that was delivered to the Canadian public on April 26, 1989 will be long remembered in the history of parliamentary procedure. It will be remembered, regrettably, for the manner in which the document was placed before the people of Canada, as well as its devastating impact on all regions of Canada due to the spending cuts and tax increases.

The Government has now tabled departmental Estimates. Members opposite would have the people of Canada believe that this is the Conservative answer to a Liberal legacy, which the government Members are claiming demanded such severe measures. However, I wish to tell the Government that the people of Canada will not buy that argument any longer. The people of Canada are tired of being deceived and are equally fed up with broken promises and commitments. The people of Canada want a Government to tell it like it is, not the way it was. They want a Government that will be straightforward and treat all Canadians fairly and equitably.

I would like to take this opportunity to review the aspects of the proposed Estimates that are both offensive and unacceptable to the people of Canada. Canadians wonder what will happen to them as a result of the reductions in unemployment insurance, VIA Rail cutbacks, reduced regional development programs, reduced provincial transfers, the loss of universal social programs, reduced defence programs, broken child care commitments, reduced stabilization programs for agriculture, reduced Canada Post services, and the list goes on.

However, Canadians do not have to wonder what will happen on the taxation side. The answer is brutally clear. Although the Government has taken the axe to so many of our programs, at the same time it has cut deeper into the pocket books of Canadians by increasing gasoline taxes, increasing income tax surtaxes, increasing sales taxes, increasing excise levies, increasing premiums for UIC, and increasing privatization of Crown corporations.

My colleagues, Members opposite and I are all aware that the Government did not inherit the fiscal disaster which has put it in a position of introducing such Estimates. The people of Canada deserve a Government that accepts responsibility for its own actions. Those actions have doubled the debt in the past four years and have increased the annual debt service charges to 30 per cent of government spending. The people of Canada deserve a Government that makes them proud to be a Canadian, not one that penalizes them for being a Canadian.

In the fall of 1988, the Prime Minister promised Canadians that social benefits and programs, especially those for the elderly, would be improved as long as he remains Prime Minister. Today his commitment to the seniors will cause certain Canadian seniors to sacrifice old age pensions.

During the election campaign, the Prime Minister told Canadians that there was nothing to preclude the Government from maintaining all social and regional economic development programs. His commitment to social programs will see a complete revision to the Unemployment Insurance Commission. There will be increased premiums for employers and employees and increased qualification periods, while at the same time reduced benefits. Today the Government's commitment to regional economic development will see a reduction in investment in all parts of Canada. Again, the election commitment in reality is an election deception.

The Prime Minister stated that the Government would reintroduce the child care legislation. Now the necessary funding to meet that commitment has been eliminated. In my riding, as in many parts of Canada, over 40 per cent of the workforce is made up of women. Proper child care is not solely a women's issue. All parents deserve the guarantee that proper child care is available for their children. The cancelling of the balance of this program contributes yet further to the Government's lack of commitment to fulfil its responsibilities to the people of Canada.

I find it difficult to understand why the Government has chosen to treat the social concerns of our society with such total disregard. I will find it equally difficult to explain to that single parent in Leamington or Tilbury, or the retiree in Blenheim, or the underprivileged in my riding, why the Government has not addressed the problems of the social programs but rather has used them as a financial excuse for its deficit.

• (1650)

My riding of Essex—Kent is a rural-urban mix, a beautiful part of the great country located in western Ontario on the shore of Lake Erie. It is a riding where the proposed Estimates will have disastrous results. The massive elimination of agricultural programs will create an even greater financial burden for the already beleaguered farm community.

Would the Minister of Agriculture like to explain to the farmer in Gosfield South Township that his fuel tax rebate will be cut in half this year, only to be totally eliminated next year? Or, will he explain to the farmer in Harwich Township that he will pay more for crop insurance which is so outdated that last year we required drought relief and that is still not paid?

How can we tell the farmer in Mersea Township that his finance charges are higher, his taxes are higher, his field costs are higher, his crop insurance costs are higher, his whole method of producing his crop has changed and then put the same farmer into a Free Trade Agreement? How can the Government take these programs out of the farm community and offer nothing in return?

The reductions in agricultural programs will eliminate some $332 million from farm programs over the next two years. Farmers in Essex—Kent, farmers in all ridings of Canada, deserve better treatment than the Government intends to give them. Imagine $332 million in reduced programs directed at the farm community.

How does the Government intend to handle its deficit problem? At the suggestion that high interest rates affect the ability of private sector investment and dramatically increase the cost of debt servicing by the Government, the Governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Crow, responded that the Bank of Canada should not set its interest rate with the intent of creating a cheap method of financing the government debt. Yet the current rate, at over 12 per cent, costs the Government a full $5 billion more in interest charges.

The public debt will continue to grow. Regardless of the severe program cuts and tax increases, the debt will rise from $321 billion today to $352 billion in the next year and $380 billion the following year.

The annual deficit continues to be large and the debt continues to grow. The estimated current deficit is $28.9 billion and this fiscal year will be $30.5 billion.

In my opening comments I indicated that the Estimates are an attack on our economy and do not confront the financial and social concerns of our society. This belief is based on the impact that the Estimates will have on all Canadians.

The Government's attempt to reduce the deficit in this way is a direct assault against our universal social programs. The Government's attempt to clean up its own fiscal mismanagement is a direct assault against the same programs, while doing nothing to establish a financial policy where the real problem lies.

In four years of the Government the average Canadian family has seen its tax increase by over $2,000 annually, yet its services have been reduced. In this same period the public debt has risen to $321 billion and will continue to rise yet another $31 billion this year. To the end of this fiscal year, the public debt will have risen $153 billion in just five years of Conservative Budgets.

Certainly Members opposite will not continue to blame previous Governments for this. The Canadian people will not continue to accept that explanation.

Since 1984 the Government has bestowed upon every man, woman and child in Essex—Kent and across Canada an individual public debt of $6,000. The average family of four now has an increase in public debt of $24,000 since 1984. The average Canadian family of four devotes a full dollar of every hour of employment to pay for increases in taxes. That is $2,000 in extra taxes each year for a family of four.

Rather than attacking its own financial policy, the Government has chosen to attack social programs, agriculture and transfer policies.

The reduction of interest rates to levels of only one year ago would reduce the deficit by a full $5 billion annually. This amount itself would eliminate the need for the massive tax grab on the average Canadian.

The present monetary policy and the current interest rates cost Canadians an additional $63,000 for a 25 year mortgage of $75,000. That is additional $210 per month, every month or $2,520 per year, every year of the mortgage.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask the Member to conclude, please.

Mr. Pickard: In conclusion, I ask the Government to reconsider the Estimates. I ask it, for the sake of the people of Canada, to stop taking so much money through tax grabs and to consider the regions that need help.

Mr. Jack Iyerak Anawak (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak on Bill C-11 and to use my time to comment on how the Government intends to spend that money.

Quite simply, last month's Budget is bad news for northerners. There is little benefit for the North in the budget documents.

A program which provides a rebate on the excise tax on gasoline and diesel fuel for primary producers, including hunters and trappers, will be allowed to expire on December 31, 1989. The rebate is currently five cents a litre. Because this rebate is being terminated, and there will be an increase of one cent per litre on April 28, 1989, and another on January 1, 1990, hunters and trappers will be paying seven cents more per litre for gasoline beginning January 1, 1990. These increases are an unacceptable additional burden on my constituents. Many of them hunt, fish and trap to feed their families and they already pay an extraordinarily high price for gasoline. In Rankin Inlet and Whale Cove, gasoline is currently 66 cents a litre. In Pelly Bay, gasoline is 84 cents a litre. In Cambridge Bay, gasoline is 87 cents a litre.

Hunting and trapping are the most important renewable resource activities in the Northwest Territories. This industry contributed $6.1 million to the territorial economy in 1987-88. In the North we are fighting animal rights activists for the survival of this traditional economic livelihood. By increasing the cost of going out on the land, the federal Government is making our battle harder.

Work is scarce in my constituency. Much of it is seasonal and unemployment in the small communities is well over 40 per cent. Those who do find work are generally paid higher wages than what is paid in southern Canada, but these higher wages are to compensate for a much higher cost of living in the North. For example, in Whale Cove in my constituency, milk is $3.50 a litre; a loaf of bread is $3.25; a dozen medium eggs cost $3.50.

In Rankin Inlet, a 10-pound bag of potatoes costs $10.98. In Pelly Bay, a dozen eggs cost $4.80.

Given these prices, I am sure Hon. Members will understand why hunting and trapping and traditional wild or country food is such an important staple to daily eating in the North. Most of my constituents could not afford to feed their families totally on the food which is imported from southern Canada.

The North is extremely disappointed that the Government has not kept its promise to provide more day care spaces. Instead of the seven-year, $4 billion commitment Canadians were assured of during the election campaign, we got the news in the Budget that the Government is not in a position to proceed at the present time.

In conclusion, northerners are wondering why they are being asked to shoulder so much of the Government's deficit cutting when so little will be accomplished. The national debt is higher this year than last year and will be higher again next year. For northerners this Budget means long-term pain with no gain.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand there is a prior agreement that the recorded vote will be held next Tuesday at six o'clock.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

FEDERAL BUSINESS DEVELOPMENT BANK

SMALL BUSINESS – GOVERNMENT PRIORITY

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider developing a healthy small-business sector in Canada by making small business the first priority of the Federal Business Development Bank.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure to know that the Government has decided this motion is worth while enough to add their support to it, because certainly we all know and understand how important to the economy of Canada is the small business community.

I would suggest that throughout the course of history, small business has been the backbone of the Canadian economy and in fact has created the majority of jobs, jobs that are so essential in our economy today.

In recognition of this, this motion to build a healthier small business sector in Canada by making small business the first priority the Federal Business Development Bank recognizes there is an instrument available. It can be used and should be used to assist the small business sector, both men and women, to create more employment in the hard times that we are having now, have had in the past, and will have in the future unless we encourage these men and women to create the employment necessary.

I would like to look at the legislation that is presently in force. Under Section 4, "Incorporation and Objects" of the present Federal Business Development Bank states:

The objects of the Corporation are to promote and assist in the establishment and development of business enterprises in Canada by providing, in the manner and to the extent authorized by this Act, financial assistance, management counselling, management training information and advice and such other services as are ancillary or incidental to any of the foregoing.

In the second paragraph of subsection 4, it states:

The Corporation in carrying out its objects shall give particular consideration to the needs of small business enterprises.

I would suggest that what we have seen since the inception of the Federal Business Development Bank is a falling back to a situation where money is lent and guarantees are made more and more to the large corporate sector as opposed to the small business person.

When I speak of small business, although I do not limit it to this, to a great extent I am speaking of those firms under five persons. The reason I state that is that it seems that this is the route of the future. The small entrepreneur should be encouraged. That is an area that has been left by the Federal Business Development Bank and should be paid more attention to in the future.

It appears that over the last two years, for instance, there has been a decline in the actual number of new and existing borrowers. The number of customers of the Federal Business Development Bank has been declining across all provinces since 1985. In 1988, more than 80 per cent—and in fact my figures have it at 82.9 per cent—of all funds for loans and guarantees made by the Federal Business Development Bank were in the over $100,000 category. Three thousand three hundred and six firms or individuals received funds for loans and guarantees in the under $100,000 category, for a total of $147 million. On the other side of the coin, the larger firms who are over $100,000 borrowers, received $714 million of the funds, or more than 80 per cent of the $862 million in funds authorized through the Federal Business Development Bank.

I would submit that it is clear that the Federal Business Development Bank has gone more to the area of subsection (1) of Section 4 of the Federal Business Development Bank and less to subsection (2) of putting the thrust towards small business.

Through the Federal Business Development Bank's management services, it has been able to assist small businesses in their set-up and in their training. Under this present Budget, unfortunately we have now seen a $13 million cut in these funds. I would suggest that of all of the things the Federal Business Development Bank did for small business, this was the one thing that I as a small business person and those people within the community that I represent in Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt, including the boundary country have actually used to a great extent in assisting us in setting up businesses.

As a lawyer and solicitor, I sent people to the Federal Business Development Bank for those services because they were services offered which I saw as beneficial to the communities. It is something I think should be increased and not cut because those management services are services that people in small communities look to to assist them in setting up business. If one looks at the small business communities around Canada, what one sees is often family corporations or family proprietorships of under five people. It is often two or three people.

These people start out wanting to be their own bosses. Those men or women go out and make the attempt to set up businesses. In a small community, they often have to turn to friends, neighbours, or the legal community for advice on how to set up a business and the type of things to look for in setting a business up.

The Federal Business Development Bank was an example of where we in small communities could turn. We do not have that now to the extent we had prior to the Budget. Cuts have already been made. I am told that in some of the offices, such as the Federal Business Development Bank office in Ottawa, people with two and three years' seniority have already been cut. That is the type of thing that I am getting at with this motion. We have to look into the future. We have to look at what the small business community needs. We do not necessarily have to look at what is in the large communities because after all, Canada is made up of employed people of all types, living in all areas. It is not just the large areas, but some of the smaller communities. Those are the type of places that I am fighting for now.

I am trying, through this motion, to show how important small business is and how important the management services within the Federal Business Development Bank are. Those are only some of the things that we must look at in the future.

For a minute, let us look at the small business community and how it gets along with the banking community as a whole.

Right now what we see, Mr. Speaker, is that 85 per cent of small businesses turn to private banking because as it is set up now the Federal Business Development Bank is a bank of lending of last resort. That is not acceptable. The small business community are those men and women who are out there creating the jobs in Canada. The figures show that in the last eight years 70 per cent of all new jobs in Canada were created by the small businesses. We need some place for them to go, not with cap in hand to the large corporate banks where they are at the mercy of collateral requirements and high interest rates and all of the other discriminations we see in dealing with large banks, but that there is a bank that will service their lending needs. Not just their lending needs, I would submit, but all of their banking needs.

We should be looking at the expansion of the Federal Business Development Bank to assist the business community, not just in borrowing money and management services, but in all of the banking requirements of a business community, whether it be chequing privileges, assistance with budgeting or whatever. All these services should be available to the small business person within Canada.

I can tell you from my own personal experience in dealing with a number of clients that the small businessman is required to put up a lot more of their personal and business collateral than our large firms. That should be looked at.

The collateral requirements by the business community are seen as being far too excessive. The average collateral to loan ratio is an appalling 2.79 to 1. In other words, for every dollar that that small business person borrows, he must put up $2.79 as collateral for that loan. That is the type of thing that I am pointing at that is so unfair to the small business person within Canada.

Do you know, Mr. Speaker, that more than one in five businesses provide collateral coverage that is three times or more their loan amount. Personal collateral is often required and this most certainly is the case for smaller, newer companies. The collateral requirements, as I said, have always been higher than for larger firms. In fact, the figures show that 85 per cent of small firms provide collateral security, while one-half of those must pledge personal assets.

We often see a situation where the small proprietorship or a small family corporation, with a husband and wife and maybe one or two employees, in order to get business having to go to the bank. As I say, 85 per cent go to the chartered banks, and essentially they have to put up everything they own. The banks do not look solely at what the cash flow is. They want the collateral position.

They want to have someone to fall back on, so that even if we have the case where the cash flow situation can be proven in the small business, that is not good enough for the banks. The banks want their almost three to one ratio. That puts the small person into a lot of difficulty because if they do need some money for personal emergencies, their home is tied up, their vehicles are tied up, everything that they own is tied up. They have got nowhere to turn for any additional security.

It is interesting to note that the statistics also show us that one in five small businesses are rejected in their request for funding by the chartered banks. That is outrageous. Something has to be done in order to help these people in ensuring that their business is viable.

Then there is the problem that the small businesses have with the interest rates. I think if anybody has ever dealt with a bank they automatically start with something like 3 per cent over prime. They negotiate with the bank to try and get that interest rate down. Of course the prime rate, as we well know, is up and down like a roller coaster. There is no security for these small business people. They do not know from one day to the next or from one year to the next whether in fact their business is going to be viable because of the debt load that is placed on them from start-up.

Statistics show us that one in five small businesses pay an interest rate of over prime plus 2 per cent, with the average interest rate charge being 1.23 per cent over the prime interest rate. The newest and smallest firms, the ones that are starting up, face the most difficulty in obtaining financing. It is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, the discrimination against women that we see in the banking community. It is clear that a woman has less chance of getting a loan from a chartered bank as a business person than does a male.

An Hon. Member: Discrimination.

Mr. Whittaker: There is rank discrimination and there has been for years. This can be addressed by the Federal Business Development Bank by making no distinction between the sexes. Regardless of gender, that person should be able to get a loan to start up a small business if they can show that the business is viable. They should be given the assistance in order to make sure that that business is a viable business before setting it up.

As a lawyer I can tell you that small business runs into more red tape and more paperwork than anybody else applying for loans. Because of all of the collateral requirements, these businesses must put up chattel mortgages, mortgages, give assignments of book debts, and the reams of paper are enormous. I have seen a stack for a small business person getting a loan of something like $60,000 that would choke a horse. It was approximately six inches deep. That person had to sign them but they had to go to a lawyer in order to get all of those documents interpreted, and often had to go to an accountant. The cost to the small business person in starting up is enormous, and all of these are artificial costs. The Federal Business Development Bank in granting loans often charges up to 2.5 per cent as a commitment fee. I say that that is nonsense. They should be there to help the small business person, not grab from the small business person. It is unconscionable that they would put themselves into that position of dipping their hands into a pocket that is already empty. They should be out there for the small business person. They should not be taking money from them.

I could go into another factor that is involved but I will not at this stage. What I would like to do is suggest that small business should be encouraged by the Federal Business Development Bank with lower stable interest rates to fuel jobs creation within the small business community. This would encourage economic growth in all regions of the country. We should reduce unnecessary forms and red tape that are so time consuming for the small business person. We should ensure that there are more federal contracts for small business sector and establish an aggressive "Buy Canada" program.

Under this motion, we should ensure that the Federal Business Development Bank is a bank that small business can turn to, a bank that is there for small business and not just the large corporate interests in Canada.

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard): I welcome this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to take part in this very important debate on a motion urging the Government to have a small business development policy and to administer this policy through the Federal Business Development Bank. I want to thank the Hon. Member for giving us this opportunity to have a debate on the subject because since 1984, the Conservative Government promised to review the mandate of the Federal Business Development Bank and give it a new one. Since my speaking time is limited, Mr. Speaker, instead of reading all the questions I have already put to various Ministers of State (Small Business) on this matter, something I really do not have enough time for this afternoon, I would rather spend my 10 minutes on this very important issue.

I just want to make it clear that considering this Government is often accused of having a laissez-faire policy, one look at the small business sector would prove that the Government left it to its own devices from the very beginning, and I think the last Budget is a particularly flagrant example, Mr. Speaker.

However, I wanted to talk about the Federal Business Development Bank. We in the Official Opposition took this matter very seriously after the 1984 election, and we discussed the mandate of the Federal Business Development Bank and the services it should offer on a task force that travelled throughout the country. In May 1987, we produced a report that took an in-depth look at this institution, and in three recommendations we suggested what the motion in fact proposes, that the Federal Business Developoment Bank should be a development centre for small businesses in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the Federal Business Development Bank currently offers three types of service. First, a loans service, and at the risk of repeating myself, I think the Hon. Member made it quite clear that these loans are above all directed to medium-sized businesses, because the average individual loan granted by the FBDB is about $84,000, while the average commercial bank loan under the Small Businesses Loans Act program is between $20,000 and $25,000. So actually, medium-sized businesses benefit most from Federal Business Development Bank loans.

The second service offered by the FBDB is their investment service. Mr. Speaker, here again figures show that during fiscal year 1985-86, for example, the FBDB did not put up a lot of money even in those sectors, but in spite of that 30 applications valued at $12.5 million were approved, an average investment of $417,000 per application. So as you can see we are not talking about small businesses. With respect to the second service, medium-sized businesses are also the big winners.

The third service, Mr. Speaker, relates to management consultation, information and training. This is the kind of service which small businesses essentially used to get from the FBDB whose original mandate was to help small—and medium-sized businesses.

In the Budget tabled at the end of April the Government saw fit to clip the wings of this service which accounted for $27 million. The cut-back amounts to $13 million, so we are looking at a 50 per cent reduction. The Government claims to be the political Party that looks after small businesses, yet it does away with half the services previously offered by the Federal Business Development Bank.

Mr. Speaker, I am as sure as you are that seminars have been held in your riding. As it happens, FBDB officials have organized business seminars with the bank manager, the President of the Chamber of Commerce, and small businessmen. Local merchants would meet with lawyers, accountants, tax and finance experts to learn all about the management of a small business. There was also another program under which experts, retired people, were sent to help people learn bookkeeping and give management advice. This did not cost a lot of money to the Bank. Mr. Speaker, now that these services have been cut down by 50 per cent the Federal Business Development Bank will no longer be able to provide them and the first thing we will know is that the services have been cancelled. Once again small businesses will have to pick up the broken pieces.

[English]

In politics we say put your money where your mouth is. In every speech politicians always make sure that there is a paragraph about small business, but it is only lip service. If we talk about small business it is time we put some money where our mouths are. The Government, just to prove the contrary, has cut $13 million from a service that really addressed to small business. Therefore, when the Government wants to tell us that it is the champion of small business, it should put money where its mouth is because it is not helping small business at all.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, of course we could discuss what we would do with the Federal Business Development Bank. As I said in my report, I was privileged to chair the Liberal Party of Canada's task force in May 1987, and we made a number of proposals. Concerning equity, we know and everyone agrees that if there is one area where small businesses have serious problems, serious difficulties, it's the lack of capital. Borrowing is not good enough, because a business that relies on that only, is definitely not viable when interest rates rise to the levels we have seen and are still seeing. This is one of the reasons why 80 per cent of businesses do not survive more than five years.

Our report recommended that the Federal Business Development Bank offer a capital stock service, under which the Bank could buy stocks in projects, new businesses very interesting development-wise, and withdraw when the time came, when the business were able to pay the loans back. These moneys would have enabled the start-up of a number of projects instead of gathering dust on the shelves of various financial institutions. The same goes for loans, and of course management consulting, information and training services, which could have been helped financially.

Mr. Speaker, you are signaling that my time is up, but I would simply like to suggest that two or three years ago, the Federal Business Development Bank proposed and established the AIM Program—AIDE in French. That information program regrouped all services and programs helping federal and provincial businesses, and even municipal ones in certain cases. Instead of extending those programs to all regions, they introduced it in the hope the Government would step in and encourage them. But, if they slash $13 million, the AIM program definitely will be axed.

The CASE Programs, six or seven months or a year from now probably will be discontinued also. And according to my information, the training program also would be terminated.

To sum up, the Business Federal Development Bank, if it remains unchanged, will only serve a small clientele, namely medium businesses unless the Government gives it another mandate.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on the motion by the Hon. Member from Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt (Mr. Whittaker), especially following the speech made by my friend, the Hon. Member from Saint-Léonard (Mr. Gagliano).

It is quite appropriate that we should talk about small business and its development as a strong and vibrant component of this country's economy.

[English]

This year the Federal Business Development Bank is again organizing, in co-operation with local members of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the tenth annual Small Business Week. It provides an occasion to pay tribute across Canada to the hard working men and women who operate Canada's small businesses.

[Translation]

The Bank participates in many other programs, such as the Student Entrepreneurs Loan Program which helps young people set up businesses during the summer months; a special loan program for mollusc producers in the Atlantic Provinces and in Québec; and a program designed to assist small exporters finance foreign accounts receivable.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt about the vitality of the small business community in Canada.

[English]

At the Federal Business Development Bank small business is indeed a first priority. We on the government side agree in principle with Motion No. 126 as outlined by the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt. We can, of course, take some exception to a few of the details that both Hon. Members have presented to us, but they are on the record and they can be taken into consideration. Concerning Motion No. 126, we would not want any undue delays in the interests of Canada's small business community.

Mr. Jim Karygiannis (Scarborough—Agincourt): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate in this debate. It is extremely important and requires a great deal of work since small business is the economic soul of our country. The statistics bear this out. Small business accounts for 98 per cent of all Canadian businesses or 812,000 companies out of a total of 822,000. A small business is classified as a business generating annual sales of $2 million or less.

It should be quite clear that the most crucial period for a business is its first three years of operation. This period is even more important for a small business since it has fewer resources that it can draw from. Therefore, if small business is to flourish in Canada, it requires an extensive commitment from all levels of government.

Several studies show that the survival rate of new small businesses in Canada is only 20 per cent after five years without any governmental assistance. However, in countries where Governments have been involved in helping small business, this figure is somewhere in the neighbourhood of 80 per cent. Clearly governmental assistance is indispensable if small business is to continue to grow.

In the past four years, we have seen a Government that has not given small business the priority it deserves. The Federal Business Development Bank should be the key player in helping small businesses during start-up stages. The FBDB must re-examine its mandate to ensure that it continues to put the needs of small business first.

Another proposal aimed at helping small business in Canada is the development of one stop information centres where small businesses could obtain all the information they need without the inconvenience of running from one office to another for assistance. One can certainly appreciate the difficulties that a new small business encounters when one takes into account that there are more than 560 different government assistance programs for small business at the federal level alone. The complexity of these programs are a headache for entrepreneurs who are looking for the program which will be assist them.

It was partly to solve this problem that in 1984, the Federal Business Development Bank developed a new program called "Automated Information for Management Service". The purpose of this program is to group together all the information about programs for small business.

Because of limited resources, improvements to the system could not be made quickly and it has been impossible for the Federal Business Development Bank to develop the information catalogue fully. As well, the program is still not available to a sufficient number of organizations outside the FBDB network. Because it has been a pilot project for so long, the Automated Information for Management Service is starting to deteriorate.

The Government must be committed to developing a one stop information network for small business. To do so, it must be committed to fund the development of the FBDB's Automated Information for Management Service program adequately through local business organizations such as Chambers of Commerce and the various professional associations. These organizations have offices in every region of the country and are run by business people who are familiar with small business, as well as with the local area.

In addition to providing information on government programs, the Automated Information for Management Service could also provide information of interest to small business. This data has already been compiled by Statistics Canada but small businesses do not have access to it. This service could also contain information pertaining to government purchasing contracts.

We on this side of the House are also concerned about the drastic cuts in the management services program of the FBDB as announced in the Budget. Through the management services program, the FBDB has provided small business with management and legal counselling as well as information seminars. It is worth noting that this program has been very successful. However, the Government ruthlessly intends to do away this program, again indicating its lack of concern for the small business sector.

In order to meet the needs of small business truly, the Government must also increase the FBDB's funds for venture capital. There are hundreds of small businesses in Canada that are breaking new ground in the technology field but are unable to expand due to an inadequate equity base. This is where the FBDB should step in a provide small businesses with venture capital in order to ensure that new innovations are brought into the market-place.

Rather than competing with private sector lending institutions, the FBDB should represent the needs of all small businesses in Canada, wherever they may be located. As we all know, there are some regions of Canada that are more prosperous than others, but this is no reason a small business in a depressed area should be refused a reasonable loan request. Therefore, the FBDB has a unique role to play in the small business sector, which is why it should be expanded and not butchered as the Government is in the process of doing.

A greater commitment to small business would be reflected in the size of loans granted to small businesses. Over the past few years, the size of loans has continued to climb. This indicates that the FBDB seems to be moving away from the needs of small businesses and toward the needs of medium sized businesses. This course of action must be reversed in order to put the FBDB at the disposal of small business.

These programs are essential to the continued growth of small businesses. The FBDB must re-examine its mandate to ensure that it continues to put the needs of small business first. Small businesses need a national voice. The FBDB can and should act as the major representative of small business. In order to do this, the Government must reaffirm its commitment to the FBDB. Small business must be the main business of the FBDB.

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I support the Private Member's Motion No. 126 of April 3 which reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider developing a healthy small business sector in Canada by making small business the first priority of the Federal Business Development Bank.

In addition to the arguments and comments made by speakers earlier which I support, I would like to add that making small business a priority of this bank would be of great benefit as well to new citizens, to new Canadians.

In this regard I would like to see that the bank truly assists in granting loans to the small businesses of new citizens as well, that the processing of the applications be done with great dispatch and promptness, that they be assisted with the required feasibility studies, and that the requirement to have personal properties, including homes, as a requirement for collateral be waived. Any cut to the funding of this Federal Business Development Bank will be detrimental to the interests of many new citizens and immigrants. I therefore commend the Hon. Member for introducing his motion which I wholly support.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion of the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt.Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to call it six o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 38 deemed to have been moved.

EXTERNAL AID—REQUEST THAT WORLD SUMMIT BE HELD FOR BENEFIT OF CHILDREN

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, on April 18, I addressed a question to the Minister for External Relations (Mrs. Landry) requesting the Minister to sponsor a world summit for children. The year 1989 marks the tenth anniversary of the International Year of the Child and is a most appropriate time to highlight the deteriorating circumstances that children today throughout the world are experiencing. A world summit for children would analyse the circumstances of not only Third World children but of our own children here in Canada, one million of whom are living below the poverty line.

Because of health and nutrition improvements world-wide between 1950 and 1988, the death rate among children dropped from 25 million to 14 million or almost half. Low cost health measures, such as immunization and oral rehydration therapy, have saved millions of lives. Of course it is a well-known fact that the best method to control population growth is to assure parents that their children will survive.

Third World countries, in the absence of social assistance programs, depend upon their children for economic and social security in times of illness and old age. Canada at the beginning of this century, when we were predominantly a rural economy and without our social assistance programs, was little different.

The point is that child survival leads to lower population growth. For all the progress made in the last 40 years, suddenly the trend in child survival has reversed. Child deaths are on the increase. International debt problems are considered by UNICEF to be the major cause for this appalling situation. Because of Third World debts and depressed export prices, Third World Governments world-wide have had to cut their health expenditures by 50 per cent, their education expenditures by 25 per cent. Because of Third World debt, the developed world, the western industrialized nations, and the North are the net recipients of the world-wide cash flows amounting to about $20 billion to $30 billion U.S. per year.

For all the official development assistance that Canada and other developed nations send to the Third World, we receive more in cash back than we send. No wonder that the world-wide development process is in reverse. What is more, the Canadian Government in its Budget has cut official development assistance expenditures more than any other area of expenditure cut and has the gall to tell the starving and naked in the Third World to tighten their belts because we have had a drought, we have a debt problem.

In your mind's eye, Mr. Speaker, you can see the pathetic images of misery, starvation, disease, filth. The pathetic images, mostly of children, have moved Canadians and still do to such generosity of response. Our Government's ODA budget cuts will have the direct affect of causing thousands of those human beings, again mostly children, to die. The Canadian Government's budget cuts to ODA do not reflect the Canadian peoples wishes and concerns.

The Conservative Government's lifeline now reaches only 20 feet, to quote a colleague on the other side of the House in a speech a few weeks ago. The drowning of the Third World are 30 feet away, to continue his metaphor, and must swim or drown. This is un-Canadian and shameful.

To quote UNICEF in its report "The State of the World's Children 1989", it reads:

> It is children who are bearing the heaviest burden of debt and recession in the 1980s, and in tragic summary, it can be estimated that at least half a million young children from one to five years have died in the last 12 months as a result of the slowing down or the reversal of progress in the developing world.

It is the children who are bearing the heaviest burden of our budget cuts to ODA.

However, it is not just the child deaths which are tragic. It is the unnecessary future burden created by deprivation; deprivation which even when temporary causes permanent damage to growing minds and bodies.

The child disabilities we are creating today will cost us so dearly tomorrow. Will we never learn that investment today is a saving for the future? Spending on health and education is not something that can only be afforded in times of plenty. It is an investment in our future, in the economic and social development of ours and other societies, which allows for a secure future.

It is the Third World debt and diminished export prices which are the main reason for diminishing world-wide child welfare standards. Governments, international financial institutions, private banks, and development agencies are all having to confront the problems.

To date, adjustments and the burdens imposed by adjustments are being borne by those least able, the poor in the Third World, who have no resources to cushion the economic blows. Adjustment means trying to survive on even less of life's essentials. It means depriving children of food, housing, water, health care, education, opportunity. For 40,000 young children every day, it means not surviving. All of this, and yet adjustment does not even achieve its primary goal—economic revitalization and growth.

Adjustment must be reconsidered. Debt world-wide must be rationally and humanely confronted. This Government introduces Bills to forgive debt, but takes no leadership in dealing with the root causes of poverty and debt. Debt forgiveness will not prevent new unmanageable debt from mounting. To quote UNICEF again:

> Debt relief alone will not allow the poorest countries to move toward healthy economic growth and toward a permanent resolution of the development crisis.

As the world's poor become poorer, injustices become more evident, frustration inevitably mounts. Poverty causes tension and violence, and mounting poverty and inequality become a security issue. Desperation to have access to our world's natural resources will have irreversible environmental impacts. We all lose.

A world summit for children would have to look at all the serious problems in the context of trying to reverse the trend again to advantage the world's poorest, our children. The Minister of External Relations was of the opinion that to sponsor such a summit would cost $20 million to $40 million. UNICEF believes that an effective summit could be mounted for less than $10 million.

Canada could redeem some of its lost credibility among official development assistance donor and recipient countries if it would decide today to sponsor a world summit for children. "The State of the World's Children 1989" says it best: "It is time to begin attending to the needs and rights of children not as a mere by-product of progress but as an end and a means of progress itself. The true test of a civilization is how well it protects its vulnerable and how well it safeguards its future; children are both its vulnerable and its future".

Mr. Howard Crosby (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in response to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Northumberland (Mrs. Stewart), let me begin by underlining the statement of the Minister of State for External Relations (Mrs. Landry) in respect to the recent UNICEF report on "The State of the World's Children" which was issued in 1989. It proposed an international summit meeting of world leaders to address the plight of children in the Third World, a world summit for children.

Canada has always responded positively to UNICEF initiatives and proposals. Canada was the fourth largest donor to UNICEF in 1988. Canada has been an active member of the UNICEF Executive Board, almost without interruption, since 1946. In 1987–88 Canada contributed approximately $73 million, which represented a 43 per cent increase over the previous year. Canada actively supports the goal of universal child immunization by 1990, and it has committed $43 million in additional funds for immunization in developing countries. These funds have been channelled through the Canadian Public Health Association to UNICEF. Over all Canada has committed more than $120 million to universal child immunization efforts since 1984.

An international summit would be one way to concentrate international action in this regard. This is consistent with the focus on poverty alleviation and human resource development as outlined in Canada's new aid policy document "Sharing Our Future".

Canada would be interested in further elaboration of the proposed agenda for the meeting and would especially want to know how such a meeting could avoid duplication of discussions in other international fora before deciding on a location.

Let us consider some facts. The cost, which has been estimated at $20 million to $40 million, must be compared to direct expenditure for children in the Third World. UNICEF has put forward two alternative concepts for participation and format of a world summit for children.

As we understand it, the first option would involve a one and one-half day meeting in a relatively isolated and relaxed location. It would be limited to approximately 40 countries representing developing and industrialized countries.

The second option, as we understand it, proposes that the summit be an all-inclusive gathering in the form of a special session of the United Nations General Assembly, meeting on the margins of the General Assembly, and be characterized by wider representation among participating United Nations countries; inclusion as a part of the United Nations General Assembly meetings in the fall session; the simplified logistical arrangements associated with United Nations headquarter locations in places such as New York, Geneva, or Vienna; utilization of an existing framework for heads of state and government already involved; and linking summit agenda items with General Assembly actions.

In any event, Canada's commitment to UNICEF remains as strong as ever. A summit might have significant impact. It might accomplish the objectives of placing children's issues at the forefront of the international community's agenda. However, rest assured, Canada is giving this matter serious consideration, and we will respond to positive initiatives.

FINANCE—INTEREST RATE INCREASES—GOVERNMENT POSITION—MORTGAGE AND CREDIT CARD INTEREST RATES

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, further to the announcement by the Bank of Canada that it was raising its discount rate to 12.61 per cent, I asked the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) on April 21 why the Conservative Government was going after Canadian consumers with this high-interest policy.

I reminded him then that the real interest rate—than is, the difference between the interest and inflation rates—in Canada was over 8 per cent, the highest in 20 years, and that the spread between Canadian and American rates is over 2 per cent, compared to historic spreads of 1 per cent.

I reminded the Minister and the House that an $85,000 mortgage could be financed at 9.75 per cent a year ago, but now, the same mortgage is renewed at 13 per cent, $2,000 more a year for the same mortgage. I also stated that high interest rates had forced or would force credit card companies to raise their rates to over 20 per cent on June 1 this year.

I therefore asked the Deputy Prime Minister why the Government was maintaining this high-interest policy which is painful and catastrophic for Canadian families.

True to his Government's guidelines, the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Loiselle) answered me that the current interest rates are part of the Bank of Canada's overall policy. He also said, and I quote:

"We shall continue to support the Bank of Canada in an effort to ensure that interest rates go down eventually, but in a lasting way for the better protection of consumers."

In the Budget he presented to the House last year, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) told Canadians that interest rates would be 7.8 per cent in 1989. The Minister's forecasts are far from realistic, considering that interest rates are now, in 1989, the year forecast, at 13 per cent. To add insult to injury, in his new Budget tabled this April, the Minister of Finance predicted that interest rates would average 12 per cent over the coming year. But the actual rate has already exceeded this prediction.

The Conference Board of Canada even states that the Bank of Canada's policies, combined with the Wilson Budget, will bring interest rates even higher in 1989-90. The Conservative Government is a dream merchant, but it should not take Canadians for idiots.

While this Governement itself recognizes the ill-effects of high interest rates on our economy, it insists on using regressive measures, leading us towards a recession which is going to affect consumers, investors, workers and all Canadians in general. High interest rates are like a hidden tax. For those who must renew their mortgage, the additional interest payments are often higher than the increased personal taxes and sales taxes that they have suffered since 1984 and that they will have to suffer once again with the new Wilson Budget.

In August 1988, the provincial Premiers asked the federal Government to reconsider its high interest rate policy. During their recent meeting, the Premiers repeated their request, supported by provincial Finance Ministers. The Government hasn't done anything in this regard.

In 1986, the official Opposition asked the Governement to put a ceiling on the high interest rates charged by banks and large department stores on credit cards. The Government didn't do anything then and it still hasn't done anything. Credit card users who are better off can afford to pay their bills before facing sky-high interest rates. But that is not the case for the more unfortunate, such as the average Canadian consumer who can only pay with a credit card and who must face very high interest rates on his bills.

A young single mother in my constituency—20 per cent of the families in my constituency are single-parent families, Mr. Speaker—has to support two children on the minimum wage. Once she has paid the rent, the rest of her salary only covers bus fare, food and child care. She cannot, on her budget, afford clothes and entertainment, much less unforeseen expenses. She cannot afford the luxury of drugs. Should the children get sick, the pharmacy would certainly accept her credit card to pay for the drugs. If the children need clothes, she will pray to God that they will be provided. As a last resort, she will buy with her credit card a coat and winter boots—God knows how she needs them sometimes to dress her children.

There are many like her in my constituency of Ottawa—Vanier, Mr. Speaker. They are not the only ones with problems caused by high interest rates on credit cards and other transactions.

Mr. Speaker, just think of the high interest rates that someone whose car broke down and who had to use a credit card will have to pay. Just think of all those who believed the Finance Minister last year when he predicted that interest rates would not exceed 8 per cent. If the Minister of Finance of Canada cannot predict an exceptional rise in interest rates, how can one expect Canadian families to do so? If the Minister of Finance cannot control his interest rates, how can one ask Canadian families to control their budget better, when the nation's moneyman, the Finance Minister himself, the so-called expert, is not even able to control his!

• (1800)

This Government's measures will throw many Canadian families into poverty. This Government's measures will bankrupt Canadian families.

Mr. Speaker, I again ask the Government why it is penalizing Canadian families by maintaining this disastrous high-interest policy.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, why do Canadian families again have to pay for the mistakes of a Conservative Government?

[English]

Mr. Howard Crosby (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by thanking the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) for taking the time to consider the plight of Canadians in relation to interest rates because so much of his time is involved in separating party members during this very difficult period of a leadership campaign.

Let me try to explain some of the factors that lead to higher interest rates which admittedly do have an adverse affect on some Canadians. I understand and appreciate the Hon. Member's interest in the subject.

The strength of demand in the Canadian economy over the last year, following the exceptional economic performance of the previous five years, has placed strains on productive capacity in our economy and has resulted in rising pressures on prices and costs and higher interest rates, but conditions of strong demand and rising inflation have existed as well in other major economies and interest rates have risen internationally. For example, Canadian rates have moved up much less than those in the U.K., but moderately more than in the United States and Germany.

Canadian short-term interest rates have risen in response to growing demand pressures, as indicated by evidence of capacity shortages, buoyant investment and consumption spending, as well as rapid monitory and credit growth and falling unemployment. These conditions, together with the stronger world demand and a recovery in commodity prices benefiting some of our resource industries, have increased pressures on wages and prices in all regions of Canada. I hope the Member is listening to this erudite material.

These underlying pressures have occurred despite our dollar's strong appreciation over the last year, which normally would moderate inflation. Excluding the volatile food and energy components, the Consumer Price Index has risen from 4 per cent at the end of 1987. In recent months, the total index has risen to somewhat higher levels.

At the end of 1988 Canadian short-term interest rates were higher and they increased in the first four months of 1989 to around 12.5 per cent, which they are currently. This places them roughly 8 per cent above the rate of inflation. Although high, it is still below the historically higher rates that occurred in 1981. I am sure the Member remembers well that period of time, with six and five and all that confusion. Differentials with U.S. short-term rates were also wider than historical averages, and widened to 2.5 per cent recently, reflecting our stronger economy and the attendant inflationary concerns.

Despite the significant rise in short-term rates, however, long-term rates have been relatively stable. This has resulted in the reversal late last year of the normally positive spread between short and long term interest rates. Currently long-term government bond rates are nearly 2.5 percentage points below rates paid on Treasury Bills, and our bond differentials with U.S. rates are below longer term average historical spreads. This can be interpreted as a sign of confidence among savers and investors, of whom there are many in the Hon. Member's constituency, in his affluent area of Ottawa, that inflation will be slowed in Canada and our expansion sustained.

Interest rate reductions are linked to growing demand for goods and services. Responsible fiscal and monetary management can ease pressures on capacity, and in the process reduce the deficit, inflation, and interest rates in a way that will sustain economic growth. These are the policies that will ultimately provide the greatest benefit to Canadian consumers. I am sure he will agree with all that.

PUBLIC SERVICE – VISIBLE MINORITIES – HIRING – GOVERNMENT'S POSITION – NATIVE PEOPLES AND VISIBLE MINORITIES

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to pursue the important issue I raised in Question Period a few weeks ago concerning the application of the merit principle as opposed to other standards in hiring within the Public Service.

When the Public Service was established decades ago, it was for one purpose. That was to protect the merit principle in hiring for people who would work for the Government of Canada and for the people of Canada. At that time, the merit principle meant one thing. It meant hiring people on the basis of what they could and how well they could do it, not who they knew and how well they knew them.

Now in the 1980s, it means something quite different. It means that we want to expand our conception of the merit principle, getting rid of the often invisible and unconscious barriers that prevent certain groups of people in society from being considered only on their merits and not on any other standard.

We all know who these groups of people are. We know that the disabled are looked at for their disabilities, not for their abilities. We know that women are looked at as having limited capacities based on traditional roles and not on what they are really capable of. We know that visible minorities are not hired on the basis of their merit, ability, and capacity to contribute to the Public Service but on the basis of preconceptions of that of which they are capable. We know that native people in Canada face the same barriers.

We are looking now not at hiring on merit and getting rid of political favouritism in hiring, but hiring on true merit and getting rid of bias, prejudice and built-in characteristics in the system that automatically keeps certain people out.

I think we had to first face this different definition of the merit principle in the 1960s when suddenly bilingualism for the country and for the Public Service became an important issue. John Carson, who was then Chairman of the Public Service Commission, was often asked about whether this meant an abandonment of the merit principle. He was quite easily able to say, "No, it does not, but we are having is for some positions a new qualification. What we are doing is getting rid of barriers that have prevented Francophones in this country from being fully employed in their own Government".

The description was most aptly put by Mr. Carson's second in command, a woman, who was asked the same question as to whether bilingualism and requiring bilingualism now meant the abandonment of the merit principle. She quite simply said: "No, it doesn't. I can tell you this. If Archie Bunker and I sat down to apply the merit principle equally to a group of candidates, it is absolutely certain that we would both choose a different successful candidate". Those were the kinds of barriers and biases that she was talking about.

Those biases and barriers still operate to prevent women, disabled persons, visible minorities, and native people from being given equal consideration.

What we are talking about with an employment equity policy is not special treatment for certain groups but special measures to make sure they get equal treatment. This is a policy we publicly stated for many years and yet we still find that all these groups mentioned are not receiving equal treatment within the Public Service in hiring to work for the people of Canada.

When I first raised this issue in the House, it was on the basis of the hiring of visible minorities. Yes, we are making some progress and, yes, we are hiring more people. The figures are still quite appalling and show a very distinctive bias against hiring people from visible minority backgrounds.

In 1988, the latest year for which figures are available, nearly 12 per cent of applicants to the Public Service were from visible minorities. With that large number of applications, it is very difficult to understand any other reason except inborn, perhaps unconscious bias for the hiring of only 3.3 per cent of the hiring being for visible minorities.

It is very difficult to understand why someone with a different coloured skin has only one-quarter the chance of the general applicant population of being hired. The same thing is happening to women. It is getting worse and not better. In 1987, women earned 75 cents for every dollar a man earned in the Public Service. Last year, it dropped to 74 cents. Women are still clustered at the lowest income groups.

Native Canadians are still, within the Public Service, below their representation in the population at large. If in fact we take out those who are employed by the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs, their representation drops to well below 1 per cent.

These are not statistics. This is not a record of which we as a Parliament or we as a people can be proud.

The Government of Canada is the largest employer in this country. The time has passed for us to look to other companies, to demand reports without really enforcing performance, and to look at ourselves, how we perform, what kind of leadership we are giving and what kind of example we are setting in employment equity.

It is not enough to say that visible minorities, the disabled, native people and women will forever be disadvantaged in their opportunities to work for their country and to work for their Government. We have finally to say that we are serious about it and put in place programs with real teeth in them, and hold our public servants accountable if they do not meet the objectives of justice, equality, fairness and true consideration of merit, and merit only, in hiring for the Public Service.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by assuring the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mrs. Catterall) that the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) is committed to fair treatment of all Canadians in relation to the Public Service and recognizes, as do all Members on this side of the House, that that involves really special treatment for those who have been deprived in the past.

Let me begin by explaining the Employment Equity Program of the Government of Canada especially related to aboriginal peoples and visible minorities. I should add, women and disabled people are also assisted by this program.

Our Government recognizes that certain groups face unfair employment practices and are disadvantaged in the job market. Employment equity measures are designed to correct this imbalance. The ultimate goal is to ensure that no one is denied an opportunity to compete fairly for employment opportunities.

This goal has led to the development of comprehensive employment equity action plans for all federal Departments and federal Crown corporations. These plans highlight measures to remove barriers to the equal participation of aboriginal peoples and members of visible minority groups. We have specific numerical targets to ensure that more applicants from these designated groups are appointed to positions in the Public Service.

To implement our commitment to employment equity, numerical targets must be submitted by Departments for review by Treasury Board. This process involves extensive analysis by staff and careful review by Ministers of the Treasury Board.

In 1988, $19 million in funding and more than 2,000 person-years will bolster employment equity programs within the federal Public Service. More than $44 million and 1,100 person-years were devoted specifically to increase the hiring, training, and promotion of aboriginal peoples and members of visible minority groups.

The Northern Careers Program, the National Indigenous Development Program, and the Visible Minority Employment Program were extended to 1993. These programs provide tangible evidence of the Government's support.

Target setting and special programs of this kind demonstrate that employment equity is best achieved by a comprehensive, results oriented approach. The number of visible minorities employed in the federal Government has increased significantly from 4,159 or 1.7 per cent as of March 31, 1985, to 6,308 or 2.8 per cent as of December 31, 1988. The number of aboriginal employees has grown from 3,127 or 1.5 per cent to 3,951 or 1.7 per cent during the same period despite changes in services on reservations.

The targets that were established for 1989–1991 for aboriginal peoples and members of visible minority groups will increase. More important, it is a fact that we are meeting the challenge to provide greater benefits and opportunities for aboriginal people and visible minorities.

This is cogent evidence of the Government's commitment to progress. The challenge for all of us in this House of Commons and elsewhere is to ensure all Canadians equal participation in the Public Service of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 10 p.m.

POINT OF ORDER

RESPECT FOR SPEAKER

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, this Member wishes to have noted that while there are many things that a Member may on occasion in this place wish to question, there can be no question about the integrity of the Office of the Speaker and the mandate the Speaker is empowered to carry out, indeed, the institution that the Speaker is empowered and mandated to protect.

In compliance with your request yesterday, and out of great respect for the Speaker, I withdraw words that Mr. Speaker deemed to be inappropriate and unparliamentary during Question Period yesterday.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the Hon. Member. I should comment also that his withdrawal has been in the finest tradition of this place. He has been, throughout the many years that I have known him, a very dedicated Member of this House and has always given me appropriate support as Speaker, for which I thank him.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PRIVILEGE

SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: On Tuesday, April 4, 1989, the Hon. Member for Edmonton Southeast (Mr. Kilgour) raised a question of privilege and, in addition, provided the Chair with certain related material.

The facts are as follows:

[Translation]

On March 14, 1989, a subpoena signed by a Judge of the Supreme Court of the Province of British Columbia was served upon the Hon. Member for Edmonton Southeast (Mr. Kilgour) in his Centre Block office. Your Speaker's permission was neither sought nor obtained for this service. Shortly after being served, the Hon. Member contacted Mr. Marcel Pelletier, the Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel of this House who wrote to the counsel for the plaintiffs in this civil action explaining that a sitting Member of Parliament enjoys the privilege of exemption from attending as a witness in a court of law and concluded in pointing out that: "This privilege is based on the paramount right of Parliament to the attendance and service of its Members."

[English]

Although Parliament was prorogued from February 28 to April 3, there can be no doubt that the Member's immunity persisted throughout this period. In this connection, I refer Hon. Members to May's 20th edition, page 107, and to Bourinot, 4th edition, pages 45 and 46.

[Translation]

In further correspondance via facsimile machine between the Hon. Member and counsel for the plaintiff, the Hon. Member for Edmonton Southeast (Mr. Kilgour) wrote that he would, as a former member of the Bar of British Colombia, appear if the Judge insisted. The counsel for the plaintiff replied that indeed the Judge insted, relying on the Member's previous statement, and ordered him to appear on March 31st or to have counsel appear on his behalf on March 30th. The Hon. Member responded to this last by appearing before the court on March 31st.

[English]

On April 4 he explained to the House what happened in the statement found at page 39 of Hansard:

> Appearing in court as ordered, I attempted to convince Her Lordship that an irresistible force was colliding with an immovable object. The court eventually ordered me to be sworn, and thereafter in effect directed me to reply to a question to identify a number of individuals who had come to my constituency office in April of 1986.

> The court adjourned for lunch when I declined to identify those persons. On reconvening, Her Lordship again indicated I should identify my visitors, but counsel for the plaintiff withdrew the subpoena,—just before the court ruled on the contempt citation. Her Lordship later said that she had intended to cite me for contempt.

I have just quoted what the Hon. Member said in argument before me.

[Translation]

From this sequence of events, the Hon. Member claims that his privileges have been infringed.

There are two issues I wish to deal with before turning to the question raised by the Hon. Member.

[English]

First, I feel that the service of the subpoena within the precincts of the House of Commons was improper without the permission of the Speaker.

• (1010)

Mr. Speaker: The precedents supporting this view are quite numerous, and it is unnecessary for me to cite them. Hon. Members should not, on their own accord, decide to accept service within the precincts. Nevertheless, if they wish to waive their parliamentary immunity, they can do so by leaving the precincts and accepting the service elsewhere. To do otherwise is to put at risk our ancient privileges, which are more than simply tradition. They are part of the law of Canada.

The Chair is concerned that erosion over time of those privileges would not serve this institution's interests. I could add, nor would it serve the public interest. Our privileges exist to enable Members to perform their duties without let or hindrance and, by extension, to protect the rights of the public they serve and represent.

[Translation]

Second, I would warn and caution those who attempt to further improper service of subpoenae, that they may be acting in a manner that is in contempt of the House. In this respect, I refer Hon. Members to the first issue of the "Minutes of Proceedings and Evidence of the Special Committee on Rights and Immunities of Members" presented to this House on July 12, 1976, where at page 1:19, Members will note that a Committee of the British House found it a contempt of Parliament to do something that has the object "—of furthering legal proceedings—" which are improper ab initio.

[English]

The basis of the Hon. Member's submission is that where civil actions are concerned, Canadians should know that they can speak to Members of Parliament in confidence without fear of later disclosure in a court of law. While appreciating the Hon. Member's point, I have had difficulty in finding a precedent to support the view that communications between an MP and his or her constituents or, indeed, the public in general, are privileged in the same way as those between lawyer and client.

Speaker Lamoureux in a ruling of April 29, 1971, had this to say:

> Privilege is that which sets Hon. Members apart from other citizens giving them rights which the public do not possess. I suggest we should be careful in construing any particular circumstance which might add to the privileges which have been recognized over the years and perhaps over the centuries as belonging to the House of Commons. In my view, parliamentary privilege does not go much beyond the right of free speech in the House of Commons and the right of a Member to discharge his duties in the House as a Member of the House of Commons.

This view was reinforced on February 20, 1975, by Speaker Jerome, who made the following comment:

> The consequences of extending that definition (of parliamentary privilege) to innumerable areas outside this Chamber into which the work of an MP might carry him, and particularly to the great number of grievances he might encounter in the course of that work, would run contrary to the basic concept of privilege.

[Translation]

On this last point I would also refer Hon. Members to my ruling on November 17, 1987 where I explained that the House cannot, in fact, create new privileges.

[English]

Perhaps an argument could be made that to be forced to testify in a court of law on a matter concerning confidential communications with constituents amounts to an undue influence, thus hindering the Member in the proper fulfilment of his duties. This argument might be easier to sustain if the Hon. Member had availed himself of the remedy available to him. He could have declined to appear as a witness, as he was entitled to do by virtue of his privilege as a Member of Parliament. By waiving his privilege, appearing, being sworn and answering some questions, he appears to have voluntarily submitted to the jurisdiction of the court. Once this privilege is waived, the Member surrenders the protection implicit in it.

[Translation]

Consequently, I am unable to find from these previous declarations or in the facts as set out in this present situation anything that would allow for the extension of parliamentary privilege to communications between Members of Parliament and members of the public.

[English]

There is another aspect of this matter which disturbs me very much. In the supporting documentation supplied to me by the Hon. Member it is clear that counsel for the plaintiffs in this case questioned the right of the Hon. Member to claim his parliamentary immunity, alleging that this was a matter for the court to decide. This claim was made in total disregard of what was established and easily verifiable parliamentary law, clearly and explicitly explained by the Law Clerk and Parliamentary Counsel in his letter of March 15.

Let me state for the record that the right of a Member of Parliament to refuse to attend court as a witness during a parliamentary session and during the 40 days preceding and following a parliamentary session is an undoubted and inalienable right supported by a host of precedents.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member did not base his complaint on the contents of the letter written by counsel for the plaintiffs in the case concerned. Had he done so, I would certainly have had to determine whether or not there was a prima facie case of contempt of Parliament, of undue pressure being brought to bear upon the Member for the purpose of questioning his right to claim parliamentary immunity. Fortunately, counsel for the plaintiffs withdrew the subpoena, and the matter did not proceed further.

[English]

To sum up, on these facts I am unable to find that the protection of parliamentary privilege extends to communications between Members of Parliament and the public. I must also warn Hon. Members that waiving of a privilege deprives them of the protection they would otherwise enjoy, not simply partially, but totally. I am gravely concerned that the subpoena was served on a Member of this House within parliamentary precincts. I would appeal to my colleagues, should this occur in the future, to refuse to accept any writ of summons within the precincts and to report to the Speaker should such an attempt be made.

Finally, I take a serious view of the action of a member of the legal profession in questioning the right of a Member of Parliament to claim immunity from appearing as a witness and alleging that a court, and not Parliament, had the power to make a determination in such a case.

I want to thank the Hon. Member for Edmonton Southeast (Mr. Kilgour) for his patience in allowing the Chair time to reflect at length on the important issues he raised in the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 81—CONDEMNATION OF GOVERNMENT INVOLVEMENT IN ARMX'89 ARMS BAZAAR

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina—Qu'Appelle) moved:

That this House condemn the Government's involvement in the arms bazaar ARMX'89, and calls upon the government:

(1) to cease all involvement in the expansion of the international market for military and policing equipment; and

(2) to take action to ensure that countries which violate human rights are prohibited from directly or indirectly arranging purchases of military and policing equipment in Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is with pride that I rise this morning to move this motion on behalf of the New Democratic Party and to be the lead–off speaker on a most pressing and important matter.

Next week in Ottawa, at Lansdowne Park, an exposition will be held of military hardware from around the world, particularly from Canadian arms manufacturers. It will have between 200 and 300 exhibitors attracting between 10,000 and 15,000 people who will be there to shop around for materials and goods related to the arms race. There will be people from many different countries. In fact, every country other than those from behind the Iron Curtain and Libya have been invited. This means that we will have people from certain Latin American countries, Central American countries, African and Asian countries, countries which have long histories of human rights abuses. It means we will have people in attendance who are at present actively engaged in regional wars. In other words, through this exposition we will be allowing countries whose domestic and foreign policies are opposed by the Canadian Government to look at and be able to place orders for military hardware. This hardware, in turn, will be used to suppress their own population and, in other cases, to be used to conduct the wars they are involved in.

The ARMX Conference was originally organized by the Liberals in 1983 and has been an ongoing biennial fair. This is the second time that it has now been contracted out. It has been contracted out to the division of Baxter Publication of Toronto which produces the trade journal of the Armed Forces, The Canadian Defence Quarterly, Defence Publications Limited.

To suggest as the Government has done, particularly the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) in a letter to my colleague from Brant (Mr. Blackburn), that the Canadian Government is not directly involved in ARMX is to side-step the issue. Let there be no doubt that if the Canadian Armed Forces were not there as participants, as buyers, ARMX would not exist this year. ARMX in the past would not have existed. Without the support of the Canadian Armed Forces, this arms exposition would be a non-starter.

This Government, as previous Liberal governments, has supported the arms industry through its DIPP program, the Defence Industry Productivity Program, through which arms producers and manufacturers receive certain subsidies. There are those arms manufacturers who are now paying Baxter Publication for the right to exhibit their wares.

The Canadian Government is indeed involved in helping to finance ARMX through the participation of the Canadian Defence Department, as well as through grants and subsidies to the defence industry through the DIPP program.

We have seen this Government concentrate on the defence industry as a means of its industrial strategy. I want to speak for a few minutes on the folly of that strategy.

Several countries have been seduced by cheap profits and quick industrial development by attempting to grab a bigger share of the world's military budget.

We know that dependence on the military, especially for a medium power like Canada, is wrought with danger. We will mainly manufacture for the American defence market. The Americans will be and are our major customer. As such, we are dependent upon the Americans, which in turn undermines our ability to formulate an independent Canadian foreign policy. Because of our dependence on a single market, we lose our ability to formulate a more independent stance. We lose our sovereignty.

Second, one must question the morality of encouraging the production, the creation of jobs and the productivity in the country of instruments that are essentially made to kill people. Surely, there is something immoral about devising an economic strategy based on instruments of death. For this Government, as it has done over the last number of years, to encourage this sector of the economy, when there is such tremendous need for goods and services that help people rather than kill people, I maintain is immoral.

For example, in this year some $250 million will be going in DIPP Grants. This is compared with the 1984-85 Budget of $153 million, when this Government was first elected. In other words, over a short period of time this Budget has increased by over $100 million per year. At the same time, we see cut-backs to regional development programs, to funding in health, education and social programs, right down the road. All the human programs are being cut back in the name of fighting the deficit, while there are programs to create instruments of death and the funding for those programs have increased. We find that immoral, Mr. Speaker, and that is what we condemn.

The other point I wish to raise is our history in terms of selling to those countries that abuse human rights. We have heard the Secretary of State for External Affairs

(Mr. Clark) give us the assurance in this House that no armaments made and produced in Canada are ending up in South Africa, in El Salvador and in those countries that have a strong history of abuse of human rights.

We all know that the international arms industry is not quite so neat. Canadian products can be sold to Great Britain who in turn sells them to a West German arms dealer, who sells them to the Saudis, who in turn sells them to the South Africans. We have been pressing that to help tighten up the regulations that an end use must be declared before we allow arms products manufactured on our shores to leave our shores. Unfortunately, this Government has still not accepted that position.

I wish to now address the more global question of the arms race and the economic costs of the arms race. Well over $1 trillion a year is now spent on the production of arms. Of course, the two major superpowers, the Soviet Union and the United States, spend the most. Then I am sure after that we have the Europeans, the Chinese, India and somewhere down the list is Canada as well.

When we take this total global expenditure of $1 trillion a year, we come to the conclusion that we cannot take $1 trillion out of the world economy without everybody in the world suffering from a reduced standard of living. We all pay for it. Mr. Speaker, you and I pay for it.

Let me give you one example. Because of the tremendous U.S. deficit some economists claim that almost 90 per cent of the total of what every individual and company in the United States saves is needed to pay the interest on their deficit. The Americans need to borrow huge sums of money from offshore in order to pay the interest on the deficit. The only way they can do this of course is to offer high interest rates.

As our economy is so closely tied in with the American economy, we of course have to raise our interest rates. Let us remember that the normal historic relationship between interest rates and inflation is that interest rates normally are two to three points above inflation. That means that the interest rates really should be around 6 per cent or 7 per cent. With a 6 per cent or 7 per cent interest rate, the Government deficit becomes manageable. For young families attempting to pay for a mortgage a 6 per cent or 7 per cent interest rate becomes manageable. If the farmers in my constituency only had to pay a 6 per cent or 7 per cent interest rate on the farm debt, that would become manageable. The fact of the matter is that we have a 12 per cent or 13 per cent interest rate, in large part because of the arms race and because of the deficits that this has produced on a world scale and the scarcity and demand it has created for capital. Yes, we are all paying for the arms race.

We are living in a day and age where we should have an abundance of resources and services. We are surely living in a golden age where our ability to produce in terms of human needs should be unlimited in terms of human history. Yet, we are living in an age of scarcity. There is not enough money to pay for our hospitals, roads and proper schools. There is a shortage of proper and decent housing.

Surely we can only conclude that if we did not have this tremendous expenditure in arms, we would have the resources to ensure that there are adequate houses and homes and that our streets, bridges and sewage systems would be in a proper state of repair. We should be able to afford all those human needs but, instead, we have been spending the best sums of money on instruments of death and destruction.

The hopeful sign, perhaps, in all this is that both the Soviet Union and the United States have come to their limits in the arms race and those limits are financial ones because of the tremendous deficits in the United States which I would tend to think are even greater in the Soviet Union. The superpowers are just beginning to discover that they cannot continue to afford the escalation of the arms race. They must begin to establish some understanding and some mutual disarmament process in order to start controlling expenditures. In fact, instead of sending ambassadors and generals to the disarmament conferences, we should start sending people from Treasury Board and the Department of Finance because they are the only people who realistically understand what this arms race is all about.

When, as a country, we begin to participate and sponsor programs like ARMX we are contributing to the world problem. We are contributing not only to the world economic problem, the economic problem of too much money being spent on useless production of death machines, but we are also contributing to the moral problem. Large expenditures of money are going to arms production instead of to the production of human services. Countries with long records of human rights abuse are very often the major purchasers of the arms that we are either manufacturing or engaged in manufacturing. This means that we become immoral ourselves. As we participate in this obnoxious international arms trade, we ourselves become immoral.

I think Canadians generally view Canada as a country with a good record of human rights, supporting other countries of human rights, standing up in our place and condemning those countries that do not have such human rights records. I think Canadians are surprised when they discover the extent to which Canada is involved in the production of arms, the shipment of arms and the export of arms. I think Canadians do not view our country as a major arms producer and exporter. That is why it is important to us, as the New Democratic Party, to have this topic as an Opposition day motion to make Canadians aware of what the Government has been doing and the extent to which Canada has become involved in the arms race as a supplier of armaments.

Hopefully through this awareness Canadians will protest, as many will be protesting next week at Lansdowne Park, in silent vigils and marches against the Government's policy.

While we live in a world of tremendous dangers brought about, of course, by the introduction of weapons of mass destruction, particularly nuclear weaponry as well as biochemical and the biological weapons of mass destruction there are hopeful signs. I had an opportunity, along with with some of my colleagues, earlier this year to visit and talk with some of the Canadians involved in the Vienna discussions. They were optimistic and reported to us that for the first time in their memory and experience as arms negotiators they were beginning to find a receptivity to new ideas. The other day West Germany's Minister of Defence proclaimed that the cold war was over. We have heard other Governments, western Governments as well as some of the eastern Governments, proclaim or suggest that there is an atmosphere in the world in part brought about by economic necessity, that we have to step away from the escalation of the arms race and begin the process of de-escalation. There is in this a tremendous hope for humankind.

The possibility exists today that we can walk away from the brink of total human destruction and walk toward some form of sanity. It is not just a backing away from a tremendous evil of global destruction, but going forward with something promising. If we can begin to harness that trillion dollars in world expenditure on arms every year and put it toward the building of hospitals, to the provision of basic human needs and services on a global scale, we can then dare to begin to think and dream of a much more beautiful world. We could then dream of a world where those basic human needs will become the priority and we would have the ability and the capacity to meet those human needs so that the ancient scourges of hunger, disease, poverty and ignorance can be dealt with and wiped off the face of this earth. That is the tremendous potential that we have as a human race and that exists today.

We, in the New Democratic Party, call upon this Government to realize the potential we have. We call upon this Government to reverse the strategy it has been following since 1984, one of accelerating the cold war and of playing into it. We call upon this Government to realize that the world has changed and in fact, the world is trying to step away from escalation. We call upon this Government to take up the historic role which Canada has played, and continue taking a leadership role toward mutual understanding.

Even Conservative Governments like John Diefenbaker's Government or previous Liberal Governments were the same in this one aspect. They were able to follow a more independent Canadian foreign policy. Mr. Diefenbaker did not go along with the Americans in the blockading of Havana. The Liberals under Pierre Trudeau and Lester Pearson and Louis St. Laurent also took independent foreign policy decisions. But this Government has been tripping over itself in its desire to please the Americans. In fact, it has become more American than the Americans themselves and, as such, the Government is doing a disservice to the Americans.

We are close friends of the Americans and as close friends we should be honest with the Americans. If you are not honest with your close friends, you are no longer close friends. The Americans require some friends to be honest with them. It is about time this Government became honest with the Americans and told them that there is room for disarmament, that there is room for moving to a new world order based more on mutual trust. We can together explore these new areas. The Canadian Government should be in the forefront of that process rather than a drag, and it has become a drag.

It is with great pleasure that I stand in my place today to offer this motion. I am certain it is a motion on which many Members will want to speak and that we will have a most informed and interesting debate.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, it is a real pleasure to discuss this matter, even briefly. I must congratulate the Hon. Member from the New Democratic Party for his brilliant contribution. I will simply tell him that I agree in principle with this kind of proposal insofor that everything meest be done to ensure that our planet no longer has a hot spot as far as war is concerned.

It is clear to me as Member of the Standing Committee on Human Rights, Mr. Speaker, and I am sure everyone else shares this view, that we must make every effort, do everything in our power to preserve peace. Personally, looking at the Government policy that has been very well established by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), I find it is quite acceptable even though it may not be perfect because, and I would like to hear the Hon. Members views on that, Canada is still a member of NATO and NORAD. It is a well known fact that the New Democratic Party some months ago supported Canada's withdrawal from NATO, but during the last elections, after looking at opinion polls, the New Democratic Party changed positions, the implication being they would remain within NATO for years to come.

Under these circumstances, after the Hon. Member adduced figures suggesting the Canadian Government would invest massively into the arms industry, will he recognize that the Canadian armament industry's main activity is not into manufacturing offensive weapons but strictly transport aircraft and communications equipment or is he not aware of that fact? I believe this is the essential part of our military industry's activities. Again, in view of the fact Canada is a member of NATO and NORAD, it must ensure it is well supplied with that kind of equipment. Again, it is terrible to imply Canada is essentially into offensive weapons and war equipment, when the facts are quite different—essentially, we are manufacturing transport planes and communications equipment to supply our troupes and those of our allies.

I would therefore welcome the Hon. Member's comments on those investments generated in Canada.

[English]

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, as I understand it, the Hon. Member has basically asked me two questions. One is the nature of our defence investments. The Hon. Member claims that they are essentially defensive rather than offensive in nature. Second, he is interested in our position regarding NATO. Let me deal with the question about the nature of the weapons first.

In this day and age, it is very difficult, if it ever was possible, to differentiate between offensive and defensive. A number of years ago, I raised concerns in the House about Canada's involvement in the production of biochemical weaponry. At that time, the Liberal Minister of Defence assured me that they were all for defensive purposes. One can argue that these weapons are to be used to defend oneself or used as offensive weapons. A rifle can be used in both directions. I do not think it is fair to say that these weapons are only for defensive purposes. They can also be used for offensive purposes, and it has been shown that some of the countries we have been selling them to can use them for offensive purposes and have done so.

Let me now deal with the question concerning NATO. The position of the NDP, through its resolutions, has been that Canada should withdraw from NATO. That remains our position, and as such, I make no apologies for that.

Members of the New Democratic Party would like to see NATO and the Warsaw Pact, the alliances, eventually dismantled. That is our goal. We have recognized that the timing of such withdrawal requires some flexibility. In order to further our long-term goal of seeing that both NATO and the Warsaw Pact are disbanded, we need to play our card of moving out of NATO at the most appropriate time.

For example, if it becomes feasible through negotiations to do a step-by-step withdrawal, Canada may withdraw from NATO as Poland withdraws from the Warsaw Pact. If there is a step-by-step de-escalation, we would do that, we would play our card as though we are having a game of bridge. We would play our trump card at the appropriate time. We would not start the game by immediately laying down our card. It is done at the appropriate time.

That is the change to our policy. It has changed from one of immediately withdrawing from NATO to one of withdrawing at the appropriate time. However, our goal remains the same, to withdraw from NATO at the most opportune moment possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Desjardins: Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the Hon. Member's speech and to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Tremblay). I should think that all my colleagues here are very pleased that an NDP spokesman has finally explained his Party's clear position with respect to NATO. We had been waiting for that for quite some time. The Hon. Member might be interested to know that two years ago some of my colleagues and I met with Lord Carrington in Brussels. At the time I asked Lord Carrington how Europe would fare should Canada ever decide to pull out of NATO. Lord Carrington's answer: It would be a catastrophe for both Europe and your own country.

So I have to ask the Hon. Member whether he agrees that Canada's withdrawal from the NATO contingent would be an unacceptable retreat, that Canadians would find themselves in an untenable position, altogether vulnerable from an economic standpoint and, in time, completely isolated, in short a withdrawal for which they would end up paying very dearly?

My second question concerns his Party's national defence policy. His own leader once said that a future hypothetical NDP administration—hopefully Canadians will never see that—would maintain the national defence budget as is but earmark the funds in a different way. I wish the Hon. Member would state his position concerning the kind of funding which should be allocated to national defence and, second, concerning the precarious situation Canada might be in should we as a country ever decide to part company with NATO.

[English]

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. First, let me go back to the question of NATO. Let us not forget that it was a Conservative Minister of Defence, the Hon. Eric Nielsen, who went to Washington and then Europe floating the idea that perhaps Canadian troops should be brought out of Europe. It was a Conservative proposal. The American representative at that time, Mr. Weinberger, said, "Well, that is an interesting proposal. I think we would like to back you guys on that. Why don't you go and see what the Europeans have to say about that?"

Of course, Mr. Nielsen went to Europe and the Europeans said, "Horror of horrors, you can't do this to us".

We spend around $1 billion maintaining our troops in Europe, but strategically they are of no importance whatsoever. Let us get this clear. Canadian troops in Europe are of no strategic importance and of no consequence. When Mr. Nielsen was Minister of Defence, he recognized this. Everyone recognizes this. It is a political consideration. Why did the Europeans want Canadian troops in Europe? They wanted them because if Canadian troops were not in Europe, the Americans might decide to leave. The Europeans want the Americans in Europe because if there was an outbreak of hostilities, they know that the United States could immediately become involved in those hostilities. If American boys were not in Europe, then Americans conceivably might decide not to become involved. That is really the political rationale as to why Canadian troops should remain in Europe. It is a political consideration.

What we have found with this Government is that it is withdrawing from Canada by closing all of these bases in Canada that conduct air and sea operations and rescue operations and so forth. It is withdrawing from Canada, but it is leaving our troops in Europe. I suggest that if the Government is going to leave our troops in Europe, they at least should begin to charge a billion dollars or so to the Europeans. The Europeans can well afford their defence situation. If if we are going to become mercenaries, then at least we should start charging the Europeans some billion dollars or more a year to keep our troops there.

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to participate in this debate today. I was a little surprised at the motion that was put forward by the NDP for this opposition day debate, but I welcome it. It gives us an opportunity to lay out the facts and dispel the fiction about ARMX, the Armed Forces Training Technology exhibition, which will take place in Ottawa next week. All we are hearing from the NDP are mistruths about this particular event.

I listened to the Hon. Member across the floor as he got into all sorts of other defence issues, I would certainly enjoy debating him on some of those. It is interesting to note that the NDP's position on NATO is still to withdraw from NATO but not necessarily withdraw until the time is right. Quite honestly, that kind of a foreign and defence policy certainly would not wash with our allies, as I am sure even the Liberals would admit.

It was interesting when the Hon. Member talked about arms control. I represented our Government in Vienna two months ago at the opening of the conventional arms talks, and it was positive meeting. There was a sense between our NATO allies and the Warsaw countries that this may be the time to make some real progress in the reduction of conventional arms. But this has only come about through our strength, through our allies in NATO. We have held a strong position for the last 40 years, and they are now willing to negotiate. If we had not had that strength, and NATO, we would never be in the position today where we are looking forward to a reduction in conventional and nuclear arms in Europe and around the world.

Coming back to the point of the debate today, I would like to speak specifically about ARMX. Starting with a little history, ARMX, the Armed Forces Training Technology Exhibition, began in 1983, an exhibition at the mobile command headquarters in St. Hubert, Québec. Its focus was and still is on training, technology, including the use of simulation devices. The point of creating such an exhibition was to allow members of the Armed Forces contact with industry to see what the training technology industry had to offer and to allow industry a first-hand opportunity of learning the needs of the Canadian forces. Although ARMX has grown and evolved over the years, its basic purpose has not changed. It has three primary goals: first, to demonstrate modern technology, especially training technology, to as many senior commanders and staff users as possible; second, to acquaint Canadian and international industry with training equipment requirements of the Canadian Forces, and finally to encourage industry to industry related relationships between Canadian and international sources of technology and provide a forum for a potential investment and industrial co-operation.

What is so threatening about all that? It is merely bringing people together in a cost-effective way to make us more efficient in our Department and to bring us up-to-date with what is happening in the training technology area.

I would also like to clarify the role of the Department of National Defence in ARMX and the reason for our continuing interest in its success. Our job in the Department of National Defence—I would like to make this very clear because I have heard some confusing discussion over the last few weeks about it—is to safeguard our country's sovereignty and security. This involves a vast range of national and international commitments. It includes our commitments to collective security through NORAD and NATO as well as to our international peacekeeping operations. In order to fulfil these commitments, the Canadian Forces, the men and women who serve in our Forces in Canada and around the world in NATO and in peace-keeping operations, we need the most effective training and technology methods and equipment that we can acquire. We all know that we have a finite budget, and we live within the constraints of our budgets and resources. We need the assistance of industry to better equip our forces. We need new ideas to improve our training.

Let me explain why modern simulation capabilities are cost effective and are very important to the training activities of the Canadian Forces. It is much less expensive for members of the Canadian Forces to train on simulators rather than using valuable equipment. Such equipment is usually expensive to operate and can be risky if used by inexperienced personnel. Training modules save time and money in almost every forum of training in the military. Such training devices range from drones and flight simulators to electronic rifle ranges and advanced naval tactic simulators. It is obvious that if you spend hours working with the simulator, such as in air-flight training, by the time you get up in the air, you will have a lot more confidence and expertise. That really is a more cost-effective way of helping to train our people.

Another way in which these training devices contribute positively to Canada, and perhaps this is not something usually thought of, is that the use of simulators and simulator training devices helps to protect our environment. We all know of Canadians' concern for environmental protection these days. Simulators are some of the most environmentally sound and energy efficient ways in which to provide military training and maintain necessary skills. For example, a jet fighter aircraft would be flown a fraction of the time if its crew were to be trained equally well in flight simulation. They not only save time. They save expense and energy.

This is why ARMX plays such a useful role. ARMX is much more than a defence trade show. It is a meeting place, a forum for Government and industry to exchange information and ultimately come together and work together to improve our Forces' training and our operational effectiveness. That is why we support this training technology exhibition.

However, our involvement is relatively limited. First, there is no public money spent on ARMX whatsoever. It is sponsored, organized and conducted by defence publications which are owned by Baxter Publishing. In other words, this is a private exhibition run by private industry for the benefit of both government and industry. While we do provide some direct support in terms of equipment and personnel, the cost of these services is recovered in accordance with the regulations.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that my time is limited for now. I will look forward to returning to the discussion following Question Period.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

FOOD AND PROCESSING INDUSTRIES

Mr. Ross Stevenson (Durham): Mr. Speaker, in sharp contrast to the moaning we heard from opposition Parties during the free trade debate, the agriculture and food processing industries in Canada are growing and not dying.

• (1100)

The current massive reinvestment in these industries bodes well for future markets and for jobs.

Responding to a quadrupling in sales of oat bran, Quaker Oats has announced a $13-million expansion and upgrading of its plant at Peterborough, Ontario. This expansion will provide an even greater market for Ontario and Canadian oats. That means more jobs for workers in this industry.

Even more significant, those new facilities at Peterborough will produce one line of breakfast cereal which is currently imported from the United States. As a farmer, I am pleased to say that the food processing industry in Canada remains healthy and vigorous.

TOURISM

EFFECT OF BUDGETARY CUTS ON INDUSTRY

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, as we reach the end of National Tourism Awareness Week, Canadians are recognizing that this year the Government has turned the occasion from a celebration into a wake.

This is nowhere more evident than in the National Capital Region, where our efforts to promote Canada's capital as an international tourist destination are being hit doubly hard. Not only are we facing a future $20-million cut to Tourism Canada's budget, but also an immediate $5-million cut to the National Capital Commission's budget.

Recently, the Government changed the mandate of the NCC to give the Commission more responsibility for tourism promotion, and yet the Government has slashed the resources available to do the job.

When will the Government start to realize that investments in areas such as tourism are more than paid back in benefits to local economies? When will the Government rescind these cuts?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CHINESE HEAD TAX AND EXCLUSION ACTS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the House that Mr. Mark Aik–Liang, the first Chinese Canadian to bring his head tax certificate into my office in 1983, passed away last September 12 leaving a lonely, distraught widow who has lost most of her eyesight from crying every day since her husband's death. She can no longer read the Chinese newspaper for updates on the head tax issue. There is no member of her family with her. She lives alone. Her only son is left in Hong Kong which might not have happened if it were not for the Chinese Head Tax and Exclusion Acts. Her only burning desire is to see the settlement of the head tax issue which has caused undue suffering for her family.

There are thousands of other families who have suffered similar experiences as the result of the unjust racist head tax. I urge the Government, on behalf of all Parties, to act quickly in negotiating a fair settlement of the head tax issue with the Chinese Canadian National Council. Only after those steps have been fulfilled can Canada be upright in its claims as a nation where equality is extolled and discrimination will not be condoned.

JUSTICE

MEASURES TO OUTLAW VIOLENT PORNOGRAPHY URGED

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, in the October, 1986 Throne Speech, the Government resolved to defend and strengthen the institution of the Canadian family by, among other measures, taking effective action against violent forms of pornography involving women and children.

I believe there is in Canada today a broad consensus that children and young people not be exposed to pornographic material. Further, that material depicting sexual violence, sexual degradation, and any and all forms of child pornography be outlawed.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) indicated recently that he and his officials are studying measures dealing with child pornography and pornography depicting violence.

Most Canadians believe that violence and degrading pornography is inimical to Canadian family life. It is their hope that the Minister of Justice will proceed expeditiously with his study and come forward with strong measures outlawing malignant forms of pornography. In doing so, the Minister will recognize the importance of the family and the inherent dignity of individual Canadians.

EMPLOYMENT

YOUTH EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Jean–Marc Robitaille (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, last week the Hon. Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) launched the national "Hire a Student" campaign in Canada Place in Ottawa.

I had the pleasure of taking part in this launching together with the Minister and many Hon. Members of this House. It was an opportunity for us to meet hundreds of young people who also took part in this event, which will be repeated across Canada.

Last year, Mr. Speaker, several thousand jobs were created thanks to this campaign.

Canada's young students greatly appreciate the excellent employment opportunities afforded them by this program and I encourage private enterprise to participate actively in this strategy to employ students. They are intelligent and dynamic, they represent the future and they deserve the support of us all.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, on May 26, I shall take part in the official opening of my riding's student summer employment centres in Repentigny and Terrebonne.

I therefore encourage all Hon. Members of this House to support young Canadians and to make this program another great success for young Canadians and all students.

ENVIRONMENT

NEED FOR ACTION TO ENSURE SAFE DRINKING WATER

Mr. Rex Crawford (Kent): Mr. Speaker, water is a precious resource. I have no fear about drinking the water in this glass. However, living with uncertainty about the safety of drinking water can be nerve wracking. One only need ask the people who live downstream from chemical valley on the St. Clair River. Residents are held hostage to the constant fear that a toxic spill could jeopardize their health. They have coped with over 300 spills in three years—300 spills, Mr. Speaker!

The Government said "no" to helping communities downstream get a clean water supply. The Tories said, "It's not our problem".

The Tories said "no" to municipal infrastructure. Those saying "yes" include every Government in every municipality, province and territory, Liberal, Conservative, and NDP. They know federal funding is needed for a clean and safe environment. Water supply projects are a national problem needing a national response.

The Tories are the odd man out. They are copping out. Canadians in Kent, in Toronto, in Newcastle, New Brunswick, should not be forced to drink bottled water.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INTERMEDIATE RANGE MISSILES IN EUROPE

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, Canada has undertaken to give qualified support to the American position in favour of modernizing the range of nuclear weapons in Europe. In yesterday's editorial in the New York Times we have the sober, critical voice of Anthony Lewis who stated:

> Last year's treaty on intermediate-range nuclear forces required the Soviet Union to dismantle the 239 SS-23 missiles it had in Europe. Soviet officials had argued that the SS-23's range was just below the 300-mile threshold set in the treaty, but to meet American concerns they agreed to include it.

The Americans propose to advance the range of the Lance to 280 miles, almost the very same range that they insisted on denying to the Soviet Union. Mr. Shevardnadze, the Soviet Foreign Minister, was talking very tough about that, which may or may not be the way we are expecting Mr. Gorbachev to negotiate. As Mr. Lewis stated, we are asking them to destroy their weapons and then we are putting in weapons that are nearly the same.

I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to use his good offices to persuade the White House to back off on its modernization.

TRANSPORT

PROTEST RAIL LINE ABANDONMENT

Mr. Greg Thompson (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, in our efforts to control the national debt, no part of the country has borne that burden any more strongly than Atlantic Canada. We have done it, and we will continue to do it.

However, the point I want to make is simply that we cannot afford to have our rail lines continually abandoned in that part of Canada, particularly in my home Province of New Brunswick.

I urge the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) to take a serious look at regional development, to take a serious look at what we need in the Province of New Brunswick, and to take a serious look at stopping the continual abandonment of rail lines.

I also urge the Minister of Transport to take a very serious look at VIA Rail and maintain VIA Rail. We need it, we use it, and we don't want to lose it.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

TRIBUTE TO LIBRARY STAFF

Mr. Larry Schneider (Regina—Wascana): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend the staff of the Library of Parliament for the excellent job that they do on behalf of all parliamentarians. Both the information and Technical Services Branch and the Research Branch provide prompt and professional service at all times.

The effectiveness of the Library is quite obviously a reflection of the quality of the people who work there. Their ability to provide information and analyses on complex matters on short notice requires a great deal of skill and hard work. Without this constant level of professionalism, the House would function on a less than adequate level.

On a related matter, our public and school libraries serve an equally important function for the general public. They are the storehouses of information and knowledge available to all Canadians. They help us keep pace with this rapidly changing world of ours.

• (1110)

I believe that all parliamentarians owe a debt of gratitude to the staff in the Library of Parliament and to librarians across the Canada for the research, information and education they provide to all Canadians.

COST TO CANADIAN FARMERS OF HIGHER GASOLINE PRICES

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, thanks to the Budget of the Government opposite, farmers will see the price of gasoline rise by seven cents a litre and the price of diesel fuel by four cents a litre by the end of 1989. This stroke of the pen by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will cost Canadian farmers well over $120 million a year.

The Ontario Corn Producers Association estimates the sum will cost farmers $2 an acre per year. No other business sector has been singled out for cuts in this Budget as has the agriculture industry.

I ask the Minister of Finance and the Government whether or not they know the importance of agriculture to Canadians and to our Canadian economy? Do they not realize that our farmers are in difficult times? Why does the Minister of Finance not do something about it and bring in good programs? I call on the Government to appoint a full-time Minister of Agriculture who knows the industry, who understands the industry and is prepared to do something for farmers in this country.

THE MONARCHY

1939 ROYAL TOUR TO CANADA

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, fifty years ago, amidst colour, excitement and pageantry unprecedented in our history, Canadian nationhood was given a significant boost.

The presence on Canadian soil of King George VI and Queen Elizabeth, from May 17 to June 15 1939, put into practice the theory of the statute of Westminster of 1931. This is a perspective of the visit that is often neglected among the vivid and fond memories of that exciting time.

The 1931 Statute had changed Canada's status from that essentially of a colony to that of an independent sovereign nation within the British Commonwealth.

The 1939 tour set precedents because not only was it the first time a reigning monarch was visiting Canada, but any of his Dominions. King George VI was here as King of Canada, not as King of the United Kingdom visiting one of his colonies.

In the nation's capital on May 19, three events—accepting the credentials of an envoy, granting Royal Assent, and ratifying two treaties—concentrated attention in a solemn and colourful manner on Canada as a sovereign constitutional monarchy.

TAXATION

WRITE-OFFS FOR ADVERTISING

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, press reports today show clearly what utter contempt Canada's largest corporations have for our Canadian political system, for our tax system, and for the Canadian people.

The corporations which helped buy the last election for the Conservative Party are now asking for their part of the pay off. They want to be able to write off from their profits the money they spent on advertising supporting the trade deal.

We are not talking about small sums. The Canadian Alliance for Trade and Job Opportunities spent nearly $6 million in two years promoting their own brand of job opportunities in Georgia.

The Business Council on National Issues spent nearly $1 million, and 75 big corporations like Alcan contributed an average of $50,000 a piece.

In fact, we do not even know how many companies were involved. Noranda gave the Canadian Alliance for Trade and Job Opportunities as much as $250,000. But the Alliance refuses to provide a list of its corporate supporters. Like the insects that hide under rocks, these companies and their directors do not have the guts to face the light of Canadian public scrutiny. Big business gets its way in Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Edmonton Southwest (Mr. Edwards).

INTERNATIONAL MUSEUMS DAY

IMPORTANCE OF MUSEUMS

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, today is International Museum Day.

Canadian museums receive more than 20 million visitors every year. These figures show the popularity of these institutions, both for entertainment and for education.

Canadians do not help these keepers of our heritage and culture only with their taxes and admission fees. We must not forget either the 20,000 volunteers who give their time and energy to provide a wide range of activities featuring the wealth of our collections.

[English]

The "friends" of museums help their museums in many ways. They may guide schoolchildren, work in gift shops and libraries, or organize special events.

"Friends" serve on committees and boards. They offer advice, encouragement and enthusiasm which can assist with the daily operation of their organization.

The contribution of Friends to Museums has enriched the lives of all Canadians. I feel strongly that their generosity should be especially recognized today on the occasion of International Museums Day.

TRANSPORT

ELIMINATION OF VIA RAIL SERVICE

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, the Government's decision to slaughter VIA Rail is shameful. Since 1984, the Tories have been plotting to eliminate rail passenger service in Canada. Atlantic Canadians have been seriously misled by the Government.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Minister from Bay Street, has taken his pound of flesh and then some from VIA. No corporation can survive if its budget is slashed by $1.3 billion over a five-year period. The job losses will be staggering, especially in the Dartmouth–Halifax region where some 322 people could be thrown out of work if VIA service is withdrawn.

It is shameful that at the same time as these cuts to VIA were finalized, the Tories had the National Transportation Agency, headed by Erik Nielsen, going across the country holding public hearings on the future of VIA. What a game of deceit. What a sham. While the Minister of Finance had VIA drawn and quartered, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) said absolutely nothing and the NTA continued to be a willing accomplice in what had become an unholy charade. The Tory Members opposite who vowed to fight for VIA are now muted in silence. I call upon the Government to halt these cut-backs on VIA, protect the jobs of its workers, to keep its word and to do so now.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

QUERY AS TO DATE PRIME MINISTER AND MINISTER OF FINANCE INFORMED AS TO SECOND BUDGET LEAK

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance, I put my questions once again to the Deputy Prime Minister.

On Thursday, April 27, at page 1036 of Hansard, the Prime Minister of Canada said on the subject of the Budget investigation:

> The Solicitor General has said that if any information comes to him, he will report to the House immediately.

Yesterday, the Solicitor General said that the RCMP had been aware of the allegations of a second leak from the outset of the investigation. In other words, for over three weeks.

The Prime Minister told the House of Commons that the Solicitor General would report any information immediately. Why did the Prime Minister not live up to that undertaking to the House? It seems incredible to me that if the RCMP knew, the Solicitor General did not know or would not have reported it to the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance. When did the Prime Minister of this country know, and when did the Minister of Finance know?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I think the question raised by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition— I want to go back to what I said yesterday, Mr. Speaker. As soon as a journalist appeared on television with a document which was obviously a Budget document, the RCMP immediately started an investigation on all circumstances surrounding the incident.

And I specifically asked at that moment, Mr. Speaker— because, naturally, the leak of a Budget document one day before— I immediately asked for an investigation on whether some people could have profited from the leak of a Budget document before the Budget was tabled.

And it is precisely for that reason that we asked for an investigation right from the start, Mr. Speaker. To reassure Canadians, yesterday the Commissioner of the RCMP told me that, so far, his investigation couldn't find any evidence to the effect that some people could have profited from the Budget leak.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that this Government has acted in a responsible manner.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Solicitor General said that the RCMP has been aware of a second leak since the beginning, three weeks ago.

Despite the Prime Minister's statement here in this House that the Solicitor General would immediately report any information to this House, he hasn't done so.

[English]

POSSIBILITY OF FURTHER BUDGET LEAKS—MINISTERIAL ACCOUNTABILITY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is again directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. We want to know whether in fact there was another second or third leak. The Minister of Justice said there might have been more. That is what he said to the House yesterday.

We want to know that because this is not a police matter. This is a matter of ministerial accountability, specifically that of the Minister of Finance to the House of Commons. It is accountability not to the police but to Parliament.

Therefore, I put my question once again to the Deputy Prime Minister. On what day, at what time were Ministers of the Government, specifically the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General informed of the fact that there was another leak, second, third or fourth, of Budget information? Why was that information not given immediately to the House of Commons?

• (1120)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the right hon. gentleman, it is indeed a matter for the police. He will know if he reads the newspapers, and I know that he does, that the headline of The Globe and Mail of April 28 reads: "Many leaks reported to special RCMP unit". The article goes on to state:

> The RCMP yesterday expanded its investigation of Wednesday's budget leak to include a number of other leaks reported before Finance Minister Michael Wilson's embarrassing admission that someone had let slip his budget.

The article goes on to quote an RCMP spokesman. It states:

"Every report will be investigated," said RCMP spokesman Denis Deveau. We're not just out in the corridor on this one. We've got the wideangle lens on it, and we've a lot of guys working on it."

I could go on to cite a number of other incidents.

Mr. Kevin Newman reporting on the CTV network acknowledged a potential leak with respect to the Ottawa TV affiliate.

We have an Hon. Member of the House who suggested that he had prior knowledge of the Budget.

Mr. Tobin: Answer the question.

Mr. Mazankowski: There were many allegations. All of the allegations are indeed being investigated by the RCMP.

Why does the right hon. gentleman insist on attempting to interfere with the process of an RCMP investigation?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

ACCOUNTABILITY TO HOUSE OF COMMONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I will say to the Deputy Prime Minister the reason I am being so persistent is because—

Mr. Mazankowski: It is the phoniest fight of your life.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —it is not a police matter, it is a parliamentary matter. It has to do with the accountability of the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister to the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Deputy Prime Minister was getting a little personal. I want to say to him this. I know that he is in a difficult position. He is stonewalling for the Minister of Finance. He is stonewalling for the Prime Minister.

I want to recall to him the similarity between the position he finds himself in and the position of his predecessor, the then Hon. Member for the Yukon, who stonewalled for the Prime Minister on the Sinclair Stevens affair.

A great deal of parliamentary exchange is gratuitous. I feel in my gut that the Deputy Prime Minister knows more than he is telling this House of Commons. I am pleading with him to come clean with the House before this whole thing breaks open.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Retire your gut.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: His own Member—

Mrs. Gaffney: You are on the run.

Mr. Mazankowski: I can run a heck of a lot faster than you can.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: Cover-up.

Mr. Mazankowski: I will put my record up against your record any day.

Mr. Tobin: We will see.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, one of his own Members, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre, as reported at page 1032 of Hansard said: "There is now evidence that that leakage was widespread and that there were a number of sources." I presume—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Are you admitting it?

Mr. Mazankowski: No. I presume that if the Hon. Member had evidence of that, he turned it over to the RCMP. If he did not, he should have. If he has not, the Hon. Leader of the Opposition should petition his colleague to ensure that it is turned over to the RCMP.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW FACTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and deals with the Budget leak. I have before me a copy of the Hansard of the House of Commons for May 18, in which the Solicitor General is quoted as saying, also on the matter of the second Budget leak: —the investigation has included, from the outset of the situation, the press story referred to. This is on page 1912 of Hansard. How then can the Deputy Prime Minister conciliate the admission yesterday by the Solicitor General that the RCMP was aware of all those facts since the beginning, and the following statement made by the Prime Minister in this House, and I am quoting from page 1036 of Hansard:

> "—the Solicitor General has said if any information comes to him he will report to the House immediately— "

Why did the Solicitor General not report to us this new information he himself recognized yesterday in this House? Why did he hide that fact from the House of Commons?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, we have nothing to hide. I indicated to the House the very next day we already had set in motion a complete investigation of all the facts from the moment the document involved was shown on TV. And I also requested—and this is what I was referring to yesterday, what I am pointing out to the Hon. Member—that from the very beginning, they would look into any possibility of people profiting from a leaked Budget document before the Budget speech. This is what I was specifically referring to yesterday, and I believe this is the responsible course of action. As I suggested yesterday and as I am saying again today: the RCMP Commissioner, pursuant to that specific request I made on the behalf of all Canadians I believe, came back to me yesterday and told me there was no evidence indeed to this day that people could have profited from that. I think I acted responsibly when I so informed the House yesterday.

[English]

BUDGET SECURITY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is addressed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Minister of Supply and Services said in the House on April 27 that all precautions had been taken in regard to budget security. On the same day the Prime Minister described the budget leak as a theft and a crime.

Is it not now obvious that the only crime is the criminal negligence of the Government in this whole affair?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what I said earlier. We have acted quite responsibly from the very beginning. The RCMP are an honourable police force and they have been asked to look into this matter. We have nothing to hide. Mr. Speaker, the House of Commons always takes the same approach whenever a police agency is conducting an investigation: we let them carry out their investigation and do their work. That is what we have to do.

REQUEST AS TO WHEN MINISTER WAS INFORMED OF SECOND LEAK

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. At 11 a.m. on April 27 the Minister of Finance advised the House of Commons that there had been a Budget leak the night before. All he said was a leak. During Question Period the same day at 2 p.m. I asked two questions about the possibility of another Budget leak and the Minister of Finance chose not to respond, suggesting instead that my question was simply a political question. We know now that the same morning the finance deputy minister was told about a second Budget leak. My question is to the point: when did the Minister of Finance first hear about this second leak and why did he fail to inform the House of Commons at the earliest opportunity?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party is referring to information provided by or allegations made in the media. I said earlier, as I did yesterday on a number of occasions, that all such allegations or whatever else have been referred to the RCMP. Our duty as Members of Parliament and as Canadian citizens is to refer any such allegations to the RCMP, and that is what we did. I said yesterday and I say again today that the RCMP are looking into all circumstances surrounaing this case. That is what I said, Mr. Speaker, and I believe that is the responsible approach.

[English]

OBLIGATION TO INFORM PUBLIC OF FURTHER BUDGET LEAKS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I say that that answer is totally unacceptable. I wish to go back to the Deputy Prime Minister.

The Minister of Finance thought the one leak which had been publicly revealed was so serious that he had to come into the House of Commons the next day to address the question of a leak as a question of privilege. We now know that his Deputy Minister was informed that very morning of another budget leak that had taken place three days previously.

My question to the Deputy Prime Minister is simply this. If the Government had knowledge that day, either that morning or later on in Question Period, that there was not simply one leak but two leaks, why were the people of Canada not informed? Why was the House of Commons not informed? When is the Government going to tell us honestly when it learned of the second leak? That is what is at stake here.

• (1130)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, let us keep this thing in perspective. Even the comment that was made by Mr. Newman of CBC very clearly said that it was not until after Michael Wilson had been forced to go public with the Budget that the company told officials in Ottawa that they were aware of more details.

An Hon. Member: That was Wednesday night.

An Hon. Member: Why didn't they come clean on Thursday?

Mr. Mazankowski: According to a Globe and Mail source, the President of a Toronto financial company learned the next morning that his staff had been in possession of the Budget. Once this issue was opened and turned over to the RCMP, all aspects of it, as the Solicitor General has indicated, had been turned over to the RCMP for full investigation.

The Leader of the New Democratic Party should know, he has been around here long enough, that it would be absolutely and totally inappropriate and irresponsible for anyone to interfere with the RCMP investigation. He is asking Members of the Cabinet to in fact interfere with an RCMP investigation, and he ought to know better than that.

MINISTER OF FINANCE—PRIVILEGE—SECOND LEAK

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have been around here long enough to see a Minister of the Crown deliberately mislead the House, as I have just seen right this very minute.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: I want to ask—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa should know that he should not use language like that in the House—

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure the Member for Oshawa will withdraw and put his question.

Mr. Broadbent: I will respect the rules of the House and withdraw the comment I made. I now ask the Deputy Prime Minister to respect the truth and answer the question. That is what I want him to do. I want to ask the Minister, since today and yesterday several Ministers of the Crown have avoided the question, if he will tell us when the Minister of Finance and the Government of Canada learned of the second leak, did they know it on the day that the Minister of Finance got up on a question of privilege and talked about only the one leak? If so, why did they not come clean then and tell the people of Canada? When are they going to live up to their responsibilities and be honest in the House of Commons?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Minister of Finance stands by his statement that he made in the House at 11 o'clock on the question of privilege which the Hon. Member referred to. The Hon. Member says "Respect the traditions of this House and respect the traditions of Parliament." He should learn, and he has been around here long enough, that it is totally inappropriate for Members to interfere with an ongoing RCMP investigation.

An Hon. Member: You are a phoney.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Leader of the New Democratic Party may not like the answers that he is getting.

Mr. Broadbent: You are right.

An Hon. Member: And we don't either.

An Hon. Member: The people in Canada don't like it.

Mr. Mazankowski: Let him be patient and let due process take its course.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF TWO LEAKS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. Yesterday, in this House, he told us four times that the RCMP has been investigating two leaks from the beginning. So, the RCMP started its investigation early Wednesday evening, according to what the Solicitor General said on Thursday, April 27. If the RCMP started its investigation early Wednesday evening and knew all along there had been two leaks, why did the Solicitor General not admit it on that Thursday morning to the House of Commons and to the Canadian people?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I think we have been consistent. The day following those events, on the 27th, I think I mentioned in the House that on the evening a budget document was made public on television, we immediately asked the RCMP to investigate. We did not know anything then about the investigation or the events, all we knew was that a budget document was shown on television. We asked the RCMP to make a thorough investigation of all circumstances. Because of the special nature of a budget document, I asked the RCMP then to check specifically the possibility that people had benefited from this leak. It was the responsible thing to do, and that is exactly what I said yesterday. I have been repeating from the beginning that we had asked the RCMP to review all aspects of the matter, specially the possibility that some had benefitted from the leak. We gave a complete, clear and precise answer, that had been given to me by the RCMP Commissioner. It all seems very clear to me.

TWO LEAKS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General is trying to take back his words. Yesterday he told us that the RCMP has been investigating both leaks right from the start. The first one on Global TV and the second one at the company in Toronto.

I want to know if, at the beginning of the investigation, early Wednesday night, as you said, the RCMP was aware of both those leaks. I am asking the Solicitor General why on the following Thursday the Minister of Finance, the Prime Minister and the Solicitor General himself only referred to the Global leak. Why did they lie so shamelessly to the House that night?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I find my colleague's comment inappropriate. I will simply refer to page 1912 of yesterday's Hansard, that my Hon. colleague has read, and I quote:

> Mr. Speaker, as you know, there is an investigation by the RCMP into this case. It is a serious matter. I am informed by the Commissioner of the RCMP that the investigation has included, from the outset of the situation, the press story referred to. I am also informed by the commissioner that to date there has been no indication that any profiteering has resulted from advanced knowledge of the Budget. The investigation is continuing, and it would be inappropriate for me to comment further on this case.

It is very clear and I think this is different from what the Hon. Member referred to, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

STATEMENTS BY MINISTERS—DIFFERENCE OF OPINION

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. Yesterday the Minister of Justice admitted that there may well have been many leaks. The direct quote is: "however many there may have been—"

An Hon. Member: Who said that?

Mr. Martin: On April 27, the Minister of Finance stated: > —that this violation did not result from negligence, carelessness or lack of proper security arrangements—

Given the fact that the Minister of Justice clearly feels that there was negligence in this matter, otherwise how would he know that there had been many leaks, my question to the Solicitor General is which of the two Ministers is correct?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I just repeat what I said yesterday. The Hon. Member must not have listened to what I said a few minutes ago. As you know, Mr. Speaker, there is an investigation by the RCMP into this case.

An Hon. Member: It is a cover-up.

Mr. Blais: It is a serious matter. I am informed by the Commissioner of the RCMP that the investigation has included from the outset of the situation the press story referred to. I am also informed by the Commissioner that to date there has been no indication that any profiteering has resulted from advance knowledge of the Budget. That is clear, in English and in French.

ALLEGED COVER-UP

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, I did not ask about profiteering. I asked why there was a clear difference of opinion between the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Justice. Which of the two is he going to come down on? The real question is why the cover-up? The Deputy Prime Minister knows that there is no reason why he cannot answer this question. It does not prejudice in any way, shape or form the RCMP investigation. He yesterday selectively called for an RCMP investigation. There is only one question before this House. You are bringing this House into disrepute. Why the cover-up?

• (1140)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: You are taking lessons from Tobin.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I understand that my colleague does not have a long experience in this House, and I do not have a long one either.

However, one must recognize, Mr. Speaker, and I think my colleague, the Deputy Prime Minister, sais it clearly earlier, that when an RCMP investigation is under way one should at least, be it the Minister of Finance, the Solicitor General, the Deputy Prime Minister, or whoever, let the RCMP complete that investigation. I believe that this is just reasonable and I am convinced that my colleague understand and agrees with that.

[English]

CRIMINAL ACTION—STATEMENTS BY MINISTERS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): My question is for the Deputy Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. A few minutes ago in the House he said that the Minister of Finance had risen in the House on April 27 on a point of privilege and referred to a Budget leak.

On that very day the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and other Ministers referred on 18 different occasions to a criminal act in the singular. The Minister of Finance appearing on the Mike Duffy Show on Sunday, April 30, again referred in the singular to a criminal act.

I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister to respond very carefully to my question. Yesterday, in answer to a question put by myself to the Solicitor General, the Solicitor General said:

> —I can repeat again that the RCMP Commissioner informed me that from the beginning, the investigation included the situation referred to yesterday in the news—

Here the Solicitor General says one thing, that from the beginning he knew of a second leak and yet the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister said many times in the House that there was one leak and one criminal act. I want the Deputy Prime Minister now to explain to the House which Minister is telling the truth to the House?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I already answered that question at the beginning of the Oral Question Period. It may be necessary to return to it and to elaborate on that. What I said yesterday and what my colleague also mentioned a while ago is that there have been all sorts of allegations since the 27th. We have asked—and I believe that the RCMP has done its job, it is doing it right now—for an investigation on all allegations, including an allegation by a Member of this House, to the effect that information had been released before. I believe it is the duty of the RCMP to investigate on that.

What I said yesterday, and I want to repeate to my honourable colleague, what I was referring to, and this seems very obvious to me, is that the possibility—Because I think that the meaning of the television program, the news that appeared before yesterday, was that some people could have profited from the premature release of the Budget document. Well, it is exactly on that aspect that we have asked, from the very beginning, for a particular investigation on the possibility that some people may have profited from the release of the document, and the RCMP Commissioner, Mr. Speaker, told us yesterday that there has been no evidence of profiteering. That seems very obvious to me.

MINISTER OF FINANCE—PRIVILEGE—SECOND LEAK

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I will put my question in a different way for the Deputy Prime Minister. In the absence of the Prime Minister, would he please respond to the question.

The president of the company in Toronto said he phoned the Deputy Minister of Finance, Fred Gorbet, on April 27, which is the day the Budget was to be brought down in the House. I want to know precisely when the Minister of Finance was informed of the second leak. I ask that because when the Government heard about the first leak, when it got caught with the first leak, the Minister rose on a question of privilege.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What nonsense.

Mr. Nystrom: When the Government was told about a second leak, the Minister did not rise on a question of privilege. When did the Government find out about the second leak and why did the Minister not rise on a question of privilege at that time and tell us that there had been a second leak?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What a phoney issue.

Mr. Nystrom: Because when the Government got caught the first time the Minister rose.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, immediately at the time that the investigation was launched there were a whole series of allegations about the number of leaks. As I said, The Globe and Mail, April 28, reported that "many leaks were reported to the special RCMP unit".

I have before me, dated April 27, 1989, at 1307 hours, I believe, a story on the CP wire which stated that a public servant said that he had details of a federal budget read to him over the phone Tuesday night and was surprised that it was not leaked to the press sooner. That is what the Ottawa Citizen states.

Mr. Lapierre: What an incompetent Government—all these leaks.

Mr. Mazankowski: Then you have the CJOH incident. The Member for Hull—Aylmer made a suggestion. All of these allegations were in the public domain and all are being investigated by the RCMP. Why does the Hon. Member want to interfere with that process?

DEFENCE OF MINISTER OF FINANCE—ALLEGED MISLEADING

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to follow up on that excellent question just put to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Mr. Crosbie: Following the NDP.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): When we sat in the House on April 27 and listened to the Minister of Finance defend his question of privilege before the House, he defended his right to proceed with that Budget on the basis that the damage had been contained. There was no advantage given to any people other than the taxpayers generally and we were told that there was a single leak. That was the basis of his defence and that was his privilege to the House, that the privileges of the House were not offended and he should be able to proceed to the Budget.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Where were you the night before?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Now we learn that at the time he was on his feet the Government and the Minister perhaps knew of other leaks.

Mr. Dick: Perhaps.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Solicitor General has said that the RCMP knew from the outset. The Deputy Prime Minister is defending his case that there were wide known other leaks and yet the Minister of Finance's defence before the House was a single leak. I put my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. Doesn't that tear up the whole basis of the Minister of Finance's speech to the House of Commons and the whole basis of the privilege? Wasn't he misleading the House of Commons knowing at the time there were other leaks before the House?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance took the necessary action and precaution based upon the information he had at that time. He took the necessary steps in trying to bring the Budget before the House at the earliest possible convenience. He rose on a question of privilege and explained it on that basis. The Hon. Member is talking about all sorts of allegations which he implies in a very inaccurate manner and I think as a lawyer and a distinguished parliamentarian, he should refrain from that. I want to tell him that the Minister of Finance stands by his statement.

Mr. Tobin: Eric junior.

ALLEGED WITHHOLDING OF INFORMATION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I put this to another distinguished parliamentarian who should know that ministerial accountability is not to the police but to the House of Commons. That is what we are talking about.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Isn't the reason that we weren't told of a second or other leaks is that the Minister of Finance wanted to proceed with his Budget and that had he had to admit further leaks he would not have been able to proceed, he would have had to withdraw the Budget and perhaps resign? Isn't that the real reason?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, that conclusion is absolutely false—

Mr. Simmons: That is the truth.

Mr. Mazankowski: —and the Hon. Leader of the Opposition has no right to draw that conclusion whatsoever.

BUDGET LEAK—PROFITEERING

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. Time and again and here in the House again today we have heard the Solicitor General make the claim that no one profiteered from the advanced leaked information.

How can the Solicitor General make that statement when this morning my office was in touch with the chief investigator of the Ontario Securities Commission who told us that he has not been contacted, either by the Solicitor General, the RCMP, the Minister of Finance, or by any other government Department with respect to the investigation of a Budget leak?

[Translation]

Hon.Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, on April 27, I informed the House, here, that I had asked the RCMP to investigate all the circumstances of this affair and especially the possibility that some people may have profited from the premature release of a Budget document. Yesterday, the Commissioner informed me that so far, according to the investigation now under way—and it is still under investigation—there has been no information that anyone profited. You know that I am not to interfere in the RCMP investigation, but the RCMP informed me that it had all the means at its disposal to check whether anyone in Canada had profited.

So I simply passed on what the RCMP Commissioner had told me yesterday, Mr. Speaker, in the interest of the House and of Canadians.

LEAK OF BUDGETARY DOCUMENTS—RCMP INQUIRY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Today, the Minister says that the investigation is under way, but this very morning, he assured us several times that no Canadian could have profited. I would therefore like to ask him—and it is not the RCMP that is here in Parliament, it is the Solicitor General who revealed these facts to the House—how he can assure Canadians that no one profited when we know that even the chief investigator of the Ontario Securities Commission was not even contacted by him, by the RCMP, by the Finance Minister, by the Prime Minister or by any Department of the Government. So how can he give Canadians this assurance?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I simply repeated this morning what I had said yesterday, and that is what the RCMP Commissioner told me. It is not up to me, to the Minister personally, to do the checking and investigate. I let the police do their work. I just wanted to pass on some information that seemed important to me, because Canadians, as several Hon. Members have said in this House, can indeed be concerned that people might have profited. However, the RCMP told me yesterday that so far, according to its information, it has no evidence that anyone profited. I believe this information should reassure Canadians and you should listen very carefully to what has been said and take it in.

[English]

WITHHOLDING INFORMATION—CALL FOR RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, essentially, we are dealing with parliamentary matters rather than internal police matters. My question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. We were told after the first leak that there would be an immediate criminal investigation. That was the line of defence used by the Government to assuage the questions asked by Members of this House about parliamentary traditions. It was accepted.

We have learned in passing days that the Government had access to knowledge of two separate occasions of leaks, one admitted to by the Minister yesterday in his comments to the House when he said that one was investigated right from the start, and the second that the Deputy Minister knew as well. Once the Government knew that the first leak described as a criminal act would no longer act as a defence for the other two leaks, why did the Government not tell the House about the other two leaks and why then did the Minister of Finance not resign in the traditional manner?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, what has to be kept in perspective is the difference between leaks and allegations. The leak was quite obvious. Everyone saw it on television. The rest are mere allegations. There have been allegations floating across the House, reported in the press, all of which are being investigated in a very broad and comprehensive investigation by the RCMP.

We are witnessing here nothing but a charade. Last week they called for the resignation of the Minister of the Environment, the Minister of National Revenue, the Minister of State for Transport and the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Today they are calling for the resignation of the Minister of Finance. Well, they are not going to get it.

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, we may indeed ask for the resignation of the Minister of Finance, but considering the nature of this Government, we know that we will not get it. It does not even understand accountability to the House.

SECOND LEAK—KNOWLEDGE OF DEPUTY MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. The Deputy Minister of Finance knew of a second leak. If he did not tell the Minister, why was he fired? It is admitted. If that is incorrect, then bring the Deputy Minister to the bar of this House and we can get to the bottom of this deal. Bring him to the bar. I ask the Minister to deny absolutely that the Government, the Minister and the Solicitor General did not know there was a second leak until yesterday.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have already answered that question. The Hon. Member may want to consult with his Leader.

TRANSPORT

VIA RAIL—EFFECTS OF CUTS ON ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Greg Thompson (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport and it is with regard to VIA Rail. It is a fact that certain rural and isolated areas in Canada will be spared the axe when cuts, if and when they are made to VIA, arrive. In light of this, my question has to do with Atlantic Canada and specifically the Province of New Brunswick. Being a very isolated community with regional development problems, I believe that we need VIA Rail. I want some assurance from the Minister that there will be a commitment to maintain the service.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to presume that any routes will be closed by VIA Rail. We will see what will be the proposal—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): Settle down a little bit. We will wait for the report by VIA Rail. Second, I do not give any assurances that routes will not be closed. I will wait for the decision, but my friend knows very well that with the money we have, we cannot afford to put $650 million a year into it and we will not. Depending on the reference levels we have given to VIA Rail, decisions will be made and will be applied.

RCMP INVESTIGATION—KNOWLEDGE OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. The Solicitor General tells the House that no one profited from this supposed second leak. Yet this seems to be in direct contrast to what the RCMP said yesterday. Spokesman Pierre Bélanger is quoted in The Ottawa Citizen as saying:

> The only thing I can confirm right now is that we are investigating one leak, which is the one that resulted in Doug Small getting a copy of that publication.

Who is telling the truth? Is the RCMP investigating one leak or two leaks? If it is investigating a second leak, why can the Minister not give us the information as to when the Minister of Finance knew about the second leak? He can supposedly tell us who profited and who did not. Why can he not tell us when the Minister of Finance knew?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what I said earlier. There is a difference between leaks and allegations, a big difference. I said yesterday that I have been informed by the Commissioner of the RCMP that so far, there is no evidence of profiteering by anyone from the Budget leak. What I said was that I was informed by the Commissioner and there is nothing more I can add to that.

CONTRADICTION IN STATEMENTS

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, there is a tremendous contradiction here. We are told that we cannot have information that is as a result of an RCMP investigation. We are told that no one is profiting from this, something which must be part of the RCMP investigation. Yet we cannot have an answer to the simple question, when did the Minister of Finance know about this leak? This is a flagrant disregard for the rules of Parliament.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Sollicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I think that it was responsible to inform this House when the Commissioner of the RCMP informed me himself that to date we had no information or any evidence that anyone profited from the leak. Maybe I could ask the Hon. Member that if he or any other Hon. Member in this House has information to the effect that some people could have profited from the leak, they should go to the RCMP and give them the information. I think that Canadian people should be reassured and know exactly what is going on. And this is what I did; I informed the House.

KNOWLEDGE OF DEPUTY MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister who just a minute ago referred in the House to the distinction between leaks and allegations of leaks. Everyone would agree with that, but we want the Government to understand that there is a distinction between the truth and misleading the people of Canada as well.

There was a serious claim in the press this morning that the Deputy Minister of Finance had been informed about an earlier leak of the Budget. My office contacted the Deputy Minister's office this morning and he refused to comment on it. I would like the Deputy Prime Minister to comment on it. Will he confirm that there was a second leak and will he tell the people of Canada at last when the Minister of Finance learned of that leak?

• (1200)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member and you, Sir, that I would not take any lessons about the truth from the Hon. Member. I can tell you that because he has a very—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: It is quite obvious that he has been known to exaggerate beyond the limits from time to time. Mr. Speaker, I can only assume that this is part of the ongoing investigation. Surely the Hon. Member does not want the RCMP investigation to take place on the floor of the House of Commons. He ought to know better. He has been around here for 21 years. Has he not learned anything yet?

HONESTY AND INTEGRITY IN POLITICS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, this is not a criminal investigation that we are involved in here in the Parliament of Canada. It is honesty and integrity in politics. That is what this Government is lacking. I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister, why will he not answer the question? If he wants to claim, as there is, a distinction between allegations and a leak, will he tell us when the Government first heard the claim that there was a second leak?

We were told that the Deputy Minister of Finance was informed on the morning that the Minister of Finance made his statement. Why will the Deputy Prime Minister not answer the question? Did the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance learn that day? If they did not, why does the Deputy Prime Minister not come clean and answer the question? That is the issue.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member preaches honesty and integrity. He should practice it once in awhile.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: I repeat again and I say to him as bluntly as I can, the Minister of Finance stands by his statement in the House of Commons at eleven o'clock on April 27.

TAX DEDUCTIONS

*Question No. 9—Mr. Barrett:

1. For each year since 1984, has the government estimated the annual net revenue cost of the tax deductions (a) for business meals (b) entertainment expenses for (i) corporate (ii) individual tax filers and if so, what is it?

2. Has the government estimated the annual net revenue cost, in the years following full implementation of the 1987 tax reforms of the tax deductions for (a) business meals (b) entertainment expenses for (i) corporate (ii) individual tax filers and if so, what is it?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): The Government cannot provide actual annual net revenue costs resulting from tax deductions claimed by corporate and individual taxfilers for business meals and entertainment expenses, as the tax data which are collected are not disaggregated in this matter.

However, estimates of the annual net revenue gains resulting from reduced deductions for meals and entertainment expenses are available. The net revenue gain is estimated to be approximately $140 million for 1988, rising to about $220 million by 1992. Individual taxfilers account for about 30 per cent of the net federal revenue impact, with the remainder attributable to corporate taxfilers.

NET REVENUE IMPACT OF 1985 BUDGET ADJUSTMENT

*Question No. 10—Mr. Laporte:

For (a) 1986 (b) 1987 (c) 1988 has the government estimated the net revenue impact on the Treasury of the 1985 budget adjustment and partial de-indexation of personal income tax deductions and, if so, what is it?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): The restriction to the personal income tax indexation introduced in the May 1985 budget has increased federal revenues by $0.6 billion, $1.4 billion and $2.3 billion in 1986, 1987 and 1988 respectively.

ANNUAL NET REVENUE COST

*Question No. 15—Mr. Gardiner:

For each year since 1984, has the government estimated the annual net revenue cost for the tax-free treatment of the transfer of individual assets such as estate inheritances upon death and, if so, (a) what is it (b) what was the average tax saving by tax filer for individuals whose total income was (i) below $10,000, (ii) between $10,001 and $15,000, (iii) between $15,001 and $20,000, (iv) between $20,001 and $25,000, (v) between $25,001 and $30,000, (vi) between $30,001 and $40,000, (vii) between $40,001 and $50,000, (viii) between $50,001 and $70,000, (ix) over $70,001?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): No. Federal estate taxes were eliminated in 1972. The information needed to estimate the annual net revenue that could have been obtained by taxing such income has not been available since then.

NET REVENUE COST OF CARRYING CHARGES

*Question No. 16—Mr. Young (Beaches—Woodbine):

For each year since 1984, has the government estimated the annual net revenue cost of the tax deductions for excess of carrying charges over investment income for individual tax filers and, if so, (a) what is it (b) what was the average tax saving by tax filer for individuals whose total income was (i) below $10,000, (ii) between $10,001 and $15,000, (iii) between $15,001 and $20,000, (iv) between $20,001 and $25,000, (v) between $25,001 and $30,000, (vi) between $30,001 and $40,000,

(vii) between $40,001 and $50,000, (viii) between $50,001 and $70,000 and (ix) over $70,001?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): No. The government has not estimated the annual net revenue cost of the tax deductions for excess carrying charges over investment income for each year since 1984. To construct such an estimate would require assumptions about the composition of both investment income and carrying charges. For example, investment income may be defined as including either nominal or taxable capital gains and either cash or grossed-up dividends. Similarly, carrying charges may include all forms of interest expenses or may exclude some expenses such as interest on rental property.

A further difficulty in producing such an estimate is that it must be computed on a case-by-case basis rather than from aggregate statistics.

REVENUE COST OF SAVINGS PLANS

*Question No. 17—Mr. Nystrom:

For each year since 1984, has the government estimated the annual net revenue cost of the tax deductions for contributions to registered pension plans and registered retirement savings plans and, if so, (a) what is it (b) what was the average tax saving by tax filer for individuals whose total income was (i) below $10,000, (ii) between $10,001 and $15,000, (iii) between $15,001 and $20,000, (iv) between $20,001 and $25,000, (v) between $25,001 and $30,000, (vi) between $30,001 and $40,000, (vii) between $40,001 and $50,000, (viii) between $50,001 and $70,000 and (ix) over $70,001?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): No estimates have been made of the net revenue costs of the tax deductions for RRSP contributions and employee RPP contributions either in aggregate or for taxfilers in different income groups since such estimates could provide quite a misleading picture of the level and distribution of tax assistance for retirement saving. There are two main reasons for this.

First, information on pension contributions by taxfilers ignores the value of employer contributions to pension plans. Information reported in the Statistics Canada publication Pension Plans in Canada (catalogue 74-401) indicates that in 1985 employer contributions to RPPs totalled $8.2 billion, nearly double the total of $4.4 billion contributed by employees. Moreover, about 30 per cent of pension plan members (1.4 million out of 4.7 million) belong to plans with no employee contributions. Thus, information on the distribution of employee pension contributions does not provide an adequate proxy for information on the distribution of employer pension contributions. No source of data currently exists that would show the distribution of employer contributions (or, alternatively, the distribution of pension benefits accrued in the year) across taxfilers.

Second, an estimate of the immediate tax savings associated with the deductibility of pension or RRSP contributions would ignore the future tax liabilities associated with the full taxability of payments or withdrawals from RPPs and RRSPs. Thus, it would tend to overstate the advantage provided by the tax treatment of retirement savings (particularly for older taxfilers) by treating tax deferrals as if they were full tax exemptions.

For the above reasons, the distribution of the tax advantages associated with saving through RPPs and RRSPs can only be properly estimated using a model which takes into account both the role of employer contributions to pension plans and the full tax consequences of a contribution. Work has begun in the Department of Finance to construct a model of this sort. The aggregate annual federal cost of tax assistance for retirement saving, taking account of both employer and employee contributions to RPPs, has been estimated to be in the range of $5-6 billion.

REVENUE GENERATED BY CORPORATE TAXES

*Question No. 18—Mr. Taylor:

For (a) 1989 (b) 1990 (c) 1991 (d) 1992 (e) 1993 (f) 1994 (g) 1995, has the government prepared an estimate of the percentage of its revenues that will be generated by corporate taxes and, if so, what is it?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Consistent with the fiscal projections underlying the budget tabled on April 27, 1989, the percentage of total budgetary revenues that will be generated by corporate income and capital taxes is as follows:

1989-90	12.2 per cent
1990-91	12.1 per cent
1991-92	12.7 per cent
1992-93	13.1 per cent
1993-94	13.4 per cent

No estimate was prepared post fiscal year 1993-94.

TAX RATE STRUCTURE

*Questiion No. 19—Mr. Whittaker:

Has the government assessed the net revenue impact of adding to the current tax rate structure a fourth marginal tax rate of 32 per cent to be applied to individuals with taxable incomes of $60,001 and over and, if so, what is it?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Each percentage point increase in the top federal tax rate of 29 per cent, which would apply to taxpayers with taxable income in excess of $56,217 in 1990, would raise federal revenues by approximately $300 million assuming no behavioural changes.

*Question No. 24—Mr. Fulton:

Has the government assessed the costs involved in the procurement of nuclear-fuelled submarines and, if so, what are the estimated costs of (a) decomissioning them (b) disposing of the nuclear waste created?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): The procurement of the nuclear-propelled submarines has been cancelled.

CHANGES TO TAX SYSTEM

*Question No. 25—Mr. Funk:

1. Has the government estimated the number of Canadians who will cease paying federal income tax as a result of changes to the tax system made in 1987, and if so, what is it?

2. For each of the next ten years, has the government estimated the number of Canadians who will recommence paying taxes as a result of the partial deindexation of tax deductions, credits and brackets and, if so, what is it?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): The 1987 tax reform changes eliminated federal income tax liability for 850,000 Canadians in 1988.

Over time it is difficult to estimate accurately the number of taxpayers removed or added to the income system as a result of tax changes because other factors such as economic growth and the labour force participation rate influence the number of taxable Canadians.

LOST OF 1987 TAX REFORMS

*Question No. 27—Mr. Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing):

In the years following full implementation of the 1987 tax reforms, has the government estimated the annual net federal revenue cost of the allowance of excess of tax depreciation over book depreciation by corporate tax filers and, if so, what is it?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): No, the government has not estimated the annual net federal revenue cost of the allowance of excess of tax depreciation over book depreciation by corporate tax filers for the years following full implementation of tax reform. However, estimates of the additional revenue generated by the changes made to the capital cost allowance (CCA) system in tax reform were released with the June 1987 tax reform document.

	Federal Revenue Impact
	Taxation Years
	1988	1989	1990	1991	1992
	($ million)
Reduction in CCA rate for manufacturing and processing equipment	40	290	540	670	670
Reduction in capital cost allowance rates for other assets	30	80	120	160	210

FORECAST OF DEFICIT

*Question No. 31—Mr. de Jong:

For (a) 1988 (b) 1989, has the government revised its forecast of the deficit from those offered in the 1988 budget to take into account actual interest rates' being higher than those forecast in that budget and, if so, what is the revised forecast?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): In the February 1988 budget, the federal deficit was projected to be $28.9 billion in 1988–89. The results for the first eleven months indicate that the February 1988 budget estimate remains on track. The April 1989 budget forecasts the federal deficit to be $30.5 billion in 1989–90 which takes into account current interest rate developments.

SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 81—CONDEMNATION OF GOVERNMENT INVOLVEMENT IN ARMX'89 ARMS BAZAAR

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. de Jong:

That this House condemn the government's involvement in the arms bazaar, ARMX'89, and calls upon the government:

(1) to cease all involvement in the expansion of the international market for military and policing equipment; and

(2) to take action to ensure that countries which violate human rights are prohibited from directly or indirectly arranging purchases of military and policing equipment in Canada.

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, when we cut off debate to have Question Period, I was talking about the role of the Department of National Defence in the ARMX exhibition. Today, we have an opposition motion which is condemning ARMX. I find it surprising because, as I have already mentioned, the primary purpose of ARMX is to provide a forum in which training and technology needs of the Department of National Defence can be offered and shown, and where industry and the Government can get together in a very wise and profitable way. In fact, it is a method that can save government time and taxpayers' money.

As in the past year, we will be involved in a series of seminars during ARMX next week. We encourage all the commands of the Canadian Armed Forces to send representatives to the exhibition and to the seminars to benefit from the exchange of information that ARMX provides. We will also have a display booth at ARMX from the Department of National Defence. It will focus on our Department's training and simulation requirements. Both civilian and military members of the Department representing the three commands, as well as the research and development branch, will be on hand at various times during the week. We will have a public information officer there to answer questions. We will also have some members of the reserve forces who assist in the administration of ARMX during the week. I will be there for the opening as well and for some of the other events.

We will also be contributing to the seminar program. Each day these seminars will feature one of the three environments in which the Canadian Forces operates; that is, sea, land and air. The daily program will begin with a keynote presentation by a senior officer of the Canadian Forces, and the remainder of the day with presentations by industry.

It might be interesting for the members to have some familiarity with the subject matter of some of the seminars because the theme throughout is training and simulation devices for training. They have nothing to do with international trade of offensive weapons. For example, on the opening day which highlights naval training, there will be seminars on computer-assisted learning and the Canadian patrol frigate program, naval tactics training, procurement methodology for the Canadian Government, on-board training and training as an essential feature of modern naval acquisition programs. Each day there will be such sessions and I think it might be very interesting for interested Members of Parliament to attend some of those sessions.

I think it is clear that DND has a very legitimate interest and involvement in ARMX'89. However, as I mentioned before, it is a private exhibition in which DND is only a participant. We do not run it or fund it. Our involvement is somewhat limited.

With regard to the displays, from what I have heard from members of the Opposition, and some of the things I have read in the paper, you would get the impression that this will be an exhibition of nuclear weapons systems and all sorts of deadly weapons—a sort of Rambo. That is absolute nonsense. Most exhibitors are displaying training technology as it applies to their products. For example, binoculars, vehicles, emergency equipment, and electronic rifle-range simulators. I would like to emphasize that less than 10 per cent of the displays feature weapons or weapons systems, and then usually only to display associated training devices. As I heard someone say, that is probably less than one would find at a good sportsmen's show.

Many of the companies at ARMX will display products which have both a civilian as well as a military application. They include trucks, computers, printers, telephones, flight bags, inflatable rafts, medical tents, emergency equipment, training manuals, and on and on. That is the reality of the ARMX role and what it is attempting to do.

I would like to comment now on the possible reasons why some 400 exhibitors from 15 countries are coming to display their equipment and technology at this exhibition. The Government of Canada has identified its equipment needs from trucks to communications equipment, and ARMX provides the various companies with an opportunity to show their products and share their ideas. Many companies have developed new technologies, for example, in the computer area. Those companies want to show their technologies to DND and to other federal government Departments. ARMX gives Canadian companies across the country the opportunity to show what they have to offer to both exhibitors and to the Canadian Government. In this manner, they can demonstrate that many of our equipment needs can be met here in Canada.

The provincial government of my own Province of British Columbia has a booth at ARMX through the Department of Industry and Trade. They recently published a brochure about all the B.C. companies that will be displaying at ARMX. There are companies such as Microtel, a leading communications company. There is a special purpose clothing company, Mustang Industries, which has been in business in Richmond for many years. White's Diving Equipment will be in attendance. Mesotech Systems makes underwater sensors and acoustical sensors which are very important to us. Ebco Industries, a major company, a growing company in the Vancouver area, is involved in many types of diverse underwater technologies and radar systems. They were very much involved in developing the Cyclotron at UBC.

It is a tremendous opportunity for those companies from British Columbia. It is expensive to come to Ottawa to bring what they have to offer. Here is an opportunity. They will be here for the four days displaying what they have with the support of the B.C. Government and B.C. House here. They will be putting on some seminars and receptions that I will attend. They will have the opportunity to sell their goods and services to the Government of Canada.

It always surprises me that members of the Opposition and the NDP are always complaining that B.C. does not get a fair share. Here is a chance for B.C. companies in this type of a forum to sell their goods and services and get recognition. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that B.C. companies are second to none in terms of their capabilities. I know that they will be very successful when they are here.

Canadian suppliers also benefit from their participation at ARMX in another way. Visitors from NATO countries are encouraged to look at Canadian capabilities to help them meet their NATO commitments. For example, the Secretary of Defence from Great Britain is coming, and the Secretary of State for Defence from the Netherlands will be coming next week. They too will have a chance to look at our Canadian capabilities. They may discover that they can purchase from Canadian suppliers as a result of a higher quality or a lower cost of Canadian products. This can mean an additional investment in Canada in the form of joint ventures and enhanced manufacturing capabilities.

We all know that the defence industry is a relatively small part of our national economy. It is approximately 1 per cent. However, it certainly represents some of the most technologically sophisticated industries that we have. The high-tech industry is one of the ways for Canada to maintain a competitive position internationally, as well as then providing a high quality of life at home. That is something that I am sure all Members would agree with. The defence business is important to the economic viability of many of our high-tech communities.

The equipment needs of the Armed Forces, if we had unlimited resources, would not be sufficient to maintain an industrial base here in Canada. Exports are crucial. Thus, we take great care that exports of defence equipment are not used in ways that are inimical to our values and culture. Since 1986, when the Department of External Affairs enunciated the current policy, we have maintained a very sound export control policy to help ensure that this is the case. By selling our defence products—and I use that term deliberately since Canada rarely sells combat weapons systems—to our friends and allies that share our values, we help to safeguard those values while also boosting our high-tech systems.

There have been concerns expressed that ARMX is seeking to supply the military needs of Third World countries. That is totally and absolutely untrue. The function of ARMX is to serve the training equipment needs of the Canadian Forces. There are some visitors from NATO countries who have been invited to view the exhibition. We have also invited the military attachés, the diplomats here in Ottawa. They have been invited by the host, not by the Department, to come and view the exhibition. However, they are not there to buy arms. They are not going there to buy arms, because that is not the point of the show. So I think some of the allegations that have been made are totally untrue. It is really unfortunate that ARMX has been misunderstood.

I find it surprising that the City Council of Ottawa has indicated that it does not think we should have those types of trade exhibitions. I could go back to the Council and ask if it does not want the defence industries here in Ottawa. They are a very critical part of the economic viability of the Greater Ottawa area and the silicon valley.

Mr. Thacker: We will take them in Lethbridge.

Mrs. Collins: I can think of a few other communities that might also like to have them, too. I find this position totally inconsistent.

In conclusion, I wish to once again state the purpose of ARMX '89. It is to allow companies to display the latest developments and training technology and manufacturing capability. It allows those companies to make contact with government officials and to expand their market potential. It is a learning experience. It is a very specialized exhibition of equipment which is useful and at times vital to the day-to-day operation of the Canadian Armed Forces. Our personnel, who are committed to NATO and to continental defence, require modern equipment and technology to fulfil their roles. I am surprised that members of the NDP do not seem to want them to have those types of capabilities. Our soldiers who are on peace-keeping duty in trouble spots around the world deserve to have the very best.

I invite all Members because, as Members of Parliament, they have the opportunity to visit ARMX and see for themselves. I think that all Hon. Members will see the tremendous opportunities that ARMX '89 will offer our Department, the Canadian Armed Forces generally, and our Canadian defence industries.

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I listened with some amazement to the Minister saying that we are not going to be selling or trying to trade armaments, that these are just little training devices displayed in a schoolroom atmosphere where people can learn. It is like playing with slot machines to increase one's skill.

I do not know if the Minister has ever seen what is called the ARMX '89 Preview which lists and describes some of the exhibitors. Bofors will display the BILL top-attack, medium-range anti-tank system and so on. I cannot go into all the details, however, I do wish to mention a few more. Bell Helicopter will be an exhibitor. We know what helicopters are used for in countries such as El Salvador. They are used for attack. There is a Canadian submarine consortium. I do not see anything in here to indicate that the submarine consortium is simply going to show movies of people skin-diving around submarines. It states that it is part of a consortium of five groups that would like to build submarines, which are attack weapons. Then there is FMC Defence Systems International. It provided the Canadian Government with track vehicles for more than 20 years and armoured personnel carriers. Armoured personnel carriers are weapons of war. They are not used for going camping in provincial parks.

Then there is Garrett Canada which has been selected as the Canadian lead contractor for selected sub-systems for NATO's advanced short-range air to air missile. The company is also a member of the multinational team developing the NATO 155-M autonomous precision guided munition. These are not training movies, these are weapons for killing people. That is their only purpose.

The Minister wants us to believe that they will not be dealing with weapons here. She also wants us to believe that Third World countries outside NATO will not be making purchases or arranging to make purchases. In that case, I wish she would explain why the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has said that South Africa is welcome to come, a country which we are supposedly trying to discourage from murdering its own inhabitants. Yet we want them to come and look at weapons with which they can kill their own inhabitants or maybe the people of Namibia.

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, it is hard to know where to start with all that. Let me deal with helicopters first. We use helicopters in the Department of National Defence. We use them for a variety of reasons, including search and rescue, which is a very important part of our capability.

The Department of National Defence has weapons. You need guns if you are going to be on the front line. We have some tanks in Europe, which are kind of old, I must admit. We do buy that kind of equipment.

Less than 10 per cent of the exhibits at ARMX will focus on weapons or weapons related systems. It is a very small portion. The remaining 90 per cent is goods and services for a whole variety of activities. Exhibits include such things as rubber life rafts and computer systems, to bring together the buyers and sellers.

I cannot understand why the Hon. Member objects to a trade show which brings together the buyers and sellers. There are all sorts of trade shows, like computer trade shows and home shows, where buyers and sellers get together to have the opportunity to see the most up-to-date equipment.

Let me deal finally with Third World countries. The Hon. Member's statement is absolute nonsense. South Africa has not been invited to attend ARMX.

Mr. Heap: The Minister said they are welcome.

Mrs. Collins: That is not true. It is by invitation only. I am advised by the Minister that the organizers have assured us they have invited no South Africans to attend ARMX, including South African diplomats in Canada. They will not be there.

Mr. Heap: He said they have a right to attend.

Mrs. Collins: The only foreigners who are invited by the organizer of the conference are diplomats other than from the Warsaw countries. They will only be there to look, not to buy. Frankly, people will not be making purchases at the show because it is an exhibition where people can look at what is available.

The allegation he is trying to make that this is an opportunity to sell arms to the Third World is totally without foundation. I think that is very unfortunate because I understand that in churches and various places around Ottawa they are trying to create this hype about the exhibition, which is totally uncalled for. It is really unfortunate that members of the New Democratic Party are perpetrating that kind of mythology.

We all want to work for peace in this world. I suggest that the members of our Armed Forces are the greatest peacemakers in this country. They are the ones securing the peace of this country. I want to make sure they have the right equipment, the right capabilities to be the best trained and most effective members of the Armed Forces anywhere in the world.

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to congratulate the Hon. Minister for her speech and for the gracious way she spoke on that important motion.

I would also request her opinion for, if I am not mistaken, she has stated before Oral questions how important it is that NATO Allies be united.

I would like her to keep in mind that motion has been moved today by a NDP Member to whom I have asked questions on his party! position towards NATO because, as we will recall, the NDP said they would withdraw from NATO as soon as they took power. During the electoral campaign, in view of the polls and public opinion, they qualified their view somehow, saying that they would stay within NATO for a time, and the Hon. Member for Regina—Qu'Appelle (Mr. de Jong) who has moved the motion said that they would stay within NATO until due time.

I would like to have the Minister's opinion on that. What does she think of such a position from a party that calls itself national in view of the efficiency of the Allies within NATO?

[English]

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, what I heard from the Member from the NDP was not new. We know that for some time their position has been to withdraw from NATO. What I find confusing is that when one tries to pin them down they will not say when they would withdraw. They cannot have it on both sides. You are either with your friends or against them.

As far as this Government is concerned, we are with our friends in NATO. It is a very important allegiance.

The NDP obviously do not share the same view as the Labour Party in Great Britain. I noticed in the paper this morning that their opposition leader, Neil Kinnock, recognizes that one cannot unilaterally disarm. It must be a co-operative process through the NATO alliance, which has been so important.

We have had peace in Europe in the 40 years in large part because NATO has existed to provide that strength and co-operation. It is not easy because there are sovereign nations with different views.

I read about the first NATO summit in 1958 with Mr. Diefenbaker, and how difficult it was to get together then. There are still problems, but it has worked because of that solid commitment. It is working today and it will work in the future.

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, we are talking about an arms exhibit. I am compelled to get involved because of the suggestion that somehow the religious community is at fault for raising these questions about the role of Canada and other nations in arms manufacturing. If the religious communities speak out against this, is the Minister suggesting that they are misleading their flock when they raise questions about this? Using the church in that kind of inane interjection is the kind of stupidity that leads to the mindless development of an economy that is based purely on arms and arm's exhibits. I want to ask the Minister about the arms exhibit.

She talked about the Third World countries not buying arms. Does she not realize that the major part of their debt is incurred because of the arms sales of the western and Soviet Bloc nations? Does she not know that there is competition between both the Soviets and the Americans to sell arms any way they can in the world and all she is doing is perpetuating an arms bazaar? To attack the religious communities for their opinions is absurd and unworthy of the Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Minister for a short answer as the period for questions and comments has expired.

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, this is not an arms bazaar. That is the point I am trying to make. It is a trade exhibition of the goods and services and equipment that we use in the Armed Forces. That is what I want people to understand.

When people understand the facts they will recognize that this is a very good opportunity in Ottawa, where we have DND Headquarters—perhaps they do not want DND in Ottawa and we will move it to some other part of the country—but it is important to have those opportunities. I am surprised at the Member, my colleague from British Columbia, for trying to make allegations which are simply not the facts.

Mr. Barrett: You mentioned the church. You mentioned the religious communities.

Mrs. Collins: That is right, because I do not think they have been given proper information.

Mr. Barrett: That is not what you said.

Mrs. Collins: It is important that they should be given the proper information

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Debate should go through the Chair.

• (1230)

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today on this motion before the House, since it allows us, the Official Opposition, to comment on some recent developments happening in Canada, and particularly on what is happening with the Government of Canada's White Book on Defence. We saw that in anticipation of the last election, the Government had made a series of promises, each one more important than the other, to the Canadian Armed Forces, but now it is an entirely different story.

I listened also to the remarks made by the Hon. Minister who described to us some kind of Disneyland. The kind of description she made of that arms show in Ottawa is very different from reality. From what she said, one would think that that is part of the Ottawa Festival of Spring. In fact, many organizations in Canada object to this arms show. A coalition of pacifist movements, from both Quebec and Ontario, will be demonstrating at the entrance of Ottawa's Lansdowne Park, where this international arms fair will be held. Why will they be demonstrating? Because it has become obvious that, with the complicity of the Canadian Government, this show is no longer what the Minister described, that is an opportunity for Canadian companies to acquire a better kowledge of the needs of the Department of National Defence and for DND to inform Canadian companies of its needs. It has become a big international fair where representatives from several countries meet to talk about armaments and especially to order very sophisticated arms.

We of the Official Opposition are troubled by this because we know that representatives from countries like El Salvador, Chile or South Africa are likely to participate in this fair.

These past few days, we had an opportunity to question the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) who appeared before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade. Regarding the participation of individuals from South Africa, he said this, and I quote:

[English]

"Your question was specifically about South African participation in this private event. If they are there, they have a right to be there". That is a quote from our foreign Minister who on other occasions has said that he wants to carry on the fight against apartheid on Canada's behalf.

I want to say to the Minister that, indeed, when the Prime Minister of Canada on behalf of all Canadians spoke at the United Nations and in Africa against apartheid, he received the support of all Members of Parliament on both sides of the House. We in the Liberal Party certainly support the strong words against apartheid of the Prime Minister at the United Nations. Now, unfortunately, there have been a lot of words but very few concrete, positive actions.

I think that if Canada is to restore its leadership in this issue we have to clean up our own act. We have to put real teeth in our commitment. We should see our Government be prepared to employ the full power of mandatory sanctions in the economic area. At the same time, it should provide broader recognition of the ANC, its work in humanitarian areas, and its recognition as the counterforce to the type of propaganda that we receive in Canada from the South African Embassy.

Clearly, the Minister and the Prime Minister have not lived up to their commitment vis-à-vis the South African regimes. When we see that our exports to South Africa are increasing, and when we see that we are finding all types of ways to excuse what is taking place, we realize that we now have a Government which justifies the increase of exports of sulphur to South Africa by saying: "Somebody else will sell it to them". We can look also at the enormous increase in the imports which has about tripled in the course of the year. We see the Government saying: "Our steel industry needs this, even though we know that they are stockpiling when they can".

The Department of External Affairs has rejected, much to our regret, any assistance to the African National Congress to establish an office in Canada. There are a number of of events which have taken place which make us believe that indeed the Government is strong on words but very weak in terms of actions in relation to South Africa. Our knowledge that South African individuals and companies have been invited to participate in this trade exhibition is absolutely unacceptable.

Mr. McDermid: Not true.

Mr. Ouellet: The Minister says that it is not true. I have read to the House citations of the Secretary of State for External Affairs who indicated to us when he appeared before the Standing Committee that if they are here then they have the right to be here.

In fact, representatives of other countries which are interested in buying arms should not be here either. What we are witnessing is an effort by the Government to sustain additional armament in the world at a time when we hope that there is a genuine effort on the part of the superpowers to reduce armaments in the world.

Some members of our caucus had the good fortune to meet earlier this week representatives of a campaign called "On Track for Disarmament" who came to discuss with us their projects. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) and my colleague, the Hon. Member for—

Mr. McDermid: Your good friend.

Mr. Ouellet: I could give the name, but according to parliamentary tradition I have to name his riding. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Labrador (Mr. Rompkey), was also with me to listen to these people. We met with Lois Wilson representing the World Council of Churches, as well as with Mr. Simon Rosenblum who is the co-ordinator for the Plowshares Project, with Mr. Dave Jenson, representative of the Mennonite Central Committee, and with Mr. Alex Bryans representing the Canadian Physicians for the Prevention of Nuclear War. They were saying that they want to promote a campaign which is for disarmament and against new generations of nuclear weapons.

• (1240)

The campaign is intent to build on the new environment of hope for continued armed cuts and to say an emphatic "no" to the technological arms race.

These people are coming to Ottawa to meet with us and talk about disarmament. Another very important organization called "Veterans Against Nuclear Arms" has just come to Ottawa this week to meet with representatives of the Liberal Party and the NDP Party. They tried to meet with representatives of the Government but were turned down. They could not see anybody from the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Ouellet: Do you know, Mr. Speaker, what these people were trying to convey to us? I have the document that they left with us. I met them because I believe that they are representing a very important organization. Here is what they told us:

> As former military people who have put our lives on the line for democracy, the undersigned are concerned that Canada's agenda for NATO's May 29-30 meeting has not yet been discussed in Parliament. The subject is far too critical to be decided behind closed doors.

I agree with them. That is why I told them that I would indeed raise the matter today. They continued:

> NATO's choice about "modernization" of short-range nuclear weapons will reveal whether it aims at diminishing the risk of war, or at prolonging the burdens and risks of the arms race.

The challenge is to propose to the Warsaw Pact mutual arms reductions in all aspects of the military confrontation. This is what Norway, West Germany, and other European allies want.

At the same time, powerful forces want NATO to upgrade its Lance missiles and nuclear artillery, especially to encourage the U.S. Congress to fund more new nuclear weapons. These people want the arms race to continue.

The May 29–30 NATO decision can be a major step toward international co–operation and the elimination of war or it can be a dispiriting rebuff to Mr. Gorbachev's constructive acts and proposals.

Forty years ago, it was Canada that insisted (in Article 2 of the Treaty) that NATO be more than a military alliance. It is Canada's opportunity now to carry this farther, by insisting that NATO initiate NATO/Warsaw Pact co–operation in resolving world environmental and economic problems. Negative and obsolete militarism must not be allowed to win the day.

That was the message conveyed to us this week by the Veterans' Association Against Nuclear Arms. We of the Liberal Party received them and listened to them attentively. Furthermore, I wanted to transmit their viewpoint to the House as soon as possible. I think it is unacceptable and most regrettable that neither the Minister or the Associate Minister nor any Member of the Conservative government cared to meet with them or listened to their viewpoint. It is obvious that the NATO meeting at the end of May will be an important and historic event.

The Minister said a few moments ago that she wants to stand by her NATO friends. What friends? As we well know, there is presently quite a split among NATO members. Canada played a very important role in the setting up of NATO and rightly insisted that Section 2 of the NATO Charter should not address exclusively the military character of the organization, but also its economic and political responsibilities. We think that NATO is a very important tool. Unlike the New Democratic Party, we do not want Canada to withdraw from NATO. We believe that we should belong to the Alliance.

The Official Opposition, the Liberal Party, wants Canada to remain in NATO, but we want NATO to play not only a military role, but a political and economic role as well, as was initially intended. We think that the recent initiatives by Secretary General Gorbachev offer us an ideal opportunity to bring about a rapprochement between the members of NATO and the members of the Warsaw Pact.

At a time when there is much talk about peace, at a time when organizations such as the one I have just mentioned want more harmonious relations between the peoples of the earth, the Minister promotes an arms trade show as if it were a great and wonderful thing. I say she is out of touch with present–day reality.

People are craving for peace, they are completely overwhelmed by all those nuclear weapons threatening their safety, 24 hours a day. The people of the world, not the governments, do not want to hear speeches like the one the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mrs. Collins) just gave us praise of arms sales and new defence technologies. That is not what we want. We want peace! We want people to realize what is going on in the world! We just have to put an end to this crazy arms race, to this quest for new weapons. We don't want that, we don't even want to hear about it!

We regret that this government which is supposed to be going through a very serious budget crisis— Since each and every minister, and especially the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), have been telling us all week long that Canada is facing an important deficit which has top priority, and that we have to cut government expenditures, I wonder why the Government did not simply decide to cut funds to this arms bazaar. That would have set a good example and would have been a good way to cut down on expenses. Instead, we are setting display booths and sending representatives who will spend the whole week giving out pamphlets and overseeing the arms exhibition, at a time when we could be dealing with more important things!

Finally, I just want to add that it is obvious the arms produced in Canada are, directly or indirectly, finding their way to developing countries, to Third World countries.

[English]

The highly profitable trade in high–tech weaponry from the north to the south, always justified on ideological grounds whether real or contrived, has transformed dozens and dozens of regimes around the world into heavily equipped arsenals. We know for sure that the Russians are expending a lot of effort to sell some of their weapons in the Third World. We think that it is unacceptable. As conventional disarmament takes hold in Europe there is the dangerous risk that arms will be released to Third World markets at bargain basement prices, involving thousands of lethal weapons ranging from battle tanks to heavy artillery. All the while in developing country after developing country alert to the profitable circumstances of weapons manufacturers in the western world, we find that industrialized output is being geared to military hardware.

We do not like this and we hope that the Canadian Government does not follow suit in this regard. Indeed, it is not the Minister of National Defence who should be here, but the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He should be here to tell us that the Government does not believe in war through the voice of one of his Ministers of Defence but believes in peace through the words of his Minister of foreign affairs who should be here today to speak about peace.

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I would just like take the opportunity to ask the Hon. Member a few questions. Before I do, I want to make one thing clear because he mentioned VANA, Veterans Against Nuclear Arms. Indeed, I am meeting with them. They are bringing a group with some other people from other countries early in June, I believe, so I wanted to make sure the record reflected that.

I also want to remind the Hon. Member once again—perhaps he was not here when I spoke—that the Department of National Defence does not pay or in any way fund the ARMX exhibition. It is a private sector operation, so it does not cost the taxpayers anything.

Is the Hon. Member speaking on behalf of the Liberal Party? Is the Liberal Party, the Party that started ARMX in 1983, now saying that the Liberals are against it? What is the alternative? The alternative I can think of, I suppose, would be for our people from DND to travel all over the country, all over the world, to seek out equipment and services. I think that would be far more costly and far less efficient than bringing together all of the companies and potential sellers involved to our Department in one place at one time where we can all have a look and see whether or not this is a computer service in which we are interested or a helicopter in which we are interested. As I mentioned, some B.C. companies are here. What would he see as the alternative? The Department of National Defence continues to buy things for our Armed Forces. We spend a couple of billion dollars a year—

Mr. McDermid: The Liberals do not understand that.

Mrs. Collins: —in order to equip the men and women who are out there serving in NATO. There is no sense saying that we are going to be part of NATO unless we have men and women who will be out there participating in the NATO forces with quality equipment. We would like them to have more. We cannot do everything for them but they have to have the most up-to-date, the most cost effective equipment available.

Is the Liberal Party against ARMX? What would be their alternative of achieving the most cost effective way to enable us to do our purchasing?

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: I am sorry the Hon. Minister did not pay more attention to my speech. I said at the outset that over the years this arms bazaar had become quite an undertaking.

To provide an opportunity for a number of Canadian corporations to get together and acquaint themselves with the requirements of the Department of National Defence is one thing, but to invite foreign corporations and foreign country officials to come here to learn about new technologies and sophisticated weapons is to foster arms proliferation.

If the priority of this Tory Government is to foster arm proliferation and sale, not only to NATO Member countries but also to Third World countries, it is a responsibility which we cannot share or accept. And we clearly distinguish between the requirements and commitments of our Armed Forces within such organizations as NATO and NORAD on the one hand, and this profitable and scandalous effort to sell weapons to Third World countries. Therefore, I just cannot condone what has become of this arms bazaar, a private concern, and a very big one at that, for the promotion of those who want to make big bucks with the sale of military equipment.

As to her remarks concerning a meeting she is willing to have with members of the Veterans' Association Against Nuclear Arms, I am pleased to see that she has finally recognized the importance of meeting with this group of veterans who were yesterday and the day before, who had no trouble meeting with elected representatives of the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party, but so far have failed to meet with members of this Tory Government.

If she agrees to meet with them, I am glad and I hope that not only will she meet with them, but she will pay very close attention to their recommendations.

[English]

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member on the Liberal front benches, because I remember that he was in the Cabinet several years ago at the time of the last Liberal Government, and it was the last Liberal Government I remember that approved the sale of spare parts for tanks to the Chilean Government headed by the dictator, Pinochet.

Chile does not use the tanks for war or defence with Bolivia, Peru or Argentina. It is decades since there has been any difficulty of that sort. Chile does use those tanks on occasion to intimidate the people in the poblaciones, the slums of Santiago, which comprise half the population of the city. I would like to know whether the Hon. Member considers that it was all right for the Government of Canada to sell tank parts to a Government such as the Government of Chile that has used them against its civilian population.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the question because indeed it is a very serious one. I would be more impressed if the current Conservative Government were as aggressive against the Chilean regime as it is against the Liberal Party. I think it would mean the Government really has feelings against the dictatorship which abuses the population.

I do not recall the specifics of the question about which the Hon. Member asks. Clearly there have been rules and regulations concerning the sale of equipment. I cannot confirm nor deny that such transactions took place. I was not the Minister responsible for those transactions. I do not know about them so I cannot say whether or not such action took place. Knowing what we know now about the Pinochet regime, if we were the Government today, I doubt that we would be selling arms to that regime.

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, I have been sitting here looking forward to getting into this debate. Before I start my prepared remarks I want to comment on a couple of items that the Hon. Member for Papineau—Saint-Michel (Mr. Ouellet) related to the House, which really are not accurate at all. I think the record should be corrected so that people will know the exact situation.

First, ARMX started in 1983. The previous administration approved of this type of show back in 1983, and with justification. I am not criticizing the administration for that. It is a very legitimate show put on by the private sector. It took place in 1985 and 1987 and now it is taking place in 1989, so it has gone on for a considerable time. It has been a great aid to the Canadian Armed Forces. It has allowed the Armed Forces to do two things. First, it alerts the manufacturing industries to their needs so that we can supply the Armed Forces with the best possible equipment available. Second, it allows Canadian producers of clothing, computer programs or whatever to show their wares.

The Hon. Member for Papineau—St. Michel (Mr. Ouellet) talked about how terrible these things are and said that Liberal Members are now opposed to this show. That is quite a dramatic change in thinking of Members of the Liberal Party. I ask the Hon. Member, though I cannot ask him directly since he has had his time in the House, is he saying that he is opposed to Oerlikon establishing a major plant in the Province of Quebec and creating hundreds of jobs and producing defensive property that is being used not only by the Canadian armed forces but is being exported into the United States with a possibility of exports to other countries, other countries that would fall in line with Canada' strict restrictions on where arms may be shipped?

The Hon. Member for Papineau—St-Michel talked about the involvement of South Africa. I want to inform Hon. Members that the situation regarding South Africa and this particular show is absolutely clear. The organizers of ARMX have assured us that they have invited no South Africans to attend, not even South African diplomats in Canada. There is a ban on military co-operation and a strict official visits policy with respect to South Africa, and this is being adhered to. Why did the Hon. Member bring in this red herring about South African participation in this show?

I think the whole point of this is that there is so much misinformation. The fearmongers are exaggerating what is going on with this show. Because of that, everyone panics and all the special interest groups get on the bandwagon. This misinformation just grows and grows. The Hon. Member for Papineau—St-Michel stood in his place and said that it is terrible that South Africa is participating in this show. Well, South Africa is not participating in it, and I want that point made very clear. That is the kind of misinformation that is being spread and unfairly bringing discredit to this show.

Then I heard the Hon. Member for Papineau—St-Michel saying that the Government is not interested in disarmament or in peace. Nothing could be further from the truth. Let me give Hon. Members an example of the Government's latest peace initiative. The latest thing we have been discussing with the United States is joining in an open-skies arrangement that would allow for short notice over-flights of Canadian territory by unarmed aircraft. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has said that this concept symbolizes the West's commitment to transparency, referring of course to arms reduction, and serves as a clear reminder of our interest, meaning Canada's interest, in both arms control and peaceful co-operation with the East. The Prime Minister noted that an open-skies agreement could provide major benefits in the verification of arms control agreements, especially for states which do not possess satellite monitoring capabilities. As well, an open-skies agreement would provide benefit to the superpowers in that over-flights by aircraft would be less predictable than those by satellite.

This is a major initiative on the part of the West which President Bush proposed. Canada agrees with it. The Hon. Member says that we are not playing a prominent role in arms reduction in the world. That is totally untrue.

Members of the NDP would have us withdraw from NATO. They would have us leave the NATO table where we sit and have a strong voice and can encourage arms reductions.

Mr. Heap: You are just encouraging the White House.

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member is saying that that just encourages the White House. We are encouraging the White House and we are encouraging Moscow to reduce arms. The Members of my Party, the Prime Minister and I are very interested in peace, but the Prime Minister also understands that peace does not come from weakness. He understands that the reason both superpowers are talking about arms reduction, and NATO has a major debate going on about it is because we are dealing from strength, not weakness. Does any Hon. Member honestly think that there would be unilateral or bilateral reductions in arms if we were not dealing from strength, if we were pussycats and did not have the NATO Alliance which, by the way is working?

My socialist friend from Edmonton, the token socialist from Alberta, is waving his hands around. We understand why he is doing that. He simply does not understand the peace process and how successful it is. He does not understand what is going on in the world today.

I wanted to make those points very clear. We are supporting initiatives such as the one the Prime Minister is involved in, allowing over-flights of western and eastern planes, and we are encouraging our NATO allies to agree to this. We are also encouraging the members of the Warsaw Pact to do the same thing. We think it will go a very long way toward allowing verification of arms reductions and toward bringing a stabilized peace to the world.

I do not think the fact that Canada has the need for effective defence capability is in question here today, but after listening to the speeches that have been made, I am questioning my own thoughts on that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: Members of the NDP do not want Canada to have an effective defence capability. That is what that applause was about. Now we know where they are coming from. Now we know that they do not want Canada to have an effective defence capability.

What we are debating today is the appropriate balance between Canada's industrial capability to provide goods and services needed by the defence forces and the export requirements to make a defence industry viable.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): Oh.

Mr. McDermid: Oh, oh, good. After all, ARMX is a showcase for defence goods aimed at Canada's defence needs. That is what it is all about.

The Hon. Member for Brant (Mr. Blackburn) is the NDP's defence critic. I notice that he is conspicuous by his absence today and is not taking part in this debate. Visitors from other nations may also, surprisingly enough, be interested in our defence products. That should not come as a surprise to anyone.

• (1310)

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I rise because I am sure the Minister did not want to unduly call to the attention of Members people who are absent. Otherwise we will have to bring to the attention of the House the fact that many people should be here and are not. I am sure it is unintentional on his part, but he knows that he cannot call our attention to those present and those absent.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I accept that from my friend, and I apologize. I would suggest, however, that he might mention that to the Leader of his Party, who stood up in Question Period and talked about the absence of Ministers all during Question Period. If you are going to preach, preach to your own people, too.

Mr. Prud'homme: It is fair game. What I said applies to everybody.

Mr. McDermid: I hope the right hon. gentleman is watching.

Canada produces military equipment in order to meet our defence needs and our obligations under NATO and NORAD. To purchase these goods from other countries, which is what the Opposition seems to be suggesting, would be financially onerous and would hamper our ability to equip Canada's forces. It would also deny Canadian industry the technological and industrial benefits that are associated with defence production, and deny Canadian workers the jobs that would be created.

Defence acquisition takes place in a highly controlled environment to ensure the best possible value for the operational requirement of the Armed Forces and the best possible return on investment for the taxpayers. In recent years, all major DND acquisitions have included an industrial benefits component that includes technology transfer, new investment, job creation all across Canada, from Newfoundland to British Columbia. The Defence White Paper clearly sets out the development of a defence industrial base as one of the foundations of an effective defence.

We now have some 540 companies involved in the industry and close to 40,000 Canadians employed in these companies manufacturing defence and civilian products. Many of these industries that have evolved in Canada have developed technologies that are relevant to civil applications; particularly electronics and avionics. Relatively few defence products manufactured in this country can be classified as offensive military equipment.

The increasing complexity and high cost of modern military systems are such that it is not possible for Canada to undertake most major development projects on its own. Thus the nature of Canada's industry has become one of supplying subsystems and components, co-operating with other allies in the development of co-operative programs other than supplying weapon systems as such. Over the years, Canadian companies have developed an expertise that is recognized the world over. They are sought out by our treaty partners for systems developed by them. I do not need to tell the House that the lion's share of our trade in defence goods takes places with our NATO allies and other friendly nations. Approximately 97 per cent of our exports of military goods went to OECD countries in 1988.

These countries have, like Canada, a legitimate defence requirement as our partners in a defence alliance and to exercise their right to legitimate self defence. Our exports to these countries not only reduces the cost burden on Canadian taxpayers and the Government by extending production lines and reducing costs, but they satisfy our defence objectives by contributing to standardization and inter-operability. It also ensures that NATO defence forces have equipment that we know to be reliable and state-of-the-art. It follows that if we produce this equipment, and we want to keep costs down and the industry viable, we will also want to encourage other countries to purchase the equipment.

Canadian exhibitors at ARMX have every right to demonstrate their capability to potential customers. We encourage them to do so, and support them in their marketing activity. However, we also control them and to whom they sell. I will return to this a little later.

A close examination of Canada's defence industry will reveal that we produce very little bellicose equipment. Those defence goods that we do produce have earned us an enviable reputation around the world for civil applications. One need only cite simulator technology, short take-off and landing aircraft, navigation systems and communication technology.

Press reports and the rhetoric surrounding the show which I mentioned earlier, have alleged that Canadian firms sell vomit gas. That was one of the claims that was being made; something else to abuse the rights of civilians. The Hon. Member from Spadina (Mr. Heap) is probably one of the greatest abusers of misinformation. He likes to talk about things of which he knows very little, and does not always have the facts at his fingertips. I am sure we will hear from him later today. But nothing is further from the truth. A responsible student of the issue will know that Canada does not produce these gases or any other crowd control gases. We have stringent controls on the export of all military and paramilitary goods.

All Members of the House should be familiar with Canada's export control policies which were announced by the Secretary of State for External Affairs in 1986. These controls are amongst the most stringent in the world, and they work. In his meeting with the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade just last week, the Secretary of State for External Affairs invited that committee to look into our arms export policy. Perhaps a review by the committee could also review some of the rhetoric that surrounds this issue and help people understand that Canada not only has a responsible policy in this complex area, but also helps interested Canadians recognize that our policy works.

I repeat that invitation here today on behalf of my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I would like to see the committee get involved in this.

In the few minutes left to me, Mr. Speaker, I want to talk about our export control policies as they apply to military goods, and as they reflect the views and objectives of the Canadian people.

Canadians recognize our need to respect our defence obligations. They recognize our desire for international order and stability and they take a strong stand against human rights abuse. Specifically the policy is biased to deny export of all military goods and technology to, first, countries that pose a threat to Canada and its allies; second, countries involved in or under imminent threat of hostilities; third, countries under United Nations security council sanctions; and fourth, countries whose governments have a persistent record of violations of the human rights of their citizens, unless it can be demonstrated that there is no reasonable risk that the goods might be used against the civilian population.

Those are the cold facts. But in reality our scrutiny does not stop there. We review every overseas export transaction for military goods. As part of that review, we assess the human rights record of the country of destination. We verify security concerns, and examine the regional stability implications of these transactions. In a large number of cases, the export permit must be reviewed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs himself.

Once a permit is issued, trained officials seek assurances that goods are destined to bona fide clients and verify the veracity of these transactions. This scrutiny of export transactions is not restricted to weapons or arms, but covers all goods that could reasonably contribute to a military capability. This could include goods that are specifically designed or adapted to military purposes such as military vehicles or goods made to mill specs and components thereto. I heard my hon. friend talking about helicopters earlier on. These goods are defined in the export control list and were developed with our partners in COCOM.

COCOM is the co-ordinating committee on multilateral strategic export controls. Those are our NATO allies plus the country of Japan.

I know, Mr. Speaker, that my time is drawing to a close. I would like to say this; that the foregoing should assure the Hon. Members and the Canadian public that Canada is not, and will not, become the source of arms for nations that would abuse human rights. ARMX is a show that highlights simulation and training equipment. Both are areas where Canada possesses particular expertise; high-tech, developed and produced in Canada, and why not, and why should we not use them?

• (1320)

Exhibitors are targeting the requirements of Canada's Armed Forces. Although visitors from other nations are invited to view Canadian capabilities, Canadian industry is well aware of the constraints placed on it by Canada's export control policies.

We are confident that this particular show is a very important show for Canada, for Canadians, for our Armed Forces, for industry, for those workers who work there, and we have no objections to this being carried on by the private sector.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Trinity—Spadina on a question or comment.

Mr. Heap: I listened carefully to the Hon. Minister. I was particularly interested in his latter remarks about the controls on exports. I did not hear him say that we place an end-use requirement which the United States does to require the buying country to testify in a legally binding manner as to what will be the end use.

In other words, when we sell goods to the United States, for example, helicopters or helicopter parts, we do not know whether they will wind up sold or given by the United States to the Contras in Nicaragua, or to the Salvadoran army in El Salvador to strafe and bomb civilians.

The same applies when we sell aeroplane engines to Israel or Brazil, and later hear that they have been sold to Governments such as the Governments of Honduras, El Salvador, or to the Contras. It appears quite legal for those countries to do this because we have not required any statement from them about end use.

When the Minister talked about the restriction on exports to certain countries in certain categories, and spoke about countries with a persistent record of violence against their citizens, unless it can be shown that there is no danger of the goods being used that way, he did not mention that the Government has refused to identify which countries are currently under that restriction. Therefore, it is impossible for us to evaluate how subjective or accurate the Government's identification may be. Does it include El Salvador in such a list? We do not know.

Finally, the Minister did not explain why the Government altered its practice with respect to access to information. When there have been inquiries about exports to certain countries, the information that is returned consists of stating that "deleted" sent "deleted" to "deleted". In other words, they do not want any further embarrassment such as that encountered by the previous Government about the tank parts to Chile.

Perhaps the Minister would be willing to explain why the Government is so secretive about this policy of which it is so proud, and why it neglects to secure the end use of its products in the same way as does our ally the United States?

Mr. McDermid: I think I made it very clear to the Hon. Member. Perhaps he missed that part of my remarks, and that is fair ball. We have verification procedures, and I will just read those into the record once again. It states that in a large number of cases the export permit must be reviewed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs himself. Once a permit is issued trained officials seek assurances that goods are destined to bona fide clients and verify the veracity of those transactions. There is a follow-up, and we do keep an eye on those things.

It is not our intention to publish a list of countries which are affected by this policy. Such a list would be a cabinet confidence. I believe the identity of some countries is self-evident. Others may be of a more sensitive nature, and therefore it must remain within cabinet confidentiality. If the Hon. Member was not grandstanding, I think he would understand that very well.

The Government spends a considerable amount of time consulting with NGO groups, the non-government organizations that work around the world in many beneficial ways and are on the ground in most of these countries and know what is going on. They provide a tremendous amount of information to the Government. They let us know about the human rights developments in countries. We are very appreciative of that type of support.

The House will remember that one of the last acts of the House last fall was to approve the establishment of an International Institute of Human Rights and Democratic Development. We do not turn our backs on those principles when it comes to military exports. If my friend thought about it and fully examined what we do, I am sure he would agree that we are extremely strict in this country about exports.

I am sure the Hon. Member will support the offer that the Minister made to the External Affairs Committee to examine our export policy when it comes to defence goods, and have a thorough study of it and get the information out in the open. I trust that the Hon. Member would support that invitation from the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Edmonton East on a question or comment.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): A little bit of both, Mr. Speaker. I was delighted to hear the Minister's declaration that South Africa will not be present at this exhibition, and that we ship absolutely nothing of military value to South Africa. This will come as a bit of a surprise to Spar Aerospace which was found to be delivering proximity fuses for 155 millimetre artillery shells to the Republic of South Africa. It may also puzzle those people who view sulphur as having at least in part a strategic element to it, because we continue to ship huge quantities of sulphur, much of it from Alberta, to South Africa.

Mr. McDermid: Are you in favour of that, or against it?

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): I am against it. Absolutely against it.

Mr. Schneider: Starve them all.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): Most folk do not survive on sulphur.

Mr. Thacker: He wants to unemploy Albertans and have the whole province unemployed.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): I am certain, Sir, there are ways to employ Albertans other than in industries and in the production of products which can be used to kill people elsewhere.

Mr. McDermid: Sulphur?

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): Acknowledging that the RSA will not be there, can the Minister advise whether or not such other countries that routinely abuse their civilian populations, or at least civilian populations under their control, such as El Salvador, Chile, Indonesia, Uganda, Sri Lanka, Panama, Morocco, Israel, and Iran will also not be there?

Mr. McDermid: In an earlier answer addressed to the Hon. Member for Trinity—Spadina (Mr. Heap) I said that I was not going to release any kind of list whatsoever. That is cabinet confidentiality. I cannot make it any more clear than that to the Hon. Member. I read the list of our policy in sales, and if the Hon. Member wants me to do it again, I will.

I think the Hon. Member understands that sulphur is used to make fertilizer.

• (1330)

It is fertilizer to be used to produce food for millions of people in South Africa, most of whom are black. If he is suggesting that we cut them off from that, is that part of the NDP policy? If that is their policy, let him stand up and say it.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): It is our policy to cut off sulphur sales to South Africa.

Mr. McDermid: They want to use food as a weapon. That is the NDP—

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): Sulphur is not food.

Mr. McDermid: It produces food. It helps to grow food. That is what they use it for. They don't use it for defence purposes. When will you get that through your thick head?

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, one of the advantages of being in the Liberal Party is that it is the very embodiment of light and reason. One of the entertaining things we have watched in this House today is the difficulty that is faced by the Government on the one hand because it has caught itself in a very embarrassing situation with the ARMX bazaar next week, and the New Democratic Party trying its best to abandon its unusual policies.

We have seen much back-pedalling on both sides, and many attempts to shuffle and cover over the facts. I am delighted the Minister of State for Privatization (Mr. McDermid) is here. I enjoyed his speech today, and I will undoubtedly refer to some of his remarks again.

I want to start with my friends on the left because it is their motion we are discussing today. It has to be one of the most back-pedalling motions I have seen in a long time. It will not say what is the position of the Party. We are getting different stories.

This morning the person who would like to be leader of that Party, the Hon. Member for Regina—Qu'Appelle (Mr. de Jong), made his foray into the leadership race. He spoke very eloquently but, of course, was not really spouting the same line that the Hon. Member for Esquimalt Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett) was espousing with his comments to the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mrs. Collins). Now we are hearing a different view for the benefit of Edmonton East. They are all over the place.

When we hear from the Hon. Member for Trinity—Spadina (Mr. Heap) later, I expect he will give a different version as well. In other words, there is a complete lack of coherent policy.

I am sure that is the reason for this vaguely worded resolution we are discussing today. I want to read part of it:

[Translation]

> That this House condemn the government's involvement in the arms bazaar, ARMX'89, and calls upon the government:
> (1) to cease all involvement in the expansion of the international market for military and policing equipment; and

(2) to take action to ensure that countries which violate human rights are prohibited from directly or indirectly arranging purchases of military and policing equipment in Canada.—Mr. de Jong.

[English]

What does all that mean? What are we supposed to take from this? Are they in favour of ARMX, or are they against ARMX?

They say that they are opposed to the Government's involvement in it, but they do not say anything about ARMX itself. They are not sure. Some of them will be against it and some of them will not.

The Hon. Member for Regina—Qu'Appelle certainly did not condemn the exhibition this morning. He was speaking in wonderful sentences about how it was a shame that it was happening, but he did not say he wanted it stopped. He did not urge the Government to discontinue it. He urged the Government to stop supporting it, and that is as far as he would go. We keep getting different stories.

I had a New Democratic Party opponent whose views I am sure Hon. Members have heard. Major General Johnson was their principal defence critic throughout the last election campaign. We had a lot of discussions in Kingston about defence matters, with good reason. Kingston has a large Canadian forces base, which fortunately has not been closed down by recent government cut-backs and is also the home of the Royal Military College, one of Canada's finest educational institutions. I am honoured to represent those two bodies in this House.

It is made much easier to represent it because of the party position we have in these matters, which I will turn to in a moment.

It is important that we look at the views the New Democratic Party has attempted to express.

The Hon. Member for Regina Qu'Appelle gave his very long-winded exposition this morning. He spoke about the evils of the arms race, which everyone concedes, and spoke about the virtues of peace, which everyone recognizes. He really did not say very much about the resolution or about the New Democratic Party policy. I think the reason is apparent. I hope that there will be some clarification of what their policy may or may not be during some of the speeches later.

The Government's position in this matter is equally ambiguous. I want to deal with some of the difficulties in terms of what has been said here this afternoon and what is happening with respect to this exhibition. What is this exhibition or bazaar? As the Associate Minister of National Defence said earlier, it is a bazaar for training and simulation technology and for defence technology for the 21st century. That is what is advertised on the brochure.

It appears that this exhibition was formerly sponsored by the Government. Perhaps the Minister of State for Privatization can tell us why this was changed, because he is privatizing everything by selling the assets of the Canadian people back to them.

The Government has decided not to run ARMX as a government function any longer and to let the private sector run it. I can understand the Government's reluctance. The questions being asked, particularly by New Democratic Party Members in the House today, clearly are causing the Government some embarrassment. It decided that the best course of action was to put it in private hands in order to deflect the criticism to others, so it will not have to answer for any of the mistakes that might be made. That is the kind of attitude that typifies the Progressive Conservative Party. Instead of standing up and admitting mistakes or that things are not the way they ought to be, they say it is not their responsibility and try to shirk that responsibility. That has been happening in the House for some weeks.

My constituents have written many letters to many government Departments in an attempt to find out what is happening at ARMX. In many cases the replies were four to six weeks in coming. In many cases there were no replies at all. Ultimately they approached me to take up the matter with government Departments.

They brought me a petition containing over 200 names. Unfortunately, I will be unable to table it in the House because it is not in the proper form, but they indicated in it their opposition to this exhibition and their dissatisfaction with the answers they were receiving on the matter.

Among other things, they urged me to take steps and write to the various government Departments to find out what, in fact, was happening.

I have a letter I received from the Minister of National Defence (Mr. McKnight), which basically reaffirms the position taken in the House today by the Associate Minister of National Defence. Let me read it to the House to illume the House on this matter. The Minister writes:

> The purpose of this letter is to respond to your inquiry of March 6, 1989 on the subject of ARMX '89.

I should say that this letter is dated April 27, to give an idea of the length of time it takes to get information together on ARMX. There is clearly a problem. The letter goes on:

> At the outset, it is important to realize that ARMX '89 is a private sector undertaking sponsored by Baxter Publications. The exhibit itself focuses on technology, related to training simulator and procedures for military applications. As such, it features Canadian and international industry demonstrating training technology equipment and simulators devices. The Department of National Defence's interest in ARMX '89 is exclusively related to obtaining as much information as possible on this training technology in order that we may better train our personnel in a more cost effective manner. DND's participation is confined to stating future training requirements in the form of presentations at a seminar program and a booth display.

Since the organization and conduct of ARMX '89 is the exclusive purview of the sponsor, Baxter Publications, any further information on matters related to ARMX '89 should be related to—

There is an address and telephone number provided.

I hope you will agree that the Canadian Government neither condones nor promotes exhibits of arms whose potential buyers may include countries that have unacceptable human rights records. I suggest that your question of the export of arms is one more appropriately directed to the Department of External Affairs.

That was the reply I received from the Minister. It all sounds quite good. However, this morning the Associate Minister made what I thought was a pretty telling slip of the tongue. She said: "among the people we have invited". Then she said: "Of course I did not really mean the people we invited because of course it is not really our show, it is somebody else's".

I suggest that the Government has input, and I suggest that it has been extensive, into the guest list. While I do not think that it is necessarily a matter for criticism, it is a matter for which the Government should accept some responsibility and stop pussyfooting around the House and suggesting that it has nothing to do with the guest list or if anything is going on at ARMX. It has to live up to its responsibilities.

The other letter that I thought was most interesting was one which one of my constituents received. She took the bull by the horns and wrote directly to Baxter Publications, at least I presume it was them. It was certainly the name and address given me by the Minister of National Defence. She wrote to them in February and received the following extraordinary letter. I would like to read it. It is addressed to one of my constituents in Kingston. It is dated February 20. It states:

Thank you for your letter of February 16, 1989, and your interest in ARMX.

ARMX as you may know is Canada's Defence Equipment Exhibition featuring simulation and training technology. It is only open to military, government, police and defence industry representatives. It is not open to the public. We do not provide the list of Canadian exhibitors to anyone other than our subcontractors. As far as foreign countries attending is concerned, this is controlled by the Department of External Affairs. Invitations have been sent to a number of countries but this once again is privileged information. Should you be eligible to apply as a visitor, please let me know and I will send you the application form.

If you are one of few who object to ARMX, please be assured that this show does nothing to enhance the "Arms Race". It is a private venture, receives no government funding, and none of the equipment on display is sold (not permitted by law) and "Third World" countries are not involved other than as spectators. If you are concerned about being represented at ARMX, all Members of Parliament will be invited.

Sincerely,
Stuart P. Northrup (LCol Ret'd)
ARMX Co-ordinator.

This is an extraordinary letter. The reason it is so extraordinary is that when we turn back to the ARMX brochure that advertises the exhibition we see that the second paragraph states:

Your company can be right in the centre of intense buying action. With no general public in attendance, each delegate is a bona fide buyer, prospect or user. The time you spend with them will be the most effective and productive of the year.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): It must be a typo.

Mr. Milliken: It must be a typo. The Minister herself assured us in her speech—at least I thought I heard her—this is not a sale. It is merely an exhibition. It is merely a show, a trade show and there will be no sales.

Lieutenant Colonel Northrup said that there are no sales that are not permitted by law. Yet here in the brochure advertising the exhibition it states that: you can be in on intense buying action. What are they selling? Coca-Cola.

Mr. McDermid: Of course it is not a sale.

Mr. Milliken: The Minister for Privatization perhaps can tell us. Perhaps they are selling off Crown corporations. I do not know what this sale is all about. Either it is a sale or it is not. I think the Government should come clean on this and tell us about it.

Mr. Boudria: Don't count on it.

Mr. Milliken: Don't pussyfoot and cover the thing up and suggest that this is merely a trade show. This is a sale. These people are there for showing these weapons systems, not for the purpose of an exhibition. They want to sell them. Let us be honest about it and tell us about it. Instead of that the Minister says: "Oh, no, this is merely a trade show. There will be no sales". At least the New Democratic Party recognizes that it will be a sale. However, members of that Party do not say that they disapprove. I think some of them think that they do but they are not sure. They do not want to say that they disapprove because they are afraid they will get into trouble with their constituents. The Government does not want to say that it is going on because it is afraid that it will get in trouble with another group. It is nice to be in the Liberal Party. We do not have any such problems here.

Mr. McDermid: What is the policy?

Mr. Milliken: The policy is quite clear. Before I come to that, however, I have a few questions that I would like to put to the Government.

There is altogether too much secrecy surrounding this whole arrangement. That is part of the reason for the problem in this House. That is the reason for the disagreement in part. My constituents in their efforts to determine the facts have been stonewalled by the Government. They are told that everything is secret in so far as Baxter Publications is concerned. That is not fair. It is a trade exhibition. As a Member of Parliament I have received an invitation. My constituents are urging me to go to see what is going on. I feel that that is fine.

As far as the defence establishment in Canada is concerned, I recognize the importance of the exhibition. I suspect it is a valuable exhibition for persons involved in national defence in our country. To that extent I say to the Minister I agree with what the Minister has said about ARMX—from that sole perspective.

Having said that, it seems to me the Government has other responsibilities. Here in the letter from ARMX is a statement that External Affairs is controlling the guest list. It controls the foreign countries invited to this thing. Is it true or not? Why is not the Secretary of State here telling us the facts as to whether or not his Department controls that guest list? I think that is very important. The public is entitled to know who will be there.

The Government says: "We cannot tell you because it is not our show. It is private". Baxter says: "It is privileged information. It is not our business to release it". Everybody is covering up as best they can.

As a Member of Parliament, and particularly a new one, I am not able to recognize military people from around the world at this exhibition. I have never been involved in the military. I do not know who will be there. I would not recognize the Chief of Staff of Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, Nicaragua, Chile, or any place. I do not know what they look like. How am I supposed to know who is there? I cannot tell. That is what is going on here. There is a real cover-up operation in respect of this show. It seems to me that the Government has an obligation, if it has not got the list itself. I suspect it has. I suspect it helped prepare the list, to get it and bring it into the House and say: "These are the people being invited". There is no secret about this. Why are we not making it public? Why do Canadians have to be kept in the dark about what is going on right here in their nation's capital? I suggest there is no need for it in this case.

With respect to the list of exhibitors, we were told that the list of exhibitors was not public. I have seen a list of the Canadian companies exhibiting. The question is: Are there any others? We have no information on that.

Mr. Boudria: What is so secret about that?

Mr. Milliken: Why should that be kept quiet? The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) is perfectly correct in raising this issue. There is no secret in that.

We have raised the criticism, and I think it is legitimate, that the exhibition may be used for the purpose of arranging sales to Third World countries or countries which are involved in mistreating their nationals. It seems to me that the Minister of State for Privatization has been telling us that the Government has a list. He says that the Government has a list of countries to whom it bans exports.

However, he will not tell us who is on the list. This has been government policy for some time. I do not understand why. Why would the list not be made public? If the Government has made a determination that Government a, b, or x should not receive arms from Canada, why would we not publicize that fact? Why is it kept secret? Yet that is the position that the Government is in.

I see that my time is running out, Mr. Speaker. In our Party we are in favour of publicity in relation to this event. We believe the veils of secrecy should be lifted and the facts disclosed.

Second, we support the event in so far as it is a genuine show for military purposes for Canada's defence establishment.

We are not in favour of this exhibition if it is being used, as we suspect it is, as a vehicle for arranging sales of defence systems or weapons systems of any kind, offensive or otherwise, to countries that are using them against their own nationals, or to countries which under United Nations directives should not be able to purchase them. We are apprehensive that those people are there.

McDermid: We have said that. They are excluded.

Mr. Milliken: The Minister of State for Privatization says that those people are all excluded. Give us the list. Let us know who is on it and then we can tell, first, if they are excluded. Second, give us the guest list and we can see who has been invited.

Mr. McDermid: I said that we are not selling to them.

Mr. Milliken: The Minister says that we are not selling to them. They are invited to come and look at all this equipment but sales will not take place. Why are they even there? There is no need for those people to come and look at it. They will buy through another third party. The Minister knows that and he does not care. They do not care. I think it is very important that these facts be disclosed and that the Government come clean with the Canadian people. That is the position of this Party.

• (1350)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Minister of State for Privatization, followed by the Hon. Member for Trinity—Spadina on questions and comments.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, this is really interesting. We had the Hon. Member for Papineau—Saint-Michel, a former Minister in the Liberal Government, oppose this particular show that is going on here in Ottawa. Now we have heard from the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands. I understand why he is in favour of this show. It is because he represents Kingston and the Islands. It is a great traditional military centre, strategically important for Canada. The Royal Military College is there. I understand why he would support this particular show. I give him full marks for that.

What is the policy of the Party? I mean, come on. I am not sure who the critic is over there for national defence.

An Hon. Member: All of them.

Mr. McDermid: All of them. I know that the Hon. Member for Papineau—Saint-Michel is the critic for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He made it very clear that he was opposed today to this particular gathering for this show. I find that rather amusing that the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands, the new breed in the Liberal Party, is in favour of this particular show, with some caveats. He thinks it is a good idea. He likes the publicity on the show. He said that he thinks it is good. What is the policy of that Party? What is the policy over there?

An Hon. Member: Why don't you answer his question?

Mr. McDermid: That is what Canadians are crying out to learn.

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the Minister of State for Privatization and Regulatory Affairs had so much difficulty understanding it. I gave the policy of the Party in three short sentences. I thought it was quite clear.

An Hon. Member: Yes or no.

Mr. Milliken: I think the Hon. Minister should pay close attention because he seems to have difficulty establishing the order of these facts in his head. I know he wants to sow confusion. I know he wants to detract attention from the failure of his Government and the Department of National Defence to release the information as to who has been invited to this show. He should come clean with Canadians and tell us what is gong on here.

He said that I am all in favour of this show. I said very clearly that I am in favour of this show for its military purpose for showing hardware or military systems to Canadian defence personnel, period. I did not say that I was in favour of the show as an international arms exhibition. I said that I was very concerned. The Minister shakes her head and says that it is not. This is Canada's defence exhibition. There are people invited from all over the world. It states that right inside here. The Minister cannot have it both ways. It is either an international exhibition or it is not. It states in here: "For pre-registration or to order exhibit space, contact—", and then it has three lists. There is one for Canada and the U.S. There is another Great Britain, Germany, Turkey and the Netherlands. There is another one for Switzerland and the rest of Europe. All of those people are invited.

An Hon. Member: Exhibitors.

Mr. Milliken: Yes. I am asking for the list of exhibitors and I am not getting it.

An Hon. Member: Here it is here.

Mr. Milliken: Oh, the international ones too? Oh, great! Why does the Minister not table the list? The only list on the back is of Canadian companies. I invite the Minister to table the list. I have not seen the program.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Milliken: Perhaps these Ministers could contain themselves for a moment. I can understand their excitement. I do not know why they would not file these documents while they were making their speeches. They should table them in the House so that we can all have the benefit of the information they have. I have asked for it. Indeed, we have been asking for it since eleven o'clock this morning when the debate began, and so far there has been nothing forthcoming.

I would be delighted to have the list of exhibitors, and I would be delighted to have the list of guests. I suspect very strongly that the Minister of National Defence or the Associate Minister of National Defence helped the organizers prepare the guest list. Why not bring the guest list in here and let us see it? She said in her speech: "Some of the people we have invited". I do not think it was purely a slip of the tongue. It might have been, but I think the Minister has had something to do with this and she knows it. I think the Minister for Privatization may have had his foot in the door too. Tell us all about it? I would invite the Minister to reply.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There will be a short question from the Hon. Associate Minister of National Defence, and then we will proceed to put questions and comments by the NDP.

Mrs. Collins: Mr. Speaker, I am still not quite sure what is the Hon. Member's position. I think he supports it. We are going to be together, I believe, tomorrow in Kingston at the graduation at the Royal Military College, and I am sure we will have a good opportunity to discuss his views with the military.

I would just like to clarify one thing. The list of exhibitors is published in the program. Perhaps he does not have it. It has all the exhibitors. The countries represented are Canada, United States, Sweden, and Germany. They are all NATO countries, except I believe there is one from Israel. I have heard that there was one; I am not sure if it is on the final list or not. Those are the people who are coming from offshore to be exhibitors.

Second, we do not buy things at the exhibit. We go to look at it. I am sure Hon. Members understand how Government does its purchasing. We do not just go down and write a cheque or write an order form at ARMX. We find out what is there and then obviously the purchasing officers of the Department or the project officers go through a process at some point in time if they are interested in buying more tents or more computer systems or whatever it is. It gives them the chance to see them.

In terms of other people, I personally have invited—actually it was my predecessor—the Secretary of State for Defence from the Netherlands. He is coming as my guest next week for an official visit and he will be attending ARMX.

I understand that the Department of External Affairs has invited the the Secretary of State for Defence from the U.K. Those are the only invitations I have been involved in. I understand that the sponsors of the show have invited all the diplomatic people here in Ottawa. These are not the people that buy things. It is a diplomatic courtesy that they are invited, other than from the Warsaw countries.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Minister be ready to table the document. I see no objection to that. Would she look into the possibility of also tabling the list of the "invited guests", the diplomatic corps. That is of great interest to us. Yes or no.

Mrs. Collins: In responding to the point of order, I am sure if Members would like this list, there is a program that has been published showing all the exhibitors. This is just a photocopy of it. I do not have the list of who the sponsors have invited. I will make those inquiries and see if we can get that list.

Mr. Prud'homme: Thank you.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Can we proceed with the question from the Member for Kootenay West—Revelstoke and then the Member for Kingston and the Islands will be able to close the questions and comments period.

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the question asked as to the position of the Liberal Party. In listening to the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands, it struck me that in the great Liberal tradition it was ARMX if necessary but not necessarily ARMX, depending upon the circumstances. That is not confusing for a Liberal, of course.

There are two other positions that may have come out of it in a slightly different syntax. One is: when in doubt, mumble and when in conflict confuse. It would seem to me that it is not surprising if there is some conflict within the ranks of the Liberal Party over this issue.

I would like to draw to the attention of the Member and the House that one thing we have in Canada is a proper record of not only government expenditures and grants from the Government to various companies in the defence industry, particularly the defence industry production and procurement grants. We also have a clear public record of political contributions.

It is interesting to note that from 1969 to 1985, Spar Aerospace received some $25 million in DIPP grants. In 1986, Spar Aerospace donated some $22,629 to the Conservative Party and $21,780 to the Liberal Party. In 1987, it was $15,710 to the Conservative Party and $22,700 to the Liberal Party. Pratt and Whitney received some $333 million in DIPP grants from 1969 to 1985.

In 1986, the Liberal Party received $5,800. In 1987, the Liberal Party received $5,500 while the Conservative Party received respectively some $5,846. I can see some of the source of confusion that may exist within the Liberal Party as to where actually it stands. I wonder why the Member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Milliken), in his initial address which was entirely in English, chose when he was trying to suggest that the NDP motion was not clear, to speak French. To whom is he sending this address? If he is sending it to English-speaking constituents in Kingston and the Islands and all of a sudden says, "Well, the NDP's statement is confusing" and that is the only part that is not in English, it is going to be a little difficult. I suspect that in Kingston and the Islands we are going to see copies coming out of the English address with a few paragraphs in French.

I would ask the Member for Kingston and the Islands to read the motion in English so that all of his constituents will have clearly on the record what the position of the NDP has been in this debate.

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, first, I make no apology for speaking in either official language.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Milliken: Second, as the Hon. Member for Kootenay West—Revelstoke (Mr. Kristiansen) knows, the House of Commons Debates are printed in one language or the other language and are translated. If I thought for one minute that the motion we are debating sets out the position of the New Democratic Party I would not worry about publishing it because I don't think it does. I think it sets out the amalgam of a group of positions because I don't think the New Democratic Party, frankly, has a position on this.

Mr. Boudria: It has several positions.

Mr. Milliken: Or it has several positions. The Hon. Member has gone through a list of companies which are making donations to political parties and happen to be arms manufacturers at this ARMX exhibition. He should be very careful because he knows that a lot of his money comes from unions. The mandatory deductions from workers in various parts of Canada, many of whom are in my constituency and work in National Defence establishments depend on National Defence payments and depend on the Department of National Defence for their employment. They work on the bases in Kingston. They are members of unions and they are making a substantial contribution to the representation they are supposed to be getting in this House from the Hon. Member's Party.

If the Member is going to start bandying around figures and suggest that motives are dictated in this House by donations he had better be—

Mr. Kristiansen: Confusion.

Mr. Milliken: He is suggesting that confusion is being created because this Party happened to have received some money at some time apparently from some companies that may be exhibiting at ARMX. He had best be careful because his Party is getting all kinds of money from people who benefit from this show. As the Hon. Member knows if the Department of National Defence did not buy some of these products some of the people who work on the bases would not have jobs. Those people are being forced, I suspect in many cases, against their will to make contributions to the hon. gentleman's Party to help keep him elected to this House. If the workers could appreciate the lack of unanimity—if I may use that expression, that is even perhaps a strong word in the circumstances—and total dissension in the Member's Party over this issue they would probably feel that perhaps they were not getting their money's worth.

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Milliken) was not here at the beginning or did not take the time carefully to read our motion. I think it is quite clear and I will read it for his benefit and for anybody else who would like to know what it is.

Our motion is:

> That this House condemn the government's involvement in the arms bazaar, ARMX '89, and calls upon the government:
> (1) to cease all involvement in the expansion of the international market for military and policing equipment; and
> (2) to take action to ensure that countries which violate human rights are prohibited from directly or indirectly arranging purchases of military and policing equipment in Canada.

That presents difficulty only to those who want to cast the NDP in the position of total and absolute pacifism and then express mock surprise when they find that while we have pacifists in the Party, the Party by policy is not pacifist but, in fact, is a Party that undertakes to promote peace and to keep militarization to the minimum that is needed for defence, and not to use militarization as a means of enrichment. That is perhaps what the Hon. Member has not been able to learn but it is clear enough from the way we worded our motion.

I want to give a little description of this armaments exhibition, explain what I think is wrong with this rationale, what I think would be a better rationale for an approach and an alternative.

In its description I think it could be reasonably said that the representation of the evil empire will be in Ottawa next week. President Reagan once said that the Soviet Union is the evil empire. He changed his mind. The Leader of Iran has said the United States is the evil empire, or the satanic empire, but some of his supporters are not clear about that. I am not suggesting that any government is an evil empire. I am suggesting that the arms race itself and the very great powers that support it, those that President Eisenhower on his retirement called the military industrial complex, collectively constitute an evil empire.

Governments are currently promoting the spending of $1.2 trillion on armaments, while nearly half the world's people go hungry. They could be well fed with much left over if even part of that $1.2 trillion were diverted from arms to more constructive uses.

The Government, as was pointed out, has been curiously defensive. It wants to suggest that this has nothing to do with selling arms. I give the Member for Kingston and The Islands (Mr. Milliken) full credit for having clearly explained from the Government's own document that, in fact, as he quoted "Your company can be right in on the centre of intense buying action", and so on and so forth.

There is also the letter in the program from the Chief of Defence Staff, General P. D. Manson, "As in past years the ARMX exhibition will have a special Canadian Forces focus following on from the Government of Canada's 1987 White Paper on Defence, Challenge and Commitment. Canadian Forces have entered a period of revitalization, restructuring and re-equipment. These advances will generate unique training systems and equipment requirements which will be defined in the Canadian Forces exhibits and seminars during ARMX '89".

In other words, it is not as the Minister would have us believe, just training. It is training and equipment. Of course, modern equipment requires modern training. There is no mystery about that.

I listed earlier for the Minister's information a few of the exhibitors advertised in the program which are involved in anything but peaceful activities. They are producing weapons that kill people. I did not have time to continue but I will give just a few more.

General Dynamics from the United States produces the Stinger, a shoulder launched fire and forget missile. That company will be there, according to the Government statement at least.

Invar Manufacturing will display a designed armoured launching turret for tow missile systems. Well, a launching turret does not sound like a training or a simulation system, it sounds like something that will launch, something that will kill people, or if you aim right will kill people.

Junghans Feinwerktechnik from West Germany, are producers of mechanical and electronic fuses for automatic cannon, mortar and artillery ammunition, fuses for rockets, missiles, AT weapons, mines, and so on. There are plenty more exhibitors that produce weaponry. The Government's attempt to suggest that that is not true certainly helps to encourage the suspicions of the public who wonder what is going on.

In fact, what we have here is an arrangement for sale, granted they will not take tanks home their knapsacks, but both the equipment and the training systems can become part of regimes which are suppressing their civilian populations. The Government will be teaching methods of killing and suppression and control. Some of those methods have already been used in countries like Chile.

The Government claims that it has a good system of follow-up to make sure that our equipment does not go astray to any such country, but in fact, Project Ploughshares, a national research organization—the Minister will complain, of course, that it is funded by the church or churches.

The Minister of State for Privatization (Mr. McDermid) will complain that the churches have an interest, and I do not know whether he thinks they make money out of this or not, but in fact, Project Ploughshares has for many years been a well-respected peace organization. They estimate that $150 million to $200 million worth of Canadian arms components find their way into the Third World annually through other countries. This was printed in The Ottawa Citizen in January. Canadian arms exported to the United States have ended up in Iran, South Korea, Honduras and Paraguay, all human rights violators, according to Amnesty International.

The Government's follow-up system does not work very well and it is very unwise of the Government to be so secretive about its prohibition list because, clearly, the Government cannot do its job properly without the help of Canadian citizens who support the prohibition that the Government claims it has enacted.

This arms bazaar is being conducted in keeping and with the implicit support, of course, of the Free Trade Agreement which exempted only two kinds of subsidies to be used by the Canadian Government. One is a subsidy on energy and the other is a subsidy on armaments. Section 2003 of the Free Trade Agreement clearly encourages and gives the green light to the Government to use arms production as the only job opportunity for Canadians in very depressed areas of Canada. This, of course, plus the $250 million worth of annual grants to arms producers, is the main basis for holding ARMX. Granted, now they are able to funnel the profits to Baxter Publishing, but in fact, it would not be happening without Government encouragement, without this brochure in which the Government participates, without the military being there from all three services. ARMX would not be happening without the Government's participation, and that is why our motion condemns the Government for promoting that sort of thing.

I will not go into the list of companies who receive DIP grants and are exhibiting here. Some of them have already been mentioned. I would rather go on to a further point and that is the list of countries for whom arms export permits are given under the Export Control Act. They include India, just last year nearly $83 million worth; South Korea, just last year nearly $162 million worth; Pakistan, $1 million; Peru, $3 million; Turkey, $17 million; Zaire, $7.5 million. Our country has been exporting to these governments, although they all have very serious records of human rights violations. Yet—

Mr. McDermid: Exporting what?

Mr. Heap: According to this list, this is the arms export control list, and these are the countries to which these millions of dollars worth were sent.

Mr. McDermid: What were the products?

Mr. Heap: It is very difficult to find out. The Minister hollers, what were the products. It is very difficult to find out when we send for the information and we get the reply, after paying the fee, that "deleted sent deleted to deleted". The Government does not want us to know what they are sending to those countries.

I will give just a few instances of some of these countries from Amnesty International. We mentioned Chile already, but for example, in El Salvador, there were arrests of suspected government opponents, some of whom were supposedly tortured, subjected to severe psychological pressure or extra-judicially executed, some of whom disappeared while in custody. What we are told publicly is that anyone who is accredited to Ottawa, any diplomat accredited to Ottawa is invited to attend. In other words, to that extent, all these countries that are human rights violators are invited to attend. While of course they cannot carry away a tank in their knapsack, as Colonel North said, in fact they can make contacts and place orders. Guatemala has the same sort of record.

Apparently Israel has a Canadian subsidiary that is exhibiting here. In December, at least 23 Palestinian demonstrators in the West Bank and Gaza were shot and killed—this is a report of the previous year—by soldiers during widespread violent protests against the Israeli occupation. There were also severe and indiscriminate beatings of demonstrators and hundreds were summarily tried and imprisoned. There was an increase in reports of ill-treatment and torture of detainees by members of the Israeli defence force and the general security service. Yet Israel is invited to exhibit here and Israel is free to attend and make arrangements for buying.

In fact, it appears that the primary object of the arms bazaar is not to equip the Canadian Army. We would not need 13,000 visitors which the Government says it is expecting to equip the Canadian Army. In fact, I think the clear object of this is simply to make higher profits for arms producing companies, including Canadian ones, and to make those profits without regard to what happens with the weapons that are sold. This is what I object to and what our Party objects to and what is clearly opposed in the statement that we produced last spring called "Canada's Stake in Common Security". We object to having the manufacture of armaments done primarily or solely for profit or perhaps solely for profit with the only condition that it stays within the general guidelines of NATO. I say general because obviously our weaponry gets to countries who are not in NATO but perhaps through NATO partners. Otherwise, it is a matter of profit.

Indirectly, also, technological growth in turn increases the power to make profit, but the key question is profit. I would like to point out that more and more economists are pointing out the flaws in the theory that building up armaments builds up the general economy and the industrial strength of our country. It has been pointed out that in recent studies done under the United Nations and in the United States, countries such as Japan and Germany with the least investment in weaponry, that is in production of war goods, have a better industrial performance, a more efficient industrial performance, than the United States does. For Canada, of course, with our DPSA agreement with the United States, any jobs that we gained by selling to the United States are balanced by jobs that go to the United States when we buy from them. We are only supposed to sell as much as we buy. Actually we sell less than we buy. So the sale arrangement is not one that increases the jobs in Canada. We simply at best exchange jobs with the United States.

There is also, Mr. Speaker, what has been found by experience; that the technological spin-offs from military development are not very important, not very useful. In fact, that is one of the reasons why Japan and Germany have been able to progress faster than the United States and Canada in their economies.

I see, Mr. Speaker, that you are indicating to me that my time is running out. I want to finish by pointing out that it is possible to plan for a transition from war production that is not needed to peace production, production in the broadest sense. That does not appear to have occurred to the Government in connection with its closure or announcement that it will close certain bases. It does not appear to have made provision for alternative economy or alternative employment. It can be done. It was done in the United States and Canada after World War II, quite successfully. If you are not interested in making highest profits, that is what we should be doing. Instead of promoting, as this armaments exhibition does, just mindless increase in the sales of weaponry, we should be choosing after public debate what kind of weapons we need to defend our country and the ones that can be least used to threaten others with attack.

Then we should be considering what is necessary to produce those and direct the rest of our resources to meeting the needs of the one-sixth of the people in our country who are under the poverty line and the needs of the aboriginal peoples of our country. We would find we have some left over to meet the needs of the countries that were recently colonies of Europe that have been pillaged and need to be allowed to stand on their feet.

Mrs. Gaffney: Mr. Speaker, I think one of the benefits of this debate has been the furthering of my knowledge of what ARMX is all about. I appreciate the comments of my colleague here and also the colleagues across the floor and on the NDP side of the House. We have heard quite a distinct divergence of views this afternoon. It has certainly lifted some of the aura of indecision and confusion that seems to lie around the ARMX bazaar that is happening shortly in Ottawa. If I could move off ARMX for a moment, I would like to briefly comment on where we stand as a nation today in world military spending. We all know we spend more than 25 times what we spend on foreign aid to the developing nations of the world, and that weapons imports now amount to 25 per cent of the total debt burden of the developing world. I think this is something that concerns us all.

I believe it is incumbent upon us all to ensure that Canada has a multilateral approach to peace in the world, and working with other nations and other peoples is surely the best way to ensure peace and prosperity for all. The question that we all should be asking ourselves is how Canada can best contribute most effectively in the search for global peace. One of the key problem areas is the existence of nuclear weapons. We should all be working toward their reduction and the means to ensure that the East-West conflict will not occur.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Gaffney: There is no question that Canada should not get into the game of mass producing military weapons for export abroad. One of the things that the Free Trade Agreement does is it threatens the capacity of Canadians to pursue an independent foreign policy. The question I would like to ask my colleague is this. Looking at the NDP policy with regards to the arms race and peace in the world, I am wondering if he as an NDP still rejects Canada's view that we should be neutralist in our commitment to NATO. Also would he not agree that we as Canadians should continue our commitment to our NATO friends abroad?

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, in fact as the statement that we adopted a year ago last month lays out, we believe that NATO has outlived its usefulness for peace and that it is now one of the embodiments of a sort of unthinking momentum toward the arms race. Our policy is that in the first year of government, we would withdraw our troops from Europe. We would continue with the political side of NATO until perhaps a second term. The decisions could be made as we continue along, but what was clear and unambiguous in that statement is that we would withdraw our troops at the beginning of an NDP Government.

I think that is an important signal. When we began debating this in public, that is to say when certain journalists affected great surprise at discovering an NDP policy which had existed since 1969, what we found was it generated a great deal of discussion, not only on the left in Canada, but amongst people who are not considered to be on the left, and we find there is a great deal of debate within the United States and Europe about the usefulness of NATO. There are some alliances that do not last forever, and it is fairly clear that NATO will not. Therefore what we propose is that Canada should first of all restrict itself in such things as having nuclear ships visit our ports, testing potentially nuclear missiles and quartering troops in central Europe. Those are now quite unnecessary for the defence of Europe and quite ineffective for the defence of Canada, but they are provocations which continue to justify other countries in building up or maintaining their armaments. At the present time there is the chance of reducing armaments, and this is the kind of action that Canada should be taking.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, if I understood the Member for Spadina correctly, he said that Israel was to be one of the participants or at least one of the window shoppers at this event?

Mr. Heap: An Israeli firm will be an exhibitor.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): An Israeli firm will be an exhibitor? So it is not unreasonable to conclude that there will be official Israeli agents there?

Mr. Heap: Right.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): Perhaps checking out the competition? I was wondering, although this Chamber careers off into realms of morality and ethics, given the Hon. Member's background, if he would care to comment on whether or not there can be any moral justification whatsoever for a sale consequent to this exhibition to an Israeli government that can then use the product purchased to kill Palestinians on the occupied West Bank?

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say two things in response to that. First, I believe Israel is already quite well enough armed and does not need for good purpose or other to buy armaments from Canada. If they are here to exhibit armaments, I would want to know what sort of armaments they are exhibiting.

• (1430)

Mr. McDermid: Go over and look. You are invited.

Mr. Heap: Yes, I intend to go next week. The Minister is afraid that I will not go and look at his arms show. I will be there.

I would like to know what type of arms they are selling. Assuming that they are selling it elsewhere in the world, I would like to know their policy. That brings me to the second point.

When I read last year that Israel was selling 12 war planes to the Cameroons in Africa, I thought that that was pretty extreme. What does Cameroons need with 12 war planes? I understood Israel's need to sell them. However, South Africa is a far bigger customer for Israel. I would really like to know what Israel is selling South Africa and whether it is selling nuclear technology to South Africa for the production of nuclear weapons. If I have the opportunity next week, I would like to ask some questions of the representative of this Canadian-Israeli company.

Mr. Larry Schneider (Regina—Wascana): Mr. Speaker, the matter before us today deals with a bazaar, and the debate attached to it seemingly becomes more bizarre as the afternoon progresses. I would suspect that the next time a CF-18 patrols the skies of Canada for defence purposes that unless we hold a national referendum to disclose publicly the purpose of that aircraft in the air, the aircraft will not be permitted to take off.

Today is an opposition day. The subject the Opposition has chosen to place before us certainly leaves me, as it apparently has left many Members, not the least of whom are those who authored this motion, with a certain lack of interest. When given that opportunity, as the Opposition has today, and when looking at the essence of the motion, one must certainly conclude what a wasted day it is.

We have a national debt problem that consumes 35 cents out of every dollar of revenue received by the Government of Canada. This is an ideal opportunity for the Opposition to place before the House some solutions. What do we hear? Nothing. This is an ideal opportunity for members of the NDP to put before the House some of their plans in relation to women's rights or equity in the workplace. What do we hear? Nothing.

Members of the NDP said that our plan for day care did not go far enough and that it was not comprehensive enough. This is an ideal opportunity for them to provide us with solutions. What do we hear? Nothing. Members of the NDP have stated in the past that perhaps the development of a long-term agricultural policy would be necessary. This is an ideal opportunity to present something to this House. There is no rain, just a lot of hot air. The problem is that members of the NDP have been in opposition so long that there is no air or thought of positiveness or constructive development in their minds.

I am pleased to discuss the issue of ARMX as has been done so eloquently by my fellow Members. ARMX has received much media attention in the past week. I have been hearing that ARMX is a Department of National Defence sponsored event which promotes the use of military violence. There is simply nothing that could be further from the truth. ARMX is not in the least linked to violence. In fact, ARMX does quite the contrary. It is a privately run trade show. I have been associated with many privately run trade shows, and there is nothing unique about this one. It is designed to bring industry and government together in the field of training and simulation technology.

All the nonsense we have heard points to a great need for the record to be set straight. I will endeavour to do that very thing. I would like to provide the House with another history in order that how and why ARMX was created might sink in and to explain the importance of ARMX to Canadian industry.

ARMX or the Armed Forces Training Technology Exhibition which is exactly what it is, is a biannual exhibition of training and simulation technology for the Armed Forces. It began in 1983 and it has been held every two years since. I would like to draw to the attention of my colleagues that, as few as seven years ago, no trade show for the military even existed in Canada. One may or may not like spending money on the military. One may choose to object to equipping the forces we need to help to defend democracy. One may not deny that if we are to have forces at all for peacekeeping as well as to help ensure deterrence, we will need arms. If we need arms, why should we always have to buy them abroad?

The main force behind the first ARMX was the Canadian Land Forces increasing interest in the cost effectiveness of simulators for training. Simulators require no fuel, no ammunition, and less maintenance than tanks, artillery, and other equipment.

Lieutenant–Colonel Stuart Northrup was given the formidable task of organizing the first ARMX. In his view, and I ask Members to bear in mind that he had great experience, a trade show format was the most effective way of putting the available technologies in front of the right people. Having decided on the venue, he now had to convince officials of the Department of National Defence to support and fund the project. It was the Commander of Mobile Command who first agreed to host this ground breaking event.

The army training technology exhibition began in 1983 when it held its first exhibition in St. Hubert, Québec. Its focus was then, and remains today, on training and training simulation technology. Although ARMX initially offered simulator technology for the Army only, some 65 exhibitors from eight countries were present. They helped draw more than 3,000 military and civilian visitors.

The exhibition was created for no other reason than to permit members of the Canadian Forces to make contact with industry and discuss what training technology was forthcoming, and obviously to afford the industry the benefit of the user's view of current requirements. It also gave industry an opportunity to meet government officials at various levels and to inform them of the newest technologies available.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that you have deplored as I have the lack of contact between industry and government, the other two solitudes. I am sure that you will readily agree that anything that helps bridge the gap between them is positive.

In turn, ARMX has provided government with an opportunity to compare all the newest technologies from all the companies in one place. For both industry and government it provided insight into which way the other was moving. Ideas could be exchanged formally, comparisons could be made not only among the companies, but also their countries. Naturally, this led to savings on both sides. As we all know, we can do with some serious savings in this country.

Two years later ARMX '85 was held at CFB Ottawa in the spring of 1985. Because of its success two years earlier, it expanded to include all three branches of the Canadian Forces, Army, Air Force, and Navy. ARMX had by now grown to include 251 exhibitors from 20 countries, who saw it as an opportunity for foreign country corporations to sell to Canada and for Canadian companies to promote export capabilities and their products to the Canadian Government.

When I mention exports, it must be clear to all who sit in the House that we have one of the most stringent policies in the world to restrict the flow of armaments, not only to countries involved or that could soon be involved in hostilities, but to states with objectionable records in the field of human rights. In a news release from the Department of External Affairs dated September 10, 1986 it states:

> The Minister stressed that Canada will not allow the export of military equipment to countries whose governments have a persistent record of serious violations of the human rights of their citizens, unless it can be demonstrated that there is no reasonable risk that the goods might be used against the civilian population: "The new policy with respect to countries with serious human rights problems places the onus of proving 'no reasonable risk' squarely on the exporter".

That has to be underscored because there are those in this country who would have the public believe that we export indiscriminately, or that exporting helmets somehow amounts to arms sales. Unfortunately, some members of the Opposition have been known not to set the record straight when they have had the opportunity to do so.

Obviously, the other countries participating in ARMX '85 saw the benefit of participating in this type of trade show. They saw it as a way of gaining valuable information on Canadian security needs and in making contacts not only with Canadian industry but Canadian government officials.

That was about the time when the Department of National Defence decided that while the need for ARMX was valid, there were good reasons why the Department of National Defence should privatize it. I would like to repeat some of those reasons here today.

First, as the exhibition grew in size and scope, it required more and more DND staff. This did not seem to make the best use of the Department's already scarce resources. It did seem, however, to put to extremely good use the industries' resources. Second, since it had come to an industry led forum, it seemed only proper that industry should become the primary organizer.

Finally, it was apparent by now that if we were to continue to sponsor ARMX, this could be misinterpreted by the public. Apparently, that is so. Certainly, in recent years we have seen how the so-called peace groups, although tiny, have managed to grab the attention of the public simply by making a lot of noise and by clouding the fact that the largest of the genuine peace groups in this country is the Canadian Forces. Ask the United Nations. Ask the Nobel Peace Prize Committee.

The most recent example of this which comes to mind is the very odd and, I must say, perhaps somewhat shameful decision of the Ottawa City Council to deny city owned sites for future ARMXs. Is it not a shame to think that we may be denied this great opportunity to deal informally with industry all because ARMX is misunderstood?

Mind you, if the City of Ottawa feels that ARMX should not be held there, I am sure that my riding could offer an equally, if not better, place for ARMX '91. Perhaps Canadian Forces Base Moose Jaw might be interested. Perhaps the Government should consider moving all military related functions out of Ottawa. Why not? It is apparently asking for that to happen.

At that point in 1985, an agreement was concluded between the Minister of National Defence and Defence Publications Limited, one of a group of companies directed by Baxter Publications in Toronto. This company, one of three that bid for the right to take over the ARMX name and run the exhibition, is well known to us through the publishing of the Defence Quarterly magazine. We should all be made aware of the significant contribution Baxter Publications makes through its Canadian Defence Quarterly magazine.

There are few people with any knowledge of defence who do not read it regularly. I strongly encourage all Members opposite to do so as well. They may not enjoy all the articles, but they will learn a thing or two, thanks to the review's excellent coverage of Canadian defence issues.

In June, 1986, the agreement transferred to Defence Publications Limited the right to use the ARMX name and goodwill and to organize and run an exhibition which was to have as its theme training and training simulation.

Given the importance of this agreement and the recent attention ARMX has received in the media, I want to take this opportunity to read some of the more significant clauses:

> It is agreed by both parties that the Minister of National Defence shall in no way be responsible for the promotion, operation or managing of ARMX.
> It is agreed by both parties that the Minister of National Defence shall have no obligation to provide ARMX with any financial, logistic or personnel support, nor shall the Minister be obligated to provide any physical facilities and/or equipment for the operation of ARMX.
> Defence Publications Limited agrees to assume the entire responsibility for the promotion, operation and management of ARMX and to continue to so operate ARMX in the foreseeable future.

In summary, the agreement purely and simply absolves the Department of National Defence from all responsibility for the operation of the exhibition. I do not make this statement in an apologetic way. It also states absolutely clearly that there is no liability for cost, manpower or material unless such is asked for in writing by Defence Publications Limited and negotiated with the Department.

The first privately managed ARMX was conducted right here in Ottawa in June, 1987, at Lansdowne Park. I am not entirely sure why it did not draw the attention of the city's ever vigilant council at that time, but it certainly met the organizer's aims. Judging by the participation of industry, it has also met the needs of the creators of technology.

In introducing the motion, the mover made reference to "instruments of death in this industry of death". The question which must be asked, to which I can relate from a Saskatchewan perspective, is: Who are some of these manufacturers of instruments of death in this industry of death? The participants from Saskatchewan at ARMX include SBC Case Ltd., a producer of transportation cases and containers. Those are terrible devices. Another is SciTech, scientific analysis. Should we not be allowed to develop scientific analysis in this country?

There is SED Systems, computer high tech systems design, purely a destructive industry.

What about International Road Dynamics, producers of road signs? This is evil. How will we fight a war if we do not know which back lane to turn down?

The Saskatchewan Department of Trade and Investment assists in attracting defence contracts to Saskatchewan, including the attraction of high tech and other related industries. Instruments of death indeed.

I would not want anyone to think that the Department ceased to take any interest in ARMX once it turned it over to the private sector. The Department does not manage the operation of ARMX, but it does assist Baxter Publications in some limited ways. For example, it encourages military personnel to attend. It will maintain a booth, as the Minister referred to earlier, and I understand that the booth is provided free. Among other things, businessmen can find out how to bid for government contracts.

It also will assist in validating seminar subjects and by providing the keynote seminar address each day.

The Department of National Defence is more convinced now than it ever has been that there is a significant purpose to be served by ARMX in assisting the Canadian Forces to acquire the most appropriate, affordable technology required to enhance future training efficiency and increase the cost effectiveness of training. For a Department that has just contributed $2.74 billion to deficit reduction in the coming five years, anything that can increase cost effectiveness is nothing short of a Godsend. I think it is to the credit of the Department of National Defence that years before these cuts, it was already sponsoring ways, such as ARMX, of ensuring that each taxpayer's dollar was producing the most effective results possible.

How does ARMX contribute to cost effectiveness? It does so by offering to display modern military equipment and training technology devices; by providing Canadian and international industries with an opportunity to discuss equipment and training requirements in an informal environment; and by fostering industry to industry relationships between Canadian and international sources of training devices and equipment, thus providing a forum for potential investment and co-operation with Canadian industry.

Most important, I want to stress that enhancing future training efficiency through trade shows like it, ARMX contributes to developing our defence industrial base. I need not tell you, Mr. Speaker, nor Members of the House, how vital the defence industrial base is to Canada and indeed all western democracies and the world as a whole. What would we do in the face of aggression without an industrial capacity responsive to operational military requirements?

This is no longer 1939 or 1940. In 1989, as the military put it, if war breaks out you go as you are. There is no time to create an industry. More specifically industrial preparedness provides us with an assured source of essential defence materiel, services and technical capability. It also provides a strategic source of essential defence materiel to meet our defence needs under peacetime, crisis and mobilization conditions.

I could go on and on, but I feel I must now conclude. If I may, I want to emphasize and reiterate, because it will never be said often enough, that without ARMX we would not have this very unique opportunity to have industry and government meet informally to discuss one of the most important priorities any country has. That is to say, to become aware of the newest technologies known to man in our quest to maintain not only Canadian sovereignty but peace and security.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for his presentation this afternoon. It was very thoughtful and informative.

I have been listening with great interest both to the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party. It is my opinion that neither Party has its act together and cannot decide whether or not they are in favour of this particular show. We heard from the Member for Papineau—St. Michel (Mr. Ouellet) and the Member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Milliken). One was opposed to it and the other supported it if we showed him the list of exhibitors and invitees.

The New Democratic Party is using this motion to talk about its philosophy as far as defence is concerned, which is convoluted at the best of times.

My colleague, the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mrs. Collins), has provided me with a brochure on an air show in Abbotsford, British Columbia. This is a show demonstrating aeroplanes of all makes from around the world, along with associated equipment.

Does the Hon. Member think that this air show in Abbotsford would be in violation of the policy of the New Democratic Party as it was presented to the House today in connection with the ARMX show?

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, I thank the my colleague for the opportunity to speak again. This is a subject in which I have an interest, which I think can be described as a realistic interest.

• (1450)

As I sat in the House this afternoon I sensed a lot of "nimbism", I think, that is to say: "not in my backyard, I think. We are not really 100 per cent sure of what is going on but at the risk of making a mistake let us condemn ARMX for something that it may be". As a result of that we seem to have this debate taking place when we could have so many more productive things before us.

With direct reference to the air show at Abbotsford, I cannot help but think that if members of the NDP were to sanction the event they would be doing nothing short of developing hypocrisy in the opinion of the individual who would in fact express that point of view. An air show, while it is intended to show the defence mechanisms our country has available to us, at the same time shows equipment that is used for attack purposes. It is extremely hard to develop a piece of equipment that can offset the impulse of an aggressor without at the same time providing some degree of attack in the same breath. I do not know how anyone for a minute could sanction the public display and the costs associated with it for that matter of defence and military equipment that we have which on the one hand provides us with defence while, on the other, offers us with a form of offence.

For anyone to say that the NDP who are promoters of peace at the same time can promote the Abbotsford air show and object to ARMX which features an ideal opportunity for the display of modern high-tech is biting his tongue because he does not mean everything that he says.

Mr. Volpe: Mr. Speaker, I am going to share the same type of confusion that Members opposite are expressing with respect to ARMX. My confusion comes from the responses we have been receiving from the Government. I must accept, as my Party has always accepted, that the Government cannot ignore its defence responsibilities. There is no question that we do have responsibilities to safeguard our borders and our population and to protect our interests world-wide.

Where we do have a problem is in the discussion that has developed over the course of the day on ideology. We have a problem because the Government has indicated through its Ministers over the course of the debate that it is encouraging, participating, contributing, and involving itself in all manner of fashion in the promotion of ARMX. We have seen contradictions as stated by Ministers and Members on the government side about, first, a list of invited guests, and then about the confidentiality of such a list. I dare say there has been contradiction with respect to the type of promotions the Government must engage in, in order to ensure the success of what the Minister of State for Privatization (Mr. McDermid) referred to as a business enterprise, a commercial venture that would be of benefit to Canada economically.

There is nothing wrong with any venture that will assist the Canadian economy. What we would propose, though, is that the same type of enthusiastic vigour be addressed to conflict resolution on ideological grounds which is precisely the cause for a great deal of conflicts world-wide.

I would like to propose a question to my hon. friend. Perhaps he can seek the assistance of the Minister of State for Privatization to respond to it. The entire premise of the Minister is that this particular bazaar or bizarre, or whatever it is going to be, is to promote the commerce and well-being of the Canadian economy. I thought it might be appropriate for us to know which Canadian companies would be receiving assistance. I jotted down a few notes by way of question. I will go slowly for the Hon. Member.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Could I ask the Hon. Member to conclude as we are running short of time?

Mr. Volpe: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief.

Which Canadian companies are presently receiving Defence Industry Productivity Program payments? Are there any other forms of subsidies or support payments provided in connection with the Defence Industry Productivity Program? Are there any specific tax benefits provided to companies which participate in arms production contracts that are participating in ARMX?

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member read the question slowly so that I could understand it. What he did was he simply wasted the amount of time that other Members have to make statements and ask questions.

The Hon. Member knows full well that there is a parliamentary process to get a specific answer to the specific questions he has asked. If he simply wants a flippant, off the cuff answer, then that is all he will get in this forum. If he truly feels that he has a question that bears some merit, then let him put it through the parliamentary system and ask for the answer.

Mr. Funk: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleague from Regina—Wascana, a fellow Saskatchewan colleague, whether or not he shares at least the general concern that was not brought to the attention of North Americans first by any raving socialist but by Dwight Eisenhower when he warned against the emergence of the military industrial complex.

We see the dangers that have been pointed out regarding the militarization of the world economy, a trillion dollars a year, 27 days of which expenditure would feed, clothe and house every person on earth who now does not have access to those types of services. The Hon. Member mentioned some Saskatchewan companies in his remarks. It seems ironic that at the same time we are cutting back regional development programs that would assist those companies to get into domestic types of production and that in fact we are encouraging them to get into military types of production.

Does the Hon. Member have a line in his mind with regard to when an economy has gone too far done the road of militarization? Does he not see any kind of danger like that existing at all?

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, looking at the clock I will try to hurry along as quickly as I can.

Certainly, it would be silly for anyone, any good Canadian, any freedom loving Canadian, to make the assumption that peace can simply either on the one hand be obtained by sticking one's head in the sand or, on the other, by flogging millions, billions and trillions of dollars. There is a path, a logical progression that seems to be on its way at the present time. I do not think that we can be blinded by the fact and the reality that this currently exists.

I would like to make a statement with respect to a comment made by the Hon. Member for Trinity—Spadina which is false. He says that there is military equipment that has gone to Chile and therefore we have allowed the export of weapons to be used where a military population represses the civilian population. This is false. Permits have been approved for Chile, but they are related to military equipment such as bomb disposal suits or communications equipment. I say that so it will not be left on the record unchallenged.

There was a term used that we should all dream for a better world. Indeed, I am sure when we go to bed at night we wish to dream for a better world. However, dreaming will not get that for us. We need only ask the Silver Cross Mothers on Armistice Day the price that they have paid for peace. Ask those who have fought in the wars what price they have paid for peace. It did not consist of dreaming. One cannot gain peace by dreaming. One gains peace by logical intervention. We gain peace by some show of defence and perhaps some position of sovereignty as related to one's abilities to equip oneself in such a way that one cannot be taken for granted.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, as usual, I know that I will not have much time left to speak. Since I have time only for a few remarks, I would like to conclude with the following sentence which struck me and reminded me of this whole debate.

[English]

I wish to quote the words of someone who said: "Every gun that is made, every warship launched, every rocket fired, signifies in a final sense a theft from those who hunger and are not fed, from those who are cold and not clothed". So said General Dwight Eisenhower, President of the United States. If one does not dream of peace then it will never be achieved.

I believe that peace will be achieved if we really work within the two great institutions that we have. We must believe in disarmament. To achieve disarmament we must keep our unity in NATO. We must be an extremely activist country within NATO. If we are not, we will never achieve true disarmament. We must not get out of NATO. That is one of the comments that was made earlier. If we left NATO, if we tell it to go its own way and we in Canada have our own personal policy on disarmament, then it cannot function.

As a last comment, I think that what is important is to work toward global disarmament within the institution that we have at our disposal.

Second, we must make sure that we start thinking of how to restructure the economies of the western world watching, of course, the economies of the eastern countries. We must restructure what has been for so many years a military type of structure in order to create jobs which will lead to a new restructuring of the economy of the countries of the world. That is a debate which could go on for quite a long time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PROPOSED ADDRESS BY PRESIDENT OF ISRAEL—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the three Parties regarding the visit of the President of Israel. I have a motion to put to the House for its consent. It reads:

That notwithstanding any Standing Order of this House, on Tuesday, June 27, 1989, the House shall meet at 2 o'clock p.m. in order that at 11 o'clock a.m. President Chaim Herzog of Israel may address both Houses of Parliament in the Commons Chamber;

That when the House meets at 2 o'clock p.m., proceedings will be in accordance with the provisions of the Standing Orders with the exception that Routine Proceedings will follow Question Period; and in addition any special order relating to the proceedings for the day will also be in effect; and

That the address of the President of Israel and customary related remarks by the Prime Minister and Speakers of both Houses be printed as an appendix to the House of Commons Debates of that day and form part of the records of this House, and shall be televised according to House guidelines.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I am seeking clarification with respect to something the Parliamentary Secretary said. He stated: "in addition any special order relating to the proceedings for that day will also be in effect".

Is that an indication that some special order is being planned at this point in time, or is it just keeping the options open in case something arises in the interval?

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, that is to keep the options open and, of course, it relates to the last few days of the month of June.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the motion relates to consultations held between the Parties. We are prepared both to give leave to the presentation of the motion and to its acceptance.

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member for Kamloops satisfied at the moment?

Mr. Riis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, more than satisfied and certainly prepared to give support to this motion.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

VIA RAIL SERVICES

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Madam Speaker, I have the pleasure to present a petition signed by 279 constituents of Kingston and the Islands who protest the closure of VIA Rail as contemplated in the cuts announced by the Government in the recent Budget.

The petitioners indicate that they believe the railroad was established as a national system in the last century and has played an integral part in the growth of Canada, that the loss of jobs will be a significant loss for the country. Many communities rely on rail service as their primary means of transportation.

They call upon Parliament to urge the Government not to cancel in whole or in part VIA Rail passenger service across Canada.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Madam Speaker, I too have the honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36 regarding the Government's intention to close down all or part of VIA Rail.

The petitioners from western Canada point out the very critical role that VIA plays in the development of the economy of western Canada, particularly the development of the tourist sector there.

They are asking Parliament to maintain, improve, and modernize VIA Rail service as opposed to cutting it back and give a whole set of reasons as to why it would be in the best interest of the country.

ARMX '89 ARMS BAZAAR

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Madam Speaker, I also have another petition on a different topic. Again it is certified correct pursuant to Standing Order 36.

It points out the Government's involvement in ARMX '89, the arms bazaar currently being held in the nation's capital. It illustrates the Government's support for the growing militarization of our Canadian economy.

The petitioners also point out that the potential customers at this exhibit, those who have received special invitations, include countries which have habitually violated the human rights of their citizens. They point out that military spending of course diverts material and human resources from more important economic activities and social programs.

They call upon Parliament to cease all government involvement in the expansion of the international market for military and policing equipment, particularly the Government's support of ARMX '89.

VIA RAIL SERVICES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, I have two petitions to present from people in my riding. The first quotes the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada which said: "The federal Government has the responsibility to ensure that rail passenger services in Canada be retained, modernized, and expanded as an important part of our national transportation system".

The petitioners point out that the Government has failed to live up to its original pledge to support VIA Rail. They call on the Government to abandon its plans to cut back VIA's budget and to provide the necessary resources to allow VIA to operate as a modern, effective transportation company rather than as a museum.

MARKETING OF OATS AND BARLEY

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, my second petition calls upon the Government not to sign the Order in Council which would remove oats from the marketing jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board, and to place oats and barley under the Wheat Board Act in such a way that in future farm organizations and the Parliament of Canada must be consulted before changes are made to the marketing of these products.

UNREST IN GUATEMALA

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Madam Speaker, it is my honour and duty in accordance with Standing Order 36 to present several petitions which have been duly certified by the Clerk.

The first is a petition from a number of residents of Newfoundland who point out that in Guatemala bombing, torture, disappearances, and murders of the civilian population are increasing.

They call upon Parliament to direct the Government to stop all government to government aid to Guatemala and not to renew it until there is a genuine end to the war between the Government of Guatemala and its own citizens.

IMMIGRATION—REFUGEE BACKLOG

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Madam Speaker, I have another petition from about 300 persons mainly in the City of Toronto who are concerned with the uncertainty about the Government's programs for dealing with the refugee backlog that came about in the last few years.

They point out that there will be a great many of them who may be denied the opportunity to stay in Canada through inadequate hearings of the merits either of their refugee case or of their plea for humanitarian consideration.

They ask the House to ensure that the Minister of Employment and Immigration will ensure that those who have notified Canada Immigration of their intention to make a claim will all be considered eligible for immediate employment authorizations and a case by case review of their claims.

The review should include humanitarian and compassionate grounds traditionally used by Canada Immigration, including the presence in Canada of relatives, the successful establishment of refugee claimants in Canada, and special consideration being given to those coming from war zones, oppressive Governments and natural disasters.

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS ACT—AMENDMENT TO PROHIBIT SEXUAL DISCRIMINATION

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Madam Speaker, I also have about 70 names on a petition from people mainly in Metro Toronto who remind the Government that it is now four years since the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs prepared a report on equality rights, which recommended that the Canadian Human Rights Act be amended to prohibit discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation in all areas of federal jurisdiction.

Three years ago the Government promised to take whatever measures were necessary to ensure that this would be done. It has not been done.

Therefore, they pray that Parliament will ensure that the Government and Parliament act to bring such an amendment in as specified above with all due haste and speed.

HYDROCARBON EXPLORATION ACTIVITIES

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Finally, Madam Speaker, I have a petition from a number of people who are concerned about environmental hazards on the coast of British Columbia. They point out that in 1988 when the South Moresby Park agreement was signed the federal Government committed itself to expending $20 million or more to explore for minerals and hydrocarbons within what it was calling a national park.

Therefore, they call upon Parliament to recognize that there should not be any more hydrocarbons exploration activities in the coastal waters. They do not want the Government to pay for any such activities from this date on.

U.S. NUCLEAR POWERED VESSELS

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to submit a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36 with in excess of 1,400 signatures collected at the annual peace walk in Victoria on April 22.

The substance of the petition is the concern of the petitioners of the great danger of accidents when nuclear armed or powered ships are in Canadian ports. It was asking prior to the Budget that the Canadian House of Commons not purchase nuclear powered submarines for Canada.

Now that this request has been approved and there is not going to be nuclear powered submarines for Canada, I would just like to point out that there are over 1,400 signatures on this petition, which demonstrates the degree of concern in the lower island of the regular visits of United States navy vessels that are nuclear armed and nuclear powered.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Madam Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 2, 3, 50 and 51.

PBC STORAGE SITES

Question No. 2—Mr. Milliken:

1. What is the (a) number of PCB storage sites in the constituency of Kingston and the Islands (b) frequency with which these sites are checked to ensure they comply with health and safety guidelines?

2. Have any of these sites failed to pass such inspections and, if so (a) which sites (b) on what dates (i) did they fail (ii) will they be tested?

3. Are the PCBs in Kingston and the Islands being transferred for destruction and, if so, (a) to what location (b) by what means?

4. Is the organic chemicals section of the National Research Council receiving funding to develop its "Chemical Transformation Process" and if so (a) in what amount (b) at what time will this process be ready for wide-scale use in the field?

Order Paper Questions

Mr. Albert Cooper (Secretary to Government House Leader): I am informed by the Department of the Environment and the National Research Council as follows:

1. (a) There are 15 sites (2 federal, 13 private).

(b) The owner of each site is responsible for a monthly inspection of its premises. Environment Canada inspects all federal sites at least once a year. The Ontario Ministry of Environment inspects all non-federal sites at least once a year.

2. (a) Federal Penitentiary (federal), Dibblee Construction (private).

b) (i) Environment Canada inspected the Federal Penitentiary on March 30, 1989. A warning letter was sent advising them to take corrective action with respect to the following:

Some containers were not on pallets; the emergency response kit was not available; and some containers were in an unacceptable condition.

The Ontario Ministry of Environment inspected Dibblee Construction on October 30, 1988. The material was being stored in a wooden building and the company was asked to provide another suitable storage building.

(ii) Environment Canada will re-inspect the Federal Penitentiary in May, 1989. The Ontario Ministry of Environment will re-inspect Dibblee Construction in May, 1989.

3. There are currently no plans to transfer PCBs stored in Kingston and the Islands for destruction.

4. (a) This process was developed using the budget established for the Organic Chemicals Section of NRC's Division of Chemistry further to NRC'S annual parliamentary appropriations.

(b) Negotiations continue between NRC and the industrial partner chosen to develop this process. Once these negotiations are complete it will be possible to provide an estimate for wide scale us of the process.

1988-89 DROUGHT PAYMENT

Question No. 3—Mr. Althouse:

Were the provinces of (a) Alberta (b) Saskatchewan (c) Manitoba (d) Ontario asked to contribute funds toward the $850 million crop component of the 1988-89 drought payment and, if so, in each case (i) was a contribution made (ii) in what amount?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Yes, the provinces were asked to contribute funds toward the 1988-89 drought payment. Negotiations are continuing, but no contributions have as yet been finalized.

TAX ON LONG DISTANCE TELEPHONE CALLS

Question No. 50—Mr. Gardiner:

Since January 1, 1989, has the government collected money from the tax on long distance telephone calls and, if so, for each province, what amount?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Yes. The Excise Tax Act imposes a telecommunication service tax on long distance telephone calls and on instruments, devices, equipment or apparatus provided by the telephone companies. When filing monthly tax returns, the companies do not segregate the amount of tax applicable to long distance calls. Accordingly the amount of the tax remitted on these calls is not available.

FOREST RESOURCE DEVELOPMENT AGREEMENT

Question No. 51—Mr. Gardiner:

Has the government taken steps to ensure that the movement of funds between sub-programs in its Direct Delivery component of the Canada -British Columbia Forest Resource Development Agreement receives ministerial approval and, if so, what are they?

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Forestry)): Under the Canada-British Columbia Forest Resource Development Agreement (FRDA), the two governments established three management committees based on the delivery stream (cost-shared, federal direct, provincial direct) which are responsible to the provincial Minister of Forestry and the federal Minister of State (Forestry) for implementation of the Agreement.

The re-allocation of funds between programs requires ministerial approval and an amendment to the legal agreement. However, the legal agreement further stipulates that each of the three Management Committees may move funds from one sub-program to another, but only within the same program. In the present case, the management Committee for the Agreement has the authority to move funds between sub-programs in the direct delivery component and does not require ministerial approval. As this Management Committee has the authority to make these adjustments as required, ministerial approval has not been necessary.

The intent of this provision is to provide the Management Committees with sufficient flexibility to respond to operational constraints as well as opportunities. This flexibility in management helps to ensure the most efficient use of government funds, while at the same time guaranteeing that Ministers retain absolute control.

STARRED QUESTIONS

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Madam Speaker, would you be so kind as to call starred questions nos. 6, 23 and 26?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Cooper: Madam Speaker, I have the answers to these questions, but rather than reading them into the record because of their length maybe we can have them printed as though they were read.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the suggestion of the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary. Is the House in agreement?

Mr. Gauthier: Just on a question of interest, Madam Speaker. The answers to the questions seem to be extensive. Is the Parliamentary Secretary proposing that these be printed as read in today's Hansard? If he is doing that, then I agree.

Mr. Cooper: Yes, that is the case, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Does the House agree?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

REROUTING OF CNR ORE CARS

*Question No. 6—Mr. St-Julien:

On November 25, 1988, the day landslides occurred on the St-Maurice and La Tuque subdivisions, were ore-carrying cars or freight cars from the Chapais and Faribault subdivision routed by the Canadian National Railway Company via Ontario Northland, to the towns of Rouyn-Noranda, Val-d'Or, Senneterre, Barraute, Lebel-sur-Quévillon and Matagami and if so, what was the (a) distance covered by these trains (b) number of trains routed to Abitibi-Témiscamingue and La Tuque (c) number of cars in these trains carrying dangerous materials (d) number of days necessary to effect such transportation?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): The Canadian National Railway Company advises as follows:

On November 25, 1988, the day of the landslide, the St-Maurice and La Tuque subdivisions were impassable. CN was unable to move any cars of ore and/or other goods originating on the Chapais Subdivision via the ONR to Rouyn-Noranda, Val d'Or, Senneterre, Barraute, Lebel-sur-Quévillon and Matagami.

SUBSIDIZATION OF PASSENGER TRAVEL

*Question No. 23—Mr. Angus:

For each year since 1979, has the government an estimate of its subsidization of passenger travel by (a) air (b) rail (c) road and if so, what is the (i) total amount of subsidy (ii) subsidy per passenger-kilometer travelled?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Transport Canada advises as follows:

(a) for air transportation, net expenditures and net expenditures per passenger-kilometre are as depicted in Appendix I;

(b) for VIA Rail, subsidies and subsidies per passenger-kilometre are as depicted in Appendix II; and

(c) an estimate of the subsidization of passenger travel by road is not readily available because all three levels of government are involved both in the financing of roads and the collection of revenues from users. Furthermore, no definitive methodology exists for the allocation of costs between automobiles, buses and trucks.

COST OF ALL TAX DEDUCTIONS

*Question No. 26—Mr. Butland:

1. For (a) 1984 (b) 1985 (c) 1986 (d) 1987 (e) 1988, has the government tabulated the annual net federal revenue cost for all tax deductions available to corporate tax filers in each Canadian province and, if so, what is it?

2. For (a) 1984 (b) 1985 (c) 1986 (d) 1987 (e) 1988, has the goverment tabulated the annual net federal revenue cost for the tax deduction of capital cost allowances by corporate tax filers and, if so, what is it for the average corporate tax filer employing (i) fewer than 10 individuals (ii) between 10 and 20 individuals (iii) between 20 and 40 individuals (iv) between 40 and 60 individuals (v) between 60 and 100 individuals (vi) between 100 and 300 individuals (vii) over 300 individuals?

3. For (a) 1984 (b) 1985 (c) 1986 (d) 1987 (e) 1988, has the goverment tabulated the annual net federal revenue cost for investment tax credits claimed by corporated tax filers and, if so, what is it for the average corporate tax filer employing (i) fewer than 10 individuals (ii) between 10 and 20 individuals (iii) between 20 and 40 individuals (iv) between 40 and 60 individuals (v) between 60 and 100 individuals (vi) between 100 and 300 individuals (vii) over 300 individuals?

4. For (a) 1984 (b) 1985 (c) 1986 (d) 1987 (e) 1988, has the goverment tabulated the annual net federal revenue cost for the tax deduction of capital cost allowances by corporate tax filers and, if so, what is it for the average corporate tax filer employing (i) fewer than 10 individuals (ii) between 10 and 20 individuals (iii) between 20 and 40 individuals (iv) between 40 and 60 individuals (v) between 60 and 100 individuals (vi) between 100 and 300 individuals (vii) over 300 individuals?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): 1. (a) (b) (c) (d) (e) No. Only taxable income is allocated among provinces. Particular items of business expenses or tax deductions are not identified by province.

2. and 4. The annual amount of capital cost allowance (CCA) claimed by corporate tax filers is available for 1984 and 1985. The values can be broken down on the basis of whether the company is eligible for the small business deduction rather than by the number of employees of the corporation. In 1984, those firms eligible for the small business deduction claimed $5.3B in CCA and, in 1985, $7.9B. Large corporations claimed $16.7B in 1984 and $15.0B in 1985. The net federal revenue cost depends upon the statutory tax rate of the firm and whether it is in a fully taxable position.

3. The most recent complete figures available for the amount of investment tax credit (ITC) claimed are for 1984 and 1985. The values are available broken down as to whether the corporation was eligible for the small business deduction rather than by the number of employees. The amount of ITC claimed by businesses eligible for the small business deduction (SBD) in 1984 was $162 million and in 1985, $282 million. For large corporations, $1,371 million was claimed in 1984 and $1,231 million in 1985. The net federal revenue cost would be reduced to the extent that the ITC claimed reduces amounts that are deductible as capital cost allowance in determining taxable income.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 81—ALLEGED IMPACT OF GOVERNMENT AGRICULTURAL POLICIES

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex) moved:

That this House condemns the Government for its destructive policies affecting Canadian farmers, that have particularly devastating impact on the dairy, grain, horticulture and tobacco sectors, that undermine supply management agencies such as the Canadian Wheat Board and marketing boards at both the federal and provincial levels, and that break government promises relating to 1988 drought payments; and

That this House calls upon the Government to fulfil immediately its promises with regard to drought payments for the 1988–89 crop year, to implement a contingency plan for the current crop year, in view of indications of another drought in Western Canada, and to reverse its policies that are destroying the Canadian supply management system.

He said: Madam Speaker, I rise today in the House to attempt to address the Government's record in agriculture and the uncertainty resulting from that record, an uncertainty which the Government should address immediately.

This record shows a catering to big agri-business, a catering to foreign interests, and a real failure to address many of the concerns facing the people they should be serving. These people are tilling the land as we speak in this House of Commons, the Canadian farmers who are involved in their spring planting at this point.

The primary producers are the first but not the least important link in the food chain. It is sad that in a world where millions of people are starving farmers are being forced off their land because they do not make enough return to pay their bills.

As I examine the agricultural record of the Government, I notice that there appears to have been a shift away from the proven and traditional marketing systems, systems that may have been of a different ideology than that of the Government. However, that shift is a shift in priority. No longer does the Government take the farmer as its number one priority.

The Government is wearing horse blinders, running wild, oblivious to those whose policies are being trampled and those whose concerns it is passing.

By examining sector by sector today, by myself and my esteemed colleagues, this side of the House will make it clear to the people of Canada what too many farmers already know, that agricultural concerns are being sacrificed for the FTA.

Last summer farmers across Canada were hit hard by a severe drought. Now they are being hard hit by the Tory Government.

Farmers were promised by none other than the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds that they would be compensated for their losses at a rate of $40 to $45 an acre of wheat in Western Canada and $50 to $57 per acre of corn and beans in the East for a total pay-out of roughly $850 million. Further, the Minister promised that this $850 million was simply an estimate and not a ceiling.

When we have seen and heard about all of the hardships that Canadian farmers have experienced these last few years, we would think that it would be a top priority of any Government to lessen the blow. As Canadians we pride ourselves in taking care of our farmers through the use of such mechanisms as marketing boards, compensation programs, and stabilization.

However, where is the compassion of the Government? Where are its priorities? They are certainly not with the Canadian farmers.

I have good reason for questioning the sincerity of the Government and its commitment to farmers. Just look at the Estimates tabled by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) for drought relief, Madam Speaker. They do not read $850 million. They read approximately $378 million plus another $30 million in Governor General warrants.

What has happened since the election? Does this Government believe it was given a mandate to change the rules of the game so that immediately after an election it could force the provinces to come up with an extra $425 million to pay for a federal election promise? I am not sure how the provinces could be expected to pay for an election promise of any kind. What do I tell the farmers in my riding and across Canada who are planting their crops, who have their bills to pay and were counting on drought compensation cheques from the Government?

I just hope the Government is not delaying its payments scheduled for July. The farmers were promised that money. They have bills to pay and their need is desperate.

The Minister set a deadline of 13 days from the announcement for returning applications for assistance under the drought relief program. What if an appropriate number of those producers are still attempting to receive applications? What are they going to do? This action, however, fails to surprise me any more than the continuing delays in the program. I cannot overemphasize the gravity of the situation. Farmers hit hard by drought do not need this kind of delay treatment by government. They need the help they were promised, and they need it now.

I would like now to address the concerns of the wheat producers of Canada. We know from the United States trade representative's report to Congress that it is the intent of the U.S. Government to eliminate the licensing practices of the Canadian Wheat Board. It is not hard to surmise that Canada's Wheat Board marketing will be eliminated to appease the U.S.

Last Thursday I read that the United States Department of Agriculture will approve further subsidies on 1.5 million tonnes of wheat destined for the Soviet Union. These subsidies amount to about 28 cents per bushel. This will subsidize the United States grain exports to the tune of almost $13 million U.S. For the benefit of those Members across the floor, that is almost $15 million Canadian. The Americans are continuing on with their subsidies through the Export Enhancement Program.

In view of the fact the U.S. President has reauthorized the Export Enhancement Program, I ask that the Government tell us when the producers in this country will get the much heralded level playing field.

An Hon. Member: Never!

Mr. Ferguson: According to the Ontario Wheat Producer Marketing Board if a foreign importer buys United States wheat the final price is reduced by $30 a tonne. At the world price of $180 per tonne, the Ontario farmer must offer his wheat for sale at $150 per tonne in order to attempt to sell to that buyer on equal grounds. That is not taking into account the loss due to the lower value of our dollar.

In addition to this reduction of $30 per tonne, a farmer in St. Clair County, Michigan, can get up to three tonnes of ammonium nitrate fertilizer free if he has 40 acres of wheat. That is 150 pounds per acre free from his local supplier. Of course the United States says that this is not a producer subsidy, but it is an indirect subsidy to the producer and we as Canadians must compete against it. Yet, the Government has unilaterally disarmed our wheat producers and has thrown them to the vagaries of the market–place and the laws of the jungle.

There is another problem facing the wheat industry that to date the Government has refused to address, namely, the policy of end user certificates. End user certificates will be required when the level of subsidy between each country reaches a level that will permit the free flow of grains across the border. The difficulty of which I am confident the Government is aware is that end users certificates will not require the grade of wheat to be identified. This allows for the import of low grade wheat at lower prices than that of Canadian wheat. This is due to the quality of the control disparities which breed unfair competition, and believe me a few truckloads of low quality, ungraded wheat can destroy a stable price structure such as we have in Canada.

I would like to leave Canadian wheat for the moment and turn to oats. Again, we find the Government's record to be questionable. This past Wednesday the Canadian Wheat Board admitted what Members on this side of the House contended all along, that the lower initial prices for wheat are due to the Free Trade Agreement and the Government's fear of being placed on the U.S. trade representative's Super 310 list, about which I will say more later.

Last in this area we have the Government's decision to remove oats from the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board arbitrarily. This action broke the Government's own Citizen Code of Regulatory Fairness. This code was established by the Members opposite with much fanfare in March 1986, and the Government claims that it consulted with the producers. The polls show that 63 per cent of the producers were against the removal and 75 per cent were upset at not being consulted. Given the substantial list of pools and others who have voted to condemn the action, I wonder how the Government managed to come up with a consultation process that was selective enough to get the response it wanted. Perhaps it was the same source that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) used to determine that VIA Rail ridership was only 20 per cent.

While only about 1 per cent of oats are handled by the Canadian Wheat Board, this is the thin edge of the wedge. I should clarify that. Only 1 per cent of the volume handled by the Canadian Wheat Board is made up of oats. Because the level of subsidies on oats will be equal between Canada and the United States this year, the Minister removed oats from the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board as called for under the Free Trade Agreement. Forecasts are that wheat and barley subsidies will be equal in about a year. Will they also be removed from the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board when that time comes?

I ask the Government to tell Canadian farmers just what will be the role of the Canadian Wheat Board and the Ontario Wheat Board when free trade in wheat takes effect next year. A major end–user of grains told me less than a month ago that the Canadian Wheat Board will be out of business within two years. That is shocking. It is unacceptable to the farmers of Canada.

Another agricultural sector that was hard hit just a few weeks ago was the pork producers. During last fall's election campaign, Canadians were told time and time again about how the Canada–U.S. Free Trade Agreement was supposed to guarantee access to the United States market. We on this side of the House argued that this access has not been guaranteed and that the United States can still hurt us with countervailing duties whenever and however it sees fit, because its trade remedy laws are still intact and Canadians are not exempted.

Listen to some of the words of a Conservative advertisement which appeared last fall: "The Free Trade Agreement guarantees that Canadian farmers will have an open U.S. market for beef and pork". Another candidate from southwestern Ontario said: "the Free Trade Agreement is making sure that we are able to trade in the United States and not have to worry about countervailing of products that are moving right now". Canadian farmers would not have to worry about countervail. I am afraid those are famous last words because on May 3, 1989, a headline in The Globe and Mail stated that the United States attacks Canadian subsidies and ups the ante for imported pork. On May 4, 1989, another headline stated that pork duty troubles Canadian farmers.

Why are Canadian farmers troubled? I thought the Government, clutching to its Canada–U.S. Free Trade Agreement, was supposed to eradicate these kinds of worries for farmers. The facts lead us to believe that this is not the case. Not one week after the Free Trade Agreement was put into effect, the U.S. pork industry filed a petition maintaining that according to the United States, Canadian pork producers benefit from more than 20 potential subsidy programs, including market price guarantees and drought payments.

Subsequently, a duty of 7.7 cents per kilogram was slapped on Canadian pork exports. I realize that this money is placed in bond pending a final decision, but the fact is producers' prices dropped immediately this announcement was made. This is money out of the pockets of pork producers.

A final decision will be made by the United States Commerce Department on July 17 as to whether or not the 7.7 cents per kilogram duty on Canadian pork will be maintained. I urge the Government to defend the interests of Canadian pork producers and to refuse to allow the U.S. Government to call into question some of the most essential and vital aspects of agriculture in Canada today.

The Government has been slashing programs left and right, mostly to the right, and giving in to the United States Government to such an extent that pork producers are not only getting fried by the Government but are getting burned.

Of course, we have to look at what is happening to the Canadian dairy industry. The recent response by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski) to the GATT-Dunkel Agreement has confirmed what we on this side of the House have suspected ever since we first read the Free Trade Agreement. The Members on this side know what it says. We realize that the Government does not recognize the simple fact that once the cows are out, it is too late to close the barn door, that one should always negotiate from a position of strength and that one does not throw the baby out with the bathwater.

First, the intent of the interim GATT agreement that will go down in infamy as the Dunkel Agreement was to limit and decrease the incentives that subsidies create that result in over-production. At the same time, the Government continues to claim to stand by and to be defending producer-controlled marketing under GATT Article XI. What then was the Government's response to Dunkel? It was to place a cap on the very mechanism that the Government announced last January as the saviour of the industrial milk industry.

As anyone who can see could tell us, it is as plain as day that support prices on Canadian products have no impact on exports and certainly no effect on the intent of Dunkel. Indeed, the dairy producers pay for the disposal of over-production themselves. These support prices are totally permissible under GATT Article XI. Clearly, the message is that either the Government does not know how to negotiate and does not understand Article XI of GATT, or does not care about producer-controlled marketing.

If milk prices rise, this program will bring about the type of pricing that is the goal of the Government's Advisory Council on Adjustment. Second, the Government is currently under fire at GATT for including ice cream and yoghurt on the import control list. The United States Government is trying to argue that ice cream and yoghurt are not products like milk and that it is not necessary to have border controls in order to support a producer-managed marketing system. I understand that we have only a 50-50 chance of winning, but if we do not win this case, the precedent will be set and it will open a floodgate for other products and other commodities.

Both you and I, Madam Speaker, can clearly see that ice cream is like yoghurt and like milk. The only logic that can support this decision is the same logic the Government used to argue during the election campaign that chicken parts are not chicken. I have a copy of a section of the Free Trade Agreement that I would like to read. It deals with how chicken cannot be chicken. I would like to read it, because if I do not, I do not believe that the Canadian public would believe it. Annex 706 talks about market access for poultry and reads:

> Without limiting the generality of subparagraph 1(a), chicken and chicken products does not include chicken cordon bleu, breaded breast of chicken cordon bleu, chicken Kiev, breaded breast of chicken Kiev, boneless Rock Cornish with rice, stuffed Rock Cornish, boneless chicken with apples and almonds, chicken Romanoff Regell, chicken Neptune breast, boneless chicken Panache, chicken TV dinners, old roosters, and "spent fowl" commonly called "stewing hen".

It goes on to list processed turkey which is not considered to be turkey. How in the world can we believe the logic of the Government when it opens up the borders to such large volumes of products that can take advantage of this clause in the years ahead?

I call on the Government to demand that GATT reject this logic out of hand. More important is the fact that the Government has not acted quickly and decisively to challenge the second United States contention. If the Government allows the United States to enforce the belief that import controls are an unnecessary part of a producer-controlled marketing system, then the whole reasoning behind such a system will become obsolete. How can there be measures to ensure that there is not over-production in one country if its neighbours can export their over-production at will?

It must be recognized that producer marketing is part of the solution to world over-production, certainly not part of the problem. What has the Government opposite done to ensure that this right is not lost, to ensure the future of our producer marketing system, a system that is the best in the world and is envied around the world? Has it stood up to the American negotiators and exposed the multitude of hidden indirect subsidies that are available to United States' farmers through feed companies, grain elevators, fertilizer companies and the Commodity Credit Corporation? Has the Government confronted United States negotiators with the fact that a dairy farmer in St. Clair County, Michigan, with 44 cows, will receive roughly $10,000 worth of free feed, $10,000 worth of Commodity Credit Corporation corn? Surely this has to be considered a subsidy.

Finally, I might ask why the Government has not challenged at GATT the U.S.'s own practices in regard to ice cream. The United States has failed for 17 years to file a report on the U.S. quota which is to be established yearly on a proportional basis. Further, the Government should ask why that quota has not been met and why it was not opened to other countries like Canada, as GATT rules stipulate. The answer to all these questions is not very hard to determine.

• (1140)

During the free trade debate Members on this side of the House argued passionately, and now would appear correctly, that the agricultural interests in Canada were sacrificed to get a Free Trade Agreement with the United States, that agricultural subsidies were not allowed but that subsidies in other industries were, such as energy. I have here the final text of the FTA, Article 906. Under Article 906 it states:

> Both Parties have agreed to allow existing or future incentives for oil and gas exploration, development and related activities in order to maintain the reserve base for these energy resources.

This deal has imposed a double standard on Canadian farmers. The Government is making them second class citizens and has bargained away their marketing systems and their livelihoods. Did the U.S. Government object to the subsidy? If not, why then did the Government not get the same rights for agriculture? The Americans need our oil and gas. Certainly they are not going to object to our Canadian taxpayers subsidizing something they need. Believe me, the Canadian people will be paying through the nose for their own energy until it runs out.

Recently the Government introduced a Budget that holds title to many firsts. It was the first televised Budget. It was the first Budget to be pre-released. It was the first Budget to spawn an RCMP investigation. It is important to note that this Budget, mishandled as it was, was also the first free trade Budget. This was a Conservative budgetary future, a free trade budget that fingers for elimination the items that our government agreed with the United States to be considered to be unfair subsidies.

There have been cuts in stabilization programs, cuts in transport programs affecting farmers, cuts in crop insurance, cuts in farm credit, cuts in fuel rebates, cuts in interest relief as well as the elimination of the special Canadian grains program, despite the fact that there is only a lull in the war, not a cessation of hostilities. This included a $14 million loss to the dairy industry. It has been estimated that this Budget will cost every farmer in Canada at least $1,000 each per year.

The answers to the questions I have raised today are not so much pointing to the FTA, but to the fact that the Members opposite not only negotiated to get a deal at any cost, but now that they have the deal they will do anything to keep it, anything to say we have access to the American market, anything to say that Canada is not being treated like other U.S. trading partners.

On the last day of May, a United States trade representative will present United States Congress with a list of countries that are viewed by them as having unfair barriers to American imports. The countries on the list that do not remove those barriers within 18 months will be retaliated against by the United States with tariffs and sanctions. To date, the trade representative has cited Canadian practices which it considers unfair regarding restrictions on advertising, discriminatory postal rates, plywood, alcoholic beverages, the dairy industry, poultry, and wheat, the dairy industry, poultry and wheat being looked upon as having unfair trading practices. The United States trade representative did not even mention the pork industry, which I discussed earlier and which is currently suffering retaliatory countervails from the United States.

We have a great country, Madam Speaker, made great by the sweat of our forefathers who tilled the earth and cleared the land. We as Members have to ensure that the heritage is not lost and the farmers of this nation have an income commensurate with the rest of society.

Mr. Brightwell: Madam Speaker, I have listened to the Member's rhetoric on a group of undefined topics. He talked about free trade here, GATT there, and I wonder really what his point is. He talked about Article 11 and the protection of the dairy farmer and the poultry farmer in Canada. I am wondering what he has got against negotiations that would strengthen Article 11. Why is he against trying to put this into some order, trying to get some understanding under GATT about Article 11 and about agriculture as a whole which has never been brought up before?

He will know that under this Government, farm income is the highest it has ever been. He will recognize that this Government has supported agriculture in a way that no other government ever has. He spoke himself about 17 years of neglect by the Americans, 17 years that encompassed the period that his Government was in power, three months of which was when he was Minister of Agriculture. We wonder what he did then for the deficiencies in the American situation.

Since free trade, this government have brought in the broiler-hatching egg industry marketing board. We have demonstrated our support for supply management. Now we are with the GATT agreements trying to reinforce it. What does he have against these people that he would want us not to reinforce and to clarify Article 11 of GATT?

Mr. Ferguson: Madam Speaker, perhaps I have to go back a few years to when some of the marketing boards were first being formed. They were brought about by the need for a countervailing force in the market place, a countervailing force that is utilized by the producers. Perhaps I had better tell you how long I have been involved. It will be 40 years ago next December when, as a teenager, I was asked to sit as a township committee man on one of the local marketing boards.

I well remember the problems we experienced before that time. There had to be some different mechanism put in place so that the farmer could have a return on investment and labour in order to meet his payments. That situation is not unlike what we have at the present time, as there appears to be a move to tear these apart. But I also want to reflect back on the other marketing boards that I have been involved in at township levels over the years, such as wheat, the Ontario Pork Producers Marketing Board, later on with Eggs and then with Turkeys and Broilers. Over the years we decided there had to be a better way. It is only with the implementation of the legislation to create the National Farm Producers Marketing Act in early 1972 that these mechanisms were put in the hands of the producers so they could have control over their own destiny and tailor their production to the needs of the Canadian consumer and provide that consumer with a high quality product at a reasonable cost.

These are the things that have been put into place through the enabling legislation and they have proved very successful. We had the Canadian Wheat Board established well before the National Farm Products Marketing Agencies were brought into effect. The Canadian Wheat Board was brought into place to ensure that the farmers had the best possible return in the market-place.

Now we see those systems being challenged, even though the eggs were challenged under GATT several years ago when the National Egg Marketing Plan was brought into effect. We won that challenge because of the precedent set under Article 11. We want to make sure that that challenge is not brought up again. I am afraid it may be brought up and we will only have a 50–50 chance of winning. So it is in this context that I want to support our national and provincial marketing systems across this nation. With the concentration of power in the market-place, with the huge corporations, with the buying clubs that supply about 70 per cent of food at the retail food level, the farmers themselves have to be able to establish their price at the farm gate, a price that reflects the cost of the production with a reasonable return on investment and labour.

Mr. Harvard: Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring a western voice to this debate. Agriculture is important to western Canada. It is important to all of Canada. I want to make a couple of comments with respect to the Government's Drought Assistance Program. I was in Winnipeg just prior to the long weekend, and I caught a CBC television report—

Mr. Blais: Is this a question or comment?

Mr. Harvard: I will get to it in a moment. I know that you people have much difficulty in hearing comments from this side. So just give me a moment, please.

There was an interesting report carried by CBC television, Madam Speaker. It had to do with the Drought Assistance Program. After the program was carried, farmers from the immediate Winnipeg area, in fact all from over the province, were invited to call in and give their responses with respect to the way the Government has handled the Drought Assistance Program. It may be germane to quote a couple of the farmers who phoned in. One farmer said this: "I have 240 acres in the light drought area and 800 acres in the severe drought area. As yet I have not received a red cent and I am paying 14 per cent to 15 per cent on money I have to borrow". Another farmer said this: "We harvested no wheat and no rapeseed off 100 acres last year, but we got no payment because they think that our area isn't in the drought area. We really are not very happy about that. We needed that money very badly".

Despite the impatience of the Minister across the aisle, I wanted to point out that farmers in Manitoba and throughout the West are extremely upset with the manner in which the Government has handled the Drought Assistance Program. Not only does it appear that the Government has not set aside enough money, that is, enough of what was promised, but the manner in which it has been handled is a disaster.

Does the Hon. Member realize how steamed up the farmers are, particularly those in western Canada?

Mr. Ferguson: I do indeed realize how steamed up the farmers are in western Canada, and rightfully so. On my last trip out there I interviewed a lot of farmers and members of farm organizations. I also flew over some of the prairie areas and noticed that the dugouts were empty. Even though there seemed to be an adequate snow cover, the subsoil moisture reserves were simply not there. Such is the case at the present time in many areas of southwestern Ontario.

I do want to indicate the immediate and essential need for those payments to be put in the hands of the farmers. A farmer is an eternal optimist. He always looks ahead to a good crop every year, regardless of the returns last year. When the Government decides that a rain stops at a township or county line and does not go across the border and one fellow gets it and another does not, that indicates there is something dramatically wrong. There has to be something better. If this situation occurs again, there has to be a different type of administration or a different way of administration so that we can have more accurate records.

I was delighted in my own constituency when I contacted many farmers to see how they were being impacted upon. They volunteered to go up and down the concessions and call on the farmers to ask them who had proper yield records and moisture records and, in turn, were able to determine new areas that should have been included in the initial maps.

I certainly concur with my hon. colleague from Manitoba that it is essential that this money be put in the hands of producers as quickly as possible.

Mr. Stevenson: I would like to make a few comments on trade and ask the Hon. Member a question.

During the election period we had great discussion on the Free Trade Agreement. When members of the Liberal Party were asked to come forward with some other suggestion on how markets could be secured for Canadian producers and processors, the few times that any suggestions were made they talked about multiple–Party or multiple–nation discussions. For the first time, when we have a tentative agreement under GATT to move forward to discuss some of the agricultural problems, then the Hon. Member sounds as though he is opposed to those as well.

The Hon. Member mentioned the problem with Canada not having preferred access under U.S. law. Would he like the U.S. to have preferred access under Canadian law? Clearly the pork producers of Canada were in favour of the Free Trade Agreement. Their laws are in place, but we also want our laws in place so that we can put countervail against U.S. corn, which we have now. We want to take anti–dumping action against the United States in relation to Red Delicious apples, onions, cut flowers, or whatever action that we might wish to take, as we have in the past, or may well wish to do in the future. When the Hon. Member mentions that Canada should have preferred access, I assume he means that he also wants preferred access for the Americans into the Canadian market.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): May we have a short answer from the Hon. Member for Lambton—Middlesex?

Mr. Ferguson: Perhaps the easiest response to my hon. colleague from the other side is the following: if we already have those things in place and they already have the trade remedy laws in place and we are not exempted from them, what do we gain from the Free Trade Agreement other than to give them unlimited supplies of energy that we have to bid against them for, energy that is developed by Canadian taxpayers through development subsidies and which does not have an infinite supply? There is alarm being raised now about it being depleted in the not too distant future.

I do not see what we have gained under this agreement, because the U.S. trade remedy laws are still in effect. We have to have our countervail still in effect. I would strongly support that we should have looked at GATT with a multilateral agreement among other countries.

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Madam Speaker, I think the Hon. Member for Lambton—Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson) has a short or selective memory. He has forgotten that when he was Minister of Agriculture in 1984 that the dairy farmers of Canada had waited four to five years for a long-term dairy policy that was put in place by this Conservative Government. The Hon. Member was in office as a Minister, and he has forgotten. We do not have any lessons to learn from that Member on the drought. There was a drought in Quebec in 1983. As a Member of Parliament from that area, Madam Speaker, I am sure that you were aware there were rough times during the drought in 1983. The dairy farmers and all the farmers of Canada remember that.

Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in today's debate on Canadian agriculture. I am convinced that at the end of the day, Canadians will realize once again that this Government defends the interests of the agri-food industry. Madam Speaker, I think that this Government, more than any other, has given farmers a helping hand during the past four years and is still doing so at the beginning of its new term.

We realize how important the agri-food sector is to Canada and to the economy of this country. We have always been prepared to defend this sector in the past and we continue to do so. Every time farmers needed a helping hand, we have given them that helping hand. I can prove it! During the past four years, Madam Speaker, we have invested over $17 billion in Canadian agriculture, and we have taken the necessary steps to protect the basic mechanisms of that agriculture.

For instance, quite recently, we added yoghurt and ice cream to the items on the Import Control List, for the purpose of protecting the dairy supply management system in this country.

Madam Speaker, also quite recently, we introduced import controls for broiler hatching eggs. We would never have done so if we were not willing to strengthen this country's agricultural roots.

Some people, however, are inclined to doubt that. Strengthening the foundation of a sector that often leads a troubled existence, with fluctuating market prices and fluctuating weather, is not particularly easy. It is a daily challenge, both for farmers and for governments.

However, Madam Speaker, you know as well as I do that challenge does not necessarily mean difficulty. However, that is what some people would have farmers believe. Others go even further to suggest that the present Government has been destructive in the measures that it has taken with respect to agriculture, as reflected in today's motion and in the comments we have heard during the last few weeks.

There are also those who try to scare farmers by claiming that some sectors will be sacrificed for the sake of the survival and development of others. Nothing could be farther from the truth, Madam Speaker!

This confusion, augmented by many Members of the Opposition, makes it incumbent on me, Madam Speaker, to set the record straight, especially with respect to dairy supply management, a subject to which I am very close and on which I have worked for a number of years.

On April 7, member countries negotiating at the GATT talks agreed on a framework for negotiations that will make it possible for them to complete these difficult talks by December 1990.

To keep the international trade situation from deteriorating during the next 20 months, all member countries—not just Canada but all member countries—have agreed to a truce, in other words, a short-term capping in the agricultural sector. This means, Madam Speaker, that member countries have agreed that subsidized prices, which are set above international prices, will not exceed present levels.

For countries like Canada who want changes in international trade in agricultural products, it is a first step that was long overdue, considering the urgency of the situation.

Most Hon. Members will recall the fervour and intensity with which our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) defended, at all economic summits in recent years, the need for ending this senseless agricultural trade war. So this ceiling to which the countries have agreed is in keeping with our Government's clear, unwavering commitment to maintain supply management, because we believe that continued cooperation with our trading partners will give more weight to Article XI, which was mentioned a few minutes ago.

Indeed, Madam Speaker, that is how I think this agreement reached on April 7 must be considered—as real progress for the Canadian dairy industry and all the country's farmers. The short-term agreements reached in Geneva have somewhat broken the deadlock that was blocking multilateral trade negotiations and prevented significant progress from being achieved at the meeting in Montreal last December.

This cease-fire is an undeniable advantage for Canadian dairy farmers who want GATT Article XI maintained and strengthened. Since we can now deal with the actual reform of international agricultural trade, we can specify the types of commodities, under that famous Article XI, which can be subject to import controls as part of supply management. For example, for the dairy sector, we will make rules to allow import controls for some dairy products. We did not hesitate in the past, Madam Speaker, to add products to this list, in the interests of Canadian farmers, and if the need arises in future, we will never hesitate to do so.

I believe that we shall also try to specify the minimum requirements to be met by a supply management system so that clear import controls can be imposed under Article XI. Canadian dairy farmers will thus obtain protection from potential misuse by some of our trading partners of provisions of Article XI such as import restrictions.

Canadian dairy farmers, Madam Speaker, have helped us maintain Article XI by working with farmers from other countries and explaining to them the advantages of such a mechanism.

I hope they will continue their efforts in this respect and thus help to strengthen our position in trade talks at the international level. I know Canada's dairy producers understand this process and this policy and that they appreciate its merits. Because of international tension and the kind of trench warfare being waged by certain countries in the international arena of agricultural trade, it is so important to provide information instead of succumbing to scare tactics and closing our minds to reason.

Madam Speaker, there are those who ridicule our efforts and criticize our actions, claiming that Canadian dairy producers should not be bound by this international agreement since they only produce for the domestic market.

However, even if our supply management system is such that our dairy producers contribute very little to world dairy surpluses, the fact remains, Madam Speaker, that a certain amount of our dairy products is exported.

Last year, for instance, we exported $191 million worth of dairy products, and most of those sales were at prices below the price on the Canadian domestic market. For the dairy year 1988-89, production is expected to exceed the market-sharing quota by 4 per cent, which surplus will be entirely exported, in addition to the 3 per cent of intra-quota production already earmarked for export.

Furthermore, Madam Speaker, incomes of Canadian dairy producers are also partly determined by international price levels. For instance, the world price for skim milk powder has tripled in the last five years, which has helped to reduce levies on payments to producers. Canadian dairy producers were thus able to absorbs more easily the cost of marketing skim milk for export.

In fact, the increase in world prices brought about by the changes certain countries made in their domestic policies, as a result of pressure for international reform of agricultural trade, exercised by Canada, for instance, has helped Canadian dairy producers save more than $70 million last year alone, compared to 1986. This represents about $1.50 or even more than or per hectolitre. This is money in the pockets of agricultural producers and Canadian dairy producers! And this shows that taking positive action on the international market for greater discipline among those concerned has a direct effect on the Canadian dairy farmer's pocketbook. This must be recognized by all partners.

Our dairy farmers, like all Canadian farmers, have everything to gain from fair trade rules that permit reduced export support by other countries and thus strengthen world market prices.

I know that the Government is accused of not keeping its 1986 commitment on the long-term dairy policy. Nevertheless, Madam Speaker, we implemented this long-term dairy policy because our friends, and my colleague from Lambton—Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson) who was just speaking was Minister of Agriculture in 1984— He had every opportunity. He was part of a government that could have implemented a long-term dairy policy, but it remained in limbo for many years. What did he do? Nothing! We implemented it in 1986, and the $6.03 per hectolitre for domestic consumption for processed milk producers remains in place and is worth $275 million a year for Canadian farmers. That is a lot of money, Madam Speaker.

Once again we are being accused of abandoning dairy producers because the short term capping of farm support would not make it possible for us to live up to the production cost formula. Now, Madam Speaker, let us look at facts. For the time being, whether we like it or not, we just cannot determine what the production costs will be as per the formula the next time we use it this summer. We must collect all the data concerning production costs, producers' efficiency, so that later on this summer we will have the correct figures. This is somewhat an hypothetical issue. We just cannot determine for the time being the impact of the truce on the targeted revenues from industrial milk and cream. My colleague, the Minister of Agriculture, clearly indicated that should the current situation dramatically change when the production costs are calculated, the Government, which has always held a responsible position, will do again the right thing and consider appropriate measures, just as it has always done in the past.

Canadian dairy producers, something our hon. colleagues in the Opposition should acknowledge, are well aware that on two occasions, in August 1988 and February of this year, the Federal Government decided not to lower the targeted price for industrial milk in spite of the expected results had the formula been applied. This would have meant a reduction of $1.89 the hectolitre of milk in August 1988, and a further reduction of 14 cents in February 1989. The Government had then recognized that last year's drought had had a fairly direct impact on the increase of feed price in a number of regions. We had therefore done the right thing for which we have yet to receive praise from our colleagues opposite, by maintaining the targeted prices for industrial milk at the levels reached at the time.

It is clear, therefore, that when all the facts are taken into account and analyzed objectively, this Government's commitment to dairy producers is beyond question. The facts are undeniable. They easily stand up to any partial or biased review. Therefore, those who believe that our supply management systems, especially in the case of dairy products, are being bargained away so that other Canadian farm products can more easily gain access to export markets are totally wrong. The truce applies to all countries, all farm products and all policies. And it is certainly not, Madam Speaker, as some dare claim, a scheme to use new international commitments as an excuse to cut Canadian farming support. All these allegations that have been heard these past few weeks are pure speculations and do not bear any resemblance with reality.

I would like, Madam Speaker, to end my comments on the motion being examined by discussing the Budget and its impact on agriculture. I said at the beginning of my speech that the federal government tried to reinforce the foundations of Canadian agriculture. The last Budget does not defeat this purpose. Essentially, the Budget reduces government expenditure that affect a series of programs from national defence to government operating activities.

We had to make difficult choices. In fact, we tried to ensure that the budgetary measures as a whole were balanced, that they reflected regional realities and that they transfered a part of the debt burden to those who were in a position to assume it. These are difficult choices, but as a government, as the managers of this country, we had to make them. Even though modest Budget cuts will have only a slight impact on the agri-food industry, the federal Government's commitment to Canadian agriculture remains firm and most programs and services in that sector are still in place.

Certainly, essential elements of our long-term dairy policy remain. The $1.5 billion five-year program we adopted in 1986 is still in place and it is a permanent commitment of our Government. However, farmers must now take over from the federal Government the administration cost of marketing their products. But it is not an exceptional requirement. Other sectors, even some that operate under the supply management system, pay the total cost of developing and marketing their products. For example, wheat producers pay all their marketing costs through the Canadian Wheat Board. In addition, federal funding of skim milk powder marketing costs, including part of the Canadian Wheat Board operation costs, will be eliminated, after discussions with the industry. Subsidies provided under the special export program will also end on August 1, 1989.

As I said earlier, Madam Speaker, some milk products, in particular milk powder, have increased in cost, prices on the international market have tripled— We now believe that the milk industry is in a better position to meet its obligations. We are not asking that industry to carry the entire burden of deficit reduction; we are simply asking it to do its share. For example, the provinces, the producers and the federal Government are renegotiating crop insurance agreements in order to better distribute the cost of these programs. In Quebec, among other areas, the federal and provincial Governments pay each 25 percent of premiums and share administration costs equally, whereas producers pay the balance.

In closing, Madam Speaker, I want to reiterate the firm commitment of our Government towards the Canadian agri-food industry as a whole. Even after my speech, if some still have doubts about this statement, whether towards the dairy industry or the farm industry as a whole, they just have to consider existing facts and figures. Those data we have already made public in the last few weeks speak for themselves. The Progressive Conservative Government has always been, here in the House of Commons, and will remain unequivocally in favour of Canadian farmers.

[English]

Mr. Foster: Madam Speaker, I am glad to have a chance to make a couple of comments on the Hon. Minister's speech, since I cannot believe what he had to say when he bragged about how his Government had brought into effect the long-term dairy policy in 1986.

He did not mention that it carved out of the policy last year a few million dollars for storage of dairy product. He did not mention that $10 million more will be reduced from the Canadian Dairy Commission's budget in the next year.

He went on to say that he was waiting for the congratulations of opposition Members. I think he will wait a long, long time for that. Perhaps that is significant. However, he also went on to state that farmers understand what is being done. If they do, there are some farmers in Ontario, at least, who do not understand what the Government is doing with regard to dairy policy. I have a letter in my hand from Grant Smith who is the Chairman of the Ontario Milk Marketing Board, in which he wrote on May 5 of this year that the Canadian dairy industry was facing a very serious crisis. He stated in his letter: "It is urgent that all dairy producers respond".

He goes on to say: "Supply management with its underpinnings must be preserved. Clearly the federal Government does not understand all aspects of supply management despite repeated reassurances of complete support."

He also says: "I urge every milk producer to write these letters—", that is to the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of International Trade, "—and make these telephone calls. This battle must not be lost through default—One final comment, remember, it is your individual livelihood that is at stake."

Obviously, the Minister does not know what he is talking about. If he knew what he was talking about, and if he had seen letters like this from the Chairman of the Ontario Milk Marketing Board—and I am sure that similar letters have been sent by the Milk Marketing Board for the Province of Québec—he would not stand up and blithely say: "Well, farmers understand what is being done here, that their livelihood is being destroyed, that their whole supply management and marketing board system is being destroyed."

They understand exactly what is going on. I think it is very instructive what Mr. Smith has to say in his letter to the producers. He points out: "Increased costs cannot be recovered through the cost of production formula. Industrial milk prices in the Canadian market are not trade distorting on the export market." That is exactly opposite to what the Minister just said here this morning. Mr. Smith also writes: "Canadian supply management for milk has not contributed in any significant way to world surpluses of dairy products."

That is because we have a supply management system which only puts into production that which can be sold within the country. He further indicates: "This action is contrary to the Government's own long-term dairy policy which includes a complete commitment to supply management".

The Minister is saying that they support this, but the chairman of the Ontario Milk Marketing Board is saying that the action is totally contrary to the Government's own long-term dairy policy which includes a complete commitment to supply management.

He goes on to say: "The price of fluid milk has no connection to international trade. The price of raw milk to processors is a provincial responsibility."

I think that there is a great deal of concern in the dairy industry. The Minister has not really done anything this morning to allay those concerns.

Those representations are being made to the Government because of what it has done, not only in the free trade deal but the commitments it made at the GATT. Even more important, since I raised this with the Minister of Agriculture a week or so ago, I would be interested in what the Government is doing with regard to farm credit. Perhaps the Minister could respond. The Royal Bank of Canada sent out a memorandum to its Ontario branches saying that the value of dairy quotas has been discounted by 50 per cent when calculating debt equity ratios. The Royal Bank believes, and it has a lot of good friends on the Treasury benches, that the whole supply management and marketing business of quotas will be sacrificial lambs in the GATT negotiations. It also says that in the future there is not to be any deals over five-year loans for the purchase of dairy quotas. As well it says that if farmers' quotas are to be reduced by 50 per cent in value for a calculation of debt equity, interest rates will have to rise where their risk factor is increased. It goes on to say the increased risk is real and change in policy is called for.

Could the Minister say what the Government is doing to try to keep farmers on the land whose debt equity ratio has been destroyed by this policy of the Royal Bank of Canada? They believe that the Government is selling out at the GATT and through the free trade deal on the value of quotas. What action is being taken by the Government to ensure that farmers are not put off the land because of this change in bank policies?

Mr. Blais: Madam Speaker, I can just say to the Hon. Member that we do not really need congratulations from him. We received them from the people of Canada on November 21, and that was enough for us.

I was a little surprised when I heard the Hon. Members speaking about the dairy policy, because they do not know what it is. They left the dairy policy in limbo in 1984. That is what they have done all the time.

What we have done is put a long-term dairy policy in place in consultation with farmers. In other words, they do not know or they do not remember. They do not know what it is. We have put in place that dairy policy.

An Hon. Member: We started the process.

Mr. Blais: Did you start a process? Maybe they started the process which destroyed the farm community in Canada. What we have done is put in place a dairy policy after a consultation process with the dairy farmers of the country. This is what we are going today. We still have a consultation process to address the question of indexation formula for the milk target price. It is an ongoing process.

The Minister of Agriculture said in January that we were still looking at this because it is important for dairy farmers.

[Translation]

I think, Madam Speaker, that in that regard we acted when it was necessary. Somebody referred to "underpinning" a moment ago. We understand, for example, that the import control list is very important for Canadian farm producers. Which government used it? It is this Government, Madam Speaker! It is this Government which put ice cream and yoghurt on the import control list, and we just put hatching eggs on that list, and we are consulting on restrictions to be put on ice cream. We are the Government that did that, Madam Speaker, and we do not have any lessons to take from the Official Opposition in that regard.

It happens that we do go through difficult times once in a while. But we have done what had to be done to defend Canadian milk and agricultural producers on the world arena. We believe that they are doing well presently. There is no point to scare them off now.

Madam Speaker, the Canadian agricultural producers have the right to know the facts and they are perfectly capable to judge for themselves. I am sure that the majority are. I meet them in all parts of Canada. I meet them every weekend when I return to my riding or go to other parts of Canada. And I realize that what they need the most is to separate facts from the bogeymen of the opposition which brandish figures that have nothing to do with reality, Madam Speaker.

It is our duty to present the truth and the facts to Canadian and Quebec agricultural producers. They are intelligent enough to understand the reality.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Mackenzie.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, I was hoping to be able to ask a question of the Hon. Minister of State for Agriculture (Mr. Blais), but I guess I am going to have to wait for another time when he is making a speech.

I am pleased to be able to speak on the topic of agriculture today in the Liberal opposition motion. I think there are a great many questions being asked in agriculture which are raised by the farmers, by the Government, and by the Department itself.

One of the questions that I was about to ask the Hon. Minister who has just completed his time concerned the following: if the Government is so concerned about keeping producers informed and sending out the right signals, why did its Department just complete a study done by Deloitte, Haskins and Sells by a Mr. John Groeonewegan which concluded that it had wasted its money, in effect, providing the $1 billion pay-out to farmers in western and eastern Canada who are producers of grains.

An Hon. Member: Is that what you think?

Mr. Althouse: No, it is not what I think. If the Department and the three Ministers were certain of where they were going, why did they commission such a study? Why did they pay taxpayers money to have a study to tell them that they did not need these kinds of programs? Why spend money on a study like that three or four years after the fact?

Mr. Althouse: I cannot understand why a Government would spend taxpayers' money on a study three years after the fact for something which was needed and which it had already decided to do. Why waste the money on it? That was the question. I hope that the Hon. Members who are shouting at me will have an answer when their turn comes because I see no justification for the expenditure of the money. I do not see any justification for sending out a signal from the department under the aegis of three Ministers when expenditures of such money under such circumstances are not warranted. I think the Government is running hot and cold with that kind of study and that kind of signal.

As well, we did not hear from the Minister what the future will be of the dairy policy. Yes, there is a so-called long term dairy policy in effect. As was seen by a lot of people, that was really a grandfathering of the existing dairy policy for another five years. The Hon. John Wise, who was the then Minister of Agriculture who believed in the long-term dairy policy, appeared to have been able to get a five-year further commitment out of his Cabinet colleagues and sometime in 1991 that runs out. What will happen after that? In the international negotiations the Government has been sending out all sorts of signals that would indicate that its commitment to the supply managed price guarantees through the formula pricing kind of dairy policy that we have had are up for grabs. That was not addressed clearly by the Government nor has it been addressed clearly by the Government.

In resuming the remarks that I had intended to make, Madam Speaker, I am pleased that the Hon. Member for Lambton—Middlesex (Mr. Ferguson) put forward this motion because it gives us all a chance to review the agricultural policy before the country today.

I was a little taken aback, I suppose, when I did not hear in the Hon. Member's remarks any off-setting solutions to the farm problem. In fact, during the election campaign I did not hear from the Liberal Party any proposals that would solve the farm problem. I have to admit that during the election campaign we did not hear anything from the Government either. The only policy it had was, "If you need it, we will provide it. Just trust us". Trust us, trust us, trust us became the focus of the whole agricultural policy.

There are an awful lot of farmers in farm communities in rural areas of this country who are finding that "trust us" is not good enough. They want to know what the long-term direction is from the various parties and they want to know it now because they are making plans to either leave agriculture or stay in it.

In my part of the country, the Prairies, we have seen 28,000 farm jobs disappear under this "trust us" policy in the last year. Market towns that have been market towns since the coming of settlers to Western Canada are at the point at which it is impossible to get farm machinery supplies, parts, services and new equipment because they can no longer support that particular service in a town with a population of 1,500 to 5,000. The City of Melville in Saskatchewan, a town of 5,000 souls, no longer has a farm equipment dealership. Apparently, there is not enough money in the area to support a farm equipment dealership. That situation has arisen under this Government, even with the assistance that has been given.

Farmers and their lenders and the community that provides supporting services have to have more assurances as to where they stand in the scheme of things in the Government's economic order. The New Democratic Party proposed that it was time to institute the kinds of programs that we see in a lot of competing countries. Even though the focus of international talks is to reducing subsidies, our country is in a very vulnerable position by going into a reduced subsidy kind of mode. Our subsidies are mostly up front in the form of ad hoc payments, which can be easily dropped. We do not have that many long-term commitments to subsidize farmers or to provide economic underpinnings to them. So, when you start deregulating agriculture and pulling the subsidies away, if that is not done very carefully on a proportionate basis we will find ourselves operating with no support from the rest of the country and still competing against countries like the United States and the European Economic Community that are still using a great deal of taxpayers' money to keep their farmers and rural communities in business.

I know there are ideologues in the Conservative Party who say, "If the market will not support them, then there is no reason for farmers in rural communities to exist". They have started down the road to complete market orientation with their deregulation program they have picked up from the Liberals and carried on throughout the Government's last mandate. That means that transportation costs in rural areas will no longer be cross-subsidized with those in the metropolitan areas. It also means that we in the rural areas will be paying more for services such as delivery of parts, postal service and moving our grain and livestock because rail and trucking rates have been deregulated. It means that institutions like the Canadian Wheat Board and other marketing boards are now under scrutiny by the Government. The Government says this is not a true market economy, that boards are a form of near monopoly and do not reflect the kind of market that this Government thinks should exist. So it is deregulating those marketing boards.

Western Canadian farmers will understand this because as of August 1 this year oats will no longer be part of the Canadian Wheat Board system. Farmers will be taking slightly less money for their oats in the coming crop year. That is borne out not just by my analysis but the analysis of Canadian processors. I have discussed this issue with several of them. They say it was a good decision because they can buy oats cheaper. When I asked the processors if this means farmers will get less money, they said, "Of course. How else do we get oats for less money?" The Government thinks it is good for farmers to take home less money. But I do not. Most Canadians who look at it fairly do not think so either.

But because it is a form of deregulation and leaves more product to the open market, this Government has decided to pursue that particular policy.

We have seen changes to the taxation system that are supposed to be more market oriented. This last Budget which was leaked all over the place before it was finally presented to the public in general has a provision which states that at the end of this calendar year the rebates on farm fuel taxation will stop. This will cost farmers considerably more money for fuel. Farmers have to cover great distances, most of them being located quite a long way from metropolitan areas, so the increase will add not only to the cost of farming operations but to the cost of moving product to markets as well. This leaves less for the family on the farm to spend on expansion, maintenance and living expenses.

I think that points out the need for some guidelines or rules to provide a certain amount of assistance that will be there in good times or bad times, a program that will exist decade to decade so that rural areas will know what the rules are vis-à-vis their subsistence and government funds.

During the election campaign, we proposed a system of providing minimum guaranteed prices on a certain level of production so that farmers and their communities would know that there would be a certain level of money coming in for the first units of production. We proposed that it be about 8,000 production units which would be equivalent to about 8,000 bushels of wheat or a little over 10,000 bushels of corn. The idea was to provide a price guarantee in the neighbourhood of $40,000 per farm family so that regardless of how bad the market was, farm families could rely on at least that much for the first units of production. When prices would rise, it would not cost the taxpaying public any money because the market would take care of the problem.

We do not have very many of those kinds of systems left in place because we have deregulated and have become more market oriented. What is the rationale for our kind of program? It is very simple. We have done comparisons of rural economies in various parts of the world and have found that where we can keep active units in the rural economy at the small family level, the local economy thrives. When the production in an area is carried out by large corporate entities, the community dies and production drops. The small farm is more efficient, not only in an economic sense but in a social sense.

A landmark study was done of two California valleys, and this study bears that out. One valley was settled on the basis of small family farms which continue to exist to this day. It supports several small communities. The total output of the area is quite a lot larger than a very similarly blessed valley some 100 miles away that was settled on a corporate structure. The corporations bring in paid workers and when they are finished with them, they send them away. There is very little infrastructure in the area for community activities. There is very little health care and very few educational facilities. The number of families supported is very small and the amount of total economic output does not even begin to compare with that of the other valley which was settled on a family unit basis.

In provinces like my own province of Saskatchewan, our very existence depends on the continuation of relatively modest sized farms that will contribute to the communities and will keep the communities growing and viable economic and social units. The kind of policy the Government seems intent upon pursuing, one of letting the market decide, of pulling away all subsidies, of taking a Margaret Thatcher/Ronald Reagan type economic stance, I contend will decimate not only rural Saskatchewan but all of Saskatchewan. The population of that province has once again been falling for the last three years. As Conservative policies begin to take hold, populations fall. People are leaving because the Government's economic policy has been aimed at supporting very large economic units that do not hire people.

I would also point out that middle-sized agricultural units are, by all studies, virtually as economically efficient as are very large corporate farms. Middle-sized units have the advantage of providing more spin-off jobs and benefits to the surrounding community and provide more overall employment and activity to the whole region, province or country. We think this is the kind of economic policy that should have been proposed during the last election campaign, and we proposed it.

It is notable that in the rural parts of some parts of Canada at least, this proposal was picked up and we are now stronger in rural British Columbia and rural Saskatchewan and are holding our own in rural Ontario. Gradually the message is beginning to be heard and gradually rural Canadians are beginning to see that if they want to continue to be functional, modern communities, ready to go into the 21st century, the kind of policies the New Democrats are advocating for rural Canada are the kind that will include them in the future of Canada. They will not be left out in the hinterland, watching metropolitan areas receive the advantages of deregulation, cheaper airfare and relatively cheaper services while they have to pay proportionately increasing costs to stay up to date in our modern world.

Mr. Holtmann: These guys from Ontario living high off the hog, eh?

Mr. Althouse: Yes, the guys from Toronto living high off the hog, the guys from Winnipeg living high off the hog.

Mr. Holtmann: Come on, not Winnipeg. I knew I would get some excitement out of you.

Mr. Althouse: Yes, Winnipeg. I cannot let this pass. In Winnipeg, the Hon. Member and his Government are attempting to bring back to life the Grain Exchange, an institution that would have died a natural death if it had not received the kind of support his Government is prepared to give it, an institution with almost a dozen members under intense investigation for misdealings, an institution that resulted in farmers selling grain that they have not been paid for. These are the kinds of things that my grandparents and my parents attempted to overcome, but now my children and my grandchildren will be put through the same experience just because we had the misfortune to have a group of Conservatives gain control of the Government with 43 per cent of the vote.

In conclusion, I want to say that Canada needs a rural policy and a farm policy that will provide an underpinning for the incomes of rural Canadians. It needs the kind of program that we proposed during the last election campaign. It needs an updated crop insurance program, one that will provide coverage for crop loss.

Mr. Holtmann: That's provincial.

Mr. Althouse: It cannot be just provincial because agriculture is a federal and provincial shared jurisdiction. We cannot have one province providing higher coverage levels than another province, so it has to be handled by the federal Government with some sharing by the provinces, but the current Government proposal is to make it more and more a provincial responsibility. I predict that the result will be that some of the provinces that think they have money or are coming into an election in which the farm vote will matter, will end up boosting coverage levels in their provinces higher than those in surrounding ones. We have seen many examples of that. Recently, Alberta has been paying a so–called pro–benefit to entice the feedlot industry into that province. It began at some $22 per tonne and had a very predictable effect. It sucked feeder cattle out of Saskatchewan and Manitoba and into Alberta.

• (1250)

When you can get feed grain at $22 a tonne cheaper than the other provinces can, that is a predictable thing for feeders to do. We have also seen the Conservative Government of my own province providing subsidies to cattle feeders trying to keep feeder cattle in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Holtmann: And the previous NDP Government.

Mr. Althouse: There were no subsidies in the previous NDP Government.

Mr. Holtmann: There were no subsidies anywhere?

Mr. Althouse: Not for cattle. We had a livestock feeder guarantee program that ran on a premium basis, which was designed to pay premiums in when prices were high and take funds out when prices were low.

That program was skewered a few years later by the introduction of very low premiums when the Government changed. Of course, it then went into the hole and has continued on that basis because of interference with what was an economic program that should have carried itself. However, the need is there. Neither Government Members nor the Official Opposition have proposed long term programs. They have simply been throwing barbs at each other throughout this debate and throughout the last four or five years. There is no long term program that the Government is willing to lay out clearly, although their hidden agenda is becoming more clear. It seems it is prepared to let the market determine these things. It is prepared to watch as farmers go bankrupt and as rural communities disappear. It is prepared, in the interests of wide international need perceived only by them, to take away all subsidies and direct support to farmers and rural communities in Canada.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to my hon. friend from MacKenzie (Mr. Althouse) who comes from Saskatchewan, as I do. I listened with interest to his remarks in support of the family farm. Support of the family farm is perhaps one of the few things all Parties in this House have in common. We all want to see the traditional family farm continue to prosper in this country. Implicit though in the Hon. Member's remarks, it seems to me, was the threat or the hint of state control or state intervention relative to farm size. I am wondering if the Hon. Member has a comment, or whether his Party has a policy relating to farm size. Is there some maximum farm size for an individual or indeed a minimum farm size? I would appreciate it if the Hon. Member could give his thoughts in regard to farm size relative to this issue of viability and the long term prosperity of the family farm in this country.

Mr. Althouse: Madam Speaker, I do not know what hearing aid the Hon. Member had on when he found implicit conclusions from my remarks. I did not speak about farm size. Our Party does not speak about farm size. We point out that there should be assistance up to certain levels. If the economic theory of efficiency carries in agriculture, presumably the larger funds would have an advantage. We are simply saying that aid should be offered up to a certain size only. If people want to get beyond that, they have all the advantages of economic theory on their side.

I did point out however in my speech, which the Hon. Member may have missed, that once you get beyond the grain farms, beyond about 1,200 or 1,400 acres, there is no longer any great advantage in production costs. The unit costs after that do not reduce enough to really promote farms being much larger than that. Our proposal would have stopped assistance in the neighbourhood of four to five quarter sections. If people want to get bigger than that, they can do so, but they will not get bigger than that with assistance from the Government of Canada. They will have to do that on the basis of their own efficiency. The laws of economics make that possible for an efficient operator. They do not need a further push from the Government and taxpayers of Canada.

Mr. Karpoff: Madam Speaker, I would like the Member from MacKenzie (Mr. Althouse) to comment on the impact on the family farm of the high interest rate policy that this Government is pursuing. I know of small businesses in the metropolitan areas where the high interest rate is having a detrimental effect. Basically, family farms are small businesses so I would like his comments on what impact that has on the operation of family farms.

Mr. Althouse: Madam Speaker, increased interest rates and high interest rates have had a devastating effect on farmers in this country. The debt load has remained for Canada's farms at about $22 billion to $23 billion. The assets that Canadian farmers have to work with have dropped in value during the four years that the $22 billion debt has been in place. As a result, the amount of debt in proportion to assets has been rising compared with the United States whose debt has actually decreased during that period of time. Therefore, we have been left less competitive than before.

If you used that alone as a method of determining whether government payments have been adequate or not, you would have to conclude that they have been inadequate. This is contrary to the recent paper which has come to light from the Department of Agriculture and which argues that perhaps some of these programs are unnecessary. The effect of increasing interest rates also shows up in land values. The Farm Credit Corporation, the Government's own agency, says that in western Canada, particularly in Saskatchewan, land prices have declined over the last four years by more than 38 per cent, largely as a result of increasing interest rates combined with low commodity prices.

Mr. Stevenson: Madam Speaker, I have a few comments. I noticed from the Member's answer to the second last question that market forces are going to determine the size of farms, but he does not want them involved in determining the values of the commodities coming from those farms. It is of interest that there are figures around showing how much production is coming from family farms. Recently I saw numbers as high as 98 per cent of all the agricultural production in Canada comes from family farms. Contrary to what the Member said, I would like to suggest that a great many of the Government's policies are structured specifically for the family farm. For example, look at the stabilization programs and the thought now of altering them somewhat, as we have witnessed in the hearings regarding the Grains 2000 Program. There have been discussions among farm groups and government about stabilizing or ensuring the incomes of farmers. Clearly that thrust is for the family farms and certainly not for large corporate operations.

Considering the assistance to farmers, and particularly looking at prices of commodities in the market-place around the world, we have seen great concern for the impact of government policies on the values of various commodities. We only have to look as far as the CAP program in Europe, where there is a government-supported pricing system that has caused tremendous problems, I wonder if that is the sort of system that the Member is suggesting for Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member will have a few minutes left to answer the question after the adjournment.

EFFECT ON POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Mr. Maurizio Bevilacqua (York North): Mr. Speaker, the Government talks a lot about the deficit of the country in budgetary terms, but we know that the deficit it is really ashamed of and concerned about is its deficit of ideas, its deficit of a vision, and the deficit of solutions to the challenges facing us today and in the future.

Nothing makes this deficit more evident than how the Government responds to the needs of our post-secondary education system.

I share the concerns expressed by the Canadian Federation of Students and the Canadian Association of University Teachers that stated that the federal Budget will cut approximately $900 million over the next five years for post-secondary education.

How can the Government block the major artery to Canada's future? If the future of our post-secondary education system were to solely depend on the Government's policy, and if our future as a nation were to depend on the future of our post-secondary education system, then I tell the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that he may as well cancel tomorrow. I ask the Minister to reconsider his economic policy and allow Canada's youth—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

MULTICULTURALISM

DESIGNATION OF AHEPA DAY

Mr. Gus Mitges (Bruce—Grey): Mr. Speaker, Sunday, May 28, has been designated AHEPA Day by Archbishop Iakavos of the Greek Orthodox Church of North and South America, and the Bishop of Canada, Bishop Sotirios.

AHEPA stands for the American Hellenic Educational Progressive Association, an organization that plays an important part in the lives of all Canadians and Americans of Greek descent, as well as being active in the civic and philanthropic affairs of Canada.

Since its founding in Canada in 1928, AHEPA programs and activities have helped to strengthen the historical ties which have marked the close relationship between Canada and Greece. AHEPANS have succeeded in combining the best traditions of our two nations whose histories have been marked by dedication to human justice, to freedom, and to our democratic way of life.

AHEPA Day also gives us the opportunity to express the thanks of all Greek Canadians for the privilege and honour of being citizens of our great country Canada.

IMMIGRATION

S.S. KOMAGATA MARU

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, on May 23, 75 years ago, the S.S. Komagata Maru, carrying 375 Sikh passengers entered the Port of Vancouver. All were British subjects and had the right to enter Canada but were not allowed to disembark.

Immigration officials used fictitious health problems and processing delays to deny landing rights to the ship. B.C. government officials severed communications to the shore and denied permission to replenish food and water.

After two months of struggle, fear, hunger, thirst and disease, the ship was ordered to leave. On July 23 the Komagata Maru was escorted out of Canadian waters.

My New Democratic colleagues and I consider this to be one of Canada's darkest moments. The unfair and humiliating treatment received by those Sikhs wishing to enter Canada should never have occurred.

By commemorating this past event of racial intolerance, we let Canadian Sikhs know that their suffering has not been forgotten, that we are dedicated to a truly free multicultural Canada where incidents such as this can never again happen, and that this recollection works to ensure that Canada continues to be a better host to all peoples of the world.

INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT

DRUMMONDVILLE INDUSTRIAL OLYMPIAD

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, the Drummondville Industrial Management Club has held its fourteenth Industrial Olympiad evening event to pay tribute to the manufacturing sector. This is a wonderful opportunity to underline the essential contribution of businesses to our economic and social life. The gold medals went to IBC Enterprises and Venmar Limited and the bronze medals to GTE Sylvania and Multifoam International Products. The silver medallists were Sopréma Étanchéité and Cascades PSH.

These results stem from the motivation, perseverance, agressiveness and know-how of the region's business people, from their eagerness to take risks in search of excellence and from their reliance on competent employees. It is our duty to emphasize their vital role in the economic growth of our community.

EASTERN MONTREAL—KEEPING ELECTORAL PROMISES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Laurier—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to echo the words of Québec Government Minister Daniel Johnson who said last Friday that the Conservative Government does not seem to be in any particular hurry to promote the Montreal East economic recovery. Mr. Johnson singled out specific cases, including the Soligaz project for which the Conservative Government still has to honour its promises made during the last election campaign. This project would entail investments of $1 billion and thousands of new jobs in Montreal East. Mr. Johnson also raked the Conservative Government over the coals for failing to give priority to the endorsement of Montreal East funding propositions to upgrade facilities and create jobs. I dare hope the new Minister responsible for the Montreal region will prove to be more efficient than his predecessor.

COPYRIGHT ACT

EXEMPTION FOR EDUCATORS

Ms. Barbara Greene (Don Valley North): Mr. Speaker, thousands of Canadian teachers live in fear of lawsuits because the copyright legislation proposed by the former Minister of Communications contained no exemptions for educational purposes.

Teachers must be legally permitted to utilize modern technology to provide current examples for students of various techniques of communication in the media. Easy access to those materials is essential.

Without reasonable exemptions the proposed legislation would revert Canadian classrooms to the era of slate and chalk and make them black holes in the global village.

I urge the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) to provide reasonable exemptions for educators, and to ensure that in the quest for creators' rights the rights of students and educators are not erased.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

APPOINTMENT OF PHILIPPINE AMBASSADOR TO CANADA

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the year 1986 saw the restoration of democracy in the Philippines under President Corazon Aquino, a triumph of the ultimate authority of the Filipino people. The Government of Canada and Canadians of all cultural origins welcomed that event.

Late this morning the Philippine Ambassador to Canada, His Excellency Ramon A. Diaz, presented his credentials to Her Excellency the Governor General of Canada. Mr. Ramon Diaz is a man of high intellect and impeccable integrity. He graduated in law summa cum laude and was chairman of President Aquino's Commission on Good Government. With these credentials, he will prove more than equal to the task of continuing the close, cordial relationship between the Philippines and Canada.

I salute him on his appointment, take pride in welcoming him to Canada, and I hope that Members of the House share my sentiments.

TRANSPORTATION

VIA RAIL SERVICES – ATLANTIC LIMITED

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, national unity has been a priority of the Government. Recognizing that Atlantic Canada is not only a major pillar in the Confederation of Canada and that its regional and economic isolation places it in a fragile position, I urge the Government to ensure that the vital link, both symbolic and pragmatic—VIA Rail's Atlantic Limited—be left intact.

To that end, I have a petition with more than 1,880 signatures of the residents of Sussex and surrounding area in my riding which I shall be forwarding to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

FLIGHT TRAINING PROGRAMS

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, when the Government recently announced the closure of bases at Portage la Prairie and Summerside, residents of Moose Jaw breathed a sigh of relief, thinking that their air base was secure.

However, this may not be the case. In the same manner as the first level of flight training now carried out at CFB Portage will be privatized and moved, so may the second level of flight training CFB at Moose Jaw.

On Friday, May 18, the office of the Associate Minister of Defence admitted that just as Britain has privatized its first and second level of flight training, so may Canada, if the right economic offer comes along. Further, the Government has also admitted that regional job security will not be a factor and training could very easily be conducted elsewhere.

This knowledge, together with the fact that the Government has shown virtually no compassion for the plight of the people in Summerside and Portage la Prairie, will be cold comfort to residents of Moose Jaw.

I call upon the Government to repledge itself to regional economic development and guarantee the residents of Moose Jaw and Portage la Prairie that flight training programs will remain in their present location, regardless of who is conducting the training.

Let the Government finally begin to demonstrate the type of responsibility that the Canadian public expects.

FISHERIES

ASSISTANCE TO ATLANTIC CANADIAN GROUNDFISHERY

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, all Canadians are becoming increasingly aware of the economic crisis descending on coastal Atlantic Canada resulting from the downturn in the groundfishery.

Sound measures presently being put in place by the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Siddon), together with those already in place, will lead, with adequate enforcement, to a recovery in our fishery over the next three to five years.

However, during the interim, we will need assistance from the Government of Canada. Just as the Government has come to the rescue of communities stricken by agricultural problems in recent years, so do we in Atlantic Canada look for appropriate assistance for families and communities dependent upon the Atlantic fishery for their livelihood. Such special measures should be taken not only to assist fishermen, but also plant workers and operators, boat builders, and boat yard workers.

PUBLICATIONS

CRIMINAL LAW PAMPHLET—REQUEST FOR APOLOGY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of the House a matter of great urgency and concern both to Nova Scotians and to all Canadians.

Two legal education pamphlets have been distributed in Nova Scotia. One is bigoted and racially discriminatory. The first pamphlet entitled "Criminal Law" has a picture of three black children on the cover. The second pamphlet entitled "The Young Offenders Act and You" has a picture of a white boy. The three black children on the first pamphlet are not criminals, and their families did not give permission for their children's pictures to be used.

I find it disconcerting to think that someone would put the picture of three black children on a pamphlet entitled "Criminal Law", without portraying a group of children of various racial backgrounds.

In light of the fact that those pamphlets were produced with funding assistance from the federal Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) and as a joint project of the Public Legal Education Organizations of the Atlantic Provinces, I expect an apology not only from the head of this organization, but also from the Attorney General of Nova Scotia and, more important, the federal Solicitor General. I also expect these pamphlets to be pulled immediately, and this contemptible situation must never be allowed to happen again.

FOREST RESOURCES

REQUEST FOR RENEWAL OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL PROGRAMS

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the federal-provincial forestry development agreements are about to expire. These are five-year cooperation agreements to meet the forestry needs of each province. The agreements now in place provide total funding of approximately $1.1 billion over their lifetime: $571 million from the federal Government and $520 million from the provincial level.

Mr. Speaker, as a Member of Parliament for a forestry region, I ask the Government of Canada to renew these federal-provincial agreements because they really have an impact on forestry development. Renewing these agreements is essential to the continued development of Canada's forests, so as to reach publicly supported environmental objectives and to maintain their important contribution to the regional and national economy.

CONSUMER AND CORPORATE AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING POLICY

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, on May 20, it was reported that the federal Government has quietly implemented a new policy of allowing government advertising to go to agencies not fully owned by Canadians because existing Canadian agencies have been purchased by Americans.

On May 9, the Minister responsible for government advertising appeared before the Consumer and Corporate Affairs Committee and said that his Department uses only Canadian owned agencies, even if that meant excluding some 20 of the largest 25 agencies in this country because they are foreign owned.

At that time did not the Minister know that his Department was in the process of changing its policies to conform with the terms of the Canada–U.S. Free Trade deal? If so, why did he not tell the committee that he knew what was going on in his Department and that the policy was being changed?

Government advertising worth millions of dollars every year is awarded without tender. The Minister must stick to his statement in the committee and instruct his officials that only Canadian agencies can advertise for the Canadian Government.

EXTERNAL RELATIONS

FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF FEDERAL REPUBLIC OF GERMANY

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, May 23, 1989 marks the fortieth anniversary of the Federal Republic of Germany.

Since 1949, the Federal Republic has experienced dramatic economic reconstruction and has become one of the leading industrial nations of the world.

Canada's cordial relations with West Germany flow from our collective defence of western values of democracy and freedom as part of the NATO Alliance.

Of the thousands of United Empire Loyalists who came to Canada following the American Revolution, a significant number were of German origin. Together with Mennonites from Pennsylvania who settled in Waterloo County, these German speaking people founded the City of Berlin, now known as Kitchener. Today, Canadians whose mother tongue is German comprise Canada's third largest ethnic group.

I invite all Members of Parliament to join with me and the constituents of Kitchener in extending our congratulations on this fortieth anniversary and in expressing our hope for continued good relations and prosperity between our two nations.

EFFECT ON AGRICULTURAL INDUSTRY

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, the Government's Budget is devastating to agriculture. Some farm organizations estimate this Budget will cost an individual farmer up to $2,000. Even the Government's own officials say that it is at least between $700 and $1,000. No other sector in this economy has been hit so hard or asked to give so much.

Many farmers in Haldimand—Norfolk are living from milk pay cheque to milk pay cheque. It is time the Government woke up and realized that agriculture is the foundation of our economy. Our agriculture industry is very complex. Does it not realize that success in food production is based on long-term planning? Without warning it has taken away the programs our farmers have planned around, have been counting on, and set them adrift with nothing to take their place.

I suggest to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that his Budget will do irreparable damage to our agriculture industry. It is just one more step in the many his Government has taken which will inevitable increase our dependency on the United States, this time for our food supply. These actions are irresponsible and unacceptable and I ask the Government—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

AGRICULTURE

CAPITAL GAINS EXEMPTION ON FAMILY FARM

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, until recently members of the NDP were telling farmers that their policy of taxing 100 per cent of all capital gains would not apply to the family farm. We now learn that this policy has its limitations.

To quote the Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Cowichan (Mr. Stupich) on May 11:

> The party position is that if the farm is staying within the family and is being passed down in the form of an inheritance or a transfer, then there should be no tax at all, at least not on the first half million. However, if it is being sold to someone else, then why should it not be like any other asset of industry or business?

It should not be treated like any other asset of industry because the farm is the farmer's pension plan and because the capital gains exemption rewards farmers for their years of sacrifice, risk, and labour.

The NDP wants to bring farmers back to the capital gains rules that existed before the introduction of the $500,000 exemption in May 1985. That is simply not acceptable to this side.

THE ENVIRONMENT

JAMES BAY AND NORTHERN QUÉBEC AGREEMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in 1975, the Grand Council of Crees won an important recognition of their role, status, and culture in the form of the James Bay and Northern Québec Agreement.

The federal Government's responsibilities include the protection of health and the environment. The Government has done very little to live up to its part of the agreement. The lakes behind the dams are contaminated with mercury, depriving the Cree of fish on which they depend for their livelihood.

The Minister responsible, in his 1988 annual report on the agreement, ignores the mercury problem. Now we learn that the administration of the agreement has been assigned to the federal environmental assessment and review office, adding a new work-load to an already overburdened staff.

We urge the Government to discharge its responsibilities to the Grand Council of Cree by providing the administrator with the funds needed to do the job. The James Bay Agreement cannot and should not be treated lightly by the Government.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ARMX '89—ROLE OF NON-NATO COUNTRIES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my questions about human rights are directed to the Acting Prime Minister.

The ARMX show which is currently taking place has grown over the years from a show intended to supply Canada's defence needs to a show promoting the international trade of military equipment. Representatives of countries which routinely violate human rights meet with international arms suppliers.

This is not the international tulip show that we have here in Ottawa, or an international auto show; it is an international arms show.

If ARMX is supposedly an exhibit to provide equipment to Canada's military, why are representatives from countries which violate human rights attending this display? Why are representatives from countries which are not our allies attending this international arms bazaar? What is the role of non-NATO countries at this exhibit?

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we had the debate on ARMX in the House on Friday. I would like to assure the Leader of the Opposition once again that ARMX is a trade show. I was there this morning. It provides an opportunity for companies to display and provide goods and services which are used by our Department.

The participants with the displays are members of NATO countries. Of course, there are many Canadian companies as well, and many companies from British Columbia. I am sure the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition would enjoy an opportunity of visiting those displays.

It is organized by a private sector company, and the private sector company has advised us that it had sent invitations to members of the diplomatic community, to the military attachés, to certain members of that community. It also sent an information letter to the various embassies in Ottawa.

But the purpose of the exhibition is to provide the information about potential goods and services to be supplied to the Canadian Armed Forces to ensure that we can operate as cost effectively and efficiently as possible.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister says this is sponsored by a private sector outfit, but she was there this morning on behalf of the Department of National Defence, supposedly, and this outfit would not exist without sponsorship from that Department.

LIST OF COUNTRIES INVITED

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, Canada is acting as a shopping centre for arms for human rights violators.

Last week the Secretary of State for External Affairs made an non-credible statement to the House of Commons Committee on External Affairs. He said: "Your question was specifically about South African participation in this private event. If they are there, they have a right to be there".

No thanks to the Minister, South Africa apparently is not there, but the Minister was ready to roll out the red carpet.

• (1420)

As far as he is concerned, South Africa can use Canada as a venue for making arms deals. Why will the Government not tell Canada who has been invited, and under whose auspices they are there at this international arms bazaar?

Is Iran there? Is Panama there? Is Chile there? Is El Salvador there? Will the Minister produce a list of participants?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was not listening when I answered the earlier question or during the debate here on Friday. Let me reiterate once again for his information and for the information of Members of the House that this is a private sector exhibition.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Collins: The company involved looks after the invitations for those who come to the exhibition. They have advised us of who they have invited. I have relayed that information to the House of Commons. They have advised us that they have invited military attachés of various embassies here in Ottawa of the NATO countries, and a limited number of other countries, but not including South Africa. They also sent out an advisory to all the embassies, to the diplomats as a courtesy about the ARMX show.

Let me assure my colleague that ARMX is not an arms bazaar.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Collins: If he would go for himself he would find that out. He would find out that there are companies such as Mesotech from British Columbia—

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

[Translation]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, Canadians must realize that the Minister has not answered the question. Furthermore, she even endorsed this exhibition with her presence this morning.

DENUNCIATION OF ABUSE COMMITTED BY CERTAIN MEMBER COUNTRIES OF FRANCOPHONIE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government is reducing foreign aid but encouraging international arms sales to countries that violate human rights. The Government pretends to respect human rights as long as they do not call into question the Government's commercial interests or diplomatic relations. I therefore ask the Minister or the acting External Affairs Minister why the Government has not announced in advance that it intends to denounce vigorously the human rights abuses of some Francophone countries at the Francophone Summit now being held in Senegal.

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (Minister of State (Finance)): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that the Secretary of State (for External Affairs) has indeed placed a resolution for debate at the Dakar conference. I believe and hope that this will be a beginning of the improvement he desires.

FISHERIES

FOREIGN OVERFISHING OFF COAST OF NEWFOUNDLAND

Hon. Roger E. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. As he will know, foreign overfishing off Newfoundland's coast has reached crisis proportions. For example, in 1986 the European Community which had been assigned a catch quota of 19,000 tonnes by NAFO actually caught 110,000 tonnes.

Did the Prime Minister in his Friday meeting with François Mitterrand enlist the support of the French President to beat some sense into the European Community, including France, to get them to stop the wilful destruction of our fish stock before 100,000 fishermen and plant workers in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia see their livelihoods disappear forever?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, this serious problem that we have experienced since 1986 with reference to overfishing on the nose and tail of the Grand Banks is a matter the Government is addressing and has addressed now and ever since it started to occur.

However, if my hon. friend wants to ask the questions in this manner, the fact remains that his own Government gave 9,500 tonnes of northern cod every year for a period of five years to the European Community. It was not forced to do that. It was a voluntary action it took. That was in excess of 45,000 tonnes of northern cod. That was inside the Canadian 200-mile limit of which 1,575 tonnes went to France.

Ms. Clancy: When was that?

Mr. Crosbie: These were the years, Mr. Speaker, from 1983 to 1987, if the Hon. Member opposite wants the years.

Ms. Clancy: Were you not in power then?

Mr. Crosbie: With respect to President Mitterrand, the Government is pursuing this issue with all members of the European Community.

On June 2, I will be pursuing this issue with Mr. Andriessen who is the Commissioner for External Affairs of the European Community. We hope to persuade the European Community to be conscious of the need for conservation and proper care of the environment with respect to fish, as well as with respect to everything that pertains to the environment.

MANDATE OF CABINET COMMITTEE

Hon. Roger E. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, the Minister talks about a gift. He will know of course that it was a trade-off which had the effect of preventing overfishing. Why does he not try something that would prevent overfishing?

The announcement of the cabinet committee on the fishery on Friday I suggest pandered more to Mitterrand's presence here in Ottawa than it did to Newfoundland's need and vital interest in the matter. Does that committee have the mandate to recommend economic sanctions against those international bandits who are out there thumbing their noses at NAFO and Canada? Will the committee consider extending our fisheries jurisdiction to the nose and tail of the Grand Banks to give functional control to Canada over these transboundary stock?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's use of this type of language does not help in this issue.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The European Community and other nations are fishing in international waters outside the 200-mile economic limit recognized by most countries of the world and within which Canada has some control. To use this type of language with respect to those who fish there is not helpful.

Canada is not the world's policeman for areas outside the 200-mile limit. What we are attempting to do is to persuade the countries that fish into the northwest Atlantic that they are spoiling the fishery for themselves as well as for others. We are going to attempt to pursue whatever rights we have as a coastal state with respect to straddling stocks that cross to and from the 200-mile limit.

A unilateral extension of boundaries was not attempted by our predecessors. All they did was give fish to the European Community. I do not think it will serve us well to try the same on it again.

ARMS

ARMX '89 SHOW—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Associate Minister of National Defence.

A Chilean colonel was window-shopping this morning at the ARMX military flea market, a shopping opportunity to which South Africa had been invited as well. The Government denies any arms sales were concluded with governments with a reputation for failing to respect human rights, despite the fact that these countries were represented.

If the Government has nothing to hide, why doesn't it publish a list of all transactions involving strategic military equipment with countries that do not respect human rights?

[English]

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, if I could once again try to explain the purpose of ARMX, it is to provide a forum in which companies that provide goods and services to the Canadian Armed Forces can come together to provide this opportunity and display. Many of the people in our Department who are responsible for procurement attend ARMX to see the latest in training, the latest in simulation, and the latest kinds of weapon systems that are available.

The purpose of ARMX is not to provide a forum for the sale or information about weapons to Third World countries.

As the Hon. Member knows, we have a policy through the Department of External Affairs which limits the sale of military weapons to any countries with human rights violations.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, we all go window shopping to watch other people buy things.

If there is this policy that prohibits the sale of arms to countries which abuse human rights, then surely the Government ought to be able to come clean and tell the people of Canada and Parliament just what arms are sold to what countries that are noted for abusing rights.

Why does the Government not come clean? It is a simple thing. If it is honestly pursuing a policy of an embargo of arms shipments to human rights abusers, then tell us what is being sold.

• (1430)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simmons: Bail her out, John.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the policy with respect to the export of arms from Canada has been explained by the Secretary of State for External Affairs on many occasions. We closely control the export of military goods. We do not export military goods to countries which pose a threat to Canada or its allies. We do not export goods to those countries involved in or under imminent threat of hostilities, or countries under UN Security Council sanctions, or to countries whose governments have a persistent record of serious violations of the human rights of their citizens. That policy is administered by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. There has never been a person in that position who has been more scrupulous and more attentive in that direction than the Secretary of State for External Affairs. We have nothing to apologize for.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR STUDY OF SALES OF GOODS FOR MILITARY USE

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs is also a great advocate of freedom of information. There were many who witnessed a Chilean colonel window shopping at Lansdowne Park who would bring Canadian policy into serious question. I would ask the Government this: why will it not make the list available, if necessary to a special all-Party parliamentary task force, to study all aspects of sales of all goods that could be used for military use? I would ask the Government also to support a United Nations initiative for an arms trade register. What does he answer to that?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is a victim of controlled hysteria. Canada closely controls the exports of all military goods. The total exports in 1987 were $1.8 billion, of which 71 per cent went to the United States of America. A further 19 per cent went to other NATO countries. Only 10 per cent was exported to non-NATO countries. That was very, very carefully controlled.

Are the hon. gentlemen saying that they do not want a military or defence industry in this country? Do they want to do away with the tens of thousands of jobs that are involved?

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

QUERY AS TO SPECIAL CABINET COMMITTEE TO STUDY IMPACT OF BUDGET ON ATLANTIC CANADA

Mrs. Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, I would just remind the last Minister who spoke that there are more than men on this side, or in the House—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Campbell: (South West Nova): That is not my question. I could not resist.

Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. In light of the drastic measures in the Government's Budget, such as the reduction of regional development programs, the closure of six military bases, anticipated cut-backs in VIA, the changes in the Unemployment Insurance Program, the cuts in federal Government transfer payments, and now, the drastic reductions in the groundfish quotas, did the Prime Minister order last week a special committee of Cabinet be set up to study the effects of his Government's Budget on Atlantic Canadians?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we are sort of getting mixed signals from across the way. I take it the Hon. Member is in favour of air bases and defence procurement in the defence industry. Perhaps they may want to get their act together.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's question. She raises a very important point about economic considerations for the Atlantic region, and particularly as it relates to the fish stocks. That is a very important and urgent matter that has to be dealt with. Of course, Cabinet will be looking at it and taking whatever steps necessary to ensure that the fishermen and industry in the Atlantic region can in fact adjust to this difficult issue. We will be looking at exploring various options, plus taking a very strong stand internationally in terms of dealing with the issue of over-fishing, as my colleague, the Minister for International Trade, has alluded to.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE REQUESTED

Mrs. Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I would just tell the Deputy Prime Minister that I certainly understand the need for defending our Atlantic coast, as we have always done on the East Coast.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): You cannot hit anybody on this side on your defence closures because I think they were ridiculous. However, Mr. Speaker, the Minister did not answer. We had one Minister on the weekend saying a committee was set up. We had Premier John Buchanan in Nova Scotia saying that he welcomed the Prime Minister's order to set up a committee to take an "in depth look at the problem of Atlantic Canadians associated with many things, including the federal Budget."

Is it not ridiculous that this Government is going to set up a committee naming the same people on the committee who are responsible for the drastic cuts in Atlantic Canada? Did the Prime Minister order a select committee of Cabinet to study the problems of his Budget on Atlantic Canadians?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the concern about Atlantic Canada extends from the Prime Minister right through the whole Cabinet.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Could have fooled us.

Mr. Mazankowski: As the Hon. Member realizes, if she were to look at the figures in a factual way, support for regional development programs is going up, not going down, as it has over the last four years, compared to the previous four years. Of course, Cabinet is seized with this very important issue and will explore a number of options. If there are any announcements to be made they will be made in the usual manner.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO BUDGET LEAKS

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It is now clear that there was more than one Budget leak at the time of the April Budget. The Minister knows that he has security personnel right in his own Department to help him with this most important question.

I would like to ask the Minister the following very concise questions: When did he know about the other Budget leaks? What did he do about it? Why did he not tell this House about it?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what we did know quite clearly was that there was the leak on the Global television network on the Wednesday night of April 26. The following morning there were a number of allegations. I might remind the Hon. Member that people on his side, and people in the New Democratic Party, referred to these allegations in the preamble to their questions in Question Period that day. I remind the Hon. Member that these are allegations. They are allegations that are subject to an inquiry by the RCMP. I am advised by the RCMP that all of the allegations are the subject of that inquiry. It would be inappropriate for me to comment further on any of those allegations at this time.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I did read some statements that were made in Hansard on Thursday and Friday. I want to assure the House that I read very carefully all things that I have said about this matter. I stand by those statements. There is no way that I have misled this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

RCMP INVESTIGATION

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Mr. Speaker, the Minister still feels it is inappropriate to speak to this House on a matter of crucial importance to the House and to the people of this country. He maintains that. On April 27, the Solicitor General advised this House that the RCMP was investigating possible profit-taking on the Budget leaks by investigations through the four concerned provincial securities commissions. A press report this past weekend suggests that the Ontario Securities Commission had not yet even been contacted. Can the Minister advise the House in which provinces the investigation is taking place and why officials in Ontario knew nothing about this when the Solicitor General told us on April 27 that these securities commissions had been contacted?

• (1440)

Mr. Peterson: No doubt it is under investigation.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, as my colleague mentioned earlier, the RCMP Commissioner informed me today as well that the RCMP is continuing its investigation.

However, contrary to allegations made by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East on Friday, I have been informed that the Ontario Securities Commission was contacted on April 27, as was mentioned, and as were other organizations in the course of the investigation, as necessary.

Since the investigation is still under way, Mr. Speaker, I think we should all refrain from commenting on the case.

SECOND BUDGET LEAK—DATE MINISTER ADVISED

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): My question is for the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. Last week, when the Minister was not in the House, it was confirmed that his Deputy Minister, Mr. Fred Gorbet, was telephoned on the morning or the afternoon of April 27 to say that a Toronto company had access to Budget information for three days before the Budget was to be presented in the House.

I want to know from the Minister of Finance when his Deputy Minister contacted him regarding the second Budget leak? Was the Minister of Finance aware that this Toronto company had information three days before time when he rose in the House on the afternoon of April 27 at 5.40 p.m. to deliver his Budget Speech?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think I have responded to the elements of that question in my response just a minute or two ago. What I have said very clearly is that these are allegations. I am advised by the RCMP that these allegations are all part of the investigation which the RCMP is currently carrying on.

In response to what I think the Hon. Member is getting at with the last part of his question, I repeat, I have read everything I have said in this House about that matter. I stand by the statements that I have made. I repeat, I have not in any way misled this House.

SECURITY OF BUDGET QUESTIONED

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, in the House of Commons on April 27, the Minister rose on a Question of Privilege and said, as reported in Hansard at page 1005, that what happened was: "a wilful criminal act". What I want to know from the Minister today is whether or not he still stands behind his opinion that it was a wilful criminal act in the singular or was it, instead of that, perhaps sloppy security by the Minister and his Department?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Hon. Member has taken what I said somewhat out of context. Let me quote, "The premature release of details of the Budget appears to have resulted from a breach of trust"—"appears to have resulted from a breach of trust, a wilful criminal act—"

Mr. Tobin: Backing off now.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member says I am backing off now. That is precisely what I said on April 27.

Mr. Tobin: That is when the Barnum and Bailey Circus was in town.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If the Hon. Member could possibly read what was said, that is what was said on April 27.

I repeat exactly what I said to him one minute ago and to the Liberal questioner a few minutes ago. I have read carefully this and other statements which I have made in this House about this matter. I stand by every word that I have said.

NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

CONTAMINATED BLOOD SUPPLY—FINANCIAL SUPPORT REQUESTED

Mr. Stan Wilbee (Delta): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. We have 2300 haemophiliacs in Canada and 950 are now testing positive for the AIDS virus due to contaminated blood supply. Of these 950, 50 have already died and approximately 50 will develop full-blown AIDS each year in the next ten years. It has been several months since these people have applied to the Government for relief because of the catastrophic financial strain upon them. Could the Minister tell us today just what position these people are in and how soon they can expect the financial support requested?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, one of the first groups with whom I met after becoming Minister of National Health and Welfare was the Canadian Haemophilia Society. I am very much aware of the human tragedy which is involved in so many of these cases.

Since that meeting we have continued our discussions with the Canadian Haemophilia Society. We are working on a program designed to provide assistance to them and to other groups who have asked for compassionate assistance from the Government. We are making good progress on that and as soon as we are able to inform the House of further progress we will do so.

ARMX '89 TRADE SHOW

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Associate Minister of Defence. A few moments ago we heard the Minister say that she was in attendance this morning at the ARMX trade show. Can the Minister tell us who else was there?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Volpe: For example, would representatives from Iran have been there? Were the military attachés from Panama, Chile and El Salvador there as well? Did the Minister expect that they, too, would purchase from B.C. manufacturers of arms and will she tell us what these countries with deplorable human rights violations records are doing at a Canadian arms manufacturing show?

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I would indeed invite the Hon. Member to visit ARMX during the week because I think he will find that it is an extremely interesting opportunity to learn the newest in technology and training devices available to assist our Armed Forces.

This trade show is for Canadians and our NATO allies. It is not for Third World countries. Third World country representatives from outside the country have not been invited, nor would they be welcome at this show. I want to assure the Hon. Member that that is not the purpose. Sales are not going on as a result of ARMX to any of those Third World countries.

CONTROL POLICY QUESTIONED

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, first, I can assure the Minister that I will not accept an invitation even if she does mail it to me.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Who cares?

Mr. Volpe: Second, the hyprocrisy of this Government is just beyond comprehension. The Minister's Government and the Prime Minister are travelling world-wide saying that they deplore human rights violations everywhere, yet the Minister cannot assure us that these countries will not be in attendance. The Government is turning a forum—

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Volpe: Mr. Speaker, can the Minister give us guarantees of regulations that she will have put in place to ensure that none of the materials on display will end up in the hands of such countries with human rights violations?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs appeared before the House Committee on that subject a few days ago. There were questions asked him about our export control policy. The Secretary of State for External Affairs has invited the committee to look into our export control policy and its implementation if it is serious about this question. Rather than simply roaring and ranting in the House of Commons in the silly and jejune manner we have seen today, would the Hon. Member's Party like to look seriously at the control policy? If so, we will co-operate.

FINANCE

TIMING OF INFORMATION TO MINISTER OF SECOND BUDGET LEAK

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to follow up a question put this afternoon to the Minister of Finance in similar terms to that put to the Deputy Prime Minister Thursday and Friday.

When did the Minister's Deputy Minister or his officials learn of a second leak, other than the Global leak, of his Budget? Did they inform the Minister and, if so, when? Did he know of the possibility of a second leak when he stood on his feet in the House of Commons on the morning of April 27 on the issue of privilege and later the same afternoon when he presented that Budget?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, this is the third time I will be presenting precisely the same answer. These are allegations that have been made. They are allegations that were referred to in four or five questions in the House that day. I have said that I am advised by the RCMP that those allegations are the subject of the RCMP investigation and they have advised, according to the long-standing practice of this place, that it would be inappropriate for a Minister to comment on the details of any of the allegations that might be the subject of that investigation.

In response to the precise question the Right Hon. Member has asked about things I said in the House, I have reviewed very carefully everything I said that day. I stand by it fully. I have not misled the House in any way.

MINISTER QUESTIONED AS TO KNOWLEDGE OF SECOND LEAK AT TIME OF PRESENTATION OF BUDGET

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, that is an evasive answer. When the Minister of Finance rose in the House on a question of privilege, he referred to a single leak. He told the House on that question of privilege, in his argument before Your Honour to go forward with that Budget, that it was a single leak, that it had been contained, that no damage had been done and that no one would have profited from it. Did he, at the time he made that statement, know of the possibility of a second leak? Had he been informed of such possibility by his Deputy Minister or other senior officials? If so, why did he not be specific on that leak as well as the leak he mentioned in the House of Commons?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have been as precise as I can possibly be.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Did you know or did you not know?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I have said with great precision that I have read everything that I said in the House that day—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Did you know of the second leak?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Member is not willing to listen to the answer. I will give the Right Hon. Member an answer. Let me be very precise with him.

Mr. Tobin: Why are you hiding something?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to give that answer to the question if I am allowed to give it. Let me be quite precise. I have read everything that I have said in the House on that day including the reference I made to one event. I stand by that statement. I have not in any way misled the House.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CLOSURE OF BASE SUMMERSIDE

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. Did he and his departmental officials, in co-operation with the Minister of Finance, thoroughly investigate all the possible alternatives to keeping Base Summerside open other than the purely military one for which the base apparently is not cost-efficient.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's recognition that the main criteria of this Department is that of providing military security, and that was the rationale for the closure of Summerside. I have not had discussions with the Minister of Finance, but we have had discussions as a Government and as colleagues as to what assistance could be provided by the Government of Canada to the people of Summerside and to those of other bases as we progress through the down-sizing and closure of bases that no longer have military merit.

THREAT OF ECONOMIC RUIN TO PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, the Minister and the Government has condemned Summerside and indeed a big chunk of the Province of Prince Edward Island to economic ruin unless something is done for Summerside. Has the Minister considered the feasibility of actually increasing activity with respect to the protection of the fishery, protection against toxic waste dumping, surveillance against illegal immigration and increased surveillance against drug smuggling, all of which activities will increase as the years go by, rather than decrease, and for which Base Summerside is eminently suited and situated?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I take the Hon. Member's suggestions as being constructive. All the suggestions that have been put forward, of course, are suggestions that would be the responsibility of other Cabinet colleagues of mine. However, I am sure I will have discussions with those colleagues and with interested Members in Summerside as to what will take place as Summerside is phased out.

NATIONAL REVENUE

FAIRNESS IN THE TAX SYSTEM REQUESTED

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of National Revenue, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Last week, the Minister of National Revenue announced that he would be allowing tax deductions for those corporations that contributed to the free trade campaign. At the same time, National Revenue has rejected similar applications from businesses which made contributions to the anti-free trade campaign. This is a clear case of political favouritism and an unprecedented violation of the fairness of the tax system. Will the Deputy Prime Minister see to it that the order issued by the Minister of National Revenue is rescinded in order to restore a sense of fairness to the tax system?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, without agreeing with any of the conclusions the Hon. Member has suggested, I will certainly take the question as notice and raise it with the Minister when he returns to the House. I am sure that he will be back this week. Obviously, he is away on government business. I will give it urgent consideration and report back to the Hon. Member.

REQUEST FOR REFORM OF ELECTORAL ACT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, thank the Deputy Prime Minister for his offer, but I would ask him a supplementary question. Does the Deputy Prime Minister not agree that if this order is allowed to stand, it will lead to a massive intervention in the democratic system and really destroy the electoral Act? Is it not time for the Deputy Prime Minister to bring forward immediately legislation correcting and reforming electoral law to prevent such contributions in the future and to prevent the distortion of the electoral Act such as we saw during the last election?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is raising a number of serious allegations, some of which, without checking into the details of them, I would not want to associate myself with. As was indicated in the Speech from the Throne, electoral reform is an urgent priority and I hope that in the very near future we will be announcing a process under which that evaluation can take place to its fullest. I am sure the points the Hon. Member has raised will be taken into consideration at that time.

THE SECOND LEAK—KNOWLEDGE OF MINISTER

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Earlier, the Minister failed to answer the question put to him by my Leader. The question is quite simple: When he rose in the House on Thursday, April 27, was the Minister of Finance aware of the possibility of a second leak, yes or no?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have answered that question three times already. Let me refer the Hon. Member to the long-standing practice of this House whereby Ministers do not comment on matters that are the subject of RCMP investigation. I will quote words spoken by the Leader of the Opposition on November 30, 1984. He referred—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Why did you mention the first leak then?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Right Hon. Member asks about the first leak. The first leak was a fact. It was there on television. It was there in black and white. Everything else has been an allegation.

The Right Hon. Member was asking the Solicitor General a question and said: "Would he review the practice by reinstating the practice that used to apply in this House, and I believe still should, reflecting the principle of presumption of innocence until proven guilty? He must realize the reflection that announcements of investigations may have on private reputations and should refuse to reveal whether an investigation is in progress by the police unless and until charges are preferred". That is a quote from the Leader of the Opposition.

INSISTENCE OF MINISTER

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Finance. We are telling the Minister that he will not be able to hide behind parliamentary procedure. What we want to know is this: Was he or was he not aware of allegations about a second leak when he rose in the House on Thursday, April 27? Was he or was he not aware?

• (1500)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the response is the same. I have read each and every statement that I made on this matter in the House. I stand by each one of those statements, including the statement that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition referred to a minute ago where I referred to one matter, one leak, one incident here. I stand by that. There is no way that I have misled this House.

TRANSPORT

CANCELLATION OF REFURBISHING OF VIA RAIL CARS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. The Minister will remember that the Government of Canada decided not to give VIA Rail the money to replace its ancient rolling stock. Instead it gave it the money to refurbish the existing trains.

The Minister of Transport is listening if nobody else is. I want to ask the Minister of Transport if it is true that VIA Rail is about to cancel the refurbishing of the VIA Rail cars, throwing into jeopardy 1,950 direct and indirect jobs in Montreal and other parts of this country? Is it true that VIA Rail is about to cancel that project?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, with regard to VIA Rail, I already have said that we have referred to the corporation the new reference levels. We have asked that proposals or recommendations be made to the Minister within the corporate plan which will be done some time in June. When my friend referred to a decision, there is no decision to my knowledge which has been communicated to me by the corporation or the board of directors of VIA Rail, particularly in that sense.

FUNDS REQUIRED BY VIA RAIL

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister. In the event that VIA Rail comes back to the Government and says that the only way that it can make money operating VIA Rail is by getting new equipment, will the Government of Canada give prior indication that the money will be available?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we already gave to VIA Rail the new reference levels. It is 545 and so on for the next five years. There is no question about changing those reference levels. Any proposal which will be made by VIA Rail will have to take into account the new reference levels which were given some time in April.

VIA RAIL—CONTINUED SERVICE OF ATLANTIC LIMITED

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport responsible for VIA Rail. The Minister's Department has assured those living in isolated parts of the nation that they will not lose their rail service. Can the Minister now assure the over 250,000 VIA Atlantic Limited users from Atlantic Canada who not only use but depend upon this service annually that they will not be cut off from central Canada?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we already have said that nine lines that we call remote communities will not be deprived of any service by VIA Rail. I cannot give any other guarantee unfortunately for any other Canadian. It will depend on what the VIA Rail Board will recommend having in mind that they will try, I believe, to help Canadians who have not the best service at the present time. But any guarantee will be given after the report by VIA Rail.

PRIVILEGE

BUDGET LEAK—COMMENTS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege arising out of Question Period where the Solicitor General suggested, as I understood him, that I made a statement in the House which he said was not true, a false statement. The reason I would like to rise on a question of privilege is because I stated in the House last Friday, and I stand by my statement, that the director of investigations for the Ontario Securities Commission had not been contacted with respect to the Budget leak by the RCMP. I further learned today from Louise Labelle-Chevalier, Secretaire-Général of the Québec Securities Commission that in fact the Québec Securities Commission has also not been contacted by the RCMP. Louise Labelle-Chevalier is an official of the Québec Securities Commission. The information that I imparted Friday was from an official of the Ontario Securities Commission. If the Minister is going to insist in the House that somebody is speaking a falsehood, I think he owes it to the House to try to ascertain the truth of the matter. I would put the statement made by Louise Labelle-Chevalier or the Chief of Investigation of the Ontario Securities Commission up to his word any day.

Mr. Speaker: This may be getting well beyond an application of privilege. However, I will hear the Minister.

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I will repeat what I said earlier. Contrary to the allegations made by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East, I have been informed that the Ontario Securities Commission was contacted, as were other organizations, in the course of the investigation being conducted by the authorities that are investigating at this time. I then said it was inappropriate, considering that the RCMP was still investigating, to comment further on these events, Mr. Speaker, because I believe we should let the police do its work.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) may have a grievance but it is not a question of privilege. This is more like a disagreement between the Minister and the Hon. Member for Hamilton East concerning the situation that arose from a conversation between the Hon. Member for Hamilton East and perhaps an official or the Minister. It is a difference of opinion that is not up to the Chair to resolve. This is not a question of privilege.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask you to review the "blues" because I believe that during Question Period, the Minister said that I was guilty of a misstatement saying that the Ontario—

TENTH ANNIVERSARY OF "CLASS OF '79"

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order on a less serious but important matter. Yesterday marked the Tenth Anniversary of the class of '79. Many of us were elected 10 years ago. I would like to point out this momentous date for the House and to say that those of us who have survived the 10 years, and there are many on both sides of the House, are eternally grateful. I point out that Tenth Anniversary.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think that was a point of order, but it certainly was an announcement. I am very pleased that all those who came here 10 years ago are as happy as the Hon. Member.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

SUPPLY

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Ferguson:

> That this House condemns the Government for its destructive policies affecting Canadian farmers, that have particularly devastating impact on the dairy, grain, horticulture and tobacco sectors, that undermine supply management agencies such as the Canadian Wheat Board and marketing boards at both the federal and provincial levels, and that break Government promises relating to 1988 drought payments; and
> That this House calls upon the Government to fulfil immediately its promises with regard to drought payments for the 1988–89 crop year, to implement a contingency plan for the current crop year, in view of indications of another drought in Western Canada, and to reverse its policies that are destroying the Canadian supply management system.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When the House rose at one o'clock, there were two minutes left in the question and comment period. I believe the floor belongs to the Hon. Member for Mackenzie.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Just before we closed for the luncheon recess, the Member for Durham (Mr. Stevenson) asked me two or three questions which I would like to respond to quickly. First, he asked if the program that I outlined on behalf of the New Democratic Party for agricultural support was a program like the Common Agricultural Policy in the European community. It is not. If it is modelled after any program, it is probably closest to the United States. What we did was divide the amount of production that is produced within the country and decided that we could provide some price guarantees for the production that is in fact consumed within the country. Initially we said we would set the price guarantees equivalent to the guarantees established south of the line, that eventually we would move to cost of production based on costs for the medium-sized farm. The Hon. Member for Durham asked what type of economic impact our program would have in comparison to the programs that have been brought in ad hoc by the Government. They would have less economic impact to the extent that the programs that were introduced by the Government were aimed at farms much larger than the median size. I would remind Members of the House that the median size is where half the farms are larger and half the farms are smaller. By targeting that size, there would be virtually a neutral economic impact. Rather than focusing less dollars on the average and smaller-sized farm, which our program would do, the Government's approach has been to encourage largeness only for the sake of maximizing the amount of subsidies that the Government has tended to make available. Our program would not provide that type of counter-incentive to the system. It would be virtually program-neutral, and would have permitted economic forces to make the decision as to whether or not a farm should be larger. That decision would not be subject to doing it in order to maximize the amount of government subsidies that would be available.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Algoma.

On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, I would appreciate knowing if the order is two opposition Members and one government Member, then two opposition Members and one government Member. I am not in any way questioning Your Honour's judgment. I am curious as to the order, because the Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Althouse), who is an opposition Member just spoke, and I assumed that a government Member would follow.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I do appreciate the Hon. Member stating that he was not putting my judgment in question. I think that he will also understand that this being an opposition day, it is quite normal that we would hear at first one Member from each of the Parties, which we have had, and now we are going back to the Official Opposition that has brought about the motion. If the Hon. Member rises afterward he will be recognized.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, I want to compliment you on your decision with regard to the point of order raised by the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia (Mr. Wilson). It was a very wise judgment that you made.

When the Minister of State for Agriculture (Mr. Blais) spoke this morning, he did not respond to the questions that I directed to him regarding the very serious concerns of the dairy industry across the country with respect to the decision made on the domestic pricing of milk. That is unfortunate. I have never seen the dairy producers as concerned as they presently are about what will happen to the whole supply management and marketing board system that we have in the country. I put the argument to the Minister, and he did not respond as to what will happen to the whole supply management question. This is amplified by the decision of the Royal Bank, and I am sure other banks, to withdraw half of the value of the quota in calculating the value of a farmer's assets for loan purposes when making loans to farmers, in other words the calculation of debt to equity ratio.

These are extremely serious matters which should not be sloughed off by a Minister of the Government as they were this morning. We know that the price of fuel is going up this year. The dairy industry wants to know what will happen if the price of other input costs also go up such as feed or fertilizer. Will they be prevented from having a pricing increase in either the target price for industrial milk or for the formula price for fluid milk?

No one questions the decision of GATT to freeze the price of commodities at the international level during the negotiation period for the next 18 months. If we are going to move down from the trade war which has been going on, then obviously the international price is caught up. As Mr. Grant Smith, the Chairman of the Ontario Milk Marketing Board has pointed out, for fluid milk supply management, the marketing board does not affect the international price, and so they are very concerned.

This morning I asked the Minister what action could be taken with regard to the decision of the Royal Bank of Canada to limit the value of quotas, to cut them by 50 per cent, to raise interest rates to those producers, and to limit the five-year loan period. It would be very interesting to know exactly what was meant in the memorandum of April 17 where it stated that the increased risk is real and a change in policy is called for as a result of the Government's announcement on April 14 by the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski).

I hope that the Minister of Agriculture or the Minister of State for Agriculture will come clean and clarify the exact status of the supply management industry across Canada, especially as it affects the dairy industry. There are similar concerns being expressed by poultry, egg, and turkey producers who are also under national farm marketing regimes.

It seems to me that as the Official Opposition put this motion today, we are seeing a country whose agriculture industry is facing perhaps the most uncertain time in history. It is not only the uncertainty of what is happening at the GATT or with the free trade deal, but also the uncertainty as a result of broken promises. There was an ironclad commitment made last fall during the election campaign that marketing boards would be preserved, that they were safe, and nothing was going to happen to them. Yet, we see what has already happened. Banks are withdrawing their credit support. In the first few months of this year marketing boards have lost their ability to raise prices where input costs rise. There is great concern about what is happening.

This weekend there was a report in the Ottawa Citizen about a young couple who farm in Manitoba. In the article Nancy Drul was quoted as stating:

> "It's hot, it's dry, it's windy, and they're broke. This is a very scary situation."

The article further states:

> Farmers like the Druls were stunned this spring when, in the course of one week, they watched the federal government cut and slash at programs that carried many through the tough times of the late 1980s.
> In that black week of late April, the government:
> Reduced the subsidy it pays for hauling grain to ports;
> Said there would be no interim payment from the Western Grains Stabilization Fund. (Last year farmers received $695 million);
> Announced initial prices farmers are paid for wheat and barley at the elevator will decrease;
> And introduced a budget that will remove some interest-free cash advances to farmers and, next year, remove a fuel-tax rebate farmers have received.

The family points out that last year they had $100,000 in revenues and $68,000 in costs. They point out that one-quarter of the revenue came from Government payments and that most of that will be gone in this crop year. There is extreme hardship and extreme concern out there.

• (1520)

The food processing industry across the country is saying that the Government must make up its mind about marketing boards within one year. We expected that if the Tories won the election and implemented the free trade deal, with its commitment to the Americans which considered farm marketing boards to be subsidies, that the removal of subsidies would take several years. Now we see the grocery products manufacturing industry saying that there will be chaos in one year unless the Government caves in and gets rid of the marketing boards. There is extreme concern about exactly what will happen and what is the Government agenda.

Nothing has destroyed dreams more than the Government's Budget, with the elimination of credit by banks to those under supply management systems, as well as reduced interest rate support.

I want to refer to a group that usually supports the Government. The Western Canadian Wheat Growers point out that since April, 1988, the Bank of Canada's prime rate has climbed from 9.6 per cent to 12.6 per cent, resulting in a potential drain of more than $350 million from the western farm economy. They state that the second blow hits when farmers take their crops to market because high interest rates artificially deflate the value of the Canadian dollar, resulting in lower grain receipts on international markets. They say western Canadian farmers cannot absorb this two-way cash squeeze.

If that is what the Government's friends are saying about it, one can imagine what those who are less enchanted by the Tories are saying. They are in complete disarray as to how they will cope.

I believe that the Agriculture Committee of the House did a monumental piece of work last year in looking at one of the most important aspects of agriculture, the cost of financing. We worked for several months on a report entitled "The $22 Billion Problem", which pointed out that some $6 billion worth of funding could not be adequately serviced. Since then, interest rates have risen dramatically.

The Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia, the Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Althouse) and other Members in the House who served on that committee looked to the Speech from the Throne with great interest.

There were three lines about agriculture in the Speech from the Throne. One statement was that the whole agriculture situation was too much of a drain on the economy of the country.

There were a number of recommendations in our report on innovative ways to finance agriculture, especially for new farmers. Not one of those recommendations was implemented in the Budget. In fact, the Budget is designed to add some $500 million in extra costs to farmers over two years. Crop insurance is being cut back by $200 million. The transportation program is being cut back by $60 million. The rail branch line rehabilitation program is being cut back by $48 million. All of these programs were promises made by the Government.

Others include the dairy export program which is cut by $12 million; the Canadian Dairy Commission which is cut by $10 million, the commodity based loan program which is cut by $15 million.

The grain and crop advance payments program will be cut by $54 million over two years.

There are two main subsidized interest rate programs. One is the crop advance payment program under which the Government provides some financial interest rate support so that farmers do not have to sell their crop immediately in the fall but can hold it until the price is better or transportation and other factors are right in order to get maximum benefit. That program is being cut in direct violation of a campaign commitment in 1984.

The other subsidized interest rate program is the commodity based mortgage. While I was not entirely in favour of this program, the Government fully supported it. In some instances it did provide lower interest rates, although the farmer would have had to pay more if the commodity value rose. That program was also cut.

When one considers these measures, we can see that farmers will face much greater difficulty than they have in the past, at least as far as interest rates are concerned.

It is also interesting to look at the Budget itself to see how many of the cut-backs listed therein were listed as subsidies in the free trade deal. It will be interesting to find out from the Minister the results of his meeting today with Mr. Yeutter to see how many of the subsidies in the United States that are listed in this agreement have been cut out.

The cut-backs in the Budget include agricultural stabilization, the At and East transportation subsidy, ARDA, the Prairie Branchline Rehabilitation Program and the Farm Credit Corporation Commodity Based Mortgage.

While the domestic price gap of the Canadian Wheat Board will not be removed, clearly the Government is indicating that it wants to get rid of the Canadian Wheat Board. It has already removed oats, and it will be interesting to see if Mr. Yeutter is putting the pressure on the Minister today to remove barley.

While it is clear that the Government is attempting to remove most of these subsidies, I do not understand why it would do so. It was my belief that the Government would negotiate with the Americans over the next five to seven years a code of subsidies that would not be subject to countervail or dumping, as well as negotiate an arbitration procedure when disputes occur.

However, the domestic price of wheat has been removed and at least six or maybe more of the subsidies outlined in this agreement have already been given away. As far as agriculture is concerned, all the subsidies will be removed before the negotiations. I only hope the Americans are doing the same thing as the Tory Government. There will be little to negotiate with regard to an agricultural subsidies code because most of these subsidies are being wiped out unilaterally.

Usually you get something when you give something when negotiating. According to this procedure, the Government is unilaterally cancelling most of the items which are identified as subsidies. I read with great interest the Minister's speech which he gave in Toronto at the National Agrimarketing Association Conference. The Minister said in his speech:

> The trade agreement provides for a dispute settlement mechanism that will overcome irritants and help enhance market access. It's going to ensure anti-dumping and countervail actions are applied fairly.

I thought that that was very interesting. Then he went on to state: "The law, not political self-interest, will govern the trade process."

• (1530)

It is very interesting that a couple of weeks ago the United States slapped a countervail duty on our pork going into the United States. I could not believe the Minister's words. It seems to me that if there ever was political self-interest, the fact that the United States is to impose countervail duty on pork is it. The reason the Americans were able to do it is because after the trade deal was passed last October the Omnibus Trade Bill was brought into the United States Senate. Senator Bachus proposed an amendment stating that a countervail when applied to a primary product could be applied equally to a secondary phase of that product. You will recall, Madam Speaker, that in 1936 the United States imposed a countervail duty on our hogs going into the United States. Immediately that amendment was passed in the Omnibus Trade Bill to the countervail duty law, the United States pork producers petitioned the International Trade Commission for a countervail. It is being applied on an interim basis.

I really do not think that the Minister was thinking about the application of that countervail duty on our pork when he made this speech in Toronto in which he talked about the beauties of the situation, since our pork producers are already facing extremely low prices. Now there is a countervail duty as well.

In the same speech given to the National Agrimarketing Association conference the Minister talked about the quality of our beef products going into the United States. If there has ever been concern expressed it is with respect to what is happening in terms of our grading standards in beef. What is happening is that we are not harmonizing through negotiations with the United States, but the United States is shipping larger quantities of no-rolle or ungraded beef into Canada. Our producers are having to compete with that. Our whole grading system, which is one of the best in the world, is being destroyed. That is regrettable. If we require beef produced in this country which is going into interprovincial trade to be graded then the same should apply to beef coming into Canada from the United States.

I have set out a number of our concerns. Our agriculture industry is facing extremely difficult times and great uncertainty. This is seen when one talks to western farmers who are not sure whether the Government will come through on its payment for drought assistance since in the Estimates there was only half enough money to pay for it. We do not know whether or not the Canadian Wheat Board will be destroyed because of pressure from the United States. The Government has already knuckled under and taken oats out from under its control.

I believe we are facing a very difficult time and great uncertainty. At the same time we are facing this great uncertainty, the Government seems to be withdrawing all types of programs not only to assist the Minister of Finance but to implement the free trade deal.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, I would like to direct a question to my hon. friend from Algoma. He made reference to the $22 billion problem, the report rendered last year by the Standing Committee on Agriculture. Indeed, he was generous enough to refer to it as a monumental piece of work. Perhaps he was overly generous in his description of it.

What I recall in particular about the hearings that went on before the report was written and in the preparation of the report was that there were really no quick fixes, no easy solutions out there. All of them would involve taxpayers' money. I think there has been perhaps a universal desire to see lower long-term interest rates for the agriculture community. However, I want to ask my friend what criteria he would propose be set out for such a program if indeed he favours one. How would it be paid for?

During the course of those hearings on farm debt we heard over and over again from various responsible farm groups that imposing an artificially low interest rate in agriculture really did not do anyone any favours because the interest rate concession inevitably becomes capitalized into higher asset values, higher land and machinery prices and, in effect, exacerbates the problem. It does not really help the young farmer. It does not do anything for him.

It seems to me the key is not to seek special concessions for one sector but rather to try to get interest rates down across the board in the country.

Does my hon. friend agree with that? Or does he adhere to the idea that there should be special interest rates for the farm community? If so, how would he structure them? How would he propose to pay for them?

Mr. Foster: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member raises two very interesting points. Clearly, there are a number of programs to which he agreed when our committee reported. I will not try to go into the details of that half-inch thick document.

Interest rates in the country are very high. We are about 3.5 points above the United States, as I understand the rates right now. That imposes a great cost on Canadian producers. Mr. Harvey McEwen, the President of the Western Canadian Wheat Growers, has pointed out that the increase in interest rates by almost 3.5 per cent in the last year is costing western Canadian agriculture some $350 million per year. That is a great cost to our producers. It is something that is set by the Government. Whether or not it is an under the table deal by the Government of Canada as part of the free trade deal, we do not know. Certainly, when Congressmen, Members of Parliament and Senators meet all the talk is about the very low exchange rate by the United States officials. Whether there is a deal between the Government of Canada and the United States to keep our interest rates 3.5 per cent to 4 per cent above the United States, nobody knows for sure.

The Government does not have many programs. It is not wise enough to choose some of the programs such as the shared appreciation mortgage program, the stabilization fund, or some other of the programs which the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia (Mr. Wilson) and other members of the committee recommended. As a matter of fact, the Government did not do anything. It did not provide any assistance even though as Harvey McEwen said in the letter he sent to every Member of Parliament, interest costs have gone up by $350 million in western Canada alone. I am sure if that is applied right across the country we are probably looking at $700 million or $800 million.

The Government brought in the commodity based mortgage which, as far as I know, is the only subsidized program around. It even cut that out. It was not a very large program but the Hon. Member and others have said that it was very good. It involved some $15 million over a several year period. Even that was cut out.

It seems to me that programs like the Advance Payment Program really gets the farmer two ways. Not only does he not have that support to market at a more convenient time or a time when he can get his best price, but it tends to push everybody, especially those who are in a financially hard-pressed position, to market as soon as the crop comes off. That only exacerbates the situation and drives prices lower. The net value of that program is probably way above the cost, which I think is $27 million a year. We have the crop being marketed over a period of time, rather than everybody, especially those who are in a difficult financial position, marketing as soon as the crop comes off.

I hope I have been able to clarify these important matters for the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Further questions or comments. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia.

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, may I say I appreciate clarifying the matters earlier, and I certainly appreciate your advice.

I would like to participate in this debate from the perspective of a prairie Member of Parliament. My riding of Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia contains some 23,000 square miles of farming and ranching area, across more than half of southern Saskatchewan. My riding would be more dependent or certainly as dependent on the prosperity of the agricultural sector, especially the grain sector, as any constituency in the nation.

This opposition day motion purports to criticize this Government for its actions toward agriculture. I must say at the outset, I am rather surprised that the opposition Members would pick a topic like this. I recall they did so a couple of years ago and the debate went on for several days around the clock. It was a most successful opportunity for Members on this side to be able to outline and explain the enormous response which our Government has made to Canadian agriculture during its term of office.

During the 1986 Throne Speech, the statement was made that the Government would spare no effort in protecting the interests of the Canadian farmer. I suggest that that sums up the policy upon which our Government has embarked.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski), and the Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds) (Mr. Mayer), have consistently pursued that policy in support of Canadian producers. They have done it in two ways: externally, through negotiations, seeking order in agricultural trade. They have done it through the Cairns group, the group of grain exporting nations. They have done so through the latest multinational round of GATT. They will continue to pursue that elusive goal of trying to bring order to agricultural trade world-wide to try to reduce and ultimately bring an end to a disastrous round of production and export subsidies which have been so harmful and destructive to grain prices internationally, and which have so seriously affected our grain producers.

Domestically, the policy has manifested itself in a number of programs which Members in this House, and certainly those in the farm community, will be very familiar with. This Government has cushioned farmers hurt by those external problems that I mentioned, the external trade wars, as well as the drought problems here at home. There have been a whole series of programs, amendments to Western Grain Stabilization, improvements to crop insurance. There was a 1985 drought program. There was the Canada Special Grains Programs, 1 and 2, which contributed respectively $1 billion and $1.1 billion to Canadian farmers in order to overcome the hurt that was inflicted on them as a result of the the grain war between the European Economic Community and the United States. Last year we had the drought problem. This was not just in Saskatchewan but across many parts of Canada.

I want to briefly address the grain sector, the impact of the drought, and perhaps make some comments in regard to the Canadian Wheat Board. Certainly those are areas which impact strongly on the Prairies and western Canada generally.

My Province of Saskatchewan is one which is very dependent on grain export dollars. Regardless of the much needed diversification that is taking place across Saskatchewan and western Canada, there seems to be little question but that agriculture will continue to be the force that shapes the prairie economy.

Against a backdrop of historically low grain prices occasioned by trade wars beyond our borders and of poor yields occasioned by weather related disasters which are beyond the purview of Government, it is remarkable that the Province of Saskatchewan, so dependent on agriculture and especially the grain export sector, has been able to virtually maintain its population. It has been able to survive the most difficult times certainly since the 1930s. I suggest it is because the ravages of low prices and drought have been in large measure cushioned by a number of federal and federal-provincial programs which were designed to ameliorate the situation, indeed programs which were unprecedented in their magnitude.

I would like to make a few remarks relating specifically to the 1988 drought. I believe that that is in part the subject matter of the Opposition motion that is before us today. The federal Government has proved its commitment to the agricultural industry since it was elected in 1984. The help given to producers hurt by the 1988 drought is no exception.

The Government announced in May, 1988 a $12 million program to assist in water development. That was over and above regular moneys that were allotted to the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Administration. This $12 million was to help producers to develop water supplies. The program was an enormous success. Indeed, I am told it has been over-subscribed. In June, there was another $153 million program announced to assist western livestock producers who were hit by a drought. There were payments of up to $60 per head.

In addition, there was the green feed program to help alleviate a feed shortage. For the first time ever a there was tax deferral on the forced sale of livestock. This is something that The Cattlemen's Association and western cattle producers have requested over several generations, and it seemed eminently reasonable, and I am happy to say that our Government was able to respond.

Last fall, the Canadian Crop Drought Assistance Program was announced. This is a program that would provide approximately $850 million to producers who suffered crop damage because of the drought. As the impact of the drought started to affect cereal crops last summer, the Government focused its efforts on finding solutions to the problem. There were discussions with federal–provincial drought committees. Producers were heard at meetings in Guelph and in Saskatoon last August. There were some things that emerged from those meetings. There was agreement, I believe, that any assistance should compliment the existing crop insurance programs and the integrity of these programs should be maintained. The integrity of crop insurance was preserved and will continue to be maintained. Crop insurance is, after all, the producers first line of defence against disaster. Crop insurance works well.

As a result of the 1988 drought, crop insurance paid out a record $900 million. It is clear that crop insurance can be improved. There is work ongoing at the present time between the federal and provincial Governments, and with the input of farm organizations toward trying to make some meaningful and useful changes to make crop insurance more responsive to the needs of producers. In the summer and fall of 1988 the extent of the damage was great. It was beyond what the existing safety net of crop insurance and stabilization was able to cope. Some crop insurance prices reflected depressed prices which were brought on by the U.S.–common market trade war, so producers needed better protection. With the assistance of producers the four cornerstones of the Canadian Crop Drought Assistance Program were set.

First, the program had to be national in nature. Second, it should apply equally to all commodities. Third, the program had to be targeted because there were certain portions of five provinces where there was drought and where producers were affected.

Finally, the program should be crop specific. The drought program was designed to provide the most assistance to those who were hurt the most and there has been extensive research and data collection required to accomplish that goal.

The Government consulted farm organizations which told the Government that drought assistance should be targeted very carefully in order to reach those farmers who were hit hardest. Statistics have been obtained from provincial crop insurance offices in order to obtain crop information on areas right down to the township level.

This program covers five provinces, more than 100 different crops from wheat to apples. More than 4,500 townships have been designated as drought areas. I would like to outline how the program works. It was recognized that farmers in the most severe drought areas would need assistance quickly to help them put in a crop this year.

Provincial crop insurance figures were used to designate three types of drought areas; severe, moderate and least affected. These areas were preliminary and were designed to show where interim payments would be made and for those purposes only. Further areas could be eligible for assistance later when final provincial crop insurance figures become available. Interim flat acreage payments were directed at farmers who were in the designated areas initially identified as severe or moderate. Final payments will be made, according to the officials, in July to all eligible producers.

The payment formula will target the assistance to those areas which were hardest hit. The assistance payments are, of course, in addition to crop insurance. All grains, oil seeds, special crops, vegetables and fruits produced in drought areas are eligible for assistance. Producer review committees have been established in each of the provinces to handle appeals under the program.

The program is on track. To date, interim payments have been processed, cheques valued at over $211 million have been mailed out to over 56,000 producers. More than 121,000 applications were mailed directly to producers and over 114,000 completed applications have been returned to the drought program administration.

A process is being put in place to handle requests from producers whose areas may not initially have been designated for assistance. The fact is that in regard to this program the Government is keeping its commitments, is living up to its promises, as it has every step of the way over the preceding four years.

The drought presented problems to producers that are as varied as the crops produced across this country. The drought program, if it is to be successful, has to recognize the complexities and it must deliver assistance accordingly.

The final program calculations will be completed when the provinces provide us with final data. This data will allow the administrators of the program to provide yield and price coverage above what has already been provided by crop insurance.

The federal Government recognized the need to get as much money as possible to producers without the benefit of the final yield data from the crop insurance offices. To that end application forms were mailed out to producers on the basis of the data provided to the administrators of the program by the provincial crop insurance agencies. On the basis of this data forwarded in late January, interim payments were made. These payments were as high as possible without risking over-payment.

The program was built on cornerstones of being a national program, of being crop specific, and being targeted to those who need help the most. It is very easy to criticize a program like this because we all know from past experience that any program which is a substitute for the market-place involves the designation of some artificial criteria. You have to start drawing lines on maps. Whenever you do that some people feel good because they are on the right side and other people feel badly because they are on the wrong side. It does not matter because you can erase the line and move it, but, there will still be an equal number of people who feel aggrieved. So, no one is suggesting that this is a substitute for the workings of the market-place. What we are saying is that it is an attempt on the part of the federal Government to redress the problems which arose as a result of that unfortunate 1988 drought.

If we contrast this program with the Special Grains Programs of the previous couple of years, it is easy to see why it does take some time. The Special Grains Programs were designed to address the price shortfall occasioned by the shoot out in the trade war between the Europeans and the Americans.

Moneys were paid to all producers on the basis of prices having been affected as a result of the trade war. It was a universal program. All producers in the country qualified.

This particular Crop Drought Assistance Program is infinitely more complex and complicated because it attempts to target those producers who are in the affected drought areas and then it goes beyond that to a further degree of fine tuning and attempts to gauge the amount of assistance to the severity of the crop damage suffered by the producer. This is an enormously complex task and if nothing else, it points out the need for reform of the basic programs.

We are trying to strengthen the farm income safety net so that hopefully, in the future, it will be possible to get away from the programs which we have to come forward with which involve the drawing of lines, setting up of criteria and all the difficulties that come with them.

In other words, we would hope to get away from the ad hocery and, of course, to this end there are some very meaningful discussions ongoing. The Grains 2000 group from Winnipeg has put forward some positions for discussion as well as the Department of Agriculture. There have been consultations with the provinces and with many of the leading farm organizations across the country. Certainly it is expected there will be some serious proposals tabled this year with a view to reform of the basic safety net programs, a measure which I am sure Members on all sides, and indeed, all those associated with agriculture will welcome.

I want to just say something in the time remaining in regard to the Canadian Wheat Board. The Board is a trusted and valued institution for producers in western Canada and it is not being undermined in any way. The Wheat Board recently celebrated its fiftieth year in the service of producers within its jurisdiction in what we call the Canadian Wheat Board area in the wheat-growing areas of western Canada. The Board is responsible for export marketing of wheat and barley. It will continue to perform that goal. The Board has helped Canadian producers to establish a reputation for quality grain in the world's market-place.

During the height of the trade war, which I referred to many times, the Board has continued to be able to market grain successfully and to maintain Canada's share in the world market. During the 1987-88 crop year the Board exported a record 31.7 million tonnes of grain, oil seeds and other products. That broke the old record for exports set in the previous year. So, it is clear that the Government stands behind the Canadian Wheat Board.

Last year Bill C–92 was passed which had the effect of strengthening the Canadian Wheat Board by giving greater powers of borrowing and investment to the administrators of the Board. The Government of Canada over the past several years has acted as a backstop for the Board. There was the unfortunate situation of several years ago. The Board basically set the initial prices some 16 months in advance of the end of the crop year of August 31. These were established based on information available at the time which turned out to be overly optimistic with the result that over $300 million of taxpayers' money had to go to the Wheat Board to supplement shortages in the Wheat Board accounts as a result of over–payments made to Canadian producers.

There is also the matter of the sovereign loans made by the Canadian Wheat Board, loans to importing nations, loans which are guaranteed by the Government of Canada. At this time, there is in excess of $3 billion outstanding, and of course, in the event of default, it is not paid by producers but would come out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

There is as well the matter of initial prices that are set by Government but on the recommendation of the Canadian Wheat Board. It is the Wheat Board which is in the industry and has sensors around the world. It gives advice on the proper range in which to set the initial prices. Initial prices, of course, are the moneys the farmer receives when he initially delivers his grain to the elevator on the Canadian prairies.

If prices strengthen, there is what is called a final payment. That comes at the end of the crop year and represents the difference between the amount for which the grain is sold by the Canadian Wheat Board and the initial payment which the farmer receives at the elevator. There has been some criticism of the Government because these initial payments are considered too low. I should point out that the Government is relying on the advice and expertise of the Canadian Wheat Board when establishing the initial payment levels.

It is the job of the Opposition to criticize, that is fair enough, but surely to do so in a constructive way. Again I have to express some disappointment in that thus far in the course of this Opposition day debate, we have heard a litany of criticism, some warranted and some not, since we do not live in a perfect world, but absolutely no alternatives. I would like to hear, during the course of the Opposition debate, some suggestions as to how things could be made better.

The Government has co–operated and consulted with the producers of Canada as no other Government has before it. We on this side would like to have that same degree of co–operation in an attempt to work together to help Canadian agriculture. I urge Hon. Members opposite to put away the rhetoric and instead to come forward with solid and substantial alternatives in order that we can work together to build a better agricultural economy.

Finally, the Government made the undertaking several years ago to stand solidly behind the farm community of Canada and will continue to do so. The Government is committed to building a strong and vibrant agricultural economy and I believe the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has consistently demonstrated the leadership required to accomplish this end. The Government will continue to show the leadership necessary to fulfil the goals of Canadian agriculture.

Mr. Foster: Madam Speaker, I listened very carefully to my hon. colleague from Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia (Mr. Wilson) and I was pleased to hear him extol the virtues of and to support the Canadian Wheat Board. He spoke of co–operation and of the consultation the Government has engaged in. He exhorted opposition Members to display greater co–operation. Of course, we displayed that co–operation in the last Parliament when practically every government Bill went through in record time or at least all of those that were good Bills. There were a number of bad Bills that took several months or in some cases a year or so to pass. Clearly we are on record as being co–operative with all those good measures and we have already passed one Bill through the House since April.

I would like to question this whole business about consultation. Clearly the dairy farmers of Canada do not think that the consultations they had with regard to the GATT arrangements were adequate. If they did not think the consultations were inadequate, the Chairman of the Ontario Dairy Milk Marketing Commission would not have sent out an urgent letter to every producer demanding its members to immediately get in touch with the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski) and the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), to try to forestall the crisis which is facing the agricultural industry. If these people had been consulted, they would not have to send out letters like this demanding that the Members call upon the Prime Minister, the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister for International Trade as well as federal and provincial MPs. I would question that consultation. I also question the consultation that took place with regard to the removal of oats from the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board.

Clearly, the Government had the authority to do that and I do not say that oats needs to be under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board at all times, but clearly no one to whom I have spoken, and I have met with members of all of the prairie pools, feel that they were consulted. I am not simply talking about the advisory committee to the Canadian Wheat Board which may tend to be more supportive of the Wheat Board than those who attend community meetings.

A survey conducted by Decima Research, the polling organization of choice of the Government, the group that tells the Government what to do, shows that 63 per cent were opposed to the decision with regard to oats and only 32 per cent were in favour. As well, 76 per cent felt that there should be more consultation. In spite of what my hon. colleague says, I think there has been a drastic decline in consultation on these issues.

There is one question I would like to put to the Hon. Member. In discussions in the Agriculture Committee, there has been a great deal of support and encouragement for and interest shown in the idea of the production of ethanol from surplus grains or damaged grains, both in eastern Canada and in western Canada. It is very interesting that the executive secretary of the Ontario Corn Producers points out in a newsletter to the producers that even though mega-bucks have survived for upgraders, natural gas pipelines to Vancouver, Hibernia and the tarsands project involving many billions of dollars, there was nothing in the Budget for fuel ethanol development. This is obviously a good method of diversification for the agricultural sector, both in western and in eastern Canada.

The Hon. Member is very close to the Minister of Agriculture. They consult regularly, and I am sure the Hon. Member is aware of the Minister's every idea. Perhaps he could tell us why, in spite of the $5 billion reduction in programs this year and the $9 billion reduction next year, the mega-buck projects survived while there was no incentive provided for fuel ethanol development. Perhaps the Hon. Member could explain exactly what the Government's thinking was in that regard.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to unravel further the series of comments on the question. First, I want to say, yes, I do consider myself close to the Deputy Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture, I suspect considerably closer than the Hon. Member might be to some of his front benchers. I am proud to be associated with a Minister of Agriculture who, I believe, has an unsullied reputation of co-operation and consultation with the farm community. I am amazed that the Hon. Member would question the commitment of this Government and indeed its leadership to that sort of consultation and co-operation. Perhaps part of the problem is, as the Member from Etobicoke North (Mr. MacLaren) expressed in an unguarded moment when he said, "From this time forward every sparrow that falls out of the sky will somehow be laid at the feet of the Free Trade Agreement". We are seeing more and more manifestations of that sort of thing. The sparrows are falling out of the sky, and regardless of the cause, they are laid at the feet of that agreement.

I believe that the Hon. Member made mention of the decision taken by the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer) with regard to oats. I can do little other than perhaps repeat to the Hon. Member what the Minister in charge of Grains and Oilseeds said some two weeks ago in the agricultural committee. He said that over the last 40 years oats has become very much a specialty product. It has gone from second or third to something like eleventh in terms of export importance out of the country. It has become very much a special crop because of the volume that we produce, the way it is produced, et cetera. I quote:

> We firmly believe that there are more opportunities for individuals out there, smaller companies, the co–operatives, individual seed–cleaning plants, farmers—.to process and sell oats to the United States by themselves.

It goes on to talk about the survey that the Hon. Member referred to. I believe it was a Decima survey and apparently on page 12 of that survey it says:

> The highest proportion, 41 per cent, believe the pricing of oats through other means will provide higher returns to farmers, 37 per cent believe it will provide lower returns.

That is an interesting commentary. Perhaps you can read anything you like into the results of that type of opinion survey. But the fact is there is a time to consult and there is also a time when a Minister has to make a decision. I know that the Minister in charge of Grains and Oilseeds has criss–crossed western Canada. He has been from one end of the country to the other consulting constantly with producers. It was his judgment, as he has indicated many times, that there was a split decision as far as the removal of oats is concerned. For the reasons that he has outlined many times, he took the decision. I believe that history will prove that he took the right decision.

Finally, I believe the Hon. Member asked the question about ethanol. It came, I believe, from the Member of a Party which has been kind to agriculture over the last 18 to 20 years. This is a Party which visited capital gains tax on Canadian farmers in 1971 at the same time it took away Part 17 capital cost allowance, a Party which brought the LIFT program to western Canada, the Party whose leader said: " Why should I sell your wheat". This is the Opposition who now stand across there purporting and attempting in a feeble way to criticize the outstanding record of this Government over the past four years toward Canadian agriculture.

I am over time, Madam Speaker, and I want to close by saying that there has been a western diversification initiative. Interestingly enough, it is now headed by the same individual as the Minister for Grains and Oilseeds. I am not familiar with every single program and every approval in there, but I would be surprised if there were not initiatives within the western diversification initiative that did not relate to ethanol.

I close, Madam Speaker, by saying that I do not think that the Government needs any lessons in how to deal properly and respectfully with Canadian agriculture. I believe that there has been a record put forward in the last four years which is unmatched in Canadian history. The commitment remains. This Government will continue to stand fully behind the farm population and producers of this country.

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Madam Speaker, I must say it is one of the great privileges of being a Member of Parliament from in the Province of Manitoba to have an opportunity to speak on the question of agriculture, an industry which is so dear to the hearts of its people and the one that has traditionally been the mainstay of its economy. In the spirit of the previous speaker, although I think he fell off the wagon near the end about the spirit of goodwill in discussing the problem of agriculture, I remember he too showed frustration with the Government when he stood up a few weeks ago and asked a question in the House about rail abandonment in his constituency. Therefore, it is not only a case of non–partisanship being worried about Government policy, but it us fundamental to the concerns of the people, and it is also about free speech.

My concern as a politician from the City of Winnipeg is in looking out over the countryside and watching year after year the ability of rural Manitoba to stay in existence, to strengthen itself, to build up a strong economy, in gradual decline. Although one would be remiss in simply pointing a finger at one particular Government, the fact that this particular Government has not responded to their needs should be pointed out to the House and discussed by all the Members.

We have heard a lot of facts and figures tossed about today related to the state of our farm economy and the lack of action that this Government has taken. The problem is that this is not an issue that can be dealt with solely in numbers. In fact, we have to take into account some of the human concerns. We have to begin to understand what it means to the people left behind when they see their schools close, when they see themselves lose their health institutions, when they see themselves lose another doctor, lose a dentist, when they see another bus route disappear, a senior citizens home not being built because lack of public money. All these concerns weigh heavily on the people of rural western Canada. Although it is hard to say that one particular program is going to turn things around, it is fair to say that the national agricultural policy continues to abandon these people. This is a story of people who are struggling against incredible odds and a commodity economy where right now the prices have left them very vulnerable to international trade practices, and therefore has caused a great deal of grief. This is the story of people left behind, of the closing down of rural Canada.

Earlier this year, this Government left 70,000 prairie farmers in limbo over federal drought assistance because they could not get the application forms in in time to prepare adequate submissions before the original deadlines. This is an example of a specific action not taken by the this Government which has created a lot of grief in western Canada. The complexity of this program has not only resulted in delays in getting the forms out. It is also costing an extra $9 million in administration costs over the previous year's program.

This followed an announcement in January by the Minister of Western Economic Diversification and Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer) that initial drought payments would be only 40 per cent to 50 per cent of the total amount due to the farmer. This is in direct contrast to the 70 per cent that this Minister promised during the election last year. One of the great cynicisms that has settled in western Canada is that the Party that has always played up to them, the Party that has always preyed upon the protest somehow finds extra money in an election year. We estimated, for example, the Minister for Western Diversification found $400 million last year. Yet this year he cannot find anywhere near that amount of money. It makes people very cynical of what is happening in western Canada.

These reduced payments have arrived three months later than usual. In the Throne Speech, this Government expressed its concern that agricultural producers were causing "undue pressure to bear on the nation's Treasury". That has become a phrase which has haunted western Canadian farmers since they heard it. As a result of that phrase, they are wondering what does it mean to be an undue pressure on the nation's Treasury. What does it mean to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson)? What does it mean to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski) to be an undue burden? What we are finding out year after year—or week after week in this case, but we will find out in the next few years also—exactly what it means to be an undue burden on this particular Government. It means that the western Canadian farmer is about to suffer.

In the Budget we discovered exactly what kind of measures this Government was prepared to take to relieve this pressure. It has eliminated interest-free commodity-based loans. It has removed $200 million over the next two years from the crop insurance program. It has set higher freight rates while cutting support for branch line rehabilitation. It has attacked the dairy commission. This is on top of a lower initial price for grain, a high interest rate policy maintained by the Government and a declining Canadian market share created by ever-increasing subsidies for producers in Europe and the United States.

What does the future hold for the Canadian farmer? This is the question in front of the House today. The Government on page 65 of its Budget papers has indicated that it will no longer rely on ad hoc programs to aid disaster afflicted farmers even though these programs have the immediacy and the flexibility to best deal with crisis. If there are to be no more ad hoc programs, what plan does the Government have? We feel that the Canadian farmer, and in particular the western Canadian farmer, deserves to hear what these plans are.

Not only has the Government failed to maintain an income- support structure for the Canadian farmer, it has also failed to provide a solution to the farm debt crisis that presents the greatest long-term danger to agricultural production in the country.

One of the greatest hidden statistics in the country, and one that we would like the Government to reveal, is how much acreage in western Canada is now owned by the Canadian banking system. One of the changes that has taken place, and which no one wishes to talk about, is the number of bankruptcies and the inability of Canadian farmers to refinance their operations.For example, the debt of an average prairie farmer in 1986 was thought to be approximately $88,000. That was an increase of $30,000 since 1981. The income available to pay that debt has been dropping. The projected loss in realized net income for a Manitoba farmer will drop by 27.5 per cent. Because of these and other factors, a study done by the Westarc Group, a group working out of western Manitoba, predicts that 4,600 farms will be lost in Manitoba alone over the next seven years.

In Saskatchewan and Alberta, the realized net income will be reduced by 15 per cent. The Saskatchewan pool estimates that 17 per cent of that province's farms are in financial trouble with more than one-half of that number in a non-viable state.

Last year, western farmers paid $7.27 per tonne of grain as their share of transportation costs to get their product to port for export. This year, this share will increase by 24 per cent to an average of $9 per tonne.

A few weeks ago, in various national news reports, the entire country saw the clouds of dust blowing off the fields in Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Alberta. This is no longer an isolated phenomenon on the Prairies, because it has become widespread and is feared in every corner. A visible dust cloud means a loss of five tonnes per acre of topsoil through soil erosion. This used to be a localized problem in the southern part of the Prairies, but now it is shared by everyone.

Without a strong farm economy, the viability of small towns and even larger centres such as Winnipeg is susceptible to increased pressures and decline. If farmers leave the land, the businesses they support will close or relocate. For example, in St. Anne, Manitoba, there is an unemployment rate of 29.6 per cent; St. Rose du Lac, 21.2 per cent; Neepawa, which is located in the riding of the Minister responsible for western economic diversification, has an unemployment rate of 12.1 per cent. Those rates would be higher if it was not for the sad fact that many young people, who see no future for them in their home towns, leave for places such as Winnipeg, and now beyond to Toronto and Vancouver.

There are community leaders in those towns who have attempted to get assistance from the Government to create jobs, but there has been no help forthcoming. They are not interested in creating megaprojects, but they have realistic plans to employ several people in the manufacturing of unique products that would aid in diversification of the western economy, particularly in small towns. They went to the Department specifically created for that purpose, the Department of the Minister responsible for western economic diversification, but they have come back empty handed time and time again. It seems that the Government is more interested in giving millions to multinationals like Boeing than several thousands to a small group in a community such as Roblin.

The Government has not done a proper job in making these programs available to people in rural Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta. An extensive survey of communities and farmers in Manitoba revealed that 50 per cent of people were unaware of any program which offered assistance to those who wanted to start small businesses. In other words, the very people the Government states it wants to help have no idea of the programs available to them. A total of 83 per cent of those surveyed stated that there was a need for the Government to provide better access to information about Government grants and programs available to individuals and communities.

At a series of community meetings held by the Westarc Group in its study of labour market needs in rural Manitoba, it soon became evident that program eligibility requirements that "may be appropriate for urban applicants may be entirely unsuited to the realities of rural Canada and thus thought to discriminate against rural utilization". This was stated by a group that works in Brandon, Manitoba. It is not a group from Winnipeg, Toronto, or a research group from Ottawa. These are the people the Government states it is attempting to help who are speaking out against the Government programs.

They also stated: "The CJS criteria of 42 weeks of unemployment is not applicable to rural areas—traditional unemployment conceptualizations do not have relevance for farmers and thus prevent the needed utilization of CJS benefits in much of rural Manitoba".

The report also stated: "Existing criteria preclude many small businesses having less than the required number of employees from participating and training grants. The majority of rural businesses fit in this category".

Another issue of concern relating to the applicability of Government programs to the rural area is that there are no programs related to the service industry. In urban areas, supporting the service industry is not as much of a problem, but in the country there is a real need to service the producers who already exist. The same study stated: "The view was expressed that existing programs are geared to manufacturing and processing. Since the majority of business in rural communities is in the service sector, the result is that very little Government programming is available for the small business sector in rural Canada".

How can a farmer survive in rural western Canada if there are not businesses around to deal with, to support, and to give service needed to make a farm a successful enterprise? If those services do not exist, the farmer must travel farther in order to get needed supplies and services. Good weather will not wait while a part is shipped from a regional distributor far away from the farm.

The western Canadian agricultural economy is also affected by the way that international markets have changed in the last 10 years. The United States has decided to pursue an aggressive marketing strategy to get rid of the agricultural surpluses created by its subsidy policy. For example, through the export enhancement program, American exporters receive a free bushel of grain for every three that they can sell. The exporter can do what he likes with this extra bushel, but usually it is built in to the over-all price, giving an automatic subsidy of 25 per cent. At the height of this program, the Americans were giving away one free bushel with every two sold for a subsidy of 33 per cent.

Who is in charge of this system in the United States of subsidies and giveaways? None other than Clayton Yeutter, the same U.S. dignitary who is now the Secretary of Agriculture and better known in this country as the architect of the "level playing field" and the Canada-U.S. free trade deal. He did us a great favour.

The European Economic Community is also involved in the subsidy battle. Neither the United States nor the EEC are concerned with managing farm output in the best interests of the producers. They have an open cheque-book policy. The more you grow, the more subsidy you get. This has created a surplus that both these economic units are willing to give away at fire sale prices.

In the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement there is a provision that both countries will sit down to discuss what constitutes a subsidy and what does not. There are 15 specific programs and agencies listed in the Free Trade Agreement as being up for discussion. The Government, more like an admission of guilt than any negotiating strategy or policy position, has already started to eliminate nine of our programs.

Aside from the cuts I have already mentioned, the Government has cut over $396 million from the Estimates for the Agriculture Stabilization Act, Special Grains Program, and the Advance Payments Program. Even though no definition of subsidy has been agreed on, the Government assumes that it is the guilt party. It is not Canada that is subsidizing agricultural exports to the greatest extent in the world, it is other countries. Ministers across the way might try to remember that once in a while. Even if they do not know where they are going, they might think about where they came from.

In conclusion, the Government has failed the western Canadian farmer in many important ways. It has failed to build up the infrastructure needed to ensure production and that support services are there. It has failed to provide job-creation programs of relevance to young people in western Canada. It has failed to maintain income stabilization programs across the West. It has failed in its transportation policies to support the western farmer. Finally, it is failing miserably in negotiating an agreeable situation among our international competitors.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Madam Speaker, I rise to participate in this debate with a great deal of pleasure. It is not that I agree with the substance of the motion, but I believe it is important to talk about agriculture, and particularly to hear what the Opposition has to say on this very important issue, because it is indeed an important issue and one that we have spent a great deal of time and effort on, in addressing some of the most important issues. Let me preface my remarks by quoting from the motion:

> That this House condemns the Government for its destructive policies affecting Canadian farmers—

Mr. Speller: Hear, hear!

• (1630)

Mr. Mazankowski: The record clearly speaks for itself. The young gentleman opposite is saying "hear hear". I know he had some association with a previous Minister. If that Government had come within a quarter or a tenth of the support that this Government has provided agriculture then he could stand up and clap. But I can say that their performance in terms of support for agriculture was so dismal that it is disgraceful. It is disgusting.

Mr. Peterson: Talk to the fruit farmers and vegetable farmers.

Mr. Mazankowski: I have a great deal of respect for the hon. gentleman from Willowdale, and have always complimented him. If he could cut through the fog sometimes and get to some very salient points about agriculture, I would probably tend to listen to his rational judgment more than I would to some of the other so-called experts over there.

Let me begin by dealing with The Globe and Mail story that occurred yesterday, I believe, which suggested that the $1 billion grain subsidy was not necessary. It must have been a Liberal who was involved in making that kind of assertion.

I do not know whether other Members have addressed this particular issue, but I think it is worthy of comment.

The article states:

> The billion dollar federal subsidy payment to the Canadian farmers in 1987 may have been unnecessary, a report to Agriculture Canada suggests.

Mr. Walker: We didn't pay them to make that study. It is your own study.

Mr. Mazankowski: That does not preclude me from criticizing it. I am fairly open and blunt about things. I want to take issue with this particular conclusion because, quite frankly, if you were to go back and look at the average income in the grains and oilseeds sector from the market-place, the average income was approximately $2.4 billion between 1981 and 1984.

Because of the commencement of the trade war that occurred in 1985, receipts to the grain and oilseeds farmers from the market-place dropped to $1.2 billion, a reduction of approximately 50 per cent. In 1986, it dropped to $945 million and it dropped to $475 million in 1987. Need I go any further? I am sure hon. colleagues in the House will recognize that that was a very dramatic decline, which was triggered not by this Government but by the vagaries of the market-place and the price war which existed out there.

That brings me to the very important and fundamental point that many Members in the House and others overlook. It is the reliance upon the export market for the viability of our agriculture industry. This country's agriculture industry relies on export markets for about 50 per cent of its sales. That is probably higher than most other countries, and compares to about 20 per cent in the United States.

For example, the Province of Saskatchewan probably gets some 85 per cent of its income from the international market-place; about 80 per cent in the case of Manitoba; and 60 per cent to 70 per cent for Alberta.

What happens in the international market-place is of vital importance to Canadian agriculture, a factor that we sometimes tend to overlook. Whenever there is a price war, wherever there are export restraints, excessive subsidies or quotas, restrictions or trade distortions, our agriculture industry hurts. We must respond to that.

Today we are engaged in that scenario in terms of the approximately $200 billion paid in over-all subsidies toward the global agriculture community. A nation like Canada simply cannot afford to sustain that level of support for an unlimited period.

It is very important to do whatever we can to bring about some order and stability in the market-place. That is why the activities in Geneva, and at the Uruguay Round are very important for the long-term vitality of Canadian agriculture.

We must address the issue of the European common agricultural policy and take what steps we can to bring about a greater degree of reduction in subsidies and export enhancement programs. I think Members opposite should think twice when they suggest that we are selling the shop because we are engaged in dialogue and discussion that will hopefully bring about this kind of order. We know that there are problems.

Reference has been made to the drought situation. Approximately $847 million has been paid out of the crop insurance program, and half of the premiums, about $200 million, are funded by the federal Government. We are engaged in discussions now with the provinces to try to bring about another formula so that we can achieve two things: a better balance in terms of the equitable cost-sharing program, but also an improved program so that we have a better penetration of the crop insurance program.

When we talk about the need for establishing long-term policies and programs, that is precisely what we are thinking about. We want to establish the kinds of safety nets that will eliminate the necessity of those types of ad hoc programs, whether it be drought assistance to the grain farmer or to the livestock producers.

These are very difficult things to administer, especially when one tries to do it in a fair and equitable way. On every occasion, whether it was the Special Canadian Grains Program or whether it was drought assistance, we have always tried to sit down with the producer groups to work out a mechanism for the payment and distribution of these moneys in a manner that would be consistent with the over-all objectives which they advanced.

That is precisely what we did in the case of the Special Canadian Grains Program. We have done it with respect to the current drought payment which is presently being distributed. If there is any criticism, it would have to be levelled against us for trying to design a program that meets the needs of the producer, to ensure it has sufficient flexibility so that those who are really in need receive and those who are not really in need do not receive. In the past, the programs have been distributed on a broader basis and some who have had good crops still received the drought payment.

We must also consider the importance of recognizing those individuals who buy crop insurance each and every year. Surely there should be some advantage for those who tend to look after themselves.

I am happy to report that we have seemed to reach an all-time high in crop insurance enrolment. Some 85 per cent of producers have enrolled in the Province of Saskatchewan, about 70 per cent in the Province of Manitoba and 50 per cent in the Province of Ontario, which I believe is higher than usual. Some 60 per cent of producers have enrolled in Quebec, 75 per cent in Alberta, and 65 per cent in British Columbia, for a total of 144,000 producers who have enrolled, an average of 68 per cent across the country. That compares with 132,250 in 1988.

It is also important to note that in terms of precipitation and temperature, the accumulated precipitation deficit taken at the Lethbridge, Alberta Station shows that the deficiency in rainfall was much more severe in the last period, 1979–88 than between the years 1929 and 1939. As well, in terms of average mean temperatures, the temperatures were higher between 1979–88 than they were between 1929–38. That really tells us that the drought conditions were much more severe during this period of time than they were during the so-called dirty thirties.

I would like to return to the drought payments and refer to the latest statistics that we have. There are 57,730 cheques in the mail for a total of $214 million. As my colleague the Minister responsible has indicated, the payments are going out. We expect that the final payments should be in the mail some time during the month of July.

When we look at the level of assistance that has been provided by the Government and when we look at the realized net income, we see that in spite of all the hardship—the drought and the collapse in commodity prices—we still end up with some rather interesting figures. In 1988, the realized net income for farmers across Canada reached $5.2 billion. That is the highest on record. In 1987, that figure was $4.7 billion. In 1986, it was $4.2 billion. In 1985, it was $3.8 billion. There has been a steady progression of roughly around 30 per cent to 35 per cent.

We recognize that in some quarters that may not be seen as enough. However, when we consider that the federal Government alone put in $6.1 billion of income support to the farm community in 1988, and when we consider that the over-all net realized income was $5.2 billion, we quickly realize that the federal Government has put in more than has been realized in terms of net income. That does not strike me as a Government that is uncaring. It does not strike me as a Government that has turned its back on farmers. The fact of the matter is we have not turned our back on the farmers. When it comes to supporting Canadian agriculture, the Government's record is unsurpassed by any other Government since I have been around this institution. The figures will bear me out on that.

There can be criticisms of whether we were effective enough, or whether there was fair and equitable distribution. Whenever we look at ad hoc programs we see that the difficulty is that there is a tendency from time to time, because all the elements may not be weighed, for charges to be made of discrimination between commodities. There are charges that one region is being treated better than another. That is what happens when we get into the responses to individual problems that occur. This is one of the reasons we are going through the policy review.

We are trying to establish a new policy framework based upon the success or failure rate of any existing policy. We also want to put in place, hopefully, a regime that will provide some permanence, some confidence, some stability and some security, whether it is in the area of safety nets, stabilization, crop insurance, farm financing, research and development, marketing or the strengthening and modification of our agriculture marketing boards. This will ensure that the farmers can take advantage of the opportunities out there. All these things are under review based upon the experiences that we have had over the last four or five years. I think that is eminently sensible. It seems to me that that is one of the things that should be done from time to time.

We have a situation, whether we like it or not, where our international trading environment is in a bit of turmoil. That is a fact of life. However, we hope that this will be resolved at some point in time. We have to be positioned in such a way that we take advantage of those new trading opportunities. Our goal is to maintain and secure what we have today in terms of our market penetration, but also to try to ensure that we can position ourselves in such a way that we can further enhance the opportunities for international trade, given the importance that we place upon trade and the future of Canadian agriculture.

I heard a great many things about the Budget. We are all aware of the difficulties we have, as a nation, in terms of our fiscal position. We have heard it said many times that the cost of servicing the debt consumes about 35 cents of every taxpayer's dollar that we collect. So it is an issue we must address.

While there has been some criticism, some farm organizations have come out very positively in terms of supporting the Budget. The Canadian Agricultural Policy Alliance—

Mr. Milliken: Who are they?

Mr. Mazankowski: I will qualify that. On Thursday, May 4, the Canadian Agricultural Policy Alliance stated that it is supportive of the federal Government's initiative to reduce the current deficit. It went on to state: "Canadian Agricultural Policy Alliance members are prepared to face reduction in farm spending so long as matching reductions are taking place elsewhere in the economy". I think that is a very important key. What has happened in this budgetary process is that there have been cuts across the board. We are still looking at other areas that may have to undergo the knife, so to speak. I think that is a very responsible position.

Who are they? For my hon. friend from Kingston, who I invite to come out West, these are basically western organizations. If nobody will invite the Hon. Member I will invite him.

Mr. Milliken: Thank you. I would be glad to come.

Mr. Mazankowski: It is made up of the Alberta pork producers, the Canadian cattlemen, the Manitoba Farm Business Association, the Manitoba hog producers, the Saskatchewan Pork Marketing Board, the Ontario Pork Producers Marketing Board, the United Grain Growers, western barley growers and Canadian wheat growers.

I have something else here put out by the Canadian Cattlemen's Association. I think most Members in the House are familiar with them. They said this:

> The federal government, like farmers, must pay its debts. It isn't always pleasant, but the day of reckoning has come! The federal budget is a start. Agriculture has tremendous potential in Canada, but we cannot do it saddled with a heavy national debt. Government spending must be curtailed. The national debt must be addressed by all Canadians. In our generation we set out to mortgage our children's future, in the process—we mortgaged our own.

That is what the President of the Canadian Cattlemen's Association had to say. Members of that organization realize that in controlling the deficit we can look forward to a progressive reduction in our interest rates. I think that has been indicated since the Budget has been introduced. While there have been modest declines I think we are on the right track. Let us hope that that continues.

As I said, when it comes to supporting Canadian farmers and the agri-food industry, our Government has a proud record which I believe is unsurpassed.

During the previous four years the federal Government invested some $17 billion in agriculture. That is more than double the previous four-year period.

• (1650)

We have stood behind agriculture, behind farmers and the industry associated with it, because it is an important industry. It is about a $22 billion megaproject in terms of direct gross income to the farmers across the country. Those are big dollars and the multiplier effect, depending on who we listen to, is four or five. It does generate about 10 per cent of our GNP. It earns billions of dollars in export earnings, and it is a very important way of life.

We have extended a helping hand to the agriculture industry when it was in need. I do not think that farmers expect so-called hand-outs when they can fend for themselves. What we are looking at now are programs and policies that would allow them to become more self-reliant.

We are looking at programs and policies that are in place so that they can make market decisions based upon the reality of the market-place, but at the same time, on a set of policies and programs that are announced and that are clearly established. I believe it is very difficult for them to make decisions on the basis of not knowing for sure whether they are going to get a drought relief program, or whether they are going to get a special Canadian grains program. Or when the stabilization program goes belly-up, whether the Government of the day can provide the necessary money to replenish it. Those are some of the challenges that we have had to go through. It has been a very serious time but we have responded in a period where we have been attempting to bring the deficit into line.

When we look at some of the facts, there are a lot of myths about the state of our agriculture. I am not underestimating the difficulties that are there. Clearly, there are difficulties. When we look at some of the facts, the family owned farm enterprise is quite alive and well in Canada, contrary to the views expressed here in this House. The allegation that they are being gobbled up by huge large-scale agri-businesses is not true. The family farm business still represents about 99 per cent of Canada's agricultural production units. When we look at farm finances, debt loads have increased, but the value of farm assets has kept pace. They have gone down but they are coming back up again. The ratio of debts to assets is marginally higher than it was just 25 years ago.

As a matter of fact, in terms of equity, our statistics reveal that farmers have about 80 per cent equity in their holdings.

The other charge is the aging farm population. There is a slightly higher percentage of farmers over the age of 35 today than there was in the sixties. Everyone has not given up on agriculture. One of the reasons that everyone has not given up on agriculture is because they know that they have a government in office that stands behind them in a time of need. They know that we will be there to help them through the adjustment process. They know that we will be there to help them in sorting out the trade issues in the United States and throughout the world. They know that eventually they will have a brand new set of policies that will inspire confidence, optimism and hope for the future.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Willowdale.

Mr. Peterson: Madam Speaker, I have no doubt about the sincerity of the Deputy Prime Minister when it comes to helping the farmers in his region of Canada. I just wish, however, that he had been at the negotiations with the United States on the free trade deal on behalf of the farmers of my part of the country, southwestern Ontario.

Take for example, the snap-back provisions which are designed to protect Canadian growers of fruit and vegetables from a sudden price decrease on goods coming in from the United States. As the Minister knows, we are now rid of many of the protections that those farmers in southwestern Ontario have had through the marketing board and things like that. In terms of protecting our vegetable and our fruit farmers, these snap-back provisions are absolutely unworkable.

First, the price has to fall below 10 per cent of what it was in a five-year average. Second, that price must be down a full five days before this tax can even come into effect. Third, the sum average of Canadian acreage under vegetables or the soft fruits must not have increased during that particular period. So much for who controls Canadian farmland.

This snap-back provision which gives the illusion of safety and protection to southern Ontario farmers is nothing more than that, an illusion. As the Government of Ontario studies have pointed out, had this snap-back been applied in any of the major cases over the past two decades, it would have helped Ontario farmers in only about 1 per cent of the cases. This is why I wish that the Deputy Prime Minister had been there at the trade table negotiating the best interests of Canada in the agriculture sector.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is a slippery question to answer. First, I have to compliment and thank the Hon. Member for the very complimentary remarks he made about me. I have known him for a long time and he is that way. He is a very nice gentleman and then he tries to use the spear. I say that with the greatest of respect.

As in so many other cases, what we have are the opponents of the Free Trade Agreement spreading fear about all the bad things about the free trade deal. It is rather interesting that even the Hon. Member's own brother is standing up now on platforms in Ontario and the United States and around the world, preaching the benefits of the Free Trade Agreement. His Ministers are doing the same thing. Mr. Nixon's speech in London is a real model. I use it. I quote it all the time. It is really very, very good. It is rather amazing how that flip-flop has occurred. I appreciate the fact that they now recognize that the trade agreement has been good for all parts of Canada. In particular, it has been good for Ontario.

He talks about the snap-back. He is partially right. In terms of the acreage, there can be an increase in acreage of fruits and vegetables to offset what may be taken out of grapes. I think that should be clear. The details of the snap-back decision are being worked out and the implementation process is moving along very well.

The comments that I have received are that this is going to be a much more effective mechanism than we had before. That is coming from the growers and the industry. The Member shakes his head in the negative. I can assure him that the comments of those people who are involved with our people in terms of putting in place this provision—and we are working with the industry—are very, very positive. It gives them an inventory of prices which they never had access to before. They are more accurate in terms of whether in fact there is an undue reduction in pricing which would constitute dumping.

When we look at the totality of it, I think the Hon. Member when he sees it in place will probably change his mind, just as his brother has changed his mind. I look forward to that day.

Mr. Althouse: Madam Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski) in his response to the Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) has talked about slippery politicians. I listened with care to his remarks where he talked very carefully about the horrors of the vagaries of the market, which all of us who have lived and died in agriculture in western Canada know very much about. Yet, out of the other side of his mouth, he was talking about the need for order and stability whereby I think he justified the actions of his Government in the last few years. He met this morning with Clayton Yeutter, the Secretary of Agriculture for the United States. I presume they had their usual friendly meeting. We are very concerned in this House and beyond this House in the agricultural community as to precisely where this Government is trying to take us in its friendship with the United States and in the international discussions that have been held on trade and agriculture.

Does this Government really believe in the Bush-Reagan theory that they espouse so clearly at all international trade talks on agriculture, namely, that agriculture can only function better if there is absolutely no Government assistance and absolutely no Government interference on price and trade in agriculture? Is the Government really moving in that direction when it is trying to appear on the international stage as being very friendly and helpful to the United States, or does the Minister have another agenda? If so, would he please tell the farmers of this country what it is because there is no way they will survive if there is absolutely no room for Government assistance when times get bad.

Mr. Mazankowski: Madam Speaker, there again is a clear example of the distortions of what I have said and what I have been saying. No one has said that we are going to pull out of agriculture support completely.

Mr. Althouse: The U.S. has.

Mr. Mazankowski: I just met with the Secretary of Agriculture for the United States and he said the same thing. What licence do you have to say that in this House? What is really bothering me around here is that we have Members opposite who have about as much respect for the truth as a tomcat has for a marriage licence.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Althouse: The Hon. Member is an experienced Member. He should know enough to address his remarks to the Chair. He should also know enough that there are rules in this House with regard to calling Members careless with the truth and so on. He will know if he was a careful Minister of Agriculture, that it has indeed been the policy of the President of the United States and the two presidents—

Mr. Mazankowski: That is not true.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I think the Hon. Member is now getting into debate. I am sure that the Hon. Minister of Agriculture will want to make sure that his remarks are consistent with the rules of this place.

Mr. Althouse: And are consistent with the facts.

Mr. Mazankowski: Again, when it comes to subsidies the Americans have been subsidizing. As a matter of fact, their wheat which we—

Mr. Althouse: That is not the position they are taking in the talks.

Mr. Mazankowski: If you want to answer your own question, why don't you stand up and answer it?

Mr. Althouse: You are avoiding it.

Mr. Mazankowski: No, Madam Speaker, I am not avoiding the question. I want to try to put some facts before the Hon. Member so that he can go back home and tell his people the truth. As a result of the Free Trade Agreement we now have full access to the American figures on support for wheat, oats and barley under the Free Trade Agreement. May I tell the Hon. Member that the U.S. supports its wheat growers to the tune of $93.97 per tonne and Canada supports ours at the rate of $67.05 per tonne. On barley the American support is $80.44 per tonne and Canada's support is $41.69 per tonne. What we are really talking about here is the need to lower the level of subsidy and support and to gain more out of the market-place because the treasuries of all countries collectively can no longer continue to afford the huge bill.

The Hon. Member has no respect whatever for the taxpayer's dollar, whether he be a Canadian, an American or whatever.

Mr. Epp: It is spend, spend, spend.

Mr. Mazankowski: I think that all agriculture communities throughout the world recognize that this has to take place. But, Madam Speaker, I can tell you quite frankly that it is going to be very difficult for this Government or any other Government to continue to support agriculture to the tune of $6 billion per year. That has been a dramatic increase in the last five years and we are not suggesting for one minute that we are going to withdraw. That is where I take issue with the Hon. Member. He knows better than that. We are there to bring about some orderliness and stability and to do our part in bringing about trade reform and the removal of trade distorting subsidies so we can, in fact, continue to capitalize on the important markets we have throughout the world.

May I simply put this on the record, Madam Speaker. Of the top five markets for agriculture exports, the United States is one of our best ones followed by the U.S.S.R., Japan, the European Community and China. It is important for us to ensure that we can maintain those avenues of markets. That is what we are trying to do. We are trying to preserve what we have, enhance our access and thereby our markets so our agricultural industry can continue to grow, and we can continue to build upon that 50 per cent. Without it we will not have a very strong agricultural industry.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Foster: Madam Speaker, it is not exactly every day that we have an opportunity to put questions to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski). I wonder if we might get agreement to put a few questions to him? I am sure there would be unanimous consent for a few more questions—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I would need unanimous consent.

An Hon. Member: No.

Mr. Mazankowski: Madam Speaker, there have been a number of opposition days, and the Opposition has finally come to the conclusion that agriculture has some importance. We have had two Ministers and we will have three Ministers and I just invite the Opposition to put another agriculture day down. We will be glad to debate the issues.

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to take part in this debate. This is one Party that has always considered agriculture very important.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Laporte: We have been involved in agriculture matters for quite some time and in fact we have put forth a very practical and very logical agricultural policy during the last campaign.

Agriculture, as the Hon. Minister indicated, is an important part of the economic fabric of this nation. It contributes some 10 per cent of the GNP in this country, it employs well over half a million people, and at this time there are some 300,000 family farms in Canada. Unfortunately, that number is down from a high of 723,000 farms in 1941.

I would like to widen this debate slightly if I could. While agriculture is important, there is also the entire rural infrastructure of this country that is also important. We have not only family farms but we have small towns and communities that are an integral part of the agriculture community. We have small businesses, everything from implement dealerships to general stores. We have services such as doctors, hospitals and lawyers who are part of the whole rural infrastructure. We have services such as senior citizens' homes. Infrastructures are interdependent upon each other, each facet is interdependent upon the other.

The problem with this whole rural infrastructure is that since World War II it has been coming under increasing pressure and stress. Certainly the size of the average family farm has increased dramatically. We have less than half the number of family farms that we had in the 1940s and part of that, of course, is due to technological advancement. Certainly the days of the 160-acre farm are gone, and so they should be with the horse-drawn days and the long hard days of back-breaking work which has been replaced by significant technological advancements. However, there is another aspect to this entire demise that is starting to take place with respect to the rural infrastructure in Canada. Successive Governments since the Second World War have done little to encourage the survival of family farms and rural infrastructure generally.

The fact that Governments have done little says a lot about the Government's overall attitude toward agriculture. This care-not attitude has been clear since the Government was elected in 1984. Government Members talk of the billions of dollars the Government has put toward agriculture and that is true, it has, but unfortunately, the money has gone largely to ad hoc programs, programs that are ill-conceived and do not promote the family farm and rural infrastructure generally. These programs have been designed to promote election victories for successive Conservative Governments.

The Government's win-a-vote policy is best exemplified by the so-called drought relief program announced some 11 days before the last federal election. As early as August of last year, farmers knew that drought was a serious matter in rural Canada and the Government promised a drought relief program. In fact, in 1985, it promised a permanent drought relief program but it has yet to deliver on that promise.

Just 11 days before the election, the Government announced that $850 million would go to support farmers suffering from drought. This program was announced for political purposes. There was no indication of how it would be paid out. It was simply announced that $850 million would be provided, and government Members proceeded to state that farmers in the extensively hit areas of drought would receive up to $45 per acre. Doing the calculations, it becomes pretty obvious that if all farmers in the severely drought stricken areas would receive $45 per acre, the final amount would be far in excess of $850 million.

I felt sorry for my Conservative opponent during the election campaign. He had extreme difficulty, with justification, trying to explain the program. He could not do it because there were no details announced.

When the House reconvened in December, Members on this side of the House asked the Government when we could expect a drought payment. The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski) indicated that we could expect forms out within 10 days. Government Members had indicated earlier that final payments would be out in early January. January came and went and there were no forms and no payments.

Then government Members said that they would have the final payments out by seeding time because farmers needed money during seeding time so they could put their seed in the ground. Seeding time has come and gone and the final payments are not out. The application forms are out and money is starting to come in. Now government Members are saying that funds will be out in July because farmers need money to purchase the chemicals that they spray.

At an agriculture committee meeting not too long ago, the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer) was present. One of the Minister's experts indicated that in fact, final payments would come some time after July. Now I suppose government Members will be saying that the payments will come out during harvest time because farmers need money during harvest time.

It is clear that this program was ill conceived. It was simply announced for political purposes. The unfortunate part of the program is that it was ad hoc and ill conceived. The Government is now promising a permanent program. I hope that it will finally come through with that program. Certainly, it has been saying it would since 1985. The other concern of Members on this side of the House is that when that program is finally unleashed on the Canadian public, we hope that it will be aimed at maintaining family farms or rural communities and will not simply be a product of big agri-business with its interests at heart.

The Minister indicated earlier that there have been increased profits in agriculture in recent years, and that is true. That cannot be denied. The other fact is that there are record debts in agriculture. Over $24 billion in farm debt exists in Canada today. Communities are closing and the Government is about to inflict a neo-conservative policy on the nation.

While there have been record returns, there have also been record numbers of farms going bankrupt. What is happening is very clear. We are starting to develop an economic class structure within rural communities. There are a few farms that are becoming larger and more successful and a great many family farms that are struggling to survive. Despite the amount of money that has been thrown at past programs, it has not fallen in the right places. The programs have not been well thought out.

It is clear that the Minister will come through with a program for agriculture, but we on this side of the House are concerned about what kind of program it will be. This Government prides itself on consultation. It says it consults with all groups and listens well. Unfortunately, it listens better to certain segments than to others. We can best see that with respect to the Canadian Wheat Board.

Back in February, the Government announced that oats would be removed from the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board. The Government said that farmers wanted this and had been consulted on it. The Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds indicated that he had received hundreds of letters from producers across Canada who were in favour of removing oats from the jurisdiction of the Wheat Board, and he said that he consulted with farm groups. The reality is that some consultation was undertaken but it was not wide consultation.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture passed a unanimous resolution calling on the Government not to remove oats from the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board without allowing western Canadian producers to vote on it. The Government has ignored that. It has ignored calls from the prairie wheat pools. Certainly the Saskatchewan and Manitoba wheat pools have called for no removal of oats without a producer vote.

The Government has ignored the comments and advice of the advisory committee to the Canadian Wheat Board. The advisory committee is composed of members duly elected by some 135,000 permit book holders from across western Canada. These members were elected to advise the Government on Wheat Board matters but the Government ignores them.

Who did the Government listen to? The Government will say that the United Grain Growers and the Western Canadian Wheat Growers Association agrees with the policy and that is fair because these groups include oats producers. However, government Members will go on to include the Alberta Sheep and Wool Commission, the Alberta Pork Producers, the Saskatchewan Pork Marketing Board, the Western Barley Growers Association and the Canadian Cattlemen's Association. I am not sure how many of those groups are composed of actual producers, but those associations do not produce oats. The advisory committee to the Canadian Wheat Board should have more to say about the future of the Canadian Wheat Board than the Alberta Sheep and Wool Commission.

When oats was removed from the Canadian Wheat Board, it was indicated there was only some 1 per cent. That 1 per cent represents $300 million to the Canadian economy, and more particularly to wheat board producers. We can see that the Government did not listen, that wide consultation did not take place. The Decima poll has been referred to here today which was released by producers. In fact, the Decima poll is the polling authority that the Government uses all the time. It indicated that some 62 per cent wished oats to remain on the Canadian Wheat Board and that some 31 per cent were opposed to it, and a full two-thirds were producers.

The Government will respond that approximately 41 per cent of producers believe that oats produced outside the Wheat Board will receive higher returns. The producers who believe that oats inside the Wheat Board will receive high returns is 37 per cent. It is a virtual saw. If Government Members would look at the poll, they would see that it states that prairie farmers are unwilling to give up the security of marketing oats through the Wheat Board. While they recognize that there may be other means of marketing which would provide higher returns, they appear to sense a comfort level with the Canadian Wheat Board which will be lost as a result of the federal Government's decision. There is a risk attached to change, and respondents are not convinced that the risk is worth-while even if it means higher returns. The reliability and security which the Wheat Board provides is an important factor for farmers when considering the removal of some grains.

It is very clear, Mr. Speaker, that producers in western Canada want the Wheat Board, and this Government simply has refused to listen to the majority of those producers. Another example of this Government's attitude toward agriculture in this country is clearly seen with respect to the Budget. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) indicated earlier that agriculture in this country is improving. Perhaps the Minister of Finance should have a chat with the Minister of Agriculture who just a moment ago indicated that average rainfall is now less than it was in the thirties. Perhaps if they exchanged some information, the Minister of Finance would not make those remarks. Perhaps the Minister of Finance should take a trip to Saskatchewan. Maybe he should take a trip to the Estevan area where recently there have been high winds of such an extent that farmers are having to re-seed, some for the second time. Perhaps he should visit the community of Rosetown where there is a severe drought or how about Davidson or Watrous where producers are suffering.

The Finance Minister says that the West is recovering. Certainly the drought is still in existence. Certainly world prices have not come up. Yet we have a Minister premising his remarks with respect to cuts in agriculture with the fact that agriculture is on the mend. The Government will be coming forth, we believe, with proposals this summer, with a plan, and it will be a wide, extensive plan with respect to agriculture and with respect to the whole infrastructure of rural Canada. It is going to affect everything from transport to seed production to purchase of grains. It is going to be a program that will have a tremendous affect on the future of this nation.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski) indicated that the Government is not turning its back on family farms. He indicated there was more to agriculture than simply growing grain and the economics of agriculture. In fact, it is a way of life, and that is true. I certainly hope the Minister in putting forth the proposals will consider that way of life. I, and those of us on this side of the House, have real concerns with respect to that. We have concerns that in fact the Government has the ear of companies such as Cargill and Canadian Pacific, companies which are not concerned with the future of the family farm, companies which are concerned simply with making a profit, companies which are concerned with the bottom line. That bottom line does not measure into the way of life for rural Canada. There are factors that simply cannot be measured. This is a Government that has to philosophically decide whether it wants to simply look at the bottom line or whether it wants to maintain a viable rural infrastructure that includes not only family farms but businesses and all the services that exist within that entire structure.

When that program comes out, and hopefully it will come out this summer, we look forward to having a good opportunity to address it, to put forth observations. We hope that the Government will in fact take a wide range approach.

Certainly thus far it has not. When the Government talks about the number of groups that are in favour of its program so far, there is one thing these groups have in common. This is certainly true with respect to groups that were in favour of oats being removed from the Wheat Board. As I indicated before, the Alberta Sheep and Wool Commission has had very little to do with the production of oats. But what the Alberta Sheep and Wool Commission, the hog producers and the Cattlemen's Association have in common is that these are the very groups that agree with the Government's position. These are the very groups that sponsored an ad during the recent election campaign in support of free trade. These are the groups that have one mind. This is one aspect, one view of the future of agriculture. The Government should open its ears and eyes and pay more attention to the rest of the producers. Certainly it should not be taking such a narrow view. Certainly it should be listening to the producers. It is very clear from the Decima poll and from other groups in this country that there is another view.

It is our hope and concern that when new programs are developed, and we welcome a permanent drought relief program and new measures in agriculture, that producers in western Canada, and across the rest of this nation, should have a say as to which direction this Government is going and simply not listen to the big agri-business and the Cargills and the Canadian Pacifics of this world.

Mr. Jordan: Mr. Speaker, I just wondered if my colleague would like to react to a position that the Minister of State for Agriculture (Mr. Blais) has stated in the House and what he would read into this kind of comment. He stated May 12 that the Canadian Government will honour its commitment to maintain marketing boards. I assume that he included there milk marketing boards. I assume my colleague is aware that industrial milk, one leg of a dairy farmer's livelihood, has now been capped. The price on industrial milk has been capped in this country for the next 20 months until December, 1990.

As a matter of fact, someone says it has been frozen. It has not even been frozen because it can come down under certain conditions. A freeze would be better. A farmer probably would have accepted a freeze. But under certain conditions, the price of industrial milk could come down. That would leave the farmer, like no other individual in this country to my knowledge, no segment of the society, with a cap placed on his wages or pay cheque imposed by this Government. Would my colleague comment on that treatment? I am sure those opposite would say, with all the salve that we have had poured out to the industry today, that that is not a fact and it is not going to hurt the farmers. The farmers are very concerned. They will be in a crisis situation unless they can see some program introduced to counter this attack. It is an attack on their livelihood.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Laporte: This is a Government that is not the friend of supply management. That is for sure. This is a Government that is going to undermine supply management where it can. Unfortunately, it will use international trading negotiations as an excuse. Certainly, the problems with industrial milk are only one example.

• (1730)

There is another example with respect to the Canadian Wheat Board. When the initial prices came out recently for the Canadian Wheat Board, they were lower than most producers expected. Prices for grain were very low. Taking into account the fact that the world price of grain is still low, the amounts of grain that are in reserve are down. As a result, grain prices were expected to rise dramatically. Yet, the announcement by the Minister of State for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer) indicated that initial prices were very low. The reason is simply that the Americans do not appreciate the Canadian Wheat Board. They do not like the benefit it brings to the Canadian producers. They are trying to effectively handcuff the Canadian Wheat Board. By making prices lower they are taking money out of the pockets of producers when they deliver the grain to the terminals. It is strictly the result of American pressure to bring lower initial prices with respect to the Canadian Wheat Board. There is example after example with respect to that in supply management.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Cardiff: I would like the Hon. Member to take a moment and comment upon the things that the Government has done. I am sure he would have to agree that what the Government has done sends a very strong signal of the support the Government has for supply management. In particular, I would like him to comment on the implementation of quotas for hatching eggs and chicks.

I would also like the Hon. Member's comments on the dairy industry. In particular, last year there was a time when the price of milk could have been reduced. That happened again in February this year. The Government, in consultation with the dairy industry, did not do that. In the wisdom of the Canadian Dairy Commission and the Government it was decided not to lower those prices. There is nothing to say that when those prices are reviewed again that the prices should increase. That does not mean that the Government is not supporting the supply management sectors. As a Government we have done many things in support, in the last Parliament as well as since we have returned after the last election. We have shown strong support, in particular with respect to the implementation of the quotas on hatching eggs and chick marketing imports.

I would like the Hon. Member to comment on those two items.

Mr. Laporte: With respect to dairy products, the Government has frozen industrial milk prices for some 20 months. That action, coupled with $14 million in budget cuts, will hurt dairy farmers. The National Association of Dairy Farmers of Canada has expressed its concern in news releases and in personal communications with the Minister. The current price of a hectolitre of industrial milk is approximately $47. It is often expressed as $47.06, if carrying charges are included.

When the Minister for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer) appeared before the committee on May 10, he stated that even though the formula should have triggered two decreases in the past year, the Government did not lower the industrial milk price. I have seen this same argument expounded in information that the Government released. The DFC refutes this. First the Government states that last August the formula should have triggered a decrease of $1.89. That is the formula without indexation. DFC has stated that the Government contention is irrelevant because the costs have not been indexed forward. If it had been indexed, the price would have been unchanged at $46.93 at hectolitre.

Second, the Government stated that the formula should have triggered a 14–cent decrease. The Government is using an average of the last four quarters when DFC states it should use the last quarter only. If that had been done, the formula would have triggered an increase of 2.9 cents. Besides, the whole matter is irrelevant because there has to be at least a 2 per cent change in the formula to trigger an increase or a decrease. The DFC and the Government's calculation is very clear. Mark Twain had a saying that figures don't lie but liars figure. It is simple to take figures and programs and use them for one's own purpose. This is what the Government has done in the past.

I am not denying that the Government has not had some programs which have benefited agriculture. The problem is to a large extent programs have been put forth with a feeling not for the future of agriculture, but simply with political opportunism in mind. That is the aspect we have been checking when looking at the programs of the Government.

Mr. Stevenson: I would like to pick up on the thought of the Hon. Member for Huron—Bruce (Mr. Cardiff). I would like to suggest that the Government has taken every opportunity to support the supply management system here in Canada.

First, in looking at the dairy industry, last February yoghurt and ice cream were put on the import control list. That was clearly to support the dairy industry in this country. As the Member for Huron—Bruce stated, more recently the broiler chicks and hatching eggs board was established and the borders were closed for those particular commodities. Again, that is a significant step to support the concept of supply management here in Canada.

We are now at a stage in the GATT discussions where the importance of Article 11 in supporting supply management is under discussion. As I said, that is at a very critical stage. The Canadian Government and the negotiators for the Government want to go into those discussions in the strongest position possible. It is important that Canada appear to be clean in these discussions.

I would ask the Member what he would suggest, or what his Party would do to strengthen the position of the Canadian negotiators involved in these multilateral trade negotiations. Certainly, the cap was put on for one reason only, and that was to strengthen the Canadians' bargaining position for the long-term support of supply management; to maintain, to clarify, and to strengthen Article 11 which is one of the major underpinnings of supply management here in Canada. If we do not appear to be clean, what would the Member suggest we do?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): A very short answer from the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw—Lake Centre.

Mr. Laporte: Basically, the Hon. Member has been espousing his Government's support for farm marketing. If the Hon. Member asks for a proposal, I would suggest that we open up the National Farm Products Marketing Act. At this point there are no other marketing agencies permitted under the Act. If the Member is sincere, perhaps he would agree to second a Private Member's Bill and perhaps we could convince the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski) to put this Bill in place. That Bill would allow for new supply management boards wherever the majority of producers wanted a supply management board. If the Member is serious about that, that is one direction in which we can head.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Elgin.

Mr. Ken Monteith (Elgin): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to talk about something very close to my heart, Canadian agriculture. I especially appreciate the occasion to look at the farm situation in Ontario, the province with the largest and most diversified agricultural sector. I particularly relish relating to the House the Government's record in supporting the industry and in laying the ground work for its long-term prosperity both in Ontario and across the nation.

• (1740)

Too often over the past few years the House has heard how bad it is down on the farm; depressed grain prices, bad weather, financial difficulties, drought. I should not need to remind Members that this Government has responded in an unprecedented way. We came forward with a program to buffer grain and oilseed producers across the country from the savage effects of an insane international trade war.

We have been working hard at the international level to put the brakes to this subsidy. There has been significant progress and Canada has been no small partner in that effort.

On the home front, we have helped individual farmers faced with financial difficulties come to new arrangements with their creditors. Innovative farm debt review boards have been a resounding success, helping many producers and their families stay on the farm.

Unfortunately, the weather has played hard ball these last few seasons but this Government has gone to bat for Canadian farmers. In 1986 we paid out over $200 million to help western farmers through a serious dry spell. In late 1987, the signs were back of severe drought in several parts of the country, including Ontario.

In early 1988, in co-operation with provinces, we announced assistance programs for green feed and livestock. Last fall we announced a major Canadian crop drought assistance program. First payments have been made and final payments are being determined.

It is true there has been bad news in agriculture these past years, but the federal Government has done more than its fair share to assist farmers.

The long-term dairy policy announced in January, 1986, ensured stability to an important agricultural sector, one that is worth $1 billion a year in Ontario alone. This Government's commitment to the dairy sector and the concept of supply management remains as firm as ever.

One area of particular interest to the Province of Ontario is how we have helped the tobacco industry adjust to new times and the decline in domestic demand. Working with the province, we set up several assistance programs. The federal Government has committed $45 million to the Ontario Assistance Program. This program has two objectives. The first is to assist producers wishing to leave the tobacco growing industry. The second is to help rationalize the industry so that remaining producers can become more viable.

In addition, there is the Alternate Enterprise Initiative. This is another joint program with the province, worth almost $14 million. The program is designed to provide start-up funding for tobacco growers wishing to leave tobacco production for another crop.

The initiative focuses on alternate market development, alternate crop development and research.

Funding has been for projects involving a variety of crops including peanuts, cash crop hay, ginseng, evening primrose, onions, garlic, sweet potatoes and strawberries.

Over-all, it is an excellent example of how this Government has taken seemingly bad news of depressed prices and markets and turned it into a success story. Time and time again, we have managed this by working closely in partnership with the provinces and by relying on the initiative and drive of Canadian producers to adapt and compete.

It is that initiative and competitiveness which gave us complete confidence in reaching an accord on trade with the United States of America. The signing of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement was good news indeed for Canadian producers. I know that our agri-food sector is eager to take on the Americans on their home turf.

We have provided Canadian farmers with an extraordinary opportunity, the chance to compete unfettered in a market of over 240 million consumers.

A recent trade seminar at the University of Michigan heard that Canada and Ontario stand to gain the most from the agreement. Ontario farmers can expect to ship more products across the border, and will likely sell more vegetables in major markets like Detroit.

For example, opportunities will be created with the reduction and elimination of the 25 per cent tariffs on broccoli and brussel sprouts and the 12.5 per cent duty on cauliflower entering the United States. Enhanced access to the American market will also benefit floriculture, a growth industry that is in an enviable position to exploit the new market. Ontario $5.5 billion agriculture sector can only get bigger and stronger with opportunities like that at its doorstep. It is one major reason why there is renewed optimism in the crop and pasture lands, in the feed lots and packing plants, the greenhouses and berry fields. Things are not nearly as bad as yesterday's sensational headlines would have us believe.

Just look at the latest results from the Reid monthly survey. In April, Reid looked at how Canadian farmers assess their financial situation. The pollster found that there has been a marked improvement in Canadian farmers' outlook since the last such survey was undertaken two years ago. Farmers are feeling confident and upbeat. Reid noted that Ontario farmers are feeling particularly positive about how their operation did last year. This may be surprising to some, especially those who would believe that our agriculture sector is weak and not able to compete. But I am not surprised.

I believe the Canadian agri-food sector is more vibrant and resilient than it is often given credit. In fact, the present real picture in agriculture is considerably different than that painted by the media and those interested in portraying the family farm as a thing of the past.

I think it is important that we begin to set the record straight on a few current notions about the state of Canadian farming. It is true that our farm population has declined over the years. It was 11 per cent of the population in 1961 and was just 3.5 per cent in 1986. But rural Canada is still alive. The non-farm rural population has been stable at around 20 per cent. Total employment in agriculture has remained fairly constant since the early 1970s.

Although farm numbers are down, those farms with sales of $50,000 and more have actually increased. In fact, since 1981 there are 29,000 more farms with annual sales over $50,000.

Larger farms tend to be more viable. Almost two-thirds of farms with annual sales over $100,000 show little risk of failure.

In spite of the trend to larger farms, the family-owned farm remains the basic unit of agricultural production in Canada. Non-family corporations account for less than one-half of 1 per cent of Canadian farms.

We hear a lot about the farm debt situation. It is true that high levels of debt have been seen as a major problem facing agriculture. Farm debt grew from $2 billion in 1961 to $5 billion in 1971. In the next ten years, it jumped to $18 billion as a result of increased capital borrowing in the mid-1970s, in response to strong commodity prices.

When interest rates rose to historically high levels in 1981 and remained there for several years, many highly leveraged farmers found themselves in financial difficulty. But while farm debt shot up, so did the value of farm assets. In 1988, the ratio of debts to assets was only slightly higher than in the early 1970s.

Low commodity prices in some sectors, high input costs and the world trade situation would lead most of us to believe that farm incomes have been seriously affected.

The evidence cited for this is the decline in aggregate real farm income, which is well below the levels of the past two decades. However, aggregate income does not not take into account declining farm numbers and increased income support earned off the farm. When you compare income earned by farm families to that of other Canadian families, Madam Speaker, you will see that they are about the same.

• (1750)

These things suggest that the financial position of farmers may not be as bad as many people assume. I have of course spoken about aggregate numbers. I did this to indicate to Hon. Members that the over-all current financial state of Canadian agriculture is good.

Of course, there will always be exceptions. In those cases the federal Government will continue to provide the tools necessary for the survival and prosperity of viable operations. The Government believes in the farmers of Canada. It believes in their ability to compete in Canada, in the U.S. and offshore as well. It believes in their initiative, their self-reliance and their perennial optimism. We believe in their desire to succeed and to hold on to their rural values as they take up the latest in technological improvements.

Finally, we believe in the farmers of Canada because the farmers of Canada believe in themselves. We as a Government look forward to working with the farmers of Canada in the future to improve the future of agriculture in this great country.

Mr. Ferguson: Madam Speaker, I am wondering if the Hon. Member would like to comment on the price discovery mechanism in the world grain markets in view of the scandals that have taken place in New York markets and the Chicago commodity markets and also in regard to the investigations going on in the Winnipeg grain market as outlined by the Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Althouse) in this debate today.

What are the Hon. Member's thoughts as to the future of the Canadian Wheat Board when the subsidy levels between Canada and the United States become level and there is free movement of grain between the two countries.

Mr. Monteith: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member mentioned the Wheat Board. There seems to be a myth that the Government under the direction of the Minister of Agriculture is attempting to harm the Wheat Board. We are not attempting to harm the Wheat Board. We are attempting, as we do in all areas of agriculture, to strengthen the position of agriculture in Canada thereby allowing Canadian farmers to compete all across Canada, the United States and the world. The Government is out to protect Canadian farmers and to strengthen their position in this country.

The Hon. Member asked about Winnipeg grain futures and world prices. When we look at world prices we realize that that is what we as a Government are attempting to look at through the GATT round of negotiations. That is to say we wish to consider the support that other countries are giving their farmers which makes it impossible for us to compete. The Government is attempting through negotiations under the GATT round to see that in the future subsidies in agriculture will not make it impossible for Canadian farmers to compete.

Mr. Althouse: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member mentioned subsidies being used by other countries. He will be aware that moments before the initialling of the Canada-U.S. Trade Agreement the U.S. administration of the day extended the use of its export enhancement program some time into the 1990s. In spite of clauses in the agreement which appeared to protect ourselves and the Americans from each other's programs like the export enhancement program they interpreted their action as having been taken before the agreement was signed and therefore should continue on for some time.

This morning our Minister of Agriculture met with the American Secretary of State for Agriculture. Can the Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Monteith) perhaps qualify why it is that we now hear our government Members in the form of the Minister of Agriculture appear to approve of the American use of export enhancement subsidies into traditional markets of Canada in spite of what we thought was an agreement whereby they would not do that to us and we would not do it to them?

Mr. Monteith: Madam Speaker, we in Canada recognize that we have to compete worldwide in agriculture. We hope to promote not only trade with the United States but trade with many other countries. We hope that all our commodity groups look to increased trade with the United States. That is what the bilateral agreement with the U.S. promotes. The opportunity for Canadian farmers and business to continue with the amount of trade that we have with the United States is an opportunity to enhance that trade by going into more markets. They will be assisted by Governments helping them to market their product throughout the United States and other countries.

Mr. Hughes: Madam Speaker, it is clear from the debate today that the Government is keeping its commitment to Canadian farmers, and continues in a number of ways to keep that commitment. One way, of course, is by continuing to support the role of supply management agencies. In addition to that no Government in history has done as much for agriculture as has this one since 1984. There is heartfelt, sincere and determined support for agriculture. The Government remains open to constructive suggestions and comments that will help us together build Canadian agriculture.

In terms of the job assistance program, no government program is perfect. There can always be improvements. The Government has responded as quickly as reasonably possible in a manner that is fair. It has listened to producers in preparing the program.

I suggest that if there is to be condemnation today in the House, which the motion calls for, then that condemnation should be reserved for those Members opposite who seek to scare Canadian farmers about their own future. Canadian farmers have a tremendous future. The Government continues to stand behind them in many ways through drought assistance and other programs. We continue to fight on their behalf in international marketplaces through GATT and other measures. I suggest that the Government, unlike any other Government in history, has stood behind Canadian agriculture.

Mr. Monteith: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has indicated that Canadian farmers support the Government. They support us because of the fact that we have supported agriculture. We support supply management. We have been there when the farmers were in need.

The fact that there has been an increase in graduates and enrolment in agricultural colleges and universities all across the country of 150 per cent tells us that there is confidence in agriculture. That confidence has come about because of the policies of the Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It being 6 p.m., it is my duty to inform the House that pursuant to Standing Order 81(17) proceedings on the motion have expired.

HUMAN RIGHTS

VIOLATIONS IN EL SALVADOR

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, on April 19, 1989, five Salvadoran women, members of the Association of Salvadoran Women, and the Christian Committee for the Displaced were captured by the El Salvador Treasury Police and imprisoned at the women's penitentiary in San Salvador.

These women have been held without charge and, according to reports, brutally beaten and tortured. Their arbitrary detention seems the result of little more than community work on behalf of the Salvadoran people.

I refuse to accept the conventional wisdom that Canada can sit idly by while these human rights violations are taking place. I urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to call on the Government of El Salvador to release these women immediately.

I also urge him to explore ways of promoting development projects in the region as a means of guaranteeing a better future for the Salvadoran people.

SEVENTH INTERNATIONAL SYMPOSIUM ON ADAPTED PHYSICAL ACTIVITY

Mr. J. W. Bud Bird (Fredericton): Mr. Speaker, the seventh International Symposium on Adapted Physical Activity will be held in West Berlin from June 21 to June 24, 1989. As part of this event is a world-class film contest related to the conference theme.

I am pleased to advise the House that two New Brunswick films, made entirely in New Brunswick by New Brunswickers, have been selected for final competition in this prestigious event.

One film entitled Yes, You Can: Profiles of Independence, demonstrates how three individuals with different disabilities overcame frustration and despair. Each character, in their own way, finds enjoyment and fulfilment in participating in physical activities.

The other film Let's Get Flexible portrays older adults enjoying a variety of physical activities and contains the comments of a noted geriatrician about the benefits for seniors who develop a physically active life-style. These two videos are both highly motivational for members of important groups of our society to enrich their lives further and to participate more fully in community activities.

Watch for these videos to be winners. Cassettes are available.

CANADIAN JOBS STRATEGY

COMMUNITY FUTURES PROGRAM—NOVA SCOTIA

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, the Community Futures Program of the Canadian Jobs Strategy was established to assist communities in their efforts to identify, develop, and undertake measures to help individuals in communities adapt to changing economic circumstances and to plan the diversification of their economies.

With the proposed changes to unemployment insurance came the announcement that an additional $50 million would be added to the Community Futures budget next year.

Queens and Shelburne Counties of Nova Scotia are dangerously dependent upon the Atlantic fishery. Given the downturn in the Scotia Fundy groundfishery, these communities are highly in need of economic diversification, precisely of the sort that is facilitated through a Community Futures Program.

Therefore, I again strongly urge the Government to recognize this legitimate need and to designate Shelburne and Queens Counties immediately for Community Future Programs.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

GOVERNMENT CUT-BACKS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, this day in 1930, a Conservative Government created the CBC. Now, in 1989, a Conservative Government is wiping it out. Perhaps I should say slowly starving the CBC.

A $140 million cut-back over five years means that the goals of Canadianizing programs will be scrapped and local production, for example CBC Radio in the regions, will end.

As well, this Tory Government has stacked the CBC Board of Directors with hatchetmen like tobacco lobbyist Bill Neville who has kowtowed CBC management and appeared to be politically interfering in the management of the corporation. An example is the shameful way the CBC management forced Dale Goldhawk out of the presidency of ACTRA because ACTRA opposed the free trade deal.

The Tories have gambled that the CBC is one institution they can victimize with impunity. It is a political gamble they could and will lose. Meanwhile, the President of the CBC is to appear before a parliamentary committee this very afternoon—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

CANNES FESTIVAL—TRIBUTES TO DENYS ARCAND AND GILLES CARLE

Mrs. Marie Gibeau (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse), I would like to congratulate two Canadians who have distinguished themselves at the Cannes Festival: Denys Arcand, producer of Jésus de Montréal, for winning the Jury Prize and the Ecumenical Prize, and Gilles Carle, producer of the short film on the NFB's 50 years, for winning an honorary Golden Palm for a short film.

These prizes are an honour for all those who work in this country's film industry. The excellence they have shown will no doubt stimulate our young film-makers and open doors for them internationally.

I take this opportunity to say how proud all Canadians are of these successes. We are honoured by their creativity, which has won us recognition as a country where quality and excellence are a major concern.

Again, my heartiest congratulations to Denys Arcand and Gilles Carle!

INDIAN AND NORTHERN AFFAIRS

NATIVE LAND CLAIMS—HIRING OF CONSULTANT

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, today the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is at the Dakar Summit to present a resolution on human rights. I want to tell the House how the Government deals with human rights here in Canada. I want the Members of this House to know how the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs spends public money.

Indian and Northern Affairs is paying a consultant $800 a day to negotiate an agreement in northern Québec. That person has in turn hired a PR company to the tune of $246,000 to work out a strategy for him to work with the Cree and Inuit. This is a cynical strategy. What a waste of public money.

Now we know how negotiations break down with groups like the Lubicon and how other outstanding claims break down. There is no will. The Government does not care about resolving native issues when it perceives public support is not there.

The Government can hardly teach other countries about human rights. It is a disgrace for the Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs to present options to Cabinet regarding native land claims based on a Decima poll, but then the Prime Minister does it, so why not?

IMMIGRATION

S.S. KOMAGATA MARU

Mr. Harry Chadwick (Brampton—Malton): Mr. Speaker, I rise to inform the House of Commons that yesterday marked the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Komagata Maru incident. In 1914, 376 East Indians, most of whom were Sikhs, sailed to Canada on a freighter named the Komagata Maru. When they arrived they were not allowed ashore and after a two-month wait in the harbour all but 22 were forced to return. Upon their return to India police opened fire killing 18 and wounding 25. The rest were interned in the Punjab.

Canada's reaction stemmed from racism, ignorance and fear. Today, Canadians place a high priority on tolerance, compassion, and freedom for all people of the world. Cultural and racial diversity is now entrenched in our Canadian Multiculturalism Act.

We are eager to help strengthen the bonds of friendship between our East Indian community and all sectors of our society. We have much to learn from each other and much to give each other as we strive in unison to champion human rights in Canada and around the world.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PAKISTAN—TREATMENT OF AHMADIS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, the election of the Bhutto Government in Pakistan held high hopes for members of the Canadian Ahmadiyya Muslim community since their relatives and brethren in Pakistan had been severely persecuted for practising their religious faith by the previous regime.

However, not only has the persecution continued with a vengeance, but Ahmadiyya Canadians have learned that a new and extensive purge will be launched on or around May 25.

Yesterday, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that countries which respect basic human rights should represent a benchmark for Canada's association with them. Yet, today, thousands of Canadian families have been directly affected by the violation of human rights against the Ahmadis without any condemnation by the Canadian Government.

S. O. 31

I call on the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to establish direct contact with his counterpart in Pakistan and voice Canada's displeasure with the treatment of Ahmadis to ensure that Pakistan's signature on the United Nations Declaration of Human Rights is fully respected and that bloodshed is avoided.

Canada can have an important role in mobilizing international pressure to stop this atrocity, and I ask our Government to capitalize fully on our position with the international community.

The Government has long known about the abuse against Ahmadis in Pakistan. It is high time that it takes action and does not use rhetoric.

TREASURY

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT SPENDING PROGRAMS

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, in the past 20 years spending on federal programs has increased by well over 100 per cent. The number of interest groups wanting even more money has increased proportionately. We have created a system of hand-outs that encourage interest groups to look to the Government as an unending source of money. That mindset must be changed.

Canadians, in general, recognize the need for the Government to reduce its spending. They understand that we cannot continue to spend over $100 billion on programs that cater to every wish.

This country was built by people who earned their way in life, and it is time to regenerate that spirit and put the national interest ahead of special interest.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CONSEQUENCES OF GRISÉ AFFAIR

Mr. Cid Samson (Timmins—Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, it is a sad day for this House to learn that one of its Members has been found guilty of criminal acts. Canadians and Québecers expect their Members of Parliament to be fair, honest and open. They want us to show leadership. When one of us, of whatever party, is found guilty of such a serious offence as fraud and breach of trust, the House must act quickly to restore public confidence.

I sincerely hope that the Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé) will do his duty and announce to you, Mr. Speaker, that he will not sit in the House and declare the seat for Chambly vacant. I hope that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will then announce as soon as possible a date for a by-election in Chambly.

The residents of Chambly deserve a representative worthy of the name. The House must restore public confidence.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

INCIDENTS OF BUDGETARY LEAK—POSITION OF MINISTER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In this House for the last four weeks we have witnessed a cover-up of the truth using the police as a shield. There has been a conspiracy of silence, a conspiracy of deception involving the Prime Minister and four senior members of his Government.

The Minister of Finance has told Canadians repeatedly that there was only a single leak of his Budget. We now know that the Minister of Finance knew at least by 1.40 p.m. on April 27, before Question Period that day in the House, before his Budget speech in the House that afternoon, that Mutual Life Assurance Company had copies of the Budget in Brief both in Ottawa and at its head office. An $11 billion insurance company had the Budget for 48 hours before the budget address.

Mr. Peterson: Shame!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister of Finance said nothing of that to the people of Canada or to the House of Commons. That was not an allegation. That was a fact. That is a fact.

Why didn't the Minister of Finance tell Canadians the truth on April 27? Why didn't the Minister of Finance in the circumstances we now know withdraw his Budget? Why did this supposed man of integrity mislead the House of Commons?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I do want to say to Hon. Members on both sides of the House that this is a very important matter. As always, the Chair will be very careful in ensuring that the Opposition not only has a right to make inquiries but does its duty and does inquire. I do want all Hon. Members in this exchange and whatever exchanges may take place for the rest of Question Period to be extremely careful in the language that is used.

As I say, I am here to make sure that matters of importance are raised in Question Period, and I will ensure that they will be fully raised and an opportunity will be given to ask questions and to give answers. However, I do ask for the co-operation of Hon. Members not to stray beyond that line because we have to maintain order.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I, of course, will stay within the parameters of the discretion and your authority in this House, Mr. Speaker.

Canadians are asking: Why didn't this Minister withdraw his Budget, and they are asking: Who will ever trust this Minister of Finance again in this country? Why didn't he withdraw his Budget and why on April 27 didn't he tell Canadians the truth?

Mr. Riis: Shame!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: This is an outrage to have the Solicitor General.

• (1420)

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, if the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is suggesting that the Solicitor General should inform the House of all the details of an investigation being conducted by the RCMP, I must say I disagree Most emphatically with this approach. The Government is anxious not to undermine the ability of the RCMP, an honourable police force, to shed light on this case, and I believe it would be inconsistent to interfere in a police investigation. How would Canadians react if, when they had to testify in court, their testimony was on the floor of the House the znext day? Canadians don't want that. We do not in any way want to compromise any legal action that might be taken as a result of this inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I can inform the Solicitor General that this is not a police matter but a matter for Parliament. We are talking about the ministerial responsibility of the Minister of Finance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

ALLEGED FALSE STATEMENT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Tory Government is senior ministers have deceived Canadians by what they said and by what they did not say. One hour after the office of the Minister of Finance was informed by the President of Mutual Life of Canada that the company had had a copy of the Budget in Brief for over two days, the Prime Minister said in the House during Question Period, and I quote:

> Mr. French of Global Television who was the first person who received the call from the individual who took the documents.

This statement by the Prime Minister is manifestly false. Mutual Life of Canada had the Budget well before Global Television did. I therefore have the following question for the Minister of Finance: Did the Prime Minister know he was making a false statement? Did the Minister of Finance tell the Prime Minister that he made a false statement? Did the Minister of Finance try to correct the Prime Minister's false statement? And why did the Minister of Finance remain silent for four weeks? Why did he hide the truth, the whole truth, from Canadians?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think my colleague, the Solicitor General, has made it very, very clear, that until matters are part of the public domain, as was the case on Wednesday evening when the Global Television Network displayed a document, it is quite inappropriate for Ministers to comment on matters which might be the subject of a police investigation.

Such comment would undermine the investigation, and the Right Hon. Member would be the first to criticize us, as he has in the past, if that type of information were made known by Ministers of the Crown while a police investigation was under way. The Right Hon. Member knows that as a former Solicitor General and as a former Minister of Justice.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, a Solicitor General has the duty to protect an accused but no duty to protect a Minister who is not responsible to the House of Commons.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATION FROM MINISTER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, at 2:30 p.m. on April 27, the Minister of Finance said, "The document was released to Mr. Small of Global Television". At that time, he already knew that the document had been released to the Mutual Life Assurance Company, but he did not say a word to the House of Commons or to the people of Canada.

On May 18, when the Deputy Prime Minister referred to "an unnamed company somewhere in Canada," the Government had already known the name of the company for 22 days. Yesterday, when the Minister of Finance said "I have been as precise as I possibly can be," he had known for 27 days about the Mutual Life Assurance leak and he still did not admit the truth or tell the people of Canada.

Why did the Minister of Finance say yesterday in the House of Commons that "the first leak was a fact"? What did he mean by first since he claimed there was only one? What did he mean yesterday when he spoke in the House of Commons in reply to me of "one leak, one matter, one incident" when he knew that both Global Television and the Mutual Life Assurance Company of Canada had that information?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition is taking that comment out of context. I was referring precisely to what I said when I rose in this House under a question of privilege at eleven o'clock on the morning of April 27. At that time, all I knew was the one matter, the Global matter, which was the subject of the Global Television news report the night before.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition refers to the difference between an allegation and a fact. We knew that it was a fact that Global Television had the document. It was there on television.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The president of the insurance company told you he had a document. That is a fact too.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Until the president of the Mutual Life comes public and acknowledges in precise terms—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Until the president of the Mutual Life states those facts in public, I as a Minister cannot acknowledge the existence of them because those matters are the subject of an RCMP investigation.

POSITION OF MINISTER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and concerns the Budget leak. On April 24, here in Ottawa, the Budget was given to a Robert McFarlane by an acquaintance in a bar in the east end. On the 25th the Budget was circulated in the office of Mutual Life in Ottawa, photocopied and faxed to Kitchener, and photocopied and faxed again to Toronto. On the 26th it was photocopied at the place of work of Robert McFarlane at Time Communications in Ottawa.

Given that on the 26th, there were no less than five copies of the Budget and that some people had access to the documents three days before the Budget was presented in the House of Commons, why did the Minister present his Budget knowing those facts? Why did he insist as late as yesterday that there was one Budget leak when he knew better?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, on April 26, the Wednesday evening, we knew for a fact that there was a document shown on Global Television.

As soon as we had seen that document and knew that it was a copy of the Budget in Brief, we took immediate action. We advised the RCMP and asked the RCMP to initiate an investigation. We then contacted the Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the New Democratic Party and asked if we could come back to the House of Commons so that I could present my Budget to the House of Commons. That request was turned down by both the Leader of the Opposition and by the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Because this information was in the public domain, we thought it was essential that we get the full budgetary information into the public domain as quickly as possible. We went to the Press Gallery and provided the media with the full documentation so that that documentation was in the public domain.

On Thursday at five o'clock when according to a House order I was to rise to present my budget speech, the budget speech was already presented. It was presented the night before at 10.30. On Thursday, I tabled the documents themselves and made a brief covering statement on that, and I initiated the parliamentary process in order to ensure that we have a Ways and Means motion and the borrowing authority tabled and initiated in the House of Commons.

BUDGET LEAK—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, on April 24, the Minister's Budget was lying around in an east-end Ottawa bar. The Minister was aware of this as early as the morning of April 27. Why does the Minister of Finance insist today that no one profited in advance from budget information? Why is the Minister hiding highly important information from this House? Why has he neglected to tell us the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member said that I knew of the Mutual information on the morning of the 27th. That is not true. That is simply not true.

Some Hon. Members: When?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): That information was made known to my office at 1.30—1.45 on April 27, the Thursday, and I became aware of it shortly after that. As soon as we found out the information, my officials advised the RCMP to ensure that in their investigation of the Global incident they were also investigating this as well.

QUESTION AS TO NUMBER OF INCIDENTS KNOWN OF BY AFTERNOON OF APRIL 27

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has finally got around to acknowledging that when he got up to answer the questions in the House at 2.30 on the 27th, I asked the Minister about claims of further Budget leaks. The Minister has just admitted that by the time he answered those questions he knew there was an additional leak, and I want to—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: —ask him, since I asked him specifically about claims that there were additional Budget leaks and he replied in the singular, referring once again to a criminal act, why he did not use that occasion, immediately after, to say what had been brought to his attention by the president of a large insurance company? Why did he not tell the truth to the people of Canada right then?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what I said, and I will repeat the answer. What I said to the Hon. Member at that time is:

> If the Hon. Member has any information to the effect that someone has used any information for gain, let him inform the RCMP so that a proper investigation can be done.

That is precisely what my office did when we found out this information that has become public knowledge yesterday. We made that information directly known to the RCMP so they could proceed with their investigation.

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, this is simply a shameful performance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I was doing my job in a parliamentary democracy by asking questions. I asked the Minister, and he was the one who had the information, and it is the Minister, not me, who should have given the House of Commons that information.

The Minister is doing again today what he did on the 27th. He is doing exactly the same today as he did then. Instead of answering a direct question, he imputes the motives of a democratically elected parliamentary opposition. I want to ask him this: since he knew then and had been informed—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa will put his question.

Mr. Broadbent: —I would like the Minister to answer the question instead of making an accusation. Since he knew after 1.30 p.m., before he answered my question in the House on the 27th, of a claim by the head of one of the largest insurance companies in Canada that he had a copy of a document, Budget in Brief, which had been revealed the night before on television, since he had been told that—not a mere allegation but a substantial claim by a man who has reputation—why did the Minister not get up in the House and reply, yes, we have further information, yes, indeed, we may be having it checked out by the RCMP, but I am doing my job as a Minister of the Crown and I am publicly saying that it has been revealed and I accept responsibility for it?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): First, let me caution the Hon. Member not to jump to conclusions. I found out from my staff later that day. But let me also caution the Hon. Member. Is he saying to us that we should provide information to the public as to what is going on in an RCMP investigation? Is he saying that we should undermine the investigation that is under way? Is he saying that we should provide details that would inhibit the ability of the RCMP to discuss this with witnesses? These are the questions that I think the Hon. Member should carefully consider before he suggests that we did the wrong thing by immediately making that information known to the RCMP, as I believe was the right thing to do. We did exactly what we should be doing. Also, I believe we did exactly the right thing by not making public reference to this and thereby undermining the work of the RCMP.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, once again the Minister has turned it around with a series of questions. I simply say, the Minister has an obligation to do honestly and with integrity the job that he was elected to do. That is what the Minister has an obligation to do.

REQUEST AS TO WHEN THE GOVERNMENT WILL BE ABLE TO SPEAK ABOUT THE INQUIRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General of Canada has already commented on the progress of the RCMP investigation of this case. When will it be the right time for the Government to mention this investigation? The Government mentions the investigation but, when it does not suit it, it wants to ignore the truth.

[English]

That is the problem, and I want to simply ask the Minister this. He still has not answered the question. Will he tell us precisely when he learned of the second leak, and tell us why he did not come into the House and tell the House and the people of Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as soon as we found out in my office this information, we made that known to the RCMP immediately.

Some Hon. Members: When?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Within less than an hour. I found out shortly after that. I cannot be precise on the time, but it was shortly after that. Now, the point I want to make very clear to the Hon. Member is that there are responsibilities that we as Ministers have in the House of Commons, and that is that when there is an investigation under way, we do not comment on it. That is a longstanding tradition in the House of Commons and it is based on very practical reasons. Information that is made known to the public through the House of Commons can undermine the investigations of the RCMP, can prejudice the trial that may subsequently take place.

An Hon. Member: You are hiding behind the RCMP.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says I am hiding behind the RCMP.

As soon as Mutual Life made that information available yesterday, I had been quite prepared to talk about those aspects of it. But before they make that information available, that is simply the subject of the RCMP investigation and Ministers are constrained from commenting on that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ALLEGATION OF MINISTER MISLEADING THE HOUSE

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I, too, have a question for the Minister of Finance, and in asking it I want to say to him, Ministers have responsibilities but no Minister has the responsibility to mislead this House.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has been a Member for more years than most of us in this Chamber. He knows that unless it is clear that the allegation is intentionally misleading the House, then it is not for the Chair to intervene. But the Hon. Member knows also that the way these comments can be put can get very close to becoming unparliamentary, and then disorder follows. So I would ask the Hon. Member to be careful.

• (1440)

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I take your admonition very seriously, and that is why, in asking my question, I will start out by saying that no Minister has a responsibility to mislead the House, even if it is not intentional.

I want to ask the Minister about what he said in this House, not on April 27 but yesterday. Yesterday, during Question Period the Minister stated:

> I have read each and every statement that I made on this matter in the House. I stand by each one of those statements, including the statement that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition referred to a minute ago where I referred to one matter, one leak, one incident here. I stand by that. There is no way that I have misled this House.

I ask the Minister: why did he say something to the House yesterday that he knew was untrue? Surely that is not part of his responsibilities.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has not given me the precise area that I made that statement.

I believe, if the Hon. Member recalls, the context of that statement was a statement of privilege that I made at 11 o'clock. At that time I was aware of one matter.

Mrs. Finestone: Yesterday?

Mr. Milliken: We are talking about yesterday.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): When I made that statement of privilege in the House of Commons on April 27, I was a aware of one incident, the Global incident. That is what I referred to in my statement in the House at 11 o'clock. I did not become aware of the Mutual Life incident until later on in that day.

CLARIFICATION OF MINISTER'S STATEMENTS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I asked the Minister about what he said in the House during Question Period yesterday. As reported in Hansard at page 2050, I repeat what the Minister said:

> I have read each and every statement that I made on this matter in the House. I stand by each one of those statements, including the statement that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition referred to > a minute ago where I referred to one matter, one leak, one incident here. I stand by that. There is no way that I have misled this House.

The Minister of Finance was clearly not talking about only his statement of privilege on April 27, he was talking about each and everything he said in the House over the past three weeks, including the answers he gave in the House yesterday.

I again ask the Minister, why did he not rise in the House and tell us what he knew? Why did he not tell the House and the Canadian people the truth about what he knew about the Mutual Life leak?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me refer to the original question from the Hon. Member for Shefford. As he said, it was quite simple. He stated: "When he" that is me "rose in the House on Thursday, April 27, was the Minister of Finance aware of the possibility of a second leak, yes or no?"

When I rose in the House on April 27, that was at 11 o'clock in the morning, the answer to that question is very simple and precise: No.

ALLEGATION OF COVER-UP

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Ministerial accountability is the essence of our parliamentary system. The Minister of Finance, the Deputy Prime Minister, and the Minister of Justice have a fiduciary obligation to Canadians, but also to this Parliament, to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.

I challenge the Minister of Finance to stand in his place and deny that he did not have information from Mutual Life at 1.40 in the afternoon of April 27, 1989, and refused to inform Parliament because he, as well as the Minister of Justice and the Deputy Prime Minister, were participating willingly in a cover-up to mislead Parliament.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville.

ALLEGATION THAT PRIME MINISTER'S COMMITMENT IGNORED

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. When the Minister's office received a call from Jack Masterman, the President and Chief Executive Officer of Mutual Life of Canada, he received a call from the President of one of the largest insurance companies in the country with assets of $11 billion.

Can the Minister confirm to the House that he knew of Mr. Masterman's phone call before he rose to read his Budget Speech at 5.40 in the afternoon? Since he did know, and I certainly assume he did know, why did he not tell the House at that time what had happened in light of the fact that the Prime Minister had made a commitment in Question Period that "the Solicitor General has said if any information comes to him he will report to the House immediately—". In light of the commitment from the Prime Minister to report immediately any new information, why did the Minister of Finance not tell us at 5.40 when he read his Budget Speech that he had new information?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to what was said in this House. I can refer the Hon. Member to what I said in the House on April 27, as reported on page 1032 of Hansard:

> The investigation is underway, Mr. Speaker, and as soon as we have the facts, the findings, we will be able to disclose them.

As I said many times in this House, the RCMP is conducting a full scale investigation and I believe that we should wait for the conclusions of this investigation before inferring anything about its results.

[English]

INFORMATION TO BE MADE PUBLIC AFTER COMPLETION OF RCMP INQUIRY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance. With respect, by 5.40 in the afternoon when the Budget was read, they had the facts. This was also in the public domain, because a company with 3,000 employees is certainly a company that has something in the public domain when it has those facts.

In light of the commitment made by the Prime Minister—not the Solicitor General—that as soon as new facts came to the attention of the Government they would be reported immediately to the House, I want to ask the Minister of Finance why did he not tell the people of Canada and Members of Parliament that the President of Mutual Life of Canada had called his office and stated they had access to Budget documents. Why did he not tell the House? If the Minister does not tell the House now why he did not do that, he should resign.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to repeat the answer that my colleague has just given. However, it states very clearly that that information will be made public after the RCMP investigation. The investigation is still ongoing.

I want to remind my hon. colleague that on Wednesday night, after this information became known, we took steps immediately, as his Leader knows, to get that information into the public domain as quickly as possible. We were refused access to the House of Commons, so we made that information available through the media on Wednesday evening. It was not material to the process on Thursday. On Thursday, we were simply tabling the documents in the House of a Budget that had been made public about 20 hours before. It was important for us to get that information tabled in the House, simply to initiate the parliamentary process.

BUDGET CANCELLATION SUGGESTED APPROPRIATE COURSE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Finance. A reading of the statement put out yesterday by Mutual Life of Canada makes it clear that when Mutual Life reported the leak to the Minister's office on the afternoon of the 27th, it was not in a position to tell the Minister's staff, or the Minister, that no profiteering had occurred.

With that information, and not knowing that no profiteering had occurred, how could the Minister proceed to introduce his Budget in the House that night?

• (1450)

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has just mentioned a very important point. In fact, this is why last week I felt I had to remind the House, as the RCMP Commissioner had informed me, that so far we had no evidence that people in Canada had been able to profit from information derived from a Budget document. And I think that is what Canadians need to know. My point is that this Government has acted responsibly by immediately asking the RCMP to investigate all the circumstances around this case, and especially any possibility that people may have tried to profit from privileged information in the Budget, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

RESPONSIBILITY OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am not asking about a police investigation or the result that investigation will lead to, I am asking about the responsibility of the Minister of Finance who had to decide that afternoon whether to proceed to bring his Budget before the House of Commons. He knew that it had been leaked to a large financial institution. He did not know whether there had been any profiteering at that point. How could he proceed with the Budget, knowing that it was in the hands of one of the largest insurance companies in Canada?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me remind the Hon. Member that the Budget was made public the night before and that information was in the public domain.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): That information was in the public domain for some 20 hours prior to my standing up at 5.40 on Thursday afternoon. That information that was released in the Budget statement on Wednesday night—

Mr. Kaplan: This was Tuesday.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —was the subject of trading activity all day Thursday. It would have been quite inappropriate, quite disruptive to the financial markets if at that stage we would have withdrawn the Budget.

EXTERNAL TRADE

ACCUSATIONS OF FRAUD AGAINST CERTAIN TEXTILE IMPORTERS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. Not long ago, Canada Customs laid several charges of fraud against textile importers in this country, in connection with merchandise manufactured in Korea, shipped to front companies in Japan and then transshipped to Canada as merchandise of Japanese origin, thus violating our bilateral agreements and Section 17 of the Export and Import Permits Act. Could the Minister reassure Canadian textile manufacturers and workers and inform the House that the Government is taking appropriate steps to monitor and detect this type of fraud?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, officials at External Affairs and Revenue Canada Customs have been investigating allegations that Korean exporters have been circumventing our bilateral textile agreement with Korea through the trans-shipment of polyester fabric through Japan. There has been an investigation in the offices of certain importers in Montreal and Toronto. Charges have been laid against two importers in Toronto. Charges against a number of other companies are anticipated.

We have asked the co-operation of the Korean and Japanese Governments in the investigation. We are requesting consultations with Korea under the provisions of the Canada-Korea Textile Agreement to seek compensation for the trans-shipment.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Sudbury.

THE BUDGET

APRIL 25 ALLEGED AS DATE OF SECOND LEAK

Mrs. Diane Marleau (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, we were advised that Mutual Life had a copy of the Budget in Brief on April 25.

Mr. Lewis: You were advised?

Mr. Mazankowski: Why didn't you tell us?

Mr. Lewis: Why didn't you tell us?

Mrs. Marleau: The Hon. Minister of Finance has an extensive background in financial and business matters on Bay Street. Anyone with that kind of knowledge knows how quickly any detail is used and turned into profits.

With the advent of fax machines, photocopies can go around the world within an hour.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mrs. Marleau: My question is directed to the Minister of Finance. Does he still believe that no one profited from the leak of this Budget?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not quite sure I understand precisely the Hon. Member's question. If she is saying that she had information—

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): That is not the case. From what the Hon. Member says, I understand that is not what she meant to say. I can only respond to her question by referring to the investigations that the RCMP have carried out. My colleague, the Solicitor General, has said that to date there has been no indication of profiteering. I believe it is the Ontario Securities Commission and two or three other securities Commissions that have said they have found no indication of profiteering to date. But that investigation continues. When it is completed I will be able to provide the Hon. Member with a full answer.

CONFIDENCE IN THE BUDGET QUESTIONED

Mrs. Diane Marleau (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, there is no way at this time that anyone can make that kind of statement in all honesty.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put her question.

Mrs. Marleau: What we have here is Wilsongate. How will the Government restore confidence—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Dick: You blew it.

Mr. Beatty: Send in the first team next time.

An Hon. Member: Another rat.

Mr Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member could put her question.

Mrs. Marleau: My question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. How will the Government restore confidence in the Budget? Will you ask for the resignation of the Hon. Minister of Finance?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think what we have seen in the financial markets over the last three or four weeks is a very good indication of the confidence that there has been in this particular Budget.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member for LaSalle—Émard is yelling his support for this Budget because he—

Mr. Martin: Support? I said it is a terrible Budget.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): He is absolutely sure it is the right thing for this country—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops.

RESIGNATION OF FINANCE MINISTER URGED

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, the only thing we know for sure is that the Finance Minister is not doing the right thing by stonewalling against these inquiries.

My question is directed to the Minister of Finance. When he stood on April 27 at 11 o'clock, he said that he was not aware of the fact that Mutual Life of Canada had information regarding the Budget some days in advance. He has also said that by 2.30 in Question Period, although he had been alerted, it was only an allegation.

By the time he rose to deliver his Budget at 5.40 in the afternoon of April 27, was he aware then? Had he checked out the allegations to ensure that in fact there had been a Budget leak? Why did he not do the right thing at that time, announce it to the House of Commons and announce his resignation at the same time?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the Hon. Member's question. Could he repeat it, please?

Mr. Riis: I will try again. At eleven o'clock when the Minister of Finance rose in his place, he indicated that he was not aware there had been a second leak. By 2.30 in the afternoon he also indicated that he was aware of allegations that there had been a second leak—

Mr. Mazankowski: No.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): No.

Mr. Riis: By 5.40 in the afternoon, when the Minister rose in his place to present the Budget, knowing that his office had been informed, had he chased down these allegations and confirmed that there in fact had been a leak and that the Budget was in the hands of Mutual Life of Canada for at least two or three days? Why at that time did he not do the right thing, announce there had been at least two leaks, and also do the honourable thing and offer his resignation to the Prime Minister of Canada?

• (1500)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am repeating my answers. At 10 p.m. or 10.30 p.m. the night before, Wednesday, the Budget was made public. The Budget was in the public domain. It had been delivered. The full package of information had been distributed to Members of this House. The full package had been distributed to the media. It was the subject of activity in the financial markets for the whole of Thursday.

Let me go back to what the Hon. Member said. He said that we were stonewalling. He said because we are not commenting on investigations that are under way at the RCMP we are stonewalling. If we were to comment on this the same Member would be up on his feet saying that we were interfering with justice, interfering with the course of the investigation. He would be saying that we were prejudicing the successful outcome of the investigation and a successful trial if that were to follow.

TIMING OF KNOWLEDGE OF MINISTER

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, now that this whole matter of the second leak has become public my question is very simple. When was the Minister of Finance aware that there had been a second leak? Why at that time did he not at least announce that fact to the House of Commons rather than wait for the media to release the information?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we are going over ground that we already covered earlier in Question Period. I indicated that my office was made aware of this some time around 1.30 or 1.45 on Thursday, April 27. They immediately contacted the RCMP and ensured that that new information was the subject of the investigation that had already commenced around 7 or 7.30 the night before. Shortly after, I was made aware of this myself and the Government became aware of it.

The reasons why there have been no comment on this is because—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is a cover-up.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Leader of the Opposition says that it is a cover-up.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Yes.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): When he was the Minister of Justice, the Solicitor General, I am sure that he would be advising members of his Cabinet that under no circumstances should they be commenting on the details of—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: That concludes Question Period.

I have notice of a question of privilege from the Hon. Minister of Supply and Services.

PRIVILEGE

STATEMENT PURSUANT TO S. O. 31—HON. MEMBER FOR THE BATTLEFORDS—MEADOW LAKE

Hon. Paul Dick (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I want to draw to the attention of yourself and of the House that statements made by the Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake (Mr. Taylor) yesterday, as reported at page 2039 of Hansard under Statements pursuant to Standing Order 31, are inaccurate and wrong. If he would refer to the statement which I made in committee, which was that we only use Canadian owned or controlled agencies and some of the 25 largest agencies—

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Minister. However, that is a question of debate. I know that the Hon. Minister will try to find some other means by which he can respond to the statement of the Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake.

POINT OF ORDER

MEMBER FOR CHAMBLY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my point of order relates to a matter within the jurisdiction of the Deputy Prime Minister. If he might be recalled to the House, I will just hold on until he is here.

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member. Perhaps he could just wait for one moment.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the Deputy Prime Minister has chosen to leave the House despite the fact that I indicated that this is a matter within his jurisdiction. However, perhaps the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) might respond.

In view of the events of yesterday concerning the Member of Parliament for Chambly, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice, on a point of order, whether he has a statement to make to the House about tabling a motion to expel the Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé) from this House in view of the wrongdoing to which he has pleaded guilty. Will he do that?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, Your Honour knows that there is—

Mr. Speaker: I do not think that is a point of order. The Hon. Member has asked the Government a question. The Government may or may not want to respond at this time.

Mr. Lewis: That is a question for Question Period.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order.

Mr. Speaker: I have to advise the Hon. Member for Burnaby that that is not a point of order at this time.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order, perhaps we ought to wait for Routine Proceedings, until we get to Motions, with the expectation that the Government will at least have something to say when we come to that point in terms of what it plans to do with respect to this very important matter.

Mr. Speaker: Both the Hon. Member for Burnaby and the Hon. Member for Kamloops have made their positions clear. I think their area of concern is clear to the House. I think that there will be an appropriate place to raise it in the House.

RAILWAY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-242, an Act to amend the Railway Act (delimiting telephone areas).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to thank my colleague, the Hon. Member for Brome—Missisquoi (Mrs. Bertrand), who has agreed to second my Bill. The purpose of this Bill is to enable the Governor in Council to instruct the CRTC to harmonize telephone service charges within a given socio-economic region. I think it is important that the Government should have the appropriate instruments to correct certain inequities in municipalities where callers are charged long distance rates for calls within the same region.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MEMBER FOR CHAMBLY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could seek some guidance from my hon. friend, the Government House Leader. He is aware of course of how serious the matter is in terms of the Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé). I think we are all aware of course of the Fred Rose case back in 1947 when the House of Commons was asked to go through a procedure by which a motion was put before the House. This is not necessarily a government initiative but a motion of the House. The House voted on that motion and Mr. Fred Rose was no longer a Member of Parliament.

I am sure we are all dismayed at the actions of one of our colleagues. I would simply ask for guidance from my hon. friend, the Government House Leader, with respect to what steps he is planning. Is it something that the House Leaders should get together on to draft a motion that is acceptable to all sides of the House? I simply ask for guidance from the Government House Leader.

Mr. Speaker: Again I point out that the Chair is quite aware of what the Hon. Member is trying to do. However, the Hon. Member has put it in the form of a request for a response from the Government. Strictly and procedurally I am not so sure that the Government needs to respond at this time. However, the Hon. Minister of Justice was rising.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think it might clear the air if I did comment, while I agree with you that I do not think it is appropriate at this time. My hon. friend who first raised the matter is a colleague at the Bar. He will know that while the individual in question has pleaded guilty and been sentenced, that there is an appeal period for the sentence. I believe in this case that it is 30 days. I think it would be inappropriate for the Government to consider moving in haste, since the matter just took place yesterday. We should allow the due process of the law to be completed.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby on the same point.

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Government House Leader has indicated, in response to my initial question on this point, that the Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé) should be accorded a period for appeal, presumably, before he takes any action. I want to make two points.

First, the motion to expel Fred Rose in 1947 was put before the House in the name of the then Prime Minister, Mackenzie King. I would hope this Government would show the same kind of leadership in these circumstances.

Second, I want to ask—

Mr. Speaker: The difficulty the Chair is in, and I address these remarks to all Hon. Members, is that this is not the place to debate whether or not the Government ought to do what some Government did in the past.

I have certainly given every latitude to the Hon. Member for Kamloops to put a request to the Government on this important matter. The Government has responded that at the moment the Government, for whatever reasons, does not want to move. The Hon. Minister of Justice has cited appeal times.

It does not seem to me appropriate that we now have an argument, a debate in the Chamber, on whether or not that response is appropriate, given some other responses. It will not surprise Hon. Members to know that the Chair and the Table have looked at this matter with very great deliberation over the last 24 hours, and there may well be an appropriate time to discuss it. I hope that the Chair will be able to be of assistance to all Parties.

However, at the moment I do not think it is appropriate to get into a debate over what the Government would want to do at this particular time. The Minister of Justice has responded. The Government, the Official Opposition, and the New Democratic Party may well want to have some discussions and then come in, at which time that might be of assistance to the Speaker, but at the moment I think I am bound by the rules.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I am certainly quite prepared to join my fellow colleagues as House Leaders and pursue this matter further.

I am not a lawyer. Again I simply want to seek some clarification. The Hon. Member, as I understand it, pleaded guilty and has actually served his sentence. As a non-lawyer, does that still encourage the Government to set the matter aside in case he is going to appeal having already served his sentence? It seems to be an odd sort of thing.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops may not be a lawyer, but he is pleading his case with very great effectiveness. I think that is continuing the same point and I think we should move on.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS—CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew): Mr. Speaker, I move that the first report of the Standing Committee on Public Accounts, presented to the House on Thursday, May 11, be concurred in.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend has moved a debatable motion, and I wish to debate the matter.

As a past chairman of the Public Accounts Committee, I am well aware of the valuable work that the Public Accounts Committee does. I know that my hon. friend will function in the same tradition as all Members who have held that position in making every effort to see that the report of the Auditor General on an annual basis—

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Minister of Justice has called for debate. It is a debatable motion. Ordinarily, under the strict rules of the House, the Hon. Member for Renfrew, having put his motion, would not be entitled to speak. However, it might be that the Hon. Minister of Justice might accept some comment from the Hon. Member for Renfrew, due to the fact that he has called for a debate.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice rose because he has chaired this Public Accounts Committee in the past when he sat in opposition. I will give him that recognition, because I think he did a bit of wandering around and investigation with that committee and tried to bring out the government expenditures and any inequities, inaccuracies or inefficiencies thereof. Of course, we as a Public Accounts Committee will do likewise.

I am very proud to be chairing the Public Accounts Committee in this House. It also makes me the critic of the Government on financial management. One of the reasons I am so proud to be chairing the Public Accounts Committee, and as a result being the critic for financial management of this Government, is that no Government in the history of Canada could give me more work to do than to be a critic of financial management.

I want to say that in doing our work as a Public Accounts Committee this report, if adopted by the House, will allow us to meet with provincial Public Accounts Committees from across Canada, from July 9 to 12.

This will be the tenth annual meeting of all Public Accounts Committees at the provincial level and the national Public Accounts Committee here in Ottawa. This will give the Members at the provincial and the federal level a chance to discuss the way they handle their meetings, how they get information, what kind of witnesses they have before them, what approach they take to the serious problems, how we go about digging out the information that is required and, of course, paying attention to our own Auditor General's report. I think the Auditor General has done a very good job of bringing out some serious issues with which this Government is faced today.

Of course the first one is the inefficiencies and the lack of proper spending as a follow-up to the signing of the federal Government-Province of Nova Scotia federal-provincial agreement on the offshore. The Auditor General has pointed out that more than half that money was spent on things that he does not feel were related to offshore development. If a federal Minister or federal Government is to sign an agreement with a provincial Government, surely those matters should be brought out in the open.

I know that the Minister of Justice now wants me to sit down because what he has actually done is opened up a can of worms and allowed me to discuss why it is very important for us as a federal Public Accounts Committee here in the House of Commons to go and meet with the various provincial Public Accounts Committees across Canada to find out how we tackle all these problems.

• (1520)

The Minister of Justice will know that his Government signed an agreement with the Province Nova Scotia and that that agreement was, in fact, not lived up to. The Auditor General has brought this out very effectively.

Another point that he has brought out is that there are $8.8 billion in federal contracts that have been approved and sent out by the Department of Supply and Services. According to the Auditor General, he does not see that there is a very effective way of following up on the auditing of those contracts to make sure that that money has been well spent as well.

There is another area—and this is very apropos both debates that will be going on this afternoon—that the Auditor General cites. He says there is a lack of information on statistical data to make wise decisions on forestry. Forestry is a big issue in this country and is one that we have to tackle very constructively in the future.

The Bill that will follow this great discussion this afternoon will be Bill C-3 dealing with the setting up of the Department of Industry, Science and Technology. The Public Accounts Committee can look into this forestry issue very well and make sure that the proper research and development is done within forestry institutions in Canada. It can make recommendations on how we can work with the various provincial Departments of natural resources and can get on with that as well.

The Public Accounts Committee looks into all these matters that the Auditor General raises as ineffective spending or in fact lack of proper spending by the Government of Canada, as well as the agreements which the Government signs.

I want to thank the Minister of Justice for giving me this opportunity to deliver a brief speech on my report today.

Mr. Lewis: Madam Speaker, I appreciate my hon. colleague's very learned discussion on why the Public Accounts Committee is travelling to Edmonton for the annual meeting of Public Accounts Committees, provincial and federal, and his very persuasive argument to the Government that there is no need for any further discussion. We are prepared to have the motion go on the nod immediately.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

PROPOSED CLOSURE OF CFB LONDON

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): Madam Speaker, I am honoured to present, on behalf of thousands of Londoners from all three federal constituencies, the first instalment of many petitions. They speak with one common cause and one common voice demanding the Government to rescind its decision to close CFB London. The Government cannot afford to disregard the voices of thousands of people from London and are.

REVISION OF EXTRADITION LAWS

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga West): Madam Speaker, it is a great honour for me to present this petition, which has been circulated by the Victims of Violence Society and is supported by 23 Members of Parliament. It bears 2,300 signatures and has been certified correct as to form and content.

The petition calls on the Government to tighten up the Extradition Act, make it conform with the extradition treaty, and stop Canada from becoming a haven for convicted criminals and murderers from other countries.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Madam Speaker, I have the honour of presenting petitions which have been signed by over 2,100 people and have been collected by organizations spearheaded by the Victims of Violence Society and Members of Parliament from across the country.

The national petition will be presented to this House over the next number of weeks. It is expected that thousands, if not hundreds of thousands of signatures, will be gathered. I join the petitioners who are calling for the Government of Canada to revise the extradition laws and thereby allow the Minister of Justice to order the extradition of fugitives.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT CHANGES

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Madam Speaker, I rise, pursuant to Standing Order 36, to present a petition from a number of residents of Metro Toronto concerning the Government's proposal to change the Unemployment Insurance Act.

The petitioners point out that this will deprive many people of benefits to which they should have been entitled. The public was never warned during the election campaign that the Government would do this. The previous Parliament, through the Labour, Employment and Immigration Committee, had called for a move in the opposite direction.

Therefore, the petitioners call upon Parliament to move immediately to adopt the recommendations presented to it by the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration in its first report to the second session of the thirty-third Parliament and to reject any proposals to fund much needed retraining programs from unemployment benefit funds.

IMMIGRATION—REFUGEE BACKLOG

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Madam Speaker, I also have a petition from 135 residents of the City of Toronto and areas nearby concerning the Government's policy with regard to the backlog of refugee claimants who arrived before this year. They point out that many of them are denied permission to work causing strains on the public welfare system and that there is uncertainty about the standard that will be used to determine the decision about those who are not credible as refugees but may have humanitarian and compassionate grounds for being considered.

Therefore, they ask that the Government ensure that a statement of the humanitarian and compassionate grounds will be published, including the presence in Canada of their relatives and the successful establishment of refugee claimants in Canada, giving special consideration to those escaping war zones, oppressive Governments, and natural disasters.

VIA RAIL SERVICES

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Madam Speaker, I have the pleasure of submitting several petitions which have been appropriately certified by the Clerk of Petitions according to Standing Order 36.

These petitions are signed by several hundred persons from southern Ontario. They take note of the failure of the Government to have provided adequate resources to VIA Rail and, as a result, VIA Rail has not functioned as effectively as it could as a surface transportation mode. It also takes note of the fact that the Government now proposes to cut back VIA Rail further and takes note of the implications of deregulation of air passenger service.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain, improve and modernize VIA Rail, in contrast to what the Government intends to do, in those areas of the country where VIA Rail might provide a more rapid, economical, safe, convenient, and environmentally sound, as well as an energy efficient alternative to other means of transportation.

STARRED QUESTIONS

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Madam Speaker, would you be so kind as to call starred questions Nos. 4, 8, 11, 12, 13, 14 and 29?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

CNR—TRANSPORTATION OF TRANSFORMERS

*Question No. 4—Mr. St-Julien:

In 1987, did the Canadian National Railway Company transport Hydro-Québec transformers by special train No. 581, via Faribault, from Matagami to Varennes, in the province of Québec, and, if so (a) what was the total cost involved (b) through which subdivisions was that train routed (c) what was the duration in hours of that special trip?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): The Canadian National Railway Company advises as follows:

Yes, on October 23, 1987.

(a) The total cost of the movement is of a proprietary nature and the Canadian National Railway Company believes it should not be made public for competitive reasons.

(b) Via the Chapais Subdivision between Franquet and Faribault.

(c) Approximately 13 days in total. Because of the large dimensions of the load, the routing of the train was limited to the rail line that provided the necessary width and height clearance.

TAX DEDUCTIONS CLAIMED BY FOREIGN-OWNED CORPORATIONS

*Question No. 8—Mr. Benjamin:

For (a) 1984 (b) 1985 (c) 1986 (d) 1987 (e) 1988, did any foreign-owned corporation claim tax deductions for interest arising from domestic borrowing to finance foreign activities and, if so, (i) what number (ii) what is the net revenue cost to the government of those deductions?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): The requested data is not ascertainable from the financial statements and tax returns required to be filed with the Department and accordingly is not readily available to the Department.

In order to obtain this information the Department would have to audit the books and records of each foreign-owned corporation.

TAX DEDUCTIONS CLAIMED BY CORPORATIONS

*Question No. 11—Mr. Nystrom:

1. For (a) 1984 (b) 1985 (c) 1986 (d) 1987 (e) 1988, did any corporations claim tax deductions for interest arising from borrowing money and, if so, (i) in what numbers (ii) what is the net revenue cost to the government of those deductions?

2. For (a) 1984 (b) 1985 (c) 1986 (d) 1987 (e) 1988, did any corporations claim tax deductions for interest arising from borrowing money to finance corporate restructuring, purchases of other corporations or corporate mergers and, if so, (i) in what numbers (ii) for each such claim, what is the net revenue cost to the government of those deductions?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): The requested data is not ascertainable from the financial statements and tax returns required to be filed with the Department and accordingly is not readily available to the Department.

In order to obtain this information the Department would have to audit the books and records of each corporation claiming expenses against income.

DIVIDEND TAX CREDIT CLAIMED BY INDIVIDUALS

*Question No. 12—Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East):

For (a) 1980 (b) 1981 (c) 1982 (d) 1983 (e) 1984 (f) 1985 (g) 1986 (h) 1987, did any individual tax filers claim a dividend tax credit for shares held in a corporation which paid no corporate income tax, and, if so, (i) in what numbers (ii) what was the total net revenue cost?

The Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): The requested data is not captured by the Department and is not required to be reported in the financial statements and tax returns filed with the Department by individuals and corporations.

To obtain this information the Department would have to conduct a manual search for the corporate tax return of each payor; if the corporation's year-end was not the same as that of the payee, taxpayer contact would have to be made to determine the years to which the dividends related.

TAX DEDUCTIONS FOR ADVERTISING EXPENSES

*Question No. 13—Ms. Black:

For each year since 1984, did any (a) individuals (b) corporations claim tax deductions for advertising expenses and, if so, (i) what numbers (ii) what is the total net revenue cost to the government?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): The requested data is not ascertainable from the financial statements and tax returns required to be filed with the Department.

In order to obtain this information the Department would have to audit the books and records of each taxpayer claiming expenses against income.

TAX DEDUCTIONS CLAIMED BY INDIVIDUALS

*Question No. 14—Mr. Kristiansen:

For each year since 1984, did any individuals claim tax deductions for (a) bribes (b) kickbacks (c) fines for other offences and, if so, (i) in what numbers (ii) what is the net revenue cost to the government of those deductions?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): The requested information is not ascertainable from the financial statements and tax returns required to be filed with the Department and accordingly is not readily available for analysis by the Department.

In order to obtain this information the Department would have to audit the books and records of each taxpayer claiming expenses against income.

REVIEW OF UI REGIONAL BOUNDARIES

*Question No. 29—Mr. Fisher:

1. During the last four years, did the government conduct or commission any review of the regional boundaries used in determining eligibility for unemployment insurance and, if so, in each case (a) on what dates (b) were consultants hired and, if so, what are their names (c) at what total cost?

2. Has the government analysed the potential effects on (a) unemployment insurance recipients (b) the Treasury of changing the regional boundaries used in determining unemployment insurance eligibility?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): 1. (a) In September, 1988, the Commission approved a change to the boundaries of the Outaouais region in Quebec. The review was conducted by officials of the Department of Employment and Immigration and the expenses were met from within the existing departmental budget.

The only comprehensive review of the boundaries of UI regions which this government has initiated in the last four years is the one which was announced last August by the Minister of State (Employment and Immigration), a review which is still ongoing.

(b)–(c) This review is also being conducted by officials of the department and the expenses will be met from within the existing departmental budget.

2. (a)–(b) The impacts on UI recipients are not known at the present time because the project has not yet reached that stage.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 52

LACK OF SECURITY SURROUNDING BUDGET

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 52, I ask leave to propose a motion to adjourn the House for the purposes of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the rapidly escalating information about lack of security surrounding the preparation of the Budget with the resulting unauthorized pre-release of budgetary information in no fewer than five copies, as has been identified earlier today. One these copies fell into the hands of a financial institution and others in a position to take private advantage of it. As well, there has been a refusal of the Government to inform the House accurately on these matters, to take its constitutional responsibilities on such matters seriously, or to act effectively on these matters.

At a press conference today at the Ottawa office of Soloway Wright was revealed the existence of no fewer than five copies of the document entitled Budget in Brief. Given the seriousness of this matter and the important recent revelations which were made as late as a few hours ago, I respectfully request that we have an emergency debate on this topic.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has given the appropriate notice in writing to the Chair. First, let me say to Hon. Members and to the public, that the issue that has been the subject of debate in the House for some time now, and especially today and yesterday, is of course a very serious matter. I do not think that any Member on either side of the House would doubt that. Just because it is serious, however, it does not necessarily fit the rules under which an emergency debate ought to proceed.

Members of the public will know that there was a very vivid exchange of questions and answers today and there may be more from time to time, but at least as of today I feel it is not appropriate to proceed with an emergency debate.

Having said that, let me assure the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott–Russell (Mr. Boudria) that the Chair can understand the reason for the application and the Chair is in agreement with the Hon. Member that it is a serious matter.

POINT OF ORDER

ANSWERS TO STARRED QUESTIONS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Today there were seven starred questions. The use of starred questions is restricted to three per Member and a Member may, if he puts a star on the question, require that an oral answer to the question be given to the House of Commons. I notice that in the last few days, the Speaker has let this rule go by without asking the Parliamentary Secretary to read the answers. I just wonder if we could follow the rules as strictly as we can and not allow such leeway to take place.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, in the last couple of days, because of the length of the answers and because of the number of questions that were answered, we have asked the permission of the House not to read the questions. Today the procedure went very quickly and, as a result, we moved beyond that stage and into the next stage of motions. Certainly we on this side of the House are cognizant of the rule and I will do my best to entertain the House by reading answers to some of the very important questions that have been put to us.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is a very careful student of parliamentary procedure. Strictly speaking, the point he raises is one that ought to be observed unless, of course, there is a disposition in the House to allow the Parliamentary Secretary to proceed without answering all the questions orally. However, the Chair has heard the point of the Hon. Member and the Chair will be diligent in ensuring that the rules are followed unless, as I say, there is a disposition in the House to dispense.

I might say that the Chair has also noticed that there has been a certain amount of energy on the Government side in delivering answers to questions.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, April 25, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mulroney that Bill C–3, an Act to establish the Department of Industry, Science and Technology, to repeal the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion Act and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and on the amendment of Mr. Langdon:

> That the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:
> this House declines to give second reading to Bill C–3 because it fails to clearly define federal government responsibility for regional development, and specifically fails to reflect the requirement under 36(1)(b) of the Constitution Act, 1982, that Parliament is committed to "furthering economic development to reduce disparity and opportunities".

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew): Madam Speaker, I rise today to speak to Bill C-3 which sets up the Department of Industry, Science and Technology. In doing so, I must say that I have a very deep desire to see Canada participate more fully in research and development and to mean it.

The Government has shown its desire to do away with much of the Canadian R and D that has been and is in place now. It is rather prophetic that I rise this afternoon to speak on this Bill which involves science and technology because this morning at 9 a.m., Westinghouse Corporation announced the phasing out of its high-tech plant in the Town of Renfrew, a plant which is only about eight years old. This was a corporate decision made in the United States affecting one of the most modern high-tech plants in eastern Ontario.

Hon. Members will remember well the former DREE and DRIE and now the new Department of Industry, Science and Technology will take the place of those Departments, but it will not have the same effect. The nuts and bolts of this Bill is to set up a Department that will not relate in the same effective way to regional development in Canada. The Government is moving away once again from the support that has traditionally been given to the regions by governments since Confederation.

We in this Parliament may simply think that this is just another Bill. This is not just another Bill. Indeed, in a sense, it is a Bill in name only. The Government can have all the departments and agencies it likes called Industry, Science and Technology, but if it does not mean it, the Departments and agencies mean nothing.

I can recall when Mitel Corporation moved into the Town of Renfrew and undertook to build two more plants at Buctouche, New Brunswick, following that. One plant in New Brunswick was built but never opened. The plant in Renfrew eventually closed and the town lost something like 500 jobs at that time. Right across the road from that facility, there is the Westinghouse plant and its 150 employees received word today that corporate headquarters in the United States made the decision that this plant too must be phased out. I believe the first announcement about that plant was made in 1979 when $6.2 million from the former Department of Regional Economic Expansion was allocated to its construction. Later on, in order to help pay for some of the high-tech equipment that went into that plant, a Defence Industry Productivity Program was approved by the Cabinet in the early 1980s to the tune of $2.3 million which only paid for one and a quarter or one and a half pieces of equipment that went into the plant. So that gives us an idea of how high-tech this industry really was.

I am wondering if the new Department of Industry, Science and Technology made any representations to the Westinghouse Corporation to try to save this high-tech industry.

I am interested to know what discussions have gone on between this Government and the industry itself. These are serious questions. I consider eastern Ontario a very important and special region of this country. Indeed, in many ways eastern Ontario relates to the Maritimes and Atlantic Canada in general, because it has much the same way of life.

The Ottawa Valley is 250 miles east of Toronto, the same as western Québec is hundreds of miles from Québec City. This puts us in a special region where we need strong spokespersons to go to bat for the people and for the region itself. I feel for the 150 employees who received the news this morning that Westinghouse has decided to phase out their plant in Renfrew. I feel for the community and for the mayor who has been very supportive of development in her town.

As we discuss this Bill today, we are talking about a Bill on one hand and the reality of what is happening in this country on the other. I would like the Minister of the new Department of Industry, Science and Technology to comment on how this new Department is going to help the regions of this country. What association is it going to have with industries such as the one that closed this morning in Renfrew? Is it going to have negotiations? Is it going to move in and see what it can do to help them out?

It is a well-known fact that this Government is anti-Crown corporation. In this country we have some of the finest research and development, science and technology being performed by Crown corporations. Any private company that cannot afford to have its own labs can contract out to these corporations to have its research done. Crown corporations can contract for research and development. Tests can be run and the information given back on a private basis. One of the great things about having a public operation for research and development, such as a high-tech Crown corporation, is that any new inventions, new ideas, new proposals, new ventures that come out of those Crown corporations can go to any industry in the country that can use them. It is not somebody's private domain or private information. That is very important because that helps all industry, small and large.

The United States corporate decision to close the Westinghouse plant in the Town of Renfrew is regrettable. It shows once again that where there are branch plants in Canada that are headquartered in the United States, when any rationalization takes place or when there are cut-backs, it is the regions of this country with American branch plants that suffer first and foremost. Nothing is more plain than the truth we have seen today.

Many people in the regions of this country work hard together, municipalities, community leaders, to help support their communities. This happens across northern Canada where it is absolutely imperative that people stick together and work together for their regions. That is what is going to build this nation. It is not going to be the bottom line on some ledger book that is going to develop this country as a whole. The bottom line in the ledger book is going to make money or show the deficit or otherwise for a private company. But this Government is so hung up on corporate Canada, on the corporate community, that it cannot see beyond the horizon. It does not see into the regions and appreciate the great potential that is there for the future of Canada.

As I mentioned earlier this afternoon, one area that the Auditor General really zeroed in on was the lack of forestry statistical data to really make wise decisions on reforestation in this country. From long before Confederation, the three great industries of Canada have been agriculture, forestry and the fisheries. To a large degree these three elements are still extremely important to this country as a whole. The three of them touch every corner of this nation.

Madam Speaker, it is very important to have the kind of data that shows the amount of forests that have been burned annually, to show the amount of land where trees have been cut, which has proven to be of no use to agriculture and should therefore be reforested to put it to the use that nature intended. With regard to insects attacking trees—the spruce budworm, for example—there is no more important area that this Government and this Department can zero in on with research and development and science and technology than the protection of trees from diseases. They must be protected because it takes a long time to grow a tree, but insects can destroy it in very short order. We have to have a handle on all the information that natural resources departments have in every province of this country and wherever other natural resources elements apply from the territories, so that good information is available upon which to make judgments and plans.

The federal-provincial forestry agreements are extremely important to this country because they provide for the replanting of those lands that I have mentioned. When cuts are made, trees must be planted. It is true that many companies do a very good job of planting trees. But our caucus committee on the softwood lumber issue talked to some witnesses who stated that only one-eighth of the cut over lands in their particular area had been reforested by man. It is important that you get good quality trees to plant in those areas. Otherwise, if you are going to get second and third growth, you have a poor class of timber and it costs more to produce and costs more to put it through sawmills, and so on.

There should be research and development into tree growth and into producing a good breed of trees. We have some very good projects and facilities available for that. However, the bottom line is that if the Government is not interested in investing, and it cannot be called spending, but investing in research and development and good quality forestry research, then there will not be a return on those funds down the line. It will not be money that is thrown out of the window. We will be building for the future. We will be providing industry with the material for the future. Industry itself will certainly assist in doing this job in Canada. I wish to zero in on that particular aspect because indirectly and directly forestry employs something like 11 per cent of the labour force of Canada. That is why it is so extremely important to us.

The National Research Council is another thing that comes to mind as I look at this Bill on industry, science and technology. There was a particular lack of commitment by the Government in the last Parliament when it cut and cut the National Research Council.

A few weeks ago I had occasion to drive into the heartland of Algonquin Park. There, sitting in the bush with only the bears to view, it was a $50-million telescope with related equipment around it and only two people to look after and safeguard it. That very famous telescope, one of the three best in the world at the time, was closed down by the Government in the last Parliament. That research and development was taken out to a mountainside in Hawaii in the United States. Instead of owning it entirely ourselves, as we did in Algonquin Park and as we do in B.C., the Government bought a 25 per cent share in a telescope in Hawaii, which it obviously does not control. However, it will be very handy, because one can imagine how many people from the Public Service who perhaps recommended this as a great thing to do, or how many people related to it in any way, can now take a holiday in Hawaii and do their business with the telescope out there in which Canada has a 25 per cent share.

We know that many companies that conduct research and development receive loans from Governments. They have contracts that are approved by the Department of Supply and Services. They do research and development or they develop new products or product lines. Yet we find that today in the Department of Supply and Services there is a total of $8.8 billion in contracts that have been highlighted by the Auditor General of Canada as not being effectively and efficiently audited within that Department. He has asked that they pull up their socks and start doing a better job. When one thinks of this type of money floating around, that the Auditor General has stated is not being properly audited or followed up on, then how much money is there that is being wasted and could go into research and development that the Government could use to do some very effective things?

Agriculture is another area that has been hit and downgraded on the basis of lack of research and development.

Tourism is one of the great industries and will be the largest industry in this country, and in most countries of the world, by the year 2000. In fact, it is going to overtake the food industry as one of the leading industries in the world. Last year, tourists spent $2 trillion travelling around the world. Many of them visited famous scientific sites, and many of them visited some of the wonders created by science and technology in the world. By the year 2000 that will be doubled. Visitors will be spending $2 trillion to $4 trillion travelling around the world. There is a lot of work that can be done in that area. We in Canada should be among those nations that have some very important things to show to the world.

Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, as I mentioned in a previous speech in the House a couple of weeks ago, is one of the greatest research facilities we have in the nation. Now the Government has given it a 60-day or 90-day deadline to show how it is going to pay its way, or it will not be loaned any more money.

No other advanced country in the world today asks its own research facilities to pay their own way. The Governments in those technologically advanced and progressive countries in the world that are dominating world trade have a commitment to their research and development. They are putting their money where their mouth is and the money is flowing back to them because they have invested wisely.

I say to the Government today, if it is going to bring in a new Department called Industry, Science and Technology, it should develop a commitment to science and technology in this country, develop a commitment to research and development, and bring the country back from where it has been taken into a progressive, positive outlook for the development of the nation and the development of new products. Let us become one of the jewels in the world that people can point to and say that Canada has indeed done a tremendous job in developing research and development and new scientific inventions to back up the good society that we have today. Let us show we are out there leading the pack. We will not be leading the pack under this Government, however, unless there is a tremendous change in outlook.

Mr. Tremblay (Rosemont): I wish to say to the Hon. Member for Renfrew (Mr. Hopkins) that we understand very well his concern about the closing of the Westinghouse plant in Renfrew. The jobs will be moved to Hamilton, not to the United States. We must look at the background of this plant. Those facilities were established to produce and manufacture turbine blades and components of mechanical-drive turbines. The anticipated market for those products has not materialized. Over the last years the company lost $30 million.

I can say to the Hon. Member that the Department is working to find another company to buy back the facilities and to have some other products manufactured there. We know that the employees will be offered a comprehensive adjustment package. I am sure that the Department will be able to help and inform the Member on any facts that he may need.

I wish to put before the House the fact that when the Government came in it changed the tax exemptions for research and development. The Member suggested that we are spending money on technology and different things and saying it is research and development.

• (1600)

That tax rebate was the best example of giving money to companies without at least ensuring that they do research and development. We know that research and development on new products involves world-wide competition. We must have joint ventures with countries and companies must have joint ventures between themselves.

We have to choose in which sector Canada can be competitive. That is what we are trying and results are happening. We are becoming more and more competitive in the market-place.

This Department must work toward making industry competitive and innovative. That means that we must do research and development but do it with industry and on a competitive basis in the world-wide market.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member made a good point when he talked about what was happening as far as companies are concerned. I can tell the House that company officials here in Canada have taken a very humanistic view of the employees and of the community.

In no way did I say that the employees were going to the United States. I did say that the decision to phase out of the plant was made by the Westinghouse Corporation in the United States.

It is not true that all of the employees will be going to Hamilton. Some will go to Hamilton, and the Westinghouse officials in Canada have been very constructive in stating that they will work with the community and a committee of the community, of which I understand I will be a member, to try to get someone else into that plant.

This is where I believe the Department of Industry, Science and Technology can play a role. There are some very good public servants from DREE and DRIE who are very dedicated. They are in this Department of Industry, Science and Technology. I would simply ask the Minister to commit himself today to allow these people within his Department some latitude to work with the officials of the community and indeed with Westinghouse in Canada to do everything possible to assist in a changeover at least to bring another industry into that high-tech plant.

I give Westinghouse credit. By comparison, Westinghouse has approached this matter and has approached the community in a far more human and down-to-earth way than did the British firm that bought out the $30 million Mitel plant across the road.

They simply walked away from it, took some of the people and left the Town of Renfrew sitting there with 500 lost jobs. Furthermore, there is always a problem collecting taxes from industries when they close.

It is my understanding that Westinghouse Corporation, Canadian Division, will retain the ownership of the plant and is willing to lease it to another customer that may want to come in. It is an ideal proposition for a high-tech company that wants to start up.

It also takes the community off the hook. With Westinghouse Canada retaining ownership of the plant, it means the Town of Renfrew will get its municipal taxes and that will be one less headache.

I want to thank the Hon. Member for his comments. I want to see the community and those good public servants in that Department, whom I have known for a long time and know personally, work closely with the Westinghouse Corporation to get something else into that plant. I hope that along the way, when we run into a snag and need some help, the Department and the Ministry will be there to help us in every way they possibly can.

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the amendment to the motion which was placed before the House by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon). His amendment states:

> This House declines to give second reading to Bill C-3 because it fails to clearly define federal government responsibility for regional development, and specifically fails to reflect the requirement under s. 36(1)(b) of the Constitution Act, 1982, that Parliament is committed to "furthering economic development to reduce disparity in opportunities".

I recognize that there are positive aspects of the Bill. Certainly all Canadians should applaud more efforts in research and development and the integration of science with technology, even though some criticism can be made of that, as was pointed out by the Hon. Member who spoke before me. I oppose the Bill and support the amendment for two reasons. One is the continuing abdication of the historical role of the federal Government in the development of our national economy. This legislation illustrates another step in the abdication of that historic role.

Second, that abdication of responsibility is not an abstract matter. It has a real effect on people in the communities.

Historically, the role of the federal Government has been to strengthen the ties between east and west in Canada and to develop a strong national economy. Confederation came about because the various colonies in Canada made arrangements whereby they could all profit from the union. Early Governments in this country proceeded to build a national railway so that we would have an industrial structure, an independent economy and strengthen ties between east and west to give our national life and national economies some meaning. This was followed in the 1920s and 1930s by the introduction of national institutions such as the Canadian Wheat Board and the CBC, both of which were introduced by Conservative Governments. These were instruments to foster the east-west ties and to make Canada stronger.

Much of the industrial structure we enjoy today was developed as a result of the war economy. It was developed through the direct participation of the federal Government with the so-called dollar-a-year men from business and industry, which helped to develop an economic infrastructure that produced many kinds of goods and services.

There was a commitment to regional development throughout the Diefenbaker, Pearson and Trudeau years. We fondly remember the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, which did some very good work and laid the framework for new ways of integrating our national economy in the modern era. In 1982, regional development was recognized as a significant enough task for the federal Government to be included in the Canadian Constitution.

What has been happening lately? We are moving toward a global, or international economy. Goods and services flow from country to country, stock exchanges are open around the clock throughout the world and countries that previously had little economic clout have become our competitors. Clearly, these things mean that Canadians have to change, that we have to develop new ways of doing things. We accept that. In fact, we welcome that type of challenge. It is not something from which we should hide.

The Canadian Government had a clear choice about how it could confront these new developments, this emerging international economy. It could go the route of the neo-Conservatives who held sway in Great Britain and the United States. They said that the market would determine the way the economy would develop and that the Government would not play a role in national planning. There have been successes under that type of approach. Some people and some parts of those countries have become very wealthy. However, a great many people have been left behind, something which has become very clear over the years.

There is another approach. It is the one which has been taken by West Germany, Japan and, collectively, the European Common Market countries. It is a managed economy approach. In this approach the Government sees itself as playing a role to ensure that the economy benefits not only the corporate few, the companies which have the assets to get involved in the mainstream of international finance, but that each sector of the economy is developed. This is an integrated economy which can serve many of the national needs and not be vulnerable to the whims and currents of international finance. If we look at these two models, what we are saying to the Government is that it made the wrong choice. The choice it made simply ignores the historical and economic realities of our country. It will not work.

What we needed was a new approach. However, we did not get the type of new approach which we needed. The approach the Government is taking now has a number of flaws. One of those flaws is that it is reactive rather than proactive. What we are doing is waiting for enterprises to come to the Government, ask for a grant and have the Government respond rather than analyse the economy, see where we are weak and where we are strong and take organized action both in the private and public sector to address those structural flaws. The approach the Government is taking ignores grass roots movements in the country, movements such as the co-operative movement, the community economic development movement and small business. All of these have tremendous problems organizing their resources and accessing massive beasts like the Western Diversification Office and the new Department. Those are instruments which simply are not available and which do not play any type of supportive role for the self-help community type of enterprises which, when we look at the statistics, is where we see the new jobs and the new opportunities overwhelmingly being created.

We are left with no ongoing vehicle for integrated planning. We have no Department that will look at things on a national basis and that integrates one type of development in one part of the country with another in another part of the country. We have no parliamentary committee which allows Members of the House from all parts of the country to tour the country to see for themselves and to make informed decisions with respect to what direction the economics of the country should be headed in.

In regions like my own we are concerned that this lack of an integrated approach will cause us problems, for example, in the whole adjustment to free trade. The Government promised the world's finest adjustment mechanisms. The de Grandpré report let the Government off the hook by stating that we have the finest ones. I presume that refers to the Canadian Jobs Strategy. What we envision happening, as the Hon. Member from Renfrew pointed out, is that as plants close or the economies of the large metropolitan areas are impacted by free trade money that should be going to parts of the country like my own will be transferred from those areas where we need to create new jobs and new opportunities to parts of the country that are experiencing the effects of free trade.

We see too that there is no mechanism in place whereby an integrated approach can be taken to developing the infrastructure of the country. I am talking not only about the political infrastructure, the roads, transportation and air travel and so on, but we do not even have a banking system in most of northern Canada. In the north half of Saskatchewan there are only three banks. This means that without the involvement of agencies like the old DREE there is no access to capital in many areas of the country. We do not have any mechanism whereby we can co-ordinate our development of infrastructure. The Government prides itself on its deregulation. All that really means is that areas of the country that do not have the infrastructure now can certainly count on not having one in the future.

In leaving the regional development portions for Québec and Ontario in this Department, we are concerned that the historic problem of developments not taking place outside of Québec and Ontario will be reinforced by the structure of the Department. In fact, if we look at what should be done as opposed to what is being done, we can see that not only should we be taking new directions but we should in fact be changing the direction in which we are going now. In this regard one has to look only at the situation with VIA Rail where the Government is abandoning passenger train service at a time when we are facing potential serious energy shortages. We are seeing the abandonment of branch lines and the failure to upgrade them in the Province of Saskatchewan. We are seeing privatization, and the abandonment of post offices in small communities. We are seeing marketing boards, which give our farmers in all parts of the country equal access to the market, under attack on many fronts, certainly from free trade and the Government's own Budget.

We see no action being taken in the whole merger mania where the apologists here on millionaire's row just get out of the way and let the elephants have it while the small business sectors in the regions of the country are left to be trampled.

I guess the Free Trade Agreement has changed a lot of other equations. If there ever was a time when regional development programs were important it is now. What the Free Trade Agreement means is that the Government has given up any type of national vision. It has given up on Canada. It intends to give in to the natural north–south economic pole. It has no more confidence that Governments in Canada and the people of Canada can build their own economy. In other words, it is prepared to let big business dictate the agenda.

If we look at the last election which, indeed, the Government clearly won, we see that the regions of the country were clearly not impressed by the Government's assurances that regional development would not be affected. When we look at the square miles of territory which are held by the Government versus the Opposition, we see that the Government holds 919,000 square miles of territory while 5,188,000 square miles are represented by opposition Members. Some 85 per cent of the area of the country is represented by members of the Opposition. That clearly indicates that the people in the regions have no confidence that free trade will be good for them. They know it will mean that the secondary processing they need will not be there. They know that the Government involvement which could return to them the wealth that comes out of their regions for development and Government initiatives will no longer be there.

My own region, northern Saskatchewan, is feeling the effects already. Between the beginning of the year and the first three months of this year, the Province of Saskatchewan lost 13,000 people in population, 6,000 people in the month of February alone. We will soon be like North Dakota which has a population of only about 500,000, and many of those would not be there if it were not for the militarization of the economy. We see that our Government is encouraging the militarization of our economy. We can see that that is what we have to look forward to.

Cities in Saskatchewan have the fastest growing unemployment rate in the country. When I talk to people back home, one of the big factors in their despair and their lack of confidence in the future of our region is that the Government has clearly signalled over the last year that it is abandoning regional development. It has closed the offices in Prince Albert and La Ronge. It has failed to renew the regional development agreements, and in particular the Northern Economic Development Subsidiary Agreement, which had done good work over five years in developing the wild rice industry and creating tourist infrastructure, as well as community development corporations. These are all things which people saw as the vehicle to the future.

With the tourism agreement, the minerals agreement and the forestry agreement, we see that the resources that should have been available to fight forest fires and enhance the forests of that region are not there. The Government will probably come back and say: "Well, you have WDO. We are putting new things into place. You have the new Department." However, when you look at the budgets that are available in this year, the ERDA agreements have been cut by $50 million. WDO budget has been cut by $40 million. The Government states that over five years there is going to be more money spent. We can clearly see what is going to happen over five years. For the first few years there will be starvation, then there will be a feast. Ironically and probably not unintentionally just before the next election there will be a feast of money for the Government's friends in the regions. That is no way to develop a regional economy. That may be a way to buy a few votes but it is certainly not a way to develop the economy of Canada.

In summary, let me say that I oppose this particular piece of legislation, not out of some romantic longing for eras that have gone by in this country, or for some allegiance to a philosophy that perhaps it has had its time but it is past. I oppose it because it ignores the reality of the history and economic structure of this country. It will not work. I oppose it because it means throwing out the vision of Canada which has its own independent and integrated economy.

Therefore, I urge the Government to show some faith in this country so that every person and every community is confident that it has a future role to play in the development of this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Trinity—Spadina.

Mr. Heap: Madam Speaker, I was very interested in the comments of my hon. friend, particularly when he listed a number of the cut–backs that have hampered his region economically. He mentioned forest fire–fighting. If I understand him correctly, the fires that have been occurring in northern Saskatchewan perhaps could have been better fought if there had not been cut–backs in the forest fire fighting provisions. I would like the Hon. Member to explain that point a little further.

In a similar connection, he made a general statement that the wealth that is derived from the region is not being returned to the region through development. I am interested in that concept because I think it applies in many other parts of Canada. Could the Hon. Member give us some examples of the kind of development which would not be a hand-out from Ottawa—and I am not trying to suggest that it is, but it is sometimes looked upon that way by unsympathetic people—but a return of some of what was produced by the region to enable the region to develop more strongly.

Mr. Funk: I thank my colleague for his questions. They allow me to expand on a few points that I should have been more explicit about in my speech.

First, with respect to the forest fire situation and forest fire fighting, that obviously is a provincial responsibility. However, Saskatchewan had historically not paid as much attention to the forest sector as perhaps it should. Over the last five years there has been a serious commitment to the renewal of forestry stands, planting, thinning and some forest management practices, and also to bring up to date the technology that is required to fight fires, given the fact that fire hazards arise all the time from more people being in the bush. Certainly, we have had some very dry years.

What happened was that people assumed that these agreements would run for 10 years because the original ERDA framework was a 10-year agreement and this was just the first five years.

Two things happened. One is that a number of significant initiatives, in terms of computer mapping of potential fire areas, detection equipment and response mechanisms were being planned, and in fact were midway in their implementation when the agreement ended.

Second, the agreement brought a significant amount of new expertise and personnel to the Province of Saskatchewan. We were starting to develop a professional sector. It takes a whole sector to cope with some of these major emergencies. What we have seen is that the equipment and technology that people had expected to be able to develop over a 10-year basis has been cut off in mid stream. A lot of the expertise is now already leaving the province just at the time when we need it most.

The Hon. Member also referred to what kinds of development there might be that could return some of the wealth. There is great wealth produced in my constituency. For example, we have a large uranium mining industry. There are other types of hard rock mining. There are extensive stands of forests that are being exploited. What happens is that those resources leave the area, as they do in many parts of the country, without being processed. There is very little local involvement. I might add, that such involvement will no longer be possible to be required by legislation under the free trade deal where it was at least possible before. What people had hoped, and what in fact happened in the past, is that some of that money came back in infrastructure development.

We cannot have an economy if we do not have roads. We cannot have an economy if we do not have banks. We cannot have an economy if we do not have schools. We cannot have an economy if we do not have access to the types of financial services that other people have. We cannot have a well developed economy if our basic resources are not in our own hands.

What had been happening is that sectoral organizations in wild rice, in fisheries, in forestry and tourism had been developing, whereas communities in the region pooled their resources and their expertise.

The Government essentially played an organizing role to organize those communities to use their resources and to get access to the type of capital that normally is available to all Canadians.

The framework under WDO in this new Department simply does not permit that kind of local organization to take place any more. In my mind, that is a real tragedy because we did have some good things going.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Further questions or comments. Questions. The Hon. Member for Moncton.

Mr. Rideout: Madam Speaker, I enjoyed the Member's comments and his speech. We in New Brunswick face the same types of problems that were referred to, with ACOA and what it means. We had DRIE and we had DREE. We are very concerned with where this particular Department is going and what its influence is going to be. We feel that in the long run we are probably going in the wrong direction, and really not going to achieve all that we hoped to with this Department.

When we couple that with the ERDA agreements being in arrears and not negotiated, and cut-backs in ACOA, I have grave concerns as to where the economy is going and what is really going to happen. I believe that the Member is alluding to the same things in his constituency and in his concerns, and perhaps he may wish to comment on that.

Mr. Funk: I thank my hon. colleague for his remarks. I certainly have come to realize that when people try to read their papers they find that some of these trends have been there for a long time. Being in this House and hearing firsthand from Members from the various regions of the country, it is becoming very clear that in fact this is a pattern. Any kind of systematic development of local economies is really going by the boards. Local initiatives are being effectively starved by the Government's approach. It does not take very much money. The Government is still in some respects ladling out large sums of money, although there have been some cuts.

Those funds are not going where they are needed. They are not going to support local initiatives. They are certainly not going into any kind of planned approach, and that is what is essential so that the economy of the centre of the country can support the economies of the regions and vice versa. We should have an integrated economy so that we are not forever vulnerable to international tides which wash over us from time to time. Certainly you cannot isolate yourself entirely, but you can develop better rounded economies than we have now in the regions. The Government's approach makes the problems worse rather than giving us any assistance to improve the situation.

Mr. Jack Iyerak Anawak (Nunatsiaq): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to speak on Bill C-3, an Act to establish the Department of Industry, Science and Technology. This Bill also repeals the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and makes consequential amendments to other acts.

I would like to focus my remarks on the regional development mandate of the department.

In June, 1987, the Government transferred responsibility for development initiatives in the Atlantic region to the newly created Atlantic Opportunities Agency.

In August, 1987, responsibility for development initiatives in western Canada was transferred to the newly created Department of Western Economic Diversification.

The federal Government also created FEDNOR in the last Parliament which is an agency to promote economic development in northern Ontario.

Northerners waited hopefully for an announcement of a northern development program and agency. Such an announcement never came. Every region of the country except for the northern Territories has its own regional development program. The Atlantic Region has the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, the West has Western Diversification, northern Ontario has FEDNOR and Ontario and Quebec have special agreements with the federal Government. Where does the North fit into the regional economic development priorities of the Government? We seem to have been forgotten.

Last week in a meeting of the Standing Committee on Industry, Science and Technology, I asked the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Andre) whether he had any special plans for northern economic development. His reply amazed me. His response suggested that there is no need for his Department to have any special program for the North since the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development exists.

He actually said:

> We have got a whole department. It is called the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

He went on to say:

> I guess in some sense Western Diversification is to the West as Northern Development is to the North, a department of Government that has its economic development responsibility for that region.

If that remark of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion typifies the Government's attitude toward northern development the North is in big trouble.

For the benefit of those who do not already know, the mandate of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development is very much broader than economic development. It encompasses political and social responsibilities. By no means can the economic development budget of that Department be equated to the Western Diversification Program.

This year the Western Economic Diversification Program has a budget of $287 million. By contrast, the economic development portion of the Northern Affairs program this year is $73 million.

It is true that the Territorial Government receives funding in the form of transfer payments from the federal Government. This year the Northwest Territories will receive $822.2 million and the Yukon will receive $225.1 million in transfer payments. But these federal transfers go to all the provinces as well. The North is not receiving anymore than any other Government. In fact, I believe it is receiving less than it ought to receive.

I would like the Government to give serious consideration to the establishment of a northern development agency. The Northwest Territories cover an area of 3.3 million square kilometres. It constitutes roughly one-third of Canada's land mass. Our location poses some severe economic restraints such as remoteness from prime North American markets, long winters and higher utility and other costs. Our population is small and scattered and the education levels for a large part of the population could be higher. However, we have an abundance of resources and people with energy, ideas and motivation. What we need is more encouragement and support from this Government.

Settling land claims will provide economic stability and, I hope, will provide the north Indian, Inuit and Métis people with the resources they require to be full partners in northern and Canadian economies. Building the northern economy requires commitment and investment. The North must have control of its resources and the development of those resources. What we require from the federal Government are the tools and the authority to get the job done.

Before I conclude, I want to also touch on native economic development which is, according to the Government, an important component of the Department of Industry, Science and Technology. The Native Economic Development Program was established by the previous Liberal Government in 1981. The program was to run for four years with a budget of $345 million. In the last Parliament the Conservative Government extended the program for another year. It expired at the end of March but applications in the system already will be considered until the end of July.

Aboriginal people are wondering what program the Government will bring in to replace the Native Economic Development Program. It appears from comments by the Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Andre) last week that a new program, to be called the Canadian Aboriginal Economic Development Program, will soon be announced. It seems from the outset that the new program will be an amalgamation of the Native Economic Development Programs from a number of Departments such as Indian Affairs and Northern Development, Employment and other programs such as the special ARDA.

Aboriginal people are anxious to know whether the new program will be adequate to meet the economic needs that exist among the aboriginal people and the aboriginal communities. The Government knows that the economic conditions of the aboriginal people are the poorest in the country. Over half the aboriginal population is under the age of 25. These young people want jobs and economic opportunities.

The Government in its Throne Speech, as well as in other releases, has said that the priorities will be in native economic development and it seems that one of the ways in which the Government will attempt to do it is to combine or consolidate the different programs that already exist. However, that does not address the need for more funding in order to accommodate the large population of aboriginal people across Canada. The problem with that announcement is that the Government will not be renewing the Native Economic Development Program or putting any new money in place of that program to compensate for the expiration of that program. We have to press the Government to ensure that it does not simply consolidate the funding of the different programs and call it a new program but that it adds more money to the Native Economic Development Program to ensure that the economic opportunities of aboriginal people will be addressed by the Government, as it has said it would so often in the last few weeks.

The Government's new program must be one which gives hope to the young people and to their home communities in order to ensure that those young people who are going into further education may participate fully in Canadian life. We have become so aware of native post-secondary education in the last few weeks through rallies to ensure that the Government does not put a cap on funding of post-secondary education for Indian people. We must ensure that the young people of the North have the opportunity to be involved in the economic mosaic of Canada. That will require more money rather than a simple consolidation of the program.

Mr. Tremblay (Rosemont): Madam Speaker, I wish to reassure the Hon. Member for Nunatsiaq (Mr. Anawak) that as was mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, it is the intention of the Government to extend the native economic program. Proposals for a future program will be based on the results of the consultative process which is now under consideration. This process of consultation was formally conducted between July, 1987 and March, 1988 with interested native people from all parts of Canada. This was the most extensive public consultative process ever conducted by the Department and it was directed by the task force review group.

The program has been extended to July, 1989, and I can assure the Hon. Member that the intention in the Speech from the Throne will be respected by the Government. This will be in consultation with native people.

Mr. Anawak: Madam Speaker, if the consultation the Hon. Member is talking about is the same kind of consultation the Government said it did regarding post-secondary education funding, then I do not think that that consultation will be effective. In fact, it may even be non-existent.

The Native Economic Development Program has been extended until the end of July, 1989. However, it has been extended only with the existing funds. It is not an extension with more money added to the program of $345 million.

There was consultation regarding the Native Economic Development Program of which I was a part some years ago. I hope it really does address the needs across Canada. However, I reiterate that most consultations seem to end up on the bookshelves collecting dust, and I hope that the Hon. Member will relay that to the Government. The Government has consistently said that it is all for native people and all for the poorer regions. I hope it will heed that consultative process if indeed it does happen.

Mr. MacLellan: Madam Speaker, I would like to address a question to my colleague who has just spoken very eloquently and very informatively about the problems facing those in the northern part of Canada today. I sympathize with the points he has made and I can identify, being a Member of Parliament from Atlantic Canada, with his concerns about what exactly the Government will be doing.

In Atlantic Canada, we have seen funding for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency whittled away. We have now been told that funding for the ERDA agreements will be reduced and the Hon. Member is now saying that his area does not even have an agreement. All it has is an extension to the end of July of the agreement which has elapsed with no additional funding. He is hearing the same platitudes about the Government's concern for northern Canada while in fact there is an erosion in funding for northern Canada rather than an increase in funding.

Not only is there a complete disregard for the Native Economic Development Program but there is also a whittling away of the economic base of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. I would ask the Hon. Member to elaborate on just what this reduction in funding will impact on. Perhaps he could tell us the urgency of the situation as he sees it.

Mr. Anawak: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the question. In many cases, the North is seen as being a desolate land, but we like to think that it is quite different. It is a beautiful land and that is why it is called Nunatsiaq which means beautiful land in Inktitut. The people up North are very determined to be part of the Canadian mosaic in economic and social development and all the other things that Canadians down here take for granted.

We are being told that there will be more funding for the Native Economic Development Program, but I made the point earlier that to our knowledge, and the Minister responsible for Industry, Science and Technology made that statement inadvertently at a committee meeting last week, the Native Economic Development Program which was introduced some years ago by the Liberal Government is now being phased out. From what the Minister said, it sounds as if the Government will consolidate some already existing programs under Indian Affairs and call it a new program, the Canadian aboriginal development agency or something along those lines, into which no new money will be put. Combining them will make it seem as if there is more money coming in, and if that is not a cut in native economic development programs, then I do not know how one defines a cut.

So we are already being cut in our other programs, not in economics, other than the ones that I mentioned, but in social programs such as those under the auspices of the Secretary of State for Native Associations. Those programs have already been cut. But the Government will come back and say that it has already raised the budget for the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs. In fact, it is required by law to do so by the agreements it has with the Inuvialuit and the James Bay Cree and as a result of other land claims settlements made in the past. It has no choice but to raise those. But any way it can cut down on the funding for native programs, whether economical, social or otherwise, it is doing so.

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Madam Speaker, I rise today on debate on this important piece of legislation—

Madam Speaker: I thought the Member was rising on questions and comments as there were a few minutes left. I should advise the House that we have now completed the first eight hours of debate. From now on, interventions will be limited to a 10 minute period.

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): Madam Speaker, I rise today in debate on this very important piece of legislation, Bill C-3, which does more than just establish a new Department of Industry, Science and Technology. It goes on to repeal the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion Act and make consequential amendments to other Acts.

This part of the legislation is extremely telling and very disconcerting for people in Atlantic Canada. In order to understand what this Bill means, we have to look at regional development in the last 25 years in this country. In the 1960s, a Liberal Government put into effect the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. It did that in the 1960s because it was recognized that it was not good enough to have 12, 15 or 20 line departments with their programs impacting across the country and not have a specific mandate to look after regional development and wealth redistribution in this country. So in the wisdom of that government, it was decided a department was needed. The need for that department went almost as a superministry throughout all government programs and all of the departments. The department had a very specific mandate. It was to make sure that government policy and government programs were aware of the need for wealth redistribution and the real need for regional development programs in Atlantic Canada and northern Ontario, in the North and the West.

In subsequent years, the same Liberal government changed the legislation and turned it into the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion to more closely twin industry with economic development in the regions. That was an important change. In 1984, we saw a departure from this legislative method of redistributing wealth in Canada. We saw a new government elected which was bent on bottom line profits. That new government did not share the commitment to Canada where it did not matter where you lived, whether in Atlantic Canada, the West, whether you lived in a Liberal province, a Conservative province, a Liberal riding, a Conservative riding or an NDP riding. The Government felt that the bottom line always had to be the deciding factor. What it did starting in 1984, under the guise of budget cutting and austerity measures, was to significantly cut back the commitment to regional development.

During the 1988 campaign this Government opposite made much ado while travelling across this country by telling Canadians that regional development programs were safe, that the Liberals and the NDP were lying by saying that regional development programs were at risk if this Government were to be re-elected.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) himself said that he was committed to maintaining regional development programs in every guise. Indeed in 1987 he created a great deal of fanfare by a public proclamation of a new program called the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. This was announced in St. John's, Newfoundland when, I believe, he was on a junket over to Europe. I do not have the exact quote, but I think I am close enough when I say that he said this is $1.05 billion in new money in a new direction. This is not old money. This is not recycled money. It is new money. He said it again and again during the federal campaign in the fall of last year. He also said a lot of other things concerning regional development. His Deputy Prime Minister prior to the campaign said that things like VIA Rail, the national infrastructure of a rail transportation system from one coast to the other, would be expanded so that everyone across this country could benefit by an efficient and renewed rail transportation system.

After the election was over what we saw was nothing short of startling. Even in my wildest dreams as an opposition Member on the campaign trail, I could not have seen that this Government's agenda for regional development could be as sinister. I could not have imagined that what the Government would do after it was elected to another term was to systematically cut the Atlantic provinces adrift. It is unbelievable that any government that sits in this Parliament could be as callous as it has proven to be in the last number of weeks and months.

The first thing it has done, if we talk about regional development, is completely abandon its position as the protector of that great national resource that we have on the East Coast called the fishery. Over two years ago the fishermen and people in the industry begged this Government, the Minister at the time and the current Minister to have a look at the fishery because they said the Atlantic fisheries were in crisis. This Minister and this Government ignored their pleas. We saw just prior to the election last year that this Government actually increased quotas for northern cod at a time when there was some conflicting information available from its very own officials that said that the cod stocks may be in peril. After the election, we saw what the real agenda was. It has mismanaged the fisheries.

Just a few weeks ago, we had an announcement by National Sea Products that there would be over 5,000 individuals affected by lay-offs and by plant closures in Atlantic Canada. There are 30,000 individuals in Nova Scotia alone who depend on the fisheries directly or indirectly for a livelihood. This is not some small mom and pop shop on the corner that, if it closes, people will go somewhere else and get another job in a retail outlet or another mom and pop shop. This is a major national industry, not just in Nova Scotia and not just in Atlantic Canada. But the Government sat back until the fisheries were in a state of complete collapse. Strike one on Atlantic Canada.

Then the Minister of Employment came in with sweeping changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act which have had a very disastrous effect on some of the regions of Canada, some places in Nova Scotia. What it did was increase the number of weeks that individuals would have to work before they could qualify, decrease the amount of benefits payable and at the same time decrease the benefit payment period. That has had a net negative effect on Atlantic Canada. This winter there will be hundreds of individuals, perhaps thousands, that because of these regressive changes, these uncaring changes, will be forced onto welfare in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland. But to date all our pleas have fallen on deaf ears.

Then we had the infamous Budget that came through, the Budget that was going to set everything straight. In the minds of Atlantic Canadians it set a lot of things straight. We have seen cuts to established program funding in Atlantic Canada. It hits there harder than in Ontario and Quebec than in most provinces. In Nova Scotia, a cut of $16 million to $18 million in established program funding, moneys that are used to fund our medical system and our post-secondary education system. Our post-secondary educational institutions were already in crisis in Nova Scotia. This is a crippling blow. Hospitals in Nova Scotia, because the provincial treasury did not have the revenue, had to shut down entire wings. But we have a national medicare system. We are supposed to have equal access to medical care of a high national calibre no matter where we live. But $15 million of that $17 million or $18 million that has been cut out of the transfers for health care has occurred in Nova Scotia. That is going to affect many poor areas of Nova Scotia, Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick, create more hospital bed closures and a deterioration in the residents of Atlantic Canada's ability to have access to quality health care.

Then we saw the big shell game with the Government and the Minister responsible for ACOA. I referred to it earlier, the $1.05-billion five-year program of new money. We have seen what has happened with that under the Budget.

• (1700)

The Budget came down and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made much ado about nothing, as did the Minister responsible for ACOA. They talked about how they had increased the commitment. By the time the opposition Parties and the media went through the forest built around the actual figures in those Estimates, it was only last week when we found out that ACOA's five-year program was going to be stretched out to seven years. One does not have to be a math scholar to know that that will amount to a 20 per cent to 25 per cent cut yearly if those funds are spread over a seven-year program instead of a five-year program. That is another wallop and kick in the tush for Atlantic Canada.

I have attempted five times to get the Minister and the Government to talk about the ERDA process, the Economic and Regional Development Agreements. On March 31 there were $721 million in agreements expired in Atlantic Canada. We asked the Government for a commitment that it would go ahead with the ERDA process. All provinces in Atlantic Canada depend on those programs. It is not the icing on the cake, it is the flour that goes into baking the cake in Atlantic Canada.

Yet the Minister responsible for ACOA at committee last week, and in the House since then, has absolutely refused to strip down the woods and the forest that he has built around the real figures for ACOA and for ERDA and tell us what the true picture is. The people of Atlantic Canada know, and the people of Canada now know that the Government is not committed to regional development. The Government is committed to dismantling regional development programs over the next three to five years.

We have seen base closures, and we have seen reports that the coal industry in Cape Breton Island is on the chopping block. Lingan Mine, outside my home town, may be cut by the Government's callous and uncaring attitude toward development in Atlantic Canada.

The Bill proves the point that I and many others have been attempting to make. In effect, the Bill does away with any legislative responsibility for regional development in Atlantic Canada. As such, I will join with my colleagues in stating that it falls short in its intent for a new Department of Industry, Science and Technology, but it shows the true Tory agenda to withdraw from regional development programs, especially in Atlantic Canada, and to cut us adrift.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Madam Speaker, I am happy to have the opportunity this afternoon to say a few words on the Bill before the House and the amendment thereto. I represent a riding in northern Ontario and the establishment of this Department, or its change of name, and the changes the Government is imposing, are of great importance to us.

During the past four years we have seen a deterioration in the programs for regional economic expansion in northern Ontario. The Government has only taken one initiative, of which I am aware, and that was to establish the FEDNOR program. It is a small program of some $8 million a year for a five-year period which will provide incentives to small industries to expand and develop. Generally, that program, at least in some rural communities and rural areas, has been reasonably successful, even though it took approximately two years to get it operational.

We are not only concerned about the small programs such as FEDNOR which have some benefit, particularly in rural communities, but the over-all plan and scope of activities which will make industry function and allow it to modernize, upgrade, develop, and of course the whole scope of Government activity as it affects the slow-growth areas.

I only have to mention the decision by the Government in December, 1986, to impose an export tax on softwood lumber, and one sees the problems of regional development which permeate all Government decisions. When a Government takes a unilateral decision to impose an export tax, it throws large portions of that industry into decline and into a tailspin. Certainly, we have been reaping the whirlwind of that during the past several years. We have lost more than 1,000 jobs in northern Ontario. We have seen at least half a dozen mills shut down. Others have been sold and others have gone on short staff.

We have been pleading with the Government to go to Washington and sit down with the Secretary for Trade and negotiate away from that export tax. No single decision could help improve the lot for regional development in northern Ontario. We are concerned about the fact that we are involved with little incentive programs such as FEDNOR when we need to look at the whole range of Government programs.

Unfortunately, the Government has declined to get rid of the export tax on softwood lumber, although representations have been made by every important group in northern Ontario, including the FEDNOR Advisory Board. It is not only getting rid of the tax, but we must look at what the free trade deal implies. It seems to imply that major restructuring programs such as we had several years ago for the pulp and paper industry in which the federal and provincial Governments put in a few hundred million dollars and stimulated that whole industry across the country to modernize, upgrade, become cost effective, and to be able to meet the new environmental standards that were coming in.

Under the free trade deal, we seem to have lost the ability to be able to put in place massive restructuring programs such as that which took place in the pulp and paper industry some eight or ten years ago. From time to time, especially in slow-growth areas, every industry requires that restructuring. Certainly, if we want to see the softwood industry maintained in northern Ontario, we are facing that situation.

The agreements that we had under the Economic and Regional Development Program for the pulp and paper industry are needed in other sectors. A similar program is needed in the sawmill softwood lumber industry. We clearly need a new agreement in forestry. I cannot believe that the Budget does not make provision for a forestry agreement. It was a modest agreement that we had in Ontario, but even that agreement has been cut out. That is going right across the country. The ERDA Agreements are being downgraded. They are essential.

Many of the levers for economic development, restructuring, reorganizing, and modernizing of industry are in areas of provincial jurisdiction. The only way to provide an impetus is through the federal Government and the ERDA Agreements. The Government is moving away from that through the Budget and the policies and downgrading or cutting out all of those funds which have been provided through the ERDA Agreements.

Not only are those agreements important in forestry, but also in tourism. In Ontario we have a tourism agreement. Unfortunately, it has not been used as broadly as it needs to be. With the downgrading of the ERDA Agreements and the removal of funding for them, I see us losing a valuable tool to bring federal Government resources, know-how, and funding to bear in areas of provincial jurisdiction and in areas of co-ordination. Not only am I concerned about this Bill, I am concerned about the Government's general approach to the whole matter of regional economic expansion. In the previous two years we fought the taxation reform in which the Government cut out most of the incentive for the earned depletion allowance and the flow-through share program for the mining industry.

It was in 1982 and 1983, when the economy was being dragged out of the recession years of 1981 and 1982, when we introduced a new earned depletion allowance and flow-through shares which provided literally hundreds of millions of dollars for exploration and development in the mining industry in areas like northern Ontario, northern Québec, areas of the West and the East. That program has been emasculated by these tax reform measures.

Those types of incentives stimulate an entire industry, whether it is forestry, tourism or mining, which tend to be the industries most important to the slow growth areas of the country. They are all being wound down by the Government.

No matter whether this Bill is good or bad, unless the general policy of the Government through all its Departments and ERDA agreements takes the right direction, we cannot have an effective regional development program in Canada.

POINT OF ORDER

WITHDRAWAL OF REMARKS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the midst of Question Period I asked a question of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and on reflection, after reading Hansard, it was certainly not my intention to use unparliamentary language. However, after reading Hansard I can see where the Chair would perhaps come to the conclusion that in point of fact what I said was unparliamentary. That being the case, and my intention was not to use unparliamentary language, I wish to withdraw any intention that may have been said or otherwise concluded by the Chair as being unparliamentary.

Mr. Speaker: I want to thank the Hon. Member. I should tell the House that the Hon. Member extended the appropriate courtesies, called me personally and we discussed the matter. I did not want to raise it further yesterday. I appreciate the generous comments of the Hon. Member, which again are in the proper traditions of this place.

PRIVILEGE

HOUSE OF COMMONS—MEMBER FOR CHAMBLY

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege of which I have given Your Honour notice. The question of privilege which I wish to outline today arises from the reported conviction following a plea of guilty on Tuesday last of the Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé).

Before giving an outline of the circumstances that led to that, I want to take a couple of minutes to remind Members of the House and Your Honour of the seriousness with which the House has historically viewed questions of privilege and of the nature of privilege.

Erskine May and Beauchesne's set out very clearly the nature of privilege. Privileges of Parliament are stated to be rights which are absolutely necessary for the due execution of the powers of the House, rights which are exercised by each House for the protection of its Members and the vindication of its own authority and dignity. That is from Erskine May.

As well, each House claims the right to punish actions which, while not privilege breaches of a specific privilege, are offences against its authority or dignity. Such actions though often called breaches of privileges are more popularly distinguished as contempts. The powers and procedures of each House in dealing with cases of contempt are treated in subsequent chapters of Erskine May and, indeed, of Beauchesne, and I will make reference to those in due course.

I want to note as well that it is clearly pointed out in Erskine May, and again in Beauchesne, that alleged breaches of privilege or contempt which are committed out of the House or out of the precincts of the House may in fact be brought before the House in a number of ways including by a complaint of any Member of the House. It is on that basis that I rise this morning on this question of privilege which in fact constitutes a contempt of this House.

• (1110)

The purpose of raising the question of privilege this morning is to seek to persuade Your Honour that a prima facie case of breach of privilege or contempt of the House exists, thus ensuring that the subject matter of this motion could come before the House on an urgent basis. At the conclusion of my remarks, I will explain why I feel it is so important that Your Honour recognize that a prima facie case is made. Without in any way ruling on the substance of the question, it is important that Your Honour find that a prima facie case is made sufficient to allow the matter to come before the House at the earliest possible time.

The circumstances which give rise to the question of privilege are well known at this point to Members of the House, but I will set them out briefly. They concern the Hon. Member for Chambly who was a Member of this House in the last Parliament. He was re-elected in the November 21 election as a Conservative Member of Parliament with the support of his Party and the support of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

In this context I would note as well that the Prime Minister, through his principal secretary, was aware prior to the election of certain allegations of impropriety. Indeed, the then principal secretary, Peter White, on November 8 last, wrote a letter to RCMP Inspector Berubé in Québec saying that he was concerned because the Hon. Member had apparently indicated that he had been involved in some improprieties in 1985 and 1986. That merely goes to show the knowledge of the Prime Minister and that the Member was in fact elected as a Conservative Member of Parliament.

Certain allegations were made concerning the activities of the Member, serious allegations of alleged corruption, breach of trust and fraud. Indeed, a sworn statement by an RCMP inspector indicated that contractors interviewed with respect to one particular matter acknowledged that they were asked to donate a certain amount of money to a federal political party to show their gratitude. These are allegations of serious offences.

On April 14 of this year, the Hon. Member for Chambly was in fact charged by the RCMP with a number of counts of breach of trust and fraud. The next day the Member did in fact resign from the Conservative caucus and chose to sit as an independent Member of Parliament.

The circumstances surrounding the allegations are very serious. The maximum sentence to which the Hon. Member was subject was 10 years in the case of fraud and 5 years in the case of breach of trust. I think it is important to note as well when reviewing precedents that the circumstances of at least a number of the counts involve a fraud directly touching on this Parliament and directly touching on public funds which were appropriated to this Parliament.

The Member has pleaded guilty to those offences. He has pleaded guilty, among other things, to an offence which indicates that he hired a number of employees purportedly for his staff here in the House of Commons and allegedly to do work for him. He has admitted that that work was not done and that the funds which were paid to those individuals were subsequently turned over to him and split between him and the president of his riding association. Apparently $100 or $200 was received by the alleged employees, but the bulk of the money was split, and he has admitted that and pleaded guilty to that.

The nature of the other offences involve bribes and breach of trust. Contractors paid the Hon. Member in exchange for work building a community centre in his constituency. I might note that the construction of that community centre involved a federal grant of some $245,000 which the Hon. Member at the time bragged about having obtained for his constituents. We now learn that he has pleaded guilty to accepting bribes from a number of contractors in connection with that matter.

The allegations in question are very serious allegations. The circumstances of the offences are very serious. Most important, the Member himself, through his plea of guilty, has acknowledged his wrongdoing. He had been scheduled to appear in court on May 31, but on Tuesday of this week, he appeared with his counsel earlier than anticipated.

I think it is of some interest to note the comments of his counsel with respect to the circumstances of these offences. His counsel indicated that these were grave offences and very serious offences. In fact, he said that the evidence was so overwhelming that he advised his client to plead guilty in the face of that overwhelming evidence.

The allegations and the circumstances have been clearly established. The Member in question was sentenced, and I do not think anyone in the House could suggest that in view of the evidence he was sentenced harshly or excessively. He was sentenced to one day in prison, though he actually served about four and a half hours, had lunch in prison and then left, a $20,000 fine and a three-year period of probation. This is in the face of the admission of his own lawyer, Jean-Claude Hébert, that he looked at the evidence and it was overwhelming, and he suggested that he plead guilty.

I emphasize that the Member for Chambly pleaded guilty. This is important because in law this is clearly an admission of his wrongdoing. It is an admission that he took bribes. It is an admission that he defrauded this House and abused his office as a Member of Parliament. In light of those admissions, the suggestion made yesterday by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) is ludicrous.

Of course, it is not up to the Minister of Justice, as Your Honour well knows, to decide what action this House may ultimately take. For the Minister of Justice to suggest that we wait for 30 days to see if an appeal will be launched is, with great respect, totally unfounded. The only possible appeal would be an appeal from the sentence by either the person convicted or the Crown. The Crown has announced that it will not appeal the sentence so the only person who could appeal the sentence is the Hon. Member for Chambly himself. No matter what sentence is ultimately handed down, the fact remains that he has admitted to the wrongdoing that was the basis for that sentence.

Some may say that he could always have a change of heart and change his plea, ask to appear before the court, saying that he really was not guilty and had made a terrible mistake. I am sure that the Minister of Justice knows that the circumstances under which such a plea are allowed would effectively rule out any serious consideration of that in this case.

The reality is that the Member made that plea through his lawyer. His lawyer has said that the evidence was overwhelming and that in the face of that evidence there was no alternative. I suggest that it is ludicrous to ask the House to wait 30 days, as the Minister of Justice has suggested, before we take action. It is an abdication of the responsibility of the Government to do so.

There are not an awful lot of precedents in this area. Your Honour is aware that in 1947 the then Prime Minister, Mackenzie King, rose in his place and moved a motion to expel Fred Rose who had been ajudged guilty of certain indictable offences. As he said, "the resolution speaks for itself". He said: "I have nothing to add".

I want to point out that it is particularly important that Your Honour allow the motion of which I intend to give notice to be put before the House in light of the circumstances of these offences and, if I may say, in light of some of the comments that have been made since the conviction, since the guilty plea, by Conservative Members of this House.

The message that Canadians are hearing is a mixed message. We as parliamentarians have an obligation, each of us, to uphold the privileges of this House. We are being watched by Canadians to ensure that those privileges are protected. Members on the government side of the House make statements, as did the Hon. Member for Beauce, suggesting that the fraud and breach of trust activities are anomalies and that they in no way detract from the qualities of the Member as a Member of Parliament. The Hon. Member for Montreal—Duvernay has said that we are being too harsh on the Member for Chambly, that the courts are imposing a double standard and that is tougher for elected officials.

He has indicated that it is becoming very nerve-racking, that we are all human, that all sorts of things can happen when one is an MP, and that an ordinary citizen does not have the same problem. An ordinary citizen probably would not get a day in jail for this kind of offence, I would note. He says that they do not have to face the music all the time like we do, that we are always in the spotlight, but that for ordinary people it never shows.

Those are extraordinary statements by Conservative Members of Parliament defending the conduct of one of their colleagues who was found guilty of breach of trust, of fraud, and who has admitted to that wrongdoing. Where do we go from here? The Crown prosecutor, when he was asked if justice had been served by a one-day sentence, said, and I quote: "That is up to Parliament. They are the ones who will decide if he can continue as an MP".

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé) was a Member of some importance during the last Parliament. He was Chairman of the Regional Development Committee, Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister and chaired the Québec caucus of his Party.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that a Member who pleads guilty to charges of fraud and breach of trust no longer has the right to sit in this Parliament.

[English]

I would note as well that if we were to accept the logic of the Minister of Justice and perhaps suggest that if in fact an appeal were launched this House would be paralyzed in inaction, let us consider the affect of that. An appeal could take years to wend its way through the courts—the Court of Appeal, the Supreme Court of Canada.

Is he suggesting seriously that this House would be paralyzed, that we would be unable to move, if in fact an appeal were launched? Meanwhile, September 1990 would roll around and the Member would become eligible for his life-time pension. That would be a discredit to this House.

I want to close by pointing out to Your Honour how profoundly important it is that Your Honour allow this motion to be put to the House, to recognize that indeed there is a prima facie case of privilege here, privilege that affects all Members of the House.

Unless a matter of this nature, admitted corruption by a Member of this House, can be brought forward in this way, what alternatives are left to Members of this House?

Effectively there are two. One would be to give notice of motion under Private Member's Business. I have done that, but Your Honour is well aware of the limitations, to say the least, of that approach. A motion goes on the Order Paper, but it cannot even be debated for one hour unless it makes the luck of the draw. If indeed it makes the draw, of course it can be talked out by any Member of this House. Effectively, obviously, that is not an appropriate or adequate mechanism to leave Members of this House to raise serious questions of privilege of this nature, to raise questions of corruption.

The other possibility of course would be to put forward a motion under Routine Proceedings. If that were acceptable, and given the urgency of the matter, it could be debated and could be the subject of a vote.

I thank the Clerk of the House for his guidance and his assistance. I have consulted with the Clerk and with the parliamentary counsel. I understand that it is felt that a motion under Routine Proceedings in these circumstances would not be in order.

I have had drawn to my attention a decision of the Speaker of June, 1959. It has been cited as a precedent. It is important to distinguish very clearly the circumstances before the House today from the circumstances in the ruling of the Speaker in June, 1959.

That ruling arose because of certain comments made by Mr. Justice Thorson in the course of a judgment given in an action to which the Member of Parliament in question was not a party at all. During the course of his ruling the Speaker pointed out clearly that a breach of privilege could arise when a Member had used his public office for private gain, had compromised his independence by taking money, or had been found guilty of some scandalous crime. In the particular instance before the Speaker of 1959, that was not the case. In fact, the Speaker at the time said, and I quote: "Did the learned judge in commenting on the evidence say or imply that the Member for Peel had been guilty of a criminal offence?

Certainly not. He said: "The Hon. Member did not stand to gain or profit for himself by anything he did. No public funds were improperly paid out. The Hon. Member's conduct was not of that order".

This case is fundamentally different. In that case there was no abuse of public office. This case affects each and every Member of this House. It affects the privileges of each Member of this House, and it goes directly to contempt of this House.

We have the right as Members to put a motion before this House. I would plead with Your Honour to recognize that that right is a right which in practice is non-existent unless, in the serious circumstances which are before the House now, the Speaker recognizes that precedence must be given to this motion, that a prima facie case has been established and then leaves it to the House to determine what action it will take. It cannot be done under Private Members' Notices of Motions. I would argue, and I am not going to make the argument now, that perhaps it should and could be done appropriately under Routine Proceedings, but I have been advised that that is not the course which would be acceptable.

What else is left to a Member of this House? If in fact Private Members' Notices of Motions is the only alternative, then the governing party can quite clearly block, for partisan purposes if it chooses to do so or for whatever other reason, that motion from ever coming to the House for a vote. Surely that would subvert, not just spirit of the right of Members to bring a serious matter of this nature before the House, but that would subvert the privileges of all Members of this House. Most important, what message would that send out to Canadians?

Consider the circumstances. A Member of this House admits that he has been guilty of very serious criminal wrongdoing that involves funds of this House as well. Unless we as Members of this House are in a position at least to put before the House a motion that allows Members to debate the question and to subject that Member to our judgment, I think Canadians are going to shake their heads and say that this place is not doing justice.

• (1130)

I am not suggesting that the Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé) should not have the right to appear before the House and to make a statement. Indeed, under Standing Order 20 of the Orders of the House, he does have that option if a motion of this nature is presented. I would invite him to take advantage of that. Standing Order 20 states:

> If anything shall come in question touching the conduct, election or right of any Member to hold a seat, that Member may make a statement and shall withdraw during the time the matter is in debate.

That Standing Order is there for a reason. I would hope that Your Honour would recognize that I have demonstrated a prima facie breach of the privileges of the Members of the House; that Your Honour would permit the House to debate the question, and would obviously give notice to the Member for Chambly to enable him to avail himself of his undoubted rights under Standing Order 20 of the Standing Orders of the House.

Should Your Honour find a prima facie case of privilege in these circumstances sufficient to allow a motion to be put forward, following Your Honour's ruling on the prima facie case of privilege, I would move the following motion:

> That Richard Grisé, the Member of Parliament for Chambly, having pleaded guilty to two counts of fraud and nine counts of breach of trust, offences involving abuse of parliamentary funds and abuse of parliamentary privileges, be expelled from the House of Commons, that his seat be declared vacant, and that the Speaker do issue a warrant to the Chief Electoral Officer to make out a new writ for the election of a new Member to serve in the present Parliament for the constituency of Chambly.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we must not forget the constituents of the Hon. Member for Chambly. They have not had an elected representative in this House since the Hon. Member was sworn in on December 5 last year. They are now represented by a Member who has admitted that he was guilty of fraud and breach of trust, who is no longer in his riding, who cannot serve its constituents, who may not receive public monies, and who does not have the right to sit here in this House as the representative of the constituents of Chambly.

Mr. Speaker, the people of Chambly are entitled to an honest representative, and they have the right to elect someone else to represent them.

[English]

I would note that whatever arguments the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) may wish to make concerning a period of appeal, and he is entitled to make that esoteric, legal argument, that does not go to the fundamental question which is before the House—and about which a 30-day or a 60-day appeal period is totally irrelevant—that is, what steps do we as representatives of the people of Canada have the right to take when a Member of this House admits to very serious criminal wrongdoing? That is the issue before the House. That is the issue before the Chair. I hope that Your Honour would allow that very fundamental question to be debated by all Members of the House.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, today a very serious matter has been raised. It is the question as to how the House should take into account the fact that the Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé) has pleaded guilty to a number of very serious charges, charges which relate directly, I would submit, to his work and responsibilities as a Member of Parliament.

[Translation]

It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé) has pleaded guilty to several charges of breach of trust, fraud and influence peddling, and that these charges were connected with his work as a Member of Parliament. Mr. Speaker, I think we must consider whether this situation creates a prima facie case of privilege that should be brought before the House.

[English]

The first question before you, Mr. Speaker, is whether the conduct of the Hon. Member for Chambly, which has led to him pleading guilty to a number of serious charges, all of which I submit relate directly to his work as a Member, raises a prima facie case of privilege.

I have not had the opportunity to complete research I have undertaken in this matter, but I do want to draw your attention to Citation 16 of Beauchesne's which states:

> Parliamentary privilege is the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively as a constituent part of the High Court of Parliament, and by Members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their functions and which exceed those possessed by other bodies or individuals. Thus, privilege, though part of the law of the land, is to a certain extent an exemption from the ordinary law.

It might well be argued as to whether the House as a whole could function properly if, among its Members, there continues to be someone who has himself admitted guilt on and been found guilty by the courts of a number of serious charges relating, I submit, directly to his work as a Member.

One case has been cited in the House, and that is the case of a Member of Parliament by the name of Fred Rose who, after being convicted of treason, was, on resolution of this House, expelled from it. I would submit that this is a precedent for Your Honour to take into account, both with respect to the question of whether conduct by Members can be a prima facie case of privilege, and also whether the House has the power by resolution, where a prima facie case of breach of privilege has been found as the result of the conduct of a Member, to expel that Member from the House.

I would also draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that in the United Kingdom Parliament, according to Erskine May at page 139, there is the power of expulsion from that Parliament. Erskine May states:

> Members have been expelled as being in open rebellion; as having been guilty of forgery; of perjury; of frauds and breaches of trust; of misappropriation of public money; of conspiracy to defraud; of fraudulent conversion of property; of corruption in the administration of justice, or in public offices, or in the execution of their duties as Members of the House;—

To the extent that the proceedings and rulings resulting therefrom of the United Kingdom House of Commons are a precedent for us, then we certainly have precedents which involve Members of the United Kingdom House of Commons being expelled from that House as a result of convictions for such matters as conspiracy to defraud, misappropriation of public money, corruption in the administration of justice, or in public offices, or in the execution of their duties as Members of the House.

I also wish to point out that as Beauchesne makes clear at page 27 in Citations 90 to 92, in the past this House has, in addition to the case of Fred Rose, taken action, I presume by resolution, to expel Members for their conduct.

I would submit that the House certainly has the power, if you should find a prima facie breach of privilege, Mr. Speaker, to adopt a resolution, the effect of which would be to provide for a Member who has been found guilty of offences of the type to which the Hon. Member for Chambly pleaded guilty, to be expelled from the House.

I also want to draw your attention to Standing Order 20 which states:

> If anything shall come in question touching the conduct, election or right of any Member to hold a seat, that Member may make a statement and shall withdraw during the time the matter is in debate.

From that I would take it that it is certainly open to you to find that the matter of the conduct of a Member with respect to the issue of the right of that Member to hold his seat can be found to be a prima facie case of breach of privilege which can be the subject of a motion, which motion could not only be debated but voted upon.

• (1140)

I think that whatever else can be read into or taken from Standing Order 20, I would submit that what I just said about the effect of the Standing Order being based on the presumption that the conduct of the Member can be linked with his right to hold a seat, and this can result in a motion which is debatable can be voted upon, and can result in that Member not being allowed to hold a seat as a result of the vote on the motion.

If one looks at page 149 of Erskine May and the words of the heading: "Corruption in the execution of their office as Members", there is no doubt that is something which can be found to be a misconduct by Members and, I submit, can lead to their being found to have breached the privileges of the House, resulting in their expulsion.

I think there are grounds for finding that there has been a prima facie case of breach of privilege arising out of the conduct of the Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé). If that is the case, of course, it would be open to a Member to present a motion to the House which would then be debatable and could be voted upon.

However, I think one has to look upon this in a realistic way, which is, that unless the Government itself agrees to accept the motion, or unless the Government proposes the motion, then it will not be adopted.

I think that in this case the Government itself has a particular responsibility. It has a responsibility because, first, the Member for Chambly was elected and sat as a Conservative until the charges were laid against him. It would appear from the press reports at least, that the incidents which led to the charges took place while the Member for Chambly was a Member of the Government caucus. I am not suggesting that other Members of the caucus knew about this, but he was a Member of that caucus.

Second, the Government, through its House Leader, has a special responsibility for the integrity and good name of this House. Of course, responsibility for the integrity and good name of this House is something in which we all share, but I say that the Government, especially through its House Leader, has a special responsibility. Therefore, I call upon the Government through its House Leader to accept that responsibility and be prepared to deal with this matter immediately through the appropriate motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, as Members of the House of Commons we all have a responsibility to protect the reputation of this House and its privileges. And I submit that the Government, through its parliamentary House leader, has a special responsibility for that reputation, for the good name of this House. Mr. Speaker, in the case of the Hon. Member for Chambly, it is a very special responsibility, because until the Hon. Member withdrew from the Tory Caucus, he sat as a Tory Member and he was elected as a Member for the Conservative Party. The incidents that led to the charges to which he pleaded guilty occurred while the Hon. Member for Chambly was a member of the Tory caucus, and as I said a few moments ago, Mr. Speaker, I do not want to press the fact that members of the Tory caucus were aware of these events, but it is true that the Hon. Member, during this important period, was a member of the Tory caucus. And, as I said before, the Government, through its parliamentary House leader, has a very special responsibility for the reputation of this House. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Government House leader to take that responsibility and to move the appropriate motion in this House as soon as possible.

[English]

That is the kind of action we need in the interests of the good name of this House and our parliamentary system.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this discussion with regret as to the subject matter and with regret as to the timing of the suggestions made by my colleagues opposite.

My argument will be technical and it will be conventional. First, I want to say that there are not many precedents in this matter, but one of the precedents is that all steps of appeal should be exhausted.

The conviction was registered on Tuesday, May 23, 1989, I understand in the morning. It is now the morning of Thursday, May 25, 1989. I understand that the Member served a short time in jail vis-à-vis the sentence of one day. I understand that he can still appeal the terms of probation and the fine, as can the Crown. There are two appeals that can be lodged.

I take it as hearsay from my colleague, although I have no reason to believe he would mislead the House, that the Crown has said it is satisfied with the sentence. But I have no knowledge of that myself.

There is also an opportunity for the individual to appeal. All of our laws have appeal periods for a very good reason. That is to protect the rights of the Crown and of the individual. No matter what we may think of the sentence, no matter what we may think of the crime, no matter what we may think of the individual, I think it behooves us to respect that appeal period. It is due process of law. It is not always easy to defend due process of law, but I think we all owe it to the administration of justice to allow for that due process of law to take place.

Having said that, I want to move on to deal with the individual himself. The individual has gone through a very difficult period, something that would not be easy for anybody in any walk of life, in any political Party, in any province.

It may be old fashioned, it is not partisan, but I happen to think the individual himself should be given an opportunity to consider his course of action. He pleaded guilty on Tuesday—not an easy thing to do. He has not been in the Chamber. He has not had an opportunity to take a course of action himself. I think he should be entitled to have that opportunity.

• (1150)

I know that my hon. friend, the House Leader of the Official Opposition, did not initiate this discussion. However, I think perhaps my hon. friend from Burnaby—Kingsway (Mr. Robinson) has been a bit premature with the rights of an individual who has gone through a difficult time. I think we owe it to that individual to give him an opportunity to respond.

I want to make this point, too. We are dealing with this as Members of the House. This is not a Party matter. I do not think that it is partisan since this action affects us all.

The third reason I do not think we should proceed is because I understand that the practice is for the House to be informed of arrests of Members on criminal charges and of a sentence to imprisonment for criminal offences. I take that from Parliamentary Privilege in Canada by Joseph Maingot, page 134. I am not for a minute suggesting that we have not all read the newspapers. However, I am suggesting that we should await—and I imagine that the court will have noticed that we are discussing it today—a formal letter from the court, a formal notice which might perhaps shed some new light on whatever action we should take.

I also point out that in the same book, at page 181, Mr. Maingot states that the House of Commons only acts when all the evidence against a Member can be tabled and all avenues of appeal may be exhausted.

I quote from page 181 of the same volume:

> In all of the instances both in Canada and in the U.K., the House will go to great lengths to have all available evidence, e.g., judgments sentencing the member and appeals confirming the sentence before it, prior to embarking on the serious course of expelling one of its members. In the case of Fred Rose, the House waited until all appeals were exhausted and until it was clear that the member could not fulfil his parliamentary duties because of his prison sentence.

I suggest that, on the third ground, it would be premature for the House to act.

My hon. friend from Burnaby—Kingsway has made in the course of his argument several connections between the Conservative Party and the individual in question. No one denies for a minute that the individual in question ran as a Conservative in the last election. That is a given. However, let us make sure of a couple of other things.

First, immediately the Privy Council found out about this, the RCMP was called in to investigate the allegation. The Prime Minister's Office acted immediately. The investigation was carried out. The House knows that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) wants to see justice done. That is why we moved on it. That is why he and his office moved on it. We also want to see justice done now, whether or not it is on a technical matter, because we do not want to break the appeal period and create a precedent. We also want to see justice done to an individual. Without even talking to the Prime Minister, I know that he would want to see that justice done.

Quite frankly, I think my hon. friend has acted in haste and in a partisan way. I think it is unfortunate that he has acted in a partisan way.

Various comments have been made about my dual position as Government House Leader and Minister of Justice. I want to put on the record that in every case where my role as Minister of Justice comes into play, I intend to see, no matter what the case, no matter what the incident, no matter who is involved, no matter how odious the crime, that due process of law takes place. Every Canadian, every individual in Canada, in fact, is owed that by the justice system. We shall not abrogate that in any way, shape or form. I intend in this instance that the Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé) shall get that due process of law.

The oath of office that I carry tests me daily. There are some things I would like to do that I cannot do, but I shall never break it. I think there is the convention, and I would like to go back to it, that we allow the Hon. Member an opportunity to take action if he wishes to take action.

I wish to close on this point before I sum up. There have been suggestions as to what the Government should or should not do, and the Government blocking actions of the House. I think it is clear that this is a case for the House. This is a case for its Members. I assure the House the Government will take the time to consider the matter. The Government will take its responsibility seriously, and the Government will accept its responsibility. But we will also do it with the law that exists in mind, for example, appeal periods. The Government will always do it with respect for an individual's rights as a Member of this House.

In closing I say this. I do not believe that there is a prima facie a case of privilege. Even if there were, I would say with respect that it is premature because the appeal periods have not run out and because the Chair has not been formally notified by the court of the situation.

My hon. friends may make light of that. They may sneer at those appeal periods, but I think they are important. It is important that we go through all the procedures when we are doing something as serious as this.

I close with this comment. The individual is owed a duty, a right or a privilege by this House to make up his own mind as to what course of action he will take. I would defend that with all my heart and soul, as I would his right to due process of law outside this Chamber.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby—Kingsway in reply.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, very briefly in reply, I do not think any Member of this House disagrees with the suggestion that it would be desirable for the Hon. Member for Chambly (Mr. Grisé) to do the right thing, the honourable thing, and to submit his resignation himself. He has not done that. That is the point. I had hoped that perhaps at 11 a.m. this morning he would in fact have been here. The Hon. Member for Beauce (Mr. Bernier) suggested he was coming to the House today. However, he is not here. He has not done the honourable thing. Thus, we are left with no alternative but to move.

The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) suggests that the raising of this question of privilege is premature. Your Honour is well aware that one of the obligations of any Member in raising a question of privilege is to raise that question at the earliest possible opportunity. That has been set out clearly in the precedents and traditions of this House. Indeed, Citation 82 of Beauchesne's indicates clearly that this is an obligation on Members.

• (1200)

Had I delayed raising the question of privilege, waiting for the Member for Chambly to do the honourable thing, I assume that the Minister of Justice would have been on his feet saying: "No, no, no, it is not in order because he did not raise it at the first opportunity." There is no alternative in a serious situation of this nature but to raise the question of privilege at the earliest opportunity. That is why I gave Your Honour notice yesterday that I intended to raise the question at the time that I did.

I might just note parenthetically that the Member in question for Chambly also acted as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice for some two years, during the period of time when he has admitted he was taking bribes. I think that is a rather sad reflection as well.

With reference to the appeal period the Minister of Justice has said and I quote: "the precedents suggest that all steps of appeal must be exhausted." What precedents? The Minister of Justice, the Government House Leader, has not cited a single precedent. The reason for that is because he cannot. There is no precedent. There is no precedent suggesting that all avenues of appeal must be exhausted before this House can move. What a mockery that would make of the power of this House to take action in cases of admitted corruption.

What the Minister of Justice is suggesting is that all a Member of Parliament has to do is launch an appeal after having pleaded guilty and effectively that this House is paralyzed, that we can do nothing, that we have to wait until the Court of Appeal has ruled, and that we have to wait until the Supreme Court of Canada has disposed of the matter. That does an incredible injustice, not just to each and every Member of this House, but to the constituents of the Member for Chambly who according to the Minister must continue to be represented by a crook, by someone that has admitted his wrongdoing, and to all Canadians.

I would suggest that that argument, that somehow we have to wait until all appeals have been expired, is utterly without foundation. The Minister of Justice has no precedent for that. To the extent that there are precedents, I would draw to Your Honour's attention Citation 39 of Beauchesne's. I quote:

> It is not necessary for the courts to come to a decision before the House acts. In 1891 charges were laid in the House against Thomas McGreevy relating to scandals in the Public Works Department. The Committee on Privileges and Elections examined the evidence and concluded that the charges were amply proven.

A parliamentary committee, Mr. Speaker. They had not even ruled in the courts, and there certainly had not been a guilty plea by the Member of Parliament himself. I continue:

> Mr. McGreevy meanwhile had submitted his resignation—The House judged Mr. McGreevy to be guilty of a contempt—as well as certain of the charges and ordered his expulsion.

To the extent precedents exist, they state that of course this House is the master of its own proceedings and in certain circumstances could even move before charges have even been finalized, before a verdict. I am not suggesting that that is an appropriate course to take, but surely that effectively puts the lie to the suggestion that this House must stand impotent and paralyzed until the Member has exhausted every possible avenue of appeal.

There is no problem with the suggestion that the House must be technically informed, that the judge in question must technically inform the House of the conviction. The Hon. Member has an opportunity to appear under Standing Order before this House to make his case. If he wants to suggest that all of the suggestions that he has pleaded guilty are somehow a mass of fiction, he can do so at the time. If he wants to suggest that he did not plead guilty to fraud and abuse of trust, he can do so when he appears. That technical requirement clearly should not be a bar to the finding on the fundamental question of a prima facie case of breach of privilege.

In closing, I say yes, of course, I would have preferred and indeed all Members of this House would have preferred the Hon. Member for Chambly to do the honourable thing. He has not done that.

Our second preference, and I agree with the House Leader for the Official Opposition in this, would be for the Government, for the Prime Minister, to show leadership, to table a motion before this House calling for the expulsion of this Member.

We are left in a situation in which the Member has refused to resign so far, in which the Government has abdicated its responsibility in this area in terms of a former Conservative colleague. Unless in these circumstances Your Honour finds a prima facie case of privilege, we are not able to deal with a case of admitted corruption in this House of Commons. That would be to the discredit of this House. It would be to the shame of this House, and certainly the people of Canada would not accept that.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise not to reiterate my argument but to expand on my citation if my hon. friend wishes. When I cited Parliamentary Privilege in Canada by Joseph Maingot and cited at page 181, I thought that would be sufficient for my hon. friend. Obviously, the citations are there and available if he wishes to pursue it.

I think the most relevant case that we have in this particular House of Commons is the case of Fred Rose, where the Speaker tabled court judgments in connection with the imprisonment of Fred Rose for conspiracy. That was after all appeals had been exhausted. That was the precedent that I was pointing to and referring to in the actual citation of Mr. Maingot.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby—Kingsway has raised by way of a question of privilege the propriety of the House moving to expel the Hon. Member for Chambly.

The Hon. Member for Windsor West has intervened and assisted the Chair. The Hon. Minister of Justice has replied. I thank Hon. Members for their references which they have given me. It will not come as a surprise to Hon. Members to know that the Speaker has already considered a lot of the background material in this case. However, the arguments were nonetheless of help to the Chair. I thank Hon. Members for that.

The matter is grave, and I know the Hon. Members would understand that under the circumstances it is appropriate that the Chair reserve decision, and I shall return to the House as soon as it is appropriate.

Again, I thank Hon. Members.

ELECTIONS, PRIVILEGES, PROCEDURE AND PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS

SECOND REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present the second report of the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges, Procedure and Private Members' Business. This was a reference to the committee on April 8 by the House of Commons and deals with the proposed CPaC–CBC joint venture in parliamentary broadcasting.

I would point out that this is a non-partisan committee with representatives from all Parties, and that the report is absolutely unanimous in what we have found and what we are reporting.

Briefly what the report states is that the CPaC–CBC proposal not be—I repeat, not be—proceeded with at this time. The reasons for the statement in our findings are clearly explained in the brief report which I submit to the House now.

PETITIONS

REVISION OF EXTRADITION LAWS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham): Madam Speaker, I rise to present a petition organized by the Victims of Violence Society. There are 1,150 names on this petition. They urge the Minister of Justice and this Government to change the extradition laws so that criminals such as Charles Ng cannot use Canada as a haven. Here is a man who killed several people in California, came to Canada, was convicted of armed robbery here, and who I think should be returned to California to face justice there.

He is one of, I believe, eight such criminals—at least eight in Canada who are using this country as a haven—and I am very pleased to be part of a group which is urging the Government to change the laws so that people like Ng will be returned to the justice system in their respective countries.

Mr. Bob Porter (Medicine Hat): Madam Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition which has been certified by the Clerk, pursuant to Standing Order 36. This petition represents the signatures of over 1,000 people from across Canada.

The petition calls for the Government of Canada to revise the extradition laws which would allow the Minister of Justice to order the extradition of fugitives either immediately or after being dealt with fully by the Canadian penal system. I join with these petitioners in urging the Government of Canada to make the necessary revisions to prevent Canada from becoming a haven for fugitives from beyond our borders.

PUBLIC PENSION SYSTEM REFORMS

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 36 to present a petition on behalf of a number of the half million Canadian seniors who are living below the poverty line.

It calls upon the Government to introduce reforms to our public pension system and to consider the advisability of ensuring that every elderly Canadian has an income at least equal to the poverty line through increases in the Old Age Security and Guaranteed Income Supplement Program.

This petition has been certified.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Madam Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

RADIO ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Jean Charest (for the Minister of Communications) moved that Bill C–6, an Act to amend the Radio Act and certain other Acts in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mrs. Finestone: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. I would like some direction from the Chair. This Radio Bill which you have just indicated was on the Order Paper is an important Bill in the history and evolution of our radio communications in Canada. I had perhaps made an incorrect presumption, but I did believe that the Parliamentary Secretary to the Hon. Minister of Communications (Mr. Edwards) had some observations to make and I was prepared, as was my colleague, I believe, in the New Democratic Party, to make some comment in this regard.

Could you perhaps enable us to understand just what has taken place that the House is moving to the next Bill?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I put the question to the House, I read the motion, and at that time no one rose to speak. The Parliamentary Secretary rose after that. I am quite prepared to revert to Bill C–6 should there be unanimous consent of the House. I did not in any way intend to have this important Bill go through the House without anyone debating it. The question was there but no one rose to speak. Obviously, I had to continue.

Mr. Charest: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. From my understanding of how the debate was to proceed, the Government is ready to speak on the Bill. My understanding is that there will be a speaker for the Official Opposition and a speaker for the New Democratic Party. We have no objection to reverting to the time where you, Madam Speaker, put the question to the House and, if there is unanimous consent to do so, I think you will probably find that the Parliamentary Secretary is more than ready to speak on this piece of legislation.

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, I appreciate what the Minister has just said. Our critic was having a discussion because of the events of this morning. The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) was right behind the curtains speaking with me. I am ready to take at least half the responsibility that the Hon. Member did not run fast enough to participate in the debate. There is agreement already and I hope you will recognize it, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I appreciate the comments made by the Hon. Member for Saint–Denis. Even though I did see the Hon. Member for Mount Royal in her seat in the House, the Hon. Member did not rise at the time.

There seems to be unanimous consent. I am pleased to revert to Bill C–6 and I will recognize whoever rises to speak.

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, I think I have contributed to the problem in that when I do rise I have a long way to go.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Edwards: On April 12, the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) tabled a Bill to amend the Radio Act. This initiative is required to ensure responsible management of the radio frequency spectrum. The radio frequency spectrum is an important limited international resource. No one nation owns the resource but it is necessary to every nation's economic well–being.

Radio frequencies provide the means to communicate by electromagnetic waves. They are the naturally occurring building blocks of communications devices, systems and networks.

In 1899 Marconi invented wireless transmission by radio waves. By 1905 it was obvious that international regulation was necessary to permit the orderly growth of radio communications. It became mandatory for all ships to carry radio equipment which met these regulations and would contribute to the saving of lives at sea. Because of the International Telecommunications Union, international standards such as distress frequencies and the famous signal for distress, SOS, were introduced.

In 1957 the Soviets launched the first Sputnik, a tremendous accomplishment at that time. Since then, several hundred communications satellites have been placed in earth orbits providing an increasing array of communications and broadcasting services. On September 29, 1962, Canada launched Alouette 1. We became the first western country to have its own domestic communications satellite.

• (1220)

In 1976, we launched Hermes, an experimental communications satellite, to demonstrate new broadcasting techniques. Our technical expertise was recognized when Canada received an Emmy Award for this achievement.

[Translation]

ITU regulations which govern the international use of radio have been updated 20 times since 1938 to take account of technological development and international demands for radio frequencies.

Every industrialized nation has a state-controlled spectrum management system. This fact alone reflects the tremendous value of the spectrum. Many nations in Europe still exercise proprietary control over the companies which provide telecommunications service. The spectrum manager and the manager user of the spectrum are also both government agencies.

In Canada, there has been a prosperous history of keeping the management of the spectrum and the commercial interests of the big spectrum users separate in order to encourage innovation in the marketplace.

The department of communications is the manager of the radiofrequency spectrum for all Canadians, for all interests of the country.

Competing applications of radio technology cannot contribute to a healthy economy unless the spectrum resource is properly managed.

In the case of cellular telephones or the broadcasting industry, for example, the existence of a healthy competitive industry which offers good service to the canadian public is dependent on good management of the radio frequency spectrum by the department of communications to ensure this.

Effective and efficient management of the radio frequency spectrum is necessary to ensure that regulatory incentives are created which will foster the interests of Canadians and Canadian businesses.

[English]

There was a time when telecommunications was synonymous only with wire-line communications, telephone and telegraph. This is no longer true. The entire Canadian telecommunications infrastructure, one in which we can take great pride, is today critically dependent on the radio frequency spectrum. Indeed, without the radio links provided by microwave and satellite, the capacity and versatility of communications throughout all of Canada would be severely diminished.

Telecommunications, broadcasting, microwave systems, long distance telephone service, emergency services such as police and fire departments, aeronautical and marine communications, industrial machinery and consumer devices all must have interference-free access to radio frequencies in order to operate successfully. The importance of the spectrum in communicating culture, ensuring sovereignty and supporting commerce cannot be overestimated. The need for interference-free spectrum management is imperative.

Radio frequencies are public property and are a limited resource. Their application and use, to be of value, must be managed judiciously. This task is the responsibility of the Canadian Government and in particular, that of the Minister of Communications.

Two objectives are of primary importance: first, to ensure that the spectrum is made available to meet the needs of all Canadians for their social, economic, industrial, cultural and technical benefit; and also to ensure that any use of radio causes minimum interference to other radio users and to the public at large. To manage this valuable and fragile resource, we have relied on both technical and statutory tools.

Radio communications were first regulated in Canada by the Wireless Telegraphy Act of 1905. This provided the legislative framework until 1938 when the Radio Act which dealt specifically with spectrum regulation was proclaimed.

[Translation]

Since that time, the world of radiocommunications has evolved significantly. Both the nature and pace of change have been startling. The Radio Act has not kept pace with this progress. A revised act is therefore necessary to manage the spectrum environment in a way that truly reflects the new world of radiocommunications in Canada.

Since this spectrum 20/20 symposium, held in Montreal in 1987, a great deal of effort has been spent consulting with industry members. We have worked with them to develop and draft appropriate amendments to reflect the realty and needs of spectrum management into the 21st century.

Provisions of the radiocommunication bill tabled on April 12 serve to: repeal or revise obsolete provisions and definitions, and increase the flexibility of the act's application.

The amendments which follow are of particular importance in managing the spectrum. They would allow consideration of other than technical factors in authorizing radio use in Canada; considerations like the potential impact of a radio tower in a community; authorize the establishment, where necessary, of minimum technical standards for radio apparatus, for non-radio equipment capable of causing radio interference, and for radio-sensitive devices, to prevent interference with one another; require compliance to these technical standards, not by consumers who may have innocently bought substandard goods, but rather by the manufacturer, importer or retailer; Strengthen enforcement of compliance by providing for increased fines and administrative recourse rather than having to apply criminal code court procedures.

[English]

Much of this effort will seem banal to many. Managing the spectrum for the benefit of Canadians requires a great deal of behind the scenes housekeeping and maintenance. Keeping the airwaves clear so they can be used for economic growth, technological development, recreation, national security and personal safety is a demanding and often unappreciated task. The health and growth of the radio communications industry is vital if we are to continue building our economic prosperity and competitive success among industrialized nations. The passage of this Bill by Parliament will ensure an environment in which communications will truly benefit all Canadians in every part of Canada.

I know that there is, as the Minister has suggested, some sense of support for the objectives of this Bill, it being of a very technical and non-controversial nature. I look forward to its referral to a legislative committee.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Madam Speaker, although it was a long wait, I am glad the Parliamentary Secretary, the Hon. Member for Edmonton Southwest (Mr. Edwards), was able to rise to speak on this Bill. I believe the Parliamentary Secretary made a carefully crafted and well thought out presentation about what is essentially quite a dry, technical subject for the general population. I hope that people interested listened to the Hon. Member, and if they did not listen to what he said, I hope that they will read what he said and will learn about what we all take so much for granted. We have access to television sets, radios, car telephones, garage door openers, microwave ovens, the things that make life very simple to live.

• (1230)

There is a new way to sell real estate today. In some major cities you just drive along in your car, and there is a low frequency band that allows you to flick on a switch to be told the story of the internal layout of the home, the price, the description, et cetera. That does not happen out of magic. That comes from a carefully controlled, managed and very precious resource which is used almost to its fullest capacity. In fact, if I recall, when we were first looking at this whole issue we had some serious concerns about the CBs used by farmers and truckers. These all fall under this particular Bill. Even things that medical technology has developed fall under this Bill, such as heart pacemakers. That is why efficient and effective management of this spectrum is so valuable and vital.

I owe a measure of thanks to the Department of Communications and its very competent staff for knowing what is behind the complex language of this very technical 18-page Bill. I thoroughly enjoyed having it explained to me and to members of my staff. This side of the House is very supportive of the content of this Bill. It has been carefully considered. It has international and national implications. It has very important financial considerations, which I know we would all be interested in seeing handled in the best way possible.

I am sure many of the Members of this House and the public who are watching have heard of HDTV, a new kind of television system that is coming. This television set uses more lines. It is a whole complex hocus-pocus thing that has to do with communications. As much as we do not understand it and as much as we do not know how it works, let me assure you that it is dependent on what is available on this radio spectrum. Even if we do not understand how it works, once it is available we will all go and buy it. It is important that this whole spectrum work well. It is also important that we catch up on the technology. Japan is light-years ahead of us. The Americans are dragging their feet but the Germans want to join the parade and I think Canada ought to get into the act.

It is my great pleasure to have been able to say a few words with respect to this sophisticated technology. In practical terms, it is very important.

There is one thing that I do not believe my hon. colleague addressed, that is, the important implications it has for the quality of life in the cities, in the small towns and villages in which we live. For the first time there is some clarity as to the role of management in the installation that is needed to use this very precious esoteric type of equipment. I am speaking of the towers and the antennae that you see out in the marshlands and fields, sometimes scarring the skyline of our cities. Municipalities have tried to deal with this issue. They have not been able to answer it. Citizens complained that their favourite park or walkland was being disrupted by the unsightly view of a tower or antenna soaring into the air. Nobody really had the proper kind of control. The original bill, written over 50 years ago, said that the Minister: "Shall regulate and control all technical matters related to the planning for and the construction and operation of broadcasting facilities. Without limiting the generality of the foregoing, the Minister shall—" and 20 pages later, all the things that the Minister can do in great detail.

This Bill makes it clear that if you are unhappy with what your municipality is allowing to be built, if you feel powerless because there is no place to go, you can now go to your genial Oscar-winning Minister of Communications and through his department, you can get some exemption and some relief from the kinds of things that you do not care to have in your environment. If it meets certain standards technically, okay, but if it scars the environment—maybe the Minister of Environment will have something to say about that, too—but the Minister of Communications can say, under Clause 5, that the Minister may take into account all matters that the Minister considers relevant for ensuring the orderly establishment or modification of radio stations and the orderly development and efficient operation of telecommunications. He can take all these things into account, other than technical matters.

It is a tremendous improvement for our environment. We can go for walks. The birds can sing their songs and we can be at peace without the visual encumbrances that we often see today. With that, Madam Speaker, I am pleased to hear anyone who has something to say about this technical matter at legislative committee. We look forward to discussions with our colleagues on this particular bill, Bill C-6.

[Translation]

—Bill C-6, an Act to amend the Radio Act and certain other Acts in consequence thereof. The Radio Act is now called the Radiocommunication Act.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, as the New Democratic Party's critic for culture and communications, I support this Bill. As my hon. colleague, the Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) said earlier, this is a Bill to amend the Radio Act and certain other Acts in consequence thereof. I have a few comments about the Bill itself. I would like to say that the parliamentary secretary who spoke in both French and English, and in very good French, too, that—

[English]

Since I am going to deal with some details, I will switch into English, and fairly briefly on the Bill, as the Parliamentary Secretary has covered it quite thoroughly. It is a Bill, as my colleagues have said, to amend the Radio Act and other Acts in consequence thereof. The Radio Act, as has been said, governs the use of radio frequencies in Canada. This Bill provides flexibility, as I understand it, in dealing with technological change which is long overdue from garage door openers to satellite communications, the malfunctioning of non-radio electronic equipment as a result of radio transmissions and clarifies the Government's right to administer the radio communications industry.

It seems to me to be strictly a technical bill, unless I have missed something. I know that the Radio Act has not been amended since 1938, and some housekeeping was in order. I believe that the cultural, social and political aspects of communications policy are unaffected by the Bill, although I will have something to say about that policy in a couple of minutes. I believe that the Bill is an improvement for consumers in that it shifts the onus from consumers to manufacturers and importers for ensuring that certain technical standards for radio equipment are met. That is good.

The Bill was first introduced last summer. I vaguely remember that summer, and I do not believe there has been any public criticism. We have canvassed the industry, and there seems to be wide acceptance of the Bill.

On behalf of the NDP, we can support this Bill here in second reading. The Bill represents an important updating of legislation which is somewhat out of step. The original Radio Act, as I said, was enacted in 1938. It has received some minor amendment since then, but it remains essentially the same Act. I do not think the original drafters of the Radio Act could possibly have imagined, even if they had let their imaginations soar, the explosion of activities that this Act must now administer. While this Bill is highly technical and non-contentious, it has a wide-ranging impact on various forms of communications in Canada. It governs sophisticated satellite communications and allocations of radio frequencies, both national and in conjunction with the member countries of the International Telecommunications Union. It also deals with somewhat bland every-day activities. I do not know if you have an instrument that opens your garage door, Madam Speaker, but that will be dealt with under this Act.

• (1240)

As I stated, the Parliamentary Secretary has dealt with the effects of the legislation as a whole. However, I would like to underline two points. First, this legislation does improve the lot of consumers. It shifts the responsibility for the control of sub-standard devices from the consumer onto the manufacturer or the importer. As it presently stands, Madam Speaker, if you have a defective garage door opener which causes radio interference with a local radio station in the neighbourhood, you are liable. I do not know if many people know that. This Bill places the onus on the business that sells those products. After all, those businesses are the ones with the engineers, and they are the ones ultimately responsible for ensuring that those products operate properly in an electro-magnetically cluttered world.

The Department of Communications will have the ability to ensure that standards are set and maintained for those products. This may all seem a little arcane but when one considers that radio signals can potentially interfere with such equipment as heart pacemakers and railway crossing gates, its importance becomes very clear.

I would also like to deal with the suggestion in the background papers to this Bill that the Bill will permit the Government to increase Canadian control over its radio-communications industries. It is true that the enabling power found in the Bill will allow the Government to do this, if it so chooses. I am satisfied that this provision is there. However, I am not confident that the Government will in fact use it.

The New Democratic Party has been fighting hard to ensure that the tools of communications in Canada remain in Canadian hands. This is where the Government has fallen down in the past. At the moment, the majority of radio communications, the majority of the industry in Canada, is in fact Canadian controlled. The question is, will it remain Canadian controlled? If one looks at our other instruments of communicating Canadian culture, a far different story will be seen. As a former television star, Madam Speaker, perhaps you will know that the film industry is 97 per cent foreign controlled. Let me give an example of how the Government has worked on this in the past.

The Government realized and commissioned studies, and also had reports from the Standing Committee on Culture about the situation of the film industry. The Government drafted a Bill in which it would take part of the market for Canadian film distributors. What happened? We had the free trade negotiations. Mr. Jack Valenti of the Motion Pictures Association of the United States, who was very close to the then President Ronald Reagan, said that Canadians could not do that. Then people such as Mr. Gotlieb, who was our Ambassador and is now the head of the Canada Council, sent back wires to the Canadian Government and said: "Don't do this. The Americans will get angry at us. We have to get the free trade deal through". What did the Government do? At the first big test in culture and the free trade deal, the Government hastily withdrew its Bill. In fact, it tabled another Bill that would subsidize some Canadian film companies and the Americans would not be too worried about that.

I managed to get a copy of the Government's Bill which I tabled as a private Member's Bill. It is exactly the same as the Government's Bill, and it was there for all Canadians to see what the Government was going to do before the trade deal and how the Government backed away from it after the trade deal, in spite of the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stated that culture was not on the table in the free trade deal. I point that out as an example of how the Government can back away when it is under fire from the Americans or from its business friends.

As I said, 97 per cent of the film industry is foreign controlled; only 3 per cent of new video-cassette sales in Canada are Canadian. Canadian publishers own only 30 per cent of the Canadian market; 77 per cent of magazines sold in Canada are foreign. The Government has just slashed the postal subsidy which permitted many Canadian companies the chance to survive in a difficult market. Further, 85 per cent of records and tapes sold in this country are foreign. By the Government's own admission in a Department of Industry study, the record industry in Canada was sold out by the trade deal.

Madam Speaker, I am not advocating putting a curtain around Canada. We live in an international world and we have to communicate internationally. There is no country in the world that does not consider itself a colony of another country, no industrialized country certainly, that has let so much of its vital communications industry and cultural industry be controlled from outside. One cannot keep a culture if foreign forces are going to gobble up that culture. That is the great struggle in Canada, of course.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications on a point of order.

Mr. Edwards: The Hon. Member may have received my signal. I was going to request that he return to the subject matter at hand. He is making some very interesting points, and they are suitable subjects for debate in the House, perhaps at another time.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Port Moody—Coquitlam.

Mr. Waddell: I say to the Parliamentary Secretary that this is very relevant. In fact, there is a clause in the Bill that permits the Government to retain control and keep the industry Canadianized. The industry is still Canadianized, thank God. But if one looks at the Government's previous record, it is to back off and not to take advantage of those particular clauses. Do not do anything about it, and back off when threatened by your American friends.

I suggest that action is required to ensure that our radio communications industry is not the next victim of American takeover. I assure the Parliamentary Secretary that we in the NDP will be vigilant in our efforts to make sure that the Government does not stand idly by while another sell-out occurs under this disastrous trade agreement. After all, as Karl Deutsch suggested, it is a fundamental test of nationhood that more communications take place within a country than between one country and another.

For the reasons I have outlined, we will let this Bill move forward today. I believe my hon. friend, the Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus), wanted to add a few words on the Bill. We are then prepared to let the Bill go to committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, there are two brief things I wanted to say in relation to the Radio Act. Part of this Act changes the requirement for ham- radio operators in terms of their qualifications. In some categories, they no longer need Morse code in order to qualify. As a former president of a ham radio club in my riding many years ago, who never got his ticket because he could not figure out Morse code, I appreciate that change.

Second and more importantly, I wish to use this opportunity to compliment ham-radio operators around the country who provide a great service to the country in times of emergencies, providing communication services in times of disasters and the like. They perform a great service and I believe they should be acknowledged for that here in the House.

Thank you, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

MUSEUMS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)) (for the Minister of Communications) moved that Bill C–12, an Act respecting museums, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Madam Speaker, it is a privilege to rise again in the House today in support of Bill C–12. With the permission of the House I would yield the floor to the Hon. Member next to me who I am sure has a good deal to say on the subject. Perhaps we could have that consent, Madam Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Is there consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mrs. Marie Gibeau (Bourassa): Madam Speaker, museums are an important part of our cultural reality which consists of our broadcasting system, cultural industries, a technological infrastructure including telecommunications, and last, but not least, performers and creative artists.

The latter, together with our researchers and scientists, help build the collective memory of Canadians by exhibiting their works in these institutions which as such provide a benchmark and promote and enshrine our values for the greater benefit of present and future generations.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I regret that I have to interrupt the Hon. Member. While I explain to the public, perhaps she could move one row back. A Member cannot be recognized by the Chair when he or she is not in his or her assigned seat. Unfortunately, the Chair did not see the mistake at first. I am sure the House will bear with me as I give the floor back to the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mrs. Gibeau).

[Translation]

Mrs. Gibeau: Thank you, Madam Speaker, and thank you for excusing this procedural mistake.

In these times of media technology, museums have turned into cultural institutions responsible for preserving and putting on public view the artifacts that put their mark on an era, a society and the attitudes of that society. In doing so, museums reflect a way of life and translate values that bring us closer to our past and give us a better understanding of the present.

This function of collecting and preserving the signs and traces of humanity's relationship to its environment, an extension of the of encyclopaedic approach to knowledge, became a vehicle for communicating with the public when the museum, as an institution, opened its doors to the public in eighteenth–century Europe.

In Canada, this function developed during the last century, based on the concept of a museum as a public institution that has a duty to promote museum activities among all groups and all classes of society.

No longer catering exclusively to the academic constituency, as it did in its early beginnings, the museum has now become a vehicle for communication that ensures that references to skills, artifacts, and aspects of daily life of the Amerindian civilization, for instance, are preserved and indexed according to scientifically sound procedures. This guarantee of an authentic witness is the assurance that our cultural identity will be perpetuated and disseminated and that our knowledge will be maintained.

The importance of actual specimens to historical awareness is also revealed by the size and growth of Canadian collections. In 1985, the Canadian Heritage Information Network and the Museums Assistance Program surveyed the museum community and found 37 million artifacts of various kinds, from archeology to history, from fine arts to zoology. Furthermore, 74 per cent of them were documented, which shows the high degree of professionalism of our curators.

In the past twenty years or so, the architecture of our museums has evolved, as it has in many other countries. We adapt it to take account of our new requirements, our dynamism and multiculturalism and the increasing number of forms of expression. Museums free us from the bonds of time and space and help us understand how a people came to be and help us to get in touch with other cultures. Their contribution to society is highly appreciated, if one goes by the number of visitors: 20 million annually, much more than the number of people who attend paying sports events.

For the Government, museums are essential for any society that sees culture as something as necessary as the right to health. This concept arose in western societies in the 1950s and since then, Canada has always been in step with it, giving culture a special place.

France, for example, has three public institutions and 32 state-run museums, most of which perform a scientific advisory role. The British Government is responsible for 19 state museums throughout the country. And even the United States, which has a strong private sector tradition, has entrusted the federal Government with maintaining the Smithsonian Institute.

By giving $5 to $6 per capita for our museum institutions and following the present trend to specifying the Government's role in their organization, management and financial support, we are acting like other western countries.

In 1968, Gérard Pelletier, then Secretary of State, brought forth a cultural policy that was to have clear objectives, the resources necessary to attain them and a timetable for implementing them. For Gérard Pelletier, culture was not just for the elite. It should be available to all Canadians, in both economically advantaged and disadvantaged regions. That same year, he gave us the National Museums Act, whose purpose was to present the work of nature and man, with an emphasis on Canada, but not to the exclusion of other societies, in order to interest everyone and to spread knowledge.

From the 1968 National Museums Act to the 1972 national museums policy, we came, after several steps, to this awareness of the role of the state. After 21 years, the Act needed revision to help us better meet contemporary challenges.

Because of the importance of museums in our society, in January 1986, we created the task force headed by Richard Withrow to review our museum policy. The Museum Bill was drafted after wide-ranging consultation with the special interest groups and government agencies concerned and after considering the recommendations of the Standing Committee on Communications, Culture, Citizenship and Multiculturalism.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mrs. Gibeau) will be able to continue her speech as soon as the House resumes sitting later this afternoon.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this afternoon.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

IMPACT OF PROGRAM CUTS IN ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, in 1984 the Prime Minister declared that he was not afraid to inflict prosperity on Newfoundland and the other Atlantic provinces.

Over the past few weeks the Government has launched an unprecedented assault on the people of Atlantic Canada.

In Summerside, P.E.I., the Tories shut down the Canadian Forces Base.

In Newfoundland, the Tories gave northern cod to the French and cut quotas for our own fishermen.

In New Brunswick, the McKenna Government has been forced to carry on regional development programs alone.

Under the guise of negotiations the Tories are dismantling regional development programs that mean so much to the communities in our region. However, the Tories are only just beginning.

In the Darmouth–Halifax region the cancellation of the At and East grain subsidy may toss 295 individuals out of work. The withdrawal of VIA Rail service will cost another 322 jobs. CN is also putting more maintenance workers in the unemployment lines.

The Government has done enough in its assault on Atlantic Canada. I call upon it now to halt this assault and stop the battering which has taken place over the last three weeks.

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

EFFECT ON ATLANTIC CANADIAN ECONOMY

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, no regional development program over the years has even approached the success to date of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. Furthermore, the kind of assistance available through ACOA is exactly the sort of shot in the arm that the Atlantic economy needs at a time when our fishery is headed for a downturn.

This fiscal year the Government of Canada will spend close to $500 million through ACOA. This assistance will greatly benefit the Atlantic economy. However, with the current downturn in our groundfishery we greatly need the diversification and job creation opportunities that ACOA can provide.

The Government has lived up to its ACOA funding commitment, and it should be applauded for doing so. However, right now, it is not enough. I urge the Government to consider making an additional sum of $300 million to $400 million available to ACOA to assist Atlantic Canada through its current economic crisis.

TRANSPORT

CLEAN-UP OF OIL SPILL—PAYMENT OF VOLUNTEERS

Mr. Raymond Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, I wish to call to the attention of the House and in particular the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) that volunteers who helped clean up the West Coast oil spill have still not been paid for out-of-pocket costs, loss of wages, destruction of equipment, and personal things they purchased to assist in the clean-up of the oil spill.

The Minister of Transport and the Government have an obligation to compensate those individuals for their out-of-pocket costs. The Government, through the Minister of Transport, should be paying those costs and then collectively on their behalf suing the Sous brothers for the oil spill which took place on the West Coast.

I and others urge that the Minister of Transport and the Government call a public inquiry into that spill to determine more effective ways of dealing with it. On behalf of all those who are out of pocket it should launch a civil action. It should pay those individuals and launch a civil action to compensate them for the efforts they made on behalf of all Canadians to clean up those beaches.

Mr. Lindsay Armstrong is here today to present the Minister of Transport with his personal bills for that clean-up. Hopefully, that transaction will be completed.

UNITED NATIONS

CONVENTION ON THE RIGHTS OF THE CHILD—PROTECTION OF THE RIGHTS OF THE UNBORN

Mr. Gus Mitges (Bruce—Grey): Mr. Speaker, the new United Nations Convention on the Rights of the Child is approaching the ratification process. The new convention will replace the 1959 declaration. The reference to legal protection of the unborn child has been deleted from the preamble and extends protection to children only after birth.

Save The Children Canada is presently engaged in a postcard campaign seeking Canada's ratification of the convention.

I urge all my colleagues in the House and the people of Canada to do everything possible to ensure that Canada does not ratify this document which so clearly excludes pre-born children from legal protection.

Without the right to birth, the other rights contained in the convention have no value.

FISHERIES

SITUATION IN THE ATLANTIC PROVINCES

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Beauséjour): Mr. Speaker, the fisheries industry in the Atlantic provinces is in a full-scale depression. Cod, crabs and jobs are dwindling, and even heftier quota cuts are expected in 1990.

What is the Government doing about this disaster? It has created a cabinet committee to find out whether existing programs are adequate. Its members are the same people who sold out our fishermen in the Canada-France dispute, who cut federal-provincial fisheries agreements, who cut unemployment insurance benefits, who cut VIA Rail, who cut military bases, and I could go on! All in the name of reducing the deficit! This committee isn't worth a cent.

Communities are adrift, and the Government sends out the rescue team that chopped holes in their lifeboats!

Mr. Speaker, the committee must realize that it can only do one of two things: either reduce the deficit or help the fishermen, workers and communities that are facing the disastrous consequences of this crisis.

HOUSING

OFFICIAL OPENING OF TWO RESIDENCES—CONGRATULATION TO CMHC

Mr. Jean-Pierre Hogue (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, I had the privilege of representing the Government of Canada at the official opening of two residences which were built thanks to the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation and its Minister (Mr. Redway).

I would like to identify the residences. The first one is called La Colombe and the second one La Voie Lactée.

Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to congratulate the members of these housing co-operatives and their respective boards of directors.

Since the housing sector is very important to the Government of Canada and all Canadians have a right to decent accommodation, we are proud to be able to help get these projects off the ground.

These housing projects are good examples of what can be accomplished when people and governments work together to produce decent accommodation at affordable prices.

THE BUDGET

DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL DEFENCE—EFFECT OF CUTS

Mr. Larry Schneider (Regina—Wascana): Mr. Speaker, the Government has announced in its Budget some drastic painful cuts in the proposed expenditures of the Department of National Defence over the next five years.

As a result of these cuts the Department and our Canadian Forces will have difficulty meeting the many challenges and commitments which Canadians demand of them. This is unfortunate but the Government's first priority is to the economic well-being of the nation. The dedicated men and women of the Canadian Forces recognize the importance of a healthy, well developed economy to the security of our nation and are prepared to shoulder their share of the burden.

The base closures and reductions announced will have a painful impact on the communities concerned. Nevertheless, the Canadian Forces must reduce the cost of their operations and personnel in order to be able to purchase the equipment necessary to allow them to do their job effectively in terms of the 1990s. The closures at Portage and Summerside regretfully reflect operations which have become militarily obsolete.

By contrast, Canadian Forces Base Moose Jaw, where pilots receive their primary jet training, is not one of the 14 bases scheduled for closure or reductions. CFB Moose Jaw is alive and well. Operations there will continue. I asked officials of the Department of National Defence this morning if they had plans to privatize secondary flight training and they replied an emphatic: "No".

I remind the House that politics was not a factor in these decisions. The military base is in a constituency not represented by a member on the government side of the House.

YOUTH

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF UKRAINIAN EXCHANGE STUDENTS

Mr. Jim Jordan (Leeds—Grenville): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you for this privilege. We all know that the best purveyors of goodwill for any nation are very often the youth of that nation.

I want to draw the attention of all Hon. Members to a very special group of young people in the gallery today, a group of exchange students from the Ukrainian city of Donetsk.

This is the first time, I am told, that we have had such an exchange with Canadian students. They are in Canada for two weeks with some of their teachers at the initiative of the Leeds and Grenville Board of Education in my riding. They are accompanied today by Mr. Ken Robinson, the Principal of Rideau District High School in Elgin, Ontario.

I am sure all Hon. Members will want to join with me today in welcoming this group of young people to Canada, Ottawa, and the House of Commons.

SPORTS

CABA—INJURY OF KEN CASOLA

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to inform the House of a constituent of mine, Mr. Ken Casola, who suffered a most serious injury while in training for Canada's national boxing team in 1982.

One can anticipate a black eye in boxing but not a blind eye. The Canadian Amateur Boxing Association did not carry liability insurance for participants and offered Mr. Casola $5,000 compensation for his loss of sight. His decision to pursue a suit against the CABA drew an unacceptable reaction. If he were successful in his suit, then the CABA would declare bankruptcy and he would receive no compensation.

Surely, this is an unacceptable response and practice from a nationally funded sports organization. Action has now been taken, most belatedly. As of April 1, 1989, boxers are now covered by liability insurance.

This is a positive step but, unfortunately, it leaves a bitter, frustrated young man with no recourse. The Government must assure that all funded national sports associations have adequate liability insurance for all Canadian athletes.

Ken Casola has won a war for boxers but he has lost a great personal battle.

FISHERY

SALMONID ENHANCEMENT PROGRAM—SCOTT COVE HATCHERY

Mr. Stan Wilbee (Delta): Mr. Speaker, I am rising on an issue of great concern to all British Columbians, that of salmon enhancement. The Scott Cove hatchery was established in 1983 with initial capital from a private donation totalling $50,000. It was originally operated by a group known as Mainland Enhancement of Salmonid Species and later given to local residents who volunteer their time to ensure its success.

Bill Proctor and his daughter, Jan Hoddinott, have given countless hours to this facility that has restocked 10 streams and creeks decimated by poor logging practices.

This year the hatchery will produce 250,000 fry to restock our precious salmon resource. Scott Cove received only $5,000 last year from the Department of Fisheries and Oceans and has not received any assistance to date this year.

Enhancing our salmon stock is of vital importance to all British Columbians, and more funding must be made available for this important project. The future of Scott Cove and our fishery depend on it. I believe that we should support these volunteer efforts to the maximum.

HEALTH

CANADIAN CENTRE FOR OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH AND SAFETY—EFFECT OF TREASURY BOARD POLICY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety was set up in 1978 to provide accessible information on health and safety in the workplace. Since 1978 it has become something of a national treasure, supplying crucial research and information that is duplicated nowhere else.

However, this Government has announced it no longer wants to support workers' and employers' right to information on health and safety. The Treasury Board is demanding that the centre begin a policy of full cost recovery within two years. This is unacceptable.

First, the Treasury Board has no absolute right to be dictating policy for the centre. Second, full cost recovery is completely out of line with the very principles the centre was founded upon. It will mean that workers will not have the information they need to maintain a safe workplace.

By unilaterally imposing full cost recovery, the Treasury Board has effectively sounded the death knell for the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety. This is a dangerous blow to health and safety in the workplace.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

IMPACT OF JOB LAY-OFFS IN WESTERN CANADA

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, Canadian National Railways is planning to chop about 200 maintenance jobs in my province. Of the jobs to be lost, most will be in small rural communities; communities already experiencing the ravages of drought, low commodity prices and high interest rates.

The lay-offs proposed for the Hudson Bay line will have a severe impact on northern Manitoba. The area is already reeling from deep cuts to various economic development programs.

On a broader scale, there will also be a disproportionate number of lay-offs in Manitoba, Saskatchewan and northwestern Ontario. This is another sign of the Government's lack of commitment to the people of western Canada.

The lay-offs will have a harmful impact on families and the western economy. In the longer term, there is fear that the branch line service reduction will lead to branch line abandonment, often the death knell for small towns on the Prairies.

Manitobans are asking the question: "How much more can we take?"

THE HANDICAPPED

NATIONAL WEEK FOR THE INTEGRATION OF HANDICAPPED PERSONS

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the second National Handicapped Access Awareness Week will be held from June 4 to 10.

It is meant to call on all Canadians to take time to show their support for the handicapped and to encourage their efforts to integrate fully into Canadian society.

Rick Hansen showed us his determination when he went around the world and he is the originator of this annual event. Throughout the country, we should be proud of what we have done to increase accessibility for the disabled. However, much still remains to be done.

FITNESS

SNEAKER DAY—CELEBRATION OF FITWEEK

Mr. John E. Cole (York—Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow, Friday, May 26, is Sneaker Day, the day when all Canadians including Members of the House are invited to wear their sneakers in support of healthy active living. Sneaker Day is the kick-off event for Canada's Fitweek, starting May 26 until June 4.

This country can take great pride in knowing that Canada's Fitweek is the largest celebration of physical activity in the world. This year, organizers expect eight million Canadians to participate in over 17,000 events taking place across the country.

Canada's Fitweek is jointly co-ordinated by the Government of Canada through Fitness Canada, the provincial and territorial Governments, and 20 national organizations.

At the community level, hundreds of thousands of volunteers contribute their time and energy to this annual celebration. Through their generous efforts, they are the key to the success of Fitweek. The growth of Fitweek can only be described as phenomenal.

Canada's Fitweek is an excellent example of government and the corporate sector working together to promote the message of active living to Canadians and to maintain the momentum of the fitness movement. During the next 10 days, I invite all Members to join Canadians from coast to coast in promoting and participating in the many events planned in their own constituencies as part of Canada's Fitweek.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE BUDGET

TIMING OF KNOWLEDGE OF PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The Government has engaged in a conspiracy to hide the truth from the people of Canada and now it has been caught out.

At 1.30 p.m. on April 27, the President of Mutual Life informed the office of the Minister of Finance of the second budget leak. At 3.03 p.m. on April 27, one and one-half hours later here in the House of Commons, the Prime Minister said that any new information would be reported to the House of Commons immediately.

When he made that statement, did the Prime Minister already have that new information in his possession? If he did, why did he not inform Canadians? If he did not, why was he not informed by the Minister of Finance?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to answer that question because I think it does require some explanation.

There has been some misinterpretation, I think, on the part of the Leader of the Opposition and others with regard to what the Prime Minister said precisely. He was summarizing the words of the Solicitor General who on April 27, at page 1031 of Hansard, in response to whether in fact there had been profiteering, said:

> —and the Hon. Member, as soon as the RCMP was informed of these events early yesterday evening, a thorough investigation of the allegations was under way, and the securities commissions in the provinces concerned were contacted. I believe an investigation is now under way at the securities commissions of four provinces because we take this very seriously. When such allegations are made, I believe that either one should provide evidence, before the House or elsewhere, of the allegations, or else one goes to the securities commission or to the RCMP with the requisite proof.

Then this is the important part of the answer that the Solicitor General gave:

> However, it would be irresponsible to speculate about facts that have not been corroborated. The investigation is under way, Mr. Speaker, and as soon as we have the facts—

In the French version, and he was speaking in French, he used the word "conclusion".

> —as soon as we have the facts, the findings, we will be able to disclose them—

That is to the House. What the Prime Minister was referring to, at page 1036 of Hansard, was simply this:

> The RCMP is conducting a full investigation. That investigation extends to the actions of presumably all of those involved in that part of it, and also extends to the stock exchanges to ascertain if anybody has profited in any way from any kind of information. Thus far there is no indication whatsoever of that. However, the Solicitor General has said if any information comes to him he will report to the House immediately, and I know if my friend has any accusations or any specific information he will make it known to the RCMP.

That is the context of the response of the Prime Minister. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition should take it in the spirit in which it was delivered in the House.

POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, The Prime Minister made two undertakings to the House, one just recited by the Deputy Prime Minister, on April 27, that the Solicitor General would present any new information to the House, which he did not.

Mr. Mazankowski: With regard to the profiteering.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): There were no limitations put on that statement whatsoever.

• (1420)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Then, at 3.03 p.m., an hour and a half after the Minister of Finance's office learned from the President of Mutual Life, he gave the same personal undertaking that any new information would be given to the House.

Yesterday, the Minister of Finance said this:

> That information was made known to my office at 1.30–1.45 on April 27, the Thursday, and I became aware of it shortly after that.

Those were his words in the House. Later in Question Period yesterday, the Minister of Finance talked of knowing about this second leak:

> Within less than an hour.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): That is not quite accurate.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Those are his words exactly. Then he started to jumble. He said: "We knew, my office knew, we told the RCMP, I learned after the RCMP".

Mr. Speaker, the issue is critical. When did the Minister know? When did he tell the Prime Minister of this second leak?

Mr. Andre: It was released the night before.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He saw the Prime Minister stand up in the House of Commons—the Prime Minister has the next seat to him—and say that any new information would be presented to the House.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is wrong.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): When did the Minister tell the Prime Minister? Did the Minister of Finance already know when the Prime Minister stood up? Was the Minister negligent in not telling the Prime Minister of that new information, or did he sit idly by when the Prime Minister of Canada made a false statement to the House of Commons?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me again repeat what the Deputy Prime Minister has just said. The Deputy Prime Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Shields: They don't like the answer.

Some Hon. Members: We want the truth.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure all the Members would allow the Minister to reply to the question.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Deputy Prime Minister has quoted the Prime Minister where the Prime Minister refers to what the Solicitor General has said, and the Solicitor General when he made that comment made it quite clear that the information would be made known when the investigations were completed. I am quoting here from the Solicitor General:

> The investigation is under way, Mr. Speaker, and as soon as we have the facts, the findings, we will be able to disclose them.

That was precisely what the Solicitor General said and that is what the Prime Minister has referred to.

I said in the House yesterday that I found out subsequent to my office advising the RCMP. It was later in that afternoon.

Ms. Copps: What time now?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It was after Question Period but it was later in that afternoon. I can't give the Hon. Member the precise time.

Ms. Copps: Why not?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I made reference yesterday to the fact that I couldn't give him the precise time.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Budget had already been tabled.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It was before 5.40 when I stood up to comment on the Budget that had been presented the night before.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I would suggest to the House that it is incredible the Minister of Finance wouldn't have been told immediately by his office about a second leak of the Budget.

Mr. Andre: He did not know there was a second leak.

[Translation]

REQUEST AS TO WHEN MINISTER INFORMED THE PRIME MINISTER OF SECOND LEAK

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): In any event, the Minister did not answer my question. He said that his office found out about the second leak at 1.30 p.m. on April 27. An hour and a half later here in the House, the Prime Minister, who was right next to the Finance Minister, said that if he obtained further information, he would tell the House. When the Prime Minister made that statement, at three o'clock, did he know that there was further information? Can the Finance Minister tell us and Canadians when he informed the Prime Minister of the second leak, of which his office had been informed an hour and a half before the Prime Minister's statement?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I made it quite clear that my office knew at 1.30. I found out later in that afternoon.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): When?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Government knew of this.

Mr. Mazankowski: Well, he just told you.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I answered that question about two minutes ago.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): When did you know?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I said I can't be precise about the time.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is incredible.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It was after Question Period that day. The Government was aware of this information. The Government in the broadest sense was aware of this information prior to my standing up to present my budget statement later on that afternoon.

POSITION OF DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister and it also concerns the leaky Budget and refers to the second leak.

In referring to the second leak, the Deputy Prime Minister said in the House of Commons on May 18, and I quote:

> What we have here is the Opposition basing their questions on information that was contained in a CBC report which alleges that employees of an unnamed company somewhere in Canada had budget information.

Given that the Minister of Finance and the RCMP were aware since April 27 that the unnamed company in question was an $11 billion financial institution, that there had been five copies of the Budget in the public domain prior to the Budget being tabled in the House of Commons, and that the Minister of Finance knew about it at the time that he presented the Budget in the House of Commons, why did the Deputy Prime Minister not find out about these facts, or did he find out about the facts and simply not tell the House of Commons?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Government was aware of only one leak which triggered the premature release of the Budget on Wednesday night, April 26. It was on that basis that the Minister of Finance took the necessary actions that he did. The matter was turned over to the RCMP. We contacted the opposition party Leaders and asked if they would consider convening the House on an emergency basis so that this could be presented.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You are caught dead.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Budget was presented on Wednesday, April 26. It was released to the Canadian people—

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Answer the question.

Mr. Mazankowski: —in all of its detail, and it was on the basis of the one documented leak which was seen on television by everyone.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I asked what the Deputy Prime Minister knew on May 18, not April 26.

THE SECOND BUDGET LEAK—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of Finance. On May 23, the Minister of Finance said in the House, and I quote:

> The first leak was a fact. It was there on television. It was there in black and white. Everything else has been an allegation.

Considering the fact the Minister knew all the details of the second leak 26 days before, why didn't he tell the House the truth on May 23 or before then?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I made that distinction very clearly. In this House, in public, I can talk about only those things that are patently in the public domain.

Ms. Copps: That are on TV.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): In other words, the matter related to the Global Television program.

Ms. Copps: If it isn't on TV, it isn't real.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Until the Mutual Life brings their information into the public domain I am constrained from doing so according to a long-standing practice.

Ms. Copps: Government by Global.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, let me quote, if I can from Hansard of September 24, 1968, when the Leader of the Opposition was Minister of Justice:

> —I might say that investigations into suspected unlawful activity are continuously being carried on by the RCMP and by other investigatory bodies, but in the absence of charges being preferred it would not be proper nor would it be in the public interest to make the results of such investigations a matter of public record.

That was the principle in 1968. It has been restated on many occasions since then. That is precisely the same principle that we are following and that constrained me from referring on the floor of this House of Commons to the Mutual Life event until the people from Mutual Life came public with that themselves.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

QUERY AS TO DIFFERENT HANDLING OF TWO BUDGET LEAKS—EXPLANATION BY MINISTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and I preface it simply by saying that during the Sinclair Stevens affair, the Prime Minister, during the course of an RCMP investigation, commented in the House not once but a number of times and did so totally appropriately.

After the Minister of Finance discovered the Budget leak on April 26, he deemed it to be of such significance and importance, and he was correct, that he rose on a question of privilege in the House on April 27, even though an RCMP investigation had been launched the previous day. He rose in the House and talked about that Budget leak. He knew on the afternoon of April 27 that there had been another such leak, and he repeated today that he was aware of that. Even if there had been a simultaneous RCMP investigation launched in that case, why did he not report back immediately, at least at 5 p.m. when he gave the Budget address, on that Budget leak in the way he thought it was appropriate to do the morning of that day regarding the Budget leak of the night before?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it was a matter of wide public knowledge that there was a leak that was reported on Global Television that night. The reporter for Global Television held up a copy of the Budget in Brief and read from it. That was widely known by the general public. I can comment on the public aspects of that particular incident. I am not able to comment on other aspects that come to our attention later, that are not in the public domain, until those involved bring those matters into the public domain. Even at that stage, I have to be very careful, as do other Ministers, about what we say on those matters, as long as a police investigation is ongoing.

DEGREE OF PUBLIC KNOWLEDGE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that according to Parliamentary tradition in this country and elsewhere, the argument he has just made is totally, I repeat, totally bogus. The Minister has just said in the case of the evening leak, it was widely known. It is not a question of degree, whether it is widely known or not, it is a question of whether it is in the public domain or not, and both of them were in the public domain.

I want the Minister to answer again, without using that bogus argument, since he had the head of a reputable insurance company contact his office, and since the RCMP had been informed. He said it was the same summary of the Budget that had previously been on television. In short, the Government knew he had the information. It was not an alleged leak, it was a real leak. Why did the Minister of Finance, whose integrity is essential, try to cover this up instead of speaking frankly to the people of Canada and to Parliament?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me be very, very clear on this. The matter that was on the Global Television Network the night before was clearly widely known. It was not widely known, in fact it was known by a very limited number of people, that there was a leak to Mutual Life. When we found out about that leak, I believe we did the proper thing. We ensured that the RCMP were aware of this and included it in their investigation, but since that was not public knowledge that the material was in the hands of Mutual Life, we cannot make public comment on that. Perhaps I can quote again the Hon. Member for York Centre who, on April 28, 1983, in answer to a question about an investigation, said:

> —I have no intention of answering it. I am surprised that the Hon. Member is asking questions and making allegations which might prevent a fair trial from taking place in the event that a decision to lay charges is reached by the RCMP. I would ask him to respect the well established tradition of allowing the investigations to proceed on their own, without the direction or allegation or suggestion or improvisations of the Hon. Member.

That is precisely the principle that we on this side must follow, and if the Hon. Member thought this through carefully, he would understand precisely why that must be the case.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Minister should feel very, very reassured by this applause because the same Members of his caucus did precisely that for Sinclair Stevens a few years ago.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa will please put his question.

Mr. Andre: Stick to the truth for one question, Ed. Try one question with the truth, just one.

An Hon. Member: How would you know? Shut up and let him ask his question.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

[Translation]

REQUEST AS TO WHY MINISTER HAS NOT RESIGNED

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my last question for the Minister is as follows: Now we know that on April 27, when the Minister was making his Budget speech, he was aware of a second leak. However, during the speech he suggested to Canadians that there had been only one leak. In other words, he misled the House. And that is entirely unacceptable.

Why didn't the Minister resign? That is the question.

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party referred to when I stood up to make my Budget speech. I would remind him that my Budget speech was made the night before. The Budget was presented to the public the night before. This was in the public domain at that time. I remind him that when I rose in the House at I believe 5.40 on Thursday evening, I made summary comments referring to the various aspects of the Budget itself, but the purpose of that was to initiate the parliamentary process. The Budget speech had been presented the night before. When he says that I misled the House in a statement I made on Thursday, April 27, I would like him to show me where I misled the House, because the speech was entirely on the Budget itself.

QUERY AS TO OTHER MINISTERS INFORMED

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. On April 27, on page 1034 of Hansard, the Minister of Finance said in response to a question regarding the Global Television leak the following:

> When I found out the information, I first called the Prime Minister, I then called the Government House Leader and the Deputy Prime Minister and advised them of this.

That was in reference to the Global Television leak. Will the Minister of Finance now tell the House of Commons whether he immediately informed the Prime Minister, the Deputy Prime Minister and Government House Leader of the second leak to the Mutual Life Insurance Company, an $11 billion financial institution? In other words, when the Minister decided to withhold information from the Parliament of Canada and from the people of Canada, was he acting alone, or was he acting with the advice and consent of the Prime Minister, the Deputy Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice?

• (1440)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question in response to another question from the Leader of the Opposition—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You have not answered it.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —that the Government was aware of this information. The Government, in the broadest sense, was aware of this information some time between Question Period and 5.40 that evening.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance refuses to answer the specific question. Either the Minister of Finance fails to understand or refuses to acknowledge that what is at stake today is not the contents of the Budget, not the Budget leak or even the investigation of the Budget. Those questions are important, but what is really at stake is the ability of Parliament and Canadians to continue to trust the Minister of Finance. An American President was not destroyed because of a bungled burglary. He was destroyed because he did not tell the whole truth.

I ask the Minister of Finance, does he not agree that the only way in which necessary confidence can be restored to the office of the Minister of Finance is if he vacates that office immediately?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we are going from the sublime to the ridiculous. Hon. Members opposite should make up their minds. The Opposition Parties walked out when the Minister of Finance rose to present and table the Budget documents. They just simply assumed, by walking out, that the Budget had been presented the night before, and that was not the speech that he made. You cannot have it both ways, my friends. You cannot have it both ways.

ALLEGATION OF SELECTIVE SECRECY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. I was quoted earlier about an issue that took place in 1983 regarding what a Minister should say or what comment he should make about an ongoing police investigation, and that is a tradition that is designed to protect the privacy of an individual who might or might not be charged. That is not what is happening in this case. That is what I want to ask the Solicitor General about. In this case there is not a refusal to give information. What there is in this case is a selective leaking of information on a selective basis designed to protect the Government. The Government is giving us the information that it wants, to create the impression that the leak is very minimal, that no one has profited—

Mr. Speaker: Will the Hon. Member please put his question?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Solicitor General this: The Mounties learned from the President of Mutual Life at 1.30 p.m. about the leak. When did the Solicitor General learn, and did he at that point advise the Minister of Finance that this information should be made public?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, since the Hon. Member will not accept his own statements in the House relative to this kind of situation, maybe we should refer to Mr. Jean-Jacques Blais when he was Solicitor General. This is what he had to say in commenting on the same situation. This was on February 2, 1979.

> Mr. Speaker, surely the hon. gentleman knows the reason why the replies I have furnished to him tend to be noncommittal; the investigations are ongoing. The hon. gentleman knows full well any comment that may be made by me or by him in any context which would tend to interfere with those investigations would be subject to serious review.

That is the position.

MATERIAL INFORMATION WITHHELD CONCERNING BUDGET LEAK

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Deputy Prime Minister. Is it not obvious that during the afternoon, preparing for the delivery of the Budget in the House on the 27th, a calculated decision was made by this Government to withhold material information from the Canadian people about the extent of the leak of this Budget and the possible profiteering, about which the Government had no assurance at that point?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I am also surprised that a former solicitor general should ask this kind of question. He ought to know that in order to protect witnesses and the reputation of all persons involved in an investigation, as everyone knows, we cannot publish the reports we receive from time to time in the course of an investigation. It would not make sense for the RCMP to reveal every inch of its investigations. The Hon. Member, who was solicitor general for some time, knows this perfectly well, Mr. Speaker. And in fact it has been a long-standing tradition in this House.

[English]

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY TO PARLIAMENT

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In light of the fact that the Government has been hiding behind the stone wall of an ongoing police investigation in relation to the second Budget leak, my question has nothing to do with that. In this House I am not interested in the police investigation. What I am interested in is the Minister's behaviour in terms of his responsibility to Parliament as a Minister of the Crown.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: Given that sense of responsibility to Parliament and to the people of Canada, why did the Minister not come clean with Parliament and tell us that in fact 20 people in three cities across this country had the information many days before the Budget was leaked to Doug Small?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is making comments about things that I do not think he knows anything about. It is precisely—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It is precisely because of this type of allegation that it is quite improper for people to make these comments in the House until an investigation is completed and these allegations can either be confirmed or denied. That is the long-standing tradition in the House, and that is the tradition that we must follow.

REQUEST THAT INFORMATION BE SHARED

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Possibly, Mr. Speaker, if the Minister had taken us into his confidence, we would know and we would not be asking what he considers to be questions that we do not have information about.

In light of the fact that during the time Sinclair Stevens questions were being asked in this House, an RCMP investigation was ongoing but we asked questions and the Prime Minister responded in this House. What is so different now? Why does the Finance Minister not get up and share the information? Why did he not do that when he had the information and he had Parliament willing to listen to what he had to say?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am advised, contrary to what the Hon. Member has just said, or contrary to what his Leader said a few minutes ago, that the RCMP Commissioner says there was a public inquiry. There was no RCMP investigations launched in the matter regarding Mr. Sinclair Stevens. The Hon. Member is quite wrong on that, and I think that he should correct the record.

BUDGET SECRECY

ALLEGATION OF DOUBLE STANDARD

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. He stated on April 27 at 11 a.m. that there were two essential considerations underlying Budget secrecy, and I quote from the Minister his own words:

> The need to ensure that a person does not profit or otherwise gain advantage from advance knowledge of the contents of the Budget.

Later that same day, Mr. Speaker, the Minister received information confirming that knowledge of the contents of the Budget had been released to an $11 billion corporate entity two days before being presented to Parliament. I want to ask the Minister of Finance, why the different standards? At 11 in the morning, Budget secrecy was paramount, but in the afternoon, when the Minister became seized of the issue and its ramifications, it no longer became paramount. Why the double standard? Why is the Minister misleading this House?

• (1450)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in the House the Hon. Member stated that I was participating willingly in a cover-up to mislead Parliament. As long as the Member is going to leave that matter on the record, I am not going to answer a question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TWO STANDARDS QUESTIONED

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. The Minister will realize—

Mr. Andre: Come on, Mr. Speaker, who is in charge here?

Mr. Speaker: I think I should advise the House that at 11 o'clock this morning the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond withdrew the remarks he made yesterday.

Mr. Dingwall: Will the Minister of Finance now stand in his place and explain to the people of Canada and to Parliament why two standards: one for everyone else and one for him? Why the two standards?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I apologize. I was not aware of the comments that were made earlier today by the Hon. Member, and I accept his withdrawal.

With respect to the question, are there two standards, let me repeat that at 11 o'clock we were aware of one piece of information that was in the public domain on Global Television the night before. At 11 o'clock that was the information that I was aware of.

Later on that day, as I have indicated, we became aware of the statements by Mutual Life to my office. But those were a matter for the RCMP to review and investigate. Until those matters are investigated by the RCMP, it is not possible for me to comment, without undermining the investigative process of the RCMP or the possible fair trial, if such a matter does come to a trial. That is the precise reason why we are not able to make those comments.

ALLEGATION THAT TAINTED BUDGET WAS PRESENTED TO PARLIAMENT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the Minister received information on Thursday which proved that the Budget was in the hands of an $11-billion corporate entity one day before it got to Global Television. Since this was known by the Minister, why did he not follow his own rule as set out on April 27 at 11 a.m. and pull the Budget to ensure that no Canadian citizen and no corporation would receive an advantage?

Why did the Minister of Finance knowingly present to Parliament a tainted Budget?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Budget had been presented to the Canadian public at around 10 o'clock or 11 o'clock the previous evening. It had been the subject of many decisions on the part of people in the private sector throughout the course of that day, throughout the course of Thursday, April 27.

It would have been quite improper, in my judgment, to have withdrawn that Budget because many people, if they had taken decisions based on the Budget, could have been disadvantaged. I believe it would have been quite disruptive and quite improper for us to do so.

HOUSING

RELEASE OF LANDS FOR HOUSING PURPOSES

Mr. Garth Turner (Halton—Peel): Mr. Speaker, while one would not know it in the Chamber today, there are millions of Canadians who could not care less about the Budget leak.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Halton—Peel): My question is directed to the Minister of State for Housing.

As the Minister knows, there is a housing affordability crisis in many cities of the country. Several months ago the Government announced that it would be releasing lands in the Downsview site. I have not heard very much about the development of those lands.

Would the Minister of State for Housing tell us exactly when we can expect some housing to come on stream?

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, if we asked Canadians what issues should be discussed in the House, we would find that housing would rank much higher than most of the issues discussed here today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Redway: Last fall, 135 acres of the Downsview lands were turned over to CMHC to develop affordable housing for Canadians. We are proceeding at the moment. We have appointed a project manager, we are choosing a planner for the site and we are presenting a plan to the City of North York.

When and if the City of North York is prepared to approve that plan, which will be a plan for affordable social housing and also for first-time home buyers' housing, then we will certainly have some housing on this site and have it fast.

THE BUDGET

SOLICITOR GENERAL TO PROVIDE NEW INFORMATION—PROMISE BY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. On April 27, following the Global Budget leak, the Prime Minister provided the House with his assurance that any new information about Budget leaks would immediately be conveyed to the House by the Solicitor General.

It has now been 28 days and the Solicitor General has provided us with absolutely no information, while we continue to receive information periodically from the media, from newspapers, radio, and television. We continue to get our facts from those sources, not from the Solicitor General.

The only inference I can draw—

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question, please.

Mr. Lee: When is the Solicitor General going to provide the House with this information, or is he going to continue to let the Press Gallery do his work for him?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I don't know whether the Hon. Member was in the House yesterday when I clearly explained our Government's position. As I said on April 27, and I will recite exactly what I said at the time:

> The investigation is under way, Mr. Speaker, and as soon as we have the facts, the findings, we will be able to disclose them.

It's in Hansard, at page 1032. As I have said many times in this House, the RCMP is continuing its investigation and it would be entirely inappropriate to bring these facts on the floor of the House at this time.

[English]

COMMITMENT SOUGHT FOR INFORMATION BEFORE SEPTEMBER

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Solicitor General. Four weeks ago the Budget leaks occurred, and in four weeks or less I believe the House will rise for the summer recess and will adjourn.

Will the Solicitor General commit himself to providing the House with the Budget leak information we are waiting for now, instead of September? If he and the Finance Minister are planning to stonewall this until September, then the Solicitor General—

Mr. Speaker: I think the Hon. Member has put his question. The Hon. Minister.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I don't think so. In fact, I can inform the Hon. Member right now that the RCMP will not interrupt its investigation during the Hon. Member's summer holidays.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MEMBER FOR CHAMBLY

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister in the absence of the Prime Minister. It is also about honesty and integrity in Government. It concerns the response of the Conservative Government to Tuesday's guilty plea to charges of fraud and corruption by the Member of Parliament for Chambly.

Does the Deputy Prime Minister agree with the views of his Conservative colleagues who have defended this convicted criminal—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: I want to caution the Hon. Member that the Hon. Member to whom he has referred is an independent at the moment, and unless the question goes to the root of some government responsibility it may be out of order. However, I will hear the rest of the question.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Deputy Prime Minister, to ask whether the Government's response to this question, and I recognize that we are dealing with an independent Member, is reflected by the position taken by Conservative Members of Parliament, including the Member for Beauce who has said that these are anomalies—

• (1500)

Mr. Speaker: I think the Hon. Member is straying too far. The Government may want to respond.

The Hon. Member for Burnaby—Kingsway may want to put his question in another way, and I will listen to the question.

Mr. Robinson: I am sorry that I cannot ask a question about honesty and integrity on that side of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Andre: Come on!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member.

THE BUDGET

REQUEST AS TO WHY DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER DID NOT ASK FOR THE RESIGNATION OF MINISTER

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. It is now perfectly clear that when the Minister of Finance made his speech at five o'clock on April 27, he was well aware that his Budget had been leaked more than once. According to parliamentary tradition, he should not have tabled it. He should have resigned then and there. I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister, who is an experienced parliamentarian well-versed in parliamentary tradition, why, when he realized this, he did not ask his fellow minister to resign?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as has been indicated earlier, and as I am sure the Hon. Member understands, the Budget was delivered on the night of April 26. When the Minister came into the House on Thursday, April 27, at 5.40, he merely tabled the documents so that it would start the legislative process. He made some comments, a summary of the contents of the Budget.

The Opposition vacated the House because they said it was a phoney Budget, that it was not a Budget. The speech was delivered the night before. They accepted it then. Why do they not accept it today?

I am satisfied that the Minister of Finance, given the circumstances, discharged his duties in a proper and honourable fashion. He did what was necessary. He sought the co-operation of the opposition Parties to summon the House back so he could present his Budget on Wednesday evening to the House of Commons. That was denied. He chose the only honourable course. He released the Budget on Wednesday night and everyone in Canada knew what the contents were. What he was doing on Thursday was simply going through the proforma routine to trigger the legislative process.

CABINET POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister just admitted in this House that not only did the Minister of Finance know there had been more than one Budget leak, the whole Government, the whole Cabinet was part and parcel of this unparliamentary and absolutely unprecedented action, which was to bring down a Budget that was already in the public domain, thereby possibly condoning that individuals who had obtained privileged information prior to the Budget speech were able to take advantage of that information. Is the Deputy Prime Minister prepared to run the risk of informing this House that the entire Cabinet preferred to save the skin of the Minister of Finance instead of respecting the integrity and traditions of Parliament?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, that is basically a repetition of the same question. When the information about a leak on Global Television was made obvious, the Minister of Finance took appropriate action: First, by ensuring that the RCMP conducted a full investigation; and second, by soliciting the support and co-operation of the opposition Parties so that the House could be called back to present the Budget.

That co-operation, for reasons known only to the opposition Parties, was not forthcoming. He chose the only option he had available. He released the Budget to the public on Wednesday night. There are precedents for this. In the days of Finance Minister Abbott, he made a budget speech over radio and then came into the House and proceeded with the legislation. This is not unusual.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Government House Leader for a statement of the business he intends to call for the coming week.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we will deal with Bill C-10, the debt forgiveness Bill and Bill S-2, the double taxation Bill, both at second reading. If there is time we will move on to Bill C-9, the Bill affecting the Bank Act.

Monday, May 29, will be an allotted day and on Tuesday, May 30, we will continue with second reading of Bill C-9, the Bank Act.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY, SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Wednesday, May 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. Mulroney that Bill C-3, and Act to establish the Department of Industry, Science and Technology, to repeal the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion Act and to make consequential amendments to other Acts, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and on the amendment of Mr. Langdon:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor;

"this House declines to give second reading to Bill C-3 because it fails to clearly define federal government responsibility for regional development, and specifically fails to reflect the requirement under s. 36(1)(b) of the Constitution Act, 1982, that Parliament is committed to 'furthering economic development to reduce disparity in opportunities' ".

Mr. Speaker: It being three o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 45(5)(a) the House will now proceed to the taking of the deferred division on the amendment to the motion for second reading and reference to a legislative committee of Bill C-3, an Act to establish the Department of Industry, Science and Technology.

Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Langdon), which was negatived on the following division.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I declare the motion carried.

Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

MUSEUMS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C–12, an Act respecting museums, be read a second time and referred to a Legislative Committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair is only waiting for the House to calm down before recognizing the Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mrs. Gibeau) who had the floor when the House took recess at 1 p.m.

Mrs. Marie Gibeau (Bourassa): Madam Speaker, I shall continue, by saying that from the moment the original National Museums Act was adopted in 1968 through the implementation in 1972 of the relevant national policy, we had come a long way in recognizing the important role of government in this area.

After 21 years, the Act needed some adjustments to give us the opportunity to better meet today's challenges. As a matter of fact, it is because of the major impact these institutions have on our society that in January 1986 the Richard–Withrow task force was set up to look into our policy in that area. It is therefore after extensive consultations with specialized institutions and interested Government agencies, and after a review of the recommendations by the Standing Committee on Communication, Culture, Citizenship and Multiculturalism that this bill respecting museums was drafted.

On the one hand this bill provides for a more comprehensive political framework of operation and on the other hand it gives to the four museums under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Government greater autonomy. In line with the task force, recommendations September 1986 the bill grants Crown corporation status to the following institutions: The National Gallery of Canada, which includes the Canadian Museum of Contemporary Photography; the Canadian Museum of Civilization, which includes the Canadian War Museum; the Canadian Museum of Nature; and the National Museum of Science and Technology, which includes the National Aviation Museum.

Granting Crown corporation status to our museums will increase their administrative flexibility, while taking into account the individual history of each of these institutions and the specific nature of their collections.

In keeping with recommendations made by the study group and the Standing Committee on Communications, Culture, Citizenship and Multiculturalism, the legislation provides that each of these museums is to be a Crown corporation; this confirms their public responsibility with respect to cultural matters and gives them operating independence to reach full development. Each organization will thus be able to assert its museographic and museologic role more forcefully. They will also seek different objectives which reflect their individual character.

Madam Speaker, this new legislation aimed at creating museums which will be better prepared to serve Canadians establishes the following organization structure.

• (1540)

First, a hierarchic framework which defines the responsibilities of each decision–making level. To that extent, each museum assumes its responsibilities but comes under a board of directors which reports to the Minister responsible to Parliament.

Second, the appointment of active board members who will establish a credible link between the hierarchic framework of responsibility of each organization and of the Government.

Finally, the board of directors of each museum is empowered to set a course of action which is consistent with its specificity, with reference to the over–all Governement cultural policy. This course of action will be in accordance with the rules and procedures of a cultural agency, but the Government will not interfere with its daily operations.

The new act also provides that they will not restrict their activities to the National capital area. They will be encouraged to develop their program of travelling exhibitions, artefact loans and professional service exchanges with the overall museum community. This will become a vital aspect in assessing their yearly corporate plan.

This structural change is significant, because the four new Crown corporations will be subject to part 10 of the Financial administration Act, while until now they were subject to the same financial requirements as Government departments. However, in order to respect the principle of administrative autonomy that should prevail in the case of Crown corporations with a cultural mandate, the measure establishes a special relationship between them and the Government, by providing that cultural activities, including the acquisition, maintenance, conservation and use of museum material are not subject to ministerial control. Neither are public–oriented activities and programs such as exhibitions and publications.

Each museum will be responsible for its own staff. Under part three of the Bill, and after consultation with labour unions and orgnizations involved, transitional provisions ensure that staff are transfered from the current system to that of the Canada Labour Code, while remaining subject to the Public Service Superanuation Act.

This measure recognizes and encourages the essential role of the four new Crown corporations in cultural matters. Our intent is to give more emphasis to the social mandate of museums in Canada in the context of the future pointed to by their recent developments, so much so that they play a significant social role in this country and have become a source of pride throughout the community.

Since the inception of a geological commission in Canada, in 1842, which was to lead to the establishment of the National museum of Canada, the erection of the new architecture of the National Gallery of Canada, and that of the Canadian museum of Civilizations and the National Aviation Museum, a long scientific and technological process has endowed our institutions with rich collections and professionalized the services rendered to the community.

In that respect, they remain the gardians of our heritage and their function is to gather and classify art collections, heritage objects and techniques and scientific specimens. A number are research institutions that help widen our knowledge in various scientific fields. But it is through the dissimination of that knowledge that museums are essential tools in shaping our Canadian identity. Therefore, through their collections and knowledge, they are also in many respects new places of learning, which puts them among social institutions of the future. Because they are not subject to a specific program, they have the flexibility to reach a number of publics through various modes of communication and learning and also to impact on all age groups in our society.

Since they are appropriate venues for recreation and culture, museums are entertainment centres that can provide a recreational dimension without neglecting their educational role in Canadian society. We know that they can now compete economically with other recreational destinations and focus public attention very effectively. A balance should therefore be sought between expanding their audience and maintaining the fundamental role we described earlier.

Madam Speaker, that is why government and museums must work together to provide a satisfactory framework for collecting, preserving, interpreting and enhancing collections that are representative of our Canadian and world heritage, for the benefit of present and future generations.

By tabling this legislation, we are providing the government and all Canadians with a cultural instrument that is effective, better adapted to present-day reality and better suited to the fundamental role society expects it to play. These museums will therefore be entering a new development phase in which they will be able to pursue their objectives, which are to preserve, to do research, to circulate and to educate, in terms of their specific mission and the responsibility they now have to the public under this legislation.

We are thus discharging our responsibility as defenders of our Canadian heritage and offering Canadian society the necessary tools to become acquainted with its own culture and that of other civilizations. These four new Crown corporations will be much-needed partners in developing, with the museum community, the cultural policies of the future.

[English]

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to speak to Bill C-12, an Act respecting museums. The purpose of this Bill is to dismantle the National Museums of Canada Corporation. May I assure Hon. Members that this decision was not lightly taken.

Under this Bill, the individual responsibilities of each board will be clearly outlined and their mission clearly defined. The effectiveness of the seven national museums' goals will be enhanced in great measure and it will be to everyone's advantage. The changes are designed to allow the national museums to serve all Canadians better. The responsibility, authority and accountability of the directors of the National Gallery of Canada, the National Museum of Science and Technology, the Canadian Museum of Civilization, the Canadian Museum of Nature as well as those three museums which fall under their mandate will be increased.

I believe that Bill C-12 is a living testament to the spirit of parliamentary reform. The process of a task force study followed by the Standing Committee on Communication and Culture's review which acted upon a consensus provided very sound advice to the Government. At this time, I would like to pay tribute to the Parliamentary Secretary who is sitting in the House at this time. He chaired the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture and worked very hard to enable a sense of commitment and consensus to emerge. I believe this allowed for a team response in the interests of the cultural communities of Canada. I take my hat off to the Hon. Member. I only wish that the new Standing Committee will learn from this experience.

As a result, we have before us a Bill that has been thoughtfully prepared. It was arrived at through consultation and consensus building. I hope that it will serve Canada's national museums well, and I trust it will serve as an important example of a solid, valuable process that will continue in this Parliament. From a management perspective, I believe we will be better served. Certainly architecturally, we will be better served. We have been enriched. Our cultural and collective heritage will be better housed, protected and displayed in the magnificent National Gallery in its new glass home, the exciting, expansive and yet to be unveiled Canadian Museum of Civilization, the dynamic mind-expanding Museum of Science and Technology and of Nature, the up and coming Museum of Contemporary Photography as well as the new modern home of National Aviation Museum.

The Canadian War Museum has been neglected, and I hope, will be attended to in the near future.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, a people that is ignorant of its history and heritage cannot, in my humble opinion, fully assume its national identity. Granted, in this century of instant communication, when the day's events, whether they occur in Peking, Moscow or Montreal, are all projected on our television screens often live, we often have the impression that technology has taken the place of memory. However, that is certainly not the case for everyone. As in other areas, there is an increasing tendency to go back to the grass roots of our collective memory. Last year, more than 20 million people visited Canada's 846 museums. Now that is impressive! We think of the National Gallery of Canada, a truly brillant example of our Canadian cultural heritage, and the immense success it has enjoyed since its official opening.

I am sure that the soon to be opened Canadian Museum of Civilization will add a new dimension to our cultural network. Generations of Canadians will be grateful to Prime Minister Trudeau for having the necessary vision and determination to give this country these two masterpieces, the National Gallery of Canada and the Canadian Museum of Civilization.

What also impresses me, however, is the fact that 60 per cent of Canadian museums are quite small and spread out over this vast country of ours. I wanted to mention this aspect, Madam Speaker, because it is essential if we want to ensure that our natural and cultural heritage is accessible to all Canadians and that Canada's regional and cultural diversities are adequately represented.

In the Bill before the House today, we are basically dealing with seven large museums which are the backbone, as it were, of our Canadian museum system. The National Gallery of Canada, the Canadian Museum of Civilization, the Canadian Museum of Nature, the National Museum of Science and Technology, the Canadian Museum of Contemporary Photography, the National Aviation Museum and the Canadian War Museum, as a group, provide a network of information, helping us to understand the development of the universe and its inhabitants, from prehistoric times to the space age.

There is no doubt in my mind that in addition to preserving our natural and cultural heritage, museums remain an important link between generations, because they explain the past and project the future of the cultural mosaic that is Canada.

[English]

I would like to deal with some background, Madam Speaker. What were the issues that led to this Bill about our National Museums of Canada Corporation? I think it is important to focus on the question. We need to understand how it became a worth-while goal to amalgamate these autonomous museums and through that amalgamation the shared use of administrative and financial services. There is a common thought today that bigger is better rather than small is beautiful. This amalgamation make it possible to pool scarce resources and to avoid duplication. These centralized services were to reduce the burden of housekeeping for the four museums and to provide more cost-efficient services.

Furthermore, to those sponsoring the legislation, the combining of four separate institutions and the three subsidiary ones was thought to be more desirable since the resulting single museum corporation was likely to be more forceful in its dealings with the Government. While on paper it appeared to be a more effective structure, the system in practice was too heavy, inefficient, costly and some would say overly bureaucratized.

While the national museums are similar in that they collect, study and exhibit objects and are owned by the federal Government, that is where the similarities end. The museums actually collect and exhibit very different kinds of museum objects from different kinds of disciplines. These really need to be better focused and their efforts need to be better directed in order to get the best response for all our Canadian citizens. What was originally felt to be in the public's best interest led to much loss of autonomy and conflicting priorities. With this ambiguity over lines of authority, the situation basically became unworkable.

In January of 1986 the Government appointed a task force charged with examining the federal policy concerning museums which reported back in September of 1986. The principal recommendation of that task force was the repeal of the National Museums Act of 1968 and the dismantling of the corporation. This was to be followed by new legislation to establish each of the four major federal museums as administratively autonomous, free-standing institutions.

The task force also recommended a restructuring of the museums assistance programs, the principal means of providing grants to museums outside of Ottawa. There is a world outside of this National Capital Region, as we all know.

The assistance programs were to fall under the direct responsibility of the Department of Communications and its Minister and to be administered by an Assistant Deputy Minister upon the advice of an advisory committee.

The Standing Committee of Communications and Culture undertook to review the task force recommendations. A series of most interesting hearings were held during the fall of 1986. Our committee was able, I believe, to hear the varying views from institutions and from individuals that supported many of the task force's recommendations. It enabled us in our January, 1987 report to the House of Commons to be fair and to show consensus along all lines.

On May 21, 1987, the Minister of Communications reported to Parliament that the Government was going to establish these separate national museums, abolish the corporation organization and place the granting programs which serve museums and galleries throughout Canada in the Department of Communications. The task force summed up the corporations' problems well when they wrote, and I quote:

> Its centralization of functions, instead of facilitating the implementation of museum programs, the Corporation has enmeshed them in bureaucratic complexity, so that coping with that, is what consumes and exhausts staffs' energy, relegating creative work to a secondary role.

I was pleased that we moved ahead with this action. While for the most part I find that Bill C-12 is a really good piece of legislation, I would like to make some of the following observations. Let us get down to some of the nitty-gritty part of the second reading for which we have a very serious responsibility to this House as fiduciaries of the people of Canada.

Mr. Boyer: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Finestone: Well, to my hon. colleague who writes all those wonderful books about how this House operates and who is really the master of the process in this House, we could have used your enlightened involvement in the debate which just took place recently. Notwithstanding that, I do respect your opinions in this regard. I forgot to mention the Hon. Member is from the riding of Etobicoke—Lakeshore. We shared the equality task force report. That is a landmark report that I would appreciate adhering to all along the way. Disability week is coming up and we will remember that all over again as we roll with Rick Hansen.

• (1600)

Clause 23 provides for the appointment of a director for each museum by the board of the museum subject to the approval of the Governor in Council. I would have preferred to have seen the model used to appoint a director like that of the National Arts Centre. That appointment is made by the board and is not subject to Governor in Council approval.

When appearing before the Standing Committee on its Estimates the other day, the Secretary General of the corporation stated that the model used in Bill C-12 was not their favourite choice. He said: "It would not have been our original first choice. It is a move in the right direction but one could argue whether it goes as far as it should". I would suggest that in the end he was satisfied with the compromise. I still have to ask, is not the power and responsibility of the board diminished in this way? Can we expect them to act as a responsible body if they do not have the ultimate responsibility? Will not a director feel he must serve two masters? Finally, what is to be achieved by making an appointment subject to Cabinet approval?

The museums' relationship with Government is also of concern to me. For museums to function effectively, they must have the necessary autonomy and arm's-length from Government. The best formula is that recommended in the Applebaum-Hébert Report which stated:

"Large subjective decisions of an aesthetic, artistic, professional, subventionary nature are best taken collegially by a board of directors acting at arm's length from the Government of the day".

I note in Clause 27(1) that the Government cannot give directives to museums regarding:

> (a) the acquisition, disposal, conservation or use of any museum material relevant to its activities;
>
> (b) its activities and programs for the public, including exhibitions, displays and publications; and
> (c) research with respect to the matters referred to in paragraphs (a) and (b).

However, in Clause 27(2) there is to be no interference regarding the content of the by-laws of a museum with respect to its cultural activities. The question to be answered when the Bill goes to legislative committee will be: what is a non-cultural matter? I asked the museum corporations and the general public, if they are interested, to perhaps respond to this particular concern, if it is of concern to them.

Bill C-12 should provide no lesser independence from Government for museums than has already been established for the Canada Council, the CBC, Telefilm Canada, and the National Arts Centre.

The variations in the statements concerning objects, capacity, and powers of the four museums is quite interesting. Each museum essentially contributed to its own mission statements. Generally, the powers are similar, except for the Canadian Museum of Nature, which is the old Canadian Museum of Natural Science, and its well enunciated research mandate that one finds.

For example, the Canadian Museum of Nature is empowered to create new knowledge and synthesize existing knowledge into new patterns and models. It is to provide facilities to permit qualified individuals to use and study collections, to foster the co-ordination of collection-based data in Canada, to promote scientific literacy and a better understanding of nature by demonstrating the inter-relationship among all organisms including human beings and their environment. I find that a creative and a new approach. It defines where we are in today's evolving technology, whether related to museumology or any other aspect of our living, as was pointed out this morning, when we debated the new radio-communications Act.

Through these clauses it would appear that research has been given a more powerful foundation at the Canadian Museum of Nature than at the other museums. With respect to the responsibilities to teach, to train docents, and to give courses, when I asked that question, I was told that Clause 6(1)(e) is found in the mandate of all museums, and is deemed large enough and comprehensive enough for both the museum activity within the museum itself in terms of teaching and training docents as well as it would be for Canada and throughout the world. I hope that the museum community is satisfied with Clause 6(1)(e) which states:

> promote knowledge of and disseminate information about works of art and other museum material in its collection and art in general, throughout Canada and internationally—

It does not state in a city or in-house. I hope it is clear enough to give the mandate I know the museums presume they have and certainly need to have. I wish to bring that to the Minister's attention and perhaps it can be discussed.

I raised another issue during a briefing session with the museum people with respect to the Bill. That related to copyright. I am pleased to see many people who were responsible for the writing and the consultations around this Bill are present in the gallery. Welcome, and thank you for the job that you did.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Finestone: Bill C-12, through each of the museum mandates, provides the power: "to destroy or otherwise dispose of works of art and other museum material in its collection". In discussion with them I brought to their attention the problems that could be confronted under the Copyright Act. I raised concerns about the potential conflict with moral rights in this new copyright Bill that is presently in action. The museum officials have assured us, and I quote the Director General: "that museums will be bound by copyright law, and that any action to destroy would have to be governed by the provisions of the copyright law". Any artists who are worried about destruction of their works of art need not be concerned.

Under Bill C-12 the Canadian War Museum is a submuseum, if I may put it that way, although it should be a full museum in the fullest sense of the word, under the Canadian Museum of Civilization. Concern has been expressed that, by falling under the Canadian Museum of Civilization and not having its own board of directors, it will get lost in the shuffle.

There are also concerns in the military community, particularly among veterans, that the War Museum has been downgraded through its loss to the National Gallery of 6,000 square feet, and an annual acquisitions budget of only $65,000. That is barely enough to keep it alive. This museum has a collection worth more than $500 million. It contains works by a large number of our Canadian Group of Seven artists. Because of a lack of space its holdings are not easily viewed. It is our heritage and contribution to Canada, to Canadians, and to the peace of the world that is hidden away from public view. Much of the collection is rarely seen, but it is worthy of being seen. I hope that something will be done. I also hope the aspiration of the veterans will be met for more recognition for Canada's military history and eventually more exhibition space to display those works of art. It is a worth-while goal and worthy of consideration.

When representatives of the National Museums Corporation appeared before us, I was very interested to hear about the whole question of multiculturalism which we address. I am glad the Minister is present. I hope he will read the transcripts. I think he will be very pleased as his mandate is being performed and outlined as we look at the evolving role of Canadian public policy, as well as the policy of the museums. He said that while the galleries are now very sensitive to aboriginal art and the history of our nations, and while our primary reliance on references in the legislation is to Canadian culture, it encompasses the whole spectrum of multiculturalism as experienced within Canada. I like that answer. The Secretary General went on to say: "I believe there is a strong commitment to exhibiting in a substantive way the multiculturalism richness of this country". We were pleased to have this confirmed through the director of the Canadian Museum of Civilization, Dr. George Macdonald, who outlined rather elaborate plans.

I believe it is important that the multicultural community knows about these plans, so I am pleased that the Member for Saint-Laurent (Mrs. Maheu) received very explicit answers for us to be able to share with the House today as we celebrate our approach to the realization of the new museums mandates. We are seeing Museums being responsible for showing all the cultures of this country, in all their richness and variety, and in all of their Canadian diversity and dimensions. We were very pleased to read the five-point program outlined by the Museum of Civilization.

The establishment of five different exhibits, ranging from a children's museum to the electronic exhibit, is very exciting. I hope this commitment is not impeded by the Government's attempts to cut back. It is so concerned about the deficit that it forgets that culture is part of life. It cannot cut everything down to the size of a deficit. I hope this commitment will add to our understanding of Canada's evolving multicultural heritage. I quote Mr. Macdonald who explained:

> First of all, there is the special exhibit that we will have on the Chinese in Canada as our first focus on a group from outside of Canada who brought a rich cultural heritage. This will open on June 29. We have involved Chinese communities right across the country in this exhibit.

The exhibit belongs to them as well as to us, and can be shared by everyone. He went on to say that they will come to Ottawa or send their representatives from their communities. The museum will also prepare for when the show travels across the country so that those residents in each area will be familiar with the exhibit. They can begin to involve members of their community and interface between their community and the broader community, using the exhibit as a doorway between their cultural heritage and the Canadian culture in general.

I hope this type of activity will be taken up by many other cultural communities who have come here to enrich Canada and provide the foundation that makes up the colourful and glowing tapestry of this country.

We have been producing material for the networks and television programs that are increasingly carried on the cable systems, servicing different language groups across the country. The fact that more than 200 hours of interviews have been filmed with the Chinese community is a very exciting and creative approach which I certainly hope will help increase our community understanding more. They have an equal amount of material on dance in the different ethnic cultures.

They are also developing concepts for exhibits in children's museums which will emphasize children reaching out to children. If our children can destroy those stereotypes that are often passed along subconsciously in the environment in which they live, we will live in a healthier Canadian society.

They have also developed the first in what I hope will be a series of films on the civilization of mankind. The first film is entitled "The First Emperor of China". It is a joint production with the National Film Board in the celebration of its fiftieth anniversary. This film has great potential both economically and technologically, and will be sold around the world. We can be very proud of what the museums are accomplishing through their very confident staff.

When we begin using the electronic highways in this creative way, we can cross the world with much greater ease and certainly cross the boundaries of Canada to display our ancestral home as well as our chosen home. This new creative approach is very exciting and dynamic.

I want to deal with the question of acquisitions. Our national museums have very shallow root systems. We have never had the great private collections or fortunes which created European and American museums. We did not get started in the second half of the 19th century when the museum movement hit its stride in those countries.

Objects are now so dear that it is utterly out of the question that we should be able to get sums of money that would get us anything that is worth while. Fortunately, that has not been the case, although we have been very lucky with some donors. It is clear that we have been quite successful in obtaining many valuable collections from some of our Canadian patrons of the art. However, this was with very limited Government resources, resources that unfortunately have not increased in many years.

The Cultural Property Review Act has provided not only our national museums but museums and galleries across the country, through tax benefits, a valuable method of acquiring art. However, massive increases in the value of works of art mean that there exists in this country numerous major works of art whose current market value would trigger tax benefits on gifting far greater than the owner can use even with the five year carry forward provision of certification.

While the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is so debt reduction conscious, it would be worth-while for him to give serious consideration to some action to allow a cultural enrichment approach in planning the Budget, and to balance our Canadian collective heritage with that of reducing the public debt. I suggest that our collective memories will stay much longer than the Minister of Finance.

It will be impossible for any public institution to acquire the works of art of this quality that we are missing if we do not do something about making gifts and bequests easier for the owners and Canadians to give to Canada.

I remind the House that it was under the Government's management two years ago that a major painting by Gustav Klint was lost to Canada because no museum could come up with the $2 million required to match the generous offer of the Cultural Property Review Board. This situation could have been avoided. This stingy short-sightedness has deprived our country of a few very valuable pieces of collective remembrance.

There is a concern over the Museum Assistance Program, the Canadian Conservation Institute and the Canadian Heritage Information Network Program. When the plan to dismantle the National Museums Corporation of Canada was announced, the previous Minister announced the devolution of these programs, and they were to fall under the Department of Communications. The Government also discontinued the museumobile program. The $2 million from the museumobile program was to be added to the Museum Assistance Program. This commitment has not been put into effect despite repeated requests from the Canadian museum community.

The program was created in 1972 to help museums and galleries across the country improve their standards so that they may receive better, more interesting exhibits. Money had been used to upgrade exhibit space, humidity and temperature control, security, loading and unloading areas, workshops space, fire prevention systems, supplies and equipment. This program has been of great assistance to Canada's nearly 2,000 museums but unfortunately the $8 million allocation has not increased in 17 years, since 1972. We are all guilty of this neglect.

The Canadian Conservation Institute has ongoing facilities. The Canadian Heritage Information Network, with a little bit of foresight and money, could become a very important financing vehicle as it can self-finance and be sold across the world. The idea of an inventory of all heritage artifacts and artistic objects for all museums is an exciting idea.

• (1620)

I suggest that much is left to be done. There is a very dynamic and exciting project for museums outside the National Capital Region. We have a document that needs to be addressed. I hope that it is put into place shortly. We need to assure all Canadians that we are aware of their existence.

I find it rather ironic as I conclude my remarks that we are addressing the future of our national museums and their collections and yet we have not given the kind of attention to that group which makes much of this possible. I refer to our artists.

The 1981 census data indicates that there are approximately 135,000 professional artists in Canada who are responsible for plays, books, paintings, sets, sculpture, music, film, poetry, cartoons, advertising and images that permeate our daily lives, and that they not only contribute but are part and parcel of our national culture and heritage. Yet this is not reflected in their income levels, in their treatment by Government tax laws and policies, labour laws, working conditions, health and safety regulations, social benefits, business development assistance and so on. Nor has the Government done a great deal to improve their situation with the tax changes. Hopefully, we will do justice soon to this section of our society.

Our national museums are a source of our Canadian heritage, culture and pride, a visitor's delight that enriches all who visit. The mission statements are in place. Secretary General John Edwards of the National Museums Corporation did a fine job in devolving the corporation. He is out of a job and deserves a new one.

Let us hope that with the mission statement in place the mandates will be matched through public fiscal will, joined by private sector generosity, supported by dedicated volunteers, so that their life and purpose will grow and flourish. There is much more to museum life than just structural change.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

MUSEUMS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Hockin that Bill C-12, an Act respecting museums, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to follow the speakers from the Government side and the critic for the Liberal Party, my colleague and friend from Mount Royal. She spoke about the rights of the great many artists in our country. I invite her to support my Private Member's Bill which I will be introducing. It deals with the rights of artists. I think she will find it an interesting Bill. I would appreciate her support.

With regard to Bill C-12, I would like to make five points about the legislation. First, the process has been a good one. I want to indicate the nature of that process and say why it has been a good one.

Second, I want to say that on behalf of the New Democratic Party, for which I am the culture and communications critic, we support the Bill in principle.

Third, I want to say a few words about the adjustment procedures in the Bill. We want to ensure that all the employees who work for these museums, the hard-working people who keep the museums going, are well treated.

Fourth, I feel compelled to say a few words about the appointments to the various boards since this measure will be adding boards of directors. You know what happens, Madam Speaker, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) gets his chance to appoint a few people to boards of directors. He just cannot resist all those plums. I want to say a little bit about the plum pudding in this Bill.

Fifth, I want to point out in a positive way a criticism that this is only half a policy, that the Conservatives' long awaited national museums policy is still that—long awaited. It is time for the Government to deliver on an outstanding promise to Canada's museum community. We have not heard from it yet. I want to say something about that.

The process that has developed on this legislation over the past four years has been generally positive and worth while. It is sort of an exemption to the normal rules around here, and perhaps that is a good exemption.

First, we had the Richard Withrow Task Force which recommended in September of 1986 the dismantling of the Museums Corporation. Then, the Standing Committee on Communications and Culture, of which the Parliamentary Secretary sitting opposite was an outstanding chairman, supported unanimously the recommendation that four major federal museums be established as autonomous institutions, each with an explicitly stated legislative mandate and its own board of trustees.

I want to note as well the previous Member of Parliament from Broadview—Greenwood, the NDP Member Lynn McDonald, who was the culture critic for our Party and who did a lot of hard work in this area.

The Government gave a generally positive response to the committee recommendations in May of 1987. After consultations with the unions and museums, a Bill has been produced which for the most part reflects the work of the last few years. It seems to me that it was a good process.

I said that we would support this Bill. The intent of the Bill is to dissolve the current Department of Communications corporation, the National Museums of Canada, and replace it with four Schedule I Crown corporations. They are the National Gallery of Canada, including the Canadian Museum of Contemporary Photography; the Canadian Museum of Civilization, including the Canadian War Museum; the Canadian Museum of Nature; and the National Museum of Science and Technology, including the National Aviation Museum.

As the task force suggested, and the standing committee agreed, this new arrangement should permit each museum and its own separate board to operate more independently and gain additional control over their own future direction. Under the existing structure, these federal museums all have to spend a much greater share of their resources on administration and other non-programming activities. Under the present arrangement, operating as a departmental Crown corporation, the National Museums Corporation board had some significant limits to its independence. As a Schedule I corporation, these powers will be broadened. Thus it can be a more active board.

In addition, the Government has been expressly forbidden from directing the museums on matters of a cultural nature. In other words, it has built into it an arm's length relationship with regard to Schedule I Crown corporations. That relationship is built in by the nature of its being a Schedule I Crown corporation.

A few years ago the House reformed Crown corporations. We created ones with different schedules which had different mandates and different set-ups. The Government has to keep its fingers away so far as that is possible from the directors running Schedule I corporations. The principle of arm's length has not always been respected by previous Conservative Ministers of Communications. I hope it will be maintained here. Of course, it is up to the museums themselves and their boards to ensure that with their new independence they respect their mandates as institutions respective of and responsive to Canadians. They should not become isolated from Canadians.

This leads to a problem as I see it. It is that the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) will now have four boards to appoint members to instead of one. That raises the old problem.

I will give Hon. Members an example of what the old problem is. I have raised it in the House before. I refer to the previous Minister of Communications who is the Minister of Communications again. He was the Minister of Communications before he became the Minister of Energy. He is now Minister of Communications again. I refer to one Oscar Masse, as we call him over here, the great Oscar winner. I would like to look at some of the previous appointments.

• (1630)

I refer to one Denyse Patry, who was the Prime Minister's former secretary at the Iron Ore in Sept Iles. She was appointed a director of the Canada Council. Louise Dionne is a dressmaker from Sept Iles who worked on the Prime Minister's campaign in Manicouagan. She was appointed to the Canada Council. Rodrigue Trembley, who is the last of the Sept Iles three, as I call them, was the Prime Minister's riding campaign manager. Where did he end up? The National Museums of Canada Board. Jean Lougheed, the wife of Peter, where did she end up? Canada Council. Thomas Assaly, a noted local Conservative fundraiser and Ottawa developer, where did he end up? On the National Arts Centre Board. When he was appointed to the Board he was furious because he thought he would get his parking paid for, and when he found out he could not, he demanded it. He thought he would get free parking, he thought that was what it was really all about. Finally he tried to make the Centre pay for his own parking tickets.

Then of course there is the famous Jean Sirois. He was the campaign manager of Michel Côté, a previous Member of this House and previous Minister. Mr. Sirois' spending habits were legendary. The other appointment was Pierre Boutin, who is a relative of Jean Sirois and he was also appointed. He became chairman of the—

Mr. Edwards: A point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): On a point order, the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications.

Mr. Edwards: Madam Speaker, I do appreciate that the Hon. Member is endeavouring to score some debating points and that is one of the ways this House works.

I would just remind him that there is an avenue and a vehicle for examining the qualifications of members of boards—

Mr. Waddell: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Edwards: —and that he as a Member of the Standing Committee on Communications, Culture, Citizenship and Multiculturalism is at liberty, and has been at liberty to examine the qualifications of many of the individuals to whom he is referring.

Mr. Waddell: It is not a point of order. If the Parliamentary Secretary wants to take part in the debate, he should take part in the debate or have someone else take part in the debate.

The fact is that these were appointments made by the previous minister of culture who is now the minister of culture and communications. They were appointments made to cultural institutions in Canada. He now has the power under this Bill to appoint not one board but four boards of directors. Those previous appointments were not only bad for ethical reasons. They badly hurt the Canadian cultural institutions to whom these people were appointed.

Jean Sirois' tenure at Telefilm was a nightmare of incompetence, political interference and personal overspending. Pierre Boutin oversaw the debacle of the National Arts Centre trying to choose a new director. We had to have a special committee meeting of the communications committee of the House because they were so incompetent it took them two years to choose a chair. The reason they were incompetent was because on the boards they had too many political appointments.

An Hon. Member: Tory hats.

Mr. Waddell: There were Tory hats on the boards. That is what it was about. When Flora MacDonald became Minister she changed that situation. I gave her credit for that. She started making changes. Now that we have Oscar Masse back, we are into the possibility that we are going to have more Tory hats appointed.

Yesterday, at the communications committee, Pierre Juneau, the President of the CBC testified. He is a very discreet, distinguished man. He was asked by one of my colleagues on the board: "Well, would you make any suggestions now that you are leaving public life after 20 or 25 years?" He said it in a sort of nice way. Do you recall? He said: "I say to the Government, not so many political appointments to the board of cultural institutions."

An Hon. Member: Let's hear about Juneau's appointment.

Mr. Waddell: The Hon. Member yells: "Tell us about Trudeau's appointment."

An Hon. Member: Juneau's appointment.

Mr. Waddell: Juneau's. Well, it is the same thing, is it not, Juneau, Trudeau? Almost. The fact is that these boards have been hurt by the appointments. I will leave it there. I do not have to belabour this. I made the point. With talented, committed people in charge, these institutions will grow and flourish, which is what we all want in every part of this House.

Now, I want to say a few words about—

[Translation]

Mrs. Duplessis: When it's one of your colleagues who is appointed to the United Nations, like Stephen Lewis, it's OK!

Mr. Waddell: Yes, my colleagues know that. My colleagues from the West too.

[English]

I was talking about transitional arrangements because it is important in this Bill. One of the major concerns before us is to ensure that transitional arrangements for the museums are acceptable to the employees who work there. I have consulted with the unions involved and some of the employees who work there, and it seems for the most part that the legislation is acceptable in this regard. There may be a couple of problems—I hope my friend, the critic for the Liberal Party will listen to this because she is going to have to deal with it in committee.

There may be a couple of problems with transitional matters as far as the employees are concerned, but we will have to deal with that in the legislative committee on this Bill and we will have to look at that very carefully. We might want to have witnesses from the employees or the unions.

I know for example that the Professional Institute for the Public Service has contacted me with some concerns on these matters. There would be a good witness. In general, it should be noted that the Bill changes the status of labour relations at the museums. At present they are subject to the Public Service Employment Act, or the Public Service Staff Relations Act. Under this Bill, the independent museums will fall under the Canada Labour Code. In general, I see this as a positive step due to the greater number of issues that can be dealt with in collective bargaining under the Canada Labour Code. It is probably positive but we will hear from the unions and employees involved at committee to see whether any changes have to be made there.

Finally, I said that this was only half a job. It should be noted and noted strongly that while we in the NDP support this legislation in principle, it does not mean that we are satisfied with the Government's museum policy.

Indeed, as Mr. John MacAvity of the Canadian Museums Association has correctly noted, it represents only half a job. In response to the standing committee, the Government promised a national museums policy to cover not just the museums here in Ottawa but museums and galleries across the country. That is very important. Every MP will be able to tell you, my colleagues here behind me from areas in British Columbia, in Penticton and up in Prince George, that there are lots of small museums with a lot of people who are interested in them. I know many retired people in some towns who have a lot of time to get involved in museums. They are museums all across the country. The standing committee found, and people in the country feel that there needs to be a national policy to deal with these museums outside of Ottawa. Since the recommendation we have had a government discussion paper Challenges and Choices, and repeated further promises of action.

Museums in the regions cannot just simply survive on these promises. These institutions play a critical role in collecting, preserving, researching and interpreting Canada's cultural heritage. I think successive federal governments, including Liberal governments, have let them down. The Museums Assistance Program was created in the early 1970s. It has not received so much as an increase for inflation since that time. not even a 1 per cent increase in 16 years. It is as if the governments did not believe that inflation counted for museums outside of Ottawa. These museums do not have the magic formula of avoiding inflation. They need more money. They are hurting.

The museums' policy has been promised for a long time. I say to the Parliamentary Secretary that we were told back in January that it was drafted and ready. There have been some disturbing signs lately, however. There was no mention, unless I missed something, in the departmental estimates. The museums' policy was missing in the Throne Speech as well.

Last week, on International Museums Day, the Parliamentary Secretary made a statement congratulating the Museums of Canada and especially underlining the contribution made by volunteers to those institutions. I agree with him. It was a good statement. The Government should have celebrated International Museums Day, not only with those words from the Parliamentary Secretary but rather with actions from the Minister of Communications. Those actions would mean a museums policy.

• (1640)

Let me summarize the New Democratic Party's position on this Bill.

First, the process has been good. It follows up a commission and a committee report. That is the way it should be.

Second, the principle of the bill is good, mainly to make these museums four Crown corporations. Schedule l, Crown corporations, gives them more room, if you like, to be even better museums.

Third, we have to look at the adjustment procedures in a little bit more detail in the legislative committee to make sure the employees are well treated.

Fourth, as I pointed out, it does raise the spectre of those plums that the Government would like to give as political appointments. Instead, the Government should appoint good people. They can have political backgrounds but it is not necessary that they do not have and that should not be the sole criteria. The criteria should be to encompass people who are competent and who can act as advocates for the cultural agency. They should be advocates for their own agency with the Government. That is the secret of having a good cultural board.

Finally, this is only half a policy. The other half will be the long-awaited national museums policy which will apply not just to these wonderful museums in Ottawa but to museums outside the capital.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Madam Speaker, I will be brief because I know there are several colleagues across the way who would like to participate in this most important debate.

I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this legislation because museums are a vital part of our cultural history. They remind us of our past and the steps which our society has taken to make possible the quality and standard of living which we enjoy today.

Our museums remain the guardians of our heritage. They are responsible for assembling and classifying collections of works of art and heritage objects.

Let me thank the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone), if she is listening, for briefly flagging a matter that I raised two days ago before the Standing Committee on Communications, Cultural, Citizenship and Multiculturalism. The witnesses in front of our committee were the Board of Directors of the National Museums of Canada. I want to enter into the record my profound concern that what is currently known as the Canadian War Museum comes under the broad umbrella of the Canadian Museum of Civilization. I know that displays are not permitted in the House of Commons. I am not going to show all of this poster which advertises the grand opening of the Canadian Museum of Civilization, June 29, 1989. I will quote the slogan at the bottom of the poster which states: "A new experience in museum entertainment".

The Canadian Museum of Civilization is the mother of a sub-museum called the Canadian War Museum and the current Act calls the civilization museum a celebration of human cultural achievements. I believe there are several hundreds of thousands of Canadians who would take a very dim view, indeed, of the description of the victims of World War I and World War II as a celebration of human cultural achievement, let alone a showcase for museum entertainment. I am appealing to this House to remove the Canadian War Museum from under the umbrella of the Canadian Museum of Civilization, because the wonderful Canadian heritage we are talking about here is the opposite of celebration. It is commemoration in its fullest sense.

Mrs. Finestone: Good.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): I want to see, by whatever procedural routes that are necessary, and I think I can count on my friends across the way—

Mr. Mills: Absolutely.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): —a fifth museum corporation to honour the memory of the 150,000 men and women who fought and died in the two world wars, the thousands more in the Korean War and the United Nations Emergency Force in the Middle East.

There is no reason in the world, in my view, that the Government cannot establish a Canadian memorial museum. I dislike resurrecting the use of the word war, but I intend to move at the earliest opportunity, in the legislative committee, a statutory amendment to ensure that the Canadian memorial museum be completely autonomous, reflecting the views of those Canadians who lost loved ones from 1914 to 1918, from 1939 to 1945, from 1950 to 1953 and beyond. I believe that they deserve to have their own distinct and separate museum.

The National War Memorial goes a long way toward establishing that but it is not quite the same thing as preserving the heritage and the memorabilia of those Canadians who lost their lives in serving this country.

It was 50 years ago that the King and Queen opened the National War Memorial. What prompts my intervention today is that we are coming up to the fiftieth anniversary of the declaration of World War II. On September 9, 1939, Canada entered World War II. We are talking about a quiet display or a memorial to the men and women who gave their lives, not only in that war but in previous and subsequent horrors and catastrophes around the world.

Can we have a somewhat more autonomous memorial museum portray the colours of sacrifice that our Canadian war dead and other heroes and heroines across this country displayed in the name of this country? It can be done very simply. I conclude by bringing forth this recommendation which we can refer to a legislative committee.

George C. Bell, the President of the Canadian Institute of Strategic Studies, says we can do it simply by:

> In 1988 establish the museum as an autonomous institution with a new name, a clear mandate, its own board of trustees and consultative committees and budget. Couple this with an announcement of an immediate preparation of a development plan for the museum and an appropriate national support programs.
> The new name could be the Canadian Military Heritage Museum or the National Military Heritage Museum.

My suggestion would be to set up the Canadian Memorial Museum in honour of all of those wonderful men and women who gave their lives and set up their support for this country. I hope in the course of the next few minutes that we could refer Bill C-12 to the appropriate legislative committee and see if we can get justice done by separating and creating an autonomous committee for the Canadian Memorial Museum out from under the Museum of Civilization.

Mr. Mills: Madam Speaker, my question is for the Hon. Member for Hamilton—Wentworth (Mr. Scott). Has he been able to ascertain what the additional costs would be in order to take this important memorabilia, the $500 million worth of paintings and related items, give it proper packaging and proper respect and environment. As well as this project which he is talking about and, is something I do support.

• (1650)

Mr. Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Madam Speaker, in specific dollar terms, no, but I can tell the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Mr. Mills) that throughout Canada through the Department of Veterans Affairs there are regional museums, places to put the memorabilia about which we are talking, places where the memorabilia could be collected as part of a national memorial museum for which space could very easily be allocated or reallocated since space was already taken away from it some years ago. I think we could find an appropriate location and appropriate facilities, but right now, the important thing is that the Government signal the importance of the symbolism of this matter and make certain that somehow, somewhere, for Canadians now and in the future, there is a place to remember the Canadian men and women who died in the various wars in which they fought.

Mr. Mills: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that across Canada there are 700,000 members of the Royal Canadian Legion. What would the Hon. Member think of organizing collectively? Since we all agree on this issue, the forces of this institution, I am sure we would get support for this cause?

Mr. Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Madam Speaker, that is a very worth-while question. That is what the legislative committee is all about. That is why legislative committees are set up to follow second reading of an important Bill such as this. With the collective agreement of every single Member of the House of Commons, agreement that I see right now, and with the 700,000 plus men and women of the Canadian Legion, we can get that momentum going and get that institution set up in honour of those who died in our world wars.

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Madam Speaker, I hope that I can finish my remarks by the top of the hour. As usual, my colleague from Mount Royal has delineated our Party's position on this issue very well.

I am very pleased to see a piece of legislation that allows Canada's four national museums to evolve into independent bodies. This is a step forward and is great progress for these fine institutions. The legislation is based upon the recommendations of the Richard—Withrow task force on federal museums policy which set out a coherent policy for Canadian museums.

The four new national museums, the National Gallery, the Museum of Civilization, the Museum of Nature and the Museum of Science and Technology, will be independent arm's length cultural institutions in the tradition of the National Arts Centre, the Canada Council and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. The museum will join these institutions as important components of the Canadian cultural mosaic.

In the tradition of Canada's arm's length cultural institutions, we must ensure that the museums are completely autonomous in all matters relating to their collections and activities. I believe it is very important that we take a careful look in committee at the arrangements set out in the legislation creating an arm's length relationship between the museums and the Government. It is crucial that these arrangements give the museums the intended autonomy.

These four autonomous museums along with the sub-museums provided for in the legislation are an important part of Canada's identity. They are showcases of our history, our achievement, our art and our future. As Hon. Members know, this country is rich in history. We have an exciting history and everyone should appreciate it.

From the Canadian art displayed in the National Gallery to the Imax/Omnimax theatre in the new Museum of Civilization, these museums reflect the Canadian people. This is invaluable to our country.

It is notable that the legislation specifically mentions for the first time sub-museums such as the Museum of Contemporary Photography and the Canadian War Museum. This will ensure that these museums are not integrated into the larger museums and that they maintain a certain degree of autonomy. I am certain that this will be reassuring to the many supporters of the War Museum. I can only hope that the Government will follow this up with increased funding for this important part of Canadian heritage.

The War Museum is especially important as it is a means of preserving our heritage. I want to share in the remarks of my hon. colleague from Hamilton—Wentworth who so correctly pointed out that this is not a celebration of war but a commemoration and remembrance of the great men and women who have fallen in upholding the security of Canada. Of course, the War Museum is a way of honouring those Canadians who served Canada during the two world wars and a way of preserving Canada's military history.

Many of my constituents are concerned about this. They want to be certain that the War Museum does not lose out to the Museum of Civilization. It would be a great loss if this were to happen. It would also be a great loss if we did not expand the facilities of the War Museum. Valuable war art and other artifacts belonging to the War Museum are in storage as there is not enough display space available. These items should be on display. As one of my colleagues pointed out, we are talking about art worth $500 million. These items should be on display in the National Capital Region and in regimental museums across this great land.

It is also notable that the legislation includes regional outreach in the mandates of the four museums. This allows Canadians living outside the National Capital Region to share in this important national resource. It is essential that Canadians be able to appreciate Canadian art and culture regardless of whether they live in Fredericton, Vancouver or Flin-Flon, Manitoba.

My hon. friend from Burnaby—Coquitlam pointed out some concerns about employees of the museums. These are questions that should be dealt with in committee and I would hope that we could deal with those adequately when the committee studies this Bill.

In conclusion, I want to say again how pleased I am to see the progress that has been made by Canada's national museums. There are now four independent museums, and in my opinion, that is a step forward. All Canadians benefit from the growth in these institutions and we are all proud to see them develop into world class showcases for Canadian science, art and civilization.

One of my friends in the New Democratic Party raised the issue of appointments to the four separate boards, appointments that will be made by the Hon. Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse). I hope that when appointments are made in the future, they are made on the basis of competence and ability and not on a political basis. It was correctly pointed out that there have been appointments made in the past that can be characterized as political. In fact, politics was the only reason for these appointments. I would hope that future appointments would reflect competence.

Mr. Mills: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask my colleague a question related to the regional impact of the National Museums Program. As we have been discussing and exploring this program, I sense that there has been a tremendous emphasis on the museums around Ottawa, but the fact is that there are museums all across the land—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I do apologize. I will have to interrupt the Hon. Member.

It being 5 o'clock p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of private Members' business as listed on today's order paper.

NATIONAL CAPITAL ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell) moved that Bill C-206, an Act to amend the National Capital Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Madam Speaker, I am pleased this afternoon to present Bill C-206, an Act to change the boundaries of the National Capital Region, to the House. This Bill is a suggestion and I must give all due credit to the Mayor of Rockland, His Worship Jean-Marc Lalonde, who in 1986 had this brilliant idea to extend the boundaries of the National Capital Region. His Worship later contacted me and asked me whether it would be possible to take similar action. What I did, Madam Speaker, is first to contact the National Capital Commission to have its reaction to this proposal.

[English]

On June 27, 1988, at the Government Operations Committee, the Chairman of the National Capital Commission in response to a question that I asked said the following:

> It would be wonderful if perhaps you had a Private Member's bill in which you would suggest the boundaries of the National Capital Region be extended, especially along the Ottawa River. That would, I think, delight our hearts because we feel that the protection of the banks of the Ottawa River is just perhaps one of the most important issues that we face.

That is the position that was expressed to the parliamentary committee at that time concerning this particular Private Member's Bill.

Following this statement by the Chairman of the National Capital Commission, I had a meeting in the fall of 1988 with the municipalities potentially involved in such a venture. At the meeting that was held at the Township of Clarence town hall were present representatives of the eight municipalities potentially affected. Those municipalities would be the Township of Clarence, the Town of Rockland, the Township of Cambridge, the Village of Casselman, the Township of North Planta-genet and South Plantagenet and the Village of Plantagenet itself.

What does the Private Member's Bill do, and what is the cost to the taxpayers of Canada? The Private Member's Bill would add eight municipalities to the some 50 or so municipalities that already form part of the National Capital Region. What would this cost the taxpayers of Canada? The short answer is nothing. Extending the boundaries of the National Capital Region does not in itself cause any cost other than the cost of redoing the map of the National Capital Region and printing the Private Member's Bill in question into the statute upon its promulgation.

What are some of the benefits to us? There are some benefits in both the short and the long term. In the short term, the obvious benefit to the constituents that I represent would surely be in the fact that the National Capital Region would then designate their municipalities. In other words, if one is an industrialist arriving at the Ottawa International Airport and picking up a regular tourist map of the National Capital Region, communities such as Rockland, Plantagenet, Casselman and so on that are very close to the National Capital Region and very close to Parliament Hill would then form part of the map in question. It would demonstrate that indeed these communities are near the National Capital area.

There would be a benefit to tourism for the constituents that I represent. All of this, I suggest again, would be at very little if any cost to the taxpayers. One might ask, if such is the case, why does it cost us so much to have the NCC now? The short answer to that is very simply that in one municipality of my riding, the Township of Russell, the National Capital Commission has never spent one cent in that particular municipality. I am informed by my colleague from Gatineau—La Lièvre (Mr. Assad) that the same is true for a number of municipalities which he represents so ably in the House of Commons.

Therefore, the National Capital Commission does not spend money in all the municipalities which are within its territory. Of course we would wish that eventually the NCC would provide assistance of one sort or another to the municipalities in question. But the Bill in itself by its adoption does not automatically result in any expenditure of any kind in that regard.

What are some of the benefits? I have already spoken about the fact that there are potential tourism benefits for the area. What is the benefit for this country as a whole, some Members across the way might ask? Quite simply, it is the following: We have recognized as a Parliament in the past that it was necessary to have a National Capital Act. We have felt that it was desirable to have such an Act in order to protect an area around the National Capital Region. Therefore, the need to have such an Act has been well established and historically recognized by the Parliament of this country. Why should it be extended eastward, and what benefit would all of Canada derive from that?

One of the most precious and historical rivers in this country on which one of the founders of this country, Samuel de Champlain, sailed in the 1600s, is indeed the Ottawa River, and it goes through the constituency that I represent. It is a very historic river. There a few islands on the river. Those islands are important from a conservation standpoint. The banks of the Ottawa River should indeed be protected and preserved. Right now there is nothing to preserve the banks of the Ottawa River in that area. There is nothing to protect the islands and to keep them in the public domain for future generations to enjoy. I would suggest that these islands warrant protection. This has been recognized by a statement made by Mrs. Jean Pigott on June 27, 1988 which I recited to your Honour in the House of Commons a few moments ago.

There is one further point which I think should be brought to the attention of this House. It is the following: If one were to leave Parliament Hill right now and drive in a westerly direction to the limit of the National Capital Region, one would find that the distance from Parliament Hill to the westerly limit of the National Capital Region is some 45 kilometres. If one goes eastward from Parliament Hill to the easterly limit of the National Capital Region, one would find that that distance is only 20 to 25 kilometres. What I am proposing in this Bill, and what has been suggested and brought to our attention here by His Worship, the Mayor of Rockland, Mr. Jean-Marc Lalonde, is that we extend the boundary eastward to a distance which is similar to what the distance is on the western side of the city.

[Translation]

In other words, what we want to do with this Bill is quite simply to extend the territory of the National Capital, not very far, just as far east of Ottawa as the Region extends west of Ottawa.

[English]

Just in case some may think that this initiative is not one that enjoys the support of the local municipalities I have in hand here, and I have provided a copy of the same documentation to the Minister of Public Works (Mr. MacKay) and to other Members of this House, particularly the Member for the New Democratic Party, whom I understand is interested in speaking on this issue, a copy of all the resolutions of the municipal councils in question adopting this initiative.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this initiative has the unanimous support of the eight municipalities concerned. I have in my hand a resolution passed by the Council of Clarence Township; I have a resolution from the Town of Rockland; I have here a resolution from the municipalities of Plantagenet South and Plantagenet North, from the Village of Casselman, from the Municipality of Cambridge and the Village of Plantagenet. So it is clear that all the municipalities concerned are unanimously in favour of this initiative.

I would also like to bring to the attention of the House a report published in May 1988 for the Council of the United Counties of Prescott and Russell by the consulting firm of Leroux & Associates who recommended that the region I just described to the House be annexed to the territory of the National Capital. This report is called "One Step from the National Capital Region."

Mr. Speaker, in closing, I would like to point out some other important facts. I could describe the region I represent and I could for quite a while longer tell the House all the good reasons for passing this Bill.

• (1710)

[English]

However, it is important in the House today that we do not create a circumstance which may cause certain MPs to be tempted to talk this Bill out. For the information of all who are listening, and for the information of all who will read Hansard in the future and who may not be familiar with the procedure of the House, there is a quick and easy way for the Government to ensure that the Bill is defeated without voting against it, and that way is to talk it out. In other words, ensure that a government Member is standing on his feet at six o'clock. That has been done in the past by certain Hon. Members, and by some political Parties that do not wish to vote against a legislative measure of one form or another.

I want to suggest to the House that this not be done, that we allow this item to come to a vote today and we dispose of the item in question, hopefully disposing of it in favour.

A project of a similar nature involving the Blue Water Bridge proposed by the Conservative Member for that region last year was voted on on the same day by all Members of the House. We talked briefly on the Bill in question and all Members co-operated in ensuring that the Bill was not talked out.

What I am asking for today is exactly the same courtesy that was offered at that time to an issue that was not partisan, but which benefited local municipalities in one Member's riding. As I understand that particular venture, it involved very little cost to the taxpayers.

This Bill has many similarities to the one passed in the House of Commons approximately one year ago involving the Blue Water Bridge. I hope and trust that all Hon. Members will allow this issue to come to a vote in order that the Mayor of Rockland and the mayors of all other municipalities, and the Council of the United Counties of Prescott—Russell, can benefit from this measure that we can give to them as a Parliament.

It is often said that the federal Government is very distant to local communities, and that the things we do are not always tangible or there for local people to understand, and that because of the size and the vastness of this country the federal Government is aloof to the every-day needs of Canadians. We have the opportunity now to prove that we can think of the small municipality, that we can help the man on the street, and we can help the constituency which I represent. I urge all my colleagues in the House to support this measure.

Mr. Murray W. Dorin (Edmonton Northwest): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few comments about this Bill. I understand the comments of the Hon. Member, and I also appreciate that this is not necessarily a partisan matter. However, it is a matter that should be viewed from the point of view of other parts of the country and how they might see this if we were to do something like this here today.

I would like to respond to the call from the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) for the enlargement of the National Capital Region to include nearly 400 additional square miles of his riding.

Mr. Boudria: Four hundred square miles?

Mr. Dorin: How many miles do you believe it is? It is nearly 400.

We must look at this Bill and ask ourselves the question, what do we want Ottawa to be as the nation's capital, and then weigh the costs and benefits.

The National Capital Commission, the Crown corporation which administers this new area, sees our capital as Canada's meeting place, as a tool for communicating Canada to Canadians and to the world, and as a place for safeguarding Canada's treasures.

What is a capital for Canadians? What do we hope for when we go to Ottawa or see it on television? What will foreign guests learn about us when visiting Ottawa?

We want something to be proud of. Ottawa should be a place that everyone in the country would call their own, a capital where the Government listens to their voices and lets them realize their dreams wherever they might live. That is what we want to show the world, not some ornamental seat of empire, but the hub of real democracy.

That means that the town should be kept respectable. Frankly, when Ottawa became the capital, it was a mosquito-ridden, swampy logging town that would not justify being the capital of a nation such as ours. However, Canadians who now visit Ottawa know that that is not the case. Over the years, Ottawa has become a comfortable, clean and beautiful capital, worth a visit if you can afford to get here.

The National Capital Commission has had a lot to do with that. National leaders such as John Diefenbaker have seen to the transformation of this city through the NCC. People such as the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell have arranged to commemorate our former national leaders near Parliament Hill.

However, people from my riding would probably be surprised to know about some of the other changes around Ottawa. The NCC has had its share of criticism. Some people, for example the Nielsen task force on program review, voiced concerns that the House needs to consider when we talk about Bill C-206.

When I went to school in the Town of Bruce, Alberta, we were taught that Queen Victoria made the City of Ottawa the capital of this country back in the 1850s. It was not Hull, which is the major town across the Ottawa River, certainly not the Town of Arnprior, Ontario, or the Township of Buckingham, Québec.

In 1969 the federal and provincial Governments agreed that the National Capital Region would include all those places, and all those places would have the benefit of the National Capital Commission. In all, 26 municipalities in Ontario and Québec are now part of the region. Some of these have effectively become part of Ottawa, for example, Nepean. Others, like Arnprior, are quite separate towns or villages. They are not Ottawa and do not look like Ottawa. All of the areas that Bill C-206 would add to the NCC is like that: very nice places, but not the nation's capital.

The federal lands, green parklands and buildings that the NCC owns are now four times the size of the whole City of Ottawa. The NCC is the capital's biggest land owner.

This federal agency is no municipal Government. It does not collect garbage or run buses. No local officials sit on its Board of Commissioners. However, its budget is nearly half the size of the budget of the City of Ottawa. It was $92,261,000 in the Main Estimates for 1988-89.

The NCC employs more than 900 people. It sponsors cultural events and festivals. It plants more than 500,000 tulips in five hectares of flower beds. It manages 300 kilometres of pathways, 668 hectares of parks, 2,230 hectares of turf, and many museums and other buildings.

No wonder this Commission costs so much money. No wonder towns such as Rockland, Plantagenet, St. Isidore de Prescott and others would like in on the action.

Mr. Boudria: St. Isidore is not in it.

Mr. Dorin: Fine. I know there are many towns that would like in on the action. I know many towns in Alberta would probably like in on it, too. There are probably towns just across Ottawa on the other side of the river that would like to become part of the National Capital Region. The Member has been quite vocal on the subject of this expansion. He and his supporters say that the NCC would maintain riverside parks further down the Ottawa River, along the South Nation River, and prevent erosion.

• (1720)

NCC pamphlets would include these new towns for business and tourism promotion. Perhaps new federal buildings would go up in these towns and attack unemployment and a poor tax base in this mostly rural riding.

These are normal and understandable concerns in a riding with a weaker economy. The Hon. Member's constituents have watched this care and attention going on next door, and they feel it would be beneficial to have those types of improvements in their area as well.

Where I disagree with this Bill is that it seeks to do these things at federal expense at a time when we have just had to make over $5 billion in spending cuts just to keep our heads above water. When we cannot pay for 14 military bases, we cannot pay for more tulips.

As the Nielsen task force report said about the NCC: "Ownership begets more ownership which results in ever–increasing development and operating expenses". Is that not what this Bill is really about?

What we have heard so far has little to do with the way the NCC sees this town of Ottawa, or the way many Canadians see the capital. How many Canadians know the area around Ottawa? How many, if asked, would say that the area makes them feel part of the business of the country?

Back in Roman times there were two kinds of laws. The first kind were leges. These were laws to benefit Rome and its citizens as a whole. The other kind were privi–leges, which is where the word "privilege" comes from. These laws were only for a few people, giving them special rights. I think Bill C–206 is just that, a privilege and probably not much more.

Mr. Boudria: Like the Western Diversification Program.

Mr. Dorin: Not everyone has the privilege of living near Ottawa.

We could expand the NCC forever, north, south, east and west, and there would always be someone left out, like the West Edmonton Mall. I cannot support this Bill or its progress through the House for that reason.

I do not want to suggest in any way that I am saying anything negative about the people of his riding or the people who live in those towns and communities. However, I do not believe now is the time to be looking to expanding a very expensive operation of Government, when we are asking my constituents and constituents from other parts of the country to make sacrifices.

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie): Madam Speaker, first I want to salute my colleague. It is a laudable idea and I applaud him for his initiative. If I were in his constituency, I would probably do the very same thing and would be remiss and perhaps criticized if I did not.

Much work has gone into this Bill, and various municipalities are involved. I know full well the frustrations of a municipal politician, having spent 10 years in that particular line of work. I know that they are behind the project.

The benefits are obvious. Ottawa and area is a beautiful place to visit. It is a showcase for Canada. It is a pleasure to be here. In fact, it is the second most favourable city I would like to be in, second only to Sault Ste. Marie.

Canadians must be proud to visit their capital and the NCC has done very much to make this more than a liveable city and area, with an exemplary life–style. Other Canadian cities may in fact be jealous of the moneys spent, but their nationalism shines through and they say it is probably money well spent.

Having said this, I must add some criticism, not of the project or the concept or the initiative, but to some of the changes in direction and philosophy of the NCC. I have read the NCC corporate plan and have some grave concerns about the terminology used and some of its probable consequence.

As I read through the corporate plan I see phrases like market approach, market driven, revenue generation ventures, user fees, contracting out. This sounds very much like another agenda that we have become used to in this recent Thirty-fourth Parliament. I have great fears that the two agendas will come together, and I do not believe that is something we want to endorse, because the endorsation of that particular corporate plan would be an endorsation of the Government's plan.

We have concerns about the apparent change and the less than subtle approach of the NCC to doing business.

The NCC should definitely be at arm's length from the Government, and we have grave concerns that that arm is being amputated at bit at a time, if there is such a possibility.

One has to wonder about the timing of this initiative, however laudable, when there is a reduction in funding of $5 million. We are not yet sure how that will be addressed. As recently as yesterday afternoon, Mrs. Pigott could not say how the $5 million reduction would be addressed.

The request is for an expansion of territory only to be coincident with a reduction in funding. My hon. colleague suggests that this will cost nothing. I accept that it will probably cost nothing now, but certainly one has to be realistic and suggest that it will cost something in the distant future.

This concept of expansion yet reduction is tantamount to spending $27,000 on a shrub inventory, $48,000 on a poll to find out what Canadians think of the NCC, and spending $1.6 million on studies at at time when the Government says we must cut back. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has said that the shrub inventory expenditure is stupid spending, but we all know it is business as usual. The inventory went ahead.

We all know that studies beget studies, to parahrase what was in the corporate plan. Studies are often put on the shelf where they gather dust. If they are not acted on with some immediacy, a new study will eventually be required when it is necessary to rationalize spending five years later. We cannot tighten our belts, pull in, and let out our trousers at the same time. Something will give. I will not pursue that analogy, but one can see the consequences of trying to do this.

We support the concept of decentralization. Our Party supports that principle strongly. I hope a federal building is erected in Plantagenet, Casselman and Prescott—

Mr. Boudria: Prescott is not in the riding.

Mr. Butland: I am not as familiar with my hon. friend's area, as probably he is not as familiar with Sault Ste. Marie. I hope there is a federal building erected in Plantagenet and Casselman, just as I hope a federal building is erected in Sault Ste. Marie. What a boon that would be to any community.

I believe it should be an initiative of the Government and the NCC. Perhaps we should extend the NCC boundaries 500 miles northwest so that Sault Ste. Marie will benefit as well.

I applaud the initiative of the Member and the municipal officials. We support the concept and would like to share in that kind of initiative. But we must ask whether it is realistic. While we endorse it, we do not know if it is realistic, and I think we have already seen some indication of the Government's opinion. Under the circumstances, the Hon. Member will be hard pressed. We endorse the initiative. God speed.

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member has before the House Bill C-206. Quite often in the House we talk about boundary lines in relation to constituency boundaries and redistribution. We recently had the plebiscite in the Northwest Territories on the question of changing the territorial boundary line there. Sometimes we contemplate the question of whether areas like the Turks and Caicos ought to be included within the boundaries of Canada. Today, we have the Hon. Member who is sometimes known for walking a very fine line in this House, placing a Bill before us that proposes a change in the boundary line of the National Capital Commission.

• (1730)

Mr. Boudria: The National Capital Region.

Mr. Boyer: I should say the National Capital Region. There was some discussion in the previous debate as to what municipalities were not included within the exact metes and bounds description of which this Bill entirely consists. We would all like to have from the Hon. Member, of course, his assurance that after this he has no further territorial ambitions.

It was refreshing in the debate we have had thus far to hear from the Hon. Member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Butland) sounding a note of realism with respect to this type of proposal. It is certainly understandable that the Hon. Member would have taken the initiative to bring before the House a Private Member's Bill because of the background efforts that have been made within the municipalities directly affected.

When I learned that the debate was coming on today on this particular Bill I got a copy of A un pas de la région de la capitale nationale.

Mr. Boudria: I gave it to your Minister.

Mr. Boyer: The Hon. Member is saying that he gave it to my Minister. That is a very fine thing that he did. I am saying that I have a copy of it as well. I hope he will share the report with all others who are interested in this question.

The point of this document is that it is a sound bit of work by municipal authorities who are very interested in seeing the benefits that come from being within the National Capital Region extended to their area. In my review of it I see that there are at least five major characteristics of Prescott—Russell which the report suggests make it suitable to be part of the National Capital Region.

The first relates to demographic position and emphasizes the largely Francophone population in the area in question. However, I feel that given that about half the National Capital Region already in existence is in part of the Province of Quebec and has a large majority of Francophone population that it is not clear from the report that there would be any significant difference on this importance balance within the National Capital Region. I think we want to do more than just play with some numbers and statistics here. The fact is that the National Capital Region is most certainly a present reflection of the duality of Canada and our two founding cultures. The suggestion in the report that this would be altered by the inclusion of this more eastern part, while it is an important point, I do not think can really be considered to be fundamentally significant in a way that would influence us here.

The report goes on to deal with the Ottawa River shoreline, tourist circuits and attractions, festivals and organizations. Those are the five main characteristics cited in it in support of the contention that the boundary be drawn to a more easterly point. Again, one cannot take exception with any of those points. For example, in terms of festivals, the national capital now has the reputation of being an active and dynamic city in a wide range of festivals and special events that occur throughout the year. It is a real treat for Canadians from any part of the country, and foreigners as well, to come to the National Capital Region to participate in these seasonal festivals.

The argument that was put forward in the Prescott—Russell report to which I have already made reference is that the inclusion of Prescott—Russell would provide additional partners to be involved in festivals and special events. At the present time the NCC, which hosts several major festivals in the capital, has an extensive network of partners both in the public and private sectors. There are a number of other agencies as well that sponsor festivals with a local audience and a local character. It is questionable that the addition of even more partners would have a significant positive impact. In fact, it is quite possible that the opposite result would be achieved in terms of overburdening the existing administrative structure.

Mr. Boudria: Have you even heard of Franco Ontarians?

[Translation]

Mr. Boyer: Of course, Madam Speaker.

Mr. Boudria: One would not think so!

Mr. Boyer: Madam Speaker, I just want to say that the realities mentioned by the Hon. Member, such as Franco-Ontarians, now exist in that region, but it is not necessary to change the region's boundaries to enhance the participation of this group in the activities of our National Capital Region.

[English]

The Hon. Member by his interventions is obviously chippy and sensitive on this point. I understand that he is bringing before the House of Commons, our Parliament, a Private Member's Bill that is something anxiously sought by municipalities in his riding and that he would have a great deal of emotional and intellectual effort invested in the project. I think every Member of Parliament understands that.

I have tried to look at the five main recommendations in the report itself and, understanding the good intentions and the fine spirit in which they have been advanced, to point to some drawbacks associated with them. However, I am not speaking—and I want to reassure Hon. Members and the Hon. Member who sponsors this Bill—in a way to be negative about the proposal. What I would suggest is that it has been a long period now, some three decades, since the planning really got under way, and that it is high time for the future role of the National Capital Commission and the National Capital Region to be reassessed. I understand that the Chairman of the NCC, Mrs. Pigott, has in fact submitted a work plan for the year 1989–90 which looks in a broad and over-arching way at all of these questions, including boundaries, levels of participation, the future and what projects can be carried out and so on.

I am sure the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell would not mind if I added this to public record. I contacted officials to obtain a copy of Mrs. Pigott's letter in which she sets out the broad approach that the NCC is taking with respect to this matter.

Mr. Boudria: Which letter?

Mr. Boyer: This is a letter dated February 28.

Mr. Boudria: Addressed to whom?

Mr. Boyer: It is addressed to the Hon. Member. If I may, with the Hon. Member's permission, I would like to quote from that letter. If the Hon. Member has a problem with that, I will not do that.

Mr. Boudria: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. I have no idea to what correspondence the Hon. Member is referring. If he has in his possession a letter addressed to me from an official of the Government I would suggest that there appears to be a prima facie case of privilege right now. It was not an open letter. The Hon. Member says he has it. He is asking my permission now to read it. I do not even know what the letter is. I am curious and I am anxiously awaiting the words of the Hon. Member. I do not think we have heard the last of this issue. He has my permission to read it, that is for sure. The damage is already done.

Mr. Boyer: On the same point of order, Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for giving me his permission. I would note again to him, and to you, Madam Speaker, that before I mentioned anything about the contents of this letter, I referred to it and asked whether the Hon. Member—

• (1740)

Mr. Boudria: That is not the point.

Mr. Boyer: —had any objections to it being put on the record of this debate since it is directly relevant. Nothing in the contents of this letter between the NCC and the Hon. Member have yet been mentioned by me. Prior to doing that and concluding this point of order, and why I raised it as a prior point, is to see if the Hon. Member would permit me to use that as the most efficient method of explaining what the policy is publicly on record before the committee to which the Member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Butland) has referred to, as the most efficient way of joining the issue. I can certainly do it in other fashions as well. I have not, without the prior permission of the Hon. Member, mentioned anything about the contents of this letter on the floor of the House. That is my comment on his point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell on the point of order.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Speaker, the Member of course does have permission to read the letter. My objection, and my notification to you that I might rise later on a point of privilege, is not on the content of the letter. It is on the fact that he appears on surface to have correspondence between an official of the Government and destined to myself, which he says he has. It is not whether or not he reads it into the record. I do not object to that. He has my permission.

I want the Chair to know that once this debate is over, at the earliest opportunity that I may very well rise on what appears to be a case of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The points of order have taken some time. There would still be about a minute left in the Hon. Member's intervention if he wants to conclude. The Hon. Member for Etobicoke—Lakeshore.

Mr. Boyer: Madam Speaker, I would like to, in the brief moment that remains, not let this point go past because I think the Hon. Member—

Mr. Boudria: What does he have?

Mr. Boyer: —must understand—as I have told you already, Madam Speaker, I told the Member it was a letter dated February 28, 1989. There is a question about the ownership of a letter. The person who is the author of the letter is free to send copies of any such letter to whomever he or she pleases. I would welcome the opportunity for the Hon. Member to raise this at a future date, because if he—

Mr. Boudria: Who is the author?

Mr. Boyer: Madam Speaker, through you, I will repeat for perhaps the fourth time, this is a letter from the Chairman of the NCC, Mrs. Pigott, setting out the policy of the NCC with respect to the need after some 30 years for a comprehensive approach to boundary changes.

In conclusion, I would leave with that point, that the Hon. Member in his effort to seize upon the small points and not allow a debate to be joined on the merits of this case has not allowed me the opportunity to place on the record the fact that while this is under way there is a more far-reaching approach by the NCC with respect to the entire boundary question. I think the Member—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member's time has now expired. Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Madam Speaker, I would first like to congratulate the Hon. Member on his submission to the House. I think he has done tremendous work in terms of research on the issue. I became aware of it some time in the fall of 1988. I was fairly excited about it. This is not because I know that there is a benefit to his particular riding, as well as some other ridings between his and my own, but because I strongly believe that the NCC is doing a fantastic job in the National Capital Region, not only for the nation's capital of Canada, but also for Canadians as a whole.

In terms of tourists in the National Capital Commission, they are directly and indirectly bringing into this region in excess of a million tourists a year. In many of the festivals that they are sponsoring, it is now at the point where they are self-sufficient. They are bringing in money, like the Festival of Spring this year.

There has been a positive injection into the economy on the part of the NCC, whether through the festivities or through encouraging tourists from within Canada and as well the United States.

As the Hon. Member from the NDP Party indicated, it is an economic development for the riding of the Hon. Member. If that is the case, let it be. I hope that Members over the years from all sides of the House will bring forward initiatives that might benefit their ridings and the people of this country as a whole. If that is what it takes in order to get the economy rolling, let it be.

There is no doubt in my mind that when it came to the issue of unemployment insurance, when we were looking at eastern Ontario, the figures which came from Statistics Canada indicated 5.4 per cent as the unemployment rate for all of the Ottawa—Carleton region. That was not the case when we looked at the Hon. Member's riding. In his riding, the unemployment rate was about 12 per cent.

When it comes to issues that might work in the interests of the Government, the figures may come out in one way, but when the Hon. Member is trying to do something whereby his area might benefit, those figures change around completely.

I strongly believe that the extension of 25 additional kilometres into the east will not negatively impact as the mandate of the National Capital Commission. It will not increase the cost to the it. It might increase revenues, not only for the National Capital Region but also for the riding of the Hon. Member.

I wholeheartedly will support his initiative. If the issue comes to a vote, which I hope it will, I will be voting with him.

Having said that, if the issue is to be deferred to the committee, then at that time I would suggest that an impact study could be done to find out if there are any cost implications. If there is a tremendous cost we will then have a chance to vote against it. In the meantime, I have seen the Mayor of Rockland, and as well have spoken with many members from the Hon. Member's constituency and there seems to be a lot of enthusiasm about the idea.

It is a harmless gesture on the part of the federal Government in the National Capital Region, and I would suggest that that is the way it should be done, not only in this region but also in other parts of the country, whether in the east, north, west or the south.

I believe initiatives like this in different parts of the country will help those communities flourish and prosper. I have absolutely no problem with seeing festivals being held in every municipality if that would mean an additional injection into the local economy. So on that note, Madam Speaker—

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, I wish to congratulate the Hon. Member for his Bill, and I shall vote for it if we have the chance.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Fredericton.

Mr. J. W. Bud Bird (Fredericton): Madam Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to say a few words about this Bill. First, I would also like to congratulate the Hon. Member on his initiative. I appreciate his intent and I appreciate the aspirations of the communities which he represents to become a part of the National Capital Region.

Unfortunately, I believe that the National Capital Region belongs to Canada. It is not a region that can be planned or approached on an ad hoc basic. It is represented by a commission with commissioners from each province in Canada. It truly has been designed to reflect the two languages officially represented by our country, and the many cultural variations that are represented in Canada. I believe that his initiative should be considered in further comprehensive considerations of expansion or perhaps the contraction of the National Capital Region. As my colleague has said earlier, it may well be in these days of restraint that there is justification to take a second look at the capital region in terms of size. Perhaps it is too large, not as efficient or as economically designed as it may be, although it has been in its present form and geography since 1958.

• (1750)

I would like to take this opportunity as well to say that this concept of a National Capital Commission is one that—I think the Hon. Member is joining in the debate on this side and not listening.

Mr. Boudria: Let me see.

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bird: He wants to be on the right side. Is that what you call a defection? In any event, the National Capital Commission is a reflection which I believe should be considered seriously and addressed in each provincial capital of our country.

I had the honour to be the Mayor of Fredericton, the capital city of New Brunswick, and I have the honour to be the Member of Parliament for Fredericton. I am proud of Fredericton and in the manner in which we have worked in New Brunswick and Fredericton to make it as representative as possible of the two languages and the various cultures of our country. I would like to make note that in Fredericton over the years, since 1971, I recall writing to the then Minister of Public Works that the provincial Government designate a public works development area a tourism precinct. They have restored a very prestigious military compound area. The prior Government is in the process of negotiating with the federal Government about the change in ownership of old Government House which was the original headquarters of the Lieutenant Governor of New Brunswick, a very conspicuous and cherished mansion which some day will become a very significant historic site in our city. This is a subject that is very current and one in which I hope our federal Minister of Public Works (Mr. MacKay) and our provincial colleagues will address in a comprehensive and significant fashion in the near future.

Last but not least, over the years we have worked hard to accommodate our francophone population of New Brunswick which represents almost 40 per cent of our province. Fredericton, I think, stands proud in the manner in which it has endeavoured to address itself as a capital city for all New Brunswickers. The establishment of Le centre communautaire Ste. Anne is a conspicuous example of that effort to be representative in Fredericton of all New Brunswickers.

The intent of this motion is admirable. I believe that it fails only in the sense that ad hocery is not the way to approach the design of our National Capital Commission. I have many other things I would like to say. I have done a bit of research on the history of Ottawa but I think I will pass on that. Perhaps other Members know more about history than I do.

I would like to give my hon. colleague an opportunity to speak on this subject. I compliment the Hon. Member for his initiative. My regrets for the reasons I have described that I cannot support this initiative. I hope that his motive and intent will surface in a larger and more comprehensive look at our capital city of Canada in the foreseeable future.

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to take part in the debate on Bill C-206, an Act to change the boundaries of the National Capital Region. I understand very well why our colleague, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), introduced this Private Member's Bill. I understand his interest. I know that for a Member of Parliament, it is politically very profitable, but I believe that the present boundaries of the National Capital Region are reasonable and acceptable.

The most important feature of Private Members' Bills, of course, is that Hon. Members of all parties have the opportunity to analyse them together, as well as the chance to develop and put forward new legislation. And as individuals, we are all free to vote for or against these Bills, whatever side of the House we are on.

I must express serious reservations about the justification of Bill C-206, which seeks to extend or enlarge the National Capital Region.

The principle underlying this expansionist idea is outdated these days, when we must constantly strive to do more with less. Furthermore, Madam Speaker, the hypothesis that the municipalities concerned will all enjoy a whole range of benefits paid for by the federal Government is to my mind doubtful and unverified.

What are our priorities as a government during this period of restraint and restructuring? I believe that most Canadians agree that we must adopt less expansionary, less costly policies—not the other way around. I also believe that Canadians in general are in favour of more regionally based government and development, as the previous speaker said.

Needless to say, the National Capital Region is a special case because the federal Government is located there. It is the only region in the country in which all Canadians have common interests. That is why the federal Government has a special interest in protecting the symbolism it reflects.

The National Capital Region has roughly the shape of a square, the cities of Ottawa and Hull being located near the centre, towards the east. We have Gatineau Park and the Lièvre River valley on the Québec side and the Mississipi and Rideau River valleys on the Ontario side.

The Bill before the House today would add about 400 square miles of Ontario territory adjacent to the eastern boundary of the region. The result would be rather disconcerting. If our calculations are correct, this protuberance would increase the region's area by 22 per cent.

We must not forget another important point, which is that the Capital National Region has 40 per cent more territory in Ontario than in Québec. The Bill would merely increase the present imbalance.

I am not trying to draw nice straight boundary lines on a map. The issue goes much further. The National Capital Region is a symbol, uniting as it does the two main cultural and linguistic groups in this country. It is a living expression of the link between those groups, which should be represented fairly and equitably. This Bill tends to undermine this objective.

In concluding, Madam Speaker, I would like to point out that there is also the tourism aspect. As you know, many Canadians come to visit our Capital, and they come from all electoral districts of our country. They come with their families, in small groups or on organized tours. As Members, we have the privilege of receiving these people. Many tourists come to admire our treasures and national monuments and to learn something about their government and their Canadian cultural heritage. In many cases, they come to take part in our national holidays, while many only stay in the region for a few days. In fact, relatively few visitors go beyond Ottawa's metropolitan area, unless they are staying with relatives or friends who live in rural or semi-rural areas or are visiting Gatineau Park or the nature areas in the Green Belt.

Why expand the National Capital Region, Madam Speaker? Some people would rather make it smaller, although I don't support the idea. I do realize that supporters of this position have some valid arguments. First of all, the Government is divesting itself of goods and responsibilities that are more appropriately the purview of other levels of government or the private sector. Expanding the National Capital Region is contrary to the Government's own objectives. Further increasing the federal Government's field of influence in a region that is already seen as privileged is indefensible. Today —

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 38 deemed to have been moved.

CANADA POST CORPORATION—FIRST-CLASS MAIL—REPORT OF POSSIBLE PRIVATIZATION—FRASER INSTITUTE'S INVITATION TO MINISTER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to take part in the adjournement debate this evening.

Madam Speaker, I am sure you will recall that in this House on April 19, 1989 I asked a question to the Minister responsible for the Canada Post Corporation. I asked the Minister why he was planning to attend a conference to be held by the Fraser Institute, a far right organization intent on privatizing first-class mail delivery.

The Minister responsible for the Canada Post Corporation responded, and I quote:

> I realize that a closed mind is more appealing to Members of the Liberal Party, but I think that to fulfil one's responsibilities, one should be open to new ideas. The fact that things worked last century does not mean that they have to be strictly adhered to this century.

So, Madam Speaker, the position of the Conservative Government with respect to Canada Post first-class mail is that it is in fact an antiquated system which must be abolished.

However I can tell you, Madam Speaker, that wanting to keep first-class mail in the public sector in Canada is not an antiquated principle.

[English]

The Fraser Institute is sponsoring this seminar to be held on January 23 at the Royal York Hotel in Toronto. The seminar's keynote speakers are none other than Don Lander, the President of Canada Post and the Minister responsible for the Post Office.

Canada's universal mail service, which has served to unify this country, has been in place since the existence of Canada, and it was even in place after the Act of Union of 1840 which linked the colonies of Upper and Lower Canada. The rationale for Government-sponsored universal mail service was that the lucrative routes in large cities and linking large cities where the profits are would be made to subsidize mail service to small and remote communities across the country.

It is well known by the Canadian public that Canada Post does not make money when people send money orders from Trois Pistoles to Wetaskiwin or from St. Isadore de Prescott to a community east of Montreal. That is not where the money is at Canada Post.

Indeed, some 50 per cent of Canada's revenue, or close to it, is generated by first-class mail. Therefore, the first-class mail service is what subsidizes and keeps the rest of the system going.

What is happening now? The Minister responsible for Canada Post and the Corporation has privatized rural mail service. The Government has reduced services in urban areas, replacing door-to-door service with so-called supermailboxes which no one likes.

Postal outlets are replacing full post offices that once existed in rural communities. On top of that, the Government is now saying that it has an open mind about attending a conference which aims to privatize first-class mail, the mail which keeps everything else going.

I submit that if in fact first-class mail is privatized, we will destroy the postal system altogether for it is the revenue from first-class mail that keeps the postal system going. I urge the Government to make forthwith, through the spokesperson designated today, assurances that first-class mail will not be privatized. No country in the western world has done so, not even the country of that great proponent of privatization, Margaret Thatcher. Even Mrs. Thatcher, notwithstanding her views on privatization, has not attempted to do anything like privatize first-class mail. She knows better. I am asking now, does the Government across know better?

• (1805)

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) would like to have everyone believe that this Government is about to make fundamental changes to the structure and mandate of Canada Post Corporation and that in fact these changes would leave Canadians with a poor and unreliable postal system.

Let me take this opportunity to assure the Hon. Member that the Government has no present intention of fundamentally changing the structure or mandate of Canada Post Corporation. The Minister responsible for the Post Office said in a recent interview that he was not working on a proposal to get rid of the monopoly that the corporation has on first-class letter mail. Let me also say that this Government has always been willing to listen to the views of Canadians. It is the people of Canada who keep raising the question of the corporation's exclusive mandate. As the Minister said, people are suggesting it, and it would be foolish not to examine it.

The Post Office is not a static institution, one that is entrenched in old ways of doing things. It is an institution that is constantly evolving and changing just like the country and the people for whom it exists to serve. Together let us look at some of those changes. Twenty years ago, the Post Office operated in a very sheltered environment. Today, it is facing competition on all fronts. The corporation is meeting that competition head on by providing Canadians with an efficient, reliable and affordable postal service.

In 1981, all three political parties agreed that the Post Office should become a Crown corporation. At that time, its annual deficit was running at $600 million and increasing annually. This year, Canada Post Corporation will be recording a profit. This means that for the first time in years, Canadians will not pay twice for their postal service: once when they purchase their stamps, and a second time when they pay their taxes.

Canada Post Corporation is aware that its existence is dependent on the quality of its service. The quality of that service has been getting better. Canada Post Corporation is the only postal system in the world whose delivery performance is measured by independent auditors. The audits which are issued quarterly have clearly shown that significant improvements have occurred in the reliability of on-time mail delivery. For example, in the quarterly performance report issued by Clarkson Gordon, it was reported that 94 per cent of all properly prepared first-class mail within the same province reached its delivery target, and 96 per cent between provinces. Those are some very impressive improvements, and they have been made throughout Canada Post. What is equally impressive is that the corporation is trying, and I believe succeeding, to do even better.

REVENUE CANADA—SPECIAL AUDIT OF AGRICULTURAL EQUIPMENT TRADE-IN ALLOWANCES

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Madam Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to pursue further a question which I directed to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Jelinek) on April 25 of this year concerning what is euphemistically known as the business investment tax credit, heavy equipment trade-in over allowance special audit. That sounds complicated and it is. It is a problem that arises out of the Business Investment Tax Credit Program which was instituted in 1976. It provided a credit within the Province of Saskatchewan of 10 per cent of the purchase price of a new piece of farm machinery or equipment to be applied against a farmer's federal income tax payable.

That credit acted as a considerable stimulus for machinery transactions and was, needless to say, well received in the farm community. In fact, some farmers built up such a credit that I believe in 1983 the then Government of the day instituted a further refinement of the program to permit a cash rebate to the farmer of 40 per cent of the unused credits. That in turn exacerbated the problem which I will enlarge upon.

The difficulty lay in the design of the program. The program was intended, as it turned out, not to stimulate the construction or the manufacture of farm machinery and equipment, but rather to try to stimulate employment on the western prairies with the theory that a farmer having spent $150,000 on a new four-wheel tractor would go to the labour pool and hire some stranger to ride it around in the field for him. That is a sad example of the type of twenty–third floor, ivory–tower, bureaucratic thinking in this place.

• (1810)

Regardless of the intent behind that ill–conceived Liberal program, and which our Government to its credit has phased out through 1986, 1987, and 1988, we have to face the problem that farmers of course took advantage of the program in the trading in of their machinery and equipment. What happened was that farm machinery manufacturers and dealers got into the habit of inflating the value of farm machinery and equipment that was traded in. A brand new tractor might carry the price of $100,000.

If a farmer was trading in a piece of equipment that was worth $10,000, $90,000 cash would be paid as the difference. However, it was also open to the dealer to raise the list price of that tractor to $150,000 and inflate the value of the farmer's trade–in from $10,000 up to $60,000. The farmer did not care. In fact, in many cases the farmer did not know, because he was still paying the same amount of cash difference. The fact is that as far as the treasury of the country is concerned, the rebate of 10 per cent on the new price which ordinarily would have been 10 per cent of $100,000 in fact became 10 per cent of $150,000. We are talking about sizeable amounts of money. Over the course of the program, I would estimate that hundreds of millions of dollars were paid out of the federal treasury through this tax expenditure program which in essence was a mini–scientific research tax credit plan. The moneys would have been better spent, as they are now, targeted toward universal programs for Canadian farmers.

In any event, the problem is that along the way Revenue Canada decided that it would attack the western Canadian farmer and state that he was abusing the program by artificially inflating the value of those pieces of machinery and equipment that were traded in.

The producer in western Canada is the innocent party in all of this. If there was abuse of the program, first we must say that the program was ill–conceived, ill–designed, and tailor–made for problems to develop. That is problem number one. It was the policy of the then Government that was clearly at fault. Second, it was the manufacturers of equipment and the dealer networks which I believe really got into the game of inflating trade–in values.

The average farmer is no different from a person living in the city. If they have a vehicle that they want to trade in, they are going to shop around from dealer to dealer and say: "I would like to buy a new whatever. I have this vehicle to trade in. How much cash difference do I have to pay?" That is the only concern that a particular farmer would have with regard to this matter.

Now we have the spectacle of Revenue Canada coming along years after the fact saying to a farmer: "Well, we think that we are going to reassess you because you abused this program. You arbitrarily increased the value of the piece of equipment that you traded in and we are going to reassess you, cut down that value, and come after you with the full force of the law". If Revenue Canada were allowed to proceed with this folly, it would have entrapped and ensnared virtually every single producer and farmer in western Canada. To the credit of the previous Minister of National Revenue, when he got wind of that proposal on the part of Revenue Canada, he did put a stop to that special audit. However, there were approximately 600 cases where the Department of National Revenue stated that it thought there was abuse and that it should proceed against those farmers.

It is my opinion and the opinion of many farm groups and producer groups in western Canada that that is very unfair. Again, the previous Minister stated that there would be a test case. The crux of the issue here is whether Revenue Canada can come along and substitute its idea of a fair market value of a piece of equipment or machinery that is traded in with its idea of fair market value in place of that freely arrived at in the marketplace between a willing vendor and a willing purchaser acting at arm's length. That really is the legal question involved. I suggest that it is not for Revenue Canada to interfere with that kind of decision. However, Revenue Canada says it can. The previous Minister said there would be a test case to try and decide this matter. Unfortunately, the test case fell apart.

• (1815)

I asked the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Jelinek) on April 25, 1989, what his intentions were. He indicated at that time that he was working with the community, looking for a new case to come forward and so on. That is fine, and I very much appreciate that response.

What concerned me and caused me to put this item on for debate here was a response from Revenue Canada taxation in Regina on April 26, 1989, the day after the Minister's response. They say they intend to proceed as expeditiously as possible against the taxpayer because this particular test case was not going ahead.

I believe in this situation that the Department is simply out of control. Given the background, the circumstances, the years this program has gone on and the time these people have waited, to proceed originally I believe was fundamentally unfair, and to carry on now I believe is unfair. I would ask the Minister to either find another test case with a suitable agreed statement of facts, or simply drop the entire matter. Justice delayed is no justice.

In conclusion, I am heartened by the presence of the Minister here today to answer to this matter. His very presence leads me to think that he will be taking the matter in hand.

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Madam Speaker, this indeed is a very important issue and that is why I am here personally to respond to a very good case brought forward by my colleague, the Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia (Mr. Wilson).

At the outset, let me say that it is my intent and always has been as Minister of National Revenue to continue to consult, communicate and listen to any taxpayer's concerns and representations. I certainly intend to do so in this instance. If the Hon. Member or any taxpayers or organizations associated with this situation want to meet with me in order for me to hear their side of the story, as has been very well represented by the Hon. Member in the House today and on previous occasions, I would be very happy to meet with them in order to get both sides of the story.

Allow me to put this issue into some perspective. Some time ago the Department undertook to review and audit the income tax returns of certain taxpayers who have claimed investment tax credits on purchases of heavy machinery and equipment. It has been pointed out on numerous occasions that the specific audit program was not restricted to farmers of western Canada, which I want to make clear, but included other industrial sectors, such as logging, transportation, manufacturing and fishing, encompassing all regions of Canada.

The special program phase of this audit activity was concluded in April, 1987, when it reached its goal of identifying those taxpayers who claimed excessive investment tax credit as a result of receiving substantial trade-in allowances on used equipment.

For the time being, the Department will continue to proceed through the normal routine audit program to address significant cases of trading over-allowances. But it has always been the position of the Department that the investment tax credit claim must be based on the actual cost of the property acquired and computed in a manner consistent with the economic reality of that transaction. This position is supported by case law and accounting principles, and is set out in a 1987 information circular which reiterated the long-standing positions of the Department as set out in previous bulletins.

However, to remove any uncertainty as to the Department's determination of capital cost in these circumstances, and in fairness to the taxpayer, the Department was prepared to have the matter settled by the courts if the taxpayers were to challenge the Department's interpretation of the Act. Such a case was brought forward but was withdrawn by the taxpayer who decided to accept the Department's position.

It is my hope that another representative test case will emerge in order that this matter can be resolved fairly and equitably by the courts, hopefully to everyone's satisfaction. I urge the Member and the affected community and individuals to do just that. We do not have control of the test case. We want the community to come forward with the test case so that the taxpayer can be treated fairly and honourably. My principle here is to try to bring a semblance of fairness and equity to everybody; the taxpayer, the Department and the Government. As I said at the outset in response to the Hon. Member, I look forward, if need be, to meeting with the organization, the groups, the individuals or any other Hon. Member to ensure that we can resolve the situation to the satisfaction of everyone involved.

VIA RAIL—PC TASK FORCE REPORT/REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL COMMITMENT

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I rise to express dissatisfaction with the answer given to me in the House on April 5 of this year by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) in regard to VIA Rail. The date is important since it is prior to the now infamous Budget which very clearly was designed to lead to the inevitable destruction of VIA Rail as the provider of passenger rail service in Canada.

I would like first to refer to the question that I put to the Minister and the answer that I received. I told the Minister of Transport:

> When the Liberals tried to cut the deficit by taking apart VIA Rail, just like this Government appears to be set on doing, the now Deputy Prime Minister took a PC Task Force across this country in defence of VIA Rail. Its report entitled "The Last Straw" concluded that the federal Government has a responsibility to ensure that rail passenger services in Canada be retained, modernized, and expanded as an important part of our national transportation system.

If my memory serves me correctly the Conservative Party ran on that as part of its platform plank in 1984. I will give the Party credit for this, immediately after it was elected it did reinstate services which had been cut by the former Liberal Government. However, that is where the situation ends.

I asked the Minister on April 5 if the Government would live up to its report and its promises as stated in 1984 by ensuring that VIA will not only receive the funds necessary to maintain its existing operations but funds to modernize its operations.

The Minister stated:

> The answer was that any decision concerning VIA Rail or any other Crown corporation for that matter will be made in due time.

Due time came along fairly soon with the Budget. The Budget indicated that there would be a reduction in the level of subsidy to VIA Rail. In fact, it turns out that that reduction has a value of approximately $1.2 billion over the next five years. Depending on who one talks to that reduction could have a number of results.

The worst case scenario is that because of the ever decreasing dollars available from the federal coffers that it will not be five years from now that VIA as we know it as a national passenger rail system will cease to exist but it might be this fall. I am aware that on June 15 VIA Rail will increase its prices for every passenger, whether that be a day coach passenger, an overnight passenger, or what have you, by 10 per cent. The last time prices were raised by 10 per cent VIA Rail lost in excess of 700,000 passengers. VIA Rail knows this. The Government knows this. I am sure that is part and parcel of the over-all plan for the destruction of VIA Rail.

The Government has said it will protect nine routes where the people who live along those routes have no other alternative in terms of transportation. They are captive to rail. However, when it comes down to that final year, when there will be only $250 million of subsidy available to VIA, many of us believe that all that it will be able to afford to operate will be those nine routes. That means no Atlantic, no Transcontinental and that the run from Jasper to Vancouver will be gone from the national system.

• (1825)

It may mean that the corridor, Windsor, Toronto, Ottawa, Montreal, Quebec City is also gone. In addition, there is the collective agreement reality between VIA Rail and some of its employees. That makes the cost of shutting down the system extremely expensive as a means of protecting the workers, who will sort of feel like they were employees of CN Route, as they have been transferred over from CN to VIA, or CP to VIA, and who now find after a very few years that their jobs are going out the window or have been dropped off at the end of the—I would say caboose, but that is gone too.

This Government has made a conscious decision to eliminate rail passenger services as a national system. It is talking about provincialization. I hope there is no province that says yes.

I wrote to the Premiers right after the budget decision and said: "If you do that then you are falling into the trap once again of allowing the federal Government to offload national programs and put them to the provinces where the provincial taxpayers have to pay the tab."

I say to you, Madam Speaker, and to the Government of Canada, VIA Rail is extremely important. It is the only method of travel for hundreds of thousands of Canadians. It is a great tourist opportunity. The Government is wrong in what it is doing. What it is doing is driving the last spike through the heart of VIA Rail. Not only should it be ashamed of itself for doing it, but it should reconsider what it is doing, live up to its own promises to the Canadian people and make sure that VIA Rail continues to exist.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Madam Speaker, the Government appreciates the concerns of those who have expressed their support for rail passenger services. However, I think it is fair to say that the Government has come to the conclusion that Canadian taxpayers can no longer afford ever-increasing subsidies to rail passenger services.

Since 1984, the Government has contributed $600 million towards capital investment to the modernization of VIA's services. However, the operating subsidies have continued to increase. Over the past four years, total federal subsidies to VIA have increased from $607 million in 1985 to $641 million in 1988.

On May 9, 1989, the Government announced that VIA had been asked to prepare and submit by June 30, 1989, a new business plan with respect to the new reference levels for the corporation. These reference levels are, and I would like to read them into the record: $541 million for 1989-90; $435 million for 1990-91; $394 million for 1991-92; $275 million for 1992-93; and $250 million for 1993-94.

The new reference levels reflect the Government's commitment to expenditure reduction and restraint.

The Government expects the corporation to consider all available options in the development of the business plan, including productivity improvements, fare increases, the take-over of services by other interested parties, service reductions and route abandonments.

The Canadian Government's new policy approach for VIA ensures that rail passenger service will be maintained to remote localities which have no other year-round means of transportation. Service will be protected to truly isolated communities along the following remote routes: Jasper to Prince Rupert, The Pas to Lynn Lake, Wabowden to Churchill, Winnipeg to Churchill, Winnipeg to Capreol, Sudbury to White River, Senneterre to Cochrane, Montreal to Senneterre and Montreal to Jonquiere.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 10 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 6.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

CORRECTION OF COMMENTS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Yesterday in the House of Commons during Question Period, on the basis of information that had been given to me, I made reference to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) having commented in the past on an RCMP inquiry into Mr. Sinclair Stevens.

Later, in Question Period, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) pointed out that there had been no such RCMP inquiry into Mr. Stevens' activities. The Minister of Finance is, of course, quite right. There was of course only the Parker Commission.

I accept the correction and would want the record corrected immediately because I would not want to mislead the House.

FORGIVENESS OF DEBTS (SUB-SAHARAN AFRICA) ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations) moved that Bill C-10, an Act relating to the forgiveness of debts incurred or assumed in respect of certain official development assistance loans made by the Government of Canada to the governments of certain countries in sub-Saharan Africa, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

She said: Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak very briefly today to the Bill tabled in the House for the purpose of forgiving the debts incurred or assumed in respect of official development assistance by a number of sub-Saharan countries in Africa.

My comments will mainly concern the three following points: First, the decision to have this Bill approved by Parliament is in line with Canada's policy on Third World debt problems; second, the Bill will make it possible for Canada to honour the commitments it made sometime ago; and finally, this measure has practically no impact on our country's Budget.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure all parliamentarians are aware of the serious problems confronting debtor countries in the Third World.

I will not provide an in-depth analysis of the causes although I will name a few: the oil crises of the past fifteen years, sagging market prices for raw materials, problems encountered in obtaining access to the markets of industrialized countries, soaring interest rates, and so forth.

It is important to understand that these are factors over which debtor countries have very little control. However, the debts are a tremendous burden for the African countries concerned, which are already faced with formidable obstacles, including vulnerable ecosystems, increasing desertification and a precarious food production system.

In absolute terms, the debts of sub-Saharan countries are not as onerous as those of Latin American countries.

However, considering the level of economic development and scarce resources of the countries concerned, the impact is far more devastating.

• (1010)

[English]

Canada has already taken many initiatives in favour of debt distressed countries. The steps now being proposed are therefore part of a process that our country set in motion during the previous decade.

In 1977 we forgave the Official Development Assistance debts of 12 countries on the list of the least developed countries. Since April, 1986 we have been providing all new bilateral development assistance to all countries in the form of grants only, rather than loans that would add to the debt burden of Third World countries.

In 1986 Canada announced a moratorium on Official Development Assistance debt repayment for African countries that are implementing a structural adjustment program.

In 1987 Parliament also forgave the ODA debts of Togo, Mauritania, and the now defunct East Africa Community. The international community, especially African countries, welcomed those initiatives. They viewed them as proof of our country's commitment to help distressed countries.

At the 1987 Venice Summit, Canada announced that it would provide help to the poorest countries, and at the Toronto Summit last year Canada continued to play a leadership role concerning solutions to the debt problem.

Within the relevant international fora we are encouraging a flexible approach, including the possibility of rescheduling repayments and utilizing concessional interest rates on short-term loans to low income countries.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in March 1988 I tabled our Official Development Assistance Strategy, entitled: Sharing our Future. For the first time, this document includes an Official Development Assistance Charter, in which Canada has made helping the world's poorest countries a priority.

Clearly, the Bill before the House today is entirely in line with that objective.

Furthermore, Canada has decided to facilitate the implementation of structural adjustment programs in debtor countries. The programs will help these countries to improve their economic and financial situation, while remaining sensitive to the needs of the most vulnerable groups.

The proposed legislation also follows through on commitments we made before two international forums. You may recall, Mr. Speaker, that in September 1987, at the Sommet de la Francophonie held in Québec, Canada announced its intention to forgive the debts of a certain number of sub-Saharan member countries.

We announced a similar measure for the benefit of African members of the Commonwealth, at a meeting of Commonwealth heads of State which we hosted shortly afterwards in Vancouver.

However to respond to the pressing needs of these countries, Canada must honour its commitments without delay.

The countries targeted by the proposed legislation are: Cameroon, the Ivory Coast, the Congo, Gabon, Ghana, Kenya, Madagascar, Nigeria, Senegal, Swaziland, Zaire, Zambia and Zimbabwe.

Since we must assume that when preparing their budgets, these countries allowed for the consequences of the measures announced by Canada, they would find it very hard to understand, and with them the rest of the international community, any failure on our part to honour these commitments.

[English]

I now turn to the third point to which I referred earlier, namely that the proposed legislation has virtually no tangible impact on Canada's budgetary situation. This is without question an important element in the current context. One has to understand that our country's Official Development Assistance loans are highly concessional in nature. As a practical matter, the grant element makes up over 90 per cent of those loans. They are considered budgetary items, which means that Parliament has already appropriated the necessary resources for the loans through budgetary estimates. Therefore, the removal of those loans will not entail any new appropriations, nor will it impact on the cumulative deficit.

I would like to add—and this is another important point—that if the sums in question were repaid, Canada's Official Development Assistance disbursements would be increased by corresponding amounts. This occurs because Canada's Official Development Assistance, as a proportion of our Gross National Product, is based on net disbursements, that is, disbursements less Official Development Assistance loan repayments.

[Translation]

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to emphasize again that this Bill continues a policy Canada has long followed. We are convinced that the African countries concerned cannot return to the path of true development unless their debt burden is lightened. A consensus was reached on this subject very recently at a joint meeting of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund.

To be sure, the debts owed to Canada are only a part of the total indebtedness of Third World countries. Nevertheless, we are convinced that in honouring its commitments, our country will encourage other creditor countries to do their share. That is what has just happened at the Francophone Summit in Dakar, when French President François Mitterrand announced that his country would cancel the official development assistance debts incurred by several poor African countries. We are pleased with this decision, which is similar to the initiatives that Canada announced in 1987 at the Francophone Summit in Québec City and the Commonwealth meeting in Vancouver.

We note with satisfaction that the trend to concrete action in this crucial area is growing. We again express the wish that other countries will take similar action. For its part, Canada continues to consider other ways to act and contribute to the solution of this pressing problem.

[English]

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you for the opportunity for responding to the proposed Bill C-10, which will forgive debt in 13 sub-Saharan African countries.

I would like to say at the outset that it is indeed difficult to vote against such a Bill. If anybody has been watching, for example, The Journal program which is focusing on the plight of people in the Sudan and will continue this evening, one will recognize the dire need of so many hundreds of thousands of people in Africa; not just Africa but throughout the developing world, the Third World.

In the past years Canadians have responded very openly and generously to the plight of people in the Third World. When polls are taken, they indicate that over 70 per cent of Canadians support the generous past experience and policies of the Canadian Government in the provision of overseas Official Development Assistance to developing nations. They are scandalized by the recent cut-backs of this Government in its official overseas development assistance.

I have two problems with this Bill which I would like to address today. The first one is that I would not, standing here proposing to support Bill C-10, want to suggest that I am in any way supporting this Government in trying to recuperate its tarnished image in relationship to its non-support of Third World countries. In fact, Bill C-10 amounts to a big zero. It says nothing new. The Bill was first suggested in May, 1986 when we put a moratorium on debt in African countries. Since that time, and as per our policy from 1977 that any loans or payments made to Third World countries would only be accepted by them as grants, those countries have not had to make any payments to this country. Therefore, this Bill purporting now to forgive loans is a zero. Mr. Speaker, if you subtract zero from zero you will always have zero, and that is what this Bill represents.

• (1020)

The Government has been extremely irresponsible in dealing with Third World debt problems. Third World debt is one of most serious problems that the world faces today, yet the Government has no policy. It abrogates all its responsibility for dealing with the problem to the international financial institutions. That is not good enough.

The substance of Bill C-10 is meaningless. Little has been said so far about the Government's cuts to Overseas Development Assistance, but more will be said because 70 per cent of Canadians will not forget what the Minister has permitted to occur in Third World countries in terms of our caring and concern and the outward signs of that to Third World countries.

As the Minister has stated, the Bill has no impact on the budget of our country. This Bill is definitely not representing in any way any new generosity on the part of the Government. In the Government's own documents with regard to this issue it states: "The financial costs of the legislation are virtually nil. As a result of the concessional nature of ODA loans, ODA loans are considered budgetary, meaning that Parliament has appropriated the necessary resources for the loans through budgetary Estimates. Removal of these loans from the accounts of Canada will therefore not entail any new appropriations nor will it impact on the cumulative deficit."

In this Bill the amount that is suggested to be forgiven is approximately $672 million. Had that been repaid, it would automatically have been added to CIDA's budget to ensure that Canada's net ODA levels did not diminish due to debt repayment. However, I reiterate that zero from zero is always zero.

In looking at the Bill and the forgiveness of debt of $672 million, it is interesting to compare that figure with the total debt in only three of the thirteen African countries listed in this Bill.

As of 1986, the debt in Nigeria alone was $16.6 billion; the debt in the Ivory Coast was $7.4 billion; and the debt in Zaire was $4.6 billion. Therefore, the supposed forgiveness of $672 million has very little significance. It is the greater debt that is the true burden of those countries,concerning which the Government refuses to confront and develop policies.

With regard to the Government and its lack of commitment to the Third World countries and also dealing with debt, it is interesting to look at the actual record of the Government with this Budget. Normally, Official Development Assistance amounts to approximately 3 per cent of Government expenditures. With this Budget, Official Development Assistance has absorbed 29 per cent of all the expenditure cuts made by the Government. Where are the cuts?

If we propose to show that we have a concern for African countries, it is interesting to look at the cuts in the Budget. For example, and I remind Members to think of the starving in Africa, bilateral and multilateral food aid cuts amount to $65 million this year. Where is the conscience of the Government?

International humanitarian assistance has been cut by $25 million. International NGOs, non–governmental organizations, those that reach out to the most in need in their own countries, have had their budget cut by $3 million. Voluntary sector support has been cut by $87 million. The budgets of Anglophone Africa and Francophone Africa have been cut by $33 million. This Bill represents zero.

What the Government has done through its Budget cuts to Official Development Assistance has indirectly and directly caused a diminishing of potential aid assistance to Africa of $203 million. The total cuts to Official Development Assistance this year amount to $360 million. That is $360 million less than last year's expenditures in ODA.

We expected that ODA would go up to $3.1 billion this year, if we had maintained our level of increasing ratios. Instead, Official Development Assistance expenditures will sit at $2.44 billion or .43per cent of our Gross National Product.

Years ago, when Mr. Pearson was Prime Minister, he set the benchmark for the ratio of ODA to GNP for the developing nations. He suggested that .7 per cent ratio ODA to GNP was the target that we should all be attempting to achieve. As a result of the Budget, we are experiencing the third drawback from that target put in place by this Government. As a matter of fact, the Government no longer even talks about .7 per cent ratio as an objective we are trying to achieve. By our calculations, we might be able to achieve such a target by the year 2040. However, in committee, members of the Government have suggested that it is unrealistic for us to even think of attempting to achieve .7 per cent ODA to GNP ratio. I believe that that is simply unconscionable. It is being heard by Canadians, and they will not forget.

Canada now ranks last among middle income developed countries as to its level of ODA provided. We are last when compared to other countries such as the four Nordic countries and Belgium, France and the Netherlands. Canada now joins the United States as being the only developed country that is cutting back its ODA–GNP ratio. Perhaps that is our country's new benchmark and model for developed nations.

The debt problem exists not only for sub–Saharan African countries. It exists world–wide. The world–wide debt now stands at more than $1 trillion U.S. In the developing nations of the world we have felt that we have been assisting Third World countries, helping them to become equal, and that we were providing them with economic and social justice. We have striven for those objectives over the years.

However, at the moment we are failing because when one looks at world-wide cash flows, the direction of net cash flow is not from the developed nations to the developing nations but it is quite the reverse. Annually, the developing nations are contributing $30 billion to the developed nations of the world. As the Minister says: "debtor countries have no control over interest rates" which are the factor that contributes very much to the realignment of net cash flows in the world. The Third World countries are defenceless against increasing rises in interest rates. Developed countries have some control over interest rates.

I repeat that the federal Government is taking no responsibility for addressing these problems as they affect Third World countries.

In the 1980s, developing countries have experienced a 30 per cent decline in their real per capita incomes. This decline is equivalent to what Canadians and other developed nations might have experienced during the dirty thirties of the depression. However, when we were going through that most difficult period, we did not have those additional problems of droughts, food shortages and rising debt. We did not experience at the same rate the institutional deterioration that the Third World is experiencing now.

This year, 40,000 children are dying in this world every day from malnutrition and disease. Canada has abrogated its responsibility to deal with international debt problems. It has abrogated this responsibility to international financial institutions which receive in the order of 18 per cent of our ODA.

International financial institutions have instituted programs like structural adjustment programs, or SAPS, economic recovery programs, or ERPS. SAPS and ERPS all give us indigestion and they are doing nothing to assist Third World countries. They are most inappropriate. These programs have produced nothing but deterioration of the standard of living and have added to the inequality and injustices that exist in Third World countries.

Let us look at some of the background of Bill C-10. It was my honour and privilege in June, 1986, to be present at the United Nations Special Session which addressed the economic crisis in Africa. I was present as a member of the non-governmental organization community in Canada. The purpose of our community being at the United Nations was to afford non-government organizations from Africa the opportunity to be present and to be heard in that forum which was discussing the crisis in their countries.

We realize that the people of Africa have very little say in what their governments do and the decisions and policies that are taken by their governments. Therefore, it was our concern as Canadians, as non-governmental organizations of a developed country, to afford these non-governmental organizations of Africa the opportunity to be heard and to speak.

It was with pride at that time that I heard our former Minister of External Relations stand up and make her statement to the program of Africa 2,000 in which she set a moratorium on debt repayments. I cannot help but believe she must have taken some of her directions in making this statement from our ambassador to the United Nations at that time.

There was a dialogue and a debate going on at the United Nations at the time, whereby leaders of large developed countries such as Britain, the United States and Germany, were suggesting that the issues of debt and financial matters, when discussing an economic crisis in Africa, had to be left within the realm of the international financial institutions and could not be discussed at the United Nations. Our Government, by presenting its statement, boldly said that yes, indeed, debt was an appropriate topic of discussion at the United Nations.

The Minister made the following statement:

> Today I am announcing that Canada is offering to sub-Saharan countries a moratorium on repayment of these loans for an initial period of five years. We are prepared to extend this measure in five-year segments until the year 2000. In this way, we wish to help in providing all the countries of sub-Saharan Africa that face serious external payments difficulties and that have demonstrated a commitment to undertake necessary economic adjustment, the room to manoeuvre that they need to put their economies back on a solid foundation.
> On a country-by-country basis, we are prepared to immediately begin discussing the application of this measure within the framework of World Bank Consultative Groups or in other appropriate forums.

I draw to the attention of the House the Minister's reference to putting a moratorium on repayments to African countries that have demonstrated a commitment to undertake necessary economic adjustment.

It changes. At the Venice summit in June, 1987, comments were made again about this moratorium. The Government proposed a paper to be discussed, which dealt with debt relief. It said:

> The most dramatic and helpful action would be to convert all existing ODA loans to grants—Another option would be to extend the moratorium on repayments for a given number of years or until a country achieves a certain level of development as measured by the objectives indicators outlined later in this paper—such relief would be extended to countries meeting agreed criteria and undertaking serious adjustment efforts under the IMF or World Bank.

This statement was further elaborated upon on June 30 by the present Minister when she referred to Bill C-62. She said:

> The non-repayment period could also be extended by another five years if the economy of these countries showed no signs of recovery.

This is certainly a different tone from that in which the moratorium and forgiveness was originally suggested. Countries that have demonstrated a commitment to undertake necessary economic adjustment is quite different from a statement that says that the Government would provide debt relief to countries that showed no sign of recovery.

It is very important that countries that are experiencing debt and that do experience moratoriums or forgiveness of debt do exhibit some concern for changing their own internal policies. When it was originally stated that our moratorium was based on that fact, we supported it.

There are many countries in Africa that do not stand for equality and justice in their own countries. Anyone visiting those countries would have a difficult time experiencing social justice after seeing the presidents of these countries drive down crowded city streets at 90 miles an hour in stretch limousine Mercedes. Unfortunately many of these countries, not just in their economic and justice policies, but on human rights, exhibit a lack of caring for the people.

When Canada makes concessions, it should be more thoughtful and responsible. I have attempted to discover exactly what commitments Canada was imposing on the sub-Saharan African countries, on a country by country basis, to see whose debt is being forgiven in Bill C-10. I could find nothing. There do not appear to have been any conditions attached, despite the Minister's original statement.

I have done research and I have asked the Library of Parliament to help me in this. I have found nothing. However, I refer to a Senate report of 1987 entitled: "Canada, the International Financial Institutions and the Debt Problem of Developing Countries". This a quote from that document:

> The Canadian government has taken steps to lighten the official debt load of a number of low-income countries. During the Conference on International Economic and Co-operation in 1977 Canada forgave its outstanding loans to the least-developed countries, including eight African countries, for a total forgiveness of $310 million of debt. Since that time all CIDA projects in these least-developed countries in sub-Saharan Africa have been on a grant basis. Further, in 1986 Canada offered a 15-year moratorium on payments of principal and interest of the ODA debt of other low-income sub-Saharan African nations where Canada had continued to make concessional loans rather than grants. Debt of this nature totalled $700 million and involved forgoing $250 million in repayments.
> Initially the Government offered a five-year moratorium, but announced that it was prepared to extend the measure in five-year segments until the year 2000. The Government asked only that the African countries affected show their commitment to introducing economic reforms.

None of them, it appears, have voluntarily offered to do this. The international financial institutions have imposed structural adjustment programs on them, which have been a total failure to these countries. The Government has taken no responsibility in trying to support actions on the part of sub-Saharan African countries to introduce their own reforms to bring about greater justice and equality within their own countries.

When the African nations came to the United Nations in June of 1986, they had met prior to that meeting to put together a statement which is called: "Africa's Priority Programme for Economic Recovery". It outlines what they wanted to do to bring about adjustment in their own countries. At the United Nations in June of 1986, the developed nations of the world were impressed. We were supportive of these statements that came out of African countries. They state in the priority statement: "The successful implementation of the Priority Programme will lay the foundation for durable structural changes, improve levels of productivity and ensure the rapid recovery of the African economies".

It suggested immediate measures that could be taken to combat food emergencies, such as creating and sustaining national emergency preparedness, effecting early warning systems, establishing flexible and efficient regional networks of crop protection, and establishing national food security arrangements. Their program suggested medium-term measures, raising the level of investment in agriculture, increasing food production, establishing and protecting arable land and rendering it more productive.

These nations wanted to address their own programs and problems as they saw them. They wanted to devote time and resources to human resource development. They wanted to change radically the educational system at all levels to ensure that the skills, knowledge and attitudes that are relevant to Africa's developmental needs were generated. They wanted to intensify efforts to promote mass literacy and adult learning programs. They wanted to utilize efficiently manpower resources, including measures to reverse the brain drain, et cetera. They wanted to have the people of their country participate in development. In their own program they had put an emphasis on involving women in development.

All of these programs that they wanted to institute, however, required the assistance of the developed world. The international community responded by stating:

> The international community is aware that the process of development being initiated by the African countries, as reflected in the Priority Programme, has to be supplemented by complementary actions of the international community through intensified co-operation and substantially increased support—
> The international community recognizes the magnitude of Africa's debt and the severe and restrictive burden which this has placed on many African countries. It realizes that measures have to be taken to alleviate this burden and to enable those countries to concentrate on the full implementation of priorities. In addressing problems arising from such debt, existing mechanisms should respond flexibly and be improved as appropriate.

The Government has decreased in its Budget the level of overseas Official Development Assistance to sub-Saharan African countries. It has not responded as it originally committed itself to respond on a country-by-country basis, helping the African countries to meet their own objectives. It has not responded to the debt problems in those countries.

The Senate of Canada in 1987 addressed the problem of debt. The Government has not responded and taken action as a result of their report. It is worthwhile to mention some of the remarks that were made in it. As I stated before, the Senate report of 1987 is entitled: "Canada, the International Financial Institutions and the Debt Problem of Developing Countries". The Senate report suggests that there must be a dialogue between creditor and debtor countries. The report states:

> The Committee considers that the time may have come for creditor governments to lift their objections to direct dialogue with debtor governments.
> The Committee recommends that the Canadian government publicly endorse and advocate the principle of a dialogue within the IMF's Interim Committee involving creditor and debtor Governments.
>
> —the Committee recommends the creation of a small group of distinguished persons from North and South which might be known as the Advisory Group on International Indebtedness—
>
> The tasks of this Advisory Group would be: to monitor the evolution of debt problems; to relate them to other aspects of the world economy; to comment on the performance of the IMF and the World Bank and their shortcomings; to strengthen the commitment of debtor countries governments to better management and adjustment; to increase the awareness of the problems of debt particularly of the poorest countries; and to help focus the attention of creditor countries on remedial measures.

A great deal of the basic work on how this country could profitably address the debt problems internationally and world-wide are suggested in this Senate report.

Other groups in the world have looked at the problem and have come up with their own recommendations. I would like to quote from a group called CIDSE which represents 14 Catholic development organizations located in Europe and North America. They suggest:

> A debtor country is considered credit worthy if it accepts the IMF's "Recommendations for Adjustment" in a Letter of Intent.
> Typical IMF adjustment measures include: limitation of the national budget deficit through measures to curb the growth of public spending such as the reduction of subsidies, price increases for public services, staff cuts, restriction of the money supply and de-regulation of interest rates; limitation of wage increases;

Experience has shown that adjustment policies based on IMF's criteria had only limited success, whilst their social costs have been very high.

I would like to spend a few moments addressing the irresponsible abrogation of this Government's responsibility to deal with debt problems to the IMF and other international financial institutions. What we do need is structural adjustment with a human face. However, structural adjustment the way it is affecting Third World countries now is having very deleterious effects on the populations of these countries.

Health costs in developing nations have had to be reduced 50 per cent world-wide. Education expenditures in developing nations world-wide have had to be reduced 25 per cent. I mentioned before that the net cash flows from developing nations to developed nations now amount to $30 billion per annum. Instead of the developed nations helping the Third World countries, the Third World countries are now helping us with cash flows to us. We are all backwards and upside down. The world needs to take a new look at structural adjustment.

Environmental degradation is carrying on at a heavy pace. The population is rising. If people do not know that their children are going to live, the population will rise. When people know they have security, that they can feed their children, and that their children will live in health and prosperity and survive, population rates immediately decrease. The Third World is experiencing tremendous food scarcity. There is deprivation of food causing tremendous costs to the future of the world in the disabilities that are resulting.

The present results of the relationship between the developed and the developing nations has caused incredibly huge rises in food shortages, housing shortages, water degradation, health care degradation and education degradation. Illiteracy is increasing. The opportunities in these countries to the poor of their countries are decreasing rapidly. We have had structural adjustment but we have had no revitalization and growth. Adjustment must be reconsidered. Debt world-wide must be rationally and humanely confronted.

This Government introduces bills to forgive debt but takes no leadership in dealing with the root causes of poverty and death. Debt forgiveness will not prevent new, unmanageable debt from mounting. As the world's poor become poorer, injustices become more evident. Frustration inevitably mounts. Poverty causes tension and violence and mounting poverty and inequality become a security issue. Desperation to have access to our world's natural resources will have irreversible environmental impacts. We will all lose.

I would like to conclude by saying that Bill C-10 is meaningless posturing. It highlights this Government's irresponsible attitude to a major world problem. I support this Bill but I implore the Government to address debt problems world-wide and fill a debt policy vacuum.

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in support of Bill C-10, although I think it is somewhat ironic that we are forgiving a debt that we have already acknowledged could never be repaid. It is the old saw, that you cannot get blood from a stone.

In beginning my comments, because I only have a short time, I would just like to outline the direction I want to take on my response to this Bill.

First, I want to talk about the history of how sub-Saharan Africa incurred such a debt, how it got into the place it is in now and our complicity in getting it there. I then want to talk about the complexity that the subject demands, the definitions of terms such as structural adjustment and IFI, the International Financial Institutions, the IMF. For most Canadians, these terms are so obscure that I think they require definition. I also believe that our complicity in those financial institutions should be explained.

Then I would like to go to Canada's role in the forgiveness of debt. While the Government and Canadians generally should be applauded for the forgiveness of debt, we should be able to see this not in isolation. We have to see it in the context of the recent cut-backs to foreign aid, Official Development Assistance. To forgive the debt and then not to increase foreign aid is a contradiction.

To begin, then, I will just focus on the history. I have personal knowledge of the effects of the debt problem in Africa. I have travelled to the Sudan and to Eritrea. One of the most graphic pictures of the polarization that occurs in a country under IMF supervision as to its internal policies came to me when I walked out of my hotel in Khartoum. There in the street was a crippled beggar child—we do not know whether he was deliberately crippled—begging. He was beside a very scrawny donkey, and next to that donkey was a huge white Mercedes Benz limousine. That is what we see when the IMF runs things in Africa. There is no understanding of what IMF policies do. There is no understanding of the humanity that is harmed by their policies.

Julius Nyere, the former President of Tanzania, said that there is a way of focusing on the real reasons why this debt has happened. The Third World is blamed for its own poverty. The Third World heavy debt burden arose through a combination of modest development ambitions and external events beyond the control of developing countries.

What happened after the first oil shock of 1973 is that many Third World countries borrowed to ease their adjustment to the new fuel prices. Credit was easy to obtain as western banks looked for profitable uses of the OPEC surpluses which were being entrusted to them. I know that kind of dynamic as well, because prior to working for a non-governmental organization I was a banker. I know how banks work. When banks have surplus cash, they want to put it out there to make money from it. That is what happened. The Third World bought into it.

Nyere said: "The resulting huge debts are a national problem, not only for the debtor countries". He said: "We undertook to repay and honour the demands that we do so, but we are increasingly unable to do so because of the changes in world conditions since the debts were incurred. The debts are therefore also a problem for the developed countries".

That is the focus of what my main argument on this Bill is going to be.

We are in this together. We cannot see a forgiveness of sub-Saharan African debt in isolation from what is occurring in our own country. It is that connection with the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank that we have to be cognizant of. In this interdependent world, if we do not understand those connections, we can go down the same road as they are going down.

In the moments that are allowed me before Question Period, I just want to draw the attention of the House to that interconnectiveness. Our own Budget deficit and the Government's approach to attacking the Budget deficit has parallels in the Third World. One agency, OXFAM Canada, likened our own Budget to a self-imposed IMF structural adjustment. On that note, I will draw my comments to a close and hope that at some future time I will be able to continue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will proceed to statements by Members with the Hon. Member for South Shore.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

[English]

THE FISHERY

STATE OF NORTHERN COD STOCK

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, the report of the Harris task force released today indicates, and I quote from page 21:

> The state of the stock does not support a conclusion that anything drastic or threatening has occurred to the northern cod stock to date.

However, measures will have to be put in place including, it would seem, a reduction in next year's TAC to ensure that the stock again begins to grow.

Over the next few months I expect we will see various suggestions put forth as to measures that should be put in place to deal with the problem. One measure already suggested by some that would be absolutely, unequivocally, completely unacceptable to all Nova Scotians would be any diminution whatever in the percentage of the historic participation, a participation that dates back well over two centuries, of Nova Scotian fishing vessels and Nova Scotia fishermen in this vitally important fishery, which Nova Scotians helped develop and from which the Nova Scotian economy and Nova Scotian fish plants and fish plant workers benefit so much.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNREST IN LEBANON—CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN CEASEFIRE

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, after 15 years of strife, Lebanon has become a scarred pained victim of aggression and destruction. This country has lost more than its status as the pearl of the Middle East. It has lost many of its precious young and its men and women. The strife is creating great stress on Lebanese Canadians and their families as a result of the devastating attacks and bombings to which Lebanon and its people have been subjected.

The unrest continues as a number of attempts to guarantee a ceasefire have failed. Lebanese families yearn for peace in their native land. We share their hopes for peace while understanding their pain and trauma.

Canadians believe their country has always shown an understanding and constructive face in situations like that facing Lebanon. As a reasoned peacekeeper in the world and to ensure that Canada's views are part of world opinion, I urge the Government to take whatever steps are necessary to be part of a successful ceasefire undertaking in this battle weary region of the world.

THE STANLEY CUP

CONGRATULATIONS TO THE CALGARY FLAMES

Mr. Doug Fee (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my riding is situated exactly half way between Calgary and Edmonton. We have an awful lot of hockey fans and you can understand that during the regular NHL season the loyalties of my constituents are split fairly evenly.

Today, the long NHL season is over. Last night, without doubt, the two best teams in the NHL concluded an excellent series. The Montreal Canadians put forth a tremendous effort but Calgary wanted victory more. There is no true hockey fan in this country who did not have to feel a thrill when Lanny McDonald held up the Stanley Cup last night.

We want to join with all Canadians and hockey fans everywhere in the world in congratulating the best team in professional hockey, the 1989 Stanley Cup champions, the Calgary Flames.

FAMILY VIOLENCE

INITIATIVES OF GOVERNMENT

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, the Government's family violence initiatives amount to only $10 per battered woman per year. This is not enough to educate society on the seriousness of wife assault.

Recently, a man was sentenced to 90 days, his sentence to be served on weekends, for beating his wife with a baseball bat. She spent one month in a coma.

Sometimes judges may think they are preserving the family unit by handing down lenient sentences, but the family unit is already destroyed by violence. There are not enough programs for men who batter.

Sometimes judges may think lenient sentences are appropriate because the batterer is the breadwinner, but it is dangerous for women and children to be financially dependent on a batterer. Some 40 per cent of all homicides in this country involve domestic violence. Women need economic equality, not dependence on abusers.

The Government has shown itself incompetent in dealing with the problems of family abuse. How many women must lie unconscious or die before we see government action?

CONGRATULATIONS TO THE CALGARY FLAMES

Mr. Charles A. Langlois (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, as a representative of a Québec constituency, I am pleased to extend my hearty congratulations to the Calgary Flames, their supporters and the Hon. Members from Alberta sitting in the House of Commons, who showed unshakable confidence in their team.

Mr. Speaker, the Montreal Canadiens also deserve all our admiration for the determination they displayed throughout the season, during the playoffs and in the final series.

Québecers and Montrealers last night showed boundless confidence in their champions and also warmly congratulated the Calgary Flames.

SCHOOL SAFETY PATROLLERS

THIRTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF NATIONAL JAMBOREE

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, today marks the thirtieth anniversary of the National School Safety Patrol Jamboree and over 40 years of the School Safety Patrol in Canada. Two thousand school safety patrollers from across Canada are here to celebrate their decades of service to children in communities from coast to coast. They will be joined tomorrow by 4,000 more from eastern Ontario and western Québec.

Three patrollers especially deserve our recognition for outstanding bravery in the performance of their duties. This morning Elizabeth Jordan, Sebastien Thibault and David Tonn were each presented with a Canadian flag and the Canadian Automobile Association's Gold Lifesaving Medal for saving the life of another person in imminent danger.

I am particularly proud to share with Elizabeth, Sebastien and David the privilege of having been one of the now millions of young children who brave the cold, heat and danger of our streets to protect lives.

I am pleased to report that the officer responsible for the first school patrol in Ottawa is alive and well and living in Ottawa West.

No crossing guard program at whatever cost has been able to match the safety record of these young volunteers. There has never been one child fatality at a crossing guarded by a school safety patroller.

THE STANLEY CUP

CONGRATULATIONS TO THE CALGARY FLAMES

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary Northeast): Mr. Speaker, Calgary once again proved it is a city of champions by winning the Stanley Cup.

The Calgary Flames demonstrated clearly that they were not only number one in the regular season, but that they are also number one in the Stanley Cup final with a 4–2 victory over the Montreal Canadians last night. They brought the Stanley Cup to Calgary in six games, and this marks the first time in Canadian history that the Stanley Cup has been won by a visiting team at the Montreal Forum.

The Calgary Flames played a superb game and showed superior technique. Congratulations to the team for the hard work, to the owners for the contribution to the community spirit in Calgary, and to the fans for their loyalty and support to an outstanding team. Thank you Calgary Flames.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

FINAL REPORT OF WORLD COMMISSION ON ENVIRONMENT AND DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, on Saturday, June 3, there will a world-wide five-hour television broadcast on our common future. It will deal with issues of global concern such as famine, deforestation, ozone depletion, global warming, famine, flooding, and drought. The theme of the broadcast is the final report of the World Commission on Environment and Development.

The Standing Committee on the Environment yesterday unanimously adopted my motion directing the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) to take the necessary steps to have CBC National Television broadcast the event. Participating heads of government include the Prime Ministers of Norway, Canada, France, India, Italy and China; the Secretary General of the United Nations; the President of the World Bank; the Director General of the International Labour Organization; and the Director General for the World Health Organization, to name a few.

The meek excuse of CBC is that City TV in Toronto has broadcast rights. Canadians outside Toronto have a right to know about our common future, and this Government has a responsibility to order CBC to broadcast it. Failure to do so will reveal that this Government is a fraud. The public of Canada have a right to know what needs to be done to save our planet.

SCHOOL SAFETY PATROLLERS

CONGRATULATIONS TO LIFESAVING MEDAL RECIPIENT

Mr. David Bjornson (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, as part of the National School Safety Patrol Jamboree, I had the privilege of presenting David Tonn, son of Richard and Hildy Tonn of Winnipeg, with a flag in recognition of his being one of the three school safety patrol lifesaving medal recipients.

On November 30, 1988, on a dull, snowy day David was on afternoon school patrol. He had crossed a four year old Kindergarten student to the spot where his mother usually picked him up. David was waiting with the boy for the arrival of his mother. As the mother was late, she did not arrive at her usual spot, but instead stopped her car across the street. The child, upon seeing his mother, stepped on to the roadway right into the path of an oncoming car. David instantly reached out and pulled the child from serious injury back on to the sidewalk.

I would like to commend David Tonn publicly in the House of Commons today for his heroic efforts in saving the life of a young child.

THE STANLEY CUP

CONGRATULATIONS TO THE CALGARY FLAMES

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, it is now appropriate for us Montrealers to eat crow in public—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: —and admit that the Calgary Flames are the best team in professional hockey. Although both teams played well, we must recognize that the Flames outskated, outshot, outpassed, outbumped, outplayed, and outscored my beloved Canadians.

An Hon. Member: Outrageous.

• (1110)

Mr. Allmand: The Flames spirit and discipline was outstanding. To the players and management of the Calgary Flames, to the great Calgary fans, and to the Calgary Members of this House, especially the charming Member for Calgary Southwest (Mrs. Sparrow), from Montreal to Calgary my hearty congratulations for a great victory and a great season.

FINANCE

IMPACT OF RUMOURED RESIGNATION OF MINISTER

Mr. Garth Turner (Halton—Peel): Mr. Speaker, this week there were rumours in the international financial community that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was about to or had resigned.

The response to those rumours was dramatic. There was a big sell-off of Canadian dollars in the international monetary market in the Chicago Mercantile Exchange. The Canadian dollar dropped by almost two-thirds of a cent to its lowest level in five months. The Canadian money supply was devalued by $20 billion in a single day. As a result, the Bank of Canada was forced to increase its interest rate to 12.4 per cent in order to support the dollar.

This is clear evidence of the regard the financial community holds the Minister in. Canada is fortunate to have him as its Finance Minister. When the mere rumour of the man's resignation can impact on this country in the value of $20 billion, Canada cannot afford even the slightest chance that this man will abdicate his responsibilities.

FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

IMPACT ON JOBS

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, on numerous occasions in this House, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) have stood up and said that the Free Trade Agreement would bring tens of thousands of jobs to the people of Canada. Yesterday was the first occasion that we had in the committee to have the Minister for International Trade appear before us. He arrived with two deputies and 12 staff members.

A government member asked the Minister a question: "Could the Minister inform this committee how many new jobs have been created by the Free Trade Agreement?" The Minister could not provide one job or could not provide one investment to his own back-bencher. Later I asked the Minister the same question: "How many jobs were provided by the Free Trade Agreement?" He could not provide one or one company investment.

I want it on the record that the Government has admitted that while tens of thousands of jobs have been lost by the agreement, they have not record of one job being created by the Free Trade Agreement.

NATIONAL CHESS CHAMPIONSHIP

CONGRATULATIONS TO WINNERS

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, several months ago over 8,000 students across Canada entered a national chess competition to help raise money for projects in the Third World. Each participant donated $5 to build a sewer system in Liberia, helping children there to overcome disease.

Last weekend in Ottawa, the winners from each province played off and national champions were declared: Grade 1—Lefong Hua of St. Laurent, Québec; Grade 2—Victor Chernoff of Montreal, Québec; Grade 3—Laurent Gascon of Montreal, Québec; Grade 4—Anthony Castillo of Longueuil, Québec; Grade 5—Daniel Williams of Burlington, Ontario; Grade 6—Nicholas Soudre of Montreal, Québec; Grade 7—Alexandre Marcil, Longueuil, Québec; Grade 8—Martin Glass of Montreal, Québec; Grade 9—Adam Littke of Toronto, Ontario; Grade 10, Leonard Morrissey of St. Lawrence, Newfoundland; Grade 11—Nicolas Arsenault of Montreal, Québec; and Grade 12—Jonathan MacDonald of Saint John, New Brunswick.

The Calgary Flames won the hockey game, but the Québec team are chess champions.

NATO

NUCLEAR MISSILES—PROMOTION OF POSSIBLE ALTERNATIVES

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, NATO is presently undergoing a serious internal dispute about the United States Government's desire to introduce a new generation of tactical nuclear missiles to be stationed in West Germany. Canada's membership in NATO is valued, in part, for the opportunity it affords in the promotion of arms control and disarmament.

The Conservative Government should therefore be more active in this dispute by promoting possible NATO alternatives that could include: first, tying the modernization of these nuclear missiles with talks on substantial reductions in the Soviet Union's short-range nuclear arsenal and/or reductions in Warsaw Pact conventional forces; second, adopting a build-down strategy by phasing out other tactical nuclear weapons and only retaining modernized nuclear missiles; and third, substituting the modernization of these missiles with the introduction of non-nuclear smart technology weapons.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) should present these positions during the upcoming NATO meeting and thereafter inform this House about the outcome of any Canadian initiative.

MULTICULTURALISM

SEVENTY-FIRST ANNIVERSARY OF INDEPENDENCE OF ARMENIA

Ms. Barbara Greene (Don Valley North): Mr. Speaker, May 28 is the seventy-first anniversary of the independence of Armenia as declared in 1918.

Armenia has suffered a history of racially motivated genocide, betrayal, persecution, and terrorism. The dream of the Armenian people, however, has not been crushed and their struggle for recognition and independence continues.

The ideals of the Armenian people—freedom, democracy, and independence—are upheld by their descendants in Canada and around the world.

May 28 commemorates a nation that has suffered extreme adversity and has risen to the challenge. I would like to laud the Armenian people in Don Valley North and throughout the world on their determination to overcome their many obstacles and setbacks on their declared day of independence.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE BUDGET

TIMING OF BRIEFING OF MINISTER

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. I want to ask the Minister about the Government's conspiracy to bury the truth from Canadians about his handling of the budget leaks, a conspiracy about which it has been found out.

Yesterday, the Minister of Finance said that he had not been informed about the second budget leak, the Mutual Life leak, until after Question Period on April 27. On that day, the Minister was facing the worst crisis of his career. He was about to go into Question Period to be grilled on his handling of a leaked Budget.

At 1.30 or 1.40 before that Question Period, an official of his Department or his office received a call from the president of Mutual Life who informed that individual that Mutual Life had a copy of the Budget in Brief and there was therefore a second, more serious budget leak.

I want to ask the Minister this: Does he expect Canadians to believe that he was not briefed by his officials in the some 20 minutes between the call from the president of Mutual Life and two o'clock and the period of 15 minutes for Members' Statements between two o'clock and 2.15, and that he was not informed by note during the 45 minutes for questions on that day about this second budget leak? Does he expect Canadians to believe that his officials are so incompetent? Why does he not tell us what really happened?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I find it very strange that the Hon. Member would say that we were involved in a conspiracy when one of the first things that we did was to turn this information over to the RCMP. How could that possibly be a conspiracy?

The Hon. Member is asking whether I was informed prior to Question Period. I have stated quite categorically in this House that I was not. It is a very clear tradition in this House that we accept the words,the word of Hon. Members.

I have a great deal of respect for this place, as I know the House Leader for the Liberal Party also has a great deal of respect for this place.

I have never misled this House. I have always treated this House with a great deal of respect. I continue to do so. My answer to his question very clearly is: no, I was not informed.

TIMING OF RECEIPT OF INFORMATION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Minister says that he was not informed. I want to ask him this: Who exactly received the call from the president of Mutual Life and what did that individual and other Finance individuals do with that information during the missing 90 minutes between the receipt of the call and the period when the Minister was informed?

Did that official and other Finance officials inform the Principal Secretary to the Prime Minister? Did they inform the Prime Minister himself? Did they inform the Deputy Prime Minister? Did they inform the Minister of Justice?

I ask the Minister of Finance to come clean with Canadians and tell us exactly what happened during the 90-minute gap, during those missing 90 minutes? Canadians expect and have a right to receive a full explanation of what happened during that 90-minute gap.

• (1120)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, members from my staff as well as from the Department had a telephone conversation with Mr. Masterman. Subsequent to that I believe their first actions were to inform the RCMP to determine what the RCMP were working on. Subsequent to the initiation of the investigation on the previous night, Wednesday night, those people were advised of this information, and that was part of the same investigation. After that, I cannot be precise on time. Yes, they did advise the Clerk of the Privy Council and subsequent to that the Prime Minister was advised.

POSITION OF DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIALS

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, will the Minister tell us precisely what time the Prime Minister was advised?

Does he expect Canadians to believe that he is managing the Department of Finance in such a way that he has a staff that does not carry out the highest priority for officials serving a Minister, that is, to advise the Minister prior to and during Question Period of matters that are likely to come up affecting that Minister during Question Period? If he expects Canadians to believe that then surely, I ask the Minister, doesn't this mean that he is handling his Department in such an incompetent way that he is no longer fit to continue as Minister of Finance?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, if I may recall the Hon. Member to that particular date, that was not a normal day. There was a good deal of allegations early in the morning, as was repeated in a number of questions put by opposition Members, allegations of other information that could have been made available about the Budget. That was the world we were living in.

But I remind the Hon. Member that what we started the night before was a very clear process. When we received the information that Global Television had the Budget in Brief, then we started the process by contacting the RCMP, contacting the Leaders of the opposition Parties, and then doing what we thought was in the public interest, making sure that that budget information was in the public domain. We did that as quickly as we could. It was around 10–10.30 that evening.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): How about the 27th?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The next morning, on the 27th when I stood in the House at eleven o'clock, we were aware of these allegations as were the Members opposite, but we had to take into account at that time that there could be subsequent disclosures that, yes, there was information that had been made available to people.

But we started the process on the Wednesday night before that we felt we had to continue again in the public interest. The matters were public as of 10–10.30 the night before. Many decisions were taking place in financial markets that morning and throughout the day. We believed it was essential, to avoid the disruption and chaos that could come into the financial markets by withdrawing the Budget, that we should continue the process we had started on Wednesday evening.

SECOND BUDGET LEAK—GOVERNMENT POSITION.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Deputy Prime Minister. It concerns the same topic, the second budget leak.

Canadians now know that the Government, and in particular the Minister of Finance, was hiding facts from Parliament for over one month on this issue. The Minister of Finance has just informed the House that the Prime Minister was informed of the second budget leak even before he was.

Could the Deputy Prime Minister tell this House which Minister or Ministers took the decision to hide the second leak from the House of Commons? Was it the Minister of Finance? Was it the Deputy Prime Minister, or was it the Prime Minister himself who took the decision not to inform Parliament of these facts. Who done it?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Finance pointed out yesterday and the day before, I believe, and as he pointed out again today, it was some time after Question Period that the Government became aware of the telephone call and the implications thereto.

The budgetary process had been set on Wednesday night, April 26, and the dye was cast. For the Hon. Member to suggest that by turning all this information over to the RCMP construes a cover-up, then he has a different definition of cover-up than I have. Clearly, when it is turned over to the RCMP, sooner or later the information will be dealt with in a proper manner as a part of the investigation. Even the Leader of the Opposition, in the course of the debate in the House that followed, said: "We will wait to see what the—"

Mr. Boudria: Careful.

Mr. Mazankowski: "—RCMP investigation has to say and then we will deal with the facts".That is what they should do.

[Translation]

REQUEST AS TO WHO DECIDED NOT TO INFORM THE HOUSE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I asked the Deputy Prime Minister a supplementary question. The Deputy Prime Minister has again refused to answer the House of Commons.

He was asked, and I repeat again, who in the Government—which Minister—decided on April 27 not to inform the House on this issue. Was it the Minister of Finance? Was it the Deputy Prime Minister? Was it the Solicitor General? Was it the Prime Minister? Or did they all "plot" together?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it was the same government decision that started the process on Wednesday, April 26. It was a government decision, and very clearly the substance of the issue is this: It was turned over to the RCMP. This whole matter was turned over to the RCMP to find out who took the documents, how they were taken, what was done, and the reason why.

This was all done so that the appropriate action can be taken. Again we say, as has been alluded to and consistent throughout the years, Solicitors General down through the years have always taken the same position—when there is an RCMP investigation ongoing, it is improper to comment on it because it would prejudice that investigation. They should recognize that.

QUESTIONING OF DEPARTMENTAL OFFICIALS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that the RCMP is concerned with criminal accountability, but Ministers of the Crown are politically accountable in the House. That is what we are trying to get at.

The Minister of Finance has made it clear that he does not know himself what precise time in the afternoon of the 27th he was told about the second leak, but he has confirmed that his staff, including the Deputy Minister of Finance, knew well before Question Period of the second leak.

After the Question Period, at that time whatever it was when the Minister was informed of the leak, did he ask his senior staff and/or the Deputy Minister of Finance why he the Minister had not been informed immediately? Second, did he ask precisely if the Prime Minister's office had been informed? If so, did they play any role in the decision to keep the Minister himself uninformed during the Question Period?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to political accountability. Political accountability started the night before when we first found this information out through the Global Television network. The Hon. Member is quite aware of the process that we started at that time, which we believe was in the public interest and was precisely what we should have done as Ministers of the Crown.

The questions the Hon. Member is asking now are not material. The point is that the Government took the decisions. My Deputy Minister went immediately through one of the officials in my Department to speak to the RCMP to ensure that they were aware of this new information. Subsequent to that, the Government became aware of it and, subsequent to that, decisions were taken by the Government.

TIMING OF KNOWLEDGE OF MINISTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, once again the Minister of Finance is trying to mislead by not telling us the whole story. He did not answer the question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: He had information during that day. When he got up in the House in the afternoon of the 27th, he did not tell us then, he has not told us in the past two days, and he has not told us this morning. When is he going to start telling the truth to the people of Canada here in the House of Commons?

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw.

• (1130)

Mr. Speaker: I want to remind Hon. Members that in a difficult issue the public interest is not helped unless there is order in this place. That is why we have some things that are not said here, because if they are said they create disorder and then there is no free speech.

The Chair has been extraordinarily careful in the last several days to ensure that the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party have, as I have said in the past, not only the right to inquire, but the duty to inquire. However, it has to be done within the bounds of decorum within the House.

I would ask the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party, a distinguished parliamentarian who has great respect for this place, to indicate clearly that he is not calling the Minister of Finance a liar, and that he would pursue his further questions with great care.

Mr. Broadbent: I certainly respect the rules, Mr. Speaker. I did not call the Minister of Finance a liar—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I would ask Members on the Government side to co-operate with the Chair in a difficult situation and let the Chair deal with it.

Mr. Broadbent: I said, within the context of the rules of the House which I respect, that he has an obligation to tell the truth, and I repeat that. I hope that the Minister would agree.

I would like the Minister of Finance to answer the question I have asked. Would he inform the House when he went back after Question Period and was told then, sometime in the afternoon about a leak of a financial matter to one of the largest financial institutions, an insurance company in the country, did he demand of his staff to know why he had not been told earlier? Did he ask if the Prime Minister's office had been informed? Did the Prime Minister's office play any role in the decision not to inform the Minister of Finance during Question Period?

They are straightforward questions. If we received straightforward answers the House and the people of Canada would be very happy.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have explained to the Hon. Member that my staff and my Deputy Minister received this information early in the afternoon. The times are on the record of the House. Subsequent to that, their first responsibility, they felt, was to ensure that the RCMP were aware of this information. They did that. Subsequent to that there was advice given to the Prime Minister, I believe—

Mr. Broadbent: What time?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member asks: "What time?" I cannot be precise on the time. I do not know the time. However, I can say to him that that information was conveyed to me as well, and the Government took certain decisions after that which are a matter of public record.

The Hon. Member states that he wants to respect the House. I want to respect this House. I have made it quite clear through the ten years that I have been here that at all times I have tried to put on the public record those matters which are the truth, and I will continue to do so.

[Translation]

THE SECOND BUDGET LEAK—MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has not answered my question. I asked a question about the exact time when his officials or office staff informed the Prime Minister's Office or the Prime Minister himself of the second leak. This is a very important point for the public and the Minister suggested that he did not have this information. Is that true? Can he not say today exactly when the officials informed the Prime Minister?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me be quite clear with the Hon. Member here. I think he should go back to the world that we were living in on the Thursday morning prior to 11 o'clock. It was the subject of his preamble to his first question, where he referred to the fact that it is alleged that he told some individual, at least 20 of his friends and relatives.

We on all sides of the House were aware of those allegations. But we had started a process on the Wednesday night before, following the Global Television leak, which I confirmed when I made my statement at 11 o'clock on Thursday morning.

We knew at that time that some of those allegations might prove to be true, but that did not change the process that we started on the Wednesday night. We confirmed that we were proceeding on that basis at 11 o'clock on Wednesday morning and things that happened after that were all part of the process that was started on the previous Wednesday night.

PROMPTNESS IN PROVIDING INFORMATION QUESTIONED

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance. I want to deal with the same subject that the Leader of the NDP has just touched on.

Yesterday there was an event to which I want to refer. The Leader of the NDP, in his question which was put about half way through Question Period, raised the suggestion that the RCMP had been investigating the Sinclair Stevens affair, and another Member of the NDP asked a similar question.

The Minister of Finance stood up at 2.50 p.m., 20 minutes later, and stated:

> Mr. Speaker, I am advised, contrary to what the Hon. Member has just said, or contrary to what his Leader said a few minutes ago, that the RCMP Commissioner says there was a public inquiry. There was no RCMP investigations launched—

Within 20 minutes the Minister of Finance was able to correct the record about a statement made here in the House of Commons. That is how quickly officials were ready to support him and give him information.

Is it acceptable to him, and is it acceptable to us, that in a matter like the Mutual Life leak for 90 minutes on a matter much more important than whether the RCMP were involved in the Sinclair Stevens affair, that the Minister was given no information about the Mutual Life leak?

That is the reason why the Minister should resign. His staff is incompetent and he is condoning it.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I was provided with a note from my colleague about the information that I provided in response to, I believe it was the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt. Someone in the lobby had heard the Leader of the New Democratic Party make that statement. He called or she called to confirm that with the RCMP and sent in a note to say it was an incorrect statement. Therefore, I stood and corrected that at that time.

REQUEST TO KNOW HOW DECISION ARRIVED AT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is not an acceptable explanation for 90 minutes of silence.

I also want to ask the Minister of Finance about the decision that he made when he got the information about Mutual Life not to come forward with that information at once.

I want to do it in the context of a quote from his colleague, the Minister of Justice, from the night of the first Budget leak, when the Minister of Justice stated: "Well, Barbara, immediately it became clear there was a Budget leak, we sat down and decided that the best course of action was to go public and to be as open and above-board as we could". I will not ask about the options that they considered and rejected.

He also stated: "I think when you have a crisis like this, you have to say, how do we react? Are we going to be open and above-board? Our answer was an immediate yes".

On the next day when the Minister of Finance had the information about Mutual Life, how did he decide not to make that information public? Did he consult with the Minister of Justice? What other Ministers did he consult with in making his decision about an interpretation of the police investigation rule with which no one in the country agrees with the Minister on?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member does not expect me, as I know that if he were on this side I would not expect him, to disclose the whole decision-making process of a Cabinet body. Cabinet decisions are taken, the Government decides, and the Government proceeds on the basis of those decisions.

FURTHER LEAKS INQUIRED ABOUT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, Canadians know that the Government has hidden the truth on Budget leaks for self-serving purposes. One month before Canadians learned about the second Budget leak, the Government knew about the Mutual Life leak and chose deliberately to hide the facts. Can the Government tell Canadians today, May 26, that no other leak, alleged or otherwise, is known to it? Are there other leaks being kept secret from Canadians in the same way it kept secret the leak to the Mutual Life company?

• (1140)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says that we deliberately withheld this information. The Hon. Member knows clearly the reasons why. Sometimes it is very frustrating for Ministers to know this information but also know that if they release this information it could obstruct the course of justice and undermine an investigation. This is precisely the reason why we have to proceed on this basis.

The Hon. Member has asked a specific question. I know of nothing more, as Minister of Finance, than what is in the public domain today.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I asked if the Government knew, not if the Minister knew because I do not trust the Minister any more. His credibility is completely lost.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, the Minister's credibility in this affair has gone—melted like snow in the sun. The Minister had two responsibilities: first, to protect budget secrecy, and second, to tell Canadians the truth. He has failed miserably in both. Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister to resign today!

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member perhaps was not listening carefully when I spoke a little earlier.

Mr. Valcourt: He doesn't care what you say.

Mr. Speaker: I have asked Hon. Members to let the Chair handle the matter. The Hon. Member for Nickel Belt.

FINANCE MINISTER QUESTIONED ABOUT CHRONOLOGY OF EVENTS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. I suppose from the answers that the Finance Minister has given us today that he is expecting the House and Canadians to believe that he was treated like a mushroom.

I want to ask him specifically if, in effect, his office was informed before Question Period that the president of a very large insurance company had called his office to inform him that they had a copy of the Budget prior to its release. The Minister was not informed. Imagine that. The Finance Minister, the most powerful Minister in the nation, not being briefed by his officials. But he comes down to Question Period, then goes back to his office and finds out that that was so.

Mr. Andre: Is anyone here familiar with Beauchesne?

Mr. Rodriguez: Can the Finance Minister tell the House, because he did not answer the question by my Leader, if he asked his officials why he had not been briefed about this before he went down for Question Period? Second, did he assure himself that his officials had informed the Prime Minister, the leader of the nation? Did he phone the Prime Minister to inform him of this information? We are not dealing with allegations, we are dealing with a fact. Did the Finance Minister do those things?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to discuss the dealings between my officials, my staff and myself on the floor of the House of Commons. That is between those individuals and me.

As far as the advice to the Privy Council Office is concerned, I made it quite clear in my answer to his leader a few minutes ago that yes, the Privy Council Office was advised later on after the RCMP were advised, and subsequent to that they advised the Prime Minister.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, our questions are not dealing with an RCMP investigation now. We are dealing with the political and ethical behaviour of a Minister of the Crown to the House of Commons.

BEHAVIOUR OF OFFICIALS QUESTIONED

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, it is the business of the nation to know. Did the Finance Minister, when he went back to his office after Question Period, question his officials as to why he had not been briefed? He is asking Canadians to believe that he was treated like a mushroom. Did he ask why he was not informed and briefed, and why they did not inform the Prime Minister, the leader of the nation, on the Budget, the most important document in the history of Parliament?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have made it quite clear that what my staff did was advise the RCMP. That was their first responsibility and they did so. They did that immediately they had the information from Mutual Life. Subsequent to that, they advised me.

INTERPRETATION OF REMARKS SOUGHT

Hon. William Rompkey (Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. In yesterday's Hansard at page 2147, the Minister said:

> —the Government was aware of this information.

He was referring to the Mutual Life leak:

> The Government, in the broadest sense, was aware of this information some time between Question Period and 5.40 that evening.

Yet the Minister of Justice says that the Finance Minister had never told him of the Mutual Life leak.

Is the Minister of Justice part of the Government, in the broadest sense? What is the Government, in the broadest sense? How did the Government, in the broadest sense, take the decision not to reveal the leak to Mutual Life?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is not material, why or what. It is what the decision was and I have made it very clear as to why we did not make that material public. We had set in train a course on Wednesday night. The information in the Budget in Brief was a matter of public record through the Global Television Network. We felt it was essential to get that information out in the public record. At that time the process had started.

We continued with that process during the course of Thursday at 11 o'clock, when I stood in the House and explained to the House at the first opportunity I had to get into the House, why we did those things. That process continued.

The decisions that were taken were consistent with that process. We felt it was in the public interest to get that information into the public domain. Many decisions took place during the course of the day. I believe it would have been irresponsible for us to change that process, cause those decisions to be taken based on information that was subsequently withdrawn. So we continued that process. That was consistent with our decision not to make the information on the Mutual Life leak known publicly, because we had also started an RCMP investigation. We did not want to undermine that investigation by making that information public.

I have made that clear and it is very consistent with long-standing practice that we quoted in the House yesterday, based on statements that have been made by members of the Government that he has supported for many years.

REQUEST TO KNOW WHO TOOK DECISION

Hon. William Rompkey (Labrador): Mr. Speaker, it is also a long-standing practice to be fair with the Canadian people. The Minister says it is immaterial. This is the only Government the people of Canada have, God help them. I ask the Minister again, what is the Government in the broadest sense? How did the Government take the decision that afternoon? Who took the decision not to reveal this information to the Canadian people, or did the Minister take that on his own responsibility?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, governments take decisions. Sometimes governments take decisions including all members of Cabinet, sometimes including Priorities and Planning, sometimes including ad hoc committees.

Mr. Rompkey: What was it?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Sometimes including standing committees of Cabinet, sometimes including smaller groups of Ministers. The point is that it is not material how the decision is taken. The point is that the decision was taken. The Government stands behind that decision.

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister, who yesterday tried to change the significance of the commitment the Prime Minister made in the House on April 27 that the Solicitor General would immediately inform the House of any new developments.

Why? Why did the Deputy Prime Minister try to do that yesterday? Is he trying to cover for the Prime Minister who himself knew about this second leak then and did not consider it important enough to inform the House immediately on the 27th?

• (1150)

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I was not attempting to change the meaning of the statements that were made here. I think, with all due respect, the Hon. Member is in effect distorting and twisting the purport of the answer that the Prime Minister gave.

What he did say—and this was in reference to whether there was any profiteering or advantage taken by stock exchanges, et cetera in the market-place—as reported at page 1036 of Hansard was this:

> Thus far there is no indication whatsoever of that. However, the Solicitor General has said if any information comes to him he will report to the House immediately, and I know if my friend has any > accusations or any specific information he will make it known to the RCMP.

That is the context in which the Prime Minister made reference to an earlier statement made by the Solicitor General. Surely, the Hon. Member has been around here long enough to understand clearly the implications of that particular answer.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATIONS

Hon. André. Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, I can read Hansard as well as the Minister. The comments of the--

M. Valcourt: Read it!

Mr. Ouellet: Prime Minister are very clear.

Mr. Tremblay (Rosemont): Understand what it says!

Mr. Ouellet: He said: "The RCMP is conducting a full investigation. That investigation extends to the actions of presumably all those involved." A little further, he said that "—if any information comes to him, the Solicitor General will report to the House immediately."

The Deputy Prime Minister is trying to restrict the scope of the Prime Minister's commitment, and he is obviously doing so for a very specific reason.

Could he give the House the assurance today that at the time the Prime Minister spoke, he knew perfectly well there had been a second leak? Could the Deputy Prime Minister inform the House whether the Prime Minister did or did not know? Was the Prime Minister speaking in full possession of the facts or was he too still ignorant of the second leak, as the Minister of Finance seems to claim, for some strange reason?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, at that particular time during Question Period, of course—the Prime Minister was not aware.

Just to put this whole issue in further context, and I am glad the Hon. Member is smiling because I think that really reveals something—the Solicitor General in his answer, as reported at page 1031 of Hansard, again said:

> —as soon as the RCMP was informed of these events early yesterday evening, a thorough investigation of the allegations was underway, and the securities commissions in the provinces concerned were contacted. I believe an investigation is now underway at the securities commissions of four provinces, because we take this very seriously. When such allegations are made, I believe either one should provide evidence, before the House or elsewhere, of the allegations, or else one goes to the securities commission or to the RCMP with the requisite proof.

This is what he ends up saying: "However, it would be irresponsible to speculate about facts that have not been corroborated. The investigation is underway, Mr. Speaker, and as soon as we have the facts,"—in this particular case he used conclusions—"we will be able to disclose them", again referring to the issue of profiteering and taking advantage in terms of stock dealings and transactions of stock exchanges. That investigation was undertaken.

PRECISE ACCOUNT REQUESTED

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. We have heard even today the Minister refuse to tell this House the precise account of what happened on the afternoon of April 27. He has been asked a number of times when he first was informed by his officials about the second and major leak of his Budget. He took refuge behind language like: "I am not sure; it was some time shortly after". He has failed to be precise.

I believe the Minister's office would keep precise and detailed records of the time that calls were made and information was given to the Minister. I ask the Minister, how can he say that his word is credible in this House when he refuses even today to tell the House the truth about what happened that afternoon?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood.

POSSIBILITY OF FINANCIAL GAIN

Mr. Dennis Mills (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. The Minister is a former Vice-President of Dominion Securities. He understands financial systems. He understands the new technologies that allow financial transactions to take place in seconds anywhere in the world.

Now that the Minister is aware that the budget information was in the public domain not two hours before his budget address but 72 hours before, is he now confident that no one gained?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question, I believe, on Wednesday. I said there was an investigation under way. As I understand from a statement made by the RCMP yesterday, that investigation into possible profiteering continues. I cannot answer that question.

What the RCMP has indicated to date is that there is no indication that there has been any profiteering.

The other point I would make is that other people, members of the financial community, believe that there is not a basis on which people would be able to make money based on the information that was in the Budget in Brief.

That is the answer I can give him to date. If there is any indication of this, subsequent to this investigation, the Solicitor General has indicated that such information will be made public.

SUGGESTION OF EXISTENCE OF NEW STANDARDS FOR BUDGET SECRECY

Mr. Dennis Mills (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also addressed to the Minister of Finance. I have always held the Minister of Finance in high regard. I find that today we are changing the traditional principles on budget secrecy.

I would just like him to respond to the people of Canada with the new standards for budget secrecy.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think that we demonstrated very clearly our commitment to budget secrecy on Wednesday evening, April 26. When we found out that the Budget in Brief document was in the hands of Global Television we went immediately to the RCMP and initiated an investigation.

We also went immediately to the Leader of the Opposition and to the Leader of the New Democratic Party and said: "In the interests of our concerns for budget secrecy, and in the interests of our concern to ensure that that information is made available to all Canadian people at the earliest possible date, can we come back to the House of Commons so that the Minister of Finance can read his budget speech?"

That was our commitment to budget secrecy at that time. We believe that we acted responsibly and quickly in order to carry out our responsibilities.

That request was turned down. The first thing that we did after that was to make available that information to Canadians at large through the media by giving a press conference and making available the full package of budget information that at that time had been made available to Members of the House through the Clerk of the House.

REASSURANCE SOUGHT REGARDING POSSIBLE PROFITEERING

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, the answer that we have just heard is somewhat amazing. However, I will pass it and go to the Solicitor General who stated that the RCMP were satisfied no profits were made by speculators following the budget leak. He made that statement a couple of weeks ago.

Mr. McDermid: Today!

Mr. Milliken: Now we hear that the answer has changed today because they are now investigating more and they think maybe there was. We do not know the truth yet.

Mr. Epp: He did not say that.

Mr. Milliken: In any event, in blissful reliance on this rather ridiculous assurance, the Minister of Finance maintains that his resignation is not something that is required in the circumstances.

If the Government does not even know the full extent of the budget leaks, how can it possibly rely on the statements made by the RCMP which in fact were leaked from the RCMP file by the Solicitor General?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I think we have been very consistent and very clear on that point, as we have been from the outset. I think we should go back to what was said by representatives of the Ontario Securities Commission and the commissions in Vancouver and Montreal, who, on April 27 and again on May 23, said, as was reported in the press, that there had been no movement whatsoever, and that so far, they could not imagine that anyone would have been able to benefit from the breach of Budget secrecy. The position we took was, and this was the most important point of all, that when the Commissioner informed me that so far no one had benefited from the breach—

An Hon. Member: There you are!

Mr. Blais: —of Budget secrecy, I felt it was my responsibility as a Minister to immediately inform the House.

An Hon. Member: Right on!

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance in this case has failed to maintain budget secrecy. He has failed to come clean with this House in respect of the goings-on since that date. He has failed to protect Canadians from illicit profits being made by persons who had advance knowledge. Should he not now do the honourable thing and resign?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance acted properly and acted responsibly in every case in light of the circumstances.

The Hon. Member is a distinguished parliamentarian, even though he has not served in this House very long. He is a student, a tremendous student. He knows very well that in each and every case where a finance Minister resigned, he resigned because he was directly responsible for providing information. In those cases he resigned. What the opposition Parties are trying to do is blame the whole machinery on the Minister of Finance. As soon as he got—

An Hon. Member: Cover-up.

Mr. Mazankowski: As soon as he got information that there was a leak—

An Hon. Member: Not the first leak. Cover-up. The second leak.

Mr. Mazankowski: —on Wednesday night, he took immediate action—

An Hon. Member: What about the second one?

Mr. Mazankowski: —and he set in place a process. Even though he did not get the support and the co-operation of the opposition Parties, he released the Budget on Wednesday, April 26. It became effective at that day. That is the day that the Budget was released. Mr. Speaker, we are going to stand by the Minister of Finance because he is the best Minister of Finance we have ever had. He is an honourable gentleman.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried. On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Windsor West.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I would like the representatives of the Government to confirm that, in losing this vote, they have lost a vote of confidence and are prepared to take the consequences.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a point of order, the Deputy Leader of the Government.

Mr. Charest: I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) on his sense of humour.

It may be of some interest to the House and to the Canadian people to know that when the Bill was introduced, the Government Members had no objection to the introduction of the Bill. It was the Members in the New Democratic Party who objected to the introduction of the Bill and forced the vote. They then rose and voted in favour of their own Bill.

I presume that once they have cleared up the confusion on their own side, the Canadian people and the House of Commons will be able to get on with business.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) on a point of order.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I would still like to have consistency.

I must say that I regret this kind of motion. I have always said and I want to repeat that in the British system, a Member must always be allowed to present a bill and forcing a vote is a dangerous—

An Hon. Member: It was not forced.

Mr. Prud'homme: Obviously—

[English]

Mr. Charest: We know, Marcel.

Mr. Prud'homme: The Hon. Member may think that I am addressing my comments to him. I am addressing my comments to those who should listen.

It is a dangerous precedent, and I have always been on record as stating that. I learned it from great parliamentarians, one of whom was the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker. Under the British parliamentary system it is, in my opinion, a great mistake to ask permission of the House to introduce a Private Members' Bill. Why? Because some day a certain matter that we would like to at least discuss could, by a vote, be negatived by the House.

Therefore, I call on those who like to use this method—and I have no quarrel with my colleagues who perhaps have their own agenda today, and that is fine, but under the rules of the House there are other ways to call for a vote—not to do it on a Private Members' Bill because of the dangerous precedent that this could create in the House of Commons.

If my Party has done it some years ago, I will still say the same. I regret that we have to vote in favour, negative or abstain as has been done today.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden): I say to my hon. friend for whom I have a great liking that I know his regard for Parliament is as good as if not better than mine. As long as the principle of ministerial responsibility and matters related thereto are at stake in this or any other Parliament, it is the obligation of the Opposition to use every proper means under the rules of the House to bring down the Ministers responsible.

We have no apologies to make for preventing the presentation of a Bill from one of our Members, not any other Member. It is proper under the rules and we have done that.

Mr. Waddell moved that the Bill be read the first time and printed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I did not think that it was a dangerous precedent. I thought it was a good opening shot on my leadership campaign; 45 to zero is not bad.

This Bill is to deal with the problem that 97 per cent of films distributed in Canada are distributed by foreign companies, mainly American. It follows upon a special study by a Government committee and by the communications committee of the House which recommended Government action. Indeed, the Government drafted a Bill to take action and to get a share of the market for Canadians. However, because of the negotiations around the trade deal, the Government never tabled its Bill.

I was able to get a copy of the draft Bill of the Government. I tabled exactly the same Bill as a Private Members' Bill in order that the country could see what the Government was going to do, but in fact backed away from doing because of the trade deal. We all remember that the trade deal was not supposed to affect culture. Well, of course it did. At the present time we only receive 3 per cent of this market. My Bill asks that a share of this market be allocated for Canadians. I think that most Canadians favour that. It is a good Bill. Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

AN ACT TO AMEND THE EXPORT AND IMPORT PERMITS ACT (APPAREL INDUSTRY)

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina) moved for leave to introduce a Bill entitled an Act to amend the Export and Import Permits Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think it is important to inform my colleagues who have raised a serious concern about the use of this procedure that the procedure itself is not at risk, but what is at risk is the use of this House. If the House had been used properly and the Government had told us the sequence of events, then this process—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Heap moved that the Bill be read the first time and printed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a Bill to amend the Export and Import Permits Act in the apparel industry. It is for the purpose of regulating imports, particularly so that the right to import will belong to manufacturers in proportion as they manufacture. So that if a manufacturer increases his production in Canada and probably therewith his employment, he will be able to increase his importation of the same sort of product from overseas.

The other point to be made, Mr. Speaker, is that I am not—with deference to my friend in the other corner of the House—running for the leadership of the Party.

FOREST INDUSTRY

REDUCTION OF ACID RAIN CAUSING EMISSIONS

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley) moved:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of creating a more stable and sustainable forestry industry taking all measures to reduce acid-rain causing emissions produced in Canada, and flowing across our borders from other countries.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to be able to rise today to speak on this motion which, in terms of direct work in the House, is the first motion of substance that I believe we have had to deal with when it comes to the impact of acid rain on our forests.

I am pleased to see some of my colleagues from the Forestry and Fisheries Committee in the House today. I hope we will have a chance to hear their views on this matter.

I want to read the motion for the record because I believe it is important that we have the context of what our debate is about this afternoon. It states:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of creating a more stable and sustainable forest industry taking all measures to reduce acid-rain causing emissions produced in Canada, and flowing across our borders from other countries.

That motion is important because I believe all Members, particularly those from central and eastern Canada, are acutely aware of the importance of this issue. Many of us from western Canada, including my home province of British Columbia, are now becoming aware of the impact of acid rain on our forests.

In my comments this afternoon I would like to refer to a number of documents that I believe make the point about how important it is that this House and the Government deal with acid rain and its impact on our forests.

I want to read into the record a few comments that may help us refresh our memories about acid rain, how it is generated, how it is measured, and what its impact really is, particularly on our forests.

Acidic precipitation is the correct term for acid rain. This issue has been in the headlines in this country for the last six to ten years when I think Canadians have become generally more aware of their environment.

When acid rain was first discovered, primarily in a number of lakes around Ontario, it was thought to be a local problem. As perhaps with many environmental problems these days, we first become aware of them and it is not until later that we are aware of the national and global implications. We have seen this happen in Ontario, across eastern and central Canada and indeed in the United States.

The Library of Parliament report states that acidic precipitation is derived principally from emissions of sulphur and nitrogen oxides which are released to the environment during the combustion of fossil fuels in the smelting of sulphide ores.

As the pollutants are transported for hundreds or perhaps thousands of kilometres through the atmosphere, the oxides enter into a complex series of chemical reactions to form acids. Sulphuric and nitric acids are the most frequently found types.

The reference to the distances involved pertains to the coal-powered electrical generating stations in the United States and other areas. The tragedy of acid rain is its ability to be carried for great distances into Canada and throughout North America. That is one of the most difficult problems in terms of attempting to get an agreement between our country and the United States.

The global nature of the problem is an important issue with which we must deal in those discussions.

I also want to give some scientific information in terms of how we measure that acid rain. Again, the Library of Parliament report states that acidity is a measure of the concentration of hydrogen ions in solution. As concentration of hydrogen ions increases the solution, water, becomes more acidic and conversely, as the concentration of hydrogen ions decrease the solution becomes less acidic, or more alkaline. Acids are compounds which release hydrogen ions upon dissociation, thus when they are added to water they make it acidic. I am not a scientist, but obviously the general public who are concerned about our forests are aware of what acid rain means and its impact on our lakes and forests throughout the country. I do not think it takes scientists to understand the impact of acid rain on our country. The general public is well aware, and often the first to be aware of these problems.

What does it mean for our forests? I want to refer to a statement from the Canadian Institute of Forestry, a most recent report from the Library of Parliament, and a recent report that was commissioned by the federal Government under the Canadian Forestry Service.

The statement by the Canadian Institute of Forestry sums it up best, as perhaps it would, being directly involved in the industry. They state that in eastern Canada, particularly in the sugar maple industry, the trees are suffering particularly from acid rain. I will make reference to a federal report on that matter in a few moments. The Canadian Institute of Forestry cite the year 1995 as when our forests will be facing some very severe problems as a result of acid rain. However, I believe the mounting evidence suggests that we undoubtedly have a problem now with acid rain in our forests.

Perhaps the most important problem we face in dealing with acid rain is the fact that the ecosystems of our forests are so complex. There are many different organisms, different plants, different kinds of trees, so that solving the problem of acid rain on some trees could cause severe problems elsewhere, undoubtedly many of which we are unaware.

The statement goes on to say that many authorities believe the primary effect of acid rain on forest vegetation is the disruption of tree nutrition. It is recognized that some positive effects have resulted because of acid rain. Since different chemicals react in different ways, there might very well be, in some sense, a positive reaction. However, the major problem with which we are faced is the result of a negative reaction. In fact, they go on to say in their statement that most of the effects are expected to be negative and include damage to the structure of the foliage, and accelerated removal of nutrients or moisture from the trees.

Some of the indirect negative effects include increased soil acidity, interference with the nitrogen cycle, accelerated leeching of nutrients from the soil and the release of toxic elements such as aluminium, which are normally chemically bound in the soil but when released can reduce nutrient uptake by tree roots.

• (1410)

One of the most tragic side effects of that is that it in fact weakens the trees. A weakened tree means that pests have a greater opportunity to invade and to make homes and continue the destruction of the forest as a result of the acid rain.

The federal Government report which I mentioned, which was produced for the Canadian Forestry Service in March of 1986, actually did some sampling and tests in the eastern Quebec area, and there is a map included with this report. It in fact cited that: "Growth rates of sugar maple, white spruce and red spruce have declined sharply since 1950". They are learning that that is directly the result of acid rain and the many problems that we have there.

I would just like to refer to a more recent report, a Library of Parliament report that was released earlier this year. It states the very important damage that is happening to our forests across the country, and in particular the sugar maples in eastern Canada. The report from the Library states that some 40 million hectares of forests in eastern Canada and another seven million in western Canada are seriously affected by airborne pollution.

That is an incredible statement in terms of the impact that acid rain is having on the forests. In fact, some people have called acid rain the AIDS of the trees. That is not to make light of a very serious situation but it points out the gravity of the problem and how immense it is.

A review of the report, which appeared in the Vancouver Sun cites in fact some indications of problems showing up in western Canada.

The report is quoted as saying that: "Half of the sugar maples are affected and 15 per cent of them are already dead," because of acid rain. It further states that: "If the decline continues at the current rate, only a handful of maple stands will remain in Quebec by the end of the next decade."

I know my colleagues on the Forestry and Fisheries Committee are certainly talking about the importance of forestry, not just the impact of acid rain on the forests, but the importance of forests in general to all Canadians. I know that in our discussions in the committee we have talked about how it is our job, our responsibility to do what we can to draw the importance of the forests to the attention of this House and in turn to all Canadians. There are a number of people whose occupations and lives depend on the forests in many communities across our country.

I know our forestry committee will undoubtedly be dealing with this further and discussing it as we go along.

The problem is not confined just to central or eastern Canada. We now have some indications of acid rain being suspected in British Columbia. The evidence I have here is a very recent news report in the Vancouver Sun, which reports about some arbutus trees and the problems of acid rain on those trees. I gather there is some question about just whether it is in fact acid rain that is causing the problem. Nevertheless, there is evidence from the previous record and some of the problems that have been talked about certainly in the Lower Mainland of British Columbia, where the provincial minister of the environment has finally recognized the fact that that is a major problem. This problem will continue to grow unless we deal with the problem of acid rain on our forests, and many of the problems in general that are related to forestry in the country.

What has been done or what is being proposed? That is the subject of my motion where I call on the Government, as I say in it, to produce a sustainable forest industry that takes action on reducing acid rain and its impact on our forests.

Members will know that in our country there are a number of joint federal-provincial forestry agreements. There has been a lot of debate in this Chamber and in our forestry committee about those agreements and their importance, as well as the importance of what those agreements can do, to the provinces, to the industry and labour and all of the people involved in the forestry industry. In fact, I make reference to one particular agreement in eastern Canada that the federal Government has in the Province of Quebec where they are going to be spending some funds for accelerated research program—and I am quoting from the Estimates—which will include the examination of fertilization as a means to treat affected areas.

I think that directly ties in with the debate that has been in this House and in the committee as of late about the importance of the forestry agreements.

In the few minutes that are remaining to me I would like to tie in the major concerns about acid rain and its impact on our forests with some of the vehicles and chosen methods that we can use to try and solve with that problem. That is a forestry agreement that has been proposed between the federal and provincial governments, in this case Québec.

I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the House, that these agreements have proven to be effective vehicles for the different levels of Government to achieve various aims, and in this case in our forest industry. Those FRDAs, as they are called, and this is a particular FRDA, a Forest Resource Development Agreement, is a vehicle to achieve sustainable development and some planning in our forests.

In the case of Ontario, we have a forest agreement that is in limbo right now. The Minister in the committee the other day suggested to us that he would not release his criteria that he wants to use to negotiate a new agreement with Ontario and the other provinces. I would suggest that in Ontario there is a role for this committee and for the House to know exactly what criteria this level of government can use in co-operation with the province to try and resolve the problems that we have with acid rain in the Province of Ontario and other provinces.

As you probably know, Mr. Speaker, the Minister has talked a lot about long-term planning in forestry. We have been pursuing that with the Minister in committee, in terms of what he mean by that. Does he have the 20-year plans in place from the provinces that the initial FRDA agreements called for.

We are looking forward to that, and we hope that the Minister deals with the six provinces that are due. We know that he has called an early meeting of the forestry ministers across the country for June. I suggest that June is time for some action so that we can deal with this. The reason I mentioned the forestry agreements is because that is one of the most important ways that this Government and our provincial governments can attempt to implement some of the policies and the research that is needed to solve and deal with acid rain's impact on our forests.

On a broader scope, in coming to a conclusion, it is regrettable and unfortunate to have to finish on a negative note on this because we have heard time and time again from this Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) about his special relationship with the President of the United States and how he is going to be able to resolve and deal with acid rain.

We have not seen that, despite this special relationship. I asked one of my colleagues, the Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) who is our noted environment critic: "What happened to Bill Davis?" What did happen to Bill Davis? What was his contribution in trying to solve the impact of acid rain on Canada and in our forests? I think that the Government itself would admit that Mr. Davis and whatever he was doing—and I was not a Member of the House at that time—was an absolute failure.

There is much that remains to be done. The importance of signing an agreement between Canada and the United States will help resolve the general over-all problem of acid rain and its impact on our environment, and in particular, its impact on our forests where so many people have their livelihoods, and so many communities depend on it, and so many people are now beginning to understand the importance of that industry to our ecosystems and to our way of life in this country.

Mr. J. W. Bud Bird (Fredericton): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on this motion which the Hon. Member from Prince George—Bulkley Valley (Mr. Gardiner) has put before the House.

I want to emphasize that this motion states the obvious, but it comes quite a long time after policy directions were taken by the Government. The substance of the motion deals with having a more stable and sustainable forest industry and reducing acid rain causing emissions.

The Throne Speech at the beginning of this session stated some things very clearly. One, of course, was the environmental imperative in which the subject of acid rain was a very significant component. During the debates that followed it, we voiced on more than one occasion the objective of an acid rain accord with the United States.

In this session, during the budget debate and elsewhere, we have heard references to the new fully-fledged Department of Forestry which is being created by the Government and which will, I hope and trust, give significant new emphasis to the forests and all of the resources associated with them in the months and the years to come.

I have the privilege of being a member of two standing committees of this House, the Forestry and Fisheries Committee and the Environment Committee. Initiatives are now under way in both areas.

I believe that among other subjects we will be addressing in the forestry committee are terms of reference for the new Department of Forestry. In so doing, we will be addressing a stable and sustained forest economy, forest industry, forest ecology and forest environment in this country. We will give the significance to the forests of Canada that they deserve. We will help the Minister hopefully, and the other departments of Government to reconcile and resolve those many areas that overlap, and sometimes cause conflict. Multiple use forest management requires intensive co-operation and perhaps, in fact, requires some transfers of mandate from one department to another.

In terms of the environment, already in our environmental committee we have talked about the concepts of sustainable development as enunciated so well in the World Commission on the Environment and Development, the so-called Brundtland Report. I have already recommended to that committee that we use forestry as one of the subject areas to develop concepts of sustainable development in Canada's future. I think that forestry is a very apt subject in that respect.

I recognize that the Hon. Member from Prince George comes from an area where forestry is of great value in terms of employment, economics, ecology, recreation and aesthetics. I understand that because I come from New Brunswick where the forest is also extremely important. More than one-third of our entire provincial economy in New Brunswick is related to forestry. We all realize Canada's forests go far beyond their economic value. The Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Oberle) has described on more than one occasion that he sees Canada's forests as an analogy to the human body. He describes them as the very lungs and kidneys of an ecosystem. Forests help to regulate the atmosphere by trapping and converting solar energy into oxygen. They also play an important role in controlling global precipitation and moisture exchange. It is therefore imperative that we direct our efforts to ensuring that Canada's forests, as part of the global life support system, remain healthy and flourishing.

We must strive to do better than we have. That is not to say we have not done well, that we have not significantly started to manage our forests in a more comprehensive and intense way than was the case prior to the recognition of concepts such as sustainable development and the impact of the environment and the developing knowledge on subjects such as acid rain. We have much more to do. Sustainable development and other concepts will lead us to new horizons and new challenges.

I would like to say again, and I apologize for being parochial, that New Brunswick has shown the way in terms of forest management legislation in Canada. I believe that those who would address improved forest management in this country should address themselves to the Crown Lands and Forests Act in New Brunswick. They should also address themselves to the steps which have been taken over the past five years by officials, scientists and managers of the forests in New Brunswick as they have implemented the terms and conditions of the new legislation for multiple use and more intensive management addressing both Crown and private lands.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the management of forests in Canada is a major concern of our Government. Forestry Canada managers will describe for Hon. Members the work done by the federal Government concerning the health of forests as it regards the forestry industry. We are all aware that the management problems include climate, insects, diseases, management practices and air pollution. In addition, as the Hon. Member for Prince George—Bulkley Valley (Mr. Gardiner) said, the facts point increasingly to acid rain as a killer of forests.

I would nevertheless like to emphasize that this Government recognizes that it can no longer wait to have all the scientific data in hand before proceeding. Once the trees are gone, it will no longer do much good to understand in depth the cause of this disaster—it will be too late.

[English]

As proof of how seriously the Conservative Government takes finding a long-term solution to the problems of acid rain, I would like to review for the House the acid rain control program that has been put in place in this country to end the environmental, economic and health-related damages being caused by acid rain.

The Hon. Member has already described many of the causes, results and severe impacts of acid rain. I will not repeat those, but I will talk a bit about what the Government has done.

I am proud to remind this House that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced in March, 1985 that Canada would implement a comprehensive ten year acid rain control program estimated to cost $500 million annually when fully implemented in 1994. The federal Government, in partnership with the seven eastern provincial Governments and affected industries, has established a clear, scientifically derived objective for resolving Canada's acid rain problem. Canadian scientists have established that to prevent acid rain damage, acid rain fallout must be reduced to less than 20 kilograms per hectare per year in all vulnerable areas. To achieve this environmental objective requires two things.

First, total Canadian emissions of sulphur dioxide from the Saskatchewan-Manitoba border eastward must be reduced to 2.3 million tonnes per year. This represents a 50 per cent cut in emissions from 1980 allowable levels.

I see I am running out of time, Mr. Speaker, so I will proceed more quickly and say that Canada's acid rain control program is achieving the required results. Emissions levels are now below 2.8 million tonnes per year in eastern Canada, almost 40 per cent below the levels allowed in 1980. It is clear that we will reach our goal of a 50 per cent reduction in domestic emissions by 1994 or earlier.

• (1430)

I would also like to say that we do require a formal accord on acid rain between the United States and Canada. In the recent visit by President Bush, there are clear signals that an accord is achievable and that negotiations and relations are well under way between our two countries for its achievement.

I would say that this motion, while so well intentioned and comprehensive, is well behind the leading edge of government policy and action on these two important fronts, both in forestry and environment. On acid rain, Canada is and has been on the move.

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on this important issue.

Acid rain is a bilateral problem that must be addressed through bilateral channels. I will be talking about that. I also want to emphasize the phenomenon of the long-range transport of atmospheric pollutants and the potential accumulative affect it has on the environmental problems in my riding.

The environmental problems facing the North are extensive. The most serious include Arctic toxic pollution, ozone destruction, and the greenhouse effect. Canadians have made it clear that they want this country to take action on its many environmental problems, problems which are shared internationally. A new environmental responsibility is a political imperative, but it is also an undeniable necessity.

Our planet is diseased by man's environmental neglect. Human beings, indeed all living beings, are suffering the side effects. In Canada's North, we find that some Inuit people are ingesting unacceptable levels of PCBs.

Most environmental damage is irreversible and the accumulative effects are degrading the environment at an astounding rate. In the last 100 years, man has done infinitely more damage to the planet than since humans appeared on the scene millions of years ago.

Today, we are at an historical transition between a world inherited and one profoundly different, a global biosphere whose vital functions we have altered.

Do we want future generations to inherit an exhausted planet with which they will live at odds, or do we want to leave a heritage of health and harmony, a society with a clean house and values to keep it that way? Obviously, we want the latter.

Humans can adapt this value to live in harmony with the environment. It will require re-examination of materialism and modern development, but there is no reason to believe the challenge cannot be met.

By treating our environment right, we will be treating ourselves right. This is what will breed kinder and gentler nations.

Canada must lead the world in practising environmentally responsible statecraft. This means defining and implementing a strict concept of sustainable development, securing global co-operation to immediately eliminate critical problems, and fostering an environmentally-conscious populace through public education and involvement.

Ranging across some 30 per cent of the planet's land surface, forests have been described as "the climax ecosystems of a green and flowering world—the most exuberant expressions of nature." Forests perform protective, productive and regulative functions. They play a vital ecological role in the planetary recycling of oxygen, nitrogen, and carbon. They influence temperature and rainfall. They act as enormous sponges, collecting and distributing water. They protect the soil from water and wind erosion. They maintain biological diversity. They actively contribute to economic development.

Recently, however, new problems such as acid rain and other air pollutants have emerged which may stress forests beyond their regenerative capacities.

Forest management is the keystone of a natural resource conservation strategy.

Canada is a world leader in forestry. No country trades more extensively in global forest products, the latter accounting for 15 to 20 per cent of Canada's total export earnings. Over the years, Canadians have developed a broad range of modern forestry skills and techniques, and much of this technology has proved to be adaptable to tropical forest conditions.

Acid rain potentially may affect all sectors of the environment, including human health. The most persuasive evidence has been assembled for aquatic systems. It is now well known that freshwater bodies begin to show biological damage at about a very moderate level of acidity. It is feared that forests, in particular, are being damaged by acid rain and by associated pollutants such as ozone. It is also known that man-made materials are susceptible to damage from acid rain and from associated air pollutants.

Not only is the dollar cost of acid-rain damage to buildings and other structures very high, but treasured artifacts, including sculpture and historic sites, are threatened with destruction.

When I gave my speech in response to the Budget on May 18, I stated that Canada needs to develop a foreign policy and not just a defence policy for cruise missile tests and nuclear submarines, but that a foreign policy should be all encompassing with global environmental security as a cornerstone. We need to push for acceleration of the ozone protocol, adoption of an international law of the air, measures to ensure rapid reduction in the CO2 level, and preservation of tropical rain forests.

Taken together, these measures represent a comprehensive and coherent approach to our environment covering preventive, punitive, and remedial action as well as domestic and international aspects. They demonstrate the proactive liberal approach to this crucial issue and are based on the fundamental premise that pollution is everyone's problem; that we must all work together to ensure a healthy and secure environment for future generations. Sustainable development for the forest industry needs to be defined and must be complemented by comprehensive and extensive national environmental objectives.

My constituents of Western Arctic are concerned that Alberta's massive forestry development has potential to threaten one of Canada's largest and cleanest river systems and massive tracts of northern forests. Seven pulp mills are planned for the Peace-Athabasca River system, the source of most water in the southwestern N.W.T. and northern Alberta. The concept of sustainable development must be applied to this proposal. The economic benefits need to be recognized, but the negative impacts of the project must be minimized. The Government must be held accountable to implement a strict sustainable development regime in good faith.

On May 11, the Member from Davenport asked the Government House Leader when he would introduce a motion to strike the standing committee on acid rain which was in existence until the call of the election. We have heard nothing from the Government.

As usual, this Government will not move fast enough. Regulations are a necessary part of environmental management. As trustees of the environment, governments must act with vigour to protect it. Governments must lead with comprehensive support and promotion of sustainable economic development.

This Government has to change the way it approaches the environment and the economy. It has to integrate environmental input into decision-making at the highest level. Environment must be a priority of every federal Department.

My Party recommends an auditor general for the environment. Environmental considerations cannot be an add-on or an afterthought. They must be made integral to economic policy-making and planning and a required element of any economic development proposal.

I want to re-emphasize, in conclusion, that acid rain is a problem that wafts across borders. Acid rain, snow, and fog kill fish and other aquatic biota and damage forests in Canada, the U.S., and western and central Europe. An estimated 200,000 square miles of forests in industrial countries are damaged by acid rain or other forms of air pollution. It demands international solutions. As well, discussion of long-range transport of air pollutants can no longer be restricted to oxides of sulphur and nitrogen. Hydrocarbons are interacting with these gases at low atmospheric levels, producing damaging ozone. Toxic pollutants such as pesticides, metals and PCBs are being emitted and volatilizing from aerial sprayings and open bodies of water to be deposited at great distances away. The ecological damage of acid rain is generally understood, but the associated human morbidity and potential long-term health effects are not.

• (1440)

Pollutants in the environment can wreak unforeseen results, among them a global warming trend that could push average temperatures higher than any in the experience of the human race. A nuclear winter caused by global war might mean the end of most life forms. Yet along with potential self-destruction, the present moment of technology's course has delivered tools of knowledge never before in hand. What is the Government waiting for? We have the tools to do something.

Mr. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate my colleague on an excellent presentation concerning the problem of acid rain and its damage to forests. Coming from a region where a great number of my constituents earn their living from the forests, naturally I am interested in this whole question.

In 1982, with the help of the Canadian Pulp and Paper Association, I organized and sponsored a seminar on the problem that faced our forests, that being acid rain. We had gathered enough evidence to show that, as most Canadians know, the pulp and paper industry in this country is of extreme importance. Its importance cannot be exaggerated. Study after study has pointed to the fact that acid rain is something that is visible, it is concrete and obviously we have got to tackle the problem.

I am sure that in this House the concern about acid rain goes above Party lines. There is no doubt about that in my mind. Our own sulphur emissions need to be under control, and I am sure that we will tackle that problem with great vigour. However, we have a problem with our neighbours to the south. Study after study does not seem to convince them that we need an absolute commitment to seriously limit the problem of sulphur emissions that create acid rain. The Canadian Pulp and Paper Association has conducted extended studies. These have indicated that if the trend continues within the next quarter century, there will be no more pulp and paper industry in this country. This is incredible when we consider that this country had such tremendous forest reserves. We are surrounded literally by forests. Within 30 minutes of my home town, I can literally be lost in the wilderness. Nevertheless this danger is mounting week by week to the point where our whole forest industry is in severe danger.

Needless to say, we do not want to be portrayed as alarmists, but the fact remains that acid rain is probably the greatest threat facing the forest industry. Yet, it does not stop with our forest industry. There was a series of interesting programs on the CBC about a year and a half to two years ago that pointed out the danger to our forest industry. They also showed that if this damage continues, there will be social unrest in our country because the industry will be on the verge of being eliminated. We cannot exaggerate the importance.

Surely all Members of this House would want our Government to be insistent—and we will not accept no or maybe for an answer—and indicate to our industries, which we are doing, and indicate to our neighbour to the south that its northeastern states are affected. We in particular are being affected. I have met with the maple syrup producers in my area and they are seeing the damage year by year.

Like all Members of this House, we will appeal as forcefully as we can to our friendly neighbours to the south for an agreement. We are willing to put a tremendous amount of water in our wine if we have to, but we need a commitment and a reduction or else we will live to see the damage to our forest industry if it is not corrected. That is the issue that faces one of our major industries. It would probably be the greatest catastrophe of our lifetime.

It is imperative that we stand up and be counted and let them know, not only to the south, but everywhere, that Canada is going to solve its acid rain problem even if we have to take radical steps. We will call upon our neighbours to the south in the northeastern states to join us to make our two Governments understand that the time has come to correct the problem. We do not want to live with a catastrophe on our hands. Mr. Speaker, I thank you for this time that has been allotted to me.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles A. Langlois (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on a motion introduced by the Hon. Member for Prince George—Bulkley Valley (Mr. Gardiner), a fellow member on the Forestry and Fisheries Committee. The Hon. Member represents a riding, like mine, where the forestry industry has created many jobs for a number of years, jobs that have benefited several generations. Our constituents also realize that forestry operations are extremely important to the economy of our ridings and to the economy of this coutry.

Mr. Speaker, our forests are one of our major resources. They cover nearly half of Canada's total area and, south of the sixtieth parallel, cover almost two-thirds of our territory. Logging has stimulated economic growth in Canada since the time of the huge annual log drives on Canada's rivers. Today, the forestry industry consist of about 7,000 companies, most of which are Canadian-owned. These companies are responsible for about 4 per cent of Canada's Gross Domestic Product. Annual sales in the industry amount to $30 billion, and in 1987, our exports of forestry products were worth over $21 billion. We have here an industry that is extremely important to Canada, an industry that creates many jobs and contributes to the economic stability and prosperity of many regions in this country.

The problem we are discussing today, the deterioration of our forests, is a major one, and at this point I would like to mention that the present Government has met the problem head-on and taken steps and introduced mechanisms to respond to this challenge. The challenge we are facing is that of maintaining healthy forests so that the industry and this natural resource will continue to contribute to the well-being of Canadians.

I believe that our Government has recognized the importance of the forestry industry by appointing to the Cabinet a full Minister responsible for forestry and forestry policy in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I think we should also remember that the Prime Minister comes from a region that grew up and developed thanks to the forestry industry which still exists in Baie-Comeau and on the North Shore, and also in my own riding where forestry operations have existed since the turn of the century.

The problem we are discussing today is an important one, but acid rain is not the only problem affecting the viability and health of our forests. There are many other causes such as insects, logging, of course, and natural causes that annually contribute to the destruction of hundreds of thousands of hectares of forest in Canada. Forest fires also do considerable damage. We are looking at a complex problem, and as a responsible Government, we must take a comprehensive approach if we are to implement a sound and consistent policy that will both ensure that our forestry industry remains economically viable and help maintain the quality of our environment, clean up air pollution and thus make it possible for all Canadians to continue to rely on this major natural resource and also enjoy the recreational opportunities it offers.

• (1450)

I can assure the Hon. Member that his contribution and mine to the Standing Committee on Forestry and Fisheries should help provide for a fair policy, as proposed by our Government, a policy that will be maintained during the next four years, a policy that is consistent, intelligent and a sensible; a policy that will help provide jobs and ensure that our environment is both protected and profitable.

[English]

Mr. Greg Thompson (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Prince George—Bulkley Valley (Mr. Gardiner), has raised a very important issue. I welcome the opportunity to speak on that issue. It is important to all Canadians.

The Hon. Member has chosen to direct his motion toward a single factor affecting that particular issue and that is acid rain. No one will question the fact that the Government is concerned about the problems of pollution, acid rain, and transborder emissions that affect all of us. No one would argue that the United States is equally concerned. In the Speech from the Throne earlier this session we stated that we are going to address that problem and seek agreement with the United States to bring this international problem under control.

Since 1984 the Government has continued to push forward in this area, as all Canadians are demanding, for a solution to those problems and ensuring that they are dealt with head-on. The 1987 Ozone Protocol signed in Montreal is another indication that the Government is serious about the problem, is doing something about it, and will continue to work on an international scale.

The protection of the environment will be one of the main goals of the Government in its second mandate. If we are going to have sustained economic development in this country that will go beyond our life expectancy into that of our children, we must address those very real problems. It is a concern that is being expressed by all Canadians. It was certainly expressed throughout the campaign last fall. Canadians of all ages, young and old alike—and many who were well below the voting age attending high school or university—spoke out and indicated very clearly that they wanted whatever Government was elected to put this issue on its agenda. We have chosen to deal with that.

The link between air pollution and the decline of our forests is easy to make for anyone who has visited such places as Trail, British Columbia or Sudbury, Ontario. One only need look out of a car window or the window of an airplane to see the effects. It is a very complex problem. I am not sure one single factor is the reason. Is acid rain the only reason our forests are dying? I contend that it is not the sole reason and that there are other factors.

If one looks at some of the highly industrialized areas of the country and the effect that they have on the surrounding environment and the volatile organic compounds, other oxidants, and heavy metals that are present in the ground, they are also having an effect. We have to consider many factors when looking at our dying forests and the problem areas throughout the country. Acid rain is a key topic and it is one that we can clearly point our finger at, but it is not the only one.

The distinction between acid rain problems and other environmental problems is very difficult to make. Some highly regarded experts are having difficulty making the distinction, is it acid rain or is it something else? It is a very broad topic. The Government is concerned about it, and we are going to work hard in that regard. We have committed ourselves to it, and we are going to follow through with it.

Canada is not alone in this regard. The U.S. is very concerned, as are the European countries. It was back in the heady days of the 1960s and the early 1970s when acid rain became a hot topic. Early in the 1970s the European countries realized the problem and they raised it at an international level. Not long after we in Canada were faced with the same problem.

In my riding of Carleton—Charlotte the forestry sector is indeed a very important sector of our economy. We have the same problem. We are living in an ecological zone that seems to be more susceptible to that problem than other parts of the country. We will continue to monitor the problem closely. We will continue to work as best we can within fiscal restraints to address this problem.

Ultimately the problem will cost Canada jobs. For example, in eastern Canada there are approximately 10,000 maple syrup producers and many small wood lot owners who are affected by this problem. If one goes into the forests of Québec and looks at this problem, it will be seen that it is very complex. None of us want to see our national symbol, the maple leaf, turn brown. However, in areas such as eastern Québec and in my province of New Brunswick, the problems go far beyond acid rain. There are some complex questions that scientists are scratching their heads over and to which they have no answers. Of over 100 studies done only two actually point directly to the acid rain problem. There are many other variables which cannot be accounted for. It is a serious problem, and one we are dealing with. We must consider all pollutants, not only the hydrogen sulphites and other gases that directly contribute to acid rain.

In many forests there is an insect problem, or diseases over which the scientists are scratching their heads as to how they came about and exactly what they are, how long-term they will be, and whether we can eradicate them at all. We also have management problems. That problem the Government is addressing in a serious manner. Part of the management of our forests is coming from examples set in my own province of New Brunswick.

The Hon. Member for Fredericton (Mr. Bird) was a former Minister of Forestries in our home province. He is the individual responsible for bringing in that progressive legislation. As a nation we are going to follow the example of the province of New Brunswick, because it has been successful. It has proven that a small province with limited fiscal resources has the ability to deal with the problem.

In conclusion, the problem we have is a complex one. The motion of the Hon. Member opposite is a very narrow motion. We have to go beyond the sense of narrowness that I see in his motion. We as a Government are prepared to go beyond the narrow bounds of that particular motion and recognize that it is a problem that deserves a high degree of energy and a high degree of resource on the part of all of us. I am proud to say that the Minister of State (Forestry) (Mr. Oberle) is working on the problem, that he recognizes it and in time it will be dealt with in the fashion that Canadians wish it to be dealt with.

PETITIONS

VIA RAIL SERVICES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents who are pointing out their concern about the Government's intentions with regard to VIA Rail. They indicate the tremendous successes that VIA Rail has experienced in terms of providing effective passenger rail service. They are calling upon Parliament to maintain, improve, and modernize VIA Rail service in those areas of the country where it can provide a more rapid, economic, safe, convenient, environmentally sound, and energy efficient alternative to other means of transportation.

ARMX '89—MILITARIZATION OF ECONOMY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I have a second petition to present on behalf of a number of petitioners from Kamloops, British Columbia who are concerned about the Government's militarization of the economy as reflected most recently in ARMX '89.

They are concerned that Canada is sending military or paramilitary equipment and policing equipment to countries which have a record of human rights violations. They are asking Parliament to take steps to stop the Government from continuing this process.

VIA RAIL SERVICES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to present a petition that has been certified correct as to form and content by the Clerk of Petitions.

This petition which deals with the continuation of VIA Rail is signed by an incredible range of Canadians from one end of the country to the other. The signatures were collected at the train station in Thunder Bay on May 10 and represents the feelings of the passengers of the Transcontinental who desperately want to make sure that there remains a transcontinental train in this country.

REVISION OF EXTRADITION LAWS

Mr. Doug Fee (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a group of 22 petitions which have all been certified by the Clerk as being correct as to form and content pursuant to Standing Order 36.

These petitions call on the Government to revise the extradition laws to allow the Minister of Justice to order extradition of fugitives and not allow them to hide within our penal system. I join with these petitioners in urging our Government to make the necessary revisions to prevent Canada from becoming a haven for foreign fugitives.

VIA RAIL SERVICES

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure to present a petition signed by a number of constituents in Kingston and the Islands who are protesting the Government's proposed cutbacks in VIA Rail train service in Canada.

The petitioners call upon the Government not to cancel in whole or in part VIA passenger rail service in Canada which, they indicate by signing this petition, they believe has played an integral part in the economic development of our country.

JOBS CREATED SINCE 1984

Question No. 47—Mr. Rodriguez:

For each year since 1984, what has been the average annual income of jobs created for (a) men (b) women (c) each occupational category for which figures are kept?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): The attached Table 1 contains estimates of average earnings in Canada by occupation and sex for 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987. The figures are averages of earnings of persons employed in an occupational category in a particular year; data are not available on average annual incomes of new jobs created in a particular year.

PCB STORAGE SITES IN THE CONSTITUENCY OF NORTHUMBERLAND

Question No. 58—Mrs. Stewart:

1. What is the (a) number of PCB storage sites in the constituency of Northumberland (b) frequency with which these sites are checked to ensure they comply with health and safety guidelines?

2. Have any of these sites failed to pass such inspections and, if so (a) which sites (b) on what dates (i) did they fail (ii) will they be retested?

3. Are the PCBs in Northumberland being transferred for destruction and, if so, (a) to what location (b) by what means?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): 1. (a) There are 20 sites (2 federal, 18 private). (b) Each site's owner is responsible for a monthly inspection of its premises. Environment Canada inspects all federal sites and the Ontario Ministry of Environment inspects all non-federal sites at least once a year.

2. (a) 2 sites—both federal. (b) (i) CFB Trenton Main Base— March 31, 1989. Cameco (Eldorado Nuclear)—March 30, 1989. (ii) CFB Trenton Main Base to be reinspected in May, 1989. Cameco (Eldorado Nuclear) to be reinspected in May, 1989.

3. There are currently no plans to transfer PCBs stored in Northumberland for destruction.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I am wondering if you could look at Questions Nos. 45, 52, 53, 62, 64, 83, and 88 in relation to Standing Order 39(6).

I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: I should advise the House that the Hon. Member for Peace River gave some indication prior to the House sitting that he would stand and proceed, or ask that the House proceed, pursuant to Standing Order 39(6). I understand that this has not been done for a great many years. I know that the Hon. Member will understand why I think it is advisable that the Chair consider the procedure very carefully. It may also be that others may want to comment on this.

I do not intend to make a ruling on it immediately. Perhaps, if other Members wish to address this or might be able to assist the Chair, they would get their messages back to my office and some arrangement can be made, if necessary, to discuss it further.

I do not want to take Members by surprise.

POINT OF ORDER

STATEMENTS BY MEMBERS—CORRECTION OF REMARKS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Last week, in a statement I made in the House of Commons, I inadvertently presented wrong information.

When referring to the seventy-fifth anniversary of the Komagata Maru incident, I gave the impression that only Sikhs were on board that ship.

As you well know, Mr. Speaker, there were a number of people from India of various religious backgrounds on board that ship. The majority were Sikhs, but there were also Muslims, Hindus, Christians, Bengalis, and others. I simply wanted to make that clarification.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member.

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 81—ALLEGED ECONOMIC DEVASTATION IN ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. George S. Baker (Gander—Grand Falls) moved:

That this House condemns the Government for initiating a series of policies that are causing unprecedented economic devastation to Atlantic Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the reason for this motion is well known, and that is that a series of policies brought in by the Government of Canada is having a devastating effect on Atlantic Canada.

I am going to let my colleagues address the devastation that those policies are causing as far as increased taxes and government cuts are concerned, and I will restrict my remarks today to what the Government of Canada is doing to destroy the fishery off the East Coast of Canada totally.

This morning we heard on the news that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had spoken to the Government of Spain and told it to cut back its fishing activities just outside the 200-mile zone off Canada's East Coast. I do not want to talk about what is happening outside the 200-mile zone. This morning I want to talk about what is happening inside the 200-mile zone with licences issued by the Government.

Today, at this very moment, due east of the City of Halifax there are no fewer than 35 Soviet factory freezer trawlers, floating fish plants, not 200 miles out into the ocean, not out past the 200-mile zone, but licensed to fish to within 12 miles of Halifax Harbour. They are licensed to fish within 12 miles of the Nova Scotia coast.

If that were not bad enough, off that same Halifax Harbour there are nine factory freezer trawlers from Cuba, licensed by the Government in the past six weeks, with more to come.

They go into the Port of Halifax in a tugboat, walk into the fisheries office, and get their licences signed by the Department of External Affairs. There are floating fish plants right off Halifax Harbour today. Each one of those boats is equal to a fish plant on shore. There are 35 Soviet floating fish plants, and 9 Cuban floating fish plants due east of Halifax.

At this very moment, today, there are seven Russian factory freezer trawlers due east of St. John's, Newfoundland. They are not out past the 200-mile limit, but they are inside the 200-mile limit, 30 and 40 miles offshore. There are seven of them.

What are those gigantic floating fish plants doing? They are licensed by the Government of Canada, the very Government that states that our fishery is in a crisis, the very Government that is reducing our quotas and closing our fish plants, the very Government that has appointed a cabinet committee to work out the money to be paid to people who will be on welfare. That committee is headed by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). You remember him, Mr. Speaker; he is the fellow who wrote to France and said: "We will never forsake the people of St. Malo. Never, jamais." He is the guy who promised to give France all the Canadian fish it wanted. That same person is heading a cabinet committee to see what can be done for the devastation now of the reduced quotas all around the East Coast of Canada.

That Minister and that Government have issued those licences to Russian boats to fish right now off the coast of Nova Scotia and off the coast of Newfoundland.

What are they fishing for? Well, I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, what they are fishing for. The Government of Canada states that they are fishing for underutilized species. There are no underutilized species off the East Coast of Canada today. The only underutilized species off the East Coast of Canada are fishermen and fish plant workers. Under this Government they are not only an underutilized species, but they are fast becoming an endangered species.

Those 35 factory freezer trawlers off Halifax have an allocation of 58,000 tonnes of what is called silver hake. They also carry with it what is called a by-catch of 3,000 tonnes of cod fish, 3,000 tonnes of pollack, and 1,000 tonnes of haddock. If one adds up 3,000 tonnes of cod fish, 3,000 tonnes of pollack, and 1,000 tonnes of haddock, that would keep any large fish plant going in Atlantic Canada for an entire year.

Mr. Reid: Oh, come on. A pretty small fish plant.

Mr. Baker: The hon. gentleman says "a pretty small fish plant." The average fish plant takes 10 million pounds of fish a year and employs 450 people, and a cabinet Minister says: "Oh, pretty small stuff". Maybe he is from central Canada—

Mr. Reid: Hold it.

Mr. Baker: —but he sure isn't from Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Tobin: It was the Member for St. John's East.

Mr. Baker: The average fish plant in Atlantic Canada takes in 10 million pounds of fish.

That is what is licensed to the Russians who are fishing in what we call the silver hake box east of Halifax harbour, together with the Cubans.

What are the Russians doing with these factory freezer trawlers just east of the City of St. John's? They are catching fish called capelin. Capelin is the main food of the cod fish. Capelin are the fish for which over 400 Newfoundlanders were refused licences to fish this year. Yet there are seven Soviet factory freezer trawlers within Canada's 200 mile zone, just east of the City of St. John's, today, fishing the very resource that Newfound-landers were refused licences to fish this year because the Government says it is a restricted fishery.

Is that equal rights? Those boat owners from Newfoundland do not have equal rights with the Russians within our own 200-mile zone.

To make matters worse, today the Government of Canada is issuing licences to foreign countries which are excluded from a Canadian law outlined in the fisheries legislation. From time to time Nova Scotians and Newfoundlanders are dragged into court and charged with keeping an incidental catch. It could be salmon for which they are not licensed, or it could be sole for which they are not licensed, but they are charged. The cases come up quite often in the courts in Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. Those foreign boats fishing off Nova Scotia and Newfoundland today are exempt from that regulation. They are allowed to keep an incidental catch.

When the observer on board sees that they are catching too much fish which they are not supposed to catch, the Government simply moves the boats two miles north, east, or west. However, they are allowed to keep that catch even though they are not licensed for it, while Newfoundlanders and Nova Scotian fishermen are dragged into court and jailed.

The Government began issuing licences for inside the 200-mile zone about eight weeks ago. In other words, the Japanese, the East Germans, the Poles, the Russians, the Cubans and fishermen from the Faro Islands all received these allocations just eight or nine weeks ago from the Government of Canada. Many of them have not even picked up their licences, yet. The Government of Canada says that it is giving this fish because we are not really using it in Canada.

I want the Government to explain why the Government of Poland is fishing grey sole around the coastline of eastern Canada. Grey sole is the prime fish on the table. Why is the Government of Canada giving Poland but not Canadians the right to fish grey sole?

During the press conference on Friday afternoon, at which cabinet Ministers were present, in St. John's, Newfoundland, in the fisheries offices there on the white hills overlooking the city, in that same building, the Government was conducting negotiations for a bilateral agreement with Denmark to allow 15 large ships from the Faro Islands to come in and catch turbot in the northern cod stock area, which is the very area the Government was announcing that Canadians would have to be drastically cut back. It was allowing 15 boats from the Faro Islands.

We do not mind perhaps one boat from the Faro Islands coming in to catch the poor beagle shark on the Scotian Shelf, because that is what they use to make shark fin soup. There is a factory freezer trawler that goes there every year to catch the poor beagle shark. However, 15 of those large ships that catch turbot are being licensed through a bilateral agreement with the Government of Canada to fish turbot in the area of the northern cod stock. Where is the northern cod stock? It is not way up in the north Atlantic. It extends around every riding in Newfoundland except the south coast. That is the northern cod stock.

The same turbot for which Denmark will get licences to catch, as agreed on Friday, is the turbot that the long liner from Shelbourne must travel 800 miles to catch off the coast of Newfoundland. That is not the worst of it. All this is happening within Canada's 200-mile zone and is licensed by the Government which says there is a crisis in the fishery in Atlantic Canada. It has issued licences to the Russians which Newfoundlanders and Nova Scotians cannot get. Licences that have been refused to Canadians to fish capelin are being issued to the Russians. It is absolutely outrageous. The Government is allowing them to fish and keep incidental catch for which Canadians are jailed.

That is the cosiness of international relations as it pertains in this case to the Soviet Union, East Germany, Poland, Cuba, the Faro Islands, and Japan. This year the Government of Canada will license over 200 floating fish plants from foreign countries to fish within 12 miles of our coastline off the East Coast of Canada. There are 250 licences to be granted to factory freezer trawlers, floating fish plants from foreign nations, to fish within 12 miles of the coast of Newfoundland, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, New Brunswick, and Québec. Yet fish plants in Canada are being closed down. Lockeport is closed. An announcement is about to be made on further reduction in quotas.

Thousands of Atlantic Canadians will be laid off. This will happen while the Government of Canada, through the Department of External Affairs, makes deals behind the scenes to issue licences to the Russians, the Cubans, the Japanese, the East Germans and the Danish to come within 12 miles of the coastline of our provinces in eastern Canada. If one were to stand on the headland in Cape Breton today, one could see a French factory freezer trawler catching cod. If one were to stand on a headliner on the northeast coast of Newfoundland in another month's time, one would see three and four factory freezer trawlers from three and four different countries catching fish to within 12 miles of our coastline.

• (1130)

This year is worse than last year. Why? It is because the Government of Canada said it had a problem with boundaries and wanted to be nice to France. You know, Mr. Speaker, this year the French factory freezer trawlers which are just making their way across the Atlantic today will be fishing cod in northern New Brunswick. There must be lots of fish there to allow French factory freezer trawlers flying the French flag to fish codfish in northern New Brunswick. Off Prince Edward Island and Québec they will be catching cod to the tune of 4,000 tonnes. That means that another fish plant will be gone. Off Nova Scotia the catch will be 4,000 silver hake with a legal by-catch of cod, pollock, haddock, redfish and squid. In the northern cod zone there will be new licences issued this year, licences which were never issued before by the Government. It has never happened before in our history.

Some 2,000 tonnes of halibut will be caught in the northern cod zone area, while 4,500 tonnes of codfish, 3,000 tonnes of halibut, 4,000 tonnes of flounder and 2,000 tonnes of redfish will be caught.

Mr. Speaker, you are saying that I only have two minutes left. I have not even gotten to the main point of my argument.

The main point is this. Canadians are being treated like second-class citizens, second-class to the Russians, the Cubans, the Japanese, the East Germans and the people from the Faro Islands by the Government of Canada. Whereas on the one hand Members of the Government say: "Oh, there is a problem in the fishery", on the other hand they are dishing out these licences every day to foreign countries to fish within 12 miles of the coast of Canada for cod, halibut, redfish, squid and capelin. Licences which Newfoundlanders and Nova Scotians have been refused are being issued to these foreign countries. These licences exclude them from the fishery's regulations of Canada as passed by Parliament.

An Hon. Member: Read it.

Mr. Baker: Read it? "Release of incidentally caught fish—shall forthwith return that fish to the waters in which it was caught". That is what a Canadian is put in jail for. That is what two cases are pending for now in Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. Oh, no, Mr. Speaker, not for the Russians. They can go 12 miles off our coast now, as they are, and fish to their heart's content with licences issued by the Government of Canada.

That is why this motion is being moved today. We want to know why these people are not subject to the same regulations as Canadian fishermen are subject to. We want to know why they are given capelin licences when 440 Newfoundlanders were refused this year. We want to know why they are able to catch by-catches of cod and everything else. Why are they out there in the first place? We are not over there. Mr. Speaker, do you see any Canadian boats off the Soviet Union, England, France, Spain? No.

In conclusion, we have nothing against the Government of Canada having meetings with Spain and Portugal about what is being done outside the 200-mile zone, but there are only 160 ships outside, 80 of them factory freezer trawlers. However, there are 250 foreign factory freezer trawlers inside the 200-mile zone licensed by the Government. The Government should be ashamed of itself. This is absolute madness.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Gander—Grand Falls (Mr. Baker) made a very interesting speech. He gave us quite a picture with respect to what is going on right now. However, toward the end of his remarks he seemed to be anxious to make some additional points which time did not permit him to make. I would like to ask him whether he would give us a summary of the additional points that he intended to make in the first instance.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, I want to tell you how important this issue is. We have fishplant workers and fishermen who are out of work. They are watching off their coast foreign boats which are licensed by the Government. In the past six weeks, over 60 factory freezer trawler licences have been issue to foreign countries by the Government of Canada to fish within 12 miles of our coast. That is where our inshore fishermen fish. They are not fishing offshore. They are fishing in the area that our inshore fishermen fish with boats that are 300 feet and 400 feet long in some cases. These are gigantic floating fishplants. Each one of them is a fishplant. There are 250 fishplants fishing all around the coastline 12 miles off our coast licensed by the Government of Canada while the Government of Canada is trying to find out what economic aid to give to Nova Scotians and Newfoundlanders who are being laid off. Has foreign aid been replaced by fish aid? Is that what has happened here? The unemployed fishplant workers and the fishermen want to limit the 200-mile limit to Canadians. They want to restrict it so that they can use that resource.

The Government of Canada can talk all it wants and try to persuade foreign nations to do this, that and the other thing 200 miles or more off the coast of Canada, but we are asking a simple question. Why give the Polish Government licences to fish grey sole? Why, on Friday, did the Government give the Faro Islands 15 licences to fish turbot? That is turbot that we fish. Why is the Government going to give the East Germans another 20 or 30 factory freezer trawler licences to fish the very fish that we fish?

Just listen to the list of fish that they will be able to catch, Mr. Speaker: cod, redfish, halibut, silver hake, witch—that is flounder—squid, capelin, grenadier. Perhaps we do not need grenadier. We do not fish it. It is a deep water fish, a little scrawny fish with a big head, like some politicians we know. We do not need that fish, that is fine. The list also includes the poor beagle shark, as I mentioned before. Why issue licences to countries to fish at all? If they need that fish, why not catch it and sell it to them? In the meantime, do not issue licences that have been refused to Canadian boats. Every Member here on the east coast has constituents who wanted capelin licences this year.

There are hundreds and hundreds of boat owners who cannot get capelin licences, and they are looking out at the Russian fleet now, 12 miles off the coast of Newfoundland, fishing capelin. The problem is in their own backyard. We do not want the future of Eastern Canada and our fishery to be run like a social club in External Affairs. We want justice. We want those licences cancelled. The first thing the Government of Canada must do is to clean up its own act.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): No further questions or comments. Debate. The Hon. Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Gauthier: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): A point of order. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, all Parties have had negotiations concerning the length of speeches today. I have a proposal that could be a start toward allowing more Members to debate. For today, the Opposition Parties would propose that after the first three speakers have concluded their remarks, the Opposition Parties be allowed to divide the times allowed to them into two periods each of 10 minutes, followed by five minutes each for questions and comments. In other words, the Opposition Parties elect today to divide their 20 minutes plus 10 into two periods of 10 plus five. The Government may want to do that, but I am told that for today the short notice does not allow for that. If that could be made an order of the House, I would appreciate it.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, we on the Government side have no problem with this. We think it is a good idea that may have some future application to all the different Parties. The one thing we would want to make sure of is that we as a Government keep our full time-slots available to us today because of the subject matter and because of the points we wish to make on this particular debate. But we have no problem with that proposition. We are quite happy to agree to the Opposition Members splitting their time.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, we also agree with the suggestion. It was brought up at a Whips' meeting last week. Just so the public understands what we are doing, we are allowing more members to speak on the issue of Atlantic Canada today. It is our belief that this does not necessarily set a precedent, but it will be something that we will deal with as each Opposition motion comes up. Perhaps the Government may wish to deal with some of its bills in the same way. However, we do not believe it can be a general practice. It really has to be decided upon once we know the subject matter that is to be before us.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is fine. The Chair will take that into consideration.

An Hon. Member: Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): You want to put a House Order in today.

Mr. Gauthier: I am not asking for consideration from the Chair. I am asking for the House to agree that the Opposition Parties may today, by exception, split their times, their 20 minutes plus 10, into two periods of 10 plus five. What I want is an Order or an agreement amongst all of us here to that effect.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I believe that there is that agreement. Debate. The Hon. Minister of Public Works.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to congratulate my hon. friend who has just spoken on his usual eloquent and somewhat, if I may say so, exaggerated rhetoric. Nonetheless, I know that my colleague from St. John's East will be making some very timely remarks to rebut some of the points that he has made.

I would just like to point out to him that some of the points he has made are hardly new. Way back in the early 1970s, the foreign fleets were even closer to our shores. Some of the difficulties which the Hon. Member refers to with respect to our friends from France are the result of treaties that his Government made, which are now quite difficult from which to extricate ourselves. Having said that, I was kind of hoping that I would hear from my colleague opposite, who is a very knowledgeable Member, some timely remarks on some constructive things that he might be suggesting to deal with some of these problems he is talking about. Instead of that, we get the usual lugubrious and exaggerated kinds of rhetoric that sometimes makes me think vaudeville is on the way back.

I would like to say this morning that perhaps it would be more appropriate, at least in my case, if I could deal just briefly with some of the other issues which I think might be timely in response to this motion that has been put forward by my colleague. Our Government is, as this House knows upon reflection, very conscious of the need to provide increasing economic assistance and leadership in Atlantic Canada. It has done so more than any other Government in history. The facts speak for themselves.

To put it in perspective, the interest charges on the present public debt are about $39 billion, which incidentally is about the level of the deficit that the former Government left us when it was rejected by Canadians five years and two elections ago.

An Hon. Member: Which you have doubled.

Mr. MacKay: At that time, when we had this very critical time in Atlantic Canada, the Liberal Government allotted $185 million on average to help Atlantic Canada, not the half a billion dollars that our Government has made available this fiscal year, not to mention for the moment the rest of the transfers that flow into Atlantic Canada through increasing equalization, CAP and other programs. Consider these as well. Remember, colleagues and Mr. Speaker, that during the last tenure of the Liberal Government, right in the middle of it, when things were at their nadir in Atlantic Canada, when things were really down in the heel, to put it in the vernacular—interest rates, inflation, unemployment all up—we were allocated only $150 million to assist us for regional development. As Casey Stengel would say: "You can look it up." Three times more money is available today for Atlantic Canada at a time when, as my hon. friend suggests, the fisheries are in some difficulty and there is a need for some assistance. This year, we have half a billion dollars ready to flow into Atlantic Canada.

That figure is very interesting because, thanks to the legacy of debt that we received, right now it takes over 20 times more than is allocated for regional development just to pay the interest on the public debt. I think people in Atlantic Canada would certainly be appreciative of the fact that at this time, when the Government is under such pressure because of the debt that we inherited, we are allocating over three times more in regional development aid to help Atlantic Canada than was the case in 1982 and 1983.

It is the federal Government that made it possible, and is making it possible, for the Governments in Atlantic Canada, the provincial treasurers and the premiers, to proudly announce—and we are happy for them—that they are making considerable progress in coming to grips with their own economic difficulties, in coming close and in some cases succeeding in balancing their budgets. Does the federal Government get any credit for this? To listen to the litany of doom coming from across the other side of the House, you would think that the opposite were true. Mr. Speaker, Canadians are fair. They know very well that this country has certain economic difficulties, not the least of which is a debt problem, and they realize that in Atlantic Canada this Government is putting forward the kinds of resources that are unprecedented to help that part of Canada. Mr. Speaker, Liberals have a strange unique perspective in politics.

An Hon. Member: So I noticed.

Mr. MacKay: It is no good unless they do it. My hon. friend from Nickel Belt says yes, so do Tories. So do New Democrats. I can tell him that I certainly admire some of the unique perspectives that he brings to his work.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: I think that this kind of motion takes a certain amount of poetic licence with the facts, when they say that we have initiated policies to devastate Atlantic Canada. When this comes from a Party that voted against ACOA, it has to be looked at with a certain amount of cynicism.

• (1150)

The Liberal opposition voted against having a unique and very useful agency located in Atlantic Canada to do something constructive and make decisions. After ACOA became a success, the Opposition said "Oh, my, you are spending the money too fast. You are spending too much money". Then, when we try to modify the program and certain policies a bit, what did we hear then? "Oh, this is terrible, you are cutting back". The Opposition really does not know what it wants.

The one thing the Opposition very clearly wants is power. Liberals understand that. Power to Liberals is like sex to puritans. They pretend to loathe it, but they lust after it and they are very, very uneasy with the exercise of it by anyone but themselves.

When it comes to looking objectively at economic development policy, I think it is worthwhile to refer briefly to an excerpt from a book by Professor Donald Savoie, who wrote a very excellent treatise on economic development. I was interested in it because, like some of my colleagues here in the House, I have been following the various transmogrifications of recent development policy for many years. One of the things that DREE was very, very keen on doing was promoting growth centres.

Mr. Tobin: You called it DRIE.

Mr. MacKay: DREE then became DRIE and under the Liberals it became DRIFT.

This is what Professor Savoie said:

> But we also learned from social scientists not only in Canada but abroad as well, that the growth–pole concept was only one of a series of "fashions and fads" that was seized upon 'only to be abandoned— when it turned out that it was not a unique or complete solution—
> The growth pole gave way to the "comprehensive" GDA approach, which in turn gave way to the equally comprehensive ERDA approach. Putting aside the issue of political viability, ERDAs thus far have offered little that is new in terms of regional development programs.

Now, social scientists insist that perhaps never in the history of economic thought has so much government activity taken place and so much money been invested in the foundation of so confused a concept as the growth pole became in the late 1960s and early 1970s. I put that on the record to show that there is no unique or necessarily proper solution for regional economic development. It is something that is evolving.

Ms. Clancy: This one certainly isn't.

Mr. MacKay: My colleague from Halifax says this one certainly isn't. I think she would concede that ACOA has done a great deal in Atlantic Canada.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. MacKay: Let us look at the record then.

In 1984, when this Government came to power, the unemployment rate was over 15 per cent. Today, that rate is below 12 per cent. In 1984, there were 805,000 people employed in Atlantic Canada. Today there are almost 100,000 more. In 1984, capital investment in Atlantic Canada totalled $6.1 billion. This year it will amount to $8.6 billion. In 1984, there were 10,800 housing starts. This year there will be approximately 13,000 housing starts. I will go on, if I may, for a couple more. I know my colleagues opposite want to hear this because they are interested.

Mr. Tobin: There is a Liberal Government in New Brunswick, P.E.I., Newfoundland, and there will be one in Nova Scotia.

Mr. MacKay: It just goes to show that unlike the SCRAP Program my friends opposite proposed before the last election and which was a highly politically motivated affair, ACOA is far from that. We in the federal Government want to help Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Tobin: You have more nerve than a toothache.

Mr. MacKay: I can back up those figures. The Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. LeBlanc) is a fair man and he knows that $12 million was spent for a wharf in Mulgrave under the SCRAP program. I was glad to see that happen, but I will say one thing. The scraps were really scraps when it came to many constituencies. I didn't get a dollar in mine. The Canadian people were not too impressed with the SCRAP program because they scrapped the Government that brought it in, so that was not a particularly good initiative for them.

This year there will be over 120,000 business establishments, compared with 85,000 in 1984. In 1984, the gross domestic product in Atlantic Canada, which is a baseline measure of economic output in the region, amounted to $23.7 billion. This year it will reach $33.7 billion, a tremendous increase of 50 per cent over five years. There can be no dispute, if one looks at it objectively, that the economy of Atlantic Canada is strong and growing stronger under the policies of this Government.

Mr. Tobin: When did you last go home?

Mr. MacKay: Atlantic Canadians can be assured, as stated clearly in the Speech from the Throne and as confirmed in the Budget, that this Government is firmly committed to supporting regional development.

Federal spending in regional development in Atlantic Canada this year, as my colleagues know, will reach a record level of $500 million. Over the next five years, spending will remain at record high levels, averaging $425 million per year. For purposes of comparison, federal expenditures on regional development in Atlantic Canada during the past five years were $282 million per year. These are facts. Clearly, this Government is committed to a very healthy expenditure plan as an integral part of a purposeful approach to regional development.

Ms. Clancy: Welfare will go through the roof.

Mr. MacKay: Nevertheless, as previous Governments have discovered, throwing money alone at problems is not enough. It seldom achieved the right solutions and this is certainly the real challenge of ACOA today in developing the Atlantic economy to its maximum. That is why this Government has taken the extraordinary step of establishing a new agency dedicated solely to Atlantic Canada.

After listening carefully to the views of Atlantic Canadians, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), in June of 1987 announced the creation of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. He announced it in St. John's, Newfoundland, a very appropriate place. This is not a traditional department of government. It is a bold, innovative and new approach which more closely resembles a private sector model. The agency is located in Atlantic Canada, not in Ottawa. The president, and through him the Minister, is guided by a private sector advisory board. The agency's programs and policies are conceived and delivered in Atlantic Canada by Atlantic Canadians. This is a far cry from the centralist approach that characterized regional economic development in the past.

For the first time, the people of Atlantic Canada have the opportunity to choose their own course and to shape their own destiny. The agency has been given a full mandate and it has appropriate powers to develop it. The legislation which created ACOA, to which my hon. colleagues across the aisle objected, provided the agency with four broad powers. The action plan includes the ability to create programs of direct assistance to organizations, advocacy, which gives capacity to promote the interests of Atlantic Canada in national policies and programs, co-operation, which is the right to make agreements with provinces for joint action and co-ordination, and the responsibility to co-ordinate all federal programs having an impact on regional development in Atlantic Canada.

The most visible of ACOA's roles is the action program. Through this very successful vehicle, almost every Atlantic business and the institutions supporting them know about ACOA. Through the action program this agency has committed more than half a billion dollars to solid economic development projects. This program has been a tremendous success since its introduction in February, 1988, and its acceptance by Atlantic entrepreneurs has been overwhelming, as evidenced by the more than 60,000 inquiries and over 12,000 applications for assistance which have been received to date. Applications have been submitted at ten times the rate experienced under predecessor programs. There has been no indication of any drop in this level of interest. In fact, during April, ACOA experienced its two busiest weeks in terms of applications received. This is certainly an encouraging sign that ACOA is making real progress in its basic mission to stimulate entrepreneurism in Atlantic Canada.

I may say to my friend from Newfoundland that when I was in Newfoundland last week it was obvious to me that this program had done a lot of good things for his province in the fishing sector, as he will concede if he wants to check the figures. I realize it is never enough, no matter how much is put into a regional program. But ACOA, if my hon. friend wants to be fair about it, has done a lot of good things to Atlantic Canada.

My colleague said "Don't make any assumptions about fairness". I don't necessarily believe that. I believe my colleague opposite realizes, within the bounds of partisanship, that this is a good agency for his province as it is for other provinces in the region.

Mr.Tobin: You are building cold storage and there is no fish to put in it.

Mr. MacKay: The program is generating a very significant economic impact. There is no question about it. Some 5,100 applications have been approved involving commitments of assistance totalling some $600 million which over the coming months will leave approximately $1.4 billion in direct private sector investment. This, of course, is reflected in job creation.

• (1200)

There are additional indirect economic benefits of a similar magnitude through the multiplier effect. These projects are expected to create, directly, 13,000 new jobs, and this impetus to the economic climate will largely be felt in the coming year as the projects reach commercial production, a very timely boost to the Atlantic region.

This program will remain vital to ACOA, but it cannot, in spite of the ongoing commitment to it, carry the load alone. The advocacy function is also very important. The Act creating ACOA specifically sets out this mandate to ensure that ACOA can exercise legitimate influence on the major policy and program decisions made by the federal Government.

In its first two years of existence, ACOA has focused on advocacy activities primarily in the field of federal procurement. Atlantic Canada needs the kind of procurement contracts which can help its industries build new technologies and skills. Too few of these kinds of procurement contracts are placed outside central Canada. ACOA has targeted a number of key purchasing decisions and is working to help both the client departments and Atlantic Canada businesses get the best possible deal.

The objective of both the co-operation and co-ordination mandates is to draw together the regional development efforts of federal and provincial Governments. While the achievements in this field will be limited by the independent mandates of all the players, ACOA has been given the necessary powers, both financial and legal, to do the job. The nature of its role is clear in its legislation which says that its Minister shall co-ordinate the activities of all federal Departments and agencies which affect economic development in Atlantic Canada. Of course, this includes some of the policies to help support fisheries about which my hon. friend has spoken previously.

It also accords to the Minister the right to enter into agreements with provincial Governments, and the extent of the powers given to ACOA is perhaps best evident in the recent budget papers tabled with the 1989 Budget. These documents outline an allotment of funds for regional development in Atlantic Canada which go well beyond ACOA's own reference levels. The allotment for regional development in the Atlantic region includes all of ACOA's budget, plus the money that will be spent by other federal Departments on programs cost shared with the provinces or on special federal initiatives for regional development. The budget papers further state explicitly that the use of the funds in the allotment will be determined by the Minister responsible for ACOA.

The most important single focus of these co-ordination efforts is in the field of federal-provincial agreements which enable the provinces to undertake tasks they could not otherwise afford. The agreements also provide a mechanism for the drawing together of federal and provincial programs. The agreements, by placing ACOA in a strategic position to influence the size and content of such agreements, allow the federal Government greatly to improve its capacity to shape these key influences on regional development in the national interest.

By exercising its mandate, ACOA has developed, in consultation with other federal Departments, a set of priority themes which will guide the application of the funds within the allotment, and these priorities focus on the keys to development which are entrepreneurship, technology, trade, human resource development, and the environment. These priority themes will be used to measure the various programs put forward by federal Departments or provinces and play an important role in setting the federal agenda.

I understand that my time is about to expire. Perhaps I can simply conclude by saying that this is the first time that Atlantic Canadians have within their region an agency with a broad mandate for action and co-ordination, whose whole focus is specifically the needs and opportunities of Atlantic Canada. The success of the agency will lie in its ability to have influence beyond the boundaries of its own programs.

No regional development program can, by itself, compare with the over-all impact of broad federal government action. ACOA must be effective in influencing these broad federal policies so that they enhance the development opportunities of the region. ACOA has the tools to do this and has taken the first moves toward this success. Sustained effort and support from all Atlantic Canadians including my hon. friends opposite will ensure that the job gets done.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, let me say first that I have a great deal of compassion for the Minister who has just spoken. It is an awesome burden for a Member from Atlantic Canada, a Member from the riding of Central Nova, to be forced to stand in his place to defend the Government's record over the last number of years.

For Atlantic Canadians, nothing could more painfully illustrate the difficulties and the problems we have than comparing the speech made by the Hon. Member for Gander—Grand Falls (Mr. Baker) with the speech made by the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay). The Hon. Member for Gander—Grand Falls spoke from his heart and with passion. The Hon. Member for Central Nova spoke from a text. The Hon. Member for Gander—Grand Falls was the voice of the people of Atlantic Canada in the House of Commons. The Hon. Member for Central Nova was merely the voice of official Ottawa, the apologist of the Government of Canada.

The Minister wonders why we on this side of the House are cynical about the speech we just heard about the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency while we are talking about a crisis in our region.

We had assurances from the Government during the election campaign that UIC would never be touched. The Government announced right after the election that it was getting out of the UIC business and saving itself billions. We had assurances from the Government during the election campaign that ACOA would never be cut. The Budget came in and ACOA was slashed. We had assurances last summer that Hibernia was going ahead and that the legal contract would be signed by March 1989. I see on the calendar in front of me that it is now May 29 and there is still no legal contract on Hibernia and no indication, other than indications that it has gone into the quicksand of failed Tory promises, that Hibernia will go ahead. There is a healthy degree of cynicism acquired based on the experience of Atlantic Canadians and Members on this side about the value and worth of the commitments given from those on that side of the House.

The Hon. Member for Central Nova has the terrible burden as an Atlantic Canadian of defending the Government's record. He does it with all the passion of a telex machine, spouting out the words prepared by the bureaucrats in the officialdom of Ottawa. He said that he did not hear any constructive suggestions from the Hon. Member for Gander—Grand Falls. The Hon. Member for Gander—Grand Falls made, as his primary argument with respect to the crisis in the fishery, the suggestion that the Government has to disallow the quotas that have been given to foreign countries fishing in Canadian waters, catching Canadian fish at a time when Canadian fishermen are being told to haul up their boats and stay home. He is saying that it is time to stand up for the 100,000 people of Atlantic Canada who depend upon the fishery, and he is saying that surely this is a legitimate time to say that if we cannot provide fish for our own fishermen and fish plant workers, it is the time to say no to foreign factory freezer trawlers that are raping the resource. That was his very positive suggestion.

I want to ask a question of the Minister from Atlantic Canada, the Hon. Member for Central Nova, the Member who, when he came here a dozen years ago, had a bit of passion in his blood. I can remember that as a rookie MP, he used to stand up and defend the interests of Atlantic Canada. I want to ask that bloodless Minister opposite to find again his passion and his reason for being here, his commitment to his region, and stand up and say that he will cut those foreign quotas and give the people of Atlantic Canada a chance to restore to themselves the dignity of a pay cheque because they do not want welfare. Does the Minister opposite not realize that?

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, regardless of passion, I never believed that rhetoric was any substitute for reason. In law, they used to say: "If you have the law on your side, you pound the law. If you have the facts on your side, you pound the facts. If you have nothing, you pound the desk". These people opposite are pounding the desk.

Concerning my hon. friend's comments about the fishery, he, in his simplistic passion, as he calls it, would have us believe that we can blithely, by some xenophobic policy, disregard some of the obligations that past Governments, principally his, have arranged with some of our friends, including some of the nations in NAFO that support and strengthen the Canadian fisheries. This is the usual treatment we get from the Opposition, full of passion, full of fire, absolutely devoid of reason.

• (1210)

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister a question with regard to his own Province of Nova Scotia. In his speech he spoke with as much passion as we expected with regard to federal–provincial agreements. He said how valuable those were to the region.

Could he explain how many of the economic and regional development agreements between the federal Government and the provincial Government of his own province, which have been signed and have expired, are to be renewed?

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for that very constructive question. I can tell him, as he probably knows, that approximately half the ERDA agreements or economic co–operation agreements are still in place between the federal Government and Nova Scotia. Of the half that have recently expired, we are going to be negotiating to see, with respect to the provincial Government's priority, which ones it wants to have renewed or if it wishes to have other priorities or other types of agreements.

Ms. Clancy: Mr. Speaker, with the no less passionate and perhaps slightly cooler methods that abound in Nova Scotia as opposed to those in Newfoundland, I might ask the Hon. Minister a question.

After many, many engagements with Members on this side of the House in committee and in the House, and after having told us that the economy of Atlantic Canada is strong, and after commenting to my honourable friend about the Economic Regional Development Agreements, could he possibly give us some idea of just how much money we can expect in negotiating these ERDAs? How much money will he be going to the provinces with when they make their priority decisions so that they have some idea as to where they stand, or are we yet to get no answer from the Hon. Minister?

Mr. MacKay: I am glad that my colleague opposite recognizes the buoyant economy of Nova Scotia. As the Prime Minister has indicated, 43,000 more people are working in Nova Scotia today than were working in 1984. I can understand her sincere interest in how much money we are going to have to enter into negotiations with the various provinces. As I tried to indicate in committee, this is not a figure that I can give her today; perhaps not for some time.

Ms. Clancy: Why?

Mr. MacKay: For one reason, we have funds that are going to be delivered through the action program, which is a direct delivery from the federal Government. We have other funds that will be allocated to the Economic Development Agreements. I cannot negotiate in public by telling her globally what we are going to do until I speak with the various Premiers and the Ministers.

Mr. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has consistently trotted out $500 million as being the amount of money which will be spent for development in Atlantic Canada this year. Would he explain to the House what is included in that $500 million? Second, what is projected for subsequent years, given that the ACOA budget of $1 billion has been spread out over two extra years and 60 per cent of that budget, I might add, was committed during the period up to the end of November?

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, there are a number of elements in that question. The amount of money that was committed earlier in the mandate has allowed us in Atlantic Canada to establish a base for future economic development assistance, which is considerably higher than it was in the past and higher, incidentally, than it is with respect to WD.

I think that the money put out was done so in a constructive and timely fashion. I am the first to concede, as I did in committee, that we have not seen the results of all these applications yet. There may be some failures. In fact, I would be surprised if there were not. There was a lot of funding put out over a short period of time. I think, judging by the statistics, that it did a lot of good.

In terms of the half-billion dollars—and I am quoting by memory—I think my honourable friend would remember that by examining the blue books in committee there was something like $380 million shown in the Estimates. The rest of the $500 million comes from the line Departments which are also included in economic development spending. There are some of the remnants from the old IRDP program and the former DRIE program of which I think the IRDP is the principle remnant.

As far as funds that will be available for economic development assistance in subsequent years, as I have indicated to his colleague from Halifax, I think upon reflection he would realize that it would be unwise for me, if I could give him an exact figure, to do so publicly before I had a chance to get down to some serious negotiations with the provinces.

All I can tell him is that we are very much committed to continuing this form of regional economic development assistance. At the risk of sounding partisan, we have done more on this side of the House, particularly this year when the fisheries and other sectors may be needing special assistance, to provide an unprecedented level of funds which will flow into Atlantic Canada and provide stimulus where it is most needed.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the motion before us today is that this House condemns the Government for initiating a series of policies that are causing unprecedented economic devastation to Atlantic Canada. In speaking to that motion, I wish to cover four different areas if time permits. First, with regard to regional development; second, unemployment insurance; third, Established Programs Financing; and, last, the Atlantic fisheries.

The question I asked the Minister just a few minutes ago dealt with regional development. He had indicated in his speech that he was all for the federal-provincial agreements. We know that as of March 31 of this year 26 of the 44 economic and regional development agreements in Atlantic Canada expired. In raising my specific question to the Minister, I asked him how he felt about the agreements that expired in his own Province of Nova Scotia and whether or not those agreements would be renewed because the indications we have been given are that some of these agreements will not be renewed.

The Minister in his reply indicated that they would have to get a hold of the provincial Government in Nova Scotia and after that they could get together and have discussions about the Economic Regional Development Agreements.

The Government of Nova Scotia is a Conservative Government. It has been in place for many, many years. The federal Government is a Conservative Government. It has been in place for many years. It is not as if suddenly, at the end of March 1989, the federal Government and the provincial Government discovered these agreements had expired. Each and every one of the provincial Governments in Atlantic Canada and across Canada and the federal Government knew that these agreements were going to expire on March 31, 1989.

Indeed, some of these agreements had expired before then. In some cases there had been extensions for one or two years in order that they would expire on March 31, 1989, by which time the federal Government would be in a position to know what it was going to do with the ERDA agreements.

Therefore, either the Minister's answer is lacking or his commitment and that of his Government is lacking. They have the Department. They have the officials. They have the resources, and there certainly is the need to have these agreements in place. Here we are two months after the March 31 expiry date, and he says: "We will have to get hold of the Buchanan Government in Nova Scotia to see which of these agreements it would like to have renewed."

Can you believe, Mr. Speaker, that people concerned about fisheries, about forestry, about tourism have not had any ideas since March 31, 1989? Can you believe, Mr. Speaker, that the people concerned about economic development, people concerned about DEVCO, people concerned about all these things that are important to Atlantic Canada have just sat still, have never talked to their Premiers, have never talked to the federal cabinet Ministers or federal departmental officials? Obviously that is not true.

Obviously the common denominator is that the federal Government has not got its act together on regional development and is unwilling to make the commitments that are necessary. In an interview immediately after the November 1988 election, Mickey Cohen, a former Deputy Minister of Finance who has been both a defender and proponent of the federal government philosophy, indicated one of the directions that the Government should take in light of the Free Trade Agreement. He stated: "I guess I would go after regional development and universality. I would cut out most of the industrial programs, particularly the ones geared to the regions. If you want to cut spending, you have got to cut programs. You have got to say to Atlantic Canada: you are on your own".

• (1220)

As I said, Mickey Cohen is a former Deputy Minister of Finance and has defended and proposed many of the government programs. I believe that his advice given after the November 1988 election is the advice that the Government is following. It will not admit that, because it would be politically devastating, but it is obviously the direction the Government is taking.

The Minister spoke about the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and said that it was important, that it was being used, that it was something the region really needed, and that the decisions were finally made in Atlantic Canada. Only two weeks ago he announced that the program funding was going to be cut for this agency. According to the Minister, it was important, it is being used, and the decisions are being made in the region. He went on to say that all the small businesses understood the importance of the program and were aware that the program was available. Available? Yes. But, funds? No. Again, Atlantic Canada is being hurt.

The direction of the Government is obvious. It is not only happening here one day and over there some other day. When we saw the well leaked Budget of the Minister of Finance we saw that this year there would be $1.4 billion for regional development but that next year there would only be $1 billion for regional development in this country. There is $1.4 billion one year and $1 billion the next year, and in subsequent years there is an indication that there might be further cut-backs.

We know that regional development has been a prime target of the Americans since the Free Trade Agreement was signed. We know that the Americans got most of what they wanted at the negotiating table, but one area in which they have not had complete success is regional development. By the actions of the Government, whether it is cutting the regional development program by $.4 billion each year, whether it is cutting the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency each year, or whether it is cutting back on the Economic Regional Development Agreements that existed between the federal Government and the provinces, it is fulfilling the American mandate. The Government is not fulfilling a Canadian mandate. It is not fulfilling the requirements of the Canadian Constitution with regard to regional development, but it is meeting the goals of the American negotiators. That is exactly what the Government is doing.

It is a sham for the Minister to pretend that he has to find out what the Nova Scotia Government wants with regard to Economic and Regional Development Agreements. That shows exactly what the federal Government is attempting to do. It is attempting to get out of a significant role for regional development. It will devastate the country and guarantee that the inequities that exist at the present time will only become worse with the passage of time. That is the goal of the Government, because it wants to make sure that the American negotiating position is the ultimate winner in the battle for control of this continent.

I would like to address that issue longer, however, there are many other things that are hurting Atlantic Canada. I am only allowed 20 minutes to cover all those issues, so I will move on to an issue that I believe is equally important, and that is the issue of unemployment insurance.

As one of the previous intervenors mentioned, during the election campaign the Member for St. John East indicated: "No one is planning any changes in the Unemployment Insurance Program. There haven't been any changes proposed". At that time that may have been true. That is just like the Government stating that it would not be cutting funding for regional development, or stating that it was going to keep full funding for the Atlantic Agency. All those things were true at one moment in time. It is like the statement of Richard Nixon when he was President: "They are no longer operative". It may have been true on Wednesday, not true Thursday, and may not be true on Friday. That is the problem.

The Government ran an election campaign and stated that it was going to do certain things to help Atlantic Canada, in the same manner as it stated the same things to the other regions of the country. Yet, right after the election in the first Budget, those programs disappear, or the financing is drastically reduced, or the Government refuses to renegotiate existing federal-provincial agreements.

Exactly the same situation exists with regard to unemployment insurance. We were told that our Unemployment Insurance Program was not going to be affected by free trade. We were told that we were going to help those people who were unemployed, and this is especially important in Atlantic Canada. However, what does the Government do? Even before the Budget, it becomes obvious that the Government is conducting a major restructuring of the Unemployment Insurance Program to deny benefits to many Canadians. Now, as a result of the Budget, the federal Government is also being taken out of any funding role or unemployment insurance. That role has existed for years.

The Government is saying that the employers and employees have to pay for a program which will not meet their needs. However, the federal Government still wants to be able to control the funding and be able to deny the program to many Canadians, but at the same time it wants to be the piper that does not pay. It wants to give the direction, deny people programs, and deny benefits to certain regions of the country, but it does not want to make any financial contribution to the program. Again, in Atlantic Canada, as the Premier of Nova Scotia stated, it could be a real threat to the social security budgets of the provinces. That is what he stated when describing this program.

Another area that concerned me with regard to the Budget is the further reduction in the federal Government's commitment to Established Programs Financing. This is not the first time that the Conservative Government has cut the level of financing for universities, community colleges, and hospitals. It has been done before. The Government is following a precedent that was set by the previous Liberal Government when the MacEachen and Lalonde Budgets reduced the level of funding.

While the federal Government talks in terms of reducing its commitment, fighting the deficit, or stating that it is still contributing more than it did the previous year, the Government knows that what it is actually doing is reducing its role and commitment to health care and post-secondary education. Each time the Government does that, it means that there will be fewer young women and young men going to universities or community colleges. It means that hospital beds will be closed in various provinces. It means that there will be another operation postponed. In all likelihood, it means that there will be more deaths because the hospital beds were not there, the operations could not be performed, the nurses were not being trained, the doctors were not being trained, and the facilities may indeed be closed, even although in some cases they are already built.

The other day I spoke to Kathleen Connors, President of the National Federation of Nurses Unions in Canada. She pointed out that in each province people tend to think that the health problems are strictly a provincial crisis. In the Province of Manitoba they would say if the provincial Government would do more we would not have to close those hospital beds. In Nova Scotia, they would say there would be more nurses if the provincial Government would put more money into Medicare. One would hear the same comments in Prince Edward Island.

• (1230)

The basic reason for these situations is not because the provinces are not committed but because federal governments in the last 15 years have continued to reduce their level of financial commitment to our post-secondary and health programs.

We know that with an aging population more hospital beds will be required. We can do more for all our citizens with the development in technology. That costs money. We know that health costs are rising above the cost of living. Yet the federal Government insists that it cannot contribute as much to health care and post-secondary education as it had promised in the past.

I noticed recently that Saint John Shipbuilding in New Brunswick was advertising offshore for people to work in its shipbuilding facilities. Here is an area of high unemployment in New Brunswick, an area with a local industry in which young people would love to work. However, as a result of cut-backs to post-secondary education, there are not enough qualified people in our nation to build our own ships. We know that contracts are forthcoming, but what sort of commitment is there to post-secondary education? The federal Government is the major contractor for Saint John Shipbuilding, yet there are not enough trained people to fill those jobs.

The final area with which I want to deal today is the Atlantic fishery. It was the issue raised by the Member who spoke first on this motion and it is indeed a crisis situation. Again, it is a situation in which the federal Government has direct involvement. It is a situation about which the federal Government said one thing months ago and is doing something else now.

While we knew there was a problem with the fisheries in the past, admittedly we did not have all the information that is now available as a result of scientific studies. We knew that the fish stocks in Atlantic Canada were not healthy and that something would have to be done. But let us consider what has happened. Canadian ships are sitting in the harbour because the federal Government will not send them out to inspect the cod stocks. Federally owned ships, whose primary purpose it is to do scientific research into what is happening in our area, are sitting in the harbours because of cut-backs in the past. The federal Government would not be so surprised to learn that there is not as much fish as it thought if it had sent those ships to do the very research for which they are designed.

The same is true with foreign overfishing. The Member for St. John's East (Mr. Reid) got up in the House and said that they do not really know what is going on out there. They should know what is happening. Rather than try to find out what is happening out there, as he puts it, the Government is doing the exact opposite. It is allowing the French to overfish.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is in Spain today saying that he is concerned about the Spanish overfishing. He has been the Prime Minister for five years and there has been a problem with Spanish overfishing for five years. A glass of sangria or a cup of tea with Mr. Gonzalez will not solve the problem for the Atlantic fishery. There has been no attempt whatsoever to protect the stocks outside the 200 mile limit. Other nations facing the same situation with stocks beyond the international border have made some provision to guarantee that the stock beyond the 200 mile limit is healthy. They make some attempt to enforce quotas beyond that limit. Canada has not done so.

We have known this has happened year after year. As a result, Canadians are losing jobs, Canadian plants are being shut down and Canadians towns are being hurt.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, as a Member from Atlantic Canada I want to acknowledge to the representative of the New Democratic Party that we appreciate his interest in Atlantic Canada but when one views Atlantic Canada from the prospect of Manitoba it may be a little difficult to get the realities of the place and determine what is occurring with the economic situation in a province like Nova Scotia. I wonder if the Hon. Member knows that over the past five years there has been a dramatic change in the economic situation in Nova Scotia.

I have a graph from a Halifax newspaper, a neutral authority, which shows very clearly that while federal transfer payments have escalated dramatically, the annual provincial deficit has gone down to the point at which in the year 1991 there will be no budgetary deficit. It is very clearly said that that is a result of the increase in transfer payments.

The Member from the NDP may also want to know that in this month of May, when the Government of Nova Scotia introduced its budget, it was able to announce that the budgetary deficit for the current fiscal year was $47 million less than anticipated. It was down from $70 million. The reason was an increase in transfer payments from the federal authority. It allowed the Province of Nova Scotia to show a reduced budget deficit of almost $48 million.

Of course, the Government of Nova Scotia claimed good financial management, but the Leader of the New Democratic Party said no, that it was because of the actions of the federal Government that the Province of Nova Scotia was able to show such a dramatic change in its financial picture. She called it a windfall of federal funding to the Province of Nova Scotia.

Does the Hon. Member agree with his colleague from the NDP in Nova Scotia about the advantages of the increase in federal funding to Nova Scotia, and does he not agree that it will enhance the economic position of the province and enable Nova Scotia to better deal with the problems that it may face in the future?

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, it is quite interesting that the Conservative Member from the Halifax region does not know whether to support his Conservative Premier or the Conservative Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). I think that is part of the problem.

When he looks at his province and the unemployment rate, he will see that the provincial Government could be doing more. If he looks at the funding for the very many campuses in Nova Scotia, he will see that both the federal and provincial Governments could be doing more.

Whether the Nova Scotia deficit is going up or down is not a primary concern of this House. What is a primary concern of the House is whether those programs that we believe are important for the regions can be financed. If it is a situation where the Nova Scotia Government does not want to do these things, as the Member from Halifax indicates, then perhaps we should be putting strings on some of the funding, as was suggested by the NDP many years ago. We should be making sure that money is going into Medicare and post-secondary education. We should be making sure when there are ERDAs that the money is not directed for politically expedient programs to where there might be a by-election, a federal Cabinet Minister or a new road to be built because there are a few votes out on the street which have not been gotten yet.

• (1240)

For the Hon. Member from Halifax to get up to say that his own Premier is not doing enough is something I can hardly fight him about. He must know. I have travelled in his own riding. As a result of his hard work it is now a New Democratic riding. I am not surprised that the people in Nova Scotia feel—

Mr. Blenkarn: How many New Democratic seats do you have in Nova Scotia?

Mr. Murphy: Having done a good job for the Liberals in Ottawa, the Hon. Member now wants to do something good for the New Democrats in eastern Canada.

The situation is that the people in Nova Scotia know that the provincial Government is not doing enough in those areas. All one has to do to see that is to travel along the various coastlines to the interior of Nova Scotia and into Cape Breton to know that the provincial Government could be doing more and that the federal Government could be doing a great deal more. I thank the Hon. Member for his question.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I have been quite liberally quoted this morning. I take that as a compliment, I guess. I would appreciate it if the Hon. Member would tell me where the words came from so I could pursue them.

I would certainly like to comment on one thing and ask the Hon. Member perhaps to explain better. On the one hand, he said, the federal Government has done nothing about foreign overfishing. On the other hand he talks about the Prime Minister's initiative in dealing with the Government of Spain. This is a situation about which there have been calls for action many times in this House, certainly by Members opposite. What we saw yesterday was the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) being very forceful with the Government of Spain. He made it very clear to the Government of Spain that this sort of activity is endangering Canadian fishermen and the Canadian fishery and that it is something that would affect the relationship between this country and Spain and this country and the European Community.

We have had an opportunity to hear so much about supposedly what the Government has not done. We have closed our ports to countries that fish outside their agreement with NAFO. We have told them that they cannot come into this country, tranship and change crews. They cannot come into this country for water and food. If they insist on overfishing we will continue our action. Regardless of what fishery they are in, regardless of what it is that they do, they cannot enter into our ports.

We have increased surveillance. We have 100 per cent observers on foreign trawlers.

The Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) will be meeting with his European counterparts. He will make the same points. It continues to be said at the highest level. The country is unhappy. We will not continue to tolerate overfishing. It is not in the interests of the world that this happens. Will the Hon. Member comment on the inconsistency of that?

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, first, I apologize to the Hon. Member for attributing statements to him. I meant his colleague who is in Cabinet from St. John's. If I mentioned the wrong riding in some of my comments, I am sure the Hansard reporters will correct that.

With regard to having tea or coffee with the Prime Minister of Spain, I do not think that is enough. We have known about the situation with regard to Spain for many, many years. Because the Prime Minister happens to be in Europe this week, happens to have a free day and goes to Spain, is not something which indicates a very forceful position whatsoever. That is the truth.

I remind the Hon. Member that I understand his desire to defend the Government. The day I had my Private Member's motion on Atlantic Canada before the House, he got up and spoke with some eloquence, I must admit, about the need for the Atlantic agency. I think he spoke at about five or ten minutes to six. Just one-half an hour later it was his Minister who went before the committee to announce that the Government was cutting the funding for the Atlantic agency.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The time allotted for questions and comments has now terminated. We are now going forward with the suggestion made by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). As the House agreed, there will be 10-minute speeches and five minutes for questions and comments.

The Hon. Member for Moncton.

Mr. George S. Rideout (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, the issue we are dealing with today as Atlantic Canadians and as Members of the House is an issue of fairness. We submit that there has not been fairness and equality of treatment as far as Atlantic Canadians are concerned. Is it fair that the Government should cut 1,200 jobs at the CNR Shops in Moncton, New Brunswick, putting 1,200 people out of work? Should the Government now talk about cutting jobs at VIA Rail, putting another 200 people out of work? In fairness, should the Government talk about closing CFB Moncton and putting another 215 people out of work? Is that fair? Is that fair to Moncton? Is it fair to Atlantic Canadians?

What Members opposite usually do is quote statistics for all the jobs they have created. However, they have not gone through the CNR Shops and looked one worker in the eye and felt his concern and despair. He wonders what will happen to his family, his career and whether or not he has to move and if his family has to go on welfare. Those are the things people have to face.

The Government is concerned about the bottom line, about trying to manage the economy. Atlantic Canadians say: "We are prepared to co-operate and work, but we do not have to suffer and suffer in this way". I look at the infrastructure in this country and the fact that we were to have a rail line running from sea to sea to be constructed after Confederation. We now read that subsidies to VIA will be cut. Only nine VIA lines will be protected. Is it fair that none of those protected lines are in Atlantic Canada? I say that it is not fair.

There has been a recent announcement that CN and CP can apply for abandonment of unprofitable lines, but western lines are protected until the year 2000. However, Atlantic Canadian lines are not protected at all. Is that fair to Atlantic Canadians? Again, I suggest it is not.

When one analyses the approach the Government is taking, one sees that it is trying to solve the problems of deficits and the problems of upper Canadians on the backs of Atlantic Canadians. We do not feel that is fair.

The Minister spoke about ACOA. He outlined all the fine things it has done and all the money it has put into the Atlantic economy. The little business man is the fellow who is being adversely affected by the recent decisions and cut-backs. They will try to tell us that it is aimed at the little guy. It is not. It is the big fellows who get the money out of ACOA, not the little guys. We say that is not fair, and not fair to Atlantic Canadians.

When we consider the cuts to the ERDAs and the amounts that either have not been announced or are being looked at again, we see there is a question of fairness or unfairness. The ERDAs dealing with agriculture and forestry have yet to be signed. It is creating a great deal of uncertainty and concern for Atlantic Canadian farmers and forestry workers. They are not sure what will happen to them.

When we look at hospitals and universities and our opportunity to pull ourselves out of the quagmire of unemployment, we see that universities are being cut. That is indicative of unfairness.

Hospitals in Atlantic Canada presently have beds, but they do not have the money to open wings. They have people literally in the corridors of hospitals. Now there will be more cuts. There will be more people in the corridors of hospitals. Is that fair to Atlantic Canadians? I again suggest it is not.

• (1250)

The Government's policy with respect to transportation seems to be that it is for planes, no trains or automobiles. There will be no trains in Atlantic Canada, or just one line running from Halifax to Montreal. This is totally unacceptable, both for passengers and for freight service. Is that fair to Atlantic Canadians?

One of the conditions of Confederation was that we be linked together. Are we trying to throw the railroad and the passenger rail service out of business so that all of the people will have an opportunity to travel on our dilapidated and deplorable Trans-Canada Highway without any upgrading of that roadway? All we are doing is creating a hazard to all motorists. If we are going to try to drive people and businesses to utilize trucking services, again that is going to put great pressure on the Trans-Canada Highway, which is totally inadequate.

As I said at the outset, it is a question of fairness. We in Atlantic Canada are prepared to do our share but we feel that there has been an unequal sharing of the burden of this deficit. I believe that it is proven from all of the facts and figures that we have talked about and will continue to talk about today, that Atlantic Canadians are bearing an unfair burden of the deficit problems, with the economic conditions as we find them.

I say with all sincerity that we Atlantic Canadians are tired of begging. We are tired of kneeling down and asking Ottawa or Upper Canadians for help and assistance. We look forward to the time when we can stand up and say that we are an equal partner in this Confederation and are an equal member in a have-province or a have-region, rather than a have-not province or region. With Government policies of unfairness to Atlantic Canadians, that opportunity will never be presented to us.

I would like to conclude with a quote from Rod Archibald, who is president of the New Brunswick Federation of Agriculture. I believe his comments really typify what all Atlantic Canadians, in particular New Brunswickers, feel. I quote: "I know New Brunswick has only 3 per cent of the Canadian population and maybe that's the problem. Perhaps the federal level thinks we are too insignificant to bother with. I believe being a Canadian gives me the right to be treated fairly and on the same level as all other Canadians. We are good farmers here in New Brunswick and given equal conditions we can compete, but the playing field must be the same for all Canadian farmers." I think the playing field has to be same for all Atlantic Canadians and all Canadians rather than the way it is set up now.

In conclusion, and given the importance of this debate and the great interest from all sides of the House, I would move, according to Standing Order 26(1), seconded by my colleague, the Member from Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. LeBlanc):

> That the House continue to sit through the lunch hour today for the purpose of continuing consideration of the motion moved by my colleague from Gander—Grand Falls (Mr. Baker) now before the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The House has heard the motion. All those who object to the motion will please rise.

And more than 15 Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion is defeated. Debate. The Hon. Member for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception.

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, by way of a comment I would like to commiserate with my colleague from Moncton. He talked about his concern about the 1200 workers in Moncton. I know Moncton. I have visited there. He talked about his concern about the reneging on the promise of building the badly needed Canadian Forces supply depot. We are dealing with plant and infrastructure that have been in existence there since before World War II. In the area of VIA Rail and transportion in Eastern Canada and, relevant to his point on VIA Rail in Moncton, Newfoundlanders are very conscious of the bum deal they got from this Government in which the Newfoundland railroad was closed down in September of last year for a sum that on the surface looks very large, $800 million.

But when you consider how much the railway was losing each year—I think it amounted to somewhere in the vicinity of $50 million—if we multiply that by 15 years, that is $750 million that is being lost in now-year dollars. That is $750 million alone. If we add to that the $100 million that was necessary to look after the communities of Bishop Falls and Port aux Basques that were suffering because of this and to also pay off the unfortunate people who lost their jobs, $800 million is not very much money.

We have no roads. We have no railroad. It is going to cost us $2.25 billion to pave a four-lane highway across Newfoundland. We are now in the position where major transportation is under a great impediment. We certainly have no passenger service. That went out in 1967 or 1968. We are in a very, very difficult situation with respect to transportation. The Hon. Member from Moncton, I believe, is giving warning and is the harbinger of bad things to come for Eastern Canada. As a Newfoundlander, and as a Member from Eastern Canada, I will tell you that this is something that we should not be looking forward to. It is something that we should fight until there is not a breath of air left in our body.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being awfully close to one o'clock, I will call it one o'clock. The House will resume again at two o'clock this day.

At 12.58 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CASABLANCA ARAB SUMMIT—LEBANON'S FUTURE

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, on Friday the Arab Summit in Casablanca called for a political settlement for the Lebanese crisis, based on a reform of the system followed by the election of a president of the republic.

With all our heart, we hope that the kings of Morocco and Saudi Arabia and the Algerian Head of State who are handling this sensitive issue will succeed in this mission as soon as possible.

Nevertheless, we deeply regret that the Arab Summit did not recognize that it will be almost impossible to hold free presidential elections, to form a new government or to develop the constitution until the non-Lebanese armed forces have left the country.

I ask the Canadian Government to use all the resources at its disposal, especially its seat on the United Nations Security Council, to help the Lebanese determine their own future and their own government and be able finally to live in freedom and peace.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

LEADERSHIP BID OF MEMBER FOR PORT MOODY—COQUITLAM

Mr. René Soetens (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, on May 26, the Hon. Member for Port Moody—Coquitlam (Mr. Waddell) boasted that skirting the edges of the rules of procedure of this House was not a dangerous precedent but instead was a good opening shot on his leadership campaign.

On Tuesday, May 9, the Hon. Member for Port Moody—Coquitlam announced his intentions to seek the leadership of the New Democratic Party of Canada.

When asked during his press conference how he would lead his Party to win more seats in Ontario, his response included a statement that he was originally from the Toronto area, although he would never admit it publicly.

The reason I rise today is to wish the Member well in his leadership bid.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Halifax.

THE LATE WILLIAM P. OLIVER

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to the Reverend William P. Oliver, Order of Canada, who died in Halifax on Friday last. Reverend Oliver for 53 years was a spiritual leader and human rights activist throughout Nova Scotia. One of our province's first black university graduates, he ministered for 53 years in the Annapolis Valley, Halifax and Beechville. He was a founder of the NSAACP, the Black United Front and the Black Cultural Centre.

A gentleman in every sense of the word, the Reverend Oliver advanced the cause of equality and human dignity by untiring commitment and indefatigable spirit. While these goals are still to be realized, the awareness and sensitivity to human rights that exist in Nova Scotia today are due in no small part to Doctor Oliver.

Our sympathy goes to his wife Pearleen, his sons and his family, as well as to the black community and the larger community of Nova Scotia. We will not see his like again.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE HANDICAPPED

NATIONAL ACCESS AWARENESS WEEK

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, next week, June 4 to June 10, is National Access Awareness Week. The purpose of the week is to heighten awareness of the need for integration of people with disabilities.

The campaign will focus on five main areas: transportation, housing, employment, recreation, and education. National Access Awareness Week is a time for communities to examine the accessibility of services and facilities, to set goals for future progress, to make practical improvements, and to celebrate achievements. The goal is to make Canada the best place in the world for people with disabilities to live.

A local committee in my riding has organized public events to promote the access awareness theme. These events include model information displays, open houses, a film festival, school presentations, a kick-off luncheon, a baseball game, and poster contests.

I want to take this opportunity to wish the National Access Awareness Committee of Grande Prairie a very successful week.

THE BUDGET

NEWSPAPER EDITORIALS ON MINISTER

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Saskatoon—Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) lost control of the budget process on April 26, he was quick to quote editorials supporting him. He has not been quoting newspapers this week. Here is why.

On Friday the Winnipeg Free Press had an editorial entitled "Mr. Wilson Should Resign". It suggested that while a new Minister could gain credibility with the business community, what is needed now is a Minister who has credibility with the Canadian people. Friday's edition of The Ottawa Citizen said "Stonewalling Wrong—Wilson should offer to resign", while the Ottawa Sun of the same day said that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) should accept his resignation.

An Hon. Member: Good idea!

Mr. Hovdebo: Even the Conservative Globe and Mail stated "Mr. Wilson's defence is a strange but politically expedient redefinition of ministerial responsibility".

The Toronto Star stated: "Michael Wilson must step down". The Montreal Gazette said: "Wilson Must Go".

The media of this country know what is needed. The people know what is needed. It is time for the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister to catch up with the rest of the country.

FILM

REQUEST THAT FILM MAKER DENYS ARCAND RETRACT CERTAIN ASPERSIONS

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, fame and celebrity do not necessarily go together with good judgement. The people of Abitibi—Témiscamingue and Rouyn—Noranda will long remember what film-maker Denys Arcand said on the program Clap broadcast by Radio-Québec on Saturday, May 27: "—a prize won in Cannes is worth more than a prize won in Rouyn—Noranda."

Mr. Speaker, that is an insult not only to my constituents but especially to the whole team of the Abitibi—Témiscamingue International Film Festival who year after year give unstintingly to make this event something special.

Fortunately, such prestigious stars as Claude Lelouche, Margot Kidder and Philippe de Broca have a quite different impression and hold the Rouyn—Noranda International Film Festival in high esteem.

I therefore ask Denys Arcand to apologize publicly for his inappropriate comments about my region and especially about the excellent team who have made this event internationally famous and something of undeniable quality.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY

Hon. William Rompkey (Labrador): Mr. Speaker, today is the fortieth anniversary of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. Canada can take a great deal of pride in its role in this organization from its very beginning. As a matter of fact, Article II is known as the Canadian Article. At the end of 40 years, as NATO looks back and also looks ahead, it is very important for us as Canadians and our partners within the North Atlantic Treaty Organization to consider how this organization can be made more effective in the future.

I submit it is true that with the creative use of Article II emphasizing economic and cultural things that we hold in common with our partners we can make the greatest contribution to world peace.

Now is the time for security, but now is the time also for looking for initiatives that can really bring about world peace through the North Atlantic Treaty Organization which we salute today.

THE BUDGET

TIME DEVOTED TO LEAK

Mr. Bill Casey (Cumberland—Colchester): Mr. Speaker, day after day the Opposition goes on about the great Canadian budget leak. As a new Member of Parliament I am amazed at the time devoted to this issue when there are so many other issues far more important. Certainly it was unfortunate that there was a budget leak at all, but we cannot bring the Government to a stand still. The Opposition has made its point. Now let us get on with the matter at hand and do the job we were sent here to do.

People in my riding in Nova Scotia contact me every single day about important matters concerning fisheries, forestry, agriculture, regional development, unemployment insurance, and on and on. The fact of the matter is that not one constituent has ever contacted me about the budget leak or discussed the matter of the budget leak with me, and I respectfully request that we get on with the business at hand, that of running the country and serving the public.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UNREST IN LEBANON

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, the situation in Lebanon has recently taken a turn for the worse. A few days ago Syria set up a blockade around Beirut preventing all goods from entering the capital. This has seriously reduced the already drastic shortages of fuel, fresh food, water, and electricity in this war-torn city.

[Translation]

I would ask the Government to exert pressure through the Arab League and the United Nations to have the Syrian blockade lifted.

[English]

I would also like to suggest that if these measures to halt the blockade are not successful then Canada should recall the Ambassador to Syria for consultation as a symbolic gesture of disapproval of that country's decision against the people of Lebanon.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary Northeast): Mr. Speaker, as the North Atlantic Treaty Organization celebrates today its fortieth anniversary, it is facing a new reality, changes in the Soviet Union with glasnost, and movement toward more freedom and democracy.

NATO has performed very successfully since its inception 40 years ago and can take credit for Europe being free of war for 45 years, but it is confronted today with a new challenge because of those new realities. There is a desire in the world today to make it a safer place to live and at the same time the need to remain vigilant and militarily strong so as to prevent another world war.

As the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) put it so eloquently: "NATO speaks for freedom. We don't have to apologize to anybody".

The Leaders in Brussels should keep this in mind during their deliberations about the question of reduction of NATO Forces in Europe.

THE BUDGET

BUDGET LEAKS—MEDIA'S POSITION

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, on April 27, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) could say he had the sympathy of the public and the media. The media rushed to defend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). The Government, they said, was not directly responsible for the Global leak, and Michael Wilson had acted quickly and appropriately. I know the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and their staff are avid readers, and I will tell you what they read:

S. O. 31

On May 26, Raymond Giroux said in Le Soleil: "By falling into the duplicity trap, Mr. Wilson has caused the Canadian dollar to drop. International speculators sense that the Minister is not in control". On May 27, Alain Dubuc said in La Presse: "This incident has serious consequences. First of all, Mr. Wilson looks very foolish. Second, he has shown a serious lack of judgment in the way he presented the facts. Finally, he is losing credibility. A minister of Finance must be credible, frank and transparent. Mr. Wilson is not". On May 27, Paul-André Comeau said in Le Devoir: "As for Mr. Wilson, he should have the good grace to tender his resignation and to—

PHYSICAL FITNESS

CANADA FITNESS WEEK—THE CROSSING OF CANADA ON FOOT

Mrs. Monique Tardif (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, on the occasion of Canada's Fitweek, I would like to draw the attention of the House to what is being done at this very minute by marathon runner Phil Latulippe of Lorette-ville in the beautiful riding of Charlesbourg. On March 16 this year, on his 70th birthday, Mr. Latulippe announced he would be leaving on his second trip across Canada on foot, with another marathon runner, André Jean.

After leaving Vancouver on April 1, on his 6,754 kilometre trip, Mr. Latulippe expects to finish in 150 days. After 59 days, he and his partner have already left British Columbia, Alberta and a large part of Manitoba behind them, and we expect to see them in Ottawa on July 27. Why get involved in this kind of undertaking instead of enjoying a rest? The answer is simple: For fun, to collect money for his friend that will help disabled Canadians improve their fitness and to promote physical fitness among Canadians of all ages.

Canada's Fitweek is the greatest celebration of physical fitness in the world. Phil Latulippe, with his courage and determination, is a shining example of—

NATIONAL HEALTH

CLOSURE OF CENTRE FOR OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH AND SAFETY

Mr. Robert D. Nault (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to inform the House of what the Government is doing to the future viability of occupational health and safety research in Canada. The Government is in the process of closing the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety located in Hamilton. The centre will be progressively stripped of its $10 million in annual federal financing by 1991.

The Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety has been an invaluable source of information for labour groups, management, government, health and safety organizations, the media and educational institutions. The Government has lost complete control of its collective senses. It believes the centre could eventually end up as a free-standing private institution operating on a non-profit basis or on a for-profit basis. Does the Government really think businesses will donate funds to the centre for the purpose of investigating their own shortcomings?

This is a time when most Canadians require as much information as possible about the safety and conditions of the work environment. To dismantle or privatize the centre would be irresponsible and callous. I urge the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) to wake up to the realities—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

INTERIOR BARRIERS THERETO—REQUEST FOR REVIEW

Mr. Al Johnson (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, with the Free Trade Agreement with the United States in place, it is now time for the Government of Canada and the Governments of the provinces and territories to make a comprehensive review of all the interior barriers that have been set up that prevent free trade within Canada.

Canada's coal industry is particularly concerned that federal and provincial diesel fuel taxes for mining and transportation of low sulphur coal from western Canada to Ontario can amount to as much as $2.50 per tonne. This puts our clean western coal at a disadvantage to American coal which does not face such taxation and which is being introduced into southern Ontario. I urge the Government to review this matter as soon as possible and to take steps to remove all such barriers to trade within Canada.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

TIMING OF KNOWLEDGE OF DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, for 33 days the Government has misled Parliament. At 1.30 p.m. on April 27, the President of the Mutual Life Assurance Company advised the office of the Minister of Finance that his company had been in possession of the Budget in Brief for three days. The Deputy Prime Minister, who is here today, and I both know how the system works.

Mr. Fred Gorbet, the Deputy Minister of Finance, was advised of the second leak. Surely Mr. Gorbet must have immediately informed his Minister, the Minister of Finance. It is frankly inconceivable to me that he did not.

Paul Tellier, the Clerk of the Privy Council, and Stanley Hartt, the Prime Minister's Chief of Staff, must also have been informed almost immediately. Surely they would have told both the Prime Minister and the chief of operations, the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada, but the Minister of Finance says that he was not informed until later in the afternoon after Question Period.

If this is so, on whose authority was the Minister of Finance not informed? Surely senior officials would not have taken this upon their responsibility alone. Exactly when was the Deputy Prime Minister himself advised of this second leak, and did he order officials not to inform the Minister of Finance?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition's assertions about misleading the House are totally, absolutely untrue, and he knows it and he should refrain from making statements like that.

Simply, the manner in which the Budget was going to be handled as a result of the extraordinary circumstances that occurred on Wednesday, April 26, was first to seek the co-operation of the Leader of the Opposition and the Leader of the New Democratic Party to allow the House to be reconvened so that a proper presentation and statement could be made. That was not forthcoming.

The issue of the Doug Small leak was a matter of public knowledge at that particular time. It was turned over to the RCMP at that time, and that investigation was started, and any other relationship to any other allegations. The next day there was a whole series of allegations and suggestions about further leaks. As a matter of fact, an article in The Globe and Mail indicates that many leaks were reported to the RCMP special unit. "Mounties suggest one suspect linked to both budget leaks". "Police probe reveals widespread leaks".

I am saying that at that time, the process for the introduction of the Budget which took place on Wednesday, April 26, at about 10 p.m. or 10.30 p.m., was in fact the de facto presentation of the Budget to the people of Canada. Anything else related to any suggestions or potential leaks was immaterial because the die had been cast, and it had now become a matter for the law enforcement agencies to take its proper course. That is exactly what was done.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the House will note, as will the country, that the Deputy Prime Minister has not replied to my question as to when he personally was advised of the leak to the Mutual Life Assurance Company, and he did not reply as to whether or not he ordered officials not to inform the Minister of Finance.

REQUEST AS TO WHEN PRIME MINISTER WAS INFORMED OF SECOND LEAK

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Government is not only engaged in a cover-up, it is also thumbing its nose at Canadians.

I have the following question for the Deputy Prime Minister. Why did the Prime Minister refuse to say exactly when he was informed of the second leak, the one to Mutual Life of Canada? Was it because the Prime Minister wanted to avoid having to explain to the House why he misled it during Question Period on April 27?

When was the Prime Minister informed? Was it the Prime Minister who decided not to inform the Minister of Finance immediately?

• (1420)

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition for not answering one aspect of a many faceted question. When I returned to my office from Question Period on April 27, I had received a call from the Clerk of the Privy Council which I returned. It was some time, I would suspect, about 3.30 or toward four o'clock that I returned the call. I was advised of additional information that had been drawn to his attention. I can assume that about approximately the same time he would have informed the Prime Minister. But, Mr. Speaker, this information is immaterial to the case because it was part and parcel—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Max Keeping had suggested that he had evidence of a further leak. Now are we supposed to treat Mr. Max Keeping and other allegations or potential leaks a little differently?

The fact of the matter is that the Budget was tabled to the people of Canada the night before, Wednesday, April 26, and anything that occurred thereafter was irrelevant to that fact. It then became a law enforcement matter, and he knows the consequences of commenting on something that is before the RCMP, unless my learned friend wants to conduct an RCMP investigation on the floor of the House of Commons. He knows that that is not the proper course.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have no inclination to conduct an RCMP investigation on the floor of the House of Commons, but I do intend to conduct a parliamentary investigation on the floor of the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

APPEARANCE OF SENIOR OFFICIALS BEFORE BAR OF HOUSE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to suggest to the Deputy Prime Minister that if cabinet Ministers have nothing to hide, they should not fear the truth. The entire Conservative front bench seems to have a case of collective amnesia as to what happened after that telephone call was received.

It seems inconceivable to me that a decision to keep the information from the Minister of Finance should have been made on the authority of senior officials alone. Either the Deputy Prime Minister or the Prime Minister must have had something to do with it, on the assumption that the Minister of Finance did not know, as he told the House.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister agree to a procedure which we have not used here for some time but which is part of the rules of the House of Commons, which will allow all Canadians to find out what really happened after that phone call was received and will allow them to decide for themselves whether or not the Government has acted properly or improperly? Will the Government agree to call before the bar of the House of Commons Mr. Paul Tellier, the Clerk of the Privy Council, Mr. Stanley Hartt, chief of staff of the Prime Minister of Canada, and Mr. Fred Gorbet, the Deputy Minister of Finance, to answer questions about when and how they advised the Prime Minister, the Deputy Prime Minister, and the Minister of Finance of this second leak?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was not here on Friday, and I would suggest that since he was not here he should have taken the time to read the exchange that took place.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Where is the Minister of Finance, by the way?

Mr. Mazankowski: The Minister of Finance is attending to important financial matters.

An Hon. Member: He should be here.

Mr. Mazankowski: To respond to the charade from the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition, nonsense. He has more important things to do like defending the interests of Canada, defending the interests of the Canadian economy and the dollar.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: It is this kind of misleading information that is hurled across the House of Commons that has made it difficult to deal with this issue.

The Minister of Finance made it very clear that he was informed some time after Question Period on the 27th. He made that very clear. Now the Leader of the Opposition stands up and says for some reason or other that I withheld information from him. If you have proof of that, sir, come on, bring out the facts and stop the political run around.

APPEARANCE OF SENIOR OFFICIALS BEFORE BAR OF HOUSE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Deputy Prime Minister. I am sad to hear that the Deputy Prime Minister thinks that there are better things to do than to be accountable to the people of Canada.

First Canadians learned of the budget leak through a television reporter who received the Budget in a gas station. Then we found out about another copy of the Budget being circulated in a bar in the east end, later the same document was found at a racetrack, and then to an $11 billion financial institution.

Given the latest revelations that the Budget was found where else but on a bus in the City of Ottawa, is this not proof enough of the incompetence of this Government? Does this not prove to the Deputy Prime Minister that the Minister of Finance should be recalled home immediately and the officials should be called before the bar to answer to the people of Canada through the House of Commons?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member suggests that he is apologizing to me for my not being accountable to the people of Canada.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is not what he said.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, that is what he said. I have been accountable to the people of Canada for 21 years and 7 elections, and I have been accountable for every action of this Government in this House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hon. Member may disagree with the decision of the Government and the process that was enacted after the extraordinary events on Wednesday night, April 26. They can disagree with that. It is quite obvious that they have because from the outset they were not prepared to co-operate with the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: I hear some Members across the way saying cover-up. Mr. Speaker, how preposterous. How could this be a cover-up when everything the Government had become aware of was turned over to the RCMP? Then surely, at the appropriate time, the RCMP will deal with this issue in a proper manner.

I would ask the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition to go back to what he said on May 2, 1989:"We will wait to see what comes out of this investigation. We will want to see what the RCMP report says about the incident". Why doesn't he live up to his words, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Boudria: I say to the Deputy Prime Minister: Thank you very much, Lieutenant-Colonel Oliver Maz. I want to ask him the following supplementary question.

[Translation]

THE SECOND BUDGET LEAK—DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, last Friday the Minister of Finance admitted in the House that Cabinet, in the widest sense of the word, had been informed and had collectively decided to hide the truth from the House of Commons because there was an investigation by the RCMP. I would like to know—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I may not have heard completely what the Hon. Member was saying, but it seems to me what he is saying is that one of the Ministers has deliberately hid the truth from the House.

Mr. Boudria: No.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member could put his question again.

[Translation]

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, my question to the Deputy Prime Minister is this: Exactly who in the Cabinet decided not to inform the House about the second Budget leak? Was it the Minister of Finance, was it the Deputy Prime Minister himself or was it the Prime Minister? Could we have the truth and have it now?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, that question has been answered before. The decision about the way in which the Budget was going to be handled was taken on Wednesday night. The Budget was released at that particular time. The Budget was in the public domain.

The Opposition were making all sorts of charges and allegations and suggestions that there was more than one leak. We said: "If you have that information, it should be reported to the RCMP". This matter on Thursday became a matter for the law enforcement agency to look after; it became a law enforcement matter and no longer a budgetary matter. It is in the hands of the RCMP. Let them do their work. What we have here again is—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville.

• (1430)

INQUIRY AS TO DELAY IN INFORMING MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I remember very well on the evening of the leak, April 26, when the Minister of Justice stated on television that the Government would be open and above board regarding the leak.

In light of that, in light of the fact that last week the Minister of Finance would not say why his staff had not informed him of the Mutual leak either before or during Question Period, in light of the fact that the Minister would not say when his staff had made a phone call to the Prime Minister's Office to let the Prime Minister know, and in light of the fact that the Minister of Finance would not say who on his staff had taken the call from Mr. Masterman at about 1.30 on that afternoon, and assuming that the Minister of Finance did not know until after Question Period, what I want to know and what the Canadian people want to know is who made the decision to keep the Minister of Finance in the dark for at least 90 minutes? Who made that decision? Surely to goodness after almost one week the Deputy Prime Minister now knows who made that decision.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance answered that question in the House on Friday. As I said before, the decision about the way in which the Budget was going to be handled was taken on Wednesday night.

If Hon. Members had any information about further leaks, they were duty-bound to inform the RCMP, not to raise it on the floor of the House of Commons. That is what was done. That was the proper course of action.

After the Budget was released to the Canadian people, the issue with respect to the investigation of unauthorized possession of the document was a law-enforcement matter, and that is where it stands.

DUTY OF OFFICIALS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the Minister's officials were duty-bound to tell the Minister that they had received a call about 1.30 from Mr. Masterman, who is the President of a life insurance company with assets of around $11 billion.

What I want to know is who made the decision to keep the Minister of Finance in the dark for at least 90 minutes?

I remember Rosemary Woods. I remember Richard Nixon. What I want to know is who—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, that is the same question and I have answered it, so has the Minister of Finance.

COMPETENCE OF MINISTERIAL STAFF UNDER QUESTION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I will put the question a different way.

People out in the countryside are asking the following question. They are saying that either the Minister's staff panicked and were incompetent, or else the Minister's staff had received orders from higher up to keep the Minister in the dark.

I want to know from the Deputy Prime Minister which one was it? Was the staff incompetent and they panicked and did not tell the Minister of Finance, or were they operating on orders from above to keep him in the dark until after Question Period?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, what Canadians are wondering is why we are engaged in this charade, which is driving down the dollar and undermining the confidence of the Canadian economy. That is what many people are wondering.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: It is about time for a little responsibility and a little sense of fair play. The opposition Parties can disagree very fundamentally with the course that was chosen. The course was chosen on Wednesday night when it became evident that there was unauthorized possession of a budgetary leak.

The matter was turned over to the RCMP. Efforts were made to bring the House of Commons back so the Minister of Finance could introduce his Budget in the House of Commons, as is the tradition. That support and co-operation was not forthcoming, so the Budget was tabled.

Anything about any further leaks or suggested leaks or associated leaks or potential leaks was a matter for the RCMP. It then became a law enforcement matter. Surely the Hon. Member understands that.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF THE RIGHT HON. MALCOLM FRASER, FORMER PRIME MINISTER OF AUSTRALIA

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw to the attention of Members the presence in the gallery of the Right Hon. Malcolm Fraser, Former Prime Minister of Australia and Chairman of the United Nations Expert Group on African Commodity Problems.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CONSEQUENCES OF GRISÉ AFFAIR

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether the Government is as concerned as the Official Opposition about the continued presence in the House of a Member of Parliament, twice elected as a Conservative, who has been convicted of fraud and breach of trust?

If the Government is concerned about that, I would like to ask the Minister what the Government intends to do about it?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes and, to a large extent, the matter is for the House of Commons to deal with as well as Members on the government side.

This matter has been raised in the House of Commons. The Prime Minister is seized of the issue. He will be returning some time later this week and I would expect that he would want to deal with it.

In the meantime Mr. Grisé may very well take the opportunity to choose an honourable course of action. Perhaps Members may want to consider that as well.

At the present time, Mr. Speaker, you have been seized with this issue. It is not only a matter for Government. It is a matter for the House of Commons. Needless to say, we are very disturbed about it.

STATEMENTS MADE BY CABINET MINISTERS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the light of that answer, I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he will dissociate the Government from statements made by the Minister of Transport and the junior Minister of Finance that the Member should be allowed to make up his own mind, and from the Chairman of the Caucus that it is not up to us to judge him, of the Minister of Justice that this individual should be given a break—

Mr. Speaker: We have been through this line of questioning a few days ago. The Speaker is in the position where the question is really out of order unless it relates to the administration of the Government. That is why I think the Hon. Member is probably on difficult ground in pursuing it.

The Hon. Minister may want to respond.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I thought that I had responded in an appropriate fashion, but perhaps not to the satisfaction of the Hon. Member.

However, I want to remind him and other Members that he is not a member of the Progressive Conservative Caucus. He does sit as an independent Member. I am as disturbed as he is, and I am sure other Members are, about this particular issue.

Anything that we can do individually and/or collectively to deal with this issue in a proper manner so as not to undermine the integrity of the House of Commons and all Hon. Members is something that we would all be interested in doing.

Simply to assure the Hon. Member, from a government point of view we are seized with the issue notwithstanding the fact that it becomes more than a government issue, but we hope that we can deal with it in a proper manner.

THE BUDGET

DECISION REGARDING SECOND BUDGET LEAK

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, I want to repeat a question to the Deputy Prime Minister that perhaps he has either failed to understand or—and I would hate to suspect this—refuses to answer. The question is quite simple.

When the Government became aware of the second leak to an $11-billion financial institution, we are asked to believe that no Minister of the Crown, neither the Deputy Prime Minister, the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, or the Minister of Justice knew about it for nearly two hours.

However, once those Ministers I have just named knew about it, I want to ask the Deputy Prime Minister, who took the decision not to come into Parliament that day, the next day, or any subsequent day in the next 27 days and tell Parliament about that second leak? Whose decision was that? The Prime Minister's? The Deputy Prime Minister's? The Minister of Finance's? Who made the decision?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member states "When the Government became aware of the second leak". I understand that perhaps the Hon. Member was aware of a second leak. If he is aware of a second leak, he should make it very clear.

A May 25 headline states: "Mounties suggest one suspect linked to both Budget leaks". As I said before, and I find it very difficult that the Hon. Member cannot comprehend a very simple answer, he may very well disagree with the course of action that the Government had taken as a result of the revelations on Wednesday, April 26.

• (1440)

Some Hon. Members: Who?

Mr. Mazankowski: The Government made the decision—

Mr. Harvard: Who?

Mr. Mazankowski: The Government made the decision—

Some Hon. Members: Who?

Mr. Mazankowski: The Government made the decision to release the Budget on Wednesday, April 26, and anything that followed thereafter became a matter for the law enforcement agencies. That is a decision that we stood with.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the reason we are still on the subject in Question Period is that the Government withheld information from Canadians and from the Parliament of Canada. It is not just the opposition Parties who are upset by that. The Sun demands the Minister's resignation. The Winnipeg Free Press demands the Minister's resignation. The Citizen demands the Minister's resignation. The Gazette demands the resignation, La Presse, Le Devoir, The Toronto Star—

Mr. Valcourt: Ask the people.

Mr. Tobin: —all demand the Minister's resignation.

CONFIDENCE IN MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): My supplementary question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Does he not realize that this is not a partisan issue—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: The people of Canada cannot put trust in a Minister who has lost the right to hold the public trust. Will he resign?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Government did not withhold information. The Government took the only course of action it had available to it.

Ms. Copps: It covered up.

Mr. Mazankowski: As soon as the information about the unauthorized possession of the Budget in Brief document was flashed on television, immediately decisions were made to proceed with the introduction of the Budget that evening, and decisions were made on Thursday on the basis of the Budget that was introduced.

Ms. Copps: To cover-up the second leak.

Mr. Mazankowski: There was no cover-up.

Mr. Tobin: The whole country says: "Go, Michael, go". Wake up. Fire the Minister.

Mr. Mazankowski: How could there be a cover-up when all of this information was turned over to the RCMP as part of the investigation that is ongoing right now? If there had been an attempt to cover up, surely the Minister of Finance and others would not have turned this information over to the—

Mr. Tobin: If you had an ounce of shame you would be crawling out of here on your knees.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hon. Members across can disagree with the decision that was taken—

Mr. Tobin: The whole country disagrees. Wake up.

Mr. Mazankowski: —but I ask them to seriously consider the step-by-step process. If they do, in an objective and rational way, they will agree with the position of the Government as was outlined by the Minister of Finance on Friday.

MINISTER AND PARLIAMENT KEPT IN THE DARK

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. I will ask him about a step-by-step process. He will be aware that he has now had a month to check out all the details. Once the Minister of Finance's office was informed that there was a second leak, at least half an hour transpired. Someone in that office, some official, decided that it was not in the interest of the Minister of Finance to be informed of that, and later, of course, as the previous questioner indicated, Ministers were aware of the situation of the second leak and chose not to inform the House of Commons and the people of Canada.

Mr. Andre: They informed the RCMP.

Mr. Riis: Can the Deputy Prime Minister identify who the Ollie North north is in the Minister of Finance's office who chose to cover up and not inform the Minister of Finance during Question Period? Second, which Minister was it who decided to keep Parliament in the dark and the people of Canada in the dark on this issue?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, on April 27 we had allegations of further leaks from the Member for Hamilton East. We had allegations of further leaks from the Member for Oshawa. We had allegations of further leaks from the Member for York South—Weston. We had allegations of further leaks from the Member for Winnipeg South Centre. We had allegations of further leaks from the Member for Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte. We had allegations and suggestions of further leaks from the Member for Kamloops. We had a whole series in the newspapers, on television, and all of this information was part and parcel of the subject of the RCMP investigation. If the Hon. Member had any information, he suggested that he did, did he go to the RCMP and give them the information, or did he withhold information from the RCMP? Did he know?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TIME THAT INFORMATION GIVEN TO DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, earlier in Question Period the Deputy Prime Minister said that he learned of the second leak late in the day.

Mr. McDermid: What did you do with your information?

Mr. Riis: There have been a number of discussions between Members on the Opposition side, both from the Official Opposition and the New Democratic Party, who remember very clearly the following set of events: During the latter stages of Question Period on April 27, a page came in and called out the Deputy Prime Minister. The Deputy Prime Minister left, went behind the curtains, returned with an ashen look on his face, informing the Minister of Finance. Both went out behind the curtain with the Minister of Justice. Was that not the time when the Deputy Prime Minister was first aware that there had been a second leak?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has either imputed motives or come awfully close to imputing motives about my personal integrity. I want him to reconsider the statement that he made.

I did find out after Question Period as a result of a call that was put into my office, sometime I presume during Question Period.

Mr. Gauthier: Which leak?

Mr. Mazankowski: We are talking about the Mutual Life issue. I was called by the Privy Council Office. I returned the call sometime after I returned from Question Period. I can tell you that given the information that was imparted to me at that particular time, I can only assure the House and all Hon. Members that it simply confirmed that the course we took on Wednesday night was the right, logical and only course to take.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SITUATION IN CHINA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Alex Kindy (Calgary Northeast): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, my question is directed to the acting Minister. It concerns the situation in China, where hundreds of thousands of students and workers are having a sit–in and demonstration for freedom and democracy.

As we know, the Chinese Government itself is divided on this issue and certain forces within the Government lean toward democracy and reform. Could the acting Minister inform the House what is the position of the Canadian Government on this important question? Does it support glasnost in China?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we have been following the situation in China closely, as one might imagine. We are pleased to see that both the authorities and the students in Beijing have shown restraint and that the demonstrations and the reaction to them in general have not been violent.

It is my understanding that the demonstrations appear to have lost momentum at the moment and the Prime Minister and Deng Xiaoping seemed to have made headway in their efforts to exert control over the party, state and military. I am happy to say that we are not aware of any Canadians being in any danger there and that the situation appears to be calmer now. If the hon. gentlemen opposite are not interested they should have at least the good manners to listen. Others may be.

THE BUDGET

BUDGETARY LEAKS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. While Canadians are asking for clear and straightforward answers about the leaks, the Minister of Finance has shamefully fled Parliament.

The annual OECD meeting may be extremely important, but why, Mr. Speaker—

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The absence of a Minister is not something new in the House. An explanation has been given as to where the Minister is. The Hon. Member's question is getting very close to impugning the motives of the Hon. Minister and I know he would not want to do that. Please proceed with the question.

[Translation]

Mr. Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Why, Mr. Speaker, didn't the Prime Minister get his priorities straight and demand that the Minister of Finance act responsibly and face the House and the confidence crisis he himself created?

• (1450)

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has duties and obligations in Canada. He has duties and obligations internationally. He is very much in command. I am happy to announce to the Hon. Member that it is business as usual.

CREDIBILITY OF MINISTER QUESTIONED

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, the Minister who does not have the confidence of this House and the population of Canada cannot represent his country adequately abroad.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member can put his question.

Mr. Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is a lame duck. According to the Government he cannot even be told the truth by his own officials.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will please put his question.

[English]

Mr. Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, given the crisis and the responsibility of the Minister, why did the Government not send another Minister whose credibility would not be in question?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is questioning the fact that the Minister of Finance does not have the confidence of the House. If he is so sure of that, then let him put a motion of confidence about our Minister of Finance before the House and then we will see what happens.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ABILITY TO PROFIT FROM BUDGET LEAKS

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister.

On May 26, the Minister of Finance stated that "members of the financial community believe that there is not a basis on which people would be able to make money based on the information that was in the Budget in Brief".

Over the weekend, however, members of the financial community have confirmed, by example after example, the ways in which individuals could have profited from information contained in the leaked Budget.

Will the Deputy Prime Minister now acknowledge that in deciding to proceed with the Budget on April 27 the Government did so in the full awareness that some Canadians were in a position to profit from advance knowledge of the Budget's contents, the very thing that the principle of budget secrecy is supposed to prevent?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, that is part of the ongoing investigation as well. As the Solicitor General has suggested, whenever he has been able to bring information to the House, he has. Members opposite suggest—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: Members opposite do not like what I say. They want their own little answers to their own little questions.

Ms. Clancy: We want the truth.

Mr. Mazankowski: This is a political partisan agenda for them. They do not want the facts.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is trying to settle an old score here. The Minister of Finance called his bluff during the election campaign. He is still smarting from it. He cannot get over it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ALLEGATION THAT OPPORTUNITY FOR PROFIT WAS IGNORED

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, on the afternoon of April 27 the decision was taken by the Prime Minister, the Deputy Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance to proceed with the tabling of the Budget in the full knowledge that both corporations and individuals—

Mr. Lewis: It was tabled the night before.

Mr. MacLaren: —had in their possession for two days or more the Budget in Brief. This was nothing to do with an RCMP investigation. It was a decision of the Ministers involved.

On what grounds was it decided that the many risks of profiteering would be given no priority in the decision to proceed with the Budget?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows that the Budget was unveiled to the Canadian public the night of April 26. That was a de facto release of the Budget. As a matter of fact, everybody knew that. As a matter of fact, the Opposition called the formalized tabling of the Budget in the House of Commons a non-event and walked out. They did not consider that to be a relevant issue.

What was relevant was the release of the Budget on April 26 at 10 p.m. or 10.30 p.m. That is when the Budget took effect.

MUTUAL LIFE LEAK SUBJECT OF RCMP INVESTIGATION

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, on April 27, at 1.30 in the afternoon, Mr. Masterson of Mutual Life phoned the RCMP and established the fact that he had budget information leaked to his office. He also phoned the Government and said that he had budget information leaked to his company. That was not an allegation but a fact.

Why was Mr. Masterson's call not reported to the House of Commons rather than hidden behind an allegation that it is going to be investigated by the RCMP?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure whether the Hon. Member is hard of hearing or not, but that question has been answered many times.

ALLUSION TO STATEMENT OF MR. MASTERSON

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, that question has been asked but it has not been answered. Mr. Masterson did not make an allegation. Mr. Masterson established the fact that he had a leak. He told the Government. It is right there in his statement. Are you calling Mr. Masterson a liar? Are you calling him a liar?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows that questions must be put through the Speaker. The Minister may want to respond.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member may have been able to act as a buffoon in the B.C. Legislature. This is no place for buffoonery.

DOUBLE STANDARD ALLEGED

Mrs. Diane Marleau (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, when Ben Johnson did not play by the rules the Government banned him from competition for life. When a Conservative Member of Parliament pleads guilty to a criminal offence, or a Finance Minister does not come clean with Canadians—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: I do not know where the Hon. Member's question is going, but perhaps she could put the question.

Mrs. Marleau: Does the Government really think that double standard is acceptable to Canadians?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there is no double standard. As I said earlier, the Hon. Member may very well disagree with the position the Government took on Wednesday, April 26, in terms of how it handled the Budget. That is fair comment. However, Members opposite, because of that difference of opinion, should not engage in the kind of character destruction that is going on at the present time.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Sudbury.

PRINCIPLES OF JUSTICE CITED

Mrs. Diane Marleau (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, a fundamental principle of justice is that justice must not only be done but must be seen to be done. Does the Government not realize that Canadians see in the Government an administration prepared to sacrifice public trust for partisan considerations?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put her question.

Mrs. Marleau: Do Canadians not deserve better?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I agree with the Hon. Member when she said that justice must not only be done but it must be seen to be done. I think that is a very worthy axiom that has been the guide for those of us who seek justice.

What we have here is a situation in which the Opposition differs violently from the position that the Government took in terms of how it handled the Budget.

Mr. Barrett: You have not told the truth.

Mr. Tobin: Not the Budget, the leak—how you handled the leak.

Mr. Mazankowski: On April 28 there was some very sage advice emanating from an editorial in the Ottawa Citizen .

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: "Leave the budget leak to the RCMP". That is what we have done. I suggest that Hon. Members opposite should engage—

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition on a point of order.

POINTS OF ORDER

INFORMATION RESPECTING UNAUTHORIZED POSSESSION OF BUDGET MATERIAL

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I take it, Mr. Speaker, Question Period is finished. I have a point of order I want to suggest to the Deputy Prime Minister. During the course of the Question Period, I suggested a course of action to him which I have reduced to a motion which I would like to read to him and to the House through Your Honour.

> That Paul Tellier, Esq., Clerk of the Privy Council and Secretary to the Cabinet; Fred Gorbet, Esq., Deputy Minister of Finance; and Stanley Hartt, Esq., Chief of Staff to the Prime Minister, attend at the Bar of the House when Orders of the Day are reached in the sitting of the House following the day on which this Order is made, for the purpose of providing information to the House concerning the receipt of information about the improper and unauthorized possession and distribution of Budget material and the manner and time in which Members of the Cabinet were provided with this information;

That the aforementioned persons bring with them such papers and records as may be required for these purposes;

That the Clerk and Sergeant-at-Arms of the House take necessary actions for compliance with this Order.

That is the text of my motion, Your Honour. I would like to know whether the Government will agree to have the House of Commons make this Order now, or would it prefer to set down a time for debate when this motion can be put and debated.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, that is a rather strange way of conducting the parliamentary business of the House of Commons.

An Hon. Member: This is Opposition day.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) knows that the normal way in which matters are brought before the House is through the consultation of the House Leaders. I do not know whether the House Leader has had any advance knowledge of this, or what the agenda of the right hon. gentleman really is. They have Opposition days. They have an Opposition day today. There are further Opposition days in the future. There are Estimates before the respective standing committees. They can pursue this matter through various avenues.

An Hon. Member: What have you got to hide?

Mr. Mazankowski: If the Hon. Member wants to raise it with his House Leader, I am sure the House Leaders can talk about it.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the Day. Same point of order. The Hon. Member for Kamloops.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I want to simply say that we certainly would entertain a discussion but perhaps to expedite the matter, and we recognize that this is a rather extraordinary moment, since we are debating an important issue today, perhaps the House Leaders could meet and, if there was agreement, we could continue on for the rest of the day to debate this issue and vote on this matter before the end of the day.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Points of Order

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, one can only question the seriousness of this, when I was just handed a copy of the proposed motion today. The Right Hon. Leader is not serious and neither is the Member over there. If they had been, they would have chosen the normal course of dealing with this issue through the House Leaders process.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the normal House Leaders' meeting does not take place until tomorrow. To show our sincerity in this matter, we are quite prepared to give up the rest of our Opposition Day to debate this matter. I put the Government to the test. Will it agree to change the order of business to begin debating the motion of the Leader of the Opposition right now? Yes or no?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Point of Order. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the House whether there is unanimous consent—

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

An Hon. Member: Do business in the normal way. You have been around here long enough.

Mr. McDermid: Point of Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Minister on a point of order.

COMMENTS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that the Chair check the" blues". During the Question Period there was some unparliamentary language passed at the Deputy Prime Minister from the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett). This is language that is not befitting the Hon. Member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. If there was unparliamentary language from some Hon. Member, then I would hope the Hon. Member would rise and—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): —apologize, otherwise we will check the "blues" tomorrow. The Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca.

Mr. Barrett: If any Member has any accusation against me, put it on the Order Paper and bring a motion into this House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Orders of the Day, the Hon. Member for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception.

SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 81—ALLEGED ECONOMIC DEVASTATION IN ATLANTIC CANADA

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Baker:

> That this House condemns the Government for initiating a series of policies that are causing unprecedented economic devastation to Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception has a 10-minute speech plus five minutes.

Mr. Mifflin: Ten minutes, Mr. Speaker. I am very pleased to finally rise today to speak on Atlantic Canada. I am always pleased to speak on Atlantic Canada because that is what I was elected to come here and do, along with 19 other Atlantic Canada Liberals, one-quarter of them, by the way, making up the Liberal caucus.

I do regret, however, that the tone of my presentation could not be more positive. With the cumulative effect of the events and the happenings that have so adversely affected Atlantic Canada since the beginning of 1989, this is an occasion for concern. It is an occasion for the loyal Opposition to speak. It is an occasion for the Government to listen and to pay attention to this motion. I will read it to you, Mr. Speaker:

> That this House condemns the Government for initiating a series of policies that are causing unprecedented economic devastation to Atlantic Canada.

Our people are hurting in Atlantic Canada. It is not something to be ignored in the blind hope that it will go away. It is impossible to hide because it is so enormous that in the end it is bound to come out. Members of Parliament on this side of the House will not allow it to be ignored. We will not allow it to be hidden. Why are Atlantic Canadians hurting? If anybody in this House has to ask that question, I suggest that they are not with it. They have not been with it for some time and they were certainly not with it in the last few months. Asking that question is a little bit like asking Hitler why the Allies invaded Europe in World War II.

Down East one does not have to be a member of the technical priesthood or the bureaucratic brotherhood to know when you are in trouble. If anybody has any doubt, just take a trip to the East and ask a few questions. Ask the Mayor of Summerside, Prince Edward Island. Ask the workers at the National Sea Plant in Lockeport, Nova Scotia. Ask the fisherman in Shippegan, New Brunswick. Ask a plant worker at the FPI fish plant in Port Union which employs 1,200 people on the Bonavista Peninsula that will be shut down for 19 weeks in 1989. Because of the recent announcements and quota cuts, it will be cut down even more in 1990.

The effect of the Wilson Budget is devastating. This is a Budget that makes a mockery of social economic management. It does nothing for jobs and does nothing for the hopes of a brighter tomorrow. That hits Atlantic Canadians hard.

Ask any of the 65,000 registered commercial fishermen in the Atlantic. Ask any of the 30,000 fish plant workers who work in 900 plants in 1,300 communities in Eastern Canada. The future of the fishing industry is bleak. Tougher times than we have had are ahead, due to the quota cuts, European community and French over-fishing and the shrinking cod stocks. Federal scientists have recently recommended the total catch be reduced to a 125,000 tonnes in 1990, down from the 1988 level of 266,000 tonnes. Mr. Speaker, I do not have to tell you, this is going to have a devastatingly negative effect on fishermen, fish plants and the fish plant workers in my riding.

An Hon. Member: Tory mismanagement.

Mr. Mifflin: This morning, we heard that the Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) is reported to have said that we do not know what is going on out there. He was referring to surveillance in the fishery. It was attributed to the Hon. Member from St. John's East (Mr. Reid) but I do not think he would say something like that.

• (1510)

At a time when greater surveillance is needed to ensure the strict fisheries quotas, the Government now, as a result of the Budget, plans to disband the 29 Tracker fleet of aircraft based at Summerside whose job it is to provide more than half the surveillance hours. That is very difficult to understand. If there is still some question, ask someone collecting unemployment insurance. This Government has cut unemployment insurance funding in the last couple of months by $4.2 billion. That is an average of $1,400 per unemployed worker.

Ask a businessman or an entrepreneur who has been working with ACOA. Its budget has been reduced by $60 million per year for seven years despite all the flip-flop and the reprofiling on all the goods and various figures that have been trotted out. Ask a businessman about the new ground rules and limits on expansion and establishment. Ask him about the turnaround time, how that is to be increased.

Ask the Newfoundland Government about regional development agreements in critical areas to the tune of $100 billion which have not been renegotiated. Ask the average working class person. The tax grab of an average of $700 for each family in Canada will be hard on everyone, and in 1991 Newfoundland will face a 21 per cent federal and provincial tax on goods and services at the point of purchase. This is not a pretty picture.

Ask somebody working at the Albright-Wilson phosphorus plant in Long Harbour which is in the riding of the Hon. Member for St. John's West. That plant will shut down in early August this year. This shutdown will affect the 340 employees, many of whom live in my constituency in the Isthmus and the Trinity Bay area. These people will not have jobs and will be unable to collect unemployment insurance because of a ruling by this Government three years ago which precludes them from doing so when they receive a modest severance allowance. This is unfair, unjust and callous.

Ask the residents of Cape Freels in Bonavista Bay who have to drive to get water from a pond in winter in this day and age. Ask anyone in some of the towns and communities in my riding that don't yet have water and sewage facilities. Ask the Mayor of Clarenville, with a population of 2,967, who is living day to day in the hope that something will finally happen with the Hibernia project.

Ask the people of Harbour Grace and Conception Bay North who were promised a penitentiary in their area. It was taken away with one fell swoop of the pen in this Budget. Ask the people who are trying desperately to get some assistance to help turn the tourist industry into a viable industry in Newfoundland. Ask them about some of the difficulties they are having.

We are used to hoping. We would not be Newfoundlanders if we did not have good defences against the curve balls of life which have been thrown our way. We do not feel put upon or feel sorry for ourselves. We do not want something for nothing but history, hindsight and bitter experience made for splendid development of solid defence which allows Newfoundlanders to face harsh facts without denying them. This hope is the backbone of our defence and in the long run helps resolve our difficulties.

Newfoundlanders enjoy music. I recall the words of some of our favourite folk songs which point out over and over the Newfoundlanders' capacity to face the most devastating possibilities with humour. What about Hard, Hard, Times. The song points out the excitement of port life in the midst of starvation. A Great Big Sea Hove in Long Beach makes fun of the tidal wave of 1929 along the beach about a gunshot from my home in Bonavista. Tickle Cove Pond relates an exciting experience of a horse falling through the ice in the spring of the year hauling logs over a not-too-frozen pond.

Something positive has to be done and has to be done soon. I am sick and tired of standing in this House, sitting in this seat, and listening to questions across this floor to a Government which I do not believe is as sensitive to the circumstances as it should be. The Government would not even sit through lunch today to hear some of the concerns of Atlantic Canada. I would say the Government is responsible for bringing about a lot of these effects. How can we expect the Government to do something about the situation if it is responsible for it?

The words of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) were: "Don't worry about it. It's business as usual". I said we did not expect something for nothing. We do expect something for something in return. What we expect is a stop in our downward economic slide and the growing unemployment. We expect an end to the draining of our people to other parts of Canada and we expect to keep our young people, their talents, potential, ideas and energy at home to build our future.

What we are going to give in return are some positive ideas, some of which were heard here today, some ideas that stand a chance of implementation. Ideas such as income supplements to sustain people who are in the worst need now, better job opportunities through programs like Community Futures and other diversifications, an international initiative to bring nations over-fishing to the table with an aim to setting enforceable quotas. Iceland did it, why not Canada?

In conclusion, Atlantic Canada does not want Ottawa to do it for us. We have more self-respect than that. We want to do it ourselves but we want a fair chance, as the Hon. Member for Moncton (Mr. Rideout) said this morning. We want a fair chance and an equitable share of the pie, a share dispensed wisely to support economic growth which will make our hope and the hope of all our children a reality.

[Translation]

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I welcome this opportunity to take part in the debate on the motion of the Hon. Member for Gander—Grand Falls (Mr. Baker), alleging that the Government should be condemned for the policies it has visited on Canada's Atlantic region.

[English]

I have listened since early this morning to speeches made by Members opposite on Atlantic Canada. I would like to say that I hope that Atlantic Canadians are watching this debate because what I have heard is a bunch of disgruntled Grits and a few members of the NDP talking about Atlantic Canada in the same way as the Liberals have always talked about Atlantic Canada, about being a bunch of incompetent people who cannot do anything by themselves and need big brother Ottawa to do everything for them.

I have listened carefully to the Hon. Member for Gander—Grand Falls (Mr. Baker) on the fisheries issue. Later on one of my colleagues will set the record straight on the fisheries issue. The Liberals have not changed. They think they have the corner on everything.

Mr. Rompkey: And the 200-mile limit we brought in.

Mr. Valcourt: Yes, the 200-mile limit. Yet these are the very people who are criticizing this Government for having inflicted these measures on Atlantic Canada. The Hon. Member was a Minister in the former Liberal Government. I also listened to the Member from Porte-aux-Porte—St. Barbe this morning. He was a member of the Liberal Government from 1980 to 1984. The Liberals were in power for a long time but it took the people of Canada to put them where they belong, sitting in opposition. It took the Liberals a long time to learn something about Atlantic Canada. Today they criticize this Government for the way we have treated Atlantic Canada. I invite the Liberal Members to take a sober, second look at what they have been saying and faire travailler les méninges, get their little heads to function and recall what they did to Atlantic Canada.

In 1984 one of the reasons that prompted me to enter federal politics was exactly the heritage left by the Liberals who were in power for 16 years and who inflicted upon Atlantic Canada the kinds of problems we encountered then. That is why I entered politics as an Atlantic Canadian. I am from Atlantic Canada. I listened to them this morning. These are the same people who, in 1984, just a few weeks after the people of Canada decided they had had enough of that bunch, attacked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) for his economic renewal plan, arguing that it would kill the economy of Atlantic Canada. The Government's economic renewal policy for Atlantic Canada was about entrepreneurship. It was about telling the people to pick themselves up by their bootstraps and do what they can. We said that we are the tool that can help them, but we will not do it for them.

• (1520)

The Liberals have a recipe for everyone. They had a recipe for Atlantic Canada for 20 years, but what was done? Shortly after 1984, when we laid out a policy for economic renewal for the whole of Atlantic Canada, the Liberals were the prophets of doom and gloom and have opposed that plan in every way possible.

When I hear a Liberal talking about regional development at the federal level, I feel—I will not say how it makes me feel. It is awful to hear that coming from those people who devised a regional economic policy that saw 90 per cent of all federal moneys in regional development being spent in Ontario and Quebec, in central Canada.

The Hon. Member for Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte (Mr. Tobin), who I call "la tête à Papineau de Terre-Neuve," knows everything and has all the solutions. According to his rhetoric, he can put fish back into the sea. He was a Member of that Government from 1980 to 1984. If the measure of support to Atlantic Canada is in dollars, then I invite Hon. Members to look at the record. If the measure of support and caring for Atlantic Canada by the Liberal Party is dollars, Liberal Members did not care very much. While they were spending money like drunken sailors all across Canada, they ran up by 1984 a Budget deficit of $40 billion. In terms of regional development, all they could spend in Atlantic Canada was an average of about $182 million a year. Today the Liberals have the gall to criticize the Government for having doubled that commitment to Atlantic Canada in the first four years and for proposing in the next five years to increase that by 35 per cent.

If the measure of caring for Atlantic Canada is in dollars, we score much higher than the Grits at any time of the day. The Liberals' record has been to devise policies that were geared for central Canada. I have nothing against the well being of central Canada, in fact I applaud it. However, we in the regions should have a fair crack at succeeding and at getting jobs and opportunities for the future into our communities so that our kids can grow in Atlantic Canada as well as spend their whole lives there and die there too, having made a few bucks.

When I say I am not saddened by what I have heard from Hon. Members, it is because they have not changed. The people of Atlantic Canada realize that the Liberals have not changed. They are the same old—

Mr. Rompkey: That is why we got 20 seats.

Mr. Valcourt: I know why we have 12 seats. It is because Members like that Member went across Atlantic Canada during the last federal election campaign scaring the hell out of the poor people and the old people. He was going to senior citizens' homes and lying to those old people, telling them that they would not get their cheques. Next time around, the Liberals will have to come clean with Atlantic Canadians and they will have to apologize to those poor old people that they have scared.

The people who have put forward the motion today are the same people who advocate depriving Atlantic Canada of the benefits of the Free Trade Agreement. Instead of being positive and trying to come up with ways to positively change the situation in Atlantic Canada, they are against everything, and Atlantic Canada will benefit from the Free Trade Agreement. Today the question is not whether or not there is free trade, the question is how do we take advantage of it. This question should not be answered in Ottawa, it should be answered in Atlantic Canada.

Ms. Clancy: You drowned the Maritimes.

Mr. Valcourt: Yes? The Hon. Member who is so proud to be a big Grit in Halifax should recall that in 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984, families were being thrown out of their houses, people were losing their businesses, bankruptcies were at the highest levels ever under the previous Liberal Government.

Ms. Clancy: This is 1989.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There will be an opportunity for questions and comments later.

[Translation]

Mr. Valcourt: They say the truth is always hard to swallow.

Mme Maheu: It certainly is.

Mr. Valcourt: Yes, and the truth is that the Liberal Party ignored Atlantic Canada for 20 years, and as soon as we try to do something to change all that, they protest. They opposed the Free Trade Agreement, Mr. Speaker, and they opposed our economic renewal policy.

[English]

All the money for regional development was being spent in central Canada. We have little money to try to reduce those disparities. Surely that money should be spent where there is more need, and that is in Atlantic Canada.

We devised the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, and just to show the people—

Mrs. Maheu: You cut it by 20 per cent.

Mr. Valcourt: The Hon. Member says ACOA has been cut. She does not know what she is talking about. ACOA has not been cut. There was a commitment by the Government to spend $1 billion in Atlantic Canada over a five-year period. That was a five-year plan and this has gone on for two and a half years. The Government sees that this is a good program which is doing great things for Atlantic Canada, and we have extended the life of this agency by another five years at least with a commitment of spending in Atlantic Canada $425 million a year on average in the next four years.

Ms. Clancy: That is a 20 per cent cut.

Mr. Valcourt: No, only a Liberal could say that. Five years ago, it was $282 million a year. Only a Grit can, with a straight face, say that $425 million is less than $282 million. Only the Liberals can do that.

Back home, the people understand. We are spending more than the Grits ever dreamed of spending in Atlantic Canada, but that is not what matters. It is not the amount of money that matters, what matters is that if we in Atlantic Canada are to get out of the mess that these people have inflicted on Atlantic Canada for 20 years, we will have to change attitudes. I was listening to those people talking about the UI reform changes. All the members from Newfoundland are grandstanding. I invite the Liberals, especially the Member who is from Newfoundland to read this.

• (1530)

Mr. Rompkey: That is Labrador.

Mr. Valcourt: He should read Building on our Strengths. It talks about Labrador. It is the result of a royal commission in Newfoundland. I recommend it to the Liberal Party of Canada, especially Atlantic Canada Members. You will note that the report makes a lot of recommendations that are exactly in line with what the Minister of Employment and Immigration is attempting to do to help Atlantic Canada.

The Member before me spoke again about income supplement dependency—keep us, feed us, we are poor, we are weak. That was the theme of their campaign. Unfortunately there is a culture supported by the Liberals who are dependent, and we are going to change that. Those people are capable of meeting the challenges in the future but not the way the Liberals do it.

They criticize the Government because there are no more fish in the sea. If the Liberal Party has a recipe to put fish in the sea, sell it. You might even be able to pay off the debt of the Liberal Party of Canada. We want that recipe. If the Liberals know how to put fish in the water, tell us. We need that solution. Those great Grits will come up and fill the sea with fish.

I have listened intently to Members opposite. I just hope that people in Atlantic Canada do also. For example, they are critcizing UI reform. I am a product of Atlantic Canada. What I see in my riding and in my province are children growing up—they are now 10, 12, 14 years old—and the only work ethic that these kids have had as an example in their entire life is mom and dad working 10 weeks out of a year. This is what the Liberals left us.

We want to make profound changes in the way we develop as a region of Canada. We can do it. We have resources. They are not all renewable. We know that, but we have resources. The best resource we have is people. When we created the agency, we said that it should be located in Atlantic Canada and staffed as much as possible with people from that region so they could work with the local communities to build a better future. The Liberals, for purely political partisan reasons, voted against the agency in the House. They voted against the very instrument they have been complaining about for weeks. We are funding this agency more than in the previous four years. Yet they voted against it.

We will hear today a lot of rhetoric by Members opposite. But I trust Atlantic Canadians will just look at what is taking place, all the tools that we have put in place. Those prophets of doom and gloom on the other side should listen to the business people in Atlantic Canada.

Ms. Clancy: We are.

Mr. Valcourt: I have met several business leaders. I have found very few against free trade. The hon. Member was babbling her mouth against it all across Halifax.

Ms. Clancy: And I got elected.

Mr. Valcourt: Oh, yes, but you see this is a Grit, both sides of the mouth, but it does not work. People will not buy it. Atlantic Canada has received more attention from this Government, not the lip service they were used to from the Grits. We have been given the tools and provided that Atlantic Canadians want to pull together things will happen. Instead of being a bunch of pessimists and prophets of doom and gloom, they should come up with positive recommendations and work positively in their communities and we will all be better for it.

Mr. Harb: Mr. Speaker, I was having a coffee and watching the speaker on the television screen. It made me jump about two and a half feet to see the level of discussion going down that low. This is not an issue of Liberals against Tories or NDP against Tories. This is not an issue of the past versus the present or the future. This is an issue of Canadian people, some of whom are suffering due to disparity, some of whom are looking for some sort of an initiative on the part of the Government.

I have to commend the Hon. Minister for his initiative and his commitment to Atlantic Canada. However, I have to deplore some of the statements the Hon. Member made passing on the blame to the Liberal Party of Canada of 1980s,1981s, 1982s and 1983s. This is not an issue of free trade versus the issue of non-free trade. This is an issue of great importance. That is why this motion was brought to the attention of the House so we can debate it and discuss it on a non-partisan basis. The unfortunate thing is that there are people who at every opportunity like to score points by passing on the blame to the Liberals or to the former government. I do not approve of that. I do not think this is the way we should be addressing this particular issue.

I wish that the Hon. Member could have spent five minutes attacking past government actions and then spent another 15 minutes addressing the issue at hand. I hoped he would try to make suggestions on how we can deal with the issue of higher employment in Newfoundland and other parts of the country, of how we can encourage economic development in those parts of the country and how we can get people back to work rather than shouting from one end of his speech to the next. This is is very unfortunate, Mr. Speaker, and I hope that after I sit down that the tone of the discussion will change so that we can provide alternatives, so we can state facts.

If we are not doing enough for the Government, fine. If the people of Atlantic Canada say that we are not doing enough, then let us say, that we are going to do more. Let us acknowledge the fact. If Atlantic Canada is happy about what is taking place, then why would Hon. Members on this side of the House stand up in order to ask the Government to do more? Why would someone from another part of Canada where his or her territories are prospering not bring in a motion to the House?

Obviously we as an Opposition have a role to play. That is, every time we see certain parts of this country not prospering, not flourishing, and are passing through a difficult time, it is our mandate as an Opposition to bring the issue to the attention of the House. It is the responsibility of the Minister to say to the House what he is planning to do. Members from all sides of the House should stand up on a non-partisan basis and either defend the action of the Government or at least make a statement in order to recognize what is taking place.

We have to stop passing on the blame. We have to start living in the future and present rather than the past. If you look at the actions of the Conservative Government in the 1900s and thereafter, or the Liberal Government in the 1930s and thereafter, we could spend days, hours and years talking about the past. We have a responsibility and a mandate as Members of Parliament to start living in the present and move on toward the future. When we recognize a certain part of this land passing through a difficult time, it is our responsibility to stand up and be counted whether we are Tories, Liberals or NDP.

It broke my heart, Mr. Speaker, when I was reading in the paper that there is a quota now limiting the number of fishermen who can go out and fish. It broke my heart when I realized this is a part of this country where they have to depend on one single industry in order to survive. It is our responsibility as parliamentarians to provide them with alternatives, to start other industries, to encourage economic growth. Then when certain parts of their industry are not doing so well, they can move to other industries and do well elsewhere.

Mr. Valcourt: I want to thank the Member for his lesson in how we should address the issue contained in the motion before us today. We should not be political. I invite him to speak to his caucus colleagues. If he had listened to what his colleagues stated this morning in the House, perhaps he would react a little differently.

I happen to agree with the Hon. Member. We should be fair and reasonable and look at the problems in Atlantic Canada, instead of condemning the Government for doing what it is doing now, which I suggest to the Hon. Member is a lot more than has ever been done in the history of Canada. Members rise and blame the Government and my colleague, the Minister of Public Works (Mr. MacKay). The only thing that we are guilty of as a Government is increasing the spending in Atlantic Canada to a record level of $425 million a year.

Ms. Clancy: Take the blinkers off.

Mr. Valcourt: The Hon. Member should talk to his colleagues and tell them not to be partisan. We have put in place, together with the provincial Governments, ways whereby we can address those issues.

When the Hon. Member states that he deplores the fact that it is heartbreaking to see a region rely solely on one commodity, such as cod, I welcome him to Canada. Look at the farmers in western Canada who were affected by the drought. What was the response of the Government? Today, some members of his Party suggested that this was only a political scam to buy votes in western Canada. I suggest to the Hon. Member that he go and see the farmers on the land. They know.

In Atlantic Canada we are facing a crisis with the depletion of the fish stocks. The colleagues of the Hon. Member are blaming the Government because the fish are disappearing from the sea.

Ms. Clancy: By magic, or overfishing?

Mr. Valcourt: We will let Canadians decide. We have to ask ourselves how we can cope with the situation. That is why, well in advance of this issue being raised in the House, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) appointed a special subcommittee of Cabinet to deal with the situation in Atlantic Canada. I believe that that is the positive way to deal with the problems there. There are other problems. I fully agree with the Hon. Member. We will have a chat one day, because I like his attitude. However, he should talk to his colleagues in Atlantic Canada. I know they outnumber the others from elsewhere in Canada.

Ms. Clancy: There is a reason for that, too.

Mr. Valcourt: Provided there is goodwill there, we can do a lot to improve the situation in Atlantic Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. On debate, the Hon. Member for Restigouche.

Mr. Guy H. Arseneault (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise in the House to give this speech in support of the motion of the Hon. Member for Gander—Grand Falls (Mr. Baker).

What we are debating is the federal Government's harsh treatment of Atlantic Canada. Since the last federal election, for some reason, the Atlantic region seems to have been earmarked by the Tory Government. Indeed, the Government has initiated a series of policies that are causing unprecedented economic devastation to Atlantic Canada.

The Tory Government has repeatedly declared its support for what it called "sacred trusts", such as universality of social programs, railway transportation, and regional development, only to go back on its word time and time again.

For example, a few weeks ago the Government attempted to convince the people of Canada that regional spending was not being cut, that it was actually increasing. It is completely beyond me how the Government can claim that it is not a budget cut to spread a five-year spending program over seven years. The facts confirm that the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency will have its $1.05 billion budget stretched over six or seven years. That is a drop of up to 29 per cent in average annual spending. If that is not a cut, I do not know what it is.

The truth is that the Atlantic provinces are already facing a nearly disastrous situation, with the disembowelment of VIA Rail and the reduced fishing quotas. Add to that a reduction in ACOA spending, and one has a recipe for a very serious situation indeed.

There is also a big question mark surrounding the Tory Government's continued funding of regional development in the rest of Canada. The last Budget clearly indicated that federal spending on regional development will drop to $1 billion a year over the next five years, from a peak of $1.4 billion in the present fiscal year. It just happened that this was an election year.

The Tory agenda is quite clear. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is treating regional development like a yo-yo; the final spending is anybody's guess. All this uncertainty is especially troubling and will likely have very serious repercussions for Atlantic Canada.

The Government is slashing funds for economic development in the Atlantic Canada area—the country's poorest region—in an attempt to help it reduce its budgetary deficit. The Atlantic region should not have to bear the brunt of the Government's spending cuts.

Last April the Council of Maritime Premiers convened to discuss federal-provincial resource development agreements. During this meeting, the Premier of my home province of New Brunswick, the Hon. Frank McKenna stated that if the money were to expire, employees whose jobs are directly dependent on the agreements quite simply will be out of work. The province is obviously not in a financial position to carry its share of the burden as well as the federal Government's share.

Indirectly, hundreds and perhaps even thousands of people who work in reforestation, build fishing boats, and who work on mineral exploration projects, and who perform all the tasks connected with the delivery of resource agreements, will lose their jobs if the federal Government does not commit itself to a sensible development program.

Regional development agreements have been a valuable tool in helping key areas of the Atlantic economy which have potential to lift the region out of economic disparity. The Government must cease its Draconian treatment of Atlantic Canada, and provide the area with the resources that it needs to achieve its full potential.

Another area of the Atlantic economy which has been ravaged by the Tory Government is passenger rail service. The slashing of VIA Rail funding is a clear indication that the Government has turned its back on the people of Atlantic Canada.

Sir John A. Macdonald had a national dream. If he could only see what the Party he once led has done to his dream, he would surely roll over in his grave.

The gradual shutting down of Atlantic Canada's transportation infrastructure is an obvious attempt to isolate the region, and virtually ensures that economic disparity will be one of its permanent features.

The dream of a modern and efficient inter-city rail service in Atlantic Canada is gone, probably forever, because of the Government's recklessness. If VIA Rail is shut down, the Tories will have to answer for this hasty action. Atlantic Canadians want VIA Rail retained and expanded. Last year, VIA's Atlantic branch carried more than 230,000 passengers. In the first three months of this year there is a 10 per cent increase in the number of people using the railway.

Without VIA Rail, Atlantic Canada will become more isolated, jobs will disappear, and inadequate highway systems will suffer more wear and tear. The Tory Party will forever be remembered as the Party which shut down Atlantic Canada.

Atlantic Canada's fisheries are in serious trouble because of the Government's ineptitude. Foreign ships are pillaging Canadian fish stocks with the blessing of the federal Government. The simple truth is that the Government has no policy to deal with foreign overfishing. People have lost jobs, and more may yet lose their jobs because of fisheries troubles.

The drop in cod stocks off Atlantic Canada's coast, confirmed by a recent scientific study, has forced a reduction in fishing quotas. The result has been the closing of fish plants in both Newfoundland and Nova Scotia.

Yesterday, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) urged Spanish Prime Minister, Felipe Gonzalez, to reduce his country's overfishing of cod stocks outside Canada's 320 kilometre limit. It is high time the Prime Minister started telling the Spanish Prime Minister and leaders of the European Community countries to stop overfishing our waters. Since 1986, the federal Government has permitted member nations of the European Economic Community to overfish Canadian waters. When Spain and Portugal joined the European Community, the European Communities Council of Fisheries Ministers unilaterally set quotas much higher than those set by the North Atlantic Fisheries Organization. This situation has been permitted to prevail by the Government. It must now account for the disaster facing the Canadian fishing industry.

• (1550)

The Government's concentrated attack on Atlantic Canada includes the undermining of transfer payments, which seriously threatens to harm health care and post-secondary education. It includes the Government's withdrawal of contributions to unemployment insurance, which virtually ensures that people in this region will have to depend on the welfare rolls in order to make ends meet. It includes the closing of rural post offices and a whole slew of other mean-spirited initiatives.

In conclusion, Atlantic Canada should not be victimized by the Tory Government's drastic cuts. This region entered Confederation for very specific reasons, and the present Government has no mandate to undermine the nation building which has gone on for more than 100 years.

SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 81—ALLEGED ECONOMIC DEVASTATION IN ATLANTIC CANADA

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Baker:

> That this House condemns the Government for initiating a series of policies that are causing unprecedented economic devastation to Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in this debate on Atlantic development. At the outset let me say that it is not just a regional issue affecting Atlantic Canada but a national issue that concerns the fundamental character of the country. It is an issue that addresses one of the challenges Canada has faced since Confederation, the equitable sharing of opportunities across all parts of this country, the opportunities which being Canadian ought to provide.

Every weekend I travel back and forth to and from my riding. As I travel from Ottawa to my riding of Cape Breton Highlands—Canso I see concrete manifestations of the challenge we face in promoting regional development in Atlantic Canada.

Let me cite three examples. The community of Whycocomagh is located in central Cape Breton along the Bras d'Or Lakes. It is a picturesque community with lots of potential for tourism and for aquaculture. However, it is stranded because it does not have basic sewer and water services. It is caught in a catch-22 situation. For the lack of some $1 million in federal funding, it has been denied sewer and water for years. Without sewer and water there is no business development and no expansion of the tax base to pay for the sewer and water.

Another example is the Strait of Canso, one of the best deep water ports in the world. The potential for the port and the industries that could develop around it are still unrealized. Much has to be done to make that port a source of jobs for our area.

The third example is Antigonish, the site of St. Francis Xavier University, one of the best undergraduate colleges in North America. When I was at the convocation a couple of weeks ago I realized that most of the students who passed in front of me to receive their degrees were from that area but were faced with the prospect of having to leave the region in order to find work. These young people, who are a resource in our area, earn their degrees there but are forced to go elsewhere to earn a living. That is the reality of what we face in Atlantic Canada, particularly in the rural parts like my riding.

I drive through Central Nova on my way to Halifax to catch the plane to Ottawa. I have to drive through the riding of the Minister who is responsible for Atlantic development and who has been presiding over the dismantling of regional development policies by the Government. There has been a virtual abdication of Atlantic Canada through a whole network of policies, like the abandonment of VIA Rail, the closure of defence bases, cut-backs in ACOA and the failure to renew some of our essential economic and regional development agreements. There is a whole litany of withdrawals in support of necessary development policies for Atlantic Canada. The Minister is from Atlantic Canada and I know he is concerned about the welfare of this part of the country. I wonder how he can sit in Cabinet and preside over this dismantling of the Government's commitment to Atlantic Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, recently I read Donald Savoie's report on regional development policies for Atlantic Canada. It is an excellent report that gives a very good summary of our history and the policies we have had in the Atlantic region, as well as summarizing the successes and the failures of those policies.

One thing that is clear from this report is the importance of having federal policies that reflect a firm commitment to the Atlantic region and the ability to work with the provincial governments and the Atlantic region's various economic sectors, if we are to have consistent policy for Atlantic development. At the same time, we need a policy to improve transportation, to enhance market access and to attract human resources. These are the basic elements of this report and they are lacking in this Government's policies.

[English]

In the few minutes that remain I want to talk about one unwieldly word, infrastructure. What is infrastructure, and what does it mean in the context of development? A good comparison is to drive down the 401 toward Toronto. The first thing one notices is the quality of the road and its size. As one approaches the city of Toronto, one will notice the expanse of concrete, asphalt and overpasses within the system of transportation that feeds into that city. As one gets closer still, one can see the subway system, the parks, the hospitals, and harbour facilities, as well as the schools and network of public facilities. All of these are financed by government, whether it is federal, provincial or municipal, and together constitute billions of dollars of infrastructure that is publicly financed in this one city.

The same thing is true when one visits other centres like Montreal, Vancouver and, to a lesser degree perhaps, Halifax and some other cities in our country.

The point I am making is that infrastructure, that collection of publicly financed expenditures over a long period which make up the cities, acts as a magnet to attract industries, investment and jobs. The infrastructure that makes up that city attracts people from all over the country.

Even if business does not receive a nickel in specific assistance to locate in a city like Toronto or Montreal, that business is already benefiting from hundreds of thousands of dollars in infrastructure paid for by government.

There is no way a region like Atlantic Canada, particularly the rural portion, can compete with that unless there is a firm commitment from governments, federal, provincial and municipal, to work together to build up our transportation network, our rail system, our roads, our sewer and water, schools and hospitals in order to develop the infrastructure which makes it possible for businesses to locate there. That is what is missing in the policies of the Government. It is a denial of that long-term continuing commitment.

It is a denial of that long-term continuing commitment to Atlantic Canada to enable our economy to compete fundamentally for what is really necessary to attract and hold jobs as well as to hold our economies together. That is why we on this side of the House consider the renewal at the existing level of the ERDAs so important. They are the main lever by which the federal Government contributes with the provincial Governments toward ongoing financing of our infrastructure facilities. That is why we need continued transportation assistance and why we defend the VIA Rail network and, in general, our transportation structure in Atlantic Canada in the face of the cut-backs of the Government. It is short-sighted economics to consider solving the deficit by cutting out this infrastructure. It is exactly what will be needed in the future to be able to compete for jobs with the rest of the country.

• (1600)

In closing, if in 20 years Atlantic Canada is depopulated because our young people have left to find jobs in central Canada because that is where the market takes them, what will be required in order to preserve and build up Atlantic Canada? I suggest that will be the legacy of the Government. What we have to do is turn back this short-sighted economic policy that is being preached to us by the Government.

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member on an excellent speech. As an outside observer, not being a Member from Atlantic Canada, I would like to make a comment about one of the things I had occasion to observe recently there. During the Newfoundland election the then Premier of Newfoundland, the Conservative Premier, the late Conservative Premier in one sense of being late, was able to make statements that he had arranged a deal with Ottawa on ERDAs. The Hon. Member in his speech spoke about ERDAs and the fact that those appear to be on the skids, possibly. We have not yet heard any details from the Government on that issue.

The then Premier of Newfoundland made statements throughout the campaign that in fact he had negotiated a deal with Ottawa for millions of dollars worth of aid in ERDAs. The statements were uncontradicted by the Government in Ottawa. Once the election was over and the then Premier was soundly defeated at the polls, as I am sure he deserved to be by the good people of Newfoundland, the Government here announced that the question of ERDAs was in fact under negotiation and had not been settled.

Does the Hon. Member agree that the silence of the Government during the Newfoundland election amounted to an outright deceit of the people of Newfoundland in terms of their knowledge of what was going on in respect of these agreements? Would the Hon. Member care to comment on that?

Mr. Leblanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. Yes, I agree that it is deceitful. Unfortunately, it is not only deceitful but characteristic of the attitude which we have begun to see from the Government.

I mentioned some other examples. Before the election the Government said there would be no cut-backs in regional development, that they were secure, nor would there be cut-backs in financial programs. As a result of the Free Trade Agreement being signed, what we have seen is that the whole political agenda of the Government has been turned around. The people who have paid for this turn around in the political agenda are the people of Atlantic Canada who voted against the Government.

I might also add that the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, which was supposed to have $1 billion over five years, committed 60 per cent of its budget during the period before the election. After the election, when the Government did not receive the support of Atlantic Canada, it decided to stretch out the remaining 40 per cent over an extended period of time, not to mention that it was cutting the ERDAs and is unwilling to renew those coming up for renewal. The Government lumped the Forestry Renewal Development Agreement into the Budget for ACOA which itself has been cut.

This is the kind of double-talk we have been hearing from the Government all along.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the remarks of my colleague, the Hon. Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso (Mr. Leblanc). I took it all into account. Memories are short, particularly among politicians. I guess the Hon. Member does not remember the double digit inflation of the early 1980s, or the 11.8 per cent unemployment nationally, or the interest rates at 19 per cent and 20 per cent. What was the cause of all this economic chaos of the early 1980s? It was a spendthrift national Government, a Government that did not recognize the need to balance revenues and expenditures. What the Government today is trying to do is to introduce financial responsibility to the national scene and to ensure that we have a strong national economy. It is a bankrupt Treasury which threatens regional development and social programs, and all the programs that are so necessary to Atlantic Canada.

Even with that great effort in economy, we are still able to increase dramatically payments to Atlantic Canada. In the current fiscal year $186 million additional in transfer payments will be made, money which allowed P.E.I. to balance its budget. It allowed Nova Scotia to reduce its budget deficit.

Does the Hon. Member think that we can just go on spending for the benefit of Atlantic Canada without regard to the economic facts that prevail nationally? Does he want to disregard the fact that there is a $320 billion national debt, or does he want to go on spending, get interest rates for residential mortgages back up to 20 per cent, get inflation back up to 12 per cent and get unemployment back up to double digit figures? Is that what he wants for a national policy?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow the Hon. Member an opportunity to answer that question.

Mr. Leblanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso)): Mr. Speaker, first, the recovery started before this Government came to power. Second, the recession was world-wide. Third, to a large extent the debt has been accumulated by Members opposite. Fourth, they did nothing for four years about the deficit and the debt except to let it accumulate. Fifth, the sudden preoccupation with the deficit was a post-election phenomenon, totally at variance with the spending promises they made before the election. They were made at a time in the recovery process when we should be expecting the economy to be stimulating rather than contracting because, as economists are saying, we will face a recession soon, and Atlantic Canada will be the first to pay the price.

Mr. Ross Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to be able to participate in this debate today. I have had the privilege today of hearing my hon. friend from Gander—Grand Falls. I have had the privilege of hearing him quite a bit in the last 10 days, on radio and television. Certainly, he has been widely reported in the print media in St. John's and in other places in Newfoundland and Labrador. This gives me a particular opportunity to be able to put some order and some sense into what I know is real compassion and passion but which unfortunately clouds reality and the facts.

We are talking today about the motion that he has put forward in this House which condemns the Government for initiating a series of policies that are causing unprecedented economic devastation to Atlantic Canada. I would argue that the policies of this Government, particularly over the last five years, have done absolutely the opposite. In my province, we have seen a reduction in the unemployment rate of some 8 per cent, the highest reduction in the unemployment rate in any province in this country. Last year alone, we saw the creation of 10,000 jobs in Newfoundland and Labrador. This is an accomplishment that we have never seen before, certainly in the 40 years we have been part of this great country and the 400 years before that.

My colleagues have talked extensively about the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and other things. I would like, if I may, to concentrate on the fishery. The lifeblood of Newfoundland and Labrador is and has always been, and I would suggest will always be, the fishery. It brought us to what is now that province. It has kept us there. It has gone through a series of good times and it has gone through a series of bad times.

There is no question that I, and I think all Members in this House, recognize that in the next few years we will have a very difficult time in the fishery in Eastern Canada. It is a very difficult time for all of us, whether we are in the fishery or whatever part of the economy that we are in. The problem is serious. Potentially, the problem is one that we must all work together to find solutions for.

The Harris interim report that was released last Friday has told us that we may face some serious cut-backs in the northern cod stock. It has told us that we have much work to do to be sure of the state of that stock. It has told us that there is much that has to be done over a period of time to ensure that that stock is there. I think that all Members of this House, on whatever side they sit, will agree that the conservation of all our fish stocks must be our first concern because it is the long-term viability of the fishery that is vital to those thousands of people, as my hon. friend from Bonavista-Trinity—Conception has told us, those tens of thousands of people who depend on the fishery. The solutions to this problem are not going to be found overnight.

The solutions to this problem are only going to be found with much consultation and co–operation from all of the parties that are involved in the fishery, be they fishermen or the union, be they plant workers or people who work on trawlers, or the companies or the provincial Government and the federal Government. It is only working together, recognizing what the problem is and recognizing what the impact of those problems will be, and working together to find solutions that address the fishery, the economy and the social net that we must have to ensure that as many people in Atlantic Canada as possible can work and live in that fishery. It is the policies of this Government that will ensure that we have a viable and strong fishery.

Let us just talk a little bit about where we have been in the last few years. From 1984 to 1987, the value of landings, this is the effect of the Tory policies. The value of landings has increased by 88 per cent. In the groundfish sector, landed values increased by 93 per cent. In the shellfish sector, landed values increased by 81 per cent. The value of production increased by 75 per cent, to $2.4 billion. In 1987, Atlantic coast production amounted to $2.4 billion, an increase of 15.6 per cent from $2.1 billion in 1986. The value of landings compared to the previous year was up 27 per cent. The value of groundfish was up 41 per cent. I could go into other species but I will not.

I want to speak directly to what my friend from Gander—Grand Falls said this morning. There are two or three things that he referred to that I think demand a response. First, I want to talk about the general problem of overfishing. There is no question that overfishing by foreign countries and fishing by foreign countries have taken fish out of our waters. Let us put it into some context. If we first of all believe that that is the only problem facing our fishery, that that is the only reason we face a reduced total allowable catch perhaps next year or the year after, we are sadly deluding ourselves and all of those who have elected us to represent them.

There are a series of problems, just as there are a series of solutions. We must recognize those problems in reality and then get solutions in terms of reality. The Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Harb) has said that there has to be co–operation. There has to be a sense of reality. There has to be a sense of proportion here. I think that all of us at the end of the day would like to find that.

The overfishing or foreign fishing in the last two years has reduced dramatically. The catches are down from 1986 of 171,000 tonnes to 66,000 tonnes in 1988. Overfishing is down in somewhat the same proportion.

This Government has taken a whole series of actions to address and attack the problem of overfishing. We recognize it is a problem. It has been going on for years. There have been agreements historically and agreements that have been renegotiated that have gone back over a period of time. There is precedent that we have to deal with. Part of having a 200–mile limit that is respected because of international law and international precedent demands that we do certain things. Part of that is to make available surplus stocks, species that we do not take, to international fisheries and to other countries. We are complying with those obligations. I will go back to that.

In terms of overfishing, we have closed our ports to ships of countries that continue to overfish against their obligations. We refuse allocations inside our zone to those same countries. Surveillance and enforcement along the 200–mile limit has been improved to prevent illegal incursions. Penalties have been increased substantially to provide a deterrent to those captains, those countries, and those fish companies for offshore that want to come in and think that they can abuse our fish stocks.

This Government will continue its efforts to garner international acceptance of the enhanced coastal state preferential rights with respect to management and conservation of straddling stocks. This is something that there is clearly an opportunity to pursue, and pursue it we will and we are. The statement of this Government, the first Speech from the Throne of this new Government made quite clear its concern and its intention to address overfishing.

An Hon. Member: Second.

Mr. Reid: Indeed, Mr. Speaker, as usual the Member from Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Milliken) is absolutely right. Certainly, in my experience, Mr. Speaker, I—

An Hon. Member: Once he gets beyond one and two, he's in trouble.

Mr. Reid: Another one, another one. The Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) has brought this matter to the attention of the President of France. The Prime Minister of Canada has brought this matter to the attention of the Spanish Prime Minister—not just telling him, as someone has suggested, over a cup of tea or sangria, God forbid, but to the point of saying that this matter is something that if it is not corrected will affect our relationship. It is something that is serious enough to cause problems between us in a practical way. This Government will continue to pursue this matter at the highest level.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) and the Minister of International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) will be meeting European counterparts in the coming weeks, and they will make very clear our concern that this practice must stop, not just in the interests of Canadian fishermen but in a time of international acceptance of the premise and the understanding of development and responsible management of the environment, where sustainable development has become a catch word. Management is a critical component of that.

• (1620)

If I may briefly turn to some of the comments made by my friend from Gander—Grand Falls. His constituents welcomed him into that great paper city. I am sure he entertains them as much as he has the people of Gander and parts of the northeast coast of Newfoundland, but unfortunately we are not talking here about entertainment. In fact, it is very unentertaining. It is very serious and is not serving anyone's interest if we continue to use scare tactics, to inflate the situation and make the people of this country insecure based on something that is not there. If we continue to do this, we will get nowhere.

The attitude of the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Harb) and what I was hearing from my friend, the Hon. Member for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception (Mr. Mifflin) and some others is that we must all recognize the seriousness of this issue.

We talked about the 35 Soviet fish plants and the nine Cuban fish plants due east of St. John's licensed to fish off the coast of Halifax for silver hake bycatches of 3,000 tonnes of cod, 3,000 tonnes of pollock and 1,000 tonnes of haddock. I stand corrected if I am wrong. Those numbers are not realistic. Those numbers are perhaps the tolerance that are provided for in bycatch. You cannot avoid a bycatch. If we are going to allow these countries to take a species that we are not equipped or not prepared to take, there will be a bycatch. I think it is important to recognize what the bycatches were in 1988. The bycatches for all three of those species for the Soviets were 1,500 tonnes, not the 7,000 tonnes about which the Hon. Member is talking. The bycatches were 1,500 tonnes for all of the species. That is less than .3 per cent of the total fishery. The Hon. Member talks about 250 fish plants floating around out there. This is simply not the case. It is not happening.

The Hon. Member talks about capelin and how others are allowed to take capelin while Newfoundland fishermen are not allowed to. Let us recognize how capelin is licensed in Newfoundland and Labrador. The licensing for capelin and the allowable catches for capelin are based on the market. It is the market that dictates what can be taken, how much is going to be purchased. Therefore, we take what we know will be sold based on female roe capelin. As a result the limits are dictated by that. Capelin are being caught for the fish. It is apples and oranges and any denial of a Newfoundlander for a licence in an attempt to make sure we only catch what we can sell would not be affected by whoever was out there. If no one was out there, it would not change. It would be exactly the same.

Newfoundlanders are charged and fined for incidental catches, but not foreign vessels? There have been foreign vessels fined this year. One Soviet vessel was charged for dumping fish and another was ordered out of the zone for not reporting bycatches.

The Soviets and the Cubans are not coming anywhere near the bycatch levels. In 1988 the haddock limit was 1 per cent. They caught .59 per cent. In 4W where the limit on cod is 5 per cent, the Soviets caught .16 per cent. Of course, they are not charged because they are nowhere near the limits. If we are catching a total 1,500 tonnes of fish out of a total that is being presented to us in terms of 7,000 tonnes, of course, they are not charged. Why are there 250 factory-freezer trawlers inside the 200-mile zone?

We have issued 61 fishing licences. Vessels are issued licences for a number of things such as research or perhaps over-the-side-sales. You need a licence for the different fisheries. It also denies the fact that the quota is not based on the amount of fish a ship catches. The quota is fixed. Fleets are given an amount of fish based on our obligations and are based entirely on a block. They could have 15,000 ships out there and it would not affect the amount of fish caught. Anyone inside the 200-mile limit has a Canadian observer on that ship 100 per cent of the time. This observer reports to the Department of Fisheries so that the Department knows exactly how much fish is being caught.

The policy on allowing people to fish in our waters is very clear. Canada has an obligation under international law to make surplus stocks available to other countries with which it has bilateral fisheries agreements. Examples, as we know, are silver hake, capelin, argentine, grenadier. When and if—this is very important—these fisheries are developed by Canadians then the present foreign effort will be reduced accordingly.

The Department of Fisheries and Oceans has undertaken a whole series of programs to address the opportunities of underdeveloped species. We know about exploratory licences for crab, clams and scallops. We know about moving further north with exploratory licences for shrimp. We know about the work done for aquaculture. We know about the Icelandic scallop fishery, the offshore clam fishery, the work we have done with native fishermen to try to get them involved in the fishery.

The fishing effort and the landed value has tripled in the last three years. There continues to be movements of allocations so that when the fish are not caught, we are in the position that we can move it to someone else. For instance, in the case of the Soviets where there was a particular type of fish they were unable to catch, we exchanged it for a fish for which we had quotas available that Canadians were not catching. In that case we were able to take cod back. It is that type of innovation, creativity and co-operation why we continue to have growth in the value of our fishery, why our fishermen continue to do well and want to continue in the fishery and why we have confidence in addressing what we recognize as a serious problem. The base is there. The good policy that is being condemned by the Hon. Member is there. It is a policy that will allow us to develop and adapt.

The Prime Minister has appointed a cabinet committee which will address specifically these opportunities and problems to make sure we maximize the fishery and to make sure we use all of the tools available to us to make sure as many people in Atlantic Canada who want to live and work in the fishery in Atlantic Canada know they will have an income that is dependable and will have a strong future for themselves and their communities. Those are the policies which the Opposition want to condemn. Those are the policies that the crowd opposite want to condemn which will ensure that whatever happens in the future, we will have that strong, viable fishery.

Mr. Mifflin: I want to thank the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Reid) for his presentation. I found some of the figures very interesting and some of the qualitative descriptions also very interesting.

I would like to make a few comments. First, I would remind the House that it was the Government composed of those of us who are on this side of the House that commissioned the Kirby Commission to put the Atlantic fisheries in a better position than it had been in some time. It was also the Liberal Government that spearheaded the whole business of the change to the 200-mile economic zone in 1977 and organized forces in the Canadian Government to carry out surveillance. Indeed, it was the Liberal Government that set the policy that put us in a pretty good position.

I would like to talk about some of the things that are going on right now. I do not think that there is any question that over the last four or five years, our quotas, for whatever reason, and I am in no position to make any judgment on that, have not been the kind of quotas we should have had. A more serious environmental problem has been the overfishing by the European Community. I will not talk about that now because I think it was covered by the Hon. Member for Gander—Grand Falls (Mr. Baker) this morning.

I want to talk about fishing outside the 200-mile economic zone. I would like to refer to some figures. Last year, the Economic Community's quota in international waters off Newfoundland was 19,000 metric tons, but the European Community ships and craft hauled in 80,000 metric tons, over four times what they were allocated. Quotas in that area are voluntary and set on the basis of scientific information and evidence compiled by the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Organization,

NAFO, a voluntary group in which Canada and the European Community are members.

This year, 1989, this voluntary organization established a quota of 13,000 tonnes one more time for the Economic Community, but the Economic Community fisheries ministers, prodded by Portugal and Spain, no doubt, responded in December by setting their own quotas of from 13,000 to 160,000 metric tons. We talk about conservation while this sort of thing is going on.

I am sure the Hon. Member and other Hon. Members would say that the Prime Minister is over there talking about this and that he will do something about it. This has been going on for a long time. If we want to do something about it, and if we soon do not reach an accommodation on overfishing, I suggest that we take a look at some trade sanctions. We could direct them to some of the main European Community players.

Let me give Hon. Members an indication of what we could do. I am not sure how easy it will be in the case of Portugal. Portugal had a two-way trade with Canada last year of $286 million. There was a deficit of $48 million, but in the case of Spain which has been brought to the attention of the House this morning, it is certainly the more vulnerable of the two and last year enjoyed a $485 million trade surplus with Canada on the total two-way trade of $945 million. I think we can make use of this in some way, shape or form.

The other point I want to make is that in the last three and a half or four years, the French have been allocated around 6,400 tonnes of northern cod in 3PS, the south of Newfoundland. We have heard a lot about 3PS. The French have been catching four times that, 26,000 tonnes. We negotiated a deal with them so that we can come back to the table in two or three years' time and allocate a quota which is virtually the same amount, not 6,400 tonnes but around 25,000 tonnes while we are waiting for negotiations three years from now.

If we are concerned about conservation, I do not know how we can allow these things to happen without taking advantage of trade sanctions in support of conversation. I wonder if my hon. friend from St. John's East would like to make some comment on that.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I would love to. There is no question that when the hon. crowd opposite formed the Government and we were over there, it did a number of things and Senator Kirby did a lot of very hard work and some very good work. I cannot say it was all terrific work, but there is no question that he did a tremendous amount vis-à-vis the increase in surveillance and the 200-mile limit. The Hon. Member will recognize that at one point, the current Minister of Fisheries in Newfoundland was with the crowd here but now he is with the crowd opposite with no change in sides. He was quite involved in 1977 when he was a Progressive Conservative Member for St. John's West.

I could talk about agreements that were signed in 1972, but I will not because it accomplishes nothing. We deal with the problem we have today. I find it intriguing, as my hon. friend has said, that the European Community has whacked its NAFO quota of 13,000 tonnes up to 160,000 tonnes. I suspect it reflects, more than anything else, a recognition by the European Community that it will get a considerable amount of pressure to move it back down. It can be noble as only Europeans can be noble and talk about how much it has given up as it moves back down from 160,000 tonnes. The European Community does not have a prayer of catching that much. There is not a hope that it will catch it.

I do not want to go into the 80,000 versus what it was the year before. That overfishing by the European Community and others has dropped down and continues to drop down. The key is, and I think we all agree that that number of 80,000, though I would say it closer to 65,000, should be zero, but we cannot automatically do that.

I would like the opportunity to comment quickly on trade sanctions, an evidently easy target, something that appears to be easy. If I were the Commissioner of Trade at the European Community and Canada decided to move on trade sanctions, the first thing I would do is say that we get $450 million worth of fish a year from Canada and that is all we would touch, so all that lobster and salmon would get wiped out like that. What would we do? We would decide to do something else, so—

Mr. Mifflin: Sell it to somebody else.

Mr. Reid: The Hon. Member knows, probably better that I, that it ain't as easy as that. We establish historic markets over a period of time, we develop markets that know our products. So much of selling fish is confidence, so much of the mechanics of selling fish is contacts. If the Hon. Member opposite suggests that all of a sudden, we could sell $450 million worth of fish a year somewhere else, we should be selling fish that is sitting in freezers around the world.

To me, getting into a trade war is senseless. It is totally contrary to what we have been doing. It is contrary to the way most of the rest of the world has been going. If we move to a position in which we start slapping each other on the face, eventually not only will our faces get sore but our hands will get sore.

I would suggest that we in Atlantic Canada would be the most quickly hurt by taking action on trade. It will not serve our interests. There are other ways to do it, other ways that will give us a strong and stable relationship based on an agreement that overfishing our fish is not in anyone's interest.

We have avoided the Canada–France issue, I suggest for a number of reasons. I think there is beginning to be a sense of reality that in fact, it was as good a deal as we could get, and frankly a better deal than I ever thought possible. To blame what has happened now on an agreement that was signed two months ago is ludicrous. I do not say that my friend is doing that, because clearly he is not. However, the Government was able to get a commitment from the Government of France to reduce its committed overfishing in 3PS, a zone whose control we conflict on. We have conflicting claims over that zone. We have allowed them a catch of cod in 2J3KL that is less than 2 per cent of the total catch but is tied to the quota as it is reduced. We have an agreement that if they overfish outside, everything inside is off.

At the same time the key is that we continue down the road to have the dispute between the two countries adjudicated. That is ultimately the goal of any government, to get that dispute over the limits around St. Pierre–Miquelon decided so that we know who controls the fishery, so we can impose a management plan. Like so many of our policies, it is well thought out, far–sighted and responsible.

• (1640)

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I could not help in listening to the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Reid) when he was responding to a question from the Opposition. He was getting quite rattled and said that the Opposition was making people feel insecure, and that we should not be making people in the Atlantic feel insecure. I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, what makes people feel insecure. It ought to make people, not only in Atlantic Canada, but all Canadians very insecure. I want to put on the record the latest unemployment figures for the various Atlantic provinces unadjusted in April, 1989. The unemployment rate in Prince Edward Island was 17.8 per cent, Newfoundland, 17.2 per cent, Nova Scotia, 12.2 per cent and in New Brunswick, it is 14.4 per cent.

These figures would make anybody insecure. We ought to be ashamed of ourselves. The unemployment rate for 15 to 24 year old males in Newfoundland is 30.5 per cent, in Nova Scotia it is 18.4 per cent, in New Brunswick, it is 28.8 per cent. For women 15 to 24 years old in Newfoundland, it is 20.7 per cent, Nova Scotia, 15.6 per cent and New Brunswick, 14.6 per cent. For P.E.I., the numbers are too small to give a reading.

It is not what the Opposition does or says in this House that creates insecurity in Atlantic Canada. These are the unemployment realities. Yet the Government's full employment rate for all of Canada is somewhere between 7.5 per cent and 8 per cent. That is the Government's vision of full employment in this nation. These figures are not any different than what they were in 1972. Nothing much has changed. We have had Liberals sitting in Government and we have had Tories. When we do not like the Liberals, we put the Tories in. When we do not like the Tories in the Atlantic, we elect Liberals. It is the old story of Tweedle–Dum and Tweedle–Dee. The people of Atlantic Canada put their faith in those they elect. They believe that some change might occur but no changes occur. This is a blatant abuse of the trust and faith of Atlantic Canadians.

We just finished the federal election. Before that election was called, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his government stood up and made a promise about Hibernia. That was a spending commitment. It was not like what the New Democrats were saying and what the Liberals were saying. We were making election promises. They said, believe us, and their noses grew and grew until like Pinocchio, his nose was as long as his chin. Then the Minister for Newfoundland, the mouth from eastern Canada who is the Minister for International Trade, the Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) said in October, 1988 that it is just scaremongers in the Opposition. We do not intend to change. The unemployment insurance program will not change one jot or tittle.

After the election, what have we got? We have the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall), who knows all about unemployment in Rosedale getting up in the House, saying we have come up with a new plan. The unemployment insurance program is going to be cut back. When we in the Opposition were saying during that campaign that the Free Trade Agreement threatens the regional development programs and threatens the social programs, the same voices like that of the Member for St. John's East was saying "You are only scaring Canadians, there is nothing to that, you are creating insecurity".

The Conservatives had their friends in the big corporations spending $5 million to tell Canadians what a great deal it was. Is that not funny? Having convinced Canadians to vote Conservative because free trade would not threaten social programs or regional development, they then turn around and get Canadians to give them a tax break for their expenditures. You make the victims pay for the pickle that you put them in. Is that not something? Is it not great?

All those things we were told was a lot of rumour mongering. They were not true. After the election, Mickey Cohen who was the Deputy Minister of Finance under the previous Liberal Government, and continued for the Tories for a little while until he joined Molson, had this to say, Mr. Speaker. He said this after the election was over, not before. "I would go after regional development and universality. I would cut out most of the industrial programs particularly the ones geared to the regions but if you want to cut spending, you have to cut programs. You have to say, Atlantic Canada, you are on your own."

Imagine that. After the election, we get the truth, and it is as if Mickey Cohen was not telling all the truth. We get a Government that comes in here and barefacedly attacks the Atlantic region, a region which is much like my own in northern Ontario. It attacks by cutting back regional development spending in the Atlantic, a place where there ought to be more spending, not less. As the figures indicate, the problems are far more serious than in Toronto or most other parts of this country.

So what do we have? We have a cut-back in regional development programs. We have a cut-back in unemployment insurance. Unemployment insurance was probably the only lifeline between people who become unemployed in the Atlantic and some kind of dignity. At least they are paid premiums. There is dignity collecting on the basis of premiums you have paid while you were working. They are eliminating that by increasing the number of weeks you have to work and cutting back on the number of weeks that you collect. It is no wonder the commission set up to study post-free trade said that what you need is not a net, what you need is a trampoline. Atlantic Canadians are going to be trampolined all the way to Toronto so they can work selling John Bulloch suits and Mary Dosie's shoes for $9 or $6 an hour for a grand total of about $15,000 to $16,000 a year and 60 of them will live in one apartment. So they are living on the edge of poverty in the Atlantic or will be living in dire poverty in Toronto. It is bad enough living in Toronto but then to have to live on those wages as well is a punishment only Tories deserve.

There is no question that this Government, as the motion states, has cut back programs to the Atlantic.

• (1650)

Last week I was in Prince Edward Island, and lo and behold the Government announced that it was closing a base at Summerside. Only an insensitive stockbroker from Bay Street would understand closing the only industry on which 90 per cent of the community of Summerside depends. Not only has this economic activity for the people of Summerside been eliminated in one fell swoop, but it also serves as a tracker station for supervising our 200-mile limit. I am not the only one who has stated that, but also the people in leadership positions locally in Prince Edward Island are asking the Government why it is doing that to them. It is cruel.

We never heard a word about deficit or debt during the campaign. Suddenly, after the election campaign, I am faced with the prospect of my sons and daughters and their children's children for generation after generation having to live with a mortgaged country. I would rather they lived with a mortgaged country than have to live with rundown hospitals where services cannot be provided. I would rather they lived with a mortgaged country than to have schools that cannot be supportive and cannot provide opportunities for them to earn a living and to live with dignity in their communities. That is the option we have been given. Cut back post-secondary education and cut-back health care. That is it.

Then the Government turns around and spends the taxpayers' money to tell them a pack of lies on television about one-third of the loony being taken to pay for the interest on the debt. The Government takes out one-third of the loony, Mr. Speaker. I think that what we have to do is take the loonies out of the Government over there and put the country straight.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On questions or comments the Hon. Member for Halton—Peel.

Mr. Turner (Halton—Peel): I found the comments of the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) highly interesting, and I think that a couple of points bear some comment.

The Hon. Member is somewhat correct in his statement that during the election campaign the issues of the debt and the deficit were not adequately addressed. It needs to be said that many candidates during the election campaign did want to talk about this situation. I wanted to talk about it, and I know that many colleagues did.

The debt and the deficit have not materialized overnight. They have not come out of thin air. The Hon. Member has been in the House a long time and he knows very well that we have run annual deficits as a matter of course in this country for most of the past 20 years. It did not materialize overnight.

What happened during the election was that the issue of free trade was made by the opposition Parties, particularly the Liberals, as the one and only issue that had to be addressed.

The Hon. Member states that he would rather live in a mortgaged country than have reduced services. Does the Hon. Member not recognize that, at some point living in a mortgaged country, it gets to the point where the mortgage is so large that we cannot make both those mortgage payments plus fund the social services the Hon. Member is talking about. I agree with the Hon. Member that we need good schools, roads, and hospitals. We need to help regions of the country that are deserving of it, or are down on their luck for one reason or another. Is the Hon. Member not concerned that at some point we will not be able to fund those very programs because we are being shackled and dragged down by the interest payments? How can the Hon. Member deny that this is an economic fact? What should be done to address that?

Mr. Rodriguez: I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I do not know if all of those who here remember the period leading up to the election and the period during the election. In the period leading up to the election, whenever questions were posed about the economy or the health of the economy, government Members took a considerable amount of credit and assured us and Canadians that everything was under control, and that the deficit was in line with the projections of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). Everything is under control, have no fear, Mike is here. That was the slogan.

While I agree with the Hon. Member that during the election free trade was the overriding issue, the fact is that any single time the question was put to the Prime Minister or to the Minister of Finance during the campaign, we were not told that we had a problem. Everything was under control. Mike is on the bridge. As far as I knew, the Titanic was on course at that time. Somebody moved a giant iceberg in front of the Titanic after November 21, and now they are all arranging the deck seats on the Titanic.

The Hon. Member mentioned the deficit. I would not mind if the Government would at least tell us the truth. Two weeks ago there was an interesting article in one of the newspapers. It was an open statement by approximately 21 Canadian economists, some of whom were very well known. They took the Government to task. Since the Hon. Member is the Chairman of the Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs, I suggest to him that he ought to look seriously at the fact that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Valcourt) should be asked to investigate misleading and false advertising.

In that article I read that the Government is not telling the people the truth about the deficit. In fact, the credit demands of the Crown will only be $20 billion, and another $3 billion for foreign reserve borrowing. Therefore, it is not $28 billion and $29 billion of borrowing that the Government will have to do. The economists presented an entirely different picture that the deficit was quite manageable.

In light of how I commenced my speech today, I say to my friend that the greater emphasis ought to be to ensure that every Canadian who wants to work has a job. There is far greater dignity in people having a job, earning, being productive, paying taxes, buying goods, buying services, and paying municipal, provincial and federal taxes. Those are the types of positive moves, not accepting 7.5 per cent unemployment, but actually moving to zero per cent unemployment, or as close to it as we can get. I think that anything else is regressive. That is why we call the Government the "regressive" Conservatives.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. On debate the Hon. Member for Windsor—Lake St. Clair. I am sure the Hon. Member realizes that he will have 10 minutes, plus five minutes for questions and comments.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, I am sure you appreciate that I find myself in the difficult position of following my dear colleague, the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), who inspires us all with his analysis of the economic situation in which the Government has cast us. Nevertheless, I will plunge ahead.

Today we are dealing with the Liberal motion which states:

> That this House condemns the Government for initiating a series of policies that are causing unprecedented economic devastation to Atlantic Canada.

I would only change the motion in one respect, and that is: "That this House condemns the Government for continuing a series of policies that are causing unprecedented economic devastation to Atlantic Canada". What we have here is only a continuation of the same old song. The silent song that is sung to earn votes, but not after all to bring any substantial change to the situation in Atlantic Canada which would make itself sustaining and equal in the confederation to the core of Canada which seems otherwise so blessed.

It is absolutely astounding to me that the experience we had two weeks ago when the Minister responsible for ACOA came to our committee and without any warning announced that the funding for ACOA would be stretched over seven years rather than five years, thus imposing essentially a 28 per cent cut in the annual rate of expenditures to that program. That has to be seen as a devastating attack and a terrible reneging on a promise made to Atlantic Canada, as made to other parts of the country, that a sincere effort would be made to sustain regional economic development. In fact, regional economic development has been cut throughout the country, but Atlantic Canada is suffering a great deal.

While perhaps we can accept for a moment the necessity for fiscal restraint and some pulling back, even those on the other side of the House must understand that Atlantic Canada is a particularly special case. Even now it is experiencing the prospect of a job loss of 9,000 on account of the cuts in the cod quota. Those cuts are themselves a result in large measure of the policies of the Government. Consider the fact that the cuts in quotas are attributable to decreases in the cod stock which admittedly are a result of foreign fishing, but in part perhaps due to overfishing by domestic fishermen as well. Yet we will see another 1,200 jobs cut from Summerside which already was deficient in one key role it could have been executing, to wit, the surveillance of the cod fishery to ensure that overfishing does not occur.

Even before the Budget there was the announcement of changes to the UIC which, more than any other part of the country, would affect Atlantic Canada. There were cuts in the Established Programs Financing. Perhaps 1,000 jobs will be lost as a result of events occurring over the last two months, and the Minister has the nerve and the Government has the duplicity to enter a committee meeting to try to make an announcement under conditions where it would not see the light of day that it was cutting drastically. How could a Government be so insensitive? How could a Government be so brutal in its treatment of a significant and historical part of Canada? Is it that the Government is mean? Is it that the Government is so insensitive? No, we must look for other motives. The other motive must be what has been clear to us from the beginning, that those regional development programs like ACOA and UIC are all things the Americans do not like.

I see the Hon. Member from the Conservative Party giggling. Evidently she does not read decisions that have already been made on the American side with respect to what will be considered to be subsidies. Programs such as ACOA, DREE, DRIE, UIC, have already been cited as subsidies by the Americans in trade disputes. Let her giggle about that.

Furthermore it has been alleged that many of these programs are really not efforts to seriously affect the economic situation in the regions to which they apply. I said that the Minister came into the committee meeting two weeks ago to announce, in effect, 28 per cent cuts in ACOA. But that is only half the story. As of March 21, 26 of 44 ERDAs lapsed and the Government of Nova Scotia said that only one in five would likely be renegotiated.

I do not want to get into the games that were being played by the Minister with respect to what might be negotiated between ACOA and ERDA, and changes in the relative contributions of the federal Government, but there is a most amazing consideration. My colleague, the Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), said that the deficit was not mentioned before the election. There was some real activity before the election. The Government already spent $500 million of a five-year program before election day. Up until today the Government has spent $580 million.

In other words, of the $1.05 billion supposedly available to ACOA, $500 million has already been spent. When one considers that it costs $35 million a year to administer the program, there is only $200 million left until the program lapses. This would suggest that rather than an economic strategy, it was an election-winning strategy.

The House may recall that it was Mr. Savoie who pointed out that DREE, DRIE and the Atlantic Canada Development Programs all failed. He pointed out that there needed to be some means of regional economic development that would ensure the sustaining of effective economic growth in the Atlantic provinces.

However, what they received was more of the same. Let me explain. The Government sure spent money quickly. It spent $90,000 for a company that did not exist; $54,000 for a hotel study that had already been done three times; $100,000 in market studies for four tourist developments within a few miles of one another; tens of thousands of dollars for a struggling little J.C. Irving company. Meanwhile, we are told by the author than unless there is enhancement of education and training and infrastructure, and more research and development and long-term planning with more control to the regions, it will not work. That is from the author of the report that motivated ACOA.

Members opposite should be sitting there shamefacedly over the almost deliberate failure the Government has imposed upon a program that could have been of great use to a part of this country that needs the help of Canadians generally and which should not be burdened any longer with the dominance of the core of Canada, which even today is making it more difficult. The interest rates rise not in response to the needs of Atlantic Canada but to the needs of Toronto. There has to be a stop to that, and I know you share that point of view.

Mr. J. W. Bud Bird (Fredericton): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak about this motion which condemns:

> —the Government for initiating a series of policies that are causing unprecedented economic devastation to Atlantic Canada.

I have with me the Atlantic Provinces Economic Council report for April. It states that the Newfoundland economy is stronger than at any other time in the 1980s. Is that devastation?

It says that Prince Edward Island surprised everyone in 1988 and has had good impetus going into 1989. Is that economic devastation?

It says that Nova Scotia has one of the best records of job creation on record and its unemployment rate has dipped sharply. Is that economic devastation?

It says that New Brunswick has put together a string of good years thanks to its resource based production. While some of the bloom has now gone, newly diversified forestry production, the frigate building program and new mines offer hope for further progress. Is that economic devastation?

The report goes on to say that in APEC's eighth consecutive survey of major projects in Atlantic Canada, there are 220 projects totalling $49 billion, up 25 per cent from the figure in 1988. Is that economic devastation?

• (1710)

It states further that Government plays a dominant role in the investment prospects for Atlantic Canada, accounting for two-thirds of all projects in the area by value. Is that economic devastation?

As many of my colleagues have expressed today, we have a serious fishing industry problem, a resource scarcity problem, in Atlantic Canada. That is a development that is shocking and startling and of great concern, not only to those of us in Atlantic Canada but to all the people of Canada.

Some tough decisions have been made with respect to the quotas because the intent of the Government is to manage the resource. The resource will be managed, and it will be saved.

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hesitate to interrupt my colleague. However, I am not clear whether this is debate or a question or a comment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member is on debate.

Mr. McCurdy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bird: With regard to the fishery, while the decisions which have been made are difficult, they are not decisions of an economic policy nature made by the Government. They are decisions of a conservation nature. They are management decisions that the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Siddon) has made in terms of cutting quotas. They are political decisions that have been made in reaching agreement with France about St. Pierre and Miquelon, as my colleague from St. John's East has described them. I believe that we have to give credit to the Government and to the Minister of Fisheries for facing up to those difficult kinds of decisions.

We also face some difficult restraints and some difficult reductions in Canadian Forces Base establishments in Atlantic Canada. Those tragedies and those difficulties will be addressed. The people involved in the fishery and in the Canadian Forces Base closings will receive the help to make economic and social adjustments that will be required. I would like to return to this subject in a few moments.

I would now like to speak a bit about the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency which was established by this Government two years ago. This policy approach was based on the principle that lasting economic development must come largely from within the region itself, from the ideas and the initiatives of entrepreneurs and business people.

It was apparent that if the federal Government was to play a useful role in assisting business people to translate their ideas into projects that would create additional wealth for the region, then major changes were required in the structure and organization of the Government's Business Incentives Program.

The programs created by the previous Government in the early 1980s were hampered by rigid eligibility criteria, complicated application requirements, and by the fact that government support for projects over $100,000 had to be approved in Ottawa.

Just a little over a year ago, on February 15, 1988, the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency introduced its Action Program. This program was tailor-made to the needs of the region's small and medium-sized business community in a number of ways, including a streamlined and simplified application program, the introduction of a progress payment to assist with bridge financing costs, and expanded coverage to important parts of the services sector. The services sector is where the majority of new business formations and employment gains are taking place.

It provided for increased support for the establishment of new business where the risks are the greatest. It provided for increased support for studies, to help business people refine business ideas and to examine ways to improve the competitiveness of their operations. It increased support for the risky and high-cost areas of innovation projects to develop new products and new services. It provided support to build up the infrastructure to support business development by making assistance available to organizations such as universities and industrial development associations to provide services to small businesses. In addition, decision-making was decentralized from Ottawa to the Atlantic region so that now over 90 per cent of all the investment decisions and applications by the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency are made in the Atlantic region.

The Action Program, by its very name, promised to cut the bureaucratic red tape which was clogging the process. More than 5,200 applications have already been approved from a total of 12,000 applications received. This is more than 10 times the number of applications received under any of the old programs, and almost 15 times the number approved for implementation. The record is impressive to say the least.

Close to $600 million has been committed in the form of contributions to business investments. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, does that sound like economic devastation?

These funds will be expended over a two or three-year period as the business investment is put in place and as the government support is drawn down. Expenditures on incentives were in the order of $160 million in the past fiscal year alone. ACOA's main estimate forecast for the coming year is $280 million in financial assistance to business as a majority of the projects supported to date complete their investment plans.

How does this compare to previous Government policies? In the five-year period from 1982 to 1987, prior to the creation of ACOA, federal spending on business incentives averaged between $30 million and $35 million per year. The 1989-90 forecast of $280 million represents an eight-fold increase in historical average. The impact on the Atlantic economy of course goes beyond contributions by Government. Associated with every dollar of Government funds is close to $2 of private investment.

The Action Program has reinforced and contributed to a major resurgence of private investment in the Atlantic region. for example, capital investment was up 13 per cent in 1988. this year, the regional increase in capital investment is expected to exceed that for the country as a whole. I say to the hon. member for Gander—Grand Falls (Mr. Baker) who put forward this motion, this is hardly an indication of economic devastation.

A particular objective of the Action Program is to help foster the start-up of new companies. As I have indicated, the program was designed to respond to the special needs of business.

I have had some experience in starting new businesses in the Atlantic provinces. I am pleased to say that for 30 years one of those I have started has survived the ups and downs, sometimes barely, and manages to exist still.

While financial assistance provided under the ACOA program in the past year has contributed to more than 400 people getting into business in Atlantic Canada for the first time, an idea of the impact of the program can be seen by the fact that small business formations, that is, firms with less than 50 employees, have increased by 12 per cent in the Atlantic region in 1988 as compared to 10 per cent in Canada as a whole.

The Action Program has also introduced a comprehensive and flexible program of support for the study of business planning and new innovative business ideas. As anyone familiar with the business world knows, good planning is essential to success.

Nearly 1,000 studies have been financed under the Action Program. About two-thirds of these studies were undertaken to examine the feasibility of starting a new business.

Innovation is commonly thought to be an embracing of the development of new products in the so-called growth technologies, such as microelectronics, computer software, bio-technology and advanced industrial materials. I can recite a number of cases where, with ACOA's assistance, products that are fast becoming the way of the future are already being developed in Atlantic Canada.

ACOA has also committed over $100 million in support to non-commercial organizations such as universities and business associations. I am pleased to say that in the capital city area of Fredericton close to $25 million—and I am not sure of the exact figure—has been contributed to the New Brunswick Research and Productivity Council and to the University of New Brunswick for the development of science and technology based innovative support for business and industry not just in New Brunswick but throughout Atlantic Canada.

The Fisheries Association of Newfoundland and Labrador, for example, is one indication of the kind of innovative support provided by ACOA which has received close to $1 million—$945,000 to be exact—to undertake a three-year program to promote the sale of Newfoundland capelin roe in the Japanese market.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the changes announced recently in our action programs will largely help small and medium-sized businesses. Since the vast majority of the projects are small, 85 per cent of applications will continue to be favourably received. Projects below $200,000 will continue to qualify under the ACOA. I believe I have demonstrated that the Government's regional development policies are an unparallelled success. That success is recognized in the Atlantic Provinces, despite the rhetoric we are hearing from the other side of this House.

[English]

As I have said earlier, there is no doubt that we are facing some severe difficulties in Atlantic Canada. Those difficulties, to some extent, touch on this whole concept of sustainable development that we have heard so much about from the World Commission on Development and the Environment. What we are seeing in the fisheries is the reality of a resource that has not been as abundant as we had thought. It is not capable of supporting the industrial infrastructure we have put in place. We have come to the difficult decisions which cause us to reduce our exploitation of that resource now in favour of maintaining that resource on into the future. There is a dramatic need for support for those people and those institutions who are both economically and socially affected by this developing dilemma. I have every confidence that this Government will provide that support in those adjustment periods.

The same applies for those decisions in the name of economic restraint and fiscal responsibility which we must practice in this nation and in the concept of sustainable development which we must come to grips with. Those Canadian Forces bases closings and reductions will require major adjustment support. I have confidence that this Government will provide it.

In terms of regional development, I think that the figures speak not of economic devastation in the Atlantic region but of economic support which has been unprecedented. Five hundred million dollars is being spent in 1989 versus an average of $285 million in the previous five years and $185 million averaged in the five years before that. The average in the current five year period, while it will drop from $500 million to perhaps $400 million one year from now and then gradually ascend, the average over the next five years will be $425 million. This is hardly a contribution to economic devastation. On the contrary, it is the commitment of this Government to economic prosperity and economic development in the Atlantic region.

It is unreasonable to claim, as one Hon. Member has claimed, that this Government's budget constitutes a rape of Atlantic Canada. That is not only unreasonable, it is irresponsible. The facts are that this Government, in a manner without precedent, has addressed economic development in the Atlantic region in very full measure. While we have to face up to a reduction in the developing thrust and in the momentum of that development, it is not by any means a return to the old days.

In terms of this Government's commitment to financial responsibility, there is one figure that has struck me, and I frequently get asked the question: "Why does the Government itself not cut its own administration? Why does restraint not begin at home?" An interesting statistic is that since this Government took office in 1984, the Public Service has been reduced by 11,000 person-years. The Public Service today is the same size that it was in 1973. I wonder how many businesses in Canada could make that kind of a claim in terms of keeping their own house in order.

There are four things that I would like to say briefly that we must do in Atlantic Canada, and in fact in Canada. First, all Canadians, including Atlantic Canadians must recognize the deeply serious debt dilemma in which our country finds itself. Unless we demonstrate the financial responsibility, strength and courage to deal with that debt, to get it down, to alleviate the constant interest growth and the constant interest component of our spending, we will not be able to deal with any special problems, let alone address development in places like the Atlantic region, as we have. Second, we must accept and support the restraint measures. I believe that Canadians do accept and support the restraint measures that this Government is practising. I know it is difficult for all of us to see a service like VIA Rail diminished or in prospect be diminished. I hope that the operators of VIA Rail will find a way to maintain a large part of that service, and to find innovative and exciting ways to serve Canadians with it.

The figures are absolutely staggering. VIA Rail is such an expensive service and program that it conflicts with the very possibility of developing such major infrastructure projects so central to the development of Atlantic Canada. For example, the Trans-Canada Highway system in New Brunswick. Therefore, to face up to the cost of VIA Rail, to measure the fact that it serves only 5 per cent or less of the transportation market, to recognize that it has consumed $3 billion in subsidies over the past eight years while its ridership has diminished, is only to be financially responsible.

Third, we must emphasize the priorities for which Atlantic Canadians are famous. We must exercise priorities toward entrepreneurship which ACOA has done, toward the export on a free trade basis of our services, such as engineering, to the development of our forest industry, to aquaculture, to mining and to the attraction to Atlantic Canada of viable new industries. Atlantic Canada is a great place to live, work and to build a career.

Fourth, we must, and I believe that this Government will, establish those support programs, that adjustment assistance for those distressed situations that I have described, in the fishery, in the Canadian Forces base reductions.

I would like to tell the people of Atlantic Canada that they are well represented in this Government. We are 12 strong on this side of the House from Atlantic Canada. The message for Atlantic Canada does get delivered. The response will be forthcoming. The Throne Speech set out a mission for all of Canada. In four parts it talked of economic growth, of the environmental imperative, of a caring and compassionate society, and of a unified and distinctive Canadian identity. In many ways, Atlantic Canada will measure up to that Throne Speech challenge as a model.

In closing, I would like to make one more point about the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, and to draw the parallel to the motion about economic devastation. Donald Savoie, the developer, or at least the author of many of the principles of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency has been quoted several times today in context and out of context.

He credits the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency with avoiding the pitfalls of previous regional economic programs that poured hundreds and millions of dollars into white elephants, such as heavy water plants and importing outside industries that collapsed when the grants dried up. He said rather that "75 per cent of ACOA's money has gone to locally based ventures valued at less than $200,000 and 90 per cent has gone to aid projects of less than $1 million." He said that: "they have done"—and he is referring to the Government—"an excellent job in building up credibility with local entrepreneurs, so I think the question should not be whether ACOA spends the remaining half a billion dollars in three years or five years, but how it spends the remaining money." That remaining money is going to be well spent developing entrepreneurs, developing economic prosperity in the Atlantic region. I undertake, and my colleagues from Atlantic Canada and this Government undertake to ensure that that does happen.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments. The hon. member for Moncton.

• (1730)

Mr. Rideout: Mr. Speaker, I assume from the Hon. Member's comments that Atlantic Canada has been so well represented that he thinks it fair that VIA has nine protected routes and that none are in Atlantic Canada. Does he think it fair that CNCP is allowed to abandon routes in Atlantic Canada immediately while western routes are protected until the year 2000? Is it fair that ACOA will be cut back and spread over a longer period of time just when we need it the most? Is it fair that people will be in corridors of hospitals rather than in beds that are waiting there to be manned and looked after? Is it fair that the Government cut back on our educational institutions which need support so that we in Atlantic Canada can educate our children and make them productive members of Atlantic Canada society? Are we well represented by a government that does those things to Atlantic Canada? I submit we are not but I presume that Atlantic Canada Members think that that is in order.

Mr. Bird: Mr. Speaker, if all of those emotional and dramatic analogies were absolutely accurate, it would not be fair. It is unfortunate that this Government has had to take the financially responsible steps of addressing itself to the deficit and interest cost problems and has had to restrain the momentum of its activities in many ways. It is also unfortunate that we cannot continue to be all things to all people such as in the retention of a VIA Rail system that less than 5 per cent of the population of this country uses. My understanding from the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) is that the nine protected routes represent isolated communities to which there is no other means of travel. Is it fair that the 95 per cent or 98 per cent of the people of New Brunswick who use the TransCanada Highway system should be denied its rebuilding or imperilled in its use for years because we spend half a billion dollars each year in subsidies to maintain a passenger rail service that less than 5 per cent of the population uses. I do not think that is fair.

In so far as freight transport rates are concerned, I have spoken in this House in the past two weeks about the retention of freight rail service to the Saint John River valley. If it is viable on analysis, then I would certainly fight for it to be retained. I have spoken extensively about the impact of ACOA this afternoon. ACOA has created immense economic activity in Atlantic Canada which will be reflected over the next two or three years when the money now committed is drawn down and the projects are started.

I believe that is fair and I believe that if you talk about fairness it seems to me that for this Government to average $425 million in Atlantic regional economic aid over the next five years as compared to $285 million in the previous five years, that is very fair. The figures vary on what the increase will actually be, but there will be somewhere between 35 per cent and 50 per cent more regional development spending in the next five than the last five years, and the last five years were 50 per cent higher than the best Liberal record of development spending ever. On the basis of fairness, I believe we are not only fair but we are far and away more productive and more beneficial to Atlantic Canada than any Liberal Government has been.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are no more questions or comments. Debate. Point of order, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, earlier today the Government requested that the Speaker transfer written questions Nos. 45, 52, 53, 62, 64, 83 and 88 to Notice of Motions for the Production of Papers pursuant to Standing Order 39(6).

At the time the Speaker asked for comments from interested Members. I would like to give notice now that whenever the Speaker deems it appropriate I would like in the name of my Party to make comments on that procedure.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Halifax (Ms. Clancy) on debate.

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in this debate of crucial importance and paramount interest to my region of Atlantic Canada. My region has been battered and beaten by a cruel and uncaring Government. The list is long and the sorrows are many. Procrastination and bad planning has devastated the Atlantic fishery. Cuts to VIA Rail threaten the lifestyle and mobility of thousands of Atlantic Canadians including seniors and students. The slashing of the UI program will throw workers on to hard pressed provincial welfare rolls, and still the government juggernaut rolls on.

ACOA cuts mark the death knell for viable regional development. Uncertainty and the refusal of the Government to give us any certainty with regard to ERDA wounds our resource industries, especially forestry, as well as highways, tourism and the environment. Cuts to established program funding attack health care and post-secondary education.

My riding of Halifax which is the commercial centre of Atlantic Canada, will reel from the shock waves created by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). It will also suffer directly from this tornado of a Budget. The Atlantic East subsidy was established to encourage the continued use of the eastern ports for the export of grain and flour and to ensure that rates established would provide inducement and incentive to shippers to use the facilities of the Atlantic ports.

The Canada Grains Council noted that both the Crow rate and the Atlantic East should be considered complimentary and indeed the existence of these subsidies has been the basis of investment and marketing. Business interests, while aware that a phase-out might be equally expected, thought that this would occur with both a reasonable period of adjustment and in such a way as to not affect adversely the balance of east-west trade. This has not happened. The Government, like a thief in the night, has cut off eastern Canada while maintaining $680,000 in subsidies to the West. Further, Transport Canada has told grain shippers not to expect transitional assistance. At the same time the federal Government, through the Department of Transport, continues to provide free ice-breaker service in the St. Lawrence Seaway, free service that costs the taxpayers $60 million per year.

This radical change in policy completely reverses the former objective to decentralize and thus promote regional development. The Minister of Finance has arbitrarily directed a reorganization of export grain and flour thereby concentrating this industry on the West Coast and the ports of Quebec taking it away from Atlantic Canada. The fact that this was done without warning and with seemingly no appeal precludes and prevents negotiation and an opportunity for fair treatment for the Port of Halifax.

Did this Government study the impact of this move on the economy before it once again delivered a crushing blow to Atlantic Canada? If it did, I challenge this Government to offer some explanation to Haligonians and to Atlantic Canadians as to why their city, their province, their region, has been singled out for crushing under the Government's heavy boot. The increasingly weak reply is the deficit.

I ask this Government if it really believes cancelling Atlantic East will lower the deficit or will it, in fact, increase it? Does the crippling of Canada's most government-dependent region really add to the nation's fiscal well-being? What is the Government's real agenda for Atlantic Canada? Is it some misguided small "c" conservative belief that a total withdrawal of federal dollars will suddenly draw entrepreneurs and investors? Surely not. Or is it a new plan for Canada that concentrates every effort on our major centres to the detriment of regional and small town Canada? Can we in the Atlantic look forward to becoming one vast national park?

Atlantic Canada's universities, some of the best institutions of higher learning, not just in Canada but in the world, are gasping under the weight of their financial burdens. This Budget not only did nothing to alleviate their problems, it revealed a cut to established program funding of 1 per cent a year for five years.

Dalhousie University for well over a century has provided lawyers, doctors, teachers, scientists and business people to Canada and the world. Dalhousie's facilities are straining and the tuition fees are among the highest in the country. Salaries and benefits are barely competitive, and a proud tradition in education is in danger of a loss in standards. Smaller institutions in the region fear total collapse.

• (1740)

I think today of the travesties inflicted on a riding not far from mine, the beautiful South Shore of Nova Scotia. With the possible exception of Egmont in Prince Edward Island which encompasses Summerside, the South Shore of Nova Scotia has taken the worst of the Government's bizarre and mismanaged policies. There has been the closure of the Barrington radar station with the loss of $12 million, the closure of the Lockport fish plant, the cuts to UI which will force many seasonal workers on to welfare.

What will become of beautiful small centres like Bridgewater, Lunenburg, Liverpool and Lockport? Indeed, what will become of all our smaller centres as the Government continues its systemic destruction of the infrastructure of Canada as we know it and as we and all Canadians want it to be?

Mr. Reid: Systemic destruction?

Ms. Clancy: Systemic, yes, learn the new word. I will teach you how to spell it later.

Let us look at Sydney, a hard hit area in a hard hit region. The radar station closure removes 179 jobs. The most recent Devco cuts will destroy another 150. I suppose the Government figures that Cape Bretoners are so tough, they can take anything. They can take a lot, but the betrayal handed them by this whited sepulchre of a Government is not deserved, it is not fair and it is not acceptable.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Ms. Clancy: Right, it is a shame. Canadians deserve fair treatment wherever they live. When this country was forged nearly 122 years ago, its very survival was improbable. The joining of diverse cultures over a vast geographical area, the regional differences, the conflicting loyalties collectively created major problems, but through strong central governments sensitive to all our diversities, we have survived and yes, to a degree, even in Atlantic Canada we have managed to thrive until now. Canadians are, however, aware that this survival has a price tag. It does cost more to be a Canadian. Whether one lives in the East, the West or the North, part of our national psychology is this awareness that we must pay to live as Canadians wish to live.

Atlantic Canadians are doubly aware of this. When we entered Confederation 122 years ago, we gave up some of the prosperity we had enjoyed as a maritime nation dealing more north-south than east-west. Our rich cultural mix, our peaceful lifestyle and our social services safety net were some of the things we got in return.

We know that our unique country does not come cheap, but we do not begrudge these costs because of our commitment to this country. We do not begrudge them if we see a method that benefits our country and our region. There is no method in this madness. There is no sense in this nonsense.

Atlantic Canadians, bloodied by the savage attacks of this Budget, gaze across the miles as I gaze across this Chamber, at their fellow citizens as I gaze at fellow Atlantic Canadians Members of Parliament, and ask, is this really what we want? Is this the kind of fair play we can expect? Is this what it means now in 1989 to be a Canadian?

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, my friend from Halifax has given me the opportunity to comment on something we have not discussed today, but as my friend from Bonavista—Trinity—Conception will attest, it is something we discussed about two weeks ago, the question of transfer payments. If I may quote the Hon. Member back to herself, there is no sense in this nonsense.

The Hon. Member is talking about tornadoes of budgets and the systemic destruction of the infrastructure—

Ms. Clancy: You forgot the juggernaut, Ross. I will teach you how to spell that.

Mr. Reid: I forgot about the juggernaut and the sepulchre I missed entirely.

Ms. Clancy: Whited sepulchre. You can look it up.

Mr. Reid: Okay. If this is the way the Hon. Member will speak to a constituent, there will be a serious communications gap.

Let us talk about transfer payments. If the Hon. Member will excuse me, I will use the Newfoundland example, one with which I am more familiar. The Government of Canada supports the poorer provinces of this country as do the richer provinces of this country support the poorer provinces, through a number of ways including cash and tax transfers through the system. It is worked out on a formula and it is something that the provinces, particularly provinces like mine, have come to depend on.

With budgets today approaching $2.5 billion in the case of Newfoundland and Labrador, the provinces expect from the Government of Canada and from the taxpayers who pay their money to the Government of Canada, $1,400 million, about 45 per cent of the budget. They get it in three ways. They get it through transfer payments under equalization. They get it through CAP and they get it through EPF. The first two—

Mr. Gauthier: He is making a speech.

Mr. Reid: These are comments, Mr. Speaker. The first two are unaffected and the third one is unaffected this year, but in the case of Newfoundland and Labrador, these cuts that we keep hearing about will mean a reduction in the growth of 1 per cent, and the effect is $4 million out of $1.4 billion. That is what will destroy these universities.

There is no sense in this nonsense. If the Hon. Member would like to comment on this, I would love to hear her. Perhaps she could comment on the fact that in the next five years, regional spending will have increased by 35 per cent over the last five years when it increased by 50 per cent over the five years previously. Cuts that go up are cuts that I do not understand. There is no sense in this nonsense.

Ms. Clancy: We understand all too well that the Hon. Member does not understand. Indeed, the Established Programs Financing will sustain a 1 per cent cut per year over the next five years. This is a blow in actual dollars to the universities in Atlantic Canada and indeed, if the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Reid) had attended my university, he might understand phrases like "whited sepulchre". I know that the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosbie) did, but obviously it did not work.

The dollars that are coming to universities in Atlantic Canada are fewer. The dollars that are coming to hard-pressed universities are insufficient to maintain the high educational and research standards and the traditional services provided by Atlantic Canadians to the rest of the country in providing people who can speak articulately for their region and for their country. If the Government does to Atlantic Canada what it has started to do, then beware, because on your heads it will be.

Mr. Bird: Mr. Speaker, while the hon. intellectual lady from Halifax has given us a literary lesson this afternoon, she did not mention that the federal Budget of April 27, 1989, did not in any way—

Mrs. Maheu: Or the 26th, whenever he read it.

Mr. Bird: Well, you got it both days, as a matter of fact, except that you left the Chamber and decided you did not want to hear the good news.

The Hon. Member did not say that the Budget did not include any reduction in the Atlantic Region Freight Assistance Program which is one of the foundations of regional economic development for the Atlantic region and has been there for many decades. It remains sacrosanct. How is that for a word?

Ms. Clancy: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for Fredericton (Mr. Bird) for his comment and I also thank him for his compliment. Again, I am a little distressed by my hon. colleagues for Atlantic Canada who did not see fit to give up their lunch break today to discuss the problems affecting our region. Those cuts that have not yet been inflicted upon the Atlantic region will unfortunately do so, given the way this Government behaves, and if I can throw in a little Latin, operatio sequitur esse, which means," your manners reveal your being". I would say that we in Atlantic Canada, will just have to wait for the next load of bad news.

• (1750)

Hon. Roger E. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I assure you this is going to be debate. A lot of things that I will have to say may well be debatable to some of the people on the other side of the Chamber, judging by some things I have heard this afternoon and during the day.

My friend from Gander—Grand Falls has certainly put his finger on the issue. For the benefit of those opposite who have just dropped in to join us for a few minutes, welcome, that gentleman moved this morning that this House condemns the Government for initiating a series of policies that are causing unprecedented economic devastation to Atlantic Canada. I have listened with great admiration to the gentleman from Gander—Grand Falls over the years. He has said some astounding and revealing things but always truthful things. I would submit that never was he nearer the mark as today in the wording of his resolution. The "unprecedented economic devastation" that is being wreaked on Atlantic Canada by this Government is the talk of the town everywhere. Tory Members have made such eloquent—I was going to say made eloquent speeches—read such eloquent texts is what I ought to say. Surely they do not believe what they read today.

Surely they have their blinkers on. Surely they did not see the lead story in Maclean's Canadian section last week which confirms what the gentleman from Gander—Grand Falls has been saying and what we on this side are saying. It is the whole business of the parent with a young fellow in the military who was out of step. Everybody else was marching to the drum, and the mother decided that her son was the only one in step. Is this the issue? That they are the only people in step? Are all the newspapers wrong? Are all the people in Atlantic Canada who are without jobs tonight wrong? Is it really as good as the gentleman from St. John's East (Mr. Reid) has made it sound? I listened to him today and I actually said to myself for a fraction of a second, he was so convincing, that maybe I read this wrong. So I rushed back to Maclean's again to see if I missed a verb or something.

I go to the illustrious Toronto Star—I mean, what kind of evidence do you need? The Toronto Star tells me as recently as the 27th, just two or three days ago: "It is clear that the big ticket development funds for Atlantic Canada et cetera, are being reduced. It is also clear"—The Toronto Star says—they do not want to hear it. Do you have something against The Toronto Star? "It is also clear that dozens of regional development agreements with the provinces totalling more than $1 billion and covering everything from fish to tourism to forestry are in jeopardy". That is what we are trying to say today.

An Hon. Member: That is wishful thinking.

An Hon. Member: Why don't you do your own research?

Mr. Simmons: That is right. Get it all out. They have such pent up frustration that they have to stand and read prepared texts that they do not believe. Is it any wonder they want to babble on—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, I thought the real tell-tale sign was a moment ago when my good friend from Halifax spoke and had to do what other Members ought to have been doing all day. Instead of singing the false praises of this Government, the Members from Nova Scotia, South Shore and Cumberland ought to have been up saying what she finally had to say. What did she, the Member from Halifax say today? The region worst hit is down the south shore, but it took a Liberal, an opposition Member of Parliament, to speak for those people because the Members they sent here to speak for them are so busy playing the violin on the Government's side, they have not got time or—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member from Fredericton on a point of order.

Mr. Bird: Mr. Speaker, the facts are that the Hon. Member for the South Shore (Mr. McCreath) is in the South Shore today working for those people, talking to those people and representing those people.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the people of South Shore, I want to thank publicly the Member for Halifax for standing up today on their behalf and fighting their cause and that of people of other parts of Nova Scotia, and yes, the people for Fredericton because when that gentleman was up speaking, he said nothing about the havoc being created on his own constituents. He was so busy telling us what a great utopia we have arrived at since this Government took over. Well, I and a good many of this constituents have news for him. It is not quite as good as he says it is. I would go as far as to say that he has grossly and badly misrepresented the situation here today. For that he will answer to his constituents in due time.

The Minister from Central Nova calls it a reprofiling. They are not cuts, the Minister says. It is not a cut to take x dollars that had been designated for a five-year expenditure, and stretch those same x dollars over a seven year period. In the Minister's special math, five goes into x the same number of times as seven goes into x. So where is the cut? That is clearly a reprofiling. I come to the defence of the Minister for Central Nova for introducing a whole new set of concepts into our mathematics. I say to him that he is a great man, a fantastic fellow, a gentleman, but he is caught up in a terrible web. He is trying to defend the indefensible.

I could refer him to two applicants in my riding. I will not mention the communities because they are sufficiently small that the individuals concerned might be immediately known. I will just say generally that the two applicants I have in mind spoke to me on this particular weekend about having been told by his people in ACOA that their applications were approved. Then the rules got changed. They got a second phone call saying they were not approved.

Do not, I say to the Minister, try to explain to those people that there have been no cuts. Do not try to tell those people that everything is as it was or even better. They represents many dozens of other applicants in Atlantic Canada who were told and accepted in good faith that their applications were approved and that they could expect funding to be forthcoming. They went out and incurred certain expenditures and made certain plans. I am prepared to give the Minister the names of those two applicants. These two individual companies have been treated unfairly by the changes, by the cuts, by what the Minister characterizes as the reprofiling of the ACOA funding. These two would-be applicants are experiencing real hardship. They are absorbing expenditure losses, funding losses that they should not have had to absorb had the rules not changed in the middle of the game.

There are so many other things that need to be said, and it is nearly six o'clock. I guess this thing finishes as six, does it?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Standing Order 81(17), the proceedings of the motion have expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

In accordance with Standing Order 38, a motion to adjourn the House is deemed to have been moved.

Adjournment Debate

STATUS OF WOMEN—REFUSAL TO MEET WITH NAC—REDUCED FUNDING TO WOMEN'S GROUPS/RESIGNATION OF PRESIDENT OF PC WOMEN'S FEDERATION

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to a question I asked on May 15 last, regarding the National Action Committee on the Status of Women and the Government's decision not to attend that lobby. When the Hon. Minister destroyed a 15 year tradition of the Government attending the NAC lobby, she denied a huge constituency of Canadian women the opportunity to question Cabinet Ministers openly in the presence of the media. She denied this constituency which represents women of all backgrounds their right to hear just what the Government intends to do to fulfil its promises to Canadian women.

• (1800)

These women had a right to hear from the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Beatty) why there is no national child care program after the promises made. They had a right to hear from the Minister responsible for the status of women why contract compliance in the area of pay equity is a joke. They had a right to ask the same Minister, in her role as the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) to know why women, the last hired and the first fired, will find it more and more difficult to qualify for UI benefits.

I understand why the Government cancelled that lobby. It is neither easy nor pleasant to spend an hour in that lobby for any Canadian politician. However, I can assure the Government that life today for the vast majority of Canadian women is neither pleasant nor easy. There is a frustration in the ranks of women activists that has been aggravated by years of empty promises, inadequate programs, and the patriarchal, patronizing poses of the Government. There is a frustration in the ranks of all Canadian women as to when the Government will begin to take those problems seriously.

The Minister and her Government have exploited the difficulties that the National Action Committee has undergone in the past year. As with any umbrella organization, there are naturally strongly held and divergent views on a number of issues. There are also varying and different styles of lobbying. Some of those styles are more abrasive than others. Again, the fact that some Canadian women live lives of quiet desperation creates a certain abrasion in manner.

While I understand the Government's reluctance to attend on that lobby, I can hardly credit that a desire not to be insulted would lead it to break such a long tradition. No, the real reason behind this abdication is that the Government has no commitment to gender equality, no commitment to child care, no commitment to contract compliance in the area of pay equity. In short, it has no commitment to the millions of Canadian women who suffer under the inequities of systemic discrimination in Canadian society.

NAC is not a perfect organization. Perfect organizations are hard to come by. Neither, by any stretch of the imagination, is this a perfect Government, certainly not in the eyes of Canadian women. Nor is it a fair Government. Indeed, it is a Government that is too callous even to spare an hour for the National Action Committee on the Status of Women; it is too uncaring to provide child care spaces for one million latchkey kids; it is too cavalier about its responsibility to equality to continue to fund adequately a national umbrella group that strives to attain goals to which the vast majority of women adhere and for which the vast majority of Canadian women yearn.

I remind the Government that attacks on the National Action Committee may cripple that organization, but it will not cripple the millions of Canadian women who will continue to demand equality and to demand of the Government a fair deal. I remind government Members of this, and I suggest that they act soon to redress those inequities. If they do not, the outcries and the protests will overflow this Hill. They will certainly overflow Room 200 in the West Block, and there will be no place for the Ministers and the Government to hide.

[Translation]

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to respond to the question put by the Hon. Member for Halifax (Ms. Clancy) to the Minister responsible for the Status of Women on May 15, 1989.

Mr. Speaker, in her preamble the Hon. Member said that the Minister had refused to meet the National Action Committee on the Status of Women. That is not altogether true. The Minister privately met with the Committee on several occasions, as did the Prime Minister. In fact, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister himself met the NAC lobby.

Mr. Speaker, it is easy for the Hon. Member for Halifax to complain about unfair treatment, but the Conservative Government's record is there to prove that if any Government ever did something for the status of women it was certainly the Conservative Government. She knows perfectly well that her Party, which was in power for a quarter of a century, did nothing. It was a Party that did nothing about the status of women.

Mr. Speaker, I will not bore you with a litany of all the matters we dealt with ever since we came to power. However, I may remind the Hon. Member, who is so close to the NAC, that on July 13, 1988, as a Member of this House, I wrote a letter to the president of the NAC, who has yet to answer my letter. Mr. Speaker, I should be delighted to send the Hon. Member a copy of this letter which I think is a very good letter—and not just because I wrote it—and deserves a reply. Mr. Speaker, I have yet to receive a reply. I wish the Hon. Member, who has privileged access to the president of the NAC, would ask her why she did not bother to answer my letter.

I would also like to say that the Hon. Member knows very well that NAC is not the only one to speak for Canadian women. It is a very important group. The Government has considered the recommendations—many recommendations made by this action group. But the Government listens to that group as it does to other groups and makes its decision based on all the factors involved.

I would also like to say that we are human and obviously, NAC chose a sort of confrontation. That is their right, it is normal to criticize the Government, we understand that very well, except it is not easy to be booed at a meeting and in my opinion, the constructive approach, as she will see in my letter, is much more positive.

So, Mr. Speaker, once again, I would like to conclude by saying that the Conservative Government has acted. If the Hon. Member wishes to know all the women's issues we have settled, I will be pleased to send her a copy.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS—DRIFT-NET FISHING—AGREEMENT WITH JAPANESE/OBSERVERS ON FISHING VESSELS

Mr. David D. Stupich (Nanaimo—Cowichan): Mr. Speaker, my question concerns the drift-net fishery and the fact that the Canadian Government was not taking a strong enough stand in imposing an extension of the boundary north, among other things.

I was appointed as our Party's critic for fisheries in the middle of January, just four and one half months ago. Until then I had really heard nothing about the drift-net fishery and doubt that I had even heard the term.

From what I have heard, read and seen about it during the intervening period, I believe that if I do nothing less than bring this terrible situation taking place in the Pacific Ocean to the attention of Canadians, particularly on the West Coast, it will have been worth my while being here.

According to my latest information, there are some 50,000 miles of these invisible nets which reportedly cover an area of just less than three million square miles. These nets are operating in an area roughly 400 miles north and south and 7,000 miles east-west. There are enough drift-nets to cover that area seven times over. They can be suspended at any depth to catch anything and everything that comes into contact with them.

I have a letter dated May 16, 1989, from a constituent who states:

> I have been a commercial fisherman for 15 years and believe the high seas drift-net fishery presently expanding in the Pacific is the beginning of the end to our salmon stocks.

This is a fisherman who has been watching it happen:

> In my travels I have found seven monofilament drift-nets on beaches from Cape Cook to Masset on the north end of the Queen Charlotte Islands, one-mile net adrift off San Joseph Bay, one net tangled in a friend's propeller 70 miles northwest of Bull Harbour, and thousands of corks from these nets on beaches and adrift. I might add that I get very few chances to go ashore in my profession.

Yet he is seeing all this evidence of the expansion of this type of fishery. He goes on to state: "Please do everything in your power to stop the interception of our salmon stocks by foreign fleets". That is a very narrow concern compared to what I have in mind at the moment.

• (1810)

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) in a letter to my colleague, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), stated that Canada opposes Japan's proposal for alternate fishing areas and for a change in the northern boundary of its squid fishery in the north Pacific which, if implemented, would result in increased interception of Canadian original salmonics. Yet Canada agreed to the Japanese request to move that boundary north some 2 degrees, 120 miles. The Japanese have unilaterally announced that they will move their boundary for the squid fishing area 2 degrees further north. There is overwhelming evidence that the line needs to be moved further south to prevent the taking of salmon and steelhead. The Japanese maintain that they are not harvesting North American salmon or steelhead. Yet there is much evidence available of pirating of these salmon, not by the Japanese in particular, but by the drift-net fleets in total, and selling them in the markets of the world.

What is Canada doing about it? Canada's attitude is that we had to agree to what the Japanese demanded. If we are just a patsy in this game of international powers, why are we bothering to go there? If we are not going there with our own agenda, if we are not going there determined to do something to stop this, to control the situation at least, and hopefully to stop it, then why bother pretending? Canada does have muscle, I submit, muscle that it could use. However, Canada prefers to take it easy and not upset anybody.

There have been reports of people being charged, but they are not being charged by Canadians but by Americans. There are names and everything else available.

A pact has been agreed to among Japan, the United States and Canada. Canada agreed to the 2 degrees north and to put five observers on some 500 boats—one per hundred. That was a major victory. I suppose five is better than none.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, the concern about cutting back on nuclear arms and the necessity of having inspection. Would the United States be satisfied if the Russians said: "We will have our own observers and we will tell you what they see. You can bring one, two or three if you like and we will look after them while they are here". Would that be satisfactory? It would not be satisfactory to the Americans. It would not be satisfactory to the Russians. Yet that is what we have agreed to. We have said: "Yes, we will have five observers. You put them wherever you want and look after them". We will rely on the Japanese observers to observe their own fleet.

Korea has also come in lately and said: "Yes, we will agree to the procedure as well". However, there has been no mention of how many observers, if any, just that they will abide by the rules.

This is an important issue. Can we rely on the people who we believe are breaking the rules to police themselves? I would suggest not.

Mr. Ross Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to reply to the question and the comments made by the Hon. Member for Nanaimo—Cowichan (Mr. Stupich).

Canada is opposed to the current use of drift-nets in the Pacific Ocean because the drift-net fisheries operated by Japan, Korea and Taiwan intercept North American salmonid stock and kill large numbers of other marine species, as well as sea birds.

Since 1982, Canada has been taking a leading role in international efforts to bring this fishery under control. Recent actions by the Government with regard to the Japanese squid drift-net fishery in the north Pacific have provided a breakthrough in this effort. There will be, in 1989, for the first time, a substantial observer program in the Japanese squid drift-net fishery, including Japanese, Canadian and U.S. observers.

It must be understood that Canada does not have the legislative authority over the Pacific squid drift-net fishery as the fishery occurs entirely in international waters. There are no international treaties or agreements in place with Japan or any other nation which governs squid drift-net fishing.

Contrary to what is sometimes assumed, the squid fishery is not under the authority of the International North Pacific Fisheries Commission.

The Japanese squid drift-net fleet is subject to some restrictions pursuant to understandings reached between Canada, the United States and Japan. It is prohibited from any direct salmon fisheries and the retention of incidentally caught salmon is prohibited.

Japan has argued strongly in international meetings that it has set the northern boundary for its squid drift-net fleet in accordance with scientific advice which shows that the incidental catch of salmon south of the boundary will be minimal. In 1981, Japan, by regulation, set the over-all northern limit for the squid drift-net fishery at 46 degrees latitude. This has not changed. Within this limit, the actual northern boundary varies, in accordance with Japanese regulations, from month to month. Until this summer, and in the absence of solid scientific data on salmon and squid abundance in northern latitudes, Japan had set the northern limit in July and August of each year at 42 and 44 degrees respectively. Japan has now noted that experience and scientific cruises in the northern boundary area have demonstrated that the boundary has been set too far to the south, and that moving it to the north would result in good squid catches with no increase in incidental salmon catches. Consequently, Japan has announced the northward extension of its squid drift-net fishery in July and August to 44 and 46 degrees respectively, still conforming to the over-all northern limit it set in 1981.

• (1815)

It must be emphasized that this was a unilateral decision by Japan. Neither Canada nor the U.S.A. agreed with, or accepted this decision. In fact, both Canada and the U.S.A. strongly opposed the decision, arguing the lack of scientific evidence satisfactory to North American scientists to justify this extension as a measure that would not lead to increases in interception of salmon. Nonetheless, and despite the strong objections by Canada and the U.S.A., the Japanese would not be deterred, and went ahead with their unilateral decision.

Are you cutting me off, Mr. Speaker?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary's time has expired. The Hon. Member for South West Nova.

Adjournment Debate

FISHERIES—CLOSURE OF FISH PLANTS—QUOTAS / CAPE NORTH FACTORY FREEZER TRAWLER

Mrs. Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rose on May 12 to offer to this Government and to the Minister of Fisheries who was absent some of the options that I felt would be viable in this time on the Atlantic Coast. A crisis atmosphere now pervades the Atlantic Coast fishery. Some people are making comparisons to the Prairie drought that existed in the West in 1988.

I only offered the two solutions because I thought it was an effort to try to get this Government to focus on the problems. I am glad to see my colleague from the West Coast raising another point that shows that this Government is not addressing the needs and concerns of the fishing industry. I say to the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Siddon), we cannot keep blaming the lack of quotas. We need a study to look at the quotas in the water. He will not take a look at the quotas in the Scotia—Fundy area; the overfishing, whether it be foreigners, the fishermen or the inshore or the offshore; as well, we cannot have a policy that makes the fishermen throw good fish back into the water. This is what this Government is doing. Millions and thousands of tonnes have gone back into the water because of the overfishing—I may have exaggerated on the millions—but thousands of tonnes that have gone back into the water dead.

The Parliamentary Secretary may laugh but it is not funny. The Minister blames the over-capacity. What about the three freezer factory ships that were given by this Government to go out and fish in the utilized species of what our fleets in the past have caught?

A crisis means a danger. Any crisis also means opportunity. It means danger in that we might again devote our attention solely to rescuing the giants, an approach which in the past created many of the problems we face today. The opportunity for the Government is in the new sense of urgency which may allow us to re-examine the fundamental structure of the flawed Atlantic groundfish management plan. This is a chance for this Government to reform the whole industry.

I would like to talk about this. My solutions referred to foreign overfishing and the foreign fishing. One of the problems is foreign overfishing. When I say foreign overfishing, I mean that there has to be a political fortitude on the part of this Government to go out and claim our natural rights to what is within our 200-mile limit. We have had a Government with a toothless policy, vis-à-vis foreign overfishing. December 10, 1988, the European Council of Ministers announced unilateral quotas 12 times higher than those permitted by NAFO. Ministerial response was a press release denouncing the plan and calling on his European counterparts to be more far-sighted in their thinking. Since then, how many freezer factories took the Minister's advice to heart? Precise control of overfishing requires surveillance and enforcement, the lack of which led to the demise of ICNAF and will likely spell the end of NAFO also.

• (1820)

As an aside, this Government does not even know if this over-harvesting by foreigners is affecting the under-utilized species and the food chain for the fish caught inshore. After decades of politely being brushed off in our effort to strengthen international institutions, we must now know that we have to rely on our own enforcement capabilities to protect our fish stock. The 200-mile limit will be respected only if there is reason to. It is fundamentally unacceptable that the Government stands by as dually negotiated international agreements are flouted while domestic fishermen squabble over what is left of a steady dwindling resource.

Let me talk about foreign overfishing, Mr. Speaker. Let me assure you that out of 170 boats outside the 200-mile limit, two weeks ago, the average catch was probably 40 to 80 tonnes per boat. Seventeen days of production for one of those boats equals the total production of one inshore plant in South West Nova that employs up to 30 people. This plant is modern but today has no access to fish to continue operating. We have 40 to 60 foreign boats within the 200-mile limit doing the same amount of damage. I say to this Government and to the Governments in the Atlantic that they have to have political fortitude. There are hard decisions to be made. Those decisions mean that National Sea and Fisheries Products, if there is over-capacity, should go out and claim the 200-mile limit. Do not resort to going against the equity principle the Department of Fisheries own policy on equity. It is the inshore communities that need to benefit from the resource on their doorstep.

The current crisis is severe, but we must not permit ourselves to be blinded to the over-all health of a good Atlantic groundfishery. We must have better enforced protection of fish stocks from overfishing. We must reform the enterprise allocation system to protect the interests of a once thriving inshore sector better. If we do not, a way of life in thousands of small towns may not survive.

Do we have the political will? I say to the federal Government and the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) that I have not seen it. The offshore has not been responsible. It should be made to go to the 200-mile limit. The inshore fish gets a better price than the offshore. It needs less fish to get that price and less fish are needed to create a job onshore. What about quotas? The quotas from 1984 to 1989 in the inshore decreased 44 per cent while the offshore decreased 3.2 per cent.

If the Government follows the path that it seems to be following in protecting our giants in the fishing industry which is not the direction that I feel it should be going, that direction should be to save the many hundreds of inshore communities all along the east coast of the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Ross Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to respond to the Hon. Member for South West Nova (Mrs. Campbell). I promise to be more succinct than perhaps I was the last time, but that denies me the opportunity to respond in as vigorous a way as I would like to considering some of her comments.

Under the Department of Fisheries and Oceans Atlantic Groundfish Management Plan, there are not, and there have never been, any "plant quotas" or "community quotas" in either the offshore or the inshore sector. Licences and quotas are allocated to individual fishermen or companies, which are free to land and process fish at the location of their choice. This is a long-established principle of the Atlantic groundfish management accepted by all components of the industry. This allows companies and fishermen to improve operational flexibility and provide for integrated harvesting, processing and marketing.

Reallocating part of fish quotas given to companies might only result in displacing the problem as other communities would be affected. The problem is one of major reductions in groundfish quotas over the past several years. In such a context, companies must be allowed to make the decisions which will ensure their long-term viability.

• (1825)

Under the 1989 groundfish management plan, a permanent transfer of 12,000 tonnes of cod, haddock, pollock, redfish and flatfish has already been made from the offshore sector to the inshore and almost all of this came from National Sea Products.

The factory freezer trawler Cape North operates with a five-year experimental licence under conditions which expire at the end of 1990. This arrangement will then be reviewed. The main restrictions regarding this vessel's operations are that at least 50 per cent of the catch must be of previously under-utilized enterprise allocations and that no more than 6,000 tonnes of 2J3KL cod be harvested in any one year.

The Cape North fishes stocks which would not be otherwise harvested and processed by National Sea Products' regular fleet. For example, the Cape North is currently fishing 4VWX redfish near Cape Breton. This stock has a 28,000 tonne Canadian quota of which the maximum yearly harvest has been 21,000 tonnes in 1987. In 1989, the Cape North is targeting more the under-utilized stocks which should compensate somewhat for the reduction in traditional stocks.

The factory freezer trawler technology may be the most appropriate if Canada is to increase its harvest of some of the stocks which are currently under-utilized and which are not within reach of the inshore fleets, for example under-utilized groundfish off northern Labrador. The five-year arrangement will allow National Sea Products to test the feasibility and viability of this technology.

If I have any time left, Mr. Speaker, I am more than willing to give it to the Hon. Member for South West Nova.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would love to hear the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary, but I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

ORDER IN COUNCIL

TABLING AND REFERENCE OF APPOINTMENT

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table, in both official languages, an order in council appointment which was made by the Government, and pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 110(1) it is deemed referred to the appropriate standing committee.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

MEASURE TO CHANGE NAME OF CONSTITUENCY FROM RENFREW TO RENFREW—NIPISSING—PEMBROKE

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-245, an Act to change the name of the electoral district of Renfrew.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hopkins: Mr. Speaker, I thank the House for its co-operation in this matter. Previous to the last redistribution the constituency I represented was called Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke. Pembroke is the largest community between Ottawa and North Bay, and a large section of the district of Nipissing is also in my constituency. Those two areas have been left out of the name by the redistribution commission.

I travelled 205 miles one way from my home in Petawawa to Sudbury to make part of the representation to the commission there, and I also appeared before the commission in Nepean. The commission saw fit not to accept the simple continuation of the previous riding name.

The secretary of the commission had a discussion with me. I felt that it was a simple decision, that it was not very difficult. However, in the commission's returns it simply called the riding Renfrew, which does not identify major parts of the constituency.

I would only recommend that in future, in order to prevent all the hassle of introducing Private Members' Bills, the Electoral Boundaries Commission be more sensitive to the recommendations of Members and other people from constituencies on the procedure of naming the ridings in order that they relate to the district.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CANADIAN POTATO MARKETING ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-246, an Act respecting the orderly marketing of potatoes.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, this Bill is being offered out of frustration with the process. In 1973 the Horticultural Council of Canada passed a resolution to set up a marketing agency for potatoes. In 1974 a Potato Action Committee with producer and government officials recommended an agency without supply management. There were nine drafts of a plan. I would point out that a plan follows from a legislative proposal. That died from lack of pressing.

In 1984 poor prices prompted western potato producers to ask for the recycling of the plan. In 1985 another market disaster had the rest of Canada's potato producers on side.

A task force was structured in 1986. In the fall of 1987 public hearings were held which recommended that an agency be put in place. Some processors took action against it through the courts. A plebiscite was held in July, 1988 with 75 per cent of the producers saying "yes". It is still tied up in the courts. It has to be started again. This Bill would give the opportunity for it to be restructured and recycled.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

PORT OF CHURCHILL DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition signed by over 100 people from the communities of The Pas, Cranberry, Portage, Churchill, Moose Lake, Flin Flon, and Snow Lake, all in northern Manitoba.

The people of this region ask that the federal Government develop the obvious potential of Canada's only inland seaport at Churchill. The undersigned petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to direct the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board to ensure that at the very least 3 per cent of Canada's annual grain shipments be shipped through the Port of Churchill and that the Government aggressively pursue additional ways to utilize this important seaport to ship exports other than grain.

VIA RAIL SERVICES

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure today to present a petition on behalf of the people of my riding in Penticton, Summerland, and Naramata who are concerned about the cut-backs at VIA Rail.

They are calling upon the Government to live up to its original pledge to support VIA Rail, to abandon plans for further cuts to VIA's budget, and to provide the necessary resources to allow VIA to operate as a modern, effective transportation company rather than a museum.

PRESERVATION OF ROUGE VALLEY

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise, pursuant to Standing Order 37, to present to the House today a petition to save the Rouge Valley. The Rouge Valley in Scarborough, in Metro Toronto, is a unique and precious natural area. Protecting the endangered wildlife and wilderness area is in the national interest.

This valley is being threatened by the possibility of metro council designating the area as a garbage dump. Second, it is being threatened by the Ontario Government which states that it may build a freeway through this valley similar to the Don Valley Parkway. Each of these proposals is absolutely inconsistent with keeping this valley in its natural state.

Just last week a spill occurred in the Rouge River. It is of particular concern to the people of Scarborough because of nesting that is taking place in the marsh areas of the Rouge. It is important that we be constantly vigilant.

The petitioners are joined by the Mayor of Scarborough, the federal Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard), the Save the Rouge Valley System, and the Coalition of Scarborough Community Associations representing thousands of people. They call on Parliament to work with the Government of Ontario to establish the Rouge River Valley as a Canadian heritage land or a provincial park.

VIA RAIL SERVICES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36 on behalf of a number of constituents from Kamloops, British Columbia, who are concerned that the Government of Canada appears to have failed to provide the resources necessary to fulfil its promise to improve passenger rail service.

Now that the Government has decided to cut back VIA Rail either totally or in part, the petitioners are calling upon Parliament to improve and modernize VIA Rail instead of cutting it, to service those areas of the country where it can provide a more rapid, economical, safe, convenient, environmentally sound, and energy efficient alterative to other means of transportation. I might add, particularly in the corridor from Vancouver to Edmonton and to Calgary.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 55 and 56.

[Text]

CLAIM FOR COSTS

Question No. 55—Mr. Angus:

For the most recent year available, what amounts of money were Canadian National and Canadian Pacific Railways allowed to claim as constant costs under the Western Grain Transportation Act?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Under subsection 34 (1) of the WTGA, the level of contribution to constant costs is defined as 20 per cent of volume-related variable costs.

In calculating the 1988/89 rate scale, volume-related variable costs were $740.4 million and therefore, the amount used for constant costs was $148.1 million. However, since these figures are used only to calculate the rate scale, the amount allowable for constant costs is a function of the actual traffic that moved. In crop year 1987/88, the latest year for which actual traffic data is available the contribution to constant costs amounted to $163.3 million.

However, it should be noted that no specific amount is ever paid for constant costs. Rather, the constant costs are included as part of the rate scale which applies to both railways.

CONSTANT-COSTS CALCULATIONS

Question No. 56—Mr. Angus:

Has the National Transportation Agency made known to the government its views concerning constant-cost calculations under the Western Grain Transportation Act and, if so, what are they?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): The Canadian Transport Commission (CTC), the predecessor of the National Transportation Agency, made its views concerning constant cost calculations under the WGTA known to the Government in its "Report to the Minister" dated March 1986. At that time, the CTC recommended 17.5 per cent of the volume-related costs of the railways as the appropriate contribution to constant costs.

Currently, the Agency, as part of its statutory duties under the WGTA, is conducting a costing review. In carrying out the review, the Agency is directed to assess the level of contribution to constant costs (presently set by legislation at 20 per cent). This assessment is in progress and the results will be reported to the Minister on or before March 31, 1990.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: The questions as enumerated by the Parliamentary Secretary have been answered.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Parliamentary Secretary requested that you transfer written Questions Nos. 45, 52, 53, 62, 64, 83, and 88 to Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers, pursuant to Standing Order 39(6). At that time you will recall that you said that you would like to hear some arguments on this point. I would like to know at what time you intend to hear these arguments, because I would like to make some comments.

Mr. Lewis: Next opposition day.

Mr. Gauthier: I hear the Minister saying "next opposition day". I hope the Speaker is a little more generous than that.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the initiatives that the Government took yesterday solicited a complete review and a lot of thought.

My understanding was that yesterday you indicated an interest in perhaps hearing some comments on a private basis with yourself, before comments were made in the House. If that is the case, I would certainly be prepared to arrange a meeting with you to provide some observations from our corner of the House.

Mr. Speaker: I thank both Hon. Members for their interventions. I was not particularly thinking of private submissions. I was thinking that Hon. Members could liaise with my office and that we could get a time when it would be convenient for everyone to hear the matter on the floor of the House.

I would ask for perhaps another day's indulgence by Hon. Members. As I indicated yesterday, this particular procedure has not been invoked for many years and I do not want to take Members by surprise. That in no way prejudges one way or the other how we will deal with it, but it is an interesting point.

It is a point of importance to the Chamber, and I think that probably some time later today arrangements can be made between my office and Hon. Members as to an appropriate time to hear some argument on it. That will also give Hon. Members a chance to look up some of the background.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 52

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to propose a motion to adjourn the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the threat to fundamental rights and freedoms of Canadians, in particular the freedom of the press, constituted by the laying of criminal charges against a member of the Parliamentary Press Gallery for actions taken in the legitimate pursuit of his profession.

Mr. Speaker: The first thing I want to comment upon is that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James has followed to the letter the appropriate method of presenting an application for an emergency debate. I would hope that the example he has given in conciseness and specifics would be noticed by other Hon. Members.

I should also record that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James has given appropriate notice of this matter. The Chair is extremely cognizant of the importance of the matter and it is, of course, one of the great traditions of our democratic system relating to the freedom of the press and its ability to function, to inform the public.

However, having looked at this matter, realizing the importance of the matter not just to the Hon. Member but to all Hon. Members in this place, and I think to people in free countries, it does not seem to the Speaker to come within those guidelines which would justify the Speaker ruling for an emergency debate.

I point out to the Hon. Member and other Hon. Members that there are other means by which this matter can be pursued. It is of course a matter of great importance and not allowing the emergency debate in no way diminishes the importance of the question with respect to our democratic process. I thank the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James again for the concise and effective way he put his point.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PLANT BREEDERS' RIGHTS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture) moved that Bill C-15, an Act respecting plant breeders' rights, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have this opportunity to present for the consideration of the House a motion respecting the second reading of Bill C-15, an Act to establish plant breeders' rights in Canada.

This legislation is long overdue and enjoys a broad base of support. I believe it is essential if we are to maintain our competitive edge in plant production. Therefore, particularly since it has been the subject of debate in the House and throughout the country, it seems to me that it is timely that the Bill be brought forward for ratification.

The merits of this legislation are well understood by those individuals who have been proponents of it, those who are involved in the production of seeds. The organizations to which I refer have been a part of the process. This has not been a unilateral step that has been taken by the federal Government. There have been a number of ongoing discussions and consultations with them. They, too, consider that this legislation is imperative.

Plant breeders' rights will enable plant breeders to collect reasonable royalties for their varieties. This will encourage greater investment in plant breeding, both in the private and public sector. The legislation will enable Canadian plant breeders to collect royalties from other countries where plant breeders' rights are already in existence. The legislation will open doors for Canada's producers to the best possible plant varieties, whether those varieties originate in Canada or abroad. This is essentially why Canada needs plant breeders' rights legislation.

By strengthening and broadening the base for plant breeders, as this legislation will do, we are in essence strengthening the entire farm industry. Most developed countries recognized the importance of plant breeders' rights many years ago. The United Kingdom did so in 1964. The United States followed in 1970. In fact, many countries granted rights to plant breeders even before the Second World War.

An international convention for the protection of new varieties of plants established an international union in 1961. Eighteen countries now belong to this organization, Australia being the most recent country to join. This legislation conforms to the convention. Our intention is to join this organization, too, once the legislation is passed.

In Canada, as far back as 1973, the Canadian Horticultural Council was recommending that laws to respect the rights of plant breeders be enacted by the Parliament of Canada. In the years since then agricultural and horticultural organizations have recommended continuously the introduction of plant breeders' rights in Canada.

In 1980 plant breeders' rights legislation was introduced to the House. It was introduced by a Liberal Government. However, it was never debated and it died on the Order Paper.

The legislation was again introduced in January, 1988 but it too died on the Order Paper when the election was called last fall.

I think it is fair to say that Canada's farm industry has waited a long time and has been very patient in the delays that have occurred for various reasons. I believe the legislation, as I said earlier, is overdue. I want to see it debated and passed.

Plant breeders' legislation will not have to stand on its own. In a previous session of Parliament we introduced legislation to strengthen the Seeds Act. As a matter of fact in December, 1985 amendments to the Seeds Act received Royal Assent. This Bill will complement plant breeders' rights. The two are integrally interwoven.

The amendments to the Seeds Act guard against any possible introduction of inferior agricultural varieties. They also ensure that seed offered for sale is properly presented in the market-place and that the pedigreed seed system is not subverted.

The Seeds Act amendments laid the groundwork for plant breeders' rights legislation. The homework has been done. As a result I am confident that this legislation will receive wide acceptance as a part of the total package which we hope will improve the ability of Canadian agriculture to take advantage of the latest varieties and, in the course, enhance their competitiveness.

The organizations which support plant breeders' rights include, among others, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the Agriculture Institute of Canada, the Canadian Horticultural Council, SeCan Association, the Canadian Seed Growers' Association, the Canadian Seed Trade Association, and the Western Canadian Wheat Growers' Association.

In terms of the contents of the Bill I would like to cover them briefly. Of course, I am sure that in committee we will be able to get into more of the details.

Varieties already on the market will not be affected by this legislation. All species of plants are eligible. The breeder of a new, distinct, uniform, stable variety will be granted the exclusive right to produce and sell reproductive material of the variety for a period up to 18 years.

Breeders have the right to set conditions and collect royalties from those who multiply the variety for sale. Anyone can use a protected variety for further plant breeding work. Breeders can pursue enforcement of their rights through the civil courts.

Breeders' rights will be restricted in the public interest. For example, the breeder cannot ask for an unreasonably high royalty or restrict the supply of a variety in order to boost prices. A protective direction may be granted while applications are pending, protecting the applicant's right to prosecute against infringements during that period. Thus during the process of applying there are protection safeguards in place.

Regulations will be introduced on a species by species basis and priority will be given to those species of major importance to Canadian producers. Coverage of all major crops will take several years to complete. An advisory committee representing all interested parties will be established to advise on the administration of the legislation.

Generally, these are the main provisions of Bill C-15. I am confident that the Bill deals fairly and directly with the major issues involved in plant breeders' rights.

I would also like to deal with some of the concerns that have been expressed. I understand and appreciate the concerns. I want to deal with them hopefully in a manner that puts these issues into proper perspective. However, I also hope that the committee will deal with them fully as well, since that is clearly the place to have these issues clarified.

One of the main concerns is that government plant breeding programs will decrease as a result of plant breeders' rights. This is simply not our intention and it will not be the case. We believe it is essential to maintain a strong government plant breeding effort. The purpose of the legislation is to ensure more and not less plant breeding research, particularly by stimulating the private sector efforts. We believe that the royalties will help in pursuing that initiative. This increase in private sector plant breeding will complement the federal Government's activities and will in no way diminish our ongoing commitment to breeding, research, and variety development.

Crop research is the mainstay of this Government's agricultural research effort. In fact, more than half of Agriculture Canada's research dollars is spent on crop research, and 23 per cent of that amount goes directly toward plant breeding. Federal spending on plant breeding research during the past 10 years approached $200 million. This year alone more than $23 million will be spent on plant breeding. So it is not surprising that Agriculture Canada will be the main beneficiary, initially, of plant breeders' rights legislation for most crops. For example, 84 per cent of the cereal and oilseeds acreage grown on the Prairies in 1988 were Agriculture Canada varieties. Agriculture Canada has been in the business. It is in the business, and it will continue to be in that business. In a few years, this could involve up to $4 million in royalties for future research and plant development.

I am pleased to inform the House that Treasury Board has approved a plan whereby a substantial portion, 60 per cent of the federal royalty funds, will be funnelled back into public plant breeding programs. That should remove any doubt about this Government's strong commitment to public plant breeding in Canada. I think that for the first time we have a clear example where we can replenish the dollars that are spent on plant research in an orderly and positive fashion.

A second concern that has been raised is that the market will be flooded with inferior varieties. This will not happen. As I said earlier, the strengthened Seeds Act ensures that all new agricultural varieties are properly tested. They must perform as well or better than current registered varieties.

As for fears about genetic uniformity, this legislation if anything ensures against that danger. By encouraging greater investment in plant breeding programs, the legislation helps to increase the opportunities for genetic diversity. Varieties will only receive rights if they are different from existing ones.

Another concern that has been mentioned is the possibility of domination of the seed industry by multinational companies. This fear, more so than any others, has been greatly exaggerated.

Let us look at the facts. The vast majority of plant breeders in Canada are at Agriculture Canada and at our universities. We should also recognize the many small, often independently owned businesses that are involved in the seed industry. Most pedigreed seed is sold by Canadian farmers who are seed growers, or by Canadian farmer-owned co-operatives. Multinational corporations play a relatively minor role. I do not expect that this balance within the industry will change radically as a result of plant breeders' rights legislation.

There are also concerns that have been mentioned that royalty charges will be unreasonable and that seed costs will increase dramatically as a result of this legislation. It is fair to say that the average price of seed may increase as researchers recover part of their investment. I think that is only fair. We believe that any increases will be slight. Certainly the benefits and the advantages as a result of this will certainly be multiplied many times over when we consider the long-term effects of this in terms of maintaining our competitive viability and in terms of our leading edge in plant research and plant development. We should remember that competition within the marketplace will serve as an instrument of keeping prices down as well. The legislation also has safeguards to prevent excessive royalty charges and unreasonable restrictions on the supply of a variety.

Existing varieties, as I said earlier, are not regulated by the legislation so that their prices will not be affected. Cereal crop farmers will have the option of using grain from their own bins should they find it more economical than buying new seed.

Finally, much has been said about the protection and exchange of germplasm. First, I would point out that in countries where plant breeders' rights already exist, plant breeders have continued germplasm exchanges.

Second, when a new variety is released, the breeder cannot prevent others from using it in their breeding programs. As always, federal plant breeders will continue to make the results of their research generally and fairly available through all the usual channels.

Third, there are world-wide exchanges of germplasm from each country's national collections, and Canadian scientists participate in these exchanges.

Finally, Agriculture Canada has made a significant commitment to the collection and preservation of germplasm of various crop species. The department maintains Plant Gene Resources of Canada and it has, over the last two years, provided new resources for this program.

Also, the Experimental Farm Stations Act will be amended to ensure that plant, animal and microbial germplasm is conserved.

In addition, I am pleased to announce that the Smithfield Experimental Farm in Ontario has been designated as the primary clonal germplasm repository for horticultural crops.

As well, the International Board for Plant Genetic Resources co-ordinates world collections of germplasm and Canada has been an active participant in this program.

In summary, germplasm must be preserved and all the proper mechanisms are in place to ensure that it will be. These are some of the concerns. We have considered them very carefully and we have dealt with them fairly. I hope that the members of the committee will deal with them in an open and objective way as well.

Let us look at the some of the benefits. In the absence of such legislation, plant breeders have no protection for the varieties that they develop. With this legislation, private plant breeders can collect returns on their investments and for their efforts. In this respect, plant breeders' rights is simply a matter of fairness.

In the absence of such legislation, private sector plant breeding in general has not flourished. The work is time-consuming, requires patience, expensive, high risk and it really does not offer the private breeders much return. With this legislation, royalties will provide an incentive for more private sector involvement. As a result, we can expect more improved varieties to be available to Canadian producers.

In the absence of such legislation, some foreign plant breeders do not allow their varieties to be sold in Canada due to our lack of legal protection. With this legislation, our producers will have access to varieties that are currently withheld from Canada, including cereals, potatoes, peas, fruits and ornamentals.

In the absence of such legislation, most countries with plant breeders' rights will not grant rights on varieties developed by Canadian plant breeders. With this legislation, these rights will be extended so that our plant breeders can collect royalties when their varieties are sold abroad.

In this connection, Mr. Speaker, we know the efforts that have been placed on developing a greater degree of self-sufficiency in the cereal grain production in the Atlantic region. Many of the varieties that they could produce there are varieties that have been developed in Europe. Without this legislation, we do not have access to those varieties. We see this as but one example of how it can help a region of Canada that is trying to improve its agricultural production and its agricultural viability. With the advent of this legislation, they will then be able to have access to the kinds of varieties that they can test, and hopefully the tests will prove successful to help them develop a greater degree of self-sufficiency for the production of cereal grains within the Atlantic region.

For these reasons and many others which I have not covered, Bill C-15, in our view, will stimulate a stronger, more vital plant breeding effort in Canada both in the public and private sector. We believe this to be in the best interest of Canadian agriculture.

Therefore, I urge this House to support this long overdue, progressive and fair piece of legislation. I hope it is thoroughly considered in the committee. I know that there have been some preliminary discussions about whether in fact this bill should go back to the Agriculture Committee. If that is the decision of the House, I would certainly have no objection but I leave that to the further discussion of the Members of all three Parties. Suffice to say, we think the time has come to move this legislation ahead and I bring it forth with a great deal of pleasure for the consideration of the House.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have an opportunity this morning to make some comments on Bill C-15, the Plant Breeders' Rights legislation, which the Minister of Agriculture has just introduced. The Minister pointed out that this legislation has been before the House in various forms for quite a few years now. This is the third such Bill, though I believe this is the first time the legislation has actually been debated in the House.

The Minister has pointed out all the advantages of the Bill that he could, and there can be no doubt that the legislation is designed to provide plant breeders with a royalty regime not only for the seeds that they develop and sell in Canada but for the seeds that they develop and sell in other countries that are members of the International Union for the Protection of Plant Varieties. Canada has been a signatory to that convention since 1978, and many of the industrialized western nations are members of that union.

The other advantage pointed out by the Minister is that this Bill would allow seeds developed in other countries that are members of UPOV to be able to be sold in Canada and to receive royalty benefits as well. There is that advantage to plant breeders, an advantage they have not had up until now.

We are concerned that the production lasts for eight years, not 18 years, under this legislation. The legislation also provides that the enforcement of rights would be done through civil court actions undertaken by the individual plant breeders who have the rights.

It is my understanding that there are now some 18 countries that are members of this union. It is becoming a larger and more significant group all the time.

As the Minister pointed out, a variety accepted for plant breeders' rights and royalties would not necessarily be acceptable for registration under the Canada Seeds Act. That is very important because only seeds which are new, significant and have a significant advantage to the country would be accepted. It is my understanding that under this legislation researchers would have to develop a new, distinctive, uniform, stable variety of seed in order to be eligible for the royalty regime and that such royalty would carry to the use of the seed for seeding or reproductive purposes but would not apply where the seed was being used for feed or for research. It is important to make that distinction.

There are a number of concerns that we have with this legislation. It provides for compulsory licensing up to 18 years, which seems to be a very long period of time. It would be possible to grant a corporation that developed a new seed a guaranteed exclusivity for up to 18 years. I find it interesting that the Government would provide such an amount of time for seed production, an important input cost to farmers, while under the drug legislation, which was passed by the last Parliament, we granted an exclusivity of only 7 to 10 years. It seems to me that an 18-year period is a very long period.

I would point out that granting patent rights or, in this case, plant breeders' rights, does not guarantee that a great deal of research will be done in Canada. For instance, in the farm chemical industry, a very important input cost to agriculture, even though there has been full patent protection throughout the years, there has only been one new farm chemical developed in Canada.

Granting plant breeders' rights will not necessarily bring a tremendous bonanza of new research to the country. Granting exclusivity for 18 years without granting provision for compulsory licensing, so that others could produce the seed, would be a real mistake. It will not ensure that research will take place. If research would necessarily take place, we would have had a regular bonanza of new farm chemicals developed in Canada, but we do not.

At the same time, all kinds of chemicals are coming in from other countries, chemicals on which we pay the full patent protection.

One farm chemical which came off patent after 18 years of exclusivity had previously been selling for something like $25 a pint and its price has gone down to something like $6 to $10 a pint. There is an incentive for research to be done, but it will not necessarily happen.

A report brought out by the Government of Canada in 1984 shows a continual purchasing of small Canadian seed companies by large multinational seed companies or chemical companies and, in many cases, drug companies. There has been a corporate concentration, and I would like to talk about that a bit later on in my remarks.

My second concern is not directly about the Bill itself but relates to the Government's overall policy on public research. The general direction of the Government has been to cut back on public research, and we are opposed to that. The actual research that has been done in Canada is disproportionately Government research, but at the same time, Canada is a relatively small country in terms of population and economic power compared to the size of Canada's agricultural industry. I am speaking particularly of the western agricultural industry and our tremendous proportion of exports.

I, for one, would not want to entrust to the private sector the research which is necessary. I think about research into wheat rust and the like. There are whole laboratories dedicated to developing resistant varieties of seeds that may not be used for 10 or 15 years. Dedicated federal Government research establishments are working toward the future, picking up germplasm from all over the world to be incorporated into seeds in order to protect our vital western agricultural industry.

I am not opposed to more government research or to private research. I think it is desirable. This Bill has some benefits in that regard, but I think it is vital that we protect the public research which is done in the country. There should be more guarantees of that than was contained in the casual comments of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski) this morning. His exact words were not particularly encouraging. In the recent Budget, $500 million worth of government programs for agriculture were cut out over two years. I did not hear last November that the Government was planning to cut out everything from crop insurance, to transportation subsidies, to support for the dairy industry and so on.

When this Bill gets to committee, we will certainly want to have a much more determined commitment by the Government that the government research programs will be maintained. I do not believe that a private research company, especially a multinational which is totally dedicated to the bottom line in their across-the-world activities, is going to dedicate and commit the time, research, talent and money—let us not forget that—to ensure that we have the special disease resistant seeds we need that have to be prepared over a 10-year or 15-year horizon. Their responsibility is to their shareholders and to the bottom line. It is not to ensuring the vitality, the vigour and the preservation of Canadian agriculture. We certainly are very concerned with that side of the question in the plant breeders' rights legislation which we have before us today in the House of Commons.

Likewise, we have seen the Government cut back up to $60 million in the last several years in government research programs. The Minister has said that for any seeds that Agriculture Canada develops and has a royalty on, 60 per cent would be plowed back to government research. To me, that is an admission that the Government is not very committed to this whole scene. It seems to me that 100 per cent of the royalties collected should be plowed back and that they should be incremental to whatever the government laboratories are receiving from the Government of Canada for its research. He did not clarify whether that 60 per cent would be plowed back and the full level of research maintained, and that the 60 per cent of royalties received would be incremental to the funding provided by the Government of Canada for agriculture and crop research.

The Government's commitment to privatization is so all-pervasive that there is no saying that the Government will not privatize their own laboratories. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is a great admirer of Mrs. Thatcher in Great Britain. Britain has privatized government laboratories. One can read in the press today that the Government is planning to privatize PetroCan. You and I, Mr. Speaker, were here in 1979 with the former Tory administration when they went through the throes of discussing and deciding whether or not they would privatize PetroCanada. We cannot help but experience a feeling of déjà vu having seen that 10 years ago and seeing it again now. We should make sure this legislation does not lead to the Government privatizing those big government laboratories which have been so beneficial to Canadian agriculture.

The Minister spoke this morning about the plans for additional seed banks in Smithfield to ensure the preservation of germplasm. I am pleased to hear that. There is a need for not only a national seed bank for preservation of genetic material but regional seed banks as well. I hope that is the implication in his announcement today, that there would not only be a national seed bank for the preservation of germplasm but regional seed banks as well. It is important to do this on a regional basis. In this country, we do not really have one country in terms of agriculture. We have several countries. We have several very different agricultural economies from the regions of Atlantic Canada to Ontario or Quebec, to the Prairies and to B.C. We want to preserve the health of all of them and ensure that the seed banks and germplasm mechanisms are maintained for every region, not just on a national basis.

I spoke before about the Patent Act and the chemical industry, how it is certainly not guaranteed that we would have full, massive research going on in this country. The one concern which has been expressed by various groups, including the Canadian Federation of Agriculture and others, is the price of seeds and the problems of monopolies. It is an ongoing concern that not only that will we not get the research here in Canada but that the research will be done elsewhere, that some super varieties will come into the country and that there will develop monopolistic situation. That is of great concern. The Deputy Prime Minister did not spell out in much detail today how the whole problem of monopolies would be avoided. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture has produced a brief on the topic in which they have said that there must be provision to protect producers against excessive monopolistic pricing of privately developed varieties. Perhaps some kind of mechanism which could be put in place by the advisory committee to this Act would be useful in that regard. We do not have very strong anti-combines legislation in this country and that problem of monopoly control is very real.

• (1200)

In the report done by Agriculture Canada during the period 1975 to 1982 it lists some 15 seed companies that were bought out across the country. Some are not necessarily involved in seed production or research, but the names of the purchasers are very familiar. There are companies such as Ciba-Geigy Canada Ltd., Pfizer Chemicals, Northrup King & Co., Ciba-Geigy Seeds Ltd., Dekalb Agriculture Research, Inc., Canadian Industries Ltd., Cargill Grain Co. Ltd., and Continental Grain Co. They are all large multinational corporations buying out Canadian seed companies. The danger of monopolies and concentration of corporate control over this industry is very apparent.

This list is several years old and we have to upgrade it to see if the whole system is moving toward a very few companies, many of which probably will be doing their major research in the United States. If that is the case, how can we be assured that we will have any advantage, especially if the company is guaranteed an 18-year period in which there can be no compulsory licensing for Canadian producers.

The other danger expressed by some groups that are concerned with this legislation is not only that there is corporate concentration into a very few hands, but that the multinational corporations will develop seeds which are compatible to their fertilizers and chemicals. In that manner there is not only a corporate concentration, but individual companies that develop top flight seed that is compatible with their fertilizers and chemicals. This is not only corporate concentration, but concentration within one individual company.

I am not sure how often this occurs, but there certainly is a great deal of concern by those who have looked at this legislation in other countries. It is clear that the committee would want to take cognizance of that, examine it, and see how great a danger it is and what provisions there are in the legislation to prevent that type of concentration from taking place.

Those are some of the concerns that we have with this legislation. It probably has some benefits. However, we want to be sure that those benefits will accrue to individual Canadian farmers. We want to be sure that public research is not jeopardized by this legislation. We want to ensure that government royalties that are developed by Canadian laboratories are ploughed back into research and are incremental to the type of funding which is already provided by the Government of Canada to our research facilities across the country.

If the price of seeds rises, we want to ensure that there will be additional benefit and not only place a burden and monopoly control on the production of seeds. We have already seen what happened with farm chemicals. We paid a big price in this country with no real research taking place under the Patent Act. That is different legislation, but the principle is very similar.

I have already mentioned the danger of seed, chemical, and fertilizer combinations taking place. Those are concerns that we have with the legislation. We are in favour of more private research in the country. We think that is desirable. At the present time the research carried out in the country is highly related to the provincial and federal Governments, but mainly the federal Government, and to university research.

There is a need for more private research. However, we do not want to see this legislation lead to a cut-back in federal government research. We do not think that research can be duplicated by the private sector. We do not want to see the federal government research deal with small or regional problems. We want to see it maintained. We do not want to see the private sector hiring away our top federal government research scientists.

Maintenance of federal government research will ensure that there is a critical mass of researchers together who will develop new and better varieties of seeds. There is a good example in Saskatoon where there are many disciplines working in various fields of agricultural research who are generating very effective research results. As a result of this legislation, we do not want to see government research downgraded or privatized as a result of this move by the Government of Canada.

We are also concerned about the 18-year exclusivity rights to royalties and the possibility that companies would be given that full period of time, especially the multinational corporations that come into Canada with seeds from other countries, and would maintain that right during that period of time with no real benefits to us. That happened in the whole chemical industry.

We did not hear much from the Deputy Prime Minister this morning about corporate concentration or monopoly control of pricing and the production of seeds. We are concerned about that and will be looking at what provisions there are in this legislation when it is dealt with in committee. We do not want to see government laboratories and research facilities downgraded.

Those are our concerns with the legislation. We want to see them addressed in committee when the Bill goes to committee.

• (1210)

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I rise to debate a Bill at second reading, the purpose of which is to introduce the concept of plant breeders' rights. This is an idea for which legislation has been tabled in the House in various forms over the last nine years but has never been debated until now. The purpose of second reading is to debate the principle of a Bill. The question I wish to address today in keeping with that parliamentary tradition is the broad one of the principles being proposed by the Government in this legislation.

This Bill has a wide ranging effect on the population of Canada and the world. It has an effect on the development of the Third World because the Third World is largely the source of many of the plant genetic material we use in the developed world. There are north-south development issues to be raised, including not only the question of the flow of technological property but the funding between north and south. There is the broad question of who should control biotechnology and how it can be controlled, which this legislation begins to address.

There is the question of cost at the farm level and research level. Is this an efficient way for producers to get new genetic material? Is this an efficient way for researchers to produce new genetic material?

Finally, I believe this legislation gives us an opportunity to discuss the effects of the patenting of life forms and its effect upon our future and the future of our civilization.

It has been said many times in the last several decades that this is the age of technology and information. We have seen the development of huge computer banks. We know from observation and information that the information within these computer data banks is being more tightly controlled by the owners of the information who are finding new and different ways to control access to that information and data. The purpose of controlling that information and data is to extract money and to control who gets access to the information. This Bill addresses that matter to a certain extent.

We are not simply dealing with information on a computer chip. We are dealing with genetic information in the form of genes and genomes and establishing a blueprint for how this kind of information will be stored and utilized by certain people to make money and maintain a monopoly over the issuance of the information.

Considering the broad implications of this legislation, I think it is rather ironic that it should come forward in Canada in 1989 when we see access to information for people in the East Bloc and China becoming more open.

Finally it is being recognized that those people have a right to information and the freedom of access to information which government should not monopolize. At the same time the Government of Canada and other countries in the West are clearly moving toward restricting the amount of information that is freely available. The information is not only being restricted for the purpose of collecting revenue. It wants to restrict the issuance of the information in order to control it with a full monopoly.

In explaining how that has developed, I cannot help but think there are some frightening parallels between this process and the process the European countries went through during the Dark Ages centuries ago. During the 5th century to the 8th century the churches began a process of restricting the access to information they held in their libraries. They kept the information they had available to them in the form of books and manuscripts and through educational institutions to themselves during that period and gradually set out restrictive rules as to who would have access to those libraries and that information. The churches decided who was worthy of having that information stored in those ancient records.

Eventually they became so paranoid about allowing the free flow of information that some of those books simply deteriorated, some of the libraries burned, and some were ransacked. Much of the valuable knowledge that could have been used by the common people as well as those in power gradually disappeared. It brought about what our history books now refer to as the Dark Ages.

If we proceed in the direction that some of the owners of the technological firms and computer companies are taking us, I believe we will be setting ourselves up for a similar process. There will be two levels in our society. There will be those who can afford to have information available to them and meet the second test of eligibility for those holding the information. Gradually that information will be restricted in order to maintain power, as was the case with the church and some of the civil authorities which began restricting information to libraries,to the information and educational services that were available many hundreds of years ago.

The Government is attempting to take a small step with this legislation toward setting precedents for the patenting of life forms. This legislation guarantees some rights only to plant life forms, but I point out that once started on that process other countries that are further along in granting of monopoly power to patent holders and granting rights to profit from information, which I believe should be made available to the public very quickly, it will make further inroads into what can and may be patented.

For instance, between 1790 and 1930, as with other countries, U.S. patent laws prohibited the monopolization of biological products and processes, inventions involving national security, and inventions involving food and medicines. They were not permitted to be patented under world patent law and under U.S. patent law.

• (1220)

In 1930 the U.S. Congress passed a unique Plant Patent Act allowing the monopolization of asexually produced fruits, trees, and ornamentals. Potatoes and other asexually produced vegetables were excluded in 1930.

By 1970, having experimented with those varieties, the U.S. Plant Variety Protection Act was passed by Congress during the Christmas season in a dying Congress. This House often sees that type of action on Bills. They are not always discussed as thoroughly as they might be. For the first time in the United States cereals and vegetables became patentable as well. However, the major processing vegetables were excluded from the right to be patented in the 1970 legislation.

By 1980, in the United States, by a five to four decision, the U.S. Supreme Court allowed General Electric to obtain a patent on a micro-organism under the regular industrial utility patent law. The courts interpreted the patent law to include the patenting of a micro-organism for the first time.

At the same time, in another Christmas battle, the Congress amended the 1970 Plant Variety Protection Act to include six major vegetables.

In 1986 Molecular Genetics, a company in the United States, was granted the first utility product patent for a plant variety giving companies a choice of patenting through the 1970 Plant Variety Protection Act or through the regular industrial patents. For the first time we saw life forms being patented under the regular patent law in the United States.

A company called Sungene was granted a patent for the higher quality characteristics of the oil found in sunflowers and immediately warned other companies not to develop any high quality sunflower oils or they would be infringing upon their patent rights. Thus there was a freezing of the research into developing better sunflower oil by the issuance of a patent to Sungene Incorporated.

By 1987 we saw the U.S. Patent Office announcing that it would allow the industrial patenting of higher life forms including pets and livestock. It all started with the patenting of plants some years previously in that country. Genome Inc. announced that it would try to copyright base pairs of the human genome in 1987 as well.

By 1988 the U.S. Patent Commissioner was forced to reveal a new policy that would allow those holding livestock patents to charge royalties on the offspring for the full life of the patent, which in the American case is 18 years. Any offspring coming from a genetically manipulated cow, pet or pig has to present patent fees to the developer of that particular genetic trait, perhaps as long ago as some 18 years previously. What is more important in my mind is that they seem also to have the right to stop other researchers developing and doing research in that same area, as was the case with Sungene to which I referred, which company developed sunflower oil, stopping all other companies from doing similar research into sunflower oil and making improvements.

I contend that this idea of patenting, providing plant breeders' rights—and I like the nuances of providing rights here—masks the direction that other countries have found themselves going in. Yes, they started with something called plant breeders' rights. They made arguments that this was similar to copyright law and that they were simply doing the same thing that they were doing for words and design. Yet, gradually over time, once started down this slippery slope there is no legal way to stop other life forms from being patented.

There is an interesting debate going on in the United States at the moment as to whether or not human cells and genes can be patented. At this moment the only defence against that happening appears in the amendment to the Constitution which does not permit the ownership of persons, the anti-slavery law in the United States. Without that clause in the Constitution I contend that Americans would be going that route in that country right at the moment.

Why is this important to Canada? It is important to Canada because we are now in a series of international negotiations for GATT, whereby many of the major players in the GATT talks are now beginning to add to the patent protection rights. They are arguing that those rights should be held right across the country, all the countries on earth, and that any country which fails to restrict the use of information that has been monopolized by a patent should make those patents transferable to other countries; in other words introduce what normally would be considered a restriction to trade.

If we do not all consistently introduce the same kinds of restrictions to trade, the United States and Japan will not continue with the negotiations. They have offered that as part of their initial negotiations. I think they may step back a bit. However, they have made great progress in this direction, to the capitalization and privatization of information which I contend should be available to everyone in the intellectual community on earth. It should be made available for the use of all of us at the technical level. I believe a continuation of this kind of restricting of information will bode badly for the future of civilization and the future of this planet.

I want to point out the various steps that have occurred in the institutionalization or the privatization of intellectual property over the last several hundred years. I think it as well makes the point that society has been fairly cognizant of the dangers upon which we are embarking here. I think that the House and Members here who represent the common people of the country should consider this as we are investigating this particular proposal by the Government.

When we look at the use of patent to provide monopoly control over innovations and ideas, the debate probably begins in England of 1623 and ends at about the time of the Vienna's World Fair 200 years later in 1873. In fact, the formal capitulation to monopoly control of intellectual property and new ideas occurred in the Paris Convention of 1883 with a number of countries signing an international patent system convention.

The battle over those 250 years was very long and complex. In the half century preceding the Vienna Fair the opponents to the idea of monopolizing ideas and monopolizing patenting came from Great Britain, Holland, Switzerland, Italy, and Germany, which countries all bitterly attacked the concept of monopoly and turned back or prevented patent laws and regulations. In the prevailing era of free trade patents in those days they were regarded as barriers to trade, similar to tariffs. In fact, if we wished to do an economic analysis of it we would see that they still are.

The anti-patent movement collapsed in 1873 when a counterproposal was issued that stated that countries would have the right to issue compulsory licences and include that in their patent law.

This country is aware of how compulsory licences work. We had that form of protection for consumers and for developers in our drug patent laws prior to the Conservative Government changing them in the last session of the House. With that, it was possible to have generic drugs where companies could simply pay the original patent holder a certain fee, and having paid that fee had the right to duplicate the patent and to duplicate the drug. The result was generally much lower prices to consumers, much greater availability and much wider distribution of the information that was locked away in the secrets of that particular compound.

We have tried to let both this Government and previous Governments know that that particular part of the plant breeders' rights legislation should have included the option, the right of having compulsory licences, so that a plant breeder or a user could simply apply for the information on the payment of a set fee. The data and the generic material would be provided to him or her as a right upon the payment of that basic fee.

What the Government has chosen to do is to fudge that. It has not gone the whole route. It has said that: "It is possible that this might happen, the registrar who looks after patenting may be able to do that but he is not required to do it by the legislation." We think that is a grave shortcoming. We contend that the registrar must issue these kinds of automatic patents so that there is, in effect, a compulsory licence. The user will be forced to pay a fee to the original developer but the original developer will not have the right, which they do maintain, of keeping information secret to themselves only.

Canada is considered by the United States, Japan and some other countries to be far behind in its voyage down the same path that they have pursued with regard to international patenting. We gave in to the United States on the generic drug issue. We have now issued patents for somewhat less than 18 years but they are firm patents to producers of drugs and developers of drugs in this country. So we have complied with international pressure.

In his opening remarks, the Minister today pointed out that there is a great deal of international pressure on Canada from a few countries who have this international agreement to grant patents to produce new plants or life varieties. Those countries are effectively attempting to blackmail us into developing the same kind of consistent law. Effectively, what American and some European lobbyists are doing is forcing their governments to speak on their behalf, to tell Canada and countries like Canada who do not yet have patent protection for plant forms and other life forms, that if they do not come up with comparable legislation and provide them with the same kind of monopoly protection, they will withhold all information and all material from users in our particular country.

That is the kind of blackmail technique that we refuse to acknowledge when it is applied by hijackers. We refused to acknowledge it in this House, in this session. One of the Ministers refused to acknowledge that form of lobby action on the part of some hunger strikers who said they would not be blackmailed and would not submit to pressure. Yet, we are submitting to international pressure from international business through various governments to bring in the same kind of legislation that I submit has not been thoroughly studied in other countries. The last time this country did a thorough study of where we are going with the issue of patenting and whether or not life forms and plant life should be patented and should be eligible, was in the late 1950s, almost 40 years ago. Thirty some years ago we had a royal commission look into the issue.

The Government realizes that there are still a great many unanswered issues around this whole question of generic development and biotechnology. In the Speech from the Throne, the Government alerted us to the fact that it was thinking of setting up a royal commission to look into some of the questions surrounding the ethical, legal and other problems that surround the question of fertility in humans. Yet the Government appeared not to have extended that consideration even further back to look at the whole question of who has the right to patent a life form. Does it belong to the researcher? Why does it belong to the researcher? Why does a researcher who takes two or three varieties of plants that are found in the Third World, somewhere in South America, and makes some combinations, suddenly become the owner of the life that emerges from the cross-process or the genetic manipulation that might occur?

Can individuals own life, either as a plant form—is that ethically possible? Is that economically practical? Once we start doing it with plant life, as I have demonstrated with the United States situation, it very rapidly moves on to other forms of life. Our legal system that has developed in the Western World, and I suspect in all of the eastern countries as well, has no way of distinguishing. Once a right is given to a monopoly or a patent over one particular kind of life form, they have no way of distinguishing a difference between the simplest micro-organism and a human gene. It is the role of Parliaments and Governments, through their legislators, to be aware of this and to be fully cognizant of what it is that we are doing. I am not sure at this point that this Government has made any effort to look into those particular issues.

The question could perhaps be handled by a royal commission type of study over several years which could look into the whole question of biotechnology. We could have people who are experts in ethics, law and science do an in-depth study and make recommendations to lawmakers as to what direction they think we should take. It is my opinion that this particular legislation, while it is premature, is sending us down a wrong course in this country. Not only in this country, but I think it is a wrong course for civilization on earth in general.

Canada should be joining with a host of other countries which have expressed some doubts about this course. I point out that while there is a group that belongs to several of the conventions referred to by the Minister, the Union for the Protection of New Varieties of Plants Convention held in 1961, a lot of the information that was available in 1961 is now completely passé. The items that they dealt with are only very minor beginnings of the kind of technology that is available today.

They have not found a proper way of handling all of the concerns that exist. For instance, there is no proper way of addressing the question of compensation if it is decided to have compensation for those who develop plant types and varieties. Should that compensation not also go to those who have maintained the genetic resources in the Third World? South America, Africa and the Middle East are the birthplaces of most of the plant varieties in the world. How are those countries recompensed under this kind of system? It hardly seems fair when material is taken from South America, manipulated in North America, and taken back to South America where they can have the use of it but they will have to pay a very steep price for getting their own genetic material back. They could very rightly say that they have been keeping and manipulating that genetic material for hundreds of years and ask why we did not pay them for it when we took it in the first place. That question has not been addressed.

For some reason, our business leaders and Government people think that genetic material should be free and available to everyone until they get hold of it, then they think a price should be charged for it.

The Minister said we should not worry because there will be gene banks around the world and that Canada is responsible for part of the overall gene bank. I think the gene bank idea is an excellent one. We in Canada are responsible for most of the varieties of barley. However, I note with some alarm that some of the oldest gene banks are now being privatized. How can we guarantee full access if some private corporation has bought a gene bank, presumably with the idea of making a profit? I see no other reason for a private corporation to buy, for example, the gene bank in Cambridge which has developed over many centuries.

All of the explorers, including Charles Darwin, brought botanists or scientists with them to bring back new plant varieties and life forms, and they were deposited in places like the gene bank in Cambridge. Mrs. Thatcher, in her wisdom, decided that it should be privatized and a private corporation bought it for something over $160 million Canadian. No one can convince me that any corporation would be so generous and altruistic that it would invest $160 million Canadian of shareholders' funds in an enterprise that will not have some return. We can only conclude that those genetic resources will have a cost attached to them sometime in the future.

The road we are embarking upon with this legislation is fraught with many dangers. There are many questions that have not been answered. The Government seems to be proceeding in this direction because other countries are doing it, so it must be okay. I submit that some sectors of society restricted access to libraries prior to the Dark Ages, something that led to very negative consequences for our ancestors. There were several hundreds of years of the Dark Ages in which information was restricted and technical knowledge declined as a result. I would hate to see Canada embark on that kind of a process at a time when the rest of the world is recognizing almost unanimously that there has to been openness, glasnost, access to information, whether from Government officials or the scientific and technical community.

Our society cannot strive and grow when access to information is limited. The Government should take a very careful second look at proposing this kind of legislation, which I submit is completely counter to that move toward openness. The legislation proposes to provide monopoly control which would limit access to information and genetic materials, and I think that is the wrong direction for our society to take. It is opposite to the direction taken by most of the countries in the world with the exception of a few very highly developed countries which have been attempting to privatize and capitalize on the information that is locked away in the genetic material that no man created. Man may be able to manipulate that genetic material, but he did not create it and he should not receive recompense for something that he only had a minor assisting role in manipulating.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to bring to the attention of Hon. Members the fact that the first three speakers were allowed 40 minutes with no questions or comments under Standing Order 74. We are now entering the eight-hour period in which the speeches are 20 minutes long with 10 minutes of questions and comments.

Mr. Ross Stevenson (Durham): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to take part in the debate on Bill C-15 respecting plant breeders' rights. When we examine the situation surrounding the development of new varieties of seeds in Canada, we have to ask if our farmers and farm families are getting the best resources that are available to them to compete with other growers around the world. It seems to me that every Member of the House would want food producers to have access to the best varieties of cultivars in existence, but today, unfortunately, there is some question whether they do in fact have that access.

For those who are not really familiar with what the discussion on plant breeders' rights is all about, I want to draw a comparison with the Copyright Act. The Hon. Member who spoke previously mentioned it briefly in passing. There are a number of similarities, quite frankly, with copyright.

Copyright is the right to copy, and it means that only the owner of the original literary, musical or artistic work may copy that work or permit others to do so. It includes the exclusive right to publish, produce, reproduce and perform a work in public. The objective, of course, is to provide legal recognition for creative work, allowing the creative person to obtain a reward for his or her efforts. This encourages creativity and individuality to the general benefit of society. The concept of legal recognition of copyright has been accepted in Canada for at least 65 years.

The development of new varieties of seeds involves creativity in concept and in methods of selection. The varieties developed are original works and in many ways the recognition of plant breeders' rights by this legislation resembles copyright. The main reason for not including plant varieties under the Copyright Act is that unlike other creative works, plant varieties reproduce themselves and make their own copies.

To carry this analogy a little further, the provision of plant breeders' rights is intended to give plant breeders the same kind of legal protection for their works that is received by authors, musicians and artists. That gives the general public some familiarity with the concept. Certainly, it is a concept that is not at all foreign to Canadian people. The plant breeders' rights legislation is an idea and policy that certainly is not new or different. It has been discussed widely in Canada and in other nations for many, many years. Many agricultural countries have had some form of plant breeders' rights for many years. In fact, it is now in place in 18 countries around the world. I will mention some of those later in my presentation. In some of the Communist bloc centrally-controlled nations, there is a form of government control that approximates some of the actions of this type of legislation.

We believe very strongly that it is now time to recognize the progressive and individual acts of Canadian plant breeders and allow them to benefit somewhat for their originality and initiative. The rewards provided in this legislation certainly are not large. There are all sorts of mechanisms built into this legislation to make sure that plant breeders or companies do not take advantage of various aspects of this legislation.

Let us take a brief look at the legislation we are now discussing and see how in fact it developed. In 1923, the Canadian Horticultural Council recommended legislation for plant patents. However, nothing was done at that time. In 1961, the international convention for the protection of new varieties of plants was drawn up by several European nations. It came into effect in 1968. Arising from that was a new co-operative organization for countries, the International Union for the Protection of New Varieties of Plants. By 1970, the United States introduced its Plant Variety Protection Act for sexually reproduced plants, which means plants reproduced from seed.

In 1971, the University of Guelph sponsored a conference on plant breeders' rights here in Canada. It was attended by a great many interested organizations. I might mention that during the 1970s, I was a professor at the University of Guelph. I attended part of that conference and recognized then how important it was to introduce plant breeders' rights legislation in Canada. In 1972, the Canadian Agricultural Services Co-ordinating Committee agreed that plant breeders' rights should be a part of Canadian legislation and would be desirable in Canada. They asked Agriculture Canada to put forward draft legislation. It has been introduced on previous occasions in this House, as previous speakers have mentioned, but in each case it has died on the Order Paper.

Many countries have taken the step that we hope Canada is about to take. The Netherlands has had such legislation since 1941, West Germany since 1953, Denmark since 1962, the United Kingdom since 1964, and Australia since 1987. These countries are members of the International Union for the Protection of New Varieties of Plants. This international body now counts 18 countries as members. These also include countries such as Japan, New Zealand and Hungary. All of these nations have highly developed food producing systems like ours. The international union promotes international co-operation in the whole area of plant breeders' rights and seeks to harmonize, where relevant, legislation of its member nations.

I want to briefly mention some of the concerns that have been brought forward by people opposing this sort of legislation in the past. One concern, and we have heard it here today, is that the multinational corporations will get an unfair advantage from this sort of legislation and that small companies may well disappear. I would like to draw attention to some statistics available from other nations. If that sort of trend were going to occur, one would think that it would certainly occur in the Netherlands, a country which has had plant breeders' rights since 1941. However, going by 1988 figures, there are 983 seed trade members in that country. This is a small nation which has had plant breeders' rights since 1941 and there has not been a concentration of power. Quite frankly, it is exactly the opposite.

Individual plant breeders, for example, backyard rose breeders right here in Canada who claim to have varieties ready to release, will not release them because they know they will not gain from their many years of hard work and initiative in developing those new rose varieties. However, they now will have a chance to release them and at least get some modest benefit for their ability and initiative.

This is clearly the sort of thing that has happened in the Netherlands with 983 seed trade members of one type or another. I think that speaks for itself. There are other countries and I will go briefly through them. Denmark, not a big country, has 30 members; France, 469; the United States, 786; Italy, 887, I believe the figure is here. In the countries that have had this form of legislation for many years, the numbers are holding up, and there is certainly no concern whatsoever for corporate concentration in the seeds business.

The Government has committed itself to staying in the development of varieties here in Canada, staying in the public plant breeding. It is very important for people to realize that plant breeding is a multi-faceted undertaking. One area that is very important to plant breeding is developing new plant breeding techniques. This sort of basic research is very expensive and is likely to occur largely in the public sector. Most of the private sector companies involved in plant breeding cannot afford to be in extensive basic research and new breeding techniques. That must continue to occur in the public sector. Also, the storage and maintenance of various seeds, germplasm and various other forms of plant material will again have to be maintained by government organizations or international foundations of one type or another. That is occurring now. I believe it is very clear to this Government and to the people around the world that that must continue and that commitment is in place.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I call it one o'clock, the Hon. Member will have seven minutes left plus the 10 minutes of questions and comments after three o'clock.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m., the House took recess.

THE ENVIRONMENT

APPOINTMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMISSIONER FOR THE ENVIRONMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in 1986 New Zealand established a parliamentary commissioner for the environment. The commissioner has the power to ensure that the values of ecosystems, all values which are placed by individuals and groups on the quality of the environment, the sustainability of natural and physical resources, and the needs of future generations are taken into account in managing natural and physical resources.

The commissioner also has the powers of our Auditor General to oversee and review the actions of the Government in the environment and reports to Parliament. Helen Hughes, New Zealand's first commissioner stated: "I believe that the public has a right to expect the government system to be capable of delivering fair, equitable and environmentally sensitive decisions. I am a guardian of that right".

Canadians would welcome the creation of a parliamentary commissioner for the environment, and we seek your guidance and support, Mr. Speaker, to achieve such end.

THE BUDGET

REQUEST FOR END TO ATTACK ON MINISTER

Mr. Greg Thompson (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, Atlantic Canada is experiencing some very real difficulties which can only be dealt with at the national level through debate, intelligent discussion, and dialogue.

For more than one month the opposition Parties have launched into a vicious attack on the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). This attack has nothing to do with principle and nothing to do with the facts. Members opposite simply want the Minister's head for purely political reasons.

Members of the Opposition were elected by their constituents to serve the people of Canada, to serve the House, and to work for the common good. By not doing this, they are wasting the time of the House and taxpayers' dollars. I urge Members opposite to quit playing partisan politics and get on with addressing the real questions facing the country.

THE BUDGET

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS—CRIMINAL PROSECUTION OF JOURNALIST

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I wish to comment on the criminal charges against journalist Doug Small on the budget leak. As a former crown attorney my comments will be circumspect.

The charges were laid by the Ontario Provincial crown counsel who has a reputation for being independent and fair. The case, however, is unique. While all Canadians are equal and not special under the criminal law, under the Canadian Charter of Rights there is a guarantee of freedom of the press. In other countries, criminal prosecutions of journalists have put those countries on the long slippery slope toward less freedom for all and eventually tyranny.

I call upon the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) and the Solicitor General of Canada (Mr. Blais) to reveal whether their Ministries had discussions with the crown attorney and whether, as I think they were obliged to do, they raised the implications of freedom of the press in this prosecution.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

REDUCTION OF SHORT-RANGE NUCLEAR WEAPONS

Mr. Ross Stevenson (Durham): Mr. Speaker, dramatic proposals from the United States, supported by members of NATO, provide more optimism for disarmament. The United States and its NATO partners have made a positive and pro-active response to the Soviets on reduction of the number of troops and conventional equipment in Europe. Furthermore, the compromise within NATO on a position for reduction of short-range nuclear weapons was a major accomplishment.

Our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) have played an important role in achieving this compromise. As arms reductions occur, the necessity for verification and other confidence building measures become increasingly important. Canada has played a significant role in the research and development of various forms of verification. Peace built on trust and confidence, not nuclear deterrents, is the wish of all Canadians.

LIBERAL PARTY

P.E.I ELECTION RESULTS

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, the federal Government received a clear message last night with the resounding victory of Premier Joe Ghiz and the Prince Edward Island Liberal Party. This victory comes directly on the heels of the election of four Liberal MPs last November.

For the past six months I have listened to comments from the Island media and defeated Conservative candidates who seem to think that Prince Edward Islanders made a mistake when they failed to elect a Conservative MP.

Islanders obviously do not feel that way, because last night they elected 30 Liberals to the 32-seat Legislature in a massive show of confidence in Premier Ghiz and his colleagues. Islanders have sent a clear message to Ottawa confirming that they feel they are being unfairly treated by the present federal Government.

They have been unfairly treated with respect to the base closure in Summerside and unfairly treated with respect to regional development cut-backs. They will not sit back and let the federal Government shut down this part of Canada. P.E.I. is part of this country and Islanders demand to be treated fairly as Canadian citizens under the terms of the Constitution.

HISTORIC SITES

THE QUEBEC VILLAGE OF YESTERYEAR

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to invite all my colleagues and all Canadians to come and visit the Québec Village of Yesteryear, a historic site in Drummondville, which will be open from June 1 until Labour Day.

[English]

The objectives of this educational and cultural centre are to reproduce a village with the added attractions of animation, ways, customs, and dress of the people living in Quebec during the Eastern Townships era dating from 1840 to 1910 and to reflect the living traditions of our ancestors.

[Translation]

Last year, over 175,000 people visited this heritage village. Most Canadian and American television networks have made film sequences, television series and feature films there, including Entre Chien et Loup, Les Tisserands du Pouvoir, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Henry Ford and even Barnum and Bailey with Burt Lancaster. France and Belgium have also used this setting to shoot picturesque scenes, like "a village to remember." Its hospitality and charm are undeniable. You will be thrilled and delighted by this unique place in Québec which will take you back to the ways of life of the last century.

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are very concerned about the Young Offenders Act. They cannot understand how justice is served when a 16 year old receives a three-year sentence for killing three people.

They wonder what example is set for young people who know that they can commit serious offences without ever having an extensive criminal record. Canadians worry that the Young Offenders Act provides an incentive for adults to use young people for criminal activity.

I urge the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) to continue to pursue changes to the Act with his provincial counterparts. Public safety and justice demand nothing less.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

CLOSURE OF RURAL POST OFFICES

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the more than 5,000 rural post offices in Canada do more than provide mail service to our less populated and isolated areas. Those post offices, with their capable postmasters and staff, offer much to their communities. Rural post offices such as Nipigon, Red Rock, Armstrong, Dorion, Hurkett, and Murillo are meeting places for the residents. They assist people to complete government forms, monitor people who live alone, and provide other vital services to small communities.

More important, the rural post office along with VIA Rail may be the only federal presence in those areas.

I ask the Government to re-evaluate its position on this matter. Rather than opting for the closure of rural post offices, Canada Post should ensure that those post offices provide more valuable services to Canadians who live in rural and small town Canada.

PENSIONS

ANNUAL CANADIAN PENSION CONFERENCE

Mr. Larry Schneider (Regina—Wascana): Mr. Speaker, I wish to pay tribute to a group of Canadians who are currently attending the annual Canadian Pension Conference in Ottawa. It is noteworthy, because it is here that we see a perfect example of employees and elected officials gathered for the prime purpose of improving one of our major long-term, self help programs, that being this country's pensions.

Pensions not only provide for us beyond our normal working years, but they are a significant source of capital which is quickly making its investment strength known across Canada.

It is with a special pride that I acknowledge the presence in Ottawa from my home City of Regina of members of the pension funds of Regina Transit, City Police, General Hospital, Board of Education, Firefighters, employees and management of several civic unions, and in particular the Mayor of Regina and three councillors. It is my wish that this coming together will benefit all whom they represent.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REQUEST TO TELEVISE OUR COMMON FUTURE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, three weeks ago CBC decided against broadcasting live the five-hour world-wide program, Our Common Future.

On Saturday, June 3, the program will be made available in Canada only through City TV of Toronto on the Much Music channel. Millions of Canadians will not have the opportunity to listen to world leaders, scientists, and entertainers in the collective search for solutions to the greenhouse effect, holes in the ozone, drought, famine, flooding, and pollution.

Not only CBC, but every channel on every network should be carrying this message. The planet can only be saved by those who understand just how urgent the need for action is. If those of us who know fail to alert those who need to know, through entertaining educational productions such as this Saturday's Our Common Future, then we are part of the problem and the solution will be the continued extinction of species, perhaps our own.

On Sunday, June 4, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) plans to kick off Environment Week in Canada. I suggest that the Minister call the networks and spend the celebration money on public education.

AGRICULTURE

THE SITUATION IN WESTERN QUEBEC

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, western Québec will receive $4.5 million from the federal Government under the new joint agri-food testing and experimentation program. The Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State for Agriculture (Mr. Blais) made the announcement last Friday afternoon in Abitibi-Témiscamingue on behalf of the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Andre).

At the same time, the Minister, Mr. Blais, met the CRAAT and UPA together with dairy farmers.

Mr. Speaker, this is a Minister who is available, despite what some members of the provincial executive of the UPA (Québec farmers' union) say, referring to him as a part-time minister. They can rest assured that he listens to their demands and I hope that tomorrow they will not accuse me of being a part-time Member of Parliament because I have a family, I am a Knight of Columbus, 4th degree, a member of the Val d'Or Kiwanis Club, a member of the Standing Committee on Transport, a vice-president of the Québec Conservative Caucus, etc.

FISHERIES

GREAT LAKES—CONTROL OF SEA LAMPREY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to the attention of the House a serious problem related to the long-term future of commercial and tourist fishing in the Great Lakes. The Government, by failing to increase funding to control the sea lamprey infestation in the Great Lakes, is endangering the viability of these multi-billion dollar industries.

Sea lamprey control in Lake Erie will be totally eliminated and control in Lake Michigan, Lake Huron, and Lake Ontario will be cut by 50 per cent. Research will be cut by 50 per cent, and the resulting impacts will be that the number of lamprey will double by the year 2000, trout and salmon will decline by 50 per cent, whitefish and chub stocks will decline, sport fishing industry expenditures will decline by $1 billion to $2 billion annually, jobs will be lost, economic dislocation will occur in communities dependent upon these fisheries, and the tourism infrastructure will be threatened.

I call upon the Government to take immediate action and to restore full funding to control sea lamprey in the Great Lakes.

FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

IMPACT ON CANADIAN SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Mrs. Edna Anderson (Simcoe Centre): Mr. Speaker, during the free trade debate a great deal of pessimism was expressed by the opposition Parties about the possible detrimental effects on Canada's social programs.

It is with great pleasure today that I point to a recent item that shows the contrary. Canada's health care plan is attracting more attention in the United States. Recently the chairman of Chrsyler Corporation, Lee Iacocca, said:

> American industry cannot compete effectively with the rest of the world unless something is done about the great imbalance between health care costs in the United States and the national health care systems in virtually every other country.

The fact that our system costs less than the U.S. system has aroused a great deal of interest. Clearly Canada is enhancing the pace of social development world-wide.

DISARMAMENT

INTERNATIONAL DISARM THE SEAS WEEK

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to draw the attention of the House to the fact that this week is International Disarm the Seas Week. While there has been progress elsewhere in disarmament, Canada and its neighbours have not addressed the proliferation of military activity in our oceans. They have become dangerously overcrowded as the number and size of military exercises increases and as the build up of sea-launched missiles continues unchecked, something which should be of particular concern to Canada. There is growing instability and the potential for disaster is enormous.

The Canadian Government has virtually ignored the Pacific in this regard. The French continue nuclear testing in the South Pacific, U.S. led naval exercises such as Pacex in the North Pacific expand, and visits by American warships to British Columbia harbours increase in number and duration.

Canada, as a Pacific nation, must begin addressing the dangers posed by militarization of the Pacific and promote regional co-operation in disarmament.

Indeed, we must act urgently to disarm all our oceans to preserve the integrity of the environment and maintain peace for future generations.

SPORTS

CONGRATULATIONS TO NHL MOST VALUABLE PLAYER AL MACINNIS

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Al MacInnis, star defenceman for the Calgary Flames and winner of the Connie Smythe Trophy as most valuable player in the 1989 NHL playoffs.

Most Canadian hockey fans are now familiar with Al MacInnis's accomplishments on the ice. They know, for example, that he is the first defenceman ever to lead all players in scoring in one playoff season. In that respect he even surpasses the achievements of the great Bobby Orr.

In leading the Flames to their first Stanley Cup, Al MacInnis broke the record for most assists in the playoffs with 24 assists in 22 games.

What fewer Canadian hockey fans know is that Al MacInnis grew up on a farm in Port Hood, Cape Breton, and that he has five brothers and two sisters. His father, Mr. Alex MacInnis, is originally from Judique, a few miles down the shore, and his grandfather, Mr. Duncan MacInnis was section foreman on the legendary Judique Flyer.

Al's mother, Annie Mae Gillis, is a first cousin to the Hon. Allan J. MacEachen who, although not a hockey player, is well known to Members opposite as having a pretty good slapshot of his own.

Everyone in Port Hood, and indeed in all of Cape Breton, is proud of their native son. On their behalf I wish to say congratulations to Al MacInnis.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE HANDICAPPED

NATIONAL ACCESS AWARENESS WEEK

Mr. Scott Thorkelson (Edmonton—Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, June 4 to June 10 is National Access Awareness Week in Canada, a week for us to focus on ways of improving access for disabled people to all sectors of our society.

Access means removing the physical barriers that stand in the way of full participation by disabled Canadians. It also means changing attitudes, because these are often the most difficult barriers that disabled people face in achieving the goal of integration in housing, education, employment, transportation, and recreation.

This week brings together many groups at the national, provincial, and local levels along with Multiculturalism and Citizenship Canada. I would like to congratulate all those involved in striving for access for all Canadians.

ELECTORAL VACANCY

CHAMBLY—RESIGNATION OF RICHARD GRISÉ

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty to inform the House that I have received a communication notifying me that a vacancy has occurred in the representation, namely, Richard Grisé, Member for the electoral district of Chambly, by resignation. Accordingly, I have addressed my warrant to the Chief Electoral Officer for the issue of a new writ of election for the said electoral district.

I also have a letter, which reads as follows:

Dear Mr. Speaker,

Considering the situation that prevails in the riding of Chambly since the last federal election of November, 1988 and following my guilty plea to various charges at my trial of May 23, 1989, I wish through your assistance to offer my humble apologies, first to you, who presides over this noble House, to the Right Honourable Prime Minister, to the members of Cabinet, and to the Members of all political parties; and particularly to my ex-colleagues in the Progressive Conservative Party.

The misdeeds for which I have been convicted and, above all, judged severely, deserve rebuke and are unacceptable from a person elected to the Canadian Parliament. I also wish to offer my apologies to the people of the riding of Chambly who called on me to represent them in 1984 and gave me a second mandate in November of 1988.

My deepest regrets go to my family, to my relatives, to my friends, to the people in my political organization who assisted and supported me so well during my too-short policitial career and in my life in general.

My Speaker, allow me to offer to you, and to the whole staff of the House of Commons, my sincere thanks for your constant cooperation. It was an honour for me to serve the population of Chambly, as a member of the Government of Canada.

In spite of my errors of judgement, I have always given the best of myself to serve as a member and Chairman of various committees, as President of the Quebec Parliamentary Wing of the Progressive Conservative Party, and especially as the Parliamentary Secretary to the Deputy Prime Minister, for whom I have the highest esteem and the greatest respect.

I wish hereby and through your mediation to offer my deepest apologies to the people of Canada and I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to accept my immediate resignation in order to allow this noble institution to be protected from a situation such as this one.

I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and extend to you, with deepest regrets, my humble acknowledgement.

Richard Grisé,
Member of Parliament for Chambly

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE BUDGET

REQUEST FOR FINDINGS OF RCMP

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. You will know, Mr. Speaker, that I am fully aware as Your Honour is that criminal charges are pending against five Canadians. However, there are two distinct issues here. They are eventual proceedings in a court of law and the current proceedings in Parliament.

Cabinet Ministers are accountable for the actions they have taken or have not taken. They are accountable to the highest court in the land, which is the House of Commons and the Parliament of Canada.

It is the Prime Minister, the Deputy Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance and, indeed, other members of the Cabinet who must answer questions here in this Chamber about their incompetence, negligence, stupidity, stonewalling, misrepresentation, political manipulation, and cover-up.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Charest: We don't talk about Liberals that much.

Mr. Speaker: I understand the concern of the right hon. gentleman, but he is getting awfully close to identifying certain people and applying names to them. I think he should be very careful about that.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I do not have to identify them. The people of Canada will be the judges through the representatives of the people here of the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, and the Deputy Prime Minister.

I put my question to the Deputy Prime Minister. According to the news release yesterday of the Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police there has been, and I quote the release, "completion of the investigation by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police into the leaks of the Budget in Brief".

Will the Deputy Prime Minister now honour the Prime Minister's commitment given to us here in the House of Commons on April 27 and provide Parliament with the complete findings of the RCMP as to who knew what and when?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I think there are two sides to the question put by the Right Hon. Member. We now have charges that have been laid before the court, and I imagine the Hon. Member will agree that if those who have been charged are to have a fair trial, it is essential not to comment on the case.

As for the other side of the Hon. Member's question, I may refer to what has been said repeatedly in the House during the last few weeks. The question whether anyone benefited from prior knowledge of the Budget is still being investigated. As soon as that information— I already said that the RCMP Commissioner has informed me that so far, no one had benefited from prior knowledge of the Budget. However, Mr. Speaker, the investigation is continuing.

REQUEST THAT CERTAIN PERSONS BE SUMMONED TO THE BAR OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I quoted a commitment made here in the House by the Prime Minister of Canada that all necessary information would be revealed as soon as the RCMP had completed its investigation. I am certainly not going to intervene in the trial, although the Prime Minister has already qualified certain people as criminals.

I realize that charges are about to be laid. However, there are also some very basic questions that arise in connection with our parliamentary democracy, and I am referring to the question of ministerial responsibility and the integrity of this Government.

The Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance cannot use criminal charges as an excuse for refusing to tell us what they knew, when they knew it, and why they decided to hide the truth from Parliament.

I therefore have the following question for the Deputy Prime Minister: He has already had 24 hours to reflect. Will the Clerk of the Privy Council, the Deputy Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister's Chief of Staff be called to the bar of the House of Commons to inform the House about what happened on the afternoon of April 27, when the truth was hidden from Parliament? Mr. Speaker, my question has no connection with the criminal charges that will be laid. What we are talking about is ministerial responsibility, here in Parliament.

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as to when the Minister of Finance was made aware about the Mutual Life incident, he has answered that question on numerous occasions. They are as follows: Wednesday, May 24, as reported at pages 2088, 2089, 2090 and 2094 of Hansard; Thursday, May 25, as reported at pages 2143 and 2144 of Hansard; and on Friday, May 26, as reported at pages 2200 and 2203 of Hansard. We spent the whole of Question Period yesterday outlining in full detail the sequence of events.

Just because the Leader of the Opposition does not like the answers does mean to say that Ministers are not accountable. We have been here answering and responding to the questions that have been asked. I am sorry that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition does not like the answers. He should know very well that there are limitations as to the extent to which these questions can be answered. I think the evidence has clearly served us well. There are charges that are now being laid.

He would be the first person, Mr. Speaker, to condemn us if there was any semblance of political interference in the investigation by the RCMP.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister has said that there are limitations as to what can be answered. We do not see any limitations to answering and giving us the truth. That is what we like to have here in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

SITUATIONS OF MINISTER AND PRESS REPORTER—ALLEGED CONTRADICTION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the reporter who revealed the existence of the budget leak faces a criminal charge. The Minister of Finance who failed to maintain budget secrecy and who hid the existence of a second budget leak from Parliament continues to hold office. Indeed, he is attending an international conference in Europe.

We have a situation in which a reporter faces a criminal charge for exercising his freedom of expression under our Constitution, and the Minister of Finance is hailed as a hero by the Prime Minister and the Deputy Prime Minister. How does the Government justify this extraordinary contradiction? When is he going to come clean with the people of Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I want to be absolutely clear as to where the Leader of the Opposition is really coming from when he poses his question.

Ms. Copps: The truth.

Mr. Mazankowski: Is the Leader of the Opposition blaming the Minister of Finance for actions that were taken by people who have been charged subsequently for theft, the theft and possession of this article?

Mr. Gauthier: Try to answer the questions instead of asking them.

Mr. Mazankowski: If that is what the Leader of the Opposition is saying, I do not know how the Minister of Finance could be accountable for those actions. He should know better than that.

RCMP PRESS RELEASE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. It is about a press release issued at seven o'clock last night on the letterhead of the Commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

According to this press release five persons have been formally charged, and they are named. I checked myself and as of 1.55 p.m., according to the number given on this press release, the RCMP are still at the court house issuing these charges. There is no more information about them until they are formally charged.

I want to ask the Solicitor General why this press release was issued last night hours and hours before any charges have been formally laid.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I am informed by the Commissioner of the RCMP that following their investigation and upon advice from the Attorney General's Department of the Province of Ontario, the RCMP decided to lay charges against five individuals, and the case is now before the courts. I have no further comment at this time. Like the Hon. Member, I was informed of this last night.

• (1430)

[English]

TIMING OF PRESS RELEASE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): I would like to ask the same Minister, as a supplementary question, whether the issuing of this press release hours before the event, which perhaps has still not taken place, has anything to do with the fact that the Prime Minister is returning to the House tomorrow—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kaplan: —and the Government wants to prepare a good reason, in its opinion, for refusing to answer further questions?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I believe I did my duty when I answered the Hon. Member's question earlier. It is not customary— the Hon. Member, himself a former solicitor general, knows perfectly well that the Solicitor General does not have to be consulted nor does he have to make any decisions himself about an investigation being conducted by a police force like the RCMP. The RCMP has conducted its investigation. It has consulted with members of the Attorney General's Department of the Province of Ontario. It has concluded that charges should be laid. It was the RCMP's decision to issue a press release last night. I myself—

An Hon. Member: It was the RCMP's decision!

Mr. Blais: Exactly, it was the RCMP's decision. I had nothing to do with it. It is the kind of decison that is made by a police force, and I see that the Hon. Member is well aware of the situation. Mr. Speaker, I think that in the circumstances, the sensible thing to do is to refrain from public comments so that the individuals involved will be able to get a fair trial.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

[English]

PARLIAMENTARY ACCOUNTABILITY

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Deputy Prime Minister. I have here a copy of the search warrant documents that were issued to the RCMP. There is confirmation on page 3 of one of these documents that indeed the first leak to Mutual Life Insurance of Canada, or someone who gave the documents to Mutual Life Insurance of Canada, occurred on Monday, April 24, fully three days before the Budget was due. This is confirmation from the RCMP in the search warrant documents.

I would like to now switch to the question of parliamentary accountability. In light of the fact that the Deputy Prime Minister said yesterday that he did not find out about the Mutual leak until 3.30 p.m. or 4 o'clock on the afternoon of Thursday, April 27, I wonder if he can now say in a categorical sense whether any Cabinet Minister was aware of the leak to Mutual Life of Canada before or during the Question Period of Thursday, April 27—

An Hon. Member: Good question.

Mr. Nystrom: —and if not, who are the members of the parliamentary staff of the Government who decided to withhold that information from the Ministers of Canada?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, I answered that question yesterday in the House.

An Hon. Member: No, you did not.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Minister—

An Hon. Member: You never answered the question yet.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, I did answer the question as to when I was informed.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: When did the Finance Minister know?

Mr. Mazankowski: Just a minute, I will get to that. The Minister of Finance answered the question as to when he was informed. I am advised that the Prime Minister's office was advised by the Clerk of the Privy Council about the same time as I was advised. I know of no other Minister of the Crown having had the knowledge to which the Hon. Member referred. Mr. Speaker—

An Hon. Member: Come on.

Mr. Mazankowski: Well, what he was asking, Mr. Speaker, was: Was anybody aware—

An Hon. Member: During Question Period.

Mr. Mazankowski: —of the fact that there was the incident of the Mutual Life matter brought to the attention of any Minister of the Crown prior to the Question Period? To the best of my knowledge, no. May I simply—

An Hon. Member: That is incredible. It really is.

Mr. Mazankowski: That is simply consistent with what we have been saying all along—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is incredible.

Mr. Mazankowski: May I simply point out, I—Mr. Speaker, I would like to be as forthcoming as I possibly can. I draw to the attention of the House and to the Hon. Member—Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted, I want to remind the Hon. Member and other Hon. Members about the issue of sub-judice. It is not a matter of trying to hide behind the cloak of sub-judice. Section 505 of Beauchesne's Sixth Edition is very clear. It states:

> Members are expected to refrain from discussing matters that are before the courts or tribunals which are courts of record. The purpose of this sub-judice convention is to protect the parties in a case awaiting or undergoing trial and persons who stand to be affected by the outcome of a judicial inquiry. It is a voluntary restraint imposed by the House upon itself in the interest of justice and fair play.

IDENTITY OF OFFICIALS SOUGHT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, the following question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Which officials decided to withhold the information from the Ministers of the Cabinet?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, no officials withheld information from the Cabinet.

An Hon. Member: Oh, come on.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I would remind Hon. Members that when the question is put and the Minister rises to answer it, the Minister is entitled to courtesy in order to give the answer. The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, as I said before, the decision about the way in which the Budget was going to be handled as a result of the leak that was evident to everybody on Wednesday, April 26, that decision was taken as to how it was going to be handled. Any other leaks suggested, allegations, associated or potential leaks were matters for the RCMP to investigate. It became a law enforcement matter. Any information that was brought to the attention of any Ministers or officials of the Government were turned over the RCMP, as was the proper and only course of action.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DECISION TO INFORM MEMBERS OF GOVERNMENT QUERIED

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Masterman, who is the President of Mutual Life of Canada, said that he called the Minister of Finance's office shortly after 1.30 p.m. That has already been confirmed in the House by Ministers across the way. What I want to know, in the spirit of openness, is which official or which officials made a decision not to inform Members of the Government from 1.30 in the afternoon until around 3.30 p.m. after Question Period? Come clean with us and tell us, who made that decision and why was it made?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, contrary to what the Hon. Members are suggesting, there was no decision necessary. The action that was defined and taken as of Wednesday, there were no further decisions that needed to be taken. The Budget was presented on Wednesday night, April 26. Any allegations of leaks or associated leaks was a matter for the RCMP to investigate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS BROUGHT INTO QUESTION

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. As a former journalist, I am profoundly discouraged by the events of the past 24 hours—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Harvard: The laying of a charge against a member of the Press Gallery—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James.

Mr. Harvard: Mr. Speaker, the laying of a charge against a member of the Press Gallery for doing his job as he saw fit has serious implications on freedom of the press.

My question for the Deputy Prime Minister is this: Does the Government recognize the serious implications of this case on freedom of the press and the people's right to know? Does the Government realize that by intimidating the press it is attacking the right of all Canadians to know?

An Hon. Member: Order, order!

• (1440)

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has expressed some obvious opinions which he has.

Let me say that as far as the Government of Canada is concerned, the freedom of the press is a very fundamental and basic right of all Canadians. This Government and this Party has, is and always will support the freedom of the press which is clearly enshrined in the Canadian Bill of Rights and the Charter of Rights. We certainly stand by that and if the Hon. Member is suggesting in his question that the Government is not supportive of that fundamental principle and right, I want to assure him that that is simply not the case. I hope the Opposition doesn't get carried away with its rhetoric and innuendo and carry it just a little too far, as has been the case here over the last week or so.

Mr. Harvard: Mr. Speaker, I just want to remind the House that Woodward and Bernstein were not charged in the Watergate affair. Neither were journalists who reported leaks of provincial Budgets in both Ontario and Quebec.

GOVERNMENT POLICY QUESTIONED

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Deputy Prime Minister. Is big brother going to lock up journalists for doing their job? Is that government policy?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would have hoped that the Hon. Member would have listened to my answer and then it would not have been necessary for him to read his supplementary.

CHARGES LAID BY RCMP—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, just last November I was elected to this House, but for 16 years before that I was a television news reporter.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Keyes: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister. Given that journalists frequently come into possession of alleged secret government documents; given that never ever have their rights to publish that information been questioned by the possible laying of criminal charges—

Mr. Beatty: Tell that to the Toronto Star.

Mr. Keyes: —must the news media now seek an official government stamp of approval from this Government before it can report the news?

Mr. Beatty: Is your Leader still suing the Toronto Sun?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Yes, for libel.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I tried to make the position of the Government very clear. This matter is a matter for the courts to decide. I want to remind the Hon. Member that the charges were laid in this case by the RCMP after consulting and receiving advice from the law officers of the Attorney General's Branch of the Government of Ontario. I would assume that this matter will be dealt with in the normal course of events and through the judicial process and I have no intention of interfering.

Mr. Keyes: Mr. Speaker, he has no intention of interfering.

An Hon. Member: Right on.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: That is the first reasonable thing they have said today.

Mr. Keyes: This is not a matter to be decided in the way of the response of the Deputy Prime Minister, that he is going to wait. This is a crucial matter, Mr. Speaker.

FREEDOM OF MEDIA COMMUNICATION—COURT TO DECIDE

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, given that the constitutional guarantee of freedom of the press and given that fledgling democracies around the world are in the process of fighting for this important right, is the Government position now that news reporters are only going to be allowed to report the information that the Government wants Canadians to know?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Charter is clear. Everyone has the following fundamental freedoms; freedom of conscience and religion, freedom of thought, belief, opinion and expression, including freedom of the press and other media of communication.

The Canadian Bill of Rights, which was pooh-poohed by Members opposite on many occasions, also recognizes the fundamental freedom of the press. The rights are very clearly defined. The law is clear and I am sure the courts will dispose of this in the manner that—

Mr. Keyes: What is your policy?

Mr. Mazankowski: The Member asked me what my policy is. I have simply outlined the support of the Government in terms of basic fundamental rights of freedom of speech, freedom of expression and freedom of the press. Mr. Speaker, the court will take those things into consideration.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT TO COME CLEAN

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Deputy Prime Minister that the public is concerned that the Government not hide behind the RCMP, not hide behind the court process, but would come clean with the events.

I know the Minister is a serious man and I put the question to him seriously. The Minister just said a moment ago that the process is clear, that the Charter of Rights is clear. Is it really that clear; the line between a journalist doing his job and what is a criminal offence?

The other day, I tabled a Bill, which was a film Bill in this House, which I got as a leaked document. Does that now mean that in the future I could be charged with a criminal offence and the journalists who use leaked documents, any leaked document, can be charged with a criminal offence?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is a lawyer, I believe. But surely that is a matter for the courts to decide. I am not going to make a decision on the floor of the House of Commons, or express an opinion.

The position of the Government is very clear. We support the fundamental rights in the Charter and we also support the upholding of the law. The courts will balance that measure and come down with a verdict.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I am not convinced it is so easy. The whole House is in possession now of my film Bill. Does that make the whole House guilty of possession? I think the Deputy Prime Minister has to deal with this. He can't hide behind the court process.

Mr. Speaker: There may be some difficult lines here. But one of them clearly is that the Government of Canada is not responsible for the administration of justice which takes place at a provincial level.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is a very capable counsel, we know that, and I would ask him to keep that in mind in putting his question.

Mr. Waddell: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I understand it.

FREEDOM OF SPEECH FOR JOURNALISTS

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the Government in dealing with this matter in a broader way, not the detailed prosecution, but in dealing with it in a broader way, did the Government give any thought to the implications of freedom of speech for journalists? Is the Government prepared to bring in a Bill, for example, a Bill to deal with whistle-blowers or a Bill to deal with people who give information to journalists or Members of Parliament which they believe and which in the end run will prove to be in the public interest? Has the Government dealt with that?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, just again to remind the Hon. Member in the House, these are charges laid under the Criminal Code by the RCMP upon consultation and advice from the Attorney General's Department of the Province of Ontario. Those are the facts. What the Member is really asking me to do is to express a legal opinion. He knows that I cannot do that on the floor of the House of Commons, even if I did have the legal expertise, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF MR. TIMOTHY YAEGER, MINISTER AT THE FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH OFFICE

Mr. Speaker: I would like to draw to the attention of the House the presence in the gallery of Mr. Timothy Yaeger, Minister at the Foreign and Commonwealth Office with special responsibility for North and South America.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE FROM A COMPANY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion. On May 4, 1988, Roger Machines International Inc. applied for IRDP assistance to study a continuous mining machine. According to officials, the project is worth recommending, but there is no more money in this program.

My question is: Since no more funds are available in this program, can the Minister tell me today in this House whether he can transfer this application to the Canada-Québec mining sub-agreement and whether funds will be released immediately under another program to carry out this research project in the Val d'Or mining region in the Abitibi?

• (1450)

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I am not at liberty to discuss the particulars of this project until the applicant is informed of my Department's decision. However, the Canada-Quebec subagreement on economic development for the regions of Quebec provides a program framework relating to research and technological development. It is intended that there will be a joint Canada-Quebec innovation program within this framework, and although the federal Government's position has been elaborated for some time, the Quebec Government has yet to make its position known. When that happens, I will certainly refer this project to that particular subagreement for adjudication.

THE BUDGET

ASSURANCES SOUGHT RESPECTING PROFIT-TAKING

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, the RCMP announced yesterday that they have completed their investigation into the Budget leaks, but the Canadian people still have no assurance that there was no profit-taking as a result of the advance knowledge of the contents of the Budget. Will the Deputy Prime Minister now assure all Canadians that a full-scale investigation into possible profit-taking is under way, and will the Deputy Prime Minister detail precisely what action is now being taken?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I want to repeat what I said many times. The Hon. Member raises a very important question, because from the outset, we said that this possibility that people could profit from the early release of budget details could in fact result in profiteering. I personally asked the RCMP Commissioner to conduct a complete review and investigation of this matter and to date, we received— Because a few days ago, the Commissioner especially told me—and I don't know whether the Hon. Member was in the House then—but he told me that so far, we had no information that anyone had profited.

I just informed the House that this investigation is continuing and we will be informed in due course should further information be brought to our attention.

[English]

RESULTS OF INVESTIGATION INTO PROFIT-TAKING REQUESTED

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Speaker, experts in the financial community have indicated the various ways in which profits might be taken as a result of advance knowledge, and the Governor of the Bank of Canada yesterday confirmed that profit-taking might well result from speculation against the Canadian dollar. Is the Minister stating that the RCMP has not in fact completed its investigations, despite what is stated in its own press release, and that there are ongoing investigations into possible profit-taking?

Second, can he confirm that they fully involve provincial stock exchange commissions and other authorities capable of providing a comprehensive review of what happened? If so, will he tell the House when he will come forward with the results of such an investigation?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I already told this House several times, and I repeat, that the next day, April 27, representatives of various stock exchanges throughout Canada said that to their knowledge, no one had profited from the early release of the budget document. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, and it seems important to me to restate it, I already told this House that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police is continuing its Canada-wide investigation, including the five stock exchanges, and also representatives of the securities commissions were met with in each of those places to make sure that all areas could be covered by the investigation.

DISPOSITION OF REJECTED COPIES OF BUDGET IN PREPARATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Deputy Prime Minister and it concerns the Budget leak. The procedure used in previous years to dispose of rejected copies of the Budget consisted of either the shredding of rejected copies before leaving the printing bureau or, alternatively, the trucks carrying the document to a shredder elsewhere were to be accompanied or escorted by the RCMP. Did the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Supply and Services know of the fact that this procedure had not been followed this year when they stated in the House of Commons record on April 27 that all the precautions that have been taken in previous years were applied again this year? Did the Government know that the information provided to the House on that day was inaccurate, or is it just another happy coincidence?

Hon. Paul Dick (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I would inform the House that the Hon. Member who has just spoken once again has his facts wrong. The procedure used this year and for many years in the past has been that surplus materials which might otherwise be discarded are bound up, compacted and held within the printing plant in a secure location until after the Budget has been released publicly.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, we can tell how secure it was, we sure can.

THE SECOND BUDGET LEAK—REQUEST AS TO WHO TOOK DECISION TO WITHHOLD INFORMATION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Deputy Prime Minister.

Earlier, in his answer to another question, the Deputy Prime Minister said that although several ministers or at least their offices had been informed of the second Budget leak on April 27 before Question Period, none of the ministers had been informed before or during Question Period.

Could the Deputy Prime Minister now name the person who made the decision to hide this information, not from one minister, if we are to believe the Deputy Prime Minister, but from the entire Cabinet? Who made that decision and why?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish the Hon. Member would pay attention. I said earlier today during this Question Period that it was not necessary to take a decision. The decision was taken on Wednesday night as to how the Budget would be proceeded with. It was released at about 10 p.m. or 10.30 p.m. That is when the effective date of the Budget went into place and anything pertaining to an allegation of a leak, real or otherwise, perceived or potential, was a matter to be turned over to police authorities for a full investigation. That is what happened. We talk about uncertainty. What is causing uncertainty and question is the innuendo and the character destruction and the smear of the Minister of Finance which is driving down the dollar and driving interest rates up.

AIR INDIA DISASTER

INVESTIGATION BY CSIS WITHDRAWN

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise in the House at this time today, since June marks the fourth anniversary of the Air India disaster in which over 300 lives were lost, some 270 of whom were Canadians. I was saddened today when I learned that the investigation that was looked into by CSIS was stopped when it was to be reviewed by the Security Intelligence Review Committee set up to review CSIS procedures. Is the Solicitor General aware that the Deputy Solicitor General, the Deputy Justice Minister, the Deputy Attorney General of Canada and the Commissioner for the RCMP requested that this investigation not take place at this time and that that the Review committee reluctantly withdrew its intent to investigate through the practices of CSIS?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member mentioned, a criminal investigation is still under way concerning this unfortunate accident that occurred a few years ago.

The SIRC, the CSIS review committee, has decided not to pursue its investigation for the time being, after consulting with the appropriate authorities of the Department of Justice, the Department of the Solicitor General, the Department of the Attorney General and the office of the Commissioner of the RCMP. There were consultations, and a decision was made by the Committee, on its own initiative, to refrain from pursuing its investigation for the time being so as not to interfere with the current criminal investigation, Mr. Speaker.

TRANSPORT

VIA RAIL ADVERTISED IN GOVERNMENT TOURISM PROMOTION

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. On March 20 of this year, Tourism Canada launched an $11 million television advertising campaign aimed at 26 primary markets in the United States. The ads promote Canada as the world next door and picture VIA Rail as a symbol of what Canada has to offer. At the same time, the Government has gutted VIA Rail's funding and has jeopardized its future. How can the Minister justify the hatchet job that the Government has done on VIA Rail when this same Government is spending taxpayers' dollars to promote it as a tourism product?

• (1500)

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the VIA Rail situation, I have many times referred to the new reference levels that we have given to the corporation. A decision has not yet been made by VIA Rail. Of course, the Government cannot afford to allocate more money than it already has. We have said, and we repeat today, that a decision will be made with regard to the new reference levels. Nobody has said yet that the triangle that the Hon. Member is referring to will be closed. I invite my friend to wait for the decision which will be made by VIA Rail.

INCREASE IN VIA RAIL RATES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): My supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, is to the same Minister. The Minister in his answer said that no decision has been made. Yet on June 15, VIA Rail rates will be going up by 10 per cent across the board. The last time this Government did that, 700,000 less passengers used the service, obviously part of the plan of the Government. Will this Minister accept his responsibility and direct VIA to suspend those rate increases until such time as their plan has been presented and given due consideration? Will he suspend those rates?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I confirm that I have been advised by VIA Rail that the fares will be increased by June 15. They have done so before today, last year, the year before. They can decrease or increase. It is a Crown corporation and there is no question that I intervene.

Mr. Speaker: Because of the matters that took place at the beginning of Question Period, Question Period will take one more question. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

APPEARANCE OF SENIOR OFFICIALS BEFORE BAR OF HOUSE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to put this question to the Deputy Prime Minister. We have had admitted as a fact that at 1.30 or 1.40 p.m., in the afternoon of April 27, a call was received from the President of Mutual Life Insurance Company. That was a new fact and evidence of a very important leak to a very important financial institution. Now we have it today on the word of the Deputy Prime Minister that, to the best of his knowledge, no Minister knew until later in the afternoon of April 27, that is to say after Question Period.

My question is: which official took it upon himself or herself, on their authority, to keep the Ministers in the dark? Is this an admission from the Deputy Prime Minister that the bureaucracy in this country is deciding when Parliament is to be informed, what information Parliament is to have and if that is so, will he not agree to our motion to call before the House the three senior Deputy Ministers so we will have the facts before the House of Commons?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Leader of the Opposition purports to be a strong defender of Parliament and the rights and freedoms of individuals. He has not only engaged in the smear and the attempted destruction of the Minister of Finance; he now wants to extend it to public servants. His Member across the way suggested the integrity of the RCMP was being questioned—

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the Day.

PLANT BREEDERS' RIGHTS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski that Bill C-15, an Act respecting plant breeders' rights, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): When the House adjourned at two o'clock, the Hon. Member had seven minutes for debate and ten minutes for question and comments. I would love to hear his debate. The Hon. Member for Durham.

Mr. Ross Stevenson (Durham): Mr. Speaker, prior to the break, I was in the midst of discussing three of the many aspects of the major crop beet breeding programs in Canada. I have briefly discussed one aspect, which was the development of new plant breeding techniques. I had stated that it would largely be up to the public sector because most companies, particularly smaller companies, could not afford to carry out that costly basic research. The second area was the maintenance of seed and various forms of genetic material. Again that would have to be maintained by the public sector. The Government of Canada and many of the international foundations involved in crop breeding, are very much aware of that and are committed to playing those two roles.

The third item that I wish to mention in the whole area of crop breeding is the actual task of cranking out the varieties or cultivars. This is to a large degree a repetitive business involving a great many crosses, doing a great deal of testing. The greater the numbers that one can produce, the greater the chances that one has of producing a successful new variety. This is an area where the private sector excels. I am not suggesting that Government should not be in that area. Indeed they have been and will continue to be along with the universities. But clearly it is an area that the private sector has and should be more involved in. Canada to a significant degree has not reaped the benefit of private sector involvement in private crop breeding the way that we should have.

I would like to bring to the Members' attention the fact that we have a very significant grain producing industry all across Canada. Most of the varieties that have been produced for that massive sector in Canada have been produced by public institutions. If we had had plant breeders' rights, there is little question in my mind that the private sector would have been much more involved and the farm families of Canada would have benefited from their involvement. In fact, the only two areas that private sector research and development is heavily involved in in Canada is that of corn and hybrid canola. The fact that the plants are hybrids and do not breed true from the hybrid seed that is produced gives the companies involved some degree of protection and hence the private sector is involved. We need not look any further than that to realize that if there was some sort of modest stimulation for the private sector, they would be much more actively involved in plant breeding here in Canada. There is no doubt the benefits would be forthcoming.

The legislation that is before us today is very similar to that which is presently in force in the United Kingdom. It has been tested and proven there since 1964. Certainly everything that is in our Bill is compatible with the requirements of the International Convention for the Protection of New Varieties of Plants.

• (1510)

In 1979 Canada signified its intention to join the International Convention. However, we cannot take the final step and join that group until our legislation is in place. We look forward to the day when our legislation is in place and we are members of that international group. Such a step will facilitate the movement of varieties from other countries into this area. There have been examples of outstanding varieties from other parts of the world that have not been released in Canada because the company or the breeder involved was not prepared to lose the variety to mass distribution in Canada.

In Atlantic Canada the climate is somewhat similar to parts of Europe. There is significant opportunity to pick up varieties from other parts of the world, particularly Europe, and test and grow them in Canada once the agreement is signed.

Plant breeders' rights legislation has wide support in Canada. It is popular with many organizations that represent various aspects of the agri-food industry, and it is important to Canada's economic health.

We have received expressions of support for basics of the Bill from such prominent groups as the Agricultural Institute of Canada, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the Canadian Horticultural Council, the Canadian Seed Growers Association, and certainly the Canadian Seed Trade Association.

I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak to this Bill. It is an excellent opportunity for individuals in Canada, whether they be in crop breeding or horticultural crops, or any of the rose or flower crops and plants in Canada to have an opportunity to receive some modest reward for their ingenuity in developing new lines for Canadian society.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On a question or comment the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands.

Mr. Milliken: Would the Hon. Member care to comment on the provision in the Bill which provides for protection for plant breeders for such an extended period of time? I do not claim to be an expert in this area, but I understand that the useful life of seeds is something like six or seven years. It appears that protection is being given for 18 years in the Bill. Does the Hon. Member have reservations about that, and would he care to voice them at this point?

Mr. Stevenson: There are a number of reasons for the length of time, not the least of which is the fact that it is in agreement with other legislation around the world, and in agreement with the suggestions of various international bodies. The length of time covers much more than seeds. Some tree fruits or vine fruits, and some of those cultivars, are not in any type of production for two or sometimes as long as six years after they are planted. Therefore, they require an extended period of time for the producer of that particular species of plants to come into production and give some value to the grower and to the developer of that particular cultivar.

There may be some flexibility. However, the main reason is the fact that the protection is based on international convention. Certainly, we have examples of varieties in Canada that have been used for much more than six or eight years, particularly some of those in western Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Before I recognize the Hon. Member for Prince Edward—Hastings, the Speaker wishes to hear arguments.

POINT OF ORDER

ORDER PAPER QUESTIONS

Mr. Speaker: The House will remember that several days ago the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) raised a matter on Questions on the Order Paper. I indicated at that time that at an appropriate time suitable to all three Parties I would hear some discussion on the point. Perhaps we could start with the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to bring to the attention of the House that yesterday, on May 29, the Parliamentary Secretary said at page 2228 of Hansard, and I quote:

> Mr. Speaker, I am wondering if you could look at Questions Nos. 45, 52, 53, 62, 64, 83, and 88 in relationship to Standing Order 39(6).

Standing Order 39(6) reads as follows:

> (6) If, in the opinion of the Speaker, a question on the Order Paper put to a Minister of the Crown is of such a nature as to require a lengthy reply, the Speaker may, upon the request of the government, direct the same to stand as a notice of motion, and to be transferred to its proper place as such upon the Order Paper, the Clerk of the House being authorized to amend the same as to matters of form.

Mr. Speaker, this particular Standing Order is practically obsolete, since as far as I know, it has not been used since 1910, at least from what I was able to find out in my research. Using it would have a disastrous effect on the rights of Members to ask questions in this House, and I am thinking more particularly of Members on the Government side, who have questions put on the Order Paper in order to get a detailed reponse to their concerns, to issues raised by their constituents and to various issues that may have an impact on the general administration of this country.

If, at the request of the Government, the Speaker of the House transfers such a question to motions, this would have the effect of putting the question at the mercy of the Government's whims, since it would only be called when the Government felt it was opportune to do so.

The problem is that the Government thinks that dealing with such questions is a lengthy and sometimes costly process, and not only involves a lot of time and money but also a lot of effort on the part of certain departments to find the appropriate answers.

I admit the Government is sometimes right when it says: Question numbered X is too complex and does not justify the expenditure of public monies. That in fact, is an answer in itself. I realize that. But when the Government tries, through the Chair, to transfer the question to motions, I think that is a covert attempt to gag the Members of this House, the excuse being that some questions will take too long to read in the House or are so complex and technical that an oral response would not do them justice.

Mr. Speaker, the Government already decides in what order the House will consider the business before it, in other words, it decides when the motions will be before the House and what is going to be debated, which bill, and which day will be an Opposition day. In fact, the Government sets the agenda of the House.

However, if we give the Government a chance to get rid of embarrassing questions by having them transferred to motions, obviously it will never get around to them. And as I said earlier, this is just a way to gag the Members of the Official Opposition, the NDP and Government Members as well.

[English]

When I researched this question about the Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers, as I said in French a minute ago, I found this Standing Order is an archaic, pre-1910 measure that was put into the Standing Orders to facilitate the answering of questions in the House. We know that since 1910 the common practice has been to make such questions Orders for Return. Rather than putting motions, we just accepted that the question would be made an Order for Return and that was it.

• (1520)

If the Government is permitted to transfer these questions to Motions for Papers, in my humble opinion it is effectively putting off the need for dealing with the legitimate requests for information contained in the questions. The Notices of Motions are dealt with at the pleasure of the Government, which is under far less pressure to delay with these matters as compared to Questions on the Order Paper. Evidently we have to address the time constraints under which the Government operates. We all know that if a Member wants to put a question and he or she decides that he or she wants an answer within 45 days, the Government must do everything in its power to try to answer those questions.

Previous experience in the House has shown that many times the Government does not respond within the 45 days. That is another problem you may want to address on another occasion. I believe there are solutions to that problem, a few of which I have mentioned. For example, if a question has not been answered after 45 days then it should be considered like an oral question that does not receive a satisfactory answer and transferred for adjournment debate. A system could be implemented whereby such questions which indeed lapse after 45 days could be put to the adjournment debate at six o'clock in the order in which they are received. That is a topic for further discussion with the committee if the Speaker judges it appropriate to transfer that.

Let me return to Standing Order 39(6). This is an archaic rule, after some 80 years of not being used. The Government is merely trying to find yet another way to deny Parliament legitimate information. It is indeed sometimes very difficult and sometimes tedious for the Government to gather the answers to these questions. I will not bore the House with all the questions that have been asked, but most of the ones I reviewed can indeed be answered. They may have detailed information attached to them, which the Parliamentary Secretary does not want to read into the record, but we have had a practice in the House of printing them as read. I see no difficulty in continuing with that procedure.

The request to you by the Parliamentary Secretary is unjustified today, in my view. In my opinion, the Speaker's role in the concept of reform is to protect the rights of the individual and protect the rights of the minority. As far as I am concerned, the Speaker should turn down this request to transfer written questions Nos. 45, 52, 53, 62, 64, 83 and 88 to Notices of Motions for the reasons I have stated.

All the questions involved are short and to the point. They request straightforward information. They should be responded to quickly by the Government. If they require lengthy answers, such answers should be made Orders for Return as I suggested before and has been done virtually without any difficulty for many years. This practice which has developed over the years is acceptable.

In my view and the view of my caucus, to proceed with the transfer of these questions to Motions would be a step backward.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest the other day when the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) stood up and said:

> Mr. Speaker, I am wondering if you could look at Questions Nos. 45, 52, 53, 62, 64, 83, and 88 in relationship to Standing order 39(6).

He went on to say:

> I would ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Based on those comments, it seemed to be a reasonable thing to do, until we examined just what was involved in such a request.

I do not want to impute any motives to my hon. friend in terms of this request. I want to make some critical comments and then offer what may be a solution to this concern that the Hon. Member for Peace River brought to the attention of the House.

I am speaking on behalf of NDP caucus Members. We have had a chance to consider this issue and we have determined that our response ought to be not to support such a request. I want to explain why we have come to that conclusion.

The Government has asked you to transfer the seven questions on the Order Paper to Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers. The Government is effectively co-opting you in its attempt to weaken the ability of Members to ask and receive answers to questions put to the Government. It is a time-honoured tradition that Members, including Members of the government benches, have an opportunity to present legitimate questions to the Government for response. I suggest that on balance, this has been done effectively. There are times when we find answers to questions unacceptable, but as a process I think it works well.

The Government is exploiting an archaic Standing Order, Standing Order 39(6), which was adopted by the House as a remedy to a problem that does not exist today. This Order was adopted in 1906 because too much House time was being taken up with oral reading of answers to questions on the Order Paper. While Mr. Speaker has asked that the Annotated Standing Orders not become the text of House discussions on procedure, it is worth noting the detailed history given of the evolution of this and related Standing Orders.

Clearly it was at that time in the interests of safeguarding House time and not of protecting the Government from embarrassing questions, that the House adopted this motion. There was a cumbersome and time consuming process at that time and Members felt this was an appropriate way to streamline the operations of the House yet permit the answers to flow to Members of the House.

Today, Questions on the Order Paper take up very little House time. Anyone reading Hansard and trying to compare it with what they see on the parliamentary channel would be very confused. For example, yesterday's Hansard reports that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall), the Minister of the Environment (Mr. L. Bouchard), and the Minister of Transport (Mr. B. Bouchard) were in the House providing long and detailed answers to written questions. In fact, as those who watched the proceedings know, within the space of a few seconds several pages of "oral answers" were provided by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader. Questions on the Order Paper took hardly any time at all during the day.

It is also interesting to note that this Order has only been invoked once, that is in 1923 when the then Government of the day effectively refused to answer a question about trips taken abroad by Ministers and the cost to the taxpayers of those trips by asking the Speaker to convert the question into a Notice of Motion.

Why has the Government revived this archaic House rule after 65 years of disuse? I submit it is because it does not want to answer certain questions. By having questions transferred to Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers, it knows, as we all know, that the questions are destined for likely oblivion.

If the Government wanted to answer the questions it would do just that, either in a straightforward manner or by converting them to Orders for Return and tabling the return, as we saw yesterday in terms of very detailed answers.

The Speaker is well aware that the Government does not have to go to the lengths of using this fossilized Standing Order to avoid questions. In a third of the roughly 30 questions the Government has supposedly answered in this session, the Government essentially responded with: "We don't know" or "we do not care to find out" to a number of them.

For example, on April 3, my colleague, the Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom), attempted to find out to what extent Canadian taxpayers subsidized corporate mergers by permitting tax deductions on interest arising from borrowing money. The Government's reply to this question was: "The requested data is not ascertainable from the financial statements and tax returns required to be filed with the Department and accordingly is not readily available to the Department". In other words, they said: "We cannot find the answer. We do not know what the answer will be". They then said that in order to obtain this information the Department would have to audit the books and records of each corporation claiming expenses against income. In other words, it is virtually impossible to find out without a major undertaking and a very large expenditure of funds.

• (1530)

On April 3 another colleague, the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Harvey), asked through Question No. 12 how many Canadians received dividend tax credits for shares held in corporations which did not pay any income tax at all. This is a question of significant public importance, and I submit very much in the public interest.

The Government gave this $1,000 tax credit to wealthy Canadians in recognition of the possibility of double taxation. The answer was the same as for Question No. 11. It did not know and it did not want to find out.

If you look at the answers given in the spring, Mr. Speaker, by the Government to Questions Nos. 8, 9, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17 and a number more you will see that the Government is quite comfortable in refusing to answer our questions.

Point of Order--Ms. Copps

What are the questions that the Government has asked the Speaker to transform to Notices of Motions and consign therefore to oblivion? I might add that the questions come from all political Parties and seek information on matters such as government assistance to oil companies, transportation of hazardous waste, government funding through Canadian Jobs Strategy, the origin of fruit purchased by the federal Government, tax concessions for companies, and tax exemptions for business contributions to free trade advertisements that we see in newspapers.

Why does the Government not want to tell us how much money it has put into oil exploration? Why does the Government not want to tell us how many applications it has received and approved for Canadian Jobs Strategy programs in Ontario? Why does the Government not want to tell us where it buys its fruit? Why does it not want to tell us how great the tax expenditures were for business promotion of the free trade deal?

I suggest that Your Honour should very quickly, very strongly and irrefutably refuse this particular request coming from the Government. The Chair has already recognized the importance of these questions.

On May 18 of this year, Mr. Speaker, you suggested that those who were in the service of the public in preparing answers to the questions should recognize that the 45-day request rule does not just hang there without purpose. Transforming the questions to Notices of Motion will create a literally infinite delay.

Mr. Speaker, you also went on to say:

> For the most part, there is no real reason in the world why these answers cannot be given. As I say, I cannot order them to be given because I do not have the power.

What I would like to add is that Your Honour does have the power to refuse to grant the Government's unreasonable request to transform these very legitimate questions into Notices of Motions, thereby consigning them to oblivion. If the Speaker allows the transfer of these questions to Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers, then Your Honour will be establishing a very sad and dangerous precedent. Granting the Government's request will destroy many of the gains we have made under parliamentary reform. It will take us back to the old days when questions sat on the Order Paper, and was ineffective way for Members of Parliament to obtain legitimate information and important data.

I suggest that the questions that the Hon. Member for Peace River brought to your attention and asked for your consideration on are important questions. They are legitimate questions. They seek very important information. I trust that you, Mr. Speaker, will respect the views of Parliament when it adopted parliamentary reform which, of course, encouraged the Government actually to answer Order Paper questions.

I trust that Your Honour will rule against this request. I recognize that on occasion the Government might encounter a question that would require an extremely detailed response, or perhaps one that would be more appropriate for debate. On those few occasions rather than ask Your Honour to rule, in a sense co-opt the Chair in this decision-making, which I can see would open up an incredible Pandora's box of problems when it comes to responding to questions, the question could be placed before the House Leaders. House Leaders, being honourable men and women, would very quickly determine that this was in fact a question that could be transferred legitimately and be better put for debate in the House.

I suggest that there is a vehicle that can be used on the rare occasion when transferring these questions would be required. That is to say, consent of the House Leaders to proceed by having them moved with the appropriate order of the House. Until that takes place, I think we are opening a very dangerous precedent here if we allow this particular process to be accepted.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak very briefly on the matter in support of my colleagues' opposition to the Government's move to stifle the very appropriate vehicle of Order Paper questions.

Some of us who are in Opposition understand that there are very few ways that we can get information from Governments. I think it would be fair to say that Question Period is the vehicle to raise issues. If we want to get specific information, then Order Paper questions are one way of doing that.

For example, I have an Order Paper question which I tabled on April 20 which deals with the issue of the importation of hazardous wastes into Canada. I wanted specific information in relation to the number of tonnes of hazardous waste because I suspected, before any story appeared in the newspaper, that we were into a problem area. I think that this information is of a non-partisan, non-controversial nature, which would assist me in doing my job as an opposition Member and in particular as environment critic.

Some of us remember in the days when the Conservatives were sitting on the opposition side of the House, a gentleman now deceased who was the Member for Leeds—Grenville, made himself a fair reputation across the country not necessarily by questions that he asked in the House of Commons but by the information he was able to garner by astute Order Paper questions. That individual was a gentleman by the name of Tom Cossitt. I know that we are not supposed to name names in the House of Commons, I daresay that if Mr. Cossitt is watching us today he is probably literally rolling over in dismay at what his own Government is about to attempt to perpetrate on the people of Canada.

We in the Opposition have agreed to a number of limitations on our freedom of speech in this place. One of those limitations involves a limitation on the amount of time that we can ring the bells. That was agreed to in the unanimous view that we would try to proceed with the business of Parliament and not tie Parliament up.

Some of us may have argued individually against that view because we felt we were giving up a long-standing right that was not being returned in kind. Nonetheless, we have also in this Parliament seen limitations on our capacity to ring the bells. We have seen limitations on our capacity to put petitions forward.

While those limitations may initially have been suggested to expedite the process and to limit the possibility of phoney petitions, I, and I daresay other Members, have probably seen situations in which legitimate petitions were tossed out because they did not have the proper wording about the shewing forth of Her Majesty's—whatever the wording is. They did not sheweth forth. Perhaps they had the wrong grammar.

I think the intention of these so-called reforms was to assist in the information gathering of Parliament in the same way as we get information by Order Paper questions. We are not putting questions on the Order Paper to tie up Parliament. Rather, we are legitimately using a vehicle to seek information. One by one we have seen the avenues available to Opposition Members for the securing of information being strangled. One of those avenues was by way of petition. Another avenue was by way of pressure which could be applied through things like bell ringing.

If the Government is so desperate to limit the free speech of Parliament that it is actually going to try to move to limit the capacity to answer questions, and to put questions on the Order Paper, then I think it is a sad day for Parliament. We hear constantly Conservative Members talk about how they want to move in a non-partisan fashion. What could be more non-partisan than finding out how many tonnes of imported hazardous waste Canada is bringing into the country? This is not of concern to an individual political Party. It is of concern to the whole country. For the Government to suggest that these questions be transferred to resolutions that will be buried, essentially. What it is doing is moving with another throttle on the throat of free speech in Parliament.

I suggest that this particular attempt by the Government should be stopped forthwith and that Your Honour should permit the former Member for Leeds—Grenville to breathe easy in the other place in the knowledge that in fact the one remaining tool we have at our disposal is not being further destroyed by this insatiable Tory Government which seems more intent on slamming down the freedoms of Parliament than in allowing us to explore legitimate avenues of information.

• (1540)

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, this is an important question. I want to put on the record the attitude of the Government and some of the concerns that we have. First, I want to begin by saying that we do believe that the whole process of tabling questions on the Order Paper is a very important and fundamental part of this institution and an important part of the duties and rights of a Member of Parliament.

Second, I want to say that that right extends not only to opposition Members but it extends as well to Members on the Government side. We are in no way setting this up as a debate between the Government and the Opposition but rather a question of how we handle the questions that are tabled in the House and brought before us to be answered. We do not have any dispute with the process. We like it. We think it is important. We want to enhance it. We want to see it work. It is not our intention in any way to undermine it. But we do want to see that the system is one that works fairly and equitably for all the Members of this institution. We want to see that there is fair use of the resources, the resources being the Members themselves, the budgets and staffing that goes on within the various departments, and as well, the Cabinet people that are involved in these types of answers. We want to see that there is a fair utilization of those resources.

What has been happening over the years is that we have been falling into a habit that has some dangerous implications. What seems to be coming is that there no longer is a questioning of how lengthy a particular question is. There is no longer a concern about how impossible it may be to answer.

My hon. friend, the House Leader for the NDP referred to a couple of answers that were made. I have to tell him that I am not happy with those answers. I am not happy with an answer that says: "We cannot find out that information. We do not know what is going on there. We cannot find that out without doing this, this, this and this." In my opinion, that is not the type of answer for which a Member is looking.

Essentially what we are looking for is a way to examine the questions and say: "Can they be fairly answered or should they be better dealt with in another forum? Is there another place that we can look at them?" What my colleagues from the other side have argued is that this is an archaic Standing Order. It has not been used since 1910, and therefore, because it is that old, perhaps—

An Hon. Member: 1923.

Mr. Cooper: 1923, which is correct. That since it has not been used for that long, it is redundant. It is a bit of a dinosaur.

I think there is another point that has to be made. Since 1923, we have had considerable numbers of reforms to the Standing Orders in this particular House of Commons. I know that because I have been part of that process. Standing Order 39(6), the one we are dealing with today, has survived all of those reforms. I believe it has survived those reforms because there was a reason for it. It was an important part of the rules. Had it not have been important, there would have been a need on the part of those of us involved in the reforms to either change it or abolish it. It was left there for a purpose. I think that that purpose is very legitimate.

What we have seen in the last little while are questions that have become complicated. One of the questions that we looked at in the most recent time required a co-ordination of 60 different departments and agencies in order to collect the answer for the House of Commons. On top of that, we were asked as a Government to do that within 45 days. I suggest to this House that that is, for all intents and purposes, impossible.

We are not arguing against the principle of the questions. That principle is an important one and we support it. What we are arguing is that there has to be a fairness in the process.

I think we need to look at a couple of the elements of Standing Order 39(6). First, it states that we have the right as a Government to ask the Speaker to examine the question and determine whether or not it requires too lengthy an answer or whether it is complicated in such a fashion that it would be impossible for the Government to answer it with any kind of time restriction or reasonableness.

What happens if that is the case, Mr. Speaker? It is not, as I think my colleagues opposite have said, then transferred to something that is controlled by the Government. As I understand it, it is transferred to motions which then go into the Private Member's realm, and as a result of that, the rights of the Private Members are in fact protected because that motion then becomes debatable. It becomes votable and it becomes amendable. As a result of that, the Private Member's rights are in fact protected, rather than inhibited.

I think by putting these questions before the Speaker, we have brought back to the House a rule that has an important function and purpose.

I want to explain, Mr. Speaker, why the questions that we referred to you were chosen. They were chosen for a specific reason. First, they are non-partisan. We have questions from all Parties of the House.

Second, we have a combination of both starred and unstarred questions. It is not really a question of whether that particular question has to be answered here in the House of Commons within 45 days. What is really important is the principle, not simply the time restraints that are on us in terms of what should or should not be answered at that particular time.

There are a few things which have to be clarified. Number one, is the Government responsible to answer every question no matter how complicated it may be within the 45 days? My friend shakes his head yes. I would agree with that, but I would say that at the same time we should be looking for an answer or an opportunity to discuss this issue in a way that addresses the real needs and concerns of the Member who puts that question, no matter what side of the House that Member happens to be on.

Second, we need to know what the definition of the term lengthy is. We need to have some definition of that. What does it mean, lengthy? If we look at Standing Order 39(2), it makes reference to a coherent and concise question. We need to revisit that whole subject of coherent and concise, as it relates to the questions.

The bottom line that we want to make in asking that these questions be looked at is that this is an important process and an important question for the House. Second, by examining the questions that are put on the Order Paper, we then attach to that the validity and the importance of the process. If we just let the whole thing slide and let practices build up which lead us down a path which creates nothing but chaos and irrelevance to the process, then we as Members of this institution are hurt by that. That is why I think it is important that it be examined.

I have sat on the Opposition side. I have sat as a back-bencher. Today, I speak as a Parliamentary Secretary. I have experienced all that. I am not here to argue against the right of Members to put questions. I am here to say that this is a very important process. We do need to examine it. The use of Standing Order 39(6), as I suggested a couple of days ago in this House, is an important consideration that I believe the Speaker should look at. I think that we as a House should not in any way be frightened of that process.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member. The Hon. Member for Calgary West.

Point of Order--Mr. Hawkes

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, in coming here today I was interested in listening to the arguments put forward. It was not my intention to rise but I think that as an officer of the House both in my present capacity and as someone who has done the same job that the Member from Peace River is doing in this Parliament, I should share my experience with the House.

I rise because of the arguments advanced by the first two speakers for the official Opposition and the third Party in the House that led me to rise. I think what they are inviting you to do, Mr. Speaker, is to ignore the rule in some fashion that would encourage you to rewrite the rules of the House. That would be a very dangerous course to follow. It may very well be that Members of the Opposition would like the rules rewritten, but I do not think it is appropriate for you, Mr. Speaker, to be invited to rewrite the rules. When a rule exists I think it is the responsibility of the Chair to act within the rules of the House and to fulfil the obligations that fall upon his office.

• (1550)

The Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) has asked that this rule come into force when the Government requests it. Then you, Sir, have an obligation to consider the matter and you have a power to transfer a question on the Order Paper to notices of motions.

There has been a lot said about this being a denigration of the right of freedom of speech. It is important to recognize that a question on the Order Paper is not discussed in the House. It is a written question, a written reply, and is printed in our proceedings, but there is no speech involved in the process in the Chamber.

Mr. Milliken: It can be oral.

Mr. Hawkes: If it is oral it is simply that the reply is oral. There is no debate.

The Government is asking the Chair to transfer certain items from the Order Paper into a form which is debatable so freedom of speech can take place. Members should read, I believe it is Rule 97. Once that is done the item shall be debated for 90 minutes. It is a debatable motion so more expansion, contraction and precision can come to the question. That is what the process of amendment is all about. An amendment could be made to the question itself. More important, the House must pronounce itself. The question must be put after 90 minutes of debate. So the House can decide whether the information must be produced.

What the rule entails is an opportunity for an item to be debated in the Chamber, to be amended in the Chamber, if that is appropriate in the individual case, and to be decided by Members. The alternative is to leave it on the Order Paper.

In many cases, for example, the kinds of questions which the Member brought forward yesterday, invite the Government unilaterally to say it will not answer those questions, it cannot and it should not, for whatever reason. Those replies are very short and very abrupt such as "The information is not available". I have looked at them for over a year. If the questions had been written in a slightly different form with a little more precision they would be an answerable. But the form in which some come forward to Government put a kind of straitjacket on us. Written questions require a written or oral response, as the Member opposite said, but it is to a precise question in which a question is asked that is the problem.

All Members know from their work in committees and work in this Chamber that the more knowledge you have about the subject matter, the more precise your questions can become. You begin perhaps with a general understanding and as information comes forward you can modify your questions, become more precise in getting to the nub of the matter. If these questions were transferred to the Order Paper and debated in this Chamber with all of the wisdom of 295 Members potentially available to that debate, to the amending process and to the decision-making process, it is possible that instead of getting the denial of information—which does happen—we could get the information in a form that would be better used by all Members.

I just could not sit by and hear the arguments about denial of freedom of speech and what brought us to this Chamber. In fact, this enhances accountability to our voters. This transfer to a debatable, amendable and decision-making situation, enhances the role and responsibility of all Members in this Chamber and their freedom of speech.

Most questions can be answered in the 45-day period. That was my experience for the better part of a year. Some questions are clearly not answerable. The information was never collected, therefore, it does not exist and there cannot be an answer. It does not matter what you do with it. There is this grey line in between. The information is available perhaps but is not readily available. It is not stored in a computer where you can push a button which rolls it out and you have it. It is stored in a different form, in a different way. It is not true for the Government to say the information is not available, but to get it all out in the form in which it is stored would be an enormously time consuming task. The 45 days is totally unrealistic in many cases. It simply could not be done no matter how many resources we put on it.

I remind Members of the difficulty with the Project Ploughshares assertion to parliamentarians about their concerns. Two and a half million little pieces of cardboard came in and plugged up our entire mail distribution system. It is taking months to sort them so they get in the hands of the proper 295 Members. It is taking dollars, time, energy and it cannot be done in 45 days. We cannot distribute the mail in the House of Commons in 45 days no matter what we do. We have the assistance of three different outside firms and we are paying for that.

Some of the questions on the Order Paper are of that kind and I suggest to you that the questions brought to our attention yesterday are different but they have some of the same characteristics. The time it would take to provide the information is of considerable concern to the Government. People would have to be taken away from tasks they are now doing to provide the information. Do we, as parliamentarians, believe that is a priority? The matter, the Government may conclude, and the Government does conclude that it cannot be a priority in the total scheme of things.

So, the Government says to Members the matter is not a priority. Fancy language may be used and all kinds of excuses, but at the nub of it is the notion that the matter makes no logical sense to designate it a priority.

The Members of the House should have an opportunity to say to the Government that it is wrong. It is a priority. The method available is in this room. The Government turns the decision over to the Chamber, rather than sending the question back to the Member. I think the House has been moving through successive reforms in trying to provide opportunities for debate, amendment and decision-making for all Members of the Chamber. Not just for members of Cabinet, not just for the members of the Government, but for all Members of this Chamber.

The Order Paper is a mechanism that was intended to request information without using the time of the House and an opportunity for the House to provide the information. It works that way. In the last Parliament we were able to handle 90 per cent to 93 per cent of the questions within the allotted 45-day period to the satisfaction of the Members. But the remaining 7 per cent or 8 per cent are impossible to answer in some cases and impossible to answer within the 45 days in other cases. It is enormously expensive in human terms to create the information base thus depriving the population of this country of a good service that they need perhaps more than the information. Surely the nub of the issue is whether Parliament should decide that the answer is required or whether the Government should decide. This Government chooses to request the opportunity, in those borderline cases, for Parliament to decide rather than for the Government to simply decide.

• (1600)

Mr. Speaker: I might say to Hon. Members that I think I have the issue here. I will hear several more Hon. Members, but I would ask them to be brief and please do not be repetitious.

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Mr. Speaker, I thought it would be of benefit for you to hear a view from one of the rookies in the House here in the far distant corner. When coming to this place, one looks at the method available for a newly elected person from the opposition benches to get information that cannot otherwise be obtained. Of course, we turn to the Standing Orders and one of the ways to get such information is under Standing Order 39(1), placing questions on the Order Paper. In fact, I did that in the case of question number 64 which is of interest to the area I represent. In addition, it is of interest to the area of Annapolis in Nova Scotia and to the Niagara Peninsula in Ontario. The question asks for a breakdown from the Government of the consumption of fruit products in veterans' hospitals, prisons under the authority of the federal Government and the armed forces bases, and at what locations these fruit products are purchased.

In effect, the Government is asking you, Mr. Speaker, under Standing Order 39(6) to circumvent a back-bencher's procedure to obtain answers that I have no other way of obtaining through usual sources. If you in fact decide that my question is a proper question to fall under Standing Order 39(6), it will put my question into the draw for motions, and with almost 500 motions, the chances of that question getting drawn is not that great. By the time it is debated over a five-hour period, if it is selected as a votable motion, the chances of obtaining that answer for my constituents and for the people of the fruit industry are very negligible. I would submit that the question I have submitted is of some great importance to those people who are constantly looking for places to sell fruit and for employment opportunities in areas with high unemployment.

I wish to add my voice to those that you have heard in opposition to the Government's request.

Looking at Standing Order 36(1), I wonder if the question has to be a simple one, capable of being answered in brief. In reading through Standing Order 39(1) or the commentary under it, I find nothing that provides that the answer has to be a short answer or capable of being answered in brief. Does it have to be simple? How simple does it have to be? If it is a simple answer, we can often get the answer from the Parliamentary Library or from a member of our staff, but this is not always the case. In the case of my question, I cannot get the information from other sources. The source I have turned to is Parliament, and I would ask your consideration, Mr. Speaker, in accepting the arguments of those in opposition.

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, some years ago, I, along with the Parliamentary Secretary to the Government House Leader (Mr. Cooper), was a member of the McGrath committee, and it is from the McGrath committee that we got this particular procedure. As has been mentioned previously, there was a different type of written question in the past.

Older Members will recall Tom Cossitt of Leeds—Grenville who used that process very well. He put several hundred political questions on the Order Paper. He cluttered up the Order Paper with very political questions and the Committee decided that this was an opportunity for Members, particularly back-benchers, to vent their rage at the Government, but it was not a very useful way to get answers to questions. The McGrath committee therefore recommended that Members be limited to four questions on the Order Paper and that as a quid pro quo for having a limited amount of questions, the Government would be required to provide answers to those questions within 45 days. The questions were to be short, to the point, worded directly in a non-partisan way and with as little visible politics as possible so that it would elicit direct information. Occasionally, I am sure, as has been the practice, the Government would not be able to find answers in an efficient or effective way and there is nothing wrong with that. If members of the public see that some answers are not forthcoming from the Government, they will judge the Government on whether the reasons for not providing answers are legitimate or not.

As a person who was involved in the McGrath committee which attempted to make the role of the individual Member of Parliament stronger, I take great exception to government Members patronizing me and telling me that they know best how I should conduct my business, that they know better than I whether a question should be framed as a motion to be put into the urn to be drawn or as a question on the Order Paper. I submit that that should be my choice.

If the Government is unable to answer a question in 45 days and has to tell me that for these reasons, legitimate or otherwise, it cannot provide the answer, then it should be my choice to frame the question as a Private Member's motion and put it in the urn. Let me decide to take the chance on whether the motion will ever be drawn from the urn and see the light of day again.

I know from experience, having been here for over nine years and having submitted numerous motions and Bills to that urn, that my chances at least—I seem to be particularly unlucky—are not particularly great. After nine years, a motion of mine has been drawn once.

I do not find it helpful for the Government to say that it will not answer the questions but will throw them in the urn for us. Thank you very much, but that is not what the McGrath committee had in mind. That is not what back-benchers on either side of the House have in mind.

With all due respect, the McGrath process was supposed to free up the role of the Member. From this corner at least, our definition of freedom is the ability to make choices. I think we should be left to make the choices ourselves rather than to have one or two government Members make the choice that our motions should go into the urn and perhaps disappear forever. I think we should receive answers according to McGrath recommendations, even if the answers are inadequate, and then Members on both sides of the House can make their own decisions to throw them in the urn.

Mr. Speaker: Before moving to the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Milliken), I will come back to the Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Althouse). Did the McGrath commission give any consideration to the Government responding to a question which it felt was too vague? Some mention has been made of that. I have been here for some time as well, and I know that sometimes, questions can be deliberately vague. In a case like that, the Government could reply to the Hon. Member and ask for particulars. Was that considered?

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, as I recall the discussions that went on, a similar question was raised and it was generally thought that if the Member chose to be vague, he took his chances on getting a vague response. We are partly masters of our own destiny in this House, Mr. Speaker. I hope firmly and fervently that we continue to be and not put it in the hands of the Deputy to the House Leader to make those kinds of decisions.

• (1610)

Mr. Speaker: I have the Hon. Member's point. The Hon. Member for Kingston and The Islands. I think this could close off the discussion.
