INTERNATIONAL RED CROSS DAY

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker: today, on the eighth of May, I rise in the House to draw your attention to International Red Cross Day and to pay tribute to the thousands of Canadians and millions of people all over the world who have dedicated their lives to promoting the humanitarian principles of the International Red Cross movement.

In 1988 and 1989, the International Red Cross is celebrating its 125th anniversary. As part of the celebrations, the International Red Cross Committee and the national associations have asked the governments of all countries to commemorate International Red Cross Day.

The Government of Canada, with its unfailing dedication to the ideals and principles of the Red Cross movement, wishes to make this day a special occasion.

[English]

Many Members will have noticed a special display outside the Parliament buildings containing the distinctive Red Cross flag. That flag was first flown in Canada by the founder of the Canadian Red Cross, Surgeon Major George Sterling Ryerson, during the North West Rebellion in 1885.

The Canadian Red Cross Society was later given official recognition in 1909 with the adoption by Parliament of the Canadian Red Cross Society Act. Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada believes that one of the most important functions of the Red Cross movement is the humanitarian assistance it provides to persons suffering the ravages of war. In an ideal world where armed conflict would be but a sad memory, such assistance would not be necessary. However, we are all tragically reminded on a daily basis of the utter havoc such conflicts can wreak and how we must strive to relieve the sufferings of the victims of those unfortunate events.

[Translation]

The Canadian Government, through the Canadian International Development Agency, has worked closely with the International Committee and the Canadian Red Cross to provide international assistance to those regions where armed conflicts are taking place.

Today, the Government wishes to announce that a contribution of $150,000 is being made through CIDA so that a Canadian medical and hospital team can be sent to Pakistan this August.

The team will be located in Peshawar, in Pakistan, where it will provide Afghan refugees with badly needed medical and hospital services.

Canada is also pleased to announce its participation in an independent international telecommunications network established by the Red Cross. The Canadian Government, through the Department of Communications, has granted permission to the Canadian Red Cross for establishing and operating a radio station that will be used to transmit and receive urgent messages.

By extending this telecommunications network to Canadian territory, the Red Cross will be able to organize relief operations more quickly and more lives will be saved.

One of the most important developments that occurred 125 years ago was the adoption of the first Geneva Convention for the protection of the victims of armed conflict. Since the adoption of that instrument, international humanitarian law has progressed, culminating in the adoption of the four 1949 Geneva Conventions, and the two additional Protocols of 1977.

Canada ratified the Geneva Convention in 1965. It is the intention of the Government to table implementing legislation for the protocols in the House in the near future. Following parliamentary approval and Royal Assent, Canada would join those countries that have reaffirmed their commitment to international humanitarian principles through ratification of the protocols.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, Canada takes great satisfaction in joining countries throughout the world to celebrate International Red Cross Day.

Together with Canada's constant efforts to promote peace, security and stability throughout the world, our country's humanitarian action is dedicated to providing relief and protection to those in need.

On behalf of the Canadian Government, I wish to congratulate the International Red Cross movement and express our appreciation for its vitally needed humanitarian services.

[English]

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Minister for recognizing 125 years of hard work, devotion, and unmatched dedication toward helping the needy, the poor, and the dispossessed. This is the type of devotion that has made the Red Cross an institution that is the most widely recognized and respected and, in some instances, feared for its objective and truthful reporting of situations around the world.

Approaching the Parliament buildings this morning I noticed a most beautiful sight. I saw the Canadian Red Cross flags flanked by our beautiful Canadian flags. The maple leaf of the Canadian flag is becoming a symbol of peace around the world. That is Canada's reputation today, and I think that we should keep that reputation. The cross on the Red Cross flag is known around the world as a symbol of humanitarian assistance.

My first encounter with the Red Cross movement was back in my primary school days at Orpington Public School in Saskatchewan. The school no longer stands. However, in 1939, 1940, and 1941 the teacher asked the class to make little kits containing a bar of soap, a face towel, a comb, and a toothbrush. These went to help the war effort. Other students were asked to knit something. I remember knitting a beautiful black and white scarf. Of course, to me it was beautiful. At the end of the month the teacher collected all the projects to send overseas. I remember as a grade two student crying, not wanting to part with this scarf that I had knitted for the Red Cross effort. However, I did part with it. You will be happy to know, Mr. Speaker, I can still knit today thanks to the Red Cross training that I received in the primary grades.

I am sure the Minister would not mind if I added to her comments about the importance of the Junior Red Cross movement in Canada. As a former educator, I know the importance of the Junior Red Cross movement. Classes can elect their own president, vice president, secretary, and treasurer. This teaches excellent leadership. Anything the class decides is again helping children in less advantaged countries.

Today there is an excellent program called "Child Alive". Students put together a package that contains water, salt, baking soda, and sugar. This package costs 10 cents. By contributing 10 cents to this package, children are saving thousands of lives through this rehydration program. The sole purpose of this little package is to help children who are dehydrated. This rehydration program saves thousands of lives.

Another excellent program with which the Minister would be pleased and impressed is the "Spellathon" program. Students collect pledges for the number of words they can spell. The money raised goes toward human development projects around the world. Those are only two of many projects in which the Junior Red Cross of Canada is involved.

I would also like to recognize the Youth Department of the Canadian Red Cross. That Department is involved in international youth exchanges. I was very pleased to hear that there will be such an exchange and a youth conference to be held in Solferino, Italy. Why is it important that students from around the world meet in Solferino, in northern Italy? Back in 1859 Henri Dunant, a Swiss, saw the thousands of wounded soldiers on the battlefield in pain, agony, and dying. He got a group of people together to do something for the wounded during the wars. This was the beginning of the world Red Cross movement.

I am very pleased that the International Red Cross movement will be hosting such a conference in Solferino with hundreds of youths gathering there from all over the world. I understand our Canadian students will be exchanging visits with African students, Italian students, and others. I know of no better organization than the Red Cross to develop "international students". Our students become international students through this type of movement.

Through two World Wars the Red Cross has operated at risk to its members to alleviate the suffering that results from conflict between countries and within the boundaries of any given country. It has transcended location, race, religion, culture, and language. It has transcended all those factors that create strife, and has succeeded with continuing aid from different countries.

What Surgeon Major George Sterling Ryerson had in mind when he first founded the Canadian Red Cross during the Northwest rebellion in 1885, has blossomed into a movement that involves every single one of us Canadians, man, woman and child. On a daily basis we hear of wars and civil strife in every part of our world, and then we hear of the Red Cross efforts. As much as possible it gives us some comfort that the suffering and pain is not ignored. If the Red Cross is active, some of the pain and suffering will be dealt with in an effective and compassionate manner.

When the bombing in Lebanon escalated, CIDA worked in conjunction with the Red Cross to distribute food, clothing, and medical aid to the people suffering from the increased fighting. On this side of the House, we urged for more help. We asked that more assistance be given to those people who had fled Beirut for neighbouring countries, because the Red Cross cannot do it alone. It needs international help.

On this side of the House, we are disappointed that there will not be an increase in moneys that we can offer the Red Cross to continue its effort. We are disappointed, as are all Canadians, that the Canadian commitment to humanitarian aid is not as strong as we had hoped. I know that this is no fault of the Minister, because I know that she would like to see the funding go up to .7 of GNP instead of the .43 announced in the Budget. I think we should remind ourselves that poverty and hunger breed anger and hostility, which eventually leads to conflicts and wars. By making an investment now to prevent hunger and poverty we save ourselves billions of dollars and we save this planet billions of dollars.

I would ask the Minister, as a gesture to the important work carried out by this organization, to rescind the cuts that were imposed on CIDA in the last Budget. This would be a gesture that would truly celebrate the 125 years that the Red Cross has been in existence.

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by commending the world organization of the Red Cross on its 125th anniversary. This organization does excellent work both within Canada and overseas to alleviate suffering. It responds to real human needs in the event of natural disasters such as hurricanes and earthquakes, but also carries out the dangerous work in war zones. The work is not only dangerous, it is dirty and depressing.

I had the opportunity to see the commendable work the Red Cross does in Africa under very difficult circumstances.

When I arrived on Parliament Hill this morning and saw the Red Cross flag, flanked by Canadian flags, I remembered the Red Cross flags that I saw in Africa. They were a symbol of hope and a symbol of safety.

I think Canadians should take pride in the kind of contributions we have made to the Red Cross in its efforts to provide medical supplies, clothing and shelter in situations of war and natural disasters.

One aspect of Red Cross work that is not so well known is its work with refugees and prisoners of war. The International Committee of the Red Cross is one of the sole agencies that monitors the treatment of prisoners of war. When I was in Africa I went to a prisoner of war camp with a Red Cross representative, where 7,000 young men were harboured during the last five to seven years. The International Committee of the Red Cross was attempting to repatriate them to their homeland.

It is those kinds of workers to whom we pay tribute today on this 125th anniversary. The same man with whom I visited the prisoner of war camp had just returned from similar work with refugees in El Salvador. He was subjected to bombardment and intimidation by the Government of El Salvador, but that did not stop him because people like him are committed to doing the real work that must be done in situations of war. It is those people who try to alleviate the suffering in those situations to which our geopolitical position has contributed.

While I commend the Minister's tribute to the International Red Cross, and agree that there should be a strong humanitarian gesture, we must also be conscious that we are not simply building a bigger band-aid while cutting funds for real development work that will bring long-term solutions to poverty and suffering. That is exactly what the Government of Canada is doing in its most recent Budget. It has cut funds for overseas development assistance while maintaining constant funds for the type of work done by the International Red Cross.

While I celebrate International Red Cross Day, it is with real sadness because the Government of Canada has reneged on its promise to try to contribute to solving the world's problems in development work. It is only contributing to building a bigger band-aid.

PLANT BREEDERS' RIGHTS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-15, an Act respecting plant breeders' rights.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

INTEREST ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-238, an Act to amend the Interest Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, this Bill is one that I believe is required to deal with the problem with the way interest is calculated by companies selling goods on credit by credit cards. Some companies charge interest, even though there has been partial payment, right back to the date of the purchase of the goods when sending out their invoice for the next period to the holders of the cards. Others just charge back to the original billing date.

This Bill requires all companies to charge only from the billing date and only charge interest on a monthly basis, not on a daily interest basis. The current system of interest charges is, in my view, totally unfair to the consumer. This amendment to the Interest Act is necessary.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

BANK SERVICE CHARGES

Mr. Derek Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 36 to present a petition signed by several people living in the Ottawa area who want to bring to the attention of the Government the fact that bank service charges have been increasing at an average of 19 per cent per year, which is five times the rate of inflation. They argue that voluntary agreements and industry self-regulation have a poor record of success among Canadian corporations. They call upon the Parliament of Canada to pass legislation that would regulate and control bank service charges and provide consumer protection to banking Canadians.

FUNDING FOR SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36 on behalf of a number of Canadians who show that 41 per cent of social assistance recipients in Ontario are children. This percentage is higher in other provinces in Canada.

They point out that in all regions of Canada social assistance recipients live well below the poverty line as defined by Statistics Canada. They are asking Parliament to consider the advisability of increasing funding for social programs that are delivered by the federal Government, transferring payments for programs delivered by the provinces, and working with the provinces to raise social assistance rates to at least the poverty line.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall all questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 52

CHEMICAL WASTE IN FUELS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 52 to request an emergency debate on the impact of chemical waste in fuels on the health of Canadians and on our environment.

Just as Governments and the public have reached a heightened state of understanding of the urgent need to keep toxic and hazardous waste out of the environment, we learn of the organized criminal activity of mixing hazardous chemical wastes such as PCBs and solvents into fuel and selling it to various firms and gas stations.

There is a particularly grisly side to this criminal activity. Canadians have been knowingly exposed to materials shown to cause brain, nerve, liver and skin disorders, and of exposure to toxics known to kill.

These are crimes that involve hundreds of millions of dollars in illegal gains. An emergency debate is absolutely necessary to ensure Canadians of the concern of Parliament, to widen public knowledge of the dangers posed by the tainted fuels, to encourage anyone with knowledge of these life-threatening crimes to contact immediately law enforcement agencies, to awaken Parliament to the need for stronger enforcement and compliance procedures for cradle to grave handling of toxics, to awaken Parliament to the need for follow-up health and environmental impact assessments, and to launch the full force of the law against the criminals before they disappear with their ill-gotten gains.

This is an emergency. I believe that debate is required now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The matter raised by the Hon. Member is no doubt a very important one. Unfortunately, the Chair must find at this time that it does not meet the requirements of Standing Order 52.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I wish to inform the House that because of the Minister's statement, Government Orders will be extended 18 minutes past one o'clock today.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Wednesday, May 3, 1989, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government, and the amendment of Mr. MacLaren that the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "That" and substituting the following therefor:

> "this House regrets that the Government has imposed unfair taxes and has cut vital programs, including child care, regional development and agriculture, in an effort to reduce its annual deficit, despite the fact that this effort has been rendered futile by the Government's ill-conceived high interest rate policy; and
> That this House condemns the Government for pursuing these policies that fall most onerously upon lower and middle-income Canadians and that are certain to hinder the further development of the Canadian economy."

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to take part today in this debate on a Budget that is about responsibility, about the future and about the challenges that Canadians must face in the years to come.

Mr. Speaker, last month the Throne Speech gave us a vision of the future based on economic growth, diminishing disparity, protection of the environment and the preservation of adequate and generous social programs for those who really need them. What we see today in the Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance are the means to achieve those goals.

Today's political reality has changed. Yesterday's politicians—we were not among them, unfortunately—managed abundance. And even after abundance had become a thing of the past, their successors in the early eighties governed as though nothing had changed, which explains the deficit we inherited in 1984 and which we are still struggling to control.

The extent of the deficit made it necessary for us to make some difficult choices. However, those choices produced results. They have helped us to reduce the deficit and bring the inflation rate down to acceptable levels. Thanks to responsible financial management and concrete action, our economic growth rate is one of the highest among the world's major industrialized countries.

Budgetary responsibility and the state of the economy are two concepts that are closely linked. We cannot, Mr. Speaker, neglect one without compromising the other. They have both, however, reached a stage that will be crucial for Canada's future.

At a time when national economies are becoming increasingly open and free trade offers us tremendous scope for development, there are a number of basic conditions that must be met: Canadians must be competitive, they must be trained, and they must be technologically advanced. There is also a broader but nevertheless essential condition: the Canadian economy must be capable of sustained growth.

All this cannot be fully achieved with the kind of deficit we have today and with a national debt that costs us more than one-third of each dollar that we spend.

Mr. Speaker, Members on all sides of the House cherish certain values that are very much of this country. We all believe, for example, that the state must maintain many high-quality social services. We believe that the state must fight regional disparities and that environmental protection remains an absolute priority. We all believe in the need for national standards for the distribution of services.

Well, if we all believe in these objectives, we must ensure that our economy can maintain them. But that is not all, Mr. Speaker. There is also an important question of moral responsibility to future generations. We do not have the right to leave our children in straitened circumstances because of an uncontrollable debt burden.

And the Budget presented to the House by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is not an easy one to present, but it had to be done if responsibility means anything. This Budget is not only forward-looking. It also deals with today's realities, Mr. Speaker. The measures proposed to us by the Finance Minister are a solid foundation for our economic prosperity in the 1990s. The measures to control the deficit and public debt are a key to the future of this country. And the measures designed to establish a framework for long-term economic growth are also essential.

Mr. Speaker, the same reasoning applies to the Department that I direct. Transport has always been the motor of the economy. It is, so to speak, the arteries through which circulate the agricultural commodities, raw materials and finished products that feed this country's economy.

The various modes of transport account for 4.8 per cent of our gross domestic product and 3.9 per cent of our total employment. Every day, 130,000 Canadians travel from one city to another using commercial transport and every day, the Canadian transport system handles 1.9 million tonnes of merchandise of various kinds.

Mr. Speaker, over these last few years, we have been committed to providing Canadians with a transportation system that is first of all safe, reliable and efficient and that in every way promotes the freedom to move which lies at the heart of what Canada is about. Since free trade with the United States is a reality, the contribution of transportation will be even more decisive for our future economic development.

[English]

Pre-confederation Canada had to struggle constantly to meet its transportation challenges. This rugged land of vast spaces needed unifying bonds. Our early needs for unification were met through the realization of Sir John A. Macdonald's grand dream of a transcontinental railway. The openings of the St. Lawrence Seaway and the Trans-Canada Highway in 1959 and 1962 had enormous positive impact on economic development and transportation. Our expanding airways and communications have reduced the size of the country. We are all now truly neighbours in this great nation.

Transportation must continue to play its vital role as we enter the next decade and the next century. In looking forward I see a transportation system with at least these four essential elements.

First, it will be safe. Second, it will be efficient and effective. That is to say it will make the best use of each mode of transportation: air, rail, marine, car, truck and bus. Third, it will be responsive. That is to say it will meet the needs of shippers and travellers. Fourth, it will be innovative, both in the use of technology and in the service it offers.

How do we achieve this vision? Our action plan for transportation has many parts. First and foremost, as always, it has to be safe. Safety will never be compromised. Canada already has an excellent safety record, but we must be vigilant. We must seize every possible opportunity to improve it.

• (1140)

Having said that, we have implemented over the last four years strong legislation and measures to ensure the safety of those who use our transportation.

[Translation]

In 1985, we passed amendments to the Aeronautics Act. In 1987, we proposed improvements to the Canada Shipping Act. Last year, we presented new legislation on rail transport safety.

Furthermore, we have negotiated a national safety code for trucks and buses with the provinces, for which we pay a large part of the costs.

Finally, on April 7 in this House, I tabled Bill C-2 to create an independent multimodal board of inquiry for transportation accidents. The Standing Committee is now considering this Bill and we hope, Mr. Speaker, that it will be passed soon.

Our constant concern for transportation safety is also reflected in the Budget of the Finance Minister (Mr. Wilson). No safety-related activity has been reduced as a result of budgetary decisions.

[English]

Our action plan does include the transportation items in the Budget now before us. The objective of the branch line rehabilitation program to improve and upgrade the rail branch line system for western grain has largely been achieved so the program is being terminated one year earlier than planned. This will ensure that more innovative and cost-effective ways of transporting western grain will be developed.

The Budget also proposes to end the At and East grain and flour rail subsidy program. The At and East subsidy has outlived its original purpose which was to assist in the competitive development of Canadian routes and ports for export trade. Our Canadian ports are now successful and can compete effectively against their U.S. counterparts. Therefore, this subsidy is a non-essential expense to the taxpayers of Canada and its elimination is consistent with our commitment to sound transportation policy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, as we called on all areas of Government to take on a share caused by the deficit, we decided to stop the pattern of ever increasing subsidies given to VIA Rail. Indeed, Canadians can no longer afford to pay an average $100 every time someone takes a train, a service that only represents 3 to 5 per cent of all inter-city travel in Canada, and further, 25 per cent of Transport Canada's budget.

The Government expects the financial and operational performance of VIA Rail to improve and function in a more cost effective manner. To begin the process of rationalizing the operations of VIA Rail in a most cost effective new regime of rail passenger service, the reference levels for VIA Rail have been reduced to $541 million this year and will continue to be reduced further in the years to come.

Now that the reference levels have been established, VIA Rail will prepare a new business plan that respects the new fiscal realities that Canadians can afford. However, service to truly isolated communities will be maintained.

The Government has distinguished itself during the past four years through fiscal responsibility and judicial allocation of the federal-provincial financial resources. When money is scarce it is spent where it is most needed, where it is most likely to produce results.

Improved efficiency in the way transportation is managed will give rise to better co-ordination, particularly in the surface mode. We are developing a wide multi-modal approach that will allow better co-ordination of transportation. Close co-operation with all modes, especially surface is essential when planning our marine transportation policy.

Cost recovery in marine transportation is an issue of vital importance to my Department.

We are now developing a cost-recovery policy for marine and other modes of transportation to support deficit reduction and overall system efficiency. Such a policy will be responsible and fair, and will be finalized only after full consultation with the industry.

[Translation]

This increased demand, Mr. Speaker, has come at a price. As a result— Mr. Speaker, I shall go back— Fortunately, I am coming to the air sector, where demand, as you know, has grown tremendously in recent years. So much so, Mr. Speaker, that I have skipped over some of my papers!

Air carriers have done what they had to do. They have been extremely innovative, they have replaced outdated equipment, they have changed service levels and their operating strategy. They have also implemented many ways to improve system efficiency.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this increase has also come at a price—a serious congestion problem. The industry is always asking us to increase airport capacity, to clear more aircraft for takeoff and landing and to give priority to commercial flights.

This increase in air traffic has aroused some public concern, especially regarding safety and noise pollution and also level of service and fares.

But we must say that the answer to the problem of increased air traffic must take account of divergent concerns and interests. However, we do intend to consult both the public and the industry to find answers and solutions.

[English]

In this regard, the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Martin) and I met extensively with many groups and individuals in the Toronto area about congestion at Pearson International Airport. The construction of Terminal 3 will alleviate some congestion and inconvenience but numerous problems remain. We are preparing an overall strategy to resolve the problems that air travellers are experiencing throughout southwestern Ontario. This type of approach will also be taken in seeking solutions to capacity problems at Vancouver International Airport.

The initiatives that we are proposing, and those we shall put forward in the coming months, will be dictated by the imperatives of the Budget in addition to renewed concern for ensuring transportation safety and efficiency.

There are many other issues that I would hope to deal with here but what is important in today's debate is to consider the facts and the reality of the measures that are contained in the Budget statement.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Government has shown that while preparing the future, we have not neglected the essential needs of the present.

I asked Canadians to look at the facts. I also ask them, when they judge this Budget, to consider the spirit in which it was made. The reason we are taking difficult measures today is that we are managing an inheritance bequeathed to us by others. Personally, I do not wish to leave future governments a fiscal heritage like the one we had in 1984 and which we will have to grapple with for many more years.

We are convinced, as we have shown in the past, that responsible management of public finances is much better than a short-sighted policy. What is at issue here, Mr. Speaker, is whether we wish to maintain the Canada we know and of which we are proud: a country committed to growth, to reducing inequalities, to compassion for the less fortunate, a country that wants to face the challenges of the environment, peace and openness to the world with firmness and generosity.

These challenges are not one Government's alone, Mr. Speaker. They belong to a whole generation of Canadians in every walk of life who have a basic responsibility: to leave their children as much opportunity for development as we had.

• (1150)

[English]

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, again this morning we have a Minister of the Crown supporting this Budget because he says it is necessary to deal with the deficit. I want to ask the Minister, who was a member of the Cabinet before the election, where was he during the pre-electoral period last summer and during the election campaign when the Government was making promises and commitments in the amount of $17 billion? The Government did not mention the deficit during the election campaign and did not mention any requirement for cutting programs—old age pensions, family allowances or unemployment insurance. As a matter of fact, the Government said the opposite during that period of time. The Government did not alarm the country with the problem of the debt or the deficit. Immediately after the election the Tories discovered the deficit. They discovered this deficit and then in the Budget before this House, the Tories have brought in drastically increased taxation and severe cuts in important programs for Canadians.

I want to ask the Minister, and I put it to him straight, as a member of the Cabinet for the last three or four years, and especially as a member of the Cabinet last summer in the pre-electoral period and during the election campaign, is he telling the Canadian people and this House that he was not aware of the deficit, that he was not aware of the national debt, that he was not aware of the need to curtail expenses and to deal with the economic situation? Is he telling Canadians that he only knew about this problem after the election?

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I have been a member of this Cabinet since 1984 and with very great pride. Since 1984 we have had to cope with a deficit that we inherited from a Government which played a major part in the development of that deficit long before 1984.

Mr. Allmand: That is why you made $17 billion in promises.

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): The Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) is one of the most experienced former Ministers of the former Government. He knows very well how his Government wasted the people's money from 1970 on, but particularly in 1984.

I said in my speech that the 1970s were the years of abundance. Money was spread everywhere without for one minute having in mind what would happen after that period of time. What we faced in 1984 was a $38 million deficit which had to be reduced. It has been reduced and that is the bottom line.

In four years, the Liberal Party created a debt of about $225 billion. We tried to reduce it and we have succeeded. But it is obvious that we could not cure all the illnesses that the former Government created over 15 or 20 years.

The Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce knows, because he was in this House of Commons as I was, that almost every day, every week since 1984, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) or other Ministers have raised the problem of the deficit which we have been able to lower.

Mr. Allmand: It was $17 billion in promises.

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): That is why Canadians made their decision on November 21. They knew what we did. They knew what the Liberals did previously. That is why we are still on this side of the House. I think you have your answer, Mr. Speaker. Canadians had confidence in 1984 and 1988 because they believed that what we did then we will continue to do. We will carry on. When we look at the reality of today we see it is a tough, responsible Budget. We do not look back at yesterday. We need people for today and tomorrow.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) and his three predecessors made statements about providing VIA Rail with new locomotives which they have done, and new rolling stock which would put VIA Rail in a position of cost recovery and reduce its dependency on the national treasury by $300 million to $400 million a year. He and his three incompetent predecessors have spent more money fixing up old passenger cars than what it would cost to purchase new ones. When will the Minister put an end to that nonsense and exercise some sound business practices in the operation of VIA Rail?

Mr. Milliken: After they close it down.

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, this Government and the previous Government have spent $5.4 billion since 1977.

Mr. Benjamin: Good money after bad.

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): I listened to the Member, I hope he will listen to me. Since 1984 we have added $1.2 billion and $600 million in capital to that. We face the same prospect in 1989 as we did in 1984. The question is not what kind of service we give first but what amount of money we can afford to spend on a mode of transportation which only 3 per cent of Canadians use. We have a limited budget. The Member knows that. The NDP always have money to spend, because it is not expensive for them. We told people we had an explosion in air travel and many other modes of transport but not in passenger rail transportation. Six million Canadians have travelled. Twenty-five per cent of all money expended is on air service compared with 3 per cent of Canadians using rail passenger service. We have to face the reality of today and decide on the most effective way of spending the money allocated in the Budget for the DOT. We will spend $541 million, $435 million, $395 million, $275 million and $250 million on rail passenger service over the next five years.

[Translation]

Mr. Assad: Mr. Speaker, my comments are directed to the Minister of Transport. I would like to raise a local issue, and I am referring to Western Québec. I am aware that there has been a lot of correspondence between the Minister and the Québec Minister of Transport. Even his own colleague—she agrees with me—even his own colleague from Argenteuil—Papineau (Mrs. Bourgault) raised the matter of Highway 50, which is essential to the economic development of Western Québec. In 1972, a federal-provincial agreement provided for the construction of the section from Hull to Buckingham. Subsequently, there were annual attempts to obtain another federal-provincial agreement. The Minister is getting a lot of mail. He has heard Québec's views on the subject. Since his own colleague and the Government of Québec are requesting it, why can he not consider the possibility of negotiating a federal-provincial agreement for the extension of Highway 50 to Lachute and Mirabel Airport?

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I agree we have had a lot of correspondence on the matter with the Government of Québec. The federal Government, however, is not primarily responsible for highways. That responsibility lies with the Government of Québec, which is entirely free to build roads as it sees fit. If it wants to build the section between Masson and Lachute, it is entirely free to do so. The real problem is the agreement. There is an agreement between Québec and the federal Government that was signed in 1985 and expires in 1990, and we shall see whether the agreement is renewed next year. The fact remains that the Government of Québec never made Highway 50 a priority, and not only that, it has always stated, through Mr. Côté, that development of this section of Highway 50 would have to be done under an agreement. I must say I share that view. This means that we will first see whether the agreement is renewed in 1990, and if that is the case, the Government of Québec will tell us exactly what its priorities are.

In the list produced by Mr. Côté, Highway 30 was higher than Highway 50 and involved a federal contribution of $100 million for a bridge over the St. Lawrence Seaway near Valleyfield.

I am not saying that Highway 50 will not be built but, I repeat, Québec will have to define its priorities under a new agreement, and when it does, we will see what happens. I repeat, it is a mistake to think that the Government of Québec is not free to build. In fact, it is the province's responsibility. The federal Government is not responsible for roads. That is Québec's responsibility.

You will notice that I did not approach this subject in my speech because roads are a provincial responsibility. I am not saying it will not be done, but it will have to be done under an agreement to be negotiated at a later date.

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, on April 27, Canadians and the people of Prince Edward Island woke to the news that the federal Budget had been leaked after the alleged theft of one of its documents. Now, as the effects of this Budget slowly begin to sink in, I can tell the Government one thing for sure. The people of my province wish that the entire Budget had been stolen and never found.

Nevertheless, critics and commentators have been coming up with the winners and the losers in this year's Budget. It is not hard to figure out into which category the Province of Prince Edward Island fits. The Government's Budget has hit every aspect of the Prince Edward Island economy. The most brutal blow came from the announcement that CFB Summerside was listed for closure.

The impact of this callous decision is yet to be fully realized. Yet, together with the increases in personal income tax, increases in excise tax, increases in the federal sales tax, cut-backs in regional development, cut-backs in the funding of hospitals and education, and the list is never-ending, Islanders are the real losers. The Government's plan to introduce a national sales tax in 1991 will place another burden on the Island's fragile economy. All in all, the 1989 federal government Budget is devastating to the Province of Prince Edward Island.

When the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), was last in Prince Edward Island, he spoke in Summerside during the fall election campaign. He spoke to the area's senior citizens. He commended the gathering, advising them that they personified the core values on which this nation was built. He identified those values as being the family, the community and the country. These values also represent the heart and soul of Prince Edward Island, but it is these values which have been most abused by the recent Budget.

Islanders are proud of their heritage and their role in Canada's development. Our motto reads, "The small under the protection of the great". After this Budget, our motto should be changed to read, "The small left to fend for itself".

Prince Edward Island was thrown into a state of disbelief when it was confirmed that CFB Summerside was slotted for closure. One cannot image the impact this decision had on the Prince Edward Island economy. It appears that every aspect of our life will be seriously affected by the closure of the Summerside base.

The Canadian Forces Base at Summerside cannot close. The Government must be held accountable for this decision. The process whereby this decision was made is as questionable as the end result. There were no consultations. There were no warnings. Islanders were stunned by this news, and as the reality of the decision hit home, so did the reality of the cost.

The base closure will remove over $50 million annually from the economy of Prince Edward Island. The job losses will be astronomical. In fact, 1,300 jobs will be lost or 10 per cent of the whole Summerside and area population. The figure of 1,300 refers to jobs directly affiliated with the base. Another 2,000 indirect jobs are at stake if the federal Government closes CFB Summerside.

As my colleague, the Hon. Member for Egmont (Mr. McGuire), asked in his question to the Prime Minister last week, how can the Prime Minister possibly justify the closure of the only military base in the province? Is Prince Edward Island, a province within Canada's federation, not entitled to participate and fairly share in the economic activity generated through the defence efforts of our country? CFB Summerside is the only military base in the province, and to remove it as proposed is effectively to say to Islanders that the Government does not recognize its obligations. My colleagues from the Island and I are determined to recognize our obligations and to represent the interests of our constituents. The decision to close the Summerside base is completely unacceptable.

The federal Government has devalued life on Prince Edward Island. After the news about the base was out, property values plummeted overnight. Numerous property deals have fallen through and the phones in Summerside real estate offices are now painfully silent. The burden that has been placed on Islanders is monumental.

This Government must be made to understand that it cannot pull tens of millions of dollars out of the Prince Edward Island economy without any thought for the people that it will so drastically affect. It is the Canadian people who my colleagues and I on this side of the House are most concerned about. Like all Canadians, however, Islanders are forced to deal with the Budget realities as they affect the individual. We must deal with them in conjunction with our economic disparity and the pending doom of the CFB Summerside closure.

The Island's three major industries will be affected by this year's tax increases and budget cuts. Farming, fishing and tourism will all suffer because of the Budget. The changes in the personal income tax, the federal sales tax hikes, the unemployment insurance program changes, the reduction in transfer payments, cuts to regional development programs will all contribute to make life more difficult for the individual Islander.

One of the hardest hit industries is agriculture, the main industry in my riding. It remains the most important sector of the Island's economy. Yet the Government has chosen to attack this industry. In Prince Edward Island, the Government's slashing adds up to enormous losses in revenue for the farmers. To give you some examples, the elimination of the interest subsidy on the Advance Payments for Crops Act amounts to an annual rebate loss of $350,000 to the farmers of Prince Edward Island. This program provides producers of storable crops with interest-free government guaranteed loans at harvest time. The objective is to ensure that producers can obtain cash in advance from lenders on the strength of their marketable crops.

Just this morning, Mr. Speaker, I received a letter from the Prince Edward Island Vegetable Growers Co-operative. They are very concerned about this amendment to the Advance Payments for Crops Act. I want to share some of those concerns with this House, and I quote:

> The ACPA is the tool that provides the necessary financing to the producer allowing them to store product rather than placing it on the market at harvest time and depressing prices at that time and during the rest of the season. Since government supports orderly marketing and import replacements, it should not abandon a program that has been instrumental and successful in achieving these goals.

This loan will no longer be available on an interest-free basis which means that the producer, the farmer, will lose. The farmers are also being penalized as a result of the Government's phasing out of the fuel tax rebate program. The reduced rebate on the gasoline and diesel fuel totals approximately $450,000 in lost revenue to the farmers of Prince Edward Island in any year. That is an annual loss of $450,000. We cannot forget that the farmers will also be subject to the same tax increases, the personal surcharge, the federal sales tax, the excise tax, as they are all Canadians. It appears that this Government is eroding those things which identify our province as Prince Edward Island.

Crop insurance, an important factor for farmers, was targeted in the Budget as being under negotiation. This means that the federal Government hopes to place a greater burden on the provincial Government in cost sharing for crop insurance. This would add up to approximately half a million dollars a year in contributions from the Prince Edward Island's provincial purse. Tourism contributes approximately $100 million annually to the Prince Edward Island economy. It employs roughly 11,000 people. On Prince Edward Island we do not have a large industrial base. We do not have oil or vast natural resources. But we do know how to treat tourists. We are good at it, as the numbers that I have just indicated show. Tourism is helping my province catch up to the rest of Canada to ensure a fair standard of living for our people. But the federal Government's failure to renew the $11 million tourism and marketing agreement will mean fewer tourists. Add to this the Government's additional $5 million reduction in international tourism marketing efforts, and you will see why Islanders feel threatened, why they feel frustrated and why they feel angry at this Government.

This Government has cast a shadow on the long-term future of tourism in Prince Edward Island throwing this province open to long-term pain. In the ACOA estimates, the Government says in the short term, and I quote:

> There will be significantly less funds for Atlantic regional development than has been planned.

Add these two facts together and you get the theme of this Budget: Short-term pain for long-term pain.

The many beaches which dot Prince Edward Island's coastline also shore the Island's other industry, fisheries. Yet this is another target which will be hurt in the name of the Government's deficit control. Like farmers, fishermen will also suffer as a result of the Budget's elimination of the rebate on gasoline and diesel fuel. The money allocated to the Department of Fisheries and Oceans for small crafts and harbours is just not enough. Again it is the fishermen who will suffer.

This past weekend, Mr. Speaker, the effects of this Government's under-funding hit home. Last Friday two lobster boats were caught in the silt due to lack of dredging in my riding. This Budget is inadequate. More funding is imperative to maintain the wharfs and properly dredge the harbours so that our fishermen will be safe and secure.

The security of Islanders, of all Canadians, has been affected by the decision to reduce transfer payments to the provinces. The growth rate reduction on established program funding of 1 per cent every year for the next five years represents an erosion of federal support to Prince Edward Island for health and post-secondary education. It amounts to $1 million in 1990 to 1991 and $1.5 million in 1991 and 1992. It seems that the federal Government is trying to pass its debt on the provinces.

As for health care, this amounts to reducing the deficit on the backs of the ill. The federal Government has also cut the funding to universities at a time when our future depends so heavily on the educated workforce.

For a Government which ran an election campaign on managing change and preparing Canada for the future, its commitment to ensuring quality health care, research and education is questionable to say the least. However, the Government does appear to be committed to dipping further and further into the pockets of individuals across Canada. It has increased surtax from 3 per cent to 5 per cent on incomes under $50,000. It has increased tax on long distance phone calls. It has increased tax on cable television. It has increased excise taxes. It has increased federal sales tax. It has increased tax on gasoline. The list goes on and on. All of those increases have a notable effect on the personal disposable incomes of Canadians.

There are many people in my riding who are barely making it from one pay-cheque to the next. How will they be able to cope with all those tax increases?

The Government's reformed unemployment insurance is making Canadians pay higher premiums, and making the unemployed pay for their own training. I feel that the poor and the unemployed should not be required to finance retraining schemes that are the responsibility of the federal Government.

The Conservative Government promised many training programs to help those who lost their jobs because of the Free Trade Agreement. They were promised, but now those promises have evaporated and the programs have disappeared. Instead, the Government will finance those promises by taking money from those who can least afford it.

The federal Government's new sales tax is not so national. The Government was unable to secure the agreement of the other provinces. Therefore, in 1991 the feds will be going it alone. This new sales tax will apply to haircuts, drycleaning, and a long list of items that have never been taxed before. It will also apply to transportation, which will amount to a tax on distance. Islanders are distant from the great economic hub of central Canada. The Government is penalizing us for our geographic location.

In closing I should like to say that I hope the Government will come to terms with the severity of the Budget, and recognize the unbearable and unreasonable burden that it has placed on the people of Prince Edward Island.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On questions and comments, the Minister of State for Finance.

Mr. Loiselle: I would like to tell the Hon. Member for Malpeque (Ms. Callbeck) that I do not share her somber view of the effect of this Budget, which the Hon. Member will find out in time is a very good Budget. The Government has never hidden the fact that it is a difficult and a severe Budget, and with that I would agree with the Hon. Member.

The Hon. Member will certainly agree with me that the country is facing a most difficult and serious situation, and we have to tackle it. In a certain way the remarks of gloom and doom reminded me of the remarks we heard on that side of the House four years ago after the presentation of the first Budget of the Mulroney Government. We heard about recession. I believe the Hon. Member for Malpeque would agree with me that far from recession, we went through an outstanding period of economic success and job creation. I would like to challenge the Hon. Member to discuss this again in the coming years. She will see that her province has not been hit as she attempted to tell us this morning.

I would like to remind the Hon. Member that in all the programs to which she has referred, equalization programs and regional development programs, and so on, the amount of money which will be passed on to the provinces will be increased. Therefore, it is difficult to see that the Budget could have the very negative impact discussed by the Hon. Member. The worst thing that could happen to Prince Edward Island and the other provinces would occur if we were not to tackle the very serious situation we are in. We are very confident that the measures we have taken will cause the interest rates to come down, will diminish the inflationary pressure, and will eventually create conditions where everybody in Canada, including those in Prince Edward Island, will benefit.

If none of the necessary cuts that we have made are to the particular liking of the Hon. Member, I would like her to indicate to us what type of programs we should diminish in order to face the deficit and the national debt.

Ms. Callbeck: I thank the Hon. Member for his question. I have been trying to point out that the people of Prince Edward Island feel that this Budget is unfair in that they have been asked to share a too large and unreasonable part of the burden.

Islanders are certainly fair-minded people. They do not mind doing their part as Canadians to help achieve the national goals such as deficit reduction. I am saying that the Budget is too much of a price to pay. It is apparent to Islanders that the longer they have for the Budget to sink in, the more they will be paying than their fair share. This is what we object to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On questions and comments, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South.

Mr. Blenkarn: I was pleased to listen to the Hon. Member for Malpeque (Ms. Callbeck). I was wondering where she stood on a couple of issues that are important for economic development in her province. As the Hon. Member knows, there has been a proposal for a fixed link which would substantially improve tourism. There seems to be a bit of reticence in her province to go ahead with that, even though it could be financed privately, but with the assistance of the Government.

Second, there was a provision where we were prepared to assist in financing further nuclear power through Laprade 2 in New Brunswick, or even the first Laprade effort there.

Where does the Hon. Member stand with respect to nuclear power? It would substantially cut the hydro electric power costs to people on the Island, and improve the economy of farming, and the economy of the Island generally. These issues would improve the quality of life of Islanders. They have been proposed. Where does the Hon. Member stand on those types of things that would build a bigger pie?

Ms. Callbeck: I thank the Hon. Member for his questions. As the Hon. Member knows, there was a lot of discussion on the fixed link during the election campaign. I stated then that I agreed with the fixed link, but the agreement was conditional on addressing the environmental concerns, and that the people who worked with CN Marine had to be treated fairly, as did the Town of Borden.

Is the Hon. Member aware at the moment that there is an IRAP panel that has been appointed? The names were released last week. It will be holding hearings on the Island within the very near future. I believe the hearings will commence in June.

We do have the highest electricity rates in Canada. That affects our industry, farming, fisheries, and processing. I would be very pleased indeed to sit down and discuss any idea that would help lower those rates on Prince Edward Island.

• (1230)

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member referred to the goods and services tax that will come into effect in early 1991. She said the fact that the provinces did not come on stream with us for a national sales tax was an indication that our tax was not good.

I remind her that any such tax reform, in any case, is a very difficult thing to achieve. When there are 10 provinces that already have a sales tax which works, I must say, much more fairly than ours, it is not an easy achievement. Many of the provinces, such as Alberta, were not at all keen to come on stream. We could not wait forever.

I remind her that the present federal sales tax does exist and is presently paid by the taxpayers of her province. It is a very negative tax, which has a very negative impact. All the indications we have at this stage are that as a result of the general sales tax the East, particularly her province, would profit from that reform. Could she comment on that particular aspect?

Ms. Callbeck: Mr.Speaker, I have not been privy to any of those figures. I believe this new tax will hit the consumers. It is a regressive tax because it will hit the poor people the most.

Ruth Robinson, President of the Consumers' Association of Canada, said that she believed the Government is waging its crusade against the deficit on the backs of the consumer, that the Budget amounts to a staggering consumption tax grab, and that it is lower and middle-income people who will suffer. I would be interested to see those figures.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Continuing debate. The Hon. Member for Saint-Jean (Mr. Couture) has the floor.

Mr. Clément Couture (Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, Canada must take up the major challenge of reducing the deficit and the national debt.

We are quite partial to our social programs, our high standard of living, economic freedom, sovereignty at home and respect abroad. That is the kind of Canada we must leave to our children and we will do so if we face in a united and positive fashion the most important challenge confronting us.

We are faced in Canada with a major problem: an enormous and growing public debt. The interests on that debt are also increasing at a rapid rate. Only 20 years ago, to service the debt it only cost 12 cents out of every dollar which Canadian taxpayers paid to Ottawa. Four and a half years ago, it had already gone up to 32 cents out of every dollar. This year, it will exceed 35 cents.

Twenty years ago, Canada had no deficit and the national debt amounted to only $18 billion. In those days, we could easily afford the costs of servicing our debt.

It is in 1970 that the problem of annual deficit really started. Although relatively small at first, the deficit kept increasing from year to year, so that in 1984-85, the annual deficit exceeded $38 billion and the natinal debt had reached a record high of $233.5 billion. The reality which characterizes a debt is that it perpetuates itself. Each year, taxpayers provide new revenues a large part of which serves only to pay the interests on a growing debt. Future generations would never be able to pay off this debt if we allowed this situation to worsen.

Mr. Speaker, our Government has decided to take steps to end this mortgaging of our future by using available resources to reduce the annual deficit to less than $15 billion by 1993.

This will contribute to a progressive reduction of the public debt. We have managed to reduce the growth rate of the debt, from 24 per cent as it was in 1984, to less than 10 per cent last year. In spite of this effort, the debt continues to grow faster than our national revenues. On April 1 this year, our national debt amounted to $320 billion.

The recent rise in interest rates both in Canada and abroad illustrates the vulnerable situation in which this enormous debt is placing us. In only one year, the costs resulting from the interest on our debt have increased by over $6 billion. This year, we are going to pay $39 billion in interest. This has to stop, and the sooner the better.

In its Budget the Government proposes some concrete measures. In a climate of sustainable economic growth which is of major importance, the Government proposes to limit its expenditures and increase its revenues. It has decided not to purchase nuclear submarines. It has already closed seven military bases and will limit the activities of seven others, which will represent a saving of $2.7 billion from 1989 to 1994. It has cut its subsidies to VIA Rail by at least $100 million per year for the next four years. It has cut its subsidies to the CBC by $10 million per year for the next five years. The total costs of the unemployment insurance program is now fully supported by both employees and employers.

However, in periods of extreme hardship, the Governement would only support the fund if it faced a deficit thereby realizing a net saving of $600 million.

The government will reduce the growth of transfer payments to the provinces beginning in 1990-91, but equalization payments to lower-income provinces will remain. These equalization payments totalled $5.4 million in 1984-85. They will increase by 35 per cent in 1989-90 to $7.3 million.

With regard to foreign aid, over a five-year period, the government will reduce the growth of its expenditures by about $1.7 billion.

The government has also taken some steps to increase its revenues. These decisions are always hard to make, but are necessary given our present situation.

Taxes on gasoline and cigarettes are going up, bringing in an additional $1.6 billion. Canada Post, now under a dynamic and healthy management, will be paying a dividend to the government. Taxes will be levied on corporate capital in excess of $10 million. The surtax will increase by 2 per cent beginning July 1, 1989, and an additional surtax of 3 per cent will be applied to taxpayers with annual income in excess of $70,000.

On January 1, 1991, the government will replace the existing federal sales taxe with a Goods and Services Tax at a rate of 9 per cent. The existing sales tax suffers from three failings: it has been called a porous tax, because it is an increasingly unreliable source of revenues for the federal government; it is hidden from consumers; and is damaging to the Canadian economy, since it is limiting economic growth and job creation.

The new 9 per cent tax will be paid on most goods and services, except basic groceries, prescription drugs, medical devices, residential rents, loans, mortgages, life-insurance premiums, most health and dental services, including hospital and home services, daycare, legal aid and most educational services. Measures will be introduced to make implementation fair and simple.

• (1240)

As for small businesses, the Government proposes to give them fees for collecting the tax. Over half a million small businesses won't have to collect this tax.

Charities and non-profit organizations funded to a large extent by the state will benefit from a generous reduction of the tax owing on their purchases.

Sales of food from farmers and fishermen will be tax-exempt. In addition, the Governement will vote a special measure guaranteeing that the tax will not make new housing unaffordable and sales of existing homes will not be taxed. It will also give a partial discount to municipalities, universities, schools and hospitals, so that tax reform does not increase their tax burden.

The Government wants its new strategy to promote equity. That is why it is committed to ensuring that the new tax is more equitable to low-income Canadians than the present system. It will enhance the present sales tax credit by making it refundable, even if low-income taxpayers do not have any income tax to pay. Moreover, the credit will be paid four times a year. This new tax on goods and services will benefit people throughout the country.

The Government's objective is to ensure that families earning less than $30,000 a year will be better off after all thoses measures, including the tax on goods and services, have been implemented.

That measure, which is aggressive, economically sound and fair to the disadvantaged, will help the Governement reduce its deficit and therefore its accumulated debt.

The Government also announced a 35-per-cent increase in regional development aid over the next five years in comparison with the last five years.

Our Budget is a serious one and forced us to make difficult choices and to make decisions affecting the majority of Canadians while protecting the least fortunate. It's the middle term between reducing the annual deficit and the debt and sustaining economic growth.

Both sides of the House must join forces to reduce the debt and the deficit and to finally eliminate that major problem.

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Saint-Jean (Mr. Couture) for his statement and in particular for the information he gave us concerning the new tax on products and services and the explanation he gave us regarding how it will be applied. We hear a lot of nonsense about this modern tax which is in effect in most industrial countries. And I would like to remind you that this tax, in any event, makes those who spend the most pay and certainly protects those with more modest incomes because it will be accompanied by very significant tax credits so that a couple whose income is less than $30,000 will be better off than before.

So I thank him and I would like him perhaps to tell us a little about how it will be applied or the difficulties or solutions to decrease the difficulties it could pose for small businesses.

Mr. Couture: We know to begin with that there will be a little over half a million small businesses that will not be affected at all, that will not have to collect this tax.

We also know that the Government wants to help small business collect this tax by paying for this service. I think, from that, we can certainly say the Government will do everything, will use every means at its disposal to make this tax easy to apply and make it very much to everyone's advantage by replacing the present sales tax that we know.

[English]

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, from the outset I want to say how disappointed I am in the Budget presented by the Conservative Government which is different from the Conservative Party that was running in the election campaign. We saw two different developments occur in the Budget. There were the promises and statements made during the campaign and the reality of what members of the Government did when they came back.

My good friend from the Liberal Party, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand), asked the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) how come he is now concerned about the deficit and debt when during the time of the election campaign he and his colleagues did not say a single thing about it. Yet the debt has doubled since 1984 when the Conservatives were first elected. What a fraud this Government is.

I am amazed at the nerve and cheek of the government Members who stand up and say the wonderful things they will do. They talk about the help they will give to the people of Canada. In that regard I wish to examine some statistics to show what is happening to the rich who are getting away with fiscal murder while the ordinary workers and families of Canada are being squeezed like lemons by a Government which does not give a fig about how they survive.

I find it interesting that in his speech the Minister of Transport never once mentioned the Polar 8, the ice-breaker that was to protect our sovereignty in the North. It was to say to the Americans and the Soviets: "Don't worry, there is our Polar 8. It is our presence and a statement of our sovereignty". Its construction has been stalled for another year. The Government has twice asked the company which is building it to present plans. When I asked the Department about the second plans, I was told they had not received them, even though they were mailed two weeks earlier.

The Government is simply out of control. It is a Government by the rich, of the rich and for the rich. There is no other way to describe it.

I now want to talk about the profits of banks. When the Canadian Commercial Bank went broke the Conservatives came up with $800 million to bail it out. That was $800 million of taxpayers' money which was used to bail out a private bank. I thought that the Tories were free enterprisers. I thought they believed that people have the God-given right to go broke. However, while they bailed out the bank another phenomenon developed. That phenomenon is known as the food bank. Under the Conservatives food banks are just like the bread lines of the 1930s. Yet Members opposite laugh. They think it is funny. The major newspaper in the City of Ottawa has a sign on the side of its trucks which states: "Give to the food bank", as if it were some institutionalized charity in which everyone should get involved. We did not have food banks 10 years ago.

If the food banks asked for $800 million to bail them out so that people could eat, would the Government provide the money? The answer is no. Its priorities are mixed up. Financial institutions that go broke do not deserve any help from the Government. What the food banks should do is change their names. They should call themselves the Canadian Commercial Bank and then they will receive $800 million to bail them out. What an indignity, what a loss of self-respect. Every day people line up for food while the Government speaks only for the rich and the large corporations and does not give a fig about ordinary people who are out of jobs, who need work, who need some succour and comfort.

Members opposite did not mention the food banks. They do not mention even a regret that the unemployed are suffering. There is not a word in the Budget about ordinary people who are stuck at the bottom end of the scale.

Yet in actual fact, people are losing ground economically because of the stupid fiscal policies that are geared toward only one sector: the rich. let us look at the Government reports to get a frame of reference of what is happening in this country. I make reference to the labour force features, "Trend in Labour Income", September, 1988, of Statistics Canada. I am referring to page 97, just a quick quote based on the charts that are here. "Over a 13-year period"—four of the last of course have been under the Tories—"growth in wages and salaries did not keep pace with inflation as real average wages and adjusted salaries fell one per cent between 1975 and 1987. After adjusting by the Consumer Price Index, seven of the 12 annual gains in wages and salaries have become losses".

These are the people who are being hit for more taxes. The statistics show that the average wage earner, men and women in this country, over the last 13 years have lost ground in disposable income, lost ground in terms of where they were 13 years ago, and what has happened is more taxes have been added.

Let us look at the impact of taxes on Canadians. Among the working poor, for a family earning $24,000, the taxes between 1984 and 1988 went up under the Conservatives by 44 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Barrett: Forty-four per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Barrett: Is that good for the ordinary person in this country? For a person in a middle income group earning $49,000 a year, the taxes went up 10 per cent.

Here is the pain, here is the suffering, here is the philosophical angst that the Tories have provided.

For an upper income family earning $122,000 a year, under the first four years of the Tory Government the taxes went down by 5.9 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Barrett: This Government is geared toward serving the rich. Let us look at the over-all trend with the impact of this current Budget and incorporate it into 1984 to 1991. Let us go back to the working poor family earning $24,000. With the impact of the new Budget, the working poors' tax increase will go up, in seven years with the old Tory budget and the present one, 60 per cent.

The middle income group, the people earning $49,000 or less, their taxes will go up by 17 per cent. However, do not worry, folks, all the richees out there who are watching their money is being protected by a Government that protects the rich, all those over $122,000 will have a decrease of 6.4 per cent of their share of taxes under this present Budget.

An Hon. Member: Shame on the Tories.

Mr. Barrett: Why does this come about? This comes about because this Government is inextricably bound to the vested interests of the non-competitive wealthy in this country. This is a Government that talks about free enterprise. This is a Government that is always harping about the business of initiative. This is a Government that also defers taxes. if a corporation that has massive profits defers taxes and borrows money to acquire a competing company in order to move into a monopoly position, this Government will allow you to deduct the interest on money borrowed when another company is acquired. It is a capitalist, octopus monopoly approach that guarantees that the wealthy maintain their control of the resources of this country and the devil take the hindmost.

An Hon. Member: They control the Tories.

Mr. Barrett: Certainly they control the Tories. I am coming to that, Mr. Member. I am glad you mentioned that because it is more than just guesswork. Let me read to you how they control the Tories. Here is a list of the people who donate to the Conservative Party. They get their moneys worth. This Government proves the old adage that Canada has the best politicians that money can buy.

Let us take a look at what is being donated here. The Bank of Montreal, $40,000 to the Tories; Banque Nationale de Canada, $47,000 to the Tories. Bombardier Company, $27,300; Brascan, $22,0000; Burns Fry; $64,000; Campeau Corporation, $17,000.

An Hon. Member: They are a bunch of pikers.

Mr. Barrett: Sure they are pikers. We do not see what other money is geared into at local candidates. Does it feel any remorse about taking money from the people being protected? Not at all. It is serving its masters well over there.

It is a big corporation Government and pays back in kind what it gets from these campaign donations.

An Hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Barrett: Let us take a look at this same corporate list of donors and what the corporations are paying. These are profitable companies that pay no taxes. I do not want my colleagues to be upset when I read this list and I do not want to hear from the Government any crocodile tears when it finds out who is really getting hurt. The Liberal party is not much better. Its only anger is that it is not at the same teat that it was before now that it is out of power. It is the same group over there that got money before and served the same master. The only difference between the Liberal Party and the Conservative Party is that one is in power and the other is out. That is all.

In 1986, Alcan Aluminum had profits of $220 million and got a tax credit of $32 million. It did not pay a penny. Brascan had profits of $187 million and a tax credit of $2.3 million. Hees International had a total profit of $170 million. No taxes were paid. Power Financial Corporation had profits of $132 million and a tax credit of $1 million. Wardair had profits of $70 million. No taxes were paid. PWA had profits totalling $39 million. No taxes were paid. Repap Enterprises had a total profit of $34 million. No taxes were paid. Union Carbide Canada had profits of $28 million. No taxes were paid. Vermillion had profits totalling $51 million. No taxes were paid. Cadillac Fairview had profits totalling $37 million and a tax credit of $12 million. Hudson's Bay Company had profits totalling $50 million and a tax credit of $15 million. The list goes on and on. In the list you find page after page of corporate rip-offs of people who are not paying taxes. I did not find one worker from INCO on this list.

I did not find one worker from McMillan Bloedel on this list. I did not find one security guard who gets paid as a civil servant on this list. I did not find one working mother who has three or four children to raise on this list. This is the corporate elite of this country who are being served by a Government that is looking after its interests and its interests alone.

The Minister came in piously in defence of his hypocrisy on the position he took, saying: "Well, things are different now. We did not know during the election campaign how things were." He stands up in his defence, and I find it very interesting, he leans across the House and in his senatorial voice and says: "What would you do about it? What would you do about it? We have got a serious problem over here, what would you do about it?" Is that the defence of this Government?

Of course he would lean over to the Liberal Party and say: "What would you do about it". It would do exactly the same thing.

An Hon. Member: Rubbish.

Mr. Barrett: I will tell you what I would suggest it did before. These tax policies were inherited by the Liberal Party which served the same corporate masters in this country, the same board rooms, the same old gang. It is out of power. The only change that took place was when it had for the first time in years a national leader in the Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) who decided to abandon his Bay Street roots and tell it straight to Canadian people, and the people who knifed him most were not the Tories but his own Party. That is the end of that kind of reform talk in the Liberal Party, you can believe me.

Let us take a look at—

An Hon. Member: What absolute rubbish.

Mr. Barrett: What absolute rubbish? I suffered under Liberal Governments. I know what I am talking about. I have seen Liberal Governments. At least the Tory Party has less guile than the Liberal Party does. It does not make any mistake about it. No mistake about it, it is serving its masters without any complication or soft words. The Liberal Party had always adopted a policy of being left when it is out of office and right when it is in office.

• (1300)

Let us take a look at what is going on for these untaxed corporations and see how their senior leadership is responding to the need for restraint. I want to tell you, my friends, the senior executives have shown a willingness to set an example for the Canadian taxpayer. Let us take a look at the business finance section of The Financial Post dated April 10, 1989. This is how they show restraint when they set up their Chamber of Commerce meetings and stand up and say: "Oh, we have to tighten our belts. Oh, times are tough here in Canada. Oh, yes, we workers cannot ask for more wages. Oh, yes, if you take too much money home then it will just hurt the economy." Let us take a look at the who's who in the $500,000 club in this time of restraint. Do you think they give to the food bank? What was their charity donation to the United Appeal, Mr. Speaker? Here is Mr. Drabinsky, Cineplex-Odeon Corporation who is now earning $3,868,000 a year. The change in last year alone was a 28 per cent increase in salary. There is a great sacrifice. At least he did not take a 35 per cent increase.

Then we go down the list here and let us take a look at another one. Here is a good one. D. J. Phillips, chairman and president, chief executive officer of INCO. He earns $1,993,734. Poor baby, he only got a 12 per cent increase last year. Let us hear it for poor Mr. Phillips. He was hosed.

Let us go down the list some more. Here is another one. William James, chairman and president and chief executive officer of Falconbridge, a company not on our Party's donation list. He earned $1,689,000, a change last year of a 28 per cent increase. I go down this whole list and see 12 per cent, 13 per cent increases. Here is a dandy. Here is a guy, Edward MacDonald, executive vice-president of the Seagram Company, salary, $788,000. He got only a 30 per cent increase in his salary last year.

These are the same industrial barons who control that Government over there, who pay for this Government's election and, at the same time, can hardly take their snoot out of the trough and go for overwhelming increases. They have the unmitigated gall to tell workers and single parents in this country: "We cannot afford to give you any more services. We cannot afford to give you a raise in pay".

Mr. Rodriguez: They all vote Tory.

Mr. Barrett: This is the most crass commitment by any Government toward the power elite.

Two minutes, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Yes.

Mr. Barrett: That is longer than this Government has to stay in office.

I want to read a list to you, in summary, from Statistics Canada of what is really going on in this country based on your own statistics, Sir. I will use my last two minutes to peel off some of these important discoveries.

Three million, six hundred and eight-nine thousand people, or 14 per cent of women, men and children in this country live below the poverty line. Eight hundred and fifty-one thousand, or 12 per cent of all families or 34 per cent of unattached Canadians, have low incomes. Newfoundlanders have the highest poverty rates—22 per cent of all Newfoundlanders—21 per cent of the province's families and 49 per cent of the unattached individuals are poor.

Ontario has the lowest poverty rates, 10 per cent of all persons, 8 per cent of all families. Four in ten Canadian families are headed by women, 38 per cent are poor compared to only one in ten families led by men. No programs for women, cancellation of day care which forces them into poverty levels that the Government's own statistics show are totally inequitable. There are over one million poor children under the age of 16 in Canada, which comes to 17 per cent of the total or one child in six. Of the total of 1,016,000 low income children, 610,000 or 60 per cent live in two-parent families; 361,000 or 35 per cent are in single-parent families. Newfoundland has the highest incidence of child poverty, 26 per cent of children under the age of 16 are poor in the Province of Newfoundland. That is because of the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) who should be renamed the king of closures because of the Free Trade Agreement and the jobs that are lost in this country. Not a word, not a fig, not a mention of the poor. Not a word, not a fig, not a mention of the low income earners in the Budget. You do not give a damn, Mr. Speaker. You do not care about ordinary people. You are just happy you got re-elected and you think it is a big joke to go through another four years of the same hypocrisy.

It is amoral to treat poor Canadians this way. But it is not a problem for this Government because it is an amoral Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blenkarn: Mr. Speaker, my friend went on and on about banks, food banks and compared them to the Canadian Commercial Bank and said something about massive bank bail-outs. Does he not appreciate that the people who were assisted were people who had money on deposit with those banks? They were ordinary folk, small businesses and municipalities. I think his own municipality of Esquimalt had money on deposit in one of those banks. Certainly credit unions had money on deposit. Does the Hon. Member not appreciate what would happen if the Government had not come forward and assisted those people, businesses, boards of education, credit unions, and all the rest?

An Hon. Member: And senior citizens.

Mr. Blenkarn: People in western Canada would have been severely damaged. His attitude is that they should have been damaged, that people in western Canada ought to have been ripped off, damaged and destroyed by the Government not assisting them with banking.

I agree, Mr. Speaker, that having food banks are a disgrace. They are a disgrace because provinces do not use the Canada Assistance Plan to the extent to which they are entitled. This Hon. Member knows that. He was the Premier of a province that did not use the Canada Assistance Plan enough to solve food bank problems. I say to you that he does not know what he is talking about. What he says is great rhetoric in great speeches, but says nothing about the Budget.

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, I hoped that that Hon. Member would have kept his own counsel and said what he said over a cup of coffee.

I would like to talk about the Canadian Commercial Bank. Anything above a guaranteed rate under the Canadian banking insurance program is money lost. If, however, this Government is announcing a policy that it will pay out money lost on those bank accounts, then why did the Government not pay out money to the thousands of people who lost their life savings in Principal Trust? There was a lack of supervision. There was not a peep, not a word from the Government about Principal Trust.

Mr. Blenkarn: Principal Trust was all looked after, every bit of it.

Mr. Barrett: Oh, there it is, Mr. Speaker. All those people who want their money back, just write the Hon. Member and he will see that they get their cheques—everybody out there who is still missing money.

This Hon. Member has the cheek and the nerve that can only be explained by the fact that he does not understand the present Budget. The transfer payments in this Budget are being cut, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nystrom: Transfer payments are being cut back by over $200 million.

Mr. Barrett: I find it interesting that the Tories in their right-wing rhetoric try to blame everything on everyone else. They are going to hand out billions of dollars to the oil companies. They are going to hand out $2 billion to Opsco without even asking for a share in what it is they are investing the money of the Canadian people. Did the Member talk about that? What about the Lloydminster plant and Hibernia? I have nothing against those projects. But why give the money away? If it is Canadian taxpayers' money, then we want a share of those investments, not give it away. The Hon. Member doesn't mention anything about that. We know it is always the poor that they hold up and say should be sacrificed.

The Hon. Member mentioned British Columbia in the 1970s. We were attacked in British Columbia by right-wingers like that Member for spending money on welfare. We had balanced budgets and we did not have food banks in the Province of British Columbia.

This pious nincompoop Government tells the religious communities that they are to feed the poor. Even the religious communities have turned against that kind of selfish, avaricious Government. The Canadian Council of Catholic Bishops issued a statement to the Liberal Government on the same issue. The Liberal Government did not pay attention, to its peril. The situation has now been compounded. The Canadian Council of Catholic Bishops has made very clear what it thinks of Governments that are as amoral as this Government and former Liberal Governments have been, Governments that do not give a fig for ordinary, poor people in Canada.

The people of Canada are restive. They are hearing claptrap from that Hon. Member, a Member I like very much. He is a nice Member in normal circumstances. When I hear that kind of claptrap from him, I realize that he too has missed the message.

We are a lucky people. We are here in Ottawa, well-fed, well-tended to and isolated in Ottawa, but I pointed out to the Hon. Member what is going on in Newfoundland. In the regions, the same poverty exists. The Government has done nothing about poverty. It does not care. It never has cared.

Mr. Soetens: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to the answer to the question that was just asked of the Hon. Member, and the Hon. Member was able to blabber on making all kinds of comments, none of which related to the question. I will try to keep my question rather simple so that the Hon. Member can understand it and perhaps answer it in the same fashion.

The Hon. Member has attacked our Party because we supposedly took all these donations from some businesses that like to support our cause. I would like to ask him about his views on certain issues. Mr. White, a well-known member of the Party of which the Hon. Member is supposedly a member as well, had supplied to him by the CAW a lovely country estate in the Province of Ontario. Mr. White also takes full salary while the union in the province in which he is active is on strike. Most important, in my riding, the local NDP candidate received a donation 12 times greater than that given by any private corporate donor to any Party in my constituency. I would like to know if the Hon. Member really believes that a donation of the magnitude which the CAW contributes to its Party should simply go unannounced and unaudited, or should the CAW go back to its membership to confirm that its members like the political donations it has been making and that its leadership should get all the freebies it gets from the union?

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, I, by the grace of God, am not a poor person. I benefited from parents who worked their way through the depression to provide their children with a good education. I am not embarrassed by the fact that I am successful and modestly wealthy, but I do have a moral commitment to those who are not as lucky as I, and to use that analogy is sheer stupidity. However, I will embark upon some explanation of the Hon. Member's stupidity.

The trade union movement has made a commitment to talk to its members about donations. When was the last time a bank called a meeting of its shareholders to ask if it should give money to politicians? When was the last time Inco sent letters to its shareholders asking permission to give money to the Liberals or the Conservatives? If there is one shareholder in Canada who got such a letter, I would like to see that letter. No such permission is received. The deals are made in the boardrooms of Canada.

In closing, I would like to repeat what has happened to working people by using the Government's own statistics. Over a 13 year period, growth in wages and salaries did not keep pace with inflation. Average wages and salaries fell 1 per cent between 1975 and 1987. After adjusting the consumer price index, seven of the 12 annual gains in wages and salaries became losses. I urge the trade union movement to give more money to the New Democratic Party in order to get rid of this inequity that exists.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to call it one o'clock?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do not leave the Chair until two o'clock.

At 1.15 the House took recess.

VIA RAIL

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, over the weekend the Leader of the New Democratic Party took part in a march to save VIA Rail from the cuts imposed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

I wonder at times, Mr. Speaker, whether the Leader of the New Democratic Party is aware of Canadian realities or whether he is trying to follow into the footsteps of Christopher Columbus and discover America anew! He doesn't know where he is going, he does not know where he is coming from, and all that at the expense of the taxpayers.

Does the Leader of the New Democratic Party realize, Mr. Speaker, that each time a Canadian boards a train, there is a $100 cost to the Government? Does the Leader of the New Democratic Party realize those $100 must be paid by average citizens each time someone boards a train?

Mr. Speaker, we cannot go on spending left and right! If we are to preserve our social programs, we absolutely must reduce the deficit and better control our expenditures.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the International Chamber of Commerce Award to the Prime Minister prompted Fitzhugh Green, the former Deputy Head of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency, to say:

> It's like the devil giving an award for purity.

While the Prime Minister receives accolades abroad, at home through the Budget, he closes 12 conservation and renewable energy offices, phases out the National Conservation and Alternative Energy Initiative Program, cuts transfer payments to the provinces by $340 million, possibly affecting reforestation programs and other environmental joint ventures and cuts another $396 million from overseas development assistance, which may affect environmental programs. At the same time, there is not one word in the Budget about the $5 billion in subsidies committed to fossil fuel megaprojects which will aggravate global warming, an issue the Prime Minister claims to be concerned about.

When will the Prime Minister practice as he preaches? When will he take action to back up his words? When will he open the centre on sustainable development he promised last year at the United Nations General Assembly?

FORESTRY

NATIONAL FOREST WEEK

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, this week we are celebrating the 60th Annual National Forest Week. All across our country Canadians are reflecting on the importance of the forests to our livelihood, our environment, and indeed our planet. The release last Friday of the Woodbridge Reed Report, showing the tremendous economic potential of the forest industry, shows as well the increased demand for a shrinking wood supply. This is part of the mounting evidence that demonstrates that all levels of government, industry and labour, and many of the scientists that parliamentarians met this afternoon and later today, must work together to make sure our forests provide the same opportunities for Canadians in the future as they are providing for us in the present. The federal Government should immediately begin negotiating forestry agreements with the provinces, and they should mark this Forest Week with the introduction of legislation to establish formally the Department of Forests.

AWARDS AND DECORATIONS

ELIGIBILITY OF SENIOR FIREFIGHTERS TO AWARD

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham): Mr. Speaker, the firefighters of Canada are brave and dedicated individuals who risk their lives daily to save the lives and property of Canadians. There is a medal to recognize this devotion to duty. It is called the Fire Services Exemplary Service Medal, and is awarded to veterans on retirement who have given 20 years service of good standard. The Chancellory of Canadian Orders and Declarations decided however that only those veterans who retired after August 28, 1985, would be eligible. Firefighters who struggled with old and inadequate equipment during World War II were no less brave and dedicated. A few of these veterans are still around. Why should their contribution be ignored?

Sydney Oxenham, a constituent of mine, retired recently as Deputy Fire Marshall after 40 years of service. He received his medal, but he cannot wear it proudly standing beside older veterans who have been denied this recognition. He has, therefore, chosen to return it.

It is not the practice to give awards retroactively, but for once let us bend the rules and give the few remaining senior firefighters the honour they deserve.

BENEFITS OF NATIONAL DEFENCE PROGRAMS IN P.E.I.

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, Canadians, and indeed Prince Edward Islanders, deserve more respect from the Minister of National Defence. In his response to a question asked by my colleague, the Member for Malpeque (Ms. Callbeck), last Friday, he referred to the fact that men and women who serve in the military should not be located in regions of Canada solely for the sake of economic development. Prince Edward Island is still one of the ten provinces of Canada, having joined Confederation in 1873.

The White Paper on defence, tabled by the Minister's Department, highlights the great contribution that defence expenditures make to all sectors of Canadian society. The White Paper also notes how defence programs make a significant contribution to overcoming regional economic disparities, and that defence dollars have strengthened local and regional economies.

Economic disparities abound in P.E.I. Defence dollars should remain in P.E.I. so that they may strengthen our already weak economy.

CANADIAN CENTRE OF ARCHITECTURE

TRIBUTE TO PHYLLIS LAMBERT

Mr. Jean-Marc Robitaille (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in Montreal a number of individuals, including the Prime Minister and the Premier of Québec paid tribute to Mrs. Phyllis Lambert, an architect, at the opening of the Canadian Centre of Architecture, a museum dedicated to architecture and architectural history.

The $45 million centre, to which the Canadian and Quebec governments contributed $4 million each, is unique, Mr. Speaker. It is to be noted that Mrs. Lambert, well known for her battles to preserve Montreal's architectural heritage, personally donated $27 million for that important achievement.

As mentioned by the Prime Minister, everyone in this House must recognize Mrs. Lambert's relentlessness, generosity and patriotism.

Mr. Speaker, this centre is not only a historic place, it is first and foremost a tool for our future.

I say bravo to Mrs. Lambert, a great Canadian we are all very proud of!

EXTERNAL AID

CANADA-TANZANIA WHEAT PROGRAM

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, in response to criticism of massive budget cuts to Canada's foreign aid, the Minister of External Relations said we will have to place a greater emphasis on the quality of projects while accepting the reduction in the quantity of dollars going to crucial international development work.

The Canada-Tanzania Wheat Program adds to the sullied credibility of all this Government's statements regarding foreign aid. This program has been roundly criticized over the past three years. Yet the Government continues to send millions of dollars to support it. The Program violates at least three fundamental CIDA criteria. It is environmentally disastrous, supporting monocropping which leads to land degradation. It encourages the forced eviction of the pastoralist Barabaig people, the poorest of the poor, with brutal human rights consequences. Rather than encouraging self-reliance, it has created dependency.

This Government cannot be believed regarding its statements about the quantity of international assistance, nor its bland assurances of their quality.

ADDITION OF HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES TO FUELS

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, Canadians were aghast to read the article that appeared in The Globe and Mail today concerning the dangerous practice by unscrupulous individuals and companies of mixing hazardous chemical wastes including PCBs into gasoline, diesel and industrial heating fuels. These fuels were then sold at reduced prices to customers in southern Ontario, Québec and western New York. Many Canadians may not be aware that if PCBs are not burned off completely at high temperatures, furans and dioxins are produced which are even more dangerous.

I urge the Ministries of Environment, National Revenue and the Solicitor General to begin an investigation into the activities of these gasoline bootleggers and press criminal charges where needed.

LABOUR FORCE

NATIONAL APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAM

Mr. Jim Jordan (Leeds—Grenville): Mr. Speaker, in the fall of 1988, 14 per cent of Canadian manufacturers surveyed by Statistics Canada said that their production was impeded by lack of skilled labour in this country. In 1985, a similar survey by Statistics Canada indicated that only 2 per cent of Canadian manufacturers stated that their production was impeded by a lack of skilled labour.

• (1410)

While the number of unfilled jobs is rising in Canada, unemployment persists at relatively high levels. Skill and post-secondary education requirements are steadily increasing in most occupations.

In view of this situation, why does the Government not announce, with the co-operation of the provinces, a state-of-the-art national apprenticeship program? Would the Government not agree that the people who are unemployed simply do not have the skills required to fill many of the estimated 600,000 jobs that are available in Canada, and for which Canadians could and would become qualified with the introduction of a massive new apprenticeship program?

POTENTIAL OF INDUSTRY AND RESOURCE

Mr. Dave Worthy (Cariboo—Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to bring to the attention of the House the fact that this week is National Forestry Week. It will be celebrated all across Canada.

Our forests are Canada's greatest natural resource, as well as the largest single contributor to our country's trade balance. More than 300,000 Canadians from coast to coast are directly employed by the forest industry, and a further 600,000 are indirectly employed by the industry. Indeed, our forests represent this country's great natural heritage.

Yesterday in Prince George, British Columbia, an exciting event took place. The Minister of Forestry (Mr. Oberle) launched "Forests of the World". This was a good example of the type of community action which typifies the theme of National Forestry Week: "Your Forests and Your Future".

SCIENCE AND RESEARCH

FUNDING—EXPENDITURE OF RELOCATING SPACE AGENCY

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, this morning Louis Siminovitch, one of Canada's leading medical research scientists, again decried the loss of Canadian scientists to the United States because of lack of research money.

Promises to increase science expenditures have not materialized as the Government has pleaded for the need for budget restraints to fight the deficit.

Meanwhile, the decision has been taken to place the space agency in St. Hubert, which will cost millions of dollars extra in establishment, moving, and operational costs, over those costs even if the space agency had been moved to Montreal. At the same time, a number of leading scientists are saying that they will move, but they will not move to St. Hubert. They will move to the United States.

When the Lortie Committee recommendations to increase basic research funding have been ignored, when $4 million is being cut from acid rain abatement, when $24 million was cut from alternative energy source research, when cuts to post-secondary education will mean fewer trained scientists, many will ask if the Government has a science and research development policy at all. There are priorities other than the space station. Sexy as it is, it is about time the Government practised safe sex.

THE ECONOMY

IMPORTANCE OF REDUCING DEFICIT

Mr. Brian O'Kurley (Elk Island): Mr. Speaker, one of the greatest challenges facing Canadians today is the federal deficit. If we are to continue to provide support for our senior citizens and our farmers in the riding of Elk Island, and in other parts of Canada, then we must stand together in our fight against the deficit.

The annual deficit has fallen from a record $38.3 billion in the fiscal year 1984–85 to $28.9 billion last year. By 1993 the deficit will be cut to $15 billion.

To succeed in this challenge we must unite as a nation. Let us work together, all Canadians from sea to sea, to build for the future in order that our children can live in a stronger Canada.

GOODS AND SERVICES TAX ON NEW HOUSES

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): Mr. Speaker, the Government's Budget has been a disaster for the housing sector. The announcement that the federal goods and services tax will be extended to the purchase of new houses will put the capacity of buying a new house even further out of reach for average Canadian families. The goods and services tax could add thousands of dollars to the price of an average new house. What about that dream of owning a home, Mr. Minister?

Two weeks ago the housing Minister stated that he would help. Where is the help for ordinary Canadians in the Budget? Where in the Budget are the homeless to look for help? Where is the help for those who dream about owning a house, but see that dream taxed to death? Where in the Budget are those looking for affordable accommodation to look for help?

The Government promises affordable housing. Affordable housing for whom, Mr. Speaker? For ordinary families? Or does the Minister really mean that there will be housing for those who can afford to pay the price? Where is the housing Minister's help? Canadians have the right to know the truth.

CONTROL OVER IMPORTATION OF BROILER HATCHING CHICKS AND EGGS

Mr. Ken Monteith (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, the announcement by the Minister of International Trade that broiler hatching chicks and eggs will be placed on the import control list effective today is welcomed by producers in this industry.

Farmers have expressed concern to the Government about increasing imports, and the timely response of the Government will ensure that the Canadian broiler hatching egg and chick industry remains viable.

This action shows that the Government is prepared to use the provisions under Article 11 of the GATT to restrict agricultural imports in support of domestic supply management programs.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

FORECAST BY CONFERENCE BOARD

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. On Friday, the Conference Board of Canada, a leading and respected private sector economic forecaster, issued its latest study of the economy in which it looked at the Budget of the Government. After looking at the Budget it stated: "The risk of recession is enhanced by the Budget". It also stated: "Businesses should prepare contingency plans for a recession".

In light of this forecast, how can the Prime Minister and the Government persist in presenting to the House and to the country a Budget which, in the eyes of a respected group such as the Conference Board, is leading us inevitably into a recession and all the harm that this will bring to consumers, workers, farmers, and Canadians generally? Why is the Government persisting in this damaging course for our country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have a high regard for the Conference Board and other economic think-tanks around town and around the country.

However, it is the responsibility of the Government of Canada to chart courses that we think will be of benefit to the nation. Clearly, a failure to address the debt would only have led to higher interest rates, higher inflation, and a loss in consumer and investor confidence. The consequences of all of that would have been a severe economic downturn.

My hon. friend will agree that, for example, when the Minister of Finance brought in his first economic statement in November, 1984, some of these same think-tanks, including Leaders of the Opposition, were predicting losses of 200,000 and 300,000 jobs. In point of fact, these policies have resulted in the creation of 1.4 million new jobs. We want to maintain that record.

REDUCTION IN INTEREST RATES

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister speaks of debt and inflation. Yet in the Budget statement his Minister of Finance admits that the Budget presented to the House last week will inevitably increase inflation.

How can the Prime Minister say to the House and to Canadians that a Budget that increases sales and excise taxes, which the Minister of Finance admits will be inflationary, can be expected to reduce interest rates? What is there in the Budget that will reduce interest rates? Is it not a fact, as confirmed by the Conference Board, that the Budget of the Government will have the opposite effect?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no one can foresee the future with overriding accuracy. Even economic forecasters differ on what will be the impact of various policies.

The Minister of Finance has considered the best economic advice available to him. He has brought into the Budget forecasts a sense of realism and an understanding of the dynamics of the Canadian economy. Indeed, as the hon. gentleman points out, interest rates are too high.

It is our hope and our expectation that difficult actions such as those taken by the Government in the last Budget will result in the eventual lowering of interest rates. That will have the type of beneficial effect that we are seeking to have in the economy of Canada.

FORECAST OF INCREASE IN FEDERAL BUDGET DEFICIT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign there was a report published by Southam News citing government sources that stated that the Finance Department was confidentially forecasting a much higher federal Budget deficit than the one the Government was talking about at that time. When asked about that report, the Minister of Finance was quoted as saying as he left a Conservative rally at which the Prime Minister spoke: "No, that's not accurate". The Minister of Finance said: "I made it very clear that our program spending track is right on line".

So I would like to ask the Prime Minister why the Minister of Finance insisted that the Government was on the right track at the time, although he had heard otherwise from his Department. Furthermore, why didn't the Prime Minister take advantage of this opportunity to comment on the situation? Why did he prefer to remain silent instead of passing on this information to the Canadian public? Why didn't the Prime Minister speak out at the time?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think all Canadians are familiar with the forthrightness of the Minister of Finance. He has admitted quite frankly that the increases in interest rates towards the end of the year have had a negative impact on his Budget projections. That is no big secret. This negative impact was also felt in the United States and all major countries of the world. Interest rates rose towards the end of the year and in early 1989, which had a negative effect on the Budget projections. However, we hope that a sound policy of Budget cutbacks will have a beneficial impact that will be noticed by the House in the months and years to come.

FISHERIES

DRIFT-NET FISHING

Hon. Roger E. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. He knows that three weeks ago he and his Government sold out the Newfoundland fishermen and plant workers. It appears now that the Government is also determined to bring chaos to the West Coast fishery. British Columbia salmon runs have been declining over the past few years, mainly due to the drift-net fishery outside the 200 mile limit. Over the weekend, the Government allowed Japan an additional 120 nautical miles for drift-netting. How can he justify this latest sell-out of Canadian resources and jobs?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, some day the Hon. Member will learn that he devalues the currency if he describes every element as a sell-out.

He will also know that the question of drift-net fishing is a very serious problem with which consecutive Canadian Governments have been seeking to deal for some time. Part of the difficulty is that the fishing occurs beyond the normal jurisdiction of Canada.

We have been looking for ways in which we can put in place step by step practical measures that will allow us to protect the Canadian fisheries more effectively. There has been a very important step adopted by the Government of Canada in co-operation with the Government of Japan, whereby the Japanese have agreed now to let Canadian observers be present on Japanese vessels. That will help us both reduce the level of fishing and also gain more precise information.

We recognize that there are problems that continue with regard to fishermen coming from Taiwan, from Korea and from other countries. We are hoping to expand the initiative we have just taken to include fishermen and vessels of those countries.

Mr. Simmons: Giving Newfoundland fish to France or West Coast fish to Japan is a sell-out. He may not like the word. I could use the term Newfoundland fishermen are using, but it is not parliamentary.

MORATORIUM ON DRIFT-NET FISHING

Hon. Roger E. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister. Why did Canada not demand a drift-net moratorium instead of giving extra allocation, extra space to the Japanese? Why doesn't the Government, for a change, stick up for Canadian fishermen instead of selling out to foreigners all the time?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not want to draw the attention of the House or the Hon. Member back to some of the difficulties that arose because of fisheries' actions that were taken by Liberal Governments, in one of which he was briefly a Minister of the Cabinet.

I am quite prepared to deal with the steps we have taken. We have negotiated very successfully with France a resolution to a problem that was difficult in Canada and difficult in France. We are now in a position where we may be able to get agreement on fishing zones and their boundaries. That is very important. The Hon. Member understands that.

With regard to the drift-net problem, another step we are taking that we hope will have some effect is that we have been in touch with the Governments of Thailand and Singapore, and we will be touch with other countries, to urge those Governments to discourage their fish processing industries from dealing with the products of drift-net fishing by Japan, by Korea, by Taiwan.

This is a matter that will not be shouted down. There must be step by step progress. We made some progress in the decisions that were taken with Japan in the last few days. We intend to continue to approach this problem seriously, with an eye to protecting the interests of the Canadian fishing industry.

ADDITION OF HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES TO FUELS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. There is a report in the press this morning that hazardous chemical wastes are being mixed with fuel oils and shipped by tanker across the Canada-U.S. border, and that this process has been going on for some four years. As all Canadians know, the health risks attendant to this kind of activity are immense for Canadians. Will the Solicitor General tell the House how much information the Government has? Has there been a special inquiry involving federal authorities into this kind of activity? When can we expect that activity to stop?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the allegations published today in The Globe and Mail concern practices which, if they are established, constitute gross contempt of the law and total disregard for public health.

We are communicating right now with all Departments involved, because there are many federal laws concerned with those alleged practices. A few moments ago I spoke to my colleague, Minister Bradley of Ontario, who will be in a position to gather more facts and lay charges if the investigation results in that decision.

Oral Questions

NUMBER OF FEDERAL INSPECTORS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister could provide us with some additional information concerning the frequency with which the federal Government exercises its responsibility for inspection. For example, the author of the article suggested that hazardous substances, including PCBs, are shipped in these tanker trucks because: "They are almost never tested by consumer or environmental officials".

It was confirmed to me this morning by officials in the Minister's Department who say that they do not have enough inspectors to live up to their mandate. Will the Minister confirm that there are not enough federal inspectors to do the job properly? Specifically, will he acknowledge that for all of Ontario and Québec there are only 32 active inspectors for these two very large provinces, which is many fewer than the provincial Governments themselves have in these fields? If this is true, will the Minister tell the House that he has every intention of increasing the number of inspectors soon so that an adequate job can be done?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to give the Leader of the New Democratic Party the assurance that for several weeks now, we have been conducting routine border inspections, together with the province of Ontario and the U.S. authorities, to ensure compliance with the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act.

Second, the Budget brought down last week gave my Department 56 person-years more to help implement the new Canadian legislation on the protection of environment, and intend to be increasingly vigilant.

Mr. Speaker, we also intend to get in touch with the oil industry to ensure that Canadians are offered high quality gasoline.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR HEALTH PROTECTION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, it was only within the last couple of hours that people in his own Department said that they do not have enough people to live up to the mandate. The Government takes credit for environmental action on both sides of the border. When will it get its act together to protect the health of Canadians?

• (1430)

REQUEST FOR RCMP INQUIRY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): My last question is directed to the Solicitor General. The United States, has one section of the FBI which specializes in investigating such activities. Does the RCMP have a similar operation here in Canada?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I believe my colleague made it very clear that these are very serious allegations. I think we all agree on that. However, both my colleague and myself, and my other colleague who is responsible for Customs and Excise, intend to review all the allegations that were made this morning. We will check with other police forces that also have jurisdiction in this matter, and I personally asked the RCMP a few minutes ago, considering the seriousness of these allegations, to see what could be done tomorrow or even today, with this very serious information. However, I believe that before we launch a general investigation, we must be very careful about the matter of jurisdiction.

THE ENVIRONMENT

INSPECTIONS OF PCBS – GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Speaking of being careful, Mr. Speaker, I suggest Canadian men and women would have expected the Government to show greater care because they are the ones who are likely to be affected by the PCBs.

Could I ask the Minister whether he is aware that such an increase of 56 person-years would translate into one person to cover every 100 kilometres of the Canada-United States border and whether he feels it is enough to keep a close watch on this matter?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the proper authorities have identified the points where these materials are shipped across the border and we carry out regular inspections to make sure that the law is respected. We have 56 additional persons. We will check to see whether we have enough. I would suggest we did not talk to the same officials. Those I have contacted within my department feel that with 56 extra persons we can go a long way. We are going to implement these new measures, verify the results and, if it is not enough, this responsible Government will do what it has to do.

[English]

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind the Minister of the Environment that he is the Minister. He has to judge whether he feels that 56 people, which is one person per 100 kilometres, is sufficient.

CHEMICAL WASTE IN FUELS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address my supplementary question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Hundreds of thousands of Canadians have pumped potentially PCB–laden gasoline into their cars. They have possibly touched it. They have smelled it. They have breathed it. What they would like to know from the Minister of Health, who was prepared to act very quickly in the case of the three poisoned Chilean grapes, is what specific action he intends to take to protect the health of hundreds of thousands of Canadians who have been pumping gas over the last four years.

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, my Department will be co–operating fully with the Minister of the Environment. Any resources we have that are available will certainly be put at his disposal.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

MILITARY BASES IN ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Joe McGuire (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Minister of National Defence.

On May 5, 1989, as reported at page 1,368 of Hansard the Minister of National Defence stated:

> ––the men and women who serve in the military today deserve more from the people of Canada than to be located in regions for economic development.

Is the Minister saying that the military do not deserve or want to be stationed in Atlantic Canada, in places such as Summerside, Gander and Sydney? I demand an apology from the Minister on behalf of the Government for making these derogatory remarks.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member would agree that we must make decisions in the Department of National Defence based upon operational effectiveness. We allocate our resources across the country to ensure that we have appropriate defence capabilities in various regions of the country.

CLOSURE OF CFB SUMMERSIDE

Mr. Joe McGuire (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has stated on several occasions that the closure of CFB Summerside was caused, just as the Acting Minister has stated, to reduce the amount of the debt. However, a suggestion was made in the House last Friday by my colleague, the Hon. Member for York Centre, in regard to CFB Toronto which blows a big hole in that rationalization. The Minister has before him an offer whereby the Government could gain three–quarters of a billion dollars, help solve the housing problem in Toronto and solve problems of base closures at the same time. Has the Minister rejected this offer out of hand? If so, why?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it is important to understand that the functions that are carried out at the base at Downsview are very different from the functions that are being carried out at the base at Summerside. Summerside has supported a trucker operation which will no longer be required by our Department.

CFB Downsview is a major base which supports militia operations and our National Defence School. It is a major factor in providing for our military activities in the Metropolitan Toronto area.

I am sure my hon. colleague knows that we have already offered to transfer 100 acres from Downsview to the provincial Government for housing requirements.

CHEMICAL WASTE IN FUELS – EFFECTS ON HEALTH

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of the Environment. PCBs, furans and dioxins have been released in large quantities as a result of the illegal mixture of hazardous chemical wastes into gasoline, diesel and industrial heating fuels. Since the chemical wastes are linked to severe human disorders of the brain, liver, skin and nervous system, what steps does the Government plan to take to locate and to test sites where those levels may be dangerous?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, we are conducting two parallel investigations right now. The first will be directed at the industrial community. We will communicate with industry people to make sure that the products sold to Canadians are safe.

Second, on the multidepartmental level and jointly with the Government of Ontario, we are investigating to substantiate the evidence in support of the allegations published today.

LOCATION OF TOXIC SUBSTANCES

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, who should be very concerned about this. There may in fact be gas stations near elementary schools. There may in fact be industrial sites where hundreds of thousands of gallons of polluted heating fuels that have PCBs, furans and dioxins in them. There may be sites with extremely high toxic levels. Will the Minister endeavour to locate those sites and to test those people who have been proximate to those dangerous levels for the protection of their health and for the protection of all Canadians?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier in response to the question from the Hon. Member for Hamilton East, all the resources of my Department will be put at the disposal of the Minister of the Environment who is taking the lead on this. We will be co-operating fully. Anything the federal Government can do to be helpful we will do.

HOUSING

CO-OPS – FUNDING CUT-BACKS – GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Housing).

The Minister has reduced co-ops funding from $7,8 million last year to $5,5 million this year. It is estimated that this reduction will hardly allow the funding of 1,800 housing units this year, which represents the lowest level over the past eleven years.

My question is this: What steps will the Minister take to reverse this decision? Is the Minister prepared to accept a worse record than that of his predecessor whom he blamed so very much?

[English]

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member is aware, and as he has indicated, the budget for co-op housing has been reduced in this current year from what it was last year. I regret that. The Government regrets that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Redway: As I indicated previously the problem is the deficit situation that we are facing.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Redway: Other Canadians know that, even if members of the NDP do not.

I received recently a letter from the Executive Director of the Family Services Association of Metropolitan Toronto. I would like to quote from that letter which states: "It should be evident to most Canadians that 31 cents interest on each tax dollar is an unacceptably high price to pay for current government operations and programs. Furthermore, allowing the deficit to grow poses a real threat to the health, educational and social programs of our country". That comes from a director of a social service agency.

I am endeavouring, along with the co-operative housing movement, to meet with them and to develop with them ways to produce more out of the Budget than is available to us.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1440)

SOCIAL HOUSING—WAITING LISTS

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, that deficit is the result of a high interest rate policy of this Government which—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Martin: —comes directly from its lack of credibility in the business community. It is inconceivable to me that this Minister who was so articulate as a back-bencher would now pursue this policy with 500 people in Halifax who are on the waiting list, and 15,000 people in Toronto are on the waiting list for this kind of housing. The Minister says that it is the deficit. Let us accept that. Let us accept the Minister within that context. Last week, this Government announced that it was going to spend—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Martin: —$2.7 million on advertising for the obscene Budget. My question is—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Martin: —what does this tell us about this Government's priorities?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has obviously decided that today is the day to launch the leadership campaign.

An Hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Redway: The Hon. Member is aware that this Government and this Minister have placed affordable housing as a high priority. I am examining every possible resource that we have available to us to maximize those resources to create more housing that is affordable for Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

FINANCING—OBJECTIVES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Minister claimed that research and development expenditures should represent 2.5 per cent of the Gross Domestic Product. In view of the fact that the level of these investments remains as it was in 1983 and that the Budget does not propose any means to increase these investments, does the Prime Minister still believe that his objective of 2.5 per cent can be achieved? If not, what objective does he feel could be achieved?

[English]

Hon. William C. Winegard (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, I do not think my hon. colleague has bothered to read the Budget. If he had, he would know that all of those items in the Budget for research and development are still there.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Winegard: The $240 million Centres of Excellence Program is still there. The $200 million that is going to the councils is still there. The $80 million to the Canada Scholarship Program is still there. Bill C-22 and the money that will bring in in terms of R and D is still there.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Winegard: The advanced industrial materials program is still there.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Winegard: The biotechnology program is still there.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Winegard: The information technology program—

An Hon. Member: That is still there.

Mr. Winegard: Thank you.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF NATIONAL ADVISORY BOARD ON SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, the level of spending on research and development is still 1.3 per cent. The Prime Minister takes a great deal of pride in chairing the National Advisory Board on Science and Technology. This group of eminent scientists has made many recommendations to the Prime Minister, including a doubling of the base budgets of the Research Granting Council and a subsequent indexing of those budgets at one and half times the growth of GDP.

Is the Government going to act on these recommendations from the National Advisory Board? If not, will the Prime Minister stop wasting the time of scientists who have better things to do than to have their recommendations ignored?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, one of the recommendations that was made by leading scientists and those who are concerned with research and development in Canada was that the Government of Canada finally pass Bill C–22 which would mean hundreds of millions of dollars in new investments. We proceeded with it and the Liberals opposed it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Not only did the Liberal Party oppose it in the House of Commons, it opposed it in the Senate. It was the finest instrument for investment in research and development in Canada in the last decade and it was opposed ferociously by the Liberals. It took a commitment by this Government to override that opposition and Bill C–22 is now celebrated by all those who believe in science and technology and R and D in Canada today.

TRANSPORT

DELAY IN CONSTRUCTION OF POLAR 8

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Plans to build the Polar 8 ice–breaker have again been put on hold. This Government made a promise to Canadians that it would protect our sovereignty. This Government made a promise to northerners to serve their needs.

Last year, with great fanfare in British Columbia, this Government made a $500 million promise to start the building of the Polar 8 this spring in West Coast shipyards. Canadians are waiting for the Government to deliver on these promises. Hundreds of jobs are at stake. Will the Minister tell us exactly when the building of the Polar 8 will begin?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I hope if I tell the truth as the Member has asked me to do, she will deny what was said at the beginning. I would like to be very clear. We are proceeding with the Polar 8 operation—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): However, there are two issues about which she knows very well. The first is the sale of the shipyard which is being processed at the present time. The other one is the problem of the design. A proposal has to be made to the Government, which will be made. It is within what we call the first phase of the operation, which is the phase where we look at the design and we look at the shipyard. After that, we will go into the construction phase. On this side of the House we are operating logically with the first phase and the second phase after.

ARCTIC SOVEREIGNTY

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): My supplementary is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. We have heard about the promising phase. I would now like to say that last year the Minister entered into an agreement with the United States respecting Arctic sovereignty.

Last week, the Defence Minister said that we might have to depend on our allies to help defend the Arctic. The United States does not even accept our claims to sovereignty in this area.

Will the Minister confirm that what is really happening with the Polar 8 decision is that this Government is prepared to put our sovereignty in the hands of foreign interests.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that is absolutely false. I know that in order to be a candidate for the leadership of the New Democratic Party, one has to go to the furthest edges of extremism. The Hon. Member should resist that temptation.

COMMITMENT OF FORMER MINISTER

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, that would almost invite the comment, that in order to be a candidate for the Conservative Party, one has to learn to make promises and never keep them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I would like to know what phase the former Minister of Transport, the current Member for St. John's West, was in on March 3, 1987, page 3763 of Hansard when he said in the House:

> We will all be proud in 1993 when we sail through any part of the Arctic archipelago on this new Polar 8 Conservative ice–breaker.

Was the Government contemplating sailing through the Arctic or sailing through an election in B.C. with the promise of 1,000 jobs it had no intention of creating with this announcement?

• (1450)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Conservative language is the same for the Liberals as it is for the NDP. We have first to go with the definition of the deal. It is very technical but I am sure that the Member can understand.

Some Hon. Members: Go slow.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): I am not sure, but I think the Member can understand that. We know that the shipyard in Vancouver at the present time could be sold in a few days but it has to be fixed first. Second, we have to decide on what kind of propulsion system we will use. We have two possibilities. As soon as this is settled, we will be starting. Good news is not for the Liberal Party, and I maintain what I believed before.

Once again, we cannot construct the Polar 8 if we do not have the design. That is the way we work on this side of the House.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, we would like to believe that this matter is a laughing matter but it really speaks to whether or not this Government can be taken at its word when it makes profound statements to Parliament and the people of Canada.

COMMITMENTS RESPECTING ARCTIC SOVEREIGNTY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): The Prime Minister of Canada, the Minister of Transport and the Minister of External Affairs spent a good part of a year or two before the election talking about the record of a previous Government that left the Arctic unprotected.

The country was in a crisis; the Russians, the Americans and every other nation were about to take over. Now they have become sensible and cancelled the foolish submarines and are trying to crawl out from under a commitment of 1,000 jobs at Versatile Shipyards in British Columbia.

My question for the Prime Minister is a straightfoward one. Prime Minister, what has changed in the Arctic that suddenly you can walk away from your pre-election promises?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did not hear all of that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: But the part that I did hear dealt with the explanation that had already been provided by my hon. friend, the Minister of Transport, in regard to the construction of the Polar 8.

The Government indicated that this was a very important instrument for the assertion of sovereignty in northern Canada which had been lacking for many years. I thought that the statement by the Minister of Transport was remarkable in its clarity—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: —and he is indicating very clearly not only the importance that we place on the Arctic, but the importance that the Government places on having this very important instrument built and constructed at Vancouver.

IMMIGRATION

EMPLOYMENT OF NANNY—LANDED IMMIGRANT STATUS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Immigration. It concerns today's media reports about a nanny who faces deportation under this Government and who was formerly employed by the sister to the Minister.

I do not wish to cast any aspersions, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchi: However—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchi: Given that it is illegal to employ those without landed immigrant status, as is the case, given that the employer is alleged to have known of the nanny's illegal status and given that the Department only issued a deportation order after the termination of the nanny's employment, can the Minister please explain to the House her role and her Department's role in this particular case?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to comment on the details of the claim since it is now before the Immigration Department.

In terms of my own involvement, there has been none and there will be none.

INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE ACTION OF MINISTER

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): My supplementary is for the same Minister, Mr. Speaker. Again I ask the Minister, given that under Section 96.1 it is clearly illegal for employers to hire illegal immigrants and subject to a possible $5,000 fine or two years in prison, is the Minister prepared to exercise some understanding and compassion for the nanny and permit her to stay? If the Department is not prepared, why is the law not being applied equally and forcefully against the employer who contravened the same Immigration Act? Why the double standard?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, there is a hearing going on. My sister and brother-in-law are perfectly capable of explaining for themselves what the situation was and continues to be, and I will continue to leave it up to them.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

RATE OF R AND D EXPENDITURES

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology. Several years ago the Prime Minister promised that the rate of expenditure for research and development in Canada would be doubled from 1.3 per cent to 2.5 per cent of GNP. Last year he promised $1.3 billion for science which seems to have disappeared some place. The fact is that real expenditures by the Government on R and D in this country have not increased but, in fact, have decreased.

With respect to the choice made between Ottawa, Montreal and St. Hubert for the location of the space agency, will the Minister table the cost estimates for the different locations and an estimate of the number of scientists that will be lost to this country on account of this move?

Hon. William C. Winegard (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, let me first inform my honourable colleague that the $1.3 billion is intact and is still there.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Winegard: With respect to the space agency, whether that agency is in Montreal City or in St. Hubert, whenever you move something you are bound to lose a few good people and one regrets that. But the people of St. Hubert are putting on a massive campaign to welcome all those people in the space agency who are going to move to St. Hubert. The two English-speaking universities in Montreal, Concordia and McGill, have said they are prepared to do anything they can to help the scientists who move with the space agency to the Montreal region. What we have to stop is the squabbling and get on with this exciting development about a Canadian space agency.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCurdy: Mr. Speaker, I am sure with all that sound and fury signifying nothing, you did not miss that the question was not answered. It is clear that with the attempt by the Government to restrict expenditures on R and D in order to attack the deficit, that there is no rationality in squandering money for already short-changed R and D.

Mr. Valcourt: Forget your speech and ask your question.

COST OF LOCATING AGENCY

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister is simply this.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCurdy: Will the Minister table in this House an estimate of the relative costs for the establishment, the moving of personnel and the additional operational costs which certainly do exist as differences among the three alternatives of St. Hubert, Montreal and Ottawa? Will the Minister do that?

Mr. Blais: Are you opposed?

Hon. William C. Winegard (Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, I find this really quite unusual. We had just a few months ago the Leader of the New Democratic Party saying his Party wanted the space agency in the greater region of Montreal. Now, for some reason, the New Democrats seem to have changed their minds. Perhaps the NDP Member would like to explain to the people of Montreal why they don't want it there. As I have said before, in terms of funding, all of that money is there and all of that money stayed there through the Budget.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

INTEREST RATES FOR CREDIT CARDS

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Government Operations concerning interest rates on credit cards. He will know that a couple of years ago the Finance Committee conducted a very exhaustive investigation into this matter and rates were voluntarily lowered at that time. Now I see that rates are back at 20 per cent. Will his committee take that subject seriously as did the Standing Committee on Finance and Economic Affairs? Will he be conducting an investigation?

• (1500)

Mr. Garth Turner (Halton—Peel): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's question is well put. As Hon. Members will know, members of my committee from all Parties have indicated that they feel the very important issue of credit card interest rates should be addressed. Members of all Parties have agreed to discuss this and will be doing so tomorrow morning. I anticipate we will be looking into this issue with all due haste.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government; and of the amendment of Mr. MacLaren (p. 1095).

Mr. Bill Casey (Cumberland—Colchester): Mr. Speaker, although I have made a few short statements and comments, this is actually my first address to the House of Commons. It is certainly a honour for me to do so.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the people who elected me to this office, the people of Cumberland—Colchester, a riding in the north of Nova Scotia. These people selected me to represent them in this House as a Member of Parliament.

I have watched many new Members try to express their gratitude, their humility, and their appreciation for the opportunity to serve here as Members of Parliament. I have seen how difficult it is and I know now how difficult it is to express that gratitude. I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I am truly grateful for the opportunity, and I hope I can justify the confidence my constituents have shown in me.

Since I have been a Member of Parliament now for about five months, I have experienced all kinds of emotions. I have found it interesting, frustrating, exciting and confusing, but one thing that never changes about being a Member of Parliament is that there is always lots to learn. In any one day when we come to work, we may talk about budgets, regional development, forestry, fisheries, defence, day care, veterans affairs, science and technology, Indian affairs, and on and on. Of all the things about being a Member of Parliament, I appreciate most the opportunity to learn about Canada and about all aspects of Canadian life.

Before I get into my remarks on the Budget, I would like to talk about two lessons I have learned in the last week and a half, lessons I have learned from the Canadian people. I am very glad to have had the opportunity to learn those lessons.

First, the Canadian people want their politicians to be credible. If they are credible, Canadian people will back them to the hilt. Second, as politicians, we underrate the ability of the Canadian public to separate the wheat from the chaff, to decide between what is right, and wrong and to determine what is the real story, no matter how much conflicting information we present to the public.

The first lesson is that Canadians want credible politicians. As we all remember, about a week and a half ago, there was a premature release of budget information to the public domain. It was referred to as a leak. I do not think leak is an accurate description. A leak, according to Webster's dictionary, is a slow release of material by accident. Certainly this was no accident. It was a determined effort by an individual who absconded with some confidential information on the Budget. That person tried to sell it to the media and that did not work, then tried to give it to the media on the phone and that did not work, so finally had to hand deliver it to the media. Finally he got his story in the news and caused a great deal of embarrassment for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson).

I contend that very few Ministers of Finance could survive the onslaught that followed that premature release of information.

I contend that the only reason the Minister of Finance was able to survive that onslaught was that he has built up credibility with the Canadian people year after year. I would even suggest that he has built up his credibility with all Members of Parliament on both sides of the House.

I think as well that the Minister increased his credibility and enhanced his reputation by taking quick action. He was decisive and effective. He set a course of action and stuck to it right from the beginning to the end. I think he deserves a lot of credit for that.

Others involved in the great Canadian leak debate changed direction often while the Minister steered a straight course from beginning to end. Opposition Members seemed to go off in different directions. First they were invited to come to the House to hear the Budget presented, but they said no. Just a short while later, they changed directions and said that they wanted to have the Budget presented to them in the House. Then opposition Members said before the television cameras, and probably one of the biggest audiences the National News ever had, that it was a non-budget given by a non-minister and that they categorically refused to debate it or discuss it. Meanwhile, the Minister kept going in a straight line on his set course.

Shortly thereafter, within hours of saying categorically that they would not discuss or debate the Budget, opposition Members turned around 180 degrees and found themselves both discussing it and debating it in the House. Meanwhile, the Minister of Finance kept on his course.

Finally, the Minister of Finance presented his Budget in the House of Commons and opposition Members all jumped up and walked out except for a few stragglers. Opposition Leaders had to come back to bring them out so that the entire opposition walked out while the Minister of Finance presented his Budget. What opposition Members did not understand was that only they walked out. The people in the gallery stayed. The people did not turn off their television sets. The people stayed and listened to the Minister of Finance. Not only did they listen to him but they stood behind him and supported him.

I think the Minister of Finance set a fine example. His reputation was enhanced and his credibility was increased. The lesson is that if we as politicians are credible, the public will stand behind us through thick and thin.

Lesson number two is that the public can sort out the wheat from the chaff. I think it is incredible how members of the public can apply common sense to all the information we give them and can arrive at the right decision and the right answer. A good example is this so-called leak. Despite all opposition and media cries that it was a national disaster, that it was the end of the world and that the Minister should resign and take his Budget with him, the Canadian people applied their common sense and said that this was not a national disaster, that no one had been harmed, that there had been no damage and that it was just an unfortunate event. They also realized, by applying their common sense, that damage would be done if the Minister did resign and if he did take his Budget with him.

If the Minister had resigned, it would have created economic chaos for months, our international reputation would have been damaged for years and it would have taken years to overcome it. I give credit to the Canadian people for weeding through all the contradictory information we throw at them.

The same thing applies here. There is so much contradictory information from which the public has to choose to determine the truth about the Budget. Do we really need cut-backs and tax increases? It is very difficult for a regular Canadian like me to know, understand and put into perspective what a national debt of $330 billion means. What does a deficit every year of $30 billion or $40 million mean?

It is difficult to understand but I still believe that the Canadian people have applied their common sense and have come to the conclusion that we do have a problem, that we must address it and that we will address it. I would like to pay tribute again to the members of the public for their ability to do that. I would also like to pay tribute to the Minister of Finance for setting a fine example for new Members and for senior Members as well.

My comments on the Budget will be brief. First of all, I do not believe there is such a thing as government money or government funding, only people's money. The people provide funds to the Government in trust to be distributed to Canadians who need it the most and for the benefit of all of Canada. There is no such thing as government money.

An interesting comparison is the Unemployment Insurance Commission which is actually a smaller version of the Government. Working people allow deductions from their pay every week to be turned over to the Unemployment Insurance Commission in trust to be redistributed to people who are not working, people who need safety nets, people who need help. This is the same as the federal Government's budget but on a smaller scale. Day after day and week after week opposition Members state that unemployed people pay the premiums on unemployment insurance. I disagree with that. It is the employed people and employers who pay the premiums. Inasmuch as we have an obligation to unemployed people, we also have an obligation to the people who pay the premiums year after year. Many people who pay premiums for their entire working life never draw on unemployment insurance. So we have an obligation to put those funds to their best use in supplying a safety net for people who need it the most, and in providing facilities for people to get out of the cycle of unemployment. That is exactly what this Government is trying to do.

Getting back to the Budget, I believe it is a Budget of responsibility, and I believe Canadian people want responsibility in fiscal management. Before we discuss any aspect of the Budget, I think we have to answer the first question: Is the status quo acceptable to Canadians? Is it acceptable to have a national debt of $330,000 million? Is it acceptable to add $30,000 million or $40,000 million to the debt every year? I think not. It is not acceptable to be paying 35 cents out of every tax dollar of interest on our national debt and I am sure the public agrees.

As complicated as the issue is, the public have gotten to the bottom of it and they understand the issue. They agree that the Budget must address the debt and the deficit. That is exactly what this Budget does. It is a broadly based approach to reduce the deficit and eventually reduce the debt. It is a broadly based approach, but it focuses on large corporations, high income earners. Certainly that is very clear in the Budget.

During the last two weekends since the Budget was announced, I made it a point to talk to as many people in my riding as I could. We are not a rich riding. We are a rural riding more than anything. I have gone to auctions, rural meetings, town meetings. I have talked to academics, farmers, businessmen and accountants to find out their reactions. It is amazing how unanimous the reaction is. It is tough and no one is going to enjoy it, but everyone right across the board acknowledged that it is needed and it is fair.

The media in my riding have also supported it. A really good example is an editorial in The Amherst Daily News, which in its first and last paragraph says it all. The man who wrote this article, the day before the last election wrote an editorial in the same paper telling the people in my riding to vote for absolutely anyone but the Conservative candidate. The title of the editorial is "Tough, but Fair", and the first paragraph states:

> Finance Minister Michael Wilson and indeed the entire Mulroney administration are to be hailed for their courage in presenting what surely qualifies as not only the toughest, but also the most necessary federal Budget in Canada's history.

I will read the last paragraph:

> The important thing is that the Mulroney Government has taken a good first step on the road that will eventually lead to the elimination of the country's staggering debt, and that is the best possible gift the Government can give to future generations.

I could not have said it better myself.

This speech took 20 minutes when I wrote it, but it is not taking 20 minutes now. But finally, I want to say the vast majority of people in my riding and in Canada understand the problem we have to face. They accept their role in reducing the deficit if we as a Government act responsibly and display that responsibility in the form of good fiscal management. The fact is that I think Canadians have faith that our Finance Minister will set a course and stay on that course to eliminate the deficit and that he will keep on that course until the goal is met.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Leeds—Grenville on a question or comment.

Mr. Jordan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate my colleague who said, if I understood him correctly, that this is the first time he has risen in the House of Commons. I congratulate him on his comments.

I have a couple of simple questions that I would like to put to him. It has been repeated several times in the House that 31 cents of every dollar are now going to allay the cumulative debt. Can he tell me how much of each dollar was going to allay that debt last October 30? Has it increased that much since last October 30 when the election was on?

The Government said at that time that it had the deficit under control. There was no problem with the deficit. Every nickel had been accounted for. How much of each dollar was going to allay the debt on the same day that the Prime Minister announced that he was going to build a new prison in Quebec where everyone agreed a prison was not needed, nor were the roads needed that were going to be built into that prison? It was said that it is going to cost this country millions of dollars a year from now until eternity to service that prison when it wasn't even needed in the first place. What was the deficit on the day that the Prime Minister announced in Winnipeg last October that he was going to provide for 200,000 day care spaces? He announced that he would put it in place during the first session of the new Parliament. The first session of the new Parliament has come and gone, and I have not seen anything to indicate that the 200,000 new day care spaces are there.

My question then to my hon. friend is: Why is there this great concern now, five months or thereabouts after there seemed to be an abundance of money to offer new services, five months after the Prime Minister advised the country that new programs were in the offing as soon as this Government was re-elected? If you had been in the audience on that day in Winnipeg and were concerned about day care, I am sure you would have gone away thinking, yes, they are going to put that program in place. The idea being, hopefully anyway, that you would vote for that Party that made the announcement. So what was the situation on October 30—we are talking now about 31 cents on the dollar—when the Prime Minister announced the day care program which he was going to proceed with as soon as he was re-elected?

Mr. Casey: I appreciate your question. I understand there is a policy here that we go easy on new Members when they make their first speech, and I really appreciate how you have gone easy on me.

I cannot answer your question on the deficit. You have to understand that I have only been in politics a very short time, but even I remember the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) talking about reduction of the deficit from the day he was elected. I know for a fact that he has reduced government spending year after year for the last four years. I think it is a tremendous accomplishment because I cannot name one single business in the private sector that has accomplished the same thing. Certainly, the goal is to reduce the deficit which they have done on actual government spending, the increase in interest rates notwithstanding.

Mr. Corbett: Mr. Speaker, I want to take the opportunity to congratulate my colleague for a fine maiden speech in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Corbett: It was indeed a tribute to the people who elected him who, I am sure, will continue to put their faith in his performance in the House of Commons in the years to come.

I would like to ask my colleague a question with reference to the Free Trade Agreement. Being an Atlantic Canadian myself, I know it must have weighed heavily on his mind, as it did on mine, during the last campaign. At that time we were well aware that in the years previous to 1984, when the Minister of Finance along with this Government was elected, that Atlantic Canada experienced a net deficit of jobs under a Liberal administration supported by an NDP Government that had made their bed well known in this country as being supportive of the Liberals and their negative policies with reference to Atlantic Canada. We saw the refreshing approach to the course of this country with reference to the Free Trade Agreement. In the few short years leading up to 1988 we saw in excess of 1.4 million jobs created in the nation, and probably in excess of 45,000 or 50,000 jobs created in Atlantic Canada alone. Indeed, that was a refreshing change.

Then the Government moved toward a Free Trade Agreement in the last 18 months. We in Atlantic Canada became extremely excited about the ramifications and the possibilities of what Atlantic Canada could become and how important that was. It was such a refreshing change from what we had been witness to over the previous administration which was supported by a New Democratic Party that was continuously playing lackey and lip-service to a Liberal Government.

For those reasons, I would now like my hon. colleague and friend from Nova Scotia to give us a short version of what he feels is the importance of the program which is now thankfully in place for Atlantic Canada. What will it mean to Nova Scotia?

Mr. Casey: Mr. Speaker, my riding of Cumberland—Colchester is not the richest riding in the country. I believe that the Free Trade Agreement will allow us to become an equal in Canada. It will allow us to expand our industry. In fact, it has already done so.

In my riding there are factories that build car parts and ship them to the United States. Those factories are doubling capacity at the present time. There is also a factory that builds wood splitters and ships them to the United States. Another factory builds stoves and ships them to the United States. Other factories build ornaments in pewter, and the list goes on. Those factories will increase their production.

In Amherst, where I live, there was a company owner who was very much afraid that he would be wiped out by free trade. He was extremely concerned about it. The other day I spoke to him and he told me that he has more people working than he has ever had. He does not understand what is going on. He is very excited and sees a bright horizon. Free trade will be his salvation, and I also believe that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There is time for one more question or comment. The Hon. Member for Halifax.

Ms. Clancy: Mr. Speaker, as a fellow Nova Scotian, I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Cumberland—Colchester (Mr. Casey) how he can countenance the breach of privilege against his constituents which was constituted by the leak in the Budget. They, like all Canadians, had a right to have the Budget unveiled in the House of Commons and not on national television.

Is the Hon. Member not dismayed that he sits on the side of the House that allowed the most massive breach since the first Parliament sat 724 years ago?

Mr. Casey: I have no hesitation in talking about that issue. There was no negligence on the part of the Government. It was a deliberate attempt by someone, and it was not easy for that person. He or she attempted to sell the information to the media, and that did not work. He or she attempted to give it to the media on the radio, and that did not work. Finally, the person had to deliver the information. For whatever reason, it was a deliberate attempt. I do not know if it was sabotage or sour grapes. The fact of the matter is—and it is common sense—that no harm was done, that no damage was done, and that is what the Canadian people see.

When some Members in the House were attempting to turn it into a gigantic disaster, the Canadian people applied common sense and stated that it was not a disaster. It is too bad that it happened, and it should not have happened, but there was no harm done. Why throw the country into total chaos. Can one imagine the chaos in the economy if the Minister of Finance had to resign and the Budget had not gone ahead? It would have been chaos.

The Minister of Finance is a pillar of strength in the reputation of Canada in the world. If he were to be removed there would be terrific damage to our reputation, and it would take a long time to recover from that. I have no problem with it at all.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. On debate, the Hon. Member for Halifax.

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I wish to commence by doing something that I should have done when I rose during the question and comment period, that is, congratulate my fellow colleague, the Hon. Member for Cumberland—Colchester (Mr. Casey), on his maiden speech, and well done it was.

It is a very great pleasure for me to rise in the House today as a Member for one of the most historic ridings in the entire country. Halifax is one of Canada's oldest cities, and this year it celebrates the one hundred and fortieth anniversary of its founding. We have the largest city in the Atlantic region. Halifax is a naval base, a major commercial port, and a government centre. It is also the base for five universities with a sixth on its outskirts. Halifax is home to students, to senior citizens, to young families, and to service personnel. Although it is not immediately recognizable, as opposed to some of the larger centres in the country, within our city we boast various small cultural communities that reflect the new cultural reality that is Canada.

As Atlantic Canadians, Haligonians have known for many years that they live in what is unhappily known as a have not region. This is a bitter situation for a proud people who remember the glory days of wooden ships and, if one will pardon the paraphrasing, iron persons. However, bad as this situation has been, it became infinitely worse on the black night of Wednesday, April 26. Haligonians, innocently watching a hockey game, received a great shock that night. The Budget, the blueprint for the fiscal short-term future of our country, attacked them with a vengeance. The Government, which had promised programs that would at least hold the line on a regional economic downturn, delivered a betrayal of proportions rarely seen in this country.

The national child care program—and although it was badly flawed, at least it was there—suddenly disappeared. Gone was a program desperately needed by latch-key kids and their parents. Transfer payments for post-secondary education and health care were to be reduced by 1 per cent a year for five years. Via Rail budgets were cut by $541 million this year alone. The very existence of crucial rail links were threatened. Economic regional development agreements to various sectors were ominously not even mentioned. There was a new federal sales tax on scores of goods and services. There was a surtax on every Canadian taxpayer, including those at subsistence levels. There was an increased surtax on the hard-pressed middle income worker. There were cuts to foreign aid, cuts in defence spending, and cuts to the CBC of $50 million over four years. There was an almost complete abdication of the role of the Government in the Unemployment Insurance Program and a mortal blow to seasonal workers who depend on UI.

I might make a comment for my friend, the Hon. Member for Cumberland—Colchester, who spoke before. I am thinking of the seasonal workers in Cumberland—Colchester, many of whom travelled to Halifax and who were my clients. They will suffer desperately because of those cuts in unemployment insurance.

Mr. Simmons: He doesn't care.

Ms. Clancy: I know. None of them do.

Overriding all that there is a new word in the Canadian lexicon which strikes fear into the hearts of young and old alike and that word is "claw-back". Yet there is another tax, this time a tax that ends more than 50 years of the honourable tradition of universality in two of the keystones of our social survival network: the old age pension and the family allowance. The concept of universality has survived many attacks, until now. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) gazed deep into the eyes of the Canadian electorate and swore that those programs were sacrosanct. Those are his words, not mine. Now the Government says it is sorry, it just tripped over the deficit which it did not notice during the election campaign. There was no mention of the deficit. The Conservatives sullied somewhat their blue lips when they asked Canadians to trust them last fall.

Canadians were given spending commitments of $17 billion until a scant five months after election night when their trustworthy government bludgeoned them with taxes and lacerated them unmercifully with cuts.

Senior citizens plan for their retirements, they don't just wait around until the day comes without any thought as to how they will survive after 65. Fifty thousand dollars a year for two pensioners is not poverty, no, but it is not wealth either. In an urban riding like mine, with one of the highest costs of living in the country, clawing back the old age pension can and will seriously jeopardize the plans and the lifestyles of these seniors.

Even more serious is the creation of two types of senior citizens; those who are perceived by the Government to be in need and those who are not.

For example, there is a woman in my riding. She is in her seventies and collects approximately $40 a month from a private pension plan from a job she worked at eight hours a day, 40 hours a week, for 40 years. She receives $40 a month but that was the state of private pension plans during her working life. She will not apply for the Guaranteed Income Supplement, no matter what we say to her. We cannot convince her to apply for the Guaranteed Income Supplement because her Nova Scotian pride, borne by all of us including my friend from Cumberland Colchester (Mr. Casey), wrongly tells her this is a hand-out.

On the other hand, she believes the old age pension is acceptable because everyone over 65 receives it, regardless of income level. She receives this desperately needed funding with her dignity intact. Also intact is her belief that this pension is in some small way a return for a lifetime of contribution to the Canada that we know. This a belief that I think is held strongly by all older Canadians and one that the Government is tampering with to its peril.

Abandon universality and with it goes this dignity and this belief and indeed the commitment to the Canadian future that we all want and, perhaps most important of all, the sense that Canada appreciates her senior citizens and thanks them for the contributions they have made over many long years.

So much for so-called sacred trusts. So much for the believability of the Government. So much for how much trust Nova Scotians will have in the Government's promises next time around.

Family allowance too will be clawed back, again in those families whose income is in excess of $50,000 a year. I wonder how many couples with a combined income of $50,000 plus, who have three children, a mortgage and all the other attendant bills that modern families accrue, consider themselves wealthy, especially when one adds the surtax and sales tax to the claw back.

This same couple has received little or no help from the Government when it comes to caring for their children. They may, along with their wealthier counterparts, get some respite with tax credits, but tax credits do not create child care spaces and neither does the Government, for all its fancy promises. Tax credits do not establish quality child care centres where none exist. Tax credits do not protect parents and children desperate for care and forced to make catch-up arrangements.

Recently I spoke to a working mother who was fortunate enough to be able to pay for child care if she could find it. Unfortunately, there was no centre near her home or place of work. Consequently, she arranged for her babysitting in her neighbourhood.

There are many women who provide this kind of care and who do it well. But it is not regulated or supervised and, consequently, we cannot be sure that all care given in this haphazard manner is the kind and level of care that we must insist upon for Canadian children. It is not regulated, it is not supervised, and therefore it is fraught with dangers.

Indeed, for my friend it was. One busy morning—and most working mothers will recognize the kind of busy morning—she was attempting to get her 18-month old ready, her four-year old ready and herself ready for work, nursery school and the babysitter. Her four-year old son refused to get dressed. He sat down in the middle of the floor and began to cry. She first tried to order him out of this tantrum but then realized that this was not a minor development but a serious matter. She discovered that this normal, active four-year old boy was being shut up in a closet for two hours every afternoon. His infant sister took a nap and the babysitter could not be bothered having an active four-year old running around. He spent two hours while his sister slept locked in a dark closet. An exception, some may say. I hope so, but I fear not.

There are mothers and some fathers who work hard on subsistence wages. One of my constituents worked from 8.30 a.m. to 4.30 p.m. The nearest child care centre opens at 8 a.m. It was impossible for her to deliver her child at 8 a.m. and be at work at 8.30 a.m. There was no babysitter available. She was forced to quit her job and live on social assistance. We can only guess at the blows to her self esteem, since they are not even counted in this kind of equation. What did the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) say to her? He said: "Sorry, maybe we can get to it before the end of the mandate".

What about the mother who chooses to stay at home? It appears from some of its other policy decisions that the Government believes this is the desired position for Canadian mothers. What about this woman? If her husband makes in excess of $50,000 he will be forced to pay the claw back even though, since its inception, the money for family allowance has been deemed to belong to the mother. Here is a tacit move to joint income when a married couple cannot file a joint return in this country. I guess it is a question of: "What is yours is mine and what is mine is the Government's".

For ten years as a family lawyer, I saw women trapped in brutal marriages and I saw them save the family allowance from month to month for five or six years to accumulate enough cash to escape truly horrific situations. These women were not slum dwellers. They were not depraved. They were women who might even live in the same sort of neighbourhood as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), or the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Beatty), but they saved that money because it was the only money to which they had access, and the only way they could escape from situations totally untenable. Now that the husband in these situations must pay the tax, what extra pressures will be brought to bear on those women who already live in the twilight world of fear and abuse?

I am proud to be an Atlantic Canadian. I am proud to be a Nova Scotian, but I join all those in my region who protest the battering our people are taking. The murderous tax grab on the middle-income worker goes on. In fact, in Halifax today, small music schools fear extinction because of the sales tax, and parents face the situation that their children's exposure to music may become too expensive a luxury, a luxury they simply cannot afford.

Again in my riding of Halifax, a number of small restaurants flourish in the downtown core. Workers can buy their lunches for under $5. The sales tax will write finis to that. Restaurateurs of Halifax are frightened, with good reason.

In spite of everything, the middle-income worker of Halifax presses on. But it gets harder. Working mothers without access to child care, senior citizens threatened with a loss of the portion of their planned retirement income, travellers—mostly seniors and students—threatened with the loss of their favourite mode of transportation.

Nova Scotian universities, too, have a proud tradition. For generations they have provided teachers, lawyers, doctors and scores of other community leaders to the rest of the country, indeed to the world. Today, university administrations, faculties and students are suffering from underfunding. How does the Government react to this need? Does it offer relief to the beleaguered institutions and the people who work in them? No. The Government offers yet more cuts.

Education and a better life for our children has been the driving force behind Nova Scotians, be they coal-miners, fishermen, dock workers, or farmers. The deterioration caused by the squeeze on our universities is perhaps the most obscene because it causes people to lose their dreams, their dreams of betterment. The loss of hope for the future is and will be unforgivable.

Students watch their universities crumble around them because established programs funding has been reduced. Shame it is and shame it will continue to be.

What about cultural funding? What about cultural unity forged through the CBC? It is losing its punch as the corporation loses funding.

Health care is at risk. Defence policy has been decimated. Small towns like Summerside and Barrington have been inflicted major wounds. Larger centres such as Sydney are bleeding from cuts.

Over all, it has been tax, tax and more tax. What for? It was to reduce a deficit that was not important enough to mention in the last election campaign.

Canadians are reeling from this juggernaut of a Budget. However, the deficit is hardly touched, hardly touched at all. My constituents understand the need to make sacrifices, to ensure that our children are not crippled by debt in their future endeavours. To get kicked in the teeth and not even see a significant deficit reduction is the unkindest cut of all.

My constituents and, indeed, the vast majority of Atlantic Canadians have a deep and abiding belief in Canada. That abiding belief was manifested by their rejection of the Reagan trade deal. They are disturbed and upset by this Budget with its concerted attacks on those Canadian institutions upon which they have depended for many years. They believe that they deserve better than a harsh uncaring Government that appears to attack without reason. They believe that this Budget is another step on the downhill slide to that level playing field with the United States. The problem is that one person's level playing field is another person's graveyard.

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Halifax (Ms. Clancy) on her speech. I do not know whether or not this is her first speech in the House. It is; she nods her head in affirmation. I congratulate her. It was an excellent initial contribution.

However, she spent her speech, appropriately for a budget debate, criticizing the Budget. She criticized the expenditure cuts pretty well universally. I did not hear any praise for the expenditure cuts at all. I think that she was critical of all of them implying that they should not have been made.

She also criticized the revenue side, suggesting that taxes were too high and implying that the tax increases should not have been made.

She also said that she did not think there was enough reduction in the deficit to justify the spending cuts and the revenue increases. My confusion throughout is that if none of the cuts should have been made and none of the taxes should have been raised, then according to the finance figures the deficit would be about $36.5 billion as opposed to the projected $30.5 billion.

She has said that she is opposed to the cuts. She is opposed to the tax increases as well. However, she is apparently concerned about the deficit. In saying she opposes the two she is calling for a deficit of $36.5 billion. I wonder if she could clarify for me whether she has any views on what would be the appropriate level of the deficit. Should it be $36 billion or $40 billion? Should we be spending more?

There was an implication in some of her criticisms, in calling for example on expanding the child care program and so on, that in fact she would like to see more spending. Presumably a $40 billion or a $45 billion deficit may be more appropriate to the aspirations she talks about.

As a new member of the Liberal caucus, does she feel confident enough to say what would be an appropriate level of deficit? Will she elucidate on when would be an appropriate time to start paying off that debt? She must surely realize that the children about whom she spoke at some point in time will have to pay off the debts we are now accumulating.

Ms. Clancy: I thank very much the Minister for his kind comments on my first speech. I would like to say that while it was certainly a great desire of mine up to and including the night of November 21 to be a member of the Government, sadly, that did not take place. While I would be happy to give the Minister some instruction on how to run the Government of Canada better, I am not sure that this is the correct forum in which to do it.

Indeed, there have been suggestions made over the years about how revenue can be generated as opposed to taxes being raised. There are manners in which this can be done. Far be it from me as a junior Member to advise a senior Minister in this fashion.

However, I would like to remind the Minister that the general debt has doubled. From Confederation to 1984 it came to one figure. That figure has doubled from 1984 to 1989. I think the Minister's suggestion that I think the deficit should be at $40 billion can probably be better handled by those on his side of the House as they seem to be better at increasing debt in a shorter period of time.

I assure the Minister most definitely that come the time that he and I switch sides in this House—in other words, that we move to his side of the House and he moves to ours—that I will make my contributions on the way that government spending, taxation and revenue generating can be done, along with my colleagues, in a most pertinent and strategic manner. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the people of Canada will at that time cry hallelujah.

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the Hon. Member for Halifax (Ms. Clancy) on her good contribution to the debate. I was very impressed with the warmth with which she spoke about the proud people of Nova Scotia, of her province and of her riding. She indicated to us how much she cares about them. I would like to tell her that we on this side of the House do care. She may not always agree with us, but we care a lot.

The greatest threat to the people to whom she was referring throughout her speech is precisely the size of our debt. It is a very real problem. It is not one that we have imagined. It is not a problem that we ran away from during the campaign, no matter what our friends say very frequently.

If you remember well, Mr. Speaker, toward the end of 1988 employment stopped increasing. The rate of interest was at about 10 per cent after the market collapse of the year before. We have a list of 20 different groups that have made studies of the situation. We in the Department of Finance were the most pessimistic. We said that we expected a lower rate of increase in our economy, and a lower increase in employment. We were convinced that inflationary pressure would go down. It did not. It very quickly created the problem with which we are faced. We do not run away from it. We are facing it in the best possible way, with the a very balanced Budget which is particularly attentive to the people with lower incomes. The Hon. Member will recognize that.

The Hon. Member spoke about regions. We are increasing our payments to the regions at a slower rate in certain cases but on the whole in a very considerable way. In the area of regional development over the last five years we have increased our programs by 50 per cent. Over the next five years they will be increased by 35 per cent. That is a large amount of money. We are trying to manage all these programs in a way that will guarantee that they can be delivered over the next years and not passed on to our children.

Basically, this is what we are doing. As far as the goods and sales tax reform is concerned, I would like to tell the Hon. Member that her region stands to profit more than most from that reform. The people of Nova Scotia are presently taxed through the federal sales tax in a most unjust way. Reforming it, making it more general and wider based, as well as with a lower rate, will improve the over-all situation of the economy across Canada, particularly in her province. On the whole, I do not think that she needs to be that pessimistic. The situation is certainly not all dark, far from it, and we have taken the necessary steps to ensure that progress will be made on a long-standing basis for the whole of Canada and also for our provinces.

Ms. Clancy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Langelier (Mr. Loiselle), and indeed I thank him as well for his moral support earlier when I was nervous about getting up.

However, I do not deny and I am sure the Hon. Member, by his speech, does care. He does care. Unfortunately, I think that this caring that may exist in isolated spots on the opposite side of the House does not necessarily run through to the powers in the front benches. I think there are problems in Atlantic Canada that clearly do not have a priority with this Government. While I think that the Hon. Member means very well when he talks about the reform of the sales tax, I have to tell him most seriously, most definitively, that for small business people in Nova Scotia and most particularly in my City of Halifax, that is not true. They are frightened.

Music school operators and restaurateurs in particular are very frightened. Parents are frightened. Every voter, every citizen in my riding sees the possibility of an extra $1,000 a year coming out of his or her pocket. Piling that on top of the surtax is just creating a situation in an area that is economically depressed to a degree, and has been economically depressed for a long time; it is untenable and unacceptable.

I realize that he as an individual cares. I fear the Government as a group does not.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Monteith).

Mr. Ken Monteith (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise today to speak in the debate on the Budget. As a new Member of Parliament for Elgin, I have the honour to represent the people of Elgin County and Norfolk Township. As many Members will already know, this area is prime agricultural land and many constituents are active farmers. As well, we have a large number of small businesses and I am pleased to report we hope to have more in the very near future.

The Chamber of Commerce has reported that there has been significant interest expressed by companies in the United States about relocating to Elgin since the implementation of free trade last January. I chose this opportunity to make my maiden address to the House of Commons because of the important messages contained in this Budget.

This Budget is about Canada's future. It is about the future of our children and our grandchildren as they enter the workforce and establish their own homes. This Budget means taking control today so that our children will have jobs and our seniors will have the income security programs that have become part of the Canadian way of life. This is significant in Elgin because 40 per cent of our population is either under 18 years of age or over 65.

This Budget looks seriously at our problem of debt and the ways to reduce it. It proposes that everyone should have a part in reducing our national debt. This Budget did not hit the poor, instead it was crafted carefully to protect low income Canadians.

The Budget proposals do not take away anyone's pension. The concept of universality remains firm. All Canadians entitled to old age security or family allowance will continue to receive it. What the Budget does do, though, is ask of those Canadians with the higher income to pay back some of these benefits.

Canadians with net incomes of over $50,000 are asked to repay benefits at a rate of 15 per cent of individual net income exceeding this amount. This measure will be eased in over three years and the threshold limit will be reviewed periodically. Is this so unfair, given our national debt? Is this unjust? I think not. I believe Canadians will realize that this Budget is necessary action.

When we look at the bottom line, we realize that the national debt is now more than half the size of the economy and is growing faster than the economy. Interest payments will require more than a third of the federal revenue this year. Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Government has worked hard to bring down the growth of the public debt.

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Monteith: For example, the public debt growth averaged 23.5 per cent a year over the four years ending in 1984–85. In the four years ending 1988–89, this growth has been reduced to 12.7 per cent per year. The recent surge in interest rates shows how vulnerable we are. In just one year, the projected cost of making interest payments on the debt has risen by $6 billion.

A young baby not even a year old now has a debt over his or her head of over $12,000. This legacy of debt to our young cannot continue. This Government has made it clear that we will not make our children and grandchildren pay for the debts of their parents.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has reviewed the Government's expenditures and has made difficult choices. No one likes to see programs cut or delayed but any prudent manager knows that programs must be reviewed periodically and judged on their current effectiveness and efficiency.

This is what our Minister of Finance has done in this Budget. He has looked at the pie and saw where money was spent and where he could save. In fiscal year 1988–89, Government expenditures amounted to $133 billion, of which $33 billion was spent to pay the interest on our debt. Thirty billion dollars was spent in transfers to Canadians, government cheques in the form of old age security, guaranteed income supplement, spouses' allowance, unemployment insurance benefits, family allowance cheques, and veterans' pensions and allowances. Twenty–four billion dollars in cash and tax points were transferred to the provinces, territories and municipalities to help pay for health care, education, social assistance and other programs.

In 1989–90, $34 billion will be transferred. This means the federal Government will transfer to the provinces, $1,293 for every man, woman and child in Canada. Not many Canadians realize the extent of federal support in these areas. The Budget papers show that $11.2 billion was spent on major subsidies and transfers. These include farm support programs, regional development programs, research and development activities, assistance to native communities, railway subsidies, student loans and payments to foster job skills.

Defence spending accounted for $11.1 billion, official development assistance accounted for $2.8 billion and operations of Government, $16.2 billion. Major payments to Crown corporations accounted for $4.4 billion.

Between 1984 and 1989, program spending has increased $13.2 billion. However, among the seven major components of program spending, operations of Government and major payments to Crown corporations have recorded absolute declines.

This is significant, because now the Government spends less on its programs than it receives in revenues. So progress is being made but more has to be done. That is why the Minister of Finance carefully analyzed the Government's revenues and its expenditures and he selected areas where cuts could be made without hurting the average Canadian. That is why all Canadians have been asked to contribute a bit more but low income Canadians are being shielded. The Government's expenditure reductions will amount to $1.5 billion in 1989–90, $2.1 billion in 1990–91, and rise to about $2.5 billion per year thereafter.

To meet these expenditure reductions, the Government proposes to slow the growth in some programs, defer some programs, cancel some previously announced plans and terminate programs that no longer serve public policy. As well, privatization of Crown corporations will be examined closely to see where the Government's interests can be reduced.

Defence spending has grown about six per cent each year in the last four years. This growth has been during a period when total government spending was increased at about 3.3 per cent annually.

The Budget of the Minister of Finance proposes that defence spending continue to grow but at a slower rate. In addition, the Government will not proceed with the acquisition of nuclear submarines.

Similarly, the ratio between the Gross Domestic Product and official development assistance will be reduced. Despite this reduction, Canada will still be contributing over $2 billion to developing countries this year.

The Government has already put in place new tax measures to support families with small children. Child care expense deductions of $4,000 per child under six years of age and for children with special care needs remain in place. The child care special initiatives fund of $100 million that promotes research and development into ways of improving child care services will also remain in place.

The Budget does defer, however, the expenditure of $4 million to create with the provinces additional quality child care spaces. This expenditure could be made at a later date in our mandate when our physical position is better due to debt reduction measures taken now.

The Government will continue to share costs with the provinces for child care services that are eligible under the Canada Assistance Plan. In 1988–89 this will amount to approximately $240 million.

Secretary of State programs such as the promotion of official languages, women's programs, native programs and multiculturalism will be reduced. Funds will be targeted toward community based projects which respond to community needs. Savings of approximately $10 million will be realized in 1989–90.

Currently, the Canadian taxpayer subsidizes ridership on VIA Rail to the amount of $641 million in 1988 or about $100 for each passenger. Ridership on the trains has not increased and rail is now one of the least used modes of transportation.

The Government's assistance to VIA Rail will be $541 million this year and will decline in subsequent years. VIA will be required to operate in a more cost effective manner and produce a corporate plan outlining measures to achieve this goal.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that a similar goal was set for Canada Post a few years ago. Many believed that that goal could not be achieved. Yet the Minister of Finance has reported to this House that the Canada Post Corporation is expected to pay the Government a dividend this year. I am certain VIA Rail will be in the same position in a few years as well.

The Finance Minister also evaluated a number of agricultural programs which, of course, are of particular interest to my riding. The At and East Grain and Flour Subsidy program subsidized the rail transportation of wheat and flour exports to eastern ports. It was established in 1959 prior to the opening of the St. Lawrence Seaway in order to ensure that Canadian exports were shipped through Canadian ports and not through competing U.S. ports. At the time the subsidy was initiated U.S. rail costs were less than Canadian.

However, this competitive concern no longer exists since the cost of shipping by rail in the United States is considerably higher than shipping by water through the St. Lawrence Seaway. The elimination of this subsidy is the logical one, given the Government's commitment to reduce expenditures.

The Dairy Export Program provided for a direct subsidy of $6.03 per hectolitre on 2.2 million hectolitres of milk production destined for export market. This is one of the few, if not the only, farm group in supply management that receives an export subsidy. In 1984, the amount of milk eligible for the subsidy was reduced to 1.1 million hectolitres. Although the subsidy was to be reduced last summer, it was not. The Budget proposes to eliminate the remaining half and consequently reduce government spending by about $7 million annually.

The price of gasoline increased in this Budget, but the excise tax rebate program will continue until December of this year and the sales tax rebate program for farmers continues as planned.

As the Member of Parliament representing a large number of tobacco growers, I would be remiss if I did not mention the effects of taxation increases on tobacco products. Yes, it will affect my constituents. Tobacco farmers have seen a rapid decline in the consumption of their products, especially in the last decade.

However, the Government has implemented programs to help farmers ease into the production of alternate crops. The Tobacco Assistance Program helps farmers to exit the industry through buy-backs of tobacco quotas. Programs have also been implemented to assist farmers with diversification into alternate crops. And like crop insurance, the federal Government has carried the lion's share, while the provincial Government debated back and forth on whether or not it would join to assist these farmers.

The federal Government's commitment to agriculture has been outstanding. Canadian farmers have been sheltered from the effects of the international trade war in agricultural products at a cost of over $1 billion to the federal Treasury. Federal spending in agriculture has increased from $3.2 billion in 1984–45 to some $5.8 billion in 1987–88, and grain farmers have been assisted with over $10 billion in federal funds over the past five years. The federal Government has committed $800 million in drought assistance because it was obvious that crop insurance was not going to be sufficient to cover the effects of severe drought last summer.

As a Government we will need to examine closely the relationships in agriculture to ensure that long-range policies take into account the constitutionally shared responsibility among federal and provincial Governments in this important sector. Already review of programs such as crop insurance, safety net options and pesticide registration are under way. We are all in this together is the Budget's message, and we all have to pull together to insure that the public debt is reduced. That is why Canadians are being asked to pay a bit more in federal surtax. High income Canadians are asked to pay even more, and large corporations will be required to pay more tax through the large corporations tax. There have been changes to the federal sales tax, but changes have also been made to refundable sales tax credits in order to compensate low income Canadians.

Our Finance Minister has carefully weighed his options. Expenditure and revenue measures have had considerable analysis in order to present a fair and balanced Budget. This Budget contains many complex issues, but the most important point of this Budget is that all Canadians will share in securing the future of the Canadian way of life.

Mr. Vanclief: Mr. Speaker, just a few comments to the Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Monteith). First, I want to congratulate him on his maiden speech in the House.

Knowing that the Hon. Member is very involved in the agricultural community, I noted with interest the way he skirted around what the Budget is really going to do to agriculture and the bringing into line with the concerns of our fellow farmers south of the border. All I can say is that if this Government has another two or three Budgets to take a crack at Canadian agriculture in the manner in which it did in this Budget, we will have a level playing field, but it will be the playing field of the farmers south of the border.

The Hon. Member made the comment, for example, about the gas tax rebate staying in place until January 1, 1990. However, he did not make it as clear as I think he should have, in order to be fair to farmers, that they are going to be unable to reclaim the tax starting January 1, 1990 and this will cost Canadian farmers $100 million a year.

I would like to know what the Hon. Member is hearing from dairy farmers. I know what I am hearing from the dairy farmers in my riding, namely that supply management is being pecked away at. Will he make a few comments about that? Perhaps also he could give some comments about the concerns of pork producers. The Americans right now are insisting that a bond be posted at the rate of 3.5 cents a pound for chilled and frozen pork that we are shipping to the U.S. I would ask the Hon. Member to tell us about the views of the agricultural producers of his riding on these issues. Are they happy with the pecking away of last week's Budget?

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for the question. He mentioned that farmers are concerned about the pecking away of the Budget. I would like to remind him that the Government supports agriculture. Never before has a Government bent over backward for agriculture. Just today, I made a statement in the House about import controls for hatching eggs and chicks, and I believe that supports the fact that the Government is fully behind supply management in Canada.

The Hon. Member mentioned the pork situation. I realize that the American Government is talking about imposing that bond. It has not yet been imposed, and I believe that the federal Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski) indicated in the House the other day that the Government of Canada will be fighting that.

Ms. Langan: Mr. Speaker, I have two questions for the Hon. Member. I would first like to congratulate him on his maiden speech in the House. I know the feeling.

The Hon. Member said that the provinces will continue to share in the cost of child care under the Canada Assistance Plan. Would the Hon. Member agree that the Government should insist that all federal–provincial transfer payments be spent on the services for which they are transferred when they go to the provinces?

Second, I was very pleased to hear the Hon. Member say that the Government supports the agricultural industry. I meet regularly with the dairy farmers of my riding. In fact, the dairy farmers are quite alarmed about the fact that hundreds of litres of milk a day come from the United States. Duty is supposed to be charged on that milk, but in fact the milk that pours across the border affecting farmers in the Fraser Valley is not charged duty by the National Revenue Department. I wonder if the Hon. Member could comment on that.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for her comments on my maiden speech to the House. I am sure that she experienced the same butterflies.

The Hon. Member mentioned child care. Of course, the responsibility for child care lies with the provinces, but the federal Government has committed, through the Canada Assistance Plan, to continue the payments that have been made toward child care and we are committed to child care.

There are many dairy farmers in my riding and I am in daily contact with them as well. Several of them spoke to me over the weekend and I know that they have concerns about supply management. However, I am sure that if they take an honest look at it, they will realize that the Government does support supply management.

As far as the situation with the milk in British Columbia, I understand that the Department of Agriculture is looking into it to see that it does not continue. We will have to ask the Minister that particular question.

Mr. Lee: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for his speech also. I can appreciate his commitment and the commitment of many Hon. Members on both sides of the House to the agricultural sector of the economy. I would like to raise an issue involving the economy in general.

Since the Budget, questions have been raised and discussions have been commenced on general economic factors now present in the economy with the backdrop of increasing interest rates which has now been going on for several months and which, if not actual Government policy, is certainly something to which the Government acquiesces. We see in the Budget a significant increase in the tax take, cash taken out of the economy, involving several billions of dollars. At the same time, there is a drastic reduction of several billion dollars interspersed regionally across Canada. An example of this is the effect on Summerside, Prince Edward Island, of the closing of the military base.

These three significant economic factors are all occurring at the same time. As well, there will be an anticipated cyclical downturn in the economy. I wonder what steps, if any, the Government is now taking that would recognize the multiplier effect of these Government initiatives at the same time as there is an anticipated cyclical downturn. What steps are being taken to protect Canada from an inadvertent or negligent backslide into recession?

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his comments on my maiden speech and for his question. Back in the early 1980s when there was a different Government of the day, no action was taken and there were criminally high interest rates. We as a Government have taken action that will see interest rates steadied. We will see that there will be no recession in Canada because of the action this Conservative Government has taken under the leadership of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). The Budget of the Minister of Finance will prove the Opposition wrong. It will prove that we are on the right track to securing the future of Canada.

Mrs. Sparrow: I, too, want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Elgin (Mr. Monteith) on his maiden speech. As he has mentioned, this Budget affects each and every one of us across Canada, but it is a fair Budget. We did not get into this mess ourselves. It started some 20 or 25 years ago. In fact, when the then Prime Minister, Mr. Trudeau, came to power, there was a debt of $18 billion. When he left, the debt was $170 billion. In fact, in the last four years, this Government has brought the deficit down each and every year. We have cut spending, and that is the first time since 1946 that any Government has cut spending three years in a row.

Sure, last year it cost us 31 cents on every dollar to service the debt, and this year it will cost 35 cents. If we did nothing but increase our spending by 24 per cent, as did the Government on the other side of the House, just where would we be?

• (1620)

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Speaker, interest rates would sky rocket. I would hate to think where we would be; I think interest rates would be higher than they were before. Unemployment would increase. We would never reduce the debt. Our children and our grandchildren would not have a chance. They would have more than $12,000 over their heads when they were born; it would be $120,000 the minute they were born.

This Government has taken the steps that we need. Never before has this happened in Canada, and the Opposition will not admit it.

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the 20 minutes that I have I want to advance the case being made by the Official Opposition. First, this is a Budget which is wrong for the time considering the way the economy is performing now and the signs ahead. Second, right or wrong, it is a Budget that is unfair and out of tune with the responsibilities that the federal Government has in our Canadian society.

When I address myself to the question of the rightness of this Budget for the times, I want to make something very clear. I do not take the position that raising taxes is always wrong, and that restraint is something that no Government should ever engage in.

That is not my proposition. I know that it is not popular in some quarters to talk at all about raising taxes. In the United States it is said to be a ticket to oblivion politically, and restraint is also said to be unpopular.

However, it is not a matter of whether one is a Liberal or a Conservative when one is talking about restraint and taxes. It is really a matter of the needs of the economy at the time and the situation of the Government accounts at the time. A case can be and ought to be made at times in our economic cycle for increases in taxes. Restraint is also an extremely important policy that Governments have to take seriously at times when the deficit is increasing, when social programs are getting out of hand, and when there are management problems in the social programs.

I do not want it to be said on the opposite side that this is an irresponsible criticism of their Budget. Taxes sometimes do have to be increased. Unlike the Americans, I think one of the great things about Canadians is that they are willing to have their taxes increased, provided that the increases are fair and are being used for something worth while. That is why this Budget fails. This is not the time to be increasing taxes. It is certainly not the time and never would be for the form of increase in which this Budget is presented.

The Trudeau administration, in its last term of office, experienced very tough economic times. Interest rates were high. The deficit was high. There was tremendous unjustifiable concern about the fact that Canada was going through one of the most serious recessions in post-war history, in fact one of the most serious since the Depression.

One can look back with hindsight and say what might have been done during the Trudeau administration to solve or reduce that problem. However, one thing is very clear: when the Government took office in 1984, the economic cycle was at a point when things were definitely and clearly looking up, not just in Canada but in the United States as well. The interest rate was falling. Employment was increasing. Huge profits were beginning to be made by companies that in 1980, 1981, and 1982 were sustaining losses that would protect and shelter taxable income for four and five years ahead from that time. The deficit was high, let me concede that; we thought it was high at $170 billion.

When the Government took office with those underlying economic conditions, if there were a time for a countercyclical type of budgeting that would bring the deficit down and would bring government programs under control, that was the time. The Government knew it. It talked about the deficit going into that election, the great scandal of it, how important it was for them to address it, how the economy would be able to handle it, how we would be able to survive a Budget the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) was signalling was going to be a tough Budget.

I would like to submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that the Government blew it. In a four-year period, instead of taking advantage of great increases of employment, over 1.5 million new taxpayers added to this system, record profits for Canadian corporations, and great opportunities to deal with the deficit, the Government let the deficit grow to such a point that it grew more during its four years in office than in the whole history of our country up until 1984, including what it considered to be the very profligate years of Mr. Trudeau's administration when he was presiding over a very serious international recession.

Government Members had the opportunity for economic responsibility, for restraint, for raising taxes. They said that they would do it. They said that they had the backbone for it. They had the largest electoral mandate in the history of Canada, and they blew it. They have come back from an election in which they have spread propaganda and made promises of tremendous social programs: medicare promises, child care promises, promises to protect the social security network in Canada, and in this Budget their true commitment is revealed to be zero. When we look at a tough and unfair restraint Budget, with which I am going to deal in some detail in a moment, the economy over which they are presiding is a totally different one. They inherited from the Trudeau administration trends that would have permitted a tough Budget to be introduced. History has been rewritten about the Trudeau years, but the facts are there. A tough restrained tax increase Budget could have been sustained back in 1984 and 1985 when a boom was just being launched.

Just a few days ago we had an indication that the boom times may be ending, that this country and the United States may be looking to a downturn. Unemployment is up. There are more people unemployed and the participation rate is down. This is a time when a different kind of Budget is in order, a Budget that would be more in line with their campaign promises, broken in the Budget that they have brought forward.

I condemn this shift of gears by the Government because, as other members of my Party have indicated, it represents broken promises and a right wing agenda. Many things are given away, as I will show in a moment, that are critical to the well-being of Canada and to the identity of Canada. In any event, this is not the time for a Budget that restrains programs and cuts them back. This is the time when particularly in the regions of our country support is required. A government effort is required and government participation is required.

However, what do we see at the centre and in the regions of our country? We see withdrawal. Montreal, Toronto, and Vancouver can survive this Government, but I do not think the regions of our country will be able, nearly as well, to survive the kind of measures which have been introduced in this Budget.

I want to turn now, after giving my views about the timing of a tough restraint Budget as being at least four years too late, to talk about the measures contained in the Budget. What is the Government telling us in its proposals to the Canadian people? One thing that is clear is that Canadians and Americans have some very different values. One that is relevant to examine this Government's purpose is the way we feel about the market-place. In Canada there is no doubt that we appreciate the importance of the market-place. The market-place provides a discipline. There is a bottom line that focuses the attention of an enterprise on its efficiency. That is valuable. We promote and we respect the market-place.

It really goes further in the United States. In that country the market-place is accepted as a proper moral judgment of behaviour and value of the members of that society. Those who succeed in the market-place are valued, and the American people accept the consequences of the market-place in its moral terms. Perhaps the best example is Medicare. I suggest that Members check with their American friends and find out how differently they feel about Medicare than we do. They do not see it as a service or a social need which must be met by Government through the tax system. They think of Medicare as a business. Medical services are provided as a business; every doctor is a small businessman entitled to maximize his profits and is under no obligation to serve those who cannot pay.

In one institution and in one domain of life after another in the United States, that is the approach. That is not our approach. We regard the social network as a fundamental responsibility of Government. On Medicare, the Americans look across the border to Canada and think they are looking at a Communist plot up here to make doctors into public servants working for the Government for a salary. Millions of dollars are spent in a campaign to reinforce that ideology on the part of the American people. I could mention many institutions that have become part of our social safety network which in the United States are only part of the market-place. But because of the time, I will only concentrate on one or two of them to make my point.

In particular, I want to talk about the situation of closing the military bases in regions of our country. I have spoken about this outside the House. I have made a suggestion to the Government. What I want to report to the House about is the idea of closing Downsview and moving its activities 45 miles away so that the Government can earn $750 billion in profit to keep the regional bases going in this country.

I am very proud to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that since I raised this suggestion publicly last Friday I have had a very strong balance of support from my constituents. These are people whose vested interests are to keep things from changing. Although there are exceptions, and I concede that, I am very proud to state that the overwhelming amount of reaction I have had from my riding is that this is a good idea. People are saying that if this can play a part in keeping the regions of our country continuing, if the DND presence in outlying regions can be sustained and foster viable economic life in those regions, they will accept this change.

I concede that it is not coming from everybody, but the overwhelming majority of people recognize that this is something that they are willing to do. It is a kind of sharing in which they are willing to participate. As far as the Government is concerned, it has made the most terrible mistake in falling into line with the market-place idea that things should be where the market dictates that they ought to be, rather than thinking of the shared approach that we have taken as a country to produce a certain standard of living and certain opportunities for all Canadians wherever they are.

During the last four years, while the economy was booming, while more and more fortunes were being made, and while Canadians were becoming more and more prosperous and finding more and more jobs, one of the things that grew, particularly in my riding, was the number of food banks and the number of people without shelter.

In Liberal times in the past, we did not see that situation. Certainly, food banks have a place even in a very rich society. There is no doubt that a food bank is needed, or shelter is needed for battered wives who get kicked out of their homes, or for people whose house burns down and who have to take their children somewhere to spend the night, or for travellers who are robbed, or for people who are facing crises in their lives. In Tory times, in this Conservative age in which we live, that is not what the food banks are for. These are not the people who are lining up in my riding to get a free meal. We are now finding that food banks are there to help the poor, people whose poverty has been created by the Government's approach to economic development. They are there to help the poor get a square meal. Beginning in the third week of every month the line-ups begin in my riding as people on social programs, the poor—who are mostly children and single mothers, or people who are handicapped—begin to line up to keep their families alive until the inadequate incomes provided under the social programs to which the Government has abandoned them comes in at the end of the month.

With the increase in food banks across the country, and with the increase of the homeless, we are starting to see how this Government feels about the social safety net and about the market-place. These people are outside of it.

I do not like to talk about personalities, Mr. Speaker, but I cannot refrain from reminding the House that the wife of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) attended the official opening of a food bank in the Ottawa region during the last Parliament. The argument was made that here is a wonderful opportunity for the rich people in our society with social consciences, which are perhaps the strongest in the world, to get some exercise. Here is an opportunity for them to exercise their charitable nature and spirit of volunteerism which is such a strong part of Canadian life. Mr. Speaker, that is sick. I think it is a disgrace. During the prosperous times we have had in the last four years would have been the time to see the social safety net maintained and strengthened, not torn apart and weakened.

I also want to talk about the universal programs to which the Government has stated it is committed, and which it has claimed have survived the Budget. On this side of the House we are using the expression "claw-back". What the claw-back means is that even though one may receive benefits from a social program, the old age pension or the baby bonus, if your income is over a certain level it is clawed back and, as a result of the Budget, you receive nothing. That is the end of the universal social programs in this country, if the Budget goes through. There is no way it can be said that it is a universal program if senior citizens do not get anything out of it, and many of them will not get anything out of it.

Until 1971 there was an Old Age Security tax on the income tax return. Up until 1971 it was 3 per cent of an individual's tax paid in order to receive an Old Age Security pension upon retirement. Mr. Speaker, that was a contract. It was an engagement between a citizen and a taxpayer and their Government that, when they retired, they would receive the old age pension. The person contributed to it and it was there in a separately accounted and segregated fund.

The Government has broken faith with senior citizens. It has the hypocrisy to tell them that they are still getting the universal programs. In my opinion, it has violated a contractual undertaking. It would be like an insurance company taking payments from a person and putting them in a separate fund and then upon retirement cooking the books and giving nothing for a lifetime of contributions to the old age pension.

At the beginning I stated that I could see situations in which taxes had to be increased. However, the tax increases that we have seen from the Government have been increasing the burden on the poor and on middle-income Canadians, and token increases on families that can afford to pay proportionately more. Mr. Speaker, this is not a tax increase that could be approved under any circumstances.

The balance between how much corporations pay and how much individuals pay is extremely interesting. The balance is not moving to tax corporations more but, if anything, it is moving to tax corporations less and individuals more, and that in relation to increasing economic prosperity and increasing corporate profits.

There is a good reason the Government does not want to put fair taxes on corporations. The reason is to give a gift to Americans who are earning indirectly through their corporations from the Canadian economy. A growing number of our corporations are owned in the United States. During Liberal years the trend was the opposite. During these Conservative years we are moving increasingly toward control of our economy by Americans. Unless those corporations are taxed fully, certainly more than they are being taxed now, individuals primarily Canadian citizens will pay more than their share, and corporations that are increasingly owned by Americans will pay less and less of their share. That is not acceptable.

Taxing corporations is a way of making sure that there is a proper share of taxes for the maintaining of government services on earnings in this country, whether by Americans or Canadians. Taxation should be moving in the other direction. Corporations should be paying more. Those who are better off should be paying more than the poor and middle income Canadians, the Government's favourite milk cow, who are paying more.

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Speaker, we have a saying in French that when something is exaggerated too much it does not exist.

I have two comments, particularly in respect of the closing remarks by the Hon. Member. Either he has not read the Budget or something is wrong. He talks about a corporation tax. Indeed, we will be collecting $1 billion in additional money from the corporations in the coming year.

He began his remarks by saying that we should have addressed the deficit problem when we came to power. I remind him of speeches by his colleagues at the time, that our measures were so severe that it would throw the country into a recession.

We did reduce the deficit considerably in the first year, the second year and the third year. We were thrown off track because of high interest rates. We are now trying to address that very real problem. I believe that reducing the deficit by about $10 billion over the four-year period is quite an achievement.

He talked about unusual and exceptional economic circumstances. I want to remind him that the equalization programs have also increased by 50 per cent over the year, so that, according to our programs, there is 2 per cent more support to less favoured regions.

When the Hon. Member talks about differences between Canada and the United States, I like to see him wrap himself in the Canadian flag, but I hope he leaves some for us because we are just as concerned about this country. That is why we are taking these measures to fight the deficit and correct the debt problem that is with us.

He said we increased the debt considerably. I remind him that we were left with a $38 billion deficit by the Liberals. We have been fighting that for the last four years and we have made good progress. We will continue to do so.

[Translation]

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleague on the Government side has not really asked me a question, but I am quite happy to comment on what he said before the House. First of all, he wants me to recognize that corporations pay an additional $1 billion in the Budget. That is true. But how much more do individuals have to pay? If we consider all tax increases imposed on individuals, we can see that the balance between corporations and individuals changes very little and that the burden is not being transferred to corporations. I wish to emphasize that point. I want the Government to change the balance and not only the total tax on corporations. The Government must make corporations pay a bigger share of total taxes.

[English]

I want also to refer to the general suggestion he made, that we were critical of the Budget the Conservatives introduced in 1984. It is quite true that we were critical. They were a majority Government and there was lots to criticize in that Budget.

The fact is that whatever the Conservatives believe they can do to bring down the deficit would have been twice as easy four years ago. They must recognize, when they talk among themselves, that they made a big gaff in the general direction of their economic policy. To have inflationary Budgets and doubling the deficit over a four-year period when there was a capacity to pay was a big opportunity lost.

Now, when an economic downturn seems likely, the Conservatives are jumping on its back and making it worse. They are making it certain that there will be more unemployment, more inflation and higher interest rates. This is their purpose in the Budget they have brought forward now. I feel reinforced in my observation that the Government blew it in 1984 by not trying to solve the deficit problem. The Government has blown it now by attacking the deficit as if we have a period of growth when in fact we are looking toward what could well be a period of decline.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, first I want to say that I certainly agree with a number of the criticisms the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) made of the Government's approach. I think it is quite clear that the approach of the Government in this Budget will increase the disparity between rich and poor in Canada.

The banks heaved an enormous sigh of relief when they discovered that there was to be no special taxation measure addressed to them. Certainly we on this side of the House would have hoped for a fairer tax system in this country, a system which is much more progressive.

I want to ask a question of my colleague, the Hon. Member for York Centre. Who is it that speaks for the Liberal Party on financial and budgetary matters? Of course, it was his colleague on the front benches a few seats from him, the Liberal finance critic, who said: "For my part I continue to wonder whether family allowances and possibly old age pensions need be universal, especially now that our federal deficits have mounted so markedly". A couple of weeks ago the president of the Liberal Party said: "We had a debate on universality but we did not ask ourselves whether the debate itself was still timely. As I see it, there is no longer a case for universality. We do not have enough resources. Since the need has become far greater among the poorest in Canada we must consider reallocating resources to offer generous assistance".

While I agree with the criticism of the Budget by the Hon. Member from the Liberal Party, I must ask who on earth is it that speaks for the Liberal Party. Is it the Liberal finance critic, who says that we must get rid of universality in family allowances and old age pensions? Is it the Liberal justice critic who just spoke? Is it the Liberal employment critic sitting in the House, who says something different? Who speaks for the Liberal Party on universality and on social programs? When they are saying one thing to one crowd and another thing to an entirely different crowd, why should we believe any of it?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to send my colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby—Kingsway (Mr. Robinson), a chart which will show him who speaks for the Liberal Party on these matters.

I want to read a statement which I adopt and which reflects the position of the Liberal Party on questions of universality. It is a statement made by a Princeton University professor. I hope members of the Government will listen, because I think we are in grave danger of abandoning a very valuable program and disguising a retreat from universality as a continuing commitment to it. He states:

> We pay taxes for schools to educate not just some parents' children, but the next generation of citizens. Even childless adults have a stake in the survival of their society. We do not pay Social Security taxes solely to sustain the aged but also to keep up a compact that rolls over from one generation to the next. These are the frameworks of a commonwealth.

On universality he states:

> Linking the fate of the poor to the majority strengthens their common sense of membership in the nation. The poor gain more from the vigilance of middle-class voters than they lose from any scattering of scarce benefits. Narrow targeting of public programs promotes the political isolation of their beneficiaries: it feeds resentments of the excluded lower middle classes and exposes the poor to retribution. Programs that target benefits on the poor can also target cutbacks.

I have a number of specific concerns about the Budget. One of them is the regions and the damage that is being done to them. Another is the vitality of our universal programs and the damage that is being done to them.

• (1650)

It is not too late for the Government to reconsider this Budget. I urge it to do so. It has done so in the past with Budgets in which it has made stupid and unjust proposals which it subsequently withdrew. Let the Government recognize the errors that it has made in this Budget and withdraw them as well.

Mr. Soetens: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for York Centre. I believe he was a member of the Government back in 1972, a Government which participated in one of the second largest land grabs in Canada, the largest being Mirabel. The second largest was in my riding. I refer to the proposed Pickering airport site.

It is with regard to that land and a very valid recommendation that the Hon. Member made that I would like to follow up. He suggested that we consider closing Downsview and that we consider moving the Armed Forces base to Barrie. We have heard the comment that the base has to be in the Toronto area.

What I would like to propose to the Hon. Member and what I would like his thoughts on is this: we have a substantial federal landholding in my riding. We do not have a housing problem in my riding in that we are building lots of them. We could possibly move the Downsview base to the airport land in my riding. However, in closing down the airport, the Hon. Member suggested that we use some of that revenue to help the bases across Canada. I have some sympathy for that proposal.

Would the Hon. Member be willing to go even further? His area has the housing crisis, which crisis is created by people wanting to move to Toronto for real jobs. Would he be willing to recommend to de Havilland that it move to Prince Edward Island or to Portage—Interlake to create jobs in the regions of Canada, real jobs that would encourage people in the regions to stay where they are? That would help the Hon. Member's housing crisis. It would help the job problem. It would help the Government's problem in keeping the Canadian Forces Base in the Toronto area.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, we have an extremely prosperous economy in the Toronto area. It is dynamic and very viable. I would certainly like to encourage de Havilland, which is now owned by Boeing of the United States, to expand its activities across the country. I was very pleased to see Magna International, an important Toronto company, respond to economic opportunities offered in Cape Breton Island. It created jobs there and a technical infrastructure that I know will have a lot of good spin-off effects. I would certainly encourage the Government to offer the kinds of programs in Prince Edward Island that it has offered in Cape Breton. They are programs that talk to the private sector.

However, I do not view the Summerside military operation in the same way that the Hon. Member views it. He seemed to suggest that a job at de Havilland is a real job—that is his expression. I took from what he said that he meant that a job working for the Department of National Defence at Summerside is not a real job. It is a real job. It is an important job.

I think the mandate that the military base at Summerside has is a mandate that is relevant to its location. It does search and rescue and North Atlantic patrol. What could be more appropriate for a base that is located in Prince Edward Island?

The Hon. Member should think again, and so should a lot of Conservatives, about the proposal that jobs in the private sector are the real jobs and that jobs in the public sector are not. That just does not wash. That is not the way this country is.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine).

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to comment today on the Minister of Finance's Budget Speech.

The Budget Speech describes services the Government of Canada wants to make available to Canadians, as well as the revenues necessary to pay for their distribution. For years, the Government has made services available to Canadians but Trudeau, who called himself a Liberal although, deep down inside, he was an idealist and a socialist, did it for 20 years with the co-operation of both Opposition parties— For 20 years, we gave to Canadians, we offered them services and at every election we increased the promises for the services to be provided in future, but by borrowing from people who, when the promises were made, did not pay, were not even born or in some cases from teen-agers who today, tomorrow, and 30 years from now will still have to pay for the debts of the Liberals, supported by the socialists.

Those debts, Mr. Speaker, amount to $320 billion. That was the key point in drawing up our budget speech. How can you live with a $320-billion debt? How can you live with interest costing Canadians $3 million an hour or $80 million a day? How can you live with interest costing every Canadian $1,300 a year or a family $5,000 a year? That is the cost for every family in Canada—$5,000. It costs every Canadian family $400 a month to pay the interest on the services provided by the Liberal Government, in alliance with the socialists, over the last 20 years, just to get elected every four years!

That is the reality we Conservatives must continue to face today.

What are the effects of this debt today, Mr. Speaker? It means that the Government, with such a great need for money, must borrow more. And when demand for money is strong, bankers must raise interest rates. Government competes with private enterprise, both multinationals and small businesses, and then companies must pay more for the money they need to grow. And in turn, Canadians who must buy an automobile, furniture, sporting goods, or have to build additions to their homes, must pay higher interest costs because the Canadian Government needs money to service an extremely heavy debt. This impacts negatively on small and medium businesses, borrowers, consumers. In that light we had to exercize caution and make the best out of this financial situation. We could have raised taxes, thereby choking demand in Canada. This would have met the current inflationary trends head on, but there was a danger. If through our actions we dampened demands too much, another problem would arise, and we would be faced with another recessionary bout. So what does it take?

It takes the most balanced Budget possible, one that will not fuel into the existing inflation, and it also takes a Budget that will not lead us into a serious recession. To reach that goal we decided, first, to increase the federal Government's revenues by having the workforce pay part of our obligations, rather than, as has been done over these last 20 years by a Liberal administration, having our commitments and our present needs shouldered by our young people still in university, high school and elementary schools. We do not want to have them pay for our debts later on.

We want to leave them a nice legacy. We do not want to leave them debts built up by the Liberals. So we decided, first, to reduce Government expenditures by $1.5 billion and increase Government revenues by $3.5 billion.

Some will say we could have reduced Government expenditures further. True! But we would have hurt a lot of people—it would have hurt our seniors, chronic patients, young people in school, it would have hurt a part of the people who need to share in our common wealth. So we reduced our expenditures by $1.5 billion, a maximum in our view. We discontinued some services we felt were neither essential nor a priority. People suggested we could have made further cuts. We could have indeed.

But, Mr. Speaker, keep in mind that services may be curtailed, and some Canadians who work for Crown corporations or for the Government have just been told they will be laid off. Of course they will find employment elsewhere, but by the time they do find new jobs the Government will spend a lot more than their annual salary because there are expenses to be paid in cases of severance. If an employee who has been working for the Government or a Crown corporation for 10, 15 or 25 years and earning $30,000 or $35,000 a year is told he will be out of work tomorrow, employment termination may cost twice as much in some cases. So when we reduce operating expenses by $35,000, in some cases we increase costs to reduce this expense on the long term, but for the coming year expenses will go up, sometimes by $70,000. This is why we were unable to reduce our expenses by more than $1.5 billion.

By contrast, Mr. Speaker, a trend is unmistakable in the ever sharper decline in our expenses since 1984. Canada's Gross National Product that year stood at about $500 billion and at the time—the Liberals had been in office for 20 years—the Government did absorb, manage and look after one fifth of that amount. By 1994 we expect that public outlays or the Government's share of the GNP should be down to about 15 per cent, and this would then work out to 15 per cent of roughly 1,000 billion dollars.

Since the Budget Speech was made on April 27, Mr. Speaker, I have spent the weekends in my riding meeting true Canadians, real ordinary Canadians who are responsible for the collective wealth of our country, who do not live as parasites, but who have jobs, operate small businesses, or carry out their respective duties as educators, teachers, physicians, or nurses. When I met them, they asked me a few questions about our Budget. Some wanted to know if in our Budget we had cut the resources made available to the Canadian International Development Agency. I replied that we had in fact reduced our contribution by $360 million because we felt that according to an old saying which is worth repeating here, charity begins at home. It is an old saying which is still true today. We can also assure the people in Third World countries who are still getting more than $2.4 billion from the Canadian Government that we are in the process of strengthening our own economy in Canada and that as soon as we have achieved this goal, we will have even more resources available to help countries in need. But before we can share our resources, Mr. Speaker, we must first and foremost be able to collectively control our own economy.

Other people asked why we had reduced Old Age Security pensions? I replied to them that we had absolutely not reduced Old Age Security pensions. I explained that Canadians who have net incomes of $50,000 today and who are eligible for Old Age Security pensions have nothing whatsoever to do with those other Canadians who are getting both the Old Age Security pensions and the Guaranteed Income Supplements. This measure applies only to 4 per cent of Canadians 65 years of age or over and who are earning in excess of $50,000. For instance, a Canadian earning $52,000 will have to pay 15 per cent on the excess $2,000, that is, $300. This Canadian will therefore see his Old Age Security pension reduced by $300. In addition to that, the Old Age Security pension will disappear alltogether for 2 per cent of Canadians who are 65 years of age or over. That will increase Government revenues or reduce expenditures by $600 million.

Others have asked us why we did not plan to continue Government intervention in unemployment insurance. Why, Mr. Speaker, would the Government help me insure my house or my car? Is it the Government's responsibility to pay insurance premiums on my car?

The same applies to people who work. Workers can get insurance from the Unemployment Insurance Commission, which was put in place by the Government. They insure themselves against losing their jobs. We reduced payments slightly but we told those people: "OK, you will get a little less each week, but we will help you find another job faster. We are going to train you so that you can find another job fast." That is one thing we are offering workers.

Also, when we came to power in 1984, the unemployment rate was 11.6 per cent; today it is 7.8 per cent. We created 1,5 million jobs for Canadians.

We will reduce unemployment and make the fund self-supporting. We will give money to unemployed Canadians to make their training easier and we intend to curb unemployment insurance abuse. Everybody knows that people throughout the country systematically abuse this generous system at the expense of all Canadians. This must stop, Mr. Speaker, and we have taken action to stop it.

People have asked me why the increase for individual income tax, after we had reduced it. The answer, Mr. Speaker, is that in 1989-90, the tax increase for those earning $30,000 will be $80 a year. That is not even $2 a week. The tax increase for those earning $60,000 will be $240 a year, $20 a month or $5 a week as their share in restoring our country's finances. Is that asking Canadians too much in a difficult period? And for Canadians who earn $100,000, it will be $725 a year.

Mr. Speaker, those are the questions I was asked. In general, people are pleased with our budget, especially seniors, because they know from experience in life that nothing can be given that has not already been earned. Seniors do not want us leaving our debts to their grandchildren. So they are pleased that finally a government can continue to shoulder its responsibilities and put our country on the right track.

And finally, Mr. Speaker, we also said in our budget speech that we intended to modify our tax system by bringing in a new tax on goods and services to replace the tax on manufactured products. The main reason for this change is that the tax on manufactured products is unfair. For example, Mr. Speaker, take the company that makes this chair here.

So it is Canadian or American. If the chair sells for $400 the Canadian maker today would add a $48 tax to the cost of the chair and he will bid to sell it in the United States or anywhere in Canada. The American makes the same chair, he bids anywhere in Canada or the United States, but he does not have to contend with the 12 per cent tax on manufactured goods. So he can offer to sell his chair for $400 whereas the Canadian must market it at $448. This is why the tax on manufactured goods throws fair competition out of kilter. We had to eliminate the problem, and that is precisely what we will achieve with our goods and services tax. The goods and services tax will enable Les poulies Maska, a company located at Sainte-Claire very close to the riding of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Blais) to sell Cadillac brakes to General Motors in the United States without this 12 per cent tax which is shutting the company off its markets.

This will also enable Ressorts Cascade in the riding of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to continue selling springs in the United States, whereas the 12 per cent levy was getting to be an export barrier. And the same thing goes for Salaisons Brochu in my riding. The company will go on selling ham in the United States without this tax at every stage of production. That is why we did away with that tax. It will generate revenues to replace the tax on manufactured goods—$16 billion—and the Government will secure additional revenues and give credits to less fortunate people so they will not suffer from the goods and services tax.

Nor will this tax apply to such basic commodities as food, prescription drugs and medical devices. The tax will not apply if you sell the existing house in which you live. It will apply to new homes sold by builders, but perhaps it will come cheaper because up till now the 12 percent tax sometimes hits twice the same home built by a contractor. So to people who have to sell their homes, two, three, four, five or ten years down the road I say not to worry, the tax will not apply; it applies on new homes as sold by builders. It does not apply to housing, it does not apply to university education. Low-income people will receive four times a year a credit they can apply towards that tax.

So this was the essence of our tax message for our second term. We moved by steps to free ourselves from the hazardous economic situation put in place by the Liberals and the Socialists, as Hon. Members are aware. By steps we want to break free and better control our lives. The most important message, Mr. Speaker, is to tell our children: We will not leave you in debt. We are going to leave you an active Canada, with opportunities for a quality life. This was the essence of our message, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Assad: Mr. Speaker, this tax message is four years late. In 1984 your own Leader and the present Minister of Finance stated that within four years they would bring the deficit down to $7 billion. This has not been done, even in four years. Is that your tax message? European economists will not invest in Canada for the simple reason the Canadian Government is increasing taxes instead of making cuts where needed. If less money was taken away from Canadians, they would be interested in investing here. Is that your tax message? In view of the fact that from 1984 to 1988 you had a $82 million surplus? It is like someone in debt who for the next four years has significant surplus income. When this happens, we arrange to pay our debts. But, you increased it instead, and now you come here and give us a tax message?

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, I would like to have heard the Hon. Member for Gatineau—La Lièvre (Mr. Assad) in 1984. When we came to power, we had an annual Budget of $38 billion, but we managed to bring that down. And when we did, your colleagues who were there at the time screamed bloody murder because we managed to reduce the Budget! You should have been there. You should have heard them. You should have read what they said. They objected to our tax increases that were aimed at reducing the deficit, and they also objected to our spending cutbacks. You should have been there!

These people also said that because of the Budget proposals made in 1984 and the years after that, unemployment would rise. The Budget did not cause unemployment. Thanks to the budgets we brought down in 1984 and in subsequent years, we were able to help the private sector create 1.5 million new jobs during the past four years.

When you mentioned European investors who were avoiding Canadian markets, you were wrong, because today, Europeans consider Canada as the promised land for setting up business and developing their American markets, all because of the Free Trade Agreement both your colleagues and the non-elected senators objected to. European investment is rising. You should do your homework. When we speak in the House, we try to inform Canadians, not play politics and mislead them.

You mentioned the debt has increased. Would you like to know why? It has increased because we have to pay the interest that is accumulating on the enormous debt you passed on to us in 1984. And if you take the debt increase, plus $30 billion in interest per year, it adds up to the difference between what we had when we came to power and what we have today. We managed to keep the debt down to that level and we also managed to improve the state of the economy and increase employment in Canada. You never did that during the 20 years you were in power!

[English]

Ms. Langan: Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of questions for the Hon. Member. He said in his speech that seniors in his riding have a lifetime of experience and do not want to leave their grandchildren with a debt. Has he read the National Pensioners and Senior Citizens Federation submission to the Government of February, 1989 in which it shows that they passed a resolution unanimously urging the Government to eliminate payment of income tax from all Canadian families or individuals whose income is at or below the accepted poverty level? They go on to say that there are numbers of seniors in this country, particularly women, who are in fact living below the poverty line because their only source of income is the old age security and the guaranteed income supplement.

Does the Hon. Member not believe that those seniors, while they respect the need for fiscal responsibility, also understand very clearly how important it is to be able to eat well and be properly sheltered in their declining years? The Hon. Member refers to the new proposed sales tax and talks about the unfairness of it. I think we all accept that there are inequities in the current manufacturers' tax. But is it fair that the kids and moms in this country will be paying tax on clothes for children, on music lessons and on family counselling? Is that fair, Mr. Speaker?

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, the first thing I would like to say to the Hon. Member is that according to our previous economic message, as you well know, barely 10 per cent of Canadians 65 years old and over pay income tax. In fact, every day your Leader has been asking us to make them pay more taxes. These 10 per cent have worked in the course of their lives and accumulated a certain amount of wealth. They are paying income tax today, and your Leader wants us to change their tax rate and make them pay more. That is the answer to the first part of the question.

Second, you said that the elderly need a pension. We are aware of that. Senior citizens need a pension, but Canadians who are still in the labour force are entirely aware of the fact that we can go on giving them this pension and give our seniors the security they need, and that is very important. Senior citizens want to be sure they will receive their pension cheque every month. They know that Canadians who are in the labour force must have jobs to help pay for those cheques. And that is the kind of economic climate we have given them. We have created one million and a half new jobs since 1984. These people contribute to the public Treasury and ensure that senior citizens receive their pension cheques regularly.

About the goods and services tax, I said that it applied to all goods. I gave a list of exemptions, and I said that it replaces the old system and does not create new revenue. It does not penalize our young people because there are people living confortably who will still receive a cheque four times a year to compensate for the sales tax. They will receive a cheque that says it is for the sales tax they have paid during the last three months. People who are just making ends meet and are living barely above the poverty level won't have to worry, because they will get a refund in advance.

Mr. Marchi: Having heard what my friend the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) had to say, Mr. Speaker, I find it very hard to keep cool because a great many things he said are not consistent with the facts.

• (1720)

[English]

He tries to portray this Government as a political Robin Hood, a Government that robs from the rich through this claw-back and gives to the poor.

First, the Hon. Member makes the mistake of treating family benefits and pensions as some kind of hand-out, which they are not. We in this Party see those services as being a social contract with Canadian citizens, giving meaning and purpose to what we call Canadian citizenship. Second, he did not talk about the thresholds going down next year. He did not talk about medicare being put in a similar situation one day.

More important and more misleading is the tax situation facing Canadians. Canadians want to know why the Government is imposing such an unfair tax burden which will apply differently depending on who one is, where one lives, and how much one makes. Canadians do not mind paying their way for future generations. They do not mind putting their shoulders to the wheel, digging down, contributing and pushing Canada forward. However, when Canada moves forward, Canadians do not want people to be left behind.

We must examine not only this Budget because we cannot look at it in isolation, but the previous four Budgets. There have been five Budgets handed down by this Government. We have been asking in the House of Commons since the most recent Budget was introduced what the cumulative impact of these Budgets is on an average family in my riding. My riding is a hard working, middle-class type of riding, and I would imagine it is very similar to that of the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine). People in my riding are saying that after four or five Budgets, it is becoming more difficult to stay in the working middle-class sector of Canadian society.

They fall off on either one side or the other. The disparity between the extremes is getting bigger.

Let us look at the numbers. After five Conservative Budgets, a person earning $100,000 pays 8 per cent more in taxes. The guys and gals earning $30,000 will have to pay 60 per cent more in taxes. I ask the Hon. Member to try to explain that to Canadians. He should try to sell it. Canadians know an unfair tax system and an unfair Budget. I would ask the Hon. Member to address that unbalanced, unfair and inequitable situation that the Government has created rather than masquerade as some political Robin Hood which the Government is not.

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Speaker, I will try to summarize the issue. I am not sure whether he knows exactly what was his question. I think I heard him say that my Government was abandoning the poor, the sick and the aged. With the Socialists' assistance, the previous Liberal Government had systematically abandoned future generations of Canadians leaving them to pay the debts incurred by this generation and thus finding a way to stay in power longer. Mr. Speaker, these are the people who did abandon generations. We, on the contrary, are trying to assume our responsibilities. I must emphasize the fact that ever since we came to power, we have created jobs for over a million Canadians to help us develop this country. Far from abandoning them, we are taking them along. You had abandoned them! We have put an end to this practice. Now, all Canadians must strive to increase the collective wealth to ensure the availability of our social programs for the aged, the sick and the young.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, I spent last weekend in the riding represented by the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) to witness the launching of the new Joseph and Clara Smallwood ship.

[English]

During my brief visit to his riding, I got the impression that the Hon. Member was a reasonable fellow. I was a little taken aback today when I realized that he was defending this foul Budget without equivocation.

Is the Hon. Member not really bothered by the manifest duplicity of this Budget? Last fall the spokespersons for his Party were saying the exact opposite. They were saying that everything is coming up roses, that there is no problem. They could not pronounce the word "deficit". They never mentioned it at any time.

Mr. Blais: False.

Mr. Simmons: He is awake. Welcome. We are here every day at this time. Come in more often.

I understand that we have hit a nerve. Last fall during the election campaign, there was not a word about the deficit. Everything was coming up roses. Things would be magnificent. We would all have two cars in every garage.

Now we are told what a terrible time it is and how terrible the Liberals were before 1984. Suppose we were to buy the thesis that everything was terrible before 1984, why has it taken almost five years for the people on that side of the House to discover that there is a problem? Last fall they did not know there was a problem. Is the Hon. Member not a bit bothered by this duplicity, this basic dishonesty that last fall we were told one thing and now we are being told something very different? They both cannot be right. They are mutually exclusive. Which is right, what we were told last fall or what we are being told now?

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: In 1984 and even in 1983 as we were striving to get rid of this Government, Mr. Speaker, we had exactly the same platform as today. We were as aware then as we are now that before giving money to the needy, we had to earn it. That is the difference between the Liberal Party which was led by a Socialist—a Socialist had become the Leader of the Liberal Party. First he got his membership card from the NDP, but he switched to the other side because he was a political opportunist.

These people were living off other people's money. The difference with us is that we know we must create wealth before sharing it. This is still our position. We have been on this track since 1984 and we shall keep on going down the path already staked out four years from now, and after we have again been re-elected, we will still continue in that direction, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I am always delighted to follow the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine). Everyone has now heard from the extreme right, the voice of unreasonableness. Now we get to hear the voice of reason, of moderation and of concern.

• (1730)

Mr. Speaker, I thought about a theme for my contribution to this debate, and I have taken the theme of a question: On which side is this Government? To whom is this Government, under the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), accountable? Let me just draw a picture. We all have this very vivid picture of Brian Mulroney as a boy growing up in Baie Comeau. We all remember him. He sang for his breakfast. He sang for the bosses of the Iron Ore Company of Canada from Chicago. He sang for them and he got $50 American. That was big money in those days. Not so long ago, four years ago, he sang for his political boss. He sang in Quebec City for Ronald Reagan, he sang When Irish Eyes Are Smiling.

He has been singing his whole life for somebody else, for the people who pull his chain, the same corporate big-wigs that during the last election put up $2 million plus to advertise to Canadians for the re-election of the Mulroney Government, the same gang. Mr. Speaker, there is a saying that he who pays the piper calls the tune. They have called the tune. They have paid the piper, and now what are they doing? They have grabbed the pipe, and they are not only paying, they are playing the tune. There he is coming out of his basket, serpentine, sinuous and seductive. He is coming out of his basket and he is dancing to the tune. Whose tune is he dancing to? It is the same boys to whom he went for a very private and very secretive dinner meeting in Toronto one week before the Budget came down. Yes, he went to a private meeting in Toronto, possibly in the back rooms of Winston's. Now, who was the host of that secret meeting?

An Hon. Member: John Turner?

Mr. Rodriguez: No, not John—I do not say the J.C. word here. It was Tony Fell of Dominion Securities. He was the host. Who were among the guests? Hal Jackman from National Trust. How about this one—Alf Powis from Noranda? How about Bob Martin from Consumers Gas, and my friend Bill James from Falconbridge, and Doug Creighton from The Toronto Sun, The Toronto Star, et cetera, Bob Osborne from MacLean Hunter, and who of all people, Dave Culver flew all the way from Montreal, the same person who headed up that campaign to get the Tories re-elected. These are the real boys. So what were the boys saying? Mr. Speaker, there he was having a nice, quiet, cosy supper before the Budget came down, presumably assuring them that there is nothing in that Budget that was really going to touch them, that everything was safe.

Did the Prime Minister meet with a single mother who is looking for child care for her children and cannot get it? Did he meet with a single mother? He did not fly to the Toronto to meet with the real people. Did he fly to meet with any family earning about $30,000 a year in Metro-Toronto, a family who is trying to keep a roof over their heads and food in their cupboards? Did he meet with anybody like that? You bet your bottom dollar, he did not. Did he meet with people from Summerside to explain how he was going to shaft them? Not on your bottom dollar he did not. Did he meet with the unemployed from Belle Island? No, Mr. Speaker, not at all. I ask, whose side is this Government on? I painted the picture of Brian the snake coming out of the basket, and people laughed. But it is as true as I am standing here that those who paid for the Government's re-election are now in fact calling the tune.

I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I have an image of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). I do not know if many Members around here know it, but his favourite sport is squash. I have this image, and it keeps recurring again and again in my mind of the Finance Minister playing squash with John Crowe, the Governor of the Bank of Canada. I have this image of the ball being the unemployed in this country, the low-income Canadians, middle-income Canadians, Canadians who cannot afford homes. I think of the poor children of the world, and as the Finance Minister whacks the ball with a right forehand against the front wall, the ball ricochets off the back wall, John Crowe catches it with his high interest rates, and he whacks it up against the side wall, and the big, almighty, powerful but with a lot of integrity and courage and competence, he catches with his backhand and flips them so carelessly against the wall and smashes that ball, Mr. Speaker, pulverizes the ball, and they are playing with a blue ball, and he pulverizes the ball. That is the image that I have of these people who are responsible for fiscal and monetary policy in this country.

One has a Budget that in fact sticks it to them on a fiscal level, and the other one has the high interest rates and is sticking it to them on a monetary level. There they are like a squash ball pulverized between these two big, tough, powerful squash players.

Mr. Speaker, I ask myself, why did the Prime Minister not meet with these people? These are the real Canadians in my view. These are the people who really contribute to building this country. We know that they pay most of the taxes to support this country anyway with their revenues. So why? Because I honestly believe that Canadians are starting to see that this Government has decided who their friends are. Their friends are from the corporate boardrooms.

An Hon. Member: It is not the mothers of Canada.

Mr. Rodriguez: Of course not the moms, of course not the unemployed. They don't even understand. We heard of the Prime Minister's wife going to open a food bank here in Ottawa. Imagine that. I can just imagine it. Their own lifestyle epitomizes the chasm which exists between the people in this country who are poor and who do not have homes and those who have it all so posh and so plentiful.

The Minister of Finance has been touted as a man of considerable courage. They said he has so much integrity, so much competence. This is why the Prime Minister could not bounce him. We are told that Bay Street was up in arms. They were phoning the Prime Minister's office. The telex machines and the fax machines were running overtime. All of Bay Street were baying "Keep Mike, Keep Mike" because we are told that Mike Wilson, the Finance Minister, has courage and integrity and competence and he also has friends. His friends are in high places. His friends reside in the boardrooms. Does it take a lot of courage, I ask you, to cut spending in the foreign aid budget, to cut food for the starving of this world? Does it take guts to do that? Does it take a lot of courage to eliminate child care spaces in this country when there is a great and expanding need for it? At the same time, their friends in high places owe $35 billion in deferred taxes. Does it take a lot of courage?

The President of Costa Rica was here not so long ago and was introduced in the House. The Prime Minister said to the President:

> We know the impact of poverty and violence in Central America. For this reason, Canadian economic assistance has more than tripled in the past decade and will increase significantly during the next.

This is the same Prime Minister with a Budget that takes millions of dollars out of our foreign aid over the next five years. Does it take courage to do that?

During the last campaign we heard a lot from the Prime Minister about the promises that had been made. We all remember those promises such as the upgrader at Lloydminster, Hibernia, and the tar sands. When we stated that those were promises that were being made before the election, we were told that they were not promises but that they were spending commitments. Now we are told that they are no longer in effect. They are gone. Is that integrity?

The Finance Minister stated the reason that he had to bring in such a tough Budget was that there was this sudden jump in interest rates after the election and it forced the Government to abandon all those spending commitments—promises. That whole business of spending commitments—Budgets, how it can play with words.

It is like the Prime Minister getting what was supposed to be a loan from the PC Canada Fund for all his personal expenses and Gucci shoes. When we pointed out that it was a loan and that it should have been recorded, it then became an advance. It was a loan—advance. Here we have spending commitments—promises. The Prime Minister said that he had to abandon them because of the sudden rise in interest rates. Last November during the election the interest rates were already three points higher than what the last Budget had forecast.

Everything the Finance Minister had forecast was blown to smithereens. That is not the hallmark of a competent Minister of Finance, or one with integrity, but he has a lot of courage. One can have a lot of courage with a squash ball and a nice big racket, and old John Crow and those other birds over at the Bank of Canada helping. It is pretty easy to smash them around.

Is it competent to continue as the Government has, even after making people pay? This is short-term pain for long-term pain. Even after all these squeezings, the Government is still projecting a deficit of $30 billion, and a projected national debt in 1991 of some $400 billion. What type of competence is that? That is managing debt. During the campaign we heard that this was a Government that knew how to manage change. It could not even manage to deliver a Budget without leaking it.

What we are now hearing from the Minister of Finance is "sharing the burden". As the Government claws back $320 million from the bank presidents and all these big wigs the Government claims it is clawing back this old age pension. If a person is non-resident in this country, he does not get anything clawed back. Therefore, E. P. Taylor does not get his old age pension clawed back. K. C. Irving does not get his old age pension clawed back. He is in the Bahamas. All those well-heeled Tories live somewhere else most of the year.

The Minister of Finance sees himself as the Robin Hood from Rockcliffe. He is clawing back $320 million. If he really wanted to share the burden, and this is a real suggestion for the Tories, he could have created another tax margin of 34 per cent. The maximum tax margin used to be 17 per cent and that was squashed into 5 per cent or 3 per cent. The highest is now 29 per cent. There is a margin at 29 per cent and another one could be created at 34 per cent for the real biggies. The Government could have raised $2 billion, and we would not have to tinker around with the principle of universality. We would not have to run after will-o'-the-wisps like E. P. Taylor, K. C. Irving, and a whole bunch of others. A further $2 billion could be raised. This would hit at those in the $500,000 club. Who is in that club?

The $500,000 club was referred to earlier by one of our speakers. There is A. J. de Grandpré, Chairman of BCE Inc. This is the man who was set up to tell us how we can phase in the Free Trade Agreement by trampolining people all over the country. He is making $852,900. Vic Rice gets $1,034,000,499. This is the man who closed down Massey-Ferguson in Brantford. There were 4,000 jobs lost, but he looks after himself pretty well. Here is a Liberal who did not do too badly at all. There had to be a Liberal in this pile. He was also a candidate. Frank Stronach ran against old Sinc Stevens. Sinc was a candidate, and then he wasn't.

He was a candidate for a whole year and on the eve of the election the Prime Minister found his integrity and said: "No, you are not a candidate any more", and poor old Sinc was out on the street. Sinc was sunk. Sinc was sitting with his wife playing Let's Make A Deal. Anyway, Frankie baby is making $1,354,000. There is this guy Culver. He was the one at this little private, secret meeting at Winston's. He headed up the campaign to get the Tories re-elected. He is the President of Alcan Aluminium. He is making $1,454,259. He is a fellow who calls himself my friend, and I accept that. There is also Bill James, Chairman and President of Falconbridge.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): He is a friend of yours?

Mr. Rodriguez: That is right. He made a contribution to my campaign, and don't forget it. With friends like these! His salary jumped 20 per cent to $1,689,533. That is real money. That is not an accounting—what did he call the deferred taxes—procedure.

How does the Government say it is going to tackle getting some money? It is going to put in surtaxes on corporations. If a corporation does not pay any taxes, it does not pay any surtax. There are 89,000 wealthy corporations in this country that did not pay taxes last year. Therefore they will not pay any surtax. There are a couple of thousand very wealthy Canadians who did not pay anything and who will continue not to pay anything.

People with $100,000 in taxable income paid an average federal-provincial tax rate of 53.88 per cent in 1987. With tax reform it dropped to 46.4 per cent in 1988. This Budget will inch it back up to 48 per cent in 1990. This is still a full 5 per cent lower than in 1987, but people with incomes in the $27,000 range will end up paying 5 per cent more than when tax reform started. That is the logic of the Robin Hood of Rockcliffe.

I come back to the original question with which I began: On whose side is the Government? Who pulls the chain of the Government? The answer is very clear. Those who are wealthy, those who are economically powerful determine the decisions that are made by the Government. So it has been with Liberals, so it is with the Tories.

[Translation]

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his dynamic contribution to this debate. I also want to remind him, in case he has read the Budget papers, of some information concerning the last part of his speech, when he talked about the surtax schedule based, for example, on income. I just want to say that the increased surtax amounts to $45 a year for taxpayers earning $20,000; $725 a year for people earning $100,000; and $2,175 a year for those earning $200,000. If that is not a progressive increase, I don't know what is. I think the Budget aims at protecting low-income individuals, and it would be dishonest for the Hon. Member not to recognize that fact. We have significantly increased the tax credits, and have asked the well-to-do to help us fight our debt and our deficit problem. So, I don't know where the Hon. Member got his information, but from the figures he used, it is clear that his information does not reflect the real situation.

[English]

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, those of us who have been here a long time and have had opportunities to look at the statistics which come from the Department of Finance with respect to those who pay taxes in Canada were impressed by the information last year that there were several thousand Canadians, very well heeled, who did not pay a penny of income tax. Those are not my figures. I am reporting figures from Revenue Canada.

I do not see what the Government has done in the Budget that in any way catches those people who have paid no tax in the past. Certainly, there is no minimum tax on corporations. In fact, if they do not pay any tax, they cannot pay any surtax.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, while listening to the Hon. Member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), I could not help but think of a study that came out yesterday in the Toronto Star. It analysed the federal Budget brought down a couple of weeks ago. It showed how families living in poverty in Canada have a net tax increase as a result of the Budget.

Let me give the example of a single parent family with two children and an income of $20,000. They have a tax increase as a result of the Budget. There is income tax, excise tax, surtaxes, an increase in the manufacturers' sales tax.

The Government is putting a tax on poverty, a tax on the poor. While the Government put a tax on poor families, did it close off the loopholes for the rich? There are a lot of loopholes for the rich.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for that excellent question. In fact, there is one loophole that really angers Canadians and cries out for correction. I agree with the person who said: "Eliminate the interest deductibility provision on non-productive takeovers in Canada to ensure that large pools of capital are not diverted to useless empire building". I agree with the person who said that, who happens to be the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in his book: "Where I stood, 1983".

Mr. Nystrom: That is past tense.

Mr. Rodriguez: Here he is, the Prime Minister in 1989, and corporations still have the ability to borrow large amounts of money for corporate takeovers and mergers and the interest that is payable on the money they borrow to do that is still tax deductible.

The Prime Minister said where he stood. It seems to me he is still standing there in 1983 while we are in 1989.

If that loophole were plugged, I am sure it would account for several hundred million dollars.

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Speaker, surely the Hon. Member will recognize that over the last few years we have made a considerable effort to remove the loopholes which existed under former regimes.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): No you haven't.

Mr. Loiselle: I have a very long list of efforts we have made and are making this year to improve the equity in our tax system.

As far as corporation tax is concerned, I hope he will realize that this year we will be getting $1 billion from the corporations. This is a new tax.

If the Hon. Member wants to listen, I can tell him the loopholes that were closed. I am sure he is aware of them. We have made a very good effort to make it equitable for all citizens and ensure that those who have a greater capacity to pay and contribute to the solution of the problem, which we have explained at length in the House, will make a greater contribution.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I recall the first Economic Statement of the Government in 1984 in which it created the $500,000 capital gains tax exemption. It put that in place against all the advice it was getting from all over the country. At the same time it made changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act which treated severance pay, pension income, holiday pay as earned income for UIC. That involved a few dollars while, at the same time, it put in place a generous handout to the wealthy of this country.

Second, I say to the Minister that there are 89,000 profitable corporations which do not pay any tax at all. I recall the debate on television between the Leaders in 1984 in which the Prime Minister promised that there would be a minimum tax on corporations. We still have not seen that tax. Yet there are 89,000 profitable corporations that do not pay any tax.

In fact, the contributions to Revenue Canada are dropping in terms of corporate contributions to the revenues of this country. They are paying about 12 per cent of the total revenues collected while individuals have been paying an increasing load of total revenues collected in this country. People look for fairness in the tax system. They do not see that tax fairness, but see themselves being constantly taxed.

We know that as a result of this Budget the average family will be taxed $710 this year and $1,000 next year. Surely the Minister should not sit there and believe that he can do all of those things they did for the wealthy while just ignoring average, ordinary Canadians and letting them pay, pay and pay.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTED DAY, S.O. 81—SOCIAL PROGRAMS—CLAW-BACKS

The House resumed from Friday, May 5, consideration of the motion of Mr. Dingwall:

That, in the opinion of this House, the claw-backs proposed by the Minister of Finance with regard to the Old Age Security pensions and Family Allowances (1) undermine all Canadian social programs; (2) make easier future incursions against Old Age Security pensions and Family Allowances as well as other social programs, including medicare; (3) will fall most severely on Canadians of moderate means while costing the wealthy little; and

That this House, therefore, condemn the Government for this attempt to violate this sacred trust.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 6 o'clock, pursuant to Standing Order 45(6), the House shall now proceed with the deffered recorded division on the motion of Mr. Dingwall, seconded by Mr. Wappel, concerning the business of supply.

Call in the Members.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PETITIONS

SUPPORT FOR CULTURAL INSTITUTIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and privilege to present a petition on behalf of a number of residents of Kamloops, British Columbia. The petitioners point out that only 2 per cent to 3 per cent of prime time television drama on English language television is Canadian, that 77 per cent of all magazines sold in Canada are foreign, and that 85 per cent of all records and tapes sold in Canada are foreign.

Therefore, the petitioners call upon Parliament to promote and adequately support Canadian cultural agencies to ensure that Canadian cultural institutions remain in Canadian hands, and to ensure fair funding for artists and cultural organizations in every region of the country.

MINIMUM TAX ON CORPORATIONS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I have another petition on another topic, again certified correct pursuant to Standing Order 36. The petitioners are from Kamloops, British Columbia. They point out that the tax burden on average families is roughly $1,000 greater than it was in 1984. This petition must have been presented prior to the last Budget, because they could have added on another $1,700 on top of that $1,000 if it were more timely. The petitioners point out that there has been a shift in the burden of taxation from corporations to wage-earners.

The petitioners call upon Parliament to establish a minimum tax on profitable corporations, and to ensure that the burden of taxes is more fairly spread among individual and corporate taxpayers.

FULL UTILIZATION OF PORT OF CHURCHILL

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, today I have the honour to present five petitions. One is from the City of Thompson and the community of Wabowden. Another one is from Winnipeg, Lorette, Dugald, Anola, and Hazel Ridge in Manitoba. Another petition is signed by residents of the Dauphin and Sifton areas of Manitoba. Another petition is signed by residents of Headingley, Oakburn, Strathclair, and St. Francois Xavier.

All petitions are on the subject of the Port of Churchill. The petitioners are calling upon the Government to utilize fully the Port of Churchill because it would improve the economies of Canada's prairie provinces. The petitioners believe that there is a need for the federal Government to develop the obvious potential of Canada's only inland seaport.

Therefore, the petitioners humbly call upon Parliament to direct the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board to ensure that, at the very least, 3 per cent of Canada's annual grain shipments be shipped through the Port of Churchill, and that the Government pursue aggressively additional ways to utilize this important seaport and to ship exports other than grain.

FUNDING FOR SUPERNUMERARY SPECIAL CONSTABLE PROGRAM

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition signed by the residents of the Village of Belcarra which is in my riding of Port Moody—Coquitlam. Whereas the federal government funding for the Supernumerary Special Constable Program previously allocated to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in Coquitlam detachment for policing the rural area where they live has been cancelled, the petitioners call upon the Government to reinstate the funding for the Supernumerary Special Constable Program, thereby alleviating the negative impact on an already intolerable situation. They need the police service, especially when summer arrives.

FERMI II NUCLEAR PLANT

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the petition which I would like to present this morning, and which has been certified, comes from approximately 500 people in the constituencies throughout Essex County and the City of Windsor.

The petition notes that just a few kilometres from our border the Fermi II nuclear plant is continuing to operate. It continues to pose a clear danger to lives and to property in our part of the country because of the "abysmal record of accidents at the plant".

The petitioners therefore call on our Government to take as strong action as possible to push the United States Government to accept an independent review process which will ensure that this plant is assessed fairly, to see if it is safe for the future.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Trois-Rivières): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Shall all questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

THE FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Monday, May 8, 1989, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government, and the amendment of Mr. MacLaren:

That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following therefore:

"this House regrets that the Government has imposed unfair taxes and has cut vital programs, including child care, regional development and agriculture, in an effort to reduce its annual deficit, despite the fact that this effort has been rendered futile by the Government's ill-conceived high interest rate policy; and

That this House condemns the Government for pursuing these policies that fall most onerously upon lower and middle-income Canadians and that are certain to hinder the further development of the Canadian economy."

Hon. Kim Campbell (Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate in the debate on one of the most important functions of government, that is to create a fiscal plan, a budget whereby the Government can function for the coming year and whereby we can ensure the continued prosperity of all Canadians.

As Canadians, we have a serious problem. It is our large and growing national debt. The national debt is growing by $3 million an hour. By this time tomorrow the debt will be larger by more than $80 million. In just two weeks it will have grown by more than $1 billion.

The interest payments on the debt are also increasing rapidly. Only 20 years ago, just 12 cents of every dollar the taxpayer sent to Ottawa went to interest payments. When this Government came to power four and a half years ago, that figure had already increased to 32 cents. This year it is over 35 cents.

The debt is a major obstacle to building the kind of future we all want for ourselves and for our children. In the House yesterday, the Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett) talked about the Budget and said that it did not say anything about food banks, that the Budget did not say anything about poor people in Canada. I think the Budget deals directly with the problems of poverty and the disadvantaged in Canadian society.

Unlike the New Democratic Party, our Government does not view Canadians as victims and does not see it as being the role of government to perpetuate weakness and dependency. Our Government sees the role of government in Canadian society to strengthen individuals, to strengthen people in their communities, to give them the wherewithal to stand on their own two feet. Without careful fiscal planning that addresses the fundamental problems of poverty, the problems of unemployment, the problems of training, these goals cannot be achieved for Canadian society.

Without addressing the problems of public debt, the Government of Canada cannot address the question of income disparity in Canadian society. The Government of Canada cannot provide training for Canadian workers who are displaced by technological change or other shifts in the economy, and the Government cannot play its role in enabling individual Canadians to stand on their own two feet.

I think the question of the public debt, which is the most important theme addressed by this Budget, is fundamental to all Canadians and fundamental to achieving the social goals we have set for ourselves as a society.

How did Canada acquire its debt? Like any family or individual might have done, Canada acquired its debt by living beyond its means. The national debt is simply all of the yearly deficits added together. The deficits are simply the difference between the amount of revenue the Government receives and what it spends.

Although we now receive as much revenue we need to pay for program expenditures, we have another expenditure which is creating our deficit, that is the cost of interest on the national debt.

Only 20 years ago Canada had no deficit. Our total debt after an entire century of Confederation was only $18 billion. The cost of servicing our debt was well within our means.

During the 1970s and the early 1980s we spent freely. Regardless of the question, the answer was always government. The problem of yearly deficits began in these years. The deficits were relatively small in the beginning, but year after year they grew in size and began to take their toll.

In 1984 when we came to power, the $18 billion debt had risen to nearly $200 billion and the annual deficit, the shortfall between revenues and expenditures, was more than $38 billion. By then Canada had built into its public finances a self-propelling force that threatened to undermine our valued reputation for fiscal prudence and responsibility.

The sad reality of debt is that it feeds on itself. Each year more effort is required from the citizens to produce new revenues that merely go to pay the interest on a growing debt. It places the nation on a treadmill.

We must ask ourselves: Should this enormous debt be our legacy to future generations? Let us be clear about what it means if we continue year after year, government after government, to borrow and borrow just to pay interest on the debt. We could be paying in the years ahead for programs and policies of yesterday.

Not long ago there was an advertisement in The Globe and Mail by an advertising company that was expressing its particular concern about the national debt. Of course, advertising companies are very skilled at putting forward their views in vivid images. I think the image in this advertisement was extremely effective. It was a picture of a baby with a ball and chain, and that ball and chain are the national debt. Unless we address the national debt, we have put a fiscal ball and chain around the legs not only of today's infants but of infants yet to be born. We would be paying in years ahead for programs and policies of yesterday. Our government resources would be spent to pay the interest on our commitments of the past rather than addressing the problems of today or the challenges of tomorrow.

We live in a very changing world, a world in which the challenges of tomorrow are in many ways unknown to us.

One of the main themes of our Throne Speech was a concern for the environment. More and more industrialized countries are coming to recognize that many of the processes and practices that they rely upon are inconsistent with the survival of the planet. We will have difficult choices to make in the future.

We may have additional environmental catastrophes to deal with in order to clean up the environment. We look at something like the oil spill in Valdez, Alaska and recognize the limitations of our own ability to deal with those situations. We may have to make difficult choices with respect to technologies, with respect to products, with respect to sources of energy. These choices, in order to protect our environment and our planet, may require us as a country to engage in considerable expenditures. How tragic if our children discover that 50 cents or 35 cents of every tax dollar they send to their government to engage in those activities which are part of the national purpose are devalued because most of those tax dollars are required to pay a national debt incurred by their parents and grandparents. That is a legacy we cannot leave to our children.

We have a changing workforce. Although it has been an integral part of our Government's policy to provide training and training opportunities for a changing workforce it has also been an integral part of that policy to call on the private sector to play its role. Nonetheless, opportunities for training and our commitment to education for all our people throughout our lifetime is essential in order for us to be able to meet the challenges of a changing economy and the demands of a changing workforce.

What a tragedy if we do not have the money to meet those challenges because that money is going to pay interest on the national debt.

Our workforce is changing in other ways. We now hear from many industries in Canada about labour shortages because of a shortage of skills. My generation, the baby-boom generation, perhaps has created a false impression about the availability of labour in Canadian society. However, by the 1990s we will be facing serious labour shortages. For example, we cannot afford to take women out of the workforce. It is with a considerable amount of regret that the Government has deferred the third prong of its child care policy. However, today's demands are very small compared to the demands that we will see 10 years or 20 years down the road for assistance to enable a broad range of Canadian people to remain in the workforce.

What a tragedy if we do not have money to support those social goals because our tax dollars are increasingly going to pay interest on the national debt.

We have an ageing population. I speak particularly of my own generation. I have a strong vested interest in the fiscal health of my country because I am at the cutting edge of the baby boom. When my generation finally retires it will not be at the age of 65. They will not be able to retire at 65 because they will be needed, which is wonderful. We have already opened up opportunities for workers over the age of 65 to remain in the mainstream of our working population. However, the challenges of an ageing population are in many ways as yet unknown. Our elderly are healthier than they used to be. Yet we do not know what the impact on Canadian society will be when that huge demographic bulge, the baby boom, gets into its 80s and 90s.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I do not want to have to face a young generation who will reproach me with the debt that I have incurred and put on their backs because I was not prepared to take tough decisions to reduce the national debt.

There are many challenges that face the future of Canadian society, challenges that we will not be able to meet successfully if we do not remove that legacy of debt. We would be borrowing from our children and not paying our own bills.

It is easy to borrow from future generations because they have no voice in this debate. They have no vote. Yet it is they who must live with the consequences if we do not act.

[Translation]

The Government therefore acted. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) presented a budget that helps build our future instead of mortgaging it. We are reducing our expenses and improving our efficiency and our operations. We also call upon all Canadians to play a greater role in solving this national problem.

[English]

We recognized the seriousness of the debt problem when we came to office. We have been acting to get it under control. I find it amusing to hear comments in the House that somehow the Government's approach to reducing the deficit is some kind of new departure in policy, that we did not talk about it during the last election campaign, that it was a secret agenda. I tried often to talk about it during the last election but, unfortunately, my opponents were not interested in talking about the deficit.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): They wanted to talk about free trade. We have been talking about the deficit for a long time. We have been doing something about it since 1984. We will continue to do something about it. Not only have we been acting to get it under control but we have succeeded, since 1984, in reducing the growth of the debt from almost 24 per cent a year in 1984 to less than 10 per cent last year. Despite that progress the debt is continuing to grow more rapidly than our national income.

An interesting aspect of public discussion about the national debt is the statement made by some, including some economists, that somehow the national debt is not itself a problem. They say that we owe it to ourselves, so it is not really a problem that should concern us because it is simply the left hand lending to the right one, or it is simply borrowing within our own community.

In an article in yesterday's The Globe and Mail it was stated that as a result of the national debt we have about $150 billion in secure investments that have been available to small businesses throughout Canada. That is only half the national debt.

It has also been argued that the national debt is not a problem because, after all, it is secure, we have the value in our economy to support it.

I think all those arguments against concern about the national debt really miss the main point. First, it is not true that we just owe it to ourselves. On the contrary, our rate of foreign borrowing is increasing. This makes us very vulnerable.

Furthermore, with Government being such an important borrower in the financial markets of our society it edges out private borrowers. It reduces the supply of capital available to businesses large and small who want to put that capital to work for economic growth. Therefore, it increases the cost of that capital to Canadian society and has an inflationary impact on interest rates.

Let us say for the sake of argument that all those concerns about the deficit and about the public debt were not serious. Let us suppose that the arguments which state that we only owe it to ourselves, that we have created secure investments for business around the country are true. What is missed is the most fundamental aspect of the national debt, that is to say the question of cash flow.

There are many expensive houses in Vancouver. I could go with a downpayment of $100,000 and make an offer on a house worth $1 million. I do not think I could afford a house for $1 million but perhaps the bank would give me a mortgage for $900,000 because maybe the house is really worth $1.2 million and my debt is secure. The bank knows that, if it has to foreclose on the mortgage, the value will be there. The only problem is that there is no way I could service that debt. It would take every penny I earn and more simply to pay the interest on the debt. It does not matter that the debt is secure. The fact of the matter is that if I cannot afford food, clothing and transportation then I am over my head in debt. That is the point that I think is missed by all the commentators on the national debt.

The problem with the national debt is that it is simply taking too much out of the Government's cash flow to service it. It takes 35 cents from every tax dollar. That is too much. It restricts the flexibility of the Government, and thereby the Canadian people, to reach and meet their common social goals in society. Therefore, all the arguments that suggest that the national debt is somehow a figment of the Government's imagination, that it is not important, are spurious. I repeat again that when the Government of Prime Minister Trudeau came into office, the payments on the national debt were about 12 cents on every dollar. When he left office in 1984, they were 32 cents on every dollar. That is more than is healthy for the Government. It is more than is healthy for any individual or family to be paying in interest on its debts.

The recent surge of interest rates in Canada and abroad show us just how our huge debt has left us exposed. In just one year the projected cost of paying the interest on the national debt has risen by more than $6 billion. This year alone interest will cost us $39 billion. That is more than we spend in total on health care, family allowances, old age security and social assistance.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced a number of expenditure and revenue measures to deal with the debt. These debt control measures will amount to more than $5 billion this year and $9 billion next year. The Budget measures will cut the annual deficit in half by $15 billion by 1993–94. This will restore the flexibility that we need to continue to maintain the programs Canadians value.

In terms of my own Ministry and in terms of Canada's natives these programs are being maintained right now. Hand in hand with fiscal responsibility comes social responsibility. The Government's concern for and commitment to native people is evident from its actions. DIAND, my Ministry, is in a period of transition. It is a facilitator, helping Indians help themselves. What is important to native people is important to the Department, notably aspirations of self-government and economic self-reliance. I mentioned earlier about not borrowing from our children, from the next generation. At DIAND we are investing in the next generation.

The Government remains committed to native economic development. As you will recall, the Throne Speech announced our intention to continue this program. Once decisions have been made, the Ministers of Industry, Science and Technology and Employment and Immigration will join the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development in implementing this important Government priority respecting Canada's first people.

With respect to the area of Established Programs Financing, the federal Government makes these payments to the provinces for both health care and post-secondary education. The responsibility for funding education for Indians on reserves rests with the Ministry of Indian and Northern Affairs and is not affected by this Budget. Furthermore, funding for such items as post-secondary education, housing, and social assistance remain unaffected. Services and funding have in fact been increased.

I have just come back from British Columbia where I met with a number of groups, including non-profit organizations from my riding, as well as business leaders. After a week of meetings in my region, I was struck by how responsible and responsive this Budget in fact is. I can tell you, contrary to the comments made yesterday by the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett) the business community was not overjoyed by this Budget.

The challenge of making expenditure reductions often seems very simple to business. It is more complex for those of us trying to do it within Government. Members of the Opposition have tried to paint this Government and this Budget as friendly to big business. I can tell you that the business community had some pretty frank words for this Budget. They did not think we went far enough.

My meeting with the non-profit groups provided me with another vantage point. They were concerned, naturally, with expenditure reductions. I took the time to listen to both of these opposing views, as well as to representations from many other groups. I have come to the conclusion that the approach of the Minister of Finance was both fair and even-handed.

As a national Government, we have an obligation to Canadians to get our fiscal house in order and at the same time to invest in programs and policies that provide a return to our society in general. This is a Budget that does not simply deal with the problems of today. It does not simply deal with the questions and programs the Government has to deal with in today's society. It is a Budget that ensures that we will be able to continue to deal with the issues and the important challenges of Canadian society for the future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood.

Mr. Mills: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member. I listened with fascination to your concern about the debt. We are all concerned about the debt. However, I would like to ask you a very specific question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like the Hon. Member to direct the question to me, please.

Mr. Mills: Mr. Speaker, my question is, on the north shore of Vancouver there is an organization called Ballard Industries. It is a small organization. It employs about 30 or 40 people. It is an environmentally friendly organization. They have clean air technology. They have developed this clean air technology through a solid polymer fuel cell. This industry is looking for support from the national Government to the tune of about $10 million. Their prospectus shows that within 10 years they can create a billion dollar industry in British Columbia alone.

My question is, when the Minister is confronted with a situation like this, what is her reaction and how does she treat an industry like this?

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. He raised the issue of Ballard Industries with me yesterday outside the House and asked if I was familiar with it. I am not. There are two points I would like to make in response to his question. First, viable technologies which have the kind of potential financial return which the Hon. Member suggests this particular industry has, are technologies that should be invested in by the private sector. If money is scarce in the private sector, it is a reflection of two problems. One, Government edging that money out, Government providing a secure place for people to put their money as opposed to encouraging them to participate in the risk capital enterprises that are so important to the financial health of our society, and second, the cost of money itself, which is a reflection of the scarcity as a result of Government's enormous presence in that financial market. We have as a very important part of our Government policy programs to encourage private enterprise in the way that we believe it should be encouraged, and that is for Government not to take the responsibility of innovation and creating industries, but to provide assistance where necessary.

When I was in Vancouver last week I presided over a series of announcements on behalf of my hon. colleague the Minister responsible for the Western Diversification Fund. Our Government has in fact provided very important assistance to many innovative business people in the Vancouver area who are seeking assistance and seeking markets to establish their foothold, often in competition with larger companies from the United States and elsewhere. I think that is an important and appropriate role for Government, but it is characteristic, I regret to say, of the outlook of that Member's Party that somehow when you have a good idea which appears to have the potential for very serious economic return, the first place you look at is Government.

We cannot continue to have Government trying to play the role of risk capitalists, venture capitalists, and entrepreneurs. We have serious problems in parts of our country where there are not any natural markets, where there is difficulty in attracting business. That is why our funds for regional economic development are so important.

The question that the Hon. Member asked is a complex one. Is he suggesting that Government should take the whole responsibility? We have programs and we are quite willing to play a role to encourage local technologies. We have many programs throughout Government, including through the Ministry of the Environment, to encourage a development of new environmental technologies. In fact, that was one of the themes that was discussed in the Throne Speech.

However, what I am talking about today, the problem of the debt and the presence of the Government as a major borrower in capital markets, relates directly to the issue that the Hon. Member raises, that people look to Government to resolve the problem that Government in its indebtedness has created. That is, a scarcity of capital available for private industry in this country.

Ms. Langan: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her speech. I was quite heartened when she noted at the beginning of her speech that this Budget deals with poverty. I was waiting to hear just how this Budget deals with poverty in a positive way. She related the sad reality of the new deficit in the treadmill we are in, and asked whether this enormous debt should be our legacy to future generations. She discussed a baby with a ball and chain in a Globe and Mail ad, and referred to it as the fiscal ball and chain, which suggests that maybe the attitude of this Government is one that children should indeed shoulder the burden of the debt today and not worry about the future.

I would like to ask several questions. The Hon. Member referred to training programs and said that we cannot afford to take women out of the workforce. In the same breath she said the third prong of child care is on hold. My question is, can we afford to take the risk with the lack of good child care, the cutting back of social programs, and the impact that those will have as we go through the next number of years, as these children work their way through their childhood and early adulthood and are faced with lack of supervision, lack of social support, and for example, a tax increase including matters like family counselling, when we are talking about taxing back.

I ask the Hon. Member, what will be the impact on society of those program cuts. She talked about removing the legacy of debt and said that it is easy to borrow from our children's future because they have no voice in vote. I have said in this House and I raise it again that it is always easy to steal from today's children and their programs because they have no voice in vote.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member why the choice was social programs, not corporate tax programs that will affect all profit making companies, all 89,000 of them, I might add, including the banks.

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, there were a lot of questions in the Hon. Member's comment. I will try to deal with the ones that I think are most crucial. As to the last comment about corporate taxation, I am curious to know whether the Member's Party takes the view that there should not be the loss carry-overs allowed for corporations. That is another question.

• (1140)

In the Budget Speech, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) indicated very clearly that the Government will act to meet its objectives in child care by the end of this mandate. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said when he introduced the child care bill in the last Parliament, which was not acted on by the Senate, we cannot do in four years what has not been done in 20 years. The federal Government's financial commitment to child care remains quite considerable, remembering that all of the child care subsidies existing throughout the country are shared 50-50 with the federal Government. Enormous amounts of federal money go into child care.

We have continued with our program to put $2.3 billion over seven years in both tax credits and tax deductions. It is often said: "Well, those tax deductions only help people with higher incomes". That is a very short-sighted view. When we are living in a society where there is a limited number of child care spaces, it is very important to provide incentives to reduce the demand on those spaces until we can increase the number.

We also have our $100 million program of which, I think, 77 projects have been approved. This is designed to find new innovations for child care.

It is easy for people to sort of throw off as a comment, "Well, why aren't we doing more for child care?" It is important and it will become increasingly important in Canadian society. Our Government has recognized that. But there is not a country in the world which meets its child care objectives. Sweden, which is often referred to as a great leader in this area, has child care spaces for only one-third of its demand and has a two year waiting list. All of the industrialized countries are scrambling to catch up with this question. It is very important that we have taken an approach, not only that we want to provide financial support for child care—we do now in considerable amounts—but also that we want to give some serious thought to how best we can do that. The area of institutionalized child care is still relatively new and there is a great deal that we do not know. The 77 projects that we have currently approved under the innovations fund and more which will be done will help us very much in determining where those financial priorities should go.

I would like to point out, once again, when the Hon. Member makes, I suppose, a predictable comment about poverty that since we came into power in 1984, 1.5 million new jobs have been created in Canada and those were by policies that the Hon. Member's Party denounced in this House and predicted would result in a net loss of 200,000 jobs to Canadian society. A half million fewer Canadians live under the poverty line than did when we came into power in 1984.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Minister's time has expired. The questions and comments period has expired. If the Member would wind up, I would appreciate it.

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, this debate will continue, not just through this particular Budget, but I think for all time in Canada because it is a very important, philosophical debate in Canadian society and I am pleased to have had the opportunity to participate in it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate. The Hon. Member for Saint-Laurent.

[Translation]

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to take part in the Budget debate today. I would like to point out to the House and to you that this is much more than a debate about budgetary choices. Indeed, it is a debate about the very nature of our country. We are faced with two visions. The first is the one that my party and I defend, one of a Canada that cares about social justice and fairness and that is sensitive to the less fortunate. The second is the one advocated by the Government and directly inspired by Darwin's "survival of the fittest" philosophy, resulting in a complete laisser-faire approach by the Government and a feeling of indifference to the least fortunate in our society.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to represent my constituents from Saint-Laurent. This riding includes the City of Saint-Laurent, Québec's second largest industrial city, and two residential districts of northern Montreal: Cartierville and Saraguay. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, this Budget will be a disaster for my constituents—for the 42,000 workers and 5,000 people desperately seeking employment. I will also have to tell more than 12,000 seniors in my riding that the Prime Minister has gone back on his election promises at their expense, in order to favour his Bay Street friends.

Moreover, the most unfortunate thing is that more than 50 per cent of the families in my riding earn less than $33,000 and they will be subject to drastic income tax increases, not to mention gasoline tax increases and cuts to child care, another "sacred trust" election promise the Prime Minister made! In fact, it just adds to the long list of commitments the Prime Minister has not kept.

[English]

What will happen to the 13,000 home owners who will face increases in their mortgage payments as a result of this Minister of Finance's perceived inflationary threat? Tenants will also see their rents increase because of the cost incurred by landlords. No one escapes from the ravages of this Budget except, of course, friends of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the men of the Canadian establishment. This is an anti-people Budget, Mr. Speaker.

After making all kinds of promises, after promising us that ordinary Canadians would never bear the brunt of measures to reduce the deficit, that social programs were a sacred trust, and so forth, the Conservative Government has once again shown its true colours.

In 1984, it tried to deindex old age security pensions, and now, Mr. Speaker, despite the fact that its attack on senior citizens backfired, the Government is trying once again to reduce the deficit at the expense of the poorest in this country, the unemployed.

Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that the Liberal Opposition will fight as hard as it did when the Tory Government made its abortive attempt to deindex old age security pensions.

We can hardly expect a more sensitive approach this year, from a Government that announces cuts in unemployment insurance and says that the unemployed will have to pay for new training programs.

On April 11, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) announced changes in the Unemployment Insurance Program. Typically, the Tory Government will make the unemployed pay for the new training programs introduced as a result of this reform.

Mr. Speaker, this Government seems to think Canadian workers don't have enough troubles as it is. The Government has increased the period of employment required to be eligible for benefits and at the same time, it has the nerve to reduce the number of weeks during which a worker may receive benefits.

But the Government didn't stop there. The Americans, or should I say the bosses of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), let him know that unemployment insurance was considered to be a hidden subsidy.

Instead of standing firm during the negotiations on what constitutes a subsidy, this Government goes weak-kneed as soon as it hears from our neighbours to the South. The result? The Government has entirely withdrawn from financing the Unemployment Insurance Fund, so that workers and employers will have to pay the whole shot.

Mr. Speaker, remember when the Prime Minister said during the televised debate between the Leaders that social programs were not threatened? He even went so far as to say that the Leader of the Opposition was using scare tactics. Well, let me tell you that the Leader of the Opposition was right and that the Prime Minister of Canada has deceived Canadians once again. Canadians have had enough of this Government's broken promises!

Mr. Speaker, in connection with the unemployment insurance reform, I would like to quote Michel Vastel, a reporter with Le Devoir, from his article published on April 12 this year:

> It all boils down to making the unemployed pay part of the cost of adjusting to free trade.

That is Tory social justice for you!

[English]

This is indeed a heartless Government. I believe that it is showing its true colours now that the election is over. It has hit Canadian families through the postponement in the delivery of the $4 billion worth of child care spaces. It has decided not to go ahead with its own program for budgetary reasons. I would have understood the elimination of this program had it been replaced with ones that Canadians really want and need, but to eliminate it outright simply shows that the Government has no commitment to Canadian families. The Budget killed any hope for immediate relief in the child care crisis despite the Government's election promise and its commitment in the Throne Speech.

The Government must put into place some capital funding to facilitate the creation of desperately needed child care spaces throughout Canada. It is obvious that the Tory Government and this Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) are more concerned with their ideological propensity to slash government spending and increase taxes than the provision of adequate and essential services to all Canadians. The $4 billion cut over six years in transfer payments to the provinces will hit Canadians where government assistance is a must. The Established Programs Financing transfer payments are once again affected by substantial reductions. The Government first cut money transfer payments by 2 per cent in 1986. Now, an additional 1 per cent cut will have a profound impact on those provincial programs which depend on federal financing to provide adequate services to all Canadians.

The services that these cuts affect are the most important elements of our society. The cut in EPF transfer payments will affect the ability of the provinces to provide good health care to Canadians. Cuts in transfer payments will also affect the ability of the provinces to provide proper post-secondary education. In other words, the Government is cutting back on the fundamental services that make Canada a strong nation.

As we all know, the level of medical services has at times been lacking. Throughout Canada, nursing staffs have voiced their frustration with the health care system by walking off the job. In Québec, interns have expressed their frustration with the system by staging protests and work-to-rule campaigns.

I ask the Government, how does it expect the status of our health care system to improve if it is only concerned with cutting back on expenditures? It seems to me that the Prime Minister wants to eliminate all aspects of our social fabric before his friends to the south define them as subsidies.

The Government has in the past expressed a concern for post-secondary education. It has said that the intelligence and competitiveness of our youth is what will help Canada compete internationally. How does the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister expect Canada to remain competitive internationally if our university and college systems deteriorate as a result of budgetary cut-backs in the form of reduced transfer payments to the provinces?

It seems obvious that the Government expects Canadians to pay more taxes for fewer and fewer Government services. It seems that taxpayers will have to absorb tax increases at the provincial level in order to maintain the health care and education that they have come to expect and deserve. One must question the equality of services that will prevail in the various provinces. How will the people in less prosperous regions be able to pay for the cuts in federal funding for health care and education without in some way compromising the quality of these essential services?

Cutting services to Canadians was not enough. Now the Government is announcing tax increases. Canadians are going to pay more for less. That is Tory social justice, a kind of Tory inflation which means that the purchasing power of our tax dollars will go down as a result of cutbacks in government services.

Between 1984 and 1989, revenues from personal income tax rose 33 per cent but revenues from corporate income tax rose only 17 per cent, even during your so-called economic prosperity. Some social justice!

Always as a result of this policy of social injustice, low income families will be paying $2,050 more in 1991, and this does not include your new 2 per cent surtax.

It should raise the average family's tax burden by about $2,000 a year. On the other hand, well-off families paid 6.4 per cent less taxes over the past five years. Those figures come from the National Council of Welfare, a federal government agency. Let me quote from page 6 of their report: "Tax reform is deceptive— Taxes will march ever upward and more and more working poor Canadians will have to pay income tax."

But it is not enough. In addition, Canadian taxpayers will soon have to face a new tax on goods and services. To add insult to injury while waiting for that regressive and unilateral tax to be implemented, this Government is increasing the present sales tax by 1.5 per cent. This increase will bring in close to $2 billion.

This tax will also severely harm municipalities since they buy a lot of goods and services. And who will pay the bill in the end? Municipal taxpayers, of course! But all the Government tells us about this tax is: "Don't worry, be happy!"

What takes the cake, Mr. Speaker, is that despite all those drastic measures, the Government can barely maintain the deficit at around $30 billion in a period of economic prosperity. Why? Because of its mismanagement of public funds and its obsession with maintaining high interest rates to fight the threat of inflation!

[English]

I would like to talk a bit about multiculturalism.

[Translation]

It is a fundamental characteristic of our country. In the 1986 census, 38 per cent of Canadians described their ethnic background as other than English or French. Once again, Mr. Speaker, I am amazed by this Government's total inconsistency. It creates a separate Ministry of State for Multiculturalism while reducing by $2 million the funds available for various programs required to achieve the objectives underlying the establishment of that Ministry. The Government will spend more on multiculturalism but will cut related programs.

In conclusion, if you allow me, this Government, shut in its ivory tower, blinded by right-wing conservatism, is insensitive to Canadians' aspirations and continues to turn a deaf ear to Canadians' legitimate demands. This Government has abdicated its responsibilities in all fields: withdrawal from unemployment insurance, child care, regional development, transfer payments to the provinces, universality of social programs.

Mr. Speaker, the people will judge this Government severely for its complete laisser-faire attitude and flagrant lack of social justice!

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Saint-Laurent (Mrs. Maheu) talks about a just society. Finally, she concludes that the people will be severe with the Government. That reminds me of 1984, Mr. Speaker, and speaking of a just society, we also remember that time, and I would first ask the Hon. Member for Saint-Laurent simply whether she remembers the size of the deficit the Liberal Government left us in 1984. Secondly, speaking of the sacrosanct principles of social programs, I would ask the Hon. Member how this Budget violates the principle of universality, and also, if this principle is so sacrosanct, as she maintains and claims, how does one reconcile the statement by her finance critic and her own party president? These two individuals strongly question the universality of social programs in order to reduce the deficit which her own party left us in 1984.

• (1200)

Mrs. Maheu: Mr. Speaker, I in turn would like to ask the Hon. Member on the other side of the House a question. The deficit has doubled since you have been there. Speaking of the universality of social programs, you know as well as I do that the Government to the south of us, during the free trade debates, was really very concerned about our social programs and the possibility— We have proof, Mr. Speaker: unemployment insurance has already been cut! Employees and employers will pay the cost of it.

[English]

Mr. Jordan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate my colleague on a very succinct and clear summary on a Budget that is going to come down hard on lower and middle-income people in this country. I wonder if she would agree with me that there seems to be a lapse of time here. We hear the Opposition recalling a time when Mr. Trudeau left a legacy, and to a time five years ago when another legacy was left. Then there seems to be a lapse of about five years in which they do not want to discuss anything. Could someone explain to me, and I wonder if my colleague would agree, why there is a lapse in there of five years. No one seems to be able to justify why the cumulative debt doubled in those five years. It did not seem to be a problem when we were going through the last election. At that time, they were announcing new programs, depending on which part of the country you were in.

If you happened to be in Winnipeg last October, you heard a new program being announced that there would be 200,000 day care spaces. They did not say, as I recall, "If we have the money, we are going to do this". There was no mention of that. People assumed that there was money for the program , because the Finance Minister had said so, that the debt was under control. Does my colleague agree that that lapse of time of five years, in which the cumulative debt doubled, seems to be a period that the Opposition does not want to describe or discuss or for us to try to penetrate in any way? They would like us to forget about that five-year period. We have seen that they now consider it to be a disaster period. But seemingly it wasn't a disaster through the election. Can my colleague comment on this?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before the Hon. Member answers the Hon. Member for Leeds—Grenville (Mr. Jordan), if there was a misunderstanding as to the amount of time that the Hon. Member had, if she still has two or three minutes left to complete her speech, I will let her complete it, and then answer the question of the Hon. Member.

Mrs. Maheu: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There obviously was a misunderstanding.

The next subject that I wanted to touch upon was international development. Canada has developed a reputation as a nation that cares for the needy and demoralized people of this earth. The way that we have demonstrated our concern has been through a generous program of official development assistance to needy Third World countries. In 1969, former Prime Minister Lester Pearson recommended that development assistance reach 0.7 per cent of an industrialized nation's GDP. Most countries recognize that this is a goal for all states. In 1984, the President of the Treasury Board announced that Canada's official development assistance would reach this target by 1995.

What we are witnessing now is the Government's complete abandonment of its commitment to development assistance. With the figures in the Minister of Finance's Budget, Canada would not reach this 0.7 per cent target until the year 2040, a full 45 year delay in the fulfilment of this Tory promise. This Government has called for a $1.8 billion reduction in official development assistance over the next five years, including a reduction of $400 million in the development budget for 1989-1990 which represents a full 12.2 per cent decrease in Canada's commitment to international development. This means that the Conservatives are abandoning their own commitment to put poverty first as outlined in the International Development Charter signed by our Prime Minister in 1988. Surely this Government recognizes the significant impact this huge reduction will have on the absolute poor of this world. Instead of helping to break the cycle of poverty in developing countries, this country has shifted away from its commitment, and in effect, has broken promises to both Canadians and the international community.

It seems that the international community will learn the same lesson as have Canadians from this Government. They will learn not to judge by the words, but rather by the actions of the Conservatives. It seems very odd indeed that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has managed to find the funds to pay the $90 million price tag for our new embassy in Washington when he asked Canadians and the world's debt-ridden countries to tighten their belts. With this Government, Canadians and the Third World have been singing a requiem, while the Prime Minister and the President have been serenading themselves to the tune of "Don't Worry, Be Happy".

Fully 79 per cent of Canadians feel that our foreign assistance programs are either just right or not enough. This budgetary attack on our development assistance programs is morally wrong. While we may have certain fiscal difficulties in Canada, it is reprehensible for this Government to make the most needy in the world pay with their lives for our problems.

Another key area of development responsibility affected by this Budget is passenger rail service in Canada. According to Lawrence Hannigan, chairman of the board of VIA Rail, 1988 was the best year in the corporation's history. After two successive years of failing ridership and revenues, VIA has managed to turn itself around. Five hundred thousand more people used VIA this year than last. This 9.4 increase in ridership, as well as the 12.9 per cent increase in revenue, fly in the face of the Prime Minister's comments that Canadians are not using the railway as a means of transportation. It is clear that the cut-back in subsidies will jeopardize a service that 6.5 million Canadians use. Why is this Government pulling the rug out from under VIA Rail when the annual report for the corporation states that the operating subsidy level for 1988 is actually 8 per cent lower than in 1982? It seems that in the name of deficit reduction, the catalyst of Canadian Confederation is being sacrificed. The $100 million reduction in subsidies over the next year represents a 13 per cent cut in VIA's total revenue.

No corporation can absorb such a massive reduction without cutting expenditures that, in VIA's case, are vital to its continued growth. Instead of building toward VIA's prosperity and financial independence, this Government is tearing this country's passenger rail service apart and wasting the public's valuable tax contribution that, if not sustained at an appropriate level, will lead to VIA's demise.

Cuts in VIA's service are imminent. Not only will they have a devastating effect on rural communities that rely on this essential service, but on urban ridings as well. This cut in financing of VIA Rail's services will result in an over-all increase in both air and automotive traffic. With the already over-burdened air traffic control and highway systems, we will have to re-examine the question of travel safety in Canada.

• (1210)

As outlined by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in the Budget, the cuts to VIA Rail are too harsh and have come at a time when the corporation is turning itself around. The Government should have continued its commitment to VIA Rail in order to ensure adequate transportation services to all communities, and to facilitate VIA's emergence as a viable and eventually profitable Crown corporation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. On debate, the Hon. Member for Lotbinière.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I too want to express my views, not so much to echo the many arguments made in support of or against the budgetary policy, but simply to shed more light on these economic measures which are designed to serve the best interests of Canadians. All Members will agree with that, Mr. Speaker, regardless of their political persuasion.

When the Progressive Conservative Party came into office in 1984, Mr. Speaker, Canada had just pulled through the worst economic crisis of its history, given the means or economic levers it had developed at the time.

We had unprecedented unemployment, interest rates were so high that we start shaking just thinking they might again soar to similar levels, and our indebtedness was beyond imagination.

From Confederation to its centennial, Mr. Speaker, Canada managed to build a railroad from coast to coast, live through two world wars, keep the armed forces abroad with its allies, provide generous financial assistance to developing nations, and set up a network of social programs which are the envy of other industrialized countries. Despite so many advantages, Mr. Speaker, and despite the cost Canadians had to pay to acquire them, our national debt at the time—100 years after Confederation—was under $20-odd billion and debt service charges were less than 5 cents out of every dollar.

Mr. Speaker, Canadians were then known as credible and trustworthy people, and a great many nations enthusiastically chose our country as their meeting place, Montreal's Man and His World, to mark the 100th year of our Confederation at Expo 67.

We were facing a challenging future, Mr. Speaker, and even more prosperous times still lay ahead.

And of course we had a new leader, Mr. Speaker, a man who entertained fresh ideas and came up with a new slogan: The Just Society! That was our challenge to forge ahead. The Liberal Party was euphoric. Nothing was too good.

Mr. Speaker, the first years following 1967 did nothing but give the Liberal Party a few opportunities to show their ability to govern the country, what with the emergence of Québec's separatism and the energy crisis which shook the industrialized world during the first years of the Liberal Trudeau government.

Already at that time, Mr. Speaker, it was clear the Liberal Party was not going to be impressed with such trifles. Proud of their century-old history, they owed it to themselves to overcome what could then be viewed as hickups from a handful of intellectuals trying to get attention. Rapidly arrogance set in, and it fueled the rise of Québec nationalism which almost led to this country's break up during the 1980 referendum. What happened on the constitutional level also happened on the economic level. After a very bad reaction to the first oil crisis, the then Government was about to do the same thing when the second came, so that in the space of 10 years rather than 100, Mr. Speaker, that is from 1975 to 1984, the national debt grew at an appalling rate to nearly $200 billion. The inflation rate clearly showed the then Government lost control of the economy. The unemployment rate reached an all-time high, and even the computers refused to believe we could have such interest rates! That was the legacy left by the Liberal Party!

During those ten years, Mr. Speaker, from 1974 to 1984, the Liberal Government was literally bent on destroying, to put it mildly, what had been built by our ancestors over the previous 110 years. In those ten years, we went through a period of federal-provincial fighting and as you will remember, Mr. Speaker, Québec even came close to leaving Confederation. We experienced a worsening of the international political climate, first with France which severed most of its economic relations with Canada. And because of France's leadership in Europe, that dispute with France caused a general slowing down of European investment in general.

On the military level, we experienced a period of stagnation that caused us to seriously lag behind in our commitments to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, NATO, so that today the effort needed to fill that gap has become phenomenal if not impossible.

Similarly, following repeated confrontations, our relations with the United States which are our most important economic partner had so soured that we had become increasingly concerned about relying on this vital market for our economy. Such is the legacy of the Liberal Party, Mr. Speaker! In 1974, we were faced with a yearly budgetary surplus of nearly $700 million—imagine that!—which in 1984, some ten years later, had turned into a yearly budgetary deficit of $38.3 billion. What a change, Mr. Speaker!

The economic situation we inherited at the time from the Liberal Party was in such a state of degradation that even the Liberal Party would not and could not govern this country any longer, Mr. Speaker. Our first real challenge was to try and govern this country while trying to curb the deficit, a challenge we have met head-on. Not only have we managed to curb the deficit four years in a row, but at the same time we have used economic leverage to make sure that Canada would enjoy the highest economic growth rate of all the industralized nations except Japan. That is extraordinary too!

During these past four years, we have created over 1,300,000 jobs. Yet, Mr. Speaker, we have not had an easy time. Unfortunately, in spite of our performance, the burden resulting from the debt legacy of 1984 was such that we would have needed all the conditions which would have made favourable and perfectly coordinated economic policies possible.

As we know and as you know, Mr. Speaker, inflation has always been and remains one of the most extremely unpredictable and sensitive factors whose quickly growing pressures can soon cancel out all the benefits resulting from economic growth.

The only true and efficient way to control short term and medium term inflation is through an interest rate policy.

• (1220)

On the other hand, it was clear that maintaining high interest levels would reduce proportionately the Government's margin of operation which was extremely limited, in view of the historic past and the legacy left to us. That is precisely the problem which the current Budget is addressing, Mr. Speaker. This Budget has been put together in such a way as to bring down interest rates to more acceptable levels. And one the cornerstones of this Budget is the sales tax reform.

The existing sales tax which is levied at the manufacturing level is one of the key elements of our strategy aimed at preserving our social programs so important to Canadian men and women and guaranteeing once and for all a sustainable economic growth. The current sales tax produces the revenues needed by the government to finance its essential programs.

This tax has serious flaws. It is hidden from consumer, unfair and damaging to our economy. That's how! Moreover, it's the only tax in industrialized countries which favours imports over domestically produced goods. Think about it. This tax is a total nonsense. In fact, the tax levied on goods produced in Canada is, on average, a third higher than the tax on competitive imported goods. That makes no sense at all! That tax is penalizing Canadians. It represents a significant handicap to our Canadians producers, on the domestic market of course, but also on international markets. That is so obvious!

Right now, the federal sales tax is directly levied on only one third of all goods and services consumed by Canadians. In most instances, services are tax-free, which is advantageous to the well-off Canadians, Mr. Speaker, since those are the people who consume relatively more services.

Again, the existing sales tax is not such a reliable source of revenue for the government. Over the years, the tax system was the subject of many tax avoidance provisions, an assortment of special provisions and administrative interpretations, as well as an increasing number of legal actions by the taxpayers. So, the tax system being a major investment to economic growth, Mr. Speaker, the present government has decided to give this problem top priority and will try to resolve the matter through a sales tax reform. The existing sales tax will be replaced by the Goods and Services Tax on January 1, 1991. The new tax, at a rate of 9 per cent, will be applied on the vast majority of goods and services consumed in Canada.

However, and that is particularly important, basic groceries, prescription drugs and medical devices will not be taxed. Similarly, Mr. Speaker, residential rents, child care services, legal aid and most health, dental and educational services will be exempt as well as loans, mortgages and life insurance premiums. Special steps will be taken to minimize compliance costs for small businesses since, as we all know, small- and medium-sized businesses are the key sector in our economy.

Mr. Speaker, at 9 percent, the new tax will generate enough revenues to replace, not "add to", the present federal sales tax, including the additional revenue it will produce pursuant to the budget. The new tax will also allow further income tax reductions for average households. Finally, it will fund a new sales tax credit which will be considerably more generous than the present one. This refundable credit will be paid out quarterly, the first payment to be made before the coming into effect of the new tax. The government's aim is to ensure that families who earn less than $30,000 a year will be better off after the sales tax reform than before.

Mr. Speaker, help will also be given to home buyers, since this too is a key sector of our economy. As is often said, when construction is booming, so is the economy. In fact, homebuyers who may have trouble finding an affordable house as a result of the tax reform will receive assistance.

At the present time, the consumer has no way of knowing whether the price of the item he buys includes or not a hidden federal sales tax. With the new tax, the consumer will know exactly how much goods and services tax he is paying, which means that it will be easier for him to buy sensibly. In this respect, the goods and services tax is similar to the provincial retail sales tax.

The sales tax reform will provide major economic benefits for Canada. By removing the federal sales tax from the production of goods and services, it will lead to higher investment and improved productivity. There will be greater domestic output and higher real incomes for Canadians.

Strengthening Canada's international competitiveness and eliminating existing biases in favour of imports will encourage Canadian production and help create jobs for Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, the estimated economic gains as a result of federal sales tax reform will be around $9 billion annually, gains that will be enjoyed by all sectors of the economy and all regions of this country. Sales tax reform will also bring more fairness, a more equitable sharing of the tax burden. It will make federal sales tax fairer and more visible to consumers. It will establish a more stable foundation upon which the Government can maintain essential public services and manage effectively the problem of Canada's debt.

I was listening to the previous speakers who said that in four years we had almost doubled or at least substantially increased the deficit the Liberal Government had left us in 1984. That is what I call irresponsible, Mr. Speaker.

I referred earlier to the state of euphoria in the Liberal Party when they came back in 1967, but now they are being totally irresponsible. Mr. Speaker, with a population of about 26 million, how do we reduce an annual debt of $ 38.3 billion? How do we do that without touching the sancrosanct principle of universality of our social programs and without cutting into any of the expenditures initiated by the Liberal Party? No, no cut backs! We had to accept the deficit because a Government has no choice but to accept the economic situation it is left by its predecessor. But that isn't what the Liberal Party wanted.

They consider it their prerogative to create debt, but we Conservatives are not allowed to do that. We can't touch anything! That is the legacy they left us. As I said earlier. Mr. Speaker, four consecutive years of reducing the debt is a first in Canada's history. And I may recall that when the Liberals came to power, with the advent of the Just Society, less than 5 cents of every dollar was spent to pay the interest on the debt. Today it is 35 cents and in 1984 it was 31 cents. Once again, all the decisions we have made have an impact on various sectors, and the problem is how to manage debt reduction.

With this Budget's help, however, we will not only maintain our credibility as a Government that manages the interests of this country as they should be managed, we will also be able to bring interest rates down, which is perhaps the most crucial problem today, and thus accelerate reduction of the debt.

[English]

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, I respect the hon. gentleman's position in this House as a Member of Parliament since he was put here by a majority of the constituents in his riding. However, if his constituents heard what he was saying this afternoon in the House, I think that they would be very ashamed of his representation.

The debate before us concerns the Budget. Yet in his remarks he pulled out the problems of separatism and the problems concerning the referendum. He ran down the former Prime Minister, the greatest Prime Minister in the history of Canada, who is not here to defend himself. He talked about former Prime Minister Trudeau being bent on destroying the country.

In my riding I have constituents from over 50 different countries. Practically every one of them says what a great country Canada is. They say: "We are so pleased that we have found ourselves in this country".

Who built the country to that stage if not previous Liberal Governments and previous Prime Ministers such as Pierre Elliott Trudeau?

The Hon. Member talked about the former Prime Minister's reputation. When I was a Member here previously for five years, I had the pleasure of representing Canada in Madrid at the Human Rights Conference, in England and other countries. Members of Parliament would come to me and say: "Mr. Flis, you people are so lucky to have a Prime Minister such as Mr. Trudeau".

The Hon. Member has stood up and in his remarks on the Budget lowered the greatness of our former Prime Minister. I am sure that his constituents will be quite ashamed of his representation.

The Hon. Member talked about the differences among the provinces. Pierre Elliott Trudeau believed in a strong central Government. He did not give in to the whims of every little region in the country. He believed in what was good for the country as a whole.

If the Government of the Hon. Member has such a great rapport with all the provinces why are not most of the provinces supporting the federal sales tax brought in by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson)? Why are three provinces objecting to the Meech Lake Accord if his Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Government have such a great rapport with the provinces?

I am trying to bring the hon. gentleman back to the debate before us and not have him talk about separatism and the referendum. It was thanks to the former Prime Minister Pierre Elliott Trudeau that we have today a united Canada.

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, first I understand that members of the Liberal Party praise former Prime Minister Trudeau and will continue to do so because he is indeed the one who made it possible for that bunch of nincompoops to sit with him for more than sixteen years. Obviously, Mr. Speaker, they will glorify him.

Now, I personally would not wish to denigrate him, because we must render unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's. But what do you want, politics is also part of government, and the Budget is also part of politics. So in that way, it is a whole and all those policies had an effect, unfortunately a harmful effect on Canada's development. It is true that Canada remains a country with some credibility because the people see to it every four years. At some point, they had enough and made a radical change because we were literally headed for bankruptcy. The Hon. Member says, "Look, Mr. Trudeau still believes in a strong Canada—" We certainly know that; he even took the trouble to travel here from Montreal, to go to the Senate Chamber and again give his vision of Canada—an outdated vision. How can one support such a former Prime Minister who to boost his ego—imagine—repatriates the Constitution without the agreement of the Province of Québec, one of this country's founding nations? Why do you want to pay tribute to such a Prime Minister! And when you say that in fact there are three provinces opposed to the Meech Lake Accord, that is wrong, unless you are a Liberal, perhaps!

None of the Premiers is intelligently opposed to the Accord. They are for the Accord but want it improved. That is the reason for their opposition, because they want to repair not just a mistake but an aberration in Canadian history. Imagine! What province do you come from? From an English-speaking province. If your province had not signed the agreement in 1982, would you be so proud of the man who was then your Prime Minister? Well, I am from the Province of Québec and I feel that our rights were violated and ridiculed to satisfy the Liberal Party's own ego so that it could continue to spend and leave us a $38-billion debt, not in 100 years but in one year, twice as much as in the previous 100 years. That is what your former Prime Minister and your Liberal Party did!

Yes, you may well leave this House, this honourable Chamber which is entitled to honourable remarks.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, allow me first to commend the Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Tremblay), an outspoken member who is expressing the beliefs of Canadians and his constituents. The Hon. Member for Lotbinière was re-elected with a five-fold majority, and this is quite an achievement we recognize.

The Hon. Member opposite suggests his constituents were not proud of him, but I rather believe the Hon. Member for Lotbinière has been active enough during these last four years to get re-elected by five times his previous majority.

Mr. Speaker, I was listening to his speech on the federal sales tax. Although I am in total agreement with him, I know the Hon. Member for Lotbinière emphasized the antiquity of the federal sales tax. As you know, Mr. Speaker, the federal sales tax is entitled to its old age security pension because it is turning 65 this year.

We also know the new tax proposed for 1991 is already in place in 48 nations around the world and it works very well.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Lotbinière, in view of our antiquated federal sales tax system and the example set in 48 nations, doesn't he feel that indeed, here in Canada, that new tax will be most valuable not only to the country as a whole but to every Canadian?

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I thank and I commend the Hon. Member for Trois-Rivières (Mr. Vincent) who, in his capacity as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance, ensured that this Budget is in line with realities Mr. Speaker, because we have international economic relations as well as political ones. Canada must consider adjusting to what is going on around us.

As I said, Mr. Speaker we are essentially an exporting nation. We export some 85 per cent of almost everything we produce. It is therefore vital to look at what is going on around us. The current sales tax is recessive, hidden, unfair, and it does not bring the Government adequate support.

With this new type of tax on the other hand, and as I said this is a replacement rather than something added-on to what already exists, we are going to do-away with the old tax and are going to tax at a much more normal and fairer rate. But now Canadians will know what they are buying, and also a widened tax base will allow the Government much more sustained revenues, as I said earlier to the Hon. Member from the English speaking provinces, so that Canada may maintain its vital economic credibility.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now over. The Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Phinney) for debate.

[English]

Ms. Beth Phinney (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, this Budget has deeply shaken my faith. I always believed in Canada as the tomorrow land, a golden land, a gift to an inherently decent people: Canadians. A gift of abundance that needed only to be administered by a fair and hopefully wise group of legislators. But this Budget is a parody of fairness. It panders to and protects the privileged and the profit takers and hurts those who are struggling to make a decent living. It abandons the needy and misdirects the public with its bafflegab.

What is most frustrating is to see the Hon. Minister introduce the Budget with the same amount of dignity one would accord to a new brand of toothpaste or mouth wash entering the market-place. After introducing his Budget at the press conference, he has launched a crass media blitz. A silver dollar rolling on to the screen should be the first signal that Canadians are about to get the run- around from this Government once again.

Thirty seconds later we are no wiser about the content of the Budget than we are about the contents of toothpaste. Once again, our pockets are lighter as we are made to pay for this ridiculous exercise.

What is truly galling about these commercials is the implied threat that if we do not deal with the debt now we risk losing our social programs in the near future.

The Finance Minister has already attacked those social programs by completely stopping the federal Government's support to the unemployment insurance program, and with the claw- back clause on senior pensions and family allowances. He is fighting the deficit by broadening the taxation, rather than trimming the operation costs and eliminating unnecessary expenditures.

It adds up to a trim in spending of $3.5 billion, new taxes and assorted other measures of extracting funds from the people of $10.6 billion. It is the Government versus the Canadian people and as the score indicates, in this Budget the people are clearly losing.

The UIC rolls will shrink, the Minister tells us, and the funds will be earmarked for retraining. What are we training them for? Where are the jobs? The Minister cannot predict that there will be jobs. He cannot predict where those jobs will be. If he does not know what and where, then how will he know what they need to be trained for? Providing Canadians with sketchy, questionable training and not providing jobs, dumping them from the UIC rolls straight on to the welfare line, is this the present Government's idea of progress?

This country has been built on the free enterprise system. The people I represent on Hamilton Mountain believe in a strong private sector and jobs, good jobs. They want to see us using our resources wisely, creating jobs through research and marketing, not squandering our precious resources on whoever wants them for a quick buck. Canada spends less on research and development than almost any western country. That is a scandal. We have an embarrassment of riches and all this Government does is give them away. What about creating wealth? What about focusing those resources and encouraging the growth of industry that our children will benefit from. Where are the guidelines that demand a partnership with Canadians? It should be considered a privilege to do business in Canada. There is a skilled labour force, an abundance of resources and access to transportation.

We have a stable democracy. We are next door to one of the largest, most lucrative markets in the world. Yet foreign investors dump large chunks of capital into real estate and commercial development in this country. They sit and wait for the equity to build and their money is as safe as it would be in a bank, reducing Canadians to the status of tenants in their own land.

Where are the jobs that are created from this type of investment? When did obligation and accountability go out of vogue? Why have we not learned from the economic initiatives of European and Pacific Rim countries, which have learned that research gives a country a competitive edge and that aggressive market strategies provide the mission statement for a healthy nation. We are faced in this country with a gap between the haves and the have nots that is accelerating at an unnerving rate. Witness the need for food banks in our major cities, a need that hardly existed five years ago. The victims, single parent families, usually headed by women, and the casualties of plant shutdowns, where is the hope for them?

The Budget is not solely an administrative tool any longer. Today, more than ever, it should be a tool for social justice. Skilfully wielded by a person with vision, it has the power to achieve greatness, to create wealth and opportunity and the social justice that Canadians demand. However, in the hands of a Government with no social conscience, the Budget also has the power to create despair. For the single mother in Toronto, the fisherman in the Atlantic provinces, the smoke stack industries in our cities, the underfunded research centres and universities, where is the thoughtful consideration of their future? They are the heart and the essence of Canada.

I remember when Canadians talked about a just society, when we were admired for our quality of life and of opportunity, and not solely for our viability as an economic unit. Canadians have a sense of fairness that extends far beyond our borders. According to a recent poll, 86 per cent of Canadians believe Canada has a moral duty to assist the developing world. In the Third World, Canada means hope. Canada is a helping hand in times of crisis, a partner in long-term programs that help people help themselves.

With this Budget I fear Canada will be known instead for hypocrisy. While the globe-trotting Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) pretends to be a friend of the developing world, this Government has cut the foreign aid budget by $1.8 billion. It has turned its back on the most vulnerable people on earth, on those who go hungry, who have no access to basic medical care, no roof over their heads and no school for their children. Is this what Canada stands for? Is this the uncaring face we show the rest of the world?

Let us not forget the economic cost of these vicious cuts in foreign aid. Canada relies on its export markets. By turning our backs on the developing world, we throw Canadians out of work. I quote from a speech by Ivan Head, the President of the International Development Research Centre to the Canadian Club of Hamilton recently: "The economic downturn in the southern hemisphere in the past seven years has led to the loss of 130,000 Canadian jobs and at least $24 billion in export revenues".

This Government must pull its head out of the sand. The world is becoming more interdependent every day. By slashing foreign aid, we reduce Canada's stature in the world community. We undermine the goodwill that is so important in expanding our export markets. We ignore the threat to the planet's environment. Worst of all, we ignore the suffering of millions of our fellow human beings. The cost of progress must always be balanced against the quality of life. Canadians recognize this. We have always paid the premium. Historically, we have always decided that the cost of being Canadian is not too high but, indeed, a bargain for the freedoms and privileges we have enjoyed.

We Liberals measure our success much differently than do Tories, that much is evident. The Tories look for comparisons with the giant economic unit to the south. We Liberals, on the other hand, measure success by finding ways to meet the needs of Canadians now and in the future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions or comments? the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I listened with some interest to the comments of the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Phinney) and felt compelled to make a couple of comments and ask her a question.

The Hon. Member's speech contained the mandatory criticism, of course, criticizing the expenditure reductions in the Budget and criticizing the tax increases. She went on to accuse the Government of hypocrisy and, yet, in the Hon. Member's speech she criticized the Government for expenditure reductions. At the same time, she suggested the Government has not gone far enough in chopping the fat out and in reducing expenditures. I find the Hon. Member's message rather contradictory.

I believe she went on to say that we paid a premium for being Canadians. I think, if anything, what we have done is mortgaged the future in order to pay for the programs of the past and that is what has led us into this debt problem that we have today, the interest charges on which are consuming so much of our national revenue and which threaten the social programs of tomorrow and, indeed, the future of our children.

I heard the Hon. Member criticize tax increases on the one hand, criticize expenditure reductions on the other. I would like the Hon. Member to say here today what she and her Party would do to meet the problem that we have out there. We will not even bother getting into recriminations about how that debt arose, but let us just talk about addressing the problem today. What would the Hon. Member and her Party do in place of the measures which the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has put forward?

Ms. Phinney: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Liberals have to take any lessons from the Conservatives about the way the Budget has been run. The Conservative Party, our present Government, has doubled the debt in the last four years. We have a Budget now that will not cut the deficit and will not cut down on the debt.

I think one thing is apparent to the public, and I have probably 40 or 50 letters from my riding coming in every day explaining how people feel about the Budget. It is the people who have to pay for these cuts, the same people over and over again, those people who can least afford them. I think an example in the Minister's Budget in Brief that we saw the night before the Budget was brought down in the House. It explains the philosophy of this Government when it is talking about the cut in foreign aid and considers it a saving. Savings will amount to $1.8 billion. When we cut the budget to foreign aid, the present Government is calling that a saving. Our Party would not consider it a saving to cut foreign aid by $1.8 billion.

Mr. Harvard: I have a question, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Phinney) whether she feels this Government has the mandate to do some of the things that it proposes to do in the current Budget. For example, does the Government have the mandate to privatize unemployment insurance? The Tories certainly did not talk about privatizing unemployment insurance during the election campaign. Does this Government have the mandate to bring an end to universality? There was no discussion in the campaign about bringing universality to an end. There was no discussion about further severe cuts to the CBC. There is talk now, for example, of perhaps changing the mandate of the CBC as a result of cuts, closing down stations, for example, at Sydney, in Labrador, in Saskatchewan.

Given the rhetoric from this Government during the election campaign, does the Hon. Member feel that this Government has the mandate to do what it is proposing to do?

Ms. Phinney: Mr. Speaker, I think probably it could be argued that the Government does not have the mandate to do what it is proposing. The Government discussed before the election that the Party which managed this country should be given the mandate and the power for another four or five years because they, the Tories, had done such a good job managing the economy over the last five years. As I have already mentioned, that management consisted of doubling the debt over the past four years. The Government asked us to give it the mandate for another five years but unfortunately, as Canadians are learning, the Tories do not deserve this mandate.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain (Ms. Phinney). It has to do with this very, very important area of universality which is pretty basic to the social programs in this country. The Conservative Government will argue that the claw-back of old age security is not an assault on universality. But, in fact, it is.

Mr. Dick: You are wrong.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): I do not think there is any doubt that once the Government introduces legislation in a Budget allowing a total claw-back of a social service—

Mr. Dick: From the rich.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): —then you have, in fact, the termination of the application of universality.

Mr. Dick: No, they all get a cheque.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): It may be $50,000 now but the Finance Minister may decide next year he will reduce that amount to $40,000 or $30,000 or $25,000. Then the old age security becomes a government hand-out or a social welfare payment to the elderly who are retired. That is then the end of universality.

Mr. Dick: Is this a question?

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): The question I want to put to the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain—and I thank her for her maiden speech if it was her maiden speech. It was her first speech I have listened to in this House. I congratulate her on that and on her election. I want to know whether or not her Party would restore full universality if they were elected at the next election.

Ms. Phinney: Mr. Speaker, universality is the basic right of all Canadians. At what point will it stop? The Government is saying now $50,000. Next year that amount may be $40,000 and the next year $30,000. It is a basic right of every Canadian to receive their pension and their family allowance.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate. The Hon. Member for Fredericton (Mr. Bird) will be the first speaker at three o'clock.

It being one o'clock I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At 12.59 p.m. the House took recess.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PLO MEMBERSHIP IN WORLD HEALTH ORGANIZATION

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham): Mr. Speaker, the 166-member assembly, the World Health Organization's governing body, began its annual two-week session yesterday. The organization may be taking a very important but divisive vote today. The vote is whether or not to grant full membership to the Palestine Liberation Organization.

Full membership in WHO would automatically allow the PLO to join several other agencies such as the UN Conference on Trade and Development. The United States, which contributes 25 per cent of WHO's yearly budget of $73.8 million, is expected to vote against the PLO because it is not a legitimate state in control of a territory, borders or a government. Admittance to full membership is therefore both undeserved and premature. I am pleased to say that for the same reasons, Canada will also be voting against any move to grant full membership to the PLO.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

DETROIT GARBAGE INCINERATOR

Mr. Rex Crawford (Kent): Mr. Speaker, something is rotten in the State of Michigan. The Detroit garbage incinerator will be completed this month without state-of-the-art pollution controls. The Government has not even lifted a finger to stop or to delay the world's largest incinerator.

This garbage-burning monster is only three miles from the Canadian border but the impact area extends well into Ontario. Sailing in the breeze every year will be sulphur oxides, hydrogen chlorides, arsenic, chromium, mercury, dioxins and furans which could be reduced by imposing the necessary controls. The incinerator will burn 2,000 tonnes of trash each and every day.

The Americans say it is too expensive to install better anti-pollution equipment. I say it is much more expensive to affect the health of residents downwind.

The Government should follow the lead of Ontario's Environment Minister. He is showing guts and real commitment by taking the Yankees to court. He is defending our interests. Where is the Government of Canada on this matter?

ENTREPRENEURSHIP

RECOGNITION OF FIVE DISTINGUISHED BUSINESS WOMEN OF ABITIBI-TÉMISCAMINGUE

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, women entrepreneurs have finally come of age in Abitibi-Témiscamingue. And to emphasize this fact, the Abitibi-Témiscamingue Chambers of Commerce every year give an award to five women who have made their mark in the business world through their dynamism and outstanding achievements.

I should like to congragulate Diane Raymond, from Ville-Marie, Lise Gendron, from La Sarre, Hélène Lagrange, from Rouyn-Noranda, Dolly Lepack, from Val d'Or, and Jocelyne Deshaies, from Amos, the five award winners for 1989 for their tremendous success in the business world. Through these women, Mr. Speaker, I wish to congragulate and thank all the women who are continuously working for the development of our Abitibi-Témiscamingue region.

FISHERIES

DREDGING OF PORTS IN P.E.I.

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, this past weekend in my riding, two lobster boats became caught in excess silt and were forced to wait until the tide came in before they could come ashore. Events like this should never happen and would never happen if the ports of Prince Edward Island were properly dredged.

The recent Budget is inadequate. It is unacceptable because it does not have sufficient money to keep our harbours safe and our wharfs properly maintained.

The fishery is one of the most important industries in Prince Edward Island. It means approximately $80 million in landed value to the fishermen and totals about $200 million to the Prince Edward Island economy. I urge the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to think again and to evaluate the effects of his budget on the safety and future of the fishery in Prince Edward Island.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

COST OF SEWAGE TREATMENT

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to draw the attention of the Government once again to the crisis of deteriorating roadways, bridges and sewer systems across Canada. One example that portrays this crisis is the fact that more than eight million Canadians live in municipalities that provide no sewage treatment whatsoever.

Municipalities do not have the tax base to address this issue alone but are willing to raise their share of one-third of the cost as are all provincial Governments. The federal Government is not, despite veiled promises made from time to time before the Budget. In the meantime, both the deterioration and the price escalates. It is now $15 billion.

The Federation of Canadian Municipalities has a concrete proposal endorsed by its 1,200-plus members which would help clean up our environment, create 60,000 good paying jobs, reduce the deficit through tax revenue and rebuild the infrastructure of Canada. I call on the Government to enact one positive initiative out of a totally negative and regressive Budget and allocate the $600 million generated from tax increases on gasoline to this plan. It would be a small step toward addressing the issue, but at least it would be a positive step which would improve the quality of life of all Canadians.

FORESTRY

TRIBUTE TO FORESTRY WORKERS

Mr. Jean-Luc Joncas (Matapédia—Matane): Mr. Speaker, the Lower St. Lawrence Gaspé Forest Association has just held in the Matapédia Valley its annual convention which had brought together under the same roof some 200 groups more or less directly involved in forestry and the important roles it plays in our daily lives.

This year, during the Week of the Tree which will be held between May 7 to 13, each Canadian man and woman should plant a tree and use this period to reflect on the impact forests have on our economy, environment, our health generally, as well as on the conservation of our fauna and water resources.

Contrary to an opinion held much too long, Mr. Speaker, this wealth is not inexhaustible and should be preserved through a well thought out forestry policy so that future generations can enjoy healthy and luxuriant forests.

Today, Mr. Speaker, we are no longer referring to lumbermen but forestry workers who fully deserved admiration and to whom I wish to pay here a special tribute. They are the gardeners who through their professional dedication, will deliver the forests of tomorrow.

Finally, I want to pay a special tribute to the late J. Donat Brûlé, a great forestry engineer who founded the "Club 4H" on February 20, 1940, in an effort to teach young men and young women the desire to protect trees.

FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

EFFECT ON COST OF FOOD

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Mr. Speaker, once again we have evidence of the Government being less than candid and indeed untruthful with the Canadian people in respect of the real effects of the trade deal. In today's issue of The Globe and Mail, Galen Weston, food conglomerate chairman and president of Loblaws, says that Canadians should not expect any kind of break at the supermarkets as a result of the Free Trade Agreement.

During the election campaign, the Government promised Canadian families that $85 to $130 would be saved annually by a family of four on their supermarket bills due to cheaper imports as a result of the free trade deal. Instead, we have seen over the last year a 4 per cent hike in grocery prices, the largest increase since the summer of 1987. As a result of the 1989 Budget tax grab, we can expect further food price increases.

Again, we have seen the Government mislead the Canadian consumer and have evidenced the Government's lack of credibility in keeping election promises. Even the corporate friends of the Prime Minister such as Galen Weston are now saying that the Government has misled the people of Canada on the Free Trade Agreement.

TELECOMMUNICATIONS

REQUEST THAT THE CRTC REVIEW CERTAIN RECOMMENDATIONS

M. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): Mr. Speaker, a decision rendered by the CRTC concerning an aspect of telecommunications in Western Québec does not reflect the reality of the Ottawa area and the services that its people want.

The proposal by Bell Canada is the result of several years of consultations with all the municipalities and local agencies. Bell Canada's proposal, in conjunction with the municipalities, is fair and equitable since it gives Western Québec the same services as are found on the Ontario side.

We ask, Mr. Speaker, that the CRTC review the proposals and render a decision which truly reflects the situation in Western Québec.

DECLINE IN NUMBER OF FARM BANKRUPTCIES

Mr. Ross Stevenson (Durham): Mr. Speaker, the number of farm bankruptcies declined by 8.2 per cent in 1988, continuing the downward trend established in 1984. Of course, there are many reasons for this positive trend. Ever-improving fiscal management and improvements in prices of some agricultural commodities are two major factors. Major financial support by the federal Government, through stabilization, special grains and drought assistance programs, has also been a major contributor to the improved economic outlook on many of our farms. The economic well-being of our farm families is a concern of all of us. Leadership by the federal Government has and will continue to assist in the continued evolution of a strong agricultural industry in Canada.

THE HOUSE OF COMMONS

SEVENTH SQUASH TOURNAMENT BETWEEN MP'S AND THE PRESS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, the star athletes of the parliamentary media and the ordinary sportsmen of the House of Commons have just held their Seventh Squash Tournament.

Although our opponents had obviously been training hard for a long time, they barely held on to the cup in this tournament between the media people and the elected representatives.

Since 1984, the tally is: MP's 5, Media 2.

I congratulate them, but our day will come. See you next time.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

TRAIN TO WAKEFIELD

Mr. Gilles Rocheleau (Hull—Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, I want to talk about the financial contribution of the federal government to the proposed tourist train between Hull and Wakefield.

As a result of unrelenting efforts on the part of the community, particularly representatives of the three city involved, Hull, Hull-Ouest and La Pêche, which have bought the railway infrastructure between Hull and Wakefield, Quebec has granted $1.4 million to this project which will bring in $17 million in revenue and create about 124 jobs.

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the federal and provincial governments have been playing ping-pong with the tourist train proposal, and that unwarranted delay could jeopardize the project scheduled to start in May 1990.

Consequently, I insist that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion speed up the analysis so that the project sponsors can get an answer before the end of May of this year, of course, Mr. Speaker. I do hope the Hon. Member for Pontiac—Gatineau—Labelle will support my request.

THE ECONOMY

ONTARIO GOVERNMENT'S EXPENDITURES

Mr. Lee Richardson (Calgary Southeast): Mr. Speaker, my constituents are upset about high interest rates that are a result of government debt and inflation. Our Government has attacked this debt. We are told interest rates are high to fight the ravages of inflation. Westerners ask, what inflation? Inflation in Alberta is not out of control, but it is in Toronto, and we are all paying for it. Another irresponsible Liberal Government is spending like a drunken sailor at a time when its economy is booming. Its excessive government spending and deficit financing is fueling inflation and driving up interest rates to the detriment of Canadians in western Canada and in other regions.

Our Government is taking bold initiatives to fight the debt. What is the Peterson Government doing? While we trimmed 10,000 civil service jobs, Ontario has increased its civil service by 7,000. While we cut salaries and spending by 25 per cent, the Ontario Government increased spending by 24 per cent. When we cut administrative costs by 48.3 per cent, the Ontario Government's comparable costs increased by 25 per cent. Westerners are saying, enough is enough.

SPACE RESEARCH

CLOSING OF ROCKET RANGE AT CHURCHILL, MANITOBA

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, for years now Canadians have known that the ozone layer, sheltering the earth from the sun's harmful rays, is at risk. Canadians should also know that we have one of the finest research stations for monitoring that ozone layer right here in Canada. In Churchill, Manitoba, we have what is considered the finest northern rocket range station in the free world for studying the ozone layer. The Manitoba launcher is praised by American and Canadian scientists alike. I quote one American scientist who has said:

> It is the best location for such research.

In addition, Churchill's launching pads are indoors and heated, essential for winter launching. However, in 1985, the Canadian Government decided to shut down the Churchill rocket range by 1992.

Since 1985, however, we have discovered the need for rocket research in order to better understand and monitor the ozone layer. Since 1985, the United States itself has doubled its annual number of rocket launches. This year there have been four NASA launches in Churchill. Given the renewed interest by the North American scientific community in the use of rocket launchers, I would call upon the Government to reconsider its decision to close down the Churchill rocket range.

As you know, Mr. Lagassé, a long-standing member of the New Democratic Party, wants to succeed Mr. Broadbent. STUDENT FARES

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, over the next few weeks, thousands of Canadian university students will criss-cross this vast country in search of summer employment opportunities. All Members of this House are well aware of the cost of travel in Canada and should ask, how can university students carry this burden of travel expense? The student stand-by fare to travel from Nova Scotia to British Columbia is $460, $50 more than the seat-sale price. Surely, Canada's major airlines can give students a better deal on empty seats. I call upon Air Canada and Canadian International Airlines to give students a break.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ENCOURAGEMENT OF TRADE WITH POLAND

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, recently the Paris Club, of which Canada is a member, held a special session on Poland's substantial foreign debt. For over seven years, the western world has been using economic sanctions to push for reforms that they believed would enable Poland to salvage its own economy independently. The legalization of Solidarity has motivated the United States, France and Germany to accept in principle some of the responsibility for trying to ease the burden of debt that has crippled Poland for so long.

We are pleased to have the Minister of Foreign Affairs of Poland's People's Republic, Mr. Olechowski, with us in Canada to discuss the developments that have occurred in his country and the ways and means in which we can facilitate freer trade between our countries. Poland is seeking to reschedule its foreign debt, and we should be generous in our approach by encouraging joint ventures, promoting investment and increasing Polish imports to Canada. We look forward to the elections in June as a symbol that Poland is moving in the right direction towards economic stability and greater freedom for the people of Poland.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

SOCIAL SECURITY PROGRAMS

OLD AGE PENSIONS—UNIVERSALITY PRINCIPLE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. It used to be that Canadians in this country who worked for 45 years and helped build our country were entitled as a matter of citizenship to the old age pension. But now more and more Canadians are telling Members of Parliament, why bother planning for retirement when the Conservative Party can change the rules at any time? To show the injustice of the Minister's proposals on old age pensions, I want to use his formula, which he cutely calls CPI-3. Using his formula, will the Minister confirm that 55 year-old Canadians whose incomes are currently $25,000, as a result of inflation will have their old-age pension taxed back at age 80? Will he confirm that 45 year-old Canadians whose incomes are $18,000 will, as a result of the same formula, have their old age pension taxed back at age 80?

What is that, Mr. Speaker, if not the end of universality of our social programs?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think Canadians know from the many improvements that we have brought into the retirement savings system over the last four years that we are very, very much committed to a very responsible and broad retirement savings system in Canada. We have improved the Canada pension plan system. We have improved the rules on vesting and on portability and part-time pensions so that many more people can be eligible for pensions. They can also move those pensions and take them with them when they change jobs.

We have changed the rules on Registered Retirement Income Funds, again to give people more flexibility on the investment of their retirement savings when they reach age 71. Our commitment is very clear.

What the Hon. Member is attempting to do with his question is to draw very unfair conclusions. He knows that we made changes when we brought in the CPI-minus-three formula in 1985. In 1987 we proposed changes that raised thresholds for people who were affected by that through an increase in the low-income threshold. This is something that we have committed ourselves to do in this Budget and to monitor on a regular basis.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr.Speaker, the formula I am basing my questions on is found at page 9 of the Minister's own Budget Papers. What he has really done is admitted the weakness of his proposal in that the old age pension is now discretionary on the whim of a Government. It is no longer statutory. It is no longer a formula upon which Canadians can plan throughout their working lifetime.

RETIREMENT PLANNING

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, still referring to the Budget papers and the Minister's own calculations, figures and formula, in 20 years, over 2 million seniors will have to pay tax on their old age pensions. According to the Minister's formula and calculations, a 45-year-old couple who now earns $28,000 a year will have to pay tax on their old age pensions when they retire. Like everybody else, that couple is now planning for their retirement. How can they plan for the future when the Conservative Government has promised to review income level from time to time over the next few years?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition has said things that are false. We have introduced many changes in the pension plan system that are very beneficial to Canadians. In response to the first question, I also said that many changes were good for pension plans. I said it is very important to understand that 4 per cent of Canadians are affected by changes in the rules and I think it is very equitable. We have a debt problem and all Canadians must work on it.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has said that the figures I quoted in this House are false, but they are based on his own formula in his own Budget Papers. If the Minister can produce a document proving me wrong, let him do it! Otherwise, he has to start telling Canadians the truth.

FAMILY ALLOWANCES TAX-BACK

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): If we could turn to the family allowance, under the plan announced by the Minister of Finance, and again based on the formula in his Budget Papers, in 20-years' time a family now living at the poverty line and earning $23,600 a year will have their family allowance taxed back. That relates to a family now living at the poverty line and based on the Minister's formula. The Minister shakes his head. Let me give him another figure.

Will the Minister explain why today, even without the use of his formula, a yuppie couple living on a joint income of $99,000 will not have their family allowance taxed back, while a single earner with only half that income will have his or her family allowance taxed back? What type of a scheme is that?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is drawing all sorts of conclusions which have no basis whatsoever in reality.

Let me draw the Hon. Member's attention to the summary for taxpayers on tax reform which was brought out two years after we made an adjustment to the indexation formula. That change clearly demonstrates that we are going to review these things and, where it is appropriate, we are going to make changes, as we did two years after we made the adjustment in the indexation formula.

Let me also draw the Hon. Member's attention to the change. For a married one-earner couple we raised the low-income threshold at which individuals start paying federal tax from $16,770 to $18,890. For a married couple aged 65 and over, we increased the threshold from $16,945 to $19,010.

It is clear that when we say we are going to review those matters, we have demonstrated in the past that we are going to review those matters. Those particular statistics that the Hon. Member is using are pure scare tactics, and the Hon. Member knows it.

ADDITION OF HAZARDOUS PRODUCTS TO FUELS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. Over the past 24 hours Canadians have become increasingly concerned about the absolute negligence of the federal Government in relation to the scandal of PCB-laced fuel oil being imported from the United States.

Last night we learned that the Minister's office was first informed of the possibility of this scam last March. I learned this morning that the Minister of State for Transport was personally informed while at a conference in Switzerland last March.

Can the Minister of the Environment explain why, after his office had been personally informed of a potential scam, he refused to participate in a border investigation of a criminal nature which took place in the Province of Ontario involving the seizure of 113 samples, the stopping of 383 trucks, and the laying of 18 charges over six days in April?

Can the Minister explain why his Department chose to send one observer, instead of sending in government inspectors and the RCMP, as he should have done when he had the facts already before him?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, while in Switzerland two months ago one of my aides received a general hint from an environmentalist from Montreal on possible illegal toxic waste commerce crossing the border between Canada and the United States. It was a general allegation with no specific possibilities involving, for example, tainted fuel.

When my aide returned to Canada, he gave the information to the officials in my Department. Last month a joint operation was conducted between Ontario and Canada to check the borders. A charge has been laid, and it was in the general scope of the transportation of dangerous goods under an Act of Canada and the accord between the United States and Canada.

No one in my Department, or in any federal government Department has been told that there was a specific allegation of tainted fuel.

As soon as we were made aware of this yesterday we took immediate action. As of now the Solicitor General has instructed the RCMP to conduct a full investigation into the question. This investigation will be conducted in cooperation with seven federal Departments.

We have now begun blitz inspections at the border between Ontario, Québec, and the United States. My officials are now in contact with Governments all over Canada to do the same. I have just spoken to Ministers Bacon and Bradley. They are conducting a joint operation. I can tell the Government that industry has also been contacted. A full review is being conducted of the inspection systems, and steps will be taken to ensure that Canadians are protected.

SEIZURE OF CONTAMINATED OIL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, his negligence and the negligence of the Minister of State (Transport) has put the health of thousands in jeopardy. I have the following question: If it is true, as he said today in the House, that he received some notification in March, why wasn't he there in April when 113 samples of oil were seized from 383 trucks, an operation that was not carried out by the federal Government which did not want to get involved, saying it did not have the money to carry out such an operation? Why didn't he ask his Department and the RCMP to join forces with the Government of Ontario? Why?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I will have to disappoint the Hon. Member for Hamilton East. The federal Government, through Environment Canada, participated in the operation that helped to detect these violations at the border. I just spoke to the Ontario Environment Minister who told me that he appreciated the federal Government's co-operation in this operation which was launched after we passed on some information to Ontario. I think this is an entirely unjustified attempt to smear a Government that has done, and will continue to do, everything to protect the public interest.

ILLICIT TRANSPORT OF TOXIC MATERIAL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of the Environment. The Minister is of course aware that Mr. Green, an environmentalist from Montreal and a responsible person, was a member of the Canadian delegation to a conference on the environment in Switzerland. Mr. Green informed my office this morning that he told someone at the Minister's office a month ago that toxic substances were being shipped unlawfully between Canada and the United States. Why didn't the Minister's office inform the Solicitor General or the Minister of National Health and Welfare immediately to protect the health of Canadians and take legal steps?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I know Mr. Daniel Green, whose name was just mentioned by the leader of the New Democratic Party, and I can confirm that Mr. Green, who was in Switzerland recently to attend an international conference on the transportation of toxic substances, informed one of my assistants that there were claims of widespread transportation of toxic substances across the Canada-U.S. border. As soon as he came back to Canada, my assistant informed the authorities concerned, including the Ontario Government, which led to a special surveillance operation at the U.S. border last month and subsequently to charges being laid against individuals whose trucks were seized at the border. Mr. Speaker, there never were any specific allegations concerning the unlawful transportation of tainted fuel. Never!

[English]

TRANSPORTATION OF ILLEGAL SUBSTANCES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of the Environment said that he learned of it just yesterday, not a month ago when someone in his office was told. The Solicitor General said yesterday that the investigation by the RCMP would not start likely until today.

My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of State for Transport. The same Mr. Green was at a conference with the Minister in Switzerland during the period March 20 to March 22, during which time, he has informed my staff, he told the Minister directly that the transportation of illicit substances illegally was taking place across the Canadian border. Is this true? Was she informed at that time? If so, why did she not do something about it until it appeared in the press yesterday?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I will repeat the facts. The facts are that people were informed in Switzerland that there was a possibility of a general traffic of toxic waste between Canada and the United States. We immediately acted on this information and triggered an inspection blitz at the border. That was done properly. There was no specific allegation until yesterday about tainted fuel crossing the border.

RCMP INVESTIGATION—DELAY IN ACTING

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister has decided to answer all the questions on this subject, I will direct my supplementary question to him. Mr. Green, who is acknowledged as a responsible man, has said there was information passed to the Minister to the effect that there was an illegal transportation across the border of these substances, and furthermore, that The Globe and Mail was conducting at that time a series of investigations that it would be publishing soon. Will the Minister tell us why the RCMP did not get in touch with The Globe and Mail reporter? Why did the Government, on the whole, not act more thoroughly, until it found out about it in yesterday's headlines?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the healthy and normal reaction of a Government hearing information of this kind is not to get in touch with a newspaper.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): It is to do what we did, inform the Governments involved through regular channels to set up a special border check. That is what we did.

NATIONAL REVENUE

NEW SALES TAX—EFFECT ON PROVINCES

Mr. George S. Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Mr. Speaker, the new sales tax announced in the Budget, to be brought in at the end of next year, is perhaps the most unfair and unequal tax ever foisted on Canadians.

In Alberta it will mean a new 9 per cent retail sales tax. In British Columbia it means a 9.5 per cent increase, in Ontario a 9.7 per cent increase, in Prince Edward Island and the Maritimes a 9.9 per cent increase and in Newfoundland an increase of over 10 per cent. It is called double dipping.

If the Government is going to bring in this unfair tax, then will the Minister now say that the Government will adjust it so that it is equal in every province in Canada? The Minister asks us to deal with the deficit, but surely Canadians deserve a fair deal. This is a double deal.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, possibly the Hon. Member might slip into the empty seat next to his finance critic and ask him why he supports the very actions that we are taking in introducing a new sales tax.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): If I understood the convoluted nature of his question, the Hon. Member just said that he wants us to have a federal sales tax which is different in different provinces.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): That is one rate in one province and another rate in another province. I do not know where he finds the fairness in that. Surely if that is what he is proposing, the provinces will be up in arms at the unfairness of that sort of approach.

Mr. Baker: Mr. Speaker, the Minister is not only good at double dealing, he is a master of double talk.

REFUNDABLE SALES TAX CREDIT

Mr. George S. Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that every province in Canada has a different retail sales tax. The Government has no right to impose a new tax on all goods and services in such a way that there will be a different increase in different provinces in Canada. Heaven help you if you are in Newfoundland. It is an increase of over 10 per cent. We will be paying over 22 per cent retail sales tax.

I want to ask the Minister about his cash advance rebate of this tax. Will Canadians who live the furthest away from the manufacturing plants in Canada receive a higher advance tax rebate before the end of next year because of where they live, or will the rebate be the same no matter where one lives in Canada?

This rebate is only tax bait, and Canadians are not going to swallow it.

• (1440)

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I still cannot get it through my head—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —how the Hon. Member is suggesting that some provinces should have a federal sales tax which is different from another province. Surely, the Hon. Member understands that the retail sales taxes to which he just referred are applied by the provinces, not by the federal Government. If we are to be fair we should have the same rate across the country. That is fairness.

The other element of fairness to which the Hon. Member alluded is the refundable sales tax credit. It is a major step forward. I want to refer the Hon. Member to page 22 of the book entitled Goods and Services Tax.

Mr. Crosbie: He doesn't read.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I do not think I should repeat that, Mr. Speaker.

It sets out very clearly that the new system will be much more fair. It will be a progressive tax system that will help the people in his province—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Members opposite do not understand that.

Mr. Crawford: They do not believe it.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It demonstrates very clearly that people in provinces like Newfoundland, his own province, will be much better off as a result of this new sales tax.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

USE OF TRACKER AIRCRAFT

Mr. Joe McGuire (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Yesterday, a spokesman for DND, Captain Rick Jones, said that the tracker aircraft had a military role in that: "They were doing coastal surveillance with a particular effort for the Department of Fisheries on fisheries patrols".

How does the Department of National Defence intend to provide this military role if the trackers are taken out of service? Can the Minister assure the fishermen in the Gulf of St. Lawrence that the industry will be protected, especially in view of the fact that France is now robbing us blind in that area?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows, as would the captain if he had been asked, that the tracker aircraft will have to be retrofitted within the next 18 months to 20 months. Right now the engines and the fuel needed are very scarce and hard to acquire.

With a $2.74 billion reduction in the budget of the Department of National Defence, the money is not available to retrofit the tracker aircraft. Therefore, the two squadrons which are based in Summerside will be phased out.

Ms. Clancy: So much for the fishermen!

CLOSURE OF CFB SUMMERSIDE

Mr. Joe McGuire (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, there is a need for a fisheries patrol off the Atlantic Coast. There is a need for patrols of the drug smuggling that goes through eastern Canada. If Search and Rescue remains in P.E.I. new facilities will have to be built.

The Minister knows he will not save one red cent by closing CFB Summerside. Why is the Government blindly going ahead in closing the base at Summerside?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I can again inform the Hon. Member about the advice I received when I found the reduction of $2.74 billion in the budget of National Defence as to the economies that could be made without jeopardizing defence efficiency and defence readiness. Those decisions were made by my military advisers. I believe that they are good advisers. I believe they know their job. I believe they are competent.

The Hon. Member should be aware that the Aurora aircraft that DND has continues to fly out of Maritime Command.

DANGEROUS PRODUCTS

RCMP INVESTIGATION INTO TAINTED FUELS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment who said a few moments ago that the Government does not contact newspapers to get information, that that is not the general practice of Government. The Government knew, had some hint, of the movement of tainted toxic products across the Canada–U.S. border a month ago.

Would the Minister of the Environment explain why then under the jurisdiction of the Solicitor General yesterday morning after The Globe and Mail came out with the banner headline the Government through the RCMP contacted Jock Ferguson from The Globe and Mail to get information?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I want the Hon. Member to read my lips. We did not receive specific allegations, nor any hint of illegal crossing of tainted fuel from the States.

I want to take advantage of this occasion to clear up some information I just gave. It was not one of my aides but a civil servant from my Department who received the general information from Mr. Green.

TIMING OF NOTICE RESPECTING TAINTED FUELS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister of the Environment be somewhat more clear with the House of Commons and the people of Canada? When exactly did the Minister know that there was a possibility of toxic materials coming across the border from the United States into Canada? When did he know and what precise steps were taken to test those tankers coming from the United States into Canada? Could the Minister be precise?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I have always been straightforward with this House. I always will be, like any Member on this side of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): The Hon. Member knows perfectly well that we were made aware yesterday of existing allegations of tainted fuel crossing the border. Only yesterday were there specific allegations of the crossing of tainted fuel from the States.

STATEMENT OF MR. GREEN—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Laurier—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Transport, since the Minister of the Environment does not want to tell us the truth.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Malépart: But Mr. Daniel Green, an official with the Society To Overcome Pollution, said that he told the Minister of State for Transport in Switzerland that PCBs mixed with gasoline and heating oil were being imported into Canada from the United States.

Can the Minister tell us when she passed on to the Minister of the Environment the information received by the Minister of State for Transport from Mr. Green?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the facts are very simple. An international conference to sign an agreement on the transportation of dangerous goods was held in Basel, Switzerland. Canada was represented at that conference by a delegation. In that delegation was an Environment Department official who happened to meet Daniel Green, a well-known Québec enviornmentalist, by chance—that is quite normal. Mr. Green told my departmental official, 'We are hearing stories, rumours, about illegal traffic in toxic substances between the United States and Canada'. Such information had already been going around—I believe there were even projects and plans for stricter inspection at the border.

When this official returned to Ottawa, the information he obtained made it possible to accelerate and intensify the police operation, which successfully accomplished its mission at the American border.

Mr. Malépart: Mr. Speaker, what the Minister does not want to say is what Mr. Green told the Minister of State for Transport who was there. Mr. Green will tell the truth and he is confronted.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Laurier—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Minister responsible for National Health and Welfare.

I spoke to Mr. Tobin, the Health Department toxicology official, and he told me that the Health Department, which is also responsible for the environment, had not been informed and that he too knew that the Environment Department had previously been notified.

Can the Minister tell us how come his Department did not conduct a thorough study of the health consequences for people who may have used (contaminated) gasoline or heating oil, advising them of the potential dangers of cancer and liver disease?

Is the Minister of National Health and Welfare able to reassure the people on that?

• (1450)

[English]

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, my Department does regular samplings of foods from across the country to look for contaminants that may be in the food chain. Never at any time have we found excess amounts of PCBs, dioxins or furans in the last several years. In addition, the Ontario Ministry of the Environment has monitored some 60 water treatment plants for PCBs since 1987 and have found no excess PCBs in water around Ontario during that time.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

TRANSPORT

TENDER CANCELLATION—TRANSPORT CANADA HEADQUARTERS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Transport. It concerns the Transport Canada headquarters tender cancellation and the subsequent sweetheart deal with Campeau Corporation. I would like to ask—wasting taxpayers' dollars is not funny, I tell the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I have a question for the Minister of Transport. I would like to ask him the following: I have in hand a copy of an internal memo signed by Mr. Glen Shortliffe, whom I believe to be a deputy minister, dated April 28, the day after the Budget, which says:

> Agreement in principle has been reached with Campeau Corporation to renew the current leasing agreement for our Tower C premises—

Given that this document was sent the morning after the Budget, can the Minister of Transport tell us how it is that it could renew the lease for 560,000 square feet of office space overnight? Is that not a bit much, even for the Tory Party rewarding its friends?

Hon. Elmer MacKay (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I can assure my colleague that this particular lease that he refers to as being renewed overnight was not renewed overnight. There were negotiations late in April which resulted in considerable savings for this particular building.

An Hon. Member: For the Budget.

REQUEST FOR EXPLANATIONS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Minister of Finance. In light of the answer we were just given by his colleague the Minister of Public Works to the effect that his department had begun negotiations with Campeau Corporation even before the Budget was printed and before it was announced, how are Canadians to know whether Mr. Campeau or the Minister of Public Works had prior knowledge? In addition, can the Minister of Finance tell the House why, referring to restraints on page 26 of his Budget Papers, he states that the project was cancelled to save $200 million? How can he save $200 million, as he suggests, when the proposed building costs more than the new lease. Why claim he is saving money when he actually spends more?

[English]

Hon. Elmer MacKay (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to see my colleague drawing such unwarranted conclusions from this particular—

Mr. Boudria: It was your answer.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, my colleague has been around this House long enough to know, surely, that when negotiations are going on they are always subject to approval by Treasury Board. This particular matter does not involve, as he is trying to suggest, any sort of budgetary leak or any of these wild conclusions. This is just simply normal negotiations with respect to the Department of Public Works.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DRIFT-NET FISHING—AGREEMENT WITH JAPANESE

Mr. David D. Stupich (Nanaimo—Cowichan): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs. Canadians know the damage caused by drift-net fishery. In 1987, we cancelled our own experimental drift-net fishery because it proved to be an environmental disaster.

In spite of that, Canada has entered into an agreement with Japan that provides for the expansion northward of the drift-net fishing. Does the Minister agree that this will mean an increased interception of Canadian origin salmon and steelhead?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. gentleman has his facts completely wrong. Canada has not agreed to any expansion of the Japanese squid drift-net fishery. In fact, we have objected to any expansion of the Japanese squid drift-net fishery. What we have achieved with the United States is an agreement to put observers on these Japanese vessels so we will be able to get part-time scientific information on the effect of the Japanese drift-net fishing on other marine life. The Japanese are operating in international waters, they are not operating in Canadian waters. We have no control in these waters. This is a significant advance. Certainly, we have not agreed and do not intend to agree to any extension of Japanese drift-net fishing. In fact, we have objected time after time.

OBSERVERS ON FISHING VESSELS

Mr. David D. Stupich (Nanaimo—Cowichan): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to the same Minister. The Minister may be right in saying we have not agreed to an expansion, but we have agreed to the border moving one degree north in July and two degrees north in August.

Some Hon. Members: Right on.

Mr. Stupich: The Minister talks of a significant advantage. We are getting five observers on 1,000 vessels. There are 30,000 miles of these curtains of death in the ocean, and we are going to be allowed to put five people on 1,000 vessels. How can the Minister describe that as an advantage? Let him tell me why it is an advantage.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is such an expert at exaggeration that I imagine he will be a candidate—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: —for the leadership before he is finished.

Japan unilaterally extended the northern boundary for July and August, while remaining within the over-all boundary of 46 degrees north set in 1981 by Japanese domestic regulations. We are going to have 14 North American observers on 32—not 1,000, Mr. Speaker, not 900, not 800, not 500—on 32 Japanese squid drift-net fishing vessels for the 1989 fishing season. Try to be a little less exaggerated in your question, please.

TOURISM

CUT IN ADVERTISING BUDGET

Mr. Ken Atkinson (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for tourism. Tourism is of course important to Canada and particularly to the Niagara area. Each year the highest volume of tourists into Canada are from the northern U.S. states. In light of the $5 million cut in tourism advertising for next year, as shown in the Estimates, can the Minister assure this House and the tourism operators that Canada's advertising campaign in these border states will continue?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: Yes or no?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to assure the Hon. Member that I share his emphasis on the northern border states. If you take a look at American tourism, they are having more trips and they are having shorter trips which makes Canada the best market for American tourists. We do not want to cut back on the possibilities in that market, so what we are going to do in the year when the budget is cut by $5 million is elicit more joint advertising, more co-operative advertising and the result will probably be more advertising expenditure and exposure, not less.

CULTURE

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): My question is directed to the Minister of Communications. Between 1984 and 1994 we will have witnessed a series of cumulative cut-backs along with non-indexed CBC budgets—not to mention additional corporate taxes—which amount to an over-all budgetary reduction of close to $400 million out of approximately $915 million in parliamentary appropriations. Does the Minister not realize that he would be responsible for the utter destruction of Canadian culture and of the CBC which, as a cultural institution, is essential to Canada? Mr. Speaker, we have no Oscar to award him for that! Is he not ashamed of his policies?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I want to point out that as Minister of Communications I am not on the lookout for Oscar or Juno awards.

The CBC has been given a wide-ranging and very important mandate for which Canadians, through their Government, contribute roughly $1 billion.

It stands to reason that with a wide-ranging mandate it will always be possible to earmark additional funds for more programs or improved performance. On the other hand, the Government's top priority is to reduce the deficit lest our cultural and social programs be curtailed even more drastically. With that in mind, Mr. Speaker, the Government has urged the CBC management to support the effort made by Canadians, Crown corporations and the Government and cut their budget by an estimated 2 per cent.

• (1500)

[English]

Mrs. Finestone: You know, with all that sophistry, Mr. Speaker, perhaps he is standing in line for a second nomination as an Oscar winner.

EFFECT OF BUDGET CUTS TO THE CBC

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, as these savage cuts to the CBC will affect services to the regions, services to English and French language minorities, service in terms of the Canadianization of our airwaves and services to ensure that the French language stations have equivalent production funds, isn't this Minister ashamed of the cuts that he has allowed to CBC? Doesn't he recognize the seriousness of the devastation to the Canadian network? Aren't you ashamed of yourself, Mr. Minister?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, as Minister of Communications I can tell my colleague that I am particularly proud to have managed to increase my department's budget for cultural endeavours, with the co-operation of the Prime Minister and my Cabinet colleagues.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Trinity—Spadina, a single question, please.

IMMIGRATION

BACKLOG IN REFUGEE DETERMINATION SYSTEM

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. As she knows, her officials' report shows that in the new refugee determination system a new backlog is growing. This is equal to about half the number of the 4,500 new refugee claimants who came in this year. About 1,700 have not started on their preliminary hearing and there are more than 900 others who have not finished their formal hearing. Will the Minister admit that the new system will break down if she continues with a double hearing in which 93 per cent of those who go to the first hearing are sent on to the second hearing?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, no, I would not admit such a thing. There are a couple of points I would like to make in connection with this.

First, when the new system was established it took a while to make it operational. We were not fully staffed or trained at the beginning but we certainly are now. We have put more people to work in the system. The Immigration Refugee Board and the Department of Immigration are working together to make the system as effective as possible.

Let me say as well that the first hearing is an important stage in the process. We have only had the system running for about three and a half months and I think all Members of the House should be proud of the fact that it is working well, with credibility and compassion. We will continue to ensure that there are enough resources available so the system will work well.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 52

SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: Before proceeding to Orders of the Day, I wish to give a ruling as a consequence of argument of Thursday, April 6, by way of an application for an emergency debate under Standing Order 52. At that time, the Hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) raised a point of order concerning guidelines that exist for the statement which can be made in support of such an application. For the benefit of Hon. Members, I will read Standing Orders 52(2) and 52(3). Standing Order 52(2) reads:

> A Member wishing to move, "That this House do now adjourn"—

Because that is what is moved when one wants an emergency debate.

> —under the provisions of this Standing Order shall give to the Speaker, at least one hour prior to raising it in the House, a written statement of the matter proposed to be discussed.

Standing Order 52(3) reads:

> When requesting leave to propose such a motion, the Member shall rise in his or her place and present without argument the statement referred to in section (2) of this Standing Order.

A strict interpretation of these two subsections could lead one to suppose that the written application was to be read to the House by the Member requesting leave for an emergency debate and that the Member would not be allowed to deviate from this prepared text. This interpretation is in general the correct one, as I said on September 30, 1987 in response to a very similar point of order raised by the then Hon. Minister of Justice. That point of order and my response to it may be found on page 9498 of the Debates. It is also interesting to note that this interpretation is supported by the annotated Standing Orders at page 175.

[Translation]

However, on occasion there may be mitigating circumstances which I feel, as your Speaker, I should take into account in order to respect the spirit of this Standing Order as well as its most literal interpretation.

In my ruling of September 30, 1987 I said:

> The Chair has allowed and may well continue to allow sufficient comment when the application is made so that the position of the member is clear.

Some written applications do not provide enough detail for the Speaker to know precisely what the member wants to raise and why. Others are too long and detailed and the member, rather than reading, should give only a concise summary.

As Speaker, I feel it is important to reiterate that no argument or discussion is allowed in presenting the statement.

[English]

I can certainly understand that Hon. Members care deeply about these requests and may from time to time stray beyond what the rules envision. In the interests of fairness, particularly since the Government does not have an opportunity to present any counter arguments during an application for an emergency debate, I will, of course, use this opportunity to again remind Members of the rule and will be vigilant in ensuring that Members do not stray from these guidelines.

I thank the Hon. Minister of Justice for raising this matter and thereby allowing me to bring this issue to the attention of Members. I hope that I can count upon the support of all Hon. Members in this matter.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government; and of the amendment of Mr. MacLaren (p. 1095).

Mr. J. W. Bud Bird (Fredericton): Mr. Speaker, I feel sure that it is clear to all Hon. Members that a strong economy is fundamental and paramount to the kind of country and quality of life which Canadians desire to build and sustain.

Both history and current events present clear evidence that economic strength is the key to high standards of living, to political stability and to peace, whereas economic weakness is the prelude to poverty, oppression, political chaos and even war.

There are two pillars to a strong economy for which firm foundations must be laid. The first is a dynamic, creative and competitive productivity led by our traditional skills as a world trading nation, and our move into the free trade environment with the United States is a major step in that direction.

The second pillar is a disciplined control of the government deficit and debt. Mr. Speaker, I wish to speak about this second subject today.

Over the past 20 years, as we in Canada have increasingly lived at a standard beyond our means and as we have watched the relentless process of deficit financing borrow from our future, a great many Canadians have truly begun to fear that we are on a path toward financial self-destruction. One of those concerned Canadians has been the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) who will earn and deserve the historical credit for being the first Finance Minister to confront those disastrous directions and to start to turn them around.

This 1989 Budget, which we are now debating, is not the beginning of the Government's resolve toward financial responsibility, rather it is a continuation. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, an intensification of the new directions which were expressed in the Minister's first Budget in November, 1984. At that time, with the Conservative Government just newly elected, he reported to Canadians the state of the country's financial affairs, a deficit inherited from the previous administration of $38 billion, a total net national debt of $199 billion and interest payments that year of $22 billion. The Minister of Finance warned Canadians at that time that unless we began to put our fiscal house in order the burden of debt would continue to mount rapidly in the future. We are on a very dangerous treadmill.

Just over six months later, in May, 1985 the Government announced in its first full Budget plans to cut that deficit by nearly $4 billion, reducing it to $34 billion. That was the beginning of Conservative policies for financial responsibility, and they have been continued ever since in a consistent and progressive direction.

In 1986 the deficit was cut by $4 billion again to less than $31 billion. In 1987 it was reduced by $3 billion more to $28 billion, a decrease of over $10 billion in the deficit in a three-year period.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, before getting any further, I must perhaps underline that $10 billion reduction because it is an important achievement. A decade ago, in 1978 for example, that amount was equal to the total debt of the Canadian government. From that day until the Liberals were defeated in 1984, the deficit inflated by almost 400 per cent. Our success in reducing it by over a fourth or $10 billion signals an evolution in the management of Canadian which gives us some hope for the future.

[English]

Now, as we stand on the threshold of the 1990s, despite the dramatic turn in direction over the past four years, we are faced with the compounding impact of 20 years of deficit financing. The steamroller of total net debt of the country has grown by 12 times, from about $30 billion in 1968 to $360 billion in 1988. That avalanche of debt cannot be stopped easily and was certainly not caused by the Conservative Government or by the Minister of Finance. In fact, they have been the only ones even able to slow it down.

The momentum of growing debt was caused by living beyond our means for 20 years with deficits rising almost without interruption. Complex developments in the world of finance now have caused one dramatic new factor to be added in recent months, that being rapidly rising market interest rates which have severely intensified government expenditures for interest on the debt. In the current Budget these interest charges are up $6.4 billion over last year, totalling almost $40 billion in 1989-90, which will be 27 per cent of total government spending.

That interest cost is by far the largest item in the Budget, and by comparison, the next two largest items are transfers to other Governments at $24 billion and transfers to citizens at $23.5 billion. The arithmetic is simple but stark to behold. It clearly means that our growing interest expense is eroding the two most significant programs of government spending—support to provinces for health, education and regional development, and support to citizens for social security.

Unless we can stop the growing rate of debt service charges each year and turn that rate around so that it begins to reduce, sooner or later we shall face the reality of becoming financially insolvent as a country, unable to afford the basic programs on which our Confederation exists and our quality of life depends. It is not difficult for average Canadians to understand these circumstances, and they certainly have every right to ask how we got into this mess. The clear answer is that it is much like a family spending out of control. We have been living at costs which exceed our income. As with a family, the only real solution is a twofold one—to lower spending until we can afford to pay our way and to raise new income wherever we can realistically earn it. It is exactly that kind of policy direction which the Government has been pursuing and which the new Budget continues and intensifies.

This Budget is a message of responsibility and determination, but it is also a message of hope because it has been introduced with the vision of a fiscal plan that points us toward real progress over the next five years, a plan that directs us toward the threshold of a balanced Budget, a plan that permits us to see the real possibility of starting to pay down our debts in the mid-1990s, a feat that presently seems beyond imagination.

Those are the real foundations for economic stability in Canada, simple phrases that we all understand, to balance our budget and to pay our debts. These are national goals of financial responsibility to be shared by every Canadian except those most needy or incapable among us, until we have our fiscal house in order, until the mountain of debt can be reduced, until our prosperity can be sustained, and until our economic future is secure.

If there is another thing this Budget contains besides responsibility and determination, it is the rare quality of political courage, a quality exemplified by the Minister of Finance and by the Government. Political courage is very evident in the difficult decisions which have been taken to divert this Budget into a plan for positive action. I would like to speak briefly about three of these tough decisions to try to put them in perspective with the compelling priorities of deficit control and debt reduction which I have previously mentioned. Those three are VIA Rail, regional economic development in the Atlantic region, and defence reductions.

It has been announced that subsidies for passenger rail service will be reduced substantially over the next five years, eventually resulting in savings of $.5 billion in government spending on VIA Rail each year. This decision will impose severe constraints on VIA and will cause its management to reorganize the business plan. VIA must become a self-supporting passenger service company. There is no doubt that this will cause major changes in services, routes and fares. Where it may ultimately lead is uncertain. VIA's future will depend on the innovative skills of its management to make it a profitable business enterprise.

In the past another Crown agency has demonstrated the conversion of profitability, and Canada Post has been able to accomplish that over the past few years.

Whatever the outcome to VIA's future may be, the stark reality of its financial implications to the Government's deficit and debt can no longer be ignored. Since 1984 the Government has provided $3 billion of total assistance to VIA, along with major political initiatives and commitments to help make it work. The results have admittedly increased fare revenues by $15 million over the past two years, but to earn that increase it required additional federal assistance over the same period of $84 million.

Despite the short-term increase in ridership in actual fact over the past eight years, VIA passenger utilization has declined by 20 per cent. It now represents less than 5 per cent of the total passenger transport market, perhaps even as low as 3 per cent. There is not a single Canadian family or a single Canadian business that could tolerate that kind of arithmetic in its financial affairs.

Today in Canada VIA is truly the kind of program that we must examine with clear heads and tough minds. We must accept the grim reality that it is a service we can no longer afford from the public purse and that its future must be built on providing value and service to those customers who are willing to pay, with government help for certain locations and to those citizens who have no other way of travel.

Mr. Speaker, my remarks on regional development will focus on the situation in Atlantic Canada. The federal government's special assistance has been a great help in funding our economic infrastructure and in increasing economic growth opportunities. The region has been the beneficiary of a vast range of programs over the years. But two initiatives now stand out: the economic and regional development agreements and the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency's action plan.

The Budget clearly shows that the present high levels of funding for regional development cannot be maintained and that cuts will be introduced in the short term to be gradually reduced in the course of the five-year fiscal plan. To keep things in perspective, Mr. Speaker, since a large part of current year expenditures result from commitments made or agreements signed in the past, by setting at $500 million special assitance to Atlantic Canada, expenditures planned for 1990 in this Budget will reach a new high.

[English]

To even more graphically demonstrate the priority which this Government has given to regional economic assistance in Atlantic Canada, it is significant to note the following comparisons: the average of these funds for the last five years of the Liberal Government was $185 million; for the first five years of the Conservative Government, it was $282 million, and for the next five years of the fiscal plan introduced with this Budget, it will be an average of $425 million.

What all this means to Atlantic Canada is this: under the Conservative Government and Finance Minister Michael Wilson, regional economic assistance to us has increased more than 55 per cent on average between 1984 and 1989 and it is projected to increase another 50 per cent between 1989 and 1994.

With respect to the defence cuts that have been made, some people may find these reductions easier to accept than most of those contained in the Budget. For example, some citizens are quick to agree with the decision to cancel the purchase of nuclear submarines. That one is a matter of choice. Conversely, Mr. Speaker, some of the other defence cuts, such as the proposed closings of CFB Summerside and CFB Portage la Prairie, are among the most difficult, indeed perhaps tragic in potential impact on those communities, of all the results from the entire Budget.

Because we are fortunate in my own riding to have Canada's largest military establishment, CFB Gagetown, our citizens can easily understand the frustration and discouragement which must surely exist at Summerside, Portage la Prairie and those 14 other areas where bases will be reduced or closed. Although there will undoubtedly be effects as a result of these cuts on the Gagetown base, both favourable and unfavourable, we do know how fortunate we are to remain a high priority in the military plan and in the Budget. While we take some relief from that knowledge, I say sincerely that along with other Hon. Members, I am sure, I express compassion and understanding for those at other locations who now face major changes and adjustments in their lives. We must strive to help them in every possible way.

Those subjects upon which I have touched briefly do reflect financial responsibility, government determination and political courage. The main thrust of this Budget in a five-year fiscal plan is to demonstrate to Canadians and to the world that this Government is financially responsible. Its direction is to continue the headings which were started in 1984 and to eventually stop the annual growth of deficit and debt and to start to pay them down. This Budget is another milestone in the challenging economic mission of our Government and our country, a mission of financial responsibility toward a balanced budget and beyond.

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member in his speech spoke about VIA Rail and the effects of the recent cuts. I do not agree with the comments he made and I would invite him to express perhaps some corrections in his answer to my comments and questions on his speech.

Mr. Speaker, he will recall that in the 1984 election, the Party which he now supports in this House made certain promises. He will recall that the previous Liberal administration had proposed certain cuts in VIA Rail. In fact, the cuts had gone into place and the front bench members of the Conservative Government advocated the reinstatement of all those cut railway lines. In fact, they proceeded with that reinstatement at some cost to VIA, a cost that is obviously reflected in the increased operating grants that are made by the Government to VIA. The Government promised that, in addition to reinstating all those cuts, it would turn VIA into a national rail service of which we could be proud. But in the present Budget, the Government is reneging on that promise.

It is cutting VIA's subsidy substantially over the next few years. Obviously there are going to be cuts in service. Obviously it cannot pay its own way. No other railway in the world, that we know of, is paying its own way. Yet the Government is saying to VIA, "You do it". In this huge country, with huge spaces between our cities and where transportation is a major expense, it is saying VIA will have to pay its own way. I ask the Hon. Member, does he not think that the suggestion that VIA pay its own way is absolute nonsense? Does he also not think it is simply disgraceful that the Government in the course of the 1984 election campaign, the same group that is still here, was saying that it wanted to turn this into a national service of which we could be proud? Yet now it is trying to reduce, cut and slash the service and close it down.

Mr. Bird: Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member, the Government position was clear back in 1984 and 1985 when it presented a renewed opportunity to VIA Rail to demonstrate its viability. I believe the phrase, "Use it or lose it", was clearly conveyed and expressed to the citizens of this country with respect to VIA Rail. I tend to share the view that a passenger rail service is almost like a constitutional right. It is hard to imagine this country without such a service, but we are now facing priorities of a much higher order. We are literally talking about the fiscal solvency of our country. What has emerged since those days in 1984 is, first, as I said in my remarks, the compounding almost incestuous growth of the debt resulting from the cancerous deficit process that was established by the Liberal Government back in the early 1970s and 1980s.

Also, the rise of interest rates in the past 12 months of almost 30 per cent would alone cause any government that is financially responsible for the over-all good of the country to face the difficult assessment of services such as VIA Rail and to come to the conclusion that after eight years of decreasing transportation utilization by 20 per cent, now representing less than 5 per cent, or even just 3 per cent of the transportation market, that some reassessment is needed. This is simply the kind of arithmetic that no family nor any company in Canada could tolerate, and the Government had to face that and act on it. I think, Mr. Speaker, that has taken political courage and responsibility.

Mr. McGuire: Mr. Speaker, obviously the Hon. Member agrees with the Department of National Defence cut-backs in his own province and in the rest of the Atlantic area along with VIA Rail cut-backs and changes in UIC. I would like to ask him about the veterans and the people in his province who volunteered in the first and second world wars, especially from Prince Edward Island. After their sacrifices made during wartime, does he not think they deserve, or the province that they served deserve to have some share in the spending of defence dollars?

Mr. Bird: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe there is any Hon. Member in this House who relishes or receives with any sense of satisfaction the cuts in defence spending or VIA Rail or any other cuts. It would be nice to be able to afford to continue with everything we have on the go and then some, but as I stated earlier, the order of priority of our financial position is paramount. So cuts had to be made. As I said in my remarks, there is nothing in my heart, nor in the hearts of my constituents, but compassion and understanding for the citizens of Summerside and Portage la Prairie. I certainly do not like the defence cuts, but as the higher order of priority, I do support the Budget. I do support the direction of fiscal responsibility that we are pursuing. I do believe that we must do everything we can to assist those people in Summerside with the adjustment. I do not know what that will take, but I believe we will find a way to ease the pain as much as we possibly can.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Since there are no more questions or comments, the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) on debate.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, at the start of speeches it is customary to make some comments which are a little lighter than those that follow. I am especially concerned about doing that because recently I have been accused of having too much gravitas. I must say that I have been desperately looking for something which one could joke about with respect to the Budget. It is difficult, but I did come across a comment which sums up reasonably well my approach to this speech and to the Budget. It is from Will Rogers. He stated: "I don't make jokes. I just watch the Government and report the facts".

It becomes a source of immense amusement, I am afraid, to those of us who watch the Government and report the facts to our constituents and to the rest of the country, to see a Government which consistently does the same misguided things over and over again, and a Government, faced with the choice between something sensible and something foolish, inevitably and consistently opts for something foolish.

For instance, as we look at the Budget we see certain realities with respect to employment, realities which have marked the Government's approach right from its election in 1984. With its first economic statement, the Government effectively said to Canadians that it would not put the emphasis on what it promised during the 1984 election campaign, reaching full employment in this country. Instead it would put the emphasis on helping those wealthy corporations and rich individuals who provided the cash to get the Government into office. That approach persisted in 1985 in the first major Budget brought forward by the Government. That Budget took the approach of attacking old age pensioners, rather than attempting to do something about achieving real fairness.

Close to five years after the election of 1984 as we look at the realities with respect to employment, what do we see? For the first time in the past three years we see an increase in unemployment and, for the first time in the past three years, we see a decrease in full-time jobs for the prime labour force. The Government likes to refer to those who are 25 years of age and over. In fact, if we look at the entire workforce we see a decrease in employment, comparing March 1989 to April 1989, of 54,000 people whose jobs have been lost.

This is the same Government that promised that the Free Trade Agreement would bring us new jobs, extra jobs, and expansion in terms of employment. The Government now has to face the reality that the number of jobs is shrinking, employment is decreasing, and the consequences are appearing of those 30,000 job losses which can be traced directly to free trade. There have been shutdowns at Northern Telecom and shutdowns at Inglis in the constituency of my seat-mate, the Hon. Member from Spadina. There have been cut-backs in my constituency at places such as Arnold Manufacturing and Helin Tackle. In each case those cut-backs can be associated with jobs being shifted from this country to the United States.

That is precisely what we predicted would happen with the Free Trade Deal, and it is precisely what is happening as the Government leads us further and further down that economic dead-end.

It is not only us who have started to notice that the Government is very much on the wrong track. Even the Conference Board of Canada has stated that the Budget will take us into a recession. When even Conservative think-tanks like the Conference Board of Canada start to see that reality, unless we are blinded as the Minister of Finance seems to be, we have to recognize that severe damage is being done to our country and to the men and women who work and who want to work within our country.

All this is being justified in terms of the deficit. The great cut-backs that are occurring across the entire face of Government, and the massive tax increases being put into effect, are all being justified because, as the television ads tell us, 36 cents out of every dollar that the Government collects has to go to pay back debts.

Unfortunately, those advertisements do not tell us the other side of the coin. First, they do not tell us that the reason 36 cents of every dollar raised in taxes goes to pay back debts and to pay interest on the national debt is that the Government has permitted interest rates to go up to a level where they are three percentage points above those in the United States. That is an unprecedented differential in the modern economic history of our country. The ads do not tell us either that by running deficits this country has succeeded, as Clarence Barber of the University of Manitoba has estimated, in generating another $150 billion of extra growth each year.

I have collected some statistics that deal with what has happened to long-term debt of large corporations. Of course, it is the large corporations which are telling us that it is necessary to make these changes that are being put into effect in this country. When we examine the long-term debt of companies in Canada we see that the long-term debt in a period of four years has gone up by close to 50 per cent in most of the large corporations. Nobody worries about that. The reason they do not worry about it is because that debt is being used to generate growth within those corporations. Precisely the same thing is taking place in our country, by undertaking to keep people at work, by undertaking to see to it that development projects go forward, by seeing to it that there is expansion in the activities in terms of the government sector.

These are not my calculations. They are those of Clarence Barber, one of the most noted economists in this country. We have succeeded in generating $150 billion in extra growth and, consequently, the thousands of extra jobs that come with that growth. That is the other side of the coin. It is far more important than the simple statistics the Government throws out about 36 cents of every tax dollar going to pay interest on the public debt. It is far more important to recognize that by taking a creative approach, an expansionary approach, it is possible to create more growth, more tax revenue and to have fewer unemployed in this country. Consequently there are more benefits for Canadians.

I just returned from Summerside where the consequence of this Budget is especially clear. Last night I spoke to people in Summerside who are devastated by what has been done to their community by a government which is unthinking, uncaring and unaware of the human consequences of the unemployment which it will create if it proceeds to shut down the base in Summerside.

That base is very important, not just to the economic development of Prince Edward Island but to the economic growth and well-being of Atlantic Canada. That base is the place from which search and rescue operations take place. These are important to the fishing fleet in Atlantic Canada. It is also the place from which flights take off to ensure that our exclusive economic zone off the coast of Atlantic Canada is carefully monitored so that Canadians have the chance to benefit from the resources that exist there. This base is important, not to the military might of Canada but to the economic prospects on the Atlantic coast.

It is also crucially important to the economic development of Summerside and Prince Edward Island because 2.2 per cent of the jobs in Prince Edward Island are associated with the base in Summerside. Taking the base out of that community is like the Government deciding to take the auto industry out of my community of Windsor. It is as if the Government decided to take the shipping industry out of Saint John, New Brunswick.

I remind the Government that in the past when economic survival was threatened in communities like mine and Saint John, the Government saw its responsibility and acted. In the case of my community, $150 million in loan guarantees was provided to Chrysler Corporation to ensure that the auto industry in my community survived. In the case of Saint John, there were frigate contracts given to the shipyard there which saw to it that that city also survived.

Why should the Government be so heartless, so unthinking and so uncaring with respect to Summerside and Prince Edward Island? Is it because the Government, instead of thinking about the country, is thinking about the politics which saw four opposition Members elected in Prince Edward Island? Is it trying to punish the people of that part of Canada?

How can it possibly make sense to have our forces retreat from Canada at a time when the Government is spending $1.2 billion to keep troops in Europe? It does not make sense. The Budget does not make sense. The unemployment which it will create does not make sense. The unfairness and its tax measures do not make sense.

The result will be a great deal of anger, a great deal of passion, and a great deal of opposition to a Budget that does not serve the interests of the people of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. DeBlois: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member opposite. What bothers me a bit is the Opposition's apparent insensitivity to the huge national debt problem. The Hon. Member made some fun of government advertising to show Canadians the importance of this debt and the national effort asked of all Canadians, beginning with the richest. In this regard, I am somewhat disappointed that the Opposition has no constructive criticisms because we have a balanced Budget. We are spending no more than we take in. The deficit problem is due to the debts accumulated by former governments. So I am rather frustrated to hear a fellow Member of Parliament not offer positive criticism. I understand that the Budget has some tough aspects, but it seems to me that we are asking all Canadians to make an effort, especially those who are better off, and it seems to me that a Member of the New Democratic Party, which insists so much that wealthier individuals can contribute more, should be the first to encourage us in that direction!

[English]

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, it is not a question of whether or not the debt exists, for all we have to do is read the budget documents to see that it does. In fact, all we have to do is see that it is this Government which has doubled the national debt during its period in office from 1984 to 1988. The debt is there. The question is: What do we do about it? Do we cut and slash?

Let us say that one is the chief executive officer of a large corporation which has built up a considerable debt. Does that person decide that the way to deal with the debt is to shut down half the company's factories, throw one-half the people out of work and go to one-half the previous size of the company? Or, does that person decide instead that it is important for the company to expand, to offer more services, to be more efficient, and to make more revenue? As a consequence of that the person comes to a position where, out of the profits being made from the company, he can pay off the debt.

Campeau Corporation saw its debt blossom incredibly. If it took the philosophy that the Government takes then it would be back operating flower stands on Bank Street. The approach the Government seems to suggest is to cut things back, to tax people and to reduce consumer expenditure.

Back in 1984 when the Government first came to office I said that the cut-back approach which had started at that point in time would end up with us having a larger deficit by the end of the term of this Government than at the start. That is what has happened. The deficit now is $36 billion as compared to $29 billion, which is where it started.

The way one has to get things going is to get people back to work, get production in the country, achieve exports and create jobs which will give us in the future a rate of growth, a rate of investment and a rate of expansion that will provide us with a balanced Budget which will be fair to everybody since everybody will be working. That is something which is not happening under this Government.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I take it that the Hon. Member supports a balanced Budget. Will he tell us if that is the case?

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I should say that contrary to the Government I believe that it is important to reach a position in which we have full employment. I do not mean zero per cent unemployment but 3.5 per cent unemployment which means a straightforward shift from job to job. When we reach that position there is no question that we should have a balanced Budget.

In fact, it is quite possible, if the unemployment rate were to be pushed below those figures, that we might have to look seriously at running a surplus. I know it is heresy for the Government to think that we might possibly have a surplus, that we might have so much growth and so much potential that there is a budget surplus. However, these things used to happen in Canada before this Government took over.

Of course it makes sense at some stage to have a balanced Budget, but that is not the goal in itself. The goal is to see to it that full employment is reached in our economy, just as the goal within a corporation is to see to it that the capital structure is worked out in such a way as to expand the corporation in the most sensible way possible.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are over. On debate, the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. Larrivée).

Mr. Gaby Larrivée (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, this is the first time I have the opportunity to address this House and if you allow me, I would like to take a moment to thank most sincerely the people in my riding of Joliette for the confidence they placed in me last November.

I can assure them that I shall represent them with dignity and that I shall defend their interests with as much determination as my predecessor, the Hon. Roch La Salle, did for over twenty years.

My statement on the Budget tabled recently in the House will enable me to share with you the reactions of my constituents. First, all are aware of the huge debt we have to deal with and also agree that courageous but fair measures must be taken to solve the problem. They feel that the Budget meets these criteria.

In his May 8 editorial entitled "The Budget—A Good Step", Jean-Pierre Malo of the Joliette Journal reflects very well the comments that I was able to pick up in the past few days from my constituents.

He wrote: "Liberals and New Democrats may shout as much as they want, the federal Budget tabled urgently is a good step towards getting public finances back on an even keel." "We had been waiting with impatience and we were rewarded: the Conservative Government has decided to face the music and break the vicious circle of uncontrolled expenditures." He goes on to point out that the Minister of Finance slashed hard where Canadians have least to fear, National Defence. The elimination of 80,000 government jobs, the privatization of Air Canada. and the lighter VIA Rail burden all make sense.

"We do not believe that Canada is headed for a financial crisis with this kind of Budget", he said. "Quite the contrary. Minister Wilson intends to reduce interest rates thanks to his cut-backs which will dampen inflation. In short, the Minister said quite clearly that he is seeking to slow down the rate of expenditures and reduce their uncontrolled growth by a notch.

If the Minister is right, the national debt will melt like snow under the sun. Interests on the debt account for almost one third plus of forecast deficits." He concluded: "The future will tell whether inflation is here to stay or not and thus contribute to increase or decrease our debt. Be that as it may, Minister Wilson will have introduced better management in public finances."

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that we can bank on the competence of our Minister of Finance and that we can look to the future with optimism if we are prepared to accept short-term sacrifices.

The Budget is a turning point in Canada's future, underscoring as it does the fact that as a nation we have become aware of the threat to our way of life and that we have resolutely launched a counter-offensive. It is telling us that we have decided to act as a Government and as a nation to maintain our standard of living and our social programs, not only for ourselves but especially for our children. This threat is neither new nor unknown. Every Canadian knows how the debt can threaten his or her way of life. We all know what happens to someone who gets buried under debts, who stretches credit to its limit, who skips a few car payments just to make ends meet, and who has to borrow to pay off a loan, paying interest on interest and sinking ever deeper into debt. Every ones knows that people like that are in deep trouble.

Countries are like people. In Canada, we have a cumulative debt that is absolutely astronomical. Today, the debt is $320 billion or about $34,000 per Canadian family. Because of interest charges, the debt increases $80 million each day and every day. Last year, 31 cents of every tax dollar was spent to pay the interest on the debt. This year, it will be 35 cents.

We cannot go on like this. We are mortgaging our children's is future by leaving them this legacy. We are weakening our own capacity to cope with changes in the world economy, such as the recent upsurge in interest rates.

Unless we act, we will no longer be able to afford the major programs that make Canada a generous country. We must act now to be able to control our future.

The Progressive Conservative Government has been working on debt control since 1984. To do so, it had to introduce vigorous measures, manage the economy intelligently, and keep a close rein on public spending. We have succeeded in reducing the deficit by $9.5 billion and reducing the growth of the debt from 24 per cent per year to less than 10 per cent last year.

Despite that progress, the debt is continuing to grow more rapidly than our national income. That is why the Budget proposes drastic measures that will enable us to deal with the debt. We must now build for our future, not borrow from it.

Our task will not be easy. Some programs will be cut, and some taxes will be increased. Every Canadian who is able to do so will be asked to help shoulder the burden.

The Government will introduce the measures that are necessary to maintain a healthy and strong economy. By reducing the debt, by reducing the deficit and by making Government operations more efficient, we can help lower interest rates, keep Canadians at work and take care of those members of our society who need our help. To lower interest rates, we will continue to fight inflationary pressures on our economy. Rising inflation and interest rates have increased the burden of servicing the public debt. The best way to bring interest rates down and keep them at manageable levels is to take the measures that are necessary to create a healthier economy and put our finances in order. To achieve this, we have made some difficult choices. In fact, that is why we were elected. We have worked to ensure that the total package of measures is balanced, reflecting regional circumstances and placing the greater burden on those who are better able to carry it.

As far as spending is concerned, the work done by the Expenditure Review Committee of Cabinet is reflected in major reductions in government spending that will total about $2.5 billion this year. These measures are in addition to the action we have taken during the past four years to reduce program spending which, in relation to the economy, has declined from 19.5 per cent when we came to power to 16 per cent this year and will fall to 15 per cent by 1993–94.

The reduction in defence expenditures is a major component of that effort. The cancellation or postponement of certain staffing projects, the closing or scaling down of certain Canadian Forces bases and the decision not to proceed with the purchase of nuclear submarines will allow for a $2.7 billion saving over the next five years. However, overall defence expenditures will grow. And this Progressive Conservative Government is more than ever committed to defending our sovereignty and security.

The Government also reassessed its external aid program. Our contribution to public development assistance is one of the most generous in the industrialized world, and it will remain so. The one- year reduction of the aid, and the slowing down of its growth rate will allow for some $1.8 billion deficit reductions over the next five years.

The Government also will review subsidies to VIA Rail, with a view to making substantial cuts. We simply cannot afford to spend that much money on a passenger rail service used by so few people. The Government will examine various options, including rate increases, service reductions except in remote areas, and the closing down, sale or transfer of major components of the system.

The Government also will reduce the growth of transfers to provincial Governments. Transfers under established program financing this year total $34 billion and will continue to grow from year to year at least at the rate of inflation. On the other hand, transfer payments to low-income provinces will remain unchanged. This Government remains committed to reaching the goals of our national child care strategy. Tax assistance measures to some 1.4 million families of presschool age or children with special needs already are in place, as well as a special fund to promote new initiatives to improve child care services. However, because of the financial situation, the Government has decided not to go ahead for the time being with the third prong of its strategy to accelerate the creation of extra child care spaces. It will continue however sharing the cost of provincial child care services under the Canada Assistance Plan, and will continue however sharing the cost of provincial child care services under the Canada Assistance Plan, and will take any action needed during its term to reach its child care goals.

A number of other cuts were announced in the Budget. They deal with the machinery of state, corporate subsidies and payments to Crown corporations. Altogether, these reductions, once implemented, will contribute some $2.5 billion to our debt control program. Finally, our expenditure review committee will continue to sit to make sure that the Government keeps its expenditures well under control.

Our careful management of Government resources, which are your resources, will also apply to other sectors. Regional development expenditures will remain a Government priority. In fact, they will be increased by as much as 35 per cent over the next five years compared to the past five years. The increase, however, will vary from one year to the next, in order to make possible long-term sustainable development financing.

Moreover, the Government will continue its privatization program by selling its remaining interest in Air Canada, by selling two former divisions of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and by reviewing more actively the case of some corporations which could be turned over to the private sector.

[English]

Our earlier efforts to make Canada Post self-sufficient have succeeded. Not only did it make a profit last year, it will start paying dividends to the Government, and the scheduled two-cent increase next January in the price of a first-class stamp will be reduced to one cent. These efforts to make sure tax dollars are spent wisely would not be complete unless transfers to individuals were also examined. Canada's social safety net is important to all of us. It must be preserved and made secure for now and the future. This means that the priority purpose of programs like Old Age Security and family allowance must be to assist lower and middle income Canadians, not subsidize those with higher incomes. This is why the Budget proposed to use a tax system to recover these payments from high income taxpayers. Those with individual net incomes greater than $50,000 will repay these benefits at the rate of 15 per cent. This measure will only affect about four per cent of those who receive old age pensions and about 14 per cent of those who receive the family allowance, and it will be phased in over three years.

Whoever is eligible will continue to receive a cheque. With this payback mechanism, the needy will keep all their benefits, while the affluent will reimburse part of them depending upon their income.

On the other hand, this Budget will increase some taxes. High income taxpayers will help correct the imbalance between the Government's revenues and its expenditures, so that the present generation will finance today's programs and help bring the debt under control. Altogether, these measures will make it possible for total revenues to reach levels attained prior to the 1970's when Finance Minister John Turner lost control of the deficit.

The revenue increases provided for in the Budget will help more than expenditure reductions bring the debt under control. Expenditure restraints by themselves could not lessen a debt threat which is much too important and serious. The new tax measures are designed to get more out of affluent taxpayers who have the means to pay more.

A new tax will be levied on major corporations in Canada with capital in excess of $10 million. This new tax will ensure that all large corporations will pay at least a minimum tax every year. This new tax will not apply to small-and-medium-sized businesses, but an amendment to the corporate income surtax will increase their tax rate to 12.8 per cent. These two measures will increase revenues from corporate tax by more than 7 per cent, which will represent nearly one billion over the first year.

Taxes and duties on cigarettes will be increased by $4 a carton, with proportional increases on other tobacco products, as suggested by a number of health organizations. The excise tax on gasoline will be increased by 1c. a litre, and then by another cent in January 1990.

[English]

On the personal tax side, the existing surtax will be increased by two percentage points starting July 1. An additional three per cent surtax will be applied to high income taxpayers with incomes in excess of $70,000. These measures ask those who can to contribute more.

They will increase personal income tax revenues by 2.3 per cent or about $1.2 billion in the first full year.

Federal sales tax rates will be increased in advance of sales tax reform. The general rate will rise 1.5 per cent and the rate in telecommunications, construction materials, alcohol and tobacco by 1 per cent. The increase for construction materials will not go into effect until January 1990.

The refundable sales tax credit for adults and children will be doubled to protect low-income Canadians. The income threshold will also be raised to $18,000. That means a single person earning less than $18,000 will get a $140 credit next year, while a family of four will get a $420 credit. That measure will be of substantial benefit to the most needy.

Another facet of our strategy to control the debt concerns the Unemployment Insurance Program. Changes announced recently, which will enhance the Program, increase training activities and improve equity, as well as the incentive provisions are designed to allow a reallocation of resources within the Program. At the same time, we will introduce changes to ensure that the financing of the Program supports our efforts to control the debt. Starting in 1990, the Unemployment Insurance Program will be totally financed by premiums paid by employers and employees. But the Government will continue to contribute to the unemployment insurance account if it runs a deficit in difficult economic times. The contribution rate will be set at $2.25 per $100 of insurable earnings for the next three years, higher than this year's rate but lower than those of the last four years.

Taken together, these measures represent over $5 billion this year and $9 billion next year. This year, they will compensate almost entirely for the rise in interest rates and maintain the deficit at $30.5 billion. Next year, the size of the debt in relation to the economy will stabilize and the deficit will slide to $28 billion. We will take up the challenge and, by following the financial strategy in the Budget, we will halve the deficit in five years.

A fundamental element of that strategy is the federal sales tax reform. A new tax on goods and services will replace the present system on January 1, 1991. Its base will be wider and its implementation rate will be set at 9 per cent.

Reforming the federal sales tax has been discussed for a long time. The present tax is hidden, unfair and harmful to our economy. Although it has not been possible for the time being to implement a joint federal-provincial reform of the system, the importance of reform persuaded the federal Government to act.

At 9 per cent, the new tax will generate enough revenue to replace the present federal sales tax, reduce income tax for average-income households and finance new refundable sales tax credits. This credit will be paid four times a year, even before the new sales tax takes effect, and will leave families earning less than $30,000 better off after sales tax reform.

The expenditure reductions and tax increases announced today and the sales tax reform to take effect in 1991 enable us to attack the debt problem with determination. The challenge is to stay the course year after year until the problem is eliminated. The Budget puts us on the right track by improving the nation's ability to bear its debt burden and by strengthening our ability to preserve essential social and cultural programs as well as other important public services.

That is why the Budget is intended to guarantee the future and not to mortgage it. That is why the Budget is tackling head-on a major obstacle that is keeping us from a better future: the growing debt problem. The Budget is meant to overcome this obstacle. The measures it contains are rigorous, because the challenge facing us demands it.

Mr. Assad: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss if I did not commend the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. Larrivée) for his maiden speech. However a question popped into my mind during his speech. The Hon. Member mentioned the transfer payments to other provinces, so I would refer him to the remarks made yesterday by Québec Premier Bourassa who was in our region and said he is strongly opposed to the tax increases announced by the Government. He expressed the hope that the other provinces, particularly Ontario, will form a common front with Québec to argue against the new sales tax, the value added tax if you will. I believe the Québec Premier was an ardent supporter of the Hon. Member's political formation during the last election campaign, and every time he spoke he was absolutely right. Does my Hon. colleague opposite me think he may be right again this time?

Mr. Larrivée: Mr. Speaker, first I want to say to my colleague that Québec Premier Bourassa agreed with us during the election campaign because what we advocated at the time was going to benefit all Canadians, and Quebecers in particular.

I would suggest that any provincial Premier who feels that an additional tax might strike his province can be expected to react strongly. We did not expect Premier Bourassa to get in touch with us to express his thanks.

However, the way I interpret the remarks of Mr. Bourassa does not lead me to conclude that he is categorically opposed to the federal tax advocated by the Minister of Finance. I think he was somewhat more flexible and that he thought the discussions with the federal Government should continue.

I made a comment along that line and I believe One thing for sure is that I agree with my colleague: Mr. Bourassa did not applaud and was not overwhelmed when he heard about the new measure the federal Government intends to implement.

[English]

Mr. Comuzzi: Mr. Speaker, I join with my colleague in congratulating the Hon. Member for Joliette (Mr. Larrivée) on his first speech in the House. However, I have a question with respect to the earlier part of his address. He stated that the deficit is rising by $80 million each day, that 35 cents out of every dollar collected must go to pay the interests costs, that we, and I assume the "we" he refers to is the Government, cannot carry on this way to deal with the deficit, and as a result of the deficit the debt. I agree. We on this side of the House cannot carry on this way nor can Canadians carry on with that type of Budget.

The Hon. Member went on to explain in capsule form all the remedies the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) brought forward in his Budget with all the tax increases and cuts. However, there is still a greater deficit today than there was last year, a deficit projected at $30.5 billion. We cannot carry on this way. How does the Hon. Member anticipate coming up with a debt of $30.5 billion while still reducing the deficit? There is something here that I do not understand. We cannot keep raising the deficit while dealing with the debt. Perhaps the Hon. Member could comment on that.

Mr. Larrivée: Mr. Speaker, I have some difficulty understanding the Hon. Member's question. It is easy to understand that when we have the kind of debt load we now have, we must both reduce our expenditures and get extra taxes. Nothing could be simpler.

There is one very important fact, which I think has been repeated a number of times in this House and the Hon. Member from the Socialist Party who left earlier made no reference to it. We not only have a debt problem but an inflation one as well. We have to act on two levels. Certainly if we had no inflation problem interest rates would not have gone up as high as they did, and the deficit would have been as forecasted by the Minister of Finance, around $25 billion. Unfortunately, because of inflation, higher interest rates have led to an extra $6 billion in interests costs.

Since we have to deal on both planes, surely, with the proposals put forward by the Minister of Finance, this might slow down the economy to some extent. By slowing down the economy somewhat, inflation will come down, which in turn will lead to lower interest rates. This is the strategy, the plan followed by the Minister of Finance to reduce the interest load on the national debt.

[English]

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Hon. Member could expand a bit on his statement that the problem is not necessarily the debt but is inflation and that this is the reason the Government is running up such big deficits. If the Government is serious about the problem of inflation, why did it not choose to return to a system of taxation in which the corporate sector is taxed at approximately the same rate as the private sector? That situation obtained in the 1950s when about 75 per cent of Government revenues were taken from income taxes on corporations and private citizens and the tax load was balanced approximately 50:50. Since that time, we have moved far from that situation. Had that situation persisted, instead of having a deficit this year of $30.5 billion, according to the Budget, we would instead have a surplus of $18.5 billion.

It seems to me that when corporations are given more of a free ride on the tax side, they have used their extra money to create the inflation that the Hon. Member says the Government is trying to fight. How else can we analyse a situation in which one corporation with too much money, because we have not taxed it, decides to buy out its nearest neighbour and bids the stocks up to three, four and five times the realistic price? Is that not inflation? Does that not create inflation? I could go on to point out numerous other examples of how the current tax policy creates inflation by permitting one group, in this case rich citizens and the corporate sector, to bid too much for goods and services, something which is inflationary.

I wonder why the Government did not choose to begin using a more equitable tax system so that I, as a small businessman who has paid 30 per cent on my tax earnings and invest my 70 cent dollar in a new business, will not face unnecessary competition from a big multi-national that has not paid any taxes even though it has been very profitable and is sitting there with 100-cent dollars. A 70-cent dollar just cannot compete with a 100-cent dollar. It is not fair. It ends up skewing the business climate as well as being inflationary. I wonder if the Hon. Member could tell us why the Government has refused for these many years to shift back to a more equitable taxation system that would in fact fight that inflation.

Mr. Larrivée: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite asked why the Government dit not years ago change its method for taxing corporations. I must tell him right now that I have only been here for six months, so I am hardly in a position to know why previous Governments did not make that change. New Democratic speeches, Mr. Speaker, always try to make the point that we could solve all our problems if we taxed industry, the multinational corporations, while spending more. There is something I find a little amazing in this debate. Everyone is aware that we have a difficult debt to manage at $320 billion, everyone knows. Everyone recognizes we have a debt, so everyone must realize it. But since we came back here in the beginning of April, I have not witnessed a single instance where either the Liberal Opposition or the New Democratic Opposition did not blame the Government for not putting enough money into programs. They never have enough. Even where programs were left untouched, there is never enough. Every single day they ask that we put back millions and billions of dollars, that we hire more staff. They suggest there is not enough for the environment. They suggest there is not enough for transport. Nowhere is there enough, although we have that $320 billion debt. Not being an economist, I cannot easily explain why industry is not taxed at par with individuals. But one thing is sure, the Budget that just came down ensures that industry, the multinational corporations pay a minimum tax.

This might not be high enough Mr. Speaker, but it is a beginning, and if the Hon. New Democratic Member recognized this so much the better. But it is not enough. On the one side those taxes are not enough, and on the other they want to have more. Perhaps I would have a question for the Member, where would we end up with all he has to propose?

Mr. Gilles Rocheleau (Hull—Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to all Canadians and especially to my constituents in the riding of Hull—Aylmer, which is located in the National Capital region. Mr. Speaker, only a few days ago the Conservative Government brought down its Budget, or rather leaked its Budget the day before, as a diversion, since it is a Budget that was very difficult to explain, and Government preferred to have questions about the leak itself instead of about the real reasons behind the new taxes and cuts in program spending we have seen.

Mr. Speaker, the Official Opposition has some important questions. Before November 21, Canada was in good shape. Not a cloud on the horizon And now, hardly six months later, we have total disaster. We have the worst debt and the worst deficit Canada has ever had, and we are now seeing major cutbacks in social programs, although the Government promised Canadians before the election on November 21 there would be no cuts. Before November 21, Canadians were deceived by this Government's promises, and today we have to pay the consequences.

I will comment very briefly on free trade. In my riding, especially in the Municipality of Aylmer, Northern Telecom is scheduled to close down in a few months: 624 jobs.

There have been several mergers recently. For instance, E.B. Eddy in Hull was acquired by Scott Paper, and a number of foremen lost their jobs. The Gillette plant closed in Montreal. And all because of free trade.

Mr. Speaker, is there any indication that free trade has done anything for Canada except cutting employment? No Mr. Speaker.

About unemployment insurance. We have every reason to talk about it, because the Government just made major cuts in this important program, after signing the Free Trade Agreement without making any provisions for an adjustment program or for retraining. Today, the Government transfers the funding of the Unemployment Insurance Program to employers and employees.

A cut in Government spending worth $2.9 billion means the same amount in additional expenditures for Canadian citizens and for Canadian companies.

And what about old age security pensions? Last week, we were told that old age security pensions for rich people would have to be cut. Mr. Speaker, I think you will agree that old age security was a universal program that applied to all Canadians, whatever their income or lack of it. And when a Government like this one starts cutting old age security at the top, next year or the year after we can expect the Government to lower the ceiling, and finally, we will have old age security pensions as a substitute for welfare, payable only to people living at the poverty line.

Mr. Speaker, we could also talk about a program in Québec which the Government was expected to support, and I am referring to day care. In July 1988, a few months before the election, the Minister of Health announced that $1 billion or a thousand million more would be earmarked for day care. We are told the Budget provides for a $4 billion cut in funding. Is this Government conservative or progressive? Is this a Government that helps Canadian families? No, Mr. Speaker, it is not.

Yesterday Premier Bourassa was just across the river in the Ottawa Valley, in Hull to be exact, criticizing the federal government for forcing Québec and the other provinces to make up for its budget cuts in the field of education.

All these cuts, Mr. Speaker, let alone the tax increases— And what about the latest scheme of this government, the value-added tax, or as my colleague called it a while ago, the added sales tax, which was to be negotiated between the provinces and the federal government. The Conservative government promised before the election not to impose another sales tax on Canadians without reaching an agreement with the provinces so as to avoid taking up a tax field which is presently theirs.

Mr. Speaker, it is shameful and ludicrous for the government to present such a budget to Canadians. I personally deplore the fact that, just before the election, the government fooled and betrayed the Canadian people by saying everything was going well while, today, we get just about the worst budget Canada has had in a long time.

Mr. Speaker, how can we cope with free trade with the Americans when our interest rates are 3 percentage points higher than theirs. How can we hope to reduce inflation? What can we do when the government itself and the minister of Finance control the Bank of Canada which is responsible for these high interest rates? How can we believe in the intellectual honesty of this government when we have a deficit of 29 billion dollars this year which, according to the budget, will increase to 30.5 billion next year? Is that good management? When the government came to power in 1984, the national debt reached 177 billion and today, in 1989, it is 330 billion. Is that good management? We are plunging into debt generations and generations to come and that is what is absurd in the budget presented by the Conservative government.

But there is another point even more important to be made, Mr. Speaker, a point which particularly affects the National Capital Region. And I want to try and explain to the House the frustration shared not only on the Quebec side of the Ottawa Valley but also in Ontario, throughout the National Capital Region and by all Canadians, over the awarding of federal contracts.

We all know, Mr. Speaker, how important it is for a Government to maintain its integrity and openness. Probity is the most sacred attribute a government can have, and God knows what the present Government has put us through during the last four years.

Mr. Speaker, last December, Transport Canada and the federal Government were calling for tenders. Twenty-one tenders were sent to Public Works. Five were selected, Mr. Speaker, because they met the criteria specified by Public Works. We followed the whole debate, Mr. Speaker, because we thought the government was showing us its openness. But nowadays, we see how things have changed, especially when we read in the Budget introduced by the Minister of Finance, on page 26, a completely false statement which I will now read to you, Mr. Speaker. It says that the total capital cost of this Transport Canada Building is estimated to be in the order of $200 million, that the call for tenders for this new facility will be terminated as part of the government's overall restraint effort, and that is not true. That has nothing to do with any type of investment or capital cost. It is a twenty-year lease which was a part of the call for tenders.

Is this the result of a sudden change in the way Government runs its business? Is this how things will be from now on, the Government will call for tenders just to throw them in the waste basket and restart negotiations with people they did not want to deal with anymore? And I am talking here about Campeau Corporation whose lease is expiring in 1991 and to whom the Government was paying $350 a square meter, when the lowest bids from a Quebec firm and an Ontario firm in the Ottawa Valley varied between $200 and $250 a square meter. It that the savings the federal government wants to make? That's not true.

More than that, Mr. Speaker, the federal Government, through the Public Works Department, will negotiate a new lease with Campeau for over $300 a square metre, and will have to pay for renovations to this building that is in disrepair, to strip it of asbestos and to replace the heating system. Yet, Mr. Speaker, here is what is said in Treasury Board Order 774012 dated April 27, 1981, of which the English version I will quote is much more precise:

[English]

It states: "The entry into new or renewal leases should be avoided until any potentially hazardous condition has been corrected".

In this case, Mr. Speaker, Transport Canada's employees will be working in unsafe conditions because they will remain at work while the asbestos is removed from the building. That is contrary to a 1981 Treasury Board Order, contrary to an important regulation protecting the health of men and women who work for Transport Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I ask the Government to examine their conscience and reconsider the negotiation of a contract at the present location while bids submitted were much cheaper. The situation is unacceptable, Mr. Speaker, it is indefensible. Indeed, Québec Premier Bourassa said yesterday in Hull that it was a great injustice to have renegotiated a lease and dealt with the Campeau firm even before the Budget was tabled in this House. This decision has deceived and wronged contractors who had submitted bids in good faith, each spent hundreds of thousands of dollars to prepare and present those bids to the federal Government, to the Department of Public Works. The results of all those efforts have simply been thrown to the garbage.

Is this how tenders will be invited in the future, Mr. Speaker? Is it how openly the federal Government intends to operate? Is this the honesty and integrity the Canadian people can expect from this Government? Certainly not, Mr. Speaker, and certainly not for the future. If this is the way the Government intends to do things in the future, it is totally unacceptable, it is completely absurd, and it is contrary to all normal procedures and acceptable decency, Mr. Speaker. I would even say that the civil servants who work for Transport Canada are insulted by the decision of the Government to force them to stay in that building while they do some repairs to remove the asbestos. This will be done over the next five years, Mr. Speaker, while the employees remain onsite, although we know that asbestos is definitely hazardous to public health. We know that asbestos is carcinogenic and a few steps from here, we will let our employees work in unsafe conditions.

Mr. Speaker, it is totally unacceptable. Again I refer to a story published in today's Le Droit where it could be read that this Transport Canada case is beginning to smell bad. This case is smelling very bad indeed, Mr. Speaker. The tender process followed in this case is a shameless scandal. We, in the Official Opposition, cannot accept that this Government revert to the ways of the old days, the ways of Duplessis, and it is not because we have the little guy from Baie-Comeau at the head of the government that we have to revert to unacceptable and aberrant ways. All the more so since it has been recognized by the Trudeau government in 1969, in the legislation on the National Capital Region, that every building project of the federal Government in the National Capital Region should be examined so as to provide a good balance between both sides of the river.

• (1650)

And we wish, Mr. Speaker, that this Government would live up to former policies which have never been formally changed. And in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I hope that the Goverment will improve somehow a situation which it has created itself and I hope also that in the next few days, it will revert to the bidding process as it has been requested, and thus show some respect for contractors who made the bids as well as for the Canadian population as a whole and mostly for the population living in the National Capital Region.

Mr. Assad: Mr. Speaker, first I want to thank my colleague the Member for Hull—Aylmer for a very well-thought and accurate statement. During the Hon. Member's speech, I noticed some reaction. When he spoke of Free Trade, the Secretary of State for External Affairs reacted as usual. If I may, Mr. Speaker, I will say it in English.

[English]

Every time we talk about free trade we see a reaction by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). I will quote from Shakespeare: "Methinks you protest too much".

An Hon. Member: That was a lady.

[Translation]

Mr. Assad: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask you—

[English]

Take it for what it is worth. You know what I mean.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member mentioned the Transport Canada-Hull case and I would ask my colleague if he agrees to say that Conservative Members who represent Québec in this Chamber have not done their job. They had the opportunity to gain recognition for Québec through a process recognized as legitimate everywhere and they have not uttered a single word. Even the Québec Premier spoke of a grave injustice. Do we hear anything from Québec Hon. Members sitting here? Not a word! I ask the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer if he agrees to blame the Conservative Hon. Members who represent Québec in this chamber. They are asked to make Québec's voice heard and they do nothing. Here is a golden opportunity for them to show that they represent the whole of the province and look what happened in the Hull region, on the Québec side of the Outaouais: a normal process and not a word from them when everybody agrees it is a shameful thing. And the Conservative Members do not utter a single word! Shame on you! I would like the Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer to comment on that and I ask that a charge be made against you all. You are not doing your job! And neither is he!

Mr. Rocheleau: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister of Energy, Mines and Ressources to kindly stop chattering.

Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Gatineau—La Lièvre (Mr. Assad) is absolutely right. We sat together in the National Assembly for several years as members of the Bourassa government and such a thing would never have been tolerated. I was Minister of Supply and Services and responsible for the Société immobilière du Québec, and I would have been hung in Québec City if I have done something like that.

The 63 Conservative Members from Québec did not do their homework. None of the Conservative Members did their homework. All of them learned about the budget at the same time we did on television and they still have not read it. And it shows! Let me put the facts straight. Twenty-one major Canadian promoters presented in good faith submissions to Public Works Canada. It is a fact, Mr. Speaker. Several officers from Public Works Canada repeatedly stated to the media and in public that this contract would be awarded.

Could it be that these civil servants were fooled by their boss, the Minister of Public Works, by the Minister of Finance, by the President of the Treasury Board, by the Prime Minister of Canada?

Mr. Speaker, could we ask ourselves that question? Could we ask that question to the public servants? The agreement between Campeau and the Prime Minister will cost enormous sums of money to the taxpayers for removing the asbestos and improving the heating and ventilation system. These costs will be in the neighbourhood of 25 to 30 million dollars, and the federal government will pay half just to please Campeau!

That reminds me that on June 27 1978, the present Minister of Public Works, who was then the Member for Central-Nova, was wondering for how long they would have to go on wasting taxpayers' money to please Mr. Campeau? I am talking about the present Minister of Public Works and he is the one responsible, Mr. Speaker.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, I endorse completely the comments made by my colleague from Gatineau because he is right and he is fighting for a principle, the fundamental principle of procurement by public tender. I say to the people in power this: never forget integrity and honesty. You got a taste of it last time and the same thing will happen this time.

Mr. Leblanc: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Gatineau spoke at length, in the first part of his speech, about free trade. I just want to remind him he was about the only member in the Bourassa government in Quebec who was against free trade. I find that hard to understand! Anyway, I think he was forced to resign and to settle here, near Ottawa, either to save some money, since travelling is less expensive this way, or because Mr. Bourassa simply asked him to resign as he was against free trade.

So, I want to ask him this: Why wasn't he able, when he was a Minister in Quebec, to settle the problem of Highway 50, north of the St. Lawrence River? That is another thing in which he failed.

I don't know what issues the Hon. Member will be able to fight if he continues to make grand speeches based on false statements. It was just grandstanding today, because all his statements were unfounded. Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, this kind of statements does harm to the status of the House of Commons.

An Hon. Member: It lowers our standards.

Mr. Leblanc: It undermines the ability of our colleagues.

Mr. Speaker, I would like the Hon. Member to answer two small questions and also to explain why, when he was in office, they could not stop the annual deficit from increasing every year and why they left us the country in such an appealing state.

Mr. Speaker, I would like some answers to my questions.

Mr. Rocheleau: Mr. Speaker, I never thought that the Hon. Member for Longueuil who lives next door to the Space Agency would have raised in the House today. Just the same, I should like to reply to some of his questions.

As far as Highway 50 is concerned, I can tell my Hon. friend that the Quebec Government has accepted to assume the costs of its construction provided the Federal Government pays it share. And the Canadian Minister of Transport has so far refused to include this in the Federal-Provincial Agreements.

I dare hope that this Government will have the decency to provide the funds necessary for the development of the Ottawa Valley on the Quebec side and make it possible for the people living in the Ottawa area to travel to Montreal on a Quebec highway.

As far as free trade is concerned, Mr. Speaker, I can tell the Hon. Member that the Quebec Government I was part of—that I would fully support free trade provided the Federal Government first agreed to Quebec's demands, something it has not done yet. You have no re-training programs, which was an essential condition of the Bourassa Government, Mr. Speaker. We all know that the Bourassa Government went over that and supported this Tory Government and, six months later, Mr. Bourassa came to tell you that you had not done your homework and that you lacked political conscience. That is what he came here to tell you on the other side. And I went to listen to my former boss, and the Hon. Member for Longueuil should not worry, for we are still very good friends.

I hope this is enough, because I could deal with several other issues, Mr. Speaker. Over the next few years, I know I will have a great many opportunities to set him straight.

[English]

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, since the Hon. Member from Gatineau quoted from Shakespeare so easily I thought I would give him one that befits what he said. It is from Henry VIII, Act III: "His promises were as he was then, mighty, but his performance as he is now, nothing".

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure and a privilege for me to participate in the Budget debate. I would like to begin with a review of the actions of the Government and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) over the past four and a half years, since the fall of 1984.

The Economic Statement of November 1984, put forward by the Minister of Finance, talked in terms of four pillars or foundations of the program of the Government. Those four pillars were economic renewal, national reconciliation, social justice and constructive internationalism.

The key to everything, of course, was economic renewal. In keeping with the goal and objective of responsible deficit reduction announced by the Minister back in November of 1984, great strides have been made toward economic renewal. That is to say, putting Canadians back to work and dealing with the economic mess that was left to the Government back in the fall of 1984.

At that time you will recall, Mr. Speaker, unemployment was in the area of 12.8 per cent. There was a pitiful job-creation record of the previous three or four years. The national debt was approaching $200 billion. In fact, by the end of the 1984-85 government fiscal year on March 31, 1985, the accumulated national debt was in fact $200 billion.

The tragedy is that so much of that national debt was caused by program over-expenditures. It was not a case of having to meet interest payments on past debt, as is the case today. Back then it related almost entirely to program over-expenditures.

In the three years leading up to our Government taking over, that is 1982-83, 1983-84 and 1984-85, program over-expenditures increased dramatically each year.

Program over-expenditures in 1982-83 were $11 billion. That is to say, the Government of the day spent $11 billion on day-to-day programs of Government, excluding interest on any past debt. In 1983-84, the over-expenditure on a current account basis was $14 billion. By 1984-85, the last fiscal year of that previous administration, it reached an incredible $16 billion. That is to say nothing of paying interest on the past debt. We are talking here about plain and simple overspending, putting out more in government programs than there was revenue to sustain those programs.

I am going to circulate a chart to Members of the House containing these figures because I think they are very important and instructive. If one looks at the succeeding Budgets and the fiscal performance during the years the current Minister of Finance has been in charge, one will see a dramatic shift in the composition of the annual deficit. That first year, 1985-86, the program over-expenditure aspect was down to $9 billion. In 1986-87, it was down to $4 billion. In 1987-88, there was more revenue taken in by Government than spent on the day-to-day programs. In 1988-89, the year just ended, there was in fact a $4 billion surplus in terms of excess revenue over program expenditures.

Unfortunately, there has been a steady growth in the amount of money that is required to pay interest on the national debt, which has been accumulating. We have seen the interest charges on that national debt increase steadily during the last number of years from $17 billion in 1982-83, to $22 billion in 1984-85, to $26 billion in 1986-87 and up to $33 billion this year. That is of course the root cause of the problem.

The steps that have been taken by the Government have been these: the first step was to reduce the program over-expenditures which characterized the previous administration, the previous 10 or 12 years. That is to say, to reduce those program over-expenditures and get Government back to break-even on its everyday operations.

Once the Minister of Finance was able to accomplish that, that is, to take in enough tax revenues to pay for the day-to-day programs of Government, the next step was to go to work on the interest burden. At this point in time the entire annual deficit consists of interest which we have to pay on the unfortunate accumulation of past deficits—the national debt, as we call it.

Now the objective is to try to bring down that annual deficit. The only way that can be achieved is by program expenditure reductions and by tax increases. There is no magic way that we know of or have heard of from Members opposite. It is not something that can be wished away. We have a debt and we have to confront it and deal with it.

Members opposite are now suggesting that the national debt has doubled during the tenure of this Government. The fact is that from April 1, 1985, until the end of March this year, the national debt in fact increased from approximately $200 billion to $320 billion. That is an increase of 60 per cent, unfortunately. It is fair to say that it will have doubled by 1992. However, the fact is that all of that increase, the entire doubling, will consist of interest that has accumulated on the past debt that this Government inherited at the end of that 1984-85 fiscal year.

Mr. Nicholson: The Trudeau legacy.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): The Trudeau legacy, as my hon. colleague points out.

Mr. Nicholson: Cheered on by the NDP.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): I believe that the moon is rising opposite, Mr. Speaker. Hon. Members are inspired by it.

The fact is that the national debt has increased over the last four years by approximately $120 billion. The chart that I will circulate to my hon. doubters opposite will indicate that all but $8 billion of that represents interest that this Government has had to find to pay interest on that past debt. Program over-expenditures in four years amount to $8 billion in total.

This, I suggest, is a solid record of achievement. However, it is still not good enough because the debt situation has reached the point where it now feeds on itself. It is at a point where interest on interest causes the debt to increase even as the Government increases taxes and reduces program expenditures. In spite of those serious measures, the debt continues to increase. Because of interest charges on the debt—the evidence of that debt is Canada Savings Bonds, Treasury Bills and Government of Canada securities—the interest charges on those securities amount to something in the order of $3 million per hour. That is the rate at which the national debt is growing. It requires $80 million a day to service that debt—over $2 billion each month.

This in effect places the country on a treadmill. Every effort that is made to increase revenue and to produce additional government revenues go merely to paying interest on that growing debt. Roughly 35 cents out of every dollar of government revenue that is raised go to interest. Next year without these measures it will go to 39 cents and to 43 cents, and on and on it will go.

Clearly serious steps have to be taken to deal with the debt, the deficit, and the interest problem. It has to be done because if serious steps are not taken we will soon reach the point where all government revenue has to go to pay interest on the national debt. There will be no moneys left over for the day-to-day programs of government, let alone the kind of social programs which Canadians have come to enjoy and which I think make Canada one of the unique countries among those in the world.

Much has been done over the past four years. I would like to cite some of the measures that have been put forward by this Government in achieving the change in the composition of the deficit from program over expenditure to straightforward deficit reduction and the meeting of interest.

The Government downsized the bureaucracy. Something in the order of 12,000 Public Service jobs have been eliminated. Now that was not easy, because every step of the way this Government was opposed by Members opposite. We were opposed by organized labour. The Canadian Labour Congress in fact declared war on the Government and spent over $2 million trying to unseat it during the past campaign. That is the price a Government pays for taking action which is necessary in order to deal with a problem.

The Government promised to get rid of Crown corporations that were serving no useful public purpose. There is no reason particularly why Governments should be in the business of manufacturing aircraft so the Government privatized Canadair and de Havilland. Again there was great debate in the House and predictions of doom and gloom, in spite of the fact that something in the order of $2 billion of taxpayers' money had already been thrown down the drain in subsidizing those enterprises. The fact is that they were sold to the private sector, and contrary to the predictions of loss of employment which we heard from Members opposite, both these enterprises are doing better than ever before and employing more and more Canadians.

We got rid of some programs which in the minds of many were questionable. Katimavik is one which comes to mind. It provoked a good long hunger strike in the halls opposite, but it was really a program of dubious value.

We have instituted tax increases along the way. We have taken measures to enhance trade relationships, both with the United States and with every other country in the world, with a view to trying to create jobs for our young people. We have encouraged the private sector through the institution of the lifetime capital gains exemption for the shares of small business. The Canadian Organization of Small Business representing some 750,000 small businesses, the entrepreneurs, the lifeblood of this country, has said that this measure is the single most important incentive toward risk taking and entrepreneurship.

At this point I think it is important to salute the small business community. On its own initiative it took advantage of the conditions the Government tried to put forth in which they could flourish. The small business sector has managed to generate an unprecedented number of jobs. The fact is that among all industrialized countries of the world over the past four years the Canadian job creation record is No. 1. The reason for that is the private sector.

As a result, at this point in time there are 1,500,000 more Canadians working today than was the case just four and a half years ago. Happily they are not working for government. They are not on some short-term "paint the fence" type of make work program that characterized the previous administration. These for the most part are full-time rewarding jobs for Canadians. These Canadians are now contributing tax revenue to the Government. They are not taking out for unemployment insurance and social assistance so we benefit in two ways.

While much has been accomplished, much more needs to be done. The progress that we have made over the past four years is at risk, giving to growing inflation at home and elsewhere. We require responsible budgetary measures to restrain inflation long term and to help keep interest rates down.

The Budget put forward recently reflects a difficult situation. It takes serious steps, and it reflects difficult decisions and difficult choices that have to be taken. It calls for unpopular measures. It calls for tax increases and it calls for expenditure reductions. However, it acknowledges a fair and equitable balance. It reflects regional concerns, and it places a larger burden on those who are better able to carry it.

In the course of the last number of days these measures have been mentioned many, many times, but in summary we see restraint exercised at National Defence and overseas development, reduction in subsidies to VIA and CBC, postponement of child care spaces being created, transfers to the provinces being reduced somewhat but not less than the rate of inflation, and that privatization will continue, as will the success of de Havilland, Canadair and others.

We are seeing the repayment of social transfer payments that are made to wealthy Canadians and a new corporate tax not on income but for the first time on capital. Corporations may not make any money, but notwithstanding that they will have to pay tax based on capital employed within this country. We are going to see a tightening up of the corporate tax system. Personal taxes have to increase, as will excise taxes on cigarettes and tobacco and gasoline and the federal sales tax. All these measures are hardly worthy of a lot of cheer, but the fact is that they are absolutely necessary. This problem is in front of us. It is not going to go away.

I have been listening intently to Members opposite. I have from time to time asked them at the conclusion of their 20 minutes of criticism and complaining whether they have a single, sensible, alternate, practical solution which Canadians can employ to deal with the problem, and I have yet to hear one.

The Minister of Finance and this Government have acted responsibly and decisively through a balanced measure of tax increases and expenditure reductions. The tragedy in all this is that even with the measures I have outlined the debt is of such a magnitude that they will barely offset the interest costs. The result is that the deficit this year will still be $30.5 billion, but happily next year down to $28 billion and projected to be cut in half within five years.

Members opposite will say that that is not very impressive, that it does not do much, that it just maintains the status quo. However, I would challenge them because I do not think that they can have it both ways. One does not need a vivid imagination to see where things would be at without the tax increases and without expenditure restraints. The deficit would be into the area of $40 billion to $45 billion, with interest payments going out of sight and the future of the country, the security of our safety net and the future of our children impaired seriously.

I must assume that Members opposite will apparently agree that interest on the national debt is a serious problem and a threat to the future prosperity and security of the country. Presumably all Canadians want a caring and compassionate society with the capability to maintain the social programs, cultural programs, and the important public services that Canadians need. They want a Canada which is economically strong and is able to compete with the rest of the world so that our growth in job creation can be maintained and there are opportunities for our young people.

I believe that they want as we do a Canada that can sustain the high standard of living and pass on an enhanced quality of life to those who come after us, succeeding generations.

There may be those who disagree with certain aspects of the Budget, certain tax increases or a particular expenditure restraint, but the need for action cannot be denied. Partisan rhetoric simply is not in. Mindless criticism is out. Canadians want some meaningful action to deal with this problem. I say to Members opposite that if they have some alternatives, some workable suggestions, then let us have them because we on this side of the House do not claim to have a monopoly on all these matters. We want to work constructively. I believe that this deficit interest problem is of sufficient concern that Members on all sides should be joining together in an harmonious atmosphere in an effort to try to cope with it.

We cannot long continue to mortgage tomorrow in order to pay for today and, indeed, to pay for yesterday. That is why the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said that this Budget is about building for the future not borrowing from it.

The Budget deals with the major obstacle to our future progress, our future growth and that is the growing debt. The Budget attacks that obstacle. The measures are tough because they are absolutely necessary and absolutely required. No one on this side takes any great delight in increasing taxes or in reducing programs, but the fact is that it is the carelessness, the over-spending, the profligacy of those who went before us which have contributed in large measure to this problem. We have to face it today. It is real. It is not an illusion. It is not going to go away on its own. It has to be faced and faced now. A failure to do so now would be to abdicate our responsibility to those who come after us. We will leave our children, I suggest, with a major and very real crisis.

In conclusion, I want to say that I believe that the Minister of Finance has crafted a Budget that faces the debt challenge and will help to protect Canada's future. It asks everyone to play a part so that everyone may ultimately benefit in the years ahead. It is about our future. Its success depends on the commitment and understanding of all Canadians.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I have heard the Hon. Member from Swift Current say that all of the country should be more involved in dealing with the country's deficit and I believe that most of the country is.

Prior to the Budget and prior to most budgets, we saw announcements and pronunciations by the business community and the lobby groups which represent the business interests saying that the deficit had to be dealt with, so I presume that that particular group in our society is prepared to take part in deficit reduction.

I would remind the Member of something that I reminded one of his colleagues a few moments ago, a study that was recently completed by John Orr in which he goes back to the taxes paid by the corporate sector and individuals in the 1950s. Seventy-five per cent of the Government revenues were raised by income tax at that date. The two sectors paid approximately the same amount of money.

If we were to carry that same regime of the corporate tax take being equivalent to the take from individuals, Mr. Orr estimates that we would have produced under this Budget an $18.5 billion surplus. Instead, the Minister and his Government have chosen to go with a $30 billion point something deficit. Given that the business community has been one of the loudest proponents of doing away with the deficit, can the Member explain why his Government and why the Minister of Finance did not take them at their word and begin placing the same level of taxation on the business community and the corporate community that they were paying back in the 1950s when deficits were not a problem?

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to respond to the observations of the Member from Mackenzie.

I have not examined the study to which he is referring, but times have changed since the 1950s. The population of this country, I suspect, has virtually doubled. There are many, many more individual Canadian taxpayers. I suggest to you that the corporate sector is carrying roughly a 50 per cent tax rate. I know of no individual or corporation in this country that is making money that does not pay tax with the exception—and I want to add this exception because I know of the Hon. Member's fixation—of these 60,000 or 80,000 corporations which are "profitable" and which pay no tax.

The Hon. Member opposite, of course, knows full well that 95 per cent or more of those corporations he is talking about are individual Canadian small business people and farmers. The reason they may be profitable on one line of their tax return but not paying income tax in a particular year is because they are perfectly entitled to carry forward losses from previous years to offset the income in the year of reporting. He knows also that another reason is because of the business investment tax credit whereby if a taxpayer, corporate or individual, makes certain capital purchases they were in the past entitled to take certain credits to offset income tax payable. That is the short answer when we get to this nonsense about all these so-called profitable corporations which pay no tax.

I want to close my response with an interesting little piece that I noticed In The Financial Post for May 5. It is entitled "Advice & Dissent" by William Watson. The heading of this article is, "Those who wanted debt control must pay". He concludes by stating:

> You only hurt the ones you love. A surtax on high incomes. A new tax on big corporations. Consumption tax increases. A big jump in the sales tax credit. It's as if Mike Wilson were saying to his natural constituency—that is, the top half of the income distribution—"You want debt control? Now pay for it."

So, Mr. Speaker, an interesting comment from someone I do not know but he seems hardly over-sympathetic.

Mr. Mills: I have a question, Mr. Speaker. I listened with interest to the remarks of the Hon. Member for Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia (Mr. Wilson). He mentioned that we do not have any ideas on this side of the House. Quite frankly, I did not see very much creativity in this Budget. Let me ask the Hon. Member a specific question. One of the ways in which we compete internationally is through a very high level of productivity. We have heard repeatedly in committees of this House over the last four or five years that profit-sharing and equity participation produces an enhanced level of productivity in most corporations that employ a system like this. Does the Hon. Member think it would be in the interests of the Government to consider using the tax instrument for promoting that kind of activity in the corporate world because that would not only enhance our productivity but would also give us new levels of taxation which would allow us to attack the deficit in a more progressive way? Would the Hon. Member have some thoughts on that?

Mr. Wilson (Swift—Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comment from the Hon. Member opposite. I may say that it is an attempt to be constructive, which is highly unusual and well above what I have heard from that side to date in this debate.

The whole thrust of the tax reform exercise which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has tried to put forward has been to get rid of the tax expenditures. I think a number of tax expenditures which have been put out in the past have been less than productive, perhaps well meaning, but less than productive. One example is perhaps the business investment tax credit which while well meaning likely caused more problems than it was worth. Then there is the scientific research tax credit; that was a monumental tax expenditure put forward by the Party of the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Mr. Mills). I am not sure what the final tally on that tax expenditure was, perhaps something in the order of $4 billion. It did not do very much for research and development in this country.

I think it is perfectly open for the business community to engage in profit-sharing with its employees. In fact, I think it would be a splendid idea for more businesses to engage in that practice. It seems to me that individual initiative and incentive is what makes things tick in this country and it would give employees an opportunity to participate, to share in some of the fruits and rewards of the entrepreneurial spirit that are so important. It drives the small business sector in this country and is certainly the life-blood of the small business sector.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will entertain a supplementary question from the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood.

Mr. Mills: Mr. Speaker, my point was that I think the Minister of Finance should use the tax instrument to provide incentive for businesses to engage in that kind of equity participation and profit sharing system. I did not quite understand the Hon. Member's answer.

Does he support that kind of approach? Could he possibly suggest that as something creative which the Government should consider? Government Members always accuse us of lacking in creativity, but this is a very simple thing that would engage millions of people in a form of productivity which would give us global competitiveness. Yet we cannot seem to get a specific answer on it.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite talks about specific answers. I am rather amused by that because for the past week I have been asking other opposition Members, at the conclusion of their critiques of this Budget, whether they have anything concrete to suggest, anything workable, anything which would help us face the problem we have in Canada. I have heard absolutely nothing whatsoever.

In answer to the Hon. Member's question, I know of nothing which prevents business people, entrepreneurs, from entering into profit sharing arrangements with their employees. It seems to me to be a very sensible way of doing business. I hate to think that it would require another tax expenditure, the sort of thing they themselves criticize over and over again as being inefficient, to encourage the business community to do that. I think it is a very good idea. The business community ought to go right ahead with that very sensible idea.

Mr. Gustafson: Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to note that on the Government's record between 1984 and 1988 more jobs were created in Canada than in West Germany, Austria, France, Sweden, Belgium, Greece, Finland, Ireland, and New Zealand. Canada has been creative in production, and the number is 1,432,000 jobs in a four-year period.

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to participate in the debate on the Budget. There is no question in my mind that the deficit must be reduced if we are to compete in today's global economy and still provide the essential services Canadians have come to expect. The longer we wait, the higher the bill will be and the less money we will have to pay it. We have to start by balancing the Budget.

However, the Estimates which were tabled in the House show that the Government plans to spend $142.9 billion in the fiscal year 1989-90, despite revenue predictions of only $112.4 billion. This means a shortfall of $30.5 billion. It is obvious that the books are not balanced.

The books are not balancing because our economy simply cannot thrive in an environment of high interest rates, decreased government spending and never ending tax hikes. The deficit is increasing and will continue to do so until we find a real long-term solution to this serious problem. Unfortunately, the Government's chosen solutions are not working.

A colleague of mine once described this Government's theory of economics as one based on selling off the furniture to pay the rent. I could not agree more.

The Government is overlooking the obvious. Instead of tax hikes and cutting the very programs which work to prevent economic slowdowns, the Government should be focusing on increasing the country's productivity and competitiveness. The only long lasting means of reducing the deficit is to increase productivity. This is not a new idea. Increased productivity will not only make Canadian business more competitive world-wide but will provide revenue to reduce the deficit which is threatening to strangle our national economy.

Increased productivity will not only make Canadian business more competitive but will also help us move into the 21st century in a better way. We can increase productivity by improving the skills of our workforce and by putting new energy and commitment into our research and development partnership with the private sector. Improving the skills and education of our workforce is not only a good idea. It is an essential one, given the deplorable state of Canada's basic educational level.

First, let us talk about illiteracy. Based on Gross National Product, Canada ranks in the top ten of the world's wealthiest societies, but ranked by literacy of its citizens Canada is nowhere to be seen in the top ten. Hon. Members may be surprised to learn that countries such as Nicaragua, Cuba and South Korea have literacy levels higher than that of Canada.

The Southam survey carried out in the fall of 1987 is now well known for bringing to light the shocking statistics on the national literacy crisis in Canada. It reports that 4.5 million people, one out of every five Canadians, cannot read a basic job application or a simple operating manual. They cannot read government notices or product labels in supermarkets and are helpless when faced with their children's homework questions.

How did this happen and what does it mean to our economy? In 1961 author Barbara Moon warned that Canada was suffering from widespread undereducation. As Hon. Members can see from the statistics, her warning was ignored.

In today's international market-place, success and profit go to the companies on the leading edge of technology and productivity. Illiteracy simply does not fit into this picture. Canadian companies know very well that the 1990s will bring increased international competitiveness and the need for greater productivity and higher efficiency than ever before.

They are in the process of updating their equipment and adopting new technologies to compete in a rapidly developing market.

But the benefits resulting from all this new technology may be lost if employees are unable to adjust to the radical changes involved. It would be altogether impossible to increase or even maintain productivity without providing our workers with the basic knowledge they need to prepare for the future.

The low literacy levels will reflect on Canada's ability to compete on international markets. Compared with our commercial and industrial rivals, our competitiveness would be seriously jeopardize if our workers' literacy and educational levels were not as high as those of other industrialized countries.

Recent studies have revealed for instance that 95 per cent of all Japanese workers have completed the equivalent of two years of university education. In Canada, only 42.6 per cent of all students register for post-secondary education.

These facts speak for themselves when it comes to our country's productivity. If we do not take immediate action to increase the literacy and educational levels in Canada, Canadians will be unable to compete on domestic and international markets.

A study conducted by Southam took into account the following points to calculate the cost of illiteracy in Canada: unneeded unemployment insurance benefits, lower international competitiveness, increased medical costs and workers compensations, subsidies for retraining of industrial workers, jail terms for frustrated illiterates and fiscal revenue losses.

• (1740)

Social and economic costs are also enormous and the final chilling result is more and more obvious. On top of being a universal right, literacy and education are an economic necessity.

[English]

A group of Canadian business executives recognized the seriousness of this situation and set up the Canadian Business Task Force on Literacy. They wanted to let the business world know the effect illiteracy is having on the corporate and social bottom line. This task force published a report in February of 1988 which estimated the direct annual cost of illiteracy to Canadian businesses at about $4 billion, and to society as a whole at approximately $10 billion every year. They reported that lost productivity alone could be costing Canadian corporations $2.5 billion every year. That is a lot of money, Mr. Speaker, money which could go a long way toward decreasing the national deficit without, I must add, hitting the Canadian taxpayers with more increases or chopping the already strained budget of our social programs.

In September of 1988, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stood in the grand halls of Casa Loma in Toronto and spoke eloquently about the problem of illiteracy in Canada. He promised that his Government would finally do something about its 1986 commitment to fight illiteracy. He pledged $110 million over the next five years to this battle. It is now 1989. By the end of the 1989-90 year, the Government predicts it will have spent $33 million on grants and contributions related to literacy upgrading. Despite this, the problem is not going away and local groups tell us that they are still desperate for help.

In the words of the Right Hon. Prime Minister:

> The voluntary sector has carried the flame of literacy and kept the cause alive in this country.

He said this at Casa Loma in September of 1988. Many of these literacy groups have been carrying that flame for over 10 years. We have to give them a hand and share the important work they are doing in our communities. The education programs, from kindergarten to graduate school, must be strengthened and focused to increase the knowledge and skills base of our workforce. But indications are that this is not being done. Just when our colleges and universities are fighting a losing battle to maintain and extend the quality and excellence of education in this country, the Government is capping provincial transfers for post-secondary education. This is a cut of $111 million for the upcoming year.

Throughout the free trade debate, we heard a great deal about managing change and about the need for increasing research and development, a better educated workforce and greater productivity. Hearing about it is one thing, seeing it happen is another. The statistics say it all, Mr. Speaker. According to the advisory council on adjustment, among eight comparable industrialized countries, Canada is ranked lowest in gross research and development spending, lowest in industry-funded research and development, second lowest in government-funded research and development, lowest in higher education research and development and lowest in international patents granted per capita.

A report prepared for the Canadian Chamber of Commerce indicates that the existing research and development incentives are hampered by slow and clumsy bureaucracy. Right now, many corporations must wait 24 months to receive the refundable research and development tax credit.

I notice, Mr. Speaker, that you are asking me to speed it up and I will move right on to the very end of my speech.

An Hon. Member: I want to hear more.

Mr. Harb: In summary, we must work together, government, business and the public at large to ensure that we are ready for the future. In the 1990s, the countries which will do well, which will see strong economic growth, high employment and whose people will enjoy a higher standard of living, are the countries which invest in the skills of the workforce and the excellence of research and development today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 5.45 p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 84(5), to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the amendment now before the House.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment, which was negatived on the following division:

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FORTY-FIRST ANNIVERSARY OF ISRAEL

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham): Mr. Speaker, on May 14, 1948, being the fifth day of Iyar in the Hebrew calendar in that year, the State of Israel was created, the realization of a Zionist dream and a haven for the homeless in the tragic aftermath of the Holocaust.

The soul and spirit of the Israeli people were aptly described by Israel's first Prime Minister, David Ben-Gurion, when he said:

> The essence and significance of Jewish history lies in the preference of quality over quantity. For our security, survival, and status in the world and preservation of the legacy of our prophets to the end of time, Israel must strive incessantly for moral, cultural, technological, and social improvement to be a unique people.

Israel has become a vibrant, beautiful state. The desert has indeed bloomed, as I saw during my visit.

While Israel has had to cope with many wars and conflicts over the years, the past year and a half have been particularly difficult times.

As we wish Israel happy birthday, we pray that a way will be found for a lasting and enduring peace. No one longs for that peace more than the Israeli people. Shalom.

TRIBUTES

THE LATE KEVIN BROWN

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to an extraordinary Canadian and friend who died yesterday, Kevin Brown of Vancouver.

Kevin was a founder of the Persons with AIDS Coalition. He fought his personal battle with AIDS for nearly four years, overcoming eight bouts of pneumonia. He was a fighter for all people living with AIDS, a man of humble origins who put a human face on AIDS.

Kevin challenged all of us, individuals and Governments, to do much more to combat and prevent this terrible disease which has killed over 1,400 Canadians, and to provide love and support to those who are living with AIDS.

As a proud gay man, Kevin spoke out against discrimination with these words:

> As people with AIDS we are engaged in a daily battle for survival with this dread disease—to wake up each morning is a marvel and to make it through the day an achievement. Therefore, how cruel, for those of us who are gay, to not only have to fight against AIDS but also to suffer the unjust burden of homophobia from our society.

There can be no better tribute to Kevin Brown than to honour the important message that he gives us all.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

FORTY-FIRST ANNIVERSARY OF ISRAEL

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent): Mr. Speaker, I rise today in the House to honour the forty-first anniversary of the independence of the State of Israel.

After 2,000 years in the Diaspora and the horrors of the Nazi Holocaust, the Jewish people finally realized their dream in the establishment of their own homeland. Israel is the one place in the world where the Jewish people are masters in their own home.

Years of violent interaction with its neighbours have made Israel mature quickly as a state. I wish the people of Israel peace and happiness in a troubled area of the world and call on Parliament to celebrate this occasion with the Canadian Jewish community.

S. O. 31

FORTY-FIRST ANNIVERSARY OF ISRAEL

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the messages of my colleagues.

Today is Israel's Independence Day, celebrating the forty-first anniversary of the founding of the modern State of Israel. For the past 41 years our country and Israel have shared a strong and close friendship based upon mutual respect and understanding. Although Israel has had to struggle to deal with some of the most trying crises that have ever challenged a modern state, Canadians are pleased to note that she remains a democratic and pluralistic state, unfortunately one of the few such states in the Middle East guided by a commitment to the democratic process and the rule of law.

Canadians and Israelis share a history of struggling in many regions against climate and physical geography in order to turn desolate and harsh lands into places where food can be harvested and life improved. We share a common commitment to improving the lot of people in less developed countries and to making a positive and constructive contribution to our global future.

I hope all Members of the House join me in wishing Israel well on this occasion and with Israel in the hope that this year we shall finally see an enduring peace brought to all neighbours in the Middle East, as well as to the entire world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRIBUTES

THE LATE ALEX FRASER

Mr. Dave Worthy (Cariboo—Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, this morning I was advised that after a long and courageous battle with cancer the Hon. Alex Fraser, MLA for The Cariboo, had passed away.

Alex Fraser's father, John A. Fraser, was the Cariboo MLA from 1912 until 1916 and Member of Parliament in this place for the Cariboo from 1925 to 1935.

Alex continued in his father's footsteps by serving in elected office for more than 40 years, first as Mayor of Quesnel and then as MLA for The Cariboo for the last 20 years. Much of this time he spent in the role of Minister of Transportation and Highways.

Alex Fraser was as much a part of The Cariboo as the great river with which he shared his name. Throughout his long and distinguished political career he never lost sight of the people he was chosen to represent. He was the kind of man who will best be remembered for representing all the people all the time and with all of his heart. He embodied the good qualities of those good people of The Cariboo that he loved so well. For this reason Alex transcended politics.

Just as Alex was honoured to serve The Cariboo, we of The Cariboo have been even more honoured to have been represented for so long by such a dedicated and distinguished gentleman.

HEALTH

TRIBUTE TO NURSES AND ORDERLIES

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased today to pay tribute to Canada's nurses for their dedication and contribution to improving the health of Canadians.

Their presence is felt in the home, the workplace, clinics, hospitals, reception centres and all other types of health care institution. There are more than 200,000 nurses in Canada. This impressive number of care-givers makes a big contribution to health services and accounts for a large part of the effectiveness and strength of the medical team.

The theme chosen this year by the Canadian Association to celebrate the national week from May 8 to 12 is: Canadian nurses promote children's health, advocate healthy living and a safe environment, give information about health and risks, cooperate with Canadians for a better future.

In recognition of the nurses essential role, I call on Members of this House and Canadians to show their appreciation.

FORESTRY

REINSTATEMENT OF PROVINCIAL AGREEMENTS

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, at the end of March, forestry agreements with six provinces expired. Three other agreements will expire in March of next year. These agreements have helped provinces to regenerate their forest resources and the seedlings we have here today.

Despite the cancellation of the agreements and the fact that it is Forestry Week, the Government has failed to move quickly to negotiate new agreements with the provinces. The federal Government has a requirement that a comprehensive 20-year forestry plan be in place with each province before new agreements are signed.

Officials in the Western Diversification Office have stated that they are changing the current agreements and that it will be at least another three to four months before the Government knows what approach to take.

It is time for the Minister to show some leadership, to make a commitment now that the funds will be available to negotiate the new agreements which the provinces need to ensure that our forests will continue to provide for future generations.

CRIMINAL CODE

PROHIBITION OF FULLY AUTOMATIC WEAPONS

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, for under $500 a 16 year old in Canada can purchase an AK-47 assault rifle that has been converted from fully to semi-automatic. For an extra $60 that same 16 year old can purchase a trigger activator that will allow the gun to fire three bullets with one pull of the trigger. If that person has any knowledge of guns the AK-47 can be easily reconverted back to a fully automatic machine-gun. A fully automatic AK-47 fires a 30-round clip in less than three seconds.

I join the police agencies from across Canada in urging the Government to change the Criminal Code to prohibit these converted guns.

I applaud the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) for stating his commitment to address this issue. I urge him to ensure that our Criminal Code bans any weapon that is or has the potential of becoming fully automatic.

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND WHARFS

Mr. Lawrence MacAulay (Cardigan): Mr. Speaker, the deplorable condition of Prince Edward Island's wharfs has not been addressed by the present Conservative Government. Island fishermen have to work under conditions that are hazardous to life and limb.

Wharfs in my riding such as those at Grahams, Macaulays, Savage Harbour, Sturgeon and Naufarge, among others, have deteriorated into a state of disrepair, a disrepair that is fast becoming an environmental as well as a fisheries issue.

Fishermen have petitioned the Government over the past five years to commit funds to repair these wharfs. The Government has only paid lip-service to these requests. The proof is at the wharfs, the proof of the Government's insensitivity and inaction.

I implore the Minister to act now before it is too late. Island fishermen deserve equality now.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

COURT CHALLENGES PROGRAM

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches—Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, I think members on all sides of the House should be lending their whole-hearted support to the renewal of the Court Challenges Program for disabled people which is due to expire in March 1990.

This program provides the only funding available for disabled people to use their equality rights under the Charter. Without an adequate and permanent funding scheme to support test case litigation on behalf of disadvantaged groups, the equality guarantees in the Charter will be accessible only to the wealthy. Most people with a disability in Canada live on low or fixed incomes.

Already applicants to the Court Challenges Program are being informed that only expenditures incurred before March, 1990 can be covered. Since litigation often takes years, not months, few cases will be completed by that date. This means that access to the Charter is already jeopardized.

This program is extremely important to disabled people and their organizations. It deserves to be supported by members on all sides of the House.

NATIONAL FOREST WEEK

DEVELOPMENT OF FOREST RESOURCES

Mr. Charles-Eugène Marin (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, last September, the Prime Minister announced the creation of a full-fledged forestry department. He also mentioned the increasing recognition of the importance of this special heritage, our forest resources, for all Canadians.

In the years preceding the announcement of the department's creation, we as a nation clearly began to take a sound management approach to our forestry resources. Just recall the impressive results obtained from federal-provincial agreements to develop forestry resources. Indeed, nearly 900 million trees have been planted and some 100,000 jobs created throughout Canada.

National Forest Week is the time to reflect on these achievements and to prepare to meet the many challenges the future of the forests holds as we approach the 21st century.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I should advise Hon. Members that I have noted an exhibit on some their desks on both sides of the House. Hon. Members will know that no matter how well motivated the exhibit may be, it is breaching the rules. I would ask Hon. Members to co-operate with the Chair.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

SOCIAL SECURITY PROGRAMS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take up with the Minister of Finance the question of his breach of trust with the senior citizens of the country today, as I did yesterday.

I want to recall to his mind what the Prime Minister said during the election campaign in Sydney, Nova Scotia. I quote: "As long as I am Prime Minister, social programs, especially those for the elderly will be improved, not diminished".

Today, the President of the United Senior Citizens of Ontario, representing 300,000 old age pensioners, said this about the Prime Minister: "He has misled us". The President of the National Senior Citizens and Pensioners Association representing half a million senior citizens also said today: "We were betrayed—seniors were misled".

Will the Minister of Finance explain why some senior citizens are the only people in the country who are going to have part of their income taxed at 100 per cent? Why is it that some people at 75 will pay a higher tax on their income than people at 35 with the same income? Does he think that an age biased tax is really fair?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Leader's financial critic is supportive of just exactly what we are doing here.

Some Hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. Simmons: Stop misleading the House.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): That is quite consistent with what the Prime Minister and others have said on this side. There will be $865 million more to be paid on Old Age Security payments this year than last year.

Mr. Allmand: Because there are more old age citizens.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I also say to the Hon. Member that these payments are fully indexed.

Let me quote if I may again from the budget speech: "This measure maintains the universal character of these transfer programs. Everyone eligible for these programs will continue to receive their benefits, regardless of income."

That is precisely what we are doing. I think it is quite consistent with what has been said in the past.

UNIVERSALITY OF SOCIAL PROGRAMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign the Minister of Finance called me a liar because I predicted that he would cut social programs in this country.

Even the Prime Minister told Canadians again that to him the principle of universality was sacred and that it was one of the basic tenets of this country.

Why did the Minister of Finance break the Prime Minister of Canada's solemn commitment, in his Budget?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me just quote if I could from a book called Honourable Mentions written by his finance critic: "For my part I continue to wonder whether family allowances and possibly old age pensions need be universal, especially now that our federal deficits have mounted so markedly". There it is in black and white from his finance critic.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: Seniors want an answer.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, let me if I can here—

[Translation]

The main purpose of the social safety net is to help people who need it most, not to subsidize individuals with high incomes. That is the policy of this Budget.

[English]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is the word of the Prime Minister that is at issue here. The principle of universality for him was a sacred trust, once again. Senior citizens are challenging his words.

PRINCIPLE OF UNIVERSALITY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is again for the Minister of Finance. He knows, as do I, that citizens in this country working throughout a lifetime to help build Canada have depended on the old age pension as a right of citizenship. They have spent a lifetime being taxed and they have planned their future on the basis of that pension. It was part of the social contract in this country, part of the universal social contract. The Minister has broken that contract. What is he going to say to the senior citizens of the country?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I say quite clearly that we not have broken this contract.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): These payments have been taxable for many, many years now. We are still using the tax system because of the huge debt problem, which I have asked all Canadians to understand and to work with us in trying to beat.

An Hon. Member: Not all Canadians.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I have asked all Canadians to understand the debt problem. We are asking people to work with us to try to get this debt problem under control.

I say to the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that I have stood in this House for two weeks now and he himself has said: "Yes, we have a debt problem because, Wilson, you have increased the debt over the last four and one-half years." He knows—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition—

An Hon. Member: Why don't you tell the truth?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will tell the truth, I say to the Member from Newfoundland. The Leader of the Opposition is being dishonest with the Canadian people.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Minister of Finance does not want to pursue that particular point, at least not in quite the same language. I would hope when I recognize him that he will properly correct himself.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the way that I was expressing it, but I will make the point at any rate.

The Leader of the Opposition knows full well the only way that debt can be stopped from growing is by reducing the annual deficit. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has yet to tell us how he in any way would reduce the deficit, and that is why I say that that is not the right way to treat Canadian people. Come clean with them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

RESPONSIBILITY OF MINISTER OF STATE FOR TRANSPORT

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State (Transport).

We are aware that the Minister represented the Canadian Government at an international conference on the environment about two months ago. At that conference, she received some specific information on traces of PCBs in gasoline sold in Canada.

I would like to ask the Minister why, after a special meeting in Switzerland, she did not have the courage to act on her responsibility with respect to the transportation of dangerous goods or at least be sufficiently concerned about the health of Canadians to inform the Minister of the Enviroment accordingly.

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, all the reports I received, including the statements made yesterday to the press by the Minister of State (Transport), are to the effect that no specific allegations concerning illegal shipments of contaminated gasoline were passed on, either in Geneva or elsewhere, to departmental employees or members of my office staff.

The only reference made, as I said before, in Basle and at meetings that may have taken place at that time was that toxic substances were being shipped illegally from the United States. That is the only reference that was made.

Personally, I didn't know anything about all this before reading the article in The Globe and Mail.

[English]

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my supplementary question to the Prime Minister. We are not talking about an employee. We are not talking about a civil servant. We are talking about a Minister of the Crown who was given certain information as a representative of the Government of Canada at an international environmental conference and who, with absolute and total negligence, failed either to exercise her responsibilities under the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act or in fact to inform the Minister of the Environment.

Given that reports out of Washington today indicate that this scam could in fact be occurring also in British Columbia, potentially in Alberta and possibly in other parts of the country, what specific action have the Prime Minister and his Government taken to protect the health of Canadians against this scam of PCB laced oils and gas, and specifically to fire the Minister of State for Transport?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I can inform the House that starting this morning a full operation has been launched at the main crossing point between Canada and the U.S. to take samples on shipments of fuel.

We have 34 inspectors in Environment Canada acting jointly with the Ontario Government and other Departments of the federal Government in Québec and Ontario. We have now been in contact with all regions of Canada on this matter. I can assure the House and the people of Canada that every measure requested is now being taken to control it.

TRANSPORTATION OF TOXIC SUBSTANCES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State for Transport. My office was told yesterday that at a conference in Switzerland the Minister had been given very specific information about the transport of fuels with toxic substances across the border. Yesterday, the Minister refused to answer in the House. The Minister of the Environment, answering for her, said that all the Government had were hints.

Today, Mr. Green, the responsible environmentalist, who the Minister himself concedes is a serious person, has repeated the following with reference to the Minister, and I quote:

> I told them that oil contaminated with PCB's were being transported across the border for use in industrial furnaces and greenhouses.

• (1430)

My question for the Minister is simply this—and it is not for the Minister of the Environment, it is for the Minister who has the responsibility here.

Mr. Andre: You have no right to say that.

Mr. Broadbent: Was she told that and, if so, why didn't she act upon it?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: No.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Shirley Martin (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, at a conference in Basle, Switzerland, there were conversations in which Mr. Green stated his concern about toxic waste crossing the border. Those concerns were voiced to the officials of Environment who were at that conference. They were voiced within my hearing. The Department took action and that is the extent of it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INSPECTIONS—FOLLOW-UP ON INFORMATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the Minister. We know according to one official that the inspections that followed this revelation of information at the border were already initiated by the Ontario Government. It had nothing to do with the search for toxic substances. What we are dealing with is not, for example, as was the case with tainted tuna, something that is merely unpleasant but life-threatening. Since the Minister of State for Transport had the information, why did she rely on someone from the Environment Department just to follow up and not herself inform the Minister of the Environment, the Minister of Health and the Solicitor General, all of whom had direct responsibility?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the Leader of the NDP did not get his facts straight before asking the question. The truth is that it is routine in my Department and jointly with the Ontario Government that each year in May or June there is a stepped-up operation to check the border to verify if there are violations of the transportation of dangerous goods legislation. This year, because Mr. Green raised the question of a general movement of illegal toxic wastes across the border, we advanced the operation to April.

Mr. Lapierre: What did you find?

ALLEGED DEALY IN TRANSFER OF INFORMATION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The Minister of the Environment admitted yesterday that he had obtained information about these problems at the border, two days ago. But the Minister who went to the conference knew about it two months ago. My question for the Prime Minister is very simple. Did this Minister of Transport make a responsible decision by not directly informing the Minister of the Environment then? Yes or no?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): The New Democratic leader has asked a question. Obviously, the two Ministers have given a complete answer. The two Ministers—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Do you want an answer? I shall try to answer.

Obviously, the two Ministers acted in an admirable way. The answers were complete and I now count on the New Democratic leader to support Canada's Environment Minister who is doing such important work for the future of Canada.

[English]

CONFERENCE IN BASLE—INFORMATION RECEIVED

Hon. William Rompkey (Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of State for Transport who said that she received information at a conference in Basle two months ago. I want to give the Minister the opportunity now to tell us exactly what information she was given. The Minister has also said that action was taken. Specifically, what action was taken and when?

Hon. Shirley Martin (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, as I answered before, Mr. Green had concerns about the possibilities of toxic wastes being shipped across the border to Canada. That was the extent of it. When he brought that forward, the Departmental officials were there. They heard his concerns, I heard his concerns and the Departmental officials for Environment under whose jurisdiction his concerns lie followed up on the details. There were no details.

Mr. Lapierre: What did you do?

Mrs. Martin (Lincoln): There were concerns expressed and those concerns were followed up.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ACTIONS TAKEN BY MINISTER

Hon. William Rompkey (Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the same Minister. The Minister of State for Transport still has not said what specific action was taken.

Mr. Lapierre: What did she do?

Mr. Rompkey: She refers to some action that was taken, but we were told today that the Minister has just taken action now at border points in reaction to a problem that is becoming very, very serious indeed. What specific action was taken after that conference in Basle, Switzerland?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the action is that after the information was conveyed to my Department, it was also conveyed to the Governments of Ontario and Québec, and to the United States. Then there was an advance operation to check the borders which resulted in charges being laid and samples being taken. It was a very active operation.

I have something to add about Mr. Green's allegations. Mr. Green's allegations are somewhat complicated. In The Gazette today, under the signatures of Jennifer Robinson and Marian Scott, we read:

> He said he did not mention diesel fuel or gasoline because he was not aware of the extent of the problem.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ALLEGED IRRESPONSIBILITY OF MINISTERS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think we have here a fascinating case of ministerial irresponsibility.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): We have one Minister who says she heard about it but did nothing. The other Minister says: "My officials did something about it, but I didn't know about it".

My question for the Prime Minister is when will he start appointing Ministers of Transport and the Environment who will start taking some action on crucial questions and who will not simply leave things up to the officials all the time?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): One thing that I will agree on, Mr. Speaker, is that the Hon. Member knows a great deal about irresponsibility.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: That is a great answer, Brian.

Mr. Mulroney: I think my hon. friend being a fair-minded parliamentarian—

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): You have had two cases in the last two weeks.

Mr. Mulroney: —will acknowledge that both Ministers have acquitted themselves and their responsibilities in a very admirable way, and I know he would want to be the first to underline and salute that.

INVESTIGATION INTO ACTIONS OF MINISTERS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister, as a fair-minded parliamentarian some of the time, would surely want to respond to the fact that his Minister of the Environment said yesterday that he only found out about it yesterday and then took action. His Minister of State for Transport said she knew about it but didn't take any action, even though she is responsible for the transportation of toxic goods. Does the Prime Minister not think that it is time he began his own investigation into the irresponsible actions of his Ministers on something that affects the health and safety of Canadians?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that all Members of Parliament, irrespective of political parties, are very concerned about the health and welfare of all Canadians. I do not think there is any doubt about that.

In the case at hand, a question has been put to the Minister of State for Transport who responded fully with the information that was required.

Mr. Lapierre: She did nothing.

Mr. Allmand: She left it to the officials.

Mr. Mulroney: The information was conveyed to the Department of the Environment. It is important to note, as the Minister has just pointed out, a quote from Mr. Green:

> He did not mention diesel fuel or gasoline because he was not aware of the extent of the problem.

To the extent that he was aware of the problem, that information was conveyed to the Department of the Environment and the Minister for the Environment has acted very competently and fully—

Mr. Lapierre: Yesterday.

Mr. Mulroney: —in regard to this difficult matter and will continue to do precisely that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIONAL REVENUE

ILLICIT TRAFFIC OF TOXIC MATERIALS

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. Yesterday in the House, the Minister of the Environment said that he learned a month ago, and I quote, "Daniel Green had been informed of illicit traffic in toxic substances between Canada and the United States." Today, Revenue Canada's chief investigator said:

• (1440)

[English]

> —whenever Canada Customs inspected a tanker truck they looked for tax law violations—not hazardous wastes—"Had we known of these allegations our approach would have been entirely different—we weren't testing PCBs,"—

[Translation]

That is quite a different story!

When did the Minister of National Revenue learn about toxic substances crossing the border between Canada and the United States?

[English]

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, as did my other colleagues in Cabinet, I learned of the suspicion of toxic wastes being included in liquid fuels this Monday. I immediately initiated an investigation within my Department to ascertain whether or not any officials were knowledgeable of the fact prior to this Monday. The response was no. No one was informed of anything of that sort.

With respect to testing of tankers, it is true that Customs and Excise tests on a periodic basis tankers for tax rules and regulations for tax evasion. We had no reason whatsoever, prior to this Monday, to suspect the presence of toxic waste in liquid fuel in oil tankers any more than we had any reason to suspect toxic waste in taxed fuels as of this Monday.

Upon finding out, through the leadership of the Minister of the Environment, the Government, on a broad basis, took immediate action. Customs and Revenue Canada is co-operating fully with the Department of the Environment, with the Province of Ontario and with other provinces.

CUSTOMS—SEARCH FOR TOXIC CHEMICALS

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, we heard both today and yesterday that Ministers knew at different times about this potentially very dangerous hazard to the health of Canadians. The Minister of the Environment said yesterday one month. Is it not the practice that other Ministers would inform the Minister of National Revenue, who is responsible for Customs in Canada, to ensure that he undertook to begin to search for hazardous toxic waste at the Canadian border as soon as the information was available? Why was the Minister not informed?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I do not know how often Ministers on this side of the House have to say that the first time this matter of toxic waste in fuel specifically came to our attention was on Monday. How often do we have to say that? As soon as we found out, immediate, proper, direct and decisive action was taken by the Government.

LOW-SULPHUR WESTERN CANADIAN COAL

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, and pending his answer, this could have a very significant, positive impact on Canada's balance of payments and on our environment.

What undertakings has the Minister made or is considering making with respect to the movement and utilization of low-sulphur western Canadian coal in the industrial heartland of Ontario to prevent the utilization of high-sulphur Pennsylvania coal, the principal cause of sulphur dioxide emissions and therefore acid rain?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the Hon. Member that we have been very active in attempts to have low-sulphur coal used for thermal purposes, particularly in Ontario. The Hon. Member will recall that a task force was formed largely under the direction of the Deputy Prime Minister. A number of tester model projects were developed, 14 in all, and partial funding for it was to come from western diversification in the amount of $27 million over a period of time. I can tell the Hon. Member that those plans are going forward and we hope we can put together a case for why western coal would be advantageous to Ontario while also using Canadian products and reducing the acid rain problem which now exists.

LIAISON BETWEEN MINISTERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of State for Transport has said that she had the information, as did some environmental officials, two months ago in Basle. Why is it that she did not communicate with her colleague, the Minister of the Environment? Why did the Minister responsible for the transportation of dangerous goods not follow it up with her officials or with environmental officials who should have reported, as should she have reported, to the Minister of the Environment? Why did she not maintain close contact with her officials and environmental officials to ensure that this matter was followed up?

Hon. Shirley Martin (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, in Switzerland, there was concern expressed about toxic substances crossing the border. If the Right Hon. Member would read Hansard, he would see that I did not say toxic substances in fuel or gasoline. I said that Mr. Green had concerns about the transportation of goods across the border. They were not details, they were concerns. Those concerns were expressed to the Department of the Environment, which is responsible for environmental matters, and it took action within the Department.

RESPONSIBILITY FOR ENFORCING ACT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, is it not so that the transportation of toxic goods across a border falls within the purview of the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act? Does the Minister not recognize that she bears the highest responsibility for those officials, and in the circumstances, does she recognize no responsibility to the House or the country for not having followed it up with her officials or with the Minister of the Environment? Now we find that no one followed it up with the Minister of National Revenue who is responsible for Customs to prevent the stuff from coming across the border. Has the Minister no responsibility at all?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the Leader—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: It is a novel occasion when the Leader of the Opposition rises twice during Question Period. It must be a matter of great importance.

The question was put to the Minister of State for Transport and I can tell the House and the country that she gave an answer of much greater clarity than the question of the Leader of the Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I do not know why the Leader of the Opposition seems to find some virtue in trying to nitpick about an answer of the Minister of State for Transport which was given with great clarity and great concern. The Minister of State for Transport has responded fully. The sequence of events was detailed with clarity and concern by the Minister of the Environment. The answers have been given in the finest traditions of the House of Commons. I would think that the Leader of the Opposition would be the first to want to honour and respect those traditions about which he speaks so frequently.

REPORT APPEARING IN OTTAWA CITIZEN

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister stands on his feet with a smirk on his face and says that it must be an important issue because the Leader of the Opposition has risen twice during Question Period. We tell him to put away his smirk because it is an important issue. It is about toxic substances affecting the health of Canadians.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, if I can be heard through the braying jackals across the way, I want to quote the Minister of Environment from a newspaper report. I refer to The Citizen. The story said "But Green said he specifically told Martin and a Bouchard aide that toxic wastes were being transported across the border in fuels". Whether it was gasoline, home heating fuel, whatever it was, it had to be transported. We are not aboard the Enterprise. We do not beam it up or down.

I ask the Minister of State for Transport, given that she is responsible for the transportation of dangerous goods, given that she listened in with her cocktail glass in her hand, on a discussion of the movement of dangerous goods—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: —why did she not undertake her responsibilities herself as well as advising the Minister of Transport?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member just quoted a statement that Mr. Green claims to have made to one of my assistants. Since that assistant is not in the House and cannot defend himself, I may remind the House, and the Hon. Member that, as they know, yesterday this assistant publicly denied that Mr. Green made that statement.

[English]

ADVICE TO OTHER MINISTERS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—Port au Port—St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, you would need the agility of a mental gymnast to follow the convoluted law of this Government. They have now got it that Mr. Green failed in his responsibilities.

Two months ago at an important environmental conference, a very credible individual told a Minister of the Canadian Government that there were suspicions of toxic substances being disguised in fuels of one sort or another.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member could put his question.

Mr. Tobin: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I have a question for the Minister of State for Transport. Will the Minister clarify for the House today, beyond overhearing the conversation and telling us today that she overheard the conversation, did she take any other action? Did the Minister contact the Minister of the Environment or the Minister of National Revenue? Did the Minister advise the senior Minister of Transport? Did the Minister advise her own officials, or did the Minister finish her cocktail and go back home?

Mr. Speaker: There are some things that are of course unparliamentary, and then there are other things that may not quite get there, but in the interests of fairness, we probably should be more careful. The Hon. Member for Skeena.

ALLEGED SMUGGLING

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of State for Transport. Mr. Green has said very clearly that what he told the Minister was that there was toxic and hazardous wastes in fuels. Setting that aside for a moment, the Minister was told that toxic and hazardous waste was being smuggled across the border. With smugglers, it is just a suspicion of smuggling until you catch them. Why did the Minister of State for Transport not immediately tell the Minister responsible for the border, the Minister of Customs, that there was smuggling going on?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, one thing must be very clear. This general information that was given in Basle was immediately transmitted to Ottawa by a phone call to my Department. My Department is responsible for enforcing the transportation of dangerous goods regulations. That is why the action was taken by my Department in co–operation with the Ontario Government. It was immediately taken. Charges have been laid, and very rigorous inspections have been conducted at the border.

CONTRADICTION RESPECTING INSPECTIONS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): My supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, is to the Minister of the Environment. The Minister of the Environment said to my Leader a few moments ago that after the conference in Switzerland, the number of inspections were advanced. This was flatly contradicted yesterday afternoon by Environment Minister Bradley who said that the inspections were not related to Mr. Green's statements, but were already planned. How does the Minister explain that fundamental contradiction?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, there is no contradiction nor confusion except in the mind of the Hon. Member. What is true is that those inspections are routinely made in May and June each year. But this year, because of this, they were advanced. That is the only thing that happened.

TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS GOODS ACT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Having had a clear signal from the Hon. Member as to what his intention is, I would ask him to go ahead with his question.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of the Environment. I thought it was always understood that while a number of Departments have responsibility to enforce Acts like the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act, they have to work at the border in co–operation with the Department of National Revenue. If that is the case, why did the Minister and his officials fail to get the immediate and full assistance of customs people across the country such that they would do something effective on this? Why did the Minister of National Revenue and his people learn about this matter only on Monday? Is this not proof of a clear dereliction of duty by the Minister of the Environment and his Government?

[Translation]

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the information we received, which the Department received, was connected with the environment. It was about toxic substances that might or might not have crossed the Canadian border illegally. That is why the matter was handled by the Department of the Environment. There had been no fiscal implications so far. There is no connection between fiscal responsibility and the environmental issue.

REQUEST FOR MINISTER'S RESIGNATION

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister was really concerned about the health of Canadians, why did he keep these serious problems a secret? Why didn't the Minister immediately get in touch with his opposite numbers at Customs and Excise? Why did he keep this important information to himself?

Mr. Speaker, the Minister is obviously not capable of performing his duties and should resign, and with him the Minister of State (Transport).

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the Hon. Member that I have no intention of resigning, and that with the support of the Prime Minister, the Cabinet and the entire Conservative Party, I intend to carry out this very important mission that we all have, which is to protect the environment in this country.

• (1500)

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I wish to advise Hon. Members that there will be a single question from the Hon. Member for Winnipeg Transcona.

SAFE DRINKING WATER ACT

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, I want to give the Minister of the Environment an opportunity to do something of a preventive fashion with respect to the environment instead of having to act after the fact, as in the case that we have been discussing.

The Minister will know of the concern of the citizens of Winnipeg about the potential damage to their water supply, thanks to the application by Consolidated Professor Mining to start up a mine in the middle of Shoal Lake in the drinking water supply.

Will the Minister rise in the House today and commit himself to using every federal power at his disposal, plus bring in a Canadian safe drinking water Act that will make this type of madness, having a mine that produces arsenic right in the middle of our water supply, impossible?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as a Manitoban, I share the view of the Hon. Member, that the drinking supply of Winnipeg must be secure. It is an issue that has been dealt with a number of times in the House and on a number of topics. In each case members of the Government have made sure that the security of Winnipeg's water supply is not tampered with or compromised in any way.

With regard to the application the same condition applies. We do not want to have arsenic in the water supply. From our perspective, no approval should be given until every assurance has been given that the water supply is in fact safe.

PRIVILEGE

RETRACTION OF REMARKS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. During the course of Question Period I think an unfortunate slur was directed, perhaps inadvertently, at the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Martin), and I am sure without any foundation whatsoever, by the Hon. Member for Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte (Mr. Tobin).

As a distinguished parliamentarian, and I am sure in keeping with the spirit of the traditions and dignity of the House, perhaps the Hon. Member may wish to reconsider, withdraw, and apologize to the Hon. Minister and to the House.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, I invite the submission of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski). I would not want to infer in any way, shape or form that the Minister was not alert, serious and all the other things Ministers should be in attending her conference out of the country.

I was using some imagery to suggest that the matter which I thought should have been paid attention to was not. If the Minister took any insult, I want to assure her that none was meant.

ALLEGED REMARKS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, during Question Period while my colleague the Hon. Member for Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte (Mr. Tobin) was making submissions, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. McKnight) uttered some very profane words, directed at my colleague.

In the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I would ask that you ask the Minister of National Defence to withdraw and apologize for the profane comments he made.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, if anything that was said during the heat of Question Period offended my colleagues opposite, I withdraw it, in the tradition of the House.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank all Members.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PETITIONS

SEXUAL DISCRIMINATION

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to present a petition to the House, pursuant to Standing Order 36.

The petitioners call upon the Government to take whatever measures are necessary to ensure that sexual orientation is a prohibited ground of discrimination.

They also call upon the Government to introduce an amendment to the Canadian Human Rights Act to protect persons from discrimination due to their sexual orientation.

MARKETING OF OATS AND BARLEY

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have two petitions to present to the House which have been duly certified.

The first petition calls upon the House of Commons to instruct the Government not to sign the Order in Council which would remove oats from the marketing jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board and to place oats and barley under the Wheat Board Act in such a manner that in future farm organizations and Parliament must be consulted before such changes are made in the marketing of these products.

VIA RAIL SERVICES

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, the second petition is from residents of the Province of Saskatchewan.

The petitioners note that it was the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada which stated that the federal Government has the responsibility to ensure that rail passenger services in Canada be retained, modernized, and expanded as an important part of our national transportation system.

Therefore, they call upon the Government of Canada to live up to its original pledge to support VIA Rail, to abandon its plans for further cuts to VIA's budget, and to provide the necessary resources to allow VIA to operate as a modern, effective transportation company rather than as a museum piece.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall all questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would ask that all Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall all notices of motions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

THE FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Tuesday, May 9, 1989, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure today to take part in this debate on the Budget. This is a debate about our future. It is a debate about responsibility and about the kind of Canada we want for Canadians today and the kind of Canada we want to leave to our children.

Mr. Speaker, I must say I am also very pleased that Canadians were able to see the irresponsibility shown by the Opposition Parties during the last two weeks in their comments on this Budget.

Last month in the Throne Speech, the Government announced its agenda for the next few years, an agenda that emphasizes the Government's commitment to maintaining economic growth across this country, to continue to provide Canadians with a vast range of social programs, to protect the environment and to protect and strengthen the fundamental values that define us as Canadians.

At the time, as Hon. Members will recall, Members on this side of the House stressed the fact that the commitments in the Throne Speech could not be met unless Canada can rid itself of the intolerable burden that the national debt has become.

To understand what we are talking about, Mr. Speaker, I think it would useful to give a short overview of the budgetary process during the last fifteen or twenty years.

Up to the early 1970s, ministers of finance had more or less been able to balance their budgets, which was relatively easy because the economy was in good shape and money was flowing into the coffers of the Treasury. Because those were affluent times, the Government of the day was able to develop many social programs, to provide assistance to the needy, and to fight against regional inequalities. In those days, politicians had it easy. They could afford to be generous and please almost everybody. Those were happy years. But then, around 1973–74, the economy started slowing down. The good time was over with the oil crisis which had a considerable impact on finances, but our friends opposite who formed the Government at that time kept on managing the affairs of the State as if nothing had changed, as if nothing had happened, as though the Canadian economy was still going full speed. And that is when for the first time we started to run a deficit. The Leader of the Liberal Opposition can rightfully claim that he was the first to create annual deficits in this country. That is his legacy to Canadian men and women.

At first, the deficits were small. People thought that it was only a temporary phenomenon, but over the years, they quickly realized that these small early deficits had become enormous and when we assumed power in 1984, something nobody can deny, the annual deficit was close to $40 billion. And during the Liberal Government's last term in office from 1980 to 1984, the trust in the Canadian economy was at its lowest ebb, every month the unemployment rate reached record highs; we had runaway inflation and skyrocketting interest rates.

Such a situation developed because these people pursued year after year short-term budgetary policies and demonstrated a lack of responsibility and courage in the management of the State's affairs. I would not want to be too harsh on these poor Liberals, Mr. Speaker, for on two occasions already Canadians have already passed judgment on the sort of management they pursued then and still continue to propose to the Canadian people.

Now, when I consider the economic record of the past four years, I must say I find it a little more heartening. Canada has experienced sustained growth over that period. Inflation has remained stable; over a million and a half jobs were created throughout this country; the unemployment rate is much lower and the economic outlook is much brighter. Contrary to a popular belief which those who are eager to divide Canada are trying to spread, the continued economic growth I am talking about was not limited simply to Southern Ontario.

Many people want to blame Ontario for all the economic problems some regions of the country may have now, but I believe that, looking directly at the facts, you will see that over the last four years, not only Ontario but all regions of the country benefited from the economic policies put forward by the Government.

In my native province of New Brunswick, Mr. Speaker, which is considered to be one of the disadvantaged regions of the country, New Brunswick and the Atlantic region benefited from the favourable economic climate created by the policies put forward in 1984 by the Government under the Finance Minister's leadership.

Since September 1984, Mr. Speaker, unemployment in New Brunswick, where I come from, has gone from 16.3 to 12.1 per cent. My fellow New Brunswickers will say that 12.1 per cent is still too much, but it is better than 16.3 per cent and this progress was achieved with our Government's economic program.

The growth rate in New Brunswick was higher than the national average during this period. And this year again, investment is expected to increase by some 16 per cent. Admittedly, some people wonder about it because many of us on the Government side talk with satisfaction about the Government's record. We often say that we created many jobs and that Canada's performance is unmatched by any OECD country. So why change, if there are no problems? I think the question is legitimate. That is where the importance of putting things in perspective comes in. We must make every Canadian aware of the financial realities facing us as Canadians. I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that we in Canada absolutely must change our way of seeing things because we can no longer afford the luxury of living and operating on borrowed money, as was done systematically over the last 20 years.

In his budgetary projections and his Budget speech, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) used the phrase: to borrow from the future, which has always been the approach taken by the Liberal Party, while spending like there is no tomorrow is the solution proposed by the New Democrats. However, there comes a time when Canadians the New Democrats often talk about ordinary people, about the average Canadian, about unmarried mothers who have to work and have trouble making ends meet. The people in that Opposition Party, Mr. Speaker, talk a lot about the average person. The Liberal Party does too. The Liberals talked so much about the average Canadian that when we came to power in 1984, they left us a debt of nearly $280 billion.

In this Budget, the Minister of Finance and the Government are asking Canadians to look at the facts and face reality.

[English]

That is a sad reality. What we have been doing in the last 20 years has been literally mortgaging the future of our kids.

I have listened to Members opposite. They all seem to agree that we have a problem with the deficit. None of the solutions put forward by the Minister of Finance have been accepted or even endorsed by opposition Members.

I think one has to look at the financial picture and where the expenditures are taking place to see that this is indeed a tough job. If we Canadians cherish those social programs the way I believe we do all across Canada, I think we will have to make certain choices.

One thing is certain. For the time I am in public life I will not be an accomplice in mortgaging the future of my children and their children, which is what has been happening.

Hon. Members opposite, my good friends the Liberals and socialists, would do well to go back and speak to the people they claim to represent. I do not think they have a corner on representing ordinary Canadians as is their claim to fame. We know how well they served them in the past.

We on this side of the House were elected by ordinary Canadians. I was home on the weekend and spoke to a lot of ordinary Canadians in northwestern New Brunswick, Madawaska and the County of Victoria. I did not meet one person who took offence to the measure in the Budget to tax people earning above $70,000 a year so they would pay back some of the money given to them under family allowances and old age pensions.

I have not met one person in the streets of Edmundston, St. Basile, Grand Falls or Perth who takes offence to the fact that back home that great New Brunswicker whom I respect very much, K. C. Irving, should have to send back the old age pension that he receives every month. K. C. would not need it for his breakfast. I fail to appreciate and understand why, given the massive debt that we as Canadians shoulder, the people on the other side of the House are not applauding this measure introduced in the Budget of the Minister of Finance. If this is not done, then something else will have to be done. We cannot say that we will cut expenditures, reduce the annual deficit, and keep on spending like drunken sailors. We just cannot.

Members opposite will point to the odd expenditure which takes place about which the Government does not even know. There are stupid expenditures taking place out there, I recognize that. However, when we look at the broad picture and the transfer of moneys from the federal Government on to the taxpayers of Canada, they may think that they fool Canadians. Maybe they were fooling them for a while because they think that the money is coming from Ottawa. Ottawa is not giving anything to Canadians. It is just going into the pockets of Canadians, taking money, and redistributing it to the same taxpayers. There is no free lunch. The Budget is about just that. There is no more free lunch. We cannot keep on spending the way we have done without controlling the situation.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I have heard a number of accusations coming from the other side of the House, and as far as I am concerned, I can say that in his Budget, the Minister of Finance has proposed a firm, realistic and responsible approach to our public finances, an approach this Government has been taking since 1984. The Liberals and socialists opposite would have Canadians believe that we just found out about the national debt, that this is the first time the Government ever mentioned the debt, and that we tried to hide this from voters during the last election campaign. Mr. Speaker, it takes a lot of nerve to make a statement like that!

During the election campaign, and it is all there on the record, the Prime Minister said on several occasions, including the morning when the election was called, that we had to tighten public spending and manage Government expenditures responsibly. The Minister of Finance talked about this. What is more, during the election campaign the Chairman of the Finance Committee said, when discussing the proposed national sales tax, that the Government would raise $18 or $14 billion more. This was Blenkarn, the well-known chairman of the committee. This was quite a bombshell, Mr. Speaker, and imagine, the same guy who was shouting that the Minister was taking money out of the pockets. This went on for three hours during the election campaign. During the campaign, the white-collar Socialists and the Liberals were trying to scare people. They were indulging in intellectual terrorism across this country on the issue of the Free Trade Agreement. Even if we had wanted to talk about the deficit, they would never have given us a chance, because they just were not interested in Canada's finances. Those are the people who, during 20 years, have brought Canada on the brink of bankruptcy. It is the legacy which they left us.

Unfortunately, I only have two minutes left, and I would like to take this opportunity to invite my colleagues opposite to seriously consider—and I don't know if they can do that— supporting the measures contained in this Budget, because it is the turning point that will allow future generations of Canadians to benefit also from the government programs and services which our generation can enjoy today.

Mr. Speaker, you don't have to be a prophet to predict that if we do not accept these measures, if we do not adopt them, 15 or 20 years from now, it will no longer be 35 cents of each Canadian taxpayer's dollar that will be spent on debt interest payments, but perhaps the whole dollar. We cannot do that to future generations of Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I see that you are signalling me that my time has expired. I want to invite all members of this House to consider the seriousness of the situation and to support the measures proposed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his Budget.

[English]

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House listened attentively for the last 20 minutes to the Minister's speech. It was very difficult to ascertain what was fact and what was fiction, since the Minister failed to tell the House and Canadians about a number of different issues that must be brought to bear on the Government.

Perhaps the Minister can explain why, during the last election campaign, members of the Government did not tell the facts to Canadians as they are telling them now. They are now very bent on telling Canadians how important the deficit is and how important it is to make sacrifices. They are now saying that it is important that cuts be made and that it is important to claw back on family allowances. They say how important it is to take back on pensions and increase taxes. If it was important in January and February of 1989, why was it not important enough to tell Canadians that in terms of the economic outlook in September, October, and November of last year?

If it is so important now to increase taxes, how can the Minister explain to his constituents, to average families in his riding out in New Brunswick, that if they happen to be on the lower end of the economic scale, earning $25,000 to $30,000 in terms of family income, they now have to pay more than 60 per cent in taxes than they did in 1984, after five federal Budgets?

In the very elitist neighbourhoods in his ridings and elsewhere people earning $100,000 and more will face an 8 per cent increase.

I would like him to tell the House and to explain to his constituents how fair that situation is, how fair that tax regime is. Perhaps Canadians will then have a fair and balanced overview of what the Government is actually trying to do.

Mr. Valcourt: Mr. Speaker, I welcome a chance to answer my colleague from the Liberal Party. The way in which the Hon. Member put his question seemed to downplay the importance of the national debt, the debt that every Canadian, every kid, every person has to shoulder. He said that it was not important enough to speak about it during the last election campaign. I made the point, as did the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister. We spoke about the deficit.

Mr. Crawford: No!

Mr. Marchi: It was written in invisible ink.

Mr. Valcourt: The hon. gentleman says: "No". I invite him to read the speeches that were made during the campaign by different Ministers, by different candidates on behalf of our Party.

Mr. Marchi: Table them.

Mr. Valcourt: That is not the issue. This just shows how much in the past and how not forward looking is the Liberal Party of Canada. Members of that Party would rather deal with what happened in November when we had a challenge facing us from coast to coast about the debt situation that plagues every Canadian. No, this is not serious enough for the Hon. Member. He would rather stay in the past and talk about what happened. What is going to happen in the future is what matters.

The Liberal Party has failed to bring in a solution or to propose anything. The Liberal Party has completely failed as Canadians in this House to tell the Minister of Finance that it is wrong to do this, that this should be done instead. The Liberal Party has not done this because it has no clue of what is taking place. The finance critic for the Liberal Party had an opinion as to the fiscal situation, as to what the Budget should be. Every Member in that caucus, their leader included, have denied the words of the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North (Mr. MacLaren). He is not even allowed to ask a question in the House. How many days has that Hon. Member been silenced? How many days has the official critic of the Liberal Party been silenced in this House? Explain that to Canadians. Why is he muzzled? Why is the Hon. Member for Etobicoke North muzzled?

An Hon. Member: Shirley Martin is being muzzled, not us.

Mr. Valcourt: The finance critic for the Liberal Party may be muzzled by his colleagues but I think that he agrees with what this Government is doing. He talks about the increase in taxes. He asks the elitists. There are no elitists in my riding. We are all poor people. I met a gentleman during the weekend. I do not know his income but I believe he earns over $100,000, maybe close to that, and he told me he was going to have to pay $5,000 more in taxes next year on account of this Budget.

An Hon. Member: He was happy.

Mr. Valcourt: He does not mind. He knows that if Canada—

An Hon. Member: What is his name?

Mr. Valcourt: What is his name? I have too much respect for him to give it publicly but I will ask him and I will send you the name. I even know of another one who contributed a few bucks to my association because he was happy with the Budget. But I am not surprised that the Liberal Party does not understand and appreciate the real life that is taking place but Canadians out there do and they will approve of this Budget.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saskatoon—Dundurn on a question or comment.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, the previous speaker mentioned that on two occasions the Liberal Party has been defeated. I would suggest to the Hon. Member opposite that that also implies that the Conservatives have been elected twice. It is long past time that the Government opposite blamed anyone but itself for the economic problems this country is facing.

Since the Conservative Party was elected in 1984, the total federal deficit has doubled. It doubled in four years compared with the previous history of this country. Yet Members opposite stand there and blame Members on this side of the House, including the New Democratic Party, which they accuse of being socialist. I thank them for that because at least if nothing else the Member knows enough to call a spade a spade and a socialist a socialist, which is what we are.

An Hon. Member: The "S" word.

Mr. Fisher: The "S" word, yes. It is long past time when Members opposite can blame anyone else for the problems this nation is suffering except themselves. It wants solutions. There are solutions. Since the Conservatives were elected in 1984, the proportion of Government revenue from corporate tax has decreased from 15 per cent to 10.7 per cent. I would suggest that if the Conservatives were to put a little bit more fairness—and I stress little, because there was not much in it previously—back into the tax system, that some of the nation's problems would be alleviated as far as the financial mess is concerned.

I would also like to point out that as far back as 1962 the proportion of corporate tax was 26.1 per cent and the individual tax was a mere 34 per cent. It has now gone up to 57 per cent as of about six months ago, compared with 49.8 per cent when the Conservative Party was elected. Taxes for the individual in this country have gone up from 49.8 per cent to 57.7 per cent since the Conservatives were elected. That is taking tax revenue from the ordinary Canadian whose average earnings during that period of time decreased in real value by over 5 per cent.

Mr. Valcourt: How can the Hon. Member honestly stand up in this House and make that charge when the people in the socialist party claim to be so honest? He knows, if he cares to look at the facts, that what we inherited in 1984 was a debt that had risen from some $18 billion to $200 billion in 1984. What is dishonest and what I do not accept is a socialist standing up today telling us that we have let the debt go up in the last four years, when every single proposal made by this Government to reduce the deficit in the four previous years was opposed by every socialist. Every day in this House the socialists called for more spending. They think we grow money on trees. They are dreamers. They are dreamers who have no idea of what the reality is in this country. The socialists think that they can take—

An Hon. Member: Tax the poor.

Mr. Valcourt: These are the same people who were governing Manitoba. Along came the socialists in Manitoba. Look at what happened in Manitoba. Those poor Manitobans. All those poor people below the poverty line. What happened during those great years of socialist government? The people were worse off.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The last question or comment to the Member for Calgary Northeast (Mr. Kindy)

Mr. Kindy: Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the Hon. Minister because I used to sit with him on the Justice Committee. I appreciate what he is saying but I have some problems with his numbers. In 1984, the deficit was around $180 billion. The projections for 1989 are $353 billion. The Auditor General has said that we might be short another $30 billion that is not accounted for. This would almost raise the debt to $380 billion. This is in five years. We have really doubled the deficit. I do not think this Budget really addresses the deficit and debt reduction. I am for debt reduction. I would like to see the deficit reduced but I think this Budget does not do it because we did not cut enough. This is my explanation to the numbers. For instance, we give tax breaks to big companies and tax deferrals, probably in the order of $35 billion. I think we should get that money back because we have a debt. It should be paid for. So I have some problem with his numbers. I would like him to comment on how the debt can be doubled in five years and at the same time say we did the proper thing was done. When the Conservatives took over, the over-all—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Could I ask the Member to conclude, please, as the time is running out?

Mr. Kindy: In 1985, the total expenses of the Government were $109 billion. They are projected to be $142 billion. That is an increase of over $33 billion. I do not call that cutting the deficit and the debt. I would like him to comment on that.

• (1540)

Mr. Valcourt: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says that we have not cut enough and he has a problem with the numbers. He points to the fact that the debt, he says, has increased during the last five years, and no one is disputing that. But if the Hon. Member cares to look at the figures, at the expenditures of the Government and at how much money goes to service that debt, there is the problem we face.

Mr. Lapierre: Cut.

Mr. Valcourt: The Liberals say cut, but every time a cut is proposed they yell for more money. We know and Canadians know from coast to coast that you cannot trust the Liberals to cut any deficit but you can trust the Liberals to mortgage the future of the kids of this country.

An Hon. Member: They did it.

Mr. Valcourt: To come back to the Hon. Member from Calgary Northeast, who says there are not enough cuts, my own view on this Budget is that it is well balanced because of the regions of Canada. It is all right to say that we should have cut more, but if you look at the balance, these are serious cuts that will take effect on the fiscal framework over the next five years. The deficit will be cut by half by 1992-93 and that is, I think, serious progress in the right direction. The purpose of this, as the Minister of Finance has indicated time and time again, is to allow the growth in Canada to continue to ensure that we can generate enough revenues to pay the interest on the debt and also to afford needed programs for Canadians from coast to coast.

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak on the motion that the House approves the budgetary policy of this Government. I will be speaking against that motion because I do not think that middle income and low income earners in Canada would support this motion on this budgetary policy. I think they would say no to this budgetary policy. The homeless of this country would say no to this budgetary policy. The one in six children who are living in poverty would say no to this budgetary policy. Those who are unemployed and who see the Minister projecting that 8.2 per cent unemployment in this country for this year is an acceptable level would say no to this budgetary policy.

This is what has led to a lack of trust in all the policies of the Government and, in particular, this Budget. When taxpayers look at what is happening and see that in 1985 a family whose assets are valued $6.2 billion received a $500 million tax break, they do not have much trust in the Canadian Government and its policies.

Since 1984, the budgetary policies of this Government have meant that corporate taxes have increased by eight per cent, personal income tax by 45 per cent and sales tax by 67 per cent. I do not support this budgetary policy and I believe that Canadians do not support this budgetary policy.

I would like to speak particularly to some issues in this Budget having to do with northern Canada, those areas that are more remote and, as a consequence of this Budget, will experience even more severely the effects of it. This refers not only to northern areas like my own, the Yukon, the Northwest Territories, but also to many rural parts of Canada.

Let me outline just a few issues to illustrate why it would be impossible to support this kind of budgetary policy.

First, a simple item to some people, a one cent increase in tax on aviation fuel. The Yukon Government has been working very hard to reduce the cost of fuel in the Territory because it is of vital importance to northerners where we have long distances for commercial transportation as well as for communication between communities. The impact of the one cent a litre increase will be substantial. It will be substantial for those small business enterprises, such as outfitting and trapping, which depend on not just aviation fuel but other fuels as well to which an additional tax has been added.

Tourism is a major industry in the North. Most of Yukon's tourist travel is from the United States and Alaska as well as from southern Canada. In surveys several years ago tourists cited gasoline costs as one of the most prohibitive reasons regarding their ability to travel in the North. When we talk generally about travelling in the North, I want to remind Members that we are not just talking about a Sunday drive, we are talking about the life line to remote villages. Our dependence, for example, on the Alaska Highway for ground transportation of goods into the Yukon as well as to transportation by air.

A second example is that of the telecommunications tax. Last year when the Government imposed a 10 per cent telecommunications tax covering all long distance calls as well all calls made by business, it was devastating for many individuals and businesses in the Yukon. Studies have indicated that Whitehorse residents pay as much as three times more on telephone services than residents of southern Canada. Last year, the first year after the telecommunication tax was imposed, it cost Yukoners, and we are talking about a very small number of people, $4.5 million in extra costs for essential phone service. This year the projected cost is $4.75 million. To northerners, long distance phone service is essential in the same way that local service is to southerners.

Such things as the use of mobile and radio phones in many northern and rural areas is very common and necessary for safety reasons, business reasons, as well as for personal reasons for making appointments with the doctor or school teachers. All of the calls made on those phones are taxed because all of them are considered to be long distance calls. It is clearly an unjust and inequitable measure instituted by this Government.

Another area is that of the increased tax on building materials. Building materials in the North and in many rural areas and northern parts of the provinces, both because of the transportation costs to bring those materials to source, are extremely expensive. A tax from 8 per cent to 9 per cent, as provided for in this Budget, is not fair. It is also harmful to the development of the northern economy.

This leads me to make a few comments on the whole aspect of regional development and the philosophy that this Budget embodies about this Government's policy toward development of our country in a national sense beyond central Canada. The Government has broken its promise to the far-flung regions of Canada with its assault on regional development and its cut-backs of over 40 per cent over a period of time.

The other issue which affects all Canadians, not just simply northerners, is the whole question of taxation. This Budget, as I mentioned earlier, has been seen as the biggest tax grab in Canadian history. But it is a tax grab on one particular group, a tax grab on the middle-income to low-income earner. It is a claw-back on senior citizens as well as on families. It is certainly not a tax grab on large profit-making corporations. I will mention several examples of this, particularly in terms of the inability of this Government to institute tax fairness. It is fine to talk about tax reform but the reforms have been very minimal on the high-income earners and profit-making corporations in this country and have been maximized on the individual who is now paying the largest percentage of tax.

The Government, in order to indicate that it was going to tax the wealthy at a greater level, put an additional surtax on Canadians making over $50,000 a year and an additional one on Canadians making over $70,000 a year. In principle that may be all right except that we have to look at the facts and see that over 6,000 upper-income Canadians do not pay any tax at all. A surtax on nothing is nothing and 8 per cent of zero is zero. Those wealthy whose tax lawyers are not quite up to scratch can afford to pay a bit more. After all, since the Government came to power in 1984, the richest 1 per cent have had an average tax cut of $3,500. This is not tax fairness, this is not a policy, this is a tax grab.

On the other hand, the question of a surtax for all Canadians is an interesting one and is an illustration of the Government's inability to keep its promises. When the surtax was imposed on income, we were told that the general national sales tax would replace the surtax. Now we are being told that it will not replace it. The surtax will stay on. I suppose one might say that we were naive and wanted to believe that a certain tax measure that was imposed might at some point be withdrawn, but clearly the Government has gone back on this promise.

In addition, Canadians, through other attacks on social programs, will be paying more. Unemployment insurance is a good example with a 15 per cent hike in premiums, premiums that are now to be paid by the employer and the employee. All of these tax measures, and we are not yet talking about the sales tax but the increase in gasoline taxes, the increase in fuel taxes, the telephone communications tax, the increase in excise taxes, will mean a decrease of well over $700 per year for Canadian families.

Sales and excise taxes have also gone up. Again, we are told that when the national sales tax comes in, the manufacturers' sales tax will no longer be in place. That tax has gone up from 12 per cent to 13.4 per cent. Even at that level, more is being paid.

When we add on the new sales and excise tax, a regressive form of tax which hits low-income earners as well as high-income earners, we see that taxes have climbed 62.4 per cent between 1984 and 1988. When we add on the new sales and excise taxes, consumption taxes, those hidden taxes, it will have increased an astounding 171 per cent since the Government came to power. Support this budgetary policy? Hardly.

These kinds of taxes affect northerners more severely. First, the cost of living is about 30 per cent to 50 per cent higher depending upon where one lives in the Yukon or Northwest Territories. All of these measures will have an exponentially higher effect on the taxpayers of the area and on the cost of living in the area. Clearly, this will lead to an inflationary cost of living for northerners.

Some measures such as the sales tax credit have been built into the Budget. However, those will not address the issues of the majority of northerners. Because of the higher cost of living, many people are already making higher salaries so the sales tax credit will not kick in at the level that really is the poverty level in a place like the Yukon. As well, the claw-back of old age security and family allowances will have a similar effect on the cost of living in the North.

Earlier, I mentioned unemployment insurance and the effect this budgetary policy will have on the development of regional economies. Unemployment insurance will cost Yukon employers and employees approximately $2 million a year, or $65 for every man, woman and child in the Yukon. That is an insupportable cost to enhance business development.

At the same time, the Government went back on its promise to institute a national child care program. This will have very severe effects for all Canadians, not just those in the regions. We will have a very short-term gain but very long-term pain if we do not care about our children now, if we do not provide the resources our children deserve so that they will become productive citizens themselves.

An Hon. Member: An investment in the future.

Ms. McLaughlin: My colleague says that it is an investment in the future and he is absolutely right. It is an investment in education, child care and health. The Budget is saying that that is not an investment, we should cut back on that. However, that is an investment in the future. We are not simply looking for a short-term gain. We are looking to build a nation for the future.

Finally, I would like to say a word on the national sales tax which is to be instituted, it appears, without the co-operation of the provinces at this point. Even such organizations as the Canadian Federation of Small Business have pointed out what a severe handicap this will be for many of the small businesses which exist in my riding. They will find the bookkeeping involved in collecting these taxes extremely expensive as well as an added burden. What about music teachers who give music lessons in their homes? We will make Canada a nation not only of taxpayers but of tax collectors. We will all be running around trying to figure out how to collect taxes when we provide a service such as teaching music.

I am particularly concerned that national conservation and alternate energy initiatives will be phased out by 1990-91. How can the Government say that it is concerned about the environment when Government support for the development of alternate energy sources will be phased out? We held an emergency debate during which many Hon. Members from all sides of the House spoke of their concerns over the oil spill in Valdez, Alaska, and its environmental consequences. What is the Government doing? Is it putting more resources into alternate energy sources? No, it is taking them out.

How can the taxpayers trust the budgetary policy of the Government? I say they cannot. Previous speakers have talked about the debt. We are all concerned about the debt. It is important and we want to see it addressed.

I have some suggestions. What about a 20 per cent minimum corporate tax on profit-making corporations? What about not spending $2.7 million on advertising to convince us that we have a deficit? We know we have a deficit. What about that $3 million that we spent to have the post office convince us that it is great for us to privatize and take away our services, lower the wages of workers and try to destroy the postal system? There are three examples alone if the Government is looking for alternatives.

I would like to conclude by saying that the budgetary policy of the Government cannot be trusted by Members on this side of the House. It cannot be trusted by Canadians. It is a litany of broken promises. It is not a budget for the future, it is a budget for an immediate tax grab and in the long term, it will create inflation and higher unemployment, and it will have very serious consequences for Canadian taxpayers.

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I commend the Hon. Member on her speech. I understand that perhaps she has aspirations of going further in the New Democratic Party, and I wish her the best of luck.

It would be fair to the House if we were to understand where she is coming from when talking about the Budget that was introduced by the best Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) this country has ever known. She suggested that we impose a 20 per cent extra tax on the rich people of Canada. That would involve a certain amount of money. That would be the proposal of the NDP and the Hon. Member, should she become the leader of that Party. The philosophy of this side of the House is that to balance the Budget the Government must on one side cut its operations and administration of programs, and on the other side tax. If the NDP Party believes that we must balance the Budget and attack our global national deficit, could the Member give us some figures as to how she would bring our annual deficit down to zero?

• (1600)

Second, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Hon. Member for Yukon, assuming that she does have aspirations to the leadership of her Party, where she stands on the Meech Lake Accord since the Province of Québec would be brought officially into our constitution and into our Confederation. What does she think would be the state of investor confidence in the Province of Québec from outside the country and from other provinces?

Ms. McLaughlin: The first thing that I would do in order to reduce the debt, which this Government has doubled since coming into office, is to not elect Conservative and Liberal Governments that first created the debt and then continued the debt. That would be the first thing that I would do.

Since the Member opposite is interested in political ideology, when the New Democratic Saskatchewan Government was in power, it had a balanced budget. When the Manitoba New Democratic Government was in, it had a balanced budget. When the New Democratic Government of British Columbia left office, it had a $300 million surplus, and social democratic countries such as Sweden not only manage to have a balanced budget, but to have an unemployment rate of under 3 per cent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. McLaughlin: However, I will list again for the Member some specific suggestions because he may wish to take notes. The first suggestion that I mentioned is something that has been instituted in the United States. I do not always like to use the United States as a model but under Ronald Reagan there were some good ideas. The first is a 20 per cent minimum corporate tax on profit-making corporations. When you look at the deferred taxes that corporations have outstanding, which I believe is at $36 billion at the moment, that is higher than the deficit. If we were to charge interest on those deferred taxes, that would be a way to raise revenue. I pointed out in my speech that a lot of money is spent trying to sell Canadians on this Government's policies such as the $2.7 million spent to sell us and tell us that there is a deficit, the $3 million spent by Canada Post to try and convince us that privatization is a good thing. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that there are several evident ways that one could reduce the Budget.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out to the Hon. Member for Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin) that since the election of the Mulroney Government in 1984, there has not been a Government in the country that has spent more money in her area than our present Government. We have spent money to help her people, especially the native people. We have done it in a number of ways. But we must pay our bills and gather the revenue necessary for this country to operate. I agree that it is unfortunate that we must pay tax, and it is unfortunate that we must have a federal sales tax, but I really cannot see the basis for her argument when she discusses the federal sales tax and the goods and services tax that we are going to implement. She should realize that we are going to reduce the amount of federal sales tax. Regarding the 13.5 per cent example to which she referred, it is going to be reduced to 9 per cent. So where is the logic in her argument? Is it going to be more burdensome for the Canadian people to carry 9 per cent versus a 13.5 per cent rate of tax?

It is great to complain, but let us have some solid suggestions. There is an old expression "Everyone wants to complain about the weather, but no one wants to do anything about it". It is the same with taxation. Members opposite complain about taxation. However, they do not want to do anything about it. The bills in this country have to be paid. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has taken steps to ensure that we are taxed fairly and evenly across this country from one end to the other. No area has benefited more than the northern areas under the present taxation formula that the Minister of Finance has put forward. He will continue to put it forward to ensure that the northern peoples, all people from one end of this country to the other, are treated fairly, equitably and receive the types of services and programs that they deserve.

In relation to the argument on the child care Bill, we all know what happened to the child care Bill in the last Parliament. We passed the legislation. We brought it forward. It was passed here in this House of Commons. However, it was killed in the Liberal Senate, her friends to her right. The Minister noted last week that we will bring that legislation forward in the Thirty-Fourth Parliament. I am sure that when parliamentarians see that legislation, read it and interpret it, they will be very proud of it. Many of the concerns that the Member for Yukon has expressed will be addressed in this Thirty-Fourth Parliament.

Ms. McLaughlin: I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that I heard a question, but I did hear something about proposed alternatives. I would say that there are a number of alternatives that could be proposed. This Government should support the aspirations of aboriginal people. It should ensure that land claims are settled, ensure that the compensation through land claims is carried forward so that aboriginal groups can become self-sustaining, can develop economically as they wish to. That is a very large part of what this Government can do.

In terms of the child care Bill, I would remind the Member that at the standing committee which heard submissions on child care, not one of the 39 groups that appeared before that committee approved of the Government's child care Bill. There was a general community consensus of professionals and others who work in that field that this Bill would not address the child care needs of this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kindy: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the speech of the New Democratic Party hopeful. I would like to have her comments on how the national sales tax and the goods and services tax would affect the northern people. I personally believe that there is an inflationary component to that tax, and the compliance costs would be extremely high for Canadians, probably about $4 billion. It would put small farmers and small businesses at a disadvantage compared to big businesses. Small farmers would be required to issue invoices on all sales, and maintain records of taxes paid on all inputs. This would create a lot of cost to them. It would as well put in difficulty small businesses compared to big businesses which already have excellent accounting systems. I would like her comment on that.

Ms. McLaughlin: I basically agree with the comments of the Member opposite. We do not have many large corporations, other than perhaps mining, in many of the northern and more remote areas. They have a very narrow profit margin. They also have a great profit problem. I believe last year there was a study by the Canadian Federation of Independent Businesses trying to have them identify their major problems. Something like over 70 per cent said that their major problem was paperwork for the Government. This will increase substantially, and many businesses in my area certainly would not be able to hire extra accounting services. It is a very severe concern for people in that area. When I say small business, we could be talking of a two-person business, a three-person business needing not only additional accounting resources, but a whole new training on this. It is going to be a complex procedure. It is not clear yet what the mechanisms will be. It will be a substantial cost to small business. I can assure the House that it is a substantial concern to small business people at the moment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Simcoe Centre.

Mrs. Edna Anderson (Simcoe Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is a great honour to rise to debate in the House today for the first time as the elected representative of the constituency of Simcoe Centre. I do so with a very keen sense of history.

It was 72 years ago that my grandfather, the Hon. James Chaplin, Conservative Member of Parliament for Lincoln, and Prime Minister Arthur Meighen's Minister of Trade and Commerce, sat three rows down and four seats over to do likewise.

Today, in the throes of embarking upon my new career, retirement now long behind me, I reflect on the counsel he gave to me as a child. He spoke of Canada. He spoke of building a better Canada. He spoke of building a better Canada for future generations, for his granddaughter's generation. Today, in that very same spirit, we are here in an attempt to demonstrate how we view our legacy.

The Budget we are now debating speaks to passing on to our grandchildren a nation better than we found it. Although I am new to this place, I have lived my life and raised my children in a part of this country where it is understood that one does not live beyond his or her means. I understand that. My constituents understand that. They know that we cannot keep borrowing simply to pay the interest on what has already been borrowed. In the real world one goes broke or becomes bankrupt when those loans are called in, and then there are no choices.

As a nation our flexibility to pay for caring and compassionate social programs would be eliminated. Our ability to compete in the world would be eliminated. Our choices of how we want to live as a nation would be eliminated. Governments would have to raise more and more money out of everybody's pocket just to stand still. That money would not go to social programs, or to alleviating regional disparities, or to defending our nation. It would simply go to paying the interest, not the principal. So taxes inevitably go up, and so would inflation and interest rates. Programs would be decimated as we spent just about all our revenues on merely the interest.

As the television commercial states: "You can pay me now or you can pay me later". The problem is that it is not those of us here today who will be paying more later. It will be our children and our grandchildren.

The Government and the Party I have the privilege to represent understand that. We know why we are here. We know our responsibility goes beyond the next election or the next leadership convention. We have acted.

The growth of the public debt which averaged 23.5 per cent a year over the four years ending in 1984–85 has been reduced to an average annual growth of 12.7 per cent over the four years just ended. By 1988–89, the growth in debt will have declined to 9.9 per cent. That is the first time in 15 years that the debt growth has been less than 10 per cent. However, if controlling the public debt is our objective, then deficit reduction is our means.

From 1984 to 1989, the budgetary deficit was reduced from $38 billion to $29 billion. Relative to the size of the economy, the deficit fell from 8.6 per cent to 4.8 per cent of Gross Domestic Product. The provisions of this Budget, along with sustained economic growth, will reduce the deficit to $15 billion in 1993–94. This is very real progress indeed.

By carefully balancing revenue increases and expenditure reductions, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has put before the House a comprehensive plan for addressing the national debt. Not driven by some blind allegiance to antiquated micro or macro-economic theories, the Budget has as its reason for being the need to preserve for future generations—for the grandchildren—an ability to continue to make choices. The Government knows all about making choices; the right choices.

Recently, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) announced a new labour force development strategy for the 1990s. It will be based upon consultation with the private sector to design programs to train Canadians and upgrade their skills in order that they can better meet the demands of a quickly evolving labour market.

I am a strong supporter of the Budget precisely because it will allow future generations the ability to make excellent choices like these.

In a similar light, it recently was my honour, on behalf of the Minister of Employment, to announce in my constituency federal funding to the Barrie and District Industrial Training Council for use to help launch an experimental job skills project in participating secondary schools throughout Simcoe County.

Skills Canada is intended to improve the image of manufacturing careers, and provide an incentive for students to pursue technical careers boosting enrolment in many technical colleges and schools, while providing technical workers for industrial growth. This program is unique in Canada and the Government has shown innovative leadership by providing the start-up funds.

Last week, 12 Simcoe County students specializing in 12 different technical areas, travelled to Columbus, Ohio to participate in an international skills competition. Their results were impressive. Competing against 1,200 others, they placed in the top third of the competition. One student even came home to Huronia with a bronze medal.

Just as programs like these assist today's generation to make necessary choices, so in turn do future Governments and future generations need the ability to do the same. Let there be no mistake that this is far more than the usual Budget debate over tinkering at the edges. This is a debate about the very future, the economic future, of our nation.

It is a debate between those on the other side of the House who take no responsibility for that future, and who did not even when they were in office and had that responsibility, and those of us who say, simply, that it is time to pay our way, time to make the tough choices so that our grandchildren can determine what type of Canada they want.

It is time to stand up and be counted. It is time to decide whether political expediency counts for more than our grandchildren's future. I have listened intently to this debate for the past several days. I have heard absolutely nothing from the other side of the House to indicate anything more than what some call political posturing.

What has the Opposition been saying throughout this debate? It is simple. It has been taking the easy route. Nobody likes tax increases, so it says cut taxes. Nobody likes spending cuts, so it says do not cut expenditures. But where is there responsibility to the nation? Who speaks for the grandchildren? How big a burden is it willing to put on our grandchildren in its single-minded pursuit of the immediately popular?

Every minute, every hour, every day the debt compounds and we, everyone of us in this country, go deeper into debt and must dig deeper to pay the interest.

Only by getting it under control, only by taking the tough decisions now while we still have a chance, can my grandchildren expect to have the life my grandfather dreamt of for me. The choice is ours. It is ours here and now, not at some indefinite point in the future when it will be too late.

For the sake of the grandchildren, we must make the right choice.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, let me congratulate the Hon. Member on her speech. I must say, however, that if the Government was really serious about the deficit in this country it would be attacking the great tax give-aways that have been in place since the days the Liberals were in office. The give-aways to corporations in Canada now amount to some $34 billion. These give-aways have been determined by economists to be completely uneconomic.

If the Government was genuine, it would introduce a minimum corporate tax. Instead, we see the crocodile tears shed about the deficit, which I may say, are shed for a deficit which has largely remained untouched by this Budget. Instead we see a Government that is repudiating its election promises to the people of Canada. It is repudiating solemn commitments made to Canadians. The commitment on child care has been repudiated. The commitment on social programs has been repudiated. Its commitments on regional programs have been repudiated. Its commitments on unemployment insurance have been repudiated. Its commitment on official development assistance has been repudiated. A sacred trust on universality has been repudiated by the Government.

If the Government was genuinely going to tackle the deficit, the Budget should have attacked the tax give-aways that have dominated the unfair tax system that this country has had for so long.

Let me conclude by making some specific reference to the impact of this Budget on Victoria. We have seen the CBC cut-backs move further back the commitment which has been made for over 35 years to the people of Victoria for CBC facilities. We see the Government beginning to edge away from its commitment on the Polar 8. We hope that is not so. We will fight hard to ensure that it is not so.

We see the threat, now reported to us by the Conference Board, of an economic slowdown as a result, just as our community is beginning to work itself out of the 1981-82 deficit. We see the E and N Railway under threat as a result of this Budget.

Will the Hon. Member comment on the failure of the Budget to deal with what is on all sides understood to be the critical issue of the environment? Why is there nothing in the Budget for the environment?

Mrs. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, I believe the Hon. Member has not read the Budget in its entirety. We certainly have been taxing those with higher incomes and we certainly are protecting those with lower incomes.

The environment is most definitely included in the Budget. It is my priority. We must not forget that we are looking after the future of our grandchildren. The time to do it is now. We have to tighten our belts.

Our social programs have been definitely kept intact. Certainly those who are in need will be well cared for.

Mr. Kindy: Mr. Speaker, I would like the Hon. Member to comment on the goods and services tax. It will be introduced in 1991, with approximately 9 per cent on all goods and services. This tax, in the words of the Minister, will probably bring in revenue of $23 billion. Does the Hon. Member feel this tax is fair to consumers? Does she approve of this type of taxation?

Mrs. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, the new goods and services tax will be replacing the present manufacturer's tax. Very few people realize that the manufacturer's tax, aside from being very unfair and a burden at roughly 12 per cent, will be removed entirely before the 9 per cent goods and services tax will be implemented. Just that one tax will be paid by the consumer and it will be much better.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate my fellow committee person the Member for Simcoe Centre (Mrs. Anderson) on her speech.

Will she tell us the source of financing for that very commendable school program that took place in Barrie? The kind of training the young people receive today to prepare them for the future is certainly commendable. The competition in which they participated in Columbus, Ohio, is an exemplary example of the talents of our young people. If only we had the jobs to be able to make use of those talents.

What is the source of the funding for the program in Barrie? Second, can she assure Members of the House that after this Budget similar financing will be available after January, 1990, for similar programs?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question and comment period must be addressed to the speech of the Hon. Member. I do not recall if the Hon. Member mentioned specifically the issue that the Member for Saskatoon—Dundurn has raised. The Member may reply if she wishes.

Mrs. Anderson: Mr. Speaker, the Skills Canada Project is financed through the federal Government and through industry as well. It is assisted through the educators in our community. We are hopeful that this program will be adopted throughout the country. It is highly successful and has made young students who are at the drop-out stage and really do not have a yearning to go to university aware that technical schools do exist. They can earn a good living and be trained.

The industry is providing assistance on a co-operative basis, taking students into their industries or providing supplies through what I believe is called "adopt a shop". It has been a very successful project in our area and I am extremely excited about it.

• (1630)

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to rise today to represent the views of my riding, Eglinton—Lawrence, on the Budget. I do so with some sense of anger. I say anger because my constituents, so Canadian in their willingness to work themselves out of crises, so trusting in Government to apply the same principles of reason and responsibility to their accounts, and so accommodating in their contribution to the common weal, have themselves in anger deluged my office with objections to a Budget that they define as a blueprint for disaster.

I would have preferred that it had not been so, that the Ministers of our Government might have erred here and there. After all, we cannot accuse them of being more than mere mortals. But so pernicious is the all-pervasiveness of fault in procedure, thought and in context, that my constituents of Eglinton—Lawrence no longer want me to merely criticize the Budget but rather to work to bury it.

What other end could be expected of a document that is so without indication of planning for the country's future, so bereft of courage in addressing the challenges of tomorrow, so senseless in its direction or so mean in its spirit? My constituents, who can be best characterized as having a self-help approach to problem solving, are asking if this reactionary—and I mean it in a social and economic sense—Conservative Budget has as its only purpose the demonstration that a Government incapable of comprehending larger social economic goals is still petty enough to say: "We won the election. Now we will rub your noses in it".

We have seen ample examples of this cavalier small-mindedness by the Government over the last four years when Canada has experienced some fortuitous, even if localized, healthy growth in the economy. Some would even call it unprecedented growth.

Of course, there was an accompanying windfall in government revenues, as more Canadians entered the labour force and were gainfully employed in their own enterprise or in the enterprise of others. At the same time, there was a diminution of people who were dependent on social programs. A reasonable individual might have expected that the Government would have seized the opportunity to use good times and profits to alleviate the disparities and to invest in Canada's future. Not so. Instead, Tory myopia set in.

Employment training decreased by 27 per cent over the last four years from $2.2 billion to $1.6 billion. Tory support for R and D, so vital to international competitiveness, actually decreased over that period of time.

However, what could we expect of a Conservative Government that sat back as self-interest in the marketplace generated a concentration of wealth so unchecked that mergers and takeovers increased by some 48 per cent and, now, the top 25 firms control 35 per cent of Canada's economic assets?

Could one expect any less of a Government that saw fit to increase taxes on lower-income and middle-income families by some 62 per cent while inflicting—and I choose the word guardedly—families with annual incomes of over $100,000 or more per annum with a mere 8 per cent increase in taxation? Instead of planning for the future the Tories attempted to solve short-range financial problems by pillaging our earnings.

I know that Hon. Members, colleagues on both sides of the House, wonder and ask themselves would that the Tories had applied such meanness evenly. Unfortunately, the middle and lower-income groups, as we have seen, have borne the brunt of tax increases while corporate earnings were only taxed by some 28 per cent during the same period. In fact, these same businesses which pay roughly $11 billion to $12 billion in income taxes received almost $9 billion in subsidies, grants and tax write-offs in 1987 alone.

Thinking Canadians in Eglinton—Lawrence, as elsewhere, are aghast when they learn that corporate income taxes as a proportion of GDP have actually decreased by 4 per cent under the Tory Government while personal income taxes have increased by 24 per cent—the highest tax increases in Canadian history. For what purpose? The Government certainly did not address the debt and, if we accept the figures of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) himself, not even the deficit.

The public debt of $177 billion that represented 45 per cent of GDP in 1984 has ballooned under these great managers, these all-seeing visionaries, these all-knowing builders, to $321 billion, and 55 per cent of GDP in 1988, and growing. A $29 billion deficit forecast for 1989 is still $1 billion higher than it was last year, even after tax increases.

Why did'nt the Minister of Finance and his Government address the major problems of the Canadian economy? Why did'nt they concentrate their efforts on the quality of this economy and what is necessary to make it a success over the next five or ten years?

With this Budget, the Minister should strive to provide the economy with flexibility and diversification, unless it can increase the wealth of this country to improve the welfare of all Canadians men and women by progressing on several fronts at the same time.

[English]

Yet over the next five years the 10 occupations expected to contribute the highest number of new jobs are in the medium to low-skilled positions where the remuneration is below the weekly average. I ask government Members this: Whose kids are being targeted for those jobs? Whose children are being slotted for such a future?

The Minister of Finance bold-facedly says that this Budget aims to increase the level of unemployment, a level already on the upswing in seven out of ten provinces. Canadians must surely find it hard to appreciate knowing, as they do, that approximately 60 per cent of that unemployment currently represents and is attributable to job mismatching.

Approximately 600,000 job vacancies go begging. That figure represents the highest percentage, the highest total, since 1966. Some 300 categories of skilled jobs are not being filled, and in many areas the situation is not improving. In fact, it is getting worse.

As an example, the average age of tradesmen in the construction industry, which is so vital to the growth of many of our big metropolises, such as Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver, is 55. Worse, Canada's illiteracy, as we have seen evidenced by one in six adult Canadians, costs businesses some $4 billion annually, and society as a whole a total of $10 billion.

The results for Canadian productivity are as obvious as they are harsh. Anticipated growth in productivity of a paltry .7 per cent over the next four years is predicted when a competitive position in the global economy requires 1.5 per cent to 2 per cent growth.

Canadians will be forgiven for their skepticism and their cynicism when Tory propaganda, which my hon. colleague to the left has indicated is costing Canadians $2.7 million, aims to convince Canadians and all of us in this Chamber that their Government is in a bind and must tax its way out. The past four "fat cat" Tory Budgets declined to meet the minimum standards of sound economic management.

The sins of omission read like a litany of betrayals for Canadians: No comprehensive job training, no national educational strategy; decreased support for R and D; insufficient support for export-based manufacturing industries; deregulatory policies that favour monopolies to the detriment of competitiveness; disproportionately heavy taxation of the two groups with the greatest input in the economy—and I refer to those two income groups at the lower and middle spectrum—the abandonment of any industrial strategy that might have increased the softer lines of all-Canadians, widened the tax base and reduced dependence on Government programs.

Where budgets in the past have buttressed the infrastructure of our society, provided impetus to growth and instilled confidence at home and abroad, this Budget perpetuates that sense of drift now so characteristic of Tory governments. The errors of omission are compounded by a perversity of commission in this Budget. The Minister has set in motion the dismantling of the infrastructure that binds this country and gives it that chance of survival in the face of continental pressure.

We see that the private sector will soon rule over Air Canada and the Post Office. Gone will be VIA Rail and an equitable employment insurance system as the Government withdraws from the economy.

Moreover, this Finance Minister (Mr. Wilson) refuses to recognize the damage that he is inflicting globally. His Government has gone back on defence and aid commitments, actions so symptomatic of its cynical domestic deceptions. With cut-backs to the ODA, the Minister has compromised our national word of honour. As a result, he has undermined our international moral authority, diminished our image as an honest broker, weakened our export markets and generally convinced our allies and friends abroad that we are no longer reliable.

The rest of the world is quickly learning what Canadians now take as a given: That the Tories cannot locate the word "integrity" in any dictionary.

An Hon. Member: That is right.

Mr. Volpe: However, this Budget shows something worse. In fact, it shows that the Finance Minister is unable to properly appreciate either the economic realities of the day or the requisites of tomorrow's marketplace. He can no longer manage the financial and economic affairs of our nation. A brief look at his performance over the last year leading up to this Budget ought to shake the confidence of even his more assiduous sycophants in the business world.

He based his fiscal plan in 1988 on an interest rate of 7.8 per cent. When the Budget was tabled later in the year at the end of winter, the rate had gone to 8.5 per cent. It reached 10.5 per cent when the election was called. It now threatens to break through the 14 per cent barrier. The Minister made no adjustments to his Budget. I would ask my colleagues: How many of them or how many Canadians would not have fired their financial planners with that kind of performance?

That same Minister justified $16 billion in election commitments by saying that everything, and I quote: "is within the spending budget—set out in February of 1988. The costs would be zero—in those reserves we have sufficient money to handle the announcements". Six months later, after reneging on those commitments which, according to the Minister, represent money in reserve, the same Minister launches into a tax grab of $12 billion to $14 billion over the next two years to restrict the growth of the deficit. So much for honesty and integrity!

One may ask the Minister "why"? He says that interest rates must remain high in order to keep inflation down. The difference between interest rates, currently at 13 per cent and the inflation rate at 4.3 per cent, is already the highest it has ever been in Canada, despite the prosperity of recent years.

The Finance Minister still acknowledges that the introduction of his goods and services sales tax will actually increase the rate of inflation by 3 per cent. This is the same Minister who said that he would attack the debt and deficit through expenditure reductions rather than through tax increases. Now for every dollar of reduction he proposes, there are three in additional taxes. What unmitigated gall! We have seen this shifting of responsibility before. Even when the Budget was leaked, the Minister who is responsible for all aspects of departmental activities, immediately and without foundation covered up by claiming to be a victim of a criminal act.

[English]

One is left to conclude that his Government must think that Canadians are stupid in addition to being gullible. I can assure all Hon. Members that Canadians are neither. They can see clearly the lack of logic and absence of reason in this Government's budgetary decisions and directions. They wonder: "Who is writing the Government's agenda?"

This Tory Budget says loud and clear that the Government will not be involved actively in the economy in the short or in long term with any consistent, co-ordinated policies. It abandons any direct interest in promoting the expansion of an economy with deeds, as well as with words, so that the resulting expanded tax base would effectively reduce the Government debt.

What an insipidly short-sighted document! One that authorizes the pulling back of Government contributions to the economy and simultaneously taxes more money out of that economy while sheltering the rich against its pillaging forays.

These are the indicators of a government and a party without honour and without purpose. One that listens only and exclusively to the corporate rich. One that is afraid to look beyond any issue other than the public debt, a problem, I might add and remind, that has been created by this Government over the last four years. A government that can still predict a 3 per cent growth in the economy as it slashes spending, increases taxes and causes interest rates to rise.

• (1650)

The Finance Minister who bungled the Budget from the very beginning should heed the call of all Canadians and dump this Budget or risk damning the Government to unending vilification.

This Budget must go.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate, the Hon. Member for Quebec East (Mr. Tremblay) has the floor.

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today to participate in this debate on a Budget which deals with responsibility, the future, the challenges which Canadian men and women will have to take up in the forthcoming years.

On Monday, April 3rd last, Mr. Speaker, the Speech from the Throne presented us with a vision of the future and dealt with such issues as economic growth, inequalities reduction, environment protection, as well as the maintainance of adequate and generous social programs for all those who really need them.

What the Minister of Finances Budget is offering us today the means to achieve these objectives. This Budget is of outstanding significance, not only because of the circumstances which surrounded its publication, but rather because of its substance generally and the problem it addresses in particular.

To understand this Budget well, one must realize that Canada was faced with the serious threat of becoming completely powerless to continue its economic, social and cultural development, of loosing the high standards of living we all value so highly, as well as being deprived of our quality of life and social programs. In fact, it is the very character of Canada which is being threatened, everything that distinguishes us from other societies. All of that because the public finances in this country are ill and attacked by a condition which is in the process of destroying everything. The causes of this condition are well-known: the national debt and its servicing.

Let us now have a look at the patient, Mr. Speaker! The national debt which reaches now $320 billion is made up of all the deficits which Canadian Governments have accumulated since day one. This year, we will have to pay as much as $39 billion just to service the debt. That is something to think about, Mr. Speaker! As an illustration we could say that 35 cents out of every tax dollar sent to Ottawa by my good Quebec East constituents is earmarked to pay for these interests.

Our national sickness has reached such a level of growth that it feeds on itself. Each year, the Government is compelled to always borrow more money, not to pay back its debt, but only to pay the interests on that debt. Our national debt results in a real misappropriation of funds which could forever jeopardize our economic growth and which, day after day, weakens our country and seriously mortgages its future.

Mr. Speaker, do we have the right to borrow—some might say steal—so much money on the backs of our children and grand-children who could not be here to speak-out for themselves and vote, but who would eventually have to foot the bill?

For the people living in my fine Quebec East riding as for most Canadian men and women, the answer is clear: We must put an end to the treadmill of the national debt. While we still can, we must stop this tremendous waste of our resources. We are very likely to succeed because our Government has been aware of the seriousness of the debt problem since it came to power. It did address it right at the beginning. For four and a half years, we have taken stringent steps to control the problem.

For instance, we have done away with a number of programs which had become obsolete. We have cut down on waste and made public management more effective by cutting over 10 000 positions from the Civil Service. Program expenditures on the whole have decreased in relation to national revenues.

We have eliminated unproductive tax shelters for corporations and high-income individuals. We have also reduced the annual deficit. In four years, we have lowered it by $9.5 billion. In addition, we have succeeded in slowing down the growth of the public debt from 24 per cent in 1984 to less than 10 per cent last year. Our Budget program was conceived and implemented under a long-term comprehensive plan to revive the economy in a rapidly changing and increasingly competitive world. For the past four and a half years, we have built a solid foundation on which Canadians can develop their economic potential. Our aim was accurate. The results speak for themselves. Since 1984, Canadians have created 1.5 million new jobs and our economy has grown more rapidly than that of most industrialized nations. We have made that progress together, as a Government and as a nation, because we had the courage to make difficult choices and to take vigorous action in the fight against our fiscal and economic problems.

But we haven't won the war yet. The public debt disease has found a new ally: mounting inflation in Canada and other countries. It feeds the national debt and threatens our gains. In response to inflationary pressures, short-time interest rates are up. This year, they will largely exceed most experts' predictions. At the beginning of 1988, most economic analysts forecasted that the October 1987 market crash would slow down economic growth. Nobody in Canada or any other industrialized nation predicted the rapid growth and the inflation we are now experiencing. In Canada and elsewhere, monetary policy was activated to fight inflation.

These rising interest rates will increase the cost of the public debt by $6 billion this year. Something else to consider, Mr. Speaker. I am well aware that Canadians are frustrated with high interest rates. Some even suggest that we reduce them by decree. But let us not forget that interest rates are not cut off from everything else; they are not isolated from other economic forces. They cannot be reduced without considering the whole economic picture. Upward inflationary pressures lead to high interest rates. Acting on the symptoms, on the rates alone rather than the underlying causes, solves nothing. On the contrary, it could even be very harmful.

Let us not forget the surge in inflation and interest rates we had in the early 1980s. Let us not forget the resulting loss of confidence in the economy, the arrested economic growth and job losses in every region of Canada, and especially, the disastrous consequences for the lives of millions of Canadians.

The Government at that time did not take the inflation threat seriously, which resulted in interest rates of 22 per cent in 1982. You remember that, Mr. Speaker. We shall not make the same mistake. We must all admit that a slowdown is necessary to restore economic growth to a normal rate for long-term development. We must apply firm, moderate, coherent budgetary and monetary measures that keep us on the right track to lower inflation and interest rates in a lasting way.

In the budget we just presented, we made difficult choices. We tried hard to make all the measures balanced, to take account of regional situations and to place the heaviest burden on those most able to carry it. We are not reducing the debt at the expense of the least fortunate. The budgetary measures include a vast range of reductions in public expenditure and of measures to increase revenue. The measures affecting revenue are intended to place the heaviest burden on taxpayers who can afford it. Altogether, these measures will bring in over $5 billion this year and $9 billion next year.

This year, they will almost cover the increase in interest charges and leave the deficit at $30.5 billion, a level that in my view is low enough to satisfy the money markets and lead to the reduction in interest rates all Canadians are looking forward to.

This year, they will almost cover the increase in interest charges and leave the deficit as I said at $30.5 billion, which next year will lower the deficit down to some $28 billion.

The debt-to-GP ratio will stabilize next year. The debt will stop increasing faster than the economy. This is a capital achievement. Finally the illness will be under control. And within five years, the deficit will have been reduced by half down to $1.5 billion. Borrowing needs will plummet to $3 billion, after reaching $20.5 in 1989-90.

In the long term, we will continue building the foundations for economic growth by implementing a balanced program of financial and economic moves. We will take important economic initiatives in areas such as manpower, international trade, financial regulation and the promotion of a productive and economically viable farm sector. We will ensure that economic growth does not harm the environment.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to emphasize this. The replacemeent of the existing federal sales tax is a key component in this Government's strategy to preserve essential programs while strengthening the Canadian economy. This new tax will improve the overall fairness of the tax system. It will make the federal tax more visible to the consumer. and result in significant economic production gains of about $9 billion a year, which will be felt throughout the Canadian economy and in all parts of the country.

The Government is committed to ensuring that families earning less than $30 000 a year will be better off after the sales tax reform. Let's keep in mind also that basic groceries, prescription drugs and medical equipment will not be taxed. Residential rents, day care services, legal aid, most health and dental care services and education services will also be exempted.

A few days ago, Mr. Speaker, many Canadians got another summary of the Budget through a special bulletin on the global TV network. I will not share my thoughts on that special bulletin, but rather leave you with my personal version of what a special bulletin could have suggested.

"We have just heard from exclusive sources that the Conservative Government has decided to protect and strengthen the Canadian identity and basic values, which make Canada unique among other nations, thanks in particular to its social programs. The Government has decided to develop a strong Canada that is entireley competitive with other countries. It proposes to declare war on the national debt, that cancer which eats its way through public finances, by implementing a firm, measured and cohesive budget.

According to our sources, it would seem that by introducing such a Budget the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) assured himself of a political future for years to come."

End of special bulletin.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that every single piece of information in my special bulletin is verifiable.

Mr. Kindy: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the Hon. Member's speech, which was mostly about the deficit and the debt. He said that the debt would be reduced in a matter of years. If we look at the statistics, we see that in 1984, the debt was about $180 billion, while today it is $350 billion and is increasing daily.

The Budget this Government brought down has a deficit, which means we are about $30 billion short for this year. Our revenues this year are $112 billion, while our expenditures will be $142 billion. That gives us a deficit for 1989–90 of about $30.5 billion.

I think these figures show we are not really dealing with the problem of the deficit or with a national debt that next year will total $380 billion, while the interest on the debt is expected to be 38 cents of every tax dollar the Government receives.

I don't think we are dealing with the debt and I don't think we have made enough cuts. This year, the Budget was increased by 7 per cent, a very substantial increase, and we do not have the revenues to make up for this $30 billion deficit.

In 1991, the Government will introduce a sales tax that will affect all taxpayers on low incomes. The tax will increase inflation by about 3 per cent.

I would like the Hon. Member to answer the following question. What does he think of a sales tax that in its first year will raise inflation by about 3 per cent?

Mr. Tremblay (Québec–Est): Mr. Speaker, first of all, perhaps I may recall what I said in my speech which is that in my view, the $30 billion deficit is low enough to satisfy the financial markets and will help bring down interest rates as quickly as possible, something Canadians are looking forward to, especially my constituents in Québec–Est.

Mr. Speaker, this year we have had some hard knocks financially as a result of interest rate levels that were much higher than expected. If the Hon. Member would look at the timeframe in which the Budget is expected to have an impact, he will see that by 1993–94, financial requirements will have fallen to $3 billion, compared with $20.5 billion in the Estimates tabled recently by the President of Treasury Board.

For the benefit of those listening, perhaps I may recall that financial requirements represent the money the Government will borrow on capital markets, and that this indicator compares pretty well with the definition of the deficit used in the United States and the United Kingdom.

According to this indicator, Mr. Speaker, Canada will have almost balanced its Budget by 1993–94, and I think that is a fundamental point people should remember. Although the present exercise leaves us with a deficit of $30.5 billion, we must realize that this is the kind of action we must take now if we want to succeed in controlling and balancing our Budget within a reasonable timeframe.

Mr. Rocheleau: Mr. Speaker, I would tend to agree with my colleague from Calgary–North–East (Mr. Kindy) when he talks about the debt increasing from $177 billion in 1984 to $320 billion today. And, according to the Budget, this year's deficit will be $1.5 billion higher than last year's. This goes to show that before November 21 1988, the Conservative government kept hidden from the Canadian people the real problems which this country is facing.

I ask myself and I ask the Hon. Member from Québec–Est whether the people in his riding were not fooled by the promises of the Conservative government considering the fact that unemployment insurance is now left entirely to employers and employees. In the case of universal social programs such as old age pension, it is again the people who have worked all their life, regardless of the money they have, which will have to pay. In Baie–Comeau, the Prime Minister of Canada, with his mother at his side, said that social programs would not be cut, yet with this Budget devoid of any real improvement, the debt has doubled, the deficit has increased, programs have been cut, taxes are up. Furthermore, interest rates continue to increase substantially. Despite all this, the government would have us believe, Mr. Speaker, that it has done its job over the last four years. I think not and I would like the Hon. Member from Québec–Est to comment on that.

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, I repeat what I said earlier, that our approach since 1984 has brought concrete results. The measures we have taken to reduce the deficit and slow down the debt growth have helped fostering investment and employment in Canada, raising the standard of living and increasing economic security.

I am well aware that there is more to do. We must do more to be able to continue our social and cultural programs, to build and support a strong and competitive economy that will keep on creating jobs and opportunities for Canadian men and women, to give us the means to meet priorities such as job training and the protection of the environment and, of course, to improve the quality of life for Canadian men and women in general.

So, in meeting the debt challenge, this Budget is building our future instead of mortgaging it. You can be assured that I, who has young children, have no intention to pass the buck to them, to make them pay the bill for something in which they had no say and did not deserve.

Mr. André Harvey (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, it is absolutely inconceivable to hear our colleague of the Official Opposition say that the Government has added to the deficit. We know full well that the deficit stood at $39.5 million in 1984 and had the Liberals remained in office the deficit would now be up to $50 billion or $55 billion and the public debt would have gone over the $500 billion mark.

In an attempt to set the record straight, allow me first to commend my colleague for the quality of his remarks on the Budget Speech. I would suggest that the ponderation and scope of our colleague's speech enables us to gain a better insight during the difficult times we are experiencing now and will soon be facing, Mr. Speaker.

I should like to ask my colleague whether it is a fact that, according to the claims of both Opposition Parties, regional development programs are to be reduced as will other social programs. Is it a fact that old age pensions will not continue to increase? Is it a fact that regional expansion programs will be axed, or is the truth something else again?

Mr. Tremblay (Quebec–Est): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. I think the truth is completely different.

On the contrary, we notice an increase in all areas of the budget. Where there is a slowdown, it applies to the rate of increase. When you read and read again the many documents made available to us, you see that priorities remained the same and that measures taken by our Government since September 1984 are maintained and will be completed on time, except that we have a temporary period of restlessness. We do not control interest rates as we would like to, but be assured that the actions we are taking now will enable us to position ourselves very firmly and much more aggressively as early as 1993–94, when our budget program is completely balanced.

[English]

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, allow me first to preface my remarks with some general observations about this Budget. The Government has burdened Canadians with $3.3 billion in additional taxes which will be raised on the backs of Canadians right across this land.

On March 6 the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) promised this House that they would cut spending and that they would not raise taxes as tax levels in Canada were already too high. He went on to promise Canadians that the deficit would be reduced by cutting spending, not by raising taxes.

On November 29, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) told us that Canadians paid a pretty penny for their government services. They feel that they pay quite enough already, yet since 1984 taxes paid by individual Canadians increased by $26.7 billion while taxes paid by corporations increased by only $3.4 billion. In our estimation this is very unfair.

When the Government took office in 1984 the public debt was $176.8 billion. Between 1984 and the end of this fiscal year that debt will rise to $352 billion. The Government has doubled the debt of this country in the five short years that it has been in office. What does this mean? It means that in the past 117 years of Canadian history since Confederation, up to 1984, the national debt of our country increased by $1.5 billion a year. Since 1984, for the last five years of Conservative rule, the national debt of our country has increased by $34 billion a year.

In light of the largest personal tax increase in Canadian history our deficit will increase this year from $28.9 billion to $30.5 billion for the next fiscal period. All Canadians were told by the Minister of Finance that the deficit in our country could not be allowed to increase and that it was the number one problem in Canada. When we were discussing the deficit I was prepared like all Canadians to tighten our belts. We expected some harsh measures in the interest of reducing the deficit for the benefit of all Canadians.

How disappointing it was when the Budget was finally tabled in the House to see that the deficit had not decreased but in fact had increased. What did the Government do? It did an about-face and increased the deficit again, exactly opposite to what it told Canadians throughout the country that it was not going to do. This Government has failed miserably in its attempt to realize the goals outlined by its own Minister of Finance when he stated: "Our challenge is to restore fiscal stability and rebuild credibility in the management of government finances. The only way to do this is to set out a medium term fiscal plan with sustained deficit reduction and then hold firm to that plan." This is not what the current Government has done. It has done just the opposite.

Let me be specific in the main thrust of my intervention. A close review of the Budget suggests that the Government has little regard for northern Ontario. This Budget is cruel to rural and small town Canada. This Budget is particularly cruel to northern Ontario. Since 1984 the Government has ignored all of the people in northern Ontario. Since 1984 it has failed to let Canadians from northern Ontario share in the national dream. Since 1984 it has failed to let the people of northern Ontario share in the national pie.

The people of northern Ontario responded to being ignored in 1988. It is obvious from the actions of the Government that we are now paying our dues. No matter what the Government does or says, its actions count. It ignores those who exercise their democratic rights. It ignores those in northern Ontario like it ignores the good people in Prince Edward Island—look what the Government has done in Summerside. It ignores us in northern Ontario like it ignored the people in Ottawa—look what it did with the space program. It ignores us in northern Ontario like it ignores the people in Newfoundland—look what it did to the vital fishing industry and the unemployment insurance. It ignores the people in Portage la Prairie—look what it did with the service base there. They ignore us in northern Ontario—take a look at what the Government has done to our softwood industry and the movement of our grain away from the traditional ports to the West Coast.

Do we need any more proof that the Government is not concerned about small-town and rural Canada? Do we need any more proof that the Government is not concerned about northern Ontario?

Gasoline prices in northern Ontario are 4 cents or 5 cents a litre higher than in southern Ontario or Manitoba. Fifty kilometres out of Thunder Bay gasoline costs 10 cents to 12 cents more a litre. What does that mean to the average person who lives in northern Ontario? It means if that person goes from the centre of my riding in Thunder Bay to the furthest point which is 290 kilometres away, it will cost $5 more for a tank of gasoline. It costs $5 more for a tank of gasoline every time one pulls up to the gas pumps. You can cut it any way you want, Mr. Speaker, but this is $5 extra in income tax that is being paid for the deficiencies in the way the Government handles its fiscal responsibility.

The impact goes beyond economic considerations. Northern people must travel great distances to reach a neighbouring town. Increasing gasoline prices limits the mobility of people in northern Ontario. Northern people must travel to communicate with their neighbours. We must travel to socialize with our relatives. We must travel to receive a degree of health care. We must travel to obtain educational equality. Sometimes, yes, we must travel to survive. This is a cruel Budget to the people of northern Ontario because of those increased costs of taxation.

On April 12 I tabled in the House a petition from a group of concerned citizens from northern Ontario who are opposing the Government's 10 per cent telecommunications tax on long-distance telephone calls. Residents in the North are often compelled to make more long distance calls than our friends in the South due to the population and the distances between our communities.

How do you think those citizens will respond to this Budget, Mr. Speaker? In its disregard for matters pertaining to northern Ontario, the Government has again increased the tax on telecommunications services from 10 per cent to 11 per cent. That is another issue and another area in which the Budget is cruel to the people of northern Ontario.

We on this side of the House recognize the importance of rural post offices to the communities they serve. They provide valuable services which go well beyond the delivery of mail. Yet rural post offices which were previously threatened by closure are again threatened by closure under the Budget. Most small communities in northern Ontario such as Nipigon, Red Rock, Dorion, Pass Lake, Gull Bay, Armstrong, and Hurkett rely on their rural post office. In small-town and rural Canada, as it is in small-town and rural northern Ontario, perhaps the only presence of the Government in those small communities is either the post office or a VIA Rail station, and the Government cannot take those away from rural Canadians.

Does the Government realize that in remote areas the costs are much greater? The Budget will reduce the disposable income of all Canadians, but it will particularly hurt those who live in the North. The impact will be felt most in isolated, rural, and small-town regions. Those people will now have to shoulder increases in personal income surtax from 3 per cent to 5 per cent, and sales tax increases from 12 per cent to 13.5 per cent.

If that was not enough of a burden, young families in our communities, those who wish to buy homes for the first time, not only face higher interest rates, mortgage rates, and insurance rates, but with the imposition of another tax, construction materials will be raised from 8 per cent to 9 per cent which will further delay their ability to purchase homes.

Transportation plays an integral role in the unity and the prosperity of northern Ontario. Yet the cruel Budget threatens those essential services. The Budget calls for substantial cuts to VIA Rail's continuing operating and capital subsidies for the coming year. It is a paradox that when the Budget was handed down, the National Transportation Agency was holding hearings throughout Canada, costing millions of dollars, to find out the future viability of VIA Rail. While that is being done the Budget is presented which tells all Canadians where VIA Rail is going and what its future will be.

Those subsidy cuts will lead to a reduction in the quality of service, the abandonment of certain routes, numerous lay-offs, and certainly lower maintenance standards. This is being pursued by the Government because it fails to realize the importance of passenger service. It fails to realize that the passenger service is integral to the history and the development of our country. Instead of exploring options to modernize and improve the passenger rail system, the Government has condemned VIA Rail to a slow and painful death before our very eyes.

I represent a riding that was once represented by a very great Canadian by the name of Clarence Decatur Howe. Among Mr. Howe's many accomplishments as a Member of the House and serving Canada, especially during the Second World War, was being a founding person in Trans-Canada Airlines, now Air Canada. We are proud of Mr. Howe in the riding of Thunder Bay—Nipigon. It was a sad day when the Government announced in the Budget that it would now privatize the remaining 55 per cent of Air Canada.

I can say with complete assurance that it was Mr. Howe's dream that we would have a national airline in Canada that was owned by Canadians to equalize the delivery of air transport to all Canadians regardless of where they lived. In reading that particular segment of the Budget, it was a sad day for Air Canada, a sad day for Canadians, and a sad day for a great Canadian by the name of Clarence Howe.

The Budget shows all too well the Government's real and actual commitment toward social programs. The Budget tells us that the Government has chosen not to proceed with the promised $4-billion child care program. This is a cut in our social programs. Individuals who earn more than a set amount will no longer receive old age pensions and family allowances. This constitutes a further cut to the social programs that we were told would not be cut.

As of January 1, 1990, the Government will terminate its $2.9-billion contribution to the Unemployment Insurance Program. Instead, employers and employees will have to pay for this through increased premiums. This is a further cut in our social programs.

As a result of the Budget, transfer payments to the provinces will be further reduced by 1 per cent. In 1986 those payments were cut by 2 per cent. We all know the benefit of transfer payments to the provinces. In Ontario the transfer payments pay for post-secondary education, and the very needed health care costs for care that we have come to expect. When funding is reduced in those two vital areas, the health care delivery system is reduced, as is the delivery of post-secondary education.

When we told Canadians that the Government would be forced to harmonize our social programs with those of the United States in the interest of big business, we were accused of lying to the people and using scare tactics. Now that we see the direction the Government is taking in the Budget, who is misleading the Canadian people now?

Some Hon. Members: The Tories!

Mr. Comuzzi: The Budget also points to areas other than social programs where the Government misled the Canadian electorate. The list of broken promises is long. The Government stated that it would not reduce its commitment to regional development. It was cut by $300 million. It pledged to increase official development assistance by .7 per cent of Gross National Product. That target was reduced to .43 per cent. Farmers were told that the Government would maintain adequate support. Instead, there have been cuts to the farm fuel rebate, crop insurance funding, dairy export subsidies, and Farm Credit Corporation interest-free loans have been eliminated. The Government said it would improve federal housing programs. What has it done? It has cut the Canada Mortgage and Housing Mortgage Residential Rehabilitation Program by $49 million. It said it would improve women's programs and multicultural programs. It has cut both by $2 million. The added funding for the CBC announced on January 23, 1988, was reduced by $45 million. The point is quite clear. The Government has misled the Canadian people.

• (1730)

In summary, I suggest that all Canadians, from northern Ontario, southern Ontario, Victoria to Newfoundland, know that they cannot have their cake and eat it too. Canadians realize that we cannot increase expenditures, cut taxes, reduce the deficit and thereby service the debt.

The purpose of my intervention today is to bring to the attention of Canadians what the Government promised. It promised to sponsor a fully-funded program of day care to the mothers of this country. It promised that social programs would not be touched. It made a definite commitment to our elders and senior citizens. It made a promise to the working people of Canada that it would not change anything in our unemployment insurance program. It promised not to cut our social or foreign aid.

I am trying to tell the Government that it cannot continue to tell Canadians one thing and do something else, as it has done since it formed the Government in 1988. It is time the Government did something for Canadians. It is time it told Canadians exactly what they can expect for the future of our young people who want to get married, have families, own homes and realize the Canadian dream. The Government must provide a level playing field for all Canadians so that we know where we are going. It can only do this by not misleading us anymore.

Mr. MacDougall: Mr. Speaker, I know that the Hon. Member is new in the House and perhaps did not have an opportunity to review the record of the Government between 1984 and 1988 and what we have been able to do for northern Ontario.

Between 1984 and 1988 this Government introduced a northern tax allowance which many of his constituents are benefiting from. That was not in place prior to 1984. We also brought in a program called Community Futures where individual communities across northern Ontario have the opportunity to enhance their future.

We also brought in procurement which previously did not exist. Companies across northern Ontario had the opportunity to work with the Government in order to procure purchases from the federal Government.

I cannot understand why the Hon. Member would not have congratulated the Government for FEDNOR and the fact that funding for FEDNOR has remained the same. It is people from northern Ontario who are ensuring the opportunities for all of us, whether in small business or large business, or individual tourist operators in northern Ontario.

The Hon. Member talked about softwood lumber. As a good Liberal Member from northern Ontario, perhaps he would not mind talking to the provincial Minister of Natural Resources to encourage him to sit down with our Minister, like other Ministers from other provinces, to negotiate a way to settle this. The provincial Minister has received over $50 million which has not gone back into reforestation or into the industry. It goes into general revenue funds.

I challenge the Member to compare our record from 1984 to 1988 with the record of any Liberal Government prior to that time. If the voters had the opportunity in 1988 to vote on the record of this Government rather than on the misleading untruths they heard about the Free Trade Agreement, I suggest there would be more Conservatives from northern Ontario than just myself.

Mr. Comuzzi: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend opposite for his remarks. While he was speaking I wondered how he was the only Conservative to win one of the 12 seats from northern Ontario. I suggest it is indicative of the way the Government has treated the people of northern Ontario.

I accept his challenge. Shortly after the election he visited the riding of Thunder Bay—Atikokan. If the local newspaper recorded his comments accurately, I was amazed at how little he knew about the sawmill softwood lumber industry in northern Ontario. He did not even know that it was not a surcharge, referring to the $50 million in the Ontario coffers to which he alluded, but an export tax. It is an export tax to stop the countervail by the United States so those funds would stay in Canada.

If the Hon. Member wants to challenge me about anything to do with the softwood lumber industry, I suggest that we can meet later. I would certainly open my file on softwood lumber for him so he could be better informed as to that very difficult and serious area that affects some 3,000 to 4,000 people in northern Ontario.

The Hon. Member talks about programs like Community Futures and the northern tax allowance. I thought the Member would have some appreciation for what the people of northern Ontario are all about. People in northern Ontario do not want handouts. They do not want something for nothing. They want the ability to work, earn a living, pay whatever is necessary and enjoy themselves. That is the fibre of the people of northern Ontario. They do not want to rely on those services that must be provided at times when they cannot find employment. The people who make up the fibre of our community are strong-willed people. Community Futures, although appreciated, is not what the people of northern Ontario are all about.

With respect, I suggest to my friend that those are programs to help the unfortunate, the poor and those who need additional retraining, but what the people of northern Ontario want is the grain moving through the port of Thunder Bay. We want our fair share of grain. We want the sawmills operating at full capacity. We do not want that export tax that the Government put on softwood going to the United States.

I might say to the Hon. Member, to show him the fibre of the people in northern Ontario, that this weekend two ships left the port of Thunder Bay for a market in London, England. They were taking over 800,000 board feet of lumber to a new market which the people of northern Ontario developed without the help of any Government. They were forced to do that because of the 15 per cent export tax that the Government blatantly implemented, destroying an industry in northern Ontario.

Mr. Atkinson: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member was simply mistaken, but he indicated that there was a 1 per cent decrease in Established Programs Financing transfers to the provinces. I am sure he will agree that there will be an increase in those fundings this year, but the increase has been decreased. The increase will be down by 1 per cent, but there is a guarantee in the Budget Papers that that increase will not fall below the level of inflation. These EPF programs will be increased, not decreased, as seems to be the customary assertion.

I would also like his comments on the deficit, whether he considers it a problem, and whether he has any solutions to that particular matter. He has attacked every tax increase and expenditure decrease that has been made. I would like to hear his comments on exactly what he would do in regard to the deficit.

• (1740)

Mr. Comuzzi: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the comments of the Hon. Member. With respect to the 1 per cent, I did not intentionally mislead the House. It is 1 per cent less than what was projected to be turned over in transfer payments. Thus it is 1 per cent less than what was promised.

With respect to solutions, Members opposite had all the solutions up until November 21. There was no deficit problem. They told the people of Canada that all the spending commitments had been looked after and that the fiscal management of the country was in its best shape ever because of the Conservative Government.

Now, they look across the House and say: "What is the solution?" The solution is this: perhaps they would like to turn the reins of government over to us. I am sure that with the 83 members on this side of the House we could come up with a better solution than what we have heard in the Budget tabled in the House. I promise you, Mr. Speaker, that we would bring the Budget in on time without any floods.

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to my colleague from Thunder Bay—Nipigon. I heard him speak in the House. I have listened with care to his vision and the Liberal Party's vision of the country. I have learned a great deal from the Hon. Member about the true nature of the country. I like to talk about the country being a nation of regions, each distinct. I found out that the northern part of Ontario is a distinct and important region of Canada. As such, many times in other parts of Canada we look at Ontario and see it as the fat cat of Confederation.

However, when we see what transpires in this House and when we listen to the important debates that take place here, it becomes increasingly obvious that regionality does not just hit the West and East. It also hits the northern part of Ontario. One thing we saw in the Budget and about which I would like to ask the Hon. Member is a picture of the Government which only a few short months ago said that regional development programs were safe. Members of the Government said that they were a sacred trust with universality, old age pensions and family allowances, for goodness sakes. We found out just how sacred they were. We know now that over the next five years there will be up to $1.2 billion cut from the projections for regional development programs. We have heard the Minister responsible for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency say in the House that in the short term, a three-year period—a lifetime in the regions—there will be some difficulty in funding regional development agreements.

What I would like to ask my colleague is exactly how the $1.2 billion in cuts to regional development programs will affect the vision of the North as a full participating partner in the economy of the nation.

Mr. Comuzzi: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for his question. It gives me a chance to discuss in some detail regional development in northern Ontario.

Like the area which my hon. friend represents, as with many other areas in the country, in northern Ontario we depend on regional equity in order to enhance our communities. The Atlantic provinces, northern Ontario, most parts of Manitoba and other areas rely on regional assistance.

In answer to the question, let me say that we do not have any regional assistance. In 1988 a funding program by the name of FEDNOR was started. It was funded up to $55 million, which is a pittance when one talks about regional development and the wealth of northern Ontario. It is a pittance when we consider our mines and what they have produced for the national economy. It is a pittance when we consider what our forestry industry was worth before the export tax. It is a pittance when we talk about what the pulp and paper industry in northern Ontario produces for our national economy.

We do not get one iota of assistance from the Government other than that $55 million in FEDNOR which has already been committed for $12 million. I might say that it is spread over five years. Thus it amounts to a $12 million subsidy to enhance industry in northern Ontario.

As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, you can see that the Conservative Government has ignored the people of northern Ontario.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Vincent).

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance, I am happy to speak to the Minister's excellent Budget. Since we have been debating that Budget for a few days, it is perhaps time to set the record straight and, at the same time, go over what the Progressive Conservative Government has accomplished since 1984.

I'm sure you will remember that Minister Wilson tabled Budgets in November 1984, May 1985, February 1986, February 1987 and February 1988. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that in those five Budget debates the Liberal Opposition said roughly two or three things. Firstly, we would lose jobs in Canada with those Budgets; secondly, inflation would skyrocket; thirdly, we would get all the problems in the world on top of lost jobs, growing inflation, higher interest rates and so on.

And, if you read Hansard for the 15 days following those five Budget Speeches, you will realize that is all the Opposition said.

If we look at what really happened since 1984, Mr. Speaker, we created 1.4 million jobs in Canada, 80 per cent of which are permanent, unlike the Liberal Government who used to create temporary jobs in the same proportion.

Inflation stood at about 4 per cent over the last four years. Canada had the best productivity ratio. During the years 1984 to 1988, Canada was among the countries having the best economic performance.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, it worked so well that, by the end of 1988, we were in an inflationary period. The Minister of Finance and the Conservative Government had two alternatives: to let inflation escalate like it did in 1980–1981 under the previous Liberal government when it shot up to 12 or 13 per cent; or to wake up and raise interest rates to 22 per cent, like the Liberals did. The Liberal Government had to go along with interest rates of 22 per cent to check the inflation it had let run rampant. Mr. Speaker, this Government has faced up to its responsibilities and said no, we cannot let the inflation rate go up too fast. There are two ways to make sure that inflation will not go wild: sure enough, interest rates must inch upward, and there must be a Budget to put a clamp on our national debt and the current annual deficit. Both steps have been taken. It is an excellent Budget. Indeed there are cut backs. Indeed there are tax increases. And indeed we have a major problem. Our national debt goes up to the tune of over $3 million every hour, and this works out to $80 million every day. Now, Mr. Speaker, just what is this national debt? It is the debt we inherited from the Liberal Party when it was turfed out in 1984, that is what it is!

Members opposite do not like that. We can hear them moan. They do not like that, but it is the debt they left behind in 1984, Mr. Speaker, plus what it is costing us to service it. If you examine the deficits of the Progressive Conservative Government since 1984 you will see that they can be accounted for by adding up the cost of servicing the debt of the Liberal Party. That, Mr. Speaker, is our current national debt. We must be aware of that, and ours is the only Government courageous enough to take whatever action is needed to get a handle on the debt and cut down the deficit. We have managed to reduce the deficit four years in a row.

Mr. Gauthier: Not true! You are again dreaming in colour!

Mr. Vincent: Four years in a row we have reduced the deficit. And I challenge my colleague to stand up and tell me that is not true, instead of twittering. Let him stand up and say it! Let him put up figures!

Mr. Speaker, this year's deficit should have been lower but, as I said earlier, because of higher interest rates, we have had to pay $6 billion more just in interests. And that explains why the deficit is higher this year than was anticipated. However, with the kind of initiatives that were taken in the Budget, as much in terms of tax increases as of different spending cuts, we will be able in a couple of years to cut our deficit by half to $15 billion. And with the control of our national debt, Mr. Speaker, it is important to look towards the future, as we have done, and to know where we are going. Mr. Speaker, I heard comments from business which supports us, according to the Opposition, and it said: Cut spending. Since 1984, Mr. Speaker, we have made annual spending cuts and now in 1989–90, the Government will spend less money on running this country than it did in 1984. We will be spending less, in cash terms.

Mr. Gauthier: Look at the books!

Mr. Vincent: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is upset, Mr. Speaker!

Mr. Gauthier: Not at all!

Mr. Vincent: Yes he is, his glasses are shaking. Mr. Speaker. The truth is always hard to take.

This year we are going to spend less money on administration than we spent in 1984–85, in cash terms. Five years later, we are spending less. This proves that we cut the fat, and we also cut some of the lean. There isn't much left. We are spending 16 cents on the dollar to administer this country.

Mr. Valcourt: And the Liberals?

Mr. Vincent: They spent 20 to 22 cents.

An Hon. Member: Terrible!

Mr. Vincent: On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, we are spending 35 cents on the dollar to pay off their debt, and that is a fact. It is a fact that we are spending 35 cents on every dollar to pay interest charges on the debt that the good old Liberal government left us. We have to live with it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, the truth really shakes them. They are waking up, Mr. Speaker, and it is high time they did. The House is going to adjourn in five minutes. But I will be back tomorrow morning. I will be here when you come back, and that should put you in fantastic shape for the rest of the day!

Mr. Speaker, every year I have had a chance to take part in the debate on the Budget, and every year I tried to explain to the Opposition what we were doing, and every year I asked the Opposition— No, they just won't understand, and I never could make them understand, Mr. Speaker. But every year, I asked them and I am doing it again this year: Do you have any measures that could help this country, not the Conservative Party but Canada, to reduce the deficit, because, Mr. Speaker, I will tell you what I have been hearing in the House for the past five days. For the past five days, they have been demanding more money for VIA Rail, more money for day care, more money for unemployment insurance—

Mr. Gauthier: Broken promises!

Mr. Vincent: They want more money for regional development, for training and for the environment—

Mr. Gauthier: Broken promises!

Mr. Vincent: They want more money for the sales tax, for old age security pensions and for family allowance cheques—

Mr. Gauthier: Broken promises!

Mr. Vincent: They want more money for the provinces, for women and for the disabled—

Mr. Gauthier: Broken promises!

Mr. Vincent: They want more money for the CBC, and I could go on and on and on, Mr. Speaker.

Every single day the Opposition ask for more money for everything, while blaming us for not cutting the deficit down enough, not reducing the national debt enough. To use the usual phrase, they speak from both sides of their mouths. Let me remark that some of their colleagues are very well equipped to do that. They speak from both sides of their mouth.

But this Government has a straightforward message. Already in 1984, Mr. Speaker, we stated we had a national debt problem. We stated we had a deficit problem, and new Members here in particular can read the Debates, there is a lot to learn in it. They will see we have been suggesting this for four years.

Mr. Speaker, let me ask this question once more: Does anyone in the Liberal Party of Canada or in the New Democratic Party have brillant solutions to offer? The Liberal critic shares our views. Inded, the Liberal Party critic thinks as we do. They shut him up for a while. Of course he must shut up. He does not ask questions during Oral Question Period anymore, he does not rise, they shut him up. Mr. Speaker, let me ask the question: If they have such brillant solutions that will help the country, we are buyers any time. I know beforehand what the NDP will say. The NDP will say: Tax large corporations, tax the individuals who are well off. This we did, Mr. Speaker. This is finished and done with! We cut tax havens for individuals. We imposed a minimum corporate tax and cut corporate tax havens.

Just remember the scientific research tax credit which was imported by the clever Liberal Party of Canada and its Finance Minister of the time which cost billions of dollars to Canadian taxpayers. It was a sham, a real sham which cost billions of dollars to Canadian taxpayers. Such was the result of the Liberal Party of Canada's management. We have eliminated the tax loopholes. We have levied a tax on corporations with assets of over $10 million. We have done all that for the sole purpose of giving back Canada its proper place among nations, and to stop people from saying that Canada is the country with the greatest debt in the world, which is a fact now. But to achieve this, all Canadian men and women must do their share to reduce both the deficit and the national debt.

In this Budget, something the Opposition has chosen to overlook by jumping a line, we have reduced by 1 per cent the increase in transfer payments to the provinces. I repeat that we did not reduce the payments made to the provinces, but only by 1 per cent their rate of increase. We have reduced the increase. That should be emphasized, because the provinces, just as ordinary individuals, must work together with the Federal Government to finally control our national debt.

We have also indicated our intention to levy as of January 1, 1981, a new 9 per cent Federal Sales Tax. As you know, Mr. Speaker, this is a 65th anniversary. The Federal Sales Tax, as we know it, would be eligible for Old Age Security pension, because it is now 65 years old. It came into being in 1924. In view of its age, the Minister of Finance and the Cabinet have felt that the time had come for it to get its pension, and they are absolutely right.

The federal sales tax we now have is harmful to Canadian companies, as it favours imports.

Mr. Speaker, I can see you are telling me that my time is up. I understand, Mr. Speaker, that you will give me the opportunity to complete my speech at the next sitting.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) will be here tomorrow morning, so that he can finally understand how good a budget this is.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) will be here. He is always here.

PRIVILEGE

CONTAMINATED WASTE—CLARIFICATION OF COMMENTS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of personal privilege stemming from remarks I made to this House during the course of Question Period yesterday in response to questions from the Hon. Member for Yukon (Ms. McLaughlin) regarding contaminated waste.

I said yesterday:

> —I learned of the suspicion of toxic wastes being included in liquid fuels this Monday. I immediately initiated an investigation within my Department to ascertain whether or not any officials were knowledgeable of the fact prior to this Monday. The response was no.

That statement was made on information I received from my officials earlier this week and was based on the best information available to them and to me at the time.

Late yesterday afternoon it was brought to my attention that on September 11, 1987, a meeting was held at the headquarters of Revenue Canada in Toronto. As a result, calls were made to some of those purported to be in attendance at that meeting.

In clarification of my statement yesterday, I have since been advised that the meeting took place. I am advised as well that Revenue Canada was not provided with any evidence of contaminated fuels being brought into Canada.

I am further advised that during the discussions on fuel import fraud, which took place at the time, a reference was made to the transport of contaminated material between states in the United States. At no time was there any allegation made about toxic materials being placed in fuels for export to Canada. For this reason, I am advised information was not conveyed to senior officials in Ottawa or to the Minister.

I hope that the information I have submitted to the House at the earliest opportunity will clarify the extent of my Department's knowledge in respect to this situation.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am to understand that the Minister has clarified his statement of yesterday and that, in fact, according to his new information his Department became aware of certain allegations in September of 1987. I have in my hand a letter from the Assistant Deputy Minister of his Department at the time. It is dated February 9, 1987. It states that "the Department is presently involved in an investigation of the petroleum importation and distribution industry and has in co-ordination with several other federal, provincial and international investigation and enforcement agencies maintained an exchange of information and liaison concerning this matter. It has been through this exchange of information with these enforcement agencies that we have been able to proceed with the pursuit of the Canadian perpetrators. Unfortunately, due to the confidential nature of our court evidence, I am unable to provide you with further details at this time.

In addition, I should mention our investigators meet on a scheduled basis approximately twice a year to discuss various enforcement issues. Petroleum fraud has been high on the agenda at the most recent meeting—," et cetera.

• (1110)

Mr. Speaker, the reason I have put this letter on the record is because in response to the Minister's statement today in the House that his Department has been aware of details concerning petroleum fraud since September of 1987, I can only assume that if his own Department were conducting an investigation which involved contact with international agencies and international enforcement agencies, that would have included, for example, the FBI, and we know from the reports in the press that the FBI has been aware of the petroleum PCB fraud for a number of years.

In that regard, we would like more information, specifically from this Minister and also from the Government, over repeated statements over the last number of days that it knew nothing about it from the period before Monday. Then we heard that it knew something as of March. Then there were suggestions that it might have known something earlier on. Now, by the letter from the Assistant Deputy Minister of the former Minister of Revenue, the Government itself is allegedly involved in a major investigation involving contact with international authorities.

I think the only way to resolve this matter is to have the whole issue referred to a standing committee of the House of Commons so that we can have the former Minister brought before the committee, who, according to my information, was apparently intimately involved with not only the discussions that were taking place but also a police informant who directly notified the Ministry of Revenue about the possibility of PCBs being mixed in with fuel oil, and that fuel oil being imported into Canada.

According to our sources, that information was provided in 1987 to the Ministry of Revenue. Obviously, for that information to remain silent and secret for a year and a half, or possibly up to two years, is completely unacceptable.

The only way to clear the air on this whole matter is to set aside the tissue of contradictions that we have seen between the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Martin), the Minister for the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) and the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Jelinek), and have the whole—

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member. The Hon. Minister has risen on what I suppose could be called a point of personal privilege to try to deal with a statement made yesterday in view of information, as he has told us, he has received since. I have, and I think quite properly, recognized the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) who is the critic on these matters for the Official Opposition and I have very deliberately allowed her to make a response.

However, obviously the Hon. Member has more to say on this issue, but I think it properly should be pursued perhaps later on today.

I do take the matter seriously and I hope the Hon. Member will not feel I have unfairly interfered with her intervention. The Hon. Minister may now want to say something and I certainly will recognize him.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I have to set the record straight because the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) is talking about something totally unassociated—

An Hon. Member: That is debate.

Mr. Jelinek: —with contaminated fuel. She is talking about—I am responding to the Member for Hamilton East. She is talking about an ongoing investigation between the Government of Canada, Revenue Canada, the Provinces of Québec and Ontario in respect to tax evasion of fuels coming in and out of Canada. I made reference to that in my answer yesterday and said that it is an ongoing process. There is no secret about that.

We are, as a government and as a department, working very actively with the Provinces of Québec and Ontario in taking every step that we can possibly take in exchange of information, in spot checks and extended spot checks, to make certain that we eliminate the extent of tax fraud that had been taking place in the past. But there is absolutely no connection to the point that I was making reference to about contaminated fuels.

Mr. Gauthier: A point of order.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Why don't you let him finish.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, the Minister is now engaging in debate. If he is into damage control—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier is of course correct. This is becoming a debate, and it probably is my error in allowing it to be so. But I think I appropriately gave to the Hon. Member for Hamilton East considerable latitude in responding to the Minister. The Minister has now responded. I accept what the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier says, that this is now moving into debate and should properly be pursued, as I said a few minutes ago, in another place. I see that the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) is seeking the floor. I will hear him briefly.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I would like to rise on the same question of privilege. The Minister has now clarified what he said in the House and we accept his word that he inadvertently misled the House yesterday when he said—

An Hon. Member: He did not mislead the House.

Mr. Broadbent: That is what I am getting at, and I am saying that I am accepting the Minister now. Unlike what he said yesterday, he is saying that a meeting took place in Toronto on September 11, 1987, in which people from his Department were involved in discussions that included the transport of fuels with toxic substances in them. I understood what the Minister said and he said it was between states in the United States and not between Canada and the United States.

I have a number of questions which it seems to me would be usefully pursued on this question of privilege that the Minister should elaborate on. He said that there was a meeting on September 11, 1987. He did not say that there has not been a meeting since then.

Mr. Speaker: There is a difficulty here. I think I am going to have to make a very firm procedural decision at this time. The Minister of National Revenue has made his statement. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East has responded to it, and after a lengthy statement I indicated that this is now getting into debate and there is a more appropriate time and place to pursue it. The Hon. Member for Oshawa is very understandably rising to seek some further information but I have to say to all Hon. Members that there will be another occasion later on today to seek that information. At the moment I think it is appropriate that we proceed with Routine Proceedings. I thank Hon. Members for their interventions.

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF DELEGATE TO INTERPARLIAMENTARY CONFERENCE ON TOURISM IN THE HAGUE, THE NETHERLANDS

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 34(1), I have the honour to present to the House, in both official languages, the 11th Report of the Canadian Group of the Interparliamentary Union, the report of the Official Parliamentary Delegation which represented Canada at the Interparliamentary

Conference on Tourism in The Hague, The Netherlands, from April 9 to April 14, 1989.

This conference was attended by 47 national delegations. It dwelt on many of the problems that are facing tourism today, an industry that has grown up around governments and is going to creep up on us even faster because between now and the year 2000 it will double. In the year 1987, tourists around the world spent $2 trillion. It is expected that that will double by the year 2000.

The conference discussed facilitation in great length with regard to exchange rates, visas, passports, airport congestion, health services in various countries, environmental protection of tourist sites and the attitudes of people who receive tourists in their own nations.

• (1120)

As you can appreciate, one of the difficulties that officials are facing today is to at times recognize the real tourist from the illegal entrant in some countries. Canada has a great opportunity here between now and the year 2000 to build up our facilities and be prepared to accept the great tourist influx that is going to take place in the next few years.

I respectfully submit this report, Mr. Speaker.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

CHANGE IN THE NAME OF ST. LAURENT RIDING

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent) asked for leave to introduce Bill C-239, an Act to change the name of the electoral district of Saint-Laurent.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce this Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mrs. Maheu: Mr. Speaker, it is a great honour for me to table today the Bill to amend the name of the electoral district of Saint-Laurent. The new name will be Saint-Laurent—Cartierville.

Saint-Laurent includes both the City of Saint-Laurent and the northwestern part of the City of Montreal. The name Saint-Laurent is frequently associated with the City of Saint-Laurent itself in a restrictive way, which makes my Montreal constituents feel excluded.

Cartierville—Saraguay accounts for nearly 25 per cent of the population of the riding. I therefore ask the House for consent to change the name.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

(Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.)

Mr. Speaker: When shall this Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

STRIKING COMMITTEE

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, if the House gives its consent, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier):

> That the third report of the Striking Committee presented to the House earlier this day be concurred in.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

MOTIONS TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 52

DISPOSAL OF TOXIC WASTE MATERIAL

Mr. Speaker: Before we proceed to Orders of the Day, I have two applications for an emergency debate. The Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent).

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 52 to seek leave to adjourn the House for the purpose of discussing a matter of urgent and pressing concern, namely, the public revelation early this week of the transportation of fuels across the Canada-U.S. border laden with toxic substances.

I called for a debate on Monday on this subject. I appeal for it again today for a very specific aspect of this problem, namely, that the Government of Canada has not dealt in an adequate fashion with the health implications of this news. The Government has not indicated that any sampling is being done of suspected shipments already imported, or any efforts to ensure the contaminated fuel is not burned. Such efforts are needed, Your Honour, in order to ensure Canadians of the safety of burning fuels for their homes and vehicles. Fuel has been already purchased, perhaps not being used now because of the warming of the climate but it is sitting in the homes of Canadians and could be used in the fall. This issue simply has to be addressed by the federal Government and it has not been.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) has a similar application. I will hear her.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Thank you, Mr. Speaker. In support of the application I have actually asked leave to propose a motion to adjourn the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the illegal and health-threatening importation and use of fuel adulterated with PCBs and the Government's failure to deal with this dangerous situation in an urgent and effective manner.

We heard the revelations this morning in the House that the federal Government has known about the contamination of PCBs in fuel, including the potential of fuel for home heating oils as well as gasoline, for a year and a half. That information has not been acted upon. As a result, there is a direct threat to the health of Canadians, in particular Canadian children, and I think that if the information provided by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Jelinek) in the House today is correct, it certainly buttresses our request for an emergency debate. To keep this kind of information from Canadians is unconscionable.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Just so that all Hon. Members understand exactly what this application for an emergency debate is, and I want to be very sure that the public understands it as well, these applications are decided on by the Speaker. They should be on a subject that for the most part cannot be dealt with in any other way. This is a very serious matter, one that has taken up the time of the House, not just today but some days prior to this. It clearly is a matter of importance to both the Government and to the Opposition as has been shown by the discussion that took place a few minutes ago. However, at this time, I think that it can be pursued in the House in another way and I am not disposed, at least at the moment, to order an emergency debate. I thank both Hon. Members for raising the matter.

THE FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed from Wednesday, May 10, 1989, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to continue yesterday's speech on a very important subject, the Budget. I said yesterday that interest charges on the debt would total $39 billion this year. Fortunately, this not the extent of the Canadian Government's spending.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention the seven broad programs administered by the Canadian Government. Thirty per cent of the monies received by the Government of Canada is returned to individuals; 24 per cent is transferred to the provinces; 11 per cent is transferred to businesses in the form of subsidies; 4 per cent to our Crown corporations; 11 per cent to National Defence; 3 per cent to foreign aid; and finally, only 16 per cent is spent on government operations.

I pointed out yesterday to the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), who didn't believe me, of course, that in 1984–85, the operation of the Goverment cost $17.5 billion. This year, in 1988–89, they will cost $16 billion, which is a real drop of 20 per cent in spending by the Canadian Government on its operations.

When I hear people from various organizations say that this Government has failed to make the necessary cuts and has failed to manage its finance effectively, I think they are wrong. I think that a 20 per cent reduction in Government spending over a period of four or five years is something not many businesses have been able to do, as far as I know.

I also heard the Opposition saying that senior citizens and the provinces and so forth would be the losers. In 1984–85, we gave $11.4 billion to senior citizens. In 1989–90, we will give $16.4 billion, an increase of exactly

$5 billion over five years, just for senior citizens. So when people tell me we are penalizing the very Canadians who built this country, I think that an increase of $5 billion over five years is not bad.

Suppose we consider the various forms of transfers to the provinces. In 1984–85, $19.7 billion were transferred by the federal Government to the provinces. In 1989–90, transfers will total $24 billion. I repeat, while running this country and managing to reduce the debt, our major problem, as well as the annual deficit, we have succeeded in cutting government spending and increasing the amounts that are transferred to Canadians and to the provinces. And the same applies to subsidies. Yesterday, they were saying that regional development was being cut. In 1984–85, regional development received $9 billion. In 1989–90, we are giving $10.5 billion.

Mr. Speaker, people realize that this Government does act and that it acts responsibly, by dealing with the needs of this country at all levels, including senior citizens, regional development, the provinces and so forth.

Just to give you more relevant figures, Mr. Speaker, the Government's financial requirements in 1984–85 amounted to 6.7 per cent of the gross domestic product, whereas the comparable figure for 1993–94 will be 0.3 per cent, the lowest ever since 1969–70. That, Mr. Speaker, is what we call sound administration.

I was talking about elderly people a moment ago, and I want to insist on that point because some are confused and the Opposition gets a kick out of making things even more complicated.

Mr. Speaker, in the Budget we said that a person aged 65 or more with a net income of $50,000—or a gross income of about $60,000 or $65,000—not including the old age security pension will have to pay back some of the pension benefits according to his or her income bracket. A pensioner with a net income of $70,000—again this means roughly $90,000 a year in gross income—will pay back the full pension.

Mr. Speaker, I should think that a Canadian aged 65 or more who has that kind of income can afford to lend a hand to others and to our overly endebted country.

Mr. Speaker, I see you signaling that my time is up. I say in conclusion that the Budget of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) must be adopted as soon as possible in the best interest of all Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Mifflin: Mr. Speaker, I learned some interesting things this morning. My colleague spoke about regional development and transfers to the provinces. He quoted a figure of, I think it was, $24 billion. That may be so, but certainly in the case of Newfoundland, we depend very much on the transfers to the provinces. In fact, about 50 per cent of our revenues come from transfers. In our province alone, 23 per cent of that is spent on education and close to 22 per cent is spent on health care, two very basic things in life.

I understand that the transfers to the provinces will be cut by 1 per cent, and this represents $200 million. That is quite a slice considering that in 1986, only two years ago, there was a cut of 2 per cent. While $24 billion may sound like a lot of money when one mentions it alone, in fact after taking away the 1 per cent, the $200 million, it will cause a great deal of concern in Newfoundland. Who will make up the redress to pay for the education and health services, particularly in the Atlantic provinces where we depend so much on these transfer payments?

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a slight correction to what my colleague said. What has been announced in the Budget is not a one per cent cut but a one per cent reduction in the proposed increase in transfers to the provinces. That is completely different, Mr. Speaker! And the best proof of it is that in the next five years, the amount given to the provinces will be increased of almost $25 billion. So, the increase is real, as I mentionned, and if we look at the figures since 1984, the provinces have received more money each and every year through the financing of established programs.

As for equalization, my colleague has not mentionned it in any way. You know, Mr. Speaker, that the equalization program is aimed particularly at those we call the "poorer" provinces, Newfoundland, the Maritimes, Quebec and, obviously, Manitoba. So the Budget does not deduct anything from the full amount of equalization payments.

As to the funding of established programs, and strictly at that level, the increase will be smaller by one per cent. I underline the word "increase". Again, Mr. Speaker, cuts in transfers to the provinces or anywhere else are never pleasant. But Newfoundland, as any other province, is part of a country called Canada, and the major problem this country is going through at the present time is the national debt, the annual deficit.

To be able to give even more in the future to Newfoundland, Quebec or any other province, we must solve immediately the issue of a debt that will grow at an incredible, incalculable and impossible rate if nothing is done right now. That is the perspective in which the cut is made: to deal once and for all with the annual deficit as well as the national debt.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, how can the Hon. Member explain to the fishermen that this Budget is good for Canadians, as he just told us, and that we must hasten to pass it, when this Government has seen fit to cut—repeat, cut—some programs, including subagreements providing funds for the development of fisheries and forestry as well as other sectors?

The Hon. Member talked about a reduction in the growth of equalization payments. But there was a cut in the fisheries sector. The money is not in the Fisheries and Oceans budgetary forecast and we are told studies on fishing subagreements will be undertaken this year. Since there is no money, they probably won't be renewed.

Also, fishermen will have to pay more for their fuel because the rebates they were eligible for are being taken away.

How can he explain to Atlantic fishermen that this Budget is good for them, especially in the present situation with diminishing catches, companies closing entire plants, lost jobs and the decision not to renew fishing subagreements? How can he explain to the fishermen it is good for them?

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I think that the Hon. Member opposite has a gloomy view of life. He is not realistic about the present situation and the situation of fishermen as well. Fishermen have tax and economic advantages that no other group in the country has. Unfortunately, the Opposition Member does not talk about that.

You know, Mr. Speaker, it is easy to always look—There are two kinds of people in life. Some will say that a glass of water is half full. The Opposition Member will say that it is half empty.

We on this side of the House, Mr. Speaker, consider it half full. We approach the future positively. We do not say that the Budget does not raise taxes. We do not say that the Budget makes no cuts. We said so and explained it. But we also say why it must be done.

It must be done because for many years, the party in power, of which my colleague is a member, created for us a monster called the national debt.

Mr. Speaker, I actually managed to wake them up!

An Hon. Member: Yes indeed!

Mr. Vincent: I am glad I did. I told them yesterday evening that I would wake them up this morning, and I did.

Mr. Speaker, I will quote just one sentence:

[English]

> There are programs that are duplications. There are programs that are wasteful. There is administration that is wasteful. There are programs that are no longer useful. There are programs that no longer serve a purpose, and I am going to cut that down.

John Turner, July 25, 1984.

At the time, Mr. Speaker, on the day he said that, the national debt totalled $199,092 billion. That was the situation on July 25, 1984. If we do some simple arithmetic and add the interest charges on the 1984 debt and the interest charges for the last four years, we set the national debt as it is today.

We are trying to deal with your debt and your problem. You should be thanking us on your knees instead of squawking like that. You should realize this is the major problem in this country and show some support or at least more some suggestions that make sense.

An Hon. Member: That's your job!

Mr. Vincent: Yes, it is our job, and we are willing to co-operate but all you people ever do is criticize.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday I pointed out, and I will explain for the benefit of the Hon. Member who is new to the House. In November 1984, the Minister of Finance tabled his economic message, and in May 1985, he brought down his Budget as he did in February 1986, February 1987 and February 1988. Five times the Opposition predicted. The result would be unemployment, rising interest rates and rising inflation. Every time they predicted the country was going down the tube. Five times! And they were wrong every time. We created 1.4 million permanent jobs in four years. That is ten times what the Liberal Party did in four years. Eighty per cent of those jobs are permanent jobs, while your job creation efforts only produced temporary jobs. Look at the facts!

In any case, Mr. Speaker, I see that my time has expired, but I am glad I was able to wake them up this morning.

[English]

Mr. David D. Stupich (Nanaimo—Cowichan): Mr. Speaker, on the morning of November 22, Canadians awoke to the realization that they had re-elected the Tories as the Government of Canada. The Government awoke to the realization that the deficit was a serious problem and the debt had to be taken into account. Prior to November 21, it was manageable. Cheques could be handed out and promises could be made and accommodated within the projected deficit of $28.9 billion, up until November 21. One day later the country was in an extremely serious situation that the Government had to deal with as well as the Canadian people.

The Liberals are blaming the Conservatives for having doubled the deficit in the past five years. The Conservatives are blaming the Liberals for having started the process some years ago. I say a pox on both their houses. They both had the opportunity to do something, and both have failed the Canadian people.

We have the largest country among the seven industrialized nations in the western world. We have more resources per capita, more grain production per capita, more energy consumption. Our country has the second highest gross domestic product per capita with the second best trade balance. To come to the next line: We are the second worst when it comes to government debt per capita. When I was canvassing, anyone who wanted to talk, wanted to talk about free trade. The second most important item in the minds of the voters in my constituency, and I suspect it was the same all over Canada, was the annual deficit, the accumulating debt, and what was going to be done. The people do not care who started it. They do not care who doubled it. They want to know what is being done about it.

There is a story about the mountain that laboured and produced a mouse. This particular mountain, this Conservative Party mountain, laboured and did not even produce a mouse. Through revenue measures and expenditure restraints another $5.25 billion is being taken out of the Canadian economy. Instead of the deficit reducing, it is actually increasing by $1.9 billion. I say shame on the Government for having had all the opportunity and such a glorious country to work with and yet it failed the Canadian people.

People are worried about the deficit and they are worried about the accumulating debt. Even the Royal Bank is concerned. I have here a letter from the President of the Royal Bank. I thought it rather strange that he of all people should write about the problems of deficits and debts. After all, this is one of the organizations that regularly reports income in the hundreds of millions of dollars, and often reports paying no income tax at all. Yet its president thinks someone else should pay.

There is a story that is often used on the campaign trail: "The only fair tax is the one that you pay and I don't". That seems to be the attitude of the Royal Bank. The Royal Bank got us into part of our deficit trouble through its lending policy to nations and not caring what was done with the money or wondering how much of it was going to numbered accounts in Geneva. There was no accounting at all. It poured the money into those countries and then when it got into trouble, the bank came to the Canadian people and asked them to bail the bank out. Of course, we did bail it out. The Canadian people picked up the tab. How much did that add to the deficit in the last two or three years? How much has it added to our accumulating debt?

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) said something interesting when he was speaking in the debate. He stated that the interest of $39 billion was the problem, that we were looking forward to a deficit of $30.5 billion, and if it were not for that interest we would have had a surplus. What rubbish! There would not have been a surplus. If the money had been available we would have a fleet of atomic-powered submarines. We would have been competing with the Americans to see who could have more atomic-powered submarines patrolling the Arctic watching each other. There would not be a surplus. Perhaps the one good thing about the Budget is the fact that the Government decided that it is not in a position to build or acquire a fleet of atomic-powered submarines.

Whose fault is the high interest rate policy that the President of the Treasury Board was complaining about, and its effect on the deficit and on the debt? Who is responsible for it? I can recall hearing on television Conservative after Conservative, when they were in opposition, accusing the Liberals of having a high interest rate policy. Now that the Conservatives are in office, it is somebody else's fault. They do not say that it is the Governor of the Bank of Canada, but somebody else's fault. They take no responsibility for it at all. They recognize the effect on the deficit, and they must recognize the effect on inflation.

I heard a previous Governor of the Bank of Canada state that interest rates must be increased or we might have inflation. The moment interest rates are increased there is no more "might" about it. It is automatic that there is inflation right away. Why not lower interest rates? That has been advanced by my colleagues, and I will not address that further.

There was an editorial in The Globe and Mail which recognized that people are worried about the deficit, whether it is important or not. There is some argument about that. Economists will tell us how vital it is that the deficit and the debt are controlled, and just as many economists on the other side of the fence will state that it is quite manageable, and it is nothing to worry about at its present level. Whatever is the truth of that we will never know.

I have done a lot of campaigning and heard many stories. One of them was "if all the economists in the world were laid end to end, it would be a good thing". The editorial concludes by stating that whatever is going to be done to control the deficit and to control the debt, it must meet the test of fairness.

I wish to ask some questions about some of the measures undertaken by the Government to control the deficit. Many have been discussed previously, and I do not intend to discuss them in detail. I simply want to address the question that it is not fair.

The Government is getting out of contributing to the unemployment insurance fund. That is all well and good for harmonization which is part of the free trade deal, and I admit that it covers that, but when the Government abandons its responsibility to look after the differences in regional employment rates and states that it is up to the unemployed to do that. When the Government states that in difficult times it might add some money to this fund, in other words, when it suits its political purpose it will put some money in, that is not fair. The Canadian Jobs Strategy and programs like that might very well be funded by unemployed workers. I suggest that that is not a fair way of dealing with the deficit.

Once again, transfer payments meet the test of harmonization. But when transfer payments to the provinces are cut back, and there are provincial leaders who would love to cut health costs, education costs, and hospital costs, premiers want to move into privatization in all those areas. That meets the test of harmonization but it is not fair to the Canadian people.

Cutting $400 million in the next two years from regional development once again meets the test of harmonization. Is it fair that we should be cutting back on programs such as reforestation in B.C. and all the programs in the other provinces that are funded in part by regional development payments? I suggest that it is not fair to the Canadian people.

With regard to culture and cutting back on the CBC, perhaps the CBC is not the most popular radio station in each locality, but it is important to the Canadian identity. It is being cut back so far that the person in charge states that he does not know what will be left of the CBC.

There are other cultural programs that the Government is cutting back. The Americans wanted that when they were negotiating the free trade deal. They wanted the Government to get out of sponsoring, funding, and subsidizing cultural programs. We turned it down until after November 21, but then we decided to accept it. That is not fair to the Canadian people.

Year after year child care has been promised by Liberals and Conservatives, and supported by everybody in the House. Now that has been abandoned. If it was a popular program here, and if it was a popular program outside, is it fair to the Canadian people to cut that particular program? I suggest that it is not. Once again, it meets the harmonization test, but it does not meet the fairness test discussed in an editorial in The Globe and Mail.

Earlier in my remarks I talked about the tremendous resources that we have and the tremendous capacity and how much more we could be doing for our own people. We also have an obligation to other people in the world who are not nearly so fortunate. We have an obligation and the opportunity to help them help themselves. We agreed that we would contribute .7 per cent of our Gross Domestic Product to official development assistance and foreign aid. We are half way there and have two years to go to meet the target of .7 per cent. It is not fair to ourselves. How can our representatives hold their heads up high in meetings of nations when Canada is failing miserably to meet a promise that was made to international development?

What can I say about VIA Rail? The Minister responsible stated that it was like trying to keep the canoes and the stagecoaches going when the railroad was built. In every other one of the seven most developed nations, other than Canada, each one is doing its best to build a modern, rapid, comfortable, and safe railway system for transporting people, and they are accomplishing it. Some countries have had that system for years and are still improving it, whereas we have been letting ours slide back. There is public pressure for this, and I hope that that public pressure will result in the Government changing its mind about this aspect of our policy. Let us examine the details of the Budget. The largest revenue measure in the Budget is the increase in the federal sales tax. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) himself calls it the silent killer of jobs. How can the Minister consider this to be a fair way to get more money from the economy when he knows it will be a killer of jobs? That is not fair to Canadians.

We were led to believe the Government was going to finally introduce a financial margins tax that would bring in $1.4 billion with respect to the banks, insurance companies and trust companies. Was it fair not to impose that tax on the Royal Bank, because of "technical problems"? There were no technical problems involved in any of the cut-backs we have talked about. There was no technical problem with respect to increasing the federal sales tax. Yet when the Minister attempts to get money from the banks, there are technical problems that make it impossible to do so.

An Hon. Member: Called political problems.

Mr. Stupich: It may be technical problems or it may be political problems, but it is certainly not fair to Canadians when the Government is not getting the money it should. To the Government's credit, it has done something by imposing a large corporations tax. Instead of 89,000 profitable corporations not paying tax, only 85,800 will not pay tax. That is progress. Obviously, it is not nearly enough to be fair to Canadians.

There has been some discussion about the possibility of collecting the deferred tax or collecting interest on it. We have heard some description of the deferred tax, such as that given by the Member for Edmonton Northwest (Mr. Dorin), who is an accountant. He wanted to change the title of that tax so it would not appear as though the tax was really due at some later date.

According to the dictionary, "defer" means to put off to a later time, or postpone. Companies acknowledge that the tax is due at some later date. If you or I have that kind of debt with the Government, it charges us interest immediately. It seems quite reasonable to the New Democratic Party that interest should be charged on that deferred tax.

The purpose of the deferred tax is to enable the corporations to retain some cash in their accounts so they may expand their assets, pay out dividends or even swallow other corporations. I do not mind corporations having the cash, but at least we should collect the interest on the tax at the same rate that you and I are charged when we are behind in our payment.

The Budget also introduces the goods and services tax. There is no question that it is terribly regressive. I acknowledge that the opposition in this House will not be able to prevent the implementation of that tax. As much as I will fight it and talk about it between now and the time it is implemented, I still want to urge upon the Government to restrain itself in its temptation to give exemptions. Exemptions will not make it more fair. Exemptions will make the tax much more difficult to administer. Exemptions will be of greater benefit to those who have more money than to those who have less money.

Exemptions will not help the poorer people. There will be a tendency to change the exemptions every four years, if it coincides with an election. The exemptions will be politically inspired rather than exemptions made in an effort to look at the needs of poor people in the community.

I associate myself with the consumers' organization when they say not to exempt food. What is food? Food comes in many different forms and can be obtained in many different places. How does one make a distinction in order to apply an exemption? The regulations and definitions would have to be constantly changed.

I urge the Government to correct the discrepancies by providing a larger tax credit for the poorest people in the community. It is easy to identify them, to know how much income they are getting and how much they are spending. It would be much easier to determine the size of credit they should receive. Exemptions would only make the process much more difficult.

The Minister stated that he would pay this out quarterly in advance. There are many Canadians living on welfare or at the welfare level. It will be very difficult for them to make this extra amount of money last for three months when they must meet basic daily expenses. Let us ensure that the poorest in our country get those cheques monthly rather than quarterly. It is not fair to ask them, with their very limited means, to budget the small amounts of money they have over a three-month period.

Finally, I want to talk about personal tax. I agree that it is fair to impose a surtax. However, it is not fair to have abandoned the different categories and let the people with high levels of income pay the same tax as those at the medium level. We need a progressive income tax. Why should people who make capital gains get away with paying less tax than those who work with their hands? The Government should do away with the capital gains tax exemption and its special deals for investment.

According to The Financial Post there are 48 people who made $500,000 or more a year. If they were paying tax at the maximum rate, it would be about 50 per cent. The top earner made about $4.6 million in cash compensation. I doubt that that person is paying 50 per cent tax.

I would like to know how much they are paying. I very much doubt any of them are paying at the maximum rate. I have more to say, but will do so on another occasion.

Mr. Thacker: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member spoke about deferred corporate taxes. Does he and his Party believe that this should be abolished? While some large corporations get the media coverage, the fact is that the same provision applies to tens of thousands of small businesses, including farmers and corner store operators. Would he draw a distinction between those?

Is it his view and the view of his Party that the 12 per cent manufacturer's sales tax should continue rather than a sales tax? I believe he said the capital gains tax exemption should be abolished. Does he include those 300,000 farmers who qualify?

I totally agree with the Hon. Member with respect to the sales tax exemption. It is hard to believe that he is a Member of the New Democratic Party. He sounds more like a New Zealand labour socialist. They have no exemptions at all which, in principle, would be the wisest policy. Food should be included, with a generous refundable sales tax.

Will he distinguish his view as compared with the NDP official view? His position seems far more sensible than has his Party's position for quite a few years.

• (1210)

Mr. Stupich: Mr. Speaker, I believe I made it very clear that I do not agree with the goods and services tax. I think it will be a very regressive tax. I do not trust the Government to properly look after the poor people in our community. I do not agree with it.

However, if the Government is going to do it, and I am sure that it will unless the heat builds up in the country—

Mr. Dick: You already approved it in the last Parliament.

Mr. Stupich: I was not here in the last Parliament.

However, if we are going to go that route then what I said is true. I think there should be no exemptions. However, it is still a very regressive tax. There is no question about that. The sales tax is equally regressive. I did not say anything about that tax other than that I was opposed to increasing it because, as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said, it is the silent killer of jobs.

The Hon. Member asked me whether I speak for my Party or for myself when I talk about deferred taxes. Several Members in this corner of the House have asked already: "Why do we not at least charge interest on deferred tax accounts?" If the Government is letting people with such accounts use that money for whatever purpose, for whatever time, recognizing that it is only deferred, only postponed, then let us get interest on it in the meantime.

Mr. Thacker: What about capital gains to farmers?

Mr. Stupich: The Party position is that if the farm is staying within the family and is being passed down in the form of an inheritance or a transfer, then there should be no tax at all, at least not on the first half million. However, if it is being sold to someone else, then why should it not be like any other asset of industry or business?

[Translation]

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, I listened carefully to what my New Democratic colleague said and I realize that the New Democratic Party is talking out of both sides of its mouth. When they are close to winning an election, they are ready to reconsider, for example, as former MP Michael Cassidy said, they are ready to reconsider tax breaks for flow-through shares. At first, when they were far from power, they said that this left the rich too much money. When they were close to power, they wanted to restore flow-through shares for those people. They even had a special day on it, because they were close to power, Mr. Speaker.

But we also realize that the New Democrats do not have a certain economic vision of Canada. They are prepared, Mr. Speaker, because they say that we absolutely must make the rich pay, and they are the first to get up and say that in the present budget reform, it is incompatible for a Finance Minister to say that those earning $50,000 and more will gradually have to give back up to $70,000 they received. They make no distinction, Mr. Speaker, between those with high salaries and people on low wages. They make no difference— That is a comment, my dear friend. They make no distinction between the rich and the poorest people and the measures the Government took in that direction.

What I would like to ask my colleague, Mr. Speaker, and I ask him to answer as honestly as possible, is how he as a New Democrat can claim to defend the interests of the weakest and most disadvantaged when he gets up to say that those receiving $50,000 and more should be given the benefit of the doubt, have greater eligibility for federal programs, while those who need them most are those who earn the least. And that is why the federal Government's Budget, the Finance Minister's Budget, takes into consideration the least fortunate and is not based on the interests of the New Democratic Party.

[English]

Mr. Stupich: Mr. Speaker, it is a real surprise to me that any Tory would stand up to accuse somebody else of talking out of both sides of their mouth during the election campaign.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stupich: I made no comment about flow-through shares. I recall the discussion prior to the election—

Mr. Champagne (Champlain): Your colleagues and your Party did.

Mr. Stupich: I thought we were talking about my speech this morning. I said nothing at all about flow-through shares. Given another opportunity, I might.

Mr. Barrett: He needs another 20 minutes. I ask the House to give the Hon. Member another 20 minutes.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stupich: I had a little trouble keeping up with the Hon. Member, Mr. Speaker, since the interpreter had a little trouble keeping up. I may have lost something.

An Hon. Member: You didn't lose a thing.

Mr. Stupich: The Hon. Member talked about the claw-back on the family allowance and old age pensions. Mr. Speaker, did you hear me mention anything about that issue during my speech? He is talking about a speech I have not yet made.

Mr. Barrett: Let us hear that speech.

Mr. Kindy: Mr. Speaker, I would like to hear some comments from the Hon. Member with regard to the Australian experience. In 1987, the Labour Government of Australia introduced a means test. I point out that the Labour Government in Australia had inherited a deficit of about $8 billion. The inflation rate at that time was 11 per cent and unemployment was at 9.6 per cent.

Today, the experience in Australia shows that the Government is expecting a budget surplus of approximately $5.5 billion. So that experience worked extremely well. The Budget was balanced and a surplus is expected.

The unemployment rate in Australia is down to 7.6 per cent and the inflation rate is 7.7 per cent. It was a socialist Government in Australia and it did very well. However, it had the courage to introduce a means test.

Mr. Barrett: What do you think income tax is?

Mr. Kindy: I would like the Hon. Member to comment. I think we should perhaps look at that experience. We have a huge problem in Canada. Our deficit is rising and our debt is increasing. I would like the Hon. Member to comment.

Mr. Stupich: Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of my remarks I admitted that the deficit is rising, that the debt is rising and that the Government is not doing anything about it and that the Liberals did not do anything about it either. I suggested ways of dealing with it. I suggested ways of getting more revenue by going after the corporations which have been escaping the tax man so far. I suggested that the Government go after individuals in the high income tax brackets. I would like to see us get three-quarters and not half of the $4.4 million that the person at the top of the list received in cash compensation last year. There are ways that the Government could be getting more money. We do not need the means test. There are methods.

The Hon. Member asked me about the Labour Government in Australia. The one significant thing it did at the beginning is that it sat down with industry, labour and the communities and got everyone to agree to the program as it was proceeded with. It had the support of business, labour unions and individuals.

I challenge the Government and I challenge the Hon. Member to produce one Tory Premier who supports the GST.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stupich: I challenge the Government to get into a consultative process with the community as a whole before it moves in this direction.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the debate on the Budget that was brought down by my colleague draws to a close, I am very pleased to take part in the debate and to discuss in a rational forum, as my colleagues on this side of the House have, the necessity of the instrument of a Budget to rectify wrongs that have built up over a number of years in Canada.

This was a difficult Budget. It was a difficult Budget for all Canadians. It was a particularly difficult Budget for the Canadian Armed Forces. However, it is very easy to imagine something that could be worse.

We could have ignored the extent to which we were going, with the debt building up ever increasingly day by day, year after year. We could have listened to the wailing prophets of gloom and doom from the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party who have in their loud voices this time recognized that there is a debt. However, those voices were stilled over a number of years. Those who held those voices had their eyes shut. They stepped on the accelerator. They blew down the alley of Utopia. They looked for the end of the rainbow. Or, they had a fantasy that was substituted from the troublesome reality that Canada has to face today.

• (1220)

I guess in some ways I envy Opposition Members in their simple world, a world of self hypnosis that they are involved in. I suppose if the finances of Canada could be tranquilized by hypnosis it would be a much easier country to govern. I do not believe in the theory of Disneyland economics. There are realities of today and those realities have to be met.

It is an entirely different world outside of that comfortable cocoon that Opposition Members sit in. We have heard them enunciate all the wrongs that have been brought out in this Budget in their minds. But we have not heard how they would have handled the real reality of today.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has given this House a very stark, informative picture of the finances and realities of today. He has outlined the stringent actions that are required to curb the debt that is faced by this country.

Like all Canadians, the men and women in Canada's Armed Forces and their civilian colleagues accept that they have a role to play in the broader strategy intended to bring the deficit down and restore our economic health. Because it is their lives' work to provide security to this country, they share the concern of all Canadians of the immediate and present danger inherent in the ever-growing national debt we face today.

I am sure it bears repeating again what my colleague, the Minister of Finance, said when he talked about what this Government had inherited in 1984, and what we have done to correct it and the actions that we now find necessary to set it right.

I would like to expand somewhat in the time allowed to enunciate the contribution that the Department of National Defence has made to the national effort to reduce the deficit in Canada. Mr. Speaker, $2.74 billion of the projected spending over the next five years has been removed from the budget from the Department of National Defence. As some colleagues would know, when you project that over the 15-year planning period, that is a total of $22 billion plus in the planning timeframe.

The Department has cancelled the plans to provide nuclear propelled submarines, additional long range Aurora aircraft, the battlefield night observation equipment, additional CF-18s, the unmanned airborne surveillance and the target acquisition program.

We will purchase smaller quantities of equipment to outfit the countermeasure training vessels. We will purchase fewer northern terrain vehicles, army radios and CF-5 avionics. We will postpone the procurement of light armoured vehicles for the militia, and put on hold the acquisition of the main battle tanks. The North American Defence Modernization Program will proceed as planned, as will the research into territorial and air space surveillance. The two phases of the frigate program, so important to Canada's security, will continue. As well as the modernization of our tribal class destroyers, we will acquire a new ship-borne aircraft as we identified earlier. The countermine sweepers for the naval reserve will continue to be constructed.

This Government started in 1984 to rebuild the capability of Canada's Armed Forces. We will continue to rebuild that capability. As the Minister of Finance identified, we will immediately examine the alternatives to ensure that our naval forces are able to make an effective contribution to the maintenance of our national security.

We will continue to re-organize our land forces and we will set up a new regional command structure. In particular, we will continue to concentrate on the requests for peacekeeping whenever Canada can contribute to the peaceful resolution of disputes around the world.

As other Members know, over the last months no fewer than 1,500 of Canada's men and women who serve in the military have served in peacekeeping operations around the world in the last 12 months. This is something that all Canadians are proud of but in particular those men and women who have the opportunity to serve Canada and bring about peace and security in the world.

The Canadian Forces will also concentrate on the collective security and defence in Europe. We will continue to seek security within that alliance. Our commitment to NATO is unwaivering and that, sir, has brought about the longest period of peace in Europe in the last 200 years.

We will continue to increase our reserves. It will be at a slower rate than identified, but with the commitment to using total force concept it will be necessary to continue to create reserves around this country.

What has happened is that financial restraint will require us to find some personnel savings so that we have room for other expenditures. As I have noted, the reserves will grow at a slower rate. There will be a slight reduction in our civilian and military personnel over the next five years. As we move to reduce military establishments, employment reductions will be necessary.

As some Members will know, perhaps from having participated in station closures over the last number of years, the workforce adjustment program of this Department has been recognized as one that has compassion, that understands the need, the sensitivity and the change that takes place when these stations and bases must be reduced.

Some 14 bases and stations will either be closed or rationalized. These plans are advanced for economic reasons and they are based on military rationale. With changes in technology, CFS Holberg, Sydney and Barrington are no longer necessary and Gander can be reduced in size. Mont Apica will be replaced with other facilities nearby.

On other occasions in the House, I have mentioned the tracker fleet at Summerside. It is over 30 years old and could not be kept going beyond 1992 without major retro-fit. It no longer has a military role. These aircraft and the base that supports these aircraft because of that necessity are surplus to military needs.

Portage la Prairie is another base that has been discussed. We are actively pursuing plans to co-operate with the commercial sector for the preliminary flight training that takes place there. When it is concluded, that activity will allow adequate notice to the people of Portage la Prairie because in the near future we will be going forward with requests for availability and costs in that project.

The remaining bases that are being closed or rationalized are to bring about cost efficiency to the base structure. It is an efficiency that we must now have to compensate for the reduction in the Budget.

There are some Members who perhaps will not recall that some 20 years ago there were 120,000 men and women in Canada's military. The bases that have been identified have been in existence for over that period of time. With fewer military personnel, the military need from a defence and capability point of view can no longer be supported. Some people have suggested that this may be a plot against certain regions and certain provinces.

Some Hon. Members: True. True.

Mr. McKnight: The simple fact is that those bases were opened when they were needed. When they are no longer needed because of changes in technology, resources and priorities, then the need to close them is as apparent as the need was to open them.

• (1230)

Those who wish we could keep these bases open are saying that the military payroll in the community is more important than having properly equipped armed forces who can fulfil the commitments that the Canadian people task the men and women in the military to fulfil. Those who would suggest that we close bases in Europe instead would see Canada sacrifice its contribution to stability and peace around the world so that obsolete facilities could be kept full of men and women who in turn have obsolete equipment and would be doing things that would no longer need to be done from a military perspective. Uneconomic bases must be closed so we can bring into balance the infrastructure and the capital dollars that we have to provide the equipment that men and women need in the military.

This contribution of $2.7 billion to the war on the debt over the next five years is significant and everyone understands, particularly this Minister, how painful that is at DND. I am convinced though that we must halt this slide of our national finance into the pit of oblivion. DND and all other Departments of Government will be asked to make a contribution and we have made that contribution. If we had not made it we would continue to have to sacrifice more and more as we slide further and further into that pit.

I firmly believe that lack of economic security would impair our ability to have defensive security and that is an important part of Canada and an important part of the debate in which we are involved.

Obviously the goals in the White Paper will be achieved more slowly and, in some cases, less fully. We will keep our present forces in Europe. We will continue to provide the North American defence role in which we have been involved and we will continue to stand ready for peace-keeping missions around the world.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, even if the rate of progress is slowed, the continued expenditure of over $2 billion annually on capital equipment will continue to rebuild our Canadian forces.

The White Paper tabled some two years ago continues to provide the basic parameters of our defence policy. Those programs will be put in place more slowly but the budget will continue to grow in real terms, although at a reduced rate.

The last four years' real efforts that have been taken to end the neglect of our armed forces and to bring into line our defence commitments and our defence capacities are efforts that have been recognized and will continue.

It has not been easy for the leadership of Canada's Armed Forces to see the debt crisis undermine these plans that military and civilian officials at the Department of National Defence have a duty to both Canada and to the men and women who are serving Canada to bring into fruition.

I firmly believe that a failure to act now would require very dangerous sacrifices as to capability in the future. The military leadership as reflected on the defence budget produced a significant contribution to debt reduction. That has to be recognized and one that I wish we had not had to ask for.

Through the Budget discussions, they offered to me the forthright advice that I needed and that I required to protect the capability of the forces within a much less than adequate budget than had been planned for a short time ago.

I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, thanks to their contribution, the goals and efforts of the White Paper are still attainable and while armed forces modernization will take place at a slower rate over a longer period than intended, that modernization will take place.

One of the things that bothers me is that the military did not contribute to this problem. Unfortunately our options in resolving the situation are limited and we have to call on the resources we have in order to prevent a larger debt and an even greater tragedy that could take place in the years ahead.

We accept the responsibility on this side of the House for what must be done. As Minister for Defence, I am responsible for contributing to the struggle against the debt while maintaining the integrity of our Armed Forces. Our military leadership has done its duty in supporting the necessary budgetary policies put forward by the Government, and I believe it is my duty to ensure that the rebuilding of our capability resumes without further delay and diversion.

I take the opportunity at this time to reiterate that the Government found these decisions difficult. As difficult as those decisions were, the Government had the courage to act upon them because of the necessity for future generations of Canadians, so that those Canadians would not be impaired in their ability to take part in the life and economy of this country as we know it as a result of lack of will or leadership by the Government of the day.

Mr. Harb: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to comment too much about the speech on the Budget because the Hon. Member concentrated more on the Defence Department and the budget cut in his Department as a way to reduce the deficit. In my view, that cut has left the Department defenceless.

My question to the Hon. Minister concerns those 14 or so bases that are going to be shut down over the next years. Could he tell us what is going to happen to those bases once they are shut down? Will they remain or will they be torn down? I heard some rumours that the Government intends to tear them down. Is that the view of the Minister? If so, could he inform the House?

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, the bases and stations that were identified in the Budget for either closure or rationalization will be closed or rationalized starting in 1990. The work force adjustment program is now in force in the Department of National Defence and will be furthered developed. That adjustment program for civilian employees will provide for priority hiring, redeployment, reallocation of families, or retraining, if necessary, for a period of up to two years, and will allow time off for job interviews in either the private or the public sector. This program will allow these civilian employees, both men and women, to have an opportunity to continue employment either within the Government of Canada or outside the Government.

The question which the Hon. Member asked regarding the bases and their structure will involve those communities affected. The Department has gone through this process in other years under other administrations and it has always been—and I have experienced it within my own constituency—the Department's intent to allow for reuse to take place, for committees to be established locally, for opportunities for industry or other Government Departments to locate in those infrastructures already there. This will happen as bases are identified and the reuse committees are structured involving the community and community leaders.

The Department of Public Works has the responsibility for disposal. In other words, as other Government Departments turn over their assets for disposal, they will be offered to another Government agency. If there is no governmental use, they will be offered to the community and the private sector. The past experience I had in my riding shows that with co-operation between the communities and Government, alternate uses can be found.

There is an opportunity for development, some of which may be unique. Some Hon. Members might remember the Alsask Pinetree Base located on the border of Saskatchewan and Alberta. Most people would not consider that to be a retirement area but there is now a very vibrant retirement community located on that base. Senior citizens from across Canada have come to that strange small corner of the heartland of Canada on the border of Saskatchewan and Alberta because there is a community there with security, infrastructure and the support of one another.

There are options. We know it is difficult. Other Ministers will be involved. We will seek co-operation from other government Departments so that something we recognize as being very difficult for communities can be less traumatic with assistance.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I must say that while listening to the Minister during the course of his remarks this morning, I was more than once moved almost to tears. The spirit of selfless sacrifice that obviously has motivated the Minister and his Department's approach to this Budget is something which I think we must all deem to be little short of heroic.

However, there was a nagging doubt at the back of my mind. I finally felt compelled to check with one of my colleagues, and imagine my surprise when it was confirmed that in fact the defence budget is increasing this year. In fact, the defence budget is assuming a larger proportion of total Government expenditures. So, it seems to me that we are left again with a question of choices.

It is not the fact that vicious cut-backs in the Defence Department budget are forcing the Minister to close bases. No, the Minister is choosing to close bases, and I would suggest that that be borne in mind.

I do have a question for the Minister, if I may, and it arises from a letter I received last week from a fellow Albertan. He notes in his opening paragraph:

> A balanced budget is no guarantee for financial well being and a large national debt is not a recipe for financial disaster. Antonio Salazar—

Parenthetically, I would note that he, too, was a big fan of large defence budgets.

> —the late dictator of Portugal, religiously balanced the budget for 35 years in a row and Portugal remained the poorest country in western Europe. During World War II Canada had deficits, in today's terms, of $100 billion per year and in 1945 the national debt was $700 billion. What followed was 25 years of excellent economic growth, low inflation and low interest rates.

Can the Minister point to any substantial factors—other than that, at the time, corporate income tax made up more than individual income tax and it was unquestionably the period of the largest Government regulation of the economy in Canada's entire history—to explain this remarkable financial record prior to the ascendancy of the Conservatives?

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, I do not find it strange that a Member of the New Democratic Party would treat with sarcasm and scorn actions that have been taken by the men and women who serve Canadians. I do not find that strange at all from a Member of the New Democratic Party.

The Hon. Member says that our budget will increase. In nominal terms, it will increase. That increase is needed.

If the Hon. Member were to consult with his Party's defence critic, he would understand that Canada's commitment, ability and opportunity to bring about and take part in peace-keeping around the world is not just incumbent upon the UN peace-keepers. Every man and woman who is in uniform today is a peace-keeper in Canada and a peace-keeper for the world. Canadians asked them to do that. Canadians set the task. In this country, the Canadian Government sets the tasks and the men and women who serve fulfil them.

The Hon. Member spoke of dictatorships and of expenditures. He spoke of the tremendous growth Canada saw. This country spends 35 cents of every dollar the people send to Ottawa to pay interest on a debt that was accumulated in a very, very short period of time. When this debt started to really steamroll was when the New Democratic Party and the Liberal Party joined in a coalition in 1972 to 1974.

I make no apologies for attempting to provide, on the advice of my senior military advisers, the ability to continue our defence operational capabilities by taking actions that are difficult. We ask others to take difficult decisions. The Government is also taking difficult decisions. We are listening to the people who have knowledge about providing defence capability to Canada and attempting, in the financial realities of today, to meet the needs of the men and women who serve in Canada's Armed Forces, the men and women who protect the Hon. Member and I and who contribute to international peace and stability.

Mr. Rideout: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister could explain why the previous Minister of National Defence would announce $100 million to be spent on the base in the City of Moncton while a year later, the Department changed its decision and in effect closed the base. What factors came into play?

Mr. McKnight: Mr. Speaker, the actions that have been taken were taken because $2.74 billion of planned expenditures became unavailable. Those actions were taken because of that reality, and $2.74 billion is a lot of money.

The base in Moncton to which the Hon. Member refers is basically a supply depot. It has the infrastructure of a full base. We can continue to supply from that region and we have said we would, but it is not necessary to have the infrastructure support of a full military base for a supply operation located in Moncton. We have said that the operation will continue and be rationalized, but not with the infrastructure and support of a full military base.

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have an opportunity to speak on the 1989 Budget this morning. Before I do, though, I would like to publicly thank my Leader, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) whose courage and integrity has been a great inspiration and an example to me. He has shown me more than anything else that politics can be an honourable profession.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mifflin: On the subject of the Budget, if I could synthesize the comments of my constituents, it would be that this is as bleak a report on our national accounts as has ever been tabled or attempted to be tabled in the House of Commons. This is a Budget that makes a mockery of the Canadian assertions of sound economic management, breaks the promise of the sacred trust and does not do much for the hope of a brighter tomorrow. It does not do much for the expectation of more jobs. It does not do anything for a stronger commitment to defence and it does less for the vision of economic prosperity.

The name of my riding stands for three great bays on the east coast of Newfoundland, Bonavista Bay, Trinity Bay and Conception Bay. I represent 90,000 people in that riding and they are very special people, descended from a very special breed. My constituents have inherited qualities from their history, their background and their ancestors, qualities that in some ways are paradoxical. They are steadfast and demanding of themselves, yet they are forgiving of others. They are strong of the spirit and strong of the will, yet they are steeped in the milk of human kindness. They have come to accept the hard knocks of life that have been so often dealt their way. Yet they cheerfully return to fight another day. When darkness sets in, we can be philosophical and dismiss it by the very thought that yesterday is over and tomorrow will not last forever. But perhaps more than anything else in the world, we thrive on the fundamental belief that a man's word is his bond. Herein lies the big disappointment and the big disillusionment in this Budget.

This Budget has been called a hard-line Budget. My colleague, the Hon. Minister of National Defence, just called it a difficult Budget. A hard-line budget is bad enough, Mr. Speaker. Low and middle-class households will become the brunt of the Government's deficit-cutting exercise. The largest share of these measures have fallen on the backs of working people. This is the blackness, and what makes this blackness a nightmare is that the policies and measures inherent in the Budget represent the biggest about-face imaginable in the lexicon of promises known in recent political history.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mifflin: There were $17 billion worth of promises for megaproject after megaproject, from Bonavista—Trinity—Conception to Vancouver Quadra. These promises were as colourful as candy in a glass jar and just as attractive. These promises gave hope to the electorate last November when Canada was headed for a glorious and prosperous future, thanks to free trade and the Government's economic policy, we were told. Suddenly within six months, we are threatened by inflation, our interest rates are historically high and we have a crippling national debt. The commitments have disappeared into thin air, and hope has given way to despair. Broken promises, Mr. Speaker.

In a riding with chronic unemployment, a shortage of health and education facilities, a lack of public revenues relative to government revenues and services, the straight-faced and fervent campaign promises, made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his team, of more jobs, no change to social programs, better health and education facilities, tax reform, improved regional development opportunities and even construction of major infrastructure must have raised the expectations and hopes in the minds of even the most skeptical.

I must admit, I was beginning to believe it myself for a while. We did not expect political miracles. We did not expect anything more than was promised. What did we get? We did not get very much, Mr. Speaker. If we bear in mind that this Budget must have been formulated last fall when this Government knew about the deficit and the national debt, we wonder what was going through their minds when they, six months later, made the announcements that we have seen and upon which I am commenting this morning.

I would like to examine some of these promises. First regarding unemployment, in mid-March of this year, unemployment insurance recipients in a part of my riding had their qualifying time increased from 10 to 16 weeks, not because the employment had increased, but because of an unfair quirk in the system. I have already spoken about this in the House. A few weeks later we found out that $30 million would be taken from Newfoundlanders out of work as a portion of the $1.3 billion directed from unemployment insurance. On April 26 we learned that this Government is giving up its 23 per cent contribution to the unemployment insurance fund. Together that represents an over-all reduction of unemployment insurance funding of just over $4 billion. If you work that out on the back of a cigarette package, it equals $1,400 for each unemployment recipient.

The playing field that we heard so much about during the free trade debate is being levelled even before the referees are being called out to referee the game. This all occurs after Newfoundland's representative in the Cabinet said, and I quote: "You're damn right I asked the Prime Minister about changes, and he said, no, no one was planning any changes in the unemployment insurance program".

To use his language, there is a change, a damn big change and they damn well knew it at the time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mifflin: What kind of public trust is engendered by this kind of behaviour? On the subject of jobs, we were promised that free trade would produce over 200,000 jobs. This was the cry during the election campaign. But the Conference Board of Canada this past weekend predicted that this Budget will slam the brakes on economic growth that will cost somewhere in the vicinity of 87,000 jobs in 1990 on top of the thousands of jobs that we have just lost since this House sat last December.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) admitted that unemployment would rise from 7.7 per cent to 8.5 per cent next year as a direct result of this Budget.

I would now like to look at two basics, health and education facilities. They are important in all provinces. Newfoundland relies heavily on the transfer of revenue from the federal Government, as I indicated earlier this morning. In fact we derive nearly 50 per cent of our provincial revenue from the Government of Canada. Twenty-three per cent of our budget goes to education and 22 per cent goes to health care. That is a big slice. Beginning next year, I see from the budget papers that transfers to the provinces, its growth, whatever you want to call it, is being reduced by $200 million, in addition to the 2 per cent cut-back that took place in 1986. This is bound to have a detrimental effect on the health of our people and the education of our children. The question is who is going to pick up the slack? Where is the slack going to come from?

In the few moments before one o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk about regional development. In Newfoundland, we rely heavily on regional development agreements called ERDAs for short. The ERDA process is critical to fueling the engine of economic growth in Newfoundland; indeed in all but two provinces in Canada. It represents a total expenditure of around $6 billion. That is a lot of money, and it covers such areas as mining, tourism, rural development, ocean industry, forestry, farming, fisheries and agriculture, all good stuff in Newfoundland. Of immediate concern are the 40 sub-agreements of around $1.5 billion that expired on March 31 of this year. In my province, these ERDAs represent a total federal commitment of over $400 million. There are six that are still waiting for approval. We have learned also that while ACOA will not be cut this year, but reductions are coming next year. The original $1.05 billion commitment to ACOA remains, but it will be spread out over a longer period of time. The new word for this is reprofiling. That is a great word. What it means to me is that we are going to get less money for Atlantic Canada.

I am at a point in my presentation, Mr. Speaker, where I would suggest that we call it one o'clock at your discretion, please.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

ROMANIA

HUMAN RIGHTS ABUSES

Ms. Barbara Greene (Don Valley North): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, May 10, was the anniversary of the independence of Romania, a nation once considered the bread basket of Europe, with a respected cultural heritage.

Today, this country of 23 million is on its knees in the midst of the most severe crisis in its history. Starvation is everywhere. Thousands are imprisoned for their political convictions.

The dictator, Nicolae Ceausescu, is intending to destroy more than 7,000 villages and thousands of churches, cemeteries, and homes. Food, medicine, fuel, and even water are being rationed. Security police are terrorizing the population and those involved in the 1987 riots are still being persecuted. Over 500 people have disappeared.

Europe is incensed and outraged at the disaster zone that is now Romania. Hungary is overflowing with refugees from this cruel regime.

Like many Canadians, we have been increasingly preoccupied by the deteriorating human rights situation in Romania. We must continue to protest these flagrant violations of human rights. I urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) to encourage the Romanian Government to co-operate with the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe provisions that were established in Vienna last January.

EFFECT OF THE BUDGET ON DAIRY FARMERS

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, three events in the last five weeks have had an immense impact on the well-being of dairy farmers, including those in Prince Edward Island.

First came the Government's decision to sign the recent GATT Agreement which will freeze industrial milk prices for the next 20 months. This decision disregards a fundamental principle of supply management and goes against a five-year policy commitment that the federal Government made in 1986 to the dairy industry.

Then dairy farmers were hit with the elimination of the $7-million subsidy on planned diary export quota, and with a $7-million cut from operation costs of the Canadian Dairy Commission. Together this amounts to an annual loss of $260,000 dollars for the Prince Edward Island dairy farmers.

Time after time, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has insisted that all Canadians must share in the task of controlling our deficit. However, the dairy industry has been asked to do more. This Budget is unfair and unreasonable to diary farmers, in light of the recent GATT Agreements signed by the Government.

DAYCARE CENTRES

LACK OF FLEXIBILITY IN FINANCING

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, this week, we are witnessing another adverse effect of the Budget introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). Hundreds of parents from the province of Quebec are threatening to resign from boards of directors of non-profit daycare centres in protest against the potential consequences of the withdrawal by the federal Government of its commitment to child care.

After the Budget announcement, the provinces find themselves with a lot less flexibility for the funding of child care services. In Quebec, the Liberal government is considering cutting back on direct grants to non-profit daycare centres in order to put that money in the only joint funding program maintained by the federal Government, the Canada Assistance Plan. This would cause an increase in the cost of child care services to parents in the province of Quebec.

Where are all those promises that the Conservatives made regarding the support they so wanted to give to parents in Quebec and in all Canada? They have gone up in smoke, and today we are facing an even more severe crisis in the area of child care.

FORESTRY

NATIONAL FORESTRY WEEK—VALUE OF FOREST RESOURCES

Mr. J. W. Bud Bird (Fredericton): Mr. Speaker, National Forestry Week is an important occasion to remind ourselves about the great value of our forest resources. They are precious to Canadians in many ways: recreational, environmental, and economic.

One impressive measure of the economic value of Canada's forests is the enormous contribution which pulp, paper, lumber, panelboard and a wide range of other forest products make to our international balance of trade.

Based on 1987 statistics from the Canadian pulp and paper industry, Canada exported a total value of $20.3 billion in forest products to other countries. This export volume is larger than the contribution made by mining, petroleum, fisheries, and agriculture combined.

In economic terms, Canada's forests are the foundation of our enviable position in world trade. For example, one-third of all the pulp and paper sold internationally comes from Canada, and we have customers on every continent, more than 75 countries in all.

Our Government commitment to a strongly mandated Department of Forestry is recognition of the forestry imperative in the Canadian way of life.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL INQUIRY INTO GANDER AIR TRAGEDY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, on December 12, 1985 at 6.45 a.m. a tragic event occurred in Gander, Newfoundland. An Arrow Airlines DC-8 crashed to the ground killing all people on board. There were 248 American servicemen and eight crew members who lost their lives.

The ensuing investigation by the Canadian Aviation Safety Board has been riddled with controversy and contradiction to such a point that to this day the parents and families of those victims still do not know what caused the deaths of their loved ones.

Later today I intend to table a petition signed by 1,500 Americans who wish a judicial inquiry to take place in order that they can find out the truth about what happened on December 12, 1985 in Gander, Newfoundland.

DRUG ABUSE

NATIONAL ANTI-DRUG CONFERENCE—RECOGNITION OF WORK OF SELKIRK PRIDE GROUP AND OF DR. IAN REID

Mr. David Bjornson (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be part of a Government that recognizes and has declared war on drug abuse.

The community of Selkirk was represented this week at the National Anti-Drug Conference in Saskatoon by Dr. Ian Reid and the Selkirk PRIDE group led by Sharon Purvis. At this conference, the nationally recognized group received an award for being the most active community in Canada for its work in promoting drug abuse awareness. In addition, Dr. Ian Reid received the individual award for his outstanding work in the fight against drug abuse.

I am encouraged by the impact that this group and Dr. Reid are continuing to have on the war against drug abuse, and I salute their efforts.

LA SARRE–FORESTRY CAPITAL OF CANADA, 1989

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, the week of May 7 to May 13 marks the National Forest Week. Each year, the Canadian Forestry Association bestows on a municipality the title of Forestry Capital of Canada 1989.

I am proud to inform the House that the municipality of La Sarre has been chosen as the Forestry Capital of Canada 1989. La Sarre is the first municipality in Québec to receive this honour.

This prestigious title will be officially bestowed on the municipality by the Minister of State (Forestry) next Saturday May 13. I am delighted that the people of La Sarre will thus become the focal point of Canada.

Allow me, Mr. Speaker, to congratulate all interested parties as well as all forestry workers in my region whose contribution has made 1989 a memorable year for the municipality of La Sarre.

A big cheer for La Sarre, Forestry Capital of Canada 1989.

FISHERIES

CLOSURE OF NATIONAL SEA PRODUCTS PLANTS IN ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the announcement today by Gordon Cummings, the President of National Sea Products Ltd. in Halifax, is another fatal blow to the economy of Atlantic Canada.

National Sea Products Ltd. have closed the Lockeport fish processing plant in Nova Scotia. It is also closing for a two–month period the following fish plants in Atlantic Canada: the Lunenburg wetfish operation, the Canso operation, losing 625 jobs—the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) may laugh, Mr. Speaker, but the people of Atlantic Canada are not laughing. He will have to account for the sins, not only of his Budget, but also because of his fisheries policy which is hurting the people of Atlantic Canada. Stop your smugness and stop your rude remarks.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Dingwall: National Sea Products will close the North Sydney fish plant, 400 jobs; Louisbourg in Nova Scotia, 450 jobs; Lockeport, 220 jobs; Burgeo, 450 jobs; Arnolds Cove, 350 jobs; and St. John's, 450 jobs.

I urge the Government of Canada to give a directive to National Sea Products Ltd. to curtail those lay–offs until such time as all the reviews conducted by the Department of Fisheries and Oceans are within the jurisdiction of the Minister.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PANAMA—REQUEST FOR CANADA TO SUPPORT REMOVAL OF GENERAL NORIEGA

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, the cry for democracy in Panama is being heard throughout the world. The annulment of Sunday's election is nothing less than morally reprehensible and a violation of any notion of justice. The victory by the opposition parties was the first ray of hope for Panamanians to rid themselves of a dictatorship. It was a clear statement for democracy and self–determination. We urge the Government to support the call for General Manuel Noriega's removal from the country, and for the result of Sunday's election to be respected.

The people of Panama have chosen to rid themselves of dictatorship through the democratic process of the ballot box, and they deserve the full support of Canadians. An escalation of violence or military intervention by an outside party at this time would only aggravate the situation and prolong the rule of tyranny. We urge the Government to call in the Panamanian Ambassador and express in the strongest terms possible Canada's rejection of Noriega's hijacking of the will of the Panamanian people.

IMPROVED EMPLOYMENT EQUITY FOR THE DISABLED

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, you have shown a special interest in the problems which disabled persons face. You will be aware that the recent federal Budget introduced changes in the Income Tax Act which will improve employment equity for disabled persons. They will now be able to deduct the cost of care provided by a part-time attendant to a maximum of $5,000. This initiative, at a revenue cost to the federal Government of $5 million per year, is an important step toward creating equity in the workplace.

This measure is one from a package of tax considerations discussed with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) by the Canadian Paraplegic Association and the Coalition of Provincial Organizations of the Handicapped, demonstrating that this Government does consult, listen and respond to those deserving equitable treatment.

There remain many other obstacles to full participation of disabled persons in the labour force but I remain confident that this Government is prepared to act and eliminate these obstacles.

PULP AND PAPER INDUSTRY

DIFFICULTIES OF ABITIBI-PRICE COMPANY

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, while all Canadians are celebrating the National Forestry Week, the people of Jonquière, the constituency I have the honour to represent in this House, are having problems in a related field, namely with their pulp and paper industry.

Senior executives of Abitibi-Price Inc. met yesterday with the social and economic interest groups of the area and the 1,200 workers of their Kénogami plant.

Mr. Speaker, we don't often see top executives, like Mr. Davis and Mr. Beaudoin, schedule a meeting with the workers in order to tell them the plant is in trouble. Obviously, the situation is serious.

However, Mr. Speaker, I am sure the workers will be able to face the challenge and to turn their plant into a viable operation in just a few months. It's a huge challenge which the workers will take up with the support of the whole population.

DEVELOPMENT OF FOREST RESOURCES

Mr. Réginald Bélair (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, this week we celebrate the Week of the Tree and of the Forests. The slogan "Your Forest and Your Future" illustrates very well the great interest Canadians have in this natural resource, upon which depend close to one million workers. The forest has a national impact, and this is a good opportunity for Canadians to think about its value in our lives.

The ideal thing would be to witness in the coming weeks the renewal of the six federal-provincial agreements on the development of forest resources. They are essential for the viability of the industry and they are in line with the objectives we set for ourselves: to preserve the environment, while at the same time ensuring regional and national economic viability.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, during this Week of the tree and of the Forests, the owners and workers of sawmills across Canada would have been delighted to hear that the 15 percent surtax on lumber exports would be eliminated.

EMPLOYMENT

STUDENT HIRING CAMPAIGN

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, on the occasion of the launching of the campaign to hire students, I would like to urge all the students of my riding looking for a summer job to apply as soon as possible to Canada Employment Centres for Students.

I call on all companies, businesses and private individuals in Drummond, to contribute to the success of the Canada Employment Centre for students by hiring quality manpower.

Through the Challenge '89 program, 302 jobs will be created in my riding, thanks to pay subsidies amounting to $406,314 granted by the federal Government.

I know how much students are counting on those summer jobs and I am particularly proud to contribute to the creation of jobs for the students of Drummondville through this program.

I wish good luck to all the youths of my riding in their quest for a job. I urge them again to apply without delay to the Canada Employment Centre for Students of Drummond.

IMPACT ON MIDDLE-INCOME CANADIANS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Finance could not explain why he violated the principle of universality by attacking old age pensions. Today I want to ask him questions on the disastrous impact of his Budget on the average Canadian.

Can the Minister explain why a two-income family with two children living at the poverty level has seen its taxes rise by 176 per cent, according to his own figures, since he became Minister of Finance? Can he explain why the taxes of a similar family making $100,000 a year have increased by only 11 per cent? Can he explain why taxes paid by families living at the poverty level are growing 16 times faster than those paid by families earning $100,000? Does he think this is fair?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have tried to set out very clearly the impact of the tax changes. We acknowledge that there have been tax increases in this Budget. However, I think if the Hon. Leader of the Opposition reflects on what we have done with the large corporations tax, the high income surtax, the number of loopholes that have been changed in the tax system both for corporations as well as for individuals, he will agree that there has been a very substantial increase in those people with high incomes or corporations that have a better ability to pay the increased tax load. That is the direction we are going. That is clearly the burden of the Budget, and clearly the burden of the changes that we brought in over the past four years.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The questions I have been putting to the Minister over the last two weeks are drawn from his own Budget Papers, all 800 pages of them.

FAIRNESS OF PROPOSED SALES TAX

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have another question about fairness and the implications of the new proposed sales tax upon provincial Governments and the people who live in the provinces. How are the poorest provinces going to cope with the addition of this 9 per cent federal sales tax? These provinces are already being hit with a cut to transfer payments and already have the highest provincial sales taxes in the country.

I put my question to the Prime Minister, rather than the Minister of Finance, because yesterday the Prime Minister issued a warning to provincial Premiers that if they did not play ball on his new sales tax they must, to use the Prime Minister's words: "Accept the consequences". What does the Prime Minister believe he is going to accomplish in this shallow attempt at intimidation? Why does he not listen to the provincial Premiers on this issue of the sales tax instead of attacking them? Where is this new renewed federalism he is talking about? Where is this renewed sense of national harmony?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the renewed federalism to which the Right Hon. Leader refers comes from the fact that the Minister of Finance has been meeting with his provincial counterparts with regard to the national sales tax for almost two years. That is an indication of the tremendous change from when the Right Hon. Leader and his Party were in office. There is a difference.

In response to a question I simply indicated that we had no problems at all with provincial Governments or provincial Premiers themselves commenting on areas of federal jurisdiction. This is an area of federal jurisdiction. I indicated that I thought that the Premier—

• (1420)

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): Including Peterson.

Mr. Mulroney: I am trying to come to that.

I indicated that I thought that the Premier of Québec in terms of his comments was being vigilant in regard to the interests of the Province of Quebec.

I indicated as well that Premier Peterson of Ontario had already engaged us in a battle on the free trade question, and that he was free to do so again; it is a free country and we welcome his participation.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, that was certainly not the tone of the Prime Minister's remarks. However, I am sure that both the Premiers of Québec and Ontario will take renewed heart from what he had to say today.

FAIRNESS IN CORPORATE TAX

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance mentioned corporations. I want to put another question to him about the fairness in the Budget.

We have reviewed his budget papers. Corporations already pay only 12 per cent of the taxes in Canada. As part of tax reform the Minister of Finance promised that he would shift some of the burden to corporations from individual taxpayers. That he has not done.

Will the Minister of Finance be good enough to explain to the House why tax increases in his latest Budget for individual Canadians are six times higher than tax increases for corporations? Does he think that is fair? How does he reconcile that with his earlier statements to the House this afternoon?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me observe that the tax on large corporations results in an increase in corporate taxation of 7.3 per cent. Increases in the personal income tax in this Budget result in an increase of 2.1 per cent. Clearly, we are asking corporations to pay a greater share of the burden of income taxation.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is wrong.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Leader of the Opposition is suggesting, I think, that we hammer the corporations, and ask them to pay a good deal more tax. He knows full well that if we followed that route the opportunities, the incentive to invest in Canada, would be lowered relative to other countries. Corporations would move down into the United States or other countries, set up business down there, create jobs, and take job opportunities away from Canada.

If that is the short-sighted approach that the Leader of the Opposition wants to follow, I think he will find out very quickly that there will be no one following him in that direction.

Mr. McDermid: Now we understand why he is resigning.

DANGEROUS PRODUCTS

TRANS-BORDER SHIPMENT OF TOXIC SUBSTANCES IN FUELS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. Yesterday, the Minister said in the House that he did not learn of the toxic fuel fraud until this week. This morning he clarified that statement in the House, admitting to a meeting that took place in September of 1987. However, he claimed that that meeting dealt with the issue of toxic fuel fraud in the United States only, and did not involve transborder shipments.

How can the Minister continue to mislead the House—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Ms. Copps: —when in fact in a statement this morning the Executive Vice-President of the Petroleum Marketers Association of Canada said that he met with the former Minister of National Revenue on January 7, 1987, and told the Minister specifically about allegations of transborder shipments of toxic fuels placed in gasoline?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, as Your Honour knows I took the earliest opportunity this morning to come before this House to clarify the statements as a result of new information that came to me late yesterday afternoon.

I said, and I will repeat what I said this morning, that I am advised that Revenue Canada was not provided with any evidence of contaminated fuels being brought into Canada, at the September meeting, or since. Whatever new information comes to light, I will be very happy and delighted to look at it.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary for the Prime Minister who yesterday suggested in this House he was proud of the clarity of answers given by his Ministers on this matter of tainted gas.

In view of the fact that the vice-president of the Petroleum Marketers Association of Canada informed me this morning he met on January 7, 1987 with the former Minister of National Revenue and that the discussion dealt with toxic material from the United States being sold in Canada, and since that information was conveyed directly to the Minister of National Revenue on January 7, 1987, is the Prime Minister still fully satisfied with the clarity of answers provided by his Ministers in this House?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I indicated yesterday that matters involving health protection were of concern to all Members in this House, whatever the political organization they might belong to. This is an overall concern of all Members in this House.

Certain details were given yesterday, which were explained with clarity by the Minister of State for Transport and the Minister of the Environment who yesterday pointed to a series of events. All the evidence before us is to the effect those Ministers acted diligently and effectively in the discharge of their ministerial responsibilities.

Now, if the Hon. Member has private information, there are investigating bodies such as the RCMP, she is free to submit it to the investigators involved, and certaiinly it will be brought to the attention of the proper authorities.

So my answer is this: Yes, indeed, frank and clear answers were given by the two ministers who were questioned. And I would say further that the third Minister concerned, the Minister of Revenue, who this this morning brought to light further details that were needed, acted according to the best of parliamentary traditions. I believe the Hon. Member should instead emphasize the Minister's integrity in so doing.

TRANSPORTATION OF TOXIC SUBSTANCES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue.

This morning he got up in the House to correct the statement he made yesterday afternoon. He acknowledged that officials in his Department were at a meeting of his Department in Toronto in September, 1987, during which time the transportation of toxic substances and fuels was discussed, they said now. However, according to the statement the Minister made, it was only a discussion about the transportation of such substances from one state to the other and not across the border into Canada.

My question to the Minister is this. Considering that the reporter who has done a series of articles on this subject, and has not yet been factually corrected in any matter—in fact, has been proved correct—has said that three officials were at that meeting and that the subject about the substances coming into Canada was discussed, is the Minister telling us that he believes and that he would have the people of Canada believe that there was a meeting in Toronto of Revenue Canada officials with Americans in which the subject came up and they did not even ask the question about it being shipped across the Canadian border? Does the Minister really want the people of Canada to believe that?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the meeting to which the Leader of the New Democratic Party refers was attended by seven officials of Revenue Canada. We have since yesterday—since it came to my attention late yesterday afternoon after Question Period—had the opportunity to talk to all seven of those officials. Five of those seven officials had absolutely no recollection of any discussions taking place in regard to the subject of contaminated fuel. The other two stated that there was a reference made by an RCMP informer that there was, in the context of import fraud, in fact a reference made to the transport of contaminated fuels between states in the United States but no connection whatsoever was there given as to transborder crossings of contaminated fuel.

Further, I would like to add that notes were taken at this meeting. We have been able to obtain those notes.

An Hon. Member: Table them.

Mr. Jelinek: There is no reference in those notes whatsoever with regard to contaminated fuels or the border crossings of contaminated fuels from the United States into Canada.

In conclusion, no word was passed to higher senior officials in the Department of National Revenue. As far as I am concerned, the case is closed.

An Hon. Member: It has only just begun.

Mr. Broadbent: I would like the Minister to know that the case may be closed for him but for a matter affecting the health of Canadians in profound ways, the case has just begun to be opened.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INQUIRIES RESPECTING TOXIC SUBSTANCE SHIPMENTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, what was said in The Globe and Mail article is consistent with what the Minister just said, that officials in his Department did not pursue the toxic substance matter because they were just interested in the revenue implications: For example, they were not interested in the health concerns of Canadians, they were interested in revenue and therefore the matter was not pursued.

I would like to ask the Minister if he asked any of his seven officials when he met with them if the officials asked whether any of these shipments were coming across the border, when it was raised that there was within states in the United States shipment of toxic substances in fuels? If they did not ask that question, why did they not?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party says that we were not concerned about the safety, health and well-being of Canadians. Let me tell you that every Member of this Government is very much concerned—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jelinek: —about the health and well-being of Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jelinek: To underscore that fact, as soon as we found any hint of contaminated fuels coming across the country, fast, appropriate and direct action was taken to deal with this situation for the protection of Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: The House will have noticed that the Minister did not answer the question, nor did he tell us exactly what the fast and direct action was. We now know, from what the Minister said yesterday, that the Government added one more inspector at the border after another Minister came back from a conference in Switzerland. That is the fast action, one more inspector.

MINISTERS' ACTIONS—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): I would like to ask the Prime Minister, who not that long ago became concerned about tainted tuna, which was not potentially fatal—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: —but serious, and actually took steps to fire a Minister at that time. I would like to ask him if he is happy that the Minister of the Environment claims that he just found out about this matter at the beginning of this week and that half the country knew about months ago, and that another Minister was at an international conference a couple of months ago and did nothing about it, and then another Minister has had officials in his Department who have sat on it for months. Three irresponsible Ministers. When is the Prime Minister going to take action with his Ministers and tell them to shape up or ship out?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we take this matter very seriously.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: I hope my hon. friend will agree that the Minister of the Environment, the Minister of Revenue and others involved, both here where it is a matter of great interest and in the Legislature of Ontario where it is of great concern, and in Québec and elsewhere, have come together and are coming together to make sure that this very important issue—

An Hon. Member: Will come together.

Mr. Mulroney: —of national—I am trying to answer the question, Mr. Speaker, this important issue of national concern is dealt with in the best possible way in the interests of the people of Canada.

My hon. friend asked the question with regard to ministerial responsibility. Last week he asked for the resignation of the Minister of Finance and he failed. Today, he is asking for the resignation of the Minister of Environment, and he is going to fail again.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DANGEROUS PRODUCTS

MEETING WITH MR. CONRAD—ACTIONS OF MINISTER

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister. What is at issue today is whether or not Canadians were unnecessarily exposed to cancer-causing toxic substances.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, we have learned today that Mr. Jim Conrad, the Executive Vice-President of the Petroleum Marketing Association of Canada met January 7, 1987 with the Member for Central Nova, the then Minister of Revenue. Mr. Conrad has said today that during that meeting on January 7, 1987, 28 months ago and eight months before the September meeting with officials in Toronto, that he told the Member for Central Nova, the then Minister of National Revenue, of strong concerns about toxic fuels, tainted fuels being brought into Canada from the United States.

My question to the Prime Minister is straightforward. Given that the then Minister of National Revenue was made aware of this matter 28 months ago, and given in the intervening 28 months Canadians have been exposed to cancer-causing substances, why is this Minister still in the Prime Minister's Cabinet today?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I want to advise the House of the measures the Government is taking to improve a situation which is already under control. First, the operation launched yesterday has been accelerated today. In practically all regions of Canada we now have teams of inspectors at the main Canadian border points. Samples have been taken from a great many oil, fuel oil, kerosene and diesel carriers, mainly in Ontario and Québec, but elsewhere in Canada as well.

Later today we will complete our plan of action. Among other things, the federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has convened a meeting for this evening where spokesmen for the Canadian oil industry will be told about the measures we intend to take, and we expect them to offer their full co-operation.

In addition, the Ontario and Québec Environment Ministers have been asked to come to Ottawa tomorrow morning to meet with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and finalize our joint plan of action. We will keep in touch with all concerned and follow up on this matter. Mr. Speaker, I believe Canadians should feel more secure.

INFORMATION RECEIVED FROM CANADIAN PETROLEUM MARKETING ASSOCIATION

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of the Environment is telling us what the Government of Canada is doing today. We want to know why it has not done anything for the last 28 months about cancer-causing toxic fuels being consumed by Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, the Member for Central Nova who was in the House a moment ago has left.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: I will repeat my question to the Prime Minister. A reputable industry spokesman and executive vice-president of the Canadian Petroleum Marketing Association has said today that he met with the Member for Central Nova, the then Minister of National Revenue, 28 months ago in the Minister's office face to face and told that Minister of that industry's concern about toxic-laced fuels being brought into Canada from the United States. If the Prime Minister is concerned about the finest parliamentary traditions being respected in this House, why wasn't that information made available to Members yesterday, again today, and what is that Minister still doing sitting in the Cabinet?

• (1440)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think Canadians will be astonished at the apparent disappointment of my hon. friend—

Mr. Tobin: He has known about it for two and a half years.

Mr. Mulroney: —and the disinterest of my hon. friend in a major plan of action announced by the Minister of the Environment to deal with a serious problem.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Simmons: Cover up.

Mr. Mulroney: The interest of the Opposition appears to be directed infinitely more toward something that may or may not have happened on the basis of an allegation rather than the health and welfare of Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I would have thought that given, to understate the case, the indelicacy of his remarks yesterday, the hon. gentleman would have learned to be a little more prudent today. He had to withdraw his remarks yesterday and I assume he may have to withdraw them today.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EMPLOYMENT

CLOSURE OF NATIONAL SEA PLANT

Hon. Roger E. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. It concerns National Sea's announcement today of a plant closure and considerable down-time at other plants, including Burgeo in my riding, reducing more than 4,000 positions to seasonal status and wiping out nearly 300 additional jobs.

Fishermen and plant workers in Atlantic Canada are once again being asked to bear the brunt of this Government's mismanagement of fish stocks and its recent cave-in to France on the fish issues.

In view of the fact that the Fisheries Department is awaiting the assessment report of the Northern Cod Stock Review Panel, will the Prime Minister assure the House that he will prevail upon National Sea not to implement those drastic measures until the Department and the Government have had time to receive and review the Cod Stock Review report which, I understand, will be in the hands of Government early next week?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, National Sea has had to make a decision based upon the quotas of fish that are available. They cannot catch or process fish that is not in the water and available for them to be caught. This is a very unfortunate situation but conservation of the fish resource and fish management is our responsibility and we have to see that the best kind of job is done that is possible.

The worst consequences of the National Sea decision is the closure of the fish plant in Lockeport. The Government Member for South Shore is in Lockeport today discussing options with plant managers and workers to try to keep the plant going. He is not here trying to score points based on the unfortunate results of this decision that National Sea has had to take based on quotas. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that he might well be in Burgeo discussing the same kinds of things with the people of Burgeo.

DISPUTE WITH FRANCE—CONTINGENCY PLANS

Hon. Roger E. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, the Minister from St. John's West knows full well that the people of Burgeo did not create this problem. His sell-out to the French created the problem.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Simmons: You cannot catch the fish twice and if his buddies, the French, have already caught it you cannot catch it again.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member would put his question.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Minister from St. John's West or the Prime Minister, whatever suits their fancy. Would the Minister tell us whether this is just the tip of the iceberg? Can he assure us that the Government's mishandling of this issue, including ignoring the overfishing on the northern tail of the Grand Banks, is not going to trigger more closings, more cut-backs by other fish companies in Atlantic Canada? Will the Minister tell us, in particular, while he is on his feet, what he has in mind? What contingency plans does the Government have in mind to address the suffering, the hardship being inflicted on those fish plant workers?

Mr. Speaker: I think the question has been put.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we have—and it has been known for some time—a serious situation on the east coast of Canada with respect to fish stocks. On the advice that the Government received from Fisheries scientists earlier this year, a committee has been appointed to review the work done by the Fisheries scientists. Quotas have had to be reduced this year and they might well have to be reduced again next year. The Government is working on plans in that connection. We will assist and, of course, as to the shut-down of the plant at Lockeport all readjustment programs of the Government will be applied and hopefully a committee will be set up under the industrial adjustment service.

I hope that the honourable gentleman—and I have several of these fish plants in my own district as well—will be prepared to work to try to reach a solution, not to make partisan points in the House. National Sea did brief the honourable gentleman several days ago and he ran to VOCM and leaked the private and confidential information.

EFFECT OF FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the same Minister on the same topic.

Gordon Cummings, Chief Executive Officer of National Sea Products, said in December in defence of the Free Trade Agreement, and I quote:

> Canadians have to get off their butts and get out there and find out about the American market and win.

Can the Minister tell this House and tell those workers who have been laid off how the American system is helping them?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, this decision and problem has nothing to do with the Canada-United States fish trade agreement unless somehow that agreement drove the fish out of the waters so that they are not there any longer to be caught. This has to do with the fact that the fish stocks we hoped and expected were there are not there.

How does the Free Trade Agreement help the situation? This does not affect secondary processing which continues at Lunenburg because of access in part to the American market. It will continue in National Sea plants in the United States. The Free Trade Agreement helps their marketing position, but unless they can catch fish nothing can help them, neither the Free Trade Agreement nor any other arrangement in the world.

GOVERNMENT ACTIONS RESPECTING UNITED STATES AND FRANCE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Cummings has put Canadians on their butts. He hasn't got them off their butts, he has put them on their butts. This Government has given in to the Americans, it has given in to the French and has not defended Canadians. Why has the Government not done that?

An Hon. Member: It's a red herring.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, National Sea Products, of course, is quite capable of defending itself from the silly and futile kind of charge made by the honourable gentleman. I will say this though. National Sea has invested $50 million in the last three years in fishery facilities, improving plants and improving operations in Atlantic Canada. National Sea cannot be blamed if the quotas of fish have been reduced by 27 per cent over the last five years. That has been necessary for conservation purposes and that company is to be sympathized with, not blamed as the hon. gentleman attempts to do in his unwitting and uncaring way.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ACTIONS RESPECTING CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

Hon. William Rompkey (Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. It is obvious that he has taken over the drum of the Minister of Health simply to beat the retreat of the Canadian Armed Forces.

Mr. Beatty: The Liberals now love the military.

Mr. Rompkey: Since the Minister has taken over he has turned around tanks, grounded CF-18s and satellites and virtually disarmed the Canadian Armed Forces. After four years of attacking Liberal policies and raising—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: This is coming from a Liberal.

Mr. Rompkey: We are getting sound and fury, Mr. Speaker, but no substance.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we could get the question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rompkey: The question is, after four years of damning Liberal policies and raising expectations of some great white knight on a tricycle, how can the Minister of Defence now turn around and cancel almost everything in his Budget? Is it the Minister's intention to let the United States defend Canada or is he simply—

• (1450)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: A Liberal talking about defence?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I could not help but notice the smile on the Hon. Member's face. He started out biting his tongue and then ended up wishing that he had not started the process.

A Liberal Member is criticizing the actions taken by this Government since 1984, but when that Hon. Member was a member of the Liberal Government, in 16 years the forces were reduced from 104,000 to 78,000. Canada's capacity and its maritime responsibilities were jeopardized. That Hon. Member and his Party now wish to criticize a Government that since 1984 has had an increase in defence expenditures so that the men and women who serve Canada and all Canadians can have equipment. That I cannot understand, and I know the Hon. Member does not believe a word of what he says.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, the honeymoon is over.

COMMITMENTS TO NATO

Hon. William Rompkey (Labrador): Mr. Speaker, let us talk about one year ago. One year ago in Lahr, and I want the Prime Minister to hear this, the Prime Minister said:

> —we will refit all our forces in Europe with appropriate equipment. Our attitude is simple: you are the best. We want you to have to the best equipment to do a tough job—

In the past several days, the Government has reneged on its commitment to increase Canadian land forces in Germany and supply them with tanks. How can the Minister square the statement of the Prime Minister made in Germany one year ago with the decisions taken in the last two weeks? Does the Government have any credibility left at all?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to see the renewed interest in NATO by the Liberal Party.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKnight: I am sure that as their leadership debate continues, there will be newly enunciated positions on their NATO posture.

The Hon. Member wanted to go back one year and he referred to Lahr and our responsibilities in central Europe. I would like to take the Hon. Member back to 1983, the last time his Party was in Government. Based in central Europe, Canadian forces, joined with our allies, had 5,400 troops. There has been an additional 2,000 troops added. There will be more troops added this summer. The Hon. Member has to understand that this Party's—

Some Hon. Members: Why?

Mr. McKnight: I hear "why". The reason why is this Government has a commitment to seek joint security with our allies, and the Hon. Member and other Hon. Members should understand that that has—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CLOSURE OF MILITARY BASES

Mr. Ronald J. Duhamel (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. The Minister may know that the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South and the Hon. Member for Portage—Interlake had indicated that the Minister of Defence would come to Manitoba to explain the closure of the bases at Portage La Prairie, Manitoba, and Kapyong Barracks in Winnipeg, Manitoba. That does not appear to be the case at this point in time.

In fact, a delegation is coming to Ottawa next week. When that delegation comes, will the Minister be able to show the members of the delegation that before taking decisions to close the military bases in areas such as Summerside, Prince Edward Island, London, Ontario, Portage La Prairie and Kapyong Barracks in Manitoba, he undertook a study to determine the total economic impact on these communities of that kind of decision?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asks an important question. The decisions to reduce in size or close some 14 bases and stations were difficult decisions. They had to be made so that we could bring into balance our infrastructure costs with our capital needs. One cannot have a reduction in a budget of the magnitude of this without taking that action. If one did not take that action, one would not be able to provide the equipment that the men and women need.

The Hon. Member should understand that we are prepared, through the civilian workforce adjustment program, to sit down with those employees who are affected. We are prepared to sit down and examine opportunities for base re-use. We are prepared to sit down and examine the possibilities that exist.

I will be meeting with the Premier of Manitoba later this day. I will be meeting with a representative of—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

ECONOMIC IMPACT STUDY

Mr. Ronald J. Duhamel (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Can the Minister confirm that there has been no economic impact study? Can he confirm that there have been no studies to consider the impact of the closure of the bases on those communities and that neither his Department nor any other Department of Government has looked at the impact of additional taxes such as excise, sales and income taxes, cut-backs in the agricultural sector, cut-backs in transfer payments that will affect education and health on those communities? Can he confirm to the people of Canada that no such studies were undertaken in order to show the Minister and the Government the devastating effects those decisions would have on those communities?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I understand the Hon. Member's concern, but what causes me additional pause is that the Hon. Member is not asking the questions that are important to ask as to the responsibility of the Minister of National Defence. The Hon. Member is more interested in having empty barracks with men and women who do not have the capacity to fulfil the tasks the Government of Canada asks of them.

TRANSPORT OF TOXIC MATERIALS—REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF STATE FOR TRANSPORT

Mr. Cid Samson (Timmins—Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of State for Transport.

She admitted having been told, on March 22, that toxic wastes were being shipped illegally to Canada from the United States and used in industrial furnaces and greenhouses, in Québec and Ontario.

She said nothing for about 50 days. Is this standard carelessness for the Conservatives, or should she not rather announce in the House she is resigning for reasons of incompetence?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the facts seem pretty obvious to me. The Minister of State for Transport attended a conference in Bâle where was signed a treaty on toxic substances transportation. Officials of the Environment Department were given in her presence some general information they communicated immediately to Ottawa. This information was transmitted to those concerned, in Ottawa. Action was taken. That Minister cannot be blamed in any way.

THREAT TO HEALTH OF CANADIANS

Mr. Cid Samson (Timmins—Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister believe that the health of Canadians should only be protected from PCBs when the media reveals a threat, or will he tell Canadians that health protection is important to the Government? Just what does it take for a Minister to resign if this issue is not considered important enough?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I indicated in response to questions from my hon. friends yesterday and today that I believe questions of this nature to be of great interest and genuine concern to every Member of the House, irrespective of political persuasion. Since that is the case, I think we owe an obligation to the House, on this question at least, to a certain degree of objectivity. I think the test of the reasonable man would indicate that the Minister of State for Transport and the Minister of the Environment have, in regard to this question, acted with clarity and objectivity and very much in the national interest.

FARM LOSSES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Right Honourable Prime Minister deals with the statements made by Mr. Pagé, the Quebec Minister of Agriculture, who after having accused yester day the Deputy Prime Minister of speaking from both sides of his mouth, finally indicated that Quebec farmers had been hoodwinked and betrayed by this Tory Government during the election campaign.

My question to the Right Honourable Prime Minister is this: What step is he planning to take and what measure will he adopt to compensate Quebec farmers for the loss of some $15,000 per farm per year they are going to sustain, according to the UPA?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I should like to emphasize the fact that the agreement reached on April 7 represents for Canada a real victory, because the other countries recognized there for the first time the importance of our farm product marketing boards. It is quite significant.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Blais: Moreover, Mr. Speaker, at least this time the importance of Clause 11 of the GATT has been recognized, and both the Opposition and the Quebec farm producers have asked us to protect it. And we did Mr. Speaker. We saved it, and now, we are going to work to clarify and re-inforce it. It is the major element in this agreement, and we have obtained that both our American and European friends accept to put on the table the exceptions to this agreement.

DANGEROUS PRODUCTS

REQUEST FOR NATIONAL HEALTH ALERT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Canadians in British Columbia, Alberta, Ontario, and Québec may have poisoned fuel in their vehicles, home heating systems or in gas cans, a situation where someone could in fact come in direct skin contact with PCBs, if they were for example cleaning a paint brush in contaminated gasoline.

Will the Minister advise the House now on why he has not issued a national health alert about the dangers of coming in contact with substances such as PCBs?

We have a situation where there is money in the Budget to advertise about the national debt. How about advising Canadians—

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is true to form. Instead of wanting to inform Canadians, he wants to frighten them.

As soon as information was made available to us which suggested that there could be the transport or shipment of such tainted fuels, we immediately started an investigation. To date—and the hon. gentleman should know this—there has not been confirmation that in fact Canadians have burned tainted fuel.

Notwithstanding that fact the Minister of the Environment is continuing with his investigations. My Department and I have been in touch with our provincial colleagues in Ontario and Québec. We will be meeting with our colleagues from the Departments of the Environment and Health in Ottawa tomorrow. We are also continuing to contact all provincial Governments.

If it turns out that such allegations are justified, we have proposed already to the provincial Governments in Ontario and Québec that studies be undertaken to determine whether or not Canadians have been exposed to toxins. The first thing to do is to get the facts, not to make wild allegations like the hon. gentleman usually does.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, this being Thursday, I want to ask the Government House Leader if he will give the customary statement of business which he intends to call for the coming week.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, today will be the conclusion of the budget debate with a vote, if a recorded division is asked for, to be held Monday at 6 p.m.

Tomorrow will be an allotted day. On Monday, May 15, we will resume second reading debate on Bill C-11, the borrowing Bill. On Tuesday, May 16, we will continue with Bill C-11, if that is required, and then move on to Bill C-8 dealing with labour adjustment.

I should advise the House of the only change that could occur. If the other place were to amend the interim supply Bill which was sent to it last week, under those circumstances we would deal with the Government's response to that amendment first thing Monday morning.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, when will the Hon. Government House Leader introduce a motion to strike the standing committee on acid rain which was in existence until the call of the election and served very well in pursuing a matter of high interest in the minds of the Canadian public?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the House will know that we revised the number of committees and their mandates earlier this year after a lot of deliberation with the House Leaders of the two opposition Parties.

At that time it was thought that perhaps the entire matter of acid rain could be dealt with by the environment committee. I can tell my hon. friend that the subject has not come up again, but I would be very willing to entertain any suggestions my hon. friend might have to re-enact such a committee after talking with other House Leaders.

Mr. Fretz: Mr. Speaker, I want to draw your attention and the attention of the House to the fact that yesterday members on this side were rising on questions and only one Member was recognized. Today, Sir, no Members were recognized on questions.

Part of the problem rests with the Opposition and its long preambles which have kept many other Members from raising questions which are important to the House and important to the country.

Therefore, I would like Your Honour to consider the point which I have raised today and hope that you will give it due consideration.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on this point of order. In your consideration of this matter will you please give attention to the excessively long answers by government Ministers?

If Ministers wish to make statements, I would appreciate it, Sir, if you would direct them to make them on motions as provided by our Standing Orders. We too in the Official Opposition have concerns. We receive fewer questions than we are entitled to in our view because of the abuses of Question Period by the long answers given by Ministers.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point. I do believe there is a problem with the length of both questions and answers in the House. I would ask you to meet with all three House Leaders to see what can be done.

An. Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Murphy: I hear a Conservative squawking on the other side. I would like to indicate to him that we are quite willing to have the Hon. Member for Portage—Interlake ask a question on national defence.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, while considering this particular point, I would also ask that you consider the nature of questions that emanate from the government benches. All too often, when recognized, government Members ask set up or planned questions about which the Ministers know in advance.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I have, of course, paid careful attention to the interventions of Hon. Members. Perhaps tomorrow things will go better.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, I should like to continue the presentation I started this morning on the effect the Budget will have on Canadians. I covered jobs, unemployment, regional development, health, education, and transfer payments.

I would now like to deal with the so-called tax reform promise which raises $3.7 billion or nearly two-thirds of the budget cutting effort. I have a few figures that I would like to pass on for consideration. By 1991 Ottawa will collect $55 billion in personal income tax compared with $29 billion in 1984. This is an increase of close to 90 per cent in seven years. Over the same period total corporate taxes will have increased from $9.4 billion to $14.6 billion. That is an increase of approximately 50 per cent.

In 1965 personal income taxes made up 30 per cent of Canada's revenue and corporate taxes made up 20 per cent. In 1988 the situation had changed. The ratio was personal taxes, 44 per cent; corporate taxes, 11 per cent. For the next three years it is calculated that consumers will continue to pay almost four times as much income tax as corporations. It is clear that once again individuals are bearing the brunt of the tax load. They are paying more than their fair share. This point was made very adequately by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition about an hour ago in this very Chamber.

On top of this heavy income tax burden there are consumption taxes which will add another $200 to $500 to most family tax bills. The Government has steadily raised consumption taxes in its past Budgets, despite complaints from consumer groups and welfare advocates that such moves penalize the poor. The Government has been unmoved by those arguments.

Householders will also have to shoulder much of the burden of Ottawa's decision to shift the entire funding of unemployment insurance to the private sector. Consumers will probably have to pay higher provincial taxes as a direct result of the lower transfer payments from Ottawa.

Recently the Minister of Finance confirmed that on January 1, 1991 Canadians would begin paying a 9 per cent tax on goods and services, on almost everything but food, rent, health care, and education. In Newfoundland, with 12 per cent provincial sales tax, the net effect will be to add 21 per cent to goods and services at the point of purchase. That is almost 25 per cent on the price quoted in the stores.

This tax started out to be revenue neutral, another catch phrase. I am not sure if it means that the Government will not be collecting more or that the consumer will not be paying more. I do not think the definition matters. Sooner or later, and I would expect sooner, the Government will raise it from 9 per cent to 10 per cent, to 11 per cent, to 12 per cent.

It would be interesting to discuss the experience of some European countries where similar taxes started out at around 10 per cent and in 20 years they were double that amount, around 20 per cent. That works out to approximately half a per cent every year or one per cent every two years. That has us all concerned.

I now wish to turn to the universality of Old Age Security and family allowances. Members of the Government gave repeated personal assurances that universality would continue, would remain, would not be violated, and was a sacred trust. What happened to the sacred trust? This year it will only affect people with an income of $50,000 or more. When will it become $40,000 or $30,000? The foot is in the door. The mind set that universality is here to stay has now been breached. How long will it take? I would suggest that the principle has been established. All we are haggling over now is the price or in this case the threshold.

I do not have very much to say on child care. The Government did not have very much to say on child care. This was another promise close to the heart of Canadians that has been eliminated even before it was put in place.

I have a specific concern pertaining to my riding, which deals with promises, broken promises. In my riding on August 25, 1988 the Government announced approval to construct the first federal penitentiary in Newfoundland. It was a 160-unit medium-minimum security penitentiary, to be constructed at a cost of $30 million. It was to have an annual budget of $7.4 million, and it would employ 100 to 120 people. The prison was to be built in Harbour Grace. I do not have to tell anyone in the House the impact that such an announcement has on a community with a population of approximately 4,000 people.

Twelve days before the November 21 election day there was a sign put up, and here is a shot of it in a local newspaper. It states: "Harbour Grace location of planned federal medium-minimum security penitentiary". That was the sign 12 days before the election. The sign was put up, everyone took note, and everyone made plans. Corrections Canada made plans and the Town of Harbour Grace made plans. What happened to the prison? Something happened, because in the Budget it states: "Construction of the new prison planned for Newfoundland will be delayed, reducing expenditures by $30 million over the next three years. The delay will not jeopardize public safety as existing cell capacity can meet the region's needs".

The Minister for International Trade wrote to the Evening Telegram and stated that he spent three years of continuous work trying to make sure that this prison finally got to Newfoundland some 39 years after Confederation. Can anyone explain what happened to that promise? Can anyone explain that to the people of Harbour Grace? I considered it a living, breathing, real commitment, and so did the people of Harbour Grace.

All Canadians were suitably impressed when the Government stood tall on a promise to continue the effort that was launched in the mid-1970s to improve national defence. There was a White Paper entitled "Challenge and Commitment". Where is that White Paper today? Where is the commitment? Where are the bases that are being closed? Where are the CF-18 replacements? Where is the naval modernization program? What is DND saying to its international colleagues? I would suggest that national defence deserves better. Our men and women in uniform deserve better. Canada deserves better.

This massive tax hike in the Budget, the biggest in Canadian history, will drive up costs and prices and will edge Canada closer to an anticipated economic slowdown. The forecast of the Minister of Finance of an average annual 3.2 per cent rise in real GNP in the next three years is optimistic. Most economists put Canada's potential growth rate in the 1990s at about 2.75 per cent. I understand from economists that this is a tremendous drop.

Before the Budget was released one-third of Canada's economists were forecasting a recession in the early 1990s as a result of the current high interest rates. Now more than half the economists think that the probability of a recession is more than 50 per cent, and sooner, and that this is a direct result of the Budget.

With some political issues, where one stands often depends on where one sits. That is not the case with this Budget. There is a discomfort index all over the House. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I feel it. It is also felt by my colleagues on this side of the House.

When government members woke up on November 22, and I am winding up my remarks now, they discovered that there was a national debt problem. What is now being proposed as a solution is a disastrous cut in defence spending. Defence represents 10 per cent of government spending, and it is being cut by one-third. There is a reduction in the number of social and regional development programs, and a tax grab that will stifle economic growth and dampen our entrepreneurial spirit for some time to come.

In closing, I would like to conclude my remarks by quoting H. L. Mencken who once stated: "Every human problem always has an easy solution—neat, plausible and wrong".

Mr. Crosby: I have a comment and a question for the Hon. Member for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception. I listened with interest to his remarks. When he was talking about the income tax changes, he did not bother to mention the 850,000 low income earners who have been taken off the income tax rolls. When talking about the sales tax, the Hon. Member did not bother to mention the fact that Canadians are now paying a 12 per cent plus sales tax on most of the goods that will be covered in the tax changes. I guess we cannot expect much different. He finally got around to mentioning national defence, but only in the closing moments of his presentation.

• (1520)

I want to make a few comments about national defence with which I am sure the Hon. Member will agree. I believe the biggest threat to Canada's Armed Forces and military effort would be a bankrupt national Treasury. I think the Member realizes that if Canada did not pursue sound economic policies, we would not be able to take our place in the world as a world power and exercise some sort of military intervention when that was required. I cannot believe that he does not recognize the need to trim the budget, to get our financial house in order. I am sure he agrees with us on that point.

How will that be done unless we look at major expenditures like national defence? I am sure the Member, as a military person, does not expect Canada to continue to subsidize military bases simply for the reason of assisting the communities. Surely we can find better methods to provide economic support to Canadian communities.

Is he suggesting that we should keep the trackers in the air for the two hours that they are able to maintain surveillance? Should we retrofit them at great expense to the national Treasury in order to keep what many consider obsolete planes in the air? He is not suggesting that.

My specific question concerns the nuclear propelled submarine issue. We had an address by the Minister of National Defence who explained the Government's reasoning in this action. I am sure that when the Member remarks on the cut-backs in national defence he will take the nuclear propelled submarines into account.

Did not he, along with his colleagues, complain about the nuclear submarine program during the election campaign? Did he not tell his constituents that it was not necessary and that we should spend the money on child care and social programs?

In the Halifax area candidates said that they did not want nuclear submarines. They said: "We don't want them. We will crush the Navy. We don't care what the future holds for Canada's Navy?

Did the Member join that chorus from the Liberal Party? Was he part of that protest movement? Did he cause Canadians to rise up against the nuclear submarine acquisition so that the people demanded the cancellation of that program? Was he part of that?

Mr. Mifflin: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted at the number of questions put to me by the Hon. Member for Halifax West. I am not sure where to begin.

Some suggestions were made across the floor. I remind the House that I was privy to a lot of information that caused national defence to be where it is today.

The House will be aware that the acquisition program of ships, aircraft and tanks takes anywhere from eight to twenty years. I recall distinctly a cabinet memorandum and a paper which was initiated by the Liberal Party. I can even remember the date, December 22, 1977. That was a great day because the Liberal Party, the Government of the day, decided that Canada should have 24 frigates to make up a strong Navy. That was the position of the Liberal Party in 1977. It was the position of the Liberal Party as we commissioned six that are built and six more that are being built. It will continue to be the position of the Liberal Party. We support a very strong Navy. I am for a strong Navy, and I can assure the House that every member in the Liberal Party on this side of the House is for a strong Navy.

There are other aspects of this which I would be quite prepared to address. However, I want to return to something my hon. friend from Halifax West said about whether I remembered the low income Canadians who are not taxed. Does he remember the high income Canadians who are not paying much tax?

I am sure there are other questions, so I will wait for them.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I rather enjoyed the presentation of the Hon. Member. I like to be entertained just like anybody else.

As the Hon. Member attempted to close his speech five times, he reminded me of the definition of an optimist. It is the man who reaches for his car keys when a politician says "in closing".

The Hon. Member can correct me if I am wrong, but I understand that he was in the Armed Forces and served this country well and honourably. We as Canadians appreciate that very much.

How can he stand up in the House today and talk about the defence of this nation after what the Government has done over the last five years for the Armed Forces, compared to what Prime Minister Trudeau and his merry band of bandits did to the Armed Forces during the period he governed this country? Why did he not stand up then and take the side of the Armed Forces? He sat silently by.

Now he stands up in the House to say with emotion and fervour that the Armed Forces are being destroyed. He knows that the purpose of this action is to maintain our Armed Forces and commitments to NATO. It is to maintain a good, solid Armed Forces and to provide the equipment that the men and women of the Armed Forces deserve. Why did he not stand up and speak about that when he was in the Armed Forces?

Mr. Mifflin: Mr. Speaker, at the outset let me congratulate the Hon. Minister for an excellent presentation and excellent performance.

Mr. McDermid: You haven't see anything yet.

Mr. Mifflin: I feel very comfortable because I see members of the military in the gallery.

Let me say what the Liberals did not do. They did not lead the military on by preparing a White Paper entitled "Challenge and Commitment", making great promises for modernization, and leading them down the garden path by cutting everything off. We did not do that.

Let us look at some of the figures. In my opinion the burden of the cuts falls disproportionately on national defence, where the reductions will account for one third of all government cuts over the next two years. The Department only makes up 11 per cent of federal spending. I am sure this news landed like a mortar bomb on DND. The Department cannot say very much about it, like I could not say anything about it when I was in uniform.

Mr. McDermid: But you were opposed to what was being done.

Mr. Mifflin: I could not say anything when I was in uniform. My job was to serve, and I served.

Some Hon. Members: hear, hear!

Mr. Mifflin: I come here to serve as a politician. Only two years ago the defence White Paper entitled "Challenge and Commitment" gave great hope to this country with a commitment to continue the modernization process that was begun earlier by the Liberals in the mid-1970s.

Let me answer the Minister's question. It would appear from the lead up announcements to the Budget that the Minister of National Defence must have agreed to a series of cuts or delays in major capital acquisition programs, in a real effort to save the nuclear submarine program. It appears equally likely that the change of mind centred on the Government's inability to sell a tough Budget if this high profile, increasingly nationally unpopular project was left unscathed. DND got the worst of both worlds. It got both barrels—bang, bang.

The spending cuts leave national defence in tatters. Will the capital acquisition delays result in equipment rust out? Will the manpower cut-backs leave the forces unable to meet the White Paper manpower commitment to NATO and to reinforce Europe? What is the rethinking on redressing the balance to have a strong Navy and the new approach to ensuring Canadian Arctic sovereignty? Where is that vigorous naval modernization program Canada was embarking upon?

What about base closings? They will cost jobs and decimate the local economies of regions across Canada. They will decrease our mobility infrastructure.

• (1530)

How will defence planners have any confidence in the Government or its plans for money when acquisition programs take 20 years and it cannot tell from year to year how much money it will have?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise in the House today to speak to this Government's budgetary policy.

[English]

I have been following the debate closely. I want to use this opportunity to address one or two specific misconceptions about the Budget. Before I do that, however, I want to look at the entire Budget.

In this debate we have heard a great deal—and we heard it just now again—about the negativism that delights in picking holes in the details of policy, especially policies that show a breath of vision. Speaker after speaker from the other side has avoided dealing with the overriding imperative that has shaped the Finance Minister's Budget—Canada's large and growing public debt.

We have heard them criticize the Government and what it is trying to do to get the burgeoning debt under control. They have criticized every single budget cut that the Government has announced—every single one. We just had a member of the Liberal Party criticize the decision on the nuclear propelled subs.

They have criticized every single budget cut. They have criticized every single tax increase. There has not been one that they have not criticized.

However, what they have not done is they have not been honest with the Canadian people. They have not stood up in their places and said where they would cut, where they would save money for the Government, where they would try to get the debt under control, where they would try to get the deficit down—not once. Not one Member has said that.

I sat and listened to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) ad nauseam the other day. He criticized every single part of the Budget. However, did he have any ideas as to how to get the debt under control? Not one.

Do you remember, Mr. Speaker, when he ran in 1984? He was going to cut the deficit in half in a very few years. He did not say how. Then, in 1988, he said: "By golly, that did not work in 1984. Cutting the deficit did not work in 1984 so in 1988 I am going to make $40 billion worth of promises in the campaign. That is what I am going to do". His whole caucus, this fine looking group of men and women, together with their socialist buddies, have stood up time after time and criticized. However, they have not had one idea.

Do you know what they say, Mr. Speaker? It happened just the other day. They sat there and they yelled at me the other day. They said: "It is not our problem, no, no, no. It is your problem. You are the Government. You solve the problem. Do not ask us for ideas".

The Hon. Member who is a former Cabinet Minister and who has a new riding now—it is South West Nova—sat there the other day and said: "It is not my problem. The debt, the deficit are not my problem". I am going to tell you, Mr. Speaker, it is everybody's problem.

Mr. Karygiannis: How much are you spending on advertising?

Mr. McDermid: It is your problem. It is my problem. It is the Prime Minister's problem. It is the problem of the people in the galleries. It is all our problem. If we do not come to grips with those problems now—

Mr. Karygiannis: How much are you spending on advertising, John?

Mr. McDermid: I will answer your question. Do you know what we have? We have a question and answer period following this speech. I will be happy to answer the Hon. Member's question after the speech. Okay? If he will give me the courtesy of delivering my speech—

Mr. Karygiannis: Do you give us the courtesy when we are up?

Mr. McDermid: You're darn right.

I want to review, because I think it is important that we understand, why we have this problem. It is a real problem. It has to be faced. I do not believe that it will go away and that it cannot be ignored—

Mr. Karygiannis: So you have to advertise during the 11 o'clock news at $700 a crack.

Mr. McDermid: —even by the loud-mouthed shoe salesman over there.

Mr. Karygiannis: They are not as expensive as Wilson's.

Mr. McDermid: Let me review how the problems developed.

Some 20 years ago Canada had no deficit. Our total debt at that time was $18 billion. The debt was $18 billion but there was no deficit. In other words, we were bringing in enough income to pay for that debt without having to borrow to pay for it.

At that time 12 cents of every revenue dollar—every dollar that the Government collected in taxes—every dollar my friend the tax collector collected—I mean the Minister of Revenue, who is sitting here in front of me today—went into interest payments. That was 20 years ago. Four and a half years ago, when this Government came to office, that debt had grown to nearly $200 billion. The amount of revenue devoted to the interest payment on that debt had grown to 32 cents out of every dollar. The annual deficit that year was $38 billion. In one year it was $38 billion.

This dramatic increase, as I said earlier, should be of concern to all Members. For now we have a self-propelling force in our public finances that threatens to undermine our reputation for fiscal prudence and responsibilities. We must bring that debt under control so that we can maintain this nation's ability to provide the social programs, the Armed Forces and the services that Canadians value and rely upon.

Let me be more precise about the burden that debt imposes on our Government's financial flexibility. In 1988–89, $33 billion was spent on public debt charges, that is, just the interest on the existing debt. That makes debt interest payments the biggest single category of government spending.

I would ask Hon. Members to keep in the back of their minds that we are paying $33 billion. I would like to compare that with transfers to persons. We do a great number of transfers to persons here with the funding we collect. Transfers to persons this year is $30 billion. The interest on the public debt alone costs us more than Old Age Security, the Guaranteed Income Supplement, family allowances and veterans' pensions all together. For the current year we forecast that the debt will rise to $39.4 billion. That is the interest on the debt. This year 35 cents out of every revenue dollar will go to pay interest on the public debt.

Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, what a Government could do if it had that 35 cents and did not have to pay interest on this huge debt that we have? Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, what services we could provide or what taxes we could cut? Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, what income we could leave in the pockets of the people of Canada?

That is the problem. It is so clear that we cannot continue to pay more and more of every revenue dollar on debt interest and still be able to provide the services that, let us face it, Canadians now take for granted. Health care is one, as are old age pensions and so on. Beginning in 1987–88, and carrying on into 1988–89, public debt charges have exceeded the annual deficit. In other words, without our large stock of debt we would have a budgetary surplus in each year. We would have a budgetary surplus if we did not have to pay the interest on this huge debt.

This has put us on a treadmill. It has become a major problem because now we are just borrowing money to pay interest. That is insane. There is no end to that. That is why the Minister of Finance brought in the Budget he did. I would like to tell you something. Nobody on this side of the House likes this Budget. That is why I agree with what is going on over there.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: Nobody likes it. We do not like raising taxes. We do not like cutting spending but we know that it is needed. If we do not do it now, within the next two or three years we will be spending 50 cents of every $1 collected just to pay the interest. This Government has the guts to come to grips with the problem. Opposition Members have no guts at all. They do not have any idea how to handle this problem.

An Hon. Member: Are they bankrupt?

Mr. McDermid: Yes, they are bankrupt of ideas. They have not made one suggestion.

An Hon. Member: They run their Party like they ran the country.

Mr. McDermid: That is right. Yes, I believe their Party is still in debt quite a bit. That is the way that they ran this Government for a number of years too.

An Hon. Member: No wonder we are in trouble.

Mr. McDermid: What has been going on is that total spending on Government has dropped significantly as a portion of national income. Over the last four years, the Minister of Finance has made sure that program spending has only grown at an average of 3.6 per cent a year, which is less than the rate of inflation. Actually, it is less than half the growth in the economy.

Over that period, costs of Government operations have actually fallen. The costs of operating the Government, not the transfers of moneys to provinces, medicare or to people; whatever it may be, but the cost of actually operating the Government, which is about 16 per cent of our total expenditures, has gone down over the last four years. We have trimmed and we have reduced the annual deficit. It has dropped from 8.6 per cent of GNP, when we took over, to 4.8 per cent in 1988–89. It dropped to $28.9 billion in the fiscal year just ended. That is almost $9.5 billion below the level of what it was when we took over in 1984. However, it is not enough. We have to do more. The measures introduced in the present Budget take us further along the path of fiscal responsibility, the path we have been on since we came to office. The measures reflect the seriousness of the present situation. They are a result of a great deal of work, and some tough decisions.

I sat with the Minister of Finance, along with my colleague, the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Loiselle), and our Parliamentary Secretary, and he can tell you the tough decisions that had to be made. I would like to say that paramount in our Minister of Finance's mind in all of those deliberations, was to make sure that the less fortunate in our society were protected.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: That was paramount in the deliberations that went on for this Budget.

An Hon. Member: Breath-taking.

Mr. McDermid: There is my jolly friend from Edmonton, the token socialist from Alberta, chuckling away in the back row. He was not here when his Leader stood up in the House after the Minister of Finance delivered his economic statement in November of 1984 and predicted the greatest doom and gloom for this country. Two hundred thousand jobs were going to be lost—

An Hon. Member: Two hundred and fifty thousand.

Mr. McDermid: Two hundred and fifty thousand, was it? Two hundred and fifty thousand jobs were going to be lost, and we were going into a recession as a result of this economic statement and the role that the Government had taken. This is how accurate he is every time he stands up and makes a prediction. I turn him right off because he has been wrong every time.

In the next four years a million and a half jobs were created, a million and a half more people are paying taxes, and have worth-while, meaningful jobs. That is what has happened because of the economic guidance we have given this country.

In the few minutes left to me I would like to turn to some criticisms that have been expressed in this debate which I think are unfair. First, one of the things that the Opposition Parties have been saying all along is that this Budget is an attack on families. This is what they state: It is an attack on families. Let me tell you what an attack on families is. The minute a baby is born in this country—

An Hon. Member: You tax it.

Mr. McDermid: —that child owes $12,000. Every day that child lives that debt goes up $3. That is an attack on the families. That child and that child's child cannot be paying our debts. That is why we have tried to come to grips with the debt problem and the deficit problem in this country.

I ask the critics to be realistic. The real threat to families is the growing debt. There is no question about that. Without action to control it, our flexibility to take action is constrained by the debt charges.

That has never been discussed by the Members opposite. They have never stood up and said: "Hey, we do have a problem here. We should do something about it. Here is what we propose". Not one of their speakers have done that. I have listened to the whole debate and read the debate, and none of them have done that. The NDP Party says that it has. It said, "bring the Armed Forces back from Europe and that will save money".

An Hon. Member: Tax the large corporations.

Mr. McDermid: The NDP Party's own figures show that the defence budget will be more by doing that. Its own figures show that. That is not a solution.

An Hon. Member: Tax the large corporations.

Mr. McDermid: Tax the large corporations. Here we go, let me give you an exaggeration. The House Leader of the New Democratic Party got up the other day and said that 87,000 large profitable businesses in Canada do not pay taxes. That is what he said. Do you know how many large corporations we have in Canada in total, 2,120. He says that we have 87,000 profitable large corporations that are not paying taxes. The NDP Party is always exaggerating. I have told the Members a million times, "do not exaggerate".

An Hon. Member: Where do you guys get your numbers?

Mr. McDermid: I do not know where they get the numbers. I think Ed comes in from outside and plucks them out of the air on his way in. I would like to—

An Hon. Member: Conclude.

Mr. McDermid: —to be serious here for a moment. I am not finished yet. I would like to talk about asking the Hon. Members to be realistic. Repayment of family allowances and old age security benefits begin when an individual's net income exceeds $50,000.

The measure is progressive. It affects only 14 per cent of the present recipients of family allowance. Less than 10 per cent will end up paying back all of their family allowance. If I ever had a suggestion from the public presented to me more on debt reduction, it was this one: that family allowances should be taxed back from the high income people. That was suggested to me many, many times. I know that my friend from Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Milliken) heard that suggestion from his constituents as well. It is the same with the old age security, there is no question about that.

Mr. Speaker, I notice you are signalling me but I still have time. I watched my hon. friend give his speech and he received about an extra seven minutes—

An Hon. Member: Order, order.

Mr. McDermid: I would hope that there might be a little leeway in the Chair.

An Hon. Member: Time. Time.

Mr. McDermid: In any event, Mr. Speaker, our agenda has always been open.

An Hon. Member: It was well hidden.

Mr. McDermid: It has always been clear, right from 1984, day one, when the Minister of Finance presented his economic statement. It was just not talked about, but proclaimed in that economic statement of 1984 and reaffirmed explicitly in budget after budget and in throne speeches. It was discussed—I get this—we did not discuss it in the last election. I would like to tell you what happened when I got into all candidate meetings in the last election. I started talking about the deficit. My opponents stood up and said, "You are afraid to debate free trade. You are getting off the subject. We want to talk about free trade. We do not want to talk debt. We do not want to talk deficit". That is what went on in the last election.

I am going to conclude with this: If we are going to maintain the social, cultural and other programs that are an integral part of Canada, if we are going to meet the needs of the people of Canada who need the help most, then we must have an efficient and effective government. We must have a balanced and equitable financial system. We must get out from under this crushing load of debt and get it under control.

I believe the Budget presented by my colleague is an important one for Canada. It builds on what has gone on before. It addresses the problems we face today. It sets out a reasonable set of measures which will enable us to deal with the debt problem and, at the same time, preserve our social programs. I am proud to be able to stand and register my support for it and for the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, after listening to the speech I now understand fully what Amnesty International means when it refers to cruel and unusual punishment. I do not envy you having to listen to several Tories across the way. Being the non-partisan person that you are, that must be real punishment.

I want to read a few quotes for you and see if you can try and remember who said them. Let us try this little contest here.

> We would cut spending. We would not raise taxes. Tax levels in Canada are already too high.

Guess who said that?

Some Hon. Members: Michael Wilson.

Mr. Boudria: I think my colleagues behind me have it right. It was the Hon. Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson) on March 6, 1984. That person, of course, is now the Minister of Finance.

Let me read another one, Mr. Speaker, and see if you recognize it.

Liberals have made election promises. Conservatives have made spending commitments—In the way that I have described it, yes, it is zero (the cost of Tory election promises)—.In those reserves, we have sufficient money to handle the announcements that we made prior to the election and those that have been made since the election was called.

Mrs. Maheu: Who said that?

Mr. Comuzzi: Who said that?

Mr. Boudria: I am glad you asked. The Minister of Finance on November 11, 1988 as reported in The Globe and Mail.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: Let us try another one to see if people can guess who made the following statement:

We achieved this record (of deficit reduction) with a new disciplined approach to the management of government and its expenditures.

Guess who said that one?

Mrs. Maheu: Who?

Mr. Boudria: That was the Minister of Finance on December 15, 1988. If we were that disciplined on December 15, 1988, why did we have to cut back so much in April of 1989?

Mrs. Maheu: Wreck the family.

Mr. Boudria: Let me see. I have got another one here and it is even better.

In the future, Canada will be doing more, not less for all of you. As long as I am Prime Minister of Canada, social benefits, especially those for the elderly, will be improved, not diminished by our Government—

I guess it is a give-away right there, Mr. Speaker. That was the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on October 15, 1988, in Summerside, Prince Edward Island.

Mrs. Marleau: That is terrible.

Mr. Boudria: I know it is extremely unfair to quote the Prime Minister using his own words, but does the Minister across the way remember those words from the last election campaign? If so, could he explain today why this double-speak and this double-talk on the part of Tories should be endured by any Canadian?

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I think that Canadian people are smarter than the Hon. Member opposite. Canadians are beginning to understand the problems we have in this country. They understand why we are trying to do something about it. Do you know something? I think they are prepared to support this Government in trying to tackle this problem. They are far more committed, far more interested than the Opposition Parties are in this problem. I do not think there is any question about that. The Prime Minister said that social benefits will be improved. To my recollection this year senior citizen's pensions will be raised four times and about 4.9 per cent.

Mr. Boudria: Clawed back.

Mr. McDermid: Here is my hon. friend saying, "Claw back", whatever that means. What we are doing is exactly what his Party asked us to do and that is tax those in the higher income brackets. The Hon. Member is defending people earning over $75,000 a year. That is what he is doing now. The Leader of the Opposition said, and I heard him say it many times, "Tax those in the high income area". That is what we are doing with this Budget. Members of the NDP have said the same thing, "Tax the rich". It was their campaign, tax the rich. That is exactly what is done in this Budget. Four per cent of senior citizens earning over net $50,000, which works out to about $60,000 or $70,000, somewhere in there, will pay taxes.

Mr. Parker: Universality.

Mr. McDermid: It is universality. They get their cheques, and it is taxed back, and that is the answer. Yes, our Prime Minister said social benefits will be improved, and they are being improved. There is no question about it.

Mrs. Marleau: Not to our seniors.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, every speech I have heard from across the way during the course of this debate has at some point or another included a statement to the effect that the Opposition has advanced not a single idea on how we might come to grips with the deficit and the debt. I must say if that were that the case, I would, in fact, be truly ashamed and I would feel myself compelled not to rise in this debate.

However, I know that even before the Minister's Budget was—well, I was going to say presented—our finance critic had sent to the Minister of Finance a six-page letter detailing a dozen proposals for various budgetary programs that could be used to reduce the deficit and begin to tackle the debt, including six proposals dealing with taxes alone.

I understand, and we have had it demonstrated in the last week, that communication within the Ministry is not the most efficient. It is possible that the Finance Minister neglected to share these excellent ideas with his colleagues, both within the Ministry and within his Party. I have a copy for the Hon. Minister. In fact, I have copies for any of the unfortunately benighted Members of the benches opposite.

Mr. Weiner: Table it.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): I am sorry, I have not sufficient copies to table. We work on restricted budgets over here.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): I will just send this over to the Minister, and while it is in transit, might I ask him whether we are really to take seriously his protestations of fairness in the matter of taxes in the Budget? His Government's record, not according to the NDP, but according to the Institute for Research on Public Policy; in the course of this Government's first mandate, for the richest 1 per cent of Canadians, the tax burden was reduced by $3,500 a year, while everyone else's went up. Are we to place the slightest shred of credibility then in the taxation policies of this Government?

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I get a charge out of the New Democrats and the various Budgets they talk about. For example, the Hon. Member is talking about tax. He is talking about tax reform a year or so ago when we reduced something like nine or ten different tax levels to three tax levels. The NDP forget that. The Government took 850,000 low-income earning Canadians off the tax rolls. These Canadians do not pay taxes anymore. The Hon. Member fails to mention that. He fails to mention that this Budget increased taxes for high-income people. He forgets to mention that the wealthy in this country who have more ability to pay got an extra surcharge, and we have heard from them too.

The Hon. Member talks about corporations. One of the things the New Democrats do not understand, and they showed their ignorance when they were debating the Free Trade Agreement, Canada is a trading nation. We rely on 30 per cent of our income in this country, three million jobs, many of them unionized, on international trade. If we cannot be competitive with those countries we are trading with, then we will not do any trading. This gang of bandits would tax these corporations right out of existence because if we followed their tax recommendations and policies, the companies could not compete in the world of trade today, and that is a fact.

• (1600)

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): That is blackmail.

Mr. McDermid: The Hon. Member is yelling "blackmail". That shows the absolute ignorance of that Party when it comes to international trade and its importance to Canada. The Hon. Member should talk to some union members, particularly those in my community who work in the auto trade. He would find out how competitive they have to remain if they want to sell their products to the United States.

Any company that trades has to be competitive. If we tax them out of existence, they will not be competitive. That is the NDP philosophy, and I understand it.

Perhaps the Hon. Member should take time to study this Budget. He would see that high income earners will be paying proportionately more. He will see that the 850,000 who were dropped off the tax rolls are still off the tax rolls. He will see that there was a doubling of the sales tax credit to low income earners. If he did that, maybe then he would be honest with the Canadian people when he criticizes. Perhaps he would be a little more objective.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I believe that this is the first time I have had the privilege of rising in the House on other than a procedural matter.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Milliken: I have commented on the speeches of a few Hon. Members, but I have not made my own, so I will take advantage of the opportunity since, in a technical way, this is my maiden speech, to say a few words about my riding of Kingston and the Islands and how honoured and pleased I am to represent it in this House. As Hon. Members will know, it is one of the most historic ridings in Canada since it was represented in the first Parliament of Canada by none other than Sir John A. Macdonald.

Mr. McDermid: He is still in your riding, I understand.

Mr. Milliken: His spirit. Kingston has been represented by a string of very distinguished predecessors, and I hope that over the years I am here I will be able to live up to the high standards that have been set by those who have gone before me in this position. I have referred to Sir John A. Macdonald, but I also mention Mr. W. F. Nickle.

Mr. Friesen: Benson.

Mr. Milliken: I will come to him. The Hon. Norman McLeod Rogers served a very distinguished career as Minister of National Defence of Canada. The Hon. Mr. Justice William Henderson, as he now is, of the Ontario Supreme Court, served as a Member in this House for many years. The Hon. Ben Benson who Members opposite obviously recall with great affection brought in wonderful Budgets and did not have leaks the way we do today. He served as Minister of Finance and Minister of National Revenue at one time or another.

Of course, my immediate predecessor is the Hon. Flora MacDonald who for 16 years represented the riding in this House and served her country as Secretary of State for External Affairs, Minister of Employment and Immigration, and Minister of Communications. I think she will be particularly fondly remembered by Hon. Members opposite.

I should also say that the riding of Kingston and the Islands, besides its terrific location on the shores of Lake Ontario where the St. Lawrence River flows from the lake and wends its way off toward the Province of Québec and the Maritime Provinces, contains two of Canada's great educational institutions in the form of the Royal Military College at Kingston and Queen's University, a university very close to my heart as I attended that university and am fortunate to be a graduate of the same.

In addition, Kingston boasts a series of penal institutions, and in many ways it is the penal capital of Canada, having more prisons within the confines of the riding than almost any other place. There are four of them, and there are two other large prisons outside the immediate confines of the riding of Kingston and the Islands, in the riding represented in this House by the Hon. Member for Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington (Mr. Vankoughnet).

In addition, Kingston has a substantial military base which, fortunately, has not been closed by this Budget.

An Hon. Member: You are lucky.

Mr. Milliken: We are lucky, very lucky. In addition, it has many industries that are well known across Canada and are part of national chains, as well as many smaller businesses that flourish in the community.

Kingston is one of Canada's oldest communities. It was founded in 1673 by le comte de Frontenac and has survived to this day. It is of course known as the Limestone City because of its many beautiful limestone buildings. Kingston is active in preserving its historic past. There are active historical societies that seek to preserve the ancient buildings of Kingston and make use of them for future generations by maintaining them in good condition.

The riding itself comprises the City of Kingston, the Township of Kingston, part of the Township of Pittsburgh, and the three townships that comprise the islands of the riding—Wolfe Island, Howe Island, and Amherst Island. These three islands sit off the south shore of the mainland of Ontario in the St. Lawrence River very close to our boundary with the United States.

Kingston is Canada's second largest retirement centre after Victoria and has a substantial population of seniors. Those people, I must say, are disappointed with the Budget that we are discussing today. I would like to turn now to that Budget.

The Minister of State for Privatization (Mr. McDermid) was on his feet immediately before me and gave what I can only describe as an incredible speech. He was shedding crocodile tears about how he hated, as he maintained did everyone on that side of the House, to impose taxes. Honestly we have never had a Government that has imposed taxes the way this Government has. For him to make that rather bold-faced statement and try to maintain that it was an accurate representation of the true feelings of the Government is, quite frankly, unbelievable.

I would like to turn to the attack that has been made on the universality of social programs by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in this Budget. I want to deal specifically with seniors, because recently they have decided that it is time to speak out and condemn the Government for the actions it has taken. There is an article in today's The Ottawa Citizen in which the National Pensioners and Senior Citizens Federation is quoted. It has launched its criticism of this Budget. The group sent telegrams, The Ottawa Citizen reports, to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and to the Minister of Finance on Wednesday protesting the claw-back program the Government has embarked upon. The article quotes the group as saying:

> "We think we were betrayed because both the prime minister and the Minister of Finance— indicated there would be no tampering with the social security programs,"— "Seniors were misled by statements that were made during the election".

I submit that that is exactly the kind of thing that has been going on for some time. Citizens were misled during the course of the election campaign. They were told that there would be no change in benefits.

I would like to remind Hon. Members opposite who seem to have forgotten that citizens contributed to their pensions for many years. They paid an old age security tax until 1971 when it was melded into the general income tax revenues of Canada. Having made that contribution, I find it incredible that today, they are not receiving those benefits. They receive them only to pay them all back.

The Minister of State for Privatization tried to justify this move by saying that they were simply taxing the rich, but the only rich that are being taxed by this scheme are the the seniors who are receiving a pension. I suggest that that is unfair—

Mrs. Dobbie: No, that is mistaken.

Mr. Milliken: The young wealthy person is not taxed in this way. The taxes only apply to wealthy seniors, and that is unfair. It is discrimination, and those people have contributed to those pensions for years and years. Now they are being taken away.

Mrs. Dobbie: That is not true.

Mr. Milliken: That is true. Read the Budget. The seniors of Canada object to this move and feel that it is unfair. There is no other kind of income that is taxed the way this income is taxed. The only ones who receive this income are seniors.

Mrs. Dobbie: I don't want to argue.

Mr. Milliken: I will argue it with the Hon. Member any day. It is a tax of 100 per cent.

I am sorry to keep drawing attention to the Minister of State for Privatization, but after all, it was his speech that immediately preceded mine. He stood there and complained, as the Minister of Finance whines and complains every day in Question Period, that we never come up with any suggestions for saving money, that we always criticize every cost cutting measure that Hon. Members opposite propose.

• (1610)

We have praised the nuclear submarine cuts. I have another suggestion for the Hon. Members opposite that will save us a good deal of money. They should abandon the rather stupid advertising campaigns to which they are subjecting Canadians as a result of this Budget. Over $2.7 million has been wasted to convince Canadians that the national debt is a problem. How stupid can they get? Honestly, if the Government is going to waste the money of Canadians in this way, surely it should not be complaining about us saying "don't cut here and don't cut there".

We are trying to save programs that mean something to Canadians, not wasting money on advertising in newspapers, on radio and on television trying to tell Canadians that the debt is a particular problem. If Canadians cannot understand that the debt is a problem, they should leave it and deal with it in the Budget. That is what they have done. We do not need a huge advertising campaign with the pictures of loonies with the sides cut out of them to illustrate that the debt is a particular problem. That is an example of waste of money.

In fact, the Government is spending over $90 million a year trying to convince Canadians that its policies are right. Canadians know they are wrong. They do not need to be convinced with ads. I would suggest that the Government pull that advertising campaign at once and save Canadians some of their money. There is a suggestion. Do not let me hear again that there has never been a suggestion from this side on how to save money. I will come up with another if I am forced to.

I have got another way to save money, that is, to cut down the size of Cabinet. We have never had such a huge Cabinet in Canadian history. It has continued from 1984. If this Government were serious about saving money, it would cut down the numbers of members of its Cabinet and save all those salaries and car allowances. There has been no suggestion that there will be any cuts there. It has been left intact. It is a huge Cabinet, oversized, and, as we saw earlier today, sadly lacking in competence.

I would like to turn to a couple of other items in this Budget that I think are particularly unfair. I would like to turn to the proposed cuts in VIA Rail, a most shocking breach of promise on an absolutely grand scale. Here we have a Government, as I indicated in a comment the other day, that came into office in 1984 promising, with solemn promises by the Deputy Prime Minister in particular, that it would restore VIA Rail to its former grandeur and make it a show case of railway travel for the world right here in Canada. Every single line was going to be improved. The Minister reinstated lines that had been cut and said that they could not do without them and that they were vitally important to our country.

Mrs. Dobbie: We found out later that we could not afford to do those things when you guys left.

Mr. Milliken: We could afford it in 1984 while you were doubling the debt and now you are telling us that we cannot afford it because you have doubled it already. The deficit is going up and up.

The behaviour of Hon. Members opposite is so inconsistent that it borders on the ludicrous. The Hon. Member laughs; she should be ashamed of the Government that she is supporting. These cuts to VIA Rail fly completely contrary to the promises made by the Deputy Prime Minister and many other members of the Cabinet opposite. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg South interrupts and suggests that I am not being fair in my comments, but I tell her that I am being perfectly fair in my comments. They are accurate. She should pay more attention to the facts.

Another thing I would like to turn to deals with VIA Rail and the proposed cuts. These continual reductions over a four-year period will have a devastating effect on this company. In 1987 VIA Rail paid $179 million in trackage fees to CN and to CP. Last year it paid $103 million for the privilege of using those tracks. VIA Rail was created in order to save those two companies money, one of which is wholly owned by the Government, CN. In fact, its President has been appointed head of VIA Rail.

Those companies have these tracks, and they were relieved of their obligation to run passenger service so that they could make more money, in both cases. They applied to the Canadian Transport Commission to have their obligation to carry passengers lifted so that they did not have to lose money on passenger service. The Government of the day created VIA Rail to take that particular service out of those two railways and put it in a new corporation, VIA Rail, where the operation would be carried on.

VIA pays $100 million to subsidize the maintenance of tracks on those railways. It was created for the sole purpose of preventing them from losing money on passenger service. I suggest that they should be getting that service for free. Instead of cutting the operation grants, the Government should introduce legislation to say that they get it for free. Then there would not be a need to cut the operating grants because $100 million would be saved right off. That is more than is being cut this year.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg South shakes her head. I say to her "go and look at the facts". Canadians have built the national train service. We have paid for it over the years. It was a precondition of the establishment of this country that we have a rail line to British Columbia. Now this Government is seeking to destroy our railway system. I say that is wrong, that is improper, and that the Government ought not to be doing it. The largest committee room in this building, as far as I know, is the Railway Committee Room behind us. It was called such because of the massive amount of time Parliament has spent on railways over the years. Now, with a stroke of a pen, the Minister of Finance says that they are going to carve up VIA Rail, cut it out, sell it off, sell off chunks of the service, sell off lines here and there, get the provinces to operate it, and shift the expense and the burden to somebody else. The Minister is incompetent to organize the finances of Canada in such a way—and he has had five years to do it—that that burden can be properly shouldered by the people of Canada today. That is the problem.

The question of child care is another one that I would like to address. I recall during the last campaign how much we heard about child care, how important it was, and how frightful it was that the other place had held up the child care legislation. Let us see the record in this regard. I am sick and tired of listening to this drivel. I heard it all through the election from my opponent.

The child care Bill was passed in this House on September 26, 1988. It went to the Senate for first reading on September 27. It was called for second reading on September 28 and got through second reading. Parliament was dissolved two days later, on September 30. Yet the Minister of Finance has the gall to stand up and say that this was held up by the Senate. It was four days in the Senate, and we are told that the reason we do not have the child care Bill passed today is that the Senate held it up. That is just rubbish.

The Senate was not taking an undue amount of time on this. The Senate offered to stay in session for another day in order to pass this Bill, but the Prime Minister would not have it. He said: "No, no. We are going to the people. We are going to dissolve Parliament". He kept saying all through the campaign that we would have had child care if it were not for the Senate. We now see that in fact that was not accurate. He misled Canadians during the election.

The Minister of Finance stood up the other day and said that we could not have child care because we could not afford it. If we cannot afford it today, why could we afford it in October or November? He did not want to admit that we could not afford it. It was a complete deception of the Canadian people. They were not told the facts. The Minister of Finance knows it, the Prime Minister knows it, and I suggest that his supporters know it.

I would like to turn to CIDA because this has to be one of the most vicious and nasty cuts that we have seen in this whole Budget. CIDA's grants and contributions are being cut by $200 million. That in itself is appalling, but I suggest that what is worse is the increase in the costs of operating CIDA. They have gone up by $19 million—$19 million extra to administer $200 million less. It is a shocking indictment of the priorities of this Government—cut aid to Third World countries and increase the payments to the people who administer the funds. That is what is going on in these Estimates. The Hon. Member should read the Estimates. I refer her to page 9-3 of the Estimates that were tabled in this House. It is completely shameful. The Hon. Member should read the Estimates.

Mrs. Gibeau: You are misleading the people of Kingston.

Mr. Milliken: I invite the Hon. Member to read the Estimates.

Mrs. Gibeau: I hope they do not listen to you.

Mr. Milliken: I hope that they do not listen to the Minister of Finance. The stories of misleading and intellectual dishonesty during the last campaign are coming to light every day in the House with new revelations of incompetence and new stories of financial horror the Minister of Finance conjures up in order to convince Canadians that what he is doing is right.

The final statement in the Budget must be for Canadians to look at the amount of tax increases and then look at the amount of cuts. The deficit has increased; it has not gone down. It has increased, despite this huge tax increase. I suggest that the reason it has increased so much is that government spending is out of control. In spite of the announced big cuts in defence, and in spite of the big cuts to CIDA, and the nasty tax back on Old Age Security earners, the Government has failed in its attempts to bring the deficit under control. It has failed to convince Canadians that what it is doing is right. I suggest that it has done the opposite and convinced Canadians that it is unfit to remain in office.

Mrs. Dobbie: I congratulate the Hon. Member opposite, my erstwhile travelling companion, on his fine maiden speech which was very well done. The Hon. Member certainly gave us an interesting piece of history. He suggested to us that we should continue to subsidize VIA Rail because the nation was built on the promise of a railroad from coast to coast.

Mr. Milliken: That's right.

Mrs. Dobbie: I am questioning his logic. Is the Hon. Member suggesting that we should also continue to use the horse and buggy, because traditionally this country was built on that type of mode of power?

We heard from the Hon. Member opposite a litany of complaints about cut-backs. He also suggests that government spending is out of control. However, the Hon. Member does not seem to have any concrete suggestions for how we can fund some of the programs that he holds so dear to his heart. He made some casual suggestion about cutting some advertising program. However, he has not offered one item of real substance.

Could the Hon. Member explain to us his program to reduce the debt and the deficit? Perhaps the Hon. Member could give us an outline of his program.

Mr. Milliken: I thought I had given some ideas to the Hon. Member. I suggested to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South that the advertising budget of the Government be cut. The Hon. Member should use her influence with the Ministers in front of her to do this. If she has been attempting to do so, I believe the pleas have fallen on deaf ears.

I thank the Hon. Member for her question and comment. The Hon. Member knows as well as I do that she has a duty to represent her constituents. I would like to know their views on the cuts to VIA Rail. Do they know that the Hon. Member is supporting this scheme to slash VIA?

Mrs. Dobbie: Yes, they do. I am encouraged.

Mr. Milliken: I am glad that she encourages them to buy up these cuts. I have a feeling that, come the next election, they may remember her support and may have something to say to her about her chances of being re-elected.

Every Member on the other side of the House, including the Minister of Finance, whines and whimpers that we are not suggesting ways to cut. When we suggest ways, they are ignored. Today I have made two very sound suggestions to save millions of dollars, and there has been no positive response from the other side. I do not know why the Minister of Finance does not run down from his office now and say: "Yes, all right, we will cut the $92 million from advertising". We have suggested something, and I do not know why he does not come down and agree. Instead there is dead silence, and all we get is a statement that we have not suggested anything.

We are not the Government. We are the Opposition.

Mr. Friesen: There is a very good reason.

Mr. Milliken: It will not be for long. I can tell Hon. Members that there is no need for us to come up with all the suggestions to help them run the Government. That is not our job. Our job is to look at the proposals they make and ask if those proposals are fair and just in the eyes of the people of Canada. I have stated that the proposals the Government has made are unfair and unjust. They are discriminatory in that they are taxing the senior citizens of the country, the people who have worked and contributed to the schemes that we have in place. Those are the people the Government is depriving of money, and I suggest that that is unfair. Our job is as an Opposition. The Government's job is to propose, and our job is to oppose.

However, I have come up with suggestions that are falling on deaf ears. Hon. Members opposite are so enamoured of their misguided proposals that they feel to convince the Canadian people of how good these misguided proposals are that they have to advertise and put it all through the papers. There is $90 million worth of advertising to convince Canadians about the wrong policies that are being pursued.

If the policies were correct, there would be no need to advertise. Perhaps that is why we have to go through the charade of spending $90 million to convince Canadians. Perhaps that is why we need so many members of Cabinet. There have to be more spokesmen to sell a bad policy than to sell a good policy. We on this side of the House are selling good policies to Canadians.

Mr. Young (Beaches—Woodbine): I have a question for the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands. I too wish to congratulate him on his maiden speech.

I wonder if the Member would agree that the Government seems to have something against pensioners. I do not know what its hang up is, but it has something against pensioners. The Hon. Member may recall, even though he was not in the House, that the Minister of Finance, when he was attempting to defend his proposal to deindex pensions in the 1985 Budget when speaking to the Chamber of Commerce in Montreal, made the statement that he did not think there were enough rich people in Canada, and this was why he was attempting to deindex old age pensions. We all know that the Minister has been preoccupied.

Mr. Friesen: A little bit of honesty.

Mr. Young (Beaches—Woodbine): Did the Hon. Member say "lies"?

In the last four years the Government has consistently attacked pensions. There is no question about that, and it is doing so again.

My question for the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands is the following one. In establishing government priorities, surely to goodness the Government should be aware that there has been an explosion in the number of food banks across the country. The Canadian Association of Food Banks released a press release today pointing out this very fact.

In terms of establishing priorities, surely Government has an obligation to say to people who are living in abject poverty that it wants to do something for them, rather than the 60,000 very profitable corporations that ain't paying a red cent in income tax. That is the type of priority the Government should be addressing, and it is not.

Mr. Milliken: Of course, I agree with the comment made by the Hon. Member. It is accurate. Hon. Members opposite laugh when they hear the facts. Seniors are being very badly treated in the Budget. The record of the Government is a very dismal one in respect to seniors. Perhaps Hon. Members opposite represent suburban areas of Canada and not the downtown areas that some Members here represent. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg South is a prime example. We know about the problems faced by those people who are deprived of a livelihood by the Government with these vicious taxes.

I wish to turn to another matter, but I do not wish to provoke Hon. Members opposite too much. However, during the election campaign my Conservative opponent was a person very near and dear to the hearts of Hon. Members opposite. During an all-candidates debate she was discussing the fact that the Conservative promises made during the election were not going to cost Canadians a cent and that it was all looked after in the financial plan of the Government. I asked if it was not in the Budget and she turned to me and said: "Peter, you don't understand government finance".

I understand government finance. I understand that to pay for these promises, the ones that are not broken, we are seeing another huge tax increase in Canada. The seniors are being taxed to the hilt.

Mrs. Dobbie: Seniors are not being taxed to the hilt.

Mr. Milliken: They are being taxed to the hilt. They are being taxed 100 per cent of their pension income if their income exceeds a certain figure.

Mrs. Dobbie: Yes, a million dollars a year.

Mr. Milliken: It is taken out of their limited incomes by the new sales tax. That is how the Government is paying for those promises. That is the financial plan of the Government. The financial plan always was to hike taxes and use the additional money to pay for the promises it chose not to break. It is a shocking record of financial organization and mismanagement.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Bourassa (Mrs. Gibeau).

Mrs. Marie Gibeau (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I rise today on behalf of my constituents in Montreal North—Bourassa to support the Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). When I talk to people in my riding, to men and women representing various interest groups, to my friends and family, they all say I am concerned about so many issues: the environment, health care, ageing of the population, immigration, the declining birth rate, and especially Canada's debt. And the last one is very important. How not the Government, but our society deals with these issues will determine the quality of life in Canada in the years to come. Today, I want to say to my constituents in Montreal-North—Bourassa that our Government not only listens but acts to ensure that these problems are under control and will be solved.

The previous Government was in charge of the destiny of Canadians for nearly 20 years. In charge is perhaps a bit exaggerated. The previous Government wanted to be popular and fell in with the fashion at the time which was to live for the here and now. We have experienced the disastrous consequences of this laissez-aller approach in all social and economic sectors of our society. Many of the problems we are having today, and the debt is the most crucial one, are the result of those years of carelessness and neglect. The Liberal era was a time of instant gratification, of disposable just about everything which created the concept of planned obsolescence.

As approaches go it was not reprehensible, except that in management terms, the cricket's philosophy, as opposed to the ant's, left Canada without any room to manoeuvre when it was necessary to pull back. It is of course much easier to hand out presents and say yes than to ask people to be prudent and to say no. However, there comes a day when we have to choose between being popular and being responsible. Anyone who is responsible for raising children knows this, and anyone who is responsible for making others go the extra mile know this as well. Unfortunately, the previous Government took the easy way out and decided to try and please everyone. As the saying goes, however, gouverner c'est prévoir. And considering the statistics, I think we have every right to blame our predecessors for poor planning .

Public debt has existed in Canada since Confederation. But it has grown too big in the last 20 years. Borrowing per se is not bad. Canadian consumers borrow to pay for houses, education, cars. Companies borrow to build new factories and buy raw materials to make their products. Governments also borrow to pay for social programs such as unemployment insurance or health insurance, to finance megaprojects like space research or the development of the Old Port of Montreal, to pay public servants' salaries or to heat the Parliament Buildings. Governments also borrow to invest in the future through scientific research and development as well as to subsidize companies and thus promote economic growth. In itself, borrowing is a useful, if not necessary, economic tool, as anyone who has a credit card knows.

However, when expenses are greater than revenues and the money borrowed cannot be repaid within a certain period, a deficit is created. This is called living beyond one's means. Accumulated deficits make up the debt and when we have to borrow to pay the interest, without even being able to repay the principal, we know that the situation is dramatic.

The Government last had a budget surplus in 1969–70. Since 1970–71, the federal Government has spent more every year than it took in. In short, the Government has run a deficit every year and to make up for this shortfall, it has had to borrow. This is normal during tough economic times, but why has the Government continued to spend more than it took in when the economy was going well?

In hindsight, the Government has been too eager in periods of prosperity to satisfy the desires and demands for new services and programs. The previous Liberal Government has too often consented to the creation of new programs or tax shelters instead of resisting it. Short-term needs have sometimes prevailed over long-term consequences. Since 1984, our Government has made an all-out effort to correct the situation. But, Mr. Speaker, the fact remains that loans contracted over 20 years translate into a colossal debt that keeps getting bigger. At the end of last month, annual deficits accumulated over the last 20 years had brought the public debt up to $320 billion. As the debt was growing, so was the proportion of public funds used to service it. Last year alone, interest on the debt amounted to $33 billion.

In a way, the debt has reached a critical point. This year, Government revenues from taxes and other sources will finance all our economic and social programs, national defence, as well as our international commitments. But, Mr. Speaker, the crucial point is this: every dollar borrowed by the Government, and probably a little more, is used to pay interest on the public debt. In other words, we are not even paying back the capital. We are simply borrowing to pay more and more interest on the debt. You don't have to be a financial genius to figure out that a person who must borrow money to pay interest to his bank is not in good financial shape.

You know as well as I do that the $33 billion used to pay interest could be better spent elsewhere. That amount represents twice what is spent on elderly benefits, three times what is spent on national defence, 20 times what is spent on job creation and training and 24 times what is spent on all regional development programs. Seen in this light, debt charges bring us to a sad conclusion. Debt interest payments do not in any way contribute to the improvement of Canadians' living standards. The debt problem got worse, but it is the result of 20 years of a spendthrift Government. From the beginning of its first mandate, the Progressive Conservative Government has made fiscal responsability one of its priorities and that has not changed.

Over the past four years we have severely restricted program expenditures and they are now less than the revenue we collect.

As I pointed out earlier, a key element of our progress has been a renewed and systematic effort to eliminate waste and boost public service efficiency. For example—and I draw this to the attention of my colleague on the other side who made unfounded remarks a moment ago—more than 10,000 public service jobs have been eliminated. Operating expenses have been reduced in all departments, productivity has gone up, and that is just the beginning. A number of corporate grants have been cut down or eliminated altogether. Many tax loopholes which were a boon to companies and high income individuals have been closed. A minimum tax has been implemented to improve the personal income tax system.

Program expenditures which accounted for 19 per cent of national revenues four years ago were brought down to less than 17 per cent last year.

Lower expenditures and higher revenues enabled us to slow down the growth in the public debt. In 1984–85 the debt was going up at the annual rate of 24 per cent. Last year we brought that rate down to 10 per cent. But, given the size of the current debt—$320 billion—the growth rate is still to steep.

All things considered, financial responsibility combined with the implementation of constructive economic policies have strengthened the economy. Our approach is producing results. Canada's economic growth since 1984 ranks among the best of all industrialized nations. Investment growth has been strong. Nearly one and a half million new jobs have been created. Generally speaking, Canadians have enjoyed a much greater economic security.

The Budget proposed by the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) is a turning point for Canada's future. It recognizes that our lifestyle is being threatened and this Government has started to effectively and courageously meet that threat.

This Government is taking its responsibilities. The Bourassa people, when voting for the Conservative Party, asked us to protect the quality of their present and future life, as well as Canada's reputation among our economic and social partners.

The Budget put forward by the Minister of Finance aims at protecting our generous social programs, our high standard of living, our markets in a sovereign country that is respected abroad, our inheritance made vulnerable by the ups and downs of interest rates. The challenging measures in the Budget reflect the seriousness of the situation. Some tough decisions had to be taken, but this is what the people elected us for. This Government opted for balanced measures, reflecting regional characteristics and requiring more from those who are in a better position to contribute. We succeeded in greatly reducing program expenditures, after reviewing them to ensure that we get the maximum results from taxpayers' money.

In the Budget, this Government was mainly concerned with people and families. The Government is injecting more money into direct income support for Canadians, more than for any other program.

I would like to tell my constituents in Bourassa that Canadians 65 and over are eligible for old age security pensions, and families with dependent children under 18 are eligible for family allowance payments, regardless of the need for assistance. Those benefits are subject to personal income tax.

The Budget proposes to recover those payments from high- income Canadians. They will refund OAS and family allowance benefits at a rate of 15 per cent of individual net income excluding $50,000.

Repayments will be calculated on the income tax return and will be deductible in determining the amount of income subject to personal income tax. The $50,000 threshold ensures that only benefits received by higher-income Canadians will be subject to repayment. Lower- and middle-income Canadians in receipt of these benefits will not be affected. And of course, we are talking about a net income of $50,000.

The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) recently announced a new labour force strategy for the 1990s. It will based upon consultation with the private sector to design programs to train Canadians and upgrade their skills so that they can better meet the demands of the quickly evolving labour market.

Expenditures will not be reduced. The size of the unemployment insurance program will remain, but it will be a better program.

In December 1987, the Government announced a national strategy for child care, which consists of new tax assistance to families with pre-school children and children with special needs, and a fund to support innovative initiatives to meet child care needs. The new tax assistance measures are in place, and before the end of its term of office, the Government will act to meet its child care objectives.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) had the courage to make the decisions that were necessary. Our Government has acted responsibly. However, the Government is elected by the people, with whom it forms a partnership. The debt is a national problem, and the success of these measures depends on the understanding and commitment of all Canadians. Only if it is prepared to make such a commitment will our country be able to continue to afford the social, cultural and economic programs that are the very expression of our personality as a nation.

By what we do, we can ensure that our children's opportunities will be unrestricted. We have a duty to pass on to them the same advantages that we inherited and especially, to offer them the province of a better future.

Mr. Karygiannis: Mr. Speaker, I was amazed while listening to the Hon. Member. I was amazed because time and time again the Hon. Member praised the Minister who, in the reality of this world, we can say took the Canadian public and stuck it to them.

I am wondering how the Hon. Member could be proud to be part of a Government which, in 1984, said: "Do not worry about it. We will not touch them, they are a sacred trust". In 1985 Members of that Government had to back off. In 1988 they said the same thing: "We have every nickel accounted for—every little nickel".

Members opposite have called our Leader a liar.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Karygiannis: I am saying, will the real liar please stand up. Of course, lo and behold who rises—

Mrs. Dobbie: You are walking on thin ice.

Mr. Karygiannis: In today's paper the Government is quoted as saying: "Jobs, jobs, jobs". In an article in the same newspaper it states that free trade is the culprit in the closure of Toro Co. Ltd.'s only Canadian plant in Manitoba. "The Minnesota-based Toro announced Wednesday it is closing the plant, which opened in 1985 after receiving $720,000 in government aid."

Another article in today's newspaper states:

> Canadian auto parts maker Galtaco Inc. is closing its doors in Canada, affecting about 400 workers—

In Orillia about 260 people will lose their jobs at the same company.

How can the Hon. Member stand and say that she is proud of her Government? Members opposite should be ashamed of themselves. Not only are they willing to put in place a national sales tax without consulting the provinces, but they say: "If you do not like it we will go ahead and do it alone". As if the national sales tax that the Minister of Finance wants to bring in is not bad enough, he leaked the Budget also. That sales tax will cost the average person thousands of dollars every year. The average person who goes to McDonald's for breakfast will have to pay an extra 40 cents. It costs $5 for a decent breakfast. Now it will cost him $5.40.

Members of the Government state that they have created 1.4 million jobs. Yet those jobs pay only $3.50 per hour.

I have one question to ask of the Hon. Member. How can she stand up to say: "I am proud of my Government"? How can she stand up to say that she is proud when jobs are being lost?

I am wondering if people in my riding are not different from the people in her riding.

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Karygiannis: Are the people in my riding stupid? I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, my riding was represented previously by a Conservative Member of Parliament. Do you know what they did to him? They kicked him out. I am wondering when the people of Canada will do the same to this Government.

Mrs. Gibeau: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member of the Opposition for giving me this opportunity to say how proud I am of our Government and how proud I am of our Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). I am very proud to be a part of a Government that has both the courage to identify serious problems and the courage to propose solutions.

Mr. Speaker, I have the figures here, and I will read them in English because I think the Hon. Member did not quite understand what I said. I suppose he doesn't speak the language. It says here:

[English]

One million, four hundred and thirty-two thousand jobs have been created in the 54 months since September, 1984, including 247,000 in the past year. In contrast only 358,000 jobs were created under the Liberals in the 55 months between February, 1980 and 1984. That is three, almost four times the number of jobs. Since September, 1984, jobs have been created at an average rate of 26,519 a month as compared to the Liberal monthly average of 6,509.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, that is why I am proud of our Government, and it makes me furious to see the Opposition deceiving Canadians with their half-truths. They take facts and they twist them, treating their fellow citizens as if they were unable to face reality. The people who elected you, the people who elected us—our fellow Canadians—have a right to know the facts about their country's debt and their country's finances, and our Government has the courage to give them that information so that they will understand and support the courageous measures we are taking.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saskatoon—Humboldt (Mr. Hovdebo) on a question or comment.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member on her presentation. I would like to comment and ask a question. The most chilling part of this particular Budget is the fact that over the years, even as the Government has reduced the Public Service by, as it suggests, 10,000 jobs, there have been massive increases in taxation. It has had made massive program cuts and it is proud of them, it says. The deficit has gone up by about $1 billion to $31.5 billion. The accumulated debts, if we are to understand the Auditor General, have risen to $340 billion or $350 billion. Interest rates have gone up as well. This Government is keeping them up. We are told that a 1 per cent reduction in interest rates would reduce the deficit by $1.5 billion.

I would like the Hon. Member to defend the Government's policy of keeping the interest rates high.

[Translation]

Mrs. Gibeau: Mr. Speaker, my Hon. colleague must know that interest rates are not solely dictated by the Bank of Canada. We must borrow on world markets to make our interest payments and that is exactly why our Government is presenting a Budget that will enable us not only to reduce our deficit but also eventually our debt in order ot protect our country from variations in interest rates. That is why we presented a tough and demanding but certainly very courageous Budget which protects people first, as I said earlier, by making sure that the people who benefit from our programs are those who need them the most.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate has passed Bill C-14, an Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1990, with one amendment.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will resume debate with the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt (Mr. Whittaker).

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Mr. Speaker, it is always a pleasure to get up and speak on any Bill, but in particular I am pleased to be able to speak on a measure as important as the one presently before the House. I am always awed by the surroundings and the history that this place brings to me, and I am astounded by this Government and the measure that is before us at the present time.

I am astounded because throughout the last election we were told who would be the best Party to manage the economy into the future. It has been proven, I would suggest through this Budget, that it is certainly not the Government that sits on that side of the House.

It is certainly not the Government and the Finance Minister (Mr. Wilson) and this Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who are going to lead Canada into the economic future on their white chargers. I would suggest that this Budget is nothing but a blueprint for failure.

I point to a recent Globe and Mail article which quotes the Conference Board of Canada. It states that the federal Budget could bring Canada close to a recession by the end of this year, and will virtually guarantee no economic growth during the rest of 1989.

Calling the Budget inflationary, the Conference Board chief economist, James Frank, said that job losses and larger taxes from the Budget will reduce personal disposable income by $5 billion next year, in large part through the $2.2 billion that will be collected in additional personal taxes.

That is the blueprint for the future. The Government has brought down a Budget on the backs of the small wage earners, on the backs of small business, on the backs of agriculture, on the backs of the unemployed, on the backs of the pensioners, and it expects us to believe that it is the saviour of the economic future of Canada. Nonsense. It has shown where its priorities are.

A question raised earlier by my colleague suggests that the Finance Minister back in 1985 told us that there were not enough rich. I would suggest that this Budget shows part of that agenda, that he is trying to create more rich on the backs of the poor. I suggest that we in Canada will not stand for it. We in this corner of the House will not stand for it. We intend to show those people in Canada exactly what you, the Government, is doing to them.

• (1700)

Mr. Horner: What you did to Manitoba.

Mr. Whittaker: You are not kissing them before you are creating the problem.

An Hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Horner: Your record is good.

Mr. Whittaker: Mr. Speaker, if I might, for a minute, now that I have awakened the Member, I would like to talk a little bit about how this Budget will affect my area.

When I read the Budget I thought about my area, Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt, and what it has. I looked at the tax increases, the two per cent increase in the federal surtax, a 15 per cent hike in unemployment insurance premiums, increases in sales and excise taxes. I understand that will pull hundreds of dollars out of taxpayers' pockets. I looked to see how they will benefit by these tax increases.

Instead, what did I find? I found a one per cent cut-back in health and welfare payments, cuts in co-op and rental housing, cuts in regional development, cuts in child care, cuts to VIA, cuts in the tourism budget, proposed cuts to crop insurance, cuts to the Federal Business Development Bank. I looked to see what was missing. There was nothing for the environment or the infrastructure so badly needed by municipalities. Then I looked to see how this will affect my area and what will be directly affected.

In the Boundary country and in the Merritt—Princeton area we have a major mining industry. I looked in the Budget and found out, yes, there are cuts there too. There are cuts to the mining exploration development area. We have forestry in Grand Forks, Midway, Greenwood, Okanagan Falls, Penticton, Princeton, and Merritt. Through these cuts I find that, yes, my areas will be hit by cuts to reforestation and cuts to regional expansion. I looked further and saw agriculture which is one of the major industries in the Okanagan part of the riding. There is nothing in the Budget to help the agricultural industry. In fact, there are major cuts once again.

There are cuts proposed to the stabilization programs and there is nothing to assist small business to produce value added products. My friend says that it is a show—and I suggest that that is correct—of harmonization under the Free Trade Agreement once again.

What is there in my area that will really be affected aside from that? Tourism is of major importance. I spoke to the Chamber of Commerce in Penticton recently. I was told that the Okanagan area has over two million tourists a year who visit and spend well over $88 million, representing 50 per cent to 60 per cent of direct and indirect hospitality jobs. Of these almost 20 per cent are tourists from the United States, Japan, Europe, and other countries. This industry will be directly affected by the $10 million in cut-backs to the tourism budget, $10 million that prior had been set out for advertising and for the pursuit of tourist dollars from abroad. We are losing that under this Budget. In an area where tourism is so crucial, I suggest that that is totally unacceptable to the people of my area and certainly to the people of British Columbia who depend on tourism to a great extent for their incomes.

It surprises me again seeing this Government cutting back on the tourism budget when, as a member of the regional board of Okanagan—Similkameen, we recognized how important tourism was to our area and set aside some budget for advertising to ensure that people knew about our area.

Yet, what do we have? Instead of cutting back on the $10 million plus which the Government is spending on advertising to push some of the other programs which it cannot sell to the people and spending that money where it can be used, it is spending money on nonsense such as advertising this Budget which is indefensible. That money should be used in the tourism budget where it would create employment and productivity within our communities. It would take the people off the unemployment rolls which, incidentally, in my area are over twice the national average.

This Government, after diddling with the GATT, the Free Trade Agreement and agriculture, is now nailing coffins by pulling money out of the tourism budget. That, in our region, is unacceptable, totally unacceptable. We will fight for our rights and for the tourism budget. We will not accept without a fight what the Government is doing to the area of Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt and the Boundary country.

I would like now to speak about small business. The small business area recognized by Statistics Canada as having created 70 per cent of all employment between 1980 and 1988. What has this Government done to assist small business, to recognize the contribution which the small business community has given to Canada since Confederation, but particularly in the last eight years? The Government has now put the unemployment insurance on the backs of the employer and employee. The Government has stepped out of the unemployment insurance program where it should be to ensure that it continues. This is another step in the harmonization of the Free Trade Agreement. The Government is looking to please the Americans instead of looking after what we have and what we should be looking after in this country.

What else did the small business person get? The Federal Business Development Bank has helped a little bit—

Mr. James: A mighty little bit.

Mr. Whittaker: —although it seems to look to larger business for loans. The one program that is of benefit to small business is the provision of advice on management services. I had occasion on the weekend to refer a small business person to the FBDB for that specific service.

What do we find in this Budget? A cut of $13 million out of the management service area of the Federal Business Development Bank. The one area in that bank that actually helps small business.

The small businessman often is a person without many skills who wants to be his own boss. He needs that assistance. He needs all the help that he can get. He needs someone to turn to. That service has been offered by the Federal Business Development Bank and has been suggested as a service to be added to the Farm Credit Corporation, to assist farmers in setting up their businesses.

What have we got? We have the small businessman getting the shaft once again from the Government which says it is the friend of small business. I suggest that the Government is not the friend of small business. It has been shown time and again that the agenda is a large corporate agenda which we have seen from year to year since 1984, and it is the agenda that is again before us now.

I saw with interest a recent story in The Financial Post which said that small firms may be hardest hit with the implementation of the new tax. It points out a number of things that have been of some concern to me when looking at how the tax changes will affect small business. It deals with accounts receivable for service industries and refers particularly to advertising agencies, but could also refer to lawyers, accountants and computer outfits that offer services to the public. When those companies bill for their services, they must add the 9 per cent service tax under the proposed value added tax the Government has given notice it will bring in, and they must then remit that to the federal Government.

What happens when a small businessman has to write that off? He has to come up with that money when he bills for his services. There is not much room built in for him to defer because he is penalized. He has to come up with the money. I can tell Hon. Members, as one who has worked for small businesses, that a small business person with a marginal corporation cannot afford that extra $5,000 or $8,000. In small towns such as those I represent, he would need that money to keep his business going. He would need that money to feed and clothe his children and to pay his mortgage.

The Government does not care, I suggest, for the small business person. The Government cares only for its corporate friends.

The article also points out that probably hardest hit will be Canadian magazines which are already reporting flat incomes this year. They will have to charge tax on subscriptions which are very price sensitive. This is another example of the Government threatening a part of our culture as it did through the Free Trade Agreement.

There is one hope. The final paragraph of the article says that Saul Muskat, a Toronto accountant, points out that it is creating a whole new specialized industry. There will be a lot more work for accountants and tax lawyers. That is not good enough for those of us who care for average Canadians. We want a Budget that is fair to everyone. We want a Government that will tax large corporations and have them pay their fair share. We want a Government that will recognize that there are others in Canada than large corporate entities and wealthy land owners and employers. We want the Government to recognize that there are many of us in Canada who do not make a lot of money and who cannot afford to pay the extra taxes and have the added cut-backs.

If I might, I would move on to pensions for seniors. In 1988, the Prime Minister was quoted as saying:

> Let me say a special word to the senior citizens.

He said this in Summerside, Prince Edward Island, an area that he has now shafted once again. He said:

> —in the future Canada will be doing more, not less, for all of you. As long as I am Prime Minister of Canada, social benefits, especially those for the elderly, will be improved, not diminished, by our government which—is committed to social justice and fairness for Canadians.

Well, what did we get this time? We got some of that social justice. We got some of that fairness for seniors. Once again, as it did in 1985, the Government is attacking the universality of social programs, just as it was predicted it would do during the election campaign and during the debate over the Free Trade Agreement. It is part of the harmonization process, as much of this Budget is. It is an outright attack on seniors and social programs. I say to the Government, shame on you.

Back in 1985, the National Pensioners and Senior Citizens Federation led a fight against the Government when it attacked the old age security. Once again, this organization is starting to mount an attack, and I add my voice of support to that group. There is an article in The Ottawa Citizen today which points out that the federation is shocked that the Government is shaking the underpinnings of the Canadian social safety net.

Les Batterson, the federation president, says that they think they have been betrayed because both the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance indicated that there would be no tampering with social security programs and that seniors were misled by statements that were made during the election.

I feel sorry for Mrs. Mulroney. I know she is a woman beyond criticism. The only criticism I might have is that she should teach her son that he should pay a little more attention to the truth. It appears that he has been a stranger to that recently. We saw how he reacted once he proceeded to tell seniors what he would do for them. He has done it, but he did not do what he said he would do.

[Translation]

Mr. Guilbault: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Drummond on a point of order.

Mr. Guilbault: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is attacking a somewhat important figure for the government of Canada. I think he is out of order. I would even ask him to apologize and to withdraw what he said.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: A point of order was raised by the Hon. Member for Drummond as to the use of possible unparliamentary language by the Hon. Member. I will have a look at the "blues" and report back to the House. The Hon. Member has one minute to complete his speech.

Mr. Whittaker: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is another area I would like to touch on briefly. Once again, during the election campaign and over the prior four years, the Government told us it would look after the women of Canada. What has been done? The Government has looked after women all right. It has made major cut-backs of $2 million in women's programs. Citizenship training has been cut back. Many of these things hit at women.

During the election campaign, I met with a group of immigrant women, and one of the things these women said that there was not enough services given to women immigrants so that they could become productive members of society. What did we get in the Budget? We got the Government once again attacking that.

I want to say to the Government that it had better review what it has done in this Budget and look at what we as Canadians need. It had better look at the management of the future and come to conclusions other than the ones reached in the Budget.

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on the speech made by the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt. I am very concerned about some of the things the Hon. Member has said. I suppose I am really concerned about his lack of interest in giving credit to the people of the tourism industry. He feels that they cannot promote their businesses on their own and that there should be all sorts of federal money going toward advertising the tourism business in British Columbia. Certainly the tourism business in Ontario has been doing a fine job. These free enterprisers and entrepreneurs have attracted people to their places of business and feel good about it. He feels there has to be all sorts of federal money going to it and that the federal Government has not done right by small business. He also suggested that we have not assisted small business.

The Hon. Member said that he worked in small business, but small business people have told us in the last four and a half years when visiting Parliament Hill that they would like to have the opportunity to be unfettered, not hemmed in, or told what to do by government. They would like to go their own way.

Also local communities have told us that individual communities like to have flexibility in their decision making with respect to how best to help small business develop in their own areas. That is being accomplished by the funds that are being directed toward the Communities Futures. The Government feels positive about this and has had a good record in this regard.

Certainly the change in UI funds can be redirected to creating jobs, most especially through the Communities Futures Program, an excellent program. Small business told those of us on the DRIE committee during 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987 when they appeared before us that they needed that kind of flexibility. We listened to what they had to say. Perhaps the Member should go out and have a talk with the small business people.

I think it is a shame that the Member tends to confuse the issue in connection with the higher income pensioners paying back some of their Old Age Security. It certainly goes on above $50,000, which is certainly a credible amount of money to be made each year. I do not think that he should be confused. If one has $100,000 income in 1989, one will only be paying $700 of that money back. I think the record should be kept clear in that regard.

Earlier the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands tended to confuse the issue. I do not think it was intentional on the part of the Hon. Member for Kingston and The Islands or the Member from Okanagan, but I think the record should be made clear. It goes along with what the socialists seem to have been saying for some period of time, that high income people should be paying their fair share. In the situation faced by higher income people, along with having the universality of the program maintained, they will pay back to assist in this terrible deficit and long-term debt problem in Canada. The Member should take note of that and be careful that he speaks clearly, concisely, and accurately about such things.

Mr. Whittaker: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be given the opportunity to reply. What I have heard over the last six days of budget debate involves some confusion on the government benches as opposed to those of the Opposition.

Perhaps my friend has missed the point of some of what was said not only by myself but by some of the other Members on this side of the House with respect to tourism and small business.

I have spoken over the last week and a half with many of the people involved in the tourism and small business industries in my area. I am not getting the same type of feedback as that which the Hon. Members gives the House. I am little surprised that he would tell me that, given the fact that throughout the course of time and through the lobby by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business Mr. Bulloch was constantly warning the Government about its plan for a value added tax and what it would do to small business.

In meeting with the hospitality industry people in my area just last week, a number of concerns were raised including unemployment insurance and how that was going to affect small business people. Concerns were raised over the lack of government interest in the tourism industry. On the one hand under Bill C-3 it would say that it was going to set up all these wonderful things for tourism. Then, a week later in the Budget, it slashed $10 million from the tourism promotion part of the Budget. Those are some of the concerns about which the people in my area have talked to me.

In speaking about the claw-back provision, I make very clear that I understand it. I want to ensure that the government benches understand. Government Members have set it at $50,000 this year, but what is going to happen next year? They have now booted the door open to universality. They have set their toe in and they are intending, I would submit, to blast it wide open with that one little thrust, saying that it really does not count because it is the higher income earners we are getting at. Nonsense; it is part of a larger agenda of harmonization.

They are going to knock it down as the Government, $40,000 in years to come or $10,000? What is the limit going to be? Is it now going to become a total phase out of our social security programs? It is only a start. It is that possibility to which we are objecting, and we are flagging it so that the people of Canada will know that it is the start of what is to come.

Mr. Harb: I have a comment, Mr. Speaker. It seems that all sides of the House, speaker after speaker, have acknowledged the fact that we do have a deficit and we do have to address it.

The difference is how we address the issue of the deficit. The Liberal Party believes that to address the deficit we have to concentrate on increased productivity. I would like to bring to the attention of the Members of the House that Canada is one of the leading countries when it comes to export of raw material. Unfortunately we are nowhere when it comes to areas of high technology areas, or when it comes to many other areas such as our investment in education, illiteracy and so on. While we are one of the largest importers of wood, we still import saws from Italy in order to cut wood. We have a very strong mining industry and we ship to Japan, Hong Kong and elsewhere, we still import the machinery in order to dig and do such things

We have spoken about the tourism industry. Yes, it is a service industry. Unfortunately in this country, we still seem to be putting a lot of emphasis on the service sector rather than concentrating on the manufacturing end of it.

A Japanese speaker who was in this country a couple of weeks ago said that Canada, in order to be on the leading edge in every area, would have to concentrate more on manufacturing. There is no way that we can get out of this situation, unless we spend more money in the area of research and development and education and make manufacturing a priority of this country.

Mr. Whittaker: Mr. Speaker, I agree totally. Valued added products must be given priority within Canada, across the nation. We can no longer accept that we are primary industry people who ship out our products for manufacture. We have to look further into what we are doing and encourage that type of investment.

Part of the education and research funds that we have spoken about in other Bills are so important that they bring back enormous dividends to our country which we can certainly use in the future in the value added areas of our manufacturing, as well as in making Canada known throughout the world as not only a good research country but as the best country to which to go for research.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Laurentides (Mr. Vien).

Mr. Jacques Vien (Laurentides): Mr. Speaker, I am greatful for this opportunity to make my maiden speech in this House.

First of all, I wish to very sincerely thank the people of my beautiful riding of Laurentides for their trust on November 21st.

Since 1984, Mr. Speaker, the solid economic record of our Government fully demonstrates the soundness of its policies. We have created a million and a half new jobs and our economy has witnessed a quicker expansion than those of most other industrialized countries. We have achieved these goals together, both as a Government and as a nation, because we have been able to make difficult choices and to take stringent measures to deal with our economic and financial problems.

However, Mr. Speaker, these achievements are now being threatened by growing inflationary pressures both here and abroad.

As the result of these pressures, short-term interest rates are rising; they are higher today than we generally expected them to be hardly a few months ago. Early in 1988, most economic forecasters had predicted that the impact of the October 1987 krach would slow down the economic growth of industrialized nations to more sustainable levels. None of these forecasters had predicted the rapid growth and inflationary pressures which have been recorded in Canada and in other major industrialized nations.

Economic growth has been very strong, and Canada and countries abroad had to tighten their monetary policies to curb this inflation.

Failure to act now will result in a greater threat to our economic stability due to greater inflationary pressures and higher interest rates which could lead us in to a recession.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has recognized that many Canadians are frustrated by the increase in interest rates. Some are even suggesting that the Government should order the Bank of Canada to lower them. But interest rates move in relation to other economic factors, and therefore cannot be dealt with independently.

Mr. Speaker, inflationary pressures are responsible for high interest rates. To attack the symptoms instead of the causes would not solve the problem.

And we will not succeed in controlling inflation by increasing the money supply. Rampant inflation always brings about higher interest rates. Such inflationary spiral is a recipe for economic disaster.

Mr. Speaker, the Government will not make that mistake. Let us not forget the inflationary outburst and explosion in interest rates of the early eighties.

The erosion of confidence in the economy, the collapse of growth and employment in all regions of Canada and above all the immeasurable damage done to millions of Canadians.

As the Finance Minister said, he expects inflation and interest rates to slow down in the mid term. This will allow the economy to grow on average at its potential rate of 3 per cent between 1991 and 1994. But that potential growth rate will not be reached automatically.

Mr. Speaker, we must put in place firm, moderate and coherent budgetary and monetary measures that will keep us in the right direction, to bring down inflation and interest rates and prevent them from rising again. We must follow a realistic and responsible policy in which the short—and medium term—risks are well balanced.

Through its Budget, the Government is seeking to guarantee the future and not mortgage it. That is why the Budget comes firmly to grips with the main obstacle between us and that future: the problem of an increasing debt.

The measures in this Budget reflect the seriousness of the debt problem we are facing. We also tried to make sure the whole package was balanced, took into account regional considerations and fell more heavily on those most able to bear it.

Mr. Speaker, as a Government, we are acting with determination to reduce expenditures and to improve our efficiency and our operations. We also ask to all Canadians to take a large part in solving this national problem.

We have adopted expenditure reductions affecting a wide variety of programs, from national defence to government operations. When fully implemented, these reductions will amount to $2.5 billion a year. As a result of these measures and those announced previously, program expenditures will continue to decrease significantly. By 1993–94, they will have fallen to their lowest level in a quarter of a century.

Although expenditure reductions contribute significantly to meeting the Budget objectives, we also had to increase revenues.

Mr. Speaker, these measures have also been designed to weigh more heavily on those taxpayers who can afford to contribute more. The raises have been distributed in a balanced way among several sources of revenue: corporate and individual income tax, sales taxes and unemployment insurance funding. On the other hand, measures such as the doubling of the refundable sales tax credit mean we can guarantee that low-income Canadians will pay the smallest share of the tax burden.

[English]

The Government introduced the refundable sales tax credit in 1986, and has expanded the credit since then. In this Budget the Government is doubling the tax credits for adults and children. By 1990 these credits will be $140 per adult, and $70 per child.

In addition, in 1990 the income threshold up to which the full credit is provided will be raised from $16,000 to $18,000. This means that an individual with a net income of $18,000 or less will receive $140. A couple with two children would receive $420.

For the 1990 taxation year the extended credit will provide $655 million in support to lower-income Canadians. This will more than compensate recipients for the full credit for the federal sales tax increase announced in the Budget.

When the Government undertakes sales tax reform in the near future, it will be introducing a new goods and services sales tax credit that will involve a major expansion of benefits. It means that even if individuals do not pay income tax they will receive the credit in a cheque from the Government. Payments will be made regularly every three months, the first one in advance of the start-up of the new system on January 1, 1991. Lower and modest-income households will be better off as a result of sales tax reform.

• (1740)

Other tax changes to benefit middle-income households will be introduced as well. In combination, the new tax credit and other tax changes will result in a more progressive system. The Government's goal is to ensure that families earning less than $30,000 a year will be better off as a result of our sales tax reform.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the tax on goods and services will benefit Canadians in all regions of the country. In fact, implementation of the goods and services tax will result in a fairer tax system, once sales tax reform is a reality, thanks to the new credit for the goods and services tax and the lowering of income tax. The Government's objective is to ensure that all these measures will leave families earning less than $30,000 a year better off once the goods and services tax is in place.

The goods and services tax will improve our international competitiveness considerably. Our export industries will be better placed, while Canadian companies will be on an equal footing with importers. It will strengthen our economy, which will attract more investors and create more jobs. A modern tax base, generating stable revenues, will help the government reduce the deficit and offer Canadians the programs they want.

The overall effect of these budgetary measures will exceed $5 billion this year and will total $9 billion next year. This year, these measures will almost compensate for the increase in interest rates and will leave the deficit at $30.5 billion. Next year, the deficit will be reduced to $28 billion, and the debt will stop growing faster than the economy. That is an important result, Mr. Speaker.

The Budget will enable us to cut the annual deficit in half, bringing it down to $15 billion by 1993–1994. As the deficit diminishes, the debt will use up a lesser proportion of our national income and interest payments will take up a lesser portion of each tax dollar.

Mr. Speaker, nobody likes tax increases. Yet the debt is a major problem because we have not yet paid in full the cost of government programs. Before 1984, successive governments had acted in such a way as to reduce the tax base. This resulted in a lack of fairness and a reduction in federal revenues.

Mr. Speaker, this government has since then taken steps to restore the integrity of the tax system. Over the last four years, we have taken a number of steps, through the budgets or otherwise, to eliminate certain tax concessions, to plug loopholes and to restrict the possibility of tax avoidance for corporations and upper income individuals. We have also reduced the incentives to tax avoidance through a comprehensive reform which widens the tax base and lowers tax rates.

These initiatives have transformed the tax system in a more equitable and reliable source of revenues, thus ensuring that we get the funds necessary to preserve the future of Canada. The budget reflects the seriousness of our situation. We have made difficult choices. We have tried to ensure that the budget measures are balanced, that they take into account regional variations and that they impose the heaviest burden on those who are better able to support it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 5.45 p.m., it is my duty pursuant to Standing Order 84(6) to interrupt the proceedings and put forthwith every question necessary to dispose of the main motion now before the House.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion, the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Order made Friday, May 5, 1989, the recorded division stands deferred until six o'clock Monday, May 15, 1989.

Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at ten o'clock.

The House adjourned at 5.46 p.m.

SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S.O. 81—ILLEGAL IMPORTATION AND SALE OF TAINTED FUELS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East) moved:

That this House condemn the Government for its negligence with regard to the illegal importation and sale of fuel tainted with polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs) and other toxic substances.

She said: Mr. Speaker, I cannot say I am happy to have an opportunity to debate this issue but I think it is going to give us an opportunity to put some facts on the record, facts which unfortunately have been in the possession of the Government for some time, up to 28 months, and have been ignored. These are facts that involve a potential risk to the health of Canadians, including the possibility of cancer-causing PCBs being mixed into gasoline fuel, into home heating fuel, into fuel used in industry, into fuel that is used in greenhouses to grow vegetables and fruit which eventually find their way to our tables, leading to the possibility of toxic wastes invading the food chain and posing a risk to the health of Canadians.

I think the first question Canadians have to ask themselves is why, when on several occasions information came to various Ministers of this Government about the possibility of a wide ranging criminal scam, the extent of which we probably have not seen in any kind of trafficking in this country, there has been widespread potential trafficking in toxic wastes between Canada and the United States? When Minister after Minister and Government official after Government official were informed, why did they sweep the issue under the table? Why did they not want to deal with an issue that could very directly affect the health of Canadians?

I would like to go back for a moment with a bit of chronology. The chronology, if we take it in reverse order of occurrence, would go as follows: In March, 1989, there was a major conference in Switzerland to which the Government of Canada sent the Associate Minister of Transport as its major representative. At that particular conference, the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Martin) was specifically told by Daniel Green—

[Translation]

—the president of Montreal's Society to Conquer Pollution—

[English]

—that he had a meeting specifically with Mrs. Martin in which he laid certain facts on the table. To quote Mr. Green, prior to the specific meeting with the Minister of State for Transport, he contacted the office of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard).

I will just read into the record, Mr. Speaker, for the attention of the Government, the names of the people that Mr. Green says he spoke with directly on this issue. In terms of Ministers, he spoke to the Minister of State for Transport. He also spoke to two representatives in the office of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard). He stated this morning, Vic Shantora and John Myslicki. He spoke to Alan Beasley from External Affairs and he also spoke directly to the assistant to the Associate Minister for Transport, Shirley Wood. So we have four Government officials in three departments along with the Minister of State who were specifically told in March of this year about the existence of that scam.

However, that was not the first time that the private sector had tried to alert the Government to the possibility of a major wide-ranging scam which is not, I must point out—

[Translation]

An issue inside Quebec only.

[English]

The Centre for Investigative Reporting in Washington, a Mr. Andrew Porterfield, who has been working on this issue for a number of years and who has had input into the American Government hearings, seems to have known about this for years, although several Ministers have claimed this week in the House that they just learned about the situation on Monday. Mr. Andrew Porterfield says that he has evidence of hazardous substances travelling from Idaho and Washington State to British Columbia and Alberta. He believes that it is not simply an Ontario and Quebec issue, so when the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Beatty) stands up and says he has done testing and there are no regional disparities, it is likely that there are no regional disparities because the level of illegal toxic activity has been going on from British Columbia potentially through to Quebec and possibly Atlantic Canada. That was the statement of Andrew Porterfield, it was not the statement of the Opposition.

At the same time we now know—and I was called a liar yesterday by the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Jelinek). He called me a liar because I suggested, quite directly, that the executive vice-president of the Canadian Petroleum Marketers Association had a very specific meeting here in Ottawa 28 months ago, more than two years ago, a face to face meeting with the Minister in which he pointed out the possibility of toxic wastes being imported into Canada by way of a major criminal scam. What did the Minister of National Revenue choose to do with that information? He sat on it. As late as yesterday he denied he claimed I was a liar, or his colleague claimed I was a liar. Mr. Green is a liar. Mr. Conrad is a liar. Presumably somebody, either on this side of the House or at The Globe and Mail or by way of the Canadian Petroleum Marketers Association, or L'Association pour vaincre la pollution, wants to get the facts on the record and we would have no reason to lie. It is fine to label the Opposition as liars but when you are talking about independent organizations—

An Hon. Member: Sensationalism,

Ms. Copps: What possible interest could Jim Conrad have in creating a sensation?

The executive vice-president of the Canadian Petroleum Marketers Association is not interested in sensationalism. He has a product to sell and he wants to make sure that it is a clean, untainted product. He is interested in the revenue scam that took place and was being investigated, but he is also interested specifically in the assurances that he should be able to give to Canadians about the quality of his product. That quality has been compromised because of the complete negligence of this Government, the absolute indifference of the former Minister of National Revenue who in January of 1987 was told point blank that there is activity going on in the area of toxic waste importation from the United States. Yet he chose to do nothing.

The Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Martin), who was told in March of this year by an environmentalist whom the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) himself has called a respected environmentalist, chose to do nothing. The Minister of National Revenue stood in the House yesterday and admitted that in September, 1987, almost two years ago, a high level meeting took place in Toronto at which evidence was brought forward about toxic wastes being mixed into fuels, but he claims that the information dealt only with shipping between states in the United States.

My information, from a police informant whom I am sure the Minister will know because he said that copious notes have been kept of the meetings that were taking place on a twice annual basis, gave direct evidence to the Ministry of Revenue and offered to supply ongoing evidence about the criminal nature of toxic products being put into the waste in 1987 and the Ministry of Revenue declined that offer. If it did not have to do with tax fraud, the Ministry did not want to know about it. It was not concerned about the potential, long term implications of this type of toxin coming into the Canadian environment.

Let us look at the broader question, Mr. Speaker. Why would we see the level of shipping of illegal toxins that we are currently led to believe has been going on for the last number of years? Partly because in the United States, for example California, there are extremely stringent laws concerning the disposal of toxic waste. If a company of source is caught shipping toxic waste which ultimately ends up in some type of illegal activity, it is held responsible. If you are the owner of a small operation that may be dealing with used oils in California and somehow after you tender out your shipping of toxic fuels it ends up in an illegal dump in the State of California, you would be held criminally responsible.

But American law says that once the toxins leave its borders, the original producer of the toxins can go scot-free. So there is a direct impetus on the basis of existing U.S. legislation for American companies to get their toxic wastes out of the United States. Proper, clean, thorough disposal of toxic waste in the United States costs approximately $1,000 for every container that has to be disposed of.

If in the course of exporting that fuel, which may perhaps be laced with PCBs or with other toxins, it finds itself in an illegal dump, as long as the illegal dump is in Canada there is no problem.

I personally was shocked—and I am sure this will shock a lot of Canadians—to learn from the Environmental Protection Agency of the United States, a Mr. Jim Vincent—not a Liberal set-up, not a spokesperson for Canada; everybody is lying except the Government of Canada—

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not know how many times the Hon. Member has implied that Members on this side of the House have called her or her colleagues or other people liars. I looked through the statement of yesterday. There is absolutely no reference to that and, of course, to do so would be unparliamentary.

Ms. Copps: You did not watch television last night.

Mr. Cooper: I think the Hon. Member should be reminded that she is accusing someone—

Ms. Copps: Yes, Otto Jelinek.

Mr. Cooper: —of doing something in this House that would be out of order.

Ms. Copps: I do not know where the Member has been the last few days but Otto Jelinek called me a liar.

Mr. Cooper: Where?

Ms. Copps: Yesterday outside the House, and the Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) heard it and so did millions of Canadians.

Mr. Della Noce: She lied—

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Could we stop talking about that, please? Could the Member just continue her speech? Otherwise we will never end. The Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate the Speaker's ruling and I agree that we should not pursue this point any further. However, when another Member inside the House, as just a moment ago, made a similar accusation against the Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), at least that Member, being the Member from Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce), I think should stand up and retract what he has just said.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask Members one more time not to use that word. Sometimes it is unparliamentary, sometimes it is not. It depends if the person means that something was done deliberately or not. But most of the time the use of the word brings disorder in the House. If Members would refrain from using it, I am sure we would have a better quality of debate.

Mr. Boudria: I think you are right.

[Translation]

Mr. Della Noce: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) on a point of order.

Mr. Della Noce: My name has just been mentioned, Mr. Speaker. What I said yesterday to the press is—

Ms. Copps: I did not say it was you, I said I heard the Minister—

Mr. Della Noce: The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) has just mentioned my name. I talked to the press yesterday. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) said to the press that I had called. It is not true.

Ms. Copps: I did not say that. The Revenue Minister did.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Now that the case is closed, could the Member continue?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I will go back to what shocked me. This is in relation to the fact that Canada is rapidly becoming, in a legal and illegal fashion, the dumping ground for American toxic waste.

• (1020)

If society, and I speak not only of Canada but of the world, is to address the problem of pollution, toxic waste and the environmental damage that causes, we have to understand that there is a basic principle to which we should adhere and that is that we are responsible for our own garbage. In the United States, there are very strict laws which could lead to criminal convictions against companies that illegally dispose of toxic wastes in the United States but make no such provision interjurisdictionally. Because of that, American companies that want to play it fast and loose, want to make the cheapest bid or get the absolute lowest price for disposing of toxic waste, in some cases hand waste over to fly–by–night haulers who use any means whatsoever, including the illegal mixing of toxins into fuel and industrial oil, to get it out of the country.

At the moment, according to the EPA, we are receiving approximately 120,000 tonnes of toxic waste from the United States per year. We are having enough difficulty looking after the toxic waste we create from our own industrial and residential pollution, but we have become the major dumping ground outside the United States for American industrial waste. If we are going to get into the business of looking after other people's garbage, as we have done with respect to toxic wastes from the United States, then at the very least we owe it to Canadians to have a system in place and a Government in place that will respond to the early warning signals, the early warning signals that the former Minister of National Revenue ignored in 1987.

Later, there were warnings at the September meeting of Ministry of Revenue officials in Toronto in 1987, warning signals which were ignored. Later warning signals were given to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) at an international conference by someone the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) describes as a respected environmentalist. The final signals were laid at the door of the Minister of the Environment in March of this year when once again Mr. Green let his views be known and his concerns expressed about the possibility of toxic wastes being imported.

The Environmental Protection Agency in the United States admits that the system in place there for the export of toxic waste is subject to flaws. Once a manifest for toxic waste is drawn up, an acknowledgement of consent letter is written to confirm that the particular shipment has been licensed for export but the manifest which includes the original toxins is never cross–referenced with the letter and no check is made to see if companies have consent to export. The American system that is tougher than the one we have in Canada does not even check to see whether companies that are shipping the stuff out of the country have consent to export. That is one major flaw.

If Hon. Members do not believe me, perhaps they will believe Mr. Jim Vincent of the Enforcement Division of the Environmental Protection Agency in Denver, Colorado. He says that rarely are samples taken to confirm a shipment's contents. Usually, if samples are taken, they are taken by the sending company and sent to the receiving company and it is the receiving company that confirms the contents of the sample. That is a bit like having the fox looking after the henhouse. The sending company and receiving company are the only two parties that actually check to see whether the sample of waste is what it is supposed to be.

If there is to be the importation into Canada of 140,000 tonnes of waste a year from the United States, we must have the systems in place to enforce the regulations. This week the Minister of the Environment rose in the House but made no mention of the fact that throughout the mandate of this Government, under the infamous Nielsen Task Force, Customs and Excise alone had 336 positions eliminated. There cannot be the elimination of 336 jobs without there being some effect on control at the border.

The Minister said he would add 34 person–years to his staff which is currently responsible for enforcing regulations emanating from the Canadian Environmental Protection Act. There are 140 border points across Canada. If we assume that people are not capable of working 24 hours a day, 7 days a week—and most of us cannot do that—we can assume that those 34 positions may possibly, at best, be able to cover 8 or 10 border crossings.

That leaves 130 borders unprotected from the potential for major criminal activity and importation of toxins.

[Translation]

That point was raised several times by Mr. Green in his conversations with the Environment Minister's officials and with the Minister of State for Transport Minister. He said that if the Canadian Government was really concerned about toxic substances, it must at least treat criminals in that field as severely as it does criminal drug traffickers.

We know the Revenue Minister made a big fuss last week about various measures he is taking at the border to control drug movement and trafficking.

Mr. Speaker, PCB traffic affects the health of all Canadians. Nearly all Canadian families are suffering from environmental diseases such as cancer, breathing problems, emphysema and so on. The health of Canadians should also be important. For that reason, I think the least the federal Government could do, as was suggested during the debate on the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, is to make sure PCB and other toxic substance traffickers are treated like criminals.

Mr. Speaker, today's papers say that a major PCB trafficker was fined $100,000. But that's practically nothing compared to the profits that can be made over two years.

Mr. Speaker, if the federal Government really wants to improve the situation, it must be recognized that it has ignored the problem for 28 months— But the issue was raised by members of the public and journalists—thank God we have journalists for that—as well as by industry and environment people. I think the federal Government can at least review our federal legislation which does not treat PCB traffickers like drug traffickers and put in place systems to investigate, from beginning to end, the movement of toxic substances in Canada.

[English]

A fundamental question will have to be answered over the next few days and weeks. Do we as Canadians want to become the garbage dump of the United States for toxic products? Do we not create enough toxic products from our own industrial, residential and commercial wastes? Perhaps we do intend to make our mark as a major garbage dump for American toxic wastes. If we are bringing in 140,000 tonnes of the stuff legally, not including illegal importation of toxic wastes, we had better have in place a system to ensure that that toxic waste is properly disposed of.

As a result of what I have seen this week, which has been a comedy of errors and almost Keystone Cops, like the approach to the disposal of illegal hazardous waste, I do not have a lot of confidence that this Government will be able to deliver on a system which will reassure Canadians that PCBs and the other toxins coming from the United States are being properly disposed of. There is a lot of work for the Government. It would behove the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard), who has said that the environment is his number one priority, as the superminister over the heads of other Ministers to refer the matter to a parliamentary committee so that we can all have some input into the process in typing it up.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) on a question or comment.

Mr. Della Noce: Mr. Speaker, I too would like to participate in this debate, which I care about and in which I took part in 1987. Unfortunately, I was not at that meeting in Toronto, but it must have been the only one I missed, since Mr. Conrad spent almost three months in my office.

Ms. Copps: You telephoned Mr. Conrad.

Mr. Della Noce: I am a bit disappointed to see the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), who was just speaking, often jump to conclusions. She even told the press yesterday that I had talked to Mr. Conrad yesterday. Then I knew where the news came from. If we talk about credibility here, we should see that the Hon. Member does not sound off so much, because there is already enough hot air in this House. I did not speak to Mr. Conrad yesterday. Unfortunately, I called him and he was not there. I would also like to say to the Hon. Member, since she was not there in Toronto, that I talked with Mr. Conrad for many hours, but only about the sales tax.

I would like to ask the Hon. Member who thinks she knows everything in this field, although I spent 25 years of my life in it, why she says it is dangerous for health, since there has not yet been any evidence that such a thing occurred. All kinds of things have happened, but not that with toxic PCBs. So I want to ask her whether she at least has any proof of these allegations, proof that an automobile could run on toxic substances. As a first class mechanic, I can tell my fellow Member that I shall bring her a carburetor and show her what a carburetor is and that such a thing cannot happen. Now if she has proof, let her say so. But if not, let her stop jumping to conclusions. Mr. Conrad worked with me and Mr. Conrad was dismissed from our association. I would like to ask her why she starts rumours. If she at least has proof, let her give it to us in this House and let her stop—

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is so keen on telling the truth in the House, then why, when he was on Pierre Pascau's radio show on CKAC in Montreal this week, did he say, when they were talking about tainted fuel, that he knew that was going on? Why did he do the interview with Pierre Pascau in Montreal this week?

Mr. Della Noce: Mr. Speaker, I repeat, the Hon. Member fails to make a distinction between a tax fraud case involving the tax on gas, in which 169 charges were laid following my complaint to the Minister who was very efficient, the Minister of National Revenue at the time, not Mr. Jelinek, the other one I was talking to Mr. Pascau about the sales tax since there was never any evidence that PCBs or toxic waste were involved. There have been all kinds of fraud, but there never was— In any case, in Québec we never had fraud involving gasoline directly. That is what I said, and you are getting gas mixed up with toxic waste.

Ms. Copps: I think that the mix up, Mr. Speaker, from what the Hon. Member from Duvernay was saying, I think it is clear he admits there were allegations during the years when he was involved in the gasoline sector. He admitted as much.

Mr. Della Noce: It wasn't PCBs!

Ms. Copps: He admitted there were allegations about toxic products, and he came here some time ago. But he just said so, Mr. Speaker!

Mr. Della Noce: No, I didn't.

Ms. Copps: He talked about the tax fraud issue but doesn't seem to realize what was understood by all parties who looked at the issue in Washington when they sat on a committee of Congress with the oil companies and environmentalists, namely that the tax issue is inextricably bound up with the fraudulent contamination of fuel with PCBs and other toxic products.

Mr. Della Noce: No,no!

Ms. Copps: He says no. When companies

Mr. Della Noce: No, that's not true!

Ms. Copps: It isn't true? So now the Hon. Member is playing the police investigator! It isn't true!

Mr. Speaker, when a company is prepared to ignore the tax laws, when it claims, for instance, that it ships a certain kind of gas to avoid paying tax, that company has shown that it does not intend to respect the law, and as I see it, it is quite conceivable that the company that commits a tax fraud is prepared to mix other substances with the gas to make further illegal profits. Why is it involved in tax fraud? Because it wants to make illegal profits.

These are companies that would do anything to make illegal profits—

Mr. Della Noce: They are criminals.

Ms. Copps: To make an illegal profit through tax fraud, these companies are prepared to mix toxic products with gasoline, to avoid having to pay $1,000 per barrel and at the same time dispose of them legally.

Mr. Della Noce: That's not true!

Ms. Copps: The Hon. Member says it isn't true. Am I to conclude that the information given yesterday to the House by the Minister of National Revenue is false? Yesterday, the Minister said in the House that in September 1987, there was proof that this type of shipping was taking place between two states in the United States. And who is to say such shipments did not reach Canada? When we realize that shipping goes on between Canada and the United States every day, I think we should understand that this evidence, which is absolutely—

[English]

In Washington, the evidence is absolutely staggering as to what is going on between states. We heard about this yesterday from the Minister of National Revenue. The Member says it is false, but the Minister himself admitted yesterday in the House that there was evidence brought to them about the trafficking of illegal toxic substances between states in the United States—his nuance, Mr. Speaker—and how he attempted some damage control. He said he did not do anything because it had not crossed the Canadian border. But the evidence is voluminous. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I would rather listen to the word of a respected environmentalist—a respected environmentalist, as the Minister of the Environment said, than to the words of the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce).

[English]

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) in her remarks referred to the meeting between Mr. Conrad and the former Minister of National Revenue which took place in January, 1987. According to my understanding, the then Minister, and the officials who were present, have made it very clear that that discussion concerned only the question of excise tax evasion. If indeed Mr. Conrad had wished to raise issue at that particular time, and had done so, would it not seem logical that he would have taken a subsequent opportunity to do so when he appeared before the Finance Committee on the same issue of excise tax evasion on May 20, some five months later in 1987? Would it not seem logical that if he had conveyed that information to the Minister in early January, he then would have taken the opportunity to convey it to the members of the Standing Committee on Finance in May 1987?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I suppose the natural outcome of the question would be to suggest that Mr. Conrad was not telling the truth. I do not know why Mr. Conrad, who is not a member of the Opposition and who does not have a particular axe to grind, would be interested in bringing up a meeting that took place 28 months ago, which the Minister does not deny took place. According to a follow-up letter from the Assistant Deputy Minister, the Minister has launched an international investigation, but not into tax fraud. The international investigation that he allegedly launched involved enforcement agencies of the United States. The FBI has known about this since at least since 1987. The ADM says in his letter to Mr. Conrad that the Government is launching an international investigation into the importation of fuels. Obviously tax fraud is the major concern of the Independent Petroleum Marketers Association. It is the one that has to pay the bill if there is a fraudulent tax scam. It is the receiver of the gasoline, and is the one to be hit financially.

The individual makes no bones about the fact that when he met with the Minister, his main concern and the main issue that he raised was the tax fraud. On television today from coast to coast—I did not make up the story—he said that at the same time the relationship between the tax fraud and the toxic waste mixing were inextricably linked and that the companies or the fly-by-night operations are the underbelly of the industry that was involved in trying to scam the tax man. At the same time, there are going to be even bigger profits by mixing toxins with legitimate fuel oils.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, we have learned in the last few days that the Government of Canada and the Government of Ontario have focused on tax fraud and tax evasion in relation to the bootlegged oil and gas side of this issue rather than on the public health issue. We need to review the history of the poisoned fuel matter. It has become evident that Environment Canada has known about poisoned fuel in Canada since 1985, and Revenue Canada has known about since September 11, 1987. We know the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Martin) learned of it between March 20 and March 22 of this year when Daniel Green discussed hazardous waste smuggling with the Minister of State for Transport at a meeting on the transportation of dangerous goods in Switzerland. Daniel Green also phoned the office of the Minister of the Environment and asked to speak with the chief of staff. Instead, he spoke with Ann Marie Jean. She is currently employed in the Minister's office as a special assistant.

Between April 11 and April 13 a border blitz took place involving officials of Environment Canada, Revenue Canada, the Ontario Department of the Environment, the Ontario Provincial Police and Ontario Revenue. There was one Environment Canada inspector on site whose mandate was to ensure compliance with the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act and the Canada-U.S. Agreement on Transportation of Dangerous Goods. There were no Environment Canada inspectors on site to investigate compliance with the Canadian Environmental Protection Act which governs "cradle to grave" PCBs and other toxic substances.

An Environment Canada official, Mr. Shantora, says that this was the only sampling of fuel crossing the border in the past year. It would appear that the focus of the border blitz was tax evasion and not public health. Three hundred and eighty- three trucks were checked, and 113 samples were taken for analysis. The samples are being analysed by the Ontario Government for the presence of PCBs and other toxic substances. On May 8 a Globe and Mail story by Jock Ferguson, backed up by two reporters from The Centre for Investigative Reporting in Washington, D.C. revealed information about hazardous waste smuggling to Canada. The Minister of the Environment said in the House and I quote:

> Minister Bradley—will be in a position to gather more facts and lay charges.

It became clear at that very moment that the Minister of the Environment was not taking seriously his responsibilities either under the Canadian Environmental Protection Act or in relation to the transport of toxic and hazardous substances into Canada.

There was also a quote in the same article by Mr. Ferguson:

> For several weeks now we have been conducting routine border inspections, together with the Province of Ontario, to ensure compliance with the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act. We intend to get in touch with the oil industry to ensure that Canadians are offered high quality gasoline.

That was the line being taken by the Minister of the Environment. By May 9, we found that Daniel Green had revealed his warnings to the Department of the Environment, and the Minister of the Environment said in the House that an official was told in Switzerland, and that the information was passed on to the Ontario Government, which action prompted the April blitz. I quote:

> It was not one of my aides, but a civil servant from the department who received the general information from Mr. Green.

Of course, that is directly contradicted by the information from Daniel Green who has been described by the Minister as an extraordinary and fine individual.

• (1040)

The Government then announced a program to address the issue: Border blitzes, including sampling; tracing the movement of fuel from those dealers mentioned in the Globe and Mail story; contacting U.S. authorities; and working with the Canadian petroleum producers.

However, major questions earlier in the week were never answered by the Government side. Why has no attempt been made to find out whether the fuel which is heating Canadian homes, propelling their cars or sitting in Jerry cans in their carports to go into lawn mowers, or for cleaning paint brushes, was contaminated. Neither the Minister of Environment nor the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Beatty) have launched that kind of serious investigation. One can only wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether the Minister is suggesting that it is safe to burn fuel contaminated with PCBs.

There is not a toxicologist in the world who does not know that if you burn PCBs in a truck, car, lawn mower, or in anything else, you get incomplete combustion and you get furans and dioxins, which are far more lethal and far more dangerous than PCBs. One ten–thousandth of a gram of dioxin will kill you stone dead. To give you some idea of how small it is, Mr. Speaker, anyone who has vacuumed where there is a ray of sunlight coming through a window and sees those little particles of dust floating in that shaft of sunlight, one of those particles of dust weighs about 1/10,000 of a gram. That is how much dioxin there is coming out of the back end of a vehicle that is incompletely combusting PCBs. It is very, very minute quantities.

We have to ask, is the Minister satisfied that there is no PCB contaminated fuel in any Canadian home? This is the time of year when a lot of oil companies go around and top up people's tanks.

Those tanks then sit in a lot of basements and a lot of warm areas, in many cases improperly ventilated, almost always in the lower portion of a home. Why is the Government not doing at least some spot checks to find out? We heard from Mr. Volpe on CBC this morning that there may be nine million litres, not just of fuel, but nine million litres of contamination in terms of various toxic wastes that may be sitting in Canadians' cars, trucks, homes and fuel tanks at various gas stations and so on. Why is it not being located? Why are those people who are most likely to handle it not being advised of the health dangers that they face if they are pumping gas all day long and getting gasoline and diesel on their hands that may be highly contaminated, and not just with PCBs. I will come to the other toxics in a moment.

The Minister of the Environment then suggests that the April 11 to April 13 blitz was prompted by the environmentalist Daniel Green's warning. Only one Environment Canada inspector was on site. There were no inspectors to ensure compliance with the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, the keystone piece of legislation for which the Minister is responsible in this matter. Why are there so few environmental inspectors, Mr. Speaker? There are 77 for the whole of Canada responsible under the Canadian Environmental Protection Act. The Budget promises 56 more but we have heard of positions promised before.

Currently, even the City of Ottawa has almost as many people making sure there are no parking violations as the federal Government has to check for environmental infractions in the whole country. There are 66 people who hand out parking tickets just in the City of Ottawa.

We know now that this extremely serious criminal conspiracy has been going on for at least four years. As I mentioned in my opening remarks, Environment Canada has known about poisoned fuel being in Canada since 1985.

What about British Columbia? We have not heard from the Government side. No statement has been released to assure British Columbians about toxic fuel that is apparently coming from California into British Columbia. We have heard no statement from Ministers or from Departments about the Province of Alberta, which apparently has toxic contaminated and poisoned fuel coming from the State of Idaho into Alberta.

We know that in Québec and Ontario it has been coming principally from the Buffalo area, in the State of New York. We know that for the last five months there has been a co-ordinating police strike force in Buffalo investigating what has been going on there.

We hear from the Minister responsible for Revenue Canada in his statement to the House on privilege yesterday morning, that all that there had been as far as he is aware was the September 11, 1987 meeting in Toronto. When the FBI has the Canadian border staked out, wanting to see what is going on, they know with certainty there is an interstate movement of poison fuel. We also know that the investigation was focusing on bootlegged fuel coming into Canada, which was Ontario's apparent chief concern. They were trying to capture those provincial taxes, hundreds of millions of dollars per year over the last four or five years. It goes beyond credibility to think that neither the FBI nor anyone from the co-ordinated strike force, nor anyone from any of the state authorities, nor anyone from the state tax authorities would have come to anyone at any of those Canadian border crossings and said: "Look, you should watch out. We know there is the interstate transfer of poisoned fuel. You should be watching out for it".

I think that defies credulity, Mr. Speaker, and I think that goes to the heart of the problem that Canadians are having with the position being taken by the Government that it simply did not know until Monday. We know Environment Canada knew in 1985. We know that Revenue Canada knew since 1987. We know the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Martin) knew since the March meeting in Switzerland.

How do we deal with it, Mr. Speaker? It is an extremely serious matter. I think going back and forth over the history of the matter is helpful, but there are an awful lot of Canadians who want to know how the Government should deal with this kind of an extremely serious situation.

A few months ago, the Minister of Environment, new to his portfolio, responded to the concerns of residents of Québec and Ontario regarding the 170,000 tonnes of toxic and hazardous waste being trucked into the two provinces from the United States, and indicated that legislative steps were going to be taken to stop the flow of toxic and hazardous wastes from the U.S. into Canada. The Department of Environment has known for many months that large quantities of toxic and hazardous wastes were coming from the United States. Why were they coming? The reason for that is very obvious.

According to Congressman Synor, who has been on television lately, 250 million tonnes of toxic and hazardous waste were produced last year in the United States. Their landfills are filling very quickly. What has happened is that the cost for storage of contaminated materials at landfills has increased massively.

• (1050)

For example, we know that it costs $1,000 to take a 45 gallon drum of PCBs to a proper land-fill. The cost for dumping at all regular dumps in the northeastern interior of the United States has gone from $10 a tonne to $25 a tonne. Many of our land-fills and dumps in Canada are not properly engineered, not properly regulated and many of them do not even have anyone at a gate. One can simply drive in with a truck and dump whatever one likes, without permit, licence or anything.

The Minister of the Environment will know that a former Minister of the Environment, John Roberts, advised Canadians some years ago that about 80 per cent of toxic and hazardous waste produced in Canada is either improperly or illegally dumped. It is dumped on farmers' fields, in creeks, in unlicensed and unregulated land-fills.

As the toxic and hazardous waste problem in the United States reaches crisis proportions, where are they looking to get rid of the materials? Why have mob figures now come to be attached to the whole issue of contaminated waste in the United States? The reason is obvious. The producers would have to pay $1,000 to have a barrel of PCBs properly disposed of, to be eventually incinerated or sealed in a land-fill. The mob buys it. They do not take it to a secure proper land-fill, they dump it into empty tankers. We know this from the work that has already been done by police forces and investigators in the United States. They then go to a virgin fuel filling station and fill the rest of the tanker with virgin fuel, either diesel, gasoline or home-heating fuel, then truck it into Canada.

We know that there was only one fuel test in the past year at Canada's border. It would be obvious to any of those criminal conspirators that one of the best places to get rid of the stuff is not through an interstate transfer where they could get caught and be chased by the FBI in the United States, but to bring it to the nearest neighbour, Canada, and sell it at bargain basement prices, avoiding taxes. But it puts Canadian health seriously at risk.

The Minister of the Environment knows how serious the problem of contaminants has become in Canada. Canadians from coast to coast are aware that one of the great symbols of Canada, the polar bear, is now at risk from PCB contamination. The young males now walking in the Arctic may be the last breeding population of polar bears left in the Arctic. The Minister of the Environment knows the mobility of a lot of those toxic contaminants. They can move through the atmosphere and then, like many of the toxic and hazardous materials, bio-accumulate and bio-magnify. That means that the very small levels of lindane, PCBs and other contaminants moving through the atmosphere, go into the Arctic because of the climatic conditions there, into the marine system and build up in the shrimp and so on. They build up in the seals. We know that there are very high levels of PCBs in the milk of Inuit mothers.

One would have thought that the sanctity and purity of Canada's Arctic was still there. Canadians are now just awakening to the fact that even our northern most pristine environments are becoming contaminated by the unregulated and illegal dumping and handling of toxic and hazardous materials.

We must deal with the issue as though we are on ground zero. Many people around the planet recognize that this whole issue of contaminates are just as risky for humanity as is the potential of nuclear war and nuclear winter. The insidious movement of toxic, hazardous and contaminated materials into our environment, into our wildlife, into food systems and into our air is ending up back in our bodies. It is setting in play genetic time bombs for our future. We cannot predict how great or serious the cancer risk will be. We know that PCBs cause nerve damage, brain damage and serious skin disorders, but the genetic damage that could be happening in this country right now in relation to these contaminants could be extremely high.

If the mob is buying up drums of PCBs to save producers $1,000 a barrel, it is very likely, if not without doubt, picking up the more dangerous and higher contaminants and doing exactly the same thing with them. That is ground zero.

What about zero tolerance? Why has the Minister of the Environment not done exactly the same thing as one would expect with the drug epidemic? The United States went to zero tolerance in relation to those crossing the border with drugs in their vehicles. Now, in the era of deregulation, when the federal Government has direct responsibility for international truck traffic and interprovincial truck traffic, we see the dawn of deregulation.

How many trucks are coming in with contaminated fuel in their gas tanks? How many tankers are coming in with contaminated fuel in the tanks? There are 170,000 tonnes of licensed toxic and hazardous waste coming from the United States, but we do not even know where it goes once it comes into Canada. We must move precipitously to zero tolerance for the importation of toxic and hazardous materials, whether it is in poison fuels, in trucks or anything else.

We must get our own house in order in terms of toxic and hazardous waste. We have not even dealt with the 2,300 PCB sites here in Canada that require incineration. We have not even dealt with the problem at home, in our Territories or provinces, yet there is this avalanche of hazardous and toxic materials coming from the United States.

The United States must also go to zero tolerance. There is information that Canada has also been shipping poison fuel from Canada back into the United States.

The question of zero discharge is something the Minister of the Environment must adopt as his foremost policy. The Minister has recognized the need to do it in terms of pulp mill effluent, in terms of organo chlorines, dioxins and so on. The Minister must deal seriously with the issue of toxic and hazardous waste by making it clear that toxic and hazardous waste produced at any mill site or industrial site anywhere in Canada stays on the mill site until there is an appropriate means of properly disposing of it. Once those toxic and hazardous wastes leave the site, it opens the door to the criminal conspiracies we are now investigating and the U.S. Congress is investigating. Once the waste is out there, the companies that are set up look for the cheapest possible way to get rid of those materials.

Not too long ago I was at the Love Canal with some Members of the House. The New York public interest group, on its way to the Love Canal to show it to the parliamentary committee, passed the Hudson River, which had been on fire. That is how much toxic and hazardous material is being dumped into some waterways in the United States. Someone driving over a bridge threw a cigarette into the Hudson River and, because there was so much toxic and contaminated waste on the surface of the river, it caught fire.

There is a serious crisis with toxic and hazardous waste. Polar bears all over Canada are facing contamination. The fishery in Prince Rupert harbour is closed because of dioxin contamination. The shellfish, prawns and shrimp cannot even be taken out of what everyone assumes is a pristine marine environment.

There must be zero discharge. The Minister of the Environment has an absolute responsibility to move immediately to require zero discharge and the maintenance of those toxic and hazardous wastes on site. When those wastes leave the site we know, according to a former Minister of the Environment, that 80 per cent of the toxic and hazardous waste created in Canada is either illegally or improperly disposed of.

Yesterday the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Beatty) said it was fear mongering to talk about the possible health implications of having potentially millions of gallons of toxic and hazardous materials in fuel for cars, lawn mowers, trucks, homes and so on. The Government spent $2.7 million trying to convince Canadians about the impact of the national debt. It is very helpful for the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to find $2.7 million for that purpose, but what kind of Government would not take the same steps to publish a health alert to advise Canadians of how best to avoid coming into direct contact with toxic and hazardous materials. We know that in 1985 the Minister of the Environment knew there was PCB contaminated poison fuel in Canada. The Government knew about it four years ago. Steps have been missed all the way along.

We must have zero tolerance. We must face up to the fact that we are at ground zero. We must deal with this issue with a sense of urgency. That is the only way to protect the health of Canadians now and in the future.

FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

OPENING OF CDA'S ATLANTA OFFICE

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, I was proud to join with Mr. Vince DeVita, President of CDA Industries, in opening CDA's Atlanta marketing office. The office will further the substantial contacts CDA has already made in the U.S. as a result of the Free Trade Agreement.

Vince DeVita and CDA Industries represent the true spirit of Canadian entrepreneurial talent. Starting with virtually nothing 30 years ago, Mr. DeVita has created the largest display advertising company in Canada employing close to 130 in Scarborough, and many more in his plant in Mississauga. Thanks to the Free Trade Agreement, CDA is already negotiating new American contracts which will expand its operations in Scarborough.

I salute Vince DeVita and CDA as they continue to demonstrate that free enterprise and free trade works.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUPPORT FOR DEMOCRACY IN PANAMA

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, General Manuel Noriega of Panama, a criminal on several counts, has denied the people of Panama the basic democratic right to bring to power their choice of Government. Meanwhile, our Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) makes a feeble public statement pertaining to "election fraud" and a "volatile situation" in Panama.

Canada is losing all credibility nationally and internationally as an independent, caring, peace-promoting nation. Through unconscionable budget cut-backs in official development assistance we are blindly telling the starving to tighten their non-existent belts because we have had a drought. Our budget cut-backs will have the direct effect of causing thousands of human beings to die. Are we now going to passively watch a fragile democracy in Panama die too?

Panamanians and Latin American countries want a diplomatic solution, not a U.S. military solution to the current impasse in Panama.

The people of Panama deserve more than a whimper from Canada. I implore the Secretary of State for External Affairs to take action, to take a strong independent Canadian stand today supporting the voice of Panamanians and other Latin American countries to promote democracy and peace through non-military intervention in Panama.

TRANSPORT

TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS GOODS—INSPECTION OF TRUCKS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden): Mr. Speaker, international and inter-provincial trucking are areas of federal jurisdiction. In light of that fact and in light of recent revelations about the transborder shipping of hazardous wastes and dangerous goods, and since the provinces have shown themselves unable or unwilling to inspect adequately inter-provincial and international trucking, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) must immediately carry out his responsibility and implement a program of full inspections of trucks carrying dangerous goods across international and provincial boundaries.

A truck carrying dangerous goods crossing an international or provincial boundary should be inspected to determine whether or not it meets safety and maintenance standards, and to ensure that all federal and provincial taxes have been paid. It should also undergo direct inspection as to the nature of the cargo, whether properly contained and loaded, and a determination as to whether or not the cargo is contaminated with toxic wastes.

Instead of that, we have chaos—13 jurisdictions all dabbling in the situation. There is no standard set of guidelines, rules and regulations. There are no uniform standards. Instead, we have incompetence and negligence which are the order of the day for the Government and the respective Ministers responsible.

NATIONAL HEALTH WEEK

TRIBUTE TO HEALTH WORKERS

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, we are celebrating today throughout the country Canada Health Day.

It is in recognition of the skills and dedication of thousands of volunteers and health care professionals who contribute to the high quality of health care in Canada, consequently making of the Canadian health care system one of the best in the world.

This year's theme is about the involvement of volunteers into health promotion.

Therefore I invite all Canadians to celebrate this annual event sponsored jointly by the Canadian Hospital Association and the Canadian Public Health Association.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate both those associations for taking the initiative of holding such an event.

FORESTRY

CELEBRATION OF NATIONAL FOREST WEEK—NAMING OF NACKAWIC, NEW BRUNSWICK AS NATIONAL FOREST CAPITAL IN 1991.

Mr. Greg Thompson (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I am very honoured today to rise in the House to commemorate National Forest Week.

Today, New Brunswick ranks second only to British Columbia in terms of the importance of forestry to the province's economy. Indeed, the forest industry is one of the pillars of New Brunswick's economy, accounting for over $1 billion in exports and 8 per cent of the province's Gross Domestic Product.

New Brunswick was recently honoured, as was my riding, when Nackawic, New Brunswick, was chosen to be the national forest capital in 1991. I believe this designation capsulizes the historic and continuing importance of the forest industry in my province.

NATIONAL POLICE WEEK

SPONSORSHIP OF SPECIAL OLYMPICS BY ASSOCIATION OF CHIEFS OF POLICE

Mr. Bob Kilger (Stormont—Dundas): Mr. Speaker, next week will be National Police Week across Canada. I would like to take this opportunity to offer my thanks, as I know every Member of the House would do likewise, to the police officers across our country who serve the public so well.

An example of this service is the many officers who participate in fund-raising activities for the Special Olympics. Last year, 3,200 police officers donated their time and efforts to raising close to $400,000 for the Special Olympics. This project, sponsored by the Association of Chiefs of Police, has been in existence for three years now. This year's goal is three-quarters of a million dollars.

On behalf of this House I would like to offer our sincere appreciation and thanks to those officers across Canada who have given selflessly of themselves to assist the Special Olympics.

I would also like to thank the members of police forces throughout our country for the excellent service they provide within our communities.

FORESTRY

DEVASTATION CAUSED BY FOREST FIRES

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Portage—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, two years ago almost to the day, I made a statement in this House regarding the devastation caused by forest fires in western Canada which were raging out of control. As I speak it is happening all over again.

As we celebrate Manitoba Day today, hundreds of residents of Jackhead, Fisher River, Ashern, Seymourville, Manigotagan, and Hollow Water have been evacuated. Dozens of homes have been destroyed.

Today, present weather conditions being hot and windy, the situation begs our deepest concern and consideration.

My discussion last night with the provincial Minister of Natural Resources, Harry Enns, outlined the real tragedy of this devastation. Almost all the fires have been started by careless individuals.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PEACE PROCESS IN GUATEMALA—PROTECTION OF CANADIAN CITIZENS

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago four members of the Guatemalan Government in exile, the RUOG, entered Guatemala to participate in the peace process. They were accompanied by a number of Canadians.

In the last two days there have been a number of death threats made against this delegation, both in Guatemala and in Canada. I raised this matter with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) two weeks ago. I have been unable to confirm whether or not he has been able to act on my request that he speak to the Guatemalan Government about this concern.

In view of these death threats I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs to act today to notify the Guatemalan Government that we in Canada hold that Government accountable for the protection of Canadian citizens in Guatemala participating in this peace process.

DROUGHT IN THE WEST—MANAGEMENT OF WATER RESOURCES

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, once again parts of the West, primarily in the south, show indications that we may have to endure another summer of incredible drought. Surface moisture at this time is quite adequate but the subsurface moisture is very low.

Yesterday and the day before we had incredibly hot winds. However, it is also true that there is sufficient water, if managed properly.

Well over 50 per cent of the snowfall and the rain is lost in the spring runoff. It is lost for irrigation systems, fishing, and water systems for towns.

With properly built dams this water can produce food, not only for Canada but for the entire world. They can also provide water for the many towns and villages in western Canada.

The point is that irrigation dams are good investments. They can enrich the dry areas of Canada and, indeed, the world.

ENVIRONMENT

IMPORTATION OF TAINTED FUELS

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland—St. Catharines—Thorold): Mr. Speaker, two days ago the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) was quoted in The Globe and Mail as saying that the "environment is a new preoccupation", supposedly for the Government. I welcome him into the real world.

In view of the fact that these tainted fuels have been coming into our country, and in view of the fact that two of the busiest crossings are in the Niagara Peninsula, where I represent an area, in Niagara Falls and in Fort Erie, it is incumbent upon the Government to take its responsibilities as a spokesman between two nations, Canada and the United States, and it should have done something long before now about the tainted fuel.

Like thousands of Canadians, I was shocked to learn that tainted fuels have entered Canada and have been sold to unsuspecting patrons. If an investigation proves that gasoline containing hazardous waste and cancer-causing PCBs has been knowingly sold by operators, because they are the last end before people get hold of it to use, they should be charged with criminal negligence and punished to the greatest extent of the law.

MOTHER'S DAY

TRIBUTE TO ALL CANADIAN MOTHERS

Mrs. Marie Gibeau (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, Sunday, May 14, is Mothers' Day. I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to all Canadian mothers, especially mine and those of my constituents in Montreal North—Bourassa. I also wish a happy Mothers' Day to all nuns and teachers, in fact to all those women who play a maternal role by giving birth to children, by feeding them and by helping them grow mentally as well as physically.

We know that family is the basis of our society and that the mother is the core of the family. We have to thank those women who, through their unconditional dedication, make sure the values we hold as a nation are passed on to our children.

To all Canadian mothers, thank you and happy Mothers' Day!

COMMEMORATION OF THE BIRTH OF FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE

NURSES' WEEK IN CANADA—TRIBUTE TO NURSING PROFESSION

Mr. Raymond Skelly (North Island—Powell River): Mr. Speaker, today is the anniversary of the birth of Florence Nightingale, and it is also Nurses' Week in Canada.

I invite Members of the House to pay tribute to the service provided to Canadians by Canada's more than 200,000 professional nurses.

I would also invite my colleagues to respond quickly to the crisis in nursing in Canada today. There are thousands of vacant nursing positions in Canada that cannot be filled. This causes serious problems in health care delivery. Nursing is a strenuous and demanding profession, and people are leaving it because of low wages, unacceptable working conditions, and a lack of opportunity to provide effective, professional input into the delivery of health care.

The Government, and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Beatty), must respond quickly to the nursing crisis, providing more resources to improve salaries, working conditions, and provide nurses with an opportunity to share as team members in the health care decision-making process.

Perhaps the most important message from nurses to Canadians today is that we spend too much of the $46.2 billion in the health care budget treating sick people rather than keeping healthy people healthy.

NATO

NUCLEAR ARMS REDUCTION IN EUROPE

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, the possibility of ending the cold war and achieving nuclear disarmament was never greater than it is today. As the Soviet Union makes important proposals for arms reductions with the withdrawal of 500 tactical warheads in Eastern Europe this year, and a further offer to pull out all nuclear arms by 1991, if this is matched by the United States, now is the time for Canada to take a strong stand on this crucial issue.

Canada should join with those NATO allies that favour a nuclear-free future by urging the reduction of short-range missiles in the West.

West Germany has been asking for such steps as the weapons sit on its soil. Certain NATO allies clearly see that this move will bring us closer to an end to the nuclear arms race. The cold war can end and it is imperative that Canada, long recognized as a peace-keeping nation, be instrumental in its demise.

Nuclear weapons could destroy this planet and 800 million lives in 12 hours. Let us not miss this chance to guarantee our survival and banish these weapons from Europe forever.

AGRICULTURE

EXPORTS OF PORK TO JAPAN

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, 20 years ago Canadian pork was first exported to Japan. In recognition of this important event, the Canadian Meat Council has this day held a special seminar in Tokyo for several hundred key Japanese importers and senior government officials. Agriculture Canada is financially supporting this important industry initiative.

The purpose of the seminar is to show Japan that the Canadian pork industry produces a quality product that is second to none, and that the industry is committed to providing its Japanese customers with the consistent supply of pork that meets their demanding specifications.

Japan is an important market for Canada's agri-food products. Last year our exports of those products to Japan totalled almost $1.5 billion. Pork exports accounted for $130 million of this amount.

The Canadian Meat Council and this country's pork industry recognize that there is a potential for even greater sales to this lucrative market. The Canadian Government applauds this initiative and we are pleased to be able to support their efforts through Agriculture Canada and the Department of External Affairs.

DANGEROUS PRODUCTS

SHIPMENT OF TOXIC FUELS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, let me briefly review the events of the environmental situation this week in Canada.

The Minister of the Environment told the House that he knew nothing about the transportation of toxic waste gas into this country from the United States until Monday. The Minister of State for Transport heard allegations in March and claims she took action. The Minister of National Revenue states that he knew nothing about the shipment of toxic fuels until this week. The Minister of Public Works states that he was at a meeting on January 7, 1987, while he was still Revenue Minister, and that meeting was about the shipment of toxic fuels, but he denies that any allegations were made. The Solicitor General says that he only heard about it this week. The Minister of Health knows absolutely nothing about it, but in his usual style claims he is on top of the issue.

I ask the Deputy Prime Minister, will the Prime Minister haul in this group of bumbling, incompetent Ministers, get them together, get their story together, and produce a straightforward version for Canadians that we can have in a definitive fashion about who knew what, when, why, and where about this toxic mess?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, this is a very strange business.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That's for sure.

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): We all know that the Leader of the Opposition was a prestigious lawyer and that he made magnificent performances before courts of law because he knew then what were the rules of evidence. Now, on the statement of Mr. Conrad, he is basing the fact that a Minister of the Crown would have been made aware of advance allegations of the commerce of tainted fuel from the United States to Canada.

First, the Hon. Member knows perfectly well that no mention at all was made in the statement about trans-boundary movement from the United States to Canada of such tainted fuel. It was only about tainted fuel within the states.

Second, if Mr. Conrad was so preoccupied with the question to the point of raising it during such a meeting with the Minister, why did he not raise it five months later when he appeared before the Finance Committee and where he could express his preoccupation with the commerce of fuel? He did not raise the question then. That was the place to do it, and he did not do it.

MINISTERIAL NEGLIGENCE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, what we have here is contagious Ministerial negligence. We have a seeping incompetence. We have Ministers who do not talk to each other.

I recognize, in turn, that the Hon. Minister was a leading counsel in Quebec and in Chicoutimi, le grand royaume du Saguenay.

What we are dealing with here is the confused evidence of Ministers in the House. I suggest to the Prime Minister that he produce a coherent story.

Frankly, since the Minister questions the statement of one of the witnesses, I think Canadians are more inclined to believe the statements of one of Canada's leading environmentalists, and the statements of the head of one of Canada's leading petroleum associations, than they are to believe the confused denials of Ministers in the House.

At the time the Prime Minister appointed this Minister of the Environment, he said he was going to be a czar of the environment. He was going to co-ordinate all the Departments on environmental policy. He was going to bring Ministers together. He was going to make the environment the number one priority.

I ask the Deputy Prime Minister when—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, this is ridiculous.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Go talk to the PLO or something.

Mr. Andre: Does anybody here know Beauchesne's?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —will he or the Prime Minister refer this whole toxic mess to a parliamentary committee in order that we can have a full public inquiry?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition is more interested in engaging in political rhetoric rather than getting to the bottom of the issue.

• (1120)

What has been done is that the Minister of the Environment, the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources have this morning had a number of meetings with their provincial counterparts. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has held several meetings with the industry to work out a comprehensive plan to deal with this very specific issue. At an appropriate time, a comprehensive action plan will, in fact, be presented. It may be later this day.

What is important is to take action to get to the bottom of this issue to try to resolve it, rather than trace what might have been and who might have said what when.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): If you had had competent Ministers, that would have been right.

Mr. Mazankowski: The Hon. Member says that this thing should be referred to a Parliamentary committee. He has always chastized the Government for its failure to deal effectively in a Parliamentary sense with these kinds of issues. I remind him that under Parliamentary reform the committee of the Environment or any other standing committee, if it so desires, can seize the issue and if the Standing Committee on the Environment would so desire to study the issue in full detail, I am sure it would have the full support of the Government, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I think we have brought the Deputy Prime Minister some way here. If he would just add the phrase, "not only the full support of the Government, but to be referred specifically to the committee on the environment", then we would be very satisfied.

REQUEST THAT MATTER BE REFERRED TO ENVIRONMENT COMMITTEE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has the largest Cabinet

An Hon. Member: Careful now!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Ministers are somewhat touchy and disorganized this morning, particularly the Secretary of State for External Affairs who always wants to be the Speaker of the House. There are limits.

The Prime Minister has the largest Cabinet in the history of this country. Is that why his Ministers cannot even talk to one another? Is the Cabinet so overtaken by the events that Ministers no longer speak to public servants? Is it so busy that Ministers no longer know which way to turn with respect to the scandal in environmental and health matters which has now lasted over two years?

Mr. Speaker, since the Ministers are obviously more concerned about saving their own hides than they are about protecting public health, can the Deputy Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: The question, please.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Can the Deputy Prime Minister now assure us that he will try to convince the Prime Minister that the Government should refer to the environment committee the whole question of this scandal concerning the environment and the toxic products that are have been trucked into Canada?

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it seems quite obvious from the comments of the Leader of the Opposition that his Party is not interested in seizing the initiative to have this matter brought before the Parliamentary committee.

If the Opposition is not prepared to seize this initiative, I can tell the Hon. Member that the Government will. Of course we will refer this matter to the committee, much, I am sure, to the disappointment of the Right Hon. Member.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I like it. Thank you.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the reference has already been made to the Committee on Transport but obviously the Minister of Transport has not informed the Deputy Prime Minister of that.

An Hon. Member: Why was your leader asking for it then?

TRANSPORTATION OF CONTAMINATED MATERIAL IN THE UNITED STATES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): My question is for the current Minister of National Revenue, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday in the House the current Minister of National Revenue stated for the record, and I believe he believes himself to be an honourable Member, that:

> I am further advised that during the discussions on fuel import fraud, which took place at the time, a reference was made to the transport of contaminated material between states in the United States.

I would ask the Minister to review the following:

> At no time was there any allegation made about toxic materials being placed in fuels for export to Canada.

Does the Minister stand by that statement? And I ask him, before he lets the House know whether he has reviewed that statement with people who were at the meeting, including Ken Lowry, Sheldon Kates, Stanley Horvath, Mr. Hart, and from the Internal Revenue Service of the United States, Ken Christoff?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Yes, as I said yesterday, Mr. Speaker, our officials spoke to all seven of the officials who attended that meeting some 18 or 19 months ago. I can confirm that the discussion from the informant was a reference to the possibility of contaminated fuels being shipped trans-border within the United States. When I say trans-border, that is to say between one state and another state, and that no evidence and no suggestion of contaminated fuel coming into Canada was made by the informer or by anybody else.

I was surprised to note the Hon. Member for Hamilton East in this morning's debate stated and quoted the informant, to whom she claims she spoke, who said, as she said, "who offered to supply them"—that is to say Revenue officials—"with the criminal nature of toxic products being put into waste in 1987". That is exactly the same information we have received, namely, toxic waste being put into fuel in the United States for shipments within the United States. But no, no evidence then or since has come to this Government or to any of our Ministers. When the Leader of the Opposition says there is confusion here, I can tell him that there is nothing but consistency here and we have acted properly and straightforwardly from the very beginning.

TRANS-BORDER SHIPMENT OF CONTAMINATED FUELS INTO CANADA

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I spoke once more to the informant this morning, and again the informant, who was at the meeting, stated—

An Hon. Member: What is his name?

Ms. Copps: Where else would I find out who participated in the meeting? Ken Christoff, Ken Lowry, Mr. Hart from Canada Customs, Sheldon Kates and Stanley Horvath.

The informant stated categorically that the reason he was there and the reason he was brought there by the RCMP was so that he could tell this group about the trans-border transportation of PCBs coming into Canada from the United States, specifically PCB-laced fuels, and that the Government refused his offer to continue to provide them with information on this very serious matter. The Government ignored the whole thing.

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): That, Mr. Speaker—

An Hon. Member: Somebody is lying.

Mr. Jelinek: —is absolutely not true.

Ms. Copps: You were there.

Mr. Jelinek: This informant, who at that time was serving a 15-year prison term for theft—

Mr. Beatty: Sheila's source of information.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jelinek: —according to the seven Revenue people who were there, at no time made any reference to the possibility of toxic waste coming into Canada in fuels.

Mr. Beatty: Guess which one Sheila believes though?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: No way.

An Hon. Member: This is ridiculous.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jelinek: This is a serious matter and there is nothing but catcalls from across the way, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Skeena.

ENVIRONMENT

POISONED FUELS FOUND IN ALBERTA IN 1985

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of the Environment. I am sure by now he is aware that Turbo Resources of Alberta discovered poisoned fuel containing 6,000 parts per million PCBs in 1985. That was reported directly to Bruce Thompson of Environment Canada.

Can the Minister tell Canadians today why no federal action was taken concerning the finding of that poisoned fuel in Alberta?

[Translation]

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the information the Government obtained is known. I personally had my officials check the Department's files for recent years up to today. All information I have obtained so far shows that our Department never had any information about the shipment of PCB-tainted petroleum products from the United States to Canada. We only had specific allegations in Monday morning's Globe and Mail. But since then, we have acted quickly and diligently.

This morning, together with my colleague from Health and Welfare Canada and our provincial Environment colleagues from Ontario and Québec, we announced a four-point plan that will take effect in the coming days, in the next few hours. This plan first involves a central investigation coordinated by the RCMP with the full integrated cooperation of the police forces in Québec and Ontario, the FBI, the U.S. EPA and the enforcement officials of our departments.

In addition, I announced that we would close nearly a hundred entry points for American petroleum on the Canadian border, to concentrate our resources at some fifty entry points only. Mr. Speaker, one need only look at what we have done to see that the results are very good.

Furthermore, I would like to add one final thing—

• (1130)

[English]

TESTING OF IMPORTED FUELS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, a few months ago when there was no evidence of poisoned grapes or produce from Chile being on the shelves in Canada, all of those products were removed from the shelves and the products that were en route to Canada were blocked from coming here. Since serious matters of public health cannot be adequately aired either during Question Period or in debate on the floor of the House of Commons, and since the Minister is now aware that there is substantiated evidence that poisoned fuel from California has gone into British Columbia, that poisoned fuel from Idaho has gone into Alberta and that poisoned fuel from Buffalo, New York has gone into Québec and Ontario, does the Minister not believe, looking back at what the Minister of National Health and Welfare did in relation to potentially poisoned products from Chile, that every transport or shipment of fuels from the United States should be tested at this time and that those locations within Canada that potentially have poisoned fuel should be tested now?

[Translation]

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, in summary, that is the plan we announced this morning, with a few variations. As everyone knows, we take very seriously the allegations that have been going around since Monday morning. Nevertheless, we must say, we must in truth tell the House that all the laboratory results that we have obtained since yesterday from the samples taken in April in Ontario as part of the surprise operation that was completely unannounced and the results from the analyses of samples we took ourselves the day before yesterday show no PCBs. This does not mean that none will turn up eventually. But so far, nothing has yet been found, despite very many inspections. But we shall continue to be vigilant.

[English]

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION UNDER ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION ACT

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister of the Environment is so sure of what he has been saying since Monday, will he trigger an inquiry under a piece of legislation for which he is responsible, the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, and investigate whether Ministers of the Crown, officials of the Government of Canada, transporters, wholesalers and retailers have complied with Sections 36 and 24 of the Canadian Environmental Protection Act? The Minister is directly responsible for that. Will he trigger such an investigation?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to announce that I hope to be able to issue today an interim order which will add 97 waste types to the list of substances forbidden in Canada under CEPA.

EXPOSURE TO CONTAMINATED FUELS

Ms. Albina Guarnieri (Mississauga East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Two days ago, the Minister was asked what steps his ministry had taken to monitor the health risk to Canadians from illegal shipments of PCB contaminated fuel. The Minister told the House that his ministry is monitoring vegetables and water plants.

We all know that the greatest risk to Canadians is through direct inhalation of fumes from the combustion of these toxic substances. When will the Minister implement a program to screen individuals in industries of greatest exposure to these fumes in order to assess the full degree of contamination of these workers?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I apologize to the Hon. Member for introducing facts into this discussion. It is probably appropriate to point out that to date, with all of the testing that has been done, both by the Government of Ontario and by the Government of Canada, no evidence has as yet been found of PCBs being put into fuel oil or into gasoline. Notwithstanding that fact, both the Ministry of the Environment in Ontario and the Federal Ministry do test from time to time the food supply or the water supply to ensure that there is no generalized threat. We have found no instance, either federally or provincially, of changes in PCB levels which would be of concern either in the food supply or the water supply in Ontario.

The other thing we have done is indicate that if any evidence does turn up as a result of the work being done by my colleague, the Minister of the Environment, or by the work being done by the Government of Ontario to suggest that fuels laden with PCBs have in fact been burned, we will do precisely that and will do follow-up tests. However, it makes sense to me to find out whether in fact this has taken place in the first place, and second, if it has, who will be doing it.

Ms. Guarnieri: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister will only act when he finds PCBs in three Chilean grapes.

HEALTH EFFECTS ON CONSTRUCTION WORKERS

Ms. Albina Guarnieri (Mississauga East): Mr. Speaker, knowing that small construction sites are the most prone to using fuel from small independent sources and given that unsuspecting drivers and construction workers at these sites have been handling and burning dangerous PCB contaminated fuels, when will the Minister take responsibility for the health of these workers, which is no laughing matter? When will he stop hiding behind his colleagues on the front bench and take the lead in acting to protect the health of these Canadians?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I will step out in front of my colleagues on the front bench to point something out to the Hon. Member. It would be helpful if, before she reads her supplementary question, she listened to the response to the first question. The response to the first question pointed out that notwithstanding all of the investigations by the Government of Ontario and the federal Government to date, no evidence has been found to substantiate her allegation that such PCB laden fuels have been burned. Perhaps she could listen to the responses, learn from them and not make irresponsible allegations.

FISHERIES

CLOSURE OF FISH PLANTS—QUOTAS

Mrs. Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. In his absence, I will direct it to the Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, whoever the Acting Minister is, because the Prime Minister is not here.

One of the basic principles in the groundfish management plan of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is the following:

> Allocation of fishery resources will be on the basis of equity taking into account adjacency to the resource, the relative dependence of coastal communities and various fleet sectors upon a given resource, economic efficiency and fleet mobility.

I am sure that this has been the policy of the Department of Fisheries for many years. In light of Clearwater and now National Sea Products each closing down two Nova Scotia fishing communities, Lockeport and Port Mouton, communities which have always had fish landed at the wharves to provide the people with a living, will the Minister either reallocate the boats which have historically fished out of these communities or reallocate part of the fish quotas given to the companies, to the communities and therefore ensure the economic survival of the people of these communities?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the quotas that are allocated are allocated to enterprises. They are enterprise allocations. They are not quotas allocated to communities or to plants. They are allocated to enterprises and that is what has been done in this case in a fair and equitable manner.

The problem is that the quota losses that were suffered by National Sea Products in the last five years have been greater in waters off Nova Scotia and therefore the impact on employment is more severe in Nova Scotia. In the case of Lockeport, there was 25,000 tonnes of quota in the general area of Lockeport in 1982. Today, there is only about 1,400 tonnes of quota in waters adjacent to Lockeport. The most severe decrease in quotas, I think a decrease of four-fifths, has occurred in the South Nova area.

The problem is that there has been a severe loss of fish resources off South West Nova in the last several years due to a number of reasons including over-fishing and under-reporting of catches in a deplorable manner by certain people in that area, and the Department of Fisheries and others have been trying to correct that. That is one of the reasons for this problem—

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): Answer my question.

Mr. Crosbie: I think I have answered your question. If I have not, ask it again.

• (1140)

CAPE NORTH FACTORY FREEZER TRAWLER

Mrs. Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has not answered the question. Yesterday he was quoted in the papers as saying that he is trying to find options. I gave him an option for these communities. These communities historically have lived by the sea. There is nothing else. They had fish landed there. The boats that were taken away by Clearwater and National are the livelihood of these communities. My supplementary, Mr. Speaker, and the Minister might listen to it for one of his options, is in view of the fact that the Cape North, our National Sea's freezer factory ship, that this Government gave a licence to, along with others, catches fish 20 miles within the coastline of these communities, Lockeport and Port Mouton, and the fishermen in these communities cannot go fishing during the summer months, will the Minister now direct National Sea to send its fleet to fish underutilized species as it was supposed to do when it was given its freezer factory licence? This would allow fish that is within 20 miles of the coast to be caught by this freezer factory ship to be fished and processed by the people on shore in these communities.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the factory-freezer trawler, Cape North, was given a five-year experimental licence under an arrangement that expires in 1990. Of course, that arrangement will be reviewed then. But I can say that that vessel has the ability to fish quotas that National Sea has which cannot be caught and processed for economic or operational reasons by the wet fish fleet. It can fish in a more adverse environment than the majority of the wet fish fleet. At present they are fishing for red fish which they can process on board. In the fall the company is directing them to fish for cod and 2–GH and underutilized species which, if successful, will be very encouraging. So the vessel is not fishing for fish stocks that are suitable for processing in wet fish plants.

Mrs. Campbell: They are processing pollack there.

Mr. Crosbie: They are fishing for red fish. They are not fishing for species that can be processed in wet fish plants. Do I have to repeat it again, Mr. Speaker? What do we have to do to give the facts to this Opposition which does care about facts?

DANGEROUS PRODUCTS

STATEMENT BY MR. CONRAD

Mr. Garth Turner (Halton—Peel): Mr. Speaker, over the last few days we have heard some extremely serious allegations in this House about tainted fuel coming into this country. A lot of those allegations have come from Mr. Tim Conrad, executive director of the Canadian Petroleum Products Marketing Board. I would like to know if the Minister of National Revenue has had a chance to review those allegations. If so, would he inform this House as to their validity?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some confusion on Mr. Conrad's statements. Once he said that there was explicit mention of contaminated fuel in the discussions with my predecessor some years ago. This morning on Canada AM, referring to the same meeting, Mr. Conrad said and I quote:

> While the meeting focused primarily on tax evasion, so we didn't deal explicitly with the toxic contamination.

Further to that, on that same date of the meeting, January 7, 1987, Mr. Conrad sent a letter to Mr. MacKay, my predecessor, regarding strategy on tax evasion. Nowhere in that letter was there reference made to contaminated fuels. If Mr. Conrad was indeed concerned about contaminated fuels, surely he would have made mention of it either in a letter or a few months later in the committee hearings on waste disposal. There is no record anywhere, at any time of Mr. Conrad making any statements in respect of contaminated fuels.

THE BUDGET

OPPOSITION TO CLAW-BACK PROVISIONS

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Finance about the Budget's betrayal of old age pensioners and seniors in this country. The Minister has conceded that the claw-back provisions of the Budget are not fully indexed. This means that the number of older Canadians hit by the old age pension tax will double in the next 10 years. In fact, in 20 years, one in four seniors will have their old age pension cheques, which they have earned by their contribution to this country, taxed back.

My question is this: Four years ago, faced with the united opposition of seniors in this country to the Government's attack on old age pensions through deindexing, the Government backed down. Will the Minister tell this House, faced now with the united opposition of seniors across this country to his claw-back provisions, that the Government will back down from this onerous and obnoxious provision?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Let me comment on the Hon. Member's question. First, we are asking a wide range of Canadians, particularly those who are best able to bear the additional burden, to join with us in our attack on the debt and the deficit. If we can get this debt down, if we can get it under control, we are going to make for a better country, a healthier country for the children and the grandchildren of the people that the Hon. Member is talking about.

This particular measures affects 4.3 per cent of elderly Canadians. Less than 2 per cent will have the whole amount of their old age security recovered. It will be done through the tax system. The existing old age security is also subject to taxation. We are just changing the nature of the taxation of the program.

The Hon. Member is referring to the indexation of this. We have said quite clearly in the Budget papers that we will review this on an ongoing basis, as we have other elements of indexation in the tax system. As I have pointed out on a number of occasions previously in this House, we have made changes in the tax reform that affected the low-income thresholds that came into place in 1987.

REQUEST FOR WITHDRAWAL OF CLAW-BACK PROVISION

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has completely failed to ask wealthy corporations in this country to bear their share of the deficit. Yet he has asked pensioners in certain tax brackets to put 100 per cent of their old age pensions back into the Treasury of this country. If the Minister is going to deal fairly with seniors, he must look at the deindexing provisions of this Budget, and back away from this provision. I ask the Minister again not to talk about "might review" and not to question what he might do. It is going to be difficult for seniors in this country to have much confidence in the commitments made by this Government. Will he state to this House and to the seniors of this country that he is going to withdraw this provision from the Budget?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member refers to corporations. I refer him to the Budget papers. It is shown very specifically where we are increasing the tax burden on corporations. We have done so in tax reform and have done it again in this Budget. I am still waiting to hear any acknowledgement of this from the Hon. Member or anybody in his Party. Corporate tax revenues would increase by 7 per cent as a result of this Budget. The personal tax revenues, including the high-income surtax, will only increase by a little over 2 per cent. In tax reform, we increased the threshold at which elderly Canadians start to pay tax from $10,700 to $11,400 for singles and $16,900 to $19,000 for married couples over age 65. When he asks if I am going to say that we will review it, yes, we will review it on an ongoing basis. We have demonstrated from our actions in the past that when it is appropriate, we will act.

ENERGY

LAY-OFFS IN EAST COAST OIL INDUSTRY

Mr. George S. Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Mr. Speaker, yesterday we had lay-offs in the fishery in Newfoundland, and today it is Texaco, announcing its decision not to pursue its option to drill more wells. It is pulling out. Today, all drilling will stop off the coast of Newfoundland and 250 lay-off notices will be issued. This morning I spoke to representatives of Husky Oil and they told me that it was issuing lay-off notices to all its staff in Newfoundland. They are closing its offices. These lay-offs are like a nightmare that does not end. It goes on and on, and it is getting worse. I would like to ask the Minister of Energy, what does the Government of Canada have to say now to these hundreds of people who are receiving their lay-off notices today in the oil industry on the East Coast? How can the Government explain the fact that for the first time in 10 years not one drilling rig will be operating off the entire east coast of Canada after today?

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform the Hon. Member that when he takes a look at the drilling activity off the East Coast, there have been two cycles. The first cycle was in the 1960s to 1976, and the second one which ends this year was 1977 to 1989. In that second cycle there was more delineation of the finds that had taken place in the first cycle.

What has happened is that the second cycle was to end in 1989, and as the Hon. Member has stated, lay-off notices are being issued today. It is not clear at this point in time whether there will be other companies taking up further delineation activity or proofing activity over the next period of time. I cannot confirm that today, nor can the Hon. Member in his question make the point that there will not be any further activity in the immediate future. That is one point.

The second point, as the Hon. Member knows, is the federal Government's commitment on Hibernia, and it is due to the first and second stages that Hibernia is made possible.

HIBERNIA PROJECT—PRESENT STATUS

Mr. George S. Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Mr. Speaker, for the past 10 years we have had Hibernia held out like a political carrot. We were all going to become Jed Clampett's and we would not have to move to Beverley Hills.

That carrot is becoming mouldy and the hopeful are becoming hopeless. I would like to ask this Minister, what then—

An Hon. Member: You can be Jethrow.

Mr. Baker: —is the present status of the Hibernia project? When he gives his answer, can he give us the straight goods because in Newfoundland we are tired of Hibernia hype.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Yes, Jethrow, I will try and reply. Seriously, Mr. Speaker, I have not been giving Hibernia hype. I have been giving answers in this House and publicly very clearly on Hibernia. The hon. gentleman I think knows that, and the three points that I have been stressing and I will make those today again. What I am saying to the hon. gentleman is this: In terms of the federal Government's commitment to Hibernia, that remains firm.

Second, with respect to the legal work that I talked about earlier, the testing of the financial markets, as well as the need to finalize what form, especially top sides, are going to be used on the GBS, that work is going forward. The federal Government's commitment to Hibernia remains as we have put it in the Memorandum of Understanding. We hope to have that completed in this calendar year.

I say to the Hon. Member in all seriousness, I hope that while I have not used hype that he as well will not use hype, and will go back now to his provincial Government and convince it that its commitment to Hibernia should be as solid as the federal Government's commitment to Hibernia is this morning.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

KRAFT HEAD OFFICE MOVE TO ONTARIO—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Montreal-based Kraft Canada has announced its intention to move its headquarters to Ontario in the coming months to rationalize operations. Over 225 jobs are at stake. Can the Prime Minister or, in his absence, his Government guarantee us that Montreal won't lose jobs due to the unjustified transfer of another headquarters? And does he intend to speak to President Morrisson to keep this decision centre in Montreal, since over half its sales are made in Québec?

[English]

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, this decision Kraft is making is apparently involved with a merger of its firm. In the process, this merger has been examined by Investment Canada to determine whether in fact there is net benefit to Canada. I understand that it is increasing some research activities, and generally the activity level in Québec will be increased. I will refer the representation of the Hon. Member to Investment Canada officials to see whether in fact it would be appropriate for us to take the kind of action she is suggesting.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint-Laurent on a very short supplementary, please!

Mrs. Maheu: Mr. Speaker, it seems clear to me that this Government is not overly concerned with the well-being of the people of Montreal.

[English]

The recent closure of Gillette and the loss of the space agency demonstrates the irrelevance of Montreal Island to the Ministers of this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Maheu: What is the matter, does the truth hurt? The truth hurts. When are the Ministers from—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Maheu: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put her question.

Mrs. Maheu: When are the Ministers from Montreal going to come out of their shells and fight for the interests of the people who live in Montreal? Will the Prime Minister and his Government assure this House that this move will not lead to any job losses in Montreal now or in the near future?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I thought the Hon. Member for St. Laurent was going to rise to her feet and congratulate the Government for its contribution to Canadair for the recent jet which is going to create hundreds and hundreds of high tech jobs in her constituency.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EMPLOYMENT

LETTER FROM CANADA EMPLOYMENT CENTRE—INVASION OF PRIVACY

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister or the Minister who is responding today on behalf of employment and immigration. A woman in British Columbia, Rose Marie Roux, had left her job to move to B.C. to be with her fiancé. She applied for unemployment insurance benefits and received a very inappropriate letter from the Canada Employment Centre.

To quote from the letter, it said: "Are you living common-law with your fiancé? How long have you been living together? Have you set a date for your wedding? When was this date established? What is the date? Are there any children involved?"

I would like to ask the Government, how can it justify such a blatant invasion of a person's privacy?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will not be surprised to find out that I do not know of the particulars of that case. I would not presume that any Minister of the Crown would be expected in all reasonableness to have knowledge of such a specific case as it came up in Question Period. I will certainly be very happy to have the Department of Employment and Immigration look into this matter as rapidly as possible and get back to the Member as rapidly as possible.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. member. A short supplementary.

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): I would like to know if you find the letter as offensive—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Order. Order.

FREEZE ON MILK PRICES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Agriculture and relates to the alarming statements we have been reading or hearing on radio and TV since yesterday about the precarious situation of Québec farm producers.

Can the Minister tell the House whether it is true that, as a result of the recent decision of the federal Government to freeze milk prices, Québec farmers are now in such a predicament that some of them can no longer produce?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, alarming statements have indeed been reported in newspapers in recent days. Canadian and Québec farm producers can rest assured that the Canadian Government will honour its commitment to maintain marketing boards and re-inforce GATT section 11.

The commitment was made a number of years ago and this Government will stick to it. As a matter of fact, the work that was done Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister was one of the leaders who raised the issue of surplus control at the international level. The fact that world surpluses were reduced last year has meant $70 million more in the pockets of dairy producers in Canada and in Québec. These are facts and achievements.

DROUGHT ASSISTANCE TO WESTERN FARMERS

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board. It may be raining here in Ottawa but it is not raining anywhere in the West. It is not raining in Carman, Manitoba, in the Minister's constituency, or anywhere else.

Forecasters are already predicting that another year of drought is at hand. At page 65 of the Budget papers, the Government makes it clear that there will be no emergency assistance for drought-affected farmers. As well, a discussion paper on crop insurance given to MPs yesterday stated that the province will be asked to bear more of the load for crop insurance. Will the Minister assure the western farmers that the Government will be there for them this time, and state what form that assistance will take?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of Western Economic Diversification and Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, the PFRA has been monitoring moisture conditions on the Prairies on a regular basis for over two years. We know that the situation is certainly less than ideal in much of the Prairies.

The Hon. Member should know that in a good part of Alberta there is adequate moisture; Saskatchewan has the poorest conditions of the three prairie provinces as far as moisture is concerned, and in southern Manitoba there is enough moisture for germination.

It is very early in the year. We understand the concern and appreciate the question. We are monitoring the situation. The Government has been there to help in the past and if the situation develops at all in the way it looks in the last two days, we will have to be dealing with the situation on a regular basis.

The Hon. Member should know that this is very early in the growing season. No one on the Prairies has ever lost a crop in May yet. We will be watching the situation to see what we can do.

FISHERIES

SALE OF FISH PRODUCTS–GATT REGULATIONS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is quoted in the Halifax paper this morning as saying that he is proposing changes which would give fishermen an incentive to sell fish to Canadian processors rather than selling it whole to exporters who ship fish products to the Boston market. Will the Minister responsible answer how that can be done under the GATT rules and explain exactly what will be done to help the people in the fishing industry in the Atlantic region?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the situation is that there is a considerable amount of fish sold in the United States in a fresh state by individuals who catch the fish in Nova Scotia. I believe the amount last year was some 80 million pounds. If sold in Nova Scotia, it would be a considerable help to fish plant workers in Nova Scotia.

Of course, there is quite a difference between trying to provide incentives for people to sell fish to the local domestic Nova Scotian fish plants and putting in place regulations or legislation to do that, which could well be challenged under the GATT.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

PETRO-CANADA

TABLING OF CORPORATE PLAN AND CAPITAL BUDGET

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the Standing Orders I wish to table in both official languages the corporate plan for Petro-Canada for the planning period 1989-93, and the capital budget for the 1989 budget year.

TOURISM

NATIONAL TOURISM AWARENESS WEEK

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, next week is National Tourism Awareness Week.

Under the direction of the Tourism Industry Association, all across Canada, Canadians who make their living from tourism will be telling their fellow Canadians the facts of tourism and emphasizing that Canada grows with tourism.

The facts of tourism tell of an enormous Canadian success story. They tell the story of an industry which is of vital importance to the Canadian economy.

In fact, there are 60,000 tourism businesses in Canada employing 600,000 Canadians, and another 500,000 people who depend on tourism for at least part of their livelihood.

This sector has a record of job creation unmatched by any other industrial sector. In fact, tourism ranks second, right behind the auto industry in terms of job creation.

Tourism in Canada is a $21 billion a year business. Of every dollar spent in Canada on consumer goods and services, 6.7 cents is spent on tourism goods and services.

Tourism is also Canada's second largest export industry. It brings in more than $6 billion from foreign travellers.

[Translation]

The tourist industry extend across Canada and ranks among the first in every province and territory. And its future is as promising as its past, Mr. Speaker. According to the Conference Board of Canada's Institute on tourist resources, unemployment in the tourist industry should grow by 16 per cent through 1992.

[English]

In fact, by 1994 we expect to have an increase of 2.1 million foreign visitors a year.

The revenue from the increase in foreign visitors is expected to rise from $6.3 billion in 1987 to $13.6 billion in 1994, which means an extra $1.6 billion in tax revenue and the creation of about 145,000 new, full-time jobs.

This Government is committed to working with the industry and the provinces to ensure the continued growth of the Canadian tourism industry.

Together we organized the Tourism Tomorrow Conference, at which the private sector and the provincial and federal Governments reviewed priorities and strengthened co-operative ties.

We organized the Tourism Marketing Council and we sponsored the most ambitious and thorough study ever done of the American pleasure travel market, and shared the results with the provinces and the private sector.

The Free Trade Agreement with the United States will make travel between our two countries easier. This is important for the tourism industry because Canada's largest tourism customer is the United States.

Tourism is very much a small business industry. Eighty five per cent of the 60,000 businesses in the tourism industry in Canada are small businesses. That is they have annual revenues of less than $2 million and employ fewer than 100 people.

This Government is always mindful of the entrepreneurial basis of the Canadian tourism industry. This is an industry filled with risk takers and solid entrepreneurs. Our commitment to encourage and stimulate entrepreneurship will help the tourism industry grow. As we have seen, Canada does indeed grow with tourism.

I am committed to telling parliamentarians, legislators, business people and all Canadians about the importance of tourism to Canada.

Tourism is an important industry which touches every Canadian. We must encourage and an awareness of the industry's importance and an understanding of its challenges and its rewards.

Let us hope that National Tourism Awareness Week will bring about a greater understanding of this industry and a greater appreciation of its importance to the Canadian economy.

I urge all Members of the House and all Canadians to join me in paying tribute to the men and women of the tourism industry, and to help promote Canadian tourism next week.

Mr. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I on this side of the House would like to express our appreciation to the men and women who work in the tourism industry in Canada. Many have to work long hours to maintain their small businesses. Not only do they need recognition during National Tourism Awareness Week, they need sustained assistance, co-operation and a sympathetic ear to the multiple small but irritable problems that prevent growth in the industry.

• (1210)

The Minister said in his address that by 1992 there would be growth of 16 per cent. This does not concur with the figures of the Tourist Industry Association of Canada which disputes that figure. The Association is very critical of the new taxes set out in the latest Budget. It has said that those taxes will have an adverse affect on the industry and that that figure will not be attained.

[Translation]

On this side of the House, Mr. Speaker, we would like to join other Members to extend to everyone in the tourist industry our best wishes during the coming Canadian Tourist Week. We would like to hail all those who work long hours to ensure their business runs well because they invest a lot of time and energy to make sure the canadian tourist industry remains healthy.

I would like to emphasize that the Canadian tourist industry criticized the last Budget, and I would like to quote just one sentence here: Increased costs and reduced marketing expenditures are bad news for the $21 billion Canadian tourist industry. Tourism Canada's international marketing budget will be slashed by a third over the next three years, at a time when there is serious competition internationally for the tourism dollar and its benefits. According to Mr. Rowe, chairman of the Tourism Industry Association of Canada, we have now reached a point where the Americain States individually are spending more than the Canadian Government to promote tourism. To take one example, Mr. Speaker, the State of Illinois is spending more than the Canadian Government on tourism promotion.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, there are a number of aspects in the tourist industry on which we could focus. It was taken for granted over the years that the tourist industry could go on automatically. This is not the case. The fact is those industries create jobs. They sometimes need to be supported, but they would like above all to be consulted in order to make adjustments. Certainly, if the Minister took the time to consult the various Canadian tourist associations, he could learn a lot of things to improve the situation of the very important Canadian tourist industry.

[English]

In conclusion, I bring to the attention of the House the fact that there is a great deal of competition internationally to get tourist dollars. Everyone recognizes that, especially those in the tourist industry. However, when we see that one single state of the United States, the State of Illinois, spends more than the Government of Canada to promote tourism, I think the time has come to review our tourist promotion program and to sit down to listen to those who make their living from tourism. They are the experts in the field. From what I have seen over the last few weeks, after having consulted with those people they will be only too glad to join with the Government in seeing that their industry is kept alive and vibrant.

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to thank the Minister of State for Small Business and Tourism (Mr. Hockin) for providing my office and that of my Liberal colleague with an advance copy of his statement. That has given me an opportunity to provide a thoughtful reply to the Minister's comment.

At this time I would also like to join with the Minister in recognition of the tourism industry and its economic benefits to Canada. As the Minister has pointed out, the tourism industry is an important component of Canada's national economy. I hope that the importance of this industry will be highlighted next week during the celebration of National Tourism Awareness Week.

Tourism is Canada's fastest growing industry. In every province it has ranked first in the creation of new jobs, most of them in the small business sector. There is virtually no other industry which contributes more to Canada's regional development than does the tourism industry. It is already the largest employer in Canada. By the year 2000 it is expected that tourism will be the leading industry in Canada.

The Minister and I are in full agreement that the tourism industry is indeed a vitally important component of our national economy. Yet I am concerned that despite the good intentions of the Minister of State for Tourism, his colleagues in Cabinet have failed to understand the current and future economic impact that this industry will have in Canada.

It is evident in the legislation currently before the House that the Government wants to relegate tourism to the back-burner of economic development by hiding it within the proposed Ministry of Industry, Science and Technology. The Government has not given my colleague the status of a full ministry, something that the industry has been calling for over some time. I am sure that the Minister is reluctant to bite the hand that feeds him so I will come to his defence and say this to his colleagues on the Government side of the House: It is time that the Ministry of Tourism be given the priority and profile it needs and deserves in order to do its job properly.

Maintaining the Department of Tourism as a sub-ministry fails to acknowledge the growing importance of this industry in Canada. It fails to recognize the commitment that the Government made back in 1984 to increase the profile of the Department.

Since that time we have seen member after member of the Government praise the importance of the tourism industry. The industry itself has made it very clear that it is not satisfied with anything less than a full-fledged ministry. It has called repeatedly for the establishment of a separate Ministry of Tourism with a status equal to other major economic sectors. The Government has continued to ignore such appeals. Whether we can meet the expectations of the market-place in the future will be critical in terms of Canada becoming globally competitive in the tourism industry.

Although it is indeed a growth industry in Canada, our international tourism deficit has grown steadily. We have reached an all-time high in our tourism trade deficit of about $5.2 billion. To remain globally competitive, we will have to do better. We will have to develop and be more aggressive in marketing our tourism product. That will take initiatives that can be developed only through a full-fledged Ministry of Tourism, not a miniscule Department that is hidden within the bowels of another ministry. It will take a commitment from the Government to put its money where its mouth is, to assist the industry in the task of international marketing.

Over the past 10 years, federal investment in tourism marketing has not even kept pace with inflation. We have now reached the point at which some individual states in the United States, as my Liberal colleague pointed out, spend as much on tourism marketing as does the entire federal Government.

According to the spending estimates, the average expenditures for tourism development have not even kept pace with inflation. That is not enough for an industry poised to become the largest industry world-wide by the 21st Century. Yet what has been the response of Government? It has slashed $10 million—fully one-third of its foreign marketing budget.

I am certain that my colleague, the Minister of State for Tourism, is genuine in his commitment to the industry. However, we are going to need more than the soothing words of the Minister if Canada is to become a competitive player in the global market-place of tourism.

I welcome the opportunity to work together with my colleague, the Minister of State for Tourism, to ensure that the concerns of the tourism industry are both heard and acted upon by the Government.

PETITIONS

CANADA POST—ALLEGED MANAGEMENT HARASSMENT

Mr. Jim Karygiannis (Scarborough—Agincourt): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36. I am submitting the petition on behalf of several people employed by Canada Post in Scarborough, Ontario.

These employees would like to bring to the attention of the House the fact that they are facing severe harassment by management personnel. This harassment is in the form of management refusing to guard employees' sick leave with pay. All employees at Canada Post have enjoyed this right until now.

The employees of Canada Post call upon Parliament to investigate and correct the irregular behaviour and actions of the management of Canada Post, Scarborough Plant.

THE NETHERLANDS—RATIFICATION OF AGREEMENT

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland—St. Catharines—Thorold): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table a petition on behalf of the Dutch community in my region. The signatories are anxious to receive the benefits to which they are entitled from their country of origin, namely, the Netherlands.

The petitioners urge the Canadian Government to proceed without delay to the ratification of the agreement entered into with the Government of the Netherlands on February 26, 1987. The petitioners hope that it will not take another two years before this particular agreement is put into effect.

EQUALITY RIGHTS—RECOMMENDATIONS OF SUB-COMMITTEE

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to present a petition on behalf of 51 individuals who are requesting that the Government implement the recommendations made by the subcommittee on equality rights of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

The subcommittee, representing all Parties, recommended that the Canadian Human Rights Act be amended to prohibit discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation in all areas of federal jurisdiction.

VIA RAIL—GOVERNMENT COMMITMENTS

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 36 to present a petition duly approved by the Clerk of Petitions.

The petition is presented on behalf of a number of residents of the City of Revelstoke. This city is heavily dependent upon the tourist industry, and particularly dependent on the rail system and VIA Rail in particular.

The petitioners point out that the Progressive Conservative Party of Canada, in its report on passenger rail services, stated: "The federal Government has the responsibility to ensure that rail passenger services in Canada be retained, modernized and expanded as an important part of our national transportation system. To that end, it is recommended that federal transportation spending priorities be reordered to put a greater emphasis on rail passenger services".

The undersigned petitioners call upon the Government to live up to its original pledge to support VIA Rail, to abandon plans for further cuts to VIA's budget, and to provide the necessary resources to allow VIA to operate as a modern, effective transportation company, rather than as a museum.

In view of this being National Tourism Week, and today's statement by the Minister, I hope that the Government will listen to the petitioners and act to restore and keep passenger rail services in Canada.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall all questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I wish to inform the House that because of the Minister's statement, Government Orders will be extended by fifteen minutes.

SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 81—ILLEGAL IMPORTATION AND SALE OF TAINTED FUELS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Ms. Copps:

> That this House condemn the Government for its negligence with regard to the illegal importation and sale of fuel tainted with polychlorinated biphenyls (PCBs) and other toxic substances.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will now start the 10-minute question and comment period on the speech of the Hon. Member for Skeena, with the Hon. Member for Perth—Wellington—Waterloo.

Mr. Brightwell: As you know, Mr. Speaker, with your great experience, it is often difficult here to keep perspective on things spoken of in the House. I believe that I can put a better perspective on some matters spoken about by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) before we broke for Question Period.

Yesterday the Hon. Member spoke about this PCB-contaminated material touching a person's hand as he was filling his lawn mower or his car. Today he spoke about the polar bears being at risk from PCBs.

I wish to relate a story about this issue. A major environmental scientist spoke to me about what he would do if he were working in a laboratory and there was a container with a high concentration of PCBs in that lab and he dropped his pen into that container. Would he give up his pen? Would he walk away from it? Would he put on a glove and reach into the container? This scientist stated that he would simply reach into this container with his hand, pull out his pen, wash his hands off, and not think anything more about it. I asked a relative of mine the same question. He is also a reputable scientist. He stated that he would do the same thing. I relate this story to indicate that perhaps PCBs in themselves are not as violently toxic as the rhetoric might indicate.

The Hon. Member for Skeena stated that thousands of gallons of contaminated material have been trucked into Canada. This morning we heard that Mr. Conrad is now suggesting that his information was not as positive as it appeared before, and a constituent of mine, Mr. Hammond, who attended those meetings has stated that this was not mentioned in the meetings with the people from Revenue. How can the Member for Skeena be so sure? What proof does he have that the trucking of contaminated fuel is occurring?

Mr. Fulton: First, I would like to comment on the Hon. Member's remarks. It is highly irresponsible in the extreme to be suggesting to Canadians watching the proceedings of the House of Commons today that it is quite appropriate to stick your hands into pure PCBs. That is extraordinarily irresponsible. I hope that the Minister will rise and expunge that remark from the record.

It is not only PCBs that we are concerned about here. There are many other serious contaminants associated with this poisoned fuel scam. The Hon. Member should know that. To suggest that it is appropriate to bathe your hands in PCBs and then wash them in the sink and let that go down the drain is the height of irresponsibility. That is why the Government should not continue to be in office.

In terms of proof, Mr. Speaker, one of the chief law enforcement officers in the United States has stated now that in February, 1988, federal officials were advised that the poisoned fuel scam was going on. I wish to quote a story in The Globe and Mail which has not been challenged in any single way by any Minister of the Crown, or the Government of Canada.

On May 8, 1989, in an article in The Globe and Mail written by Jock Ferguson it states:

> The fly-by-night oil companies in Toronto—known as gasoline bootleggers to investigators—that handled the tainted fuel undercut legitimate fuel dealers by not paying the 9.3-cent-a-litre provincial fuel tax. The loss to the Ontario government was at least $100-million annually in each of the past five years, tax investigators said.

The Globe and Mail found that, and here is the information the Member is looking for. It was on the front page of The Globe and Mail. The article further states:

> American Continental Oil Inc. of Buffalo diluted heavy industrial fuel and diesel fuel with transformer oils and other wastes, former employees of the company said. Bill Barnes, owner of American Continental, admitted his company did "some mixing of transformer oil in heavy No. 6 oil and there was a lot of obvious controversy over it because of PCB contamination."
>
> Erie Petroleum Transfers Inc. of Tonawanda, N.Y., has used waste oil and solvents to dilute diesel fuel and gasoline, sources familiar with the company's operations said.
>
> Erie Petroleum was a major exporter of gasoline and diesel fuel to Ontario in the past five years and is now the object of a major investigation by the Organized Crime Strike Force in Buffalo.
> Welch Energy Inc. shipped large volumes of heavy fuel oil to Buffalo-area industries that was blended with transformer oil, and it was a supplier of diesel fuel to bootleg oil companies in Toronto. Welch was financed and controlled by the same people who operate a large hazardous-waste company in Niagara Falls, N.Y., Envirosure Management Corp. Inc., which is now under investigation by the U.S. Federal Bureau of Investigation and the Environmental Protection Agency.
> Bootleggers that sold some of the tainted fuels in Canada—

That is what the article states, and it has not been challenged by the RCMP, the FBI, or by anyone in the Government.

> Bootleggers that sold some of the tainted fuels in Canada—Ebony Oil and J. R. Oil sales—were in the waste-oil business at the same time.
> Solvent-contaminated gasoline from Detroit was sold by several bootleggers in Toronto to unsuspecting service stations, sources who sold the gasoline said in recent interviews.

How can the Member suggest that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Jelinek), and the former Minister of National Revenue, have stated categorically that what Mr. Conrad is claiming is wrong? I accept what they are stating. However, if the Hon. Member is not attempting to challenge anything that has been published by Jack Ferguson, based on a lengthy series of interviews with more than 50 sources, then I think the Member has holes in his head.

• (1230)

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, I congratulate my colleague for the points he has made in his speech and for his response to the Hon. Member.

In view of the fact that any law concerning the movement, handling and storage of dangerous goods or the safety transportation practices is only as good as an inspection enforcement capacity can be, and since we have 13 jurisdictions, 10 provinces, 2 territories and the federal Government all dabbling in inspection and enforcement, does my colleague have any evidence about a lack of co–ordination or a failure to have a standard and uniform system of inspection enforcement which affects about five different Departments of the Government?

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague who has great knowledge in the area of transportation, particularly the transportation of hazardous goods and the problems being created through deregulation.

We learned that only one test was done at the border by the Government of Canada. If that is the kind of inspection to be expected under CPA and by the Government of Canada, no wonder the mob in New York have chosen Canada as a great place to get rid of a lot of contaminated products.

As I pointed out in my speech, we know there are as many people involved in handing out parking tickets in the City of Ottawa, of whom there are 66, as there are investigators for all of the Government of Canada to deal with the transborder shipment of contaminated fuels and poisoned fuels. It is something to which the Minister of the Environment should respond in relation to the letter I have provided him, which is provided pursuant to the Canadian Environmental Protection Act. According to Section 108(1) it is possible to request an investigation of possible infractions of the Act. I will quote from "infractions" under Section 36.

First, though, I think the Minister is aware that there have been such infractions and it is quite appropriate for the Minister, now that he has the necessary signatures, to launch just exactly such an investigation. Under infractions in Section 2, I point out that the Government of Canada is "obliged to endeavour to protect the environment from the release of toxic substances".

We ask you to investigate whether the failure to take action during the 24 months since Revenue Canada officials were told that toxic fuel was being imported and sold constitutes the absence of an endeavour and an infraction under this Section.

I hope to hear from the Minister of the Environment about inspection and whether or not he feels there are sufficient inspectors to have enforcement and compliance with the Canadian Environmental Protection Act and whether or not he plans to move effectively to zero tolerance. This is something Canadians want to hear from the Minister in relation to zero tolerance on 170,000 metric tonnes of toxic and hazardous cargo which the Minister knows is coming into the country and has known since he became Minister. We want to know whether or not the Minister plans to go for zero tolerance at the border in relation to poisoned fuel. The Government has not been forthright enough in exactly what its position is and whether or not the Minister plans to move to zero discharge, something his own Government and his own Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) endorsed in the annex to the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement to make sure that toxic and hazardous contaminants are kept on plant sites until appropriate landfill sites and appropriate forms of incineration are available.

[Translation]

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I want to say that the Government is taking very seriously the allegations that appeared this week in The Globe and Mail in connection with illegal movement of gasoline products contaminated with PCBs. I think there are some very serious questions that must be asked and that, above all, something has to be done. I made it clear earlier that we have reacted very strongly.

Mr. Speaker, I am also concerned about the reaction of the opposition parties to this situation. I don't think we heard them getting very upset about the situation and about the concerns of Canadians. They see this merely as a vote–getting exercise. They are taking undue advantage of the concerns that are being voiced across this country, in an attempt to damage the Government.

Now, trying to damage the Government is not that dramatic! However, Mr. Speaker, at the same time they are undermining the confidence of Canadians in the systems that were put in place to protect them. We know perfectly well that our systems have operated very effectively for years, and that thousands of operations are monitored and tested every year by government services whose word has given no cause for any criticism whatsoever.

And how did the opposition parties react when they read, as we did, about the allegations published in The Globe and Mail last Monday? Their first reaction was: The Government knew. Well, the Ministers concerned did their duty. They each checked with their officials to find out whether there was any information circulating in my Department, and so forth.

So far, according to the reports we have been given, they had no such information. However, the Opposition insists they did, on the basis of statements from Mr. Daniel Green and Mr. Conrad, and it referred to a conversation that took place in 1987 in the offices of the Department of National Revenue in Toronto.

However, when we look at these allegations, beyond the campaign slogans, the rhetoric and the purely political interests of the Opposition parties, what is left? Nothing, Mr. Speaker!

We know that during an international conference held in Basel, Switzerland last March, a Canadian Minister representing the Government of Canada at this conference, which ended with the signing of a very important agreement on the transportation of dangerous products from country to country, that this Minister met with members of the Canadian Delegation, including Mr. Green, who was there with another official from the Department of the Environment.

When Canadians abroad sit around conference tables and get together during breaks, it is normal for them to exchange views on all sorts of issues. On the basis of what our representatives have reported and the statement which the Minister of State (Transport) has made, we know that during these discussions Mr. Green referred generally to the fact that it was rumored that some people involved in the illegal shipping of toxic materials were violating the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act.

When we stop to think with a view to not only alarming people and distorting the facts we know that toxic materials are being shipped both ways between Canada and the United States. We even know that this shipping can be legal because the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act which Parliament adopted in 1980 authorizes shipping of toxic materials. Such legitimate transportation does occur. It involves generally the transportation of tainted goods of various nature, industrial wastes, hospital wastes, used oil and similar materials which are shipped across the border to be destroyed or recycled.

This shipping occurs from Canada to the United States as well as from the United States to Canada. We even know the quantities involved. We know that we import from the United States some 180,000 tons, and that we export to the United States nearly 66,000 tons. The whole purpose of this transshipping is to minimize the distances toxic materials must travel to get properly destroyed or recycled.

That is the reason why the Canadian Government adopted in 1980 a legislation to control such transportation.

However, Mr. Speaker, we had to wait five years for the adoption of the relevant regulations. The same Liberals who now are screeming their heads off were unable for four years, between 1980 and 1984, to adopt the relevant regulations.

In 1985, this Government, one year after its election in 1984, had to step in and pass the regulations which gave its full meaning to a legislation adopted in 1980. This lack of action and interest on the part the previous Government on the toxic waste transportation issue is the real scandal, Mr. Speaker.

• (1240)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bouchard (Lac–Saint–Jean): Not satisfied with adopting such regulations, the Governement successfully negotiated with the United States an extremely important Canada–United States Agreement to specifically regulate how the shipping of toxic materials would be handled between our two countries. That is something Canadians should know, Mr. Speaker. Have we heard anyone from the Opposition side recognize this week that such system does exist? No!

Some Hon. Members: No!

Mr. Bouchard (Lac–Saint–Jean): No, because that would have comforted Canadians! But Members of the Opposition have no interest in doing that! They want to make a stir.

Mr. Della Noce: That is spreading fear.

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): They want to spread fear, Mr. Speaker.

So those measures are the result of the Government's work, concern and dispatch. Basically, they provide that there cannot be legal transportation of toxic substances either way between Canada and the United States without previous warning to the countries and also to the provinces. There must be prior notification.

There must also be waste manifests and every time a truck, for instance, stops at the border for checking, the driver must submit a list of the goods he is transporting that can be checked against his load. The drivers of those trucks must also go through special training and courses. They must pass extremely severe tests and carry a permit that certifies they comply with those requirements. There are many more measures, Mr. Speaker, because we must ascertain that on the other side of the border, the destination will meet all requirements and whether it will be possible to destroy or recycle the product in a way that is appropriate and safe for Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, having done all that, this Government also put in place an inspection network in the five areas of the country in 1985 and 1986. We had to wait all that time to take this kind of measure, Mr. Speaker, because the Liberals were in power for 20 years. They are the last ones who should talk today, who should get up in this House and become indignant, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: That's it!

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): The Government knew. Of course, it is very easy to cast doubts on Government activity. Citizens know that Governments are huge machines. Of course, considering the enormous responsibilities they are given, those machines must be huge. Some doubts always remain in the citizens' minds: Do bureaucrats and politicians who manage our taxes manage them properly and do they protect us efficiently? It is very easy to cast doubts in the citizens' minds. It is partly also the game of the opposition, but beyond a certain limit, it becomes irresponsibility, and we have had all week a brillant demonstration of such irresponsibility.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Let's take an example. Much has been said about a meeting which took place in 1987 in those offices in Toronto. We are told that there was an informer. It is strange enough that the Hon. Member from the opposition, got out in the middle of the sitting and came back to tell us: I have just talked with the informer. This is a very strange story, Mr. Speaker. It is not up to me to describe it, but you will understand that I am amazed that an Opposition Member is in direct contact with an informer, whom he says has served time in prison—I don't know whether he is still in prison or not. Nevertheless, it is all quite extraordinary.

But what is the situation being described to us? This 1987 meeting in the Revenue Department office, an informer claims to have overheard—that is hearsay, isn't it? He did not see it. He was not a witness. He heard that a truck traveling in the United States was carrying tainted gasoline. That is a big scandal with the Opposition.

An Hon. Member: He's a friend of the Liberal Party!

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): It's incredible! We cannot accept such things. We just heard the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), who was a very great lawyer and who may soon become one again. I am sure that the legal community will be very honoured to see him rejoin their ranks, if he decides to do so, but he has somewhat forgotten the rules of evidence. He knew them very well before, but he will need a little refresher course to return to the practice of law, I think, because from this meeting, he drew the conclusion that the Government knew about contaminated gasoline being transported from Canada to the United States. All that is incredible!

Mr. Speaker, the truth is that this Government acted as soon as it learned of the allegations. The Government first had to make sure that these allegations were founded.

A government has the basic duty to assume responsibility, to go seek the truth, and to ascertain if Canadians should be concerned or not about the situation. So, that is what we did. As soon as we heard about those allegations, together with the Ontario Government in particular and all the governments in Canada, we immediately ordered that inspections be carried out in every region, not at all border crossings but at those where it was thought that this traffic could be going on.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, this morning we announced the implementation of another action plan which will reinforce the one that had been put in place early this week and which, this time, came out of a meeting that took place between three provincial ministers and two federal ministers, with further follow-up between all the governments in Canada. What is this action plan? First of all, investigation. We have to know where the truth stands. We must find out if the allegations were true and to what extent and we must know who are responsible? And then charges will be laid and those who are responsible must be jailed, that is the situation!

Mr. Della Noce: There you are!

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): One must proceed with this investigation in an orderly fashion. I think a Member of the New Democratic Party said a while ago that there are 13 different levels of government in Canada. That is a fact which make Canada uniquely rich but it can complicate operations sometimes.

Mr. Della Noce: There you are!

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Therefore, we decided to proceed with a joint investigation which will be coordinated by the RCMP with the close cooperation of the Ontario and Quebec police forces, the FBI, the US Environment Protection Agency and the provincial departments involved.

Second, we know very well that ours is a vast country and we can rightly be proud of that, but it is also the source of a problem. How can we guarantee strict and adequate control over nearly 175 border crossing points? How can we do that? It is very difficult. So this morning we decided we would reduce to 50 the number of border crossings through which American oil products can be carried into Canada.

An Hon. Member: Excellent move!

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): I take this opportunity to thank my colleague the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Jelinek) who is also responsible for Customs and Excise. He has acted most efficiently in setting up this plan and he will be able to unveil some of the operational details on Monday or Tuesday. Mr. Speaker, I think this procedure will enable us to concentrate the resources we have, and we will seek additional help. I was assured this morning that the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will lend us some facilities concerning inspections and lab tests. One of the problems we are experiencing this week stems from the huge number of samples we took; practically all trucks carrying gas were checked and we are left with a large number of lab tests to be done. The labs are not used to this and, with so many tests, the shortage of technicians is more obvious. The Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has the kind of resources we need and it will lend us a hand for this operation.

The other announcement we made, Mr. Speaker, has to do with the issuance of a temporary order in council which I hope to sign before the end of the day. This order will immediately put in place a very important measure. Currently, PCB's may not be transported on either side of the border. If the slightest trace is found in a substance that is to be sold or consumed, like gas for instance, and if more than 50 ppm are found, it becomes a toxic substance, a toxic waste under the act. That order will add to the list of illegal substances 97 other ones of various nature that are not currently illegal. Under this order in Council, it will be illegal to mix them with fuel or similar products. This a most important measure we are taking today or Monday at the latest.

Mr. Speaker, what are the results of the operation? As I said, we are not taking this matter lightly nor reducing this Government's vigilance. Quite the opposite, we will exercise it fully. However, the truth of the matter is all the results obtained since the beginning of this week, whether from samples taken by us yesterday and the day before or samples taken by the Ontario Government during their blitz inspection of April last, during which nearly 40 trucks were stopped, up till now all tests have been negative—there was no PBC's in the fuel. Let us hope in all sincerity, Mr. Speaker, and I believe the Opposition will join me in this, that this will remain the case up to the end of the operations, so that we may re-assure Canadians.

However, testing continues and is even increased. We are now testing even gas stations. I received yesterday the report on four gas stations—all are negative. We will continue to do this even on an increased basis to ensure we are following up on allegations in a responsible manner. And if we find PCBs, we will act in all harshness and we will try to get our hands non only on small carriers, if any, but on the bigger interests hiding behind them.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I will say that once the protests have fallen silent and things have settled, which has yet to be done, there will be lessons to draw from that and, among others, that there is a need for close cooperation between all levels of government, the industry, our American friends, and various police forces. I think that is an example of the lessons the environment teaches us more and more every day. Indeed, as we know, the environment is threatened by acts of man, common acts of society, economic development, Nature itself, and maybe also, now, criminal activities. If so, we will also have to develop professional reactions, reactions of vigilance and great expertise. That is why, Mr. Speaker, one of the basic lessons of this week and maybe next, as we will see, will be to ensure a better cooperation between all concerned, including the Opposition. Nothing prevents the Opposition from helping the Governement cope with that kind of problem.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[English]

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the Minister's remarks, but he seems to be painting a picture for the public of Canada that there may or may not have been toxic and hazardous materials contaminating fuels that were sold in Canada. He did not respond to the request that I made. His colleague suggested that PCBs are just as safe as peanut butter. He said you can stick your hands in, stick your arms in and that is just fine. I do not think the Minister of Environment would want that message to stay untouched on the record.

So I have three points that I would like the Minister to respond to. First, is in relation to the front page Globe and Mail story of May 9 which says:

> In Buffalo at least three oil companies have blended chemical wastes into fuel products over the past four years and sold them in Canada, police tax investigators and participants in the schemes said in interviews over the last five months.

Is the Minister suggesting that the New York State police and tax investigators and the participants are not telling the truth? If he is, I would like to know that.

I would also like him to comment on what Premier Peterson said in The Citizen on May 10, which is just two days ago. I quote:

> But he also said federal officials had been told about the tainted fuel. I am told by some that they were told that they were a part of some of these investigations. The question you want to ask is why didn't they tell their Minister.

Premier Peterson says that the Government of Canada knew. The Government continues to say that they did not know. The veracity of the police and the tax investigators in the United States is being challenged. I would like the Minister to respond. Is he saying that PCBs are safe? Does he agree with his colleague? Is he saying that there have not been poisoned fuel sold in Canada? Is that the message he is trying to send out to Canadians? Is he contradicting Premier Peterson? Let us set aside the September 11 meeting, the meeting in Basle, all of these other things. Is he suggesting that the officials of the Government of Canada did not know? I believe these are very important questions. The Minister developed his entire argument to create the impression for Canadians that there is not a problem out there, that none of these fuels came into Canada, and even if they did, they are safe. I do not think that that is a fair message to send to Canadians.

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I will not comment on the allegations concerning the ongoing investigations on the American side of the border. What we want to know is if there is or is not tainted fuel traffic from the United States to Canada. We will check it. We will conduct a very extensive investigation to know everything about it. If we find in the end that there is such traffic, we will act swiftly and lay charges against the responsible people. That will be done. The truth will be known and justice will be done.

As far as Premier Peterson's allegations are concerned, I did not hear those allegations myself. I suppose that if Premier Peterson knows something about this traffic, he will go and see the police and inform them of what he knows. If he had personally informed federal officials of such a thing, I guess he would be in a position to tell to whom he said it. We have a right to know if it is true that he said that.

As far as the danger of PCBs, nobody in this House has ever suggested that PCBs are not dangerous. They are controlled in our regulations under the Transportation Act. They have been one of the main preoccupations of my Department for the last year. We are devoting a lot of time to providing Canadians with facilities to destroy PCBs. We know that PCBs are dangerous. We combat them. We have a program to eliminate PCBs from Canada over the next five years.

Mr. Keyes: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Environment announced on Wednesday, and he has just restated today, that he has 34 Environment Canada inspectors working with other federal Government departments in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec. There has been no reference by the Minister to the posting of inspectors at border crossings in British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, New Brunswick or Yukon. News reports indicate that the same scam may be occurring in Alberta and B.C. With 140 border crossings strung out along that Canada–U.S. border, is the Minister trying to suggest that 34 inspectors are enough to protect the health of Canadians from toxic–laced fuels?

Mr. Bouchard (Lac–Saint–Jean): There will never be enough inspectors. There should be more. It is a question of balancing the resources that we have. But we feel that by appointing 34 federal inspectors specifically to those points of entry where illegal traffic is most likely, we are making the best of the situation.

We must not forget that we also have 3,000 customs officials in Canada. What is being done is an attempt to embarrass the Government, but we have duty to the truth. The Hon. Member never mentioned that there are 3,000 devoted customs officials working in Canada to check the borders. We also have the benefit of the co–operation of the provinces in a joint effort. All over Canada, there is an intensive operation going on. We have concentrated our efforts in Ontario because that is where the main allegations are heard and because that is where the main traffic roads are located. We feel that we will have vigorous and efficient results.

Mrs. Catterall: Mr. Speaker, through you, I would like to ask the Minister if he is concerned that this all may be too little too late and whether all this publicity is not simply driving the illegal traffickers in contaminated oil underground? What actions are being taken to foresee the possibility that this oil is no longer moving across the border? Perhaps we are trying to catch the horse after the barn door has closed.

Second, I wonder as I sit there with my fuel tank two–thirds full of oil, is the Minister in a position to advise Canadians, based on where they have purchased their fuel and from whom, as to whether they need to be concerned about using fuels that they have in their possession.

• (1300)

Mr. Bouchard (Lac–Saint–Jean): We are also concerned with the fact that if there are people involved in illegal operations of that kind, they will go underground since they know that we are conducting intensive operations and inspections. That is true, but we are also testing service station tanks at the same time because shipments have suddenly been made there from weeks before. We are testing those stations. I am glad to say, and to repeat, that yesterday we had the results from the laboratories of four of those tests in Toronto area service stations. They were all negative. There were no PCBs.

We are also in a way comforted by the fact that we also received yesterday partial results of an analysis of samples taken by the Ontario Government in April during the surprise inspection blitz. There was no advance notice given then. It was a commando inspection. All the lab results that we have—and I think we had nine yesterday and maybe three more today—are all negative as far as the presence of PCBs is concerned.

We would advise Canadians to to identify the stations, if any are found, where there would be PCB tainted fuel. As of now we have never found any stations where we could issue this kind of notice. We cannot say anything, but as soon as we get more information, as soon as we find out that some stations are selling tainted fuel, we will close them and we will advise people not to go back there. However, as of now there is nothing of the kind.

[Translation]

Mr. Della Noce: Mr. Speaker, I would like first to congratulate my colleague, not only for the information he gave us today on the action that was taken, but also because car owners will surely be pleased to learn that after the big issue the Opposition made of all this, not one incident has yet been reported in Canada. Anyway, I do not want to talk about Canada but Quebec where I have been investigating with all the inspectors since those allegations were made last week. I have just been told one more time that there have been no positive test in Quebec. Toronto in particular was mentioned and I can assure you that in Quebec we have done everything we could to deal with those problems. We have inspectors on the road since 1972.

I would also like to put a few questions to my colleague, because those matters are important. The Opposition has unleashed a lot of fear, and the Minister said so eloquently in his speech: people have been given a fright. Some people have even said that service stations are selling fuel mixed with toxic products. I challenge opposition members to name such a service station! I am prepared to go and check it with them. Believe me, if the fuel that is sold had been mixed with toxic substances, the motors in cars are so sophisticated nowadays that we would have had a lot of complaints.

So I ask the Minister if there have been complaints in the last week from car drivers who would have experienced major car trouble? Did service stations complain about any product? Has he received any advice from within his Department regarding allegations made by the Opposition? As far as I am concerned, I have not received anything.

I would like to ask the Minister if he could reassure all Canadians by telling them that we are dealing more with allegations than facts, even though he has promised to investigate further, to have people check these allegations. I am sure it will be very positive for the Department and for the public.

So, did the Minister receive any complaints, can he reassure the public, have any gas stations been caught selling tainted products?

The Opposition is destroying the credibility of gas stations, of independent retailers who are honest and who would never do anything to compromise their reputation, and of oil companies which, I am sure, are not even remotely involved in this alleged scam. So can the Minister tell us if he has received any complaint to that effect?

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I must assure Canadians in that we can tell them that so far, the results obtained show no PCBs. I cannot reassure them by saying that there will never be any, that the allegations are not serious. On the contrary, we believe that they must be checked thoroughly and we will step up our efforts to find the truth!

I would like to make a clarification to avoid drawing the wrong conclusions: we are still waiting for the first results of the analyses from Québec. No results have yet come from Québec. Some have come from Ontario, but not yet from Québec. We expect to have some soon and the public will of course be informed of the results of the investigation under way.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Hamilton West.

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, the entire nation is concerned today with the fact that gasoline and oil fuels tainted with PCBs have entered the country through certain border points. We all can recall that dangerous situation at St. Basil le Grand in Québec when a whole community had to be evacuated because PCBs had escaped into the environment. It was a very serious situation.

We are faced with an equally dangerous situation right now for several reasons. The fact that industrial boilers, greenhouses, and motor vehicles are suspected of carrying fuels laced with PCBs means that in the present case the contamination is widespread. We know that it takes very little parts per million of these highly carcinogenic materials to cause much concern.

However, the fact that the Government knew of the importation into Canada from the U.S. of these tainted fuels is equally as serious. This Government has not come clean with the Canadian public and could have and should have stopped this illegal action months ago.

The Minister of Environment (Mr. Bouchard) informed the House on May 9, 1989, as reported at page 1494 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, while in Switzerland two months ago one of my aides received a general hint from an environmentalist from Montreal on possible illegal toxic—commerce crossing the border between Canada and the United States. It was a general allegation with no specific possibilities involving, for example, tainted fuel.

However, as early as this morning, Mr. Speaker, on a television news program that same noted Montreal environmentalist, Daniel Green, said: "Well, I have been dealing with government bureaucrats for years. Sometimes you have the impression that they don't want to hear about the problems that they are carrying. They give you the impression that they are carrying such a heavy burden on their shoulders that they would rather not hear about it. You must not forget that as an environmentalist when I say something to Government they don't think I'm telling the truth or that I lack credibility. But as you have heard, even industry tells something to government bureaucrats, they also don't seem to react."

I do not think that the Canadian public would treat the threat of contaminated fuels illegally entering this country as a general matter. It is a very serious matter indeed. He also stated that no one in his Department, or in any other federal Department had been told of any specific allegation of tainted fuel.

I will draw your attention again, Mr. Speaker, to page 1534 of Hansard for May 10, 1989 wherein the Minister of the Environment said:

> Mr. Speaker, all the reports I received, including the statements made yesterday to the press by the Minister of State for Transport, are to the effect that no specific allegations concerning illegal shipments of contaminated gasoline were passed on, either in Geneva or elsewhere, to departmental employees or members of my office staff—Personally, I didn't know anything about all this before reading the article in The Globe and Mail.

That was Monday's The Globe and Mail. How can the Minister of the Environment say on May 10 that he did not know anything about all this until he read a newspaper article but state on the previous day that two months ago one of his aides received a hint from environmentalist Green that possible illegal toxic waste was crossing the Canada–U.S. border?

• (1310)

Mr. Bouchard (Lac–Saint–Jean): That's not what he said.

Mr. Keyes: He did say it. I can give you the evidence of that.

On May 10, as reported at page 1535 of Hansard, the Minister of State for Transport said:

> Mr. Speaker, at a conference in Basle, Switzerland, there were conversations in which Mr. Green stated his concern about toxic waste crossing the border. Those concerns were voiced to the officials of Environment who were at that conference. They were voiced within my hearing. The Department took action and that is the extent of it.

That certainly is not the extent of it. She later states, as reported at page 1535 of Hansard, on May 10:

> —Mr. Green had concerns about the possibilities of toxic wastes being shipped across the border to Canada. That was the extent of it.

He has it from one of his own Ministers. She continues:

> When he brought that forward, the departmental officials were there. They heard his concerns, I heard his concerns and the departmental officials for Environment under whose jurisdiction his concerns lie followed up on the details.

The Minister of the Environment is on record as saying that no one in his or any other federal Department was told that there was a specific allegation of tainted fuel. Who are Canadians to believe? It is obvious that the Government is attempting to mask the issue by creating a state of confusion from Department to Department.

Am I to conclude from statements given by the Minister that the Minister of State for Transport feels it was not her responsibility to request an immediate investigation into this serious matter? She is the Minister of State for Transport and carries the ministerial responsibility—

Mr. Bosley: No.

Mr. Keyes: —on behalf of Canadians to supervise the transportation of hazardous goods and materials.

Mr. Bouchard (Lac–Saint–Jean): No.

Mr. Keyes: The Environment Minister shakes his head and says "no". Let me quote from the press release which accompanied the Minister of State for Transport's return from Switzerland in March. It states:

> The federal Department of Transport administers the Act and regulations, and is responsible for ensuring compliance in rail, marine and air transport, and generally for the activities of shippers of dangerous goods, which includes hazardous wastes.

They are not shaking their heads any more. It is right in her own press release from her Department.

As the newest member of the Standing Committee on Transport, whose responsibility it is among other things to ensure the safe transportation of dangerous goods, I submitted an open letter to the chairman of the Standing Committee on Transport. It requests that the Minister of State for Transport be asked to appear before the Standing Committee on Transport. I wrote:

> It is imperative that the Minister explain what she knew concerning the illegal importation of toxic contaminated gasoline and oils into Canada from the United States.

As you are aware, the Minister has confirmed that she has learned of the possibility that contaminated petroleum products were being transported across the Canadian border from Mr. Daniel Green, a Montreal environmentalist. It is incumbent upon the Minister of State for Transport to answer the following questions:

1. What was the exact nature of the Minister's discussions with Mr. Green?

2. Was this the first time that the possibility of toxic-contaminated petroleum products being transported into Canada came to the Minister's attention?

3. Did the Minister have any conversations with other federal Departments or agencies regarding such possibilities?

4. Did the Minister at any time discuss such possibilities with other Ministers of the Crown?

5. What immediate steps did the Minister take to ensure the safety of the Canadian public by identifying possible sources of toxic-contaminated gasoline and oils?

6. What does she mean when she states that officials from the Department of the Environment "took action" in relation to this possibility?

7. Did the Minister or any other member of the Crown communicate the possibility of illegal importations of toxic-contaminated petroleum products to officials of the United States Government?

8. Did the Minister or any other Minister of the Crown to her knowledge receive any information from officials of the United States Government of the possibility that toxic-contaminated petroleum products were entering Canada?

The Canadian public and Members of the House of Commons have been trying to acquire the answers to these and other questions. I believe that the only recourse left to us is to have the Minister appear before the committee at the earliest possible time.

First it was the Minister of Finance who seriously breached his ministerial responsibility by issuing his Budget by press release. Then the Minister of State for Transport chose to ignore very serious information given to her in Switzerland two months ago. Again, it is a breach of ministerial responsibility. The Minister of Public Works and the Minister of National Revenue all have breached their ministerial responsibility in order to conceal and then confuse Canadians.

This is a very dangerous precedent. Ministerial responsibility is a key principle of British parliamentary tradition. All of this negligence is inexcusable and is eroding this absolutely crucial principle of our parliamentary system.

Mr. Parker: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to direct some questions to the Minister, but I will ask the Member who just spoke what he thinks of the competence of the Minister and his Department.

The Minister has praised his Department for all that it is doing. I met with officials of his Department on March 9 to discuss a serious problem in regard to the burning of chemical waste products in an open burner at a pulp mill in Montana. I received an interim answer on April 3, stating that the matter was being investigated.

People are very concerned about this situation which had never happened in North America. Russia is the only other place where we could find these kind of chemicals being burned in an open burner.

On April 25 I wrote back to the Minister to update him on the situation and explain the growing urgency. This time I only received an acknowledgement to my letter.

On May 9 I wrote again saying that Canadians were agonizing in their wait for an answer. I received another letter saying that the Minister was investigating.

His Department has been approached with a specific topic. It was given samples of the caustic material being burned. To date the Department is still investigating.

Is that the kind of environmental protection we are getting with regard to contaminated gasoline coming from the United States?

The Minister's Department knows about the specific topic I have raised. We are still waiting for an answer about what the Department is doing. We have simply asked it to conduct some testing to identify the material. Representatives from Montana and British Columbia are worried about it, yet the Department has not found the time to give us an answer.

• (1320)

Does the Hon. Member have confidence in this Environment Minister and his Department to deal with the type of problems that we have?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Keyes: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. It is hard to put trust in someone like the Minister who has the responsibility to look after Canadians, especially when it comes to pollution and the like. I say that especially in light of the situation which we face at this time when evidence has been revealed and when people have known about it months ago. It shows that there has been obvious neglect. Someone came up and said: "Did you know this?" It was someone with some credibility who said: "Did you know this or that?" In reply we have seen that the Minister said: "Oh, yes, that is very interesting, thank you very much". To use her own words: "That was the extent of it". Yes, it is repugnant. It is totally irresponsible. I have no faith in the Minister of the Environment.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Shame on you.

Mr. Keyes: Members opposite laugh. Why should I have shame? I point to the Hon. Member opposite who said: "Shame on you". How can he sit behind the Minister of the Environment and say that? All I am doing is putting forward the evidence as was stated in Hansard and in the Government's own press releases. Members opposite cannot argue with the facts. The facts are all there.

In the debate on the Budget we heard from Members opposite: "What would you have done about it? How can we handle the deficit?" Let me go on record right now on this particular matter to outline with pride the Liberal Party's actions versus the Conservative Government's inaction. We on this side of the House have been concerned about transboundary shipments of hazardous wastes for some time. Unlike the Government we are not the Johnny-come-lately to this important issue.

Soon after the House resumed last month the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) and the Official Opposition's spokesperson for the environment placed a question on the Order Paper which requested the release of detailed information to this House and to the Canadian people on the importation of hazardous wastes into Canada. Information concerning exports of hazardous wastes from Canada was also requested.

Members of the Liberal Party did not know, in advance of Monday of this week, that hazardous wastes were being mixed in with fuel shipments. We were not in attendance at the UN conference in Switzerland, as was the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Martin). We were not party to Mr. Green's conversations with the Minister and other departmental officials, nor did Liberal MPs participate in the meeting between the former Minister of National Revenue and Mr. James Conrad, Executive Vice-President of the Petroleum Marketers Association of Canada. Finally, Liberal MPs did not attend the September 11, 1987 meeting at the Toronto offices of Revenue Canada where this same issue of toxic tainted fuel was discussed.

The Official Opposition is calling for a committee of Parliament to begin an immediate and in-depth study of toxic waste fuel trade in the country and into the Government's inept response to numerous warnings of its existence, warnings that came possibly months ago.

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, I have a couple of questions for my hon. friend from Hamilton West. I have been listening with care to his remarks. I am just a little chagrined that he should be attacking such an attentive, hard working, responsible and caring Minister as the Hon. the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) and his colleagues.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Edwards: I would like it to be on record that it was this Government in the previous Parliament which passed one of the most rigorous and stringent environmental protection Acts that the country has ever seen.

I would be very interested to know from the Hon. Member, since he is talking about what can practically be done when Liberals are taken into the picture, when they know the facts and what action they can take, just what action has been taken by the Government of Ontario in this instance. As we know, environment is a shared jurisdiction.

I wonder whether in his vast experience in the Liberal Party the Hon. Member is privy to whether Mr. Conrad has during his quests for Liberal nominations said anything about these matters in any nomination speeches.

Mr. Keyes: Mr. Speaker, obviously I am not going to thank the Hon. Member for his question. It was put in the typical way that the Government has been acting over the past few days by making light of an issue of such importance.

Mr. Edwards: I am not making light of it. I am asking a question.

Mr. Keyes: The Hon. Member shows an obvious dereliction of duty, a masking of some type of interpretative event. He is saying more or less: "Let us make some fun of them and Canadians will forget all about it. The newspaper headlines will die out and we will go on to some other issue". This issue will not die out. This Party is committed to preserving what Canadians believe we in this House should be doing, that is, looking after their needs when it comes to pollution and when it comes to the environment.

The question included a quote.

Mr. Edwards: You are afraid of the question.

Mr. Keyes: I have already said that I am not going to grace the Hon. Member with an answer to his completely ridiculous question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Keyes: I am trying to get serious about this issue.

Mr. Della Noce: Answer the question!

Mr. Keyes: Mr. Speaker, in the Hon. Member's question he talked about the attentive, caring and hard working Minister. When it comes to working for one's constituents and representing their interests in the House, whether one is in opposition or at the ministerial level, I do not question whether the person is attentive or hard working. We are all very hard working. We are all very attentive. There is no question about that.

What I have to question is: if the Minister has total responsibility for those who are under him, then how could those who work under him or around him in other Ministries not communicate with the Minister? If there is no communication with the Minister, the Minister cannot act on a situation, as has happened in this very case, which has been demonstrated by, first, not knowing about it, then knowing about it, and then: "I knew about it Monday. I know I did not. I knew about it last month. Oh, the Minister of State for Transport mentioned it to me a couple of months ago". Let us get serious here about this situation. Yes, he is a hard working Minister. He has the ultimate responsibility to be accountable for those underneath him. Unfortunately, those building blocks underneath him are crumbling. He has no choice but to say: "We were wrong".

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The last question. The Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Tremblay).

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to what the Hon. Member from the Official Opposition had to say, but I would just like to have his comments on the following point, especially when he mentions the responsibility of the various Ministers involved and when he also quotes his references concerning Mr. Green's statements and particularly Mr. Conrad's, not without casting doubt on these individuals' statements, but he was just quoting a statement or something said on a television program, if I understood correctly this morning, to the effect that Mr. Green seemed to be sort of testifying that officials or individuals in the Department were not as attentive as they might be to certain questions. That of course is based on his experience going back several years. I would like to ask the Hon. Member, because this whole debate has been going on for a week or even more in this House about the impact and importance of this, in view of what he said, I would like him to give us more specific—I would even say more relevant—facts about the general allegations made by these individuals.

Because, on the one hand, if Mr. Green complains that officials were not or still are not attentive to his comments, not only his but those of the companies, how come, faced with such an important problem, he was not more straightforward, specific and to-the-point? Secondly, how come Mr. Conrad, who also couched his remarks in general terms, who is responsible for our having the debate today, did not take the opportunity a few months after he appeared before the Finance Committee to get down to particulars and be specific about his denunciations so that, again, the Government could discharge its responsibilities?

• (1330)

[English]

Mr. Keyes: Did you understand that question any better than I did, Mr. Speaker? The Hon. Member wants me to go to the Committee on Finance? Perhaps the Hon. Member could clear up the question. I am at a loss to understand the point of his question.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member did not quite understand the question. The Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Tremblay).

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): In that case, I will try— I was careful to speak slowly and clearly, but I will repeat: According to the Hon. Member, we are faced with a serious problem. I may remind him, however, that we are dealing with allegations of a general nature. No details were given in this debate about a specific business or a specific situation that would jeopardize the health of Canadians. Since there is no specific information, I may refer you to two people who were widely quoted during the past week, who said themselves that public servants did not always pay much attention to their information. Why wasn't Mr. Green, who has had many years of experience in dealing with politicians and public servants, more direct and more specific in his statements so that the Minister concerned could act immediately? Furthermore, the Hon. Member does not seem to be aware that Mr. Conrad, after his meeting in Toronto, appeared a few weeks later, before the Finance Committee to talk about the tax. On that occasion, he did not mention the general statements he made in Toronto. Why didn't he, if it was as important as all that?

Mr. Della Noce: He never talked about it!

[English]

Mr. Keyes: I have been attempting to work very hard for my constituents in Hamilton West on various committees with various points of view. The Hon. Member mentioned that I brought forward evidence of generalities. This evidence of generalities is the Government's own creation. I was not privy to the meetings that have taken place. Liberal MPs were not privy to the events in Switzerland. The Hon. Member and the Government was.

Two months ago evidence was brought forward and indications were made to the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Martin). She was told by the environmentalist that there was a problem and the possibility that there were trans-shipments of those fuels laced with PCBs.

Mr. Della Noce: How do you know? That is not true. You were not there.

Mr Keyes: I refer back to Hansard, and also the Hon. Member could refer to the statement made today.

On May 10, 1989 as reported in Hansard at page 1535 the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Martin) stated:

> Mr. Speaker, at a conference in Basle, Switzerland, there were conversations in which Mr. Green stated his concern about toxic waste crossing the border—

Mr. Bosley: Not fuel. Not gasoline.

Mr. Keyes: The issue came before the Government. It was placed in the hands of the Government. Mr. Green mentioned it directly to the Minister of State for Transport who is responsible for the transportation of hazardous wastes.

As a colleague of mine on this side of the House asked: Are we beaming this stuff around? We are not in the Star Trek generation yet, so how is it getting across the border? It must be getting across the border in drums, or perhaps not drums, trucks.

Acting swiftly, as it should have two months ago, the Government advised Customs that there was a problem, put some more crews on the border to ensure that those trucks or those specific avenues in which toxic wastes could cross the border were checked out, and that those trucks did not have that material in them. Let us take samples of all those materials coming across and make note of the transportation companies. That is what should have been done.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is a most interesting exchange, however, it must end. On debate the Hon. Minister of National Revenue.

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I will be as brief as possible in an attempt to set the record straight from the perspective of the Department of National Revenue.

The Liberal Member who just finished speaking seems to be as confused as was the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) today in Question Period, when he suggested that what was happening on this side of the House within the Ministry and between various Government and cabinet colleagues was inconsistent and confusing. The only inconsistency and confusion exists in the minds of the Leader of the Opposition and some of his back-benchers, including the one who just finished speaking, and most specifically the environmental critic, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), who is not only inconsistent, but in most of her statements on this matter, and her history serves her well, she is unreliable and irresponsible.

Mr. Keyes: Nonsense.

Mr. Jelinek: I will address the allegations once again, although they have been answered by myself and others very clearly over the past four or five days. This Cabinet is unified and consistent, and that is something we do not find across the aisle in the Liberal Party or in the New Democratic Party.

We have acted swiftly and responsibly. The last speaker talked about the meeting in Switzerland. When talking about inconsistency, in his last two statements the Hon. Member was totally inconsistent in that he suggested there was discussion at that meeting in Switzerland about contaminated fuel crossing the borders between Canada and the United States. When he was pressed by my colleague to come up with the facts he read from Hansard and quoted the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Martin) who has clearly stated on a number of occasions that the only discussions that took place in Switzerland were generalities about the possibility of toxic wastes coming across the border.

Through our 3,000 very professional Customs Officers across the border, the Department of National Revenue, in conjunction with the Department of the Environment, with other police forces and with provincial Governments we have instituted ongoing tests, spot checks, and random testing of toxic waste coming across the border. Because of the discussion in Switzerland that everyone is now talking about, at 5 a.m. of that morning, officials in Switzerland placed a phone call to their leadership here, to the Department of the Environment, in which they stated that Mr. Green had made this vague suggestion that there was a possibility that toxic materials—not contaminated fuel—was crossing the border. Immediately the Department of the Environment speeded up its process of blitz checks. That process was not scheduled to begin until May or June.

Those checks were speeded up, and I believe April 1 was the first check. There were several days of checks at that time, and another series of checks a week later. There was immediate and decisive action taken in co-operation with the Department of National Revenue and the provinces. Samples were taken and, lo and behold, no fuel was found to have been contaminated.

Instead of trying to come up with scare tactics, which seems to be what Members of the Opposition do on any given day, I wish they would finally realize the facts are as I have stated and as have been stated by the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Martin), the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) and other Ministers in a very consistent, responsible manner.

That leads me to the allegations made of people in Revenue Canada having known some time ago as a result of the meeting on September 11, 1987 in Toronto. As I pointed out yesterday, at the earliest opportunity upon finding out that such a meeting did take place I came to this Chamber at 11 a.m. and rose on a question of privilege. I made it very clear that—I do not have the notes from which I read so I will paraphrase—a meeting had taken place regarding tax evasion. There was an ongoing investigation by the Department of National Revenue, again in conjunction with the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec, in this instance, and there was a meeting to determine how best we could act in that respect.

During the course of the meeting it is true that an informant made mention of the fact that a truck driver in the United States told him that the truck driver thought that perhaps there was some questionable material put into his fuel tanker for transportation within the United States. At no time at that meeting was there any suggestion of contaminated fuel or the possibility of contaminated fuel flowing from the United States into Canada. Upon finding this out we contacted the seven individuals representing Revenue Canada who were at that meeting. Five of those individuals have no recollection of contaminated fuel even being discussed and the other two confirmed that, in fact, the informant said that there may have been a truck driver who may have had some waste put into his fuel tanker for transportation within the United States.

Further to that, notes were taken by two of these officers from Revenue Canada. I have reviewed those notes very carefully and I can tell you that there was no mention whatever in either of the two notes referring to any contaminated fuel, let alone the possibility of contaminated fuel coming across the border to Canada. That is why the Revenue Canada officers did not pass on information to higher sources within Revenue Canada because there was no information regarding contamination of fuel coming into Canada.

Because there is an RCMP investigation taking place into this whole matter at present, I passed along those notes to the RCMP yesterday as part of the over-all investigation. So much about the meeting in Toronto with Revenue Canada officials.

Let us get to Mr. Jim Conrad, the executive vice-president of the Petroleum Marketers Association of Canada. I guess he first told the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) about the matter, for whatever reason I do not know. Perhaps because he ran for the nomination of the Liberal Party prior to the last election in Etobicoke Centre wanting to run against my colleague the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson). He lost. He was not satisfied with that so Mr. Conrad ran for the Liberal nomination in Mississauga South after that to try to run against the chairman of our Finance Committee. He lost that nomination as well. I am not saying that there is any prejudice on Mr. Conrad's part against the Conservative Party and in favour of the Liberals—

Some Hon. Members: Of course not.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jelinek: —I am just putting on record some of the facts, Mr. Speaker.

In any event, Mr. Conrad, after making accusations at a meeting on January 7, 1987 with my predecessor, the then Minister of National Revenue, he brought up the matter of the possibility of contaminated fuels coming into Canada from the United States and we started looking at all of the records, all of them.

First, on that same day, January 7, 1987, Mr. Conrad wrote a letter to the then Minister of National Revenue. I will be happy to table the letter. It deals strictly with the strategy on tax evasion. There is no reference whatever to contaminated fuels in that letter. It seems to me that if Mr. Conrad on the same day he wrote that letter and is alleged to have told the then Minister that he was concerned about contaminated fuel that he would have made reference to it in his letter. But no reference was made in that letter.

Furthermore, on March 13, a few months later, Mr. Conrad sent a telex to the Minister's office pointing out in detail the discussions that took place on January 7 in the Minister's office with Mr. Conrad. In detail—it is a long telex—he pointed out all the things they talked about. Nowhere in the telex from Mr. Conrad to the then Minister dated March 13, 1987, is there any reference whatever in way, shape or form to contaminated fuel, let alone the possibility of contaminated fuel coming into Canada.

We go a little further. On May 20, a very nice day—it happens to be my birthday and I want Hon. Members to remember that because it is coming up soon—Mr. Conrad gave testimony to the Finance and Economic Affairs Committee. It is fairly long testimony on fuel. I did not figure out how many hours but it is hours of testimony filling about 40 to 50 pages. There is not one reference by Mr. Conrad or by anybody else in the committee hearing regarding contaminated fuel, let alone the possibility of contaminated fuel coming into Canada.

Finally, although Mr. Conrad has said that he did talk to the then Minister about this on January 7, it is very strange because we find confusion in Mr. Conrad's statement. I guess all Liberals seem to be confused and it seems he falls into that category. One day he said that he did discuss the matter with the Minister on January 7, and this morning on Canada AM and I quote: "When referring to that meeting with Mr. MacKay, Mr. Conrad said, well, the meeting focused primarily on tax evasion so we didn't deal explicitly with the toxic contamination". "We did not deal explicitly with the toxic contamination", so there you have it, Mr. Speaker. The first time anything came to my attention in a documented way in hard evidence where Mr. Conrad is concerned about contaminated fuel was today when a copy of a letter dated May 11, 1989, arrived.

We have already said that we have been aware of allegations of contaminated fuels since last Monday. This letter dated May 11, 1989, was signed by Mr. Conrad, the executive director of Petroleum Marketers Association of Canada. It is a Dear David letter, the David he is referring to is David Peterson, the Premier of the Province of Ontario. I will not read the whole letter, but Mr. Conrad states: "Dear David, you know of my strong support for you and the Liberal Government, but you have a serious problem and I would like to offer a constructive suggestion". He goes on to say,

• (1350)

"My frustrations and those of the industry and environmentalists is that your officials in the Province of Ontario, both in the Ministry of Revenue and the Ministry of Environment, have repeatedly stonewalled all suggestions and recommendations from this association. Jim Bradley is only damaging the reputation of Government when he says he has the answers when he doesn't. David, your officials don't have the answers. They are the problem, not the solution.".

This is the first time any hard evidence has come to our attention that Mr. Conrad is really concerned about the environment or about contaminated fuels. We have dug through other files including the files of the Hon. Member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) when he was Minister of National Revenue and talked to the people who were at the meeting with Mr. Conrad and the former Minister of National Revenue, and as the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) would say, not a twitter or twaddle of evidence is there that there was ever an indication by Mr. Conrad to suggest that he was concerned about contaminated fuel, let alone the importation of contaminated fuel into Canada. Let me just say, so much for Mr. Conrad and his allegations.

We are being told that we are not moving fast enough or in a co–ordinated way. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) this morning in Question Period said that Ministers do not talk to each other. He may think that because Members on his front benches do not talk to each other, the same is true on this side. It of course is not true.

As soon as this matter came to our attention through the story in The Globe and Mail on Monday, all appropriate Ministers not only talked to each other but met on a regular basis with officials to bring together a co–ordinated program. In Customs within the Department of National Revenue, immediately upon finding out that there was an indication of a concern, we developed a national sampling program which was implemented on May 10 this year. All Customs operational service managers have been notified that these inspections will be carried out across Canada.

Canadian importers dealing with these companies have been identified. Lookouts against these companies are now in our automated system and the details of any shipments involving these companies are being immediately sent to Ottawa and shared with the RCMP and the Department of the Environment. A national print–out of all importation of oil and gas products has been forwarded to Environment Canada and is being shared by the various Departments associated with this problem.

Today the Minister made a four point announcement, and the part of it that will affect Customs Canada is the reduction of the number of border points across Canada so that we can direct tanker traffic into certain border points where we can be in a position, in conjunction with the Department of the Environment and the various provinces in utilizing professional customs officers within the Department of National Revenue, to make certain that the best and fullest possible tests on fuel will take place.

At this moment my officials are working on an implementation plan and they will continue to work until that plan is ready. Once that plan is ready, customs officers will be notified. The plan will be implemented and an announcement will be made accordingly.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jelinek: Let me conclude by saying that the Government has acted. It is the responsibility of Members of opposition Parties to question and to criticize, there is no doubt about that. During my few years in Opposition, from time to time I did it once or twice myself.

However, opposition Members should not try to mislead inadvertently or to confuse or bring fears into the minds of Canadians over things that are not true or that do not exist. There is no evidence, there is no evidence. As George Bush would say, read my lips, there is no evidence that contaminated fuel is coming into Canada. There is no evidence at all.

We do not mind the questioning. We welcome and encourage it. We do not mind criticism. However, opposition Members should be honest with themselves and should not confuse or scare people. They should come up with the facts, and the facts have been stated clearly and succinctly and we will continue to conduct ourselves in the way we have been conducting ourselves, in a co-ordinated, straightforward, co-operative, fair and proper fashion.

Mr. Fulton: Mr. Speaker, the Minister, much like the Minister of the Environment seems to want to leave the impression on the record, and he concluded his remarks by saying this, that there is absolutely no evidence of any poisoned fuel coming into Canada. Perhaps the Minister could respond directly to what appeared on the front page of The Globe and Mail of May 9, 1989, something which has not been challenged by the Minister. The article reads:

> In Buffalo, at least three oil companies have blended chemical wastes into fuel products over the past four years and sold them in Canada—

That is a pretty blunt statement. It goes on to say:

> —and Western New York State, police, tax investigators and participants in the scheme said in interviews over the past five months.

It notes in the same article that over 50 interviews were taken.

In The Globe and Mail of May 8, 1989, an article reads:

> Bootleggers that sold some of the tainted fuels in Canada—Ebony Oil and J.R. Oil Sales—were in the waste-oil business at the same time.

The key words there are "Bootleggers that sold some of the tainted fuels in Canada".

I do not think the Government is dealing responsibly and appropriately with the evidence that has been put before the House that the Canadian public has a right to know about. Premier Peterson was interviewed for an article in The Ottawa Citizen of May 10. The article reads:

> But he also said federal officials had been told about the tainted fuel.
> "I'm told by some that they were (told)—that they were a part of some of these investigations. The question you want to ask is why didn't they tell their Minister".

Then another very long piece appeared on the front page of The Globe and Mail of May 8, 1989, which lists the companies involved including American Continental Oil Inc., Erie Petroleum Transfers Inc., Welch Energy Inc. and Envirosure. Those companies are all listed as companies that sold; not companies that may have sold, may have smuggled, could have smuggled or considered smuggling. It is very clear that the reporters who looked into this, the police and the tax investigators have said this.

Is the Minister suggesting that the police and the tax investigators are wrong, that all of the people who have been investigating are wrong, that only he and the Minister of the Environment are right and that the Premier of Ontario is wrong when he says that federal officials were told? The Minister is saying that they were not.

Could the Minister be very specific about the September 11, 1987, meeting at Revenue Canada headquarters in Toronto? Is the Minister today telling the House that the matter of poisoned fuels was never raised at that meeting?

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, first let me say that the Government does not make a habit of responding to any or every newspaper story that may or may not be factual or may be speculative. We deal with facts. That is number one. The RCMP is investigating this whole matter and that is another situation. I suspect, believe and understand that the RCMP is looking into any allegations that are made in the news media or elsewhere. I am not sure, but I understand that that would be the case.

Inasmuch as we in the Cabinet are concerned, we have to deal with the facts that are made available to us. We have Departments that are run by very professional people who look into the situation in a very clear and succinct way. We follow up on the information that has been given to us in a open and professional manner. We would be in a shambles as are the two opposition Parties, if we had to respond in a quick kneejerk way to any suggestion or any newspaper story that may or may not come up on any given day.

• (1400)

As far as the September 11 meeting is concerned, the Hon. Member asked me a question which I will paraphrase. I think he said: "Is the Minister saying that at no time in that meeting was there any mention in regards to contaminated fuel?" I did not say that there was not a mention in respect to contaminated fuel.

What I said was made very clear on numerous occasions. The meeting came to my attention two days ago. The earliest opportunity for me to respond was yesterday, at the beginning of the sitting of the House at 11 a.m. I rose on a question of privilege and I said that according to our information and our sources who were at the meeting—our officials spoke to all seven people from Revenue Canada—the meeting was held because of tax evasion concerns with which we were dealing in conjunction with the Provinces of Ontario and Québec and the U.S. Internal Revenue Department. An informant alluded to the fact that a truck driver in the United States told him some time ago that perhaps there was some questionable material put in his fuel tank for transportation to another state in the United States. There was no suggestion and no hint of any contaminated fuel coming into Canada.

I understand and I am led to believe that that is the reason revenue officials at that meeting—there were seven revenue officials, five from Customs and two from Excise—did not report that statement from the informant to higher officials in the Department of Revenue was that there was nothing in that one brief statement or two; I believe he referred to the truck driver twice. There was no evidence nor indication that this questionable substance that went into that one truck driver's fuel tank would be coming into Canada. In fact, the statement was made that that fuel tank would be transported from one state in the United States to another. There was no discussion about the possibility of it coming into Canada.

Mrs. Catterall: Mr. Speaker, the Minister passed comment earlier to the Minister of the Environment on the number of border inspectors available across Canada. I think the number was 3,000.

Has this number increased or decreased over previous years? What is the role of these inspectors with regard to inspecting for hazardous wastes or inspecting fuel? Do their duties relate to the issue that is under discussion today and has been throughout the week?

The Minister of the Environment referred to 34 new inspectors. I presume those are environment inspectors. What arrangements are in place for the co-ordination of their activities with the officials of the Minister's Department, particularly with the Customs officials at the borders? What particular training do these Custom officials have in the detection of hazardous wastes—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Member, but I think so far we have about three questions and the time has almost expired. I will let the Minister answer.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I would be happy to try to answer as many questions as possible.

First, on the quantity of custom officers, there is an ongoing effort to try to make better use of officers. It is true that there has been a reallocation of some Custom officers over the past few years. The fact is that there are approximately 3,000 professional Custom officers working on behalf of Customs Canada at every border crossing in the United States. There are times when others are brought in to assist during peak periods of tourist traffic and so on.

What is the co-ordination between Custom officers and environment? Whenever there is a check on toxic substances, whether it be in contaminated fuel or anywhere else, obviously Custom Canada officers must be there to co-operate with environmental officials.

I will repeat what I said earlier. At this moment officials of Revenue Canada, Department of the Environment and other Departments are working together to create a plan which we hope to implement at the earlier opportunity, whereby we will reduce the number of border points for traffic of liquid fuels. At such points there will be both Custom officers and environment officers, hopefully with the co-operation of the provinces as well, to make certain that we will be able to inspect and check as many, if not all, the fuel tankers coming into Canada as possible.

As the Minister of the Environment said earlier, there are never enough resources available. We wish there were more. The number of experts in the Department of the Environment has increased. There is co-operation and co-ordination between the Department of Environment, the Department of National Health and Welfare, the Department of Transport, the appropriate Ministers, and the Department of National Revenue. We are currently developing an implementation plan to put teams at those border crossings that we feel are the most appropriate to deal with the situation. That is the action plan we are taking, despite the fact that to date there is still no evidence that contaminated fuel is coming into Canada from the United States. The Minister of the Environment outlined this morning that the tests taken thus far prove that there was no contamination. We are taking the precaution because we are the responsible Government. We are consistent, and we are dealing with this as effectively and efficiently as possible.

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the issue being debated today is a very important one. I want to assure the House and Canadians that this Government regards it as seriously as any other Party or any other group of individuals.

A great deal of attention focused during the course of this week on the stories which appeared in The Globe and Mail beginning on Monday. As Parliamentary Secretary I have had the occasion to be present during most of the meetings which have taken place during the week. Clearly the Minister of the Environment stated before the House on numerous occasions that he learned of the allegations only when he read the newspaper account on Monday. A great deal of debate during the course of the week has been focused on what may or may not have occurred rather than on what should be done. We could waste a great deal of energy and time in the House focusing on the past rather than focusing on the future.

If all Members of the House are as concerned about the environment and the health of Canadians as indeed I think they are, then I would suggest that it would be most appropriate for the House to use the time and energy remaining in the debate today and lying ahead to try to address the concerns of Canadians which exist. It would be appropriate to put them in some sort of proper perspective and to ensure that proper procedures are put in place so that we can assure Canadians wherever they may live that they need not fear for their future when they use the petroleum products on which we in Canada so heavily depend.

I would like to take a few moments this afternoon to talk about the petroleum industry because it is a very, very important part of the whole process. Certainly there has been a great deal of discussion about the the role of Governments at both levels and interested individuals. The petroleum industry is one which must be a very integral part of the process. It must be a very valuable partner if we are to make sure that the measures that need to be in place are there, and if we are to reassure Canadians as we would wish to do.

To be realistic, I think there is a certain tendency in Canada on frequent occasions to malign industry, particularly if it happens to be big industry. Perhaps we are all somewhat guilty of that. I would suggest that the petroleum industry in Canada has in recent years spent vast sums of money, millions of dollars, upgrading its facilities to ensure that its products are as protective of the environment as they possibly can be.

It has demonstrated its willingness to be part of the process, to confirm the recent announcement of the Minister of Environment that the use of leaded gasoline will be banned by December 1, 1990, a full two years sooner than had originally planned. It has indicated its ability to co–operate with that deadline.

I am certain no one more than that industry has been alarmed by the reports in The Globe and Mail during the course of this week. Certainly anyone who has read them cannot help but be disturbed by them. There have been allegations that tainted fuel has been coming into Canada. Perhaps this is a fact. We have to remember that these are allegations rather than proven facts. There is also the allegation that there are connections with organized crime, which of course alarms us all.

One of the reasons we are so concerned is the fact that any talk of PCBs is alarming to us all, particularly those of us who are lay people and may not even understand the nature of PCBs, let alone what their impact on the environment or on individuals could be.

Earlier this afternoon we heard a debate within a debate about how the science community is reported to have responded to PCBs and about the concerns of other members expressed at those reports.

I am afraid I left my chemistry back in first year university, but what is evident is that it is very difficult to dispose of PCBs. They must be burned with great care. They are very persistent and therefore a tremendous danger to our environment.

When we talk about tainted fuel, we must first of all appreciate the fact—and this has been said here on several different occasions this afternoon—that there is as yet no evidence discovered by the many people who are now part of the process. There has been no evidence found of tainted fuel. As I say that, I do not dispute the allegations in what is obviously a very well researched series of articles in The Globe and Mail this week, indicating that there has been a number of investigations, that a number of samples have been taken at the border, and that to date there is no evidence of PCBs being found.

We would perhaps be naive if we were to sort of hang on to that as evidence that there need not be reason for concern. It is important to remember that we are dealing with the fact that the evidence has not yet been found. It may indeed well be found.

The question which the motion before the House addresses, is important. It deals with how the Government has responded to the crisis that has emerged, how the Government has responded to the concerns which have been expressed. I would suggest that the Government has responded exceedingly well this week, bearing in mind that there has not been a lot of hard information, there have been rumours, and there has been fear expressed.

The Ministers within the federal Government immediately began to correlate their activities among themselves. I saw several meetings of Ministers take place this week, those who have a concern—Customs, Revenue Canada, Health, Transport, and Environment. At the same time meetings were set up and contacts were made with counterparts in the Provinces of Ontario and Québec. I attended briefly a meeting this morning at which there was a Minister from the Province of Alberta. I know that communication is passing from the federal Government to all other provinces.

In addition, there was a meeting last night between representatives of the petroleum industry and officials from Energy, Mines and Resources, from Environment, from Health and Welfare, and from Customs and Excise, to review what is known and to plan for the future. The emphasis throughout the course of the week has been on the need for government at all levels, the industry, and the interested parties to work together in a co-operative manner in order to plan for the future and to address the reported problems.

If indeed we are considering what is good for the country, what is good for Canadians, and what is in the interest of those who are here and those who are watching on television, I would suggest that the emphasis should be on what is needed to address the possibility of tainted fuel coming into Canada. It is far more important to plan and work together in co-operation than it is to launch allegations back and forth across the hall, back and forth across the House or on television with respect to who said what to whom at what particular time, or who did not say what to whom at any particular time.

I believe there is a message for us as parliamentarians in the polls, in the sense that public opinion polls have told all of us who are interested in listening that the environment is a very major issue in the minds of Canadians, that there is a great deal of concern of people of all generations.

There is this interest in the environment and this fear for the future. Recently I came back from Helsinki where I attended a follow-up conference to the Montreal Protocol meetings, and it was evident that there were far too many CFCs in the environment than we would wish. What is particularly distressing is that the CFCs which are there will remain there regardless of what we do by way of reduction of emissions for a hundred years.

I think the public is now beginning to tell us as politicians and as parliamentarians that the problems of the environment are far, far too important to be diverted by partisan differences and partisan debate within the House of Commons. If indeed there is an issue before this House which deserves and needs the attention of the House in a non-partisan manner, I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, and to all Members of the House that that issue is the environment.

We may often disagree in terms of what is needed to be done. We may disagree on who is most capable of doing it. However, surely, we should never disagree on the importance and the difficulty of the task which lies ahead. While we can afford our partisan differences, and while perhaps they are a necessary part of the cut and thrust of parliamentary debate, I believe Canadians are telling us pretty loud and clear that they do not want politicians spending an entire day in the House of Commons trying to score political points. What they really want are politicians to work together in order to develop a strategy that will ensure that the gasoline we buy in the pumps when we go home for the weekend, regardless of whether we buy it from an independent or we buy it from one of the major suppliers, is what it is purported to be and that the air we breathe is as free of contaminants as we can conceivably make it.

If we are to achieve that objective, we must keep our partisan considerations at least to a minimum. We certainly would have to be exceedingly naive if we were to assume that they would ever disappear. I see an Hon. Member across the hall who sat with me on the Agriculture Committee in the past. One thing that always pleased me about the Standing Committee on Agriculture was that I think we were essentially as non-partisan in that committee as we could ever be. We recognized that the problems in agriculture did not all originate within Canada. They could not all be blamed on the Government, or government at any level even though there is sometimes a temptation to do that.

• (1420)

If we were really to develop policies to assist the Canadian farming community, we realize that it has to be done in as much of a spirit of non-partisanship as possible. I believe we came admirably close to that objective.

I suggest that members of the Standing Committee on Environment take up the task of examining all the information that is before us this week. That would be a very appropriate challenge for that committee.

I believe the most productive way, for all of us who are sincerely concerned about the environment, to address the issue is to focus on what is needed in the future rather than on what may or may not have occurred in the past.

It is essential that the industry be considered as a partner in that process. That is why I believe it was extremely important that the industry met with officials last night. I hope it has the opportunity to meet with provincial officials as well in the near future. It is important that they have agreed to meet again.

I had the opportunity to attend a meeting this morning. While I sat in the room I did not think about the politics of the people there. It was only after a few moments that I realized that the Minister of the Environment who was chairing the meeting, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and their counterparts from the Provinces of Ontario and Québec were not of the same Party. Of course, that is true for the Minister from the Province of Alberta as well.

The fact that they were not from the same Party was not relevant to the discussions that were taking place. I believe there is a lesson to be learned from the interaction of officials. There is a lesson to be learned from the interaction of Ministers, which all of us in the House of Commons could learn particularly with reference to environmental matters.

Canadians are telling us that this issue is the most important one in Canada today. It is the most important issue for the next decade and perhaps the next century. PCBs last for a long time. CFCs last for five generations. We are talking about a problem that has great significance for Canadians for generations to come. That is why it is essential that we work together to devise a strategy to resolve the problems at hand.

Today the Minister of the Environment dealt with proposals for the future and the possibility of adding more toxic substances to the Hazardous Waste Act. That is why I stress it is important to look to the future and keep our differences to a minimum so we may concentrate on what is needed for the well-being of the country in the years ahead.

Mr. Keyes: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member said that the Government is responding exceedingly well to this situation. The fact is that the Government has shown an appalling neglect to this situation.

This morning on a television program broadcast across the country, Mr. Daniel Green, the Montreal environmentalist, was asked: "Can you tell us what you told Canadian officials in Switzerland earlier this year?" He said:

> I knew what was going on. I informed Canadian officials of my concerns. I specifically talked about my concerns dealing with the use of fuel oil being used in industrial boilers and greenhouses, oils being imported from the States used in my province in Québec.
> When I spoke to government officials they seemed very much concerned. I was relatively specific in my allegations.
>
> When I spoke of course to the Minister's office and to the Minister of State for Transport and her assistant, being less technical people, I wonder today if they really understood the whole implications of the environmental implications of burning tainted fuels, burning them improperly and contaminating Canadian environment.

This was brought forward this morning on television.

If someone with credibility came to the Hon. Member two months ago to express concern about the use in industrial boilers and greenhouses of fuel oils tainted with PCBs, oils being imported from the United States and used in the Province of Québec, what would we have done with that information?

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, the question raised by the Hon. Member for Hamilton West concerns what I was talking about during the course of my speech, and the task of going back and trying to create what was said or not said.

I too listened to Mr. Green on television this morning. I heard him use the term "relatively specific" as the Hon. Member quoted. I have to ask what the words "relatively specific" mean, particularly bearing in mind that earlier this week Mr. Green was quoted in The Gazette as saying he had not talked about this in specifics, but talked about toxic waste in general.

We should be debating today what has transpired since Monday. It was on Monday that the Minister of the Environment learned about the crisis which may exist with the movement of tainted fuel into Canada. I say that to the Hon. Member with as much certainty as I am capable.

I believe the Minister is sincere. I may say in passing that I suspect that he will prove to be one of the most effective Ministers of Environment we will have.

Mr. Keyes: What would you have done?

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Let me say that I reflected very carefully on everything that was said to me in Helsinki last week to ensure, quite frankly, that there were no casual conversations of which I was a part and may not have fully understood as a lay person. There are many such casual conversations, the scientific significance of which I may not understand.

In a situation like that which the Hon. Member poses, I would have to evaluate it based upon its meaning to me.

The Minister of State for Transport is obviously the object of the questioning directly. She said that she ensured that the professionals who were about her, of which there were many, informed their superiors here in Ottawa. If I recall correctly, the telephone call was made to Ottawa at 5 a.m. She knew then that the appropriate thing had been done.

Last week in Helsinki, if I had talked to Dick Buxton, an internationally distinguished expert on CFCs, and he made a contact back to Ottawa to his superiors, I would have assumed, based upon my knowledge of the issue, that he had done the right thing.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, both the Parliamentary Secretary and the Minister earlier this afternoon said that there is absolutely no evidence of any contaminated fuels crossing the border.

I assume that this assertion is being made on the basis of the results thus far from the sampling that was undertaken in a remarkably prescient border blitz from April 11 to April 13, given that the Government claims to have known nothing of this matter prior to last Monday. However, serendipity does work in human affairs.

As I understand it, during this blitz on April 13, 383 trucks were checked from which 113 samples were drawn. Of these some 30 to 35 were samples drawn from fuel trucks.

According to The Globe and Mail this morning the results of the testing of these samples have been received from the Ontario Government for 12 such samples. Certainly, less than half of all the fuel samples taken is a statistically insignificant amount.

I am wondering if the Parliamentary Secretary has some other sampling on which to base his contention that there is no evidence, or if perhaps he has received more samples than have thus far been publicly reported. Perhaps he is jumping the gun just a tad in this instance, rather as the Government did in the matter of the Budget leak, where in the 24 hours immediately following the leak, there was absolutely no question that the leak was but a consequence of theft. There was no question that it was undertaken by a criminal. These are judgments which seem since to be somewhat tempered.

I was wondering if his assurance in this instance might not become similarly tempered over the next little while.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the latter part of the question posed by the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Harvey), he suggests that we are guilty of jumping the tad?

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): Jumping the gun a tad.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Jumping the gun I am familiar with. I would have thought given the tenor of questions in the House in the last four or five days that that is the last thing that we would be accused of. Surely, we have been accused of the very opposite throughout most of the week.

What I have said and what others have said is that based upon the test results that have been completed—

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): Which are how many?

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): I cannot answer that. I did not do the testing. I am repeating information given to me by officials. There is no evidence that PCBs have been discovered. That is not to say that I am suggesting to the Hon. Member or to anyone else that we could ignore blithely the rather remarkable articles which have been published in The Globe and Mail. I do not discount that possibility. In fact, I worry about the possibility, which is exactly why there have been as many meetings and as many conferences for as many hours as there have been in the last five days. In that activity the Government shares the concern of the Hon. Member and the concerns of others.

We are simply repeating what the facts are at the moment. The facts are that there has been no evidence of PCBs having been found. I am happy if that is the case. However, I would not go out and bet the farm on the fact that that will always be the case.

I do not think there is any evidence whatsoever of irresponsibility in the manner in which we have responded during the course of the week. My defence of what we have been doing is a very acceptable defence, going back to the starting point. That is to say that on Monday of this week the Minister and many other Ministers realized there was an extremely serious issue of tremendous concern to us, to Members opposite and to all Canadians. That is why, as I have said, the steps have unfolded as they have, and why they will continue to unfold until we have convincing evidence.

The preliminary evidence that is there now I would not pretend for a moment should be interpreted as convincing evidence. Nevertheless, it is the evidence which is available to us.

Mr. Sid Parker (Kootenay East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to enter into the debate. During the past week Members of the House have expressed their concern about the performance of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard). Some have even called for his resignation. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has responded by singing the praises of his Ministry and calling on the entire House to support his efforts in protecting our environment and the health of Canadians.

When we look at the record of what has been happening in the Ministry of the Environment, we see the tanker problem on the West Coast. The wildlife there is suffering. The whole environment of the West Coast has been attacked. According to the Ministry, no one could foresee that everything was not safe and all right.

Here we have a situation in the United States where it has been identified that from state to state there is a problem. Both the Ministry of the Environment and the Ministry of National Revenue did not see forward enough to feel that possibly these types of things might be taking place in Canada. That is not acceptable.

The Minister has praised the Environmental Protection Act. I would like to speak about that Act. I wish to look at the administrative duties, especially with regard to what is expected of the Minister. The Act states that the Minister should take both preventive and remedial measures in protecting the environment. He should take the necessary steps to protect the environment while making social and economic decisions. He should endeavour to act in co–operation with the Governments of the provinces to protect the environment, and encourage the participation of people in Canada in making decisions that affect the environment.

He should facilitate the protection of the environment by the people of Canada, and endeavour to establish nationally consistent levels of environmental quality. He should provide information to the people of Canada on the state of the Canadian environment, and apply knowledge, science and technology to resolve environmental problems. He should endeavour to protect the environment from the release of toxic substances, which is what we are talking about here today. He should endeavour to act expediently to assess whether substances in use in Canada are toxic or capable of becoming toxic.

At the very least the Government should come forward immediately and start to test all greenhouses in Canada. It should take samples from their oil tanks to ensure that there is no toxic material to be found.

At this time of year greenhouses are producing vegetables which will be distributed throughout Canada and planted in our gardens. If the fuel being used is toxic and these young plants are being distributed across Canada and planted in our gardens, then I think the Canadian people should know.

If such a situation has been taking place for two years in the United States and the Government has said it has checked since Monday then, my goodness, once the word is out we cannot expect those oil carriers to carry this toxic fuel into Canada anymore. The Government should at least make some checks across Canada in various areas. It knows where these greenhouses are. The oil tanks in these areas could be easily checked. It would give us some idea that the Government is ready to take some action.

I want to speak for a minute if I may about the Environmental Protection Act. I think it has some very serious loopholes in it. I have in my riding a small community called Elko, British Columbia. The citizens of that community have been subjected for the past three months to one of the most blatant and underhanded uses of the burning of waste chemicals from a pulp mill. The pulp mill is operating under outdated technology which is its right under the Act since it was built before 1971. This company, Crestbrook Forest Industries, is now in the process of trying to establish a new pulp mill in Alberta to the tune of $1.3 billion. At the same time that this is going on, in the small community of Elko it is being allowed to take caustic chemicals from its pulp mill to an open, outdated beehive burner and burn them into the atmosphere.

No one knows the ramifications of this process. For the past year this community has been fighting that process through the waste management branch. It has spent $17,000 of its own money. When a company comes forward with an idea such as this, there are no provisions for the people involved to have some revenue to fight this big company, and to identify their concerns. What will happen when this chemical comes out of the stack and into the grass and the cattle eat it. This has never been done in North America before, and it is something that is very serious to them.

Early in March I met with people from the Department of the Environment and brought this issue to their attention. To date I have not received a response from that Ministry with regard to the serious problems that could be caused from that type of activity. Elected representatives from the State of Montana, approximately 20 kilometres away, object to this process. The residents in the community object to it. The Ministry has not even shown the courtesy of conducting a simple test to assure the people that they are protected, or that there are serious problems concerned with it.

Because of the fight by the residents of Elko, and because of the representation we have made, with support from the State of Montana and the people backing us there and the workers in the mill, the company has decided to withdraw and quit. However, it was not because of the efforts of the Ministry of the Environment. It was because of the efforts of those individuals who put forth their own money, time, and effort to ensure that their environment was protected.

We have a very serious problem. We have a Minister who talks about the environment, but does very little about protecting it. When we are faced with even the possibility of poisonous materials mixed in with gasoline and fuel oils, the people of Canada deserve to know that the Government would go back two, three, or six months to check that fuel in various areas of Canada to ensure that it is clean. If it is not clean, then definitely the Department should do some checking as to the effects of those plants on the environment, or the people involved with it. It is a very serious matter, and one that we must deal with, and deal with now.

Members of the Government state that members of the Opposition do nothing but oppose. We have called for an all-committee investigation of this matter, but the Government does not want an all-committee investigation. It knows if members of the two opposition Parties become involved the truth would finally come out and the people of Canada would finally know what has taken place with regard to the Department of the Environment.

It is not good enough for us to have to identify the problems on the West Coast with regard to oil tanker spills and the damage to the environment. It is not good enough when we identify those subjects that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) rises in the House and praises his Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard). It is not good enough that the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Jelinek) should rise in the House and state that his Department is quite clean, it has done its duty and carried out its process. That is not good enough. The Canadian people want more.

I have petitioned my constituency with regard to the environmental problem that we had in our riding. I received one of the biggest results in return with regard to the issue of burning those chemicals in an outdated burner. The Government had better start to address the environmental problems. It had better start now, and not only do it by attending conventions in Europe or in other countries, but start addressing the problems in Canada both with regard to the handling of dangerous chemicals, the effect it could have on our population, and with regard to the individual's right to live in a clean and healthy environment.

If the Government is going to act responsibly with its Environmental Protection Act, it should also include a section stating that when a company applies to carry out a project that could result in some environmental damage, and people want to attend a hearing to express their concerns, that that company should supply some funding in order that the people would be able to attend a hearing to express their concerns and conduct the research needed to address the problem that the company is trying to impose on them.

If the Government was acting responsibly with the environmental Act, it would place into the Act a provision that some funding would be made available in order that the respondents, the people who will be affected, will have an opportunity to receive funding to do the research to counteract what the company is saying, and to use that research in a responsible manner.

In this way we would all know that both the company and the residents who are living in that area will be protected and will feel that they have had their say, and that it has been conducted in a responsible manner with research required to be able to combat that type of a procedure. That is what must be done. It makes me mad when I see the Minister of the Environment rise in the House and tell us what a great job his Department is doing.

I wrote to the Minister with regard to these problems. On March 9 I met with an official from the Minister's office to request that his Department test effluence from a pulp mill that was burning waste chemical products in an outdated burner. I had the samples with me and I was told that the samples could not be used, they would get their own, and that they would get back to me.

One month later, on April 3, I received a letter from the office of the Minister acknowledging that the meeting took place. I know that the meeting took place. Imagine writing to me and acknowledging that the meeting took place. It took one month to acknowledge the meeting, a meeting that was very detrimental to the area. The residents wanted some answers and they continued wait.

On April 25 I wrote to the Minister to update him on the situation and explain the growing urgency. This time I received an acknowledgement of my letter, and nothing more. The residents had waited with agonizing patience, and on May 4 again I wrote to the Minister and have yet to receive a reply. The Minister tells us what a great job his Department is doing. I told him where the problem was. I had the sample with me if he needed it, and to date I have not received an answer. The people in that riding stood up and fought to stop the project taking place. I am proud of the efforts of the citizens in the riding. However, I want to say to the Minister that he better start addressing the question, and he better start addressing it now. His Department had better start recognizing that it has a responsibility to the people of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay (Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the dedication and enthusiasm with which the Hon. Member approaches this problem, but there is one specific point: my colleague mentioned the propriety and even the need for this issue to be debated in the Environment Committee. The Deputy Prime Minister answered a similar question today, saying that he was quite willing for the Hon. Member to bring this question before the committee. So I wish the Hon. Member would be consistant and do just that. What is his problem? The Deputy Prime Minister opened the door for him to bring the issue before the Committee, and now he accuses the Government of refusing to do so.

[English]

Mr. Parker: We are looking for action. We are not looking for a study. We in the official Opposition want to be part of the discussion with the Government. We want the Government to take some action, action such as I have suggested. Let us have some recommendations to test some of those tanks in various areas, especially in the greenhouse areas. I ask the Member to make that suggestion to the Minister. Check the fuel oils and the tanks in some of these areas. At least let the citizens of Canada know that the Minister is prepared to do something, not on Monday because he only knew about it on Monday, according to him. We know this sort of thing has been taking place in the United States for over two years. We know that trucks have been coming back and forth across the border.

• (1450)

It would seem to us in this Party, and I am sure to those in the Liberal Party, that the right thing to do would be to do some testing. This testing should not be done at the border because the culprits will not be there tomorrow or the next day, we can bet on that. They are going to hide somewhere. These people are experienced enough to know that. But let us do some spot checks in the storage areas and let us check some of these tanks. But if you look in areas where you know you will find nothing of course you will find nothing.

Mr. Milliken: Something is better than nothing.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate my colleague on his speech. At the same time, I want to raise with him the following proposition which I was hoping to raise earlier on with the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Jelinek), who is responsible for Customs and Excise. Unfortunately, I was unable to do so as a result of time constraints.

However, I do think that the House should be aware of what I am going to raise and I will ask my colleague to respond nevertheless.

In the constituency that I represent the port of entry is at Cornwall, Ontario, at the International Bridge. It is a very busy port of entry, not in terms of its volume compared to others, but in terms of the workload of the staff. As a matter of fact, one day last week there were no less than five runs at the port. In other words, people stop but when an officer asks them a question they floor the accelerator and leave. That happened on five different occasions in Cornwall on May 3, Mr. Speaker.

The staff there have been informed, and have told me, that there will be cut-backs at that particular port of entry of no less than five people.

What does my colleague think of that kind of dedication by the Government toward protecting the port of entries? Given these cut-backs at busy ports of entry and the ports of entry where the staff cannot manage or do a thing about the situation, would it not be the right and better thing to do to increase staff, to give better protection instead of cutting back, particularly at times when we hear about inappropriate products entering our country?

Mr. Parker: Mr. Speaker, I thank you for the question, which is a very important one. If that is what is taking place, there are very serious problems with regard to other things such as drugs, immigration and so on. If those kinds of haphazard activities are taking place at the border then it is no wonder we are being faced with these kinds of problems. This is the problem with a Government that believes in cutting back, hacking away at various programs, doing a lot of talking but doing very little. I think you have identified a very serious area and it is one that I hope the Government will do something about.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, would the Hon. Member agree that the announcement today that fuel tankers coming into Canada will be permitted to enter at only 50 locations instead of the 150 or so currently in place would be an appropriate way to ensure that the accuracy of the testing and the flow of traffic is more carefully monitored?

Mr. Parker: Mr. Speaker, I cannot agree with that at all. To say that you are going to block off certain areas is saying that you want to cut back. The staffing requirements have been cut by such a degree that there are not enough people to carry out the inspections needed.

Mr. Boudria: You cannot do the job. It is an admission of failure.

Mr. Parker: That is precisely why we have the problems we have today.

Mr. Fulton: There are as many people giving out parking tickets in Ottawa as there are inspectors across the country.

Mr. Parker: My colleague tells me that there are as many people giving parking tickets here in Ontario as there are inspectors at the borders across Canada.

My answer is no, definitely not. The Department has to get on with the job and do the job with adequate numbers of people in areas where they are required. In all sincerity I do not think that honest truck drivers and honest people in the transportation industry should have to go extra mileage to cross the border because of this Government's attitude toward inspections. Inspections should be taking place. If we have crossings, we should have people carrying out duties to make sure that Canadians are adequately protected. I cannot agree with the Hon. Member at all.

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, fortunately debate has just arrived at the point in which I am particularly interested. The question has been raised this afternoon as to whether the Opposition should be opposing or not. Perhaps it is worth while to remind Members opposite of the reason in our parliamentary system that this side of the House is called Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition. It is called that because the role of opposition is fundamental to maintaining and protecting the rights of the public to know. It is also to ensure the accountability of the Government to the public.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: Write that down folks. That is important.

Mrs. Catterall: Mr. Speaker, a key question is whether the Government in fact is continuing to provide the resources necessary to ensure the health and safety of Canadians as well as giving them adequate services.

For two weeks we have been talking about how, where and with what effectiveness this Government uses the resources of Canadians to provide services to them. Throughout the last few months in looking at the kinds of cut-backs that have taken place in the Public Service, in the allocation of human resources to the provision of services mandated—may I remind the Government—by this Parliament to Canadians, we have identified that cut-backs have led to deterioration in air safety, in the inspection and certification of carriers and pilots operating in this country while the number of people and planes flying has increased. We have identified that decreases in the numbers of inspectors and lack of adequate training has led to the deterioration in the protection of the food supply coming into Canada. We have identified, as substantiated by the Auditor General's report, that there is inadequate inspection to secure the health and safety of Canadians regarding pesticides and other food additives. Now we see the same thing occurring concerning the protection of Canadians from the entry of contaminated goods into our country.

The Minister of Revenue spoke about reallocation and about making better use of resources. What he did not tell us is what those resources are and to what extent they have been cut. The Minister mentioned that we have 3,000 inspectors. That is quite true. That is approximately 600 less than we had a few years ago. I notice from the Estimates Part III with respect to this Department that in response to the Government's request to downsize the Public Service it will yield savings of 954 person-years between 1986-87 and 1990-91. That is approximately a 10 per cent reduction in the staffing of the Department which is now supposed to be responsible for protecting Canadians from the entry of contaminated fuel.

Mr. Boudria: More cut-backs.

Mrs. Catterall: Let me quote from Part III:

> Emphasis is on achieving reductions without compromising service levels, government revenues, or the safety and security of the Canadian public.

That is exactly what I want to speak about this afternoon.

• (1500)

The result of this downsizing in this and other Departments is overwork, lack of the specialization required to handle problems like this, cut-backs in the number of border inspections, cut-backs in the efficiency of inspectors, and increases in overtime and therefore costs per inspector. Rules and regulations have changed at the border to try to accommodate this reallocation of resources. This has resulted in the kind of confusion that led a Customs inspector, not two months ago, to let into Canada a shipment of meat in the same truck as, and unprotected from, hazardous chemicals. It has led to cut-backs in the standards for inspections from 20 per cent of shipments to in some cases only 5 per cent of shipments coming in. That is what improved services with the same resources has meant to Canadians.

In air safety there has been a total shift from preventive regulation to enforcement after the fact, after accidents, deaths and injuries. If emphasis is being put on the inspection of fuels coming into Canada, from where will those resources be drawn? Just how much more can a reduced number of inspectors be asked to do at the border? They are being asked to implement zero tolerance with respect to drugs entering Canada. That is the priority for this year in the allocation of Customs officials. Now there is a new priority to inspect every tanker coming into Canada. This will add costs to the industry doing business in Canada by having them go hundreds of miles out of their way to go through another port because we do not have the resources to put inspectors at the most convenient border points.

We now have two high priorities because they are public issues. Where are the resources coming from? What kind of inspections will suffer? Will there be fewer inspections of food? To what extent was the inadequacy of resources responsible for the fact that when the Government of Canada was invited to participate with Ontario in the sweep inspection for hazardous wastes crossing the border it refused? The sole extent of its co-operation with the Government of Ontario was to allocate space at border points. Is that a positive response to a hazardous situation?

Just for the information of government Members, out of the 383 trucks that were stopped and tested during those four days of stepped up sweep, 18 charges were laid, not counting charges that will be laid out of 113 samples that were taken and were considered sufficiently questionable to have to be sent to laboratories for analysis.

The cut-back in resources is already having an effect that will be exacerbated by a new priority with no new resources. I would like to refer to a couple of situations that have come to my attention. At the Port of Niagara, there are line-ups of one to one and a half hours. Tourists and Canadians returning to Canada are being inconvenienced to that extent. Tourism operators at a number of border points are complaining about the effect this is having on tourism. Customs officers are being asked to work overtime and to work on a rotational shift that was abandoned in 1974 because it was considered inefficient and inhumane. Businesses in other areas are being affected.

There is a loss of revenue to Canada resulting from the lack of resources. More is being lost than anything that is being saved by reducing the number of people that are provided at borders for inspections.

Businesses are experiencing delays and difficulties in getting their goods released because there are not enough inspectors. Goods are being released without being inspected by commodity specialists and are therefore being undercharged on duty. The taxpayers are paying the cost of that.

We have heard a lot of talk this week about what Mr. Green had to say. One of the things he said was that what was required for inspectors at the border was training in the detection of hazardous wastes, and that is why I asked the Minister that question. Apparently there has been no contact with the union responsible for Customs and Excise inspectors at the borders, either in early April, when we were aware of additional inspection activity in the Province of Ontario, or since. There has been no attempt to solicit the co-operation or advice of the union on how an improved inspection process could be implemented.

Another concern arises out of this. For three years now, there has been a much more intensive investigation of fuel coming into Canada, not out of concern for the health and safety of Canadians or for the risks to the environment but out of concern for revenue. For three years, inspectors have been checking every shipment aside from those of major, well-known oil companies. Any independent truck coming into Canada has been tested to make sure that it is shipping home fuel and not diesel fuel when that is what it claims it is shipping. Those tests are still being carried out by border inspectors.

Have the border inspectors been warned that that testing may in fact be hazardous to their health? I can tell Hon. Members that they have not. Have we shown any concern for their health and safety at any time in the three-year period or at any time since whenever it was that Ministers of the Crown became aware of the potential risk? We have not. This is just one more incident that demonstrates that there is a very cavalier attitude toward the men and women who perform responsibilities on behalf of the people of Canada as directed and resourced by Parliament. We are not giving them sufficient resources or sufficient training. We are not giving them adequate protection from the health risks involved in their occupations.

We are asking them to take on crackdowns on drugs, new regulations under the Free Trade Agreement, reduced inspections, increased inspections and changed working conditions. We are not giving them the resources to do the job and now we are asking them to take on one more priority. I challenge the Government, if it wants that to happen, to give the people the resources to do the job, give them the training to do the job, and protect their health and safety while they are working for the people of Canada.

• (1510)

This has been a long debate, but I think it has been a worth-while debate on behalf of the people of Canada. I think that the Opposition, I say in all modesty, has admirably done its job in holding the Government accountable in this debate.

Mr. Turner (Halton—Peel): Mr. Speaker, I would take exception with a few comments. The debate certainly has been long, but little new information has been added. We have seen a lot of politics played at the expense of the environment. The Hon. Member who just spoke mentioned that government inspectors had been concentrating more on finding revenue rather than, as she alleged, protecting the health of Canadians and that they have been inspecting fuel products crossing the border to discover those which are attempting to escape taxation. At the same time, the Hon. Member is going on about not having adequate resources applied to the inspection routines.

First, does she not understand that we need to examine all possible sources of revenue coming into this country and that if we have shippers coming in who are escaping taxation, they should in fact be made to pay? Is that not a legitimate purpose of the inspection?

Second, with a country that is going $80 million a day into new debt, from where exactly is the Member going to get the moneys that we need? Where exactly are we going to cut back? How exactly are we going to hire all these new people to fulfil this? Do we not have a responsibility to our future which is twofold, that first we must pass on a clean environment to our children and that second we need to stop polluting and have a better Canada? At the same time we cannot pass on a country that has a crushing debt load to its future citizens who will face nothing but an erosion of their personal income, plus a major decline in services we are able to provide. If 30 cents of every dollar is going to interest now, and if it will be 50 cents of every dollar in two years, where does the money come from? I am interested in knowing what the Member would like to say?

Mrs. Catterall: I return the challenge to the Member. He is a member of the Government. I suggest he look at the Budget, look at the Estimates, and look at what are the sacred cows that were not touched by his Government. What are the major programs that were not touched and whom do they benefit? The Government should have a look at those figures rather than ask the opposition Party to govern the country on its behalf.

The Hon. Member has raised a couple of questions. Yes, of course the people of Canada want to get as much revenue as they are legitimately entitled to. Two objectives can be accomplished very effectively. If oil is being checked in any case to increase revenue, it might as well be checked for hazardous waste at the same time. That would be a very efficient use of government resources.

It is not efficient when the Government reduces staffing to the point where, under the Government's own 30-day rule, goods coming into this country are released to businesses without adequate inspection to make sure that they are paying the proper taxes. That is what is happening at a number of entry points. It is not in the interests of the people of Canada for the businesses of this country to be carrying additional expense because Canadian Customs does not have enough people to inspect and release goods within a matter of days rather than weeks. That is a cost to business and that is a cost to all consumers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. We have roughly one minute remaining. We will divide the minute in half: 30 seconds for the Hon. Member for Lotbinière, 30 seconds for the Hon. Member for Ottawa West.

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, you could not have done better because all I need is 30 seconds to ask her the following question.

The Hon. Member of the Loyal Opposition is highly critical, so perhaps she might explain how it was that four years after her Government passed the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act in 1980 we still had no regulations, there were no inspectors, nothing at all four years after the adoption of the legislation. How do you explain that?

[English]

Mrs. Catterall: Mr. Speaker, I think the question belongs more properly to the Government that has just passed an environmental protection law about which it bragged quite extensively throughout October and November. It has not put in place any regulations nor resources to enforce that Act. It does not even have within the Act itself the mechanisms of enforcing what it bragged about so loudly, so well, and I must say so convincingly. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, one of the things I am finding a bit tiring is this political revisionism where the Government pretends that it is not responsible for what is happening to the Government of Canada.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 36(8), I have the honour to table, in both official languages, the Government's responses to two petitions numbered as follows: 342–0014 and 342–0015.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

MEASURE TO CHANGE NAME OF MARKHAM CONSTITUENCY

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham) moves for leave to introduce a Bill intituled, an Act to change the name of the electoral district of Markham.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I introduce my Bill to change the name of this riding from Markham to Markham—Whitchurch—Stouffville. The new riding boundaries take up every inch of these two towns of Markham and Whitchurch—Stouffville. I think this will more properly recognize the residents of the northern part of the riding and, as well, remove some confusion.

There is a provincial riding of Markham which comprises only Markham. This change proposed by Bill C–240, will be a good step forward and I look forward to early passage of the Bill, hopefully, next month.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

VIA RAIL SERVICES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36. The petitioners point out that the Government of Canada has failed to provide the resources necessary to fulfil its promises of improved passenger rail service in the country. They believe that the Government, as a result of its failure to act, is now considering cutting back VIA Rail services. The petitioners are calling upon Parliament to maintain, improve and modernize VIA Rail service in those areas of the country where it can provide a more rapid, economical, safe, convenient, environmentally sound and energy efficient alternative to other means of transportation.

DROUGHT RELIEF PROGRAM

Mr. Rex Crawford (Kent): Mr. Speaker, I am presenting a petition signed by the residents of the riding of Kent who were unfairly and with no justification left out of the drought relief program.

Under the new federal program, the drought areas are defined on a township basis and not by areas that were hit the hardest. The 1988 drought hit the areas of Howard Township, Orford Township, Camden Township and Kent County. All those areas suffered losses and were ignored. There are cases where neighbours are separated only by a road and who suffered equal damage. One person was able to receive drought relief and not the other.

I urge the Government to reconsider its position regarding drought assistance.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 7 and 49.

SUBSIDIES TO THE CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY FOR THE TÉMISCAMINGUE AND VILLE-MARIE SUBDIVISIONS

Question No. 7—Mr. St-Julien:

Has the government made any grants to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the Témiscamingue and Ville-Marie subdivisions, in the province of Quebec, and, if so, in each case (a) in what amounts in what years (b) what was the actual rail traffic for the year?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): The federal government has paid Canadian Pacific branch line subsidies (not grants) under Section 256 of the Railway Act, with respect to the Temiscaming and Ville-Marie subdivisions, as follows:

Year	Subsidy ($) *	Traffic (carloads)*
1977	0	636
1978	145,238	647
1979	380,442	634
1980	515,725	612
1981	430,679	499
1982	924,730	152
1983	945,090	5
1984	684,887	4
1985	554,850	0
1986	171,121	0

Total subsidies paid $4,752,762

* Combined figures for Témiscamingue and Ville-Marie subdivisions

The portions of this line, for which subsidies were paid, were ordered abandoned effective 19 February 1986.

REVIEW OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ECONOMIC REGIONS

Question No. 49—Mr. Rodriguez:

Has the government completed its review of the economic regions under the Unemployment Insurance Act and, if so (a) what are the results of the review (b) what impact will the proposed changes outlined in Success in the Works have on the regions?

Hon. Barbara Jean McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): The review of Unemployment Insurance Economic Regions which was announced in August of last year is still on-going. Since the review has not been completed it is not possible to consider what impact the proposed changes outlined in "Success in the Works" will have on any configuration of regions which could result from this review.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

APPROPRIATION ACT NO.1, 1989-90

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of an amendment made by the Senate to Bill C-14, an Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending March 31, 1990.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the Government's interim supply Bill for 1989–90, Bill C–14, was approved by this House on May 4, 1989. The Bill has been reported from the other place with an amendment which states that the four special warrants signed by the Governor General earlier this year shall be deemed to have been legal. This House must now decide whether to agree or disagree with this amendment.

On the surface, the proposed amendment appears innocent, but it is not so. This amendment suggests that the actions taken by the Government through the use of special Governor General's warrants earlier this year were indeed illegal. This inference is wrong.

The request for special warrants and their approval on my recommendation by the Governor General was fully consistent with the laws approved by Parliament. When the Bill was reviewed in the other place, its legal counsel stated that the Government's actions were fully consistent with the laws approved by Parliament.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I do not want there to be any doubt on this matter. The record shows clearly that the Government's actions were proper and legal.

To accept the amendment would imply that Ministers of this Government have acted illegally. To accept the amendment would be to suggest that the actions taken under an Act of Parliament were illegal. To accept the amendment is to imply that the Governor General acted contrary to the law. The amendment referred to this House is not an innocent minor change.

Over the past few days, as this matter has been debated in the other place, fact and opinion have tended to be mixed together, creating confusion and uncertainty. I want to ensure that the facts about the use of special warrants are clearly on the record.

[English]

I would first like to review the circumstance surrounding the Government's use of special warrants. As most Hon. Members know, the second session of the Thirty Third Parliament had met almost continuously for 24 months before being dissolved for the General Election of November 21. After the election, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) convened Parliament a mere three weeks later in order to complete the business of the previous Parliament on which the people of Canada had spoken out so clearly and convincingly.

It has been a long time since Parliament has been convened so quickly after an election. Certainly, no Prime Minister in the last 40 years has convened Parliament within three weeks of a General Election. The opening session of the new Parliament, as the Speech from the Throne on December 12 made clear, was to deal with the free trade legislation. Once the free trade legislation was approved, the House agreed to adjourn on December 30.

[Translation]

The Government on December 16 did table Supplementary Estimates "B" for the 1988–89 fiscal year, clearly informing this House of its need for further supply for that fiscal year.

As supply had not been dealt with when the House adjourned, the Government requested the Governor General to approve special warrants. Section 30 of the Financial Administration Act provides that special warrants may be approved when the House is adjourned.

Let me turn directly to the question of legality which is raised by the proposed amendment. Parliament has provided a process for the continuing and orderly operation of government when it is not sitting. That is the fundamental essence of Section 30 of the Financial Administration Act: to provide interim funding so that the business of government can continue uninterrupted until Parliament is able to deal with the important matter of supply.

Section 30 of the Financial Administration Act cites three criteria which must be satisfied before special Governor General's warrants can be drawn: first, Parliament is not in session; second, there are no available appropriations from which to satisfy these requirements; and third, there are payments which are urgently required for the public good.

[English]

The first condition which must be satisfied is that Parliament is not in session. There is no dispute that Parliament was not in session. However, I would like to clarify an important point about how the Financial Administration Act defines not in session. Section 30, paragraph (5) states without any qualifications or conditions that Parliament is deemed to be not in session when it is under adjournment. This section was tabled in 1951 explicitly to enable the Government to obtain special Governor General's warrants that are required when Parliament is under adjournment. The Parliament of the day clearly intended that special Governor General's warrants would be issued under this provision.

It is reasonable to assume that when Parliament amends an Act such as as the Financial Administration Act, it expects and accepts that it will be used. As the Speaker stated in the House on May 2 of this year, there is no inference that the words "not in session" were to be restricted to dissolution periods.

The second condition that no other appropriations are available is a factual determination. I assure Hon. Members that there were no other appropriations available to meet these obligations.

The third condition requires that there is a payment urgently required for the public good. The interpretation of this section has received much attention in recent weeks. I would like to assure Hon. Members that the interpretation of this section used by the Government was consistent with all previous requests since 1896 for the issuance of special warrants by the Governor General.

In reviewing the use of special warrants, the other place has attached a novel interpretation to the concept of urgency. It has associated that concept with the state of Parliament's condition, suggesting that a distinction is required according to whether Parliament is dissolved, prorogued or adjourned. The condition of urgency provided for in Section 30 is related to the payment that must be made, not to the varying states in which this House may be at any particular time.

• (1120)

The counsel to the other place did advise that it was improper to imply in an amendment that the actions taken under a provision of the law which had been complied with would be illegal. In other words, there is no basis for making legal what is already legal. The flaw in the proposed amendment cannot be stated any clearer.

[Translation]

I would now like to address the matter of how Parliament has been kept informed. In every instance that warrants were issued, there was an almost immediate reference in the Canada Gazette. For example, the January 19 warrant was gazetted on January 28, well in advance of the 30–day requirement established by the Financial Administration Act. Furthermore, on April 12, one week before the required date, I tabled in thise House a statement for the 1988–89 fiscal year which provided to Parliament more disclosure than had ever been provided before about how the warrants were used.

Mr. Speaker, the matter before us requires resolution today. The special warrant signed by Her Excellency the Governor General on April 1 was intended to cover the Government's requirements for the first 45 days of this fiscal year. It was expected that this could allow time for Parliament to consider and approve the interim supply bill.

The House has certainly lived up to its responsibilities and, as agreed by all Parties on April 4, the House approved interim supply on May 4, one week after the Main Estimates were presented.

Failure to receive Royal Assent for Bill C–14 today will require that the Government cease to make payments from appropriations to be voted for any goods to be received, services to be rendered or benefits to be provided after midnight tonight.

This will mean that a number of government suppliers may not receive on time the payments which they have earned. What will be the consequences for businesses which rely on receiving these payments?

Mr. Speaker, Canadian veterans may experience delay in receiving their pension and allowance payments. Canada's debt to our veterans is surely sufficiently great that we should not create the anguish that a delay in payment may cause many of them.

Members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are scheduled to receive their bi–weekly pay cheques by the end of this week. We expect them to maintain our national security and law enforcement at all times. Their remuneration should not be delayed for a "very small point", to quote an Honourable Member of the other place.

[English]

This is an important matter that requires our immediate action, Mr. Speaker. The Government is interested in ensuring that those who have earned their payments receive them from the federal Government in the timely manner which they have anticipated. I have established, Mr. Speaker, that there is no question of impropriety or illegality. I accept the opinion advanced by the legal counsel of the other place:

> The law according to its own term has been complied with.

Accordingly, the Government is not prepared to accept the proposed amendment. I recommend that this House send the following motion back to the other place.

I move, seconded by the Member for Etobicoke Centre (Mr. Wilson), the following motion:

> That a message be sent to the Senate to acquaint Their Honours that this House disagrees with the amendment made by the Senate to Bill C-14, An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending 31st March, 1990, because this House believes that the special warrants signed by the Governor General on January 19, February 16, March 23 and April 1, 1989 are already legal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate. The Hon. Member for Kingston and The Islands (Mr. Milliken).

[Translation]

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate on the Minister's motion concerning the amendment proposed by the other place to Bill C-14. I believe that the amendment proposed is good and necessary and should be passed by this House for the reasons I shall give now.

[English]

The motion, in my view, is essential to the rights of Parliament, that is, the amendment that has been proposed by the Senate and that this motion seeks to destroy. In my submission, what we are discussing here today is fundamental to the rights of this House and to Parliament in general. It is a subject on which I have spoken several times in this House during the course of this session on questions of privilege and on points of order. Mr. Speaker, with your indulgence, I would like to review some of the events that have led up to the discussion we are having today.

The principle on which we are operating in this Chamber is that of the supremacy of Parliament. While it may seem tedious to go back to certain authorities on this subject, in my submission, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) needs some assistance in his attempts to determine the intent and meaning of the amendment that has been proposed by the Senate in this case. The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) says, "No". But I would like to refer to higher authorities, and I have some here. I am sure he will recognize some of them. I would like to turn first to the late A. V. Dicey's book called An Introduction to the Study of the Law of the Constitution. I am referring to Tenth Edition, 1959, page 69. Mr. Speaker, the learned author says:

> Parliament can legally legislate on any topic whatever which, in the judgment of Parliament, is a fit subject for legislation. There is not power which, under the English constitution, can come into rivalry with the legislative sovereignty of Parliament.
> No one of the limitations alleged to be imposed by law on the absolute authority of Parliament has any real existence, or receives any countenance, either from the statute-book or from the practice of the courts.
> This doctrine of the legislative supremacy of Parliament is the very keystone of the law of the Constitution.

I repeat, "the very keystone of the law of the Constitution". It is my submission, Mr. Speaker, that what the Government is doing here today is tampering with that keystone.

The concept of the supremacy of Parliament is not one that just happened overnight. It was developed in the United Kingdom and transported to this country over hundreds of years.

Dicey, in his learned treatise, in a footnote on page 69, deals with part of the historical reason why Parliament got control of expenditure and revenue. I would like to read part of the footnote from page 69:

> The historical reason why Parliament has never succeeded in passing immutable laws, or in other words, has always retained its character of a supreme legislature, lies deep in the history of the English people and in the peculiar development of the English constitution. England has, at any rate since the Norman Conquest, been always governed by an absolute legislator.
> This lawgiver was originally the Crown, and the peculiarity of the process by which the English constitution has been developed lies in the fact that the legislative authority of the Crown has never been curtailed, but has been transferred from the Crown acting alone (or rather in council) to the Crown acting first together with, and then in subordination to, the Houses of Parliament. Hence Parliament, or > in technical terms the Queen in Parliament, has become—it would perhaps be better to say has always remained—a supreme legislature.

This notion of Parliament having supremacy was determined on the basis of expenditure and revenue. It was determined in the course of a series of struggles between Parliament and the King. I need not go into all the historical details, but I can remind Hon. Members—perhaps the Minister of Justice will be interested to hear this. I will save that deeper aspect for another day.

• (1130)

The transfer of these powers took place in the course of a lengthy struggle which culminated in a civil war in the United Kingdom which started in 1642. Hon. Members will recall that the struggle in that civil war was between Parliament, which claimed to have control over the expenditure and the revenue-gathering functions of the state, as against the King. King Charles I ultimately lost his head as a result of that struggle in 1649. At that time Parliament essentially gained control of the purse-strings, a control which it has tightened up over the years since that time. I do not pretend that things have not changed since 1649, heaven knows they have, but the changes, I submit, are important only in the sense that the principle has been left untouched and, if anything, has been strengthened.

Why did Parliament go for the purse-strings? Because the legislators in Parliament in those days, as today, know that the person who pays the piper calls the tune. The person with control of the money effectively controls the Government. The situation in England was a little different. It had a king who happened to have a lot of manorial interests. He owned a lot of estates and lands and had various means by which he could raise money without resorting to parliamentary approval. He got that money in and he paid the money out without the authority of Parliament.

As time went on and as the role of Government grew in society, the revenues that the king derived from these sources became smaller and smaller as a percentage of the total requirements of the Government, so further recourse was had to Parliament to raise money by way of taxation. As soon as that authority was requested, Parliament began attaching conditions to the granting of money to the Crown.

That procedure was transported to Canada when this country was established. Our forbears struggled for and obtained the notion and principle of responsible Government in the legislatures of the various provinces of Canada before Confederation. That principle of responsible Government requires that the Government be responsible and report to the legislature, and that its spending plans and priorities be introduced in and be adopted by the legislature prior to the expenditure of public funds.

I would like to turn to authorities on this point that describe the financial relationship between the Crown and Parliament. I would refer to Beauchesne's Sixth Edition, 1989, page 183, citation 595. Basically, it is a direct quotation from Erskine May's book which I will be referring to presently. The citation has been amended in Beauchesne's to reflect the Canadian experience. It states:

> The Crown, being the executive power, has the responsibility for the raising and spending of money. Acting through responsible Ministers, the Crown makes known to the Commons the financial necessities of Government. The Commons grants such aids and supplies as are necessary to meet the demands of the Crown and provides through taxes and other sources of revenue the ways and means to meet the supplies that have been granted. The Crown, therefore, demands money, the Commons grants it and the Senate assents to the grant. The Commons does not vote any money except for the necessities of the country as defined by the Crown.

Clearly the responsibility for determining the necessities of the country lies with the Government. That is undisputed and that is why we have the Royal Recommendation as a requirement on all the money bills that come to this House.

The statement of the law that is laid down in Beauchesne's reflects not only the Statutes of Canada, but also the constitutional practice which is very much a part of our laws.

I turn now to Erskine May, twentieth edition, and a paragraph very similar to the one I quoted, but instead of referring to the Senate it refers to the House of Lords. At page 750 Erskine May describes in more detail the nature of this relationship between the Crown and Parliament. The learned author writes:

> The financial relations between the Crown and Parliament defined in the preceding paragraph took shape during the period while the King still governed through ministers responsible to himself, and the House of Commons only exercised a negative control through its power to withhold supplies. These constitutional relations have been maintained in essential continuity, despite the establishment of Cabinet government dependent upon the support of the House of Commons. In the Cabinet, powers derived from two different sources are combined without being confounded. As Ministers of the Crown, its members initiate policy and conduct administration. As leaders of the majority of the House of Commons, they secure authorization of their policy through their influence over their supporters.

Over questions of financial policy it may be that the influence of ministers normally avails to reduce the House's power of control to a right to criticize, exercised chiefly by the Opposition. But the twofold powers concentrated in the Cabinet—the one group exercised in virtue of statute or the prerogative, the other based on convention—

And I stress the words "based on convention".

> —are alike contingent on the continued support of the House of Commons and liable to be forfeited through the loss of that support.

At page 751 he states:

> The financial control of the House of Commons is exercised at two different levels. As an agent in the formation of policy, it authorizes the several objects of expenditure and the sums to be spent on each; it also authorizes the levying of taxes. On the level of administration, it satisfies itself that its expenditure decisions are duly carried out—in other words, that the sums it has granted, and no more, are spent for the purposes for which they were granted, and for no other purposes. For both sets of functions the House of Commons has, partly through its own procedure, and partly through legislation and administrative practice, secured appropriate machinery.
> The procedure and machinery for the control of financial policy—the presentation of estimates, the budget, the voting of estimates, the business of Ways and Means—form the subjects of the chapters that follow.

The learned author is clearly describing the way in which the House performs its basic, fundamental and very important constitutional functions in relation to the control of expenditure and taxation.

Another paragraph which may be of interest is on page 761. Again, the learned author is discussing relations between Parliament and the Crown. That paragraph states:

> Financial practice began to take shape during the long period when the King enjoyed a non-parliamentary revenue which was expected to provide for the ordinary needs of government, and when no legal sanction fettered his discretion in disposing of the supplementary revenue granted by Parliament. During all this period the Commons, as a body traditionally in favour of royal economy, naturally abstained from taking the initiative in offering money to the Crown. The practice of demand preceding grant had accordingly solidified into an invariable rule before Parliament began to take steps to appropriate its grants to the purposes for which they were demanded. Hence, in the matter of Supply, no Standing Order of the House of Commons was necessary to maintain the principle of the financial initiative of the Crown.
> When, with the commencement of parliamentary control over the Exchequer, the granting of Supply was differentiated into two functions—the votings of sums of money and the provision of revenue by taxation—it was accepted without question by the House of Commons that the rule applied to both of the now clearly distinguished functions of Supply and of Ways and Means, and to any business which belonged to either of those classes.

The precedents concerning the control of finance in the House of Commons go back hundreds of years. We would do well to regard those precedents as binding in Canada under our constitutional practice. While they may not be codified in any particular place, nevertheless, in my submission, they are clearly part of our law.

I would now turn to more recent times. Mr. Speaker made a ruling, reported in Hansard of May 2, 1989, at page 1176 which contains a description of the Canadian practice in relation to the granting of supply.

• (1140)

I want to read two paragraphs of that ruling because I think they accurately state the current law in Canada:

> The House of Commons has an important role to play in this complicated process.

He is talking about the process of Supply:

> It is in the Commons where the Government's projected expenditures—known as the "Estimates"—are first tabled and the legislation to implement the estimates—known as the "Appropriation" Bill—is introduced. Section 53 of the Constitution Act, 1867 stipulates that all financial legislation, and this includes Government expenditures, must originate in the House of Commons. This requirement is reaffirmed in the Commons's own rules of procedure, more specifically Standing Order 80(1), a point which was clearly referred to by Hon. Members the other day.
>
> As a result of the fact that Main Estimates for the upcoming fiscal year are usually adopted at the end of June, the Government could be without funds from the beginning of the fiscal year in April to the end of June.
>
> The rules accordingly provide for the Government to request an advance against the Main Estimates which is known as Interim Supply. From time to time during a session, the Government may > also require additional funds which are introduced by way of Supplementary Estimates.

In this case, as we will see in a moment, we had Main Estimates introduced but only after the Government had dished out to itself some $6 billion of the money that was contained in those Estimates by special warrants.

In his ruling, Mr. Speaker referred to Section 53 of the Constitution Act. I will read it again. Section 53 provides:

> Bills for appropriating any Part of the Public Revenue, or for imposing any Tax or Impost, shall originate in the House of Commons.

There is no dispute that the Chair agrees with that. I am sure the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) agrees with that. It is part of the law of Canada.

The Financial Administration Act is the Act upon which the Government is relying for the procedure that it has followed in respect of these special warrants. I want to take a moment again to refer Hon. Members to Sections of that Act because the Minister referred to them in his speech this morning. I think it would be more clear if the Act were read in detail. Section 26 of the Financial Administration Act provides as follows:

> Subject to the Constitution Acts, 1867 to 1982, no payments shall be made out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund without the authority of Parliament.

The Financial Administration Act itself contains that provision for no spending without parliamentary authority. Yet the Government is spending by special warrants. Where is the authority?

The Minister relies on Section 30 of the Financial Administration Act. To be fair, I will read the relevant provisions of Section 30. Section 30(1) states:

Where a payment is urgently required for the public good when Parliament is not in session and there is no other appropriation pursuant to which the payment may be made, the Governor in Council, on the report of the President of the Treasury Board that there is no appropriation for the payment and the report of the appropriate Minister that the payment is urgently required for the public good, may, by order, direct the preparation of a special warrant to be signed by the Governor General authorizing the payment to be made out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

I will skip to Section 30(5) because I do not believe the other provisions are relevant.

Mr. Kempling: Read it all.

Mr. Milliken: Hon. Members would like to hear the whole thing. I will send them a copy.

Section 30(5) provides:

> For the purposes of this section, Parliament shall be deemed to be not in session when it is under adjournment sine die—

These words the Minister left out from his quote of the Section:

> —or to a day more than two weeks after the day the Governor in Council made the order directing the preparation of the special warrant.

I will return to those words because in my submission Section 30(5) is essential to an understanding of the reason for the amendment that the Senate has proposed to this Bill.

Resort has been had to the Financial Administration Act or its predecessors over the years. The earliest precedent that we have been able to determine is 1896. I think that is common ground on both sides.

The Minister has given evidence before a committee of the other place on this matter. I am sure he is as aware of the precedents as I am, if not more aware.

The fact is that in all the cases where these warrants have been used, save one, they were used during the time between the dissolution of Parliament and the commencement of a new Parliament, not a new session or a different session, but a new Parliament.

As I understand the precedents, the only case where it did not happen was in 1896, when urgent repairs were needed for a leaky roof.

What we are faced with here today is something quite unprecedented. As I have said on numerous occasions during the course of discussion on this Bill and in my question of privilege on April 6, this is a case where the Government is using Governor General's special warrants to meet ordinary pay day requirements, and using them between the times that Parliament has met and is available to deal with the business of Supply.

I think the facts of this case are most important. I want to turn to Clause 3 of Bill C-14, which refers to the date upon which these special warrants were issued. There were several warrants that were offensive in the sense that we are discussing this morning. A warrant was issued on January 19, on February 16 and March 23, 1989. Those were in the last financial year. Then an additional warrant for about $6 billion was issued on April 1.

The Government itself is seeking confirmation of the original three warrants in this Bill under Clause 3. In effect, it is acknowledging that if there was any impropriety with respect to the issue of those warrants, it is being cleared up by this Bill.

The Bill does not deal with the special warrant issued on April 1. I suppose if there were varying degrees of impropriety, I would rank this as the most gross distortion of the practice that has arisen in respect of this matter.

This procedure is totally unprecedented. I raised the matter in the House on April 6, five days after the issue of the warrant. I gave notice to Mr. Speaker of my intention to raise the matter if not two days before, the day before early in the morning.

The matter was also raised by me on three occasions in one way or another on May 4, the day the Bill was passed in the House. I only refer to the discussion that took place on that day to say that on no occasion has the Government cited any precedents to support the actions that it has taken in respect of this matter. Every time I have raised this matter I have been told that whatever the Government has done was in accordance with past practices, yet not one example of that past practice has been cited in the House in support of the position the Government is taking in this matter. There was not one cited today and there has not been one cited in any other place that I am aware of. I can understand why. It is totally unprecedented. It is new, and I suggest that it is wrong. It goes contrary to the general thrust of our constitutional practice.

In this case the Bill was passed in accordance with a special order on May 4 and went to the other place for consideration, for some sober second thought. I can only say that I think that sober second thought is extremely important in consideration of this matter.

The suggestion that the Senate amendment to this Bill somehow suggests illegality is unfair. I believe that what the other place has sought to do is clear up any ambiguity that may have arisen because of the use of these warrants. In order to justify the use of these warrants, the President of the Treasury Board must be relying on Section 30(1) and 30(5) of the Financial Administration Act.

This matter has been discussed in the House before and Mr. Speaker made a ruling. I want to refer again to page 1179 of Hansard of May 2. Mr. Speaker said:

> As to the argument that the law has been breached, Hon. Members have other avenues available to them to demonstrate and establish those facts.

Mr. Speaker left open the question whether there had been a breach of the Financial Administration Act and of the Constitution Act in dealing with these warrants. I suggest that one of the other avenues Mr. Speaker may have had in mind is the other place. Clearly, there was a group of men and women who were receptive to the idea that there had been some hanky-panky. There are other avenues, and another avenue has been pursued. I suggest it is an avenue that has yielded some good results.

• (1150)

We have the Minister today telling us that the other avenue, as he intends it, is in court. Why should we as Members of Parliament have to go to court to defend the rights of this place? This is the highest court in the land. Surely we should not have to run down to the Supreme Court to obtain a ruling to see whether or not the Government has acted illegally. Surely, we should be able to determine that here.

I ask the Government to look at this amendment again. I ask the Government to look at it in a different light. Do not look at it as a criticism of what it has done. Look at it as a constructive attempt to correct what may or may not be an error.

Mr. Lewis: Say that with a straight face.

Mr. Milliken: Hon. Members may laugh. They are laughing at the rights of Parliament being trampled upon in this case.

We say that this amendment is reasonable. We say that there is a risk that what the Government has done in this case is illegal. We ought not to be putting in uncertainty by passing an Act in this House, or even in the other place, that does not deal with the ambiguity that has been created by the actions of Government.

I would like to look at the reasons why we believe the Minister may have—and I stress the words "may have"—acted improperly in granting these warrants. The fundamental principle of our Constitution, as I have indicated, is that it is this House, and Parliament in particular that retains control of expenditures. What has happened here is the Government tabled Supplementary Estimates on December 16. Those Estimates effectively provided for the provision of additional moneys to the Government for purposes that had not been approved by Parliament. It then gave itself those moneys by way of special warrants between the sessions of Parliament. In other words, without having the House of Commons or a single committee spend a single day looking at any of the Supplementary Estimates the Government decided that those Estimates were as good as law and it had Her Excellency sign a special warrant. The Government took that money out of the Public Treasury and spent it on these matters which were unauthorized in so far as Parliament was concerned.

That runs clean contrary to the principle of parliamentary control of expenditures. If we are going to control them, then we have to review them first. That is why Estimates are normally tabled in March. This year we did not get them until May—or was it late April? If not that date, then it was the very last day of the sitting in April.

Mr. Lewis: It was by House order.

Mr. Milliken: The Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) says that it was by way of House order. That was the latest date that they could have been tabled. If there had been in place a good administration then those Estimates would have been forthcoming long before that day. They would have been tabled on the first day we were back, April 3. Instead, we waited, waited and waited to the end of the month to get the Estimates. We now have to consider these things while the money is being spent when normally consideration of those Estimates would be embarked upon prior to the expenditure of the money. There would have been a request for interim supply earlier and dealt with before the financial year began. We did not have that.

If Parliament is to retain control of the spending plans of the Government then, in my submission, we cannot have the money requested by Supplementary Estimates, have the House adjourn and have no dealings with those Estimates but simply dole out the money by the Government helping itself with special warrants.

Mr. Harvard: They want it both ways.

Mr. Milliken: The Hon. Member is absolutely right. The Government wants it both ways.

The second reason why I think there is doubt as to what the Government is doing is that the Financial Administration Act has never been used in this way before. This is a totally unprecedented method of using the Financial Administration Act, that is, to have the warrants signed and to dole the money out. It has never been done before.

Surely, if constitutional convention is to mean anything the practice established under constitutional principles must mean something. The practice in the country has been that these warrants are usable at certain times. Every other jurisdiction in the Commonwealth has got rid of these warrants. In every other jurisdiction the Government must turn to the Legislature to obtain approval for the money it will spend. However, in Canada we have stayed with this, if I may call it so, antiquated system for the convenience of the Government.

Convenience is one thing when Parliament is not around because it has been dissolved, or before it is recalled after an election. Once it has been recalled then, surely, the Government must consider the convenience of Parliament in deciding whether or not it should spend money and allow Parliament to make that decision.

What we have here is an abdication of the Government's responsibility to call this House back in good time and say: "We need your help. We need these expenditure plans approved. Take your time, criticize them and make up your mind whether or not you want to allow it to happen. Give us the money". Instead, the Government had special warrants signed and said: "Now, approve all this afterwards". We are being asked to approve it in this Bill.

The third reason why I think the practice is irregular is that the Government itself has a special vote in the Estimates for contingencies. It has access to money voted by Parliament which it can use to tide itself over difficult moments when it runs short in one area and needs to apply additional funds. The vote is always granted by Parliament. There have been arguments about it but it always gets its way on this one. Treasury Board Vote 5 is named: "Government Contingencies".

In this year's Estimates $360 million were set aside for this little contingency item.

I would like to read what it says to describe this vote. This is the statement of authority that Parliament gives to the Government to use this $360 million. I would point out to Hon. Members just how vague it is. I am reading from the Main Estimates 1990–90:

> —Subject to the approval of the Treasury Board, to supplement other votes for paylist and other requirements and to provide for miscellaneous minor and unforeseen expenses not otherwise provided for including awards under the Public Servants Inventions Act and authority to re-use any sums allotted for non-paylist requirements and repaid to this appropriation from other appropriations.

In other words, the money in this vote could have been used for the items contained in Supplementary Estimates B and then repaid when the Supplementary Estimates were approved. In fact, we know what happened. The Government spent the whole of the $360 million and then when it needed additional money it just had a warrant signed instead of coming to Parliament and asking for Supplementary Estimates B.

That is not a proper way to run the administration of the Government of Canada. The Government had a constitutional responsibility to come to Parliament and to ask for the money instead of proceeding with Governor General warrants.

Those are the three reasons why I believe there is doubt cast on the validity of the warrants. As long as the doubt exists, surely the amendment that has been proposed by the Senate which does not condemn the Government in any way clarifies that ambiguity and brings these warrants into their true light and indicates that they are not illegal, and that the next time this happens there may be another opinion. It leaves open the issue. It does not allow this to be a constitutional precedent which, in my submission, the passage of the Bill without the amendment will do. By rejecting this amendment it is saying: "Yes, we were right in bypassing Parliament in this way. Yes, it is fine for a Government to trample on the rights of Parliament and to ignore the essential right of Parliament to control the expenditure of money in this country".

That is not what the people of Canada want. It is not what we were elected here to do. That includes the Members of the Government on the other side.

There is another principle in our Constitution, that is, the principle that the sovereign is the fountainhead of all justice. Indeed, in former times the Queen's or King's subjects could appeal to the monarch for relief from the problems that they were confronted with as a result of an unfair decision or harsh treatment by someone in authority over them. For that reason Members know that the King and the monarch in olden times established courts which could override manorial courts and lesser courts throughout the United Kingdom. We have transported that notion of the Crown's right to establish courts to this country. Now it is fettered, of course, by Parliament and the control that Parliament exerts over the Crown prerogative in that respect. It is similar to the process I described earlier.

• (1200)

One of the things that happens in this transfer is that the Crown exercises its prerogatives of mercy and of judicial control through a particular person, and that is the embodiment of all justice in this House, the Minister of Justice and the Attorney General of Canada (Mr. Lewis). Now, Mr. Speaker, one would have thought that someone in his position, the fountainhead of all justice on behalf of Her Majesty in Canada, would have acted in a judicial manner. Yet I have here an article that appeared in the Globe and Mail last Friday, and to say that I was shocked when I read this would be putting it mildly.

I would like to read what the Minister of Justice said, sir. These are not all his words but it will become obvious when it is. The learned writer, Mr. Windsor, of this column said:

> The Government will not accept the Senate censure of some financial shortcuts it took when Parliament was recessed this winter, Conservative House Leader Doug Lewis told reporters yesterday.

I believe that is a reference to the Minister of Justice, Mr. Speaker.

> He indicated that the Government will try to swing public opinion against the Upper House by mobilizing sympathy for war veterans whose pension cheques could be delayed next week because of the Senate move.

I will skip down another paragraph.

> Veterans' regular pension cheques are due to be processed Tuesday and if the impasse is not sorted out by then, "We will give any veterans who call the phone number of Senator Allan MacEachen, the Liberal Leader in the Senate" Mr. Lewis added. The Government could get its spending Bill passed with simple resolution by the Commons concurring with the Senate's amendment. However, that would imply an acceptance of the Liberal criticism.

So Mr. Lewis told reporters the Government will be refusing the amendment and sending the Bill back to the Senate.

An Hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, does that sound like a Minister of Justice threatening the Senate, threatening these veterans with their pension cheques? Why would the Minister of Justice not say, "Well, the amendment that the Senate has proposed is fair and just, and so of course we will agree to it because we have the veterans' interests at heart."

Instead of that, he is trying to use the veterans as a whipping boy—

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Milliken: —to threaten the Senate, to threaten the other place. I say that it ill behooves the Minister of Justice to carry on in this way. He laughs, Mr. Speaker. All Hon. Members opposite seem to laugh when I talk about constitutional propriety. But they have an equal obligation with us on this side to uphold the Constitution of Canada, and I say that it is being breached in this case.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Milliken: Now, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) made similar statements. Let me read from the same column:

> The Liberal move was also criticized by Treasury Board President, Robert de Cotret. "They are arguing on a very minor procedural matter which should be debated in another forum", he said. "They are putting at risk a number of Government suppliers, Government employees and recipients of Government payments. That would be a very sad event should they not get them".

Mr. Speaker, here we have the same Minister this morning who made a statement and I would like to read from his statement, because he said in the newspaper column that this should be argued in another forum. I do not know why it would not be argued in the highest court in Canada, right here in Parliament, but he does not want to argue it here. He does not want to hear about it in this House. He does not want to hear about it in the other place. He wants to go by Governor General warrants. The only person he has to convince to sign those is Her Excellency and then he does not have to go outside the bounds of the Cabinet room. It can all be done secretly and hush-hush. He said in his statement this morning, and I will quote him: "To accept the amendment is to imply that the Governor General acted contrary to law". So he said it was not illegal. He went on at some length to say it was not illegal. Why would he go and argue in another place if the Minister has this view? He is not inviting argument anywhere. He is saying he is right and that is all there is to it.

Why not accept the doubt and pass the amendment and get on with the matter instead of maintaining one position and stonewalling, and trying to make the Senate into a big bad wolf? Because that is exactly what the Government is doing. I suggest that the big bad wolf in this case is the President of the Treasury Board. I have some evidence that will back that up that I will give you in a moment, Mr. Speaker.

I would like to turn to the excellent work that has been done in the Senate and in the other place on this matter. This Bill was sent there and was referred by the Senate in its wisdom to its National Finance Committee which deliberated for some time and reviewed the provisions of this Act and the irresponsible way in which the Government had dealt with the control of the expenditures of this country. I would like to turn to the witness that the Senate Committee on National Finance called on Wednesday, May 10. They called someone who is an acknowledged constitutional expert in Canada. This person is not an expert who is acknowledged just as a Liberal expert by any means. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) refers to him at times as a constitutional expert. The Leader of the New Democratic Party has frequently referred to Senator Eugene Forsey as a constitutional expert. He was dragged out of retirement to speak on the subject of the outrage that had been committed by the Government in relation to its duty in dealing with financial matters in this House.

I would like to read some of his testimony before the Senate National Finance Committee.

An Hon. Member: Don't get too selective.

Mr. Milliken: I would not want to be selective. The Minister of Justice knows that I would not want to be unfair in my quotations. Dr. Forsey in his testimony at page 14 of the National Finance Committee proceedings said:

> When Parliament has been recalled and is there to vote supply, and when Supplementary Estimates have actually been presented, never before has there been this recourse to the Governor General's special warrants and I think it is wholly improper—

Those are the words of Dr. Forsey.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Milliken: There is a lot more, Mr. Speaker. On page 17 of the same proceedings, he said:

—The Senate has a duty to preserve the rights of the people.

Indeed it does. The Minister of Justice can make his speech later. I think the Minister of Justice can wait.

Mr. Lewis: Keep going.

Mr. Milliken: He continued:

The House of Commons failed in its duty,—

Because the majority here, of course, stifled all opposition.

—just as it did shortly after the 1984 election on a subject of a borrowing bill. The Senate refused to pass the borrowing bill until the Estimates had been tabled. In that case, the House of Commons also fell down on its duty and the Senate had to preserve the rights of the people under the Constitution.

This is another example of the misuse of its majority in this House. Then he goes on at page 18:

Exactly the same is happening now, in my judgment—that is, the House of Commons has fallen down on its duty and the Senate has to preserve the rights of the people under the Constitution.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Milliken: Oh, there is more, Mr. Speaker. There is more. Senator Frith on page 23 of the report asked the question of Dr. Forsey. He wanted to know what we—the Minister of Justice should control himself. Senator Frith said: "What can we do with this impropriety?"

What do you suggest we do? Is there any way open for us, other than refusing to pass the bill?

Dr. Forsey's answer was:

No, I do not think there is. I suppose that will make some people's hair stand on end, but I think that is the only way to stop it.

The next question, then, will be: What will follow that? Then I think the Government would have to draw up a new bill making whatever provision it considers necessary for the public service and including a retroactive clause dealing with this improper exercise of the use of Governor General's warrants. The wording would be "shall be deemed to have been" a legal action. That makes it retroactively legal but, as I see it, it does not commit Parliament to confirming what has been done for all time.

That is what Senator Forsey recommended. I suggest that what the Senate did was rather than defeat the Bill and cause a hubbub, it made a very small amendment incorporating the very amendment that this acknowledged constitutional expert suggested and put it in the Bill and sent it back to this House, and now the Government is saying: "Oh, no, we can't have that. It might imply criticism of our wrongful acts." If these acts were right the Government would have no worries about this anyway and it would let this amendment through, because on any reading there is no criticism of the Government in the wording of the amendment and that is perfectly clear.

Now I would like to turn to page 35 of the same evidence. Again we have some excellent words from Dr. Forsey on this matter. He said:

I do not think the question of whether it is a majority Government or a minority government is vital. I would agree that a minority government has more of an obligation to meet Parliament promptly than a majority government. I still think that Parliament ought to be summoned within a reasonable length of time, though I would agree that there is less pressure upon a majority government. The fact remains that this government did summon Parliament. As I understand it, it tabled some supplementary estimates when Parliament was sitting. It did not proceed with those estimates at all. It proceeded to do the things that have been described.

First, the government adjourned Parliament, and then it prorogued Parliament without making use of Parliament while it was there to be used. The government could have perfectly well dealt with this matter, and should have dealt with it according to proper usage.

He goes on:

The thing that is dangerous about this practice is, as Senator Stewart pointed out—and, if I remember correctly, was again pointed out by Senator Stollery—that if you accept this kind of action, then there is nothing to prevent a government from holding a one-day sitting, like Mr. Mackenzie King did in 1940, and then postponing the session. One day per year would be enough.

You say, "Oh, but no government would ever be unreasonable, no government would ever do anything wicked, no government would ever do anything improperly." I wish I had your faith. I remember what various people said and what I certainly said myself with great fervour when Mr. Mackenzie King dissolved Parliament after a one-day session in 1940. It was the most outrageous breach of proper constitutional practice. Heaven knows, I hold no brief for Mr. Mackenzie King. On the other hand, I have said on occasion that such and such a thing that would be dangerous to my mind is perfectly constitutional. I am not concerned with who does it or what party is involved. I do not belong to any party now.

Those are the words of Dr. Forsey.

• (1210)

I have one more quote on page 37 of the same report, Mr. Speaker. Talking about the Government's actions in this matter, he said:

> I think the practice is unreasonable, even though it was a relatively short delay, because of the precise circumstances which existed. That is the point. The danger is, as Senator Beaudoin has said, that you cannot fix an exact period, you cannot say two months, three months, four months or nine months. How many grains make a heap? At some point it becomes obviously improper. If you have the precedent of it being done for three months, then you can argue that you can do it for four months. If you can do it for four months you can say, "Well, it's been done for three months and now four months, so you can do it for five months."
> Of course, all the way through you have the wonderful argument that it is absolutely legal and that can't be questioned except by a distinguished lawyer like, perhaps, Senator Frith or by an amateur, outsider, non-lawyer like myself. So you will have to have the argument made that it is perfectly legal, therefore everything is forgotten, forgiven, past.

That was the testimony the learned Senator gave before the Senate Committee on National Finance and I suggest that that evidence is cogent, it is reasonable, it is expert testimony and it deals with the issues at hand. The suggestion is very clearly made that this Government has failed to live up to its constitutional responsibilities. It has failed to deal with the business of supply in a reasonable way and it ought to have come to this House and had these estimates voted and approved at that time instead of using these special warrants in the way that it has.

I have another quote from the National Finance Committee. I must say this is a trifle embarrassing, I am sure, for the Government because it is the President of the Treasury Board giving his evidence as to what ought to be done in this case. He was being questioned by Senator Stewart on page 1:25 of the Proceedings of the Senate Committee on May 3, 1989. Senator Stewart asked the following question:

> The mere fact that Parliament says you can find that there is an emergency does not mean in every circumstance that it is proper and legitimate to so do. I am not arguing at this point that what you have done is illegal.
> I am saying that it is illegitimate under our Constitution. You have not been able to produce a single precedent to support your practice, but you have used Governor General's warrants in a case where a Parliament has been called into session and the Parliament is adjourned—it is prorogued.
>
> You have not produced a single example which supports your interpretation of this provision. I am spelling out to you what I think is a clear result that may follow from this. Of course, not under your Government but we may have a Mr. Trudeau again, or someone like that. Think what they will do, following your example. If your example is valid—

The Hon. Member laughs. He should listen to this, it is very important.

> If your example is valid, do you dispute my assertion that it would then be possible for a government to finance itself the year out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund by Governor General's special warrants? Is there any reason on the supply side that it could not proceed in this way? You have your counsel with you. You know the Constitution and the law. What is the answer?

The President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) replied: "First of all if there were a government that had to sit as you say one day and immediately prorogue, then the law would entitle that Government probably to do it". That was the answer the Minister had. In other words, he is taking the view that Parliament could sit one day a year, be prorogued, and the Government could go on all year using special warrants, and help itself to the public funds of Canada. That is what the President of the Treasury Board thinks Section 30 of the Financial Administration Act means. Well, on a straight reading maybe, just maybe he is right. But maybe he is not. Let us assume for a moment he is right. What happens to our constitutional practice? What happens to the rights of Parliament? What happens to our control of government expenditures? It is out the window. We have no more control.

All the Members on the opposite side sitting behind the treasury benches will have no more say in what goes on in government matters because all the moneys will be expended by Governor General's special warrants if the Government chooses to do that. That is not the intention of the Constitution of Canada. That is not the intention of the Constitution Act, 1982. That is not the intention of the Financial Administration Act. So, the interpretation the Government is placing on this Act, in my submission, is doubtful at best. At worst, it is wrong and it should not be countenanced.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Milliken: That is the kind of answer the Government is giving, though. Mr. Speaker, let me continue with what the President of the Treasury Board said. Senator Stewart asked: "Do you think that would be legitimate and constitutional? That is an amazing interpretation, Mr. Minister". Mr. de Cotret answered: "I presume it would be legal". Senator Stewart asked: "But would it be legitimate? You are saying it would be legal."

Mr. de Cotret answers: "We are into a never-never land here". I will say we are. We should never be in this land. We should be dealing with this on a straight-up basis. The Government should be forthcoming and forthright in dealing with this financial matter. The Government should not be relying on the other place to come up with amendments to its Bills in order to sort out the financial mess it has created for itself by its manner of dealing in this case.

Let us look at what is going on here. I would like to turn again to Section 30 of the Financial Administration Act. Section 30—I have lost it. I should not have set it down.

Mr. Lewis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I want to take this opportunity to thank my friend and give him an opportunity to find his notes.

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, I am delighted the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) is so helpful today. I wish he would agree to the amendment.

Section 30, I could have done it off the top of my head, but I did not want to confuse the Minister by using words that were not exactly accurate. Section 30 starts off: "Where a payment is urgently required for the public good—". Now, that is the test. There must be urgency in the requirement for the payment. Yet what is the record of the Government in respect to this matter? Well, out of these special warrants it turns out from the operations of the committee in the other place, the Government managed to pay for the inspection of the shrubs at 24 Sussex Drive. This was $27,000 on a stupid expenditure. Now, the word "stupid" is not mine. That is the Prime Minister's word for describing that expenditure. The consideration of $27,000 for inspection of the shrubs to see what would best grow in the gardens of 24 Sussex Drive, which ones needed to be clipped, which ones needed to be trimmed, which ones needed to be pulled out by the roots, what new shrubs were needed to make the grounds look proper. A study worth $27,000—these are not new shrubs, this was a study. This was a payment considered urgently required for the public good.

• (1220)

That was considered to be a payment urgently required for the public good, pursuant to section 30 of the Financial Administration Act. The money for that purpose was taken by special Governor General's warrants, and it cost $27,000 for a study of the shrubbery. I read in the newspaper this morning that Mr. Southam said that was not a bad deal because he had paid $10,000 for a similar study on his garden and his garden was much smaller than the garden at 24 Sussex Drive. He thought it was a bit of a bargain. The Prime Minister did not think it was a bargain. He thought it was stupid. Yet he and his Government have advised Her Excellency the Governor General to sign a special warrant stating that those funds were urgently required for the public good. It is a scandal.

There is much more. There is the case of the heralds at Rideau Hall, urgently required for the public good. We had to have heralds at once in order to give coats of arms to certain companies. Those hundreds of thousands of dollars were urgently required for the public good. That is what the Government meant when it had Her Excellency sign these warrants. It certified that the money was urgently required for the public good pursuant to section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, hauling out money to grant coats of arms to its wealthy friends.

An Hon. Member: How much was that, $600,000?

Mr. Milliken: Oh, several hundred thousand dollars, to which the Government helped itself through special warrant. It is shocking.

That is not all. There has been the redecoration of Ministers' suites. We read just the other day how the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) was spending $35,000 soundproofing his office. I can understand that. There are a lot of protestors outside his office, particularly now that we have this problem with laced gasoline. All this money is being appropriated by special Governor General's warrants.

That is not all. In Maclean's magazine, there is a story about the latest problems the Government has faced. Let me read the article:

> It was a night to remember as Ambassador Derek Burney and his wife, Joan, entertained 560 guests at the official opening of the Canadian Embassy in Washington last week.

This must have been paid for out of special warrants as well.

> And while Prime Minister Brian Mulroney and his wife, Mila, met such guests as Secretary of State James Baker and Senator Edward Kennedy on the sixth-floor balcony, embassy staff worked hard to make the event run smoothly. There was only one hitch: waiters had to substitute a French vintage for a missing shipment of Canadian wine. Still, embassy officials appeared to have chosen La Fleur brand wine with budgetary considerations in mind. For one thing, the French wines label—which waiters were careful to cover with linen napkins—proclaimed it to be "a premium wine at jug wine prices." A drink with a pleasing taste of fiscal restraint.

If Parliament had been in session, perhaps they could have gotten a better wine because we could have voted them the money, but this was spent under Governor General's special warrants. Perhaps that is why the Canadian shipment did not arrive. Perhaps the Government ran out of money and could not pay the Canadian shipper.

Having spent all this money on wine for the embassy opening, on heralds at Government House, on the study of the shrubbery at 24 Sussex Drive, we are told today that the Government will not have enough money after tonight to pay the veterans' pensions. The Government wasted the money. It used the money it took through Governor General's special warrants for all these crazy purposes it had in mind, authorized to itself under Supplementary Estimates B that were never approved in the House. Now the Government is saying that it does not have enough money left from what it took to pay the veterans their proper pensions. That is a disgraceful way to run the Government of Canada.

Canadians deserve better and this Government should live up to its responsibilities and see that the money is made available. It should have dealt with this matter back in March. Now it is rushing in here and telling us that the other place is holding this up by having passed an innocuous amendment that does not damage the Government's credibility or the substance of the Bill that has been passed.

There is no delay here on the part of the other place. The delay is at the behest of the Government. The Government House Leader himself told the newspapers on Friday that he was not having any of this amendment. All he has to do is say he agrees with it and we would have this amendment through the House today and it would receive Royal Assent tonight. Instead, the Government has brought in this motion to delay the matter further, to suggest that the other place has acted improperly when in fact it has acted with great circumspection. It has dealt very favourably and positively with the legislation the Government has introduced. It has not suggested a change that damages the Government or alters the appropriation in any way, but one that corrects an apparent anomaly in the activities of the Government and its dealings with Parliament and the rights it may or may not have under section 30 of the Financial Administration Act.

It is very clear that section 30 of the Financial Administration Act requires that three tests be met before funds are transferred or appropriated by way of special warrant, and those three items are that there be an urgent requirement, that Parliament not be in session and that there be no other appropriation by which the payment could be made. The President of the Treasury Board has indicated his view that there was no other appropriation available, and I am inclined to believe him on that point because I think the Government had spent every cent it had and then some.

It is obvious it has to borrow money, and we will be dealing with that when we deal with the borrowing Bill, but it went ahead and borrowed money without the authority of Parliament but under the Financial Administration Act. It obviously had to borrow the money because it had over-spent what had been allocated to it. It introduced these Supplementary Estimates without having us consider them.

It is clear that there was no available way in which payments could be made. I will accept that. Parliament admittedly was not in session though it easily could have been. It is the Government's decision when to adjourn the House and when to call it back, and it was the Government's advice to Her Excellency to prorogue Parliament on February 28 that led to Parliament not sitting in March. It was the Government's advice to Her Excellency to summon Parliament on April 3, which meant that Parliament was not here to deal with this matter in a normal, expeditious manner in March.

Mr. Blenkarn: Her Excellency did it.

Mr. Milliken: Her Excellency did it on the advice of the Ministers of the Crown who sit in this House. The Hon. Member knows that Her Excellency cannot act on her own. She acts on advice from Members opposite. They gave her this advice, and I suggest that it was dreadful advice. They had an obligation to give her good advice. That is why we elect governments. This Government gave very bad advice to Her Excellency on this point.

Mr. Blenkarn: What are you doing, complaining it was bad advice?

Mr. Milliken: I am complaining it was very bad advice and it may well be illegal.

Mr. Blenkarn: It is not illegal.

Mr. Milliken: It is certainly unconstitutional, and that is the point.

Mr. Kempling: You're a windbag.

Mr. Milliken: You should have listened to what I said. If you had, you would be agreeing with me. If you had any interest in defending the rights of this place and of your constituents, you would be on your feet saying the same things I am saying, instead of sitting there.

It is a shocking indictment of the Members on the other side that not one has risen to defend Parliament. They all agree with the President of the Treasury Board who has steamrollered this place and run over our rights. He says we have no right to question his judgment, that he acted in accordance with Section 30. If we do not have the right to question that judgment here, as I have said three times already, where do we have the right to question it? I do not have an obligation to go to the Supreme Court of Canada to decide whether the President of the Treasury Board has acted properly. That issue should be decided here, and Those Hon. Members at the back on the opposite side should be on their feet defending Parliament. They used to do it when they sat on this side of the House and when Liberal administrations sat there doing things like this, but they never did anything this bad. Now we are not hearing a peep.

This is an opportunity for Hon. Members to rise and say what they used to say in the past. I have foreborne from quoting extensively from speeches made by old velcro lips, the former Hon. Member for Yukon, who used to speak about the rights of Parliament in the most heart-rending way. No one on the other side of the House is following up on that kind of discourse. Where have those people gone?

What about Mr. Diefenbaker, who used to stand up for the rights of Parliament? He was a great Parliamentarian and acknowledged on all sides to be so. He fought for and defended the rights of this House. Why is no one rising, as he used to rise, to defend the rights of Parliament to deal with the most fundamental thing that we have to deal with under our Constitution, financial matters? Instead of that, there is dead silence. I say it is a shocking indictment of the Conservative Party and its change in priorities now that it has the responsibility of Government. It should learn to shoulder its responsibilities in accordance with the Constitution.

Their actions, in my submission, Mr. Speaker, under Section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, their dealings throughout the time we have been dealing with Bill C-14, with their method of tabling Estimates late, their failure to request supply in the Speech from the Throne, all of these indicate either a profound ignorance of the workings of the Constitution of Canada, which is shocking for a government, or a blatant disregard for their obligations pursuant to that Constitution to come to this place and present those spending proposals in a timely and sensible way so they can be dealt with in the normal way that Parliament deals with spending controls. It is our function and our responsibility that is being usurped by the Government using these special warrants. Instead of coming here and seeking authority, it goes to Her Excellency and says: "Sign on the dotted line and we will spend the money and thanks very much. We will get any authority we might need later."

In theory, and Senator Stewart and Dr. Forsey pointed it out in their evidence before the Senate committee, the Government could run with one day sitting per year for the next four years and ignore this House. Given the lack of initiative that this Government chose on any legislative matter, it could easily do just that. After all, think how they must have felt come February with those cold winds of February blowing. Boy, I can hear the Minister of Justice closeted with the President of the Treasury Board and the Deputy Prime Minister, saying: "We don't want any criticisms in the House of Commons today. We don't want to read about our faux pas in the paper. We don't want to know about leaky budgets. We don't want to know about more possible resignations. We don't want to hear about any scandals.

So let's not have Parliament sit. Let us just govern by special warrant, and we will get all the money we need in special warrants and ignore Parliament because we don't want to have to put up with any embarrassing questions in Question Period. We don't want to have our spending plans reviewed by any committee. We don't want to have our spending plans discussed on the floor of the House where it might get some press attention." That is what is going on here. It is a cover-up operation and this Government has an obligation to come clean. I urge the Government to look at the words of the amendment. See how innocuous the amendment is. There is no criticism in the wording of the amendment of the Government's actions. I can safely say that had I been drafting the amendment it might have been a little stronger.

However, I am prepared to vote for the amendment even on the weakness that it contains; that is, it does not describe accurately in my view the improprieties that occurred. It legalizes whatever has happened, whether it was legal or illegal. I do not believe that in adopting the amendment the Senate has made any statement, that the matter is one way or the other. It has said there is doubt about the matter. To clarify the doubt, it has suggested this amendment to the legislation. I invite the Government to have another look at it, clarify the doubt, withdraw the motion that the President of the Treasury Board moved this morning and substitute another motion approving of the amendment, and let us get this Bill through and get the supply problem looked after. I do not want to see the President of the Treasury Board shedding more crocodile tears over the plight of the people that are not going to get paid. He knows how this can be done and it can be done very expeditiously with a little co-operation from the other side. I invite that co-operation.

We heard the Minister of Justice speaking some time ago about how important co-operation was. I recall the morning after the Budget leaked, he was in here talking about British parliamentary tradition and practice and how important co-operation was. I invite him to show that spirit of co-operation today, Mr. Speaker, and agree to the amendment. He has the power. He is the Government House Leader. He can convince his colleagues that this amendment is satisfactory. He can get the President of the Treasury Board to withdraw this motion and substitute another that will adopt the amendment proposed in the other place. I invite him to do that, Sir, forthwith.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, it is very rare that I would agree with something the Senate has done, but I must admit that this morning that we do agree despite the fact the Senate is not an elected place. What the Senate has done this morning in sending back this Bill to the House is slap the face of the Government. It has said to the Government: "You have done something that is wrong, something that is totally unconventional, something that is not very appropriate."

We have had the use of Governor General warrants four times in the last few months. Governor General warrants are usually used in very abnormal circumstances such as during a federal election campaign or perhaps when there is some other great emergency that prevents the Government from calling back Parliament to vote supply, to vote money for the ongoing expenses of this place. However, there are two things that really concern me about this Bill this morning presented by the government Minister. First, I think it is an affront to the supremacy of Parliament. This is the supreme institution of the land. The rights of Parliament, I believe, are being trampled upon. Second, I believe that the Government was afraid to meet Parliament back in January and February because of the economic activities and mergers that were going on in the country. This place could have been called back. This place should have been called back. In fact, March 6 was the agreed date to come back, but the Government was afraid to meet Parliament. It was afraid to meet this House. As a result, we now have the use of the Governor General warrant where billions of dollars was extended by it instead of being approved by Parliament.On January 19, the Governor General's warrant was used for the first time to spend some $80 million. On February 16, another $500 million was approved by a special warrant of the Governor General.

After the House was supposed to come back on March 6, and do not forget that Parliament was prorogued on February 28, instead of sticking to the original schedule and coming back on March 6 which had been agreed to, which we all expected, the Government was afraid to meet the opposition Parties in the House of Commons, and on March 23 issued another Governor General warrant for $891 million.

On April 1, a Governor General warrant was issued for some $6 billion. That was on April Fool's day, two days before the House came back. My argument is that this is an abuse of Parliament. It is highly irregular, highly abnormal to use Governor General warrants in this way. My friends opposite of course are aware of that. The chairman of the Finance Committee is aware of that. He is aware of the conventional practice of Parliament. He is aware of the traditions of this place.

He is aware that the Governor General warrant is very seldom used except when an election is on or except when there is a legitimate excuse for Parliament not to be in session at that particular time. What happened here was very unconventional. What happened here is something that you very rarely see, very abnormal. I am concerned about the supremacy of Parliament. The most important thing about a Parliamentary system of democracy is that a Government has to come to the House and seek the approval of supply, to seek money to pay for the ongoing expense of government programs and government Departments. That is what responsible Government is all about. That is what the supremacy of Parliament is all about. I can imagine the speech that would have been made on this side of the House about 10, 12 or 15 years ago by the former Prime Minister, John Diefenbaker.

He would have been making a speech about how the Government of the day was trampling on the rights of Parliament, how the executive had taken unto itself a tremendous amount of power to make decisions without consulting the people's representatives here in the House of Commons. I can remember Mr. Diefenbaker making speech after speech about Mr. Trudeau as Prime Minister ignoring the rights of Parliament and trampling upon the rights of this place and not consulting Parliament. I know the present Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) can remember those speeches very well. If Mr. Diefenbaker were here, he would see this as one of the most momentous occasions this year as this Government tramples upon the rights of this place.

Not only Mr. Diefenbaker; two former House Leaders of the Conservative Party, Walter Baker and Jed Baldwin, made speeches about the rights of Parliament being trampled upon, about the precedents of Parliament being changed, about conventions being changed by a Cabinet and by a Government across the way which in those days was of course a Liberal Government. The other point, Mr. Speaker, that really concerns me is the establishment of a very dangerous precedent by the Government. If we allow this to go on, if we allow this to proceed, then there is no saying that the Government next year will not do the same thing.

When the Government finds a certain amount of unpopularity over certain issues when Parliament is not in session, it will not recall Parliament. To carry on the expenditures of the Government, it will issue a Governor General warrant. If we let it go through this time, it will happen again, and again, and again. As a parliamentarian, that concerns me. It concerns me that we are abdicating much of our authority and power to the Prime Minister's Office and to Members of the Executive Council who sit across the way. This place will lose the purpose and the raison d'être as to why Members were elected in the first place.

What we have seen in the last four months is without precedent. No Members on the government side can say that this was done in 1925, 1935, or in the 1940s, 1950s, 1960s, or 1970s. It is without precedent. That is why we have put forward this motion today. The motion sent here by the Senate states that the payments made by special warrants signed by the Governor General on January 19, February 16, March 23, and April 1, 1989 shall be deemed to have been legal. Of course, the Government disagrees with what the Senate has stated and the sending back of its motion.

One of the arguments I am making is what we are seeing here is the trampling of the rights of Parliament by a very arrogant Government. If Diefenbaker were present in the House, we would hear one of those splendid speeches about the rights of Parliament and the British tradition, and the Conservatives would be standing up and applauding him every minute of the way.

There is a second reason that this happened. It is not only an affront to the supremacy of Parliament, but the Conservative Party of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was afraid to meet Parliament in January, February, and March. The Government was afraid. It had rammed through the free trade Bill on New Year's eve, and it was afraid to do the correct thing and come back here in January to get approval of government spending, government funds.

We all remember what happened in January. There were a lot of political issues in this country and the Government was on the wrong side. First, people were upset about the free trade deal and all the fallout from that deal.

Second, there was merger mania. Molson's Brewery merged with Carling O'Keefe. People were concerned about that. PWA, owned by Canadian Airlines, took over Wardair. People were also concerned about that and the concentration of power into fewer and fewer hands. I know the new Minister, the Member for Vancouver Centre (Ms. Campbell) must also be concerned about this.

There was the takeover of Imperial Oil by Texaco Canada. There was also the proposal from Stone Container of Chicago to take over Consolidated Bathurst. Bell Canada Enterprises took over Montreal Trustco. It was merger mania. We sent a letter to the Government House Leader and to the Speaker of the House suggesting that Parliament be recalled to deal with those matters, to have an investigation, and to debate those important issues in the House and with the people of Canada. The Government was afraid to meet the people on those issues, because it was on the side of merger mania and it knew that the people were not.

Not only did the Government not move the start of Parliament up to January or February, but it postponed the date of the commencement of Parliament from March 6 until April 3. The Government did that because it was afraid to meet the people of Canada here on the floor of the House of Commons.

It was not only merger mania, but there was the whole issue of American Express and turning it into a Schedule B bank. The bankers were concerned, and Canadians are concerned about the future of our country. Once again, the Government was on the wrong side of the issue. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) was on the wrong side of the issue. I am sure even the chairman of the finance committee was afraid to face parliament on that particular issue. For that reason, the Government was afraid to call Parliament back. It was afraid to do the correct thing and recall the House of Commons to seek supply. It had to breach the rules of the House and the conventions, and the conventions of the Constitution of Canada and seek a Governor General warrant to spend $7.5 billion of the people's money without a vote from the House of Commons.

Why else was the Government afraid to meet the House of Commons in February or even on March 6? It was afraid to meet the House of Commons because interest rates were rising and people across the country, including the small business community, farmers, workers, homeowners, and consumers were asking the Government why it did not stop this huge increase in interest rates. Parliament was crying to come back to deal with this important issue of high interest rates. Parliament was also crying to come back to talk to the Government about the deficit.

All of a sudden the Government discovered that the deficit was a big problem. It was not a problem during the election campaign, but it was a problem in the new year of 1989. The Government needed an extra month to run around slashing and cutting the budgets of various Departments which affected ordinary people, such as child care, farm programs, and unemployment insurance. The Government did not want Parliament here interfering by asking legitimate questions on behalf of ordinary Canadians. That is why we did not come back. That is why on April Fools' Day the Government had a Governor General warrant signed for $6 billion. When the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) testified before the Senate he stated that that was a rather large amount, it was abnormal, and that it had not happened before. When he was asked for a precedent, he could not provide any type of precedent, because it had not happened before.

For expedient political purposes and for narrow partisan purposes Parliament was not recalled. The Government, acting as a republican government like that of the United States of America, with the Prime Minister's Office and the Privy Council's Office, decided to seek more than $7 billion of money with a Governor General warrant.

If we allow the Government to get away with this, who is to say that when we recess in the summertime, or if there is an unpopular issue next fall that Parliament will not return in September, but perhaps will not return until late in October or November. Once again the Government will use the method under Governor General warrant to pay the pensioners, the veterans, and to continue improving the garden at 24 Sussex, or making a closet larger for the Gucci shoes of the Prime Minister.

For narrow, partisan political purposes the Government was afraid to meet the people of Canada here on the floor of the House of Commons. For those reasons, I want to move an amendment to the motion that is before the House. The amendment is seconded by my House Leader, the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Shuswap (Mr. Riis). It states:

> That the motion be amended by deleting all the words after "April 1, 1989" and substituting with "may respect the letter of the law, but are unconventional and set a dangerous precedent".

We are moving that amendment because the Government may argue that the letter of the law has not been broken. I notice that Eugene Forsey in the Senate has stated that, in his opinion, it is not constitutional. It is certainly not conventional. It is setting a very dangerous precedent.

I say to Members opposite that they will be here forever. If this type of dangerous precedent is set in terms of parliamentary democracy, even if the present Government does not use it again in this session of Parliament, what will prevent a future Government in 10 or 20 years from saying back in 1989 a Conservative Government used a Governor General warrant four times when it could not recall Parliament. It does set a very dangerous precedent. All the testimony to the Finance Committee in the Senate told us that it was indeed very unconventional.

I wish to make one final appeal to Members opposite to think back to the history and tradition of their party. Year after year the Conservative Party used to argue on the floor of the House of Commons about the supremacy of Parliament, about how more power and authority was taken away from Parliament into the Prime Minister's Office. It was taken away from Parliament and given to the Cabinet. It was taken away from Parliament and given to the bureaucracy, Departments, and Deputy Ministers and all the bureaucrats. We heard speech after speech about the supremacy of this place and how important it was that we make decisions about supply. There is no more important issue than voting on the use of the people's money. The money does not belong to the Conservative Party of Canada or the Prime Minister. It belongs to the taxpayers.

• (1250)

The Government did not come to Parliament to seek approval for that supply. It did not come to Parliament to seek approval for the appropriation of more money for the Prime Minister's garden, for his closet, for pension cheques or anything else. That sets a dangerous precedent.

I appeal to the best traditions of the Conservative Party to consider our amendment and support it. If it is not supported I believe the Government runs the risk of establishing a precedent that could be very dangerous in the years ahead.

I know that the chairman of the Finance Committee agrees with me. He is an honest and forthright person. He knows the history of this place and the history of his Party. He knows that what happened was irregular and unconventional.

The Minister of Justice knows that as well. He knows what kind of speech he would have made if Pierre Trudeau had done this. He would be moving this kind of amendment and expressing concerns about the blatant disregard of Parliament.

The Minister of Justice knows that his Government was afraid to call Parliament back last February and March. Our House Leader sent him a letter on two or three occasions, requesting that the Government to recall Parliament to discuss the American Express issue, to deal with the question of mergers. He received similar letters from the Liberal Party.

He knows that Canadians wanted Parliament to come back. He knew that the fiscal year would end on March 31 and any money the Government needed should be approved by Parliament. He knew the Government would have to ask the Governor General to sign a warrant for $800 million and another for $6 billion on April 1.

While Parliament could have been called back, the Conservatives were afraid to do so. They were afraid to meet the people of Canada. It was preparing a Budget that would cut and slash day care programs, unemployment insurance programs and programs for ordinary people. It was in the process of jacking up interest rates and jacking up the unemployment rate in this country. That is why Parliament was not called back.

In conclusion, I appeal to my friends in the Conservative Party to get up and speak their mind. Let them remember the traditions of their Party. Let them remember the speeches they made on this side of the House when they talked about the supremacy of Parliament, about political expediency. Then they will vote with us in support of this amendment before the House today.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair finds the amendment to be in order. Questions or comments.

My question is based on this interview of Mr. Chadderton. The question was: "Is that what you think of this whole kerfuffle? That people are being disregarded in this power struggle?" Mr. Chadderton said:

Yes, its very clear to me, and I have been around Ottawa a long time, that the Government was wrong. They tried to put these money Bills through. When the Senate got back into action, the Senate said: "Look, we have the authority" and they sent the Bills back. It is a question of whose right or wrong and of course the Senate, whether we agree with it or not, is doing what it can do. So the Government does not really want to knuckle under to the Senate. And then we see a big play by Doug Lewis, the Government House Leader, who says: "Well of course we are going to try to line up public support by telling them that the pensioners are going to go without their cheques". You know, if this was a major issue I would not think this way but it is not a major issue, it is a little territorial dispute between the Commons and the Senate.

The interviewer then asked:

> Well, if that is the case, shouldn't the Senate forget about the amendment and say alright, it is important that the veterans get their cheques and other people, employees of the Government, civil servants and let us just accept this as it is?

Mr. Chadderton answered:

> I would say that until someone decides to abolish the Senate you have to look at constitutionally who is right and who is wrong. And the Senate is doing what it has the power to do. Second, from my reading it is a fairly simple matter for the Government to go back, rework the money Bill and send it back to the Senate.
> So on one hand perhaps we should say: "Yes we will go along with applying pressure to the Senate". I don't think veterans are going to think that way because they know as I know, that the Senate has the power to do what it is doing.

These people have fought for Parliamentary democracy once. I suggest that the interview indicates that they are quite prepared to do it again. The Government should respect the rules of parliamentary democracy.

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): You should be ashamed of yourself.

Mr. Milliken: I am not the least bit ashamed of myself. I am proud to be defending this institution. The Minister should be ashamed of herself for being part of a Government that is trampling on the rights of this House.

Mr. Kempling: You're a windbag.

Mr. Milliken: She is the one who should be ashamed. She should be embarrassed to be part of this administration. Does the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) not agree with the comments made by that gentleman during the radio interview this morning?

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I certainly agree. The Government's action is an abuse of the rights of Parliament. It is an abuse of the supremacy of Parliament. If we allow the Government to proceed it will set a dangerous precedent.

We are not talking about a few dollars, we are discussing a Governor General warrant for $6 billion on April 1. This legislation concerns another Governor General warrant for $891 million for March.

Parliament was supposed to return on March 6. It did not come back because the Government was afraid to meet the people of Canada. Instead, it had two Governor General warrants signed for some $7 billion. That has not been done before. We were not at war. The Government could have recalled the House and we could have examined the Supply Bill. Parliament could have passed judgment as to whether it wanted to appropriate this $7 billion for the Government to fulfil its obligations during that period. But it chose not to come back.

If we allow this arrogant Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) and the Conservative Party to do this now, it will happen again. Parliament will be giving greater power to the executive, to the Cabinet and the Prime Minister's Office. This is not a republican system of Government. We are not in the United States.

[Translation]

This is not France with a republican system of government. In Canada, it is different. We have a parliamentary system here.

[English]

The most important principle in a parliamentary system of government is for the Government to come to Parliament and ask for spending approval.

I know some veteran Members on the other side, like my friend, the Hon. Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling), know that that is true. He is dying to get up and make a speech about how the Government and the Prime Minister are trampling on the rights and traditions of this place. That is precisely what is happening. They are doing it for narrow partisan purposes. They want to prevent us from asking questions about interest rates, mergers, child care or unemployment insurance, or the fact that drought payments have not gone to western Canadian farmers. That is why Parliament was not recalled.

In the meantime the Government was planning a vicious Budget in an assault on ordinary Canadians. It did not want us to ask questions about it. It wants to control the political agenda and news agenda just like the President in the United States and the President in France.

It is time that the Government back-benchers display some courage and independence. It is time they spoke their minds and read the speeches they made, that Diefenbaker made, that Walter Baker and Jed Baldwin made year after year about the supremacy of this place.

Now that the Conservatives are in Government they are opportunists. It is no wonder that people are cynical. It is no wonder that at the next election they will finish third.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

S. O. 31

AFTER RECESS

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PEACE PLAN FOR WEST BANK AND GAZA STRIP—NEGOTIATION OF PALESTINIAN SELF-RULE

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham): Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to read that Israeli Prime Minister Yitzak Shamir's plan for peace was approved by his Cabinet with a 20 to 6 margin.

The plan calls for "free, democratic and secret" elections of leaders in the West Bank and Gaza Strip to negotiate Palestinian self-rule in the territories. The first phase of this plan would have the Palestinians ruling autonomously under the aegis of Israeli military forces for at least three years before talks take place to resolve permanently the status of the occupied lands.

This plan was presented to President Bush in the U.S. six weeks ago. There have already been negative comments from several sources. However, Bethlehem Mayor Elias Freij told Israel's Arabic TV that the plan is a "worthy idea if it is fairly conducted under international supervision with the consent of the PLO and the participation of the residents of East Jerusalem".

I know Canada would be more than willing to assist with any international supervisory process. Let us hope that this latest plan will be a significant step forward to a real and enduring peace.

THE BUDGET

HARSHEST EFFECT ON WOMEN

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, as a northern Canadian, as a native person and as a female, I represent people who have been affected by the Government's Budget beyond anything which could possibly resemble fairness, justice and equality. The poorest of Canada's poor are unquestionably women. The Government obviously finds that satisfactory.

The Budget continues its punishment, particularly of native people, women and of children, not only in Canada. Now the Government has hit hard the most impoverished people in the world.

Some 50 per cent of all women-led families live well below the poverty line, as do more than four out of every ten single women, most of whom are widows over the age of 65. One in every five Canadian children is being raised in poverty. One in every eight Canadian women is a battered woman.

The Government could not see fit to be sufficiently courageous and caring about these Canadians without spreading its greed even further to the women of the developing world.

I am saddened and ashamed that the Government through its Budget has reinforced the fact that in spite of great wealth and privilege for some, there is a growing under-class of Canadians in which by far the greatest number of disadvantaged are women and their children.

HOUSING

HIGH COST OF HOUSING—HARSH EFFECT ON WOMEN

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, recently, the Minister of State for Housing (Mr. Redway) admitted publicly that the Government has not been doing a good job on housing. He invited Canadians to give him a blast.

I would like to draw to his attention two groups of Canadians who are unable to do this because they are fully preoccupied making ends meet. Some 60 per cent of single parent families headed by women and 50 per cent of single elderly women have an income below the poverty line.

The Government's callous budget policies of high interest rates, the gutting of social housing programs and now the imposition of a goods and service tax on housing means a larger number of women are being driven into poverty because of the high cost of housing.

I call upon the Government to reverse its policies so that all women in Canada are able to afford adequate housing. In particular, I call for the full funding of the co-operative housing program and the reinstatement of the RAAP.

Surely, the Government must consider the needs of these women for shelter, not just the needs of those wealthy people living on Sussex Drive.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

TOURISM IN RESSOURCE REGIONS OF QUEBEC

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Andre) has announced that the tourism aspect of the business development program in Québec's resource regions, Gaspé—Magdalen Islands, Lower St. Lawrence, North Shore, Saguenay—Lake St. John, Charlevoix, Northwestern and Northern Québec, will take effect immediately.

Mr. Speaker, with this program in effect, the resource regions have an action strategy that will enable the tourism industry in each of these regions to participate fully in economic development.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

CLOSURE OF CFB PORTAGE

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, on the weekend I joined the people of Portage la Prairie in protest over the proposed closure of CFB Portage. While hundreds of local people attended the rally, notable by their absence were the local Member of Parliament, the senior Minister for Manitoba, and the Minister of National Defence (Mr. McKnight). It is clear that the Minister of National Defence does not have the courage to come to my home province and face the people there who have been singled out for over one-third of the personnel cuts now proposed for the military.

The effect of the closure on CFB Portage, combined with the cut-backs to Kapyong Barracks in Winnipeg, will have a devastating impact on Manitoba. The closure of CFB Portage alone will result in the loss of some 580 military personnel, 180 civilians, and will pull $20 million directly out of the local economy.

At the same time, Defence Department spending will increase in Alberta, home of the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), and in Saskatchewan, home of the Minister of National Defence.

Manitoba is expected to shoulder the burden of deficit reduction. The people of Manitoba ask only for fairness. Why can this Government not be bothered to listen?

JUNIOR HOCKEY LEAGUE

TRIBUTE TO SWIFT CURRENT BRONCOS – MEMORIAL CUP WINNERS

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to report on one of the most remarkable stories in the annals of hockey.

Two winters ago I rose in this House to report on a tragic bus accident which claimed the lives of four members of the Swift Current Broncos Junior Hockey Team. Today, on a much happier note, I pay tribute to the Swift Currrent Broncos, a team imbued with indomitable prairie spirit, a team which picked itself up out of the wreckage of that accident and which, on Saturday, attained the pinnacle of Canadian major junior hockey league supremacy by winning the Memorial Cup.

I want to congratulate Coach Graham James, Bronco President John Rittinger, the players and the entire community of Swift Current and southwestern Saskatchewan, a community which has so solidly supported the team through thick and thin.

I know that all Members of the House will want to join with me in congratulating the Swift Current Broncos.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIONAL ACTION COMMITTEE ON THE STATUS OF WOMEN

EFFECT OF GLOBAL ECONOMY ON WOMEN

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, Rosamaria Ruiz, a journalist and community health worker from Bolivia, addressed several hundred women at the annual general meeting of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women. Her presentation was a sobering assessment of the present state of the global economy, and was a call for solidarity among women who are the hardest hit by economic recessions, poverty and war.

It is sad that at a time when Canada could be taking a leading role in the movement for international peace and justice, the Conservative Government is taking the opposite direction by reducing Canada's aid to countries in need. Countries in the Third World are faced with crippling foreign debt. It is from their experience that we must learn about dealing with our own.

Canada must not withdraw from the problems of international development but, rather, should be seeking, in co-operation with poorer countries, new and creative ways to achieve prosperity and justice for all.

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

APPROPRIATENESS OF BAN ON BEN JOHNSON

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Mr. Speaker, on September 26, 1988, the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Charest) purported to ban, for life, a constituent of mine, Mr. Ben Johnson, from participating on Canadian national teams. He did this without providing any form of hearing to Mr. Johnson. To accomplish this, the vehicle he used was the media.

Given that the Fitness and Amateur Sport Act provides funding mechanisms only, where does the Minister get his authority to ban anyone from competing? The enabling statute makes no provision for banning anyone from sports competition.

If the Minister had read Section 2 of the Fitness and Amateur Sport Act, he would have realized that the Minister responsible for that Act is the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Beatty) and not himself.

This Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport, full of self-importance, announced to the world that he was going to ban my constituent from competing in Canada when no Minister is empowered to do such a thing and when, incredibly, he legally is not even the Minister responsible for his own statute.

This is another example of the arrogance of the Conservative Government and an example of its lack of respect for the liberties of the individual.

S. O. 31

NATIONAL DEBT

CONSTITUENT CONTRIBUTES $100

Mr. Scott Thorkelson (Edmonton—Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to bring to the attention of the House the patriotic actions of a constituent of mine.

This Saturday I held a town hall meeting in the Windsor Park Community League Building to discuss the Budget, the annual deficit and the national debt. At that meeting Mrs. Rita Bustin, a kindergarten school teacher and single parent, presented me with a cheque for $100 made payable to the Government of Canada. Mrs. Bustin gave me this money to put toward the national debt, not the interest but the principal. I applaud Mrs. Bustin and other Canadians like her who are so concerned about the debt and want to do something about it.

Thus, to the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the best Finance Minister this country has ever had, I stand in this House to offer the $100 cheque Mrs. Bustin gave to me this weekend.

HUMAN RESSOURCES

WOMEN'S CHOICE IN REPRODUCTION

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, a humane society does not want to go back to a time when women were criminals for exercising their right to reproductive choice. Reproductive choice is a basic human right.

We must keep this right, we must ensure that abortion is in no case again considered a criminal act by restoring funding for family planning, by conducting more research to develop safe, effective contraceptives and finally, by ensuring that all women in Canada have equal access to reproductive health services.

EMPLOYMENT

EMPLOYMENT PLANNING

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Brome—Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, people sometimes wonder about the purpose of our job strategy programs. Under the previous government, they only generated temporary jobs without prospects for the future. Today, these programs are meant to give workers an opportunity to get into or get back into the labour market.

In a press release issued last week, an organization in my riding called "La traversée internationale du lac Memphrémagog" said, and I quote: "The training and job experience La traversée internationale gave these workers and students helped them acquire new skills, make contacts within the job environment and adjust to that environment."

Mr. Speaker, a follow-up of the twelve employees revealed some very positive results: one permanent job with La traversée internationale; one permanent job in the private sector; three full-time jobs in the private and community sectors; two part-time jobs in the private and community sectors; one start-up of a private business and four returns to full-time studies.

Mr. Speaker, that is good news for the people in the Magog area and my riding.

HOCKEY CHAMPIONSHIPS

THUNDER BAY FLYERS WIN CENTENNIAL CUP JUNIOR A CHAMPIONSHIP—THUNDER BAY TWINS WIN ALLAN CUP SENIOR CHAMPIONSHIP FOR FIFTH TIME

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, two Canadian sporting events took place last weekend that affected the City of Thunder Bay. I am pleased to report to this House that on Saturday, the Thunder Bay Flyers hockey team beat Prince Edward Island to win the Centennial Cup Junior "A" Hockey Championship. This is the first time that this cup has come to Thunder Bay.

Also, this past week the Thunder Bay Twins hockey team won their fifth Allan Cup Senior Hockey Championship. This sets a Canadian record for the number of Allan cups won by the Thunder Bay Twins. The efforts of the Flyers' coach, Dave Siciliano, and the Twins' coach, Bill MacDonald, and the outstanding performance of all the hockey players should be commended.

Thunder Bay and northern Ontario are convincingly emerging as the hub of amateur hockey in Canada, proving once again that rural and small town Canada does produce winners.

FORESTRY

DEVASTATION CAUSED BY FOREST FIRES

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin—Swan River): Mr. Speaker, there are now more than 100 forest fires burning in Manitoba. One of the worst is in my riding in western Manitoba. It started Thursday and as of one hour ago now encompasses 120,000 acres.

The communities of Cowan, Briggs Spur, and Renwer have been evacuated. The main highway, No. 10, has been closed. A state of emergency is in effect for the Minitonas and Mountain area. All access to the Duck and Porcupine Mountains has been closed.

The dedicated people working for the Manitoba Department of Natural Resources are doing a superhuman job in handling the logistics of battling such a destructive fire. Also involved are 120 firefighters, 21 cats, 12 skidders, 7 helicopters, and 4 water bombers.

The current situation is described as stable but extremely volatile due to near 30 degree Centigrade heat and variable winds. What is needed now more than anything else is rain.

ENVIRONMENT

FEDERAL SUBSIDIES TO FOSSIL FUEL MEGA PROJECTS

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, Canadians who care about the global environment are wondering why the Budget overlooked $5 billion in federal subsidies to fossil fuel mega projects.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Epp) says the energy mega projects represent the country's best strategy to remain self sufficient. The Minister is wrong on two counts. The International Energy Agency informs us we are using inefficiently 30 per cent of our energy. Therefore, if we learn to use energy efficiently we would rediscover an extra 30 per cent of energy we presently waste.

Second, we have a responsibility in reducing the trend in global warming. The mega projects would considerably increase carbon dioxide pollution in Canada at a time when the world is looking for ways of cutting such pollution.

Why does the Minister of Energy ignore the environment while the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) proclaims his commitment to sustainable development?

WOMEN'S ISSUES

CONCERNS EXPRESSED ABOUT SOCIAL PROGRAMS AT WEEKEND MEETING

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches—Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, over the weekend hundreds of women came from across Canada to meet in Ottawa to discuss issues not only of importance to women but to Canadians generally. Amongst the issues that they discussed were concerns about child care, about native rights, about pensions, about issues affecting the disabled, in fact, issues concerning all Canadians.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, this morning when these hundreds of women stayed over to talk to politicians who have it in their power to do something to address those concerns, the Government decided not to show up.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Young (Beaches—Woodbine): I do not think that is at all acceptable, either to the women of Canada or to Canadians generally.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Oral Questions. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

CLOSURE OF BASES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): My question is for the Minister of Finance and it concerns the closures and reductions at Armed Forces bases as a result of his Budget. He should know by now that western Prince Edward Island has been devastated by the closing of Summerside, and that 40 per cent of the military cuts contemplated by the Budget fall on the people of Manitoba.

I would like to refer him to a situation in New Brunswick. I would like to quote a press release of April 21, 1988, which states:

> The Minister of National Defence, the Honourable Perrin Beatty, announced today plans to keep Canadian Forces Base, (CFB) Chatham, N.B., as a viable, operating base.
> 'I am pleased to reassure the community of Chatham that our commitments will not only be kept, but enhanced,' said Mr. Beatty. This activity will ensure that the Chatham airfield remains fully operational well into the 1990's.

That is the end of the quote, Mr. Speaker. In an attempt to win seats in the last federal election in New Brunswick, the Minister of National Defence of the day went out of his way to assure the people of Chatham and the people of New Brunswick, by way of a special announcement, that the CFB base at Chatham, New Brunswick, would be increased in size and remain fully operational.

How does the Government now justify violating the promise to the people of New Brunswick? How does the Government now justify slashing the operations of the CFB base at Chatham?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Leader of the Opposition is well aware of the financial situation that we face in this country—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Collins: —and the need primarily to deal with the deficit. We in the Department of National Defence must also participate in those reductions—

An Hon. Member: We have heard that record before.

Mrs. Collins: —and, as he knows, the $2.74 billion reduction over the next five years. In making decisions about how we will make those reductions, we obviously had to look at the infrastructure support for the military and decisions have been made upon the advice of our military advisers.

With respect to Chatham, there will be some reductions of personnel at Chatham. The Chatham base, of course, continues to exist but Chatham along with another 13 bases and stations across the country will have to be reduced in order to meet those objectives of the $2.74 billion, to reduce the deficit which is so important for our Government and for the children of the future.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, if all that were so, why did the Minister of National Defence of the day go out of his way to make that special undertaking to the people of Chatham?

An Hon. Member: Right on!

WHITE PAPER ON DEFENCE—SCRAPPING OF 1987 POLICY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I would like to say to the Minister, if the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister are not intervening, it is both offensive to the people of Canada and dangerous that this Government has adopted a defence policy in scrapping its 1987 White Paper on Defence, not based on military priorities or based on our commitments to our allies, but on purely partisan politics.

• (1420)

That fact is, the closures or reductions announced by the Minister of Finance at Canadian Forces bases in Summerside, Gander, Sydney, Moncton, Chatham, Ottawa, North Bay, London and Winnipeg all have one thing in common; they are in ridings held by Liberal Members of Parliament. Nine of the fourteen base reductions in this country are in ridings held by the Liberal Party. Are we supposed to believe that this is a coincidence, Mr. Speaker? Are Canada's military needs now being based on partisan considerations with no military rationale at all?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): How paranoid.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Does the Minister of Finance believe that Canada's defence budget is a disguised Conservative slush fund?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: What a crock. I can't believe it.

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am absolutely amazed and disappointed that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition would make such allegations, allegations which he knows are false. In fact, if he would talk to some of his colleagues who had served in the Defence portfolio over previous years they could tell him of the requirements of the Armed Forces and that some of these changes have been required for a number of years.

Those decisions are made on the basis of military effectiveness and military operations. Ask my colleague, the Member from Portage—Interlake, how he feels about it. He, as others across the country, are obviously concerned and we understand their concerns. We are working with those members, with those communities to help them in the re-adjustment process and we have a workforce re-adjustment process to help the civilian population.

But, Mr. Speaker, once again, we say those decisions are made on the basis of the advice from the military on how we can meet our defence objectives—

Mr. Allmand: Baloney. Cut it out.

Mrs. Collins: —most effectively with the greatest degree of cost efficiency, and I would think that the Opposition Party would be applauding us for our ability to undertake this activity.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the fact is that there is no military justification for this at all. The 1987 White Paper on Defence has been absolutely gutted by what the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Defence have done.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): One thing Canadians expect, whether they vote Conservative or Liberal or NDP, is fair treatment from their Government no matter where they live.

[Translation]

JUSTIFICATION OF MILITARY BASE CLOSURES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have one more question for the Minister. How can she justify closing a base without considering the consequences for the communities concerned? How can she justify it for military reasons or because of foreign policy, if the main reason was a political one? How can she justify this to Canadians?

[English]

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, again I am surprised at the comments of the Leader of the Opposition. When the Liberals were in Government they ravaged the Department of National Defence.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Collins: They reduced our numbers in NATO by half. Since this Government has been in power over the last four years, we have increased substantially the funding for the Department of National Defence and for our military personnel. In fact, in the coming year, expenditures will actually increase, though we will continue that increase at a slower level, in order to assist in the long-term objectives of ensuring that we have financial viability in this country. That is the only way we can ensure the security of this country as well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STATUS OF WOMEN

REFUSAL TO MEET WITH NAC—REDUCED FUNDING TO WOMEN'S GROUPS

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister Responsible for the Status of Women. Given the Minister's cancelling this morning's Cabinet appointment with the NAC lobby, the Secretary of State's funding to REAL Women, an anti-equality group, and the budget cuts in child care combined with tax hikes that will attack deliberately Canadian working mothers, does this mean, as it so sadly appears, that the Minister has completely repudiated any Government commitment to gender equality and left Canadian women in the lurch?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to clarify for the record that we did not refuse to meet with the National Action Committee. We suggested that the meeting take a different format, something that we found very successful with some other people.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. McDougall: We did not boycott the meeting. Quite the reverse. I would like to make two or three other points, however.

First, we take women's issues very seriously and we have the record to prove it.

Second, in taking those issues seriously we have found private group consultations with Ministers to have been very helpful in the development of policy. I might point out that the Prime Minister met with the executive of NAC twice. He is the only Prime Minister who has done so. The Leader of the Opposition, when he was Prime Minister, did not. Nor did the former Prime Minister. Out of all of those meetings with NAC and with other groups we have been able to develop some policies that have been beneficial to Canadian women.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Clancy: Mr. Speaker, it is understandable why Members on the other side of the House were reluctant to meet with NAC.

RESIGNATION OF PRESIDENT OF PC WOMEN'S FEDERATION

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): My supplementary question to the same Minister, Mr. Speaker. Judith Hendin, the elected president of the PC Women's Federation, resigned four months ago citing a lack of respect for women's groups within elected PC circles.

Since this Government obviously is callously indifferent to the concerns of women in this country, will the Minister take a stand against the Government and fight to restore child care programs, remove the terrible taxes attacking Canadian women and other Budget measures that are detrimental to women and will she take this stand today?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the transcript of what Ms. Hendin actually said, but I do know the government record in terms of the most recent two appointments to the Supreme Court, six women appointed to Cabinet, 30 per cent of appointments of women in all the government agencies as compared with what the former Government did. In terms of policy development, we have announced in the Speech from the Throne a royal commission on NRTs and we have put parental benefits into the new unemployment insurance—

Mr. Simmons: What about child care?

Mrs. McDougall: Well, the Member talks about child care after years of inaction. The Liberals said hold off the child care legislation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. McDougall: We have increased the child tax credit. There is $2.3 billion worth of child tax credit in this Budget. We have a $100 million special initiatives fund for child care spaces for women most in need, immigrant women and native women. We have agreed that before this mandate is over we will meet all of the objectives of our child care policy.

MEASURES TO IMPROVE EQUALITY OF WOMEN

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister who just spoke about years of inaction in child care. Her Government has added years of inaction to years of inaction in child care. That is all.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): You are positively poetic.

Mr. Broadbent: The National Action Committee on the Status of Women for almost two decades has been very influential outside the House of Commons in building support for pay equity, affirmative action programs, aboriginal rights, child care, pensions and perhaps most significant of all, in 1982 it was responsible for mobilizing Canadians to get built in to our Charter of Rights the finest provision of any Charter of Rights in the world to protect the equality of women. I point out to the Minister that that is what NAC has done for all Canadians.

In this context, given NAC's persistent work in building equality of conditions for men and women in this country, how could the Government have the nerve, to put it directly, to cut its budget by 50 per cent?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, first, just dealing with some of the preamble, this Government put through the Pension Benefits Standards Act which introduced credit splitting and survivors' benefits in a way that had never before been in pension plans. In terms of the other issues, such as employment equity, we have put in place an employment equity plan which is working.

Mr. Allmand: Window dressing.

Mrs. McDougall: I think the history of the National Action Committee certainly shows it has made a contribution to women in Canada. There is no question about that. When NAC first began this lobby day, it was the only group and that was the only way it could have access to the Government. That is not true any more. In this Government, Mr. Speaker, Ministers are accessible. The National Council of Women was here last month and had nine hours of meetings with Ministers and Ministers' staff so we could discuss in depth some of the issues that they care about. The Catholic Women's League met with individual Ministers at great length. I have met with the Canadian Federation of University Women and with the Girl Guides. There is now a range of womens' groups that have talked to the Government as individual groups, and out of that comes real influence on policy.

• (1430)

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that the format NAC uses is indeed a critical format applied to parties in opposition as well as the Government, and that is why it wants to retain that format and that is why the Government should be there.

* * *

HEALTH AND WELFARE

UNIVERSALITY OF SOCIAL PROGRAMS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister responsible for pensions, my question is addressed to the Minister of Finance. The most recent NAC effort, among others, has put emphasis on the Government's intention to turn universal social programs like pensions and family allowances into means-tested programs. It has correctly pointed out that by increasing the numbers of those who will be affected by this means-tested approach annually, average and poor income Canadians will be affected one day as well.

The Minister responsible for pensions said on the weekend, and I am sure I quote her accurately, that nine out of ten pension groups she has spoken with have supported this measure. This contradicts all of our experience.

I met with the National Pensions Group on Friday and have consulted with some nine or ten other groups, all of which take the opposite position. Will the Minister of Finance please tell the House what pension groups support the Government on its incredibly regressive position on both pensions and family allowances?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member's rhetoric got out in front of him again. This is not a regressive measure. We are applying through the tax system, not through a means test, a heavier level of taxation on a particular government program. This is the same way we deal with the child tax credit, which is phased out as incomes rise. For those who earn over $50,000, these government programs are phased out using the tax system, not a means test, which we find to be an objectionable approach. We find that the use of the tax system is quite an acceptable approach. It has been used for years in some of these other social programs.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, George Orwell would understand this well. If at a certain point the whole pension is gone, that is a means test, whatever the Minister wants to call it. That is what the Government has done.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR PRODUCTION OF LIST

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister failed to answer the questions. On the weekend, the Minister responsible for senior citizens in Canada said that 9 senior citizens groups out of 10 agreed with the Government's decision to cut pensions. Our experience has been the exact opposite, and the Government has a responsibility to name these groups. This morning, I asked for a list but the Minister did not respond. Will the Minister of Finance, who has said practically the same thing in the past, give Parliament this list?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will give the Hon. Member the answer again. The Hon. Member should know that there is a specific reason for these measures and that is the fact that there is a substantial Government debt. Senior citizens understand the implications of this. Years ago, 12 cents of every tax dollar was spent on interest on the public debt. Ten years ago, the figure was 25 cents and this year it will be 35 cents. Senior citizens understand that if we do not stop that progression, we will not be able to maintain our social programs. We are committed to maintaining those social programs and that is precisely why we are taking—

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CLOSURE OF CFB SUMMERSIDE

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Yesterday, over 10,000 islanders participated in a march to protest the closure of CFB Summerside. This should indicate to the Government and to all of Canada just how seriously Prince Edward Islanders take this issue. Will the Government reverse its decision to close this base?

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence): Of course, I recognize the concern of the people of Summerside, but I must tell the Hon. Member that we will not reverse the decision to close the base at Summerside. We will, however, work with the community. Already the Mayor of Summerside has met with the Minister and with my staff. We will be working together with a provincial task force to work out plans that will hopefully develop alternative economic activity in the Summerside area.

ALTERNATE PROPOSALS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. The Minister talks about alternatives. The people of Summerside and the people of Prince Edward Island do not consider alternatives to this base at this time. How can forcing 38 per cent of the labour force of Summerside to depend on UIC and welfare contribute to a reduction in the deficit, particularly in light of the other viable alternative that was presented by my colleague from York Centre, the sale of CFB Downsview? Will this be considered?

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as we said in the House last week, the functions that have been carried out at CFB Summerside will no longer be required and it is not an appropriate base for transfer of activities presently being carried out at Downsview. We will, however, through our workforce adjustment program, be assisting those civilian employees presently working at Summerside to find alternative employment and we will be providing for them an extremely generous package. I am sure the Hon. Member will want to participate in a task force to work with the community to look at alternative economic development activities. It is not as if the military is the only option for Prince Edward Island. I am sure there are many people who are interested in the tremendous opportunities that could arise. They could consult with one of my colleagues who has lived through a base closure in her own riding and has found that indeed, better activities resulted. They were able to find alternative economic opportunities.

FISHERIES

1989 QUOTAS—TASK FORCE REPORT

Hon. Roger E. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, or, in his absence, whoever answers for him at the moment. There was such an uproar in Atlantic Canada last February over the fish quotas for 1989 that the Government and the Minister in particular were forced to appoint a special review panel to assess the size of the stocks, which panel's report ought to be in the hands of the Minister today. Would the Minister confirm that Dr. Harris and his committee agree with the methods used by the scientists in assessing the stocks and would he now indicate what the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans and the Government plan to do about the fish stock problem now that they cannot blame the scientists any longer, can no longer use them as scapegoats?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the interim report from Dr. Harris and his task force is expected today. It may have arrived this morning. The Minister of Fisheries and Oceans may have received it. The Acting Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has not seen it. If it is received today, it will receive very careful study and in due course, the Government will announce how it intends to proceed in view of the advice given by Dr. Harris and the members of his task force who will be continuing their work. Their work will continue for the remainder of this year, and this will only be an interim report. But, Mr. Speaker, we are not looking for scapegoats. We want to help the fishermen and the people of eastern Canada. Let the Liberal Party keep looking for scapegoats. We are not interested.

OVERFISHING BY FOREIGN VESSELS

Hon. Roger E. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same Minister. As he knows, the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada is still reeling from National Sea's announcement of severe cut-backs last week, cut-backs that will affect literally thousands of fishermen and plant workers throughout Atlantic Canada, particularly in Nova Scotia and Newfoundland. Will the Minister from St. John's West be good enough to inform the House what steps, if any, are being taken now to stop the complete and utter annihilation of the fish stocks in the north Atlantic? Will he indicate whether the Prime Minister has finally recognized the serious nature of the overfishing problem by foreign vessels? Has the Prime Minister and the Government finally agreed to intervene in the process and to place it on their national agenda while there are still some fishing jobs left to protect?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has had this on his agenda and on the Government's agenda for a considerable time. If the hon. gentleman wanted to read the Speech from the Throne, he would see the matter dealt with in the Speech from the Throne. I might point out to the hon. gentleman that while he was a Liberal Member and the Liberal Government was in office from 1983 onward, they gave away 47,500 tonnes of fish to the European community and 7,700 tonnes to France while the hon. loudmouth was a member of that Government.

EMPLOYMENT

CLOSURE OF PROCESSING FACILITIES

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration who is also the Minister responsible for the Status of Women. In British Columbia, the Government's new fish landing regulations have threatened some 6,000 processing jobs. On the Atlantic Coast, corporate decisions to close facilities and lay off workers is now threatening the livelihood of several hundred workers. Considering that approximately 70 per cent of these workers are women, many of them visible minority women, who are currently receiving fair wages, how does the Minister expect these women to feed themselves and to feed their families now that her Government, through its actions, have destroyed these jobs?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the suggestion that this Government has destroyed those jobs. Clearly there is a problem in the fishing industry. My colleague, the Minister of International Trade, is well aware of this. We are well aware of it on both coasts. My Department has been working with the local communities through the Industrial Adjustment Service, and other programs that we have at our disposal, because we recognize very much the seriousness of this to the workers involved, and we will continue to do so.

EMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—QUALIFYING PERIOD

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, this Government has destroyed the processing industry in British Columbia.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Black: Now we see the corporate sector doing the same thing to the East Coast. The Minister knows that for many women who work in the fishing industry, even finding 10 weeks of work is difficult, let alone 16 weeks to qualify for UI. Will the Minister reconsider her UI proposals and stop penalizing these women who have no alternatives?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, first, the current UI program remains in effect. Second, the new program is going to benefit women in a way that unemployment insurance has not before because many of these women are in a position of needing training. Some of them need language training, and this Government has introduced language training very aggressively for women in the labour force. We have put an extra $25 million into language training in the fall. We have bridging programs and training programs that never existed before; they will give women a more stable future, one in which they will not have to rely on a cyclical job at the low end of the scale.

FOREST FIRES

SITUATION IN MANITOBA

Mr. Brian White (Dauphin—Swan River): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Associate Minister of Defence. As the Minister is aware, forest fires in Manitoba have been causing great damage to our natural resources and to personal property. Over the weekend, a state of emergency was put into effect for the Minatona and mountain area in my constituency. Would the Minister please explain to Manitobans the possible role of the Government of Canada when such emergencies occur?

Hon. Mary Collins (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think first that all Members of the House would share in the shock and sorrow of the devastating forest fires that are sweeping through Manitoba. As the Member may know, the provincial Government has a primary responsibility for fighting forest fires, but through Emergency Preparedness Canada, we are prepared to respond with whatever resources may be required. The only requests we have received to date have been for assistance with a helicopter which was provided by DND for evacuation, and additionally through CMHC, the provision of 60 houses which could be used for evacuees. I know as well that my colleague responsible for Indian Affairs and Northern Development is working with the Indian reserves which have been affected by the fires. I might add that if there are additional resources or assistance that the federal Government can provide, I am sure that the Government of Manitoba and my colleague will be in touch with us.

CANADA–U.S. FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

EFFECTS ON SOUND RECORDING INDUSTRY

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. During and before the course of the election campaign, the Prime Minister and many of his Ministers gave countless hundreds of assurances that nothing in the Free Trade Agreement would in any way affect the cultural industries of Canada. We now have a report, prepared by the Government's own officials in the Department of Industry and Commerce, which clearly states that the Free Trade Agreement will undermine the sound recording industry in Canada, and thereby substantially undermine the careers, futures and opportunities of countless musicians and performing artists in this country.

My question to the Prime Minister is simple. Sir, why did you break your promise? Are you going to take this report seriously and do something to help the sound recording industry? Are you going to do something for the artists in this country?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member knows that he should address the Minister when he is making a question through the Chair. I would ask for his co–operation.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is quoting from a newspaper CP report that I saw in the Montreal Gazette today. Without newspapers, there, of course, would be no questions in this House.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, the information contained in the news story was taken from a Department of Industry profile that was made public more than five months ago, and the hon. gentleman has only come across it now. Might I read the comment to him of Brian Robertson, President of the Canadian Recording Industry Association? He said, "The report isn't worth the paper it's printed on".

DEPARTMENTAL REPORTS RESPECTING AGREEMENT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am aware that the Hon. Minister had a little trouble getting around to reading when the Free Trade Agreement was being negotiated. It is a great tragedy that he has not even bothered to read the reports prepared by officials in his own Government's Department. I have here, Mr. Speaker, 14 reports covering major sectors of the Canadian economy all of which say that the Free Trade Agreement has had a seriously negative effect on these industries. Jobs will be lost as well as opportunities and economic growth.

When is the Minister going to start reading his reports? When is he going to start doing something about them? When is this Government going to take its responsibilities seriously and start responding to the fact that the Free Trade Agreement is undermining Canadian industries and culture?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, this is the same hon. gentleman who several months ago said we have to forget all this frippery and froppery about the Free Trade Agreement and get on with life. Now he is up here fripping and fropping it again. Might I point out to the hon. gentleman that Chrysler Chairman, Lee Iacocca, has said: "American industry cannot compete as effectively unless something is done about the great imbalance between health care costs in the U.S. and the national health care systems in virtually every other country. We spend almost 50 per cent more per capita in health care than Canada." The poor devils are crying out for harmonization now with our policies.

HOUSING

IMPACT OF BUDGET

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Housing who seems to have invited Canadians to give him and his government a blast. So I intend to do just that for the moment.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1450)

Mr. Fontana: Two weeks ago the Minister assured the House that the Government was committed to affordable housing, and that the great Canadian dream of owning a house was not dead.

Two days later the Budget came down and it told us a different story. In fact, it states exactly the opposite. Now there are more taxes on construction materials, a new tax on housing, cancelled program, cuts in funding, cuts in caring, and continued high interest rates.

Where is the help for ordinary Canadians in the Budget? Where in the Budget are the homeless to look for help? Where is the help for those who dream of owning that home? Where in the Budget are those who are looking for affordable homes to look for help? Mr. Minister, where is that help?

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member had been in the House last week, or the week before, and if he had read the Budget material in the Estimates, he would have seen that in fact the housing budget this year is increasing by $100 million. That fact alone will help Canadians.

There are also other matters that we are looking into at the moment. Before very long, I am sure that the Hon. Member will be applauding the Government for its actions in making housing a priority in the country.

USE OF LANDS AT DOWNSVIEW—GOVERNMENT COMMITMENT

Mr. Joe. Fontana (London East): Mr. Speaker, after that answer, no wonder Canadians should blast the Minister and the Government.

Last week the Minister said to people in Toronto: "I wish we were leading the charge, but I don't believe we are doing that at the moment". I would like to suggest that he is bringing up the rear, and so is his Government.

Before the Minister was brought into the Cabinet, he called for all the lands in Downsview to be used for affordable housing. Today 25 per cent of those lands are being used for affordable housing. That is only one-quarter. Obviously the Minister has buckled under pressure and has sold out his convictions.

Will the Minister renegotiate and again look at the plans for Downsview to use all the lands for affordable housing in order that the people in Toronto can have a house to buy?

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, again, as the Hon. Member is aware, back in September, the Government released 135 acres of the Downsview air base site for housing in the Toronto area. At that time it was indicated that at least 25 per cent, in accordance with the provincial guideline, would be affordable housing, that is, would be social housing, geared-to-income housing.

In respect of the rest of that particular property, certainly it is my intention, and the intention of the Government, to ensure that that housing would be made available, if at all possible, for first-time home buyers, and to make it housing that is affordable for Canadians.

Of course, we would need the co-operation of the municipality which controls the zoning on that property, and we hope that we will have it in order to make sure that there is housing available for Canadians, and that it is affordable.

CHILD CARE

GOVERNMENT INTENTION RESPECTING LEGISLATION

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Minister of Health and Welfare.

Province after province has reported that the Government's unfulfilled commitments to child care in the Budget will mean that thousands upon thousands of desperately needed new child care positions will not be created. Yet, the Minister is reported to have said that dumping this Bill is no big deal.

Will the Minister please tell Canadian families what he meant by his statement, and explain his intentions regarding introduction of a child care Bill that more truly reflects the needs of Canadians families and their children?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I can certainly correct the preamble of the question. First, I did not say that dumping this Bill was no big deal. What I did say is that Members opposite opposed the Bill from the outset. Now we find when the Government has decided that it cannot proceed they cry crocodile tears and pretend they were in favour of it.

After all the filibustering, and after all the efforts made by Members of the Opposition to oppose the Bill, it is astonishing that they now see a charm to the Bill that did not exist before.

What I have said is that we expect a 20 per cent increase in federal transfers to the provinces under the Canada Assistance Plan for child care this year. It is totally open-ended. The federal Government will pay 50 per cent of all costs incurred by the provinces which are eligible. CAP is directed particularly at those people who are in need. Members opposite should be concerned about people who are in need.

MINISTER'S POSITION RESPECTING CHILD CARE

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. Members on this side of the House have never for one moment said that we were in favour of the child care Bill that did not pass. We have continually been asking the Government if and when it will introduce a child care Bill that will clearly reflect the needs of working women, children, and working families.

As a result of his answer, will the Minister explain to the House why he was not able to bring himself to attend the National Action Committee on the Status of Women lobby this morning to explain his position on child care?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, Members of the House will be grateful for the Hon. Member's assurance that she has not suddenly flip-flopped on the issue of the Bill that she mentioned earlier. For so long Members of the Opposition filibustered the legislation, said they were completely opposed to it, that it was worse than nothing, and now they pretend they are concerned about its fate.

My colleague, the Minister responsible for the Status of Women, spelled out very clearly to the House the willingness of Members on this side to meet with NAC, and that we would welcome that. What we proposed is that we have a chance to sit down with them to discuss their concerns in an atmosphere that made it possible to do that.

We remain committed to child care. We remain committed to increasing funding for child care this year. We remain committed to realizing the rest of our commitments within the life of this Government.

PCB INTERNATIONAL TRANSPORTATION—INSPECTIONS—REQUEST FOR DETAILS CONCERNING FEDERAL PLAN

Ms Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. We know that last Friday, the Minister published a plan of action that would close certain border posts where PCBs might be shipped by truck. I would now like to ask him what he intends to do about the international transportation of PCBs by air, water and rail.

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, this morning my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, announced that we have reduced the number of road border crossings that will be opened to fuel imports from the United States to 31. I may add that so far, we have received 91 lab test results and in all 91 cases no PCBs were detected.

My colleague at National Revenue and myself have also instructed our officials to prepare another plan that will be submitted to us in a matter of hours, this time to regulate entry by train and by ship.

[English]

TRANSPORT OF TAINTED FUELS—CRIMINAL CHARGES

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, from what the Minister has said to date, I understand that there appears to be no action planned for rail. The Minister states that he is going to announce one this afternoon.

I would like to ask the Minister whether his Government is aware of the fact that Sergeant Gregory Eagle of the Law Enforcement Division of the State of Michigan has released information of felony and misdemeanour warrants outstanding on two Canadian companies, and specifically corporate officials for Canflo Services.

According to a letter that we received, and information that he passed along to the Environmental Protection Agency, and presumably through them to Canada, that the activity of this Canadian company was involved in international transport of tainted fuels between Canada and the United States. When the trucking business got too hot, they were shipping the fuel by rail.

Is the Minister aware of the fact that these criminal charges are outstanding against two Canadian companies? If he is not, why is he not aware? If he is aware, does he have a specific plan to prevent the shipment of international PCBs by rail?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, we are taking measures to put into place an action plan for stepped up inspections of shipment by ship and by rail. The Department of Transport is training 30 additional inspectors in view of the implementation of this plan.

INDUSTRY

TAKEOVER OF LUMONICS

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology.

Last Friday the Minister announced proudly that he welcomed the takeover of Lumonics by Sumitomo of Japan. Lumonics is a Canadian company and is the world's third largest laser manufacturer. This industry has annual world-wide sales of about $1 billion.

My question is very specific. Would the Japanese Government have allowed a similar Japanese corporation to have been taken over by a foreign company?

Mr. Beatty: That is totally out of order, of course. Why don't you call the Japanese Minister and ask him?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as my seat-mate points out, that question is out of order, but let me say to the Hon. Member that pursuant to the provisions of the Investment Canada Act this takeover was examined and was in fact found to be in Canada's best interests.

Under the agreement there will be a considerable increase in research and development. Lumonics will have the world mandate for laser products under Sumitomo's world activities, and this will give Lumonics preferred access to the Japanese market, the fastest growing market for lasers. It will result in more jobs, more research and development and, in general, a net benefit to Canada.

TESTING AT BORDER STATIONS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. As he knows, the FBI informed his office a year ago about the tainted fuel matter.

Could he explain to the House how and why his officials never brought it to his attention? Will he also tell Canadian consumers how they are protected by the testing that is going on at the 31 border stations when it has taken almost a month to get the April results reported back to the public, knowing that the trucks are now pulling up, being tested and pulling away without anyone knowing whether or not there is poison fuel on board?

[Translation]

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I would like to correct the preamble to the question in which the Hon. Member claims that my Department had received information from the FBI about illegal shipments of tainted fuel. As I said the other day, I asked my officials to make a thorough study of all their files to check what kind of information we were given, and it seems that so far, according to the reports I have received, no such information was passed on to my Department.

POINT OF ORDER

REMARKS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Roger E. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, this is the first opportunity I have had to rise on a point of order since seeing the transcript of Thursday's Question Period. I was away from the Chamber on Friday.

In responding to a question from me during Question Period, the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) said, among other things, the following, as reported at page 1600 of Hansard:

> National Sea did brief the hon. gentleman several days ago and he ran to VOCM and leaked the private and confidential information.

That is not true. I want to take this opportunity to correct the record on that issue. I deal with National Sea and other fish companies on a regular basis, and I would not want to send out the false signal that I do not hold in confidence those matters that are given to me in confidence. I do hold them in confidence and the Minister's statement was incorrect.

I do not want to make a big fuss of this issue. The Hon. Member for St. John's West is not a bad fellow. He has his foot in his mouth once in a while.

Mr. Speaker: I have allowed the Hon. Member to rise on a point of order. Usually when a Member is given the opportunity to do so and the purpose is to correct the record, it is to correct something that the Hon. Member himself or herself has said.

The Hon. Member has made his point and I think that from now on it would be getting into debate. I think there would be some objection from the other side if I were to allow it to continue. Keeping in mind what I said, I will hear the Hon. Member.

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, I was about to conclude by inviting the gentleman from St. John's West to withdraw the remark. He knows it to be incorrect. I would hope he would withdraw the remark.

Mr. Speaker: Well, I am not at all sure this is getting into a point of order, but the Hon. Minister is rising. I will hear him.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to offend you by rising, Mr. Speaker. The hon. gentleman says that it is incorrect. Naturally I accept his word.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Finestone: Oh, John. At least say you're sorry.

Mr. Crosbie: Should I say I am sorry, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You are getting better every day. There is a chance yet.

Mr. Speaker: I hope all that exchange ends up on the record.

APPROPRIATION ACT NO. 1, 1989-90

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of an amendment made by the Senate to Bill C-14, an Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending March 31, 1990; of the motion of Mr. de Cotret (p. 1695); and of the amendment of Mr. Nystrom (p. 1713).

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock there were three minutes remaining in the question and comment period following the speech by the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville. I am now prepared to recognize Hon. Members who wish to continue the question and comment period.

Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I an pleased to have an opportunity once again to speak on this issue which I brought to the attention of the House sometime ago. You will recall that my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Milliken), and I rose in the House on Thursday, April 6, 1989 to make the House aware of the grievance we had concerning the use of a Governor General special warrant by the Government.

When we are discussing Governor General special warrants we should not confuse them with Governor General warrants of the kind that have been used on a relatively regular basis by the Government in order to administer the affairs of the nation. Today we are talking about the use of an instrument granted to the Government by virtue of the Financial Administration Act under a section that has been used improperly. We made that case in the House on April 6, and then the Bill in question was passed shortly afterward.

The Estimates were tabled in the House on April 28. The House adopted, albeit reluctantly, the interim supply requested by the Government, and the Bill went to the other place. Many of the points that my colleague from Kingston and the Islands raised in terms of our grievance with the Government's use of these so-called special warrants were indeed taken up again in the Senate Banking Committee.

I was there last week, where I heard witnesses like Dr. Eugene Forsey and others inform the committee of the other place how inappropriate and unprecedented were the use of these special warrants. Clearly the Government has put itself in a very difficult situation. In my opinion not only have the rules of the House been abused, certainly the spirit if not the text of our Constitution has been abused as well. The Financial Administration Act has been bent out of shape in a serious way by the Conservative Government. The Senate recognized this in its deliberations.

Ultimately we have to grant supply to the Government in order for it to operate. At the same time I cannot as a Member of Parliament accept what the Government has done. It has breached those privileges which I feel I have in the broad sense, recognizing that Mr. Speaker has indicated that in terms of the orders of this House there has not been a prima facie case.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that if we get into the broad sense of the definition of privilege, and in particular if we take into consideration the fact that our privilege and how we operate in this House are granted by virtue of a section of our Constitution, which section states that we operate in a manner similar to that of the Mother of Parliaments, I feel that we have definitely been offended.

Even if no privilege of a Member has been breached in the narrow sense of our definition of privilege, or in the broader sense, Mr. Speaker made it very clear a few days ago in his deliberation on our questions of privilege that in fact he was not ruling on whether or not the Bill was legal. I wish to refer to the ruling given by the Chair, as reported at page 1178 of Hansard of May 2, 1989:

> The question of whether or not the terms of the Financial Administration Act have been respected in this instance is not a matter that was raised in the arguments put forward on April 6, nor indeed is it a matter upon which the Chair would be in a position to rule.

The Chair has stated that it is not in a position to rule on the legality of the way that the Financial Administration Act is applied in this particular case.

The Chair stated further:

> The Chair has no authority to venture beyond the realm of parliamentary practice and procedure into questions of law.

I believe if we go a little further in the decision of Mr. Speaker of that day we will see that he also tells us that, indeed, he has no authority to determine whether or not our Constitution has been respected in this case. What do we have now? We have a situation in which I as an opposition Member and everyone else recognize that the Government needs funds in order to operate. However, at the same time we cannot accept what has been done. We cannot recognize that as being a valid precedent for the future. I will get into why we cannot do that in a few moments.

However, before I do that, I want to express the solution that was offered to us by the Senate. The Senate has sent to us a message in which it has recommended the following change: "The payments made by special warrant signed by the Governor General on January 19, February 16, March 23, and April 1, shall be deemed to have been legal". If I had my way I would add another sentence to that which would state: "They shall be deemed to have been legal but shall not constitute any precedent that could be applicable again". I would do that in order to ensure that the Government does not feel it has the right in the future to do what it has done before.

My colleagues to my left have proposed an amendment to the motion offered by the Government. First, the Government has responded to the amendment from the Senate by stating that it feels that the Bill is already legal. To this some of our colleagues have proposed an amendment which would add the words: "that the Bill may respect the letter of the law but are unconventional and set a dangerous precedent". Of course, that is quite true. The amendment is quite definitely supportable. I would like to support it. I know that other of my colleagues would do so as well. However, it even goes further than what was stated in the amendment from the New Democratic Party.

A few moments ago I was describing to you, Mr. Speaker, why this is a dangerous precedent and why we cannot recognize what has happened here as being acceptable.

[Translation]

First all, Mr. Speaker, the Governor General's special warrants are usually granted by Her Excellency when the Government so requests, at times when it is impossible for Parliament to decide whether or not to approve the Government's appropriations.

Mr. Speaker, of course the only time when it is not possible for Parliament to approve appropriations is during an election campaign. Before the turn of the Century, there may have been times when a session lasted only two months of the year, and six or seven months later, when the Government needed funds to repair the roof of the Parliament Buildings, it was not going to recall the House just for that. In that case, the Government could ask the Governor General for these appropriations, which would be approved by the House retroactively. That is why the House added to the Financial Administration Act a section that deals with exceptional situations.

Briefly, Mr. Speaker, Parliament must not be in session and there must be a specific or special situation. In fact, the warrants are called Governor General's special warrants. And of course, there must be no other way to obtain the funds. As far as that goes, this Government had more or less made sure there was no other way. The Government intentionally adjourned the House without giving Parliament a chance to approve appropriations.

Why did the Government do this? I hope they will be able to answer this question later on, because so far, Mr. Speaker, their answers have not been very convincing.

So first, the Government may have been unable to do otherwise, but the situation was of its own making.

Second, the Government says there was a so-called urgent need and that the House was not in session. May I remind you once again that the reason you were not in session was the result of a deliberate act on the part of the Government opposite?

[English]

When we talk about the test of whether or not the section of the Financial Administration Act can be used, it is important to note a few things. First, Parliament was recalled last year on December 12. It is quite evident to me that if the Government required supply to cover the duration of the election campaign and a normal post-electoral period which it took to recall Parliament and, perhaps, a few days into the new session, the House should recognize that there is nothing precedent setting here and that in fact we must give the Government those funds.

However, that is not the point. Parliament was recalled. Parliament sat. Parliament listened to the Throne Speech. Then Parliament voted on the Throne Speech. Parliament voted on a Bill, the free trade Bill. Once that Bill had been passed the Government did not seek supply. The Government adjourned Parliament. The Government caused the adjournment of Parliament. Once that was done we were in recess for some weeks.

When the Government had used up all its money under Vote 5 of the Treasury Board, which it can seek when the House is not sitting, it then decided to seek a Governor General special warrant. This is something rather unprecedented because Parliament had sat.

However, if that were not bad enough, once it sought those first one or two Governor General warrants pending the recall of Parliament in the same session—we were not prorogued, we were only in recess—lo and behold what did we have? We had the Government not recalling Parliament the way it said it would, but instead it prorogued Parliament in the month of April, deliberately causing itself, if you wish, Mr. Speaker, to go broke, causing itself to be in a situation in which it would be out of funds, not temporarily, but to the end of the fiscal year and for a portion of the next year.

To remedy the mess that it had created for itself the Government introduced Bill C-14 in this House, which apart from everything else will be the only appropriation Bill passed by this Parliament in a year and a half.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) said very eloquently in the past when we were discussing the the budget leak how important it was for the House of Commons to have the authority to decide what grievance it wanted to air with Parliament and what issue it wanted to bring to Parliament before it granted supply to the Government. This is not just an archaic tradition. Surely this House, a House of Members elected by the people of Canada, has the right to decide what issues to bring forward to the attention of the Government. To decide if we wanted to grant or to deny supply to this Government is not just a tradition.

Democracy is not just something that should be fondly remembered. It should be applied. It is the Government's role to ensure that the privileges of Members and the democracy in which we live is respected. It must ensure that as Members of Parliament we get to decide what funds are spent by the Government.

They should not create a situation where they ask the Governor General for special warrants, where they recall Parliament and fail to ask for supply, where they cause a recess, where they cause a prorogation of Parliament, where they recall it later and say: "Guess what, House of Commons, we forgot to ask you for some money a year ago. We have been broke ever since. We have asked the Governor General to give us money meanwhile, and now we want you to ratify all this, and do not complain."

That is what the Government has told this House. That is not right. The least we can do to rectify the damage done to this country and to this Parliament by the Government is to adopt the motion brought to our attention by the other place. If we do not do that, we should support the amendment offered to the House today and at the very least not recognize what the Government has done as being right. Perhaps we have no choice now but to give money to the Government across the way to administer the affairs of the nation, but we must insert it in the Bill or in a motion that what the Government has done has done to this country is wrong. The lack of respect that it has for the House of Commons, only a few years after being elected to government, is even worse. It is not right. We should not put up with it.

I say to the government Members across the way that it is their privileges as well as mine and, more important, it is those privileges that have been vested in us by our constituents, the people who have sent us here.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for my friend for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell. One reason the Government went the route of Governor General warrants was that it was afraid to face Parliament in February and March. Back in January, February and March merger mania going on in this country with Consolidated Bathurst, PWA, Labatt's Brewery and Carling O'Keefe. There were all kinds of mergers. The Government was on the wrong side of those issues, and the people of Canada were very concerned. They wanted us to ask questions in the House about those kinds of issues. Also, interest rates were going up, and the Government was talking about the deficit.

I wonder if the Member from the Liberal Party would agree with me that one reason why Parliament was not called back was that the Government was afraid to face Parliament, afraid to face the people of Canada. Parliament was supposed to come back on March 6. It delayed the recall of Parliament until April 3. Then on April Fool's Day we got a Governor General warrant asking for $6 billion. I think one reason we had a delay in the recall of Parliament was that it was afraid to come back and face the representatives of the people of Canada. This is why we had this very unconventional, very unconstitutional approach of seeking a Governor General warrant. This is riding roughshod over the traditions of Parliament. If John Diefenbaker were in the House today, he would be lecturing the Conservatives of the day.

Does my friend in the Liberal Party agree that the reason was not only a disrespect of Parliament, not only breaking the conventions and the rules of this place as we have practised them for many years, but that the Government was afraid to recall Parliament because the issues of the day were unpopular ones from the point of view of the Conservative Party?

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, it is quite obvious that the Government had reason to do it. There was something going through the back of its head, obviously.

When Parliament adjourned on December 30, that first part of not seeking supply at that time, there is no doubt that that is negligence. Someone probably goofed for that period of time. Of course we should be concerned about that goof-up. The Government went so far as to fail to ask for supply in the Throne Speech; it was that bad. Even worse, for that first period until December 30 it did not ask for any money. That was bad enough, but then it adjourned without having done so. That is worse. It was looking at the schedule in February, and the chairman of the Conservative caucus came out of caucus one day and announced brilliantly that the Government needed more recess time to prepare a Throne Speech. Of course, it had been elected since November 21 of the year before, but it needed more time to write, of all things, a Throne Speech. Perhaps the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) wrote it on the back of an envelope on the way back from his constituency. Looking at what was in the Throne Speech, that is probably the process he utilized to prepare it.

Notwithstanding, in the month of February we had a Government overtaken by a very difficult situation. The Free Trade Deal had just recently passed. We saw mergers and closures of plants in Canada. We saw takeovers of Canadian industry. It was basically a very unpopular situation for the Government.

The Government looked at it and said: "Well, if we recall Parliament, we are really going to be in for it. The Opposition is going to be all over us. The Canadian media is going to be all over us. Why don't we just cool it for a while? Maybe the problem will go away."

That has been said by Tory Members before—"if you do not like the problem, just wait it out and it will disappear". They tried. However, they had a further problem, that is, if Parliament returned on March 6, not only would they have the regular every day barrage of questions rightfully asking the Government to account, but they would have an even worse situation in their view where there would be only a short period of time left until the supply period ended. I think there was something like 12 sitting days of the House of Commons left in that supply period between March 6 and March 28.

Out of those 12 days the rules of this House say that we must have 9 days of supply. Those supply days constitute opposition debate in the House of Commons, or what we affectionately refer to as opposition days. Could we imagine how everything would have crashed on the head of the Government across the way? Notwithstanding, the Government had to get money. It had to recall Parliament because it did not have any funds to operate.

Members across the way said to themselves: "Look, when we forgot during the Christmas period to ask the House of Commons for supply, we used the Governor General special warrant. That worked then. Why don't we use some more of them and forget about Parliament meeting altogether?" That is what they did. They waited until the new fiscal year of the Government in order to avoid the supply period and to avoid the debates that would have been coming their way in the House of Commons. That is really what happened.

• (1530)

Mr. Harvard: Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am a little surprised by the action or the lack of action on the part of the Government because, as my hon. friend from Kingston and the Islands said this morning, this amendment is really not to condemn the Government. We are not pasting the Government to the wall over this. We are simply saying that this procedure may be wrong, that there is some doubt about it and we can remove that doubt by what we are doing in the House this afternoon.

The Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (Mr. Nystrom) talks about the late John Diefenbaker. I am sure that the late John Diefenbaker, if he were alive today, would be literally spinning hearing Members opposite. If there ever was a Canadian who believed in the supremacy of Parliament it certainly was the late Right Hon. John Diefenbaker.

I have a question for the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria). Does he think we are condemning the Government or just simply asking the Government to remove this doubt that hangs over the procedure that it took? We are saying the Government may have made a mistake, that this is perhaps a wrong procedure. If the Government were not just so intransigent and stubborn it could agree and clear up the confusion.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, all that I want from the Government across the way right now—and I have already aired the grievance in terms of supply, in terms of how wrong the Government was and so on—is to recognize that what the Government has utilized should not constitute a precedent for the future. That is all I want from the Government across the way.

There are two ways of achieving it. One is through the amendment proposed to us by the other place. That is certainly the best way. But even if the Government does not do that, at least it should recognize in a motion or an amendment to the motion that what it has used should not constitute a precedent. I will not even say that what the Government has done is illegal, even though I think it is. I do not even want the motion from the Government to say that what it has done may have been unconstitutional. We will debate that later.

The Government needs that Bill and I recognize that. All I am asking from the Government pure and simply is for the Government to state that what it has done shall not constitute a precedent. If the Government is willing to do that, we could let this Bill go through and the Government could have the supply that it needs in order to administer the affairs of the nation. That is all the action that I am looking for, that recognition of non-precedence if you wish.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, actually it is kind of a sad day to be participating in this kind of a debate.

Mr. Oberle: Why then speak?

Mr. Riis: My hon. friend says, "Why then speak?" I think that is the point. The Government would prefer not to have this procedure exposed. The Government would rather not have the people of Canada understand what it has done. I do not know if the Government has done this in a sneaky, sinister, mean-spirited, cruel way or if it is just incompetence or combinations thereof, Mr. Speaker. I do think that people watching and listening in to the proceedings of the House today will be aware of one thing, that something has occurred recently that has never occurred in our history before. Something has occurred in the last few weeks that has never occurred in any real parliamentary democracy anywhere in the world where the Government has decided that it knows best, that the Parliament of Canada does not know best, that the Parliament of Canada is a nuisance, that having an Opposition to deal with is a nuisance and so it was going to try to sneak something through. The Government was trying to do something very dishonourable, perhaps illegal, certainly unconstitutional and unethical and unacceptable.

What has the Government actually done? The Government has decided to spend a lot of money. As a matter of fact, it comes to $295 for every single Canadian. The Government decided that it would spend $295 for every man, woman and child in this country, in secret, without ever telling Parliament what it is doing. I suspect that is why Canadians have a growing cynicism towards the Government. I think that the sense of disillusionment, disappointment, and the aggravation level is increasing so that it is now almost moving off the top of the barometer.

Here is a government that decided to break parliamentary tradition. This is a government that decided to abandon parliamentary procedure, to toss the traditions and experiences of parliamentary democracy out of the window for its own sneaky political purposes. This, of course, as you well know, being a concerned parliamentarian yourself, is nothing new. This Government has developed a reputation for abusing Parliament, of taking advantage of various interpretations of various rules or, simply by strength of numbers, changing the rules to its own satisfaction. This Government has a certain political agenda and when it runs up against a House of Commons which might prohibit it from doing something, the Government says, "Let us not worry about tradition, practice, rules and regulations, but use our majority to unilaterally change the rules to suit our own agenda".

Not long ago the Government decided that the Standing Orders which govern the House of Commons would not enable it to do something very abusive, so it said it would not worry but simply change the rules. We know that over the last hundred and some years when the rules of the House of Commons have been changed it was done in consultation with all of the players. In other words, as parliamentarians, this is our House. It is not simply a tool of the Government. We would sit and sometimes take many weeks and months to agree to change the rules to suit doing the business of the country. But that was not done this time. It would take too long, so the Government said it would change the rules any way it liked and if the Opposition did not like it, tough luck.

We remember the Free Trade Agreement. This is when we came back after the election and the Government did something unprecedented in Canadian history. It used, if you like, the muzzle of closure at every single stage of the Free Trade Agreement. This has never been done before in Canadian history because most Governments welcome debate. They realize that part of the parliamentary system is to have debate at various crucial stages of a Bill. But not this Government. It said no. This Government decided to use closure at every single opportunity so that it could muzzle Parliament, neuter Parliament, and not allow Parliament to carry out its duties and responsibilities expected by the people. Actually, I have a long list of instances where the Government abused Parliament, but I think I have made my point.

This is part of a trend, a new way of doing business. It is a parliamentary bully technique that if you do not like what is going on you just bully your way through and ignore the traditions of the House.

There are a number of things Members have indicated they have found very offensive about this situation. When Parliament was recalled to deal with the Free Trade Agreement in December, did the Government ask for the passage of a Supply Bill to allow it to receive parliamentary permission to carry out its various activities? No, it did not do that. The Government just simply prorogued Parliament and people left for Christmas. Then, in January the Government decided it needed some money. The parliamentary, traditional and proper thing to do, which has always been done over the years, would be to recall Parliament to pass a Supply Bill. That is the way it is done so that the people of Canada through their elected representatives have a voice in the affairs of the country. That was not done. A Governor General Special Warrant was introduced by the Government for $80 million in secret, behind closed doors, so that Canadians would not be aware of what it was doing. Then on February 16 another Special Warrant was issued for $500 million. Rather than do the right thing, that is, introduce legislation in this House, the Government is using this back door, under the table, kind of sneaky, dishonest approach.

• (1540)

Now why were they doing that? I remember those of us on the opposition benches were asking the Speaker to reconvene the House. There were major issues facing the country. The fall-out from the free trade deal was already beginning to be felt, as hundreds of jobs were starting to disappear as a result of firms enacting the free trade provisions. We saw a whole rash of very unproductive mergers, takeovers and acquisitions take place. We called for a special debate to understand what was going on, whether our existing legislation would serve the country during this time of mega-merger activity. But, no, Mr. Speaker, again there was no interest in recalling Parliament. Remember that interest rates were starting to increase significantly.

Then there was the whole matter of American Express instantly becoming a bank because the Minister of Finance thought this was a way to pay off the American Express people who supported the free trade deal with the United States.

I could go on. There were all sorts of very important, critical issues facing the country, and we asked for Parliament to be reconvened to debate these matters and to provide an opportunity for the Government to bring in its supply motion because we recognized there was a need to expend funds. That was not done. Rather than do the honourable thing, the Government on March 23 again issued another special warrant for $891 million.

Before I get to the big special warrant of $6 billion, something very sinister happened. I want to appeal to my good associate and friend, the government House Leader. The House Leaders met on a number of occasions to agree in principle to a schedule for the debate on the passage of supply. A date was agreed upon. A special order was agreed upon so that the Government would know that its special passage of supply would occur at a certain time. After that fact, the Government still went ahead with the special warrants: $891 million, and then finally on April 1, $6 billion—$6 billion of expenditures without ever hearing a single voice from Canada's Parliament.

Where does this end? We say to the Government that we recognize now that this is how it is going to do business. There is no need to recall Parliament for most of the year. In terms of its supply legislation, it could just handle the whole matter through Governor General warrants.

This is a very serious situation. The whole matter of the last two special warrants occurred after the House was actually scheduled to resume. We agreed that March 6 would be the appropriate time, but even after that date, the special Governor General warrants occurred.

There is no way to describe it other than trampling on the rights of Parliament. That is very clear to all of us. One of the aspects of our parliamentary system that we feel very strongly about is that Parliament must remain supreme. For hundreds of years that tradition has grown. We are not a republic. We are not run on laws; we are run on tradition. We are run on practice. Over the years certain ways of conducting the business of the people of Canada have evolved. We follow those traditions. So we know from year to year, from decade to decade what to expect in terms of the process and procedure. The principle of Parliament being supreme has been with us for hundreds of years. The raising of revenues, the expenditures associated with those revenues must exist with Parliament and not with the Cabinet, not with the executive and not through the use of special Governor General warrants.

In conclusion, I believe that the Government has abused the Financial Administration Act that, in a sense, gave them the authority to proceed this way. There are times, we agree, when there is a necessity to use a Governor General warrant. Let us be very clear about that. We are not suggesting that there never has existed a time for this type of initiative. Usually it is associated with an election campaign, where it is impossible to recall the House of Commons to deal with this kind of a financial issue.

Beyond that, Mr. Speaker, when we were willing, able and interested in sitting in Parliament in January, February and March, why did the Government then not do the traditional and honour bound thing is what we are raising today.

I have some concerns, as do my colleagues, that the Senate is not the institution to influence legislation in a serious way. However, in this case, they sent it back for some reconsideration. At the time I remember making a case with other Hon. Members that this process that the Government used was unacceptable and inappropriate, that Parliament had been duped and that there had been an end run occurring around the parliamentary system.

As Hon. Members in this House, we had made an agreement. We had passed a special order. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that we appealed to the Chair to see if circumstances had changed from when we had first agreed to that special order. We had questioned whether this was an appropriate step to take under the circumstances of these Governor General warrants being issued. The Speaker, with all due respect, found that it was appropriate and we proceeded. Now we have an opportunity to send a very clear signal to this Government that what it has done is not acceptable. What it has done has set a very dangerous precedent. What it has done is unconventional and ought to be unacceptable to any serious-minded parliamentarian.

We will be here for a few moments longer, and I hope that members from the government benches will stand and explain how, now that we have broken the tradition of hundreds of years of parliamentary democracy, why they would support this motion. We have given them a way out that I think is acceptable by proposing an amendment to the Government's motion which I think makes it acceptable to all Members. While what has occurred may respect the letter of the law, that is not what we are debating here. Legally I suspect that one could make a case that the Government has not broken the law, but they have broken every tradition that this House stands for. For that reason, we say in our amendment that the action of the Government may respect the letter of the law, but the action is unconventional, and it sets a very dangerous precedent. Any serious-minded parliamentarian would have to agree with that, and we look forward perhaps to a unanimous vote on the amendment later in the day.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I only rise to give the Hon. Member for Kamloops an opportunity to correct some of the assertions that he has made. He has told the country that the Government of Canada has engaged in some arbitrary, sinister, criminal act—

Mr. Boudria: Not criminal, he did not use the word criminal.

Mr. Oberle: I apologize. He did not use the word criminal, but he used the words "sinister and devious act to deprive the people of Canada of billions of dollars of public resources that did not receive the scrutiny of the people's representatives". The people of this country need to know that all that the Government has done is pay its bills and live up to the obligations that this House has created for the people of Canada, at the encouragement of some of the people in the Opposition. I do not recall a single Bill in the last two years where we brought forward some measure where the Opposition has not said, you are not spending enough. They want another $4 billion for day care.

Mr. Boudria: It is not your money.

Mr. Oberle: They cannot have it both ways. We pay our bills, as painful as it is, with the $320 billion debt. But they come back and say, you spent too much. You pay the bills as if they are our bills. There is not a single penny that has been spent with the Governor General warrants that has had anything to do with discretionary spending.

When the unemployment insurance cheques or pension cheques bounce, the people of Canada will judge how sinister this move was. This is utterly ridiculous.

I ask the Hon. Member to be fair and honest. What we have done is legal and provided for in the statutes. The warrants allow us the resources to do what this Parliament and the country has been obligating us to do. That is all we were trying to do. I ask The Hon. Member to see his way clear to being as fair as he tended to be at the end of his remarks when he said that everything that was done was within the law. He also said that this was not a precedent. It has been done many times before. That is why there is provision for the Governor General warrant. Why can the Hon. Member not be honest, and at least not use words such as "sinister" and "devious". Nothing in this measure is devious. Not a single penny has been spent on any discretionary programs. All of it is required to be spent under the Order that was previously passed, debated, and voted on in the House. All we are doing is paying the bills with which the Opposition helped us to encumber the Canadian people.

• (1550)

Mr. Riis: I appreciate the intervention of my hon. friend. He states that I have used the terms: "sinister, unconventional, sneaky, under the table, end run, and devious". The only reason I used those words is that I could not think of other related terms.

For example, what were some of those funds used for? Most Canadians have been offended of late by that old coin rolling out on television screens to remind us that the Government is blaming Canadians for being irresponsible for many years. We know who is making the decisions on how the money is to be spent, and that is the Government.

For example, the Minister of the Environment thought that he should spend some money redecorating his office. My hon. friend tells me that it was $40,000. The Prime Minister thought that some evaluation needed to be done to the landscaping at 24 Sussex Drive, and some major renovations. Of course, there was also $2.7 million worth of advertising. Presumably these are the items that the Minister says were important.

I also wish to remind the Minister that in most countries, governments have to vote supply before the House is adjourned. They do it in the correct order.

I also wish to remind the Minister that, after the new fiscal year began, before we had the Estimates in our hands to find out how the Government was going to spend the taxpayers' money, the Government decided to use a special warrant of $6 billion. In other words, it had decided that before the House of Commons even looked at an Estimate it had decided how it was going to be spent. This is very serious when one considers what the Government is using it for.

Eugene Forsey is unquestionably recognized as an expert in the field of parliamentary procedure and constitutional law. He indicated very clearly that this was unconventional, unusual, and unacceptable. He also stated that he could probably make a very strong case that it was unconstitutional and that the Constitution of the country had been ignored in this process. Let us forget that, and say that perhaps there is some legal case that can be made that what the Government has actually done is to use the Financial Administration Act in a way it was never intended.

I wish to remind my hon. friend, the Minister, that when warrants have been used in the past it has been because Parliament was not sitting or was unable to sit. For example, one understands that during or immediately after an election, the Government is not in a position to have a financial plan before it. However, this was months after an election. This was after Parliament had already sat in December. Parliament could have sat in January, February, or March.

However, rather than convene Parliament to deliberate on the appropriate ways to collect taxes and expend revenues, which is after all why we are here, the Government decided that it knew best. It was not going to use the parliamentary process, or the time honoured tradition developed over hundreds of years, and that it had a better way.

That is why I called it sinister, indecent, unconventional, unacceptable, and inappropriate. I could continue with a long list of other terms to describe how parliamentarians who have thought about this process feel about it, and how most Canadians, once they become aware of what the Government has done, would also describe this action of the Government on this particular issue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Halifax West on a question or comment.

Mr. Crosby: I wish to make a comment on the words delivered to the House of Commons by the Hon. Member for Kamloops—Sushwap (Mr. Riis). He indicated in a strong and stressful way that we were dealing with the matter in a manner unprecedented in Canadian parliamentary history.

Mr. Boudria: It is.

Mr. Crosby: It would fall upon all of us to examine it in that light. In a calm and deliberate way, hopefully I can restore some balance to this discussion. What the Hon. Member for Kamloops and other Members in the Opposition do not seem to understand is that it was not the House of Commons' action that was unprecedented. It was the process leading up to that situation that was unprecedented.

As Members will recall, there was an election on November 21, 1988. We met as soon as possible after that election to deal with the major subject matter of the election which was the Free Trade Agreement. We gathered in the House and dealt with free trade expeditiously, winding up on Christmas Eve. I did not hear any Member of the House rise and state: "I do not want to go home for Christmas. I do not want to spend some time in my constituency". We dealt with the business at hand and all Members departed. I have here a copy of the House of Commons Debates from that time. No member of the Opposition stood up on Christmas Eve and suggested that we continue the House to deal with financial matters or Estimates. Nothing was said.

On December 16 in that very session the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) tabled Supplementary Estimates B and things carried on in the normal way. When the House was not sitting, during what would be a normal recess period, a Governor General warrant was obtained in accordance with the law passed by the Parliament of Canada and the Financial Administration Act. It was reported in The Canada Gazette. The warrant was granted on January 16, 1989, reported in The Canada Gazette 12 days later. Did anyone hear the Hon. Member for Kamloops stand up and say: "What is this warrant reported in The Canada Gazette? I want to examine this". Did Members of the Liberal Party complain at that point? Did they demand any more information? It was public knowledge. No, they were quite satisfied that the law had been followed. If they were not, they certainly did not complain about it.

Mr. Boudria: I raised it in the House on April 6.

Mr. Crosby: The Government of Canada, through the President of the Treasury Board, followed the letter of the law.

Mr. Boudria: No, he didn't.

Mr. Crosby: That has been established and ruled on by the Speaker of the House. He said that the Government and the President of the Treasury Board have followed the letter of the law. What they did was legal. It is only somebody in the other place who wanted to raise a related point. Perhaps there should be a different law. Perhaps the law should be changed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell on a point of order.

Mr. Boudria: No one in the House should insinuate that the Speaker made a ruling on an issue on which the Speaker did not make a ruling. You will obviously know, Mr. Speaker, that the Chair did not rule on the legality of the case. The Chair even argued that it was unable to make such a determination.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I ask the Hon. Member for Halifax West to conclude his comments as the period for questions and comments is almost over.

Mr. Crosby: I hope you will take into account, Mr. Speaker, that that interruption cut into my train of thought. I will have to re-explain this whole situation so Members opposite will understand clearly, because they do not get the point.

The law has been followed. There is no other law. There could be some other law. On another day or at another time there may evolve and develop a constitutional question. However, that is for the Supreme Court of Canada to determine. Every Member of the Liberal Party must remember 1981 when they said there was no constitutional convention and the Supreme Court of Canada said there was. How did that determination get made? Because the case was taken to the Supreme Court of Canada. If Members opposite do not like the law, I suggest that they take the case to the Supreme Court of Canada.

I hope the Hon. Member from Kamloops realizes what havoc he may wreak across Canada if he and his colleagues persist in this legal game that they are playing. What will happen to pension cheques, veterans cheques, and the payments required from the Government of Canada and the interest that builds up?

If the Hon. Member objects at this time and place in the House of Commons to the process that has been followed, where was he in January when those warrants were published in The Canada Gazette and made public knowledge to all Canadians?

• (1600)

Why did he not raise the objection then? Why did he not demand that Parliament be recalled to deal with the matter then? Where was he then? He talks a lot now but it may be too late.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I want to say in response to my hon. friend, the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby), that most of us would have enjoyed the opportunity to raise the matter in Parliament when we read it in The Gazette in January, but the point is that we were not sitting.

The concern was registered publicly at that time. We did petition the Speaker to recall Parliament for a variety of reasons laid out in our letters—

Mr. Crosby: This one?

Mr. Riis: Yes. In conclusion, I want to say to my hon. friend from Halifax West that we are not arguing the legality of this particular matter. We are suggesting that what has occurred is unconventional and sets a dangerous precedent.

My hon. friend began his comments by saying that this was not a break in precedent, but he failed to mention any other precedent of a similar nature.

Mr. Boudria: There isn't one.

Mr. Riis: There isn't any. I am aware of that.

I think it will serve us all well to vote unanimously for this amendment. It recognizes that while respect of the letter of the law may exist, and we are not arguing the legality of this particular initiative, it is not conventional and sets a dangerous precedent. I think that any seriously concerned parliamentarian evaluating what has happened would agree it sets a rather dangerous precedent for this or any Government in the future.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be brief. I had not intended to join in the debate today. I suppose I went with the word of the House Leader for the Official Opposition who said that this matter would go through quickly and with the word of the New Democratic Party Whip who said the same. We asked our speakers to stand down with the intention that this matter would move to the Senate quickly where it would be able to consider—

Mr. Riis: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: I do not remember interrupting you, sir, but go ahead.

Mr. Riis: I am not interrupting my hon. friend. I am anxiously awaiting his remarks. I know they will be thoughtful, as usual.

He knows that the Senate is not sitting and that it will not sit until tomorrow at 2 p.m. Whether we vote now or an hour from now or tomorrow morning is irrelevant, because the Senate will not be able to respond until two o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. Lewis: I was coming to that, Mr. Speaker. I will deal with it in a minute.

We had hoped that this matter could be dealt with quickly so that it could go back to the Senate and those people who rely on discretionary cheques from the Government of Canada would be able to get their cheques tomorrow. As a result of the actions of the Opposition and the other place, which I will get to in a minute, that is not possible.

I rise to refute all the allegations of illegality and to put on the record for the people of Canada just how long my friends opposite have been thrashing around with a non-issue. First, there was a point of order considered by the Chair on April 6. We spent over an hour debating it, which we do not object to at all.

On Tuesday, May 2, the Speaker ruled that there was no case for illegality to be made in this place and that if my hon. friends wanted to take this up they should take it up somewhere else.

On Thursday, May 4, in the middle of a vote while Members from all Parties were trying to meet their planes, because these votes proceed very quickly under normal circumstances, there was another point of order. It was also ruled out of order by the Chair.

We take the position that the use of special warrants during adjournments is allowed by law. Lest anybody suggest that there is a convention that this is not done, let me point out to the House that in 1951, when the Financial Administration Act was passed, there was an amendment specifically to allow for the use of special warrants during adjournments.

I think the comments of the Deputy Minister of Finance at that time are illustrative of why it is now legal and why the change was made in the Financial Administration Act. The Deputy Minister of Finance stated:

> This provision is made necessary by the practice which has developed in recent years of long adjournments.

The next day during clause-by-clause consideration there was little discussion on this clause. There was no concern raised on this clause in the House of Commons. It is apparent from this discussion that Parliament was well aware of the new provision, and it meant that special warrants would be used at times other than immediately prior to or after an election.

Officials from the Department of Justice have considered this matter. They have found that the warrants in this case have been used properly. Much was made by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Milliken) of the comments by Dr. Forsey during his testimony at the Senate's Finance Committee. I cautioned him fairly when he was speaking. I raised this piece of paper, hoping he would get to the remarks written here and properly illustrate all of the remarks of Dr. Forsey. Unfortunately he did not do so.

I want to read into the record exactly what Dr. Forsey said:

> Assuming this is perfectly legal, and I suspect it is, the legality of it would not be questioned. It is absolutely essential to draw the distinction between legality and constitutional propriety. I said it was legal under the statute, subject to the caution that Senator Frith made and that I said, in my amateur, lay way, that I agreed with, I think it was legal.

He went on:

That is the point that Senator Frith made, and I said that I was inclined to agree that there was some legal doubt about it. However, it seems to me that the essential question is not the strictly legal question at all.

Unfortunately, my hon. friend did not allude to those points.

Mr. Boudria: Read the next sentence. I was there.

Mr. Lewis: If my friend wishes a right of reply, he may speak when the original motion is debated.

The Law Clerk of the Senate, in referring to this amendment that was sent to us by the Senate, said:

As Counsel to the Senate, I have a problem with the amendment. I find it improper to imply in an amendment that actions authorized by Parliament under a provision of law would be illegal. So I have a problem with the wording. The committee has gone over the three tests in section 30 of the Financial Administration Act that were discussed yesterday. No one has any problem with the first test—

Mr. du Plessis went on to say that: "The law, according to its own terms, has been complied with".

Lest anyone suggest that the Government was judging itself when the Ministry of Justice officials looked at this, we took the precaution of going to an outside expert. We have a written opinion by a recognized constitutional expert, professor Peter Hogg of Osgoode Hall Law School, to the effect that special warrants as issued were legal.

This has all been very interesting. In closing, let me just ask what are the legal force and effect of the delaying tactics of the Opposition? What are the legal force and effect of the delaying tactics of the Senate?

The Senate had a tough day. It sat from 2 p.m. to 2.15 p.m. These are the people who the Official Opposition are rushing to support. These are the people who the NDP, which refuses to have anything to do with the Senate, rush to support. They had a tough 15-minute workday.

The rest of us and the people out there who rely on these payments that will not be made tomorrow because of their actions work a little longer than 15 minutes a day. The effect is that the non-elected, appointed Liberal Senate has delayed this Bill by putting through this amendment. They were joined in this action by the Opposition.

Had they sat a little longer today and had this not been filibustered by my friends opposite, the Senate might have had the Bill today.

• (1610)

As well, those discretionary payments that will stop at midnight tonight could be made.

I suggest that this has all been a farce created by the other place, joined in gleefully by my friends opposite, without any thought about the practical effect on the people whom they were elected to serve. I cannot say that about the Senate since Senators are not appointed to serve anybody except the Liberal Party. I am surprised that the NDP has been rushing to join the Liberal Party in this venture. However, they are now joined in a common cause—support of the Liberal Senate.

I suggest that Members opposite call back to their ridings tonight to explain this to the folks who should be getting those discretionary cheques. If they push it any longer through Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, they should explain this to the veterans and members of the RCMP. It was voted on by Parliament to supply that funding. Every legal expert we can find says it is legal. My friends opposite say that it was illegal. They want to filibuster this even longer. I suggest that there will be a difficult task back home.

It is a lot of fun here for them. We have debated it. My colleagues will get together on Wednesday in the Liberal caucus room. Unfortunately, my hon. friend from Kamloops will be excluded because he won't be in the Liberal caucus room. Lord knows he should be after today. They will sit there and the MacEachens and the Friths of this world will say: "Boy, did we pull one over on the people this week. They will not get paid". Just come right out, folks, and tell them why they will not get paid. It is because appointed Senators down the way who had a 15-minute workday were responsible for them not getting paid. They were joined by the Liberal Opposition in the House of Commons and the NDP.

I submit everything we have done is legal. Surely, that is what it is all about. I suggest we get on with the business of the nation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a couple of question of my hon. friend across the way who has just finished saying what a good job he thinks the Government is doing by forgetting about the rules of Parliament. I want to bring the following to his attention.

First, the Tories have forgotten to mention that when the Hon. Member accuses the Opposition of filibuster that earlier today we told the Government that our side would be having two speakers. As a matter of fact, I think my colleague to my left will recognize that moments ago both he and I called for the question to be put. Yet the Minister decided that he was going to filibuster and make a speech, to use his own words.

In fact, the two speakers that we were going to put up on our side of the House, namely the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands and myself, have both made their speeches earlier today pursuant to the agreement that was made.

The additional speech that was made, not at all in conformity with what had been discussed earlier today, was the speech made by the Minister of Justice, of all people. I bring that to the attention of Hon. Members.

It has been said by the Government that the Opposition should have raised this issue earlier. I see the Hon. Member for Halifax West pointing out "Right on" or something to that effect.

Immediately upon the recall of Parliament I notified the Chair of my grievance on this issue. I was recognized on April 6, along with my colleague from Kingston and the Islands. We raised this issue in the House of Commons at the first available opportunity. The Government did not seek to rectify or assist in the situation. As a matter of fact, I have a few pages of a variety of insults of the Minister of Justice as reported in Hansard of April 6 when he felt the issue was unimportant.

What happened? He seems to think that it is very important this afternoon. As a matter of fact, he seems to tell us that the whole world is going to fall apart this afternoon. A while ago the Minister of Justice pretended, along with his colleague, that this was perfectly legal and that everyone agreed that it was legal. That is not quite the case.

Mr. Lewis: It is like you pretending to be a Member of Parliament.

Mr. Boudria: My friend says that I am pretending to be a Member of Parliament. I want to tell him that I have a majority which proves I was duly elected.

Mr. Cadieux: My neighbour.

Mr. Boudria: My friend says that I am his neighbour. He knows of my majority.

I want to ask the Minister of Justice about the instruments that were used for the borrowing of these funds. Does he recall a few years ago when the Senate refused to appropriate funds because of the fact that the Estimates had not been tabled in the House and at that particular time the Government had to use short-term borrowing instruments at high interest rates? It condemned the fact that someone else, namely, the Senate, had caused this use of short-term instruments.

Will the Minister confirm today in the House that in fact he used the very same instruments during this period, this self-inflicted period of being broke that the Government has brought upon itself? I confirmed with the officials of Treasury Board those facts. Will the Government confirm this double-talk, that the instruments used two years ago—and they were seen as being inappropriate by the Government at that time because they had to be used involuntarily—were used voluntarily this time and caused the same type of expenditure of funds?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I welcome to the House the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands because his colleague is desperately in need of his help to explain special warrants which give the power to spend, not the power to borrow.

Mr. Boudria: That is not what I am talking about. I am talking about the instruments that you used.

Mr. Lewis: Perhaps my friend, the recent expert on this kind of thing, could enlighten us on that matter. It would be helpful.

I want to point out to him that I entered the debate only to set the record straight. I did it without an awful lot of fanfare. We used the authorities that we had for doing what we were doing and to refute the allegations which have been made during the rhetoric of my colleagues opposite.

My friend was kind enough to raise another occasion when the great anointed and appointed other House held up the business of the elected representatives of Parliament causing further expense to the Canadian taxpayer, the same taxpayers who will not be paid tomorrow because the Liberal Senate had a 15-minute workday. I want to point out that I have answered the question. The special warrants were used in complete accordance with the authorities and the law and in complete accordance with the Financial Administration Act. I think that has made the point. I would like to get on with the question.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to my hon. friend. He was concerned that the Liberal dominated Senate was going to cause some problems. I noticed the haste at which our Prime Minister is quickly trying to change that balance in the Senate. Given a few more days, weeks, and months, it will be a Tory dominated Senate. I guess then everything will be okay. These are the realities of Senate appointments. One thing is clear: there are no New Democrats in there, and there never will be.

Mr. Lewis: Even the Senate has certain qualifications.

Mr. Riis: I would like to move on to another area, but first I think I should clarify what I just said, or perhaps I will leave it after all.

Mr. Milliken: You better leave it.

Mr. Riis: The Minister of Justice asks why these people will not get paid. He identified certain groups of taxpayers who will be expecting cheques. He raises in a rhetorical way why they will not get paid. He had some notion it is because we are holding up the House and that it would cause some problem.

If there are any problems in terms of paycheques getting out to the right people at the right time, it is because the Government has bungled the business of Canada. The Government should have done the right thing. It should have done the traditionally honour bound thing and followed the precedents that have been established over many, many years.

Mr. de Cotret: We followed the law.

Mr. Riis: The President of the Treasury Board says that he followed the law. The point is that if Members of the Government had done what has always been done, we would not be here today. This debate would not have occurred today if that were done. The House of Commons would have voted on the appropriate terms of supply, and the business would have been done as it has been done in parliamentary democracies for hundreds of years.

However, members of the Government decided to take a short-cut. They decided to do an end run around Parliament, to do something under the table, to sneak something through.

• (1620)

All we are saying is that if the Government had the courage, the decency and the honour to do things appropriately and the way Canadians want them to be done, this would not have occurred. The Minister of Justice should be honest and say: "Yes, we have made a mistake. We have made an error in judgment. We did something rather dastardly when it comes to parliamentary process. We should not have done it". He will have an opportunity shortly to vote on a very reasoned amendment which would allow the Government to say that the letter of the law may in fact have been kept but that what it has done as a Government is unconventional and sets a very dangerous precedent.

I know that the Minister of Justice and the President of the Treasury Board, being the kind of people that they are, will agree that what has been done is unconventional and that what the Government has done is in fact setting a very dangerous precedent. I look forward to their support when we vote on the amendment.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I want to confess that I did make an error. There is a representative of the NDP in the other place. Senator Ed Lawson represents all the values of the NDP to the Canadian people in that place. I know that they revere his representation. I want to get that on the record because I would like to admit that mistake.

We followed the Financial Administration Act to the letter of the law. We followed the House order to the letter of the law. When it comes to payments to the RCMP, to the veterans and to our suppliers, all of which cannot go forward as of midnight tonight, we will tell those people that we followed the letter of the law. We will tell them that the delay has been completely on the part of the Liberal Senate, the Liberals in the House of Commons and the NDP.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments has expired.

Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The question is therefore on the amendment of the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the Members.

And the division bells having rung:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 45(5)(a), I have been requested by the Chief Government Whip to defer the vote until a later time.

Accordingly, pursuant to Standing Order 45, the division on the question before the House stands deferred until 5.30 p.m. today, at which time the bells to call in the Members will be sounded for not more than 15 minutes.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1989–90

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, May 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C–11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Lee Richardson (Calgary Southeast): Mr. Speaker, I will return to the borrowing Bill, another integral part of the Budget process. This Budget is a milestone for the future of Canada. It marks the point where Canada as a nation recognized that there is a threat to our way of life. It also marks the point where we started to effectively deal with it. It marks the point where we took action as a Government and as a people to maintain our standard of living and our social programs, not just for ourselves but for our children as well.

The Progressive Conservative Government has been working since 1984 to get the threat of debt under control. This took tough action, competent management of the economy, and strong control of government spending. We succeeded in cutting the deficit by $9.5 billion and by slowing the rate of growth of the debt from 24 per cent a year to less than 10 per cent last year. Despite this progress the public debt is still growing faster than our ability to carry it. That is why the Budget proposes some strong medicine to face up to the debt challenge.

The reality is that we still have a long way to go. Today we are debating the approval of a Bill to permit the Government to borrow $25.55 billion. This will permit the Government to meet its financial requirements and to conduct foreign exchange operations.

Perhaps some background would be helpful. In general, the Government requires parliamentary authority to borrow new money. A notable exception is temporary loans under Section 47 of the Financial Administration Act with a maturity of less than six months when there are insufficient funds to meet disbursements. With the exception of these special Section 47 loans new parliamentary authority is not required to roll over existing debt.

The deficit is projected to be $30.5 billion in the 1989–90 fiscal year, compared to $38.3 billion in the 1984–85 fiscal year. However, this is not equal to the borrowing requirements of the Government for three reasons.

First, the Government has access to $10.4 billion in non–budgetary sources of funding such as contributions to the Public Service superannuation accounts. The projected financial requirements after taking non–budgetary items into account are $20.5 billion.

Second, foreign exchange operations will affect the Government's borrowing requirements. For example, when the Canadian Government acts to moderate a rise in the Canadian dollar, Canadian dollars must be borrowed while the acquired U.S. dollars are added to our foreign exchange reserves.

Burrowing Authority

A $3 billion borrowing authority reserve will be sought to provide for flexibility in managing foreign exchange transactions including exchange fund earnings.

Third, the amount that must be borrowed is increased by the exchange fund earnings.

The exchange fund earnings are related to the investment income from Canada's foreign exchange holdings, particularly in the form of U.S. dollar denominated assets. Since these earnings are in foreign currency, they increased the reported level of foreign exchange holdings but do not reduce financial requirements even though they are reported as budget revenues. Exchange fund earnings are projected to be $1.3 billion.

On March 31 of the previous fiscal year, the Government used its emergency borrowing powers under Section 47 of the Financial Administration Act to borrow $750 million. This Bill will refinance this temporary debt and authorize a further $24.8 billion for a total of $25.55 billion, consisting of, as I have noted, the 1989–90 financial requirements of $20.5 billion, exchange fund earnings of $1.3 billion, a reserve of $3 billion and the replenishment of Section 47 loans for another $750 million for a total of $25.55 billion.

The Government's financial requirements are a comprehensive measure of the demands on credit markets. These requirements have fallen sharply from $29.8 billion in 1984–85 to a projected $20.5 billion in 1989–90. Relative to the size of the economy, financial requirements have fallen from 6.7 per cent of gross domestic product to a projected 3.2 per cent this year. By 1993–94 the Government's financial requirements will have fallen to $3 billion or 0.3 per cent of gross domestic product.

To accomplish this we have made and will continue to make some tough choices. That is what we were elected to do. We have striven to ensure that the total budget package has an appropriate balance that reflects regional circumstances and a greater burden on those who are able to carry it.

On the expenditure side of the ledger, the work of the Expenditure Review Committee of Cabinet has resulted in major reductions of Government spending which add up to about $2.5 billion per year. This builds on the efforts we have made in the past four years to reduce program spending as a portion of the economy from 19.5 per cent when we took office to 16 per cent this year and about 15 per cent by 1993–94.

Since 1984, this Government has worked to build a strong foundation on which Canadians could achieve their economic potential. Over the past four years, the Government has introduced a number of structural policies and reforms that raise the prospects for growth and higher living standards for Canadians. We modernized the regulatory environment for business. We reformed the corporate and personal income tax systems to make them more equitable and to increase the incentives to save and invest. We negotiated the Canada–U.S. Trade Agreement, which by securing access to the large U.S. market will permit Canadian firms to operate on a larger, more efficient scale and seek expanded markets for their products.

We encouraged research and development and approved job training programs. We replaced the Foreign Investment Review Agency with Investment Canada to encourage the foreign investment that provides net benefits to Canada.

Together with responsible fiscal actions, our economic measures created a climate in which Canadians could face the economic challenges of a tough competitive world.

We will also continue our privatization efforts, including the sale of the remaining Air Canada shares, the sale of two former divisions of Atomic Energy of Canada and a stepped up evaluation of other possible privatization candidates.

Our earlier efforts to make the Post Office self–sufficient have succeeded. Not only did it make a profit last year, the Post Office will start paying dividends to the Government.

These efforts to make sure tax dollars are spent wisely would not be complete unless transfers to individuals were also examined. For example, as the Hon. Member for Edmonton Northwest (Mr. Dorin) has pointed out, senior citizen's pensions represent the largest single expenditure of Government, in the neighbourhood of $15 billion a year. Those pensions are indexed so that every year the amount we spend on them will increase by the amount of inflation, which is currently running about 4 per cent. So we have an approximate 4 per cent increase simply as a result of that. Second, the population is growing older. There are more and more people turning 65 and entitled to these pensions. The result of inflation and more people turning 65 will require the Government to find an additional $1.5 billion this year just to maintain the existing program—not to improve it, enhance it or increase it. Our seniors will not be denied their due. Our seniors will not be penalized because they did not have the opportunities of this generation.

Canada's social safety net is important to all of us and it must be preserved and made secure for now and the future. That means that the priority purposes of programs like old age security and family allowance must be to assist lower and middle-income Canadians, not to unnecessarily subsidize those with higher incomes. That is why the Budget proposes to use the tax system to recover these payments from high income taxpayers. Those with individual net incomes greater than $50,000 will repay these benefits or part of them. Everyone eligible will continue to receive a cheque. This repayment measure will ensure that those who need assistance will retain their benefits, and those with high incomes will repay more as their income rises.

The Budget also contains tax increases. Higher revenues will contribute to narrowing the imbalance between government income and outgo so that this generation pays for today's programs and contributes to debt control. This will return total revenues as a share of the economy to levels that prevailed in the early 1970s before deficits started to balloon out of control when the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) was Finance Minister.

Let us remember that when the Leader of the Opposition was Finance Minister the deficit increased by $4 billion. Relative to the size of the economy the deficit doubled from 1.6 per cent of Gross Domestic Product to 3.3 per cent. In contrast, the present Minister of Finance has cut the deficit by $10 billion and relative to the GDP the deficit has been almost cut in half from 8.6 per cent to 4.9 per cent. When the Leader of the Opposition was Finance Minister total spending rose by 107 per cent in four years. That is four times faster than the spending increases of the present Government. If the Minister of Finance had increased his spending at the same rate as the then Minister of Finance, taxes this year would have had to double just to keep the deficit from rising.

Some would argue that the Government has taken harsh measures to tackle the deficit. But this Government has also helped ease the tax load on many Canadians. The refundable federal sales tax credit for adults and children will be doubled to protect those with low incomes. The income threshold will also be increased to $18,000. This means a single person with an income of $18,000 will receive $140 credit next year, and a family of four will receive $420. This measure provides substantial assistance to those most in need.

A further part of our debt control strategy relates to the unemployment insurance system. The changes announced recently to improve the UI program, increased training and improved the equity and incentive provisions, were designed to redirect resources within the program.

At the same time changes will be made to ensure that the financing of the program is consistent with our efforts to control the debt. Beginning in 1990 the UIC system will be fully financed by employer and employee premiums. The Government will continue to finance the UIC account should it go into deficit and difficult times.

A major part of this strategy is the reform of the federal sales tax. A new tax called the goods and services tax will replace the current system on January 1, 1991. It will have a broad base and will have a rate of 9 per cent.

Sales tax reform has been in the works for a long time. The present tax is hidden, unfair and damaging to our economy. While the joint federal-provincial reform of the Senate is not possible at this time, the importance of the reform made it necessary for the federal Government to move ahead. The new goods and services tax will provide a more stable revenue base for government programs and debt control.

It will improve the over-all fairness of the tax system. It will be more visible to the consumer than the current federal sales tax and it will allow the economy to function more efficiently. The goods and services tax will be levied on a vast majority of goods and services consumed in Canada. However, basic groceries, prescription drugs and medical devices will not be taxed. Residential rents, child care, legal aid and most health, educational and dental services will also be tax exempt. The paper burden on small business will be minimized.

The 9 per cent rate will provide sufficient revenues to replace the existing federal sales tax, allow income tax reductions for middle-income households and provide a new refundable sales tax credit. This credit will be paid four times a year in advance of the start of the new tax and will be designed to ensure that families earning less than $30,000 will be better off as a result of sales tax reform.

The combination of spending costs and tax increases today in the reform of the sales tax system in 1991 will make sure that the threat of the debt is dealt with decisively. The challenge is to make sure that we keep to this task each year, every year until the job is done.

This Budget puts us on the right course, with an improved ability as a nation to carry the debt, with a strengthened capacity to maintain vital social and cultural programs and other important public services. With prudent fiscal management and reduced spending, I hope by the fourth year of this mandate that we will not need to borrow to pay our bills. I wish we did not have to borrow, but that is the legacy of our debt. That is why this Budget is about building for the future, not borrowing from it. That is why the Budget deals firmly with the major obstacle to a better future, the problem of our growing debt. This Budget is designed to overcome that obstacle. The measures in it are tough. They have to be to match the challenges we are facing.

• (1640)

Mr. Harvard: Mr. Speaker, I listened intently to my hon. friend from Calgary, and I found his remarks interesting. There is an apparent contradiction which I would like to point out. He talks about himself and his Party defending Canada's social programs, and states that they are as concerned about our social programs as we are on this side of the House. I wonder how he can say that, given the fact that they have introduced this Draconian measure in the Budget called the claw-back, which in effect puts an end to universality in this country.

If I said to my hon. friends across the way that if we were introducing a Canada-wide pension plan or Canada-wide family allowance, and providing those programs only to those people earning $10,000 or $15,000 a year, they would say, "Oh, no, that is a form of welfare, and we would not stand for that". But that is exactly what this Government is proposing to do. They are starting at the other end, and coming down.

It has already been pointed out a number of times in this House that if this Government can start at $70,000 in clawing back pensions, clawing back the family allowance, it can do it at $60,000, $50,000, $40,000 or $20,000. That is the direction it is taking. Not only that, if it can do it with pensions, it can do it with medicare.

When it comes to Conservative thinking, if the Government wants to reduce the deficit by cutting back on pensions, would it not include cutting back on medicare benefits? It seems to me that that is what it can do.

The point I really want to make is this. One of the unique features of universality is bringing rich and poor together in the same constituency. By dividing those people through a claw-back measure, the rich people in this country begin to resent the payments to the people who are at the lower end of the pay scales. Pretty soon there will be no support from that constituency of Canadians for pensions and family allowances.

People who are fairly well off in this country do not lend the same support to welfare as they might do to pensions because they do not see anything in it for themselves. It is a welfare measure that has become stigmatized.

Does my hon. friend from Calgary understand that people who are better off in this country will begin to resent pensions and family allowances that they themselves will never share in? They will pay into it but they will not share in something that should belong to them as a right of citizenship.

Mr. Richardson: I thank the Hon. Member for his question. First, I should clarify that the direction we are taking in this Government is to reduce the mountain of debt that was created, beginning in 1974 when the Members' Leader was the Minister of Finance. That mountain of debt is the greatest obstacle that we have to overcome in the country today.

With regard to your question relating to the taxation of benefits of wealthy Canadians, I cannot recall a single matter that was raised more often in the course of my knocking on 25,000 doors in my constituency than the waste of government funds going to people who simply do not deserve or need them.

We are taking a number of difficult measures in this Budget to reduce the national debt. This is one of them. I do not think that anyone who is in an income category over $50,000 is going to begrudge being taxed at the rate of 15 per cent on the baby bonus, should they receive it, or any old age benefits.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, the Conservative Member from Calgary who just spoke failed to answer a couple of important questions. He dwells on the national debt, on the annual deficit.

Can he explain to Canadian taxpayers why the Government in the last four years has more than doubled that national debt? In borrowing for interest payments, will he answer why, during the best of economic times in the last five to seven year cycle, that deficit, if it was so important, was not brought down rather than doubled.

Second, when he tries to parade a political Robin Hood image of sorts, that is to say, take from the rich in terms of family allowances and pensions, he fails to tell zCanadians that they are simply playing with pocket change. The real message in these Budgets is in the tax distribution. We have quoted day in and day out on this side, whether it is in Question Period or in debate, the unfairness of the tax regime. We have described a family, which is real on the streets of this country, that earns $26,000 whose taxes have gone up 60 per cent since 1984 through five Tory federal Budgets. On the other hand, the increase of those families earning upwards of $150,000 was only 8 per cent. That is the real message, the real dilemma that many Canadian families are facing.

Perhaps the Hon. Member can also address the fairness of that particular tax regime. No one minds paying his way for this country. Where the tax revolt comes in, where the tax inequities lie is when one class of Canadians says, "Hey, we are getting hit much more than the next door neighbour". Then the situation is that the poor in this country cannot afford to pay and the rich will not pay. Therefore this large working middle-class sector in our society says enough is enough. They fall to one side of the category or the other. Perhaps the Hon. Member, in the minutes that he has available, can address himself to the question of why the Tories doubled that debt; and second, talk about where the fairness is in this tax regime.

Mr. Richardson: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure the Hon. Member was in the House for all of my speech. He could have had the answer to his question by listening to what I said.

I began by noting that in the period when the Hon. Member's Leader was Finance Minister. In that four years, the debt increased 107 per cent. It was the snowball that the Liberals starting rolling down the hill which grew into this huge mountain of debt by building in ongoing programs that will take some time to control. This is the first government and the first Finance Minister that has had the courage to stand up and say enough is enough. We cannot continue as the Liberals did for 18 years to spend beyond our means. We have to get a handle on the national debt, not only for this generation, but for future generations. We have to stop what the Liberals started, control the national debt and provide the social programs that all of us in the House want.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise an important point concerning the role played by the average backbencher, Members like me, in this House.

I refer to the decision made earlier by the Government to defer the vote on the amendment made by the Senate to Bill C-14.

Mr. Speaker, I object to the Government using its orders, although it has a right to do so, to defer a vote to a time normally reserved for Private Members: Business. We have one hour a day, sometimes three days a week, set aside for Members, from 5 p.m. to 6 p.m.

• (1650)

[English]

There are no rules that provide that the Government cannot do that, but I think there is a moral obligation to understand that private Members do have an hour occasionally during the week in which to bring forth initiatives of their own. By deferring the vote to 5.30 this afternoon, the Government is doing something during private Members' hour that it should be doing during Government time. I believe serious consideration should be given to this matter.

Standing Orders 45(4) and 45(5) give the Whips of the Government and the official Opposition the right to request that a vote be deferred to later in the day or to 6 o'clock the next day. I would not want to see the Whips being accused of abusing this right by deferring all votes to 5 o'clock on a day we know that a private Member's Bill or motion will be before the House, thereby preventing that debate from occurring. In the spirit of decency and in the spirit of the McGrath reforms, Hon. Members should have that hour during the week.

I do not think the Government can have it both ways. The Government has its time and is entitled to that time, but within that time it should do what governments do well and that is govern. I do not think the Government wants to take away from Members on both sides of the House their right to present initiatives, Bills and motions which they understand will be of benefit to the country and their own constituents.

I ask that the House consider this point and possibly refer it to a committee for further consideration. Possibly the rules could be adapted or modified to prevent an abuse by the Government or by the Opposition of Standing Order 45(5) which gives the Whips this power. I know I might sound a bit funny because I am a Whip myself, but I do not like the abuse of private Members' hour. I have made my point clear and I will sit down.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, by and large, I agree with my hon. friend opposite. All of us in this Chamber should be protective of private Members' hour and of the private Members' process. Today, the Chamber was faced with a decision by a non-elected body to deal with financial matters in a way that is certainly not common although it is legally possible. We felt this morning that we could dispose of that matter and return it to the other Chamber in time for the veterans and pensioners who are expecting cheques from the Government to receive them. We felt that with the co-operation of the three parties, we could do that rather quickly. We felt we could send it back to the other place and have the situation resolved in time to issue those cheques. As the day progressed, it became clear that it was not possible. Those people will have to suffer some inconvenience in most cases but some real hardship in others.

The source of the interference with private Members' hour today was discussed earlier today with the Whip of the third party in the House, the Hon. Member who happens to be the sponsor of the private Members' Bill. Less than one hour ago, the Official Opposition and the Government, in an effort to protect private Members' hour, proceeded to deal with the issue of the Senate motion on a voice vote in the Chamber. Certain Hon. Members having risen in their places caused the bells to ring and Hon. Members to be called. No Member of the Official Opposition did that and no Member of the Government did that. It was Members of the third Party, the Party's whose Whip sponsors the private Member's hour that is before the House today. If there is any suffering on the part of the sponsor of the motion, may I suggest that on this unique day in this unique set of circumstances, it was the Whip of the third Party who caused his own personal misfortune.

Earlier this day, we had conversations that would have allowed a full one hour for private Member's business. It would have been very simple to let the motion carry on the voice vote at 4.15 this afternoon, but the decision was made to call in the Members. We were then still faced with the issue of governing the country.

We passed a motion last week providing that we meet later this day to conclude our vote on the Budget. Our proceedings will already go longer than they would on a normal day. The third Party is asking us to go longer still, something which will cause an enormous proportion of the Members of the House to cancel very important engagements relating to the governing of the nation.

The Government, as represented by myself as Whip, has taken the decision to have the vote on the Senate amendment earlier to be followed by the vote on the Budget in the interests of all Members of the House. It would not be in the best interests of society to give in to the tyranny of a minority at any point, and our books are quite clear on that subject.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I take some pleasure in being involved in this. I believe the words of the government Whip are astounding. The vote on the Budget was deferred until 6 o'clock on Monday from Thursday of last week. The government Whip has a responsibility to have his Members here at that time. He had all the warning he needed. Earlier today, he suggested that we defer private Members' business so that government Members would not have to stay here until 6 o'clock. That was really astounding and I thought it was shameful. Of course I did not agree to it.

The government Whip is seeking his revenge in this small way by making sure that when my motion comes up, we are told that we can only debate it for one half hour. The Government is upset because it has to keep some of its Members here past 6 o'clock.

Government Members do not want to stay here to vote for the Budget. I understand that. If you have read the Budget, Mr. Speaker, you will understand the implication of its closing down the bases in Summerside and Portage la Prairie and you will understand why government Members do not want to stay here until 6 o'clock to vote. There are a number of Members who do not want to be here tonight, and that is the Government's problem.

Government Members knew last Thursday that they had the responsibility to be here at 6 o'clock tonight to vote on the Budget. I do not have any sympathy whatsoever for the government Whip, but I do have some sympathy for the people of Atlantic Canada who were told that at 5 o'clock tonight, a motion relating to regional economic development would be dealt with by the House. They were told that the motion standing in my name would have one full hour of debate. The shenanigans of the Government House Leader indicate how little support the Government has in Atlantic Canada and why the Government has such little support.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. First, the government Whip failed to mention the fact that the vote in question should have taken place at 4.30 this afternoon, after a 15 minute bell which should have started at 4.15. In other words, we will be voting on this Bill at 5.30, not because of any action of the New Democratic Party, but because of a delaying tactic, under the rules, that was utilized by the Government at 4.15 this afternoon.

There is only one reasonable thing to do under the circumstances because the precedent that has been set today is one that I could use tomorrow to ask that a vote be deferred to a time a government Member's private motion is being dealt with. We could do that across the way with each other and practically eliminate Private Members' Hour under the dangerous precedent initiated today by the Government Whip.

• (1700)

I wish you would seek unanimous consent of the House, Mr. Speaker, that immediately upon taking the vote today the last half hour of Private Members' Hour be taken up at that time in order not to remove any time from the Hon. Member whose Private Member's Motion we are debating today. I ask that you seek unanimous consent. Hopefully, if the Government is serious that it is not trying to punish the New Democratic Member in question, it would agree to provide that extra half hour. Then we would not create the dangerous precedent I fear we may be creating.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must remind the House that we must commence Private Members' Hour at five o'clock. Is there unanimous consent to continue with Private Members' Hour after the possible three divisions that we will have tonight?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is unanimous consent.

I thank the three Whips of the respective parties, including the Deputy Whip, for the remarks they have made. The Chair will look into the matter and report back to the House.

It being 5 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[English]

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

LONG-TERM PLANNING FOR ATLANTIC REGION

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of providing long-term regional planning for the Atlantic region through an established permanent ministry responsible for regional development.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is an unusual situation in that we are dealing with a motion rather than a Bill. That is deliberate because we do not have the power, as opposition Members, to set up government Departments. The motion that we are dealing with is very important. If one looks at the history of regional economic development in this country, one sees why the issue itself is important.

First, in our Constitution regional development is specifically listed as a requirement of the House of Commons and the Parliament of Canada.

Second, over years of Liberal and Conservative government there has been a move away from a Department which was specifically responsible for regional economic expansion to the present Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, and now the Conservative Government is moving further in that direction by setting up a new Department with no specific mandate in its title for regional development.

Not only have we changed the title of the Department concerned but the whole focus of that Department. When the Liberal Government disbanded the Department of Regional Economic Expansion it made a mistake. That mistake is still hurting the regions today. The federal Government at the present time has the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion in place. We already see that the focus on regional development has been curtailed. There is not a Minister sitting in Cabinet with a specific responsibility for regional development. There is not even a Minister of State with a specific responsibility for regional development. Yet over the years Cabinet has grown in size from 25 to 28, to 30 and now to 40. Instead of having one Minister responsible there is a hodgepodge of Ministers responsible for various aspects of regional economic development.

That approach does not work. It is especially harmful to the underdeveloped regions of the country. It is extremely hard on Atlantic Canada. The Government speaker who will be delegated today to rise after the three votes will point out that the Government has set up ACOA and that the Atlantic Canadian Opportunities Agency has a similar mandate and according to the Government perhaps an expanded mandate.

I would argue that it does not have the same powers as a full-fledged Department. It does not have the staff of a full-fledged Department. It does not have the opportunity, the capacity, or the willingness to deal with other Departments in the way that the former Department of Regional Economic Expansion could do. That is a serious problem.

An agency basically situated in Atlantic Canada will not have the power, the focus, the money, or the wherewithal to meet with other agencies or other Departments. It does not have a Deputy Minister sitting in Ottawa who meets with other Deputy Ministers. It does not have Assistant Deputy Ministers who meet with Assistant Deputy Ministers. It does not have the same role within the whole budgetary process as other Departments.

The same thing could be said for the western diversification fund. In itself it can be a useful tool, but it cannot replace a Department which is specifically responsible for economic expansion and economic development in our nation.

If Members from the various regions think about that, they will realize that it is true. Those of us who have worked in Ottawa for a number of years know how important it is to have someone who is here making decisions, and how important it is to have someone here who has a voice.

I have already indicated that the voice is no longer there within Cabinet. I have already indicated that we do not have a voice at the Deputy Minister level, at Assistant Deputy Minister level, or other levels which are parallel to the aligned Departments. As a result we really have a situation where, as my colleague from Prince Albert—Churchill River indicated a few moments ago, we do not know if we are dealing with a political slush fund or a sense of government direction.

Certainly people who receive money for their projects, industries, corporations, and communities are very happy when they receive that money. Those who do not receive money are obviously not nearly as happy.

The problem that we and Members from Atlantic Canada have is that they cannot look at a clear mandate of what the Government is attempting to achieve. We do not know what the mandate of ACOA will be one year from now. We do not know what will happen to the money that is not spent through ACOA. We know that some of the projects that are funded seem to come out of nowhere, and the money has gone to nowhere and no jobs have been created. We could go through a whole list of embarrassing situations.

A government Member may rise and indicate that there are some rosy pictures from one or two of the grants. I would hope that when he rises he will also deal with the other grants and programs that did not prove to be fruitful. In terms of balance, he should do that.

However, my primary concern in presenting this motion is to indicate how we as a Parliament have failed in allowing the Government to go in this direction. The prior Liberal Government and the present Conservative Government made a tragic mistake in terms of understanding what our regions need.

In a previous speech I indicated that there was a House of Commons committee that was specifically responsible for regional economic expansion. That committee was able to travel. I took great pleasure in travelling with that committee when I was a member. We went into northern New Brunswick, Newfoundland, and other parts of Canada. As a Member from western Canada, on those trips I learned a lot about why programs were necessary and I also learned a lot about the communities we were in. I learned about some of the problems the Department of Regional Economic Expansion were having and what changes were needed to specific legislation, programs, and regulations. That is where we are failing at this point. There is no such standing committee of the House.

• (1710)

Therefore many Members of Parliament are not in a position to know what should be done in terms of changing government programs. Since there is no Minister directly responsible for regional development who can report to any committee of the House of Commons, the House of Commons cannot look at the whole scope of regional development programs in the budgetary process.

While specific agencies have particular responsibilities for regional development and can report that to the House, it is not like looking at the whole picture from coast to coast. That is what we need.

Newly elected Members were not here when we had the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. I can say there is a significant difference from what is happening in the Standing Committees now and what happened eight or nine years ago when that Department existed. The ability of Parliament to influence government programs has diminished as a result. While Members can examine the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agencies and deal with its mandate, the mandate is no where near that of the previous Department of Regional Economic Expansion.

Furthermore, the committee does not have the mandate to direct the efforts of the Government toward such things as reducing economic disparities or affecting over-all government regional economic policy. I can use those same arguments with regard to the western diversification fund.

That is the purpose of this motion. I hope Members opposite will not simply rise to speak about the grand successes of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agencies or the wonderful achievements of the western diversification fund but will talk about what Parliament wants for regional development. I hope they will say what we should be doing in the House of Commons to represent the needs of those in the regions of Canada who are in most need of government assistance.

I remind Members opposite that this is a Private Member's Motion and does not require solidarity with the Government. It is an opportunity for them to speak about their region and their responsibility as a Member of Parliament. I hope Members opposite take that approach when they rise to speak.

The Government's policies mean that there are a number of issues which can no longer be raised in specific Standing Committees. This has concerned me particularly since I became our caucus spokesperson for Atlantic Canada issues. The mandate of the former Standing Committee on Regional Economic Expansion allowed us to cover the whole gambit of economic development in a certain region. While a Standing Committee on Fisheries and Oceans dealt with matters specifically concerning the fishery, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion could deal with the question of the Atlantic fishery within the scope of Department of Regional Economic Expansion estimates. It was possible to deal with regional issues concerning forestry, post-secondary education, transportation or native people in Atlantic Canada under the mandate of the Standing Committee on Regional Economic Expansion.

These concerns came within the Department of Regional Economic Expansion.

When we visited northern New Brunswick, Corner Brook and St. John's East, we were given a royal reception because the people there wanted that direct input with Members of Parliament. They knew the importance of talking to Members of Parliament. They knew the importance of having a Department that would look at transportation, fisheries, and economic development as a whole rather than in isolation. We knew that the witnesses who would appear before the committee, whether in Campbellton or Corner Brook, would be involved in all aspects of the economy including the social programs of the regions.

This over-all perspective made a lot more sense not only to the MPs who were on the committee or to those who were listening to the presentations, but it made much more sense in helping the Government formulate its goals for that region. It made a lot of sense to have a Department of Regional Economic Expansion which could deal with numerous issues, including the fishery, post-secondary education, whether community colleges provided adequate courses for the people in that region, or whether there was the community infrastructure to attract industries.

That has gone out the window. It is a sad commentary on what has happened. We know that this was the agenda of senior bureaucrats in Ottawa in the early 1980s. They said so during hearings with the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and in a separate committee hearing dealing with industry and trade. They did not like having to encourage corporations to set up in particular areas such as Campbellton, Summerside, Halifax or Cape Breton because it should not be their responsibility to direct private enterprise. They would rather have the programs in place and leave it to the companies to decide where they wanted to set up.

That was a hard concept for parliamentarians to accept in those committees. We believed that if we were providing government money for regional development we should have some say in how we encourage those corporations and facilities to set up in a particular area.

The senior bureaucracy in Ottawa wanted the amalgamation that took place when the Liberals got rid of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. I suspect that it is some of those same bureaucrats who are responsible for successfully persuading the Conservative Government to integrate further and diminish the role of regional economic expansion within the new Department that is being established under legislation before the House.

Our Constitution requires that Parliament take regional development seriously. I do not believe we can do so if there is no longer a Standing Committee that studies that area. Even more important, we cannot do so without a specific government Department with that mandate.

It is interesting to note that just before the Liberal Government of the day demolished the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, a consultant's report which it had requested indicated the Government should proceed in the opposite direction. I have a copy of the report. It states that the mandate of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion has been good but that it really needs to be expanded. It has to expand its role of communication and co-ordination with the other Departments.

The report went on to give examples of why it was important. That was a worth-while study. I have not been a great fan of consultants, as many people in the House well know. I have not been a great fan of various studies that Governments have done. I have not been a great fan of the hiring process in terms of how those people get their jobs either. However, that study made a lot of sense. It actually amplified what we had heard in the Standing Committee on Regional Economic Expansion when we went into Atlantic Canada, Québec and western Canada.

What we heard from the people at that time was that they wanted an expanded role for the Department of Regional Economic Expansion. Rather than having to deal with two Departments they wanted one Department which would do a lot of the leg work, which had the authority and the emphasis within government to ensure that regional development occurred. As well, they wanted it to have the political muscle in Cabinet to make sure that individuals in other Departments did not stymie a good project.

That was what the people in Atlantic Canada and in the other parts of Canada called for. The Government rejected that. That is why I am asking through this motion that we indicate as the House of Commons that we want to see that process re-established. We want to be in a position to have a focus within Cabinet and within the House of Commons to ensure that the people in the regions are listened to, that the Government is in a position to act, and that the House of Commons and its Members will be in a position to monitor the activities of the Government when it comes to regional development.

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, I would like to compliment and indeed as an Atlantic Canadian, thank the Hon. Member opposite for bringing this motion before the House and for providing us with an opportunity to talk about regional development needs in Atlantic Canada.

However, I would like to tell him that the Government has already formed a long-term regional planning capability for Atlantic Canada through the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency established on June 7, 1987. I might say that it is a lot more than a grant dispensing agency.

I would also like to tell the Hon. Member that this agency has a Minister sitting at the cabinet table. It has a senior Minister sitting at the cabinet table. It has a former DREE Minister sitting on its behalf at the cabinet table. He is a Minister of whom we think very highly. We are quite satisfied that our interests are extremely well looked after in that the Minister responsible for the administration of ACOA is the Minister looking after regional development in Atlantic Canada.

Furthermore, we are very pleased that we have not only this new agency which functions as a Department but that it is centred in Atlantic Canada where Atlantic Canadians can play the lead role in determining what it does and how it functions.

The agency as legislated by Parliament is a permanent Ministry which has the principal responsibility in the federal Government for planning, implementing and co-ordinating programs and activities in support of regional development in the Atlantic region, including the administration and delivery of a $1.05 billion budget in incremental funds. I would like to have all of that money in the South Shore, too.

I would like to point out that in announcing this agency on June 6, 1987, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stated, and I quote directly from his remarks on that occasion:

> The agency will have a strong mandate for the co-ordination and planning of all federal activities contributing to the economic growth of the region, particularly procurement, training and skills development, job creation, technology infrastructure development and local investment promotion. It also will be directly responsible for federal small and medium sized business and industrial development policy and programs in the region, working in close co-operation with provincial Governments and with the private sector. Special efforts will be made to ensure Atlantic suppliers benefit fairly from federal procurement requirements.

The role of ACOA was embodied in Bill C-103 which was proclaimed last year. The object of the agency as stated in Section 12 of the legislation is: "to support and promote opportunity for economic development in Atlantic Canada, with particular emphasis on small and medium sized enterprises through policy, program and project development and implementation, and through advocacy of the interests of Atlantic Canada in national economic policy, program and project development and implementation".

The agency has been provided with significant powers in Section 13 of the Act, including that to formulate plans to support economic development in Atlantic Canada in concert with other federal Departments, in addition to other program powers.

ACOA is the result of a new decentralized approach to regional development.

The agency is served by a private sector advisory board which provides input to the impact of proposed policy and programs. It keeps ACOA management advised on current private sector concerns.

The ACOA headquarters is located in Moncton, New Brunswick. There are regional offices in each of the provincial capitals, as well as an office in Ottawa.

The key point is that this agency is based in Atlantic Canada where it can benefit from the needs, the aspirations, and indeed the wisdom of Atlantic Canadians.

With limited resources of approximately 320 person-years ACOA makes use of expertise available within the private sector and other levels of government in the delivery of its operations.

Regional Development

The Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is a strategic partnership with the people of Atlantic Canada in the renewal of the Atlantic entrepreneurial spirit. In pursuit of this mission ACOA has adopted several strategic long-term objectives. The first is a self-sustaining entrepreneurial culture. The second is more successful small and medium sized businesses. The third is more lasting employment opportunities. The fourth is increased earned incomes. The fifth is national policies and programs which reflect the strengths, aspirations, and opportunities of Atlantic Canada. The sixth is an expanding competitive economy.

The elements of the ACOA mandate and the powers embodied in the legislation will provide the agency with the necessary tools to implement its mission and work toward the following four stated objectives.

First, the ACOA action program is providing the resources to undertake strategic risk sharing with Atlantic entrepreneurs. By engaging in this type of relationship with its clients the agency is gaining valuable insight into the future directions of economic development within Atlantic Canada.

Second, the co-operation element of the mandate sees ACOA implementing a new concerted approach to shared federal-provincial regional development funding in Atlantic Canada.

Third, ACOA is mandated to co-ordinate federal policies and programs aimed at stimulating Atlantic Canada economic opportunities. This is resulting in more efficient use of federal regional development resources.

Fourth, ACOA is devoting a portion of its energies to the advocacy of Atlantic interests across the entire spectrum of national policies and programs, from federal procurement to regulations and legislation. The goal of this element is to alter some long-standing stereotypes regarding the region's ability to compete with national standards. That is why it is so important it is an Atlantic based agency.

By far the most impressive of ACOA's accomplishments to date has been the unprecedented reaction to the agency's action program. Since it was introduced in February of 1988 applications to the program have run at approximately ten times the rate of previous regional development programs. This accelerated activity has translated into over 5,000 approved projects. The direct private sector investment generated by these initiatives will amount to over $2 billion. I know that at the present time there are 200 applications in the ACOA office from the South Shore alone. We have had over 100 applications approved. Quite frankly, jobs are being created on a daily basis. With the downturn in the fishing industry we need that right now.

For example, in my own riding, Harry Freeman and Son in Greenfield has created 19 jobs; Nova Woodcraft in Bridgewater has created 8 jobs; ABCO Plastics in Mahone Bay has created 12 jobs; and Neptune Leather Company in Clark's Harbour has created 25 jobs. That is a result of a program that is based in the region and understands its potential. The economic spin-offs from this investment are expected to inject at least $2.5 to $3 billion into the Atlantic economy.

The effects of this economic stimulation are already being measured in lowered unemployment rates and the creation of some 14,000 jobs in Atlantic Canada. From December, 1987, to December, 1988, Atlantic Canada registered an 11.4 per cent increase in new business establishments, compared to 10 per cent for all of Canada. In each of the Atlantic provinces, increases of between 8.9 per cent and 15.4 per cent were registered for capital expenditures during 1988, over the previous year.

In conclusion, clearly this Government has taken some very tangible steps to ensure the permanency of regional development initiatives in Atlantic Canada. To date, those initiatives are working. As we head into the crisis in the fishing industry, I know that we can look to this Government for substantial support to see that the self-reliance of Atlantic Canadians which has been the key to our success in the past will be the key to our success in the future.

APPROPRIATION ACT NO. 1, 1989-90

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the amendment made by the Senate to Bill C-14, an Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the Government of Canada for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1990, and of the motion of Mr. de Cotret (p. 1695) and the amendment of Mr. Nystrom (p. 1713).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being 5.30 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 45, the House will now proceed to the deferred recorded division on the amendment of Mr. Nystrom to the motion of the President of the Treasury Board concerning the amendment made by the Senate to Bill C-14.

Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Nystrom), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

Is the House ready for the question on the motion in the name of the President of the Treasury Board?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall I dispense with the ringing of the bells?

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier, on a point of order.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I think you would find there is unanimous consent for applying the results of the previous division to this one.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In the reverse.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House agree to apply the division just taken, in the reverse, to the main motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on the motion, which was agreed to on the following division:

THE BUDGET

THE FINANCIAL STATEMENT OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The House resumed, from Thursday, May 11, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to order made on Friday, May 5, 1989, the House will now proceed with the deferred recorded division on the motion of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) concerning the Budget.

[English]

The question is on the motion standing in the name of the Minister of Finance. Shall I dispense with the ringing of the bells?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on the motion, which was agreed to on the following division:

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

LONG-TERM PLANNING FOR ATLANTIC REGION

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Murphy:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should consider the advisability of providing long-term regional planning for the Atlantic region through an established permanent ministry responsible for regional development.

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have this opportunity to speak on the motion put forward by my hon. friend. I am delighted that he is sponsoring something of this nature for the Atlantic region.

The advisability of providing long-term regional planning for the Atlantic region is certainly a subject that is near and dear to my heart. The mainstay of my riding of Bonavista—Trinity—Conception is very much the fishing industry. However, I am also constrained to report to the House that the last time I checked the figures, the average income was approximately $22,500. According to the latest figures, that puts it very close to the poverty level for this country.

One of the main issues that I considered to be a point of great importance during the election campaign, and certainly one of my campaign platforms, was the way to get things moving in Bonavista—Trinity—Conception. There is hardly any industry there. It is my wish as the Member of Parliament for the 91,000 people whom I represent not only to raise the profile of the fishing industry but also to try to get something moving in the area of diversification in other industries.

I am particularly interested in the area of tourism in Newfoundland. All Hon. Members who have been to Newfoundland would agree that there is a tremendous potential for tourism. Unfortunately, we have not been able to realize the full potential of this tourist industry for a number of reasons.

Of course, one reason is that although we have been around since 1497 and long before that, it is only in the last two decades that the potential of the tourism industry in Newfoundland has been recognized. Last year I believe we took in just over $300 million in the tourism industry. A large part of that came from the riding of Bonavista—Trinity—Conception.

We need regional development funding in Newfoundland in order to survive. I certainly need it in the riding of Bonavista—Trinity—Conception in order to conceptualize and work on some of the ideas that I have put forward to my constituents.

As I stand in the House today, I am in receipt of some 13 submissions to ACOA. They range from tourism to secondary fishery processing. They include mining and the building of hotels and motels. These applications represent the whole gambit of what can be done in my riding to develop ideas that can fuel the engine of economic growth.

I am very much in support of these and am indeed working with ACOA to make sure they get off the ground and proceed at a reasonable pace so that we may see some action in the foreseeable future.

• (1820)

I wish to speak for a moment about ACOA. There is no question that ACOA has been very successful. I would bring to the attention of the House that in the first year of its creation in Newfoundland ACOA received somewhere in the vicinity of 1,300 applications. That will give Hon. Members some indication of how popular this agency is.

In addition to ACOA there are other subagreements. In my presentation on the Budget I spoke about some of these areas. I refer now to Economic Regional Development Agreements, commonly known as ERDAs. These are lumped in my mind with regional development because they are in fact regional development agreements. If they were added up we would see that their total number amounts to $6 billion. That is a great deal of money.

I believe that six ERDAs have been approved in Newfoundland. I believe that there is some work going on with respect to them. However, vis-à-vis my earlier comments, I am particularly interested in the agreement for tourism which ran out on March 31 of this year. I know that there are one or two major projects under way and some of a lesser extent that depend very much on these agreements. In particular, the tourism agreement amounts to something in the vicinity of $21 million. That is a lot of money for some of the projects that we are trying to get under way in Newfoundland.

The projects range from a hospitality home development up to and including the building of hotels and motels, as well as tourist attractions, roadside tables, fireplaces and that sort of thing.

There is one other area to which I alluded in the House not too long ago which I will deal with now. It was when the Hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Dick) was speaking on another issue. I made note of the fact that in my briefings with ACOA I was very impressed with the dedication of all the people from the very top down to the account executives. I was somewhat distressed to find—and I am really putting words into the mouths of the senior executives—that they would like to do more but were constrained from doing so because they did not have adequate staff.

Looking at it from the output end one would expect that more could be done. However, purely from the input end alone the going formula for an account of the ACOA types would be between 10 and 15 for an account executive. This would allow an account executive to look at the incoming submission, to counsel the individuals or the company that has sought advice, and to discuss the whole procedure with the company. The account executive could send these people out to other agencies to seek assistance. I think that 15 accounts per account executive would permit that. However, in the case of ACOA I am told that the number of accounts for each executive is somewhere in the vicinity of 40 to 50. That does not permit the proper counselling and the institutionalized machinery to allow the success to happen as quickly as it should.

It would be my hope and desire that the favourable consideration of this type of motion put forward by my colleague would go a great deal of the way toward helping Newfoundlanders and indeed the people from Bonavista—Trinity—Conception in these types of submissions to have a better feel for the regional development programs, ACOA, and the ERDAs, as well as a better understanding of what is there so that they can make application and better treatment when they make their application. In the long term there could be a greater measure of success and a greater chance of success.

Mr. Ross Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure for me this afternoon to be able to participate in this debate. I am particularly gratified that my friend opposite from Churchill has moved this motion. It shows a recognition of all parliamentarians of the particular need for regional development, particularly in the Atlantic. I am pleased as well to be able to follow my friend from Bonavista—Trinity—Conception, a riding that neighbours mine. He is a gentleman who understands some of the problems that we face.

All Members of this House would share, I think, a common concern that regional development is important, that the creation of jobs and the enhancement of our economy is something to be strived for by all of us. I guess what the question inevitably comes down to is the most appropriate method for doing that, the best process to follow.

What disturbs me most about this motion is that the move that my hon. friend from Manitoba would like to take is regressive. It goes back to where we were before. It goes back to the times that did not work. The reason we have ACOA and its response stems from years of it does not work, they do not know what our problems are, they do not understand us in Ottawa.

The response of the Government was to say, as my hon. friend from the South Shore has said: "What we will do is we will set up an agency in the region staffed by people in the region who will make decisions on something that they know. There will be a quick and effective response". It is not just a money pot. The last thing we need in Atlantic Canada is just a money pot. I am not saying that the last thing we need is a money pot.

It is critical that ACOA continue to play a role that was set up some time ago with the creation of the Federal Economic Development Co-ordinator, the FEDC. That system involved the chief public servant in the region, the senior economic adviser to the Government. Those who wanted to deal with the Government had to deal with the FEDC. It was the FEDC who was in a sense the seed of the vice-presidents of ACOA.

Today, that role continues to be played out. Today, we continue to have the primary source of advice not only to government in Ottawa but to other government Departments, to provincial Governments, to those who are doing business in the regions, coming from the senior person in the regional offices of ACOA. The decisions are not being made in Ottawa. The decisions are being made in the region. If they are not being made by the vice-presidents, they are being made by the board. That is the way it should be. That is why ACOA is successful.

My friend from Churchill said something on which I have to comment. I do not want to take up my whole time in responding to him. He talked about the needs of Members of Parliament. I respect the needs of Members of Parliament, being one a few short months myself with many needs. The key here is the needs of the people of Atlantic Canada. It is the needs of the people who want to create jobs, the people who want to create opportunities. The people I grew up with and went to school with in Atlantic Canada, particularly in Newfoundland, only ever wanted one thing. That was the opportunity to create for themselves and for their families and their communities those things that would develop their communities in the future—economic growth and employment.

ACOA today is very active. It has been hugely successful, based on its mandate to do two things. It is an agency that supports job creation and job development and encourages others to do the same by modernizing, expanding and protecting our jobs. It is also an agency that plays a leading role in the development of the economy.

To the end of the year ACOA in Newfoundland and Labrador has had economic activity under the Action Program. It has grown ten times over the three previous initiatives. IRDP and AEP, the Atlantic Enterprise Program, saw 100 projects in 1987. Since ACOA was set up 7,000 inquiries have been held into its programs, 2,316 applications were received and 1,061 approvals have been granted. Over 40 per cent of these were new businesses and 38.4 per cent were for expansions.

• (1830)

In Newfoundland and Labrador ACOA's activities are expected to generate 3,200 new jobs and help maintain more than 7,000 others. That is a total of over 10,000 jobs created and maintained in an area of very high unemployment.

In terms of dollars, in 1987 we saw $21.7 million in federal money under IRDP and AEP and the ERDAs. Last year, $134.3 million reached Newfoundland and Labrador through ACOA.

In the manufacturing sector—time is a problem here, there is so much to say—in the service sector, I would like to refer to my hon. friend for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception (Mr. Mifflin) who quite rightly points out that the tourism industry is one of great opportunity for all of us. It is something that is natural to our province. It is something that we can do well. It is something that can grow exponentially. It is one of the largest employers in this country and it has the potential to be one of the largest employers in Newfoundland and Labrador.

We have provided $18 million in the tourism industry alone. It is quite clearly one of the areas that will continue to attract great interest, and that ACOA continues to want to fund and move ahead.

Sixty per cent, or $112 million, of the total sectoral investment in 1988 in the manufacturing sector came from ACOA. Some $40 million of this went into modernizing the Newfoundland and Labrador fishery. Modernizing the fishery is critical because not only do we modernize and keep up to date, but we increase our capability of adding value to our raw product in the region, creating wealth and jobs, and maintaining the profits in the region as opposed to exporting them to other parts of this country, or to other countries. That is absolutely critical.

That is the future of the region. That is where ACOA comes into the process. That is why ACOA, as a body, is dealing day-to-day with all the federal Departments, with all of the provincial governments individually, and their departments, and with industry groups, with those that want to go out and create jobs and can play such a substantial role. That is where it all comes together in that focus that is so important to us over the next few years.

An Hon. Member: Allan J. MacEachen all over again.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I know my hon. friend did not want to hear about some of the good things that OCOA has funded. I know there will be some projects over time that will not be successful, that will not live up to the hopes that so many have had, but I think the difference with ACOA from so many other organizations is the commitment of funds that the Government has made shows that at least we are trying. At least things are going ahead. The success rate with ACOA is remarkable. Some of the programs that we have seen that are so important, such as the Atlantic Entrepreneurial Institute, the TeleMedicine of Educational Technology Resource Agency, known as TETRA, which will go around the world in getting telemedicine and information to people that need it. These will have had sprung from many similar communications and high tech programs that will provide benefit around the world, in our province, in our country, and clearly in the Third World as well.

One thing that is particularly important, and I think shows how co-operation and how working together, particularly with the provincial government to ensure that as many people as possible who have ideas, and who have a will to go out and create jobs can do so, is the pilot project that has been developed by the Newfoundland and Labrador Development Corporation. The Enterprise Network will be a resource to many people who want to be able to create opportunities, to create jobs, to see futures for their communities but do not have the resources available to them, and in the past have not had those resources available to them. However, with a Government, a Department, as my friend from the South Shore said, with a Minister at the Cabinet table—

An Hon. Member: What department?

Mr. Reid: —with the full capability of a Department of this Government able to understand the needs and the ability to move ahead.

An Hon. Member: Which department?

Mr. Reid: To be able to work on the ground—

An Hon. Member: Which department?

Mr. Reid: To be able to say to—

An Hon. Member: There is no department.

Mr. Reid: —provincial colleagues, to be able to say to other departments: "These are the ideas, we work on them", in Moncton, in Fredericton—

An Hon. Member: Name the department.

Mr. Reid: —In St. John's, in Halifax. The Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, which in the last five years—I would love to go on but I know that others would like to speak on this. It is an important motion and I thank you for your tolerance.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear.

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to all of the previous speakers on this very timely subject. This is a subject very close to the hearts of all Atlantic Canadians because, as we all know, regional development programs are the lifeline of Atlantic Canada. It is an important economic tool for the cash-starved provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, P.E.I., and Newfoundland. Recent developments by this Government clearly show that it is either unaware of the problems of Atlantic Canadians, or it just does not care. There is no commitment.

From its inception in 1969, by the then Liberal Government, regional development has become a focal point of the federal Government. DREE was established specifically to address regional economic development. Since that time, it has deteriorated and today it no longer exists, nor does its predecessor DRIE.

Bill C-3, we note, will abolish the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion and put the emphasis on economic development only in Ontario and Quebec. I feel that they do not need the help any more than do the Atlantic provinces.

From 1984 to 1988 the Government has cut back $2 billion in regional development. The recent Budget cut back an additional $2 billion. The Government has refused to renegotiate the expired ERDAs. It has cut back on transfer payments.

This shows the Government's insensitiveness towards the needs of Atlantic Canadians. My home province has millions of dollars in ERDAs waiting to be renegotiated. Presently, there are eight ERDAs totalling over $78 million that have expired or will be expiring this fiscal year. Prince Edward Island needs these agreements, as they touch on all facets of the Island economy, including transportation, agriculture, fisheries and tourism. Prince Edward Islanders are fully aware of the deficit problem that Canada is facing. We are more than willing to do our share, Mr. Speaker, but our share is growing. What the Government has to realize is that it is tampering with the economic base of Atlantic Canada, an economic base that is solely dependent upon indigenous industries of which these ERDAs have been put into place to assist. Vital to Atlantic Canada's economy is transportation and fisheries. In fisheries, small craft harbour projects are being cut back. There has been added tax on fuel. There have been changes to the UIC program which is vital to this part of the country.

Transportation is the cornerstone of economic prosperity and this has been severely hammered. VIA Rail cutbacks, threats to kill the Atlantic freight subsidies, the direct flights of Air Canada and others to the major centres of Atlantic Canada are being cut. What about the base closures? The Government has severely cut back bases in Atlantic Canada. Whether some agree or not, the bases in Atlantic Canada and other parts of Canada were put there as regional development programs. This Government has not provided any viable economic alternatives.

My colleagues and I support this motion but I would also add that not only do we need a permanent ministry responsible for regional development but this ministry should be a super ministry with the power to veto or alter any intentions by this Government to hurt the long-term economic development and the economic prosperity of Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Bill Casey (Cumberland—Colchester): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly my pleasure to speak on this motion today. I would just like to read it to clarify it. The motion is basically to provide "long-term regional planning for the Atlantic region through an established permanent ministry responsible for regional development".

As much as I appreciate the Hon. Member for Churchill's interest in Atlantic Canada, I believe it would be a big step backwards and a big mistake. In fact, ACOA in place now takes it one step further from regional to almost every area, through the Enterprise Cape Breton Program, the Pictou Economic Development Program, Cumberland Development Program, et cetera. Area by area ACOA gets it right down to the grassroots so the people involved in economic development at the very lowest level have a say in economic development and the proceeds from ACOA.

• (1840)

This Government has taken bold action, I think, in formulating a regional development policy which is based on a decentralized approach and nowhere is this approach working better than in Nova Scotia.

ACOA is working for and with Nova Scotians from Sydney to Yarmouth to create a deliberate path of entrepreneurial renewal.

ACOA is supporting the activities of entrepreneurs, both new or seasoned, by sharing financial risk, by supporting the activities of their business organizations, by acting as an advocate in Ottawa and by working with the provincial Government to take progressive new steps toward economic development.

In the space of only one year, from February, 1988 to February, 1989, ACOA has received 3,328 applications for assistance in Nova Scotia alone under the action program, through its Halifax office and its Enterprise Cape Breton office in Sydney. Nearly half of these have been approved. This has generated $623 million in growth in Nova Scotia.

Sectors of the economy assisted include manufacturing, the service industry, tourism and accommodation and resource industries.

ACOA risk-sharing has been distributed throughout the Province taking into account particular needs in certain areas. For example, in Cape Breton, ACOA delivers its programs through Enterprise Cape Breton. With headquarters in Sydney and an office in Port Hawkesbury, again, focused right on the grassroots, the people at the level in these areas make the decisions and help provide the information.

The Pictou Economic Development Fund was established in 1988 and has provided nearly $4 million in assistance to entrepreneurs in that region.

The recently established Cumberland development authority in my own riding is undertaking a number of activities in support of economic development in the county and is working hand in hand with municipalities and development commissions. A national program could not do this.

ACOA provides programs and assistance that are both regionally and provincially responsive but, most important, they are in tune with the Atlantic economy and Atlantic Canadian entrepreneurs.

ACOA recognizes that Nova Scotia has strengths upon which to build. It has the largest population of the four Atlantic provinces, a diverse economy and a number of favourable economic indicators.

Building on local strengths and opportunities is fundamental to success. Since the day of its announcement, ACOA has put the entrepreneur, the non-commercial research establishment and the business organization front and centre in its strategy to create economic strength and vitality. It has been working very well.

In 1988, ACOA contributed directly to the creation of 5,752 new jobs and the maintenance of 1,540 jobs. That broke all records by far, compared to national programs that were in place before. Let me mention a couple of examples. One is Seagull Pewterer and Silversmiths Ltd. in my own riding which currently employs a staff of 136, up from two employees. It expects to create 50 more jobs to end up with 186 by the end of the year as a result of an expansion from assistance and interest buy-down from ACOA.

Seagull Pewterer is located in a small town in a rural area and many of the 186 jobs that will be created have gone to young people. These young people would not have any opportunities for employment other than Seagull Pewterer in this location. They play an important role in the community and they are a good corporate citizen.

Another example is Sarsfield Foods Ltd. in Kentville, Nova Scotia. It is a maker of high quality, home-style frozen pies. The company which began on a kitchen table to add value to the owner's apple orchard, today makes 30,000 pies a day. Following an ACOA assisted expansion, the growing company will have a workforce of 75 employees. The company will also have a spin-off in the local fruit industries since Sarsfield will have greater requirements for locally grown fruit. Instead of shipping unprocessed products of apples and fruit, we now ship finished products and keep the jobs in Nova Scotia.

ACOA's work in Cape Breton is carried on through Enterprise Cape Breton. A new spirit of entrepreneurship is taking shape in that part of the Province and the climate for investment is improving. A recent example of this was the opening of the Cape Breton Wallcoverings. ACOA has assisted this company with an interest buy-down and loan insurance.

A division of the St. Clair Paint and Wallpaper Corporation, Cape Breton Wallcoverings is projecting 1989 sales of $20 million. Sixty-five employees are now working at the plant and that figure will grow as additional equipment is installed.

In summary, I disagree with the motion before us to centralize our regional development programs. It is very important to keep it locally. We can contact the people we apply to now. We can talk to people. With national programs, the applications disappear in Ottawa or wherever the national office is. There is no contact, no way to find out where they are or the status of the applications.

• (1845)

The objectives for ACOA have been set, the commitment has been made and in Nova Scotia the process is under way and working. In my view, it is working better than a Ministry located outside the region as this motion proposes.

[Translation]

Mr. Gray (Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to add a few comments regarding the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. As the Member for Bonaventure—Îles-de-la-Madeleine, I have a good view of Members opposite who are from northern New Brunswick. Mr. Speaker, I can say that thanks to a number of changes that have taken place, there has been an improvement in job creation since the ACOA, as it is referred to, was established. These developments are extremely important for New Brunswick as a whole, and also for the northern part of New Brunswick.

[English]

If we take into account the effect that ACOA has had in the Province of New Brunswick, we find that in the past it has received in excess of 20,000 phone calls, and 4,000 requests from small and medium-sized businesses. The federal Government has spent $232 million through the ACOA program and out of the $232 million we find this has generated in excess of $800,000 from private enterprise. More than 2,000 projects have been accepted.

We look toward the future, and this is what we are doing with our decentralized programs for regional development. We need it, we want the control in the regions, and that is what we will continue to do with ACOA.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired. Pursuant to Standing Order 96(1), the order is dropped from the Order Paper.

It being 6.47 p.m. this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at eleven o'clock pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 6.47 p.m.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

MEASURE TO CHANGE NAME OF FREDERICTON CONSTITUENCY

Mr. J. W. Bud Bird (Fredericton) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-241, an Act to change the name of the electoral district of Fredericton.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Bird: Mr. Speaker, the name of Fredericton was assigned to my riding at the time of redistribution. It does not adequately reflect the geographic or traditional description of the riding and so we propose to change the name to Fredericton—York-Sunbury.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

VIA RAIL SERVICES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36 on behalf of a number of constituents who are concerned that the Government of Canada has failed to provide the necessary resources to fulfil its promise to expand VIA rail into a modern, efficient passenger transportation service. They are also of the opinion that the Government has now made it clear that it will be either cutting back or eliminating VIA Rail completely. The petitioners are asking Parliament to maintain, improve and modernize VIA Rail services in those areas of the country where it can provide a more rapid, economical, safe, convenient, environmentally sound and energy efficient alternative to other means of transportation.

HUMANITARIAN TREATMENT FOR REFUGEE CLAIMANTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty, in accordance with Standing Order 36, to present a petition duly certified by the Clerk, from a number of residents of my constituency who are concerned for the humanitarian treatment of refugee claimants in the back-log. They point out that many of them are here primarily because of the Government's mismanaging of the election of the immigration refugee process and they request the House to ensure that the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) will see that all refugee claimants shall be considered eligible for immediate employment authorization and a case-by-case review of their claims to include humanitarian and compassionate grounds traditionally used by Canadian immigration, including the presence in Canada of relatives and successful establishment and that special consideration be given to those refugee claimants fleeing war zones, oppressive governments and natural disasters.

ENVIRONMENT—MINING IN SOUTH MORESBY PARK

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I also have a petition from a number of residents of Spadina, again duly certified by the Clerk, who are concerned with the environmental problems around the South Moresby Park situation allowing for mining or drilling in parkland and exploring for hydrocarbons in waters where it is a potentially very dangerous operation. They ask that the House therefore ensure that these explorations be stopped.

IMPLEMENTATION OF COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATIONS ON EQUALITY RIGHTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): I have a third petition from the residents of Spadina, also certified by the Clerk, who are concerned that in February, 1985, the Government ordered the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs to prepare a report on equality rights. In the same year, the Sub-Committee on Equality Rights of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs submitted a report to the House recommending that the Canadian Human Rights Act be amended to prohibit discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation.

My constituents are concerned that nothing has yet been done. Therefore, the undersigned, request Parliament to insure that the Government and Parliament will act to bring in such an amendment, as specified above, with all due haste and speed as in duty bound your Petitioners will ever pray

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

I have an application under Standing Order 52, for a motion to adjourn House for an emergency debate. I will hear the Hon. Member for Dartmouth.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S.O. 52

CUTS IN REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS FOR ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 52, I ask leave to propose a motion to adjourn the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the unprecedented and devastating cuts in regional development programs for Atlantic Canada and the callous manner in which these cuts were announced by the Government last evening.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Dartmouth has complied with the rules and given appropriate notice. The Chair is aware of the purpose of the application and the serious matter that he wishes to discuss. However, under all the circumstances, it is not appropriate, at least at the moment, to proceed with an emergency debate. Orders of the Day.

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1989-90

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from May 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have a chance to speak on Bill C-11, the Bill to borrow $24.8 billion. Since this Government will doubtless spend this money according to the Budget that the Minister has brought in, I cannot agree with burdening our country with further debt at this time. What the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) proposes is a budget for big business. It is not the budget that a great many people in Canada have asked for. It is a budget that was asked for by a very few pressure groups such as the Business Council on National Issues, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business and the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. The sort of things that they asked for were to make a big issue of cutting the deficit, and that this should be cut by $7 billion, and that the cuts should be done largely in expenditure and particularly in the social programs of the Government.

They also asked that social programs be "targeted to those in need". In other words, they asked that there be an end to the principle of universality. They have asked that tax hikes only be temporary, and that the manufacturers' tax be replaced with a sales tax. Obviously, they did not ask that that be temporary. These groups asked that there should be a discontinuation or reduction of industrial grants and subsidies for regional development, and that preference be given to keeping the interest rates high until the deficit goes down, rather than vice versa. It was never once suggested that the deficit be reduced by having companies pay the $30 billion or so of deferred taxes which would have wiped out at least one year's deficit.

Generally speaking, this Budget has followed their requests very closely. In the constituency that I represent, Trinity—Spadina, there has been some study of the Budget and questioning of people on the streets to get their opinions. A few of the comments we have received in the course of that inquiry are as follows: A writer tells me that her income has been cut by 10 per cent by order of the Cabinet, in that what was originally for her a $40 fee for the library's use of her book is now only a $36 fee.

There is also a problem with regard to our university in that we could now more easily lose our scientists to the United States because the free trade deal makes it more inviting for post-doctoral students to go to the United States. The student's spouse can more easily find employment there. Naturally, that could be very attractive to those two individuals. It means, however, that we will probably lose potential scientists from Canada. Also, the Government's funding program holds back on direct funding to basic science at the university and ties government funding more and more to the interests of specific private enterprises; that is to say, dollar for dollar matching of grants from industries. Therefore, the study of science is suffering, and that is of great concern to many people in Trinity—Spadina.

There are other concerns. For example, the carving away of something like $800 million from our unemployment insurance benefits. The people of Spadina are not encouraged when they find that after the benefits have been restricted, some of the money that they pay for unemployment insurance will be used for the Government's training programs for which they have very limited respect, if any. In addition to that, they point out that the Government is getting out of its responsibility for keeping the unemployment insurance viable, especially by regional supplements. Almost half a century of undertakings have been broken by the Governments of Canada to the people of Canada to provide a cushion for people who are forced into transition.

My constituents are also concerned that the Government's promise that the social programs will not be cut, promises that were made not very credibly by leaders of business before the election, have not been met. Some business leaders have since clarified their credibility by reneging on those promises and demanding exactly what we knew they were privately demanding, that the social programs be cut. Therefore, the Government has cut about $175 million this year out of the promised child care program, and it is cutting about $4 billion over the next four years in what would have provided spaces for some of the 200,000 who badly need them. At the same time, the Government is continuing with a $4,000 child care tax deduction which can benefit only the more affluent members of society.

I have a long list. I cannot go through all of it, though I would like to. They are particularly concerned with the attack on universality by renaming it with a newly coined word, the "claw-back". They agree that what is implied there is that the rich in Canada are not taxed now by this Government according to their ability to pay.

The Government has sharply reduced the tax on rich people and, therefore, has raised the tax on middle and low income people. As a supposed substitute for fair taxation, it now wishes to establish the principle of taking back with the right hand what it gives with the left hand. It gives people the old age security pension and then takes it away again, not by taxing them according to their ability to pay, but by taxing them because, as Canadian citizens, they relied on what was understood to be their right, and to which they had been contributing through their work and their taxes. In fact, it will mean that some people who earn over $50,000 who are not pensioners will pay less tax than some people earning over $50,000 who are pensioners. There is no reason or rationale for that distinction.

There have been further cuts to our cultural industries, and that is a very strong concern in the Trinity—Spadina area of Toronto. Many people work in the cultural industries and many people are heavy users of the cultural industries. The CBC has been cut back in four successive years. Now it has been cut back by a further $140 million. After promising up and down that the cultural industries were not on the bargaining table with the United States, the Government does what the competitors in the United States dearly wanted, and it is cutting the $55 million postal subsidy that we have been giving to our publishers and periodicals. Part of the means of keeping Canada together over great distances has been the subsidy to our publishers and periodicals and the Government has decided to wipe that out, no doubt on the principle of harmonizing with the United States.

According to the Budget, we are taxing a working poor family 44 per cent more than the Government found when it came into office four years ago. Taxes have already gone up for the poorest workers by 44 per cent, for middle income people by 10 per cent, and for upper income families taxes have been reduced by six per cent. It is no wonder that people are complaining about the taxes while the Government puts up a show of being concerned about the deficit. The Government will not tax those who have the money. It will not even force those who owe the tax to pay the tax, if they are wealthy corporations. Yet, if they are individuals, they have to pay interest on unpaid tax, and that has been increased from one per cent to two per cent.

The Government is accelerating a trend which has been in the wrong direction for some years. For example, comparing personal and corporation income tax and sales tax between 1984–85 and 1987–88, personal tax increased by 54 per cent in total. Between 1984–85 and 1987 corporate tax increased only 16 per cent. Sales tax increased by 48 per cent. The taxes paid by low and middle income people, equally with rich people, have increased. The taxes that are the special moral and social responsibility of rich people have not, by any means, kept pace with them.

In Toronto we have a very serious housing problem. It is not the only part of the country with this problem, but there is a serious housing problem in Toronto. It is even hitting the corporations now because their employees quit their jobs and move out of town, or desired employees refuse to come to town because of house prices. For example, in Toronto a detached bungalow costs one–third more than it cost one year ago, according to a report in The Globe and Mail yesterday. There are also significant increases in places such as Kingston, Kitchener, Calgary, North Vancouver, and Victoria.

However, the rate of increase in Toronto is twice the rate of increase in the highest other city. The only immediate manner in which to check that would be to increase the budget for social housing. Instead, the Government has cut $2.3 million out of the funds for co–op and non–profit housing. A more long range way to put a brake on unreasonable house price increases would be a speculation tax. Obviously that would take longer, being a legislative matter, but it should also be done. However, the Government shows no interest in that either.

Finally, the Government is putting on this big song and dance about cutting the deficit, not loading things on to future generations, and not even looking after children in this generation, but it still maintains the billion dollar give–away that it gave last year in order to win the by–election in Lac–Saint–Jean for a future Tory Cabinet Minister. The Government's claim that it has to cut the deficit is not believed by the people in the riding of Trinity—Spadina, or elsewhere in Canada.

I wish to move on to another matter that also concerns many of the people who live in the riding of Trinity—Spadina and elsewhere. That is the Government's military budget. It is called Defence, but in some ways it is not a Defence budget, it is a war budget. There is a great deal of pleasure in the fact that the nuclear powered submarines have been dropped, at least for this year. There was overwhelming pressure from the Canadian public to do that, and it has also been reported that, for its own reasons, the American Government was not supportive of letting us have the technology for the nuclear powered submarines. However, whatever the reasons, people were glad that it was done. However, they notice that otherwise the Government has made the cuts in the wrong places.

It chose to cut Canadian bases, including the one at Summerside which provides an important search and rescue service. This is important for civilians as well as for the military. However, there has been no cut in the wholly unnecessary $1.2 billion funding for Canadian troops in Europe. Whatever was the rationale 40 years ago has disappeared with changes in western Europe, changes in eastern Europe, and changes in the world as a whole. To continue blowing over $1 billion to keep a token force there in order to keep alive the fears generated 40 years ago is both a waste of money and is burdening our children and grandchildren, as the Minister keeps warning us. It is also a disservice to the cause of peace and the resolution of the arms race.

The Government is also still blowing hundreds of millions of dollars, perhaps not all in one year, but over a period of time, in building up its base at Goose Bay in the hope that we can peddle it to NATO for a NATO training base. It is willing to ignore the protests of the Innu people, as it is willing to ignore the protests of the Quebec people who are affected by the same low-level flight training, because of a greedy notion that, if NATO establishes a base at Goose Bay, there will be big revenues to Canada. It continues with the low level flight training which is damaging the environment and ruining the lives of people who have lived in that area, some of them for generations, up to 8,000 years.

• (1130)

Furthermore, the Government is still subsidizing the export of military goods. Call them arms or weapons or military equipment, they are used by people who use force either against another country or against their own citizens.

The DIPP grants in the range of $250 million will be cut by $25 million per year perhaps starting two years from now if the Government does not change its mind, as it often does.

Some of the companies that receive the subsidies for manufacturing arms will be coming as exhibitors to the Armex fair in a couple of weeks at Landsdowne Park in this city. The Government will send its military representatives to give their blessing to the arms fair and it will give free entry to people from countries like Chile, El Salvador, South Korea, Indonesia, Turkey and many Middle Eastern countries that have very bad records for using such weapons against their civilian population. There is no interest in justice as a basis for peace in this Government. It is simply a matter of any opportunity for its friends to make a buck.

The same attitude applies to the Third World, the former European colonies, colonies from which European nations over the centuries took untold billions of dollars worth of gold, silver, lumber, agricultural products and forced labour. They are now, in the reckoning of our banks, debtors to us and they are being pressured by Governments, including Canada, putting pressure on little Guyana, for example, to accept so-called austerity measures which means more starvation for those people so the wealthy of Canada can grow still wealthier.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) worries about our future children. According to UNICEF, in these countries children are dying. According to their reckoning, in the past 24 hours almost 40,000 children under five died unnecessarily. This is so the chief executive officers of companies like American Barrick Resources, Cineplex Odeon Corporation, Palcer Dome, Gulf Canada Resources Limited, Inco Limited can receive cash compensation annually of $2 million or more—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired but I will let him have a minute to wind up.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I will finish simply by saying that one recommendation being made publicly for a fairer tax system and a fairer Budget is the wealth tax. The Government makes a tiny gesture toward that in its large corporation tax but it excludes many of the people and corporations that ought to be paying under a wealth tax. I believe the Government ought to look at the whole matter of a wealth tax as a way of paying the deficit without destroying the lives and working potential of Canada's workforce.

Mr. Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, I listened with some interest to the remarks of the Hon. Member. I want to make a comment and then ask him a question.

My comment is with respect to national defence. During the 1988 election campaign and for months prior to that, we heard from Members of the New Democratic Party and, unfortunately, in many cases from Members of the Liberal Party that the cure to financing child care and a variety of social programs was to cut back on national defence expenditures. They said this country was spending too much on national defence. In the 1988-89 fiscal year, our nation spent over $11 billion in our national defence effort. That is very close to 10 per cent of the total Budget, if one excludes debt carrying charges, so one gets an idea of what an enormous expense it was. Yet this country was willing to bear that expense because it is in our national interest and the interest of our international sovereignty.

Notwithstanding that, time and time again we were told to cut national defence, cut this program and that program. In the Budget recently passed by this House, we did reduce our national defence increase in expenditures. But what do we hear from the Opposition? We hear howls of protest. They say we should not have cut back on this expenditure or cut back on that program. Every day in the House we hear complaints about the closing of bases like Summerside. What were they talking about when they said to cut back on national defence expenditures? Did they not realize that this would be the result? Did they not realize that service personnel numbers would have to be reduced, that bases would have to be reduced, and programs would have to be reduced?

How many times have we heard a Member of the New Democratic Party and, unfortunately, Members of the Liberal Party say no to nuclear powered submarines? We cancelled that program, but what do we hear? We hear complaints about national defence cut-backs. We just heard them from the Member of the New Democratic Party.

The Hon. Member said if we tax the rich and the corporations, we can solve our financial problems. As a matter of record, personal income as a percentage of gross domestic product has increased fairly dramatically in the past number of years. It now amounts to some 86 per cent of GDP as opposed to 76 per cent a few years ago. There is a reason why there is a new balance between personal incomes and corporate incomes.

If we tax the rich, and take every penny that the so-called rich of Canada make and put them in our tax coffers, and if we tax the large corporations and profit-producing corporations even to the last penny, what will happen? Will the rich not leave the country? We will have no one to tax. Will the corporations not find other means to finance themselves? Do not all Canadian citizens pay all the corporate expenses?

I do not understand how a Member can stand in the House of Commons and suggest that as a solution, unless he tells us what will happen if that action is taken by the Government with respect to the so-called rich of Canada and the so-called rich corporations.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his two questions, one implied and the other explicit.

The implied question was about our attitude to cuts in defence. Yes, we wanted cuts in the defence budget. We wanted cuts particularly in the nuclear powered submarines and we are very glad that public pressure has brought that about. However, we also wanted cuts in the useless and provocative expenditure in Europe. That has not been touched. Instead, the Government appears to have played a little game.

Years ago I was on city council. If there was talk of cutting the public works budget, the proposal that was always made by the very clever commissioner of public works would be to cut out the men and women who go down the street with a broom and bag to pick up the litter. Of course there would be a public outcry not to cut those jobs.

In other words, the Government has chosen to make the most unpopular cuts that it could, mostly in opposition ridings, as was pointed out, in order to take public attention away from the fact that it is still intends to increase the arms budget by about 5 per cent per year. It has been going up by about 6 per cent per year, much higher than the general rate of government expenditure. It still intends to continue that foolish expenditure in Europe. Our position is not that there should be no defence—none of us has said that. I do not know about the Liberals, however, what we want is a more reasonable approach to the expense. That is what the Government has refused.

As for the matter of whether or not the wealthy people will leave Canada, if we consider the wealth tax that I have suggested we will see that we are almost the only industrial country in the world that does not have a wealth tax. If we tax the wealthy in Canada they cannot run to the United States, Britain, France or Germany to escape a wealth tax.

Furthermore, if we tax them now they will not have time to take all our oil, all our gas, all our lumber, all our minerals, all our fresh water and all our electrical power with them. In other words, if they leave the country they will to that extent begin to lose control over that which gives them wealth. I believe they will do as they do in other countries. That is to say stay here and accept a more reasonable net income rather than the extraordinary incomes the owners of wealth receive in Canada now.

Mr. Mifflin: Mr. Speaker, I have a few remarks to make on both the question of my hon. colleague from Halifax West and the presentation of my colleague from Trinity—Spadina.

I would like to set the record straight on a number of issues. To begin with, since I have been a Member of this House I do not remember one member of the Liberal Party making any comments about reducing defence, or the moneys to be allocated to defence. As a matter of fact, I believe that we are very cognizant of the spending on defence. I did a quick survey about three and a half years ago and found that the money that was being spent on defence even by the Government across the way was equivalent per capita to what Canadians spend eating in restaurants.

On the second point concerning the nuclear submarines, I want to make a couple of things clear. This Party has always been very much in favour of a strong navy, a three–ocean navy.

In terms of the issue of nuclear submarines, they were sold to us on the basis that their acquisition was to guard our sovereignty. We had French fishermen catching four times what they were allocated in the southern part of Newfoundland and the Government did not seem to do anything about that sovereignty issue. We did not need nuclear submarines to go under the ice to tell us what is happening in southern Newfoundland. If we could not do anything about the sovereignty in the south of Newfoundland, what were we going to do under the ice if we did see a submarine there that was not Canadian? What were we going to do? I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, and you can take it from me that if you do not know in the nuclear submarine business what you are going to do within seconds after detecting another one, you are just as well off not being in the business.

My main concern right now in defence is quite opposite from what the Hon. Member has said with respect to NATO. I am concerned now that we have made some commitments. We have 6,000 troops in Europe. We have a commitment to reinforce them with 5,000 more. We have plans for tanks for $2.4 billion to be delivered in 1992. What has happened to all that? What are the Europeans saying? What will the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) say when he goes over to Europe at the end of May? I would be very interested to know that.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will allow the Hon. Member a minute for rebuttal, if there is anything he would like to rebut.

Mr. Heap: Mr. Speaker, I will just say briefly to the Hon. Member that I understand from his remarks that he wants to continue the useless and dangerous expenditure on military activities in Europe. My point is we should stick to the defence of Canada and work with those in the world who are negotiating for arms reduction.

Mr. Ross Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to have the opportunity today to comment on the borrowing Bill. This is something that I have been looking forward to with great anticipation as the machinations of this place carry on. It is something that a number of Members have made comments on.

I apologize in advance if perhaps occasionally I appear parochial and talk a little bit too much about Newfoundland and Labrador.

Mr. Boudria: So long as you are not partisan.

Mr. Reid: I am never partisan—perhaps parochial. However, the interests of my province are something that matter a great deal to me and, if I may point out, something that matters a great deal to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Government.

This is a Budget that is important to the country and important to everyone in it. It is a Budget that without question takes some very stiff measures, but measures that only react to very stiff times. It is a Budget that we were told in advance would demand sacrifice of all Canadians. However, we were told quite specifically by both the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) that those Canadians who were least able to bear the burden would be those who would not be asked to bear the burden.

While the Budget may be tough, it is also fair. It is fair primarily for that reason. The people in the country, either geographically or economically, have been asked to make the least of the sacrifices. That is particularly the case in Newfoundland and Labrador.

We have to deal with the growing national debt, the debt that is growing by $3 million an hour, $80 million a day—and $1 billion every two weeks. It is a debt that is demanding interest that totals $39 billion this year and will consume 35 cents of every dollar we take in to pay the debt and the interest on that debt. That is more than health care, family allowances, Old Age Security and social assistance put together.

When Members opposite speak about protecting our social programs, surely there can be no better way than protect the amount of resources that go into those programs from going out in interest and in principal payments on the debt. If we do not address that problem quickly it will get bigger and the pressures will get bigger. If there is nothing more in hand to do to address the needs of social programs and protect those social programs for all Canadians, it is attacking the debt and the burden that the debt puts upon us.

Mr. Milliken: Why didn't you do it before the election?

Mr. Reid: It took this Government two terms to undo the situation the Liberal Government of 1980–84 put us in, to get us back to where the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie), the Minister of Finance in the previous Government, had us. He had us at $13 billion, and by 1993 we will get there. We continue to carry the burden of the hon. crowd opposite. I suspect we will for years to come.

With $6 billion more this year in interest payments, we had to take action. If we are to have an increase of $6 billion, we have to take it from a number of other places. The balance between tax increases and reductions is fair. It addresses the problem. More important, it allows us in the years to come to be able to continue to address our problems, and at the same time to continue to be able to provide the services, to provide the programs that Canadians so long have expected and so long have depended upon.

I would like to comment a little, if I may, on the economic performance of the last few years, the economic performance of the Government in partnership and co-operation with Canadians, provincial Governments, businesses, workers and those who want to create jobs and wealth so that more jobs can be created. Together, it has been successful.

In the last four years we have seen one and a half million new jobs in Canada. It is important for Canadians to know that together with their Government they can create jobs, that together we can move ahead to create new opportunities.

In Newfoundland and Labrador, and again I apologize for being parochial but it is important and this is a good story to tell, we have seen strong economic growth—10,000 new jobs in 1988 alone, in one year, were created. In four years we had a fall in the unemployment rate of more than 8 per cent—the largest decrease in the unemployment rate for any province in the country over that period of time.

• (1150)

The outlook for the economies are good, with 2 per cent growth through the balance of this year and into next year, and 3 per cent growth after that.

I would like to comment if I could on regional development which is something that I am sure my friend opposite from Burgeo will comment on later this morning or later today.

Mr. Simmons: Burin—St. George's.

Mr. Reid: Burin—St. George's, I'm sorry. It goes back a long time.

Spending on regional development has grown by almost 50 per cent in the last five years, over the previous five-year period. In the coming five years, funding for regional development will rise by 35 per cent over the last five years, over the previous 50 per cent increase. The average for 1989 to 1994 will be something approaching $425 million in Atlantic Canada. We will spend an average of $425 million every year on regional development. In no one year will it be less than $400 million.

The last five years, the first five-year period of many for this Government, the average was $282 million. The five years before that, from 1979 to 1984, when my friends opposite were so concerned about regional development, the average was $185 million; $185 million to $425 million, even to me,is a substantial increase and that is something to be proud of.

Newfoundland and Labrador, and again I have to be parochial, will be receiving more per capita than the other Maritime provinces. This year we will have the highest level of expenditures ever for regional development in Atlantic Canada.

In Newfoundland and Labrador alone, the federal Government will spend over $100 million on regional development in this fiscal year.

We know the effect of ACOA. I had the opportunity and the privilege of addressing this House last night on the same topic. The impact has been absolutely remarkable in my province. ACOA's activities so far are expected to generate 3,274 new jobs and help maintain more than 7,000 others. That is a total of 10,000 jobs either created or maintained.

The dollars are very important as well. In 1987, under the old programs of IRDP, the Atlantic Enterprise programs and ERDA's, we saw $21.7 million. Last year we saw $134.3 million. We will see over the next number of years, as I say, an average of $400 million. Just before we get into great harangues about certain announcements that have been made lately—

An Hon. Member: More cuts.

Mr. Reid: —before our friends opposite depend too much on headlines in morning newspapers, be they national or not—

An. Hon. Member: Table the press release.

Mr. Reid: —I think it is important that we respond and react realistically to what has happened. First of all, the only thing that has happened is the Prime Minister and this Government made a commitment to spend $1.05 billion over a period of five years. As my friend for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception has rightly recognized, some five or six days ago, in fact I think the date was May 11, that is being spread out over a couple of years more, between six and seven.

An Hon. Member: Another broken promise.

Mr. Reid: There is no great surprise in this.

An Hon. Member: Not to you.

Mr. Reid: My learned friend opposite was aware of it, recognized it and pointed it out. It is not something that we are particularly ashamed of, particularly when this year we are spending $500 million in regional development funding and in the next years down the road we will continue to spend an average of over $420 million in regional funding. In the next years down the road we will continue to spend an average of over $420 million in regional funding.

The other changes that have been announced are merely to look after a period of time when there is less new money available because of the peak that we are in now. So many Atlantic Canadians have said: "Yes, I want to try. Yes, if you'll help me, I will go out and create some jobs so that more jobs can be created." The response has been phenomenal throughout the region. As a result the commitments have been phenomenally high this year. The position that we are in is that to get over that period of time some of the programs will be adjusted.

I think it is important to recognize that while there is a $2 million cap for the big, big projects that will be affected, we are talking about 5 per cent of the projects that have been approved so far. Medium sized projects between $200,000 and $2 million will be eligible for interest buy-down and loan insurance, and innovation programs will be eligible for direct contributions. There is no change in the eligibility for the small business projects, the projects that make up 75 per cent of the projects that have been approved under ACOA and the others are there. We may not see the maximums reached in the contributions, but ACOA is open for business and continues to be open for business.

I would like to comment on the question of transfers to the provinces. The accusations that health care is being thrown to the wind, that education spending is being cut off and there is no more, that there are cuts everywhere, let us look at the situation realistically. Again, I will go back to the situation in Newfoundland and Labrador, my province. Transfers to that provincial government for this year, 1989–90 will be $1.4 billion, a 6 per cent increase over last year. About $1.3 billion of that comes from three programs: Equalization, Canada Assistance Plan, CAP, and Established Programs Financing, EPF. These make up almost 45 per cent of the provincial Government revenue. That is an important number to keep in mind: $2,350 per person in Newfoundland and Labrador, more than any other province in this country. That is the level of commitment that this Government has to the provincial Government.

Just so that we understand the cuts, the destruction of the health care program, the destruction of the education system, CAP and Equalization are unaffected. There is no change. The totals transferred from the federal Government to the provincial Government in 1989–90 will be just under $1 billion, an increase of $50 million from 1988–89.

EPF is unaffected for 1989–90. The federal Government's contribution to those programs, which we must remember, go into the pot. They can be used for anything, they just get dumped into the Consolidated Revenue Fund. They go in and they make up 45 per cent of that pot.

Time flies, Mr. Speaker. Time flies. The change in the formula for 1990–91 will be a reduction in the growth, not a reduction in absolute terms but a reduction in the growth of 1 per cent. What is the effect of that? The provincial Government in 1990–91 will receive $448 million out of this program, an increase of $19 million. This is $4 million less than it expected. Four million dollars out of $1,400 million.

I would suggest that in an era of balanced provincial budgets when 45 per cent of Newfoundland's budget and many other Atlantic province's budgets are coming from the federal Government, that continued support of this Government for those provinces that need it most is clear, is evident and is unending.

Where to go now. I would like quickly to comment on unemployment insurance, something that I had the opportunity to hear my hon. friend for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception comment on briefly and it is something that is of great concern and great importance to the people of my province.

• (1200)

We all know that the employee premiums will rise from $1.95 to $2.25, which is less than the rate that my friends opposite put in place in 1983 and which was in place until 1988. Employers will continue to pay 1.4 times the employee rate. The question is cutting unemployment and cutting unemployment insurance. I had the privilege of being in Corner Brook, a city in western Newfoundland. I was on the CBC with the Hon. Member from Labrador (Mr. Rompkey)—three great Canadian institutions if I may say, Mr. Speaker. We talked about unemployment insurance. We talked with Doug House who was chairman of a Royal Commission three or four years ago in Newfoundland on employment and unemployment. This is a marvellous document that has become a resource used all across this country by Governments.

What we heard from the people of Corner Brook and the people of that area was that unemployment insurance, as it sat, had to be changed. It had to be more responsive. It had to allow people some initiative. It had to allow people to move on.

I have no hesitation, Mr. Speaker, in saying in this House—I have spoken publicly on this—that I personally favour moving toward a guaranteed annual income. It is something that over time this country is coming to, and I think it is important. We have seen changes in the unemployment insurance system. In Newfoundland we get $830 million next year for unemployment insurance. There has been a realignment in Newfoundland, as my hon. friend said, of approximately $1.3 billion. In Newfoundland, Mr. Speaker, $30 million out of $1.3 billion was realigned. What came in behind it, which sometimes Opposition Members forget to tell us? There is $45 million in new money, Mr. Speaker, to do the things that people in my province have told me and I think have told all of us that we need, namely, mobility and community futures, a very important program to allow our communities to try to solve their own economic programs.

What about co-operative education? We are also saying to people that if they want to make their lives better and go back to school, we will be able to help them more, we will be able to encourage that improvement as opposed to discourage it. Those are the changes. Yes, there will be some effects felt, most of them are in my constituency, and I acknowledge that. There will continue to be some problems that I and others on both sides of the House will continue to try to work out with Ministers and the Government. But it has to be recognized that we have also taken out some of the flaws. Repeater provisions are gone, so there is no huge waiting period. The huge fluctuation from 10 weeks to 16 weeks is gone. People will be able to predict how they will react to the unemployment insurance system.

Let us make no mistake. People in my province who deal with the unemployment insurance deal with it because they have to and they deal with it in a straightforward, honest, upfront way, in a way that the rest of us deal with other programs, be it the tax system or whatever. They make the decisions that are important to them and their families. They make the decisions that benefit them the most. What we must do is move to change the unemployment system over time so that it encourages people and allows them decisions in a productive way.

Let me now conclude quickly. Members opposite forget the doubling of the sales tax credit. That item does not get mentioned often. What about the 67 per cent increase in seniors and dependants programs? They do not get mentioned very often either. It is unfortunate that these things tend to get left out on occasion.

The refundable sales tax credit will help 145,000 families in my constituency. But Members opposite do not talk about that. We do not hear about that sort of thing in the Budget. They do not talk about tax reform as it develops in an attempt to make sure that families earning less than $30,000 are better off after tax reform with the enhanced prepaid refundable sales tax credit making the system progressive and fair.

The Budget is tough. We all have been asked to make contributions. We in Newfoundland and Labrador and Atlantic Canada will do that. We are grateful and we will continue to make sure the Government recognizes that those of us who have the least capability to bear the burden will do that.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) have assured us that that will continue to be the case. A commitment to regional development is as strong as ever. A commitment to the Atlantic region will never waiver.

Mr. Jordan: Mr. Speaker, I have come to the conclusion that you can read just about anything into the Budget that you want to read into it, as my friend has indicated. I just want to ask him a couple of very simple questions.

What did the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) mean when he said throughout the election campaign from north to south and east to west that the deficit was under control? All programs announced had been built into the fiscal policy of the Government. What did the Minister mean by that?

Second, what did the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) mean when he said in October in Winnipeg during the election campaign that if this Government were elected he would institute a child care program allowing for 200,000 new places and he would do it in the first session of the new Parliament? What did he mean by that? What did the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) mean yesterday as reported in The Globe and Mail of May 16, when she stated, "And we have agreed that before the mandate is over —"? Previously, it had been during the first session. But the Minister said yesterday "We have agreed that before the mandate is over we will meet all of the objectives of our child care policy".

The institution of child care policy keeps sliding back on us. Would it be fair to think that what the Government really means is that it will be in place within the next decade, or perhaps by the year 2010? I just wondered if my hon. friend would zero in on those kinds of fraudulent statements, as they have amounted to, because the Government keeps setting the date back farther and farther. Mine is just a layman's opinion on those statements which came out loud and clear throughout the election. I would like the Member's reaction to those questions.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, it would be my pleasure. I, like 194 others, am just a layperson who made a decision that one would change one's life and through that period I, like the Hon. Member opposite, was meeting with thousands of people who were asking a great number of the same questions. I do not pretend to speak for individuals within this Government, but I will tell you this, Sir. When the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said to the Canadian people that the commitments which have been made and the track we were on was within the fiscal plan, you can depend that it was. You can bet your last dollar that it was perfectly straightforward. What we have to come to terms with some nine months later are changing world interest and currency rates.

I am sure the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Milliken) knows much more about these sorts of things than I. But when you are faced with a $6 billion increase in the interest rate or the bill for maintaining the debt in order to stay ahead of it, a government, be it a Prime Minister or a Minister of Finance, must take responsible decisions. They must show and exhibit the leadership for which this Prime Minister and this Government was re-elected in November, 1988.

Now to the question of child care. I was looking for a copy of the Speech from the Throne in my desk. I am sure the Hon. Member from Kingston and the Islands has it memorized.

Mr. Milliken: It is in Hansard.

Mr. Reid: While I am not as fluent or relaxed with the rules and methods of the House as my hon. friend, it is quite clear that child care will move ahead in this mandate. That program will help 1.4 million Canadian families with the cost of caring for their children. We will also meet the commitment of spending $100 million to be provided for special support initiatives to improve child care services. We continue to fund CAP, a program used by the provinces.

• (1210)

The commitments are there. Sometimes decisions are taken that will not suit every Canadian or every Member of Parliament, but we have the leadership required to take those decisions. The decisions that have been taken by the Government are fair to Canadians, and the Government continues to be willing to take such decisions in the interests of this country and all the people in it.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, this Budget provided for cutbacks to the CBC.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: I hear a "hear, hear" from the Conservative benches. We in Victoria have no CBC production facilities in either radio or television. We have limited transmission facilities for both television and radio. This situation has persisted since the founding of the CBC. Victoria is the only capital in Canada without CBC production facilities. It is time the Government provided sufficient funds to the CBC to preserve its position as an institution that ties Canada together and for the CBC to provide to Victoria the facilities which other capitals across Canada have. I would ask the Hon. Member to comment on that.

Mr. Reid: Mr. Speaker, this is a new topic. The CBC is an institution that I personally have a lot of respect for. It is an institution which we in my province have depended upon quite heavily. I should point out to the Hon. Member that for years we had the same problem. There was not a CBC station in the capital of my province and I will not comment as to why. I will not comment on the conditions that led up to that situation, the conditions that involved party politics, perhaps, and the owners of private stations—

Mr. Simmons: You said you wouldn't.

Mr. Reid: And I will not. I will go no further. The CBC, like virtually every other Crown corporation and institution, will have to take some decisions. I wish I knew the number, but I think it approaches $950 million that we give to the CBC. That is almost what we give to the Province of Newfoundland.

Everyone has to take a bit of a step. Fortunately for the CBC, unlike others, it has some options. It can be creative in generating funds, and I have faith that the board and management of the CBC will respond in that way.

Mr. Brewin: I have your support?

Mr. Reid: The CBC has my support, absolutely.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. I recognize the Hon. Member for Burin—St. George's (Mr. Simmons) on debate.

Mr. Reid: Why don't you stand up, Roger?

Hon. Roger C. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Reid) just made what perhaps will be his most profound interjection in this Parliament. I say to him that my height does not rely on my physical stature.

I was looking for the Borrowing Bill, but I believe we all know to a "T" what is in it. I am sure we all read it as a bedtime story before we went to sleep last night.

So they want to borrow some money, surprise, surprise. Is this not the same crowd that has been preaching restraint, that tells us we are almost in debtors' prison, that says it was those big, bad Liberals who ran up the public debt? Is this the same crowd, this group that is looking for more money, a few more billions, that asked the public to look the other way, to forget that it was Tory restraint that doubled the public debt over the past four years from $177 million to $330 million?

In all the time since confederation in 1867—I must digress for just a moment. The confederation that you learned about in your history lessons, Mr. Speaker, was the 1867 confederation. That was just the penultimate Act. The real confederation, of course, took place in 1949 when Newfoundland agreed to take on Canada as a continuing responsibility. I thought for the sake of the mainlanders in our audience, we should mention that the confederation I am talking about here is the first of the two, the preliminary Act of 1867.

In all those years since 1867 until 1984, all the governments of whatever stripe, including men of the ilk of John Diefenbaker and the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), plus a number of men who happened to be Liberals, managed to run up a debt of $177 million. Our boy from Baie Comeau, in four years, has managed to do what it took all the Prime Ministers of Canada before him to do, double the public debt.

I ask Hon. Members, is this the same crowd, led by that right hon. gentleman from Baie Comeau, that is now asking the public to look the other way, to forget that it doubled the public debt in four years? What then is Tory restraint? Is it different from ordinary, run-of-the-mill fiscal restraint as we have come to know it? Does this Tory restraint have certain identifying and distinguishing characteristics or qualities, a certain uniqueness all its own? You bet your spare Lamborghini it does, Mr. Speaker.

What if you do not happen to be a Tory, Mr. Speaker, not one of those starry-eyed disciples of the new creed that preaches short-term pain for long-term pain? What if you happen to have the audacity to believe that this Budget is not the best thing since sliced bread, or are one of those who are out of a job in Summerside or in Barrington? My friend will know all about Barrington. He has nightmares about Barrington. Barrington has nightmares about him. What if you are one of those who is out of a job or are a trawler man in Burgeo, which is in my riding of Burin—St. George's, who had his income very swiftly cut to zero last Thursday because the Government caved in to the French over-allocations?

This Government stood idly by and let the Spanish and the Portuguese rape our cod stocks on the nose and tail of the Grand Bank. This Government, as big as it wants to pretend to be, has not got the gall, the gumption or the guts of Iceland. It cannot say to Spain, Portugal and the other economic rapists out there on the high seas what Iceland said to Britain a few years back. Iceland said to Britain, "You come and rape our fish stock and you do it at your own peril". Iceland put its money where its mouth was. It is time we began talking tough to the people who are not prepared to be governed by the rule of international law. It is time that the Prime Minister of this country put the fishery on his national agenda and sent a signal to all and sundry, whether France, Spain, Portugal or whatever other country, that he fights first for the fishermen, the trawlermen and the plant workers on the south coast and all over Newfoundland, Atlantic Canada and all over Canada.

If you are one of those trawlermen who lost his income last week, or one of the millions being pulverized by the cruel measures in this Budget of April 27, if you are any of these, you may just not have a spare Lamborghini—you may not even have one Lamborghini to bet. In that case, you will have to bet something a little more modest, maybe a few shekels from your unemployment cheque. But do it soon, because you will not have a lot of spare betting money left once the new Tory national sales tax is triggered in 1990.

What then, Mr. Speaker, is Tory restraint as distinct from ordinary run-of-the-mill fiscal restraint? What special quality does it have? I will tell you. It is restraining yourself, as a good Tory. It is restraining yourself from doing what you should be doing to be worthy of the name government. It is restraining yourself from keeping the election promises that you made last November. Let us have a look at a few of those promises. I have a list of 12 of them. That is all I could get on that page. I have more pages, of course.

You will recognize this one, Mr. Speaker. You were there in the trenches with this piece of paper. One, maintain the sacred trust of universality. Of course, the Budget effectively ends universality of old age security and family allowance. We know that.

Promise number two, create a national system of child care with 200,000 new spaces. While an extra billion was announced in the Budget by the then Minister of Health in July, 1988, the program has been cut, not by $1 billion, or as that great Newfoundland legend, Joey Smallwood, used to say, not by $1 billion, not by $2 billion, not by $3 billion but cut in the Budget by $4 billion. How is that for a promise kept, Mr. Speaker?

Promise number three, no changes to the unemployment insurance program, and the Government has cut it by $2.9 billion. It has cut the bottom out of that particular program. It has attacked the very principle that the UI system is founded on. Promise number four, no reduction in the Government's commitment to regional development, and it cut that by $300 million in the Budget. I have to skip some of these promises as I do not have time to talk about all the failings of the Government. But another promise was to maintain adequate support for fishermen and farmers. Do you realize this Budget, announced two or three weeks ago, instead of maintaining the support base for fishermen and farmers, it has actually cut out the fishing and farm fuel rebate and crop insurance funding for farmers? I could go on. Another promise, improve women's programs, and the Budget cut that by $2 million.

Some of the Tories, and people labelled as Tories, masquerading as Tories over there, who are wishing their cake dough, must be saying how in the name of everything that is rational did I get caught up with this thing? How did I get here and have to stand up and vote for a Budget that cuts the guts out of my people in Barrington and Lockeport? Of course, the real message of this Budget is beginning to sink in, even for Tories. I admire the courageous stand taken by the gentleman from Portage—Interlake (Mr. Holtmann) yesterday. It was a very courageous step made by one of the Tory Members. How long he will be a Tory Member is another question, but it was a courageous step taken by him yesterday in at least not voting for this foul Budget.

I would say to him, were he here, he might as well go all the way because he has burnt his bridges. I wish he had had the extra bit of courage it takes to have stood up and voted against the Budget. But we should not be too unkind. He did a very courageous thing. Those Damascus Road experiences, Mr. Speaker, sometimes happen in stages. First you embrace it, then you condone it. Then you eventually abhor it, and then you speak out against it. He is at the stage where he will soon be speaking out against this Budget and we will have one more voice in this Chamber for reason.

That is Tory restraint: Restraining yourself from being the Government worthy of the name, restraining yourself from keeping all the promises, all the commitments you made when you were looking for votes last November. That is Tory restraint.

In the interests of brevity, I will have to tell you, I am not going to proceed to a more thorough definition. I was going to do so, but my good friend from St. John's East (Mr. Reid) did it for me. His whole speech was really a manifestation of what constitutes Tory restraint. Did you hear him? He said that UI is an absolute cup of tea. What do mean that we have done anything with UI? He said that we just improved it. Health care never had it so good, he said. Everything is fantastic. As we say back home, hunky-dory. Then he said, and this is the pièce de resistance, and I quote him correctly, I believe—this is the man who would know because he worked in the office of the Prime Minister and he worked for the Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) so he comes to this Chamber with a great deal of expertise; a great deal of baggage, yes, but a great deal of expertise. He said, Mr. Speaker, and I quote him correctly, "The Prime Minister has assured us that—". That is the only important part of the quote I want to mention. "The Prime Minister has assured us that—". That should be worth a lot, an assurance from this Prime Minister. That is not the kind of assurance that I would stake my life on.

This is the same Prime Minister who in 1984 told the people of Canada that old age pensions were a sacred trust. That assurance did not stop him, about six months later in the Budget of 1985, from making a clumsy attempt at beginning to unravel the old age security net that Liberal Governments over many years had put into place.

I know my time must be running short, Mr. Speaker, but what then are others saying about this Budget? We have heard what the Member from St. John's East said about the Budget. What are some others saying about it? It is going to come as an awful shock to the system of the Member from St. John's East that everybody is actually not agreeing with him. Has he taken the time to see what the Consumers Association of Canada is saying about this Budget? I will tell him in case he has not had the time. "The Government is waging a crusade against the deficit on the backs of the consumer. It is a staggering consumption tax grab." What does the Canadian Labour Congress say? It says, "It's a cruel, brutal Budget. It is a brutal blow to working people. It will kill jobs and increase line-ups at food banks." What does the Canadian Council of Social Development say? It says, "A minimum wage worker making $10,000 a year will pay another $100 a year more in consumption taxes as a result of this Budget".

• (1230)

In direct contradiction to what the Hon. Member for St. John's East states, the Canadian Association of University Teachers state: "A reduction in the growth of transfer payments to the provinces for post-secondary education and health are a blow for higher education".

If we were to accept the words of the Member for St. John's East, there are no reductions. The Canadian Association of University Teachers states that there are reductions. The Budget will show who is right on that.

There is no question that the Member for St. John's East has certainly given us hjs version of reality. However, what will the Budget really do? The Member has told us what he thinks it will do for Newfoundland, but what will it really do? I happen to have with me a few sheets of paper titled: "The Effect of the Budget on Newfoundland and Labrador". I only have a couple of minutes left, so I will just mention a few quickies to teaste the palate of my friend from St. John's East.

Number one states that established program reductions will amount to $4.6 million in 1991, and $9.7 million in 1991–92. I say to the Hon. Member that these are the Government's own figures. If Newfoundland is going to have $9.7 million less in 1991–92, does that mean that we will have to get our hospital beds cheaper, or somehow get university course cheaper? Does it not mean that $9.7 million can fund fewer hospital beds and fewer seats at a university than if we had that $9.7 million? That is what we are really talking about. We have less money in a province with very scarce financial resources to put our people in hospitals who need to be there, or to put our young people in universities who need to be there. There is $9.7 million less than we had but for this Budget. In my language that means $9.7 million less in 1991–92.

Mr. Reid: No, no.

Mr. Simmons: The Hon. Member is now going to get into this song and dance about what it would have been if it wasn't that. I am saying to the gentleman from St. John's East and to the House, very clearly that, if the additional reduction of 1 per cent in transfer payments—

Mr. Reid: Reduction in the growth.

Mr. Simmons: I understand the Hon. Member would like to say it his way, but I want to say it my way.

Mr. Reid: My way is right.

Mr. Dick: One way is honest and one way is dishonest.

Mr. Simmons: You will want to withdraw that comment. The Minister will want to withdraw that comment, or else we will know him for what he is.

Mr. Dick: What is that? Honest.

Mr. Simmons: A deceptive person, if he keeps insisting.

Mr. Dick: You are deceptive. You want to be dishonest.

Mr. Simmons: If the Speaker thinks that is parliamentary, that is his business.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. I do not recall hearing anything from here, as far as whatever the Hon. Minister or anybody else in the House has said. I will check the "blues" and if there is something there that is not parliamentary, I will naturally bring it to the attention of the Minister, or whoever said it.

The Hon. Member for Burin—St. George's has another 1.5 minutes.

Mr. Simmons: In his statement, the Minister of Finance—and I hope the Minister will accept that what the Minister of Finance says is correct—said very specifically that there is going to be a 1 per cent reduction in the growth.

Mr. Reid: Thank you.

Mr. Simmons: I think I have got it.

Mr. Reid: I think so.

Mr. Simmons: In the growth of Established Programs Financing. I say to the gentleman for St. John's East, if that 1 per cent growth is applied, Newfoundlanders and Labradorians, through their public treasury, will receive $9.7 million less in 1991–92 than they would have received without the application of that 1 per cent reduction. In other words, it is as a direct result of the Budget measure of April. I see the Hon. Member does not argue with me.

Mr. Reid: Absolutely not.

Mr. Simmons: I am delighted that he and I see eye to eye on something. There are so many other things that we see eye to eye on, including our commitment to fight for the best interests of Newfoundland. We fight from opposite sides, but that is what makes this system so virile and healthy. I thank Hon. Members for taking the time to listen to me.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On questions and comments I would like to give the Hon. Member for St. John's East the first question, and then the Hon. Member for Halifax West.

Mr. Reid: It is not proper for me to engage in any long debate. I have had my crack, and I am supposed to make comments or ask questions. There is so much that I do not know where to begin.

I have a quick comment on the fishermen's fuel rebate question. It is not a change. Last year it was extended for one year. It was due to expire at the end of this year, as it had been announced and was in the cards. The sales tax rebate is still there. The extra 3 per cent special rebate is still there. It has not changed, and it is maintained. It is important that we recognize there is no change in that.

I stand in the House very much as a messenger. The comments that I have made about reductions, changes, or commitments to the provinces I am getting out of the Budget. I am getting them from the documents. The Canadian Association of University Teachers is a great organization that has done a tremendous amount in this country. If Members want to accept what they say as the truth, then please be my guest, but I would suggest that Members, and eventually their constituents, will be sadly misled, unless one goes by what is in the Budget.

With respect to the comment that the Hon. Member made about the Prime Minister, I said that the Prime Minister had assured us. The Prime Minister assured us that those least able to bear the burden would not bear the burden. The Minister of Finance assured us the same thing. The Budget has shown that. Whatever the Member opposite thinks, 169 communities in this country last November said that the assurance of the Prime Minister is something on which they would depend. That is why we are on this side of the House and the Hon. Member is on the other side of the House. Canadians depended upon that leadership and the assurance of the Prime Minister.

The Hon. Member opposite talks about the cuts that we have made and the things that we have not done, and the burden in going ahead with that. I would like the Hon. Member to tell us what he would do that is different. Assuming all of the things that he has criticized are in the Budget, how would he deal with the deficit and the debt? I should remind the Hon. Member, who tended to forget or go around this fact, the deficit was $38 billion. It is now down to $30 billion. In three years it will be down to $15 billion.

Mr. Fontana: You said that same thing five years ago.

Mr. Reid: How would the Hon. Member balance the books? Would he tell Canadians how he would deal with it?

Mr. Simmons: I thank my good friend from St. John's East. First, I will address a couple of the less substantive points that he made. The Hon. Member is on that side because his business friends bought the election for him. He is on that side despite the fact that 57 per cent of the Canadian people voted against him. In Newfoundland he is known by a very particular name, a rare breed, a Tory in office.

The Hon. Member mentioned the public debt. I believe that he misunderstood me, so I will say it one more time. I did not say that I was asking him to forget. In my series of questions I said: Are the Tories asking the people of Canada to forget? I implore him implicitly to do the opposite and to remember that in all the years since Confederation from 1867 to 1984 the total debt was approximately $177 billion, and it has doubled under one Prime Minister who happens to be his leader. That is what I want the Hon. Member to remember.

He talks about fishermen and gasoline taxes. Let us put it in perspective. There will be a one cent increase in the excise tax on gasoline, effective immediately, as a result of the Budget. There will be another one cent a litre increase in the excise tax on gasoline in January, 1990. The Hon. Member skated over those two figures but he did mention that there will be the elimination of the two cent a litre excise tax rebate as of January, 1990.

The argument that they were told there would be an expiry date does not buy many gallons of gasoline at the pump. The poor fisherman has already had it socked to him left, right and centre with reduced quotas, foreign overfishing and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) kowtowing to the French. He can hardly find enough fish to pay for the gas at present prices let alone to buy the groceries, pay for the mortgage and the loan on the boat. As a result of this Budget, as of 1990 he is asked to pay another four cents a litre, or 18 cents more per gallon to get out and try to catch enough fish to pay for the few gallons of gas. If the Hon. Member for St. John's East can defend that, I wish him luck because I cannot.

Mr. Crosby (Halifax West): Mr. Speaker, what we have heard from the Member for Burin—St. Georges (Mr. Simmons) is a litany of complaints about cut-backs in spending and increases in taxes. We are dealing with Bill C-11, which is a borrowing Bill. I assume from his remarks that he will support the borrowing of funds to finance goods and services to the Canadian people because he wants more services, less taxes and is forcing us further and further into debt with his demands and the adverse results that will have. I will not comment further on that.

He mentioned many statistics and referred to statistical material in his presentation. I would have thought for a Member from the Province of Newfoundland, with the high levels of unemployment that Newfoundlanders have suffered over the years, that the statistic to which he would have drawn our attention is the unemployment rate in Canada which has progressively gone down over the mandate of the Progressive Conservative Government. In 1988 it was an average of 7.8 per cent, lower than the double digit unemployment rate we saw in the Liberal years. I hope he would at least give credit for that statistic.

I want to ask the Member about the matter of equalization payments which we in the Atlantic provinces benefit from to an enormous extent. Recently in The Globe and Mail an article was written by Kevin Cox pointing out that the windfall that has occurred to Atlantic Canada from equalization payments is $186 million in the last fiscal year, which has allowed Prince Edward Island to balance its budget. Prince Edward Island expenditures, including debt charges, now equal the revenues.

In Nova Scotia there was a windfall of $48 million that will allow Nova Scotia to balance its budget over the next two fiscal years. The same has occurred in the Province of New Brunswick.

Will the Member comment on equalization payments and perhaps give the Government credit for aiding our region of Atlantic Canada, particularly in this regard?

Mr. Simmons: Mr. Speaker, I must say that it is great being back in the same Chamber with the gentleman from Halifax West. First, he talked about a litany that I am alleged to have unloaded on this honourable Chamber. I must say to him that there is a place even for litanies as long as they have their basis in fact. I tell him that the litany he heard from me is actually just an abridged list. I could have taken the time of the House to give the full litany that I am hearing from the people of Burin—St. Georges, the people of Halifax West and all Canadians about this Budget, which litany I happen to have in front of me. I mentioned the end of universality. I could have mentioned the personal income surtax, the sales tax measures, the excise tax measures, the cut in regional development funding. I agree with him that there is quite a litany.

The Hon. Member mentions windfall, in the same breath incidentally, that he asked me to give the Government credit. Which is it? Is it a windfall which connotes somehow it is a happening that was not planned? How can he suggest that the Government ought to get credit even for accidental happenings as far as Established Programs Financing is concerned? Surely he is not standing there as the Member for Halifax West and defending the cuts to health care and post-secondary education?

He does put up a good front, but do you not get the impression that his heart is not really in it?

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to speak today on this borrowing Bill and about the debt and deficits of the country. I believe historians will look back on these debates at this time in Canada's history and see it as a strategic time when the Government of the people had to act decisively. That is exactly what our Government is doing.

I am proud to represent the riding of Markham, which also takes in Whitchurch and Stouffville. It has 160,000 people and includes many small and large businesses. Most important, it has a lot of astute people.

I have been quite impressed with the general comments on the Budget. The only complaints I have received so far are that we did not go far enough in expenditure cuts. That is a topic that I intend to pursue.

This Government introduced a massive review of expenditures under the Neilsen task force. Over a thousand programs were reviewed, and hundreds of people with expertise in the private sector reviewed it. I want to ensure that we got every bit of value we could from that excellent and thorough review.

In September, 1984, Canadians gave the Government a mandate to get the economy back on track. In November, 1988, that mandate was reaffirmed. In 1984 we made a thorough study of the nation's economic problems and came to some sobering conclusions. Not only were these problems deep rooted, they had been aggravated over the years by misdirected government efforts to deal with them.

What past Governments really had been trying to deal with were the symptoms of economic weakness, not the causes. We decided it was time to get back to basics, time to get to the source of the country's difficulties. We introduced a comprehensive agenda for economic renewal in the fall of 1984. This agenda was designed to rebuild the foundations and provide a strong framework of economic growth. It was meant to provide a better climate of confidence.

One step was to change FIRA, the investment agency. Not only did we change the name to Investment Canada, we changed its mandate to welcome investment in this country.

Another step was the privatization of a number of Crown Corporations. If it does not serve a public policy role, it should not be run by Government.

De Havilland was privatized and we know the success story of that company. Forty-five per cent of Air Canada is in private hands now and I understand that the other 55 per cent will be moved shortly.

A number of these steps gave investors and Canadian business men and women more confidence in this country. There has been an explosion of jobs since we began those efforts in 1984, with over 1.5 million jobs. The unemployment rate dropped sharply.

Between 1984 and 1988, jobs were created at a faster rate in Canada than any other major OECD nation. The report shows that the Canadian economy grew faster in 1988 than any of the seven OECD nations, except Japan, with real economic growth last year of 4.3 per cent. This surpassed the OECD June 1988 projection of only 4 per cent.

The OECD projects that Canada's economic growth will slow to 3.1 per cent this year, following behind that of Japan and Italy, and to 2.9 per cent in 1990, second only to Japan. The report also shows that Canada led the G-7 nations in employment growth in 1988, and will continue to do so both this year and in 1990, with the unemployment rate falling again.

These results are proof positive that the agenda of the Conservative Government is working and that Canadians are responding to the opportunities presented by our actions. That does not mean that we should rest on our laurels. Canadians must make their way in an increasingly competitive world economy. To succeed in world markets we must continue the progress we have made in implementing our agenda. One of the keys to success is deficit reduction.

We cannot pass on to our children and grandchildren a crippling legacy of debt. We have already made great strides toward fiscal responsibility, but we cannot rest.

When we came to office the deficit was more than $38 billion, as my colleague mentioned in a question a few minutes ago. The national debt had doubled in just three years. The private sector was being stifled by regulation and wasteful Government intervention in its affairs.

We acted quickly. Since we took office the deficit has been cut by almost one-quarter in dollar terms and almost in half in relation to the economy. However, there is still much to be done.

Canada's current deficit of $30 billion is quite simply the difference between what the Government spends and what it collects in revenue. For every $3 the Government spends it borrows $1 at this time. That is how serious the situation is.

Just to dwell on the background a little, in the second half of the 1970s real growth dropped sharply while the rate of inflation was high. Combined with the income tax indexation in 1974, and the indexation of major transfers to provinces, these factors generally took a significant drop in revenue growth at a time when expenditures were rising rapidly. Weak economic growth led to a number of measures to promote growth in employment during the second half of the 1970s, including the federal tax reduction, the exemption for interest and dividend income and selective sales tax exemptions. These measures intensified the deficit problem.

In the early 1980s real interest rates rose sharply and the economy was hit by a severe recession. Expenditures aimed at mitigating the effects of the recession rose rapidly. Revenue growth dropped sharply because of the weakness of the economy. Interest rates rose to record levels as the deficit widened, leading to unprecedented increases in debt service charges. These developments led to a rapid increase in the public debt which now stands at $325 billion.

The national debt has and will continue to increase rapidly. By the end of the Trudeau era the debt had reached over $200 billion. Since then it has continued to grow, largely due to the interest charges it has accumulated.

You may be interested to know, Mr. Speaker, if you go back to 1958, which is not so long ago, that our entire expenditures as a Government amounted to $5.8 billion. The current Budget is $142 billion. The size of Government has to be attacked, and that is being done by this Government.

To see when the last surplus was, we have to go back to 1969–70 when there was a surplus of $332 million. At the end of the next five years ending in 1974–75 we saw the deficit rise to a mere $2 billion. In the next five years which ended in 1979–80 the deficit had risen five times to over $11 billion. In the next five-year period under the Liberals it grew to over an astonishing $38 billion. That is when we took over as a Government, when we started to steer the country in the proper healthy direction.

Speaking of the current Budget, I would like to quote the words of a constituent of mine, Rhoda Spencer. She phoned in on April 28. She supports the Budget. She says that it is about time someone had the guts to do what has to be done. She called the NDP and Liberal Party to tell them they should have co-operated with the Government.

I would like to cite another article from The Toronto Star of April 8, 1989. It is an editorial about the deficit in which it is stated:

> In other words, Ottawa's exploding interest payments have been crowding out spending on the valuable programs Ottawa provides.
>
> The only way for Wilson to stop this erosion of essential programs is to reduce the growth and interest payments on the public debt.
>
> While lower interest rates would certainly help, Wilson must also slow the growth in the federal debt. And the only way he can do that is to keep the deficit on a downward track.
> Either Wilson cuts the deficit in his April 27th budget, or programs Canadians need and cherish will suffer a slow, but sure death by a thousand cuts.

I would like to read part of an article which appeared in The Globe and Mail authored by Jeffrey Simpson on May 2, 1989. It states:

> When the history of our time is written a generation hence, the period 1973–1983 will be remembered for having sown many of the seeds for the fiscal jungle in which Canada now finds itself.
> In the 1973–1983 period, the Liberals confronted two recessions, and they stoked up Government spending to deal with both. But in the good times, they also spent like drunken sailors—either directly, or indirectly through a dizzying variety of tax loopholes, incentives and other so-called tax expenditures.
> Liberal John Turner understood both the gravity of the mess and who was responsible for it when he assumed his party's leadership.
> The deficit was so high that Mr. Turner pledged to halve it over seven years should his party win the 1984 election. Mr. Turner knew then—even if he subsequently forgot—what had to be done.

Next, I would like to quote from another editorial which appeared in The Globe and Mail on May 2, 1989. It states:

> Now we should be hearing the important debate, the one about how the country's finances should be run.

About the Finance Minister's Budget it states:

> It is a budget that cries out for reasoned criticism. Instead, there has been nothing but a cacophony of catcalls.

Maureen Farrow, President of the C.D. Howe Research Institute, had this to say: "—the deficit reflects the enormous jump in interest payments of the national debt—a factor caused by sky-rocketing interest rates—more than any failure in Wilson's budget". She is encouraged by the Finance Minister's commitment to cut the deficit in half, to $15 billion within five years.

Douglas Peters, Chief Economist with the Toronto Dominion Bank, stated that business lobby groups had been unrealistic to count in big spending cuts. The size of the deficit was very close to what he expected.

Clarkson Gordon had this to say:

Mr. Wilson projects a target deficit in the range of $15 billion by fiscal 1993–94, a level which we believe could be justified by the roughly equivalent level of spending by the Government on long–term assets. This target will be achieved through lower interest rates that keep deficit financing costs from rising, and by curbing the growth rate of expenditures to below the rate of growth of the economy.

In an editorial in The Financial Post of April 27, 1989, it was stated:

The budget contains its share of surprises, most notably the elimination of the submarine program. In itself, this is a welcome sign of the government's seriousness. Other reductions, though less surprising, are a move in the right direction, notably the reduction of the subsidy to VIA Rail.

The tax increase which has been announced spread the pain favourably over the population. For those who see this as a "pro–business budget", an increase of $1 billion in corporate taxation is proof that the business community was not spared.

It was stated in The Ottawa Citizen of April 27: "In all, Wilson's budget does what a Conservative budget should: It builds for the future rather than borrows from it".

Roger Hamel, President of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce had this to say: "The country needs a financial blueprint and Michael Wilson is still viewed by the business community as the man to produce that blueprint—we, (the Chamber) still have great faith in him".

I have much more information I wanted to share with Members of the House and my constituents in Markham. However, I happen to think our current Finance Minister is one of the best we have had in decades. I am totally 100 per cent behind him in this, as are the majority of Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I call it 1 o'clock, if the Hon. Member wishes to carry on his remarks he will have five minutes left after 3 p.m., plus 10 minutes for questions and comments.

It being 1 p.m. I do now leave the Chair until 2 p.m. this day.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

TOURISM

TRIBUTE TO TOURISM WORKERS

Mr. Guy St–Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, it is National Tourism Awareness Week, from May 15 to May 21.

The tourist industry is of primary importance to the national economy. It generates revenues of up to $21 billion, provides jobs for nearly 600,000 Canadians and ranks third among the various sectors of our economy on exports. It is a major asset for this country because it promotes economic growth and prosperity.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate and thank all those who through their work have contributed to the expansion of tourism in this country.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

HUMAN RIGHTS VIOLATIONS IN ZIMBABWE

Mr. Maurizio Bevilacqua (York North): Mr. Speaker, I rise today in this House to express my deepest concerns about human rights violations occurring in Zimbabwe. As the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) is well aware, there are many people in Zimbabwe who have been in jail for more than 18 months with no charges laid and therefore have no judicial means of obtaining freedom.

It has been a longstanding policy of the Liberal Party of Canada and past Liberal Governments that Canada should promote the international observance of human rights, for the rights of people as individuals are as sacred in Zimbabwe as they are in Canada. Equality of rights is unequivocal, its meaning is not based on geography or race. Canada must promote equality of individual rights throughout the world.

I urge this Government to immediately act on all known human rights violations that affect the people of Zimbabwe.

FOREST FIRES

URGE RENEWAL OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL FORESTRY AGREEMENTS

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Mr. Speaker, last weekend, in spite of the best efforts of 1400 firefighters and hundreds more volunteers, 150,000 acres of valuable forests burned in my constituency. The fires in Manitoba were even worse.

Unfortunately, the help expected from the federal Government was not there. This is because the federal-provincial forestry agreements which provided for significant enhancement of our fire-fighting capacity have not been renewed. We might well be facing our worst fire season ever.

Therefore, I call on the Minister of State (Forestry) (Mr. Oberle) to convene an emergency meeting of provincial forestry ministers in order to get these agreements renewed, and the needed resources into place.

I also call on the Government to institute a community conservation brigade program to hire and train the youth of our forest areas to prevent and fight these disastrous fires.

These actions must be taken now, because Canadians are not going up to put up with stockbrokers from Toronto telling them that we have to watch our forests burn in order to fight the deficit.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TOURISM

NATIONAL TOURISM AWARENESS WEEK—MAY 15 TO MAY 21

Mr. Gus Mitges (Bruce—Grey): Mr. Speaker, the week of May 15 to 21 is National Tourism Awareness Week in Canada. The tourist industry plays a very important economic and social role in Canada, including my own riding of Bruce—Grey, where tourism and the benefits derived are an important mainstay of our economy.

Tourism in Canada is a $21 billion industry and brings in about $6 billion in foreign exchange each year. Tourism helps pay for entertainment and recreation facilities as well as fostering a better understanding among all Canadians from our different regions. Tourism is also an important vital force in promoting peace around the world on a world-wide basis.

The amount that is spent on tourism around the world is double the $900 billion spent each year on military establishments and weapons. Tourism is indeed a tremendous industry and growing each year.

In order to ensure continued success in our tourist industry we must always strive for excellence to ensure that Canada as a tourist destination will continue to rank among the finest in the world.

AGRICULTURE

CANADIAN DAIRY INDUSTRY—PROTEST CAPPING OF MILK PRICES

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian dairy industry is facing a very serious crisis. While the Government claims that it is defending our producer controlled marketing systems, which are totally permissible under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the Government has decided to cap industrial milk prices until December, 1990 to implement decreases in industrial milk prices, and if the cost of production formula goes down, to ask the provinces to extend the cap on prices of fluid milk.

These decisions have been made as a result of the April, 1989 GATT negotiations and are contrary to the clear advice given by the dairy farmers of Canada. To add insult to injury, the Wilson Budget is reducing dairy programs by $14 million.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, our marketing systems here in Canada are permissible under Article 11 of GATT, yet this Government has completely ignored that status. In fact, it is like shutting the door after the cows have left the barn.

The decision to cap milk prices makes no sense under the circumstances. Milk prices respond to changes in cost of production. Production is controlled through the quota system with the producer carrying the cost of surplus disposal, if any. Canadian producers and the Canadian market are not distorting export markets.

An Hon. Member: Time.

Mr. Ferguson: Mr. Speaker, the only thing this Government knows about milking is milking the taxpayers of this country.

Mr. Speaker: The Member's time has expired.

TOURISM

NATIONAL TOURISM WEEK

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, this week we are celebrating National Tourism Awareness Week. The tourist industry is of primary importance to the national economy because it generates annual revenues of as much as $21 billion and provides employment for nearly 600,000 Canadians. The industry ranks third in Canada. National Tourism Awareness Week was initiated to make Canadians across this country more aware of the fact that tourism is an asset to this country. We have a lot to offer: a distinct culture, a unique heritage and, of course, our magnificent country.

The riding of Drummond is fortunate in that it has many sights that attract visitors. We are ready to receive the tourists who come for the world folklore festival from July 7 to July 16, those who visit the Parc des Voltigeurs, the Manoir Trent, the Village québecois d'antan and Moulin Blanchette, to name only a few attractions. Every municipality in my riding organizes a wide range of popular festivities every weekend during the summer. I invite you all to visit the beautiful riding of Drummond, which is full of friendly people.

THE BUDGET

CUT-BACKS IN DEFENCE BUDGET

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, if the federal Government wanted to take a serious look at how it could save money in the Canadian defence budget, it could have used a little imagination and linked the withdrawal of Canadian troops from the central flank in Europe to the conventional force reduction talks that are going on right now in Europe. Instead, it chose to betray communities like Portage la Prairie, wreck regional economies and leave Canada more defenceless than it already is as a result of the Conservative cut-backs in military spending here at home.

We know that today we have a delegation from Portage la Prairie here, an all-party, broadly based delegation consisting of the local reeve and the mayor and the leaders of all the political parties in Manitoba.

On behalf of the NDP Caucus, I would like to urge the Minister of National Defence (Mr. McKnight) and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to take seriously the representations that these people are making, reconsider the cut-backs and take an imaginative look at what Canada could do in the way of saving money in Europe, instead of wrecking Canadian communities and withdrawing from Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TOURISM

NATIONAL TOURISM AWARENESS WEEK—CANADA GROWS WITH TOURISM

Mr. Walter Van de Walle (St. Albert): Mr. Speaker, May 15 through 19 is Canada's third annual National Tourism Awareness Week. This year's theme, "Canada Grows with Tourism" is very appropriate. Tourism is one of our country's fastest growing industries, taking in such sectors as accommodation, transportation, food services, attractions and travel services.

In my home Province of Alberta, the tourism industry accounts for $2.3 million in revenues and a total of 83,000 direct and indirect jobs.

During the Edmonton Klondike days and the Calgary Stampede, tourists from Japan, Europe and all over the world become hometown Albertans. Canada's tourism industry ranks third and generates an estimated $20 billion annually.

Mr. Speaker, I believe, however, the essence of tourism in Canada is found in sharing our culture and our heritage with people from other countries.

HEALTH

NATIONAL CAMPAIGN FOR ACTION ON TOBACCO

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada must "treat the tobacco epidemic like an epidemic". This is the theme of the National Campaign for Action on Tobacco which begins today.

Last year, more than 35,000 Canadians died from diseases caused by tobacco. This total is greater than the total number of people who died as a result of accidents, suicides, homicides, AIDS, alcohol and alcohol-related fatalities all combined.

Indeed, the Government has acknowledged that cigarette smoking is a national health problem of substantial and pressing concern and one that is of epidemic proportions.

Thus, it is a sad commentary that the Non-Smokers' Health Act, which was passed by Parliament in June, 1988, with support from all three political Parties, has still not been proclaimed by this Government almost a year later.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that now would be a fitting time for the Government of Canada to take action: to proclaim this Act and make it law and thereby allow the will of Parliament to prevail.

HEALTH CARE

TRIBUTE TO CANADIAN NURSES AND ORDERLIES

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer some words of encouragement to male and female nurses in Beauce, Québec, and throughout Canada who are a credit to the nursing profession and work very hard to alleviate the pain and suffering of hospital patients. I pay tribute to them because they go beyond what they are professionally trained to do: they bring compassion to nursing care.

It takes more than just knowledge to do this work, Mr. Speaker. It takes tireless dedication and respect for every human being. It used to be called a vocation, and even in our modern society, there is still room for nurses who give their patients sympathy and hope. In addition to their work, there is always a high degree of personal dedication.

Mr. Speaker, I hope that health care authorities will give these guardians of the health of the people of Beauce, the people of Québec and the people of Canada the consideration they deserve. On the other hand, members of the nursing profession would be better off if they stayed on the job and relied on public opinion, which is behind them all the way.

NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

RELOCATION OF ANTIGONISH OFFICE

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, Health and Welfare Canada currently maintains a district office for income security programs in Antigonish, Nova Scotia. This office processes claims for Canada pension plan benefits, family allowance and old age security payments from local offices in Amherst, Truro, and New Glasgow. In addition, it receives claims directly from the counties of Antigonish and Guysborough.

This office has been providing efficient service to the public since 1966. The public facilities there are ideally suited to this purpose. The staff is competent and dedicated. However, I have recently learned that plans are afoot to move the district office to New Glasgow. I suggest that this would be a serious mistake. Service to our seniors would be disrupted and in all likelihood new office facilities will have to be constructed. I cannot see how this could be justified either from a program delivery or cost-effectiveness viewpoint.

I urge this Government to have regard for the service to our growing seniors population in eastern Nova Scotia and not to proceed with this move.

FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

BENEFITS RECOGNIZED

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, it is with great interest that I have noted a change in the song Premier Peterson is singing about the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. We have all known Mr. Peterson as a great opponent of the trade agreement before it was signed. Recently, however, Mr. Peterson was in France extolling the virtues of the trade agreement. He is now encouraging the French business community to take advantage of the agreement and the decision by the European community to form a single market in 1992 by expanding and liberalizing trade between Europe and North America.

Our federal Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) is being echoed by the Ontario Trade Minister who has told French investors that the agreement provides them with an excellent opportunity to enter the U.S. market through Canada.

It is good to know that opponents of the Free Trade Agreement are finally recognizing the benefits it provides.

COPYRIGHT ACT

REQUEST FOR EXEMPTIONS FOR HANDICAPPED

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine—Lac-Saint-Louis): Mr. Speaker, Canada's copyright legislation has for many years protected the handicapped. In the past, an approach to the creators was made and accommodation was granted.

Bill C-60 amended the Copyright Act in 1988 to bring it into line with today's world of television, photocopiers and satellites. The handicapped have consistently requested that a new exception be put in the copyright law for the production of the special format materials such as Braille and talking books. Such an exemption would eliminate existing requirements to obtain the copyright owner's permission.

Until these amendments are introduced, Mr. Speaker, the visually handicapped and the institutions which serve them, including the CNIB, the MAB and the Institute Nazareth Louise Braille could be faced with charges which would gravely compromise their operations. Our Government must act to perpetuate essential services to the visually handicapped.

THE BUDGET

PROTEST AGAINST PENSION CLAW-BACK PROVISION

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) failed to respond to the allegation that the Minister responsible for seniors said nine out of 10 pension groups she has spoken with has supported the government's old age pension claw-back. Last night the Minister's office refused to provide the list, indeed, refused to name one organization that supports the Government.

I would like to place on the record the names of a number of seniors' organizations who have written or telegraphed their disapproval of the attack on pensions. They are: One Voice. National Pensioners and Senior Citizens Federation, Action Now, Canadian Council of Retirees, Nova Scotia Federation of Senior Citizens, Cape Breton Council of Senior Citizens and Pensioners, United Senior Citizens of Ontario, Golden Age Club of Montreal, Federal Superannuates, Association of Jewish Seniors, Ontario Seniors Coalition, and SOAR, the Steelworkers Organization of Active Retirees. The Minister must name those seniors' groups who support the Government's pension measures or apologize to all seniors in their organizations for putting words in their words and speaking on their behalf.

CANADA POST

INTERNAL OPERATIONS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, from the weird and wonderful world of Canada Post we now have a secret laboratory featuring a fantasy town named Paraville, Alberta, fantasy addresses and make-believe customers.

Paraville, Alberta has a population of zero; number of customers, zero; location, a warehouse at 1257 Algoma Road in Ottawa. Meanwhile, in the real world out there rural post offices are being shut down and urban residents are being subjected to supermailboxes, while these people at Canada Post are walking around with white coats pretending they are doctors and trying to deliver the mail to customers that do not exist.

The secret mysterious paradigm project cited a little earlier was produced by the same garrulous and awkward characters who just last month gave employees 65,000 video cassettes praising the management virtues at Canada Post.

TRANSPORT

REPLACEMENT OF SALMON RIVER BRIDGE NEAR TRURO

Mr. Bill Casey (Cumberland—Colchester): Mr. Speaker, the Salmon River bridge near Truro, Nova Scotia is a CN overhead bridge crossing six sets of railway tracks and is in a drastic state of deterioration. The capacity rating of this CN bridge has been repeatedly reduced to the point where it cannot legally accommodate anything more than a half ton truck.

The National Transportation Agency, CN, the Department of Highways, consulting engineers, and anyone with common sense, agree that this must be replaced immediately. The tracks in question divide the community of Salmon River right down the middle and are a barrier for school buses, ambulances, firefighting equipment. The bridge is absolutely essential as a main thoroughfare.

On January 27 of this year the NTA issued an order to CN to provide plans for a new bridge within 90 days. That time has now come and gone. With all due respect, I call on the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) to apply his influence and to expedite the process to replace this hazardous CN bridge which affects the lives of everybody in Salmon River.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

ATLANTIC CANADA

REGIONAL CUTS IN DEVELOPMENT PROGRAMS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Public Works. In a single month the Conservative Government has sold out Atlantic fishermen to foreign interests, slashed unemployment insurance programs to Atlantic Canada, reduced commitments to post-secondary education and health in Atlantic Canada, failed to renew regional development agreements for Atlantic Canada, closed Armed Forces bases in Atlantic Canada, allowed all the oil rigs in Atlantic Canada to shut down and failed to commit on the Hibernia project.

Now in the late-night gutless move by the Government, the Minister has slashed the Atlantic development programs by 25 per cent. The knife was wielded by a Minister from Atlantic Canada. How could the Minister agree to this savaging of programs for the Atlantic provinces?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to see that the Leader of the Opposition is so lachrymose when he talks about what this Government has done for Atlantic Canada.

Mrs. Finestone: Lachrymose?

Mr. MacKay: The right hon. gentleman should know, if he has taken the time to study this situation, this Government has maintained economic and regional development assistance at an unprecedented high level compared with the past five years and, indeed, for the five years before that.

Just to reinforce this national perspective—

Mr. McCurdy: Are you going to read it?

Mr. MacKay: Yes, I am going to read this. My hon. colleague from the NDP did not want me to put this on the record last night. This particular comment from Canada's national newspaper points out that in the wake of the Budget, which The Globe and Mail felt did not cut enough, they called profligate the way that the Government of the day, our Government, looked after Atlantic regional development. The Globe and Mail asks the question, "What do we see? Annual spending on regional development which averaged $597 million from 1979–80 to 1983–84 and jumped to an average of $823 million during the Conservative's first term will be boosted an average of $1.8 billion over the next five years".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CUTS TO ATLANTIC OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister was brought up in Atlantic Canada but he really must think that the people of the Maritimes and Atlantic Canada are stupid, even those who read The Globe and Mail occasionally down there. The Government cuts the Atlantic Opportunities Agency by 25 per cent. The Government fails to renew $700 million in regional economic development programs for Atlantic Canada. Then the Minister had the unmitigated nerve to say last night to the committee, and again to the House, that regional spending in Atlantic Canada is increasing.

• (1420)

I turn to the Prime Minister and ask him to rise to his feet to admit to the House that the real reason his Government is savaging Atlantic Canada is because Atlantic Canadians voted against him and voted for the Liberal Party in the last election.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that question is all the more astonishing coming from the Leader of a Party that voted against the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, giving a brand new meaning to hypocrisy. Not only are they against Atlantic Canada, they voted against the most important economic instrument that favours Atlantic Canada. That is what the Liberal Party did.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: My right hon. friend asks for some information. From 1979 to 1984, regional development expenditure in Atlantic Canada averaged $185 million per year. From 1984 to 1989, it rose to $282 million per year. Over the next five years, average spending levels will rise from $282 million to $425 million in Atlantic Canada, an increase of 51 per cent.

ANNUAL CUT OF 25 PER CENT TO ATLANTIC PROGRAMS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Public Works, by lengthening the application of those programs, has on an annual basis severely cut the programs by 25 per cent. Since the Prime Minister rose to his feet, I would to recite to him, through you, Your Honour, a statement he made to the people of Saint John, New Brunswick, on October 13 during the last general election campaign. These are the Prime Minister's words:

> As someone who went to high school in Chatham, and to college in Antigonish, I know something about the maritimes. As one whose first seat in Parliament was Central Nova, I feel something special for Atlantic Canada and its needs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): By the way, that was a rented seat from the current Minister of Public Works.

What special feeling does the Prime Minister have for Atlantic Canada that allows him to slash Atlantic programs by 25 per cent?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my right hon. friend points to a statement made in Saint John, New Brunswick. That is appropriate because in Saint John, New Brunswick, this Government put the frigate contact which is the largest expenditure of public funds ever in the history of Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Gauthier: That was a Liberal program.

Mr. Mulroney: A Liberal program? My hon. friend is asking about Atlantic Canada development to which we attach such a great deal of importance. ACOA was established and at the end of a period of time, it is appropriate to find out whether it bore fruit. Since September of 1984, and my right hon. friend is wrong, expenditures in Atlantic Canada have increased very substantially, not decreased. There has been an increase. As well, 34,000 more jobs have been created in Newfoundland, 9,000 in Prince Edward Island, 43,000 in Nova Scotia and 39,000 in New Brunswick. That is regional development.

THE BUDGET

INCREASE IN TAXES AND CUTS TO REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Mr. George S. Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Mr. Speaker, the Budget has not been good to Atlantic Canadians. We have seen an increase in the long distance telephone tax. We have seen an increase in the income tax. We will see a new sales tax coming in at the end of the next year. We have seen cuts in health care. We have seen cuts in education. Now we see cuts in regional development agreements for Atlantic Canada. Whenever the Prime Minister mentions that a thief stole the Budget, Atlantic Canadians say, "Too bad he didn't keep it".

I want to ask the Minister responsible for regional development agreements what exactly did the Minister mean when he said last night:

> The provinces will be asked to shoulder a greater part of the burden. We are not necessarily going to go ahead on the same basis as before.

What is the new deal? Is it 70–30 as we always had? Is it 60–40? Is it 50–50? The provinces have been paying 100 per cent since March 31 waiting for a signature from the Government. Why is the Government treating Newfoundlanders and Maritimers like poor cousins waiting for a package of hand-me-downs from Uncle Ottawa?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, with apologies to the late Ogden Nash, I would say that one thing the Hon. Member's questions would be very much the better for would be a more restricted use of simile and metaphor.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacKay: You can keep the hyperbole. I do not need to shout, Mr. Speaker. I have the facts on my side.

One thing that has been cut in Newfoundland is the rate of unemployment, and my friend knows that there are 26 ERDAs still in effect in Atlantic Canada with a value of $260 million. The Government will continue to negotiate with the provinces after we decide what proportion of funds we will deliver directly after we talk to our provincial colleagues and see what their priorities are. As I said before, and as the Government has said, we are very much committed to economic assistance for Atlantic Canada.

VIOLATION OF MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING

Mr. George S. Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Mr. Speaker, in these Budget cuts, the Government has violated a Memorandum of Understanding. This Memorandum of Understanding was signed with each one of the four Atlantic provinces in 1984 and was to last for ten years. The Memorandum of Understanding, the MOU, says:

> The term of this agreement shall be from the day of its execution to March 31, 1994—this agreement may be terminated—by either party giving to the other at least two clear fiscal years' notice in writing thereof.

How can the Government violate a signed ten-year agreement, a Memorandum of Understanding an MOU? The MOU has become an IOU and Atlantic Canadians say shame on you.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, under the Liberal Party, it was a COD.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I want to tell my colleague again that there has been no violation of any MOUs or any other agreement. We are still prepared to organize ourselves and to deal with our provincial colleagues on the same basis as before, but we are asking their co-operation and their input. They will see, as they have seen in the past, that this Government has the best interests of Atlantic Canada at heart.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

ERDA GRANTS—ACOA—MINISTER'S STATEMENTS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a very serious question of the Minister who is responsible for ACAO. When we asked him last month about regional development cuts, he said to this House of Commons, and I quote:

> This is an absolute lie which has been put out.

Last night the Minister came to committee and he told committee there had been $80 million cut from ERDA grants for Atlantic Canada. He also told committee that he had to stretch his ACAO action plan from five years out to six and a half years. This is very clearly a cut. It is very clearly a case of the absolute lie turning into the truth after his first free trade Budget. I ask the Minister, is he prepared to stand up and apologize to this country for misleading Atlantic Canada and all Canadians?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the Member's knowledge of Atlantic Canada is betrayed by the fact that he calls this organization ICAO which I thought was the International Civil Aviation Organization. It is ACOA.

Second, I want to tell my colleague that there were no lies of any kind. I don't know what he is talking about, and he should know, if he paid attention to the committee, that we have had to reprofile our spending but at an absolute higher level than was ever the case before because, as the Minister of Finance pointed out, it is incumbent upon this Government to do something responsible to deal with the horrendous debt problem in this country, in case he has forgotten about that.

As far as our commitment to regional development in Atlantic Canada, I want to remind him, as the Prime Minister has reminded his other colleagues, that this Government has a level of assistance available for Atlantic Canada that is far in excess of any that was available before from any government in Ottawa.

CUTS IN PROGRAMS FOR ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister who is obviously responsible for newspeak in this Government, the Minister who is responsible for telling us that reprofiling means something other than cuts, how he can justify standing up in this House and still trying to persuade Canadians that what he is doing is something other than a savage attack on Atlantic Canada and the people in Atlantic Canada?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, only a socialist could possibly interpret as a cut that which is an increase over the next five years of many, many millions of dollars compared to previous levels of spending. I do not know how he does that. Maybe after he explains that to me, I will be able to give him some more information.

Mr. Langdon: In fact, it is the Minister who last night told us how his own Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency was going to have to cut the aid to every part of the economy which it has provided.

[Translation]

IMPACT OF BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Prime Minister. We have heard there are a lot of cutbacks in the offering for the Atlantic provinces. What I want to know is this: Will the same apply to other parts of Canada? What cutbacks in regional development are being planned for other parts of Canada, considering the cutbacks we have now seen in the Atlantic provinces?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister just explained there have been no cutbacks in that area. In fact, as far as the Atlantic region is concerned, there has been a major increase in funds for economic development. And the same applies to Western Canada under the Western Diversification Initiative, another important federal program. In any event, I think the Hon. Member must be interested in the results since he was talking about the Atlantic region. From 1984 to 1989, the unemployment rate in Nova Scotia dropped from 13.8 to 10.4 per cent; in New Brunswick, the unemployment rate dropped from 16.3 to 12.1 per cent and—last but not least!—in Newfoundland, the unemployment rate dropped from 23.5 to 14.5 per cent. Not bad, eh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mulroney: And one major reason for this economic growth is programs like the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency. These programs have been receiving more and more federal funding.

FISHERIES

CONTINGENCY PLANS FOR ATLANTIC CANADA

Hon. Roger E. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, 1989 may well go down in history as the year the fishery died in Canada. In February, the Minister of Fisheries, who I am glad to see back in his seat—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Simmons: The Minister of Fisheries reduced northern cod quotas by 40 per cent in March. Unfortunately he knuckled under to the Prime Minister who wanted to cave in and did cave in to the French demands. In April, the Finance Minister drove up gas costs for fishermen by 18 cents a gallon. Last week the National Sea backed cuts, and now the cod review panel wants further cuts. In view of the dire consequences of all these actions and events, will the Minister of Fisheries now tell the House what specific contingency plans he has to ensure that the fishing industry does not completely collapse in Atlantic Canada?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the Hon. Member for his kind remarks. I will undertake to appear before the Standing Committee next week to describe in detail the plans which he has asked me to enumerate today. In the short space of Question Period, I can but tell him that the Government is extremely concerned about the trend in declining quotas, particularly in the Scotia Fundy region, and the situation that presents itself with regard to the northern cod stocks. I will be making a fuller response next week as to improved measures of enforcement and scientific assessment to deal with the stock question, but at the same time the Government and several Ministers are working on a comprehensive initiative to deal with the genuine human hardships that will occur in the coming months if we do not address this question as a high priority.

ALLEGED GOVERNMENT MISMANAGEMENT

Hon. Roger E. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, what do you say to thousands of fishermen and plant workers whose livelihoods are being wiped out by this Government's mismanagement and its lack of policy on foreign overfishing? If the Government is as bankrupt of ideas and plans as is suggested by the Minister's answer, maybe it would consider a suggestion or two. How about biting the bullet before our fishermen become an extinct species in this country? How about extending Canada's jurisdiction to the nose and the tail of the Grand Banks? What does he think of that idea?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, first I want to assure the House that the situation is not nearly as dire as projected by the Hon. Member. Second, I want to point out that under this Government we have in fact eliminated all foreign fishing on non-surplus stocks in Canadian waters with the exception of a small quantity for France which happens to be less than 40 per cent of the quantity of fish that was allocated to France under the Government of which the Hon. Member was a part for many years.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Siddon: Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, it was that same Government that entered into an agreement with France granting France undefined and perpetual fishing rights in Canadian waters. It had the opportunity to address the question of an extended jurisdiction in 1976 when the 200-mile limit was proclaimed, and it failed to do anything about the problem at that time.

OVER-FISHING BY FOREIGN VESSELS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Beauséjour): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. I am very glad to see him in good health.

The fishermen and the fish plant workers—men and women—are facing a disastrous situation. Such a situation is unprecedented. There is no more fish to catch.

The Minister knows that foreign fleets are overfishing ten times their quota outside the 200-mile limit. These ships are plundering our stocks.

My question for the Minister is: What extraordinary measures does the Government intend to take immediately to stop this plundering of this resource which belongs to the fishermen and plant workers in the Atlantic region? What immediate measures does it intend to take?

[English]

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. colleague for his question. It would be inappropriate to suggest that the problems of declining stocks and excessive processing capacity are all to be laid at the doorstep of foreign vessels fishing beyond Canada's 200 mile limit.

The Government is taking that problem very seriously, as was reflected in an undertaking contained within the recent Throne Speech. Ministers, including the Minister of External Affairs, the Minister for International Trade, and myself are developing an enhanced strategy to deal with the problem of foreign over-fishing.

I must repeat that the problem of declining quotas is not as severe as the Hon. Member indicates. In fact, in his region, the Gulf region, the quotas are relatively stable. The problem is concentrated in South West Nova, largely because of domestic over-fishing, and on the northern cod stocks for biological reasons which I will more fully explain next week.

[Translation]

JOB LOSSES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Beauséjour): My supplementary question is for the same Minister. I am very disappointed. The Minister does not seem to understand the gravity of the situation.

How can one explain this to workers who are losing their jobs and to fishermen who have no more fish to catch?

[English]

The Minister knows that this situation is brought about because of the over-fishing by foreign fleets.

Will the Minister and the Government consider taking trade sanctions against those countries that do this over-fishing? Those countries are behaving like pirates and we cannot let them continue that practice. Will the Minister consider trade sanctions?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, it is not within my sole authority to deal with the question of trade sanctions. I should point out that it is an inappropriate suggestion to imply that the declining stocks problem in Atlantic Canada is due solely to foreign over-fishing.

It was this Government that removed all foreign fishing on our non-surplus stocks from Canadian waters, a practice the previous Liberal Government permitted for decades, and which the Government ended.

With regard to sanctions, I ask the Hon. Member to consider the impact on lobster exports or salt-cod exports to the European market, if we were to do what he is recommending at this time.

QUOTAS—NEGOTIATIONS WITH FRENCH AUTHORITIES

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to welcome back the Minister of Fisheries who was absent from the House because of an illness. I hope he has returned fit and well to continue his service to this Chamber.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Barrett: I wanted to address my question to the Minister for International Trade, but I am forced now to address it to the Minister of Fisheries.

Can the Minister tell the House whether or not during the negotiations with the French authorities for additional quota or a resolution through arbitration for a quota settlement, was any presentation made to the Canadian Government before or during the process of negotiation by industry spokespersons, or persons in general, and National Seafood in particular? Was their position given to the Government before or during those negotiations about the position that Canada should take relative to their industry from their point of view?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the answer to that question is quite simple. Since early 1987 when Canada initialled an agreement to proceed to negotiate a referral of the St. Pierre and Miquelon boundary issue to an international court of arbitration, there has been a continuous and unbroken dialogue with the fishing industry in Atlantic Canada and with affected provincial Governments.

Yves Fortier acquitted himself with great skill and dexterity in concluding an historic agreement with France on this matter. He took every measure necessary to involve and consult with the industry throughout that period.

ACQUISITION OF FRENCH PROCESSING PLANTS

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, I take it from the Minister's answer that he is confirming that National Seafood, together with other parts of the industry, were a part of the consultative process in arriving at an agreement.

I would like to put the following question to the Minister. I would like him to listen very carefully, and consider his answer very carefully.

During those negotiations, was the Minister aware that, in August of 1988, National Seafood Products made a bid on two fisheries entities in France? One of them was Bretagne Exporters, which is a marketing agency based in France. The significance of that I will make clear in a moment. The other was the La Surgelation Lorientaise, which is a fish processing plant in France. The offer was made in August, 1988. The purchase was made on January 3, 1989.

Can the Minister assure the House that National Seafood Products, with the information it had in the negotiations, is not now in a position through the acquisition of those companies to buy fish from Canadians and to process that fish in its plants? Can the Minister assure us that the purchase of those French plants do not permit the loss of jobs through the export of Canadian fish to those plants?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): When the Hon. Member finally got to the question, Mr. Speaker, and if I understood it correctly, the Hon. Member was suggesting that the Government should not have consulted with representatives of the Canadian fishing industry. I must also indicate that the details of Government strategy were not at any time disclosed to the industry, although its advice and input was sought.

National Sea Products is an international fishing company which markets our fish products around the world. We do not encourage or allow the export of raw fish to Europe for such purposes. If such an acquisition was in fact and indeed made it was for the purpose of selling more fish to the European market, for processing it in Atlantic Canada, and producing more employment and income to Canadians and Canadian fish plant workers.

COPYRIGHT ACT

IMPACT ON VISUALLY HANDICAPPED

Hon. Bob Layton (Lachine—Lac-Saint-Louis): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Communications. The copyright legislation, Bill C-60, adopted by Parliament last summer, could have negative impacts on the visually handicapped and their institutions, including the Canadian National Institute for the Blind, the Montreal Association for the Blind, and Institut de Nazareth/Louis Braille.

Can the Minister assure the House and all Canadians that an exception for the handicapped will be introduced in phase two of the copyright amendments?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, that is an excellent question and it is very important for those affected. It is now the subject of meetings and negotiations among the parties concerned. There is every reason to believe that an exception for the handicapped, including the Canadian National Institute for the Blind, will be part of the second series of legislative amendments that in all probability will be tabled in this House next fall.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

RENEWAL OF ERDA AGREEMENTS

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister who is supposedly responsible for Atlantic development. Over the last 24 hours we have seen the true Tory agenda for development in Atlantic Canada unfold. We have seen the Minister responsible for Atlantic development play a game of hide and seek with the true figures for the funding for ACOA until he was forced to admit in the dead of night to a savage 25 per cent cut.

Given the fact that on March 31, some $720 million worth of regional development agreements for Atlantic Canada were allowed to expire by the Government, will the Minister stand in his place today and give the House the real figures on what his Government has allocated for the ERDA renewals for this year and the coming four years or will this cruel shell game dealing with the future of Atlantic Canada be allowed to continue?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I expected that the Hon. Member would have pointed out again at a time when there are a few problems with the fishing industry that this Government has allocated half a billion dollars to flow into Atlantic Canada through ACOA at a time when it is most needed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: In the Member's own riding, for example, just so he knows, 536 jobs have been created with an estimated total eligible cost of $52 million and 179—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Some Hon. Members: More, more.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member is calling for order. The question was at least argumentative and I think the Minister is allowed to come back with some figures.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be argumentative with my colleague. I know that he is interested, as we all are, in regional economic development. I just want to point out to him that this Government has done a very good job in promoting economic development in Atlantic Canada.

Let me also point out that the Premier of Nova Scotia was attacked by the Opposition Parties there when he did a very good job in very nearly balancing his budget. They said he could not have done it if it was not for transfers from Ottawa. They should get their act straight.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): This is funny math. It must be Tory math when cuts mean more for Atlantic Canada. Atlantic Canadians know how to add and they know there was some subtraction done last night.

EXPENDITURES IN ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. He knows that he is supposed to be the voice for Atlantic Canada in his Government. Instead, he has allowed himself to be the mouthpiece for a Government that is intent on destroying the economy of Atlantic Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I think we should take a look at the time. There are still a lot of Members who want to be heard. Preambles perhaps do not need to be quite as long as they might be at the beginning of Question Period. The Hon. Member.

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): Does the Minister stand by his statement that he made in the committee last night that maybe his Government has spent too much money in Atlantic Canada? Can he tell us where in Atlantic Canada he thinks his Government has spent too much money? Is it in Summerside, P.E.I.; is it Lockeport, Nova Scotia, or is it Gander, Newfoundland? I would like the Minister to clarify what he said last evening.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I would like the Member to clarify what he has just said because, as he knows and the Minister of Finance has pointed out, this Government cannot sustain a half billion dollar a year expenditure on regional development. That is an unprecedented figure. What we can and will sustain is an amount well over $400 million which is an unprecedented high level over the last 10 years for Atlantic Canada.

JUSTICE

SUGGESTED AMENDMENTS TO EXTRADITION ACT

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. Charles Ng who faces charges in California for murder and kidnapping in a series of 12 brutal killings has been in Canada since 1985. When will the Minister bring in amendments to Canada's Extradition Act to provide for the swift expulsion of accused killers like Ng?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the case in question is still before the courts. The House will know that extradition and the process balances our obligations under treaties, our obligations under the Extradition Act and due process of law. The Government will continue to follow all obligations in this case.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CLOSURE OF CFB PORTAGE

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg St. James): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Defence. The closure of CFB Portage will have a destructive impact on Portage la Prairie. In fact, there is a delegation from Manitoba here in Ottawa today to meet with the Government and fight the closure.

Will the Minister tell the delegation that he now realizes the destructive impact of his decision and that he will indeed reverse that decision?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as I and other colleagues have informed the House, when the Budget was brought down, with the necessity of the Government to attack a deficit that was crippling Canada, all Departments made a contribution to that effort. The Department of National Defence also made a contribution.

The reductions that took place in stations and bases, and the closures, took place because of the necessity to acquire additional efficiencies and not to jeopardize the military operations of the Government of Canada. If the Member is suggesting that we should continue with bases that do not have military impact or efficiencies, I suggest to the Hon. Member that the Government feels that is not appropriate.

DELEGATION FROM PORTAGE LA PRAIRIE

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg St. James): Mr. Speaker, I take it that he will not reverse his decision. I just want to point out that the delegation from Manitoba had to come to Ottawa because he does not have the guts to go to Portage la Prairie to face his own troops and meet the people—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Trinity—Spadina.

EMPLOYMENT

RELEASE OF IMPACT STUDIES

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Today with my colleagues I joined a demonstration of 150 workers who will be laid off or are being laid off as a result of plant closures announced since the election and the trade deal finalization.

These workers and their unions are worried about the Government's unemployment insurance cuts on top of all that. Many of them suspect that the Government's impact studies already show that women and immigrants will be hurt very badly.

Will the Minister tell the House why she has flatly refused to release those impact studies which were promised to Members of Parliament early in April? What is she trying to hide and for how long?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I did indeed say that I would issue the impact studies. We will probably be doing that during the legislative stage, once the Bill is tabled in the House and we have an opportunity for discussion in committee and at second reading. I am sure the Hon. Member will be pleased with what he sees because we will see better training programs for immigrant workers, better training programs for older workers, better training programs for laid-off workers that will help exactly the people he is talking about.

METRO SKILLS AND EDUCATION TRAINING CENTRE

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Minister spoke about retraining programs because my supplementary question concerns the Metro Skills and Education Training Centre which for the last two years, partly with federal Government assistance, has been helping workers who were laid off to upgrade their language skills, mathematic skills, and become suitable for retraining in the modern time, with an 86 per cent success rate. Many of the workers concerned with that training are here today.

When the community of workers is trying to solve the problem caused by lay-offs, why is the Minister cutting off that solution by cutting off the money?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I want to make two things clear. First, my Department and my staff are always willing to look at alternative forms of funding for projects that are no longer eligible for particular kinds of assistance.

I also want to make it very clear that this project was funded under the Innovations program, which is a program that funds things temporarily. It is made clear to people from the beginning, when they come under the Innovations program, that when the time is up, the program will have to be reassessed for alternative forms of funding. We have not received any formal request for alternative forms of funding in the form of a proposal.

Having said that, my officials and my office are meeting with the Metro Labour Council this afternoon. We recognize that they have done some good work. There is other good work in other programs. At the beginning of this project the people involved knew that after the Innovations period was over the funding may well cease.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF LEADER OF NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY OF MANITOBA

Mr. Speaker: I want to draw to Members' attention the presence in the gallery of Mr. Gary Doer, Leader of the New Democratic Party of Manitoba.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: There will be a single question from the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys, followed by a single question from the Hon. Member for Churchill.

THE BUDGET

CANADIAN EXPLORATION DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVE PROGRAM

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The Small Explorers and Producers Association of Canada has written to the Minister criticizing him for, in particular, singling them out for harsh treatment in the Budget. The letter is dated May 9.

His arbitrary action in cancelling the Canadian Exploration Development Incentive Program will mean that there will be $250 million less of planned development next year. The large corporation tax will hurt these small corporations because it is a tax on assets.

When these corporations went to the Minister for assistance why did he think that he would assist them by confiscating their assets?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the Hon. Member of two things. He refers to the CEDIP regulations and the legislation that included the six-month clause. In the past the Government observed this six-month clause.

There are two things which the Hon. Member should remember. The first is the extraordinary circumstances in respect to the Budget and the deficit that we had to address.

The second is that if one takes a look at the projected expenditures that were in place for CEDIP, which were well known in the industry, and the amount of expenditure that has already been applied for, the expenditure is well over $1 billion. If he takes a serious look at when CEDIP came into place and price of oil at the time and the price of oil today, the Hon. Member will find that not only is it fair but what the Minister of Finance did in his Budget made a lot of sense.

TRANSPORT

FUTURE OF PORT OF CHURCHILL

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

Last night at a closed meeting of the all-party committee of the Manitoba Legislature on the Port of Churchill his provincial counterpart said that the federal Minister would not commit himself to the long-term future of the Port of Churchill.

In addition to that I have been told that Ports Canada has not called back the workers for this season, something which is usually done by now, and that for the first time in history the port may not receive any grain whatsoever for shipping. Will the Minister confirm or deny that this is the case?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as a matter of fact, I met last week with the Minister of Transport from Manitoba, Mr. Driedger. We agreed together that it was unlikely that we could have any shipments of grain through the Port of Churchill this summer, but that we were ready to look at the future of the port. Officers from my Department and the Department of Transport of Manitoba will do that next fall.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1989-90

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker: When the House rose at 1 p.m. the Hon. Member for Markham (Mr. Attewell) had the floor.

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham): Mr. Speaker, I had pretty much finished my remarks, as you will recall, prior to 1 p.m. When the House settles down a bit I would like to deal with questions from Hon. Members.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have a question to ask of my hon. friend. In his speech he referred on a number of occasions to the concern that the Government has regarding the country's deficit. I wonder if he would share with the House his thoughts on the appropriateness of introducing a minimum corporate tax along the same lines as the American administration did in 1986. It is a method to raise additional revenues that could be used to reduce the deficit.

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. colleague for his question. I have served on the Finance Committee with him for a number of years. I very much respect his opinion.

As he will know, that particular area is very complex in terms of trying to get the tax dollars that one would like out of a particular area. One of the steps we took this time, as the Hon. Member will know, was a step to implement a large corporation tax which cannot be deferred or changed. It will generate up to almost $1 billion in the second year. That demonstrates that we are going after the corporate sector. I agree, and many companies in certain industries agree, that they should be bearing a fair share of the tax burden.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I want to make a comment and direct a question to my hon. colleague from Markham. The comment relates to the composition of the annual deficit. It is interesting to note what has happened over the last five years.

The year 1984–85 was the last year the previous administration was in charge of the country's finances. In that year the deficit reached a record $38 billion of which $16 billion represented program over-expenditures and $22 billion represented interest on the national debt which at that time was $200 billion.

Since that last year the program over-expenditure aspect of the deficit was reduced to $9 billion during the first year, the 1985–86 year, to $4 billion the next, and since then it has been in surplus.

In other words, the Government is actually taking in more revenue than is required for program expenditures. The excess money goes toward servicing the debt, that is, paying interest on the national debt. Unfortunately, that figure continues to mushroom owing to that legacy, that $200 billion that was left to us by our predecessors.

Has the Hon. Member heard anything from the Opposition in this debate that is constructive and can help with the problems we face? Interest is going out of sight. It is obvious we have to take in more revenue and we have to spend less. There are no other options, no other alternatives.

Has the Hon. Member heard anything at all of a constructive nature from the opposition Parties? I particularly recall some comments made by the Hon. Member from Etobicoke North (Mr. MacLaren) who suggested the very things that the Minister of Finance has done. I believe in fact that the Liberal finance critic suggested that there be program reductions and some tax increases, and that there is no other way to do it. It appears he is being contradicted time and time again by those who have contributed to this debate.

Has the Hon. Member from Markham been disappointed with the alternatives and the suggestions that have been forthcoming from Members opposite, with the exception of the Hon. Member from Etobicoke North?

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. colleague for his question. The short answer is no, I have heard very little in terms of constructive ideas. The Hon. Member for Etobicoke North I think did speak up either in a book or an article about the fact that people earning higher incomes need not really enjoy the full family allowance or even the pension benefits.

• (1510)

I will just quote from a Globe and Mail article dated May 16, 1989.

> The reality of the taxback is that it reduces the government's outlay by isolating those Canadians who can most afford to pay. Taxpayers whose net income (minus any tax payable) is at least $50,000 will pay back part of their benefits; those who earn more will pay back more.

To answer directly, I think this is the concept that the Hon. Member from the other side had in mind.

There is another article, Mr. Speaker, dated April 28. The title is "Impact of Income Tax Changes Greatest on Affluent Families". In my remarks before lunch I spoke about some of the objectives that the Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) mentioned during his days before he returned to Parliament, and that of course was filled with common business sense. When there is more money going out than coming in, some responsible action has to be taken to reduce that outlay. In a nutshell, that is really what this Government is facing.

I do want to take issue with some of the simplistic solutions that Members opposite have put forth. It concerns part of the debate on the growth of the debt. Yes, the Opposition is not totally responsible for every dollar of the accumulated debt.

An Hon. Member: Just about, though.

Mr. Attewell: But anybody that knows something about business and how it works, when things are going wrong, you just do not turn the tap and it turns off. As a matter of fact, the increases in debt got so out of hand and the deficit got so mismanaged that it became a virtual forest fire, and we know we do not put a forest fire out in a couple of days or a couple of weeks. So Canadians are paying the price for that 20 years of mismanagement. The men and women in our Government are facing it as a responsible government. I am proud of the way the Finance Minister is tackling it but I am getting a little restive or tired, Mr. Speaker, of these simplistic notions.

Members over there have many years of experience and they know better than the misleading statements that they have been making over this Budget debate and the borrowing bill debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. Debate. The Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River.

Mr. Robert D. Nault (Kenora—Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, the Government is asking Members today to adopt Bill C-11, giving it the authority to borrow $24.8 billion. Members on this side of the House obviously cannot support this legislation, and let me tell you why.

Since the tabling of the Budget last month, constituents in Kenora—Rainy River have been flooding my office with telephone calls, asking me how this Government can be so insensitive and inconsiderate.

Many of my constituents recognize the need to reduce the deficit, but they feel that doing so at the expense of those less fortunate is a serious error in judgment on the part of this Government. My constituents also believe that this Government could have reduced spending. Instead, the Government is asking to borrow billions and billions of dollars.

I never thought it possible for a government to tax dreams but obviously I was wrong. This Government has broken so many promises, it is no wonder that Canadians have become skeptical of the political process. This Government has put an end to Canada's unique social programs. It has jeopardized Canada's unity by slashing funds to VIA Rail. It has threatened regional development programs, and the list goes on and on. Many Canadians are skeptical and cynical towards elected representatives today because of these broken promises.

If the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) had been doing a good job in managing the Canadian economy, he would have known prior to the last election that the deficit and public debt were out of control. The Minister could have used his influence and prevented the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) from making promises he could not keep. He would not be asking Members to approve a borrowing authority of some $24.8 billion.

The threat to Canada's social programs is real. This Government promised to maintain the sacred trust of universality. Instead, the Minister of Finance has once again decided that senior citizens are second-class citizens. This Government is taking advantage of the vulnerability of seniors by taxing back old age security pensions. Canadians preparing for their retirement years are now doing so with the knowledge that their future may not be as secure as they had thought.

There are many single parent families in Canada today, Mr. Speaker, earning $50,000 a year and supporting one, two or three children on this salary. In my riding, there are 2,100 single parent families, with over 76.7 per cent of them in the labour force. Fifty thousand dollars is not a lot of money when you are raising children. The Budget measure taxing family allowance benefits for these families is not only unfair, it is criminal.

The Government talks about restraint and the need to reduce the deficit. This Government would be wise to practice what it preaches.

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nault: This Government has just spent some $2.7 million of hard-earned Canadian taxpayers' money to promote this Budget. How can the Government talk about restraint when it spends, spends, spends? This is the kind of government spending that my constituents oppose. Money is being wasted on promoting a Budget which severely affects Canadians.

During the November election campaign the Minister of International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) made a promise on behalf of his Government. He said there would be no changes to the Unemployment Insurance Program. Well, Mr. Speaker, what we have here is another broken promise. This Government has not only made it more difficult for the unemployed in this country to collect UI benefits, it has also withdrawn from the program completely. The Government's commitment to social programs is shameful. This Government, Mr. Speaker, cannot be trusted.

The changes to the Unemployment Insurance Program will cause undue hardships for many of my constituents. Because the riding of Kenora—Rainy River is included in the Thunder Bay statistics, the unemployment rate of 7.3 per cent is clouded. The 1986 census figures show an unemployment rate of 9.9 per cent. Individuals between the ages of 15 and 24 are faced with an unemployment rate of some 14.8 per cent. It is Canada's young people who will be severely affected by the changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act.

When the Government talks about securing the future for the next generation, it should look at what it is doing to future generations with these measures.

This Government cannot be trusted to pursue deficit reduction in a manner which is fair and equitable to all Canadians. Low and middle-income families have seen their taxes rise faster than taxes on upper-income families. Taxes paid by the traditional family, with one income and two children, earning only a poverty line income, has seen their taxes increase by 61 per cent, compared to 8 per cent for a family making $100,000. Where is the fairness in the tax system?

This Budget is nothing but a Tory tax grab. Once again large corporations walk away without having to pay taxes and Canadian citizens carry the burden. When you combine all the tax increases announced in this Budget, individuals are paying six times greater than corporations. Tax increases totalling some $2.6 billion for individuals, versus tax increases for corporations of $410 million, are not what I call a fair distribution of the burden, nor do I call this tax reform.

The excise tax measures announced in this Budget, and more particularly, the two-cent a litre increase in gasoline prices will contribute further to an already depressed region in my riding.

People from northwestern Ontario pay astronomical prices for gasoline. In Pickle Lake, for example, one litre of unleaded gasoline is sold for 61.9 cents. Two border towns in my riding, Rainy River and Fort Frances are faced with Canadians crossing over to the United States to buy gas at a much lower rate. Many service stations in those two communities are facing bankruptcy as a result.

Residents of northwestern Ontario are fed up with this Government's taxation policies. They want a tax system which is fair and equitable. They are prepared to share the burden, but they are not prepared to carry the burden alone. My constituents have told me that deficit reduction was of primary importance to them. But they also told me that government spending was out of control and that they wanted to see measures which would narrow the gap between the rich and the poor. I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, that my constituents have been thoroughly disappointed.

This Government also said it was committed to regional development. The Prime Minister first demonstrated this Government's commitment to regional development when he failed to appoint a Cabinet Minister from northern Ontario. People from northern Ontario are not represented at the cabinet table and do not believe this Government is committed to regional development. The Budget promises to take a special interest in northern Ontario. With this Government's record of broken promises, northern Ontario is not about to believe anything this Government says.

The programs offered by FEDNOR discriminate against the softwood lumber industry in northern Ontario. This industry is in severe financial difficulty. Softwood lumber companies have to pay a 15 per cent export tax on its products. The industry is in bad need of modernization in order to compete in world markets, yet it cannot benefit from regional development programs.

More than 900 jobs have been lost in the softwood lumber industry since the imposition of this tax. Many more jobs are threatened. Why has this Government singled out the softwood industry? Of all industries in the North, this one should be at the top of the Government's priority list when it comes to regional development programs.

Before entering politics I worked for the railway industry. I have seen the deterioration of passenger rail service in this country. The cuts to VIA Rail's subsidy over the next four years will lead to a further deterioration and eventually this Government will destroy VIA Rail piece by piece. The president of VIA Rail was fired because he dared to denounce the policies of this Government with respect to this vital mode of transportation.

Canadians living in rural areas, many of whom live in my riding, fear that VIA Rail will have to abandon routes in their communities. For many, passenger rail service is the only link they have to the outside world. Many people using VIA Rail are seniors and students. Contrary to what the Government says, people are using VIA Rail. One of my former constituents called my office yesterday and said he has not been able to get a reservation to head north. Why? Because the trains are booked solid.

The reduction in VIA Rail's subsidy will mean increased fares, a further deterioration of its service to rural areas and lower maintenance standards. The rail industry in Canada is a strong symbol of national unity. To do away with passenger rail service will only weaken the link in the chain and throw one region against the other. VIA Rail needs to replace its antiquated equipment with modern equipment. This will allow it to remain competitive. It must be allowed to keep its fares at competitive rates. It needs to expand its routes in order to meet the objectives of its mandate. This Government does not understand the railway industry and, quite frankly, I do not think it cares.

Many northern and remote communities in my riding have been attempting to get CBC service for several years now. Indian communities whose only connection to the outside world is through services provided by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, have been told repeatedly by Mr. Juneau that due to budget restrictions, the CBC is not in a position to provide any services to these communities. How long will these communities have to wait before they get CBC services?

The Government said it was committed to the growth and development of this country's cultural life. In a questionnaire circulated by the Alliance of Canadian Cinema, Television and Radio Artists, the Conservatives responded by promising to increase CBC's funding in order to help the corporation achieve its leadership role. ACTRA estimates that by 1993–94 the CBC's shortfall in real terms will be in the area of $300 million. There is no doubt in my mind that the CBC will have no other alternative but to reduce services, Canadian programming, and it will be forced to close stations across the country and lay off a significant number of people.

Once again, Canadians in rural areas will be the recipients of these cut-backs. Once again, this Government has broken its promise. The Government claims to be committed to the agricultural industry in this country, yet the Budget measures announced will cut more than $324 million from agricultural programs over the next two years. The most significant of these cuts is to the Crop Insurance Program. The federal Government is once again attempting to shift the burden to the provinces.

The most frightening thing for Canada's agricultural industry is the complete review of all federal agriculture programs. While a review of programs can be beneficial to a government in making it more efficient and effective, this particular review is frightening, given this Government's track record. It appears that the Government is preparing to overhaul the entire agricultural system in Canada. The primary purpose is to get Government out of the business of subsidizing farmers in an effort to reduce the deficit further.

I have touched on only a few of the key areas which affect my riding. I have only scratched the surface. There is so much to say about this Budget. This Bill, when passed, will approve a borrowing authority of $24.8 billion. Knowing the Government's history of management I am certain it will be back for more.

In the Conference Board's economic forecast in response to the Budget it states:

> Virtually no growth is now forecast for the second half of this year and recession is a distinct possibility.

The Conference Board goes on to state that the financial and business communities were disappointed with the federal Budget. They were expecting larger expenditure cuts and less tax increases to consumers.

Mr. Bosley: Are you for that?

Mr. Nault: I am certain the Conference Board's prediction of a recession will come true. Consumers will once again put their money into savings accounts in order to cash in on high interest rates and they will not spend their earnings on consumer goods and services. The Canadian economy will grind to a halt.

This Government has destroyed the dreams of many Canadians with this Budget and its monetary policies. It says it does not want to hand over this deficit to our next generation. I know that many of my constituents and many more Canadians refuse to believe anything this Government says because there have been too many broken promises.

Mr. Parent: Mr. Speaker, I compliment the Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River (Mr. Nault) on his speech and on the depth of the research that he undertook for it.

The Hon. Member mentioned that there were a great many tax increases and he spoke about their inequity.

I believe he stated that in this Budget it seemed that wealthy corporations were paying much less than their share and that individual Canadians were carrying the full burden. My question is a two-part one. Perhaps the Hon. Member could clarify for me why it is that large corporations seem to get away with not paying their fair share of taxes while middle-income earners keep getting hit again and again.

The Member mentioned something about gasoline prices in northern Ontario. I am appalled to think that one litre of gasoline in the Member's riding would cost 61 cents a litre. Has he given any thought about how these high prices could be brought down and, therefore, shared more equitably among all Canadians? If the Member could address those two questions, I would appreciate it.

Mr. Nault: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for his questions.

Contrary to what people on the other side of the House would like to think, we on this side have a very strong belief that the deficit must be reduced. We believe strongly that it can be done but it has to be done in a fair and equitable manner. One of the problems we foresee in the Budget is that yet again lower and middle-income Canadians are carrying the total burden.

If Members want to look at some statistics, 1.3 million who make less than $25,000 were taxed in this last Budget. Out of a total of 8.3 million households, only 600,000 were from that sector of our population who make over $100,000 a year. That shows that the Government and the Conservative agenda has come through. It has let the rich get off scot-free and made middle and lower-income Canadians carry the burden of paying for the deficit.

I believe very strongly that the deficit has to be reduced. I believe, and my constituents have told me over and over again during the last six months that if we do anything right in the next four years we have to reduce the deficit. But it has to be done in a fair and equitable manner. I do not see that happening through this Budget.

In relation to the gas tax, I wrote a letter to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) a few months ago explaining in detail the problems that we were having in Kenora—Rainy River. In border towns different gas stations were closing down because consumers—we cannot blame them—were going to the United States to buy cheap gas. It is a known fact that consumers will save themselves $10 on one tank of gas. As a fair minded individual I can understand why consumers would go across to the American side to buy gas. In essence, the Canadians who live along the border are subsidizing the building of American roads.

I suggested to the Minister that he would be wise to reduce the amount of tax on gasoline in areas with regional development problems, and Kenora—Rainy River is obviously one of those areas. The people of Toronto would certainly be screaming blue murder if they had to pay 61 cents a litre. We have been screaming for a long time over the legitimate problem of gasoline taxes, and we have not received a reply from the Minister as yet. In case he has not heard it from his staff, I will tell the Minister now that it would be more appropriate to reduce taxes in places along the border so that the businesses will not go bankrupt and will pay taxes rather than to let them close down and not pay any taxes at all.

Mr. Fee: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member on his speech. He may not believe this, but there are some elements of it with which I agreed. Many of the arguments he made I heard from my constituents fairly recently as well. They were criticizing the Government for the fact that it has not reduced expenditures or attacked the deficit enough, and the Hon. Member said that over and over in his speech. At the same time, he also criticized the Government over and over for the cuts that were made. He cannot have it both ways.

Where would the Hon. Member propose that major cuts be made, cuts that we both agree have to be made in order to enable us to live within our means? It is not enough to say that it has to be done in a fair and equitable manner. We all know that. I want to know what expenditures he proposes we cut.

Mr. Nault: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to respond to the Hon. Member's question because I firmly believe that there has been a lot of rhetoric lately and that it would be to our benefit to answer questions as quickly and as explicitly as we can.

On the one hand, the Government is telling the people of Canada that we must reduce the deficit, but on the other hand it spends up to $90 million a year on advertising such things as the Budget and various programs. I would love to have $90 million for regional development in Kenora—Rainy River rather than have it spent on advertisements which say absolutely nothing to me except that we have a deficit problem. I could have told the Government that years ago based on a survey I did in my own riding. Everyone kept telling me that there is a problem with the deficit and that it was rated the number one problem on everyone's hit parade.

Those are the kinds of expenditures that can be cut quickly without any damage to individuals. The Hon. Member criticized my speech because I said that we should reduce the deficit but not certain programs. That is true. I firmly believe that CBC, VIA Rail and unemployment insurance, just to name a few, cannot be cut in order to reduce the deficit. Those are very important parts of what we call the national dream, if there is still such a thing in Canada. The reason I am here is because I believe in the national dream. Those programs have to be maintained.

I suggest that the Government ensure that it starts taxing the individuals who do not pay any tax, the individuals who are getting off scot-free. It is time for them to share some of the burden. I do not mind sharing my portion of it.

Mr. Malone: Name them.

Mr. Nault: Oh, let us name them. All the big industries do not pay nearly as much as the Hon. Member pays. They pay 6 per cent, and we paid 60 per cent in the last four years. Is that fair and equitable? The Hon. Member for Red Deer told me not to talk about being fair and equitable. I do not mind paying my share, but I suggest that the Government take a look at what it is cutting and who it is affecting when it makes those cuts.

Mr. Loiselle: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member on his intervention. I would remind him that in this Budget we have gone to some length to tackle the corporations which he tells us we are not taxing enough. There will be a new tax on large corporations which will bring in $1 billion. This is certainly a step in the right direction.

Second, I would like to remind the Hon. Member who talked about rich people getting away scot-free that he should ask them how they feel about an additional surtax of 2 per cent and 3 per cent in addition for higher income earners. These, I believe, are steps in the right direction. We have been very careful to try to ensure that those who can afford to make an additional contribution to our debt situation do so.

The Hon. Member mentioned advertising. It is very easy to play around with a large number like $90 million, but this includes all the advertising done by government agencies and Departments, and much of it is service advertising. He may have his own views about budget advertising. I respect his position, but when it comes to government services, the CBC and Crown corporations have to advertise services to make the people aware of them. We live in the 20th century and it is very difficult for any organization to ignore that. This $90 million is what we pay in interest in one day. It would not solve the deficit problem. I think the Hon. Member would have to look at larger cuts, and I would ask him where he would cut.

Mr. Nault: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Minister's question. I will try to make my response brief, but he asked three or four questions. I would like to touch on his very specific question about the deficit. The deficit is a big problem for me and for all Canadians. As an old friend of mine who just happens to be Jewish always says, it is better to ask a question than to give an answer, so I will ask the Minister a question and then I will go on with my response.

If this Budget were so well put together and did what it intended to do, why has the deficit gone up, not down? I have difficulty with the concept of short-term pain for long-term gain. In the last four to five years there has been an economic boom in Canada, but we have not reduced the deficit. What will take place when the economy takes a downturn? What will the Government do then.

I think it is very important for the Minister to realize that I will have my chance in government if I stick around long enough. I hope I do and, when I do, I will tell him my ideas and he will have an opportunity to criticize me. The Government has mismanaged the economy in the last five years, otherwise the deficit would have been reduced by now, considering the economic boom we have had.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to say that the period for questions and comments is now terminated. The Hon. Member has had 13 minutes of questions and comments.

Under Standing Order 74, this will be the last speaker who will speak for 20 minutes, with 10 minutes of questions and comments. After that, all speeches will be 10 minutes long.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Marc Robitaille (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise again in the House and take part in the debate on Bill C-11, known under its short title as the Borrowing Authority Act, 1989-90.

• (1540)

Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to get a clear picture of the present budgetary situation if we are to understand what the Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) will do. Canadians have a serious problem: a large and growing public debt. An hour from now, that debt will have grown by $3 million. In just two weeks, it will have grown by more than $1 billion. The interest payments on the debt are also increasing rapidly. Only 20 years ago, just 12 cents of every dollar taxpayers sent to Ottawa went to interest payments. When the Progressive Conservative Government came to power in September 1984, that figure had already increased to 32 cents. This year, 35 cents of every tax dollar will be used to service the debt. The recent surge of interest rates shows how much our huge debt has left us exposed. In just one year, the projected cost of paying the interest on the debt has risen by more than $6 billion. This year alone, interest will cost us $39 billion, and a sudden rise in interest rates would have a devastating effect.

Mr. Speaker, how did we acquire this enormous debt? Quite simply, Canada did it by living beyond its means. The debt put us in an untenable position, and the present Government is determined to take the necessary measures. This Budget acknowledges the fact that maintaining social programs and the standard of living that Canadians want for themselves and for their children requires a vigorous debt reduction program. The Progressive Conservative Government has already made considerable progress in this respect. We have succeeded in reducing the growth of the debt from almost 24 per cent in 1984 to less than 10 per cent last year. Despite that progress, the debt is continuing to grow more rapidly than our national income. That is why, considering the urgency of the situation, the Minister of Finance has embarked on this series of budgetary restrictions. We shall proceed with reductions in Government spending affecting a wide range of programs.

Mr. Speaker, the Budget also proposes revenue increases affecting corporate and personal income taxes, sales taxation and the financing of the unemployment insurance program. These debt control actions will amount to more than $5 billion this year and $9 billion next year. The Budget measures will cut the annual deficit in half to $15 billion by 1993-94. Financial requirements, in other words, the money the Government must borrow, will be down from $20 billion this year to $3 billion. As the deficit goes down, the debt will shrink as a proportion of our national income.

Mr. Speaker, it is not easy to reduce the deficit, but the Budget ensures that the total package of measures is balanced, reflecting regional circumstances and placing the greater burden on those who are better able to carry it.

That is why this Budget talks about building for the future, not borrowing from it. That is why this Budget deals vigorously with the main obstacles that separate us from that future, the problems of a growing debt. Successful debt control seems to entail a very high cost, but it is nothing compared to the price we will have to pay if we fail. One of the measures in this Budget, Mr. Speaker, which clearly reflects the balance and fairness of this Budget and this Government, concerns repayment of family allowance and old age security benefits by high-income taxpayers. The Government is spending $30 million more in 1988-89 on direct income support for Canadians than on any other program, and we cannot make significant fiscal progress without examining this area of spending as well.

Canadians 65 and older are entitled to the old age security pension and families with dependent children under 18 are entitled to family allowance payments.

Regardless of the assistance they really need, these payments are subject to individual income tax.

Mr. Speaker, this Budget proposes to claw-back these payments from high-income Canadians. They will refund old age security and family allowance benefits at the rate of 15 per cent of individual net income over $50,000. The repayments will be calculated on the income tax return and will be deductible in computing the balance of tax payable.

The $50,000 cut-off means that only high-income Canadians will have to repay benefits. Low- and middle-income taxpayers will not be affected.

This measure will be phased in over three years. In 1989, actual repayments will only be one third of the amounts repayable. In 1990, they will be two thirds. Full repayments will only be required starting in 1991.

Once the system is in place, 54,000 old age pension recipients with high incomes will repay all their benefits and 74,000 will repay part. Overall, Mr. Speaker, only 4.3 per cent of all old age pensioners will be affected, with 1.8 per cent repaying all their old age security pensions.

As for family allowances, it is expected that 368,000 high-income families will repay all the allowances received and that 167,000 will repay part. In all, 14 per cent of family allowance recipients will be affected.

This measure is in keeping with the universality of these transfer programs. All eligible individuals will continue to receive benefits, regardless of their income. Those most in need of assistance, Mr. Speaker, will continue to keep all their benefits. Thus social security nets are maintained, while helping to ensure a solid financial basis for social programs in the future.

Mr. Speaker, very recently in this House, we saw the ardent defender of widows and orphans, the Hon. Member for Laurier—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), rise to defend the rich and thus abandon those whom he has long claimed to defend.

Mr. Speaker, we saw the same reactions from Liberal and New Democratic Members, these Robin Hoods get up in the House and protect and defend those whom they usually consider to be rich. Such hypocrites, Mr. Speaker! And Canadians have been witnesses to this hypocrisy, Mr. Speaker.

And what about the most recent attempt, which I could not overlook today, by the Liberal Senate, once again, to override the will of the people democratically expressed last November 21, by acting again in a way that is unacceptable to the people, Mr. Speaker. This really shows us the rage and frustration of those who not so long ago were responsible for Canada's present financial situation, who believe that power is theirs by divine right and use the pretext of tradition to trample underfoot the democratic will of a whole people.

This also shows us, Mr. Speaker, the need to do some house-cleaning there. When we hear Senator Gigantès say, as he did this morning on the radio: "We want to teach the Government a lesson, to show it that it is misbehaving."

• (1550)

Mr. Speaker, it is not misbehaving to serve the people and to shoulder one's responsibilities as a government and we certainly have no lesson to learn from those people. It is a hostage-taking and again, the hostages are the Canadian people.

It is never pleasant for anyone, any Canadian, to have money taken from them in order to pay off debts. It is not fun for me either and we should certainly not expect people to shout and jump for joy over this situation. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, I am banking on the maturity of Canadians and of my constituents who understand the situation very well, who know the causes very well and who are satisfied with the performance of the Government and its Finance Minister who, instead of taking one-shot measures and hiding the truth as our predecessors did, is proposing solutions that will protect and guarantee the future of all of us and will help reach that high level of excellence of which we are capable.

Excellence, Mr. Speaker, does not just happen. It is the reward of hard labour. Only great strength of character makes it possible to persevere, to make efforts whose effects are not perceived, like the movement of the hand of a watch, tireless but imperceptible.

Reaching a high level of excellence is difficult and maintaining it is even harder, for the search for excellence implies continual striving to do better.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the real tradition to which Canadians are attached, values of excellence, values of democracy and the desire for a better, prosperous future.

This Budget will give back to this country the freedom of action needed to maintain social programs and our quality of life.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On questions and comments the Hon. Member for London East.

Mr. Fontana: I was interested to hear the comments of the Hon. Member with regard to the Budget, especially how the Government views the situation.

Could the Hon. Member elaborate on the point that much of the deficit and the doubling of the debt which has occurred over the past five years cannot be put squarely on the doorstep of the Government.

As my colleague mentioned, during the best of economic times, and the past six years have been boom economic times for the majority of regions of Canada and for most people, the debt in this country increased from $140 billion to $370 billion. Now, because of mismanagement of resources, the Government wants to transfer that pain not to itself but to the taxpayers, and precisely to those in the middle income group who over the past five years are paying approximately $2,000 more in tax.

Could the Hon. Member tell me how he can truthfully say that the problem is Canadians, that they are living too high off the hog and that everybody has to pull in his or her belt, yet over five years the Government has managed to double the debt in the country? Perhaps the Hon. Member could answer that question, and then I will have another one.

[Translation]

Mr. Robitaille: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his comments and his question. I would say that the previous Liberal Government increased program spending by an average of 15.1 per cent per year. We, as the Government, brought this figure down to 5 per cent during our first term, and from 1988 to 1993, expenditures will increase by only 3.9 per cent annually.

The Hon. Member—Mr. Speaker, I was asked the same question when I made my last speech in the House and I will give the same answer—seems to be saying that the debt increased by nearly $100 billion, but I may remind him that despite the fact that we reduced the deficit by $10 billion, we still have the $28 billion that has accumulated and will add to the national debt.

Mr. Speaker, the growth rate of the public debt was reduced from almost 24 per cent in 1984 to less than 10 per cent last year. For the first time in 15 years, the growth of the debt did not exceed 10 per cent. I think that is a perfectly valid answer. What I find rather amusing, Mr. Speaker, is that the Hon. Member seems to say we are putting the burden of the debt on middle-income Canadians. I find it rather amusing, Mr. Speaker, because I have here an article by the former Liberal candidate in my riding. I think it explains clearly what the Hon. Member is trying to tell me. I will just read a few lines. Mrs. Brouillette, who was the Liberal candidate, said: "I am not a tax expert, but I am entirely opposed to the Tory policy that takes sides with the poor against the rich." Imagine, Mr. Speaker! I think no further comment is necessary. They keep accusing us of putting the burden of the debt on the poor in this country. The Hon. Member rises in the House and he says that we are putting the burden on middle-income Canadians. A former Liberal candidate and a good friend of the Hon. Member for Laurier—Sainte-Marie (Mr. Malépart), said in the press that the Tory Government was a Robin Hood, and that this was unacceptable. Curiouser and curiouser, Mr. Speaker. I think I will leave it at that.

[English]

Mr. Fontana: I am not sure I received an answer to my question. Perhaps I will leave it to other Members to ask the same question.

Yesterday evening at the finance committee meeting, Mr. Peters, a senior vice-president of the Toronto-Dominion Bank, indicated that $5 billion was added to the deficit because of the monetary and borrowing practices of the Government. Keeping interest rates 2 per cent to 3 per cent higher than those of the United States has caused the Government to pay more to borrow money in the short-term money markets and has essentially added $5 million to the deficit in 1988 because I suggest of mismanagement.

The documentation will prove that his analysis has indicated that because of the high interest rate policy of the Government $5 billion has been added to the deficit in 1988, and essentially now the Government is asking middle and low income Canadians to pay for its mistakes. If that is repeated in 1989 through another borrowing borrowing Bill the Government will again penalize those in the middle income groups.

In the opinion of the Hon. Member what effect has the high interest rate policy supported by his Government had on the deficit?

[Translation]

Mr. Robitaille: Mr. Speaker, to begin with, I would remind the Hon. Member that in 1982, the inflation rate was 11 or 12 per cent.

The Hon. Member refers to interest rates; he will recall that in my speech, I did say that in the present budget situation, we are very sensitive to interest rates—we are really at their mercy. I think that I already said that very clearly. The matter of interest rates means—and that, I think, Mr. Speaker, shows how vulnerable we are to interest rates with the danger caused by the present deficit and our national debt. Mr. Speaker, as for the national debt, we have no more room to manoeuvre and the purpose of the measures taken in this Budget is to give us back the room to manoeuvre we need to protect ourselves from sudden rises in interest rates.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The period for questions and comments is now over. Before giving the floor to the Hon. Member for Prince Albert (Mr. Funk), I must inform the House of the questions to be raised this evening at the time of adjournment.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BORROWING AUTHORITY ACT, 1989–90

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre) that Bill C–11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): As I mentioned prior to the speech by the Hon. Member for Terrebonne (Mr. Robitaille), speeches will now be ten minutes.

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Mr. Speaker, while it gives me great pleasure to debate the borrowing authority Bill which allows the Government to implement its budgetary plans, I am not pleased to have to talk about the Budget itself.

The Budget was brought to us by millionaire's row in the middle of the night. It introduces the brave new world of free trade in which ordinary Canadians will pay $1,700 more in taxes while big business calls the shots. Even the Government's friends in the forecasting business say that the Budget will cause a recession that will affect all Canadians.

Members opposite know that my constituency of Prince Albert used to be represented by the late John Diefenbaker. It is quite clear the Government has abandoned the legacy of John Diefenbaker and taken up the legacy of Margaret Thatcher. In the next election the words of John Diefenbaker, that the Conservatives were not protected by election laws but by endangered species laws, will again hold true in western Canada.

Anyone who cannot vote NDP will vote either Reform or Liberal in western Canada. There will be very few Conservatives. I have heard deep anger and disgust at the direction the Government is taking. There is a clear feeling that the Conservative Party, which western Canadians nurtured through its years as opposition, has turned its back on western Canada now that it is the Government.

My criticism of the Budget is simply that I believe it is bone-headed economics. All Canadians recognize that there is a debt problem and that we cannot indefinitely spend money that we do not take in. We all want to be able to afford future programs.

However, I believe the way to solve this type of problem is to create opportunities for people who do not have those opportunities and are not contributing taxes to the nation. The Government should create opportunities for people who are unable to develop businesses or create jobs so they may have the futures they would like.

There are many people in my constituency who would like to contribute more, but the Government has taken away that opportunity.

For instance, the people in the co-operative sector can contribute much to this country. Forty-three per cent of Canadians belong to a co-op, and 70,000 people work for co-ops. The financial co-ops have $60 billion in assets, while retail co-ops have $16 billion in sales. It is a major sector of the economy that could play a key role, particularly in the post-free trade era, in ensuring that development was sustained in the communities and regions affected by the Free Trade Agreement.

The co-op sector was looking for some help in regard to dividends. Presently, there is a serious disincentive for people to invest in co-ops compared to other forms of business.

The housing co-op sector feels strongly that it was sold out when its commitment of 5,000 housing units was cut to 1,800. The co-operative sector was disappointed that the Government took no action when Ministers responsible for co-operatives identified health and worker co-ops as ways to save money and jobs in this country.

Official development assistance was drastically cut, yet the co-op sector has played a key role in providing international assistance and developing links between Canadians and people in other countries. They helped to ensure that Canada would play its role in the world community. We cannot continue to prosper as a nation if we turn our neighbours throughout the world into beggars.

The community development sector would also like to contribute. One would think a Conservative Government that supposedly believes in self-reliance and initiative would want to encourage groups that help people pull themselves up by their own bootstraps. Instead, the Government cut Secretary of State programs which allowed those groups to organize.

The Government also cut ERDAs. The chairman of the Finance Committee stated that according to the Blue Book regional development had not been cut. I consulted the Blue Book, only to find that the Department of Industry, Science and Technology was cut by $150 million. Money for ERDAs was cut by $50 million. Grants and contributions to the Western Diversification Office were cut by $40 million. I realize the Conservatives are saving some money to have a slush fund for the next election, but that is not the kind of development that will help communities.

The old agreements were very useful in developing sectors in my constituency, including forestry, the inland fishery and tourism. They helped the communities take advantage of those opportunities.

Finally, I want to talk about my constituency of Prince Albert—Churchill River. Certainly we want to contribute more because it is one of the greatest areas in the country with the potential for wealth creation. My constituency covers half the area of the province.

But what has the Government done for Prince Albert—Churchill River? It has not dealt with interest rates which are killing small business. How can small business create jobs when interest rates keep rising? How can farmers borrow money to put in their crops, finance new equipment and enhance their farming operations when the Government keeps jacking up interest rates?

Last week I was in my constituency. Not only did I see forest fires, I saw dust blowing in a way that I have not seen in 40 years. Even the oldtimers said they had not even seen dust like that during the dirty thirties.

Not only has the Government not come to terms with how it will deal with this possible drought situation, it has not even finished with the mess it created with the last drought payment. It has come up with only $425 of the $850 it promised. It is trying to shake down the broke provincial treasuries for the rest.

At a time when the farmers in my constituency in Saskatchewan look to the Government for some help and support, the Government is still cleaning up its mess from last year.

I was in Rosthern, the hometown of the Member for Surrey—White Rock (Mr. Friesen), as well as the place I went to high school—

Mr. Friesen: It doesn't show.

Mr. Funk: I heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) say that the Conservative Party could always be relied on to stand behind farmers in Canada because they always have and always will. He went on to say that the Conservatives would provide twice as much money as any New Democratic Government would.

New Democrats would not be sitting here, with a new drought coming on, still trying to clean up the mess from the last drought payment.

Another cut which affects my constituency is branch line rehabilitation. There is a cut of $48 million in branch line rehabilitation. During the election, Conservative candidates in my constituency promised that the railway subdivision to Paddockwood and the railway from Holbein to Shellbrook would be upgraded if a Conservative Government was re-elected. The roadbeds already exist but they need heavy steel. That has been cut from the Budget. It is another broken promise to the farmers of my constituency.

Next, there are the changes to the Unemployment Insurance Program. There is a lot of seasonal unemployment in my constituency and the cuts announced recently by the Government will mean a loss of some $3.5 million to these unemployed people.

The goods and services tax will have a serious impact on a constituency like mine. Goods and services already cost twice as much in remote communities. The Government will tack on this cost for those people who already cannot afford to pay, and are already paying more than other Canadians.

The co-operative sector wants to help. The community development sector wants to help. The people of Prince Albert—Churchill River want to help pay the deficit. But we cannot do it if the Government keeps cutting us off at the knees.

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to say a few words in this debate on the borrowing Bill.

I have listened with interest to what Members opposite have said about fiscal responsibility. Perhaps they can talk to their friends down the hall, and talk some fiscal responsibility into them. Every minute that they are holding up passage of those warrants is depriving senior citizens and people who depend on government cheques and government employment of their money. That is the way they can begin to help fiscal responsibility in this country. We are talking about borrowing money for the Government of Canada. There has been quite a bit of criticism from Members opposite as to how we got into this situation. It should be pointed out that it is necessary for the Government of Canada to borrow money to meet its obligations.

• (1610)

As the Budget indicated, the deficit for this fiscal year will be $30.5 billion. I think that is quite remarkable in view of the upward pressure on interest rates and the huge responsibilities that fall to the federal Government. This figure is down from the $38 billion annual deficit that we inherited in 1984.

It is important to discuss for a few moments just how we got into the present situation. How is that we are borrowing $30 billion this year? How is it that we had to borrow $38 billion in fiscal year 1984–85?

Mr. Malone: The Liberals.

Mr. Nicholson: The Hon. Member on this side of the House says that it was the Liberals. Of course it was the Liberal Party. Members of that Party are responsible for it.

The game plan of Members opposite is very clear at this point. They are hoping that after four years of not being in office that Canadians will forget. I will tell them what the facts are.

Mr. Duhamel: Stop the excuses.

Mr. Nicholson: The facts are that when we took office in September of 1984 the deficit stood at $200 billion. That is a fact. It is not a partisan comment.

Mr. Duhamel: Check your figures.

Mr. Nicholson: Canadians cannot be fooled. They are too sharp. They know that on $200 billion the interest alone is $20 billion the first year, and then it is $25 billion the next. The debt today is over $300 billion. It is all attributable to the previous Government.

Mr. Duhamel: You doubled it in four years.

Mr. Nicholson: I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, what else is a fact. Every cent that the Government presently spends on programs is paid for by the people of Canada in this fiscal year. The only borrowing that goes on in the country is to pay for the Liberal legacy that was left to us in 1984—every cent of it.

Let me deal now with members of the NDP. They were giving a standing ovation to the Liberals for all those years that they were building up that debt. The Liberals were being cheered on by members of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Duhamel: The people forgot last time. They won't forget this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Niagara Falls has the floor.

Mr. Nault: He should go over the falls, in a barrel.

Mr. Nicholson: I was just talking about the game plan of Hon. Members opposite. I consider it my role as a responsible Member for my constituency of Niagara Falls to continue to remind people how we got here. It is my responsibility to remind them that how we got into the fiscal mess is because the previous Government took over Crown corporations. The old philosophy was that if it lost money the Government of Canada should own it.

Mr. McCurdy: And if it makes money, sell it off.

Mr. Nicholson: We have the spectacle of Crown corporations that lost billions of dollars. There were issues such as the scientific tax credits with respect to which officials in the Department of Finance pointed out the problems. They lost hundreds of millions of dollars but they did not want to admit their mistake.

We had in place before 1984 a Government which could not run a lottery without losing millions of dollars. That may be unique in the annals of civilization. However, that was the legacy of the previous Government. I am very pleased to remind Hon. Members of how we got into the situation that we are in today.

I think what Canadians realize and what Members opposite realize as well is that the only individuals, the only people who are ready to be responsible with the finances of the country are people like the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson)

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, why I think they think that on the other side. A couple of weeks ago they were all screaming for the Minister of Finance to resign. They did not want to talk about the Budget, they just wanted to talk about trying to get the resignation of the Minister of Finance. I know what happened. They went home on that weekend and found out from their constituents that they were wrong. They found out that Canadians did not want to get rid of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. McCurdy: You are right. They wanted the whole Government to resign.

Mr. Nicholson: Canadians wanted the Minister of Finance. They did not want what they had before 1984. That is what they did not want. We have not heard a peep out of Members opposite on the subject since that time. They know, and I think all Canadians know, that the Minister of Finance is the only one capable, with the support of the Prime Minister and this political Party, to put the country's finances back on the rails the way it should have been all the years during the 1970s.

Mr. McCurdy: It's funny you should mention rails.

Mr. Nicholson: I do not want to leave the impression that I am placing all this at the doorstep of the Liberal Party. I would like to pass some comments to my friends in the New Democratic Party. I am sure that when they get either to their leadership convention or, I suppose, all the conventions that the NDP have had in the past, one of the things on the agenda will be: "Why do we always lose?" I am sure this is a subject of seminars and workshops for members of the NDP. I am going to give them some advice. I never mind giving advice to members of the NDP because I know that they will never take it. One of the things they might want to consider is this. Canadians are too smart to believe that a Government can continue to spend more and more money even on worth-while projects and at the same time never increase government revenues. Most Canadians know that that will not wash.

I remember during the election the NDP quit talking about the Free Trade Agreement. One of the reasons reported in the paper for that was that the office of the NDP figured out that Canadians felt the NDP was weak on economic issues so they did not want to talk about free trade. I was so happy to hear that because I knew that if I lived long enough I would hear something that came out of the NDP office with which I agreed. They are weak on the economy. The Hon. Member down at the end of the Chamber is making all types of predictions about the Conservative Party disappearing. He only has to look in the mirror to figure out where he and his Party are going to be. They will be down at the end of the Chamber as long as this Chamber exists because they have not figured out that fiscal responsibility is part of political success. This Party knows it and it is going to stay on this side of the House.

It is up to the Government and this Party to do something about the debt. One of the things about which Hon. Members opposite have not come to grips with is the fact that every child in the country is born with a $12,000 debt. Instead of coming across with constructive solutions as to how to deal with that, or giving support to the Minister of Finance who is trying to run the country properly, they oppose all decreases in expenditures. They oppose all attempts to increase government revenue. Instead, what they are in fact doing is mortgaging the future of our children and grandchildren. I believe that is a disgrace. I believe it is something that Canadians are not going to stand for.

I believe the Government was elected to make tough decisions. I believe we were elected to make fair decisions. It is not easy I know for anyone on this side of the House not to increase spending in areas that we all believe are worth while. It is tough to increase taxes on Canadians but we believe that that is the mandate we have been given. We have been given a mandate that is tough but fair. It is to put the fiscal house of the country back in order. That is exactly what the Minister of Finance has done.

Mr. Ronald J. Duhamel (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to be able to speak on Bill C-11. What I want to do is share with all Members here the comments I have received from my constituents over the last few months, particularly with respect to the Budget.

During the election campaign the major issue was honesty and integrity in Government. As I went door to door, clearly, that was the question that was raised most frequently. Frankly, I can tell Hon. Members, and I say this with a great deal of sincerity, the Canadian public is starting to lose faith in political Parties and politicians generally.

They have also spoken to me about the Throne Speech. They feel, and they are not necessarily members of my Party, that there were a lot of old ideas that were rehashed, and that there were repeated statements and announcements to make the Government look good.

For example, we heard before the election about the Centre for Sustainable Development. We heard it mentioned again in the Throne Speech. We look in the Budget and yet we can find no trace of it. We have not heard recently either of the National Centre for Disease Control that was promised for Manitoba, or the research into aging, or the Diagnostic Research Centre at St. Boniface Hospital. We are wondering what has happened to all of those great statements because frankly, there were many Manitobans who had hoped that they might come through.

What is the Budget all about? Canadians, not only in my constituency but people with whom I have talked across the country, have described it as the most massive tax grab that we have ever had in this country. It is a Budget of broken promises and misleading statements. Where is the vision in the Throne Speech or in the Budget? Where can Canadians, the poor, the middle class, the older worker, the seniors, the students, the women and the single parents go for solace? Where do they go for hope, for comfort, for reassurance that things will be better in the future. Clearly, ladies and gentlemen, not to this Government.

It is a Budget of broken promises and misleading information. This Government has practised that with a great deal of skill. Let me share some of these with you that are on the public record. The Government talks about the deficit being over $38 billion in 1984. It forgets to remind Canadians, however, that it was in power for more than half the year. If it had not been, its line would be, of course, "It would be greater than what it was." The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was saying during the election and prior to that that the deficit was under control. Well, he forgot to say that they had doubled the debt. It will have doubled in over five years. The deficit is higher today than it was during last year, and it is about the same as it was the year before.

Conservative Members like to brag about the 1.5 million jobs that have been created. However, they do not want to tell us where those jobs are and what proportion are part-time jobs. They fail to tell us how many jobs were destroyed along the way, what kind of jobs were removed and what kind of jobs were lost. You know, Mr. Speaker, one of their favourite lines is to blame the Liberals. We just heard it a few moments ago. Blame the Liberals. I know of a young man who is having certain problems right now and he likes to say that it is not really his fault, it is his parents' fault for the way in which they raised him. Well, lo and behold, the Government of the day, if it could not blame the Liberals, most of its Members would have to cut their speeches in half, and frankly, and the rest would not have anything to say at all.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Duhamel: This is the Government that tried to deindex the pensions for the aged. It was unsuccessful because the seniors stood up to it. I am proud that the seniors were able to do that. Now the Government comes in with a more clever scheme. It is called claw-back. What are people saying about that? Well, initially if one examines it, one feels somewhat sympathetic to people having more money returned. However, if we look into it further, if we realize that if we were to change that figure one little bit, the ravages of inflation of one year will cut that roughly by half.

We also realize that the Government can change that figure at any time, and of course Canadians believe that that figure will change. They remember the Minister of International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) saying that unemployment would not be touched. This is what I mean by a misleading statement. Well, it was not touched, it was mangled. It was destroyed. It is now being paid on the backs of the workers and the backs of the unemployed.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) has received a lot of good comments from his colleagues, and I appreciate that they think so highly of him, but this same Minister—some people call him "Honest Mike"—did say during the election that all of that which was being promised were not promises, they were election commitments. They were within the fiscal framework of the Government. Well, let me ask the Minister and his colleagues to tell that to the women regarding child care. Tell that to Canadian people. Ask them whether or not those were in fact commitments rather than promises. You know, Mr. Speaker, it was the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) who said that VIA Rail would be improved, that all would be rosy for VIA Rail. What has happened? It is another misleading statement. It was another statement that was not carried through. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that Air Canada was not for sale. Well, they sold one-half of it and they are about to sell the other half.

The Prime Minister said that they would increase foreign aid and it has been reduced. Many Ministers said that there would be no cuts in regional development. If you believe that you were not at Question Period today, and you have not been listening to what has been happening in western Canada.

This Government said that it would be a fair government. We just heard that comment a moment ago from the Member opposite. Ask the people from Summerside if it is a fair government. Ask the people from Portage la Prairie if it is a fair government. Ask the people from any number of communities across Canada how fair it has been.

What has it done to the commitment to housing? Nothing. What has it done to the CBC? Reductions, gutting it. What has it done to the Post Office? Reduced the service. It brought in privatization and deregulation en masse that are going to cause us all kinds of difficulties.

Look at the area of health and education. There are reductions in transfer payments, reductions in training and retraining, reductions or freezes in student aid. It has made no significant advances in the area of education. I cannot imagine how one could possibly be a Member of this Government and brag. I would not dare brag. I would be too humiliated to do so.

The people of Canada are starting to react to this Budget. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, there will be some significant reaction as they get to know more clearly the massive impact that this Budget will have on Canadians. They will be standing up. Some of us think that this flood of information that they have received has been deliberate and it has been confusing people because there has been so much of it. We have been using large numbers with which they are not terribly familiar. Once they get through all of that, you mark my words, there are going to be reactions that you have never dreamt possible.

The Government has the gall to call its advertising program education. We all know it is not education. Let us call it what it is. It is propaganda.

It is propaganda to try to make us feel guilty about the standard of living that we have accumulated in this country, to try to make us feel guilty about all of the social programs that we have. Government Members have not told us that there are a number of countries in this world that are spending more of their wealth toward social programs. They are trying to pit us against each other in order to come out the winners.

There has been a massive and unfair tax grab. The top 1 per cent are now gaining $3,570, the bottom 10 per cent, $90. The average disposable income is down by 1.4 per cent since 1984. Some people paid tax increases of over 60 per cent. They pretend that education is the cornerstone of competitive society and they have slashed programs in those areas. They have slashed them in a very savage kind of way.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, if we look, for instance at education and especially at transfer payments, we see that in 1985, there was a cutback of over $8 billion in the areas of health and education. Another more recent cutback will probably get us down to $4 billion. In training and skills upgrading, we see that over $200 million, originally earmarked for community colleges, has been redirected. On research and development, despite recent increases, the Government is spending only half the amount spent by the United States, Sweden and Japan. Student assistance funding has been frozen, and the criteria have not changed since 1984. In the area of literacy programs, for instance, the Government announced a subsidy of $110 million but didn't say this will be spread over four or five years, and will cover five million Canadians.

That is just a few dollars for every person in need of this training. There is talk of capping post-secondary education grants for Native people. Classes for new Canadians have been abolished and with them the language training they were receiving. There were also reductions and cutbacks in the multiculturalism program and funding for groups representing women, official language minorities and again, our Native people. And there are some very important items in education.

• (1630)

Mr. Speaker, in concluding, I want to say that the honesty and integrity of this Government are being questioned. There is a growing sense of cynicism across Canada and, I say this in all sincerity, what the Government has done is shift money around. Cutbacks will put the tax burden on Canadians in the provinces and the territories, and we will see that individuals will have to pay more, a lot more!

I know, and I promise you that Canadians are going to rebel against these measures.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sorry to interrupt the Hon. Member but his time has expired.

[English]

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland—St. Catharines—Thorold): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join in this debate on Bill C-11, a borrowing Bill through which the Government hopes to borrow at least $25 billion. I must say that through its own incompetence in managing the affairs of this country over the last four years, the Government is indeed mortgaging the future of our youth, perhaps to a degree that will cause the young men and women of Canada not only to lose their exuberance for life but perhaps even their faith in this country.

Young people have dreams, and how cruel it would be to take them all away in one fell swoop. What would this one fell swoop be? It is commonly known as the dastardly Budget. This is exactly what the Government is doing when it cuts back on funds to education, training and research. These cuts lead directly to missed opportunities and, for these young people, to a loss of the fulfilment of their dreams. There is so much promise in our youth. Why is it that they cannot have the same hopes that we had when we were growing up? But, no, this Government chooses to cut back, to take away the tools that they will need for the fulfilment of their hopes.

Are you aware that after accidents suicide is the second highest cause of death among today's teens, Mr. Speaker? This is a chilling indictment for Canada and I would suggest for the present Government. Education is more than a right. It is an investment.

This Government wants to talk about free trade. I have a feeling that the Minister, who is pushing free trade and the almighty dollar, is looking at this investment in education as only an expenditure. Education must be in line with other aspects of free trade because our young people must compete sooner or later with their American and Japanese counterparts in business.

In my home town of Welland a science fair was organized recently, and this was what The Welland Tribune had to say about it on April 3, 1989:

> Environment issues appear to be important to many of today's elementary and secondary school students. It shows in the entries at this year's Niagara Regional Science and Engineering Fair, now being held at Niagara College. Be it recycling, acid rain, the greenhouse effect, cleaning up of oil spills—

I could refer to the one we have just experienced on the West Coast. It continued:

> —or keeping our air and water clean, there is a research project or experiment about it.

The interest is so great in this fair that the community has had to impose a maximum participation of 300 entries for the simple reason that there is no more space to display other experiments.

I mentioned that the Government is mortgaging the future of our youth. The least it could do is to give our young the tools with which to work. That is education. By cutting back the Government is taking away the tools of our children.

In spite of this accounting sleight of hand in the Budget, it is obvious that post-secondary funding has decreased under the terms of the present Budget. In fact, we are looking at a decrease here in Ontario of $70 million to $75 million in the year 1990-91 and about $200 million across the country. If this is not taking the money out of the hands of our youth, I do not know what is. I suggest that this Government is seriously short changing our most precious asset, our youth, our leaders of tomorrow.

I see two Members in the House who, like me, are from the Niagara Peninsula. I am sure the House is aware that 75 per cent of the tender fruit of Canada is produced in the Niagara Peninsula. Why am I mentioning this now? It is because I want to underline something which has taken place in the very recent past having to do with the Chilean grapes being taken off stands. Two grapes in a shipment of 200,000 cases showed the presence of three-tenths of a milligram of cyanide. The Government immediately took not only Chilean grapes off the shelves but also all vegetables from Chile. What does that have to do with us? This is no more or no less than agricultural terrorism.

Can we imagine what would happen if some deviant dumped some cyanide into a grain car? Our prairie farmers would be devastated. What would happen if someone found a tainted British Columbia apple at Christmas time? Would all the apples be taken off the market? God forbid. What would happen in the Niagara Peninsula if this year someone were to find cyanide in some of our magnificent peaches, cherries, raspberries or strawberries? Would the whole crop be cancelled if only two were found to be tainted? I suggest the drastic over-reaction of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Beatty) left Canada vulnerable to all sorts of bizarre scenarios and to agricultural terrorism.

Canada's image as a trustworthy trading partner has suffered severely. Some countries are already requesting cash for their produce when our credit was acceptable before.

The impact on consumers when the Chilean grapes were taken off the market was immediate. Consumers paid $4 to $6 per pound for grapes while Chilean grapes could have been sold for $2 a pound. I wonder who pocketed all that extra money. For fruit importers the effects were also immediately devastating and will affect them for a long time to come.

We learned of one importer who had a weekly payroll of $70,000. Some 40 per cent of his business was in Chilean grapes. He sent urgent pleas for help to the Government which went unheeded and unanswered. Importers asked the Government for inspection so that they would not have to throw away perfectly good fruit. In one case the produce from one company had a value of $1 million. A simple inspection could have averted extreme measures and unnecessary loss of money and food. The industry even offered to pay for the inspections, but all urgent appeals to save businesses were not acknowledged.

I have researched this matter, Mr. Speaker. On April 4, Mr. Art Fisher of Fisher Brothers in Montreal, sent a letter to a Dr. Liston, Health and Welfare, which read:

> —the detention orders which were issued only for the older fruits by Agriculture Canada's inspectors state that all fruits are now suspected of violation. Would you be kind enough to advise what tests and efforts, if any, were made by Agriculture Canada or Health and Welfare to confirm these suspicions. Are new fruits the subject of the same suspicion? If so, on what basis?
> I would like to know which statutory law governs the alleged violations. Is it a violation of a particular regulation or not? If so, which one?

Aren't these legitimate questions, Mr. Speaker? The writer went on to say:

> I feel that I have the right to know under which authority and on what basis you claim to have the right to seize our produce.

I believe that we in this House have the right to know on what basis the Government made this particular decision.

Mr. Fisher and all other fruit importers and producers rightly feel cheated, abandoned and ignored by the Government. Americans sold the same produce and seem to be making money. It should be noted that there was not even one incident of ill effects reported from the consumption of the produce.

• (1640)

I appeal to the House and to Ministers involved not to react so quickly in these cases. Sooner or later we in Canada will be drastically affected by this agricultural terrorism.

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak on the borrowing Bill which is of concern to all Canadians. The people of my riding are deeply concerned about this Bill. Small businesses, seniors, and agricultural producers all have great concerns.

Interest rates are at an all time high. This is not good for small businesses. It may be good for the people of Toronto and it may help to keep the economy of Toronto down, but it is certainly not doing any good for the City of Moose Jaw and the businesses there. Saskatchewan has the highest percentage of small businesses of any place in Canada. Small business people are drastically hurt by high interest rates.

Small business has been hurt by the recent cuts of $2.6 billion in the unemployment insurance scheme. This has put pressure on not only workers but on small businesses. The unemployment insurance scheme is to be funded solely by the workers and the employers. That will mean that premiums will increase. It is unfortunate that unemployment insurance will have to be funded on the backs of small businesses.

The federal sales tax which will be introduced in the near future will be very disruptive for small businesses. Certainly the tax will remove billions of dollars of purchasing power from consumers. The federal sales tax is a regressive tax in that it hits middle income earners much harder than it will hit higher income earners. When it hits middle income earners, they spend less. Middle income earners spend a larger percentage of their dollars on consumer goods than higher income earners. This will hurt the small businesses of my community as well as those right across Canada.

The Canada Pension Plan has been attacked by the Government's claw back. The pensions of those earning more than $50,000 will be affected. The unfortunate aspect of that is that it is the beginning of the end of universality. The figure is $50,000 this year, but it could easily be moved down. Even if it remains at $50,000, as inflation increases over the years it will affect more and more pensioners. No one on this side of the House disagrees that higher income earners should pay proper and fair taxes, but the tax should be on high incomes rather than on pensions.

The federal sales tax will also hurt seniors. As I said, it is a regressive tax which will eat into the fixed incomes of pensioners. Canadian pensioners live on fixed incomes and many have a difficult time, as it is, managing to get by. A 9 per cent and later on a 10 per cent or 11 per cent federal sales tax will adversely affect them.

Pensioners should not be surprised that the Government did not take them into account when it was drafting the Budget. As Hon. Members will recall this is the same Government which in 1985 wanted to deindex old age pensions. The only reason it backed away from that was that pensioners rose up in great numbers and vehemently opposed that move. In this case, the Government has taken a more tactical route and is removing universality through the back door. This is the same Government that did not consider seniors when it passed the drug patent Act in the last Parliament, an Act which unfortunately for seniors will mean higher drug prices. That is most unfortunate not only for seniors, but all Canadians.

The agricultural sector is of great importance to the Moose Jaw—Lake Centre riding. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) indicated in his budget remarks that the situation in agriculture is improving. The Minister, however, has obviously not visited western Canada lately. He certainly has not been to Saskatchewan where last week it seemed as if half the province was blowing away. There are still severe problems in agriculture in western Canada, and the agricultural sector is still going through a very difficult phase.

The Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski) suggested that producers buy crop insurance. That is all very well, but in the Budget, we note that crop insurance will be cut by $90 million this year and $110 million next year. This will force the provinces, if they wish to continue the program, to increase the funding of the program drastically.

The Government is in the process of dismantling the entire infrastructure of western Canada. In Saskatchewan, Alberta, and Manitoba, there is in existence an infrastructure that supports the many small communities and family farms that depend on that infrastructure. A life-style has developed since 1905 when the three provinces were incorporated and the Province of Manitoba was expanded. That life-style has developed an infrastructure, and that is now being dismantled.

The branch line rehabilitation program has been cut. This will cause severe hardships for communities as the movement of grain will become much more difficult and expensive. As well, advance payments have been cut. In the past, farmers could get interest-free loans on their grain. Now they will have to borrow money at present interest rates, making it much more expensive for producers.

Before the election the Government was telling a different story. It announced that there would be a drought payment of $850 million to Canadian producers. That promise was made in a last ditch effort to try to save seats in western Canada. Now, according to the Budget, the Government has come up with only $425 million, half of what was originally promised. This is another example of commitments the Government made which turned out to be nothing more than election profiteering.

I have spoken briefly on things that affect seniors, agricultural producers, and small business. The Budget affects all Canadians. It is an unfortunate fact that the average family is now paying $710 a year more as a result of the Budget. Once the federal sales tax is introduced, it will be paying $1,700 per year more. This is a very unfortunate Budget for the people of my riding and for the people of Canada.

• (1650)

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak to Bill C-11, respecting the borrowing authority. This Bill is reflective and indicative of the Government's mismanagement of monetary and fiscal policy.

If we look at the Government's high interest policy and borrowing practices in the 1988 fiscal year, $5 billion was added to the deficit at interest rates two to three points above the U.S. rate. This self-inflicted pain by the Government is now being transferred to Canadian taxpayers. It now wants Canadians to pay for their mistakes. I hope this Government will lower interest rates this year and thereby reduce the borrowing cost and in turn the budget deficit without inflicting such unbelievable pain on the middle and lower income groups.

Just over two weeks ago the House heard the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) deliver an eloquent speech on the Main Estimates and indirectly the Budget. The Minister gave us his vision for Canada, and I will concede that it was a lovely vision indeed: a competitive nation, a caring, compassionate society, a stronger country with healthy viable regions. I was nearly swept off my feet in the moment myself. I spent the rest of that afternoon trying to find the embodiment of these goals in the Budget. Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that they are not there. When the Budget axe fell, they were its first victims.

I would like to address each one of these goals and point out the Government's failure to deliver at every step of the way. First the Government called for a competitive nation. This country must be competitive if it is to survive the Free Trade Agreement. If this country is to become competitive, it needs to show a real commitment to research and development. The National Advisory Board on Science and Technology, a Board set up by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) himself, said that $500 million at a minimum was needed to ensure our future competitiveness. However, the Conservatives have not even set aside half that much.

We are not headed toward self-sufficiency in research and development. We are going in the opposite direction. In fact the numbers show that we have had the lowest commitment to R and D in the G-7 nations.

Where are those worker adjustment programs that were promised? Where are the training and retraining programs that were also promised? Where is the assistance for small business that was promised? So much for our international competitiveness.

Before the Government took office we used to have a caring and compassionate society. Today, care and compassion have become hollow words. Government members pay lip-service to them, but I do not think that they really believe what they are saying. After all, last week we saw Canada's social programs bludgeoned. Universal social programs are now a thing of the past. The Government no longer contributes to UIC, and the programs that remain are increasingly funded on the backs of the people who can least afford to pay. The Tory Government has ended the universality of care and compassion, too.

All this is supposed to lead to a stronger Canada with healthy viable regions. Somewhere there has been a lapse in logic.

The first few months of this Government's mandate has seen the biggest sell-out of regional development programs that this country has ever experienced. Years from now I believe that the Budget will be seen as the measure that ended the viability of our regions once and for all. This may be a vision to the Conservative Government, but to the rest of the country it is a bloody nightmare.

Government members would have us believe that Canadians are dancing in the streets because of the Budget. The reverse is true. Canadians and Londoners specifically genuinely want to help their country in the debt and deficit crises. They also want the Government to put its financial house in order first. Let us not forget that the best of times it has taxed, taxed and taxed in the past five years, yet it still managed to double the debt. Figure that out. Canadians have.

Second, Canadians want the burden to be shared fairly, especially by higher income groups and large corporations, not on the backs of the middle class. I applaud the efforts of small business, labour, consumers, women's groups, seniors, and others who are now saying that enough is enough.

I would like to turn my attention to the way the Budget will affect my home Town of London. Looking at it from the point of view of the average London family with a moderate income and a couple of children, the Budget is the largest tax grab in Canadian history. Never before have we asked individuals to pay so much more in taxes than we did in previous year.

Naturally we have the tendency to look at the Budget in terms of one year at a time. Let us look back to when the present Conservative Government first came into office. When we do this, we find that the Budget is just one in a long series of massive tax grabs. When we take all of these together, we see that the picture painted by the current Budget of the Finance Minister becomes even uglier. Today, after five consecutive Budgets, the average London family earning $32,000 in 1984 has been clobbered by extra taxes amounting to $680 a year and over $2,000 over that five-budget period. In other words, most Londoners today are having to contribute nine more days of wages to the tax man than when the Tories first came to office.

If only the tax grab were going to stop there, if only the Government would be content with nine more days of a family's wages. Unfortunately Canadians are not so lucky. The fact of the matter is that the Finance Minister has only just begun to pick our pockets. At the beginning of 1991 we are all going to be hit by a goods and services tax, a 9 per cent tax placed on everything we buy and on every service we use. The Government protests that the tax will be revenue neutral.

An Hon. Member: What a joke.

Mr. Fontana: Yes, it is a joke. We have found out that in fact it is going to be a government money machine that will produce some $10 billion more. In personal terms that represents another $400 a year for every single person, man, women or child or $1,600 for a family of four. The Government has said that some of this money will be returned to Canadians through the tax system, but even with this, the bottom line is that the goods and services tax means money out of their pockets.

In the Budget, London has also been hit very hard by the savage cut to the federal transfer commitments to the provinces. These payments are used to help pay for hospitals and post-secondary institutions. London just happens to be one of the most important centres in the Province of Ontario for both of these. London is one of the province's major medical centres. We have several of the finest hospitals and medical research centres in the world. The loss of funding means first that cuts to services are going to have to be made, throwing trained medical professionals out of work, closing top notch facilities and forcing even more of our top workers to move to the United States. Also over time the quality of health care that Londoners deserve will deteriorate, perhaps at the cost of innocent lives.

As for post-secondary education, I would like to point out that the University of Western Ontario is one of the best in the country. However, the school is already functioning with less money than it needs, and further cuts will seriously affect its academic health. A good university takes decades to build, but only a few years to destroy. The damage done by the Government to the University of Western Ontario will affect this generation and probably the next few ones to follow.

Thus far I have been building a case to prove that the Budget of the Finance Minister is wrong-headed and hurtful to the City of London and the people who live there. However, I have been saving the toughest for last. This cut above everything else makes the Budget totally unacceptable to Londoners, that is, the closing of CFB London. It is nearly impossible to zero in on any one reason the base should be kept open, but CFB London has been at the heart and soul of the City of London for more than a century. The links between the Royal Canadian Regiment and the City of London are strong and deep. Many of my constituents have an emotional attachment both to the regiment and to the Wolsley Barracks buildings. It will take more than a leaked Budget to convince us that they no longer have a place in our city.

The loss of the armed forces base will change London economically, too. There are various estimates about what the base contributes to the economy, but it seems that it is at least $65 million a year. That is a big blow to the economy of any town, no matter what size it is. The closure of the base represents a substantial loss of jobs to the city.

CFB London employs about 1,100 people, just over 700 military personnel and about 400 civilians. Each of these people is presented with a difficult choice. They can either move to Petawawa where the Royal Canadian Regiment is slated to go, or they can become unemployed. Either way, it is a traumatic experience and a tragic one when one knows what it can take to be avoided. Yet, it is clear from the documentation supplied by the Minister of National Defence (Mr. McKnight) that the annual savings to the Canadian Government in wages, operations and maintenance will be virtually non-existent.

In closing I say that Canadians are prepared to contribute toward deficit reduction and the debt, but it must be done fairly and equitably. We can build a strong country, a compassionate country, if in fact we start believing in people, investing in people and investing in our institutions so that we can become more competitive in the world tomorrow.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[English]

THE ENVIRONMENT

PROPOSED CRIMINAL SANCTIONS—VIOLATION OF REGULATIONS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should provide criminal sanctions against corporate officers who knowingly allow their companies to violate Government environmental regulations or otherwise endanger the health and safety of Canadians.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure most Members of the House, and certainly most Canadians, would like to see M-100 become an item for consideration by the Government of Canada, and that the appropriate new sections of the Criminal Code be drafted and soon passed by the House.

First, I wish to quote from the April 27, 1987 Department of Justice Criminal Law Review. The Law Reform Commission of Canada published Working Paper No. 44 entitled "Crimes against the Environment" in November, 1985. In that working paper the Commission recommended that Canada's Criminal Code should be amended to create a new offence which would make it a crime to cause or create a risk of death or serious bodily harm by acts and omissions which seriously violate environmental protection laws. It also recommended that there should be a crime of causing or risking an environmental catastrophe even in cases where there are no accompanying harmful human health effects.

There have been many recent issues. There have been, for example, poisoned fuel, the Valdez matter, other oil spills, problems with toxic and hazardous wastes, or atmospheric problems. There are many problems that require this type of addition to the Criminal Code.

As recently as May 11, 1989, The Gazette ran an article entitled: "Most Canadians favour tough action on spills". In that article is states:

> Stiff fines, criminal charges against senior oil company executives, tougher regulations and a cleanup fund created by a special tax on shipped oil are among measures finding strong public support—
>
> Nine of 10 respondents saw the Valdez accident as a sign that the government should take a closer look at oil transportation and consider introducing tougher regulations. Fewer than one in 10 were happy with current regulations—
>
> Almost nine of 10 Canadians—94 per cent of Quebecers—favour stiff fines for companies that spill oil while shipping. 84 per cent support criminal charges against senior oil company executives if their company is found to be wilfully negligent in observing safety regulations.

Regarding existing Criminal Code sections the Justice Law Review states:

> A number of Provinces suggested that a new crime would be unnecessary if existing sections on criminal negligence, nuisance and mischief were more imaginatively used or amended to enable more effective enforcement.
> The only gaps noted were: (a) endangerment of human health and safety, (b) transporter pollution, and (c) protection of the environment per se.

Recently, our task force in British Columbia heard from Dr. Murray Rankin of the University of Victoria Law School. He had undertaken an evaluation of waste management permits in British Columbia and found that a staggering three-quarters of waste management permits in areas of the province had been in significant non-compliance for more than one year.

We now know that not only industry is involved in not complying with existing pollution control regulations, but the Government often does not do anything about it.

There has been a series of recent amendments around the world dealing with the serious criminal nature of this matter. In Austria, the Penal Code was amended in 1975 adding sections to punish for wilful or negligent pollution. Portugal's penal code creates a crime for public community dangers and general dangers to human life and health or valuable property. Japan's penal code creates a crime for polluting or adding poisonous material to drinking water or water supply systems. In the United States, states such as New Jersey, New York, and Pennsylvania, following the Model Penal Code have as crimes reckless endangering and crimes causing or risking catastrophes.

We very much need similar types of action here in Canada.

I now wish to quote from a Study Paper in the Administrative Law Series of the Law Reform Commission of Canada. At page 29 it states:

> Increasingly, legislation is being amended to provide courts with more innovative sentencing options than simply fines or imprisonment, including powers to suspend licenses in default of payment of any fine owed, to order remedial and preventive action and compensation for pollution victims, to require offenders to publicize their offences and pay for the investigative expenses of agencies.

It is time that we started moving in that direction. Rather than having the environment take all the damage and then forcing taxpayers to pay, it is time that we took the type of innovative Criminal Code sanctions that I am suggesting in relation to those who knowingly and wantonly destroy the environment and put public health at risk.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fulton: In the same Study Paper under the heading: "Characterization of the Pollution Offence" it states:

> In Canada, prior to the 1970s, courts and legislatures tended to classify offences into essentially two categories: absolute liability and criminal. With absolute liability offences, only proof that the violating act took place is necessary, and a conviction will ensue. The intentions of the accused are not relevant, regardless of whether the offending act was maliciously planned, recklessly negligent, or morally innocent. At the other end of the spectrum, mens rea—a "guilty mind"—must be proven before a conviction for a criminal offence is secured.

At least in relation to the recent criminal conspiracy in relation to poison fuel, I am confident, Mr. Speaker, that you would agree that mens rea could be found.

Under that same heading, it further states:

> Characterization of pollution offences as either criminal or absolute liability often determines whether or not an accused will be convicted. If a court concludes that a pollution offence is criminal, so that mens rea must be proven, it can be very difficult to secure convictions, since many acts of pollution are not deliberate (for example, spills) and are perpetrated by corporations (in which case establishing intent for a corporate body can be an extremely onerous task). On the other hand, court characterization of a pollution offence as one of absolute liability means that polluters can be convicted even though they had done everything possible to avoid the discharge.
> Prior to the Supreme Court of Canada decision in Sault Ste. Marie, in 1978, courts in Canada were reaching inconsistent conclusions—some finding mens rea to be a necessary element, some finding it unnecessary, some providing defences, some not providing defences.

That is why I am suggesting the most broadly based sanctions under the Criminal Code that I quoted earlier.

Under the heading: "Pro-development Tendencies of Government", which is something we must look at very carefully, it states:

> For all the media attention it receives, environmental protection often has a relatively low priority in government. This can partly be explained by the fact that, unlike other regulated activities, pollution is usually the by-product of an activity otherwise encouraged by government and society. The extraction and refining of raw materials, the manufacturing of new chemicals and commercial products are activities which are intended to improve our quality of life, and are generally welcomed as such. In addition to the benefits to society, such activities bring many rewards to government by way of personal and corporate tax revenues and the political benefits which flow to governments taking credit for economic prosperity and full employment.

The Environment

> In Canada, government and industry often have an extremely close relationship, wedded by common objectives, common attitudes and more concrete ties such as government loans, grants and subsidies. Governments are hungry for revenue and employment-generating projects. In this broader context of government-industry partnerships, environmental protection may not receive the priority it should. Departments of environment are usually considered a junior portfolio within Cabinet, in terms of prestige and power—
> Bureaucrats may choose to invoke or not invoke a legal instrument provided him or her for reasons which do not reflect problems with legislation, courts, or his or her political masters.
> Bureaucrats may resist initiating formal sanctions because this may mean relinquishing control over a polluter to "the lawyers", an admission of failure of bureaucratic negotiatory techniques. Bureaucrats, many of whom are engineers or scientists, may feel uncomfortable or unfamiliar when dealing with legal jargon, and may prefer to keep communications at a technical level. Some may fear that formal legal sanctions will put bureaucratic practices as much on trial as those of the polluter, and may attract unwanted media attention—Some bureaucrats may be reluctant to adopt an adversarial role with regulatees they have been dealing with a non-confrontational basis for an extended period.

There you have the second major point, Mr. Speaker, and that is that the bureaucracy often fails to live up to the intention of Parliament, or of the Minister, in terms of legislation passed by this House or other Chambers, as well as the problems that they create by not actually laying charges and proceeding with them to the courts as they should. I now want to quote from the report "Improved Program Delivery, Environmental Qualities Strategic Review". It is a follow-on report of the Task Force on Program Review, February 21, 1986. This is the follow-on from the famed Nielsen task force reports. I quote from page 12 where we find the third problem in relation to not having the kind of criminal sanction I suggest:

> A thorough comparative analysis be made of the environmental practices followed by Canada and the United States to assess whether they are harmonious both in their design and implementation and that any major discrepancies be taken into account in the ongoing negotiations on free trade between the two countries; new Canadian environmental measures be so designed as to minimize the possibility of countervailing actions.

We now know where the Government is heading. It is hoping to minimize and harmonize, by taking us to the lowest common denominator of environmental control rather than the best.

• (1710)

Let me continue to quote from the report because even those who were studying it knew what the problems would be:

> The regulatory approach is the dominant approach in the United States, and, to a lesser degree in Canada.
> There are a number of serious difficulties with the regulatory approach. The first is that the sanctions are often imposed primarily through court actions, and action against each breach of regulations must be the subject of a new court action. Given the difficulty and length of time to implement each action through the court system, the sanctions or fines levied can result in very minimal penalties. Even if legal costs are included, the total cost to the polluter can represent a modest pollution fee. The longer each charge can be prolonged in the court system, the less frequently the fee must be paid, so that the regulatory approach frequently winds up as a battle between lawyers to delay and minimize the payment of pollution charges. In addition, the cost of such actions to the regulator is high.

Once again it is the taxpayer who carries the can and the environment which carries the damage. Certainly that is not an approach to sustainable development for which the Government can continue to pat itself on the back.

A little history is in order. I quote from page 110 of the report:

> When the Fathers of Confederation drafted the Constitution Act of 1867, they did not allocate legislative authority on environmental matters to either the federal Parliament or to the Legislatures of the provinces. Without clear responsibility for, or guidance in, the matter of environmental concerns, both levels of Government have, over the years, been able to claim authority for managing environmental problems by taking the position that various aspects of the subject matter fall within their respective areas of competence.
> It is generally accepted that the federal argument in favour of its role in environmental protection relies primarily on the "Peace, Order and Good Government" clause of S.91 of the 1867 Constitution Act. Other sources of power, which have been cited to claim the validity of federal environmental legislation, include the regulation of trade 91(2), taxation 91(3), navigation and shipping 91(10), fisheries 91(12) the criminal law 91(27) and the regulation of works or undertakings that are interprovincial or international in nature 92(10)(a) or ones that are declared to be for the general advantage of Canada 92(10)(c). These powers have generally been used in relation to the national interest, international imperatives, health, well being and prosperity of the people of Canada.

I suggest that all of those powers stand behind the argument that I am making here today for amendments to the Criminal Code.

I continue:

> Environmental legislation in Canada dates as far back as 1873 with the Navigable Water Protection Act.
> The Minister of the Environment has a general responsibility for the resources held in common, such as air (Clean Air Act) and water (Canada Water Act) and for several multi-sectoral issues affecting the environment (Ocean Dumping Control Act, Environmental Contaminants Act).
>
> First, the overlaps and resulting confusion. It should be pointed out that, regarding environmental protection of water alone, eleven major items of legislation can be listed:
>
> the Fisheries Act, the Canada Water Act, the Navigable Waters Act, the International River Improvements Act, the International Boundary Waters Treaty Act, the Northern Inland Waters Act, the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act, the Ocean Dumping Control Act, the Canada Shipping Act, the Canada Oil and Gas Act, and the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act.

Of course we can add to that the Canadian Environmental Protection Act. I quote:

> This abundance of legislation has produced confusion as to the occasions on which it is appropriate to use each statute.
>
> The second set of difficulties which should be addressed is with compliance. This can either be encouraged through a variety of means such as formal incentives (licensing, permits, tax expenditures, subsidies, grants, publicity on corporate behaviour) or enforced through disincentives (persuasion, action on licences, Ministerial Orders, civil suits or criminal prosecutions). Federal regulators, in applying some legislation such as the Fisheries Act, generally tend to revert to an ex post facto approach based on disincentives rather than taking the less adversarial, yet more difficult, approach of incentives.
> Others, who rely more on voluntary compliance, such as Environment, do not appear to have made full use of the plethora of incentive means available. Part of the reason was attributed to inadequate administrative provisions in the acts they administer.

That is a problem we have created:

> Clearly, civil and criminal court actions ought to be considered as remedies of last resort, when every other effort has failed to produce appropriate environmental behaviour.

We have reached that stage. There are many corporations that simply do not live up to the regulations passed by Parliament, by provincial legislators or by municipalities. Therefore we must have a broadly-based criminal sanction that can put those kinds of polluters and wilfully negligent individuals behind bars, in some cases for life where they so fully deserve to be. I return to the report:

> The allocation of environmental statutes among different responsibility sectors, however, unfortunately gives rise to an ill-structured and uncoordinated federal approach to compliance. For instance, lesser environmental offenders under one federal statute sometimes sustain stiffer penalties than those imposed on other offenders under another statute, for a more serious environmental offence of a similar nature.

Worse yet, some environmental offenders under one given statute, such as Section 33 of the Fisheries Act, often receive a disproportionately low penalty in one region, as compared to that imposed for a very similar offence in another region.

As was said before, the Study Team had access to little information on the extent to which federal regulations, other than S. 33 of the Fisheries Act, are monitored and acted upon. It nevertheless looked at one particular sector of interest: the pulp and paper industry. In the early 1970s, this sector was identified as a major source of pollution and became the first industrial sector subjected to comprehensive effluent standards promulgated, in 1971, under S.33 of the Fisheries Act.

Little action was taken until 1979, when the federal and provincial governments joined forces through the General Development Agreement 1974–1984. The sub-agreements on the Pulp and Paper Modernization Program, implemented through DREE, involved some $544 million of federal/provincial funding ($276 million federal) over a five-year period and were designed to assist in the modernizing of the pulp and paper industry for international competitiveness in keeping with the pre-determined pollution abatement objectives.

Recent media reports and public documents published by DOE suggest that, as a whole, compliance by this industrial sector with the negotiated standards is uneven and lower than had been anticipated in relation to the magnitude of the capital infusion.

Compliance for two of the stated measurement parameters appears to be only 60 per cent and 70 per cent, and for a third (toxicity) it is only approximately 40 per cent.

That simply is not good enough. That is abuse of public trust and of public money.

I conclude with this quote:

The use of criminal sanctions is the fourth area of difficulty which could be addressed. Most federal environmental statutes contain sections of a criminal nature. The Clean Air Act, for instance, prescribes a fine of not more than $200,000 for each offence relating to any emission into the ambient air in contravention of a standard set pursuant to that Act.

The Environmental Contaminants Act sets out a fine of not more than $100,000 or a term of imprisonment of not more than one year for any wilful release of a substance specified in the schedule to the Act into the environment, in a quantity or concentration that exceeds the prescribed maximum. The Canada Water Act indicates that a fine of not more than $5,000 per day may be imposed for either the deposit of waste of any type in waters comprising a water quality management area, or for the manufacture or importation into Canada of a cleaning agent that contains a prescribed nutrient in a concentration greater than the prescribed maximum. As pointed out earlier in this report, these statutes have given rise to very few prosecutions: to under the Clean Air Act and none under each of the Water and Environmental Contaminants Acts.

Those Acts are not working to protect our environment:

In addition to those offences established by the various environmental laws, there exist in the Criminal Code certain offences which could in principle be used to "denounce, condemn and penalize" actions which result in harm to the environment. The most important ones among these are criminal negligence, common nuisance, mischief, causing disturbance, offensive volatile substance, explosive substances and offences against animals. However, as reported by the Law Reform Commission of Canada, "criminal Code offences are seldom used as the basis of prosecutions for conduct seriously harmful or endangering to the environment. Even more seldom are such prosecutions successful".

The Commission attributes this weakness to the narrow and limited arrangement and formulation of the Code in protecting the environment.

At present, the Code contains various offences against persons and other offences against property. The Law Reform Commission's proposal is to add to these a new category of offences against the environment. The principal element of this category of offences would be a single, conceptually unified "crime against the environment". Its role and justification would be to repudiate and deter conduct which seriously compromised the fundamental societal value and right to a safe environment.

The new offence could be formulated broadly enough so that it would be made applicable to a wide range of activities and especially so as not to distinguish between harm to the air, water, land or any combination of these. It could apply to "conduct which seriously damages or endangers the environment by means of direct physical acts or in the course of the manufacture, transportation, use, storage or disposal of any hazardous or potentially hazardous goods, wastes or other contaminants."

The Study Team has not delved into the legal ramifications of the LRC proposal but finds it conceptually compatible with the "cradle to grave" approach espoused by the Minister of the Environment—

I hope all Members will support it, Mr. Speaker.

• (1720)

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) for his motion and for the creative, imaginative and vibrant approach that he always brings to matters that are environmental.

His proposal to include crimes against the environment in the Criminal Code definitely appears attractive. Yet the better way is to work on improving and enforcing civil law and, in particular, to improve enforcing and broadening the Canadian Environmental Protection Act. For example, it would be a good step to make clear in the Environmental Protection Act the fact that corporate executives are personally accountable for the pollution of their corporations. This personal accountability has to be established.

The Hon. Member made reference in the last few minutes of his extremely fast overview to the Law Reform Commission report. It is necessary to do that because in the same breath the Law Reform Commission pointed out that the Criminal Code per se cannot protect the environment for its own sake, but only if there is a threat to property, to a person or to human life in general.

On the other hand, the Canadian Environmental Protection Act could protect the environment for its own sake. I am sure that that is what the Hon. member for Skeena has in mind as a major thrust of his motion. Therefore criminal action alone has a very narrow application.

In addition to that we have to keep an eye on the enforcement, application and compliance of existing laws, an aspect which is of immense importance. Yet here, Mr. Speaker, I must draw to your attention that unfortunately today in Canada we have weak enforcement at the federal level. We have weak compliance. Why? Because of the lack of funds resulting from budgetary cuts in November, 1984, and in subsequent years by the present Government. It is because of the fact that Environment Canada was for years denied in its budgets the ability at least to keep up with inflation. In essence it is because the Government does not practice what it preaches when it comes to the crunch.

The second point that must be made in this debate is that when in committee a year ago we debated the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, the Government refused to move on some very important elements which would have helped enormously to achieve the major goal and thrust of the motion by the Hon. Member for Skeena today. For instance, because of the ideology that is embedded in the Meech Lake Accord the then Minister of the Environment had to come to committee to ask for a change in his own Bill to abandon the power to issue enforceable national standards. Imagine that, Mr. Speaker. That occurred in committee on the initiative of the Minister himself who came and asked to dilute and water down his own Bill. The debate was hot and heavy on that occasion. When the matter came to report stage in this House the Speaker even allowed an amendment which had been defeated in committee, which would rule it out in principle because of the significance of this issue, namely, the setting of national standards.

When it came to the question of PCBs all the provinces had been exempted from federal PCB storage programs except for Prince Edward Island, as reported in The Globe and Mail just a few days ago. This scenario was predicted by the proponents, those of us who insisted on national standards. However, the Government claimed it would never happen. We knew at that time that no province can impose, for instance, a fine of $1 million as envisaged under the Environmental Protection Act. At this stage the federal Minister can only enforce his law in one province and the territories when it comes to PCB storage standards.

It is important also to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that because of the opposition of the Government a citizen cannot seek an injunction under the Environmental Protection Act, something which we urged the Government to do when we debated the Bill. Under the Act as it is written now the Minister of the Environment is the only person in Canada who can seek an injunction to stop pollution.

Because of the negativism of the Government when we were in committee we could not make the release of any toxic substance a violation by inserting a clause in that Bill called a general prohibition clause. This would have allowed the Minister to stop any pollution and not just the release of the nine substances listed in the schedules of the Act.

The Government said no to removing the requirement that makes mandatory in the drafting of regulations, consultation with the provinces. The new PCB standards are the evidence of the inability of the present federal Government to provide a strong federal presence in the environment.

Finally, the Government again said no last year to the idea that would have made the Minister of the Environment responsible for the monitoring and enforcement of environmental performance by other federal Departments and by federal agencies. As the Act was finally written by sheer majority force—and brutish force I would say—the Minister of the Environment must get the concurrence today under the Act. He must get the blessing, the permission of the Minister responsible for the pollution created by another federal Department or agency before regulations can be made or before the Canadian Environmental Act can be enforced.

You can see here, Mr. Speaker, what is emerging is the necessity of an integrated broad approach, mostly on the front of civil legislation, mostly in terms of giving muscle to the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, if we are to mean business in ensuring that we will have environmentally sustainable development.

I see that my time is up, Mr. Speaker. I thank Your Honour for his patience.

[Translation]

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak to this motion. I support the suggestion by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) that anyone who contaminates the environment should be penalized. This suggestion is compatible with the "polluter-pay" principle. It is an excellent deterrent. In this way, we would give economic value to our natural resources which support life itself: the air we breathe, the water we drink and the ground that produces our food.

The Hon. Member's suggestion, although a good one, is nevertheless unoriginal. In June 1988, the Government acquired the tools it needed to prosecute polluters by proclaiming the Environmental Protection Act. This law is intended to protect the health and environment of Canadians through the management of toxic substances that pollute the environment.

[English]

The Canadian Environmental Protection Act addresses pollution problems on land, in animal and plant life, in lakes, rivers and oceans, and in the air. It provides the legislative basis for controlling international environmental degradation through restrictions on the import and export of toxic and hazardous substances and through the regulation of Canadian sources of transboundary air pollution.

The Act deals with organic and inorganic substances, the products of biotechnology, emissions, effluents and wastes. The Act also establishes a comprehensive scheme for management of toxic substances. However, it is in the area of enforcement where we find coincidence with the motion presented by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton)

Enforcement is a vital aspect of the legislation. A program of inspections complemented by spot checks is being put in place to verify compliance with the new Act and its regulations. The frequency of inspections will be determined by the risk that a substance or activity presents to the environment or to human health, and the compliance record of the given individual, company or government Department or agency.

Violators can be subject to warnings, orders, tickets, prosecution, and recovery of costs. The particular response will depend on the nature of the violation, the effectiveness of achieving compliance with the Act within the shortest possible time frame, and the likelihood of no further occurrence of the violation. The Act includes significant penalties, ranging from fines of $200,000 a day and six months in jail, to fines of $1 million a day and three to five years in jail. For offences involving criminal negligence life imprisonment is possible.

Jail sentences are an importance enforcement tool under CEPA. There are, however, a number of other effective sanctions specified in the law. We have heard some talk from the opposition Members about sanctions. I think it is important for them to hear what some of them are: seizure and detention, forfeiture, prosecution under the Criminal Code for serious offences resulting in death or bodily harm to another person, court orders, publication by the Minister of the facts relating to an offence, additional fines to negate the financial benefits of an offence, compensation for loss of or damage to property, ticketing, court injunctions on the application of the Minister, civil suits and injunctions on the application of those damaged by the polluter.

I believe that an example is in order with respect to these options and the actions one can foresee by following them. As spelled out, for example, in the court orders in Section 130 of the Act, not only might an individual or a corporation be found guilty of violating a regulatory requirement, they might also be obliged by the courts to keep the peace and be of good behaviour, report to and be under the supervision of a probation officer, remedy or prevent any harm to the environment, publish the facts relating to a conviction, notify an aggrieved party of the facts of a prosecution, post a bond to ensure compliance with court order, submit information with respect to subsequent activities, pay the cost of any remedial preventive actions, perform community service, and pay for research into the ecological use and disposal of the substance in respect of which an offence was committed. The thesis behind the enforcement provisions of CEPA is quite clearly to encourage compliance through strong disincentives.

Under Section 122 of the legislation, directors and officers can be held personally liable for offences committed by their corporations. The statement was made on the other side of the House that the whole law was too lax and that there were no actions to be taken against gross polluters. Clearly there is an action in a court order against corporations. While this Government is not planning to undertake witch-hunts or to make scapegoats of individual employees, we will take a tough stand on polluters. The CEPA specifies in Section 115 that those persons or corporations who knowingly disregard regulations will be prosecuted under the Criminal Code. It is these sections in CEPA that makes the Member's motion redundant.

I would like to clarify that our objective is to protect the environment. We plan to pursue that objective. The prosecution of corporate officers or other individuals within a company is but one of the approaches available to us under the Canadian Environmental Protection Act.

An Hon. Member: Then use them.

Mr. Clifford: Clearly, we can see these actions unfolding daily. We can see actions by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) who is actively working with the provincial Ministers of the environment to make sure that we have a set of laws and regulations that will help Canadians live their fondest dreams, that is, to have an untouched, unblemished environment to pass on to future generations.

An Hon. Member: It is too late.

Mr. Clifford: Actions are definitely taking place. We are not just doing this within our country, within our provinces, but clearly we are reaching out and being a leader with our Environmental Protection Act. We are showing the rest of the world that Canada means business, that the environment is on the front page of our agenda. We are very serious about it. Our Government has taken steps on the international scene to show that Canada wants clean air, wants an international law of the atmosphere, wants to be a leader, and has challenged all the countries in the world to meet this expectation by 1992.

In fact to have this law in place will mean a greater environment, a greater possibility for environmental enhancement for the future and the goal we all—a good environment, an environment that we can give our children who in turn will pass this legacy on to their children.

It is very important now that this Government maintain its course through things like the Environmental Protection Act to have Acts and regulations which will ensure that Canadians and indeed the citizens of the world work together to form a global environmental policy that will enhance the future that I have talked about.

We think we are on track. We are working at it every day. The Minister has made it very clear that he has both a national and international bases to work from. Those of us in this House would be well advised to work together on these issues so that we can in fact achieve what has been set out for us. Canada will be the leading nation in the world. We have the opportunity. The window is there to show leadership internationally. We are there. We are on the doorstep. We are ready to go through the door. I ask Members opposite to join with us in things like the Environmental Protection Act and laws and regulations to come. They should join with us and we together, through Canada, will make the world a better place for the young people of the future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1740)

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to take part today in the debate on environmental protection. I cannot but praise the interest shown by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) and the initiative he has taken, but I have some doubts as to the effectiveness of the approach he has suggested.

Environmental issues are very important to Canadians. Our Government shares that view and has made environmental protection one of its priorities, both nationally and internationally. We are aware of the real cost of the deterioration of the environment, and we have established a powerful battery of legislation to fight pollution, one example being the Canadian Environmental Protection Act.

To manage the environment, we have taken the offensive on two fronts. First, we mainly try to anticipate and prevent environmental damage before it occurs. We have also built a legal foundation that will help us reach that objective. Second, the Government is aware of the need to deal with pollution problems that have their origins in the past. Together with various companies and with provincial and municipal governments, we have embarked on a number of projects designed to provide solutions to the problems in their present form. I shall, if I may, expand on each of those approaches.

First, anticipation and prevention. On June 30, 1988, after a year's consideration in the House, the Canadian Environmental Protection Act was ratified. Its objective is to prevent all forms of toxic contamination that are a threat to human and environmental health. The legislation enables us to deal with questions as complex as air and water pollution, management of toxic substances, elimination of waste, acid rain and the warming of our climate. The Canadian Environmental Protection Act is based on previous environmental protection legislation including the former Environmental Contaminants Act and the Clean Air Act.

Invoking the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, our Government has established a number of national regulatory standards aimed at eliminating or reducing the threat to our environment. We have also adopted regulations providing for a 50 per cent reduction in ozone-depleting substances, and we also plan to introduce additional control measures that will virtually eliminate such substances.

We are demanding that lead additives be virtually eliminated from the manufacture of gasoline as of December 1, 1990. We have issued national standards for the storage of PCBs. We are anxious to take steps in connection with Canada's contribution to the acid rain problem and have established standards for the reduction of sulphur dioxide emissions. Enforcement of these standards currently comes under provincial jurisdiction but could be covered by regulations adopted under the Canadian Environmental Protection Act.

The Canadian Environmental Protection Act is the prime instrument of environmental protection in Canada and the cornerstone of the Government's efforts to protect the environment. These efforts are assisted by other effective legislation including the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act, which sets standards for the packaging and labelling of toxic substances and waste for transportation in Canada. The Motor Vehicle Safety Act, another federal Act, also enables the Government to restrict exhaust gas emissions of cars, trucks and buses, to avoid the problems caused by smog and ground level ozone. As we announced on April 21, our Government will reinforce its current international standards on exhaust gas emissions.

The Pest Control Products Act is also part of the environmental arsenal. Its purpose is to screen pesticides and herbicides before their use in Canada. To ensure that environmental concerns are given due consideration, we have started a review of the Pest Control Products Act.

As further proof of our comitment to environmental protection, we intend to add legislation on environmental and water quality assessment to the instruments I mentioned earlier.

In addition to these legal measures, our Government has initiated round table discussions, attracting representatives from industry, public interest groups and government, to establish connection between environmental concerns and decisions made for purposes of economic development.

As for environmental clean-ups, Mr. Speaker, our Government is also trying to eliminate the pollution caused by past carelessness or failure to act. On April 19, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) inaugurated a new era in the treatment of waste substances and the pollution problems they cause. With the provinces, we will set aside $250 million for cleaning up abandoned dumps. Everything will be done to find those responsible and make them foot the bill for the cleanup. This is important work that will be done at many dumps in the provinces and the territories.

In every case, our instructions will be to see to it that the polluter pays the cost of corrective measures. However, if the guilty party cannot be found, the Government is prepared to take corrective action as required and to do so promptly.

Mr. Speaker, we also want to upgrade water quality in the Great Lakes. More than $125 million has been spent on this activity. We are now working on the Niagara River and Hamilton harbour. We have also earmarked $110 million for cleaning up waters downstream in the St. Lawrence river. This initiative will be matched by others on the part of the industry and by additional funding.

In 1988 we started to clean up the tar ponds in Sydney, Nova Scotia. Sysco, the polluter in this case, is taking an active part in the clean-up. Still in Nova Scotia, we are examining the pollution problem in Halifax harbour.

Mr. Speaker, the motion before the House today is a very interesting one but, as you can see, what it proposes is already there in the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, the cornerstone of federal environmental legislation. The best way to use our Government's time and resources would be to take effective steps against polluters, using the instruments provided by the legislation, instead of discussing proposals for measures that are already in our federal legislation.

[English]

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the motion before us reads:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should provide criminal sanctions against corporate officers who knowingly allow their companies to violate government environmental regulations or otherwise endanger the health and safety of Canadians.

I am pleased to support this motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). I think it focuses on the fact that crimes against our environment are really crimes against the people of Canada. The proposal in this motion which can be implemented in legislation would send a very clear signal to the industry right throughout Canada, a signal for the Government of Canada to take the issue of environmental pollution very seriously indeed.

We have seen environment come from a word that very few people understood a few years ago until the Silent Spring by Rachael Carson came out which first made us the aware that problems were on the horizon. We had later works by the Club of Rome and the Brundtland commission report. These documents have outlined the very serious global nature of the problem we face as a country. Through the implementation of this kind of legislation, Canada would have a marvellous opportunity to lead the way by demonstrating to other nations throughout the world that it is time to take decisive action against those entities that continue to defile our environment to the ultimate expense of mankind. It would be a perfect opportunity for Canada to become a leader in environmental legislation.

The motion before us provides a legislative mechanism to force major polluters to recognize the very serious nature of the problem. I know my time is very limited, but I want to point out that 50 per cent of marine pollution in Canada comes from one industrial source, the pulp mills, and much of that pollution is extremely toxic. Chlorinated hydrocarbons, dioxins, organophosphates and very poisonous, dangerous compounds, once in the food chain, accumulate in organisms higher up the food chain, ultimately becoming lethal. It is through that bio-concentration that the problems of pollution begin to manifest themselves. We have relied for far too long on the fallacious argument that dilution is the solution, because it no longer holds true.

There are many miles of coastline in Canada, both on the west and the east coasts. It is the intertidal zones that generate the majority of the carbon fixation that takes place on this planet, the photosynthesis, the production of oxygen as it comes out of the oceans and into the air. The first 100 feet of ocean water is the area where most of the pollution impacts upon. In fact, we are endangering intertidal life with continual pollution of pulp mills and many other industrial sources. This is something we continue to ignore, simply because we cannot see it happening and if we cannot see it, it cannot be there. That is no longer true.

If we destroy our marine life, and we are in the process of doing so, we will knock out a very crucial link in the web of life. It is time that we came down hard on those industries that continue to ignore this very serious reality that faces us. I am talking not only about industries but about cities and municipalities that continue to dump raw sewage into inland waters, lakes and oceans. Vancouver, for example, dumps 200 million gallons of raw sewage a day. That has an incredible impact on the west coast environment. Other cities throughout Canada also dump untreated raw sewage into inland waters and oceans. That has to stop. Towns and municipalities across Canada are guilty, as well as major corporations, of taking part in this ongoing process of pollution and concentrations of toxins in the environment.

These companies and municipalities will not change their ways unless we get serious and put some teeth into environmental legislation. One way of putting teeth into the legislation is by adopting this motion that my colleague has put before the House today. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me the opportunity to address this motion.

Mr. Brian O'Kurley (Elk Island): Mr. Speaker, as always, it is an honour and a privilege to speak to the House of Commons on such an important issue.

The Hon. Member's motion reflects the current intolerance of the Canadian people for corporate behaviour which causes damage to the environment or endangers human life or health. Society's revulsion for such conduct is expressed in various federal statutes and particularly in the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, otherwise known as CEPA. Jail terms and fines are among the array of sanctions provided for in CEPA, sanctions commonly understood as being criminal, as the Hon. Member would agree. A contravention of any provision of the Act will expose the offender to the possibility of, at the very least, a fine of $200,000 plus six months in prison.

One offence is actually prosecuted under the Criminal Code and the penalty is up to life in prison and an unlimited fine. This sanction is possible on conviction for a contravention of CEPA where the offender has shown wanton or reckless disregard for the lives or safety of other persons and, thereby, has caused death or bodily harm to another person.

For some offences, there is a $1 million fine plus five years in prison. Section 115 of CEPA closely parallels the recommendation in the Law Reform Commission study paper on crimes against the environment wherein two new Criminal Code offences were proposed. Section 115(1) of CEPA creates offences of intentionally or recklessly causing a disaster that results in the loss of use of the environment and showing wanton or reckless disregard for the lives or safety of others, thereby causing a risk of death or harm to another person. These offences are indictable and give rise to liability to an unlimited fine plus five years in prison. For the more serious offence in contravention of CEPA where the offender has shown wanton or reckless disregard for the lives or safety of other persons and thereby causes death or bodily harm to another person, the Act provides for prosecution and conviction under the Criminal Code where the liability is life in prison plus an unlimited fine.

Offences that continue for more than one day give rise to liability to prosecution for a separate offence for each day with the accompanying multiple exposure to fines and imprisonment for each conviction. Special provision is made for officers, directors and agents of a corporation who in any way participated in or were made aware of but did nothing to prevent the commission of an offence by the corporation. Such corporate officials are parties to and guilty of the offence and are liable to the punishment for the offence, whether or not the corporation is prosecuted or convicted.

The Act also simplifies the proof of such offences by corporations by providing that it is sufficient to establish that the offence was committed by an employee or agent of the accused corporation, whether or not the employee or agent is identified or prosecuted for the offence.

CEPA takes into account the position of the Law Reform Commission on the criminalization of certain environmental offences and, in fact in some circumstances, provides for prosecution and conviction under the Criminal Code.

The federal Government has not made a final decision in respect to environmental crimes, although options under consideration include amendments to the Criminal Code, amendments to federal regulatory legislation such as the Fisheries Act, Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act, Oil and Gas Conservation Act, Pest Control Products Act, and omnibus legislation amending all federal laws that are directed to the protection of human health and the environment. Because this matter is under very active review and consideration by the federal Government, I find that the Hon. Member's motion is redundant and cannot therefore recommend its adoption by this House.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 38 deemed to have been moved.

FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—INTERPRETATION OF UNFAIR SUBSIDIES—PARTICIPATION OF PROVINCES IN NEGOTIATIONS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, on April 18, in reaction to statements by the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) regarding provincial participation in subsidy negotiations with the U.S. Government, I asked the Minister two things.

What is the Canadian definition of subsidy, given that the U.S. definition is well known and being directed in countervail cases against provincial programs? Why then not include the provinces in these subsidy negotiations.

There are three reasons for asking these questions.

First, contrary to the Minister's statement that these negotiations are purely a federal matter, provinces do have a well established constitutional role when it comes to international treaties. Second, federal-provincial consultation during the negotiations that led to the FTA was clearly inadequate. Third, the federal Government's performance to date ought to make us very suspicious of its capacity and determination to defend Canadian interests on its own.

On April 18, the Minister for Trade told this House that he did not intend to let the provinces participate in subsidy negotiations. He said:

> We believe quite clearly that international trade is under federal jurisdiction.

If this is the Minister's position, he is forgetting some rather fundamental Canadian constitutional law.

[Translation]

I remind the Minister of the following fact: the implementation of an international agreement signed by the federal Government requires the willing participation of the provinces. The situation in the United States is obviously quite different. For our southern neighbours, President Bush must have any international agreement ratified by the American Senate. As a result, this treaty automatically amends the relevant American laws, by virtue of article 6 of their Constitution.

In other words, the U.S. federal government has the power to bind the individual states. In Canada, the situation is quite different. An agreement that requires changing the laws of the land can only be implemented by promulgating laws to make those changes. This is not an automatic process.

Does the federal Parliament have the authority to promulgate such laws if they infringe on provincial powers? Certainly not. That has been clear since the 1937 Privy Council Labour Conventions decision. In it, the Privy Council ruled that if a law needed to implement a treaty falls under one of the subjects listed in Section 92 of our Constitution, only a province can pass such a law. This has important consequences for the subsidy negotiations, for if it were decided that some provincial subsidies were unfair, the federal Government could not legislate to abolish them. Neither could the federal Government force the provinces to do so. The provinces would have to agree, but they would certainly have the option not to comply with the demands of the federal Government.

[English]

The provinces therefore had a definite constitutional claim to be included in the negotiations. Furthermore, if the federal Government is serious about protecting Canadian interests, the provinces could prove to be useful watch dogs. It is obvious this help would be needed, given the Government's previous track record.

Consultation with the provinces during two years of FTA negotiation was far from adequate. A blatant example of this is that 24 hours to 48 hours prior to the signing of the Accord, provincial trade reps had been told that energy provisions would not be included. They were told that this would be far too complicated. Imagine their surprise when they finally held the Accord in their hands and discovered a chapter on energy had been included.

The Minister for Trade has recently said that subsidy negotiations would proceed in the same manner as with the FTA. It should be clear from the example I have given that this is not good enough.

• (1805)

Moreover, if we look more closely at the Accord's energy subsidy provisions, we find yet another reason to let the provinces participate in the negotiations. Allowing for subsidies in energy was clearly to the advantage of the United States. In most areas of Canada–United States energy trade, energy flows from north to south. This means that we are allowed to subsidize the exploitation of our energy resources with Canadian taxpayers' money.

However, Article 904(b) of the Free Trade Agreement forbids us to charge Americans more for that energy than we charge ourselves. In other words, Canadians pay for their energy twice. Tax money pays for the exploitation of the resources, then Canadians pay again to buy that energy. Americans only pay once.

If the Government is serious about defending Canadian social and regional development programs in future subsidy negotiations with the United States, the provinces could have a useful role. They could assist Canadian negotiators by acting as a backstop. The negotiators would simply be prevented from unwittingly sacrificing Canadian interests by objections from the provinces. This would help to reassure Canadians that our interests are indeed being defended.

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a couple of points with respect to the concerns of the Member on the Free Trade Agreement. As Hon. Members are aware, Canada and the United States were unable to reach an agreement on changes to our respective subsidy and trade remedy practices during negotiations leading to the conclusion of the Free Trade Agreement. Article 1907 of the Free Trade Agreement requires the two Parties to establish a working group to develop more effective rules and disciplines concerning the use of government subsidies and a substitute system of rules for dealing with unfair pricing and government subsidies.

As the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) has pointed out, while these are indeed important issues for discussion we do not intend to be rushed. No negotiations have begun. No demands have been made by either side.

Within the operations branch of the Department of External Affairs a unit has been established to support the Canadian side of the working group. The Minister has indicated that the Canadian chairperson for the working group will be named shortly.

The issue of appropriate international disciplines for subsidy and countervailing measures is a complex one. The subsidies countervail code agreed to during the Tokyo Round of multilateral trade negotiations provided only limited progress toward the goal of international discipline. The issue is under intense scrutiny again in Geneva as part of the current Uruguay NTN Round. Much of the preparatory work being done in this regard will serve us well in the bilateral context, as well as our experience with these negotiations as they progress.

With respect to definition, authorities both in Canada and in the United States responsible for the administration of our respective countervailing duty laws have made determinations of what constitutes a subsidy in specific cases. Under the GATT we have the right to challenge the consistency of American laws with their international commitments.

Finally, determinations of subsidy can now be reviewed under the FTA by a binational panel, which we are confident will ensure greater fairness in the application of existing trade remedy laws.

I would suggest that it is premature to attempt to anticipate the position that either we or the United States will be taking in eventual negotiations, or whether a mutually agreed definition of actionable and non-actionable subsidies can emerge from this process.

As the Minister for International Trade has pointed out, from the FTA negotiations there appears to be a wide gap between our views and that of the Americans on some of these matters. That does not lead one to expect that a solution will be found very quickly.

Nonetheless, over the five to seven year period contemplated by the FTA, the Government is prepared to work diligently in seeking a better regime. I invite Hon. Members and Members opposite to join us in a constructive approach to those important questions. We will be consulting actively and widely throughout this process with the private sector and the provinces.

With regard to the question of whether there should be direct provincial participation in these negotiations, I would like to remind Hon. Members, as stated by the Minister for International Trade in the House on April 18, that international trade is within federal jurisdiction and is a federal responsibility. In carrying out this responsibility the Government—

THE BUDGET—IMPACT OF CLOSURE OF CF BASE AT SUMMERSIDE, P.E.I.

Mr. Joe McGuire (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, Prince Edward Islanders and all Canadians realized before the "Great Budget Leak" that they would be asked to make a sacrifice to help reduce the national debt. They were prepared to pay their share. They knew the time was coming to pay the piper, and they were willing to join with Canadians to make do with less in order to assist the Government of Canada to get out of the financial mess it refused to address over the past four years.

However, they were not and are not prepared to pay five times the price being asked of other Canadians. They were not and are not prepared to sustain a critical blow to the economy of the province and a mortal blow to the economy of western Prince Edward Island.

Prince Edward Islanders were not, have never been, and are not prepared to accept the closure of Canadian Forces Base Summerside. In the words of a past Deputy Minister of Finance: "CFB Summerside means as much to Prince Edward Island as the automotive industry does to Ontario".

Therefore, I conclude that the Government did not know what it was actually doing when it made the decision to close CFB Summerside.

Canadian Forces Base Summerside, which is located in the Village of St. Eleanors, and the RCAF base in Mount Pleasant were established during the Second World War to train flyers for overseas duty.

These bases were established by the Minister of War, Colonel James Ralston, the Member of Parliament from Prince which is now Egmont, and a native of Nova Scotia. These bases played a crucial role in advanced training for our fighter pilots which were desperately needed in Europe during World War II.

After that War, the Mount Pleasant facility was abandoned, leaving St. Eleanors as the only military facility in Prince Edward Island.

In 1980 the Minister of National Defence, the Hon. Gilles Lamontagne, made a government commitment that every province would have at least one regular forces base.

What happened to that commitment? The Government has abandoned that commitment under the guise of fiscal restraint.

What happened to the statement by the Hon. Member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre) that "there is no question that defence is an important economic tool" and "there is no question regional development will be taken into account"? What happened to the statement in the White Paper on defence which stated at page 85:

> Defence programs also make a significant contribution to overcoming regional economic disparities. Over the years, it has been frequently possible to use scarce defence dollars to strengthen local and regional economies while at the same time satisfying defence requirements.

The following statement is also found in the Government's While Paper on defence. At page 84 it states:

> Defence expenditures in Canada contribute economic benefits to all sectors of Canadian society.

In fiscal year 1985–86 defence spending accounted for approximately $12 billion of Gross Domestic Product. It produced $1.6 billion in taxes and generated approximately 294,000 jobs, 178,000 in the private sector. Is

Prince Edward Island not entitled to any of this spending and any of this job creation?

Let me briefly state what the economic impact will be to Summerside and Prince Edward Island: 1,304 direct jobs will be lost; 1,730 private sector jobs will be lost, for a total of 3,034 jobs, which is 5.39 per cent of the total number of jobs in the province.

Furthermore, base employment supports 5,500 people or 34 per cent of the entire Summerside area population. An annual payroll and expenditure of more than $50 million will be lost. Closure of the base will remove a minimum of 33 per cent of the total income from the Summerside area. In other words, $1 in every $3 would disappear.

St. Eleanors will lose 40 per cent of its tax revenues. The province will lose over $20 million in tax revenue out of a total budget of $167 million, which is one-eighth of its total budget. This is the economic impact. The social impact would be equally devastating.

Many questions are yet to be answered. Who will do fisheries surveillance? Where will search and rescue go? Will the medic-vac service be lost to P.E.I? Does P.E.I have a constitutional right to have a regular forces base? What will happen to our environmental response on the East Coast? What will happen to the monitoring of drug smuggling on the East Coast?

Obviously the province cannot sustain the loss of our Canadian Forces Base. I am sure you will agree that the price we are being asked to pay is too great.

It is often not appreciated or understood that Prince Edward Island is a very small province where even minor readjustment in government policy has a major effect on the province.

For example, take the changes to the unemployment insurance system. Our major industries are all seasonal. Farming, fishing and tourism, in which the majority of our people are engaged, are seasonal activities. It is impossible to fish lobster in the months of December, January, February, March, and April because the gulf is full of ice. Therefore, all people who are engaged in fishing are without work for the winter months. They depend on unemployment insurance.

Yet with the changes in the present system, Prince Edward Island will have a 10.3 per cent negative impact. The nation's net negative impact is 5.6 per cent. P.E.I. will have double the nation's negative impact and more than double the Atlantic impact of 4.7 per cent.

The closure of CFB Summerside cannot be allowed to happen.

• (1815)

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, today all Canadians are being asked to make sacrifices because of our large and growing debt. The Department of National Defence has not been excluded and, in fact, has been asked to slow its spending.

I would like to remind the Hon. Member that the first goal of defence spending is the protection of national security and sovereignty. To achieve that goal during this period of restraint some very difficult decisions had to be taken. Seven bases and stations will be closed along with the reduction in size of seven others. No one likes to close military bases. I can assure the Hon. Member that the decision to close CFB Summerside was not taken lightly.

Most of Canada's fleet of Tracker aircraft operate out of CFB Summerside along with a search and rescue squadron. The Trackers are now over 30 years old. Maintenance has become extremely costly and difficult.

By 1992, only three years away, these aircraft will need to be re-engined to keep them flying. As well, the fuel they require will no longer be readily available. In other words, the aircraft will be obsolete.

For these reasons, along with fiscal restraints, the decision was made to retire the Trackers, which meant that there was no further purpose for CFB Summerside but to close it.

Civilian employees who are presently working at CFB Summerside will be assisted to find alternate employment through our Workforce Adjustment Program. I can assure the Hon. Member that it is a generous package that will be provided to the employees.

Yesterday in this Chamber the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mrs. Collins) pointed out that the military base is not the only option for Prince Edward Islanders. She called upon Members to participate in the task force to work with the community to look at alternative development for Prince Edward Island.

I am confident that through the combined efforts of this task force an alternative can be found to the base, one that will provide economic stability to the people of the area of Summerside.

STATUS OF WOMEN – FUNDING OF REAL WOMEN ORGANIZATION

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, on April 17 last, Equality Day, I raised a very important and crucial issue, one that faces all women in Canada. I am speaking, of course, about the issue of employment equity or, perhaps in these unhappy circumstances, employment inequity.

I was concerned at the time about the glib response provided by the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) to the question I raised. At that time she could only say that it was her Party and not mine that had tabled employment equity legislation, making the current provisions passed in Bill C-62 sound as if they had completely solved this terrible problem. Nothing could be further from the truth. Not only is this legislation riddled with flaws, but it also fails utterly to provide the fundamental enforcement mechanism that can effectively protect Canadian women.

I would like to take a few minutes to examine the Minister's assertion that the Government has introduced legislation that is responding to the need for equity in the workplace. Employment equity is the foundation of gender equity. Unfortunately, in spite of some progress made by women, particularly in areas of non-traditional employment, equal pay for work of equal value remains a far-off dream for the majority of working females in Canada.

• (1820)

To make matters worse, groups such as REAL Women continue to fight against equality, charging that women are not equal to men in certain areas. Surely this is the greatest betrayal of women's interests, and the funding of this group is an admission by Government of its lack of belief in equality for women.

Reading REAL's testimony in which they present their incredibly dinosaur-like views, I am truly astounded that the Secretary of State could consider funding such a group whose views fly in the face of everything for which women continue to fight. I can assure you that employment equity is not the sole area in which REAL are out of step with the mainstream of Canadian women. They fall behind on child care, on women's participation in active combat duty, in the workforce, and the list goes on.

Employment equity received thoughtful and meaningful treatment when it was dealt with in a variety of committees including the parliamentary committee on equality rights, a subcommittee of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. In their comprehensive and far-reaching report, this committee fleshed out very effectively the evolution of the employment equity debate as it has evolved in Canada.

Employment equity has a solid foundation in Canada's constitutional law, which continues to point Canadian legislators in the direction of comprehensive and far-reaching legal regimes that enshrine equality in the workplace. The Charter pays specific attention to a number of designated groups such as disabled persons, native people, visible minorities and, of course, women.

All groups that have studied the issue and who have testified before the various committees studying employment equity are agreed as to how extensive inequality in the workplace actually is.

The picture, however, while not altogether bleak, needs the active attention of the Minister and of her Government.

Section 15 of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms specifically says that special programs for assuring employment equity do not constitute a discriminatory practices. Under Section 15, the Human Rights Commission can be called upon to assist employers who want to adopt special programs for employment equity.

The Human Rights Commission has published some useful guidelines called "Special Programs in Employment: Criteria for Compliance", but few employers have used these guidelines to set up meaningful programs. What is needed is enforcement and contract compliance, elements which are sorely lacking in this Government's employment equity legislation.

The issue is a simple one. How can women be protected from discrimination in the workplace when there are no provisions for such enforcement?

Many of the witnesses testifying before parliamentary committees on equality rights were sharply critical of the shortcomings of Bill C-62 for these reasons. One, Ms. Shari Stein from the Coalition for Employment Equity stated: "One of our main areas of concern is the lack of an enforcement mechanism in the proposals—what essentially was announced is a voluntary equity program. This means that employees should be encouraged—not required by law rather encouraged—to implement employment equity programs. The only mandatory feature of the proposal is a mandatory reporting requirement for certain kinds of employers. Without an enforcement agency the proposal is just not going to work and I would hate to be back here five years from now sitting in this same chair and saying that the proposal just hasn't worked."

Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, we now find ourselves nearly five years down the road, and I am sure that Ms. Stein, if she were given a chance to testify again today, would be equally disappointed as she was when she testified before the parliamentary committee.

I reiterate my call to the Minister of Employment and Immigration to take these concerns seriously and to introduce compliance and enforcement measures that give teeth to the legislation and that give Canadian women meaningful equality in the workplace.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Burlington): Mr. Speaker, in her question the Hon. Member for Halifax (Ms. Clancy) stated that in 1984 the Government promised Canadian women both employment equity legislation and contract compliance in those areas of the private sector under federal Government influence. That is very important. Then the Hon. Member asked: "Why must we wait and when will this waiting end", and the Minister pointed out that of course the waiting has ended.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the federal contractors program applies to those companies doing business with the federal Government who are not covered by the Employment Equity Act. That is to say, those contractors who are not subject to federal regulations. The program was initiated in 1986 and requires that federal Government suppliers of goods and services with more than 100 employers bidding on Government contracts worth $200,000 or more commit themselves to implement employment equity as a condition of their bid. Suppliers who make an employment equity commitment and who are awarded contracts will be subject to on site reviews. Since 1986, more than 175 compliance reviews have been initiated and 30 are now completed.

• (1825)

The Minister of State for Employment and Immigration (Mrs. Vézina) has advised me that altogether somewhere around 1,173 employers, representing 897,359 employees, have signed certificates of commitment to implement employment equity under the Federal Contractors Program. Of these, 582 contractors representing a total labour force of 693,283 employees are subject to review by virtue of having won government contracts. More and more companies are coming into the program every day as new contracts are awarded. Companies may be denied the opportunity to bid on future government contracts until such time as they have implemented an employment equity plan.

All companies falling under the Federal Contractors Program are required to develop comprehensive employment equity plans by which to improve the representation in the work force of women, aboriginal people, visible minorities and persons with disabilities.

The process of employment equity is well under way. Already we see positive developments in attitudes toward hiring and promoting members of the designated groups. The nearly 150 compliance reviews now under way and the 30 already concluded confirm this. However, changing the proportionate numbers in a company's work force cannot be achieved overnight.

The Employment Equity Act is landmark legislation. For the first time we have a benchmark and we have benchmark data against which Canadians can judge a company's progress in the area of equity. With the Federal Contractors Program we can determine where discrimination exists. We can initiate investigations under the Canadian Human Rights Act and these investigations are not based on allegations but on basic precise data. Action was taken in the area of equity, progress is being made and our work force will be more representative of the people of Canada in the future.

CANADIAN ARMED FORCES

CLOSURE OF CFB SUMMERSIDE

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, May 14, close to 10,000 Islanders marched together to protest the Government's decision to close CFB Summerside. Never before in the recent history of our province have so many demonstrated so strongly for something so important to Prince Edward Island. I ask this Government to re-evaluate the decision to close CFB Summerside, and I demand that they think about the many people the closure will affect. The economic impact, as everyone is now aware, would be devastating, but the social impact would be tragic. There would be a loss of community, a loss of confidence to Summerside and its surrounding areas. Although we may not be able to put a dollar figure on these losses, Mr. Speaker, their impacts are very real, and this Government has provided no thought to the people who will suffer as a result of the base closure.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

WOMEN'S ISSUES

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY FOR WOMEN

Mr. Bill Casey (Cumberland—Colchester): Mr. Speaker, I would like to refer the House to an article in The Globe and Mail which headlines "Job Equity Faults Caused by Women, 2 MPs say." I was one of those MPs. I want to say that I entered into the discussion in the interests of identifying barriers to employment equity for women. I referred to actual experiences of mine as an employer, but in no way did I mean to imply what this headline says. My point simply was that in order to achieve employment equity for women, real employment equity, attitudes must change. Employers must offer jobs of advancement to women, and women must be prepared to accept those jobs.

Some women for whom I have the utmost respect have been offended by these reports. To anyone to whom these remarks were offensive, I sincerely apologize. Again, I went to the meeting in the interest of achieving employment equity, and I will continue to work toward employment equity for all minorities, but perhaps the next time I will choose my words a little more carefully.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Casey: In the words of Charlotte Whitton, "For a woman—"

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

WOMEN'S ISSUES

PROMOTIONS IN EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, yesterday a major archeological discovery was made on Parliament Hill. Two dinosaurs disguised as Tory backbenchers were discovered on the Standing Committee for Employment and Immigration. These escapees from the Drumheller Dinosaur Museum made some remarkable comments about the capacity of women to compete in the work world. The Member from Red Deer (Mr. Fee) said, "Women would follow their husbands or have a baby" instead of accepting promotions. The Member from Cumberland-Colchester (Mr. Casey) said, "Women won't take additional responsibility because they think differently and don't want to get ahead".

These outrageous remarks made by two Conservative backbenchers indicate complete ignorance of the barriers facing women in the workforce. Even though 75 per cent of women work, they still make on average only two-thirds of what men make. Yet the brontosaurus from Cumberland–Colchester says this is only because women think differently.

Do these comments reveal the true thinking of this Tory Government? Surely the time has come to make employment equity mandatory and to have strong, effective enforcement measures.

NATIONAL ACTION COMMITTEE ON THE STATUS OF WOMEN

WEEKEND MEETING WITH ELECTED REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, almost exactly two years ago I had the honour to table an all–Party report on government funding for women's groups. As chairperson of that report, I wrote, "Women live in a diversity of circumstances, and no one group or organization can speak for the mainstream women of Canada". Nevertheless, speaking as a government Member of Parliament, I want to commend the 200 or so women of the National Action Committee on the Status of Women, many of whom travelled from great distances last weekend to put their case before the elected representatives. I want to emphasize though that a nationally televised fist–fight with the Government by members of NAC is not the best way to achieve the worthwhile objectives of Canadian women.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Scott (Hamilton–Wentworth): Some NAC representatives that I met said that the private consultations were far more effective without the surrounding hoopla. I know that Ministers of Finance, Justice, National Health and Welfare, the Secretary of State and, above all, the Minister responsible for the Status of Women can confirm that.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

INSENSITIVE ATTITUDES TOWARD WOMEN

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am prompted by what the Member from Hamilton—Wentworth (Mr. Scott) has just said, as well as what was said by his colleague, the Member from Cumberland—Colchester (Mr. Casey). Yesterday, the two Conservative Members, the Member for Cumberland—Colchester and the Member for Red Deer (Mr. Fee) had a few curious things to say about working women. In fact, Mr. Casey's comments, despite his apology today, are just about the dumbest I have heard in a long, long time.

The one Conservative Member said, "I've never had a man turn down a promotion". The other said, "Women would follow their husbands or have a baby" rather than accept a promotion. Such insensitivity and 19th Century attitudes are an insult to millions of Canadian women who have been fighting the odds for years, odds that they continue to face as long as such Conservative dinosaurs are allowed to sit on the committee that is supposed to promote equality for women. These Tory Members say, and I am also going to quote the Member from Hamilton—Wentworth, that women "aren't ambitious". I say to them: Join the real world and catch up.

WORLD TELECOMMUNICATION DAY

CELEBRATION BY 166 MEMBER STATES OF THE ITU

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I rise to bring to the attention of the House an important event being celebrated around the world. World Telecommunication Day is being marked by Canada and the 166 member states of the International Telecommunication Union, otherwise known as the ITU.

[Translation]

This year's theme is world co–operation for the development and harmonization of telecommunications. The international community thus recognizes the importance of this technology in a modern world. Since it was established 124 years ago, the ITU has contributed immeasurably to our quality of life.

[English]

Telecommunications is the driving force behind economic growth, the engine that moves the economy forward toward greater prosperity and a higher standard of living. As someone who proudly calls western Canada his home, I am aware of the vital social, economic and political role which our communications links play in keeping Canadians from every region of the country constantly in touch with one another.

PARLIAMENTARY DEMOCRACY

SUPPLY BILL HELD UP BY SENATE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, let's face it, democracy in Canada is not faring very well during this Session of Parliament.

First, the Government spent $300 on behalf of every Canadian citizen through the use of Governor General Warrants without the knowledge or consent of Members of the House of Commons. This is a form of theft, and an affront to our Constitution and to hundreds of years of parliamentary tradition and fundamental democratic principles.

When the Government finally did the right thing and asked elected Members of Parliament for the supply of funds, again our democratic process found itself at risk. This time not by the Government, but by the unelected, unaccountable Members of the Senate who stopped the Supply Bill and held up cheques being processed for our war veterans and members of the RCMP. Of course, the Senators' cheques were never in jeopardy.

Does the Senate have the right to initiate money Bills? Clearly not. Should it have the right to hold up, amend, or in any way monkey around with money Bills? Again, absolutely not.

It's high time that this undemocratic, unelected group of Senatorial hacks, flacks, and bagmen resign, or better yet, that we simply abolish this outdated institution called the Senate.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

FREEDOM OF CHOICE

Mr. Doug Fee (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I want to talk briefly on the topic of employment equity. If our nation is to achieve its full potential, we must offer equal opportunities to all.

At the same time, we must respect the rights of individuals. People must be given the choice to make their own decisions, whether it be for career, family, or a combination of both.

Through the Employment Equity Act the federal Government is giving more opportunities to those people who choose to work and who traditionally have been at a disadvantage.

All Canadians deserve the opportunity to choose what they want to do with their lives. Everyone, male or female, should have the opportunity to make their own choices regarding career and family.

As Parliamentarians, through legislation and example, we must ensure that all Canadians are given equal opportunities.

COMMUNICATIONS

URGE ESTABLISHMENT OF TELECOMMUNICATIONS POLICY

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, today is World Telecommunications Day. One hundred and sixty-five countries celebrate co-operation in developing a world-wide telecommunications system that includes, in part, local and long-distance telephone networks and international telephone links. At the same time, the Department of Communications celebrates 20 years of work on Canadian communications and cultural endeavours.

Europe is developing a more unified system for 1992, and Japan and the United States are moving ahead. The time has come to establish a modern Canadian national telecommunications policy; this is vital to all parts of this vast country. I call on the Minister of Communications (Mr. Masse) to join and support this effort. These issues affect every business, every household, and every individual who uses a phone or receives digital information.

Let us look ahead and address the challenges to maximize benefits from this information age. Let us hear what Canadians think about long-distance competition, about how their phones and data services should work, and what our regulations should be in this era of rapid technological change.

The shape of our future for the 21st Century as a vibrant nation depends on an affordable, accessible, modern, flexible communication policy that benefits all Canadians in all regions.

CRIMINAL PROCEEDINGS

URGE CHANGES TO EXTRADITION ACT

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, the frustration that Canadians have felt over the case of Charles Ng cannot even begin to compare with the pain and suffering the families of the alleged victims have had to endure, as they have been forced to live over and over the horrible nightmare of the deaths of their loved ones. Some of those American families are present in the House today.

As time marches on, and as a fugitive plays out seven possible court appearances, the ability of foreign authorities to properly dispense justice becomes increasingly difficult. While fugitives such as Charles Ng are allowed to remain in this country, and as witnesses die or move away, the ability to obtain convictions in court continues to slip away. Does Canada really want to become an accessory to a possible miscarriage of justice? Are we turning Canada into a haven for American killers attempting to escape justice in their own country?

I urge the Government of Canada to move quickly with changes to the Extradition Act, and should it see fit, support my private Member's Bill C–209.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE ECONOMY

EFFECT OF CUTS TO WESTERN CANADIAN ECONOMY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Conservatives are beginning to shut down the regions of our country.

In the last 24 hours we have learned that the Government is not content with savaging the economy of Atlantic Canada, it is now beginning to ravage the economy of western Canada. We have learned that the Port of Churchill, Manitoba, will be shut down for grain shipments. We have learned that the federal Government is slashing the $420–million worth of forestry development agreements. This morning we learned that spending by the Western Economic Diversification Agency is being cut by $55 million per year.

How can the Prime Minister justify those actions, all of which will prove devastating to western Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, regional development expenditure in western Canada in the five–year period from 1979 to 1984 averaged $160 million a year. In the past five–year period from 1984 to this year, that has increased to $196 million per year. Over the next five–year period it will increase to $363 million a year. That is an increase of 85 per cent. That is why there is such strong regional development in western Canada.

BROAD CUTS TO WESTERN ECONOMY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, western diversification cut. Regional development agreements cut. Forestry agreements cut. Ports closed. Armed Forces bases closed. VIA Rail cut. Freight rates increased. Crop insurance cut. Drought assistance late. Branch line rehabilitation cut. New value–added tax on agricultural inputs. Special grains programs cut. Cash advances for grain storage cut. Rural post offices closed. Initial crop prices down.

The Conservatives have adopted a scorched–earth policy for western Canada.

I want to ask the Prime Minister why, by these actions, is he forcing young people to leave the land in western Canada? Why is he forcing the abandonment of western Canadian communities?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it will come as a shock to western Canadians who had to live with the Liberal Party and the National Energy Program which devastated the economy of western Canada to hear questions such as that.

I heard the litany of complaints from my right hon. friend. I think even he would agree that the best barometer whereby one can measure the result of economic policies is in the unemployment and employment numbers. From 1984 to 1989—and I know this may not interest my friend, but perhaps western Canadians are interested—in Manitoba in that four–and–a–half–year period there were 42,000 more jobs. There were 39,000 more jobs in Saskatchewan, 97,000 more jobs in Alberta, and 147,000 more jobs in British Columbia.

That is the result of the policies of this Government working with the provinces in western Canada to bring about an unprecedented degree of prosperity.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT AGREEMENTS WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the House and the people of Canada will note that once again the Prime Minister chooses not to respond to the question.

My own Province of British Columbia has $295-million worth of federal contributions to regional development agreements which expire in the next year.

I would like a little honesty from the Prime Minister. Exactly how much of that $295 million of those agreements that expire will be cut? Will it be $50 million, $100 million, $200 million, or will it be all of it? Will the Prime Minister give a clear response to the people of British Columbia?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of Western Economic Diversification and Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Leader of the Opposition should know that I had a meeting on Monday with one of the Ministers from the Government of British Columbia to begin the discussion on cost-sharing agreements. The Right Hon. Member should know that those discussions are being held.

If the Right Hon. Member reads the Budget Papers he will see that regional funding for western Canada will increase by almost 100 per cent over the next five years. In the last five years the average was $196 million and over the next five years the number will be $1.8 billion, which means it will be $363 million on regional spending in western Canada. That is the context in which we are holding discussions with the provinces, to arrive at something that will work for both the provinces and, above all, in the interest of western Canadians.

WESTERN DIVERSIFICATION

REDUCTION IN WESTERN DIVERSIFICATION FUND

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for economic diversification in the West. The Government will now slash ERDA funds which will undermine the forestry industry, agriculture, tourism and urban development across the West. We have seen the Government recently try to close down two towns, Churchill and Portage la Prairie. At the same time it has reduced the money for the Western Diversification Fund by $55 million a year. Will the Minister tells us why his Department, in co-ordination with other Departments, could spend over $400 million in the eight months leading up to and including the election, a nine-fold increase from the previous eight months, only to cut the funds a few short months after the election?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of Western Economic Diversification and Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member wants to read the Budget Papers and look at the numbers, he will see that there will be an increase in regional spending in the West. That is the reality.

The Hon. Member talks about slashing spending. It is interesting because when we announced about three weeks ago a major expansion in which we participated with the Province of Manitoba to create jobs in the aerospace industry, the Hon. Member is on record as saying that he is opposed to that. He should make up his mind. Either his Party is in favour of regional spending and creation of jobs in Manitoba or it is are against it. The Hon. Member is on record as saying he thinks this is a bad precedent, to put out a recoverable loan from an outfit like Boeing that will create almost 300 jobs in the very city he represents.

Mr. Walker: I did oppose that—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Walker: —because, Mr. Speaker, at a time of our deficit that company made $1 billion profit. We do not have to give money to a $1 billion profit corporation. I opposed that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Oral Questions

SETTING OF EXPIRY DATES

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, with the establishment of the Department of Industry, Science and Technology, the Government has provided for ongoing regional development funding in northern Ontario and Québec. Why has the Government decided to set expiry dates, whether they be five, six or seven years, for the Western Diversification Office and ACOA?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of Western Economic Diversification and Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, I give the Hon. Member credit for being honest in the House and sticking to what he said in the paper. I wish he would do the same when he looks at the numbers as far as the Budget Papers are concerned. Regional spending in the West will increase substantially.

We have said since the Budget that western diversification is extended over a further five-year period. We have additional funding for western diversification and we are in the process of working out how we will spend the money. I might add that it is in co-operation with the provinces, not with a confrontational attitude. We believe we can do more for people in western Canada if we work with the provinces. That is what we intend to do.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT FUNDING

CUTS FOR THE REGIONS NEXT YEAR

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday he tried to leave the impression in the House that Canadians ought not to be concerned about regional development funding. The Minister responsible for western diversification added to this when he said: "For the West it is business as usual". The Minister of Communications said with reference to Québec: "No change in Québec".

Will the Prime Minister agree that there are cuts for each of the regions next year? For the Province of Québec, for example, there is a cut of $109 million next year; for Atlantic Canada, $90 million; for western Canada, $66 million? Why do they not level with the people of these regions and say next year the situation will be worse instead of better? Why don't you quit misleading the people of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the amounts spent in Atlantic Canada over the last five years averaged $282 million. Over the next five years it will average $425 million. In Québec it was $246 million. It will average $282 million. In the West it was $196 million, and will average $363 million. In all cases of expenditure on regional development we are attempting to do more to benefit the regions. We are attempting to do it in the manner set out by the Minister who has just responded, in co-operation with the provinces.

If my hon. friend examines the files, I think he will see that from the previous five-year cycle there was an increase of 50 per cent in the last five years. The next five years will foresee an increase of some 35 per cent. Surely even my hon. friend will acknowledge that that is a major contribution to regional development.

ACCURACY OF FORECASTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada know, as every politician knows, that one can do a forecast for the next 10 or 20 years and make up almost any figure and put anything there one wants.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hawkes: Is that what you did?

Mr. Friesen: You do it all the time, Ed.

Mr. Broadbent: I want the Prime Minister to answer the question. What Canadians know definitely is what will happen in next year's Budget. Next year's Budget means a cut in western Canada, a cut in Québec, a cut in Atlantic Canada, a cut for northern Ontario.

Will the Prime Minister admit now that there is $293 million coming out of regional development next year, just when it is needed in those regions?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend refers to the fact that forecasts are made. I would point out to him that when the Minister of Finance brought in his first economic statement in November, 1984, the Leader of the New Democratic Party forecast a loss of 200,000 jobs, yet 1.4 million new jobs have been created in Canada since then.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, in all of the cases and in all of the regions, unemployment has been very considerably brought down as a result of a number of initiatives, including regional economic development programs.

We hope to continue to keep a low rate of unemployment by co-operating with the provinces and, over the next five-year funding cycle, putting more money into Atlantic Canada, more money into Québec and western Canada, those areas that need it to create more jobs. I don't know why my hon. friend won't examine the Budget Papers that are there.

Mr. Broadbent: Canadians will know that the reality which they can see, which is next year's figures, is that there are cuts all across the country.

ATLANTIC CANADA—EFFECT OF CUT-BACKS IN COD QUOTA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my final question deals specifically with Atlantic Canada. I am sure the Prime Minister will agree that because of changes that are now being made in cod quotas alone, it is not too much to say that we are facing a potential economic catastrophe in the fishery for Atlantic Canada. Since these cut-backs in the cod quota will mean for Newfoundland an estimated loss of full-time and part-time jobs of some 6,500, some 2,500 in Nova Scotia, what is the Government telling the people in Nova Scotia and Newfoundland who are interested not in unemployment insurance or in hand-outs but in the preservation of the fishery and their jobs? What does the Government plan to do about this?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend is referring to the very serious problem developing with fish stocks, he would certainly not seek to blame that problem on this Government or any other. Surely he understands that that problem is one that requires a great deal of sympathy, understanding and co-operation with the provincial governments and the Government of Canada.

I thank my hon. friend for a very important question. I want to give him the assurance that the Government of Canada is and will be co-operating very fully with the provinces and with affected individuals in Atlantic Canada, to make sure that to the extent humanly possible, any effects from this very unfortunate situation are diminished to the utmost, so that we bring as much fairness and justice as we can to the people of Atlantic Canada.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN THE GALLERY OF HIS EXCELLENCY WAN LI, CHAIRMAN OF THE STANDING COMMITTEE OF THE NATIONAL PEOPLE'S CONGRESS OF THE PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA.

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw to the attention of Members the presence in the gallery of His Excellency Wan Li, Chairman of the Standing Committee of the National People's Congress of the People's Republic of China.

CONSEQUENCE OF CUT-BACKS IN QUÉBEC

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Laurier—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Yesterday, when he brought down his Budget, the Québec Finance Minister stated that as a result of cutbacks in the Tory Government's Budget, Québec would suffer a loss of $1.3 billion over the next three years. As a result of these cutbacks, there will be 2,400 fewer spaces in daycare, a shortfall of $150 million for health care, hospital services and post-secondary education and a shortfall of $23 million for the Programme de rénovation des logements.

Is the Prime Minister aware of the serious consequences of his latest Budget for all Québecers?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am very much aware of the Budget of the Minister of Finance of Québec. I am also intrigued by the financial position that Québec is in and the difference between the financial position of the Province of Québec and that of the federal Government. As an example, that province spends 9.8 cents of every tax dollar on interests costs, and as I have said in the House on many occasions, this year we are spending 35 cents of every tax dollar on interests costs. The province's position is quite a bit different, but in the face of that, we are continuing to increase transfers to the Province of Québec. This current year, transfers will be up $412 million and that is about 4.5 per cent. Next year it will be up $517 million, an increase of over 5 per cent. Clearly, in spite of the difficult and more serious financial position the federal Government is in, we are continuing to honour our responsibilities to the provinces.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER BACK-TRACK

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Laurier—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, the answer is quite simple. The reason why Québec is in better financial shape is because it has a competent Finance Minister, a Liberal one, while here in Ottawa we have a Minister who is a Tory and incompetent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Malépart: My question for the Finance Minister is this: Why does he want to let the provincial governments, the governments of provinces in the West and the Atlantic region, and the sick suffer the consequences of his incompetence?

Would the Prime Minister be prepared to do what he did in 1985 and ask his Minister of Finance to backtrack on transfer payments for health care as he did on the de-indexation of old age security pensions? Is the Prime Minister prepared to ask the Minister of Finance to restore full indexation of funding for post-secondary education and health care?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to say that we are passing on our very great confidence in the management of this economy which has benefited the Province of Québec and allowed it to increase its revenues as it has over the last few years because of the successful economic policies.

Some Hon. Members. Hear, hear!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): I have indicated very clearly the significant increase in transfers, large amounts of finances from the Government of Canada to the provincial Government. As I have indicated, these will be continuing in future years. Over all, this Government will be spending $25 billion more on transfers to Québec and all the provinces in the next five years relative to the last five years. Clearly, in spite of the more difficult fiscal position we are in, we are meeting our responsibilities.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES—REQUEST FOR ROYAL COMMISSION

Ms. Albina Guarnieri (Mississauga East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. Yesterday, Members of the House attended a hearing investigating employment practices at Toronto area postal facilities. We heard from a large number of postal employees who recounted incidents that make the postal facility appear to be more like a 19th century workhouse than a modern industrial plant. My question—

Mr. Beatty: What did Ouellet do about it?

Ms. Guarnieri: Perrin, your turn will come, I promise. My question—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I have to determine whose turn it is. The Hon. Member will put her question.

Ms. Guarnieri: In light of yesterday's revelations, will the Government now set up a Royal Commission to investigate these shocking activities at Canada Post?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, this document sent out by CUPW called "A Campaign for Dignity" details actions that the union should take in terms of suggesting harassment, loading up the grievance procedure and how to complain about management. It also says here that they should lobby opposition Parties to ensure that opposition Parties are spokesmen for the union. The Hon. Member has shown that the union has been successful. She is Mortimer Snerd to Jean-Claude Parrot's Edgar Bergen.

APPEARANCE OF EMPLOYEES BEFORE COMMITTEE

Ms. Albina Guarnieri (Mississauga East): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the Minister did not hear my question. My question was about people, not the union. Perhaps dignity is not in the Minister's vocabulary.

The Minister is really saying, "Let the people suffer". Last night, Ida Irwin, the spokesman for Canada Post, said that the corporation has no idea when its internal investigation will be complete. The Minister is simply endorsing a policy of indefinite misery for these victims. Since the Minister is not prepared to act, will he at least assure the House that those workers who were courageous enough to come forward yesterday will not be punished by the corporation or its henchmen?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, on January 23, the Hon. Member for Mississauga South informed my office of accusations of job selling at Canada Post. Canada Post conducted an investigation, and I think it was two weeks ago now suspended the accused individual and turned its information over to the Peel police who I understand are completing their investigation which may well lead to charges. In any event, I hope the Hon. Member is not suggesting that we put aside this police investigation and interfere in the investigation that is now going on. Due process has been followed and guilty parties will be charged.

THE ECONOMY

THE DEFICIT—GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. I am sure the Minister of Finance realizes that most Members of Parliament have received complaints about the $2.7 million advertising campaign, the silver dollar debt campaign, of the federal Government, and he is also aware that most people find this very offensive. I would ask the Minister of Finance whether or not he remembers the Liberal Party's advertisements on the Constitution in 1980, advertisements that Walter Baker called the Goose Canada ads, and whether or not he agrees with his colleague, the present Minister of National Health and Welfare, who on May 3, 1982, moved the following motion:

> That this House condemns the government for its increasing use of Canadian taxpayers' dollars for self-serving advertising and public opinion surveying, and in particular, for spending millions of tax dollars for unnecessary advertising at a time when it demands financial sacrifices from ordinary Canadians.

Does the Minister agree with that?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think it is very clear that most Canadians who see these ads find them very informative. They find that they are stating clearly—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Let me remind the Hon. Member of the message of these advertisements.

• (1440)

The message of the advertisements is that our debt is very high. We are now spending 35 cents of every tax dollar to service the Government debt. We must reduce that figure so that we can maintain good social programs, programs that Canadians have come to count on. That is the message, and clearly, that is the information that Canadians want to hear because they want to understand that message—

An Hon. Member: Shame on you.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): —in light of the recent Budget.

OPPOSITION TO GOVERNMENT ADVERTISING

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, perhaps we have finally found the real loonie in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member could put his question.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, I was not referring to you.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: My question is the following one. In 1982, the Conservative opposition drew the line between straightforward informational advertising of programs already passed by Parliament, like job creation and alcohol and drug abuse. On the other hand, advertising advocates a strong partisan policy point of view.

I would like to know from the Conservative Party and the Minister of Finance if partisan advertising was wrong in 1982, is it not wrong in 1989? If it is wrong today, why does the Conservative Party of Canada not reimburse the taxpayers $2.7 million.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not know where this Hon. Member has been for the last four and one-half years. In November of 1984, in May of 1985, and in February of 1986, 1987, 1988, and now in 1989, the message has been the same. We must get control of our Government debt. We must get our deficit down. That is a matter of Government policy that has been voted on in this House time and time and time again. Each time that it has been voted on in this House, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member and his Party have voted against it because they could care less whether the debt goes through the roof—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

RADIO-CANADA

BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Charles DeBlois (Montmorency—Orléans): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. As a former journalist with the French network of the CBC, I remain very attached to that institution which has done so much to promote and defend the French culture in Canada.

The Minister said recently that he had no right to interfere in the running of the CBC, which is completely free to cut expenses wherever it likes.

Are we to understand that the Minister has no way to ensure that the French network will suffer no more than the English network, which has a much bigger advertising market and much lower costs, especially for translation of cultural works?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that I am as sensitive to these issues as the Hon. Member, indeed as all Hon. Members of this House! But the law provides for an arm's length relationship between the CBC's corporate responsibilities and the Minister of Communications.

Several times, I have explained the Government's cultural policies and the CBC is discharging its responsibilities under the law.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

PART-TIME EMPLOYEES—ALLEGED JOB SELLING

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, the allegations about the employment practices at Canada Post are deplorable. One part-time worker at Toronto AMF alleged that a manager demanded a $4,000 pay-off and sexual favours in return for promoting a woman from a casual labour position to full-time status. Upon her refusal, she was fired.

How will the Minister deal with these allegations and many others that indicate unethical practices at Canada Post?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, that allegation and others were brought to my attention on January 23 by the Member for Mississauga Centre. I referred it to the Post Office which conducted an internal investigation. The employee accused has been suspended. The Peel police have been brought in and provided the information that the Post Office has acquired. I understand that they are continuing their investigation and expect to be laying charges but we will have to await the outcome of their investigation.

EMPLOYEE GRIEVANCES

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is to the same Minister. On April 19, the Minister stated that Canada Post management has made significant strides toward improving the operations of the corporation.

Today, there are 52,000 outstanding grievances against Canada Post. Employees working under these conditions are continually fearing unfair treatment and have low job performance. The citizens of Canada are the real losers in that situation with a poor service.

How can the Minister claim strides are being made to improve Canada Post service? How will the Minister deal with these problems to ensure quality postal service to Canadians?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, an independent audit by Clarkson Gordon is showing that the service by the Post Office has been improving. On the question of the grievance, this strategy by CUPW calls on the members to harass management and to file grievances. They have been successful. They have loaded up the grievance procedure system with 52,000. It seems hardly fair to now complain about all of these grievances they put on.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

THE ENVIRONMENT

TRANSPORT OF AMERICAN WASTE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. On December 14 last year, the Minister gave certain assurances here in the House regarding American garbage being shipped to the Eastern Townships. The Minister said, and I quote: "The federal Government is contemplating several legislative measures to stop the dumping of these American waste materials in Canada". Mr. Speaker, at the time, the Minister even gave us the assurance that the Eastern Townships would not become a garbage dump for Americans. However, now, only a few months later, shipments of American garbage are continuing, and in the last few days another dump was discovered in the South Stukely area. I therefore want to ask the Minister whether he did his duty after December 14. What did he do to stop us from becoming the garbage dump of the United States?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may comment, first of all, that the Hon. Member is talking about dry waste, not toxic waste. Dry waste is a provincial responsibility. However, two weeks ago in Montreal we agreed with all Canada's Environment Ministers to establish a national waste management policy. We are meeting again in June and will be issuing a set of national regulations.

Mr. Lapierre: Mr. Speaker, I may remind the Minister that this garbage includes refrigerators that contain freon and similar chemicals which are toxic waste, and I would urge the Minister to send in his inspectors as soon as possible.

PROHIBITION OF WASTE TRANSPORT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. Last December, the Québec Environment Minister sent him a telegram, urging him to close the border to American garbage so we would not become the garbage dump of the United States. Has the Minister taken any concrete action to prevent truckloads of U.S. garbage from entering the Eastern Townships?

[English]

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm to the Hon. Member and to this House that any transportation of waste coming across the border is done in accordance with the agreements between the provinces and the environmental departments and the United States, and nothing untoward, to the best of my knowledge and those of my colleagues, has been happening in Québec or anywhere else in this country.

An Hon. Member: You haven't done anything.

OLD AGE SECURITY

OPPOSITION TO CLAW-BACK PROVISIONS

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State responsible for Seniors. The Edmonton Journal has reported her as saying that nine out of ten national seniors' groups she had met with supported the Government's claw-back of Old Age Security pensions. In fact, none of these 10 groups meeting with the Minister supported the claw-back.

My question to the Minister is why did she say this when these groups clearly do not support this measure, and in fact are vehemently opposed to the Old Age Security claw-back?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, I instructed my political staff not to release the list of organizations that attended this meeting on April 28, because I did not want our Canadian seniors used for political purposes. The meeting on April 28 was one of several held during the past three months across Canada. It was an informal meeting where no vote was taken and where we had a discussion based on the concerns that Canadian seniors wanted to put before the Minister. The two main objectives are as follows: access to social programs and a healthy economy so that our children will be able to enjoy the quality of life they need for a promising future. These two objectives are in fact supported by the Wilson Budget!

• (1450)

[English]

Mr. Whittaker: Mr. Speaker, a press release to be released today by One Voice, Jean Woodsworth, president, says that:

> The Minister of State for Seniors has revealed a patronizing attitude toward the very people she is supposed to represent. She will have to work harder to gain our confidence in her ability to convey our interest to the Government.

REQUEST FOR APOLOGY BY MINISTER

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Minister do the honourable thing and apologize to these people? Will she name one, if she will not apologize, national seniors group that is in favour of the claw-back? Name one if she will not apologize.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, I do not believe my ears. Since when does a social democratic party care about the more fortunate in society? I learned of your leader's recent resignation. Does this position in favour of the better off in society indicate a change in philosophy? Remember what the criteria are.

AGRICULTURE

PORK PRODUCERS IN QUÉBEC—EFFECTS OF BUDGET ON PRODUCTION

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Agriculture and concerns the statement by the president of the Union des producteurs agricoles, Jacques Proulx. He says that pork producers will lose $15,000 a year as a result of the federal Budget. Is the Minister able to respond to these allegations? And can he reassure pork producers about the effects of the Budget on the profitability of their production?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. Indeed, Canada, and particularly Québec, export pork worth about $200 million, which is very considerable. We were very disappointed with this American decision. Furthermore, my colleague in International Trade has asked for a meeting with the U.S. Government to discuss it. We believe that this American decision is contrary to the GATT rules. We will do everything to defend pork producers in Québec and Canada from this decision, Mr. Speaker, because we now have a new mechanism. It is a very important question, which I believe deserves an answer. Given the circumstances, we will be able to benefit from the new recourse provided by the Canada–U.S. agreement, Mr. Speaker.

EMPLOYMENT

COMMENTS RESPECTING WOMEN IN WORKFORCE

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Yesterday two Conservative Members blamed women for being the victims of unfair treatment in the workforce. Their outrageous comments are an insult to all women.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Catterall: Will the Prime Minister repudiate these statements? Will he state, unequivocally, that such attitudes do not determine the policies of his Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not read the full context of the remarks. But a remark, such as the one related in part by the Hon. Member, would, of course, be unacceptable and would offend against the common standards of Members of the House with regard to full equality for women in Canada.

EQUALITY FOR WOMEN

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister means what he says, why has he let the salary gap between men and women in the Public Service widen even more to nearly $10,000? Does he really believe a man working for the Public Service is worth $10,000 more than a woman? If not, what is he going to do about it and when?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in this very important issue of equality, I know my hon. friend would be happy to know that of the 789,000 more women who are working today than in September, 1984—

Some Hon. Members: How much.

Mr. Mulroney: —while, unfortunately, salary disparities have existed in the past and still exist today, we have increased by 100 per cent in our first term the number of women serving on agencies, boards and commissions. We have increased by 60 per cent the number of women serving in senior judicial positions. There are six women rather than two now serving in the Cabinet of Canada. We have added two women to the Supreme Court of Canada. We are working through employment equity and a number of other endeavours with provincial Governments and at the federal level to make sure that a tragic salary disparity which had gathered steam in Canada over the last 25 years is finally dealt with and wiped out by all Canadians.

EMPLOYMENT

EFFECTS OF BUDGET ON ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. According to the Budget papers the Government will:

> —continue to contribute to the financing of the unemployment insurance program in difficult economic times when it is inappropriate to raise premiums.

In light of the severe economic crisis in the Atlantic fishing communities and the scaling down and closure of Canadian Forces Bases in the Maritimes, is the Minister prepared to keep her promise because it is obvious that Atlantic Canada is, indeed, facing a severe crisis and it is inappropriate now to raise premiums?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the fund will begin to be funded by the private sector, both management and labour, as a result of this Bill, but the costs will be borne by people across Canada. What it will do is give us the funding to help communities that are facing difficulties such as we do with our Community Futures grants. The designated areas within Atlantic Canada now—and they are one of the main focuses of this program—will have more funding available to them, and there will be more funding for older workers. We will be looking at funding for older workers in this program so they will have the ability to go back and get a secondary school equivalency. We are working very closely with the provincial Governments on this. I am working with the Minister of Fisheries on specific programs for the fisheries.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—ELIGIBILITY PERIOD FOR SEASONAL WORKERS

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the same Minister. The Atlantic provinces have some of the highest numbers of seasonal workers in Canada. In good economic times, for example, in P.E.I. there are 4,000 more jobs, 95 per cent of which are seasonal and provide work for about 10 to 12 weeks each year.

Can the Minister assure this House that the eligibility requirements will be reduced to the 10 best weeks for these seasonal workers in Atlantic Canada so they will not be forced on to the welfare rolls?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the program will not be forcing people on to the welfare rolls. Let me say that the number of entry weeks depends on the local unemployment rate, as the Hon. Member knows. If there is an unemployment difficulty, then the benefits kick in at an earlier stage.

Let me say as well for seasonal workers, one of the advantages of the new program is that we have taken out the penalty for repeaters during the year, and that is specifically to benefit seasonal workers.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

PRIVATIZATION—ALLEGED SECRECY

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Canada Post. There is a great deal of secrecy and double talk surrounding the Post Office.

Canadians are more and more confused by the contradictions coming—

Mr. Speaker: Having some regard for the time, would the Hon. Member put his question.

Mr. Taylor: In light of the fact that there is talk back and forth about privatization and not privatization, that there are private communities and secret places within the Post Office—

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Taylor: Could the Minister explain all the confusion and contradiction? How can he justify the secrecy that exists within Canada Post? What is the Post Office trying to hide?

• (1500)

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I presume the Hon. Member is speaking about that highly secret Paradigm Project which was mentioned on page 24 of the Canada Post Annual Report last year.

An Hon. Member: Some secret.

Mr. Andre: Canada Post for the past fiscal year, for the first time in 30 years, is running a profit and service has improved, as confirmed by independent auditors. We should all be applauding the management of Canada Post.

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INVESTIGATION

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, in light of the information that we have heard today in this House from myself and other Members, why is the Minister responsible for Canada Post saying that due process is being followed and allegations have been referred to the Post Office for investigation? Why is it that we cannot have a public investigation to hear those concerns? Why does it have to be the Post Office that looks at its own activities?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the accusation that I am aware of is of some employee charging for jobs, which is certainly contrary to Canada Post policy and perhaps contrary to the law. In any event, after an investigation, the employee was suspended and information turned over to the Peel Police.

The Hon. Member suggests we should have a public witch-hunt while this is going on. I think the police should be allowed to pursue and lay charges and if the individual is found guilty, I hope the full weight of the law is brought to bear.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADA–FRANCE INTERPARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

PRESENTATION OF REPORT OF CANADIAN DELEGATION TO THE TWENTY-FIRST ANNUAL MEETING

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House the report, in both official languages, of the official parliamentary delegation that represented Canada at the 21st annual meeting of the Canada–France Interparliamentary Association, which was held in Ottawa, Vancouver and Victoria from April 16 to 23, 1989.

As part of this 21st annual meeting of the Canada–France Interparliamentary Association, we received 12 French parliamentarians. Two topics were on the agenda: Canada–France interregional economic cooperation and Parliament and the constitutional review process. I am pleased to be able to report to you that these meetings were a great success.

CANADIAN NATO PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

PRESENTATION OF SECOND AND THIRD REPORTS

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I forgot my glasses today, but I think what I have the honour of presenting today are the second and third reports, in both official languages, of the Canadian NATO Parliamentary Association. Thank you.

CANADIAN SPACE AGENCY ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-16, an Act to establish the Canadian Space Agency and to provide for other matters in relation to space.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Minister have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

VICTIMS OF VIOLENCE SOCIETY – REVISION OF EXTRADITION LAWS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, organizations spearheaded by the Victims of Violence Society and 23 Members of Parliament from across Canada are currently collecting signatures on a national petition which will be presented to this House over the next six weeks. It is expected to accumulate tens of thousands, if not hundreds of thousands, of signatures.

It is my pleasure to present the first such petition to the House today representing 2,300 signatures which call on the Government of Canada to revise its extradition laws in order that we may prevent Canada from becoming a haven for escaped convicts from the United States.

VICTIMS OF VIOLENCE – SECOND PETITION REPRESENTING 1,500 SIGNATURES

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary Southwest): Mr. Speaker, I am very honoured to be the second petitioner to rise today and present a petition supporting the Victims of Violence. It has been certified pursuant to Standing Order 36.

My petition represents the signatures of some 1,500 people from all across the Province of Alberta and indeed from Kelowna, B.C., Saskatoon, Winnipeg, and many areas throughout our country.

These petitioners believe that it appears that those accused of heinous crimes against humanity in other countries are entering Canada as a form of obtaining sanctuary. The petitioners call upon the Government of Canada to revise the extradition laws which would allow the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) to order the extradition of fugitives, either immediately or after they have been dealt with fully by the Canadian penal system. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

REVISION OF EXTRADITION LAWS

Mr. Scott Thorkelson (Edmonton – Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present petitions which have been certified by the Clerk pursuant to Standing Order 36. This petition, which contains 1,150 signatures, calls upon the Government of Canada to revise the extradition laws which would allow the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) to order the extradition of fugitives either immediately or after they have been dealt with fully by the Canadian penal system. I join with the petitioners in urging the Government to toughen up our criminal justice system.

OBJECTION TO ARMX-1989 SHOW

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to rise in the House and present a petition on behalf of 89 signatories objecting to the Government's participation in the ARMX-89 show, calling upon the Government to cease its support of ARMX and to ensure that the countries violating human rights are not able to arrange arms purchases in Canada and to act against the admission of criminals and terrorists to Canada.

PROTEST AGAINST TAX ON MUSIC LESSONS

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale – High Park): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36. The petitioners are music students, teachers, and professional performing artists who are objecting to the federal sales tax proposed by the Minister of Finance on music lessons or other private lessons related to the performing arts. As the majority of professional or aspiring artists exist on a lower than average income and restricted budgets in an already overtaxed society, were this sales tax made law, their lessons would no longer be affordable.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon this Parliament to leave all private music lessons and other classes related to the performing arts untaxed in the proposed new sales tax legislation.

RETENTION OF RAIL PASSENGER SERVICE

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have in my hands petitions signed by 5,098 citizens of Canada, the United States and England. The petitioners are supportive of the need to maintain and retain rail passenger service in this country. Four hundred twenty-five of the signatures were gathered in Thunder Bay and northwestern Ontario. They were primarily signed by people who were using the trans-continental train, and were arriving or departing from the station in Thunder Bay. Those I will be tabling because they have been certified correct as to form and content by the Clerk of Petitions. The remaining petitions, received from a family in Medicine Hat, the Larsons, unfortunately cannot be presented, but I would like to make reference to them. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

IMPROVEMENT TO VIA RAIL SERVICE

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure pursuant to Standing Order 36 to present a petition on behalf of a number of westerners who are concerned that the Government of Canada has failed to provide the resources necessary to fulfil the improvements to VIA Rail to enable it to compete successfully. They believe that the government simply is cutting back too much in terms of VIA Rail. They are asking Parliament now to modernize passenger rail service in those areas of the country where it can provide a more rapid, economical, safe, convenient, environmentally sound and energy efficient alternative to other means of transportation.

CLOSURE OF PORT OF CHURCHILL

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, in light of the announcement made yesterday by the Minister of Transportation that there would not be any grain going to Churchill this summer, I have the honour to present a petition signed by 375 Canadians from Manitoba, Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, Gimli, Manitoba, Kelowna, B.C., Fredericton, New Brunswick, Bracebridge, Ontario, Windsor, Ontario, Edmonton, Alberta, St. John's, Newfoundland, Niagara Falls, Hamilton, Kitchener, Newmarket, Toronto, Labrador City, Regina, Winnipeg, Brandon, Stratford, Kingston, Victoria, London, and Lorette, Manitoba. In the petition, these Canadians from across the country indicate that they believe the federal Government has a responsibility to develop the obvious potential of Canada's only inland seaport, and to ensure that 3 per cent of Canada's annual grain shipments go through the Port of Churchill, and that the Government aggressively pursue additional ways to utilize this important seaport to ship exports other than grain.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

Hon. Doug Lewis (on behalf of the Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-17, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff, be now read a first time and printed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Jean Corbeil (Minister of Labour) moved that Bill C–8, an Act to amend the Department of Labour Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank you and all Hon. Members for giving me this opportunity to introduce a short amendment to the Department of Labour Act.

This amendment is necessary to enable my Department to continue to assist older employees who have been affected by a permanent reduction in the work force and who, after making every attempt to find other employment and exhausting their entitlement to unemployment insurance benefits, still have no prospects of re–entering the labour market.

The ongoing adjustment of employees is a basic component of the economic adjustment process in Canada. For instance, since the turn of the century we have experienced a major shift of employment from the primary and manufacturing sectors to the service industries. The latter now employ 71 per cent of Canadian workers, compared with 32 per cent at the beginning of this century.

The industries themselves have experienced considerable changes as well. For every ten manufacturing companies that were operational in 1971, only six were still operational in 1980. Four closed down but, on the other hand five new companies were formed during the same period, for every group of ten.

Mr. Speaker, every year, four million workers, which is one–third of the labour force, change jobs in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, these changes are both healthy and necessary to maintain a strong and viable economy. They are also an indication of the flexibility, open attitude and adaptability of Canada's labour force.

However, one group of workers is facing some very specific adjustment problems. I am referring to those who are suddenly deprived of their jobs after reaching the age of 55. Their problems are aggravated by the competition they get from an educated and competent baby–boom generation that is flooding the labour market.

As a result, many of those Canadians to whom our country owes so much have been brutally uprooted from a job environment to which they have often dedicated their entire working lives. These people are now more or less on the street, because new technology has made their skills and capabilities obsolete.

The increasing number of people in this situation on the labour market makes it even harder to arrange for rehiring of individuals in similar jobs.

[English]

The challenge of facilitating labour market adjustment for laid–off older workers is most important as we are dealing with Canada's most loyal and experienced employees. I would like to focus briefly on some of the problems faced by these older workers.

The unemployment rate is the most visible indicator of the effects of adjustment. Traditionally, unemployment rates are lowest for the older age group. This remains true today, but the gap has narrowed since the employment peak of 1981 when workers aged 55 to 64 experienced an unemployment rate of only 4.4 per cent, or just above half of the national rate. The unemployment rate for older workers has increased to 6.2 per cent, or to just over three–quarters of the national rate.

[Translation]

A recent Statistics Canada study of laid–off workers highlighted some special problems of a growing number of unemployed older workers. It was observed that laid–off older workers are unemployed longer than younger workers. The study showed that 40 per cent of these laid–off older workers were jobless for over six months, compared to 25 per cent for the 25–44 age group.

It was also found, Mr. Speaker, that older workers are more likely to get discouraged after looking for a job for a long time and to withdraw from the labour market. Forty–two per cent of these permanently laid–off workers do not find a job and simply give up.

The tendency of older workers to get discouraged and withdraw from the labour market contributes to lowering the participation rate for this age group. Only half of those aged 55 to 64 are in the labour force, compared to about 80 per cent for the 25–54 age group.

Permanently laid–off older workers who find another job accept a 12 per cent salary decrease, on average.

That is the largest drop for all age groups, Mr. Speaker.

Inadequate retraining and lack of mobility for older workers add to their difficulties. In fact, the Statistics Canada study showed that the retraining rate for laid–off older workers is one third of what it is for the others. Only 6 per cent of laid–off workers 55 and over register for any retraining course, compared to 18 per cent for those under 55.

• (1520)

The study also revealed that, proportionately, twice as many workers who were under 55 when they were laid off permanently during the 1981–82 recession found another job. Eighteen per cent of those under 55 went back to work, compared to six per cent of those 55 and older. We all understand, I am sure, how difficult it must be for these workers to suddenly break the ties forged over a lifetime with companions who have shared their joys, happiness, sorrows and dedication.

As Hon. Members from all parties know, for many years Labour Canada has actively assisted some of these laid–off older workers. In fact, at the present time, nearly 8,000 of these workers are receiving assistance under the Labour Adjustment Benefits Act, commonly known as the LAB Program.

I immediately wish to reassure the House, Mr. Speaker, that the brief amendment we are considering today will in no way harm these beneficiaries. They will continue to receive the full amount of their present LAB benefits until they reach age 65.

[English]

The LAB Program, however, has a number of serious flaws. First, the only industries designated nationally for assistance were the very narrow group of textile, clothing, footwear and tanning industries. Second, the LAB Program contains very poor work incentives because, even before taking income tax into account, 60 per cent of every dollar earned by beneficiaries is lost through reduced benefits. Third, it discourages private–sector involvement by fully deducting from LAB payments all benefits offered by employers. Fourth, it offers no opportunities for the provinces to participate in helping older workers.

For these reasons, in 1985 and 1986 we undertook full consultation with the provinces, business, and unions on the need for improved assistance for laid off older workers. They encouraged us to find a better way to help those workers.

This led the federal Government in its 1986 Budget to indicate its intention to work with the provinces to develop a new program for older–worker adjustment, and to commit $125 million to the program.

Two and a half years of very constructive discussions with the provinces, and more than 35 federal–provincial Ministerial meetings, led to the joint development of the new program for older–worker adjustment, the POWA Program, as it is commonly known.

Details of an implementation plan for POWA were announced on October 6, 1988. Eight provinces, namely, Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, and Alberta have already agreed to participate in POWA. This is an outstanding degree of initial provincial participation for a new cost–shared federal–provincial program, and a significant accomplishment.

For example, the hospital insurance plan was launched in 1958 with five participating provinces. It took until 1961 for all provinces and territories to participate. Although the Medicare system was adopted in 1966, only two provinces were participating in the program by 1968. It took until 1972, six full years later, for all provinces and territories to join.

With regard to Ontario and British Columbia, which have not yet agreed to participate in POWA, our continuing discussions regarding their participation in the new program are encouraging.

[Translation]

The basic principles of POWA, which are incorporated in the proposed legislation before the House today, are as follows: First, POWA applies to all sectors and all regions; second, it is based on full partnership with the provinces; third, it gives the employer a chance to participate; and fourth, it provides better incentives for going back to work.

Hon. Members will note that these principles are fairer than those of LAB, its predecessor. The proposed change in the legislation, Mr. Speaker, also includes appropriate transitional measures for older workers in sectors formerly targeted by LAB.

In the case of industries that were targeted by LAB in August 1986, when most of the designations expired, the proposed amendment guarantees that termination of employment that took place between the date of expiry of these designations and January 1, 1988, the date on which POWA came into effect, may be considered for the purposes of the new program. In all cases of termination of employment considered under POWA and which occurred between August 1986 and October 6, 1988, when POWA was announced, the proposed amendment will make it possible to consider as well workers below the age of 55 whose age plus number of years of service equals 80 or more, because their situation would normally have been considered under LAB. These transitional measures are necessary to provide for a reasonable continuity between LAB and POWA in the case of workers in industries formerly designated under LAB.

Since the POWA implementation plan was announced on October 6, 1988, we and our provincial partners have received requests to consider hundreds of terminations of employment.

[English]

Speedy passage of this amendment would enable us to more promptly assist some of the laid off older workers who have already exhausted their unemployment insurance benefits. Those workers have pressing needs. Organizations such as the Canadian Labour Market and Productivity Centre, the Advisory Council on Adjustment, the Economic Council of Canada, and the Canada Employment and Immigration Advisory Council have all publicly urged implementation of POWA as soon as possible.

[Translation]

Members on both sides of the House have already urged the Government to proceed quickly with the implementation of POWA.

Consequently, Mr. Speaker, I would ask you and all Hon. Members to support this brief amendment to the Department of Labour Act, which will enable older workers whose employment was terminated as a result of a permanent reduction in jobs to obtain quickly the help they so desperately need.

[English]

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today in the debate on second reading of Bill C–8, an Act to amend the Department of Labour Act. It is a relief for me, and indeed for all the people of Canada who may benefit from this legislation, to finally see a Bill in the House. We have been awaiting introduction of this Bill for nearly three years. We have been awaiting the results of a promise that the Government made to initiate a program of income–support and retraining for older workers.

Some older workers were and in fact still are having difficulty finding employment after losing their jobs. Those difficulties have been well documented. The report on Human Rights and Ageing in Canada tabled in the House of Commons on August 16, 1986 noted a rapid increase in the number of Canadians aged 45 to 65. Aging workers have a harder time finding employment, and lengthy periods of unemployment exist for older workers.

The committee recommended, among other things, that the Government should designate older workers as target groups for job strategies; that the Government should explore the impact of corporation rationalization, plant closures, and corporate take–overs on older workers. That was in August, 1986. Since then various interest groups have spoken out on the perils of older workers in Canada. More recently the Government's de Grandpré report recommended that all provinces and territories participate in the Program for Older Worker Adjustment. That is exactly what this Bill represents, but the report also concluded that the Program for Older Worker Adjustment, or POWA as it is known, provides assistance only to those older workers involved in major lay-offs. There is no similar support for older workers who are not part of such lay-offs.

• (1530)

It is the responsibility of the Government, in conjunction with the Minister of Labour and his Department, to pursue other avenues of assistance to older workers. This is especially important for older individual workers who do not fall under the mandate of POWA and for older workers who are employed by small companies.

On November 22, 1984, the Minister of Employment and Immigration requested that the Canada Employment and Immigration Advisory Council undertake a study of the problems faced by older workers in Canada, older workers who are unemployed as a result of economic and technological changes that took place in Canada at that time.

Included in the mandate was the examination of the adequacy of current measures to assist older workers and, if necessary, to submit possible recommendations to the problem.

The council noted that the Canadian labour force and the general population was aging. The proportion of persons in the age 45 to 64 group was also growing at a tremendous rate.

The council estimated that there were 4.9 million people in the age groups, 2.4 million of these people were male and 2.5 million were female. They further estimate that there would be 6.7 million in the age group, consisting of 3.3 million male and 3.4 million female workers, by the year 2001. That date that seemed so far away five years ago is now just around the corner.

It is important to note that older workers have a significant characteristic. They remain unemployed longer than workers in other age groups. Even more startling is that over the past 10 to 15 years there has been a decline in labour force participation by older workers, particularly men in the 55 to 64 age bracket.

In a special study conducted by Statistics Canada in January, 1968, to gather information on labour market adjustment experiences, the survey highlighted marked differences between older workers and their counterparts between the ages of 25 and 54.

The study noted that older workers who lost their job experienced much greater labour market adjustment difficulties than younger workers. As of January, 1986, only 39 per cent of older workers who lost their jobs between the 1981 to 1984 period were employed, in comparison with 65 per cent of the 25 to 54 year old group which had obtained employment. In addition, about 41 per cent of the older workers had left the labour force while only 14 per cent of the younger workers had done so. Even the older workers who did find employment took an average of 37 weeks to do so. This represented a period of 10 weeks longer than younger workers.

These are startling statistics. But there is more. Older workers who managed to find a new job suffered a larger loss in remuneration than younger job losers. In essence, remunerations were 12 per cent lower for older workers compared to 2 per cent for younger workers.

When one compares labour force participation in the provinces, it is interesting that in Ontario, the prairie provinces and British Columbia, participation by 55 to 65 year old Canadians was high as of 1986. More than half were in the labour force. In Québec and the Atlantic provinces, the corresponding figure was around 40 per cent.

When older workers are displaced from traditional industries, there is no guarantee that they will easily find suitable employment. This is because of the fact that most new jobs today are in the service sector and these jobs are not comparable in terms of wages. As previously mentioned, displaced older workers who manage to find employment do so at substantially reduced wages.

Education is also a factor for older workers. It can be detrimental. On the average, older workers possess fewer years of formal education. Given this reality, they are at a disadvantage when competing against younger workers in the labour market. Characteristics such as loyalty, conscientiousness and lower rates of turnover are more often than not ignored.

Another misconception is that older workers are resistant to change. According to the research conducted by the Labour Council of Metropolitan Toronto, it was noted that:

> Older workers are extremely interested in learning about the new technology and how it applies to their jobs, and that the success of failure of training or retraining for older workers is closely related to the methods of training undertaken.

I would like now to deal with some other aspects of this legislation. When considering this legislation, one must keep in mind the fact that the present federal Government did not develop the concept of programs to assist the older worker. Therefore, Canadians should not be overly pleased to see legislation tabled almost three years after it was promised by the Government, legislation in the form of a relief package that has many weaknesses. It has so many weaknesses that if they are not watched closely, they may prove to be more detrimental than beneficial.

Canada's older workers are being squeezed out of their jobs, and thus their place in society. This program offers no more in the way of financial assistance to the these Canadians than what existed in the Labour Adjustment Benefit Program which spent $125.6 million from 1983–84 to 1985–86. It is important to note that this program was founded by the Liberal Government in the 1970s.

It must also be remembered that in its February, 1986 Budget the Government cancelled the LAB program and it is only now that we have a new program to assist these older workers.

Currently, at the federal level there are no labour market adjustment programs specifically targeted to older workers. This proposed program for older worker adjustment being discussed today is an income maintenance program.

Income maintenance to older laid–off employees is not a new idea. The Liberal Government initiated the Adjustments Assistance Benefits Program in 1972. Labour Canada developed this program to ease the burden for older employees who were laid off as a result of less restrictive import quotas being introduced into the textile and clothing industries. The program was also in response to the introduction of modernization programs initiated to improve the ability of these industries to compete with competitive imports.

The Adjustment Assistance Benefits Program was further expanded in 1978 as a result of restructuring in the footwear and tanning industries. This came about as a consequence of the then Government's footwear and tanning industry sector strategy.

These programs provided benefits to qualified individuals aged 54 and older who had been employed as production workers in the industry for at least 10 of the 15 years preceding lay–off.

Later in the decade all adjustment measures available to industry and labour were reviewed and special adjustment initiatives were created to respond to the more competitive activity in the industries within Canada. The Labour Adjustments Benefits Program was thus established. In 1982, by virtue of the Labour Adjustment Benefit Act, these Adjustment Assistance Benefits Programs were consolidated. As mentioned earlier, the Government cancelled these programs in February, 1986, and the older workers in Canada have had no assistance programs since then.

I am pleased to see that these workers who fell into the cracks between August 12, 1986 and today will be taken care of with this legislation. It was almost a three year wait, but this typifies the present Government. It has a history of promises that have either never been kept or, if they do come through, there is usually an exorbitant waiting period attached to the promise.

• (1540)

I am quite aware that government Members will argue that Bill C–8, the Program for Older Worker Adjustment, is a program not limited to designated industries as is the Labour Adjustment Benefits Program. They will argue that POWA will cover lay–offs from all private sector industries and commercial Crown corporations. They will say that POWA will assist individuals subject to unemployment as part of a major permanent lay–off and that these lay–offs will be assessed individually taking into account a full range of relevant considerations.

These considerations are to include significant economic disruption in the region, major loss of employment in the industry, lay–offs very large relative to the size of the community, a large proportion of older workers affected, permanent losses of jobs, absence of alternative economic opportunities, no prospects for re–employment of laid–off older workers and no realistic possibility that retraining or mobility will lead to job opportunities.

This does not take into account the older workers who fall through the cracks of POWA. They could include individuals who are not retrainable for a variety of reasons. They could also include any older workers who are not part of major permanent lay–offs. What is a major lay-off? Do we go by numbers of employees in a region or do we judge the severity according to an individual's circumstances?

Under the former Labour Adjustment Benefits Program, keeping in mind it covered designated industries, the criteria for eligibility was the following:

> The number of employees in the establishment must have been reduced as a result of lay-offs, in any 12-month period including the employee's effective date of lay-off by at least 10 per cent or 50 employees, whichever is less.

Once again, what will constitute, in the minds of federal and provincial Governments, a major permanent lay-off? Take, for example a shoe repairman who has been working at the same firm for 35 years. Suddenly the firm goes bankrupt, closes down and he is unemployed. This is a major lay-off for this individual. Will it be a major lay-off under POWA?

The Canadian Labour Congress, in its presentation to the Liberal task force on trade's public forum on adjustment hearing held February 7, 1989, noted that unemployment should be accepted only as a last resort. To this end, the CLC made several recommendations, including the cancellation of the program for older workers and its replacement with a credible program for older workers, Government commitment to full employment, one year advance notice of plant closures required of employers employing more than 15 workers and six months advance notice of plant closures required of firms with fewer than 15 employees.

In addition, the Canadian Labour Market Productivity Centre made a variety of recommendations at the above-mentioned hearings. These included the creation of a nation-wide program for older worker adjustments. As well, the CSN argued that the program for older workers was ineffective and in need of a complete overhaul. They did, however, call for more federal-provincial collaboration in the implementation of adjustment programs in order to remove some of the jurisdictional disputes that arise from their implementation.

To sum up the hearings with respect to older workers, there was a consensus that existing Government programs, particularly the Canadian Jobs Strategy and the Program for Older Workers Adjustment, are inadequate to meet the difficulties facing Canadians who must deal with the prospect of unemployment.

There is another issue that I believe needs to be addressed given the free trade legislation recently passed and the recent mergers and acquisitions which have occurred. What in this legislation prevents any business or corporation from intentionally down-sizing to eliminate not only older workers but their pensions and benefits as well? What is stopping a company from laying off employees between the ages of 50 and 54 and hiring younger and better educated individuals at lower salaries after a short period of time?

Government Members will answer these questions by saying that this legislation is for major lay-offs from a permanent reduction. That is, the company or business will never return to its former level of employment. I believe that business could exploit this program. This is certainly a possibility, given the sweeping economic changes that our country is facing in light of the free trade legislation. Even prior to free trade, it is a known fact that companies would hire management consultants to re-evaluate their companies employees, bringing about slashes to the average workers just prior to their benefits or pensions kicking in.

With respect to the federal-provincial partnership in this new program, I am quite concerned about the claim that eight out ten provinces have supposedly agreed to participate in the program. The two that are presently not in the fold are Ontario and British Columbia. My home province of Prince Edward Island is listed as one of the eight participating in the program, but I would question what degree this participation entails. I have been informed that P.E.I. has only agreed to participate on a project-by-project basis.

I firmly believe that these supposed levels of participation have to be examined in more detail. Presently, we have no idea what each province has agreed to. We only know that it is a 70 per cent federal and 30 per cent provincial financial split.

This federal-provincial participation begs another question. Why is the federal Government foisting the responsibility of older worker assistance programs on to the provincial Governments? It seems to me that most of the major causes of recent unemployment in Canada are the result of federal initiatives. Why then are the provinces obligated to pay? Maybe this is why some provinces have not agreed to participate and why others are only partially in agreement. These are questions that need to be addressed and we should have answers to them.

This also sets a dangerous precedent. Once the federal-provincial agreements with respect to labour adjustment programs are established, it will be very difficult in the future for provinces to refuse any financial responsibility with respect to similar programs.

Just what provinces will most benefit from such a program given the parameters required for eligibility? Once again, the parameters are major permanent lay-offs in private sector industries and commercial Crown corporations, and they must cause real hardship for substantial numbers of older workers.

Given that the principal target groups will be large-scale lay-offs that have a pronounced effect on local communities, it is safe to assume that the majority of the federal allocation of $125 million will go to high density areas, leaving little for the poorer regions that may need it more. What will be the 70 per cent contribution of federal moneys to an area such as Port Hood, Nova Scotia?

The help that this Government says the program will give is only marginal at best for it does little in the way of retraining those nearly retired workers who may still have the aptitude and interest to continue working in areas of their choice.

In conclusion, my colleagues and I in the Liberal Party support the concept of a Bill for older workers, but only if it provides more assistance than the defunct LAB program. There are many areas of concern in this legislation, and unless these are rectified, the Government will once again prove to Canadians that it is unsympathetic to the problems faced by older Canadians who are seeking employment. There must be more done to assist workers, and older workers in particular, who have been displaced by economic adjustments. The Government must be proactive and the Liberal Party will be monitoring its progress in this area.

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to, on behalf of my Party, speak this afternoon and be the lead speaker on Bill C-8, an Act to Amend the Department of Labour Act.

I rise in support of Bill C-8 and I do that with no sense of enjoyment, as one would with a bold new initiative by this or any other Government. A bold new initiative this certainly is not. This change to the Labour Code is an admission by this Government that the unemployment caused by its mismanagement is to become part of the fabric of Canadian life.

Bill C-8 is to assist older workers between the ages of 55 to 64 who are laid off when their employers, those fine outstanding responsible corporate citizens and recipients of billions and billions of dollars from the taxpayers, flee the country or rationalize their operations so they can become more lean or mean in the free trade environment.

Free trade is the economic sulphur dioxide for Canadian workers. When it rains on our employment parade, our citizens suffer economic death. We have to introduce a Bill to protect older workers. I would suggest that the best way to protect older workers would be to make sure they have jobs. Whatever happened to that catch phrase of not so long ago: Jobs, jobs, jobs.

We have heard about the millions of jobs this Government claims to have created. We will talk about them another day. Suffice it to say that the Government has little to brag about when it talks about all these jobs it has created. The way it increases or decreases by 100,000 over a weekend is a constant source of amazement to me. An analysis of the record will show that where the jobs are and the quality of them is a sorry reflection of the Government's view of what is occurring within our society.

We have another indicator as well of the state of the health of the Canadian economy. Not so long ago in response to a question in a different context, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said that if we want lower interest rates, we must have a healthy economy. I would suggest that if what he says is true, and he believes it to be true, then he is indicating as a result of the increase in the interest rates that the economy, over which he is the supervisor, is obviously not in very good shape. A healthy economy is certainly something that we would all be only too pleased to have. I would suggest that the changes to the unemployment insurance benefits for Canadians introduced recently are also a reflection in the Government's view that unemployment is something that is going to be with us for quite some time. It is a reflection of the sorry state of our economy and an admission by the Government that that is so.

It has become obvious that this Government is willing to accept a 6 per cent and more unemployment rate as being full employment in Canada. It used to be considered to be 4 per cent. Even 4 per cent was a concession by the Liberals prior to the Conservatives that zero was not an acceptable rate and that 4 per cent was acceptable.

It is similar to the E-12 which we just went through in relation to the post-secondary education for native students. E-12 in itself was not acceptable policy as far as post-secondary education was concerned and the Government was trying to bring in even more stringent conditions.

For older workers the agonies of unemployment are magnified beyond those of the younger workers. Cut down in their prime earning years, they face longer periods of lay-off, on average 33 weeks as compared to 23 weeks for younger workers. They are able to be less mobile. Nine per cent of them are able to move around the country in search of jobs or to accept employment elsewhere, compared to 18 per cent of those below the age of 54. Retraining for the older worker is something that is proving to be much more difficult. Among the younger age groups, it is evident that somewhere around 18 per cent are able to avail themselves of meaningful retraining. The retraining percentage for older workers is are a mere 6 per cent.

Several years after being laid off, 42 per cent of workers in the 55 to 64 year age group are still not in the workforce. Twenty per cent of them are recognizably unemployed and part of the statistics which we call unemployed. Seven per cent of them work part-time. Among the 42 per cent we find those who have, as they say in modern parlance, fallen through the cracks of the safety net.

I am particularly galled by the phrase "safety net", as if life were a circus, as if workers were on a trapeze just swinging away merrily knowing that there was some safe haven if they should let go of the trapeze and fall. For a majority of these older workers, there is not even any safety net.

Among the 55 to 64 year age group, those who do find work suffer a loss in earnings on an average of 12 per cent. As a portion of the population, the 55 to 64 year old age group is up from 7 per cent in 1976 to 20 per cent today, with the prognosis that by the turn of the century they will be 25 per cent of the population. Their participation in the workforce has gone from 10 per cent a few years ago down to 9 per cent at the present time which is in spite of the slow growth and admittedly—and I admit it very grudgingly because it is so miniscule—a trend opposite to that of the economic growth within the country.

These older workers are my friends. A year ago next Monday, on May 22, 1988, 75 per cent of the people at the plant where I worked were laid off. One hundred and seventy people out of a total workforce of somewhere around 230 were told that they would no longer have jobs at the potash mine where I worked. Many of them were older workers. There was George, not his real name, and one of the smartest men I have ever met. He was laid off for the second time. Hopefully he and others from that plant will be able to avail themselves of this POWA program if they should be considered to be eligible by the powers that be who make those decisions. He was laid off for the second time, fortunately having worked at least 15 years at the plant. He was cut off in the prime of his earning capacity with only three or four years to retirement. This is one of the tragedies of this whole sick economy to which I can attest so well.

• (1600)

There was Peter, again not his name, who was suffering from an industrial accident that he had experienced 10 years ago. He was hassled by the company and the Unemployment Insurance Commission in Saskatchewan. He was laid off with certainly no possibility of being able to attain retraining or employment elsewhere.

These are the older workers. This is the face of unemployment in this land of ours. This is the unacceptable part of what is wrong with our economy. It is something which has to be addressed in a far more meaningful way than the program which is being put in place now, as helpful as it will be for some people.

I met William just yesterday. He had worked for a plant which actually was part of the Chrysler Corporation. He is unemployed today because the plant where he produced components for automobiles has been moved not to one place but to two. Because of free trade, obviously the assembly from his plant has been moved to Mexico and to the United States. Victims of the Free Trade Agreement, undeniably so.

An Hon. Member: It is just a start.

Mr. Fisher: As well, I could not really understand why he would say it, but he said that he thought maybe he should take English as a second language. I have no idea why he would say that. His native tongue was obviously neither English nor French. I understood him quite well. It is even possible he may have been able to make himself understood in French, to which I cannot attest. He felt a guilt because he did not have perfect English or was not perfect in one of our two official languages. This is an insidious part of what the Government is doing to people. Why anyone in that situation should feel any guilt whatever for some kind of an imperfection in the ability to speak the English language is beyond me all together. We see it reflected in changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act. It is starting to seep out there and people are starting to feel—

Mrs. McDougall: Don't give me that stuff.

Mr. Fisher: —guilty because they do not have this total adequacy.

Mr. Allmand: Treat the Opposition like the women's groups.

An Hon. Member: The Minister is leaving.

Mr. Fisher: That is not all, Mr. Speaker. I met Miriam yesterday and guess what she felt guilty about? She is unemployed, but guess what she felt guilty about? I am glad the Minister is staying. She felt guilty about the debt. The Government's message to Canadians is getting out there: "Feel guilty about the debt". The Government is saying: "Feel guilty about the debt. This country is in debt and we have to do something to reduce the debt." The Government has gone so far as to convince people who are unemployed that they are responsible for the debt.

I would like to tell the Government and the people of Canada that my Party and I do not consider those who are unemployed to be responsible for the national debt. Members of the Government opposite, particularly members of Cabinet, are the ones who created this debt. In the four short years since the Government was elected to Parliament it has doubled the total national debt from the country's inception. It is an abomination that the Government keeps repeating things. It is the old adage that if one repeats a thing often enough people will start believing it. It is time Canadians started telling themselves and repeating that they are not responsible for the national debt.

It is this Government that will not tax the corporations. Corporations are paying almost 5 per cent less tax in 1989 than they were in 1984, while the average Canadian taxpayer is paying almost 10 per cent more. I would suggest that a reversal of those percentages would go a long way toward reversing the trend of the economic malady which affects this nation.

What is the Government's response to the plight of these people, this special age group who are unemployed because of its policies? First, in order to be able to avail oneself of the largess within this Bill C–8, one has to be part of a major lay–off. Who defines a major lay–off? It will be determined by two members from the Department of Labour and two from a provincial Department of Labour. One has to have worked 15 years out of the last 20 years in order to qualify under Bill C–8 and to have worked 750 hours in 15 of those years.

I suspect there may be some men and women, particularly in the construction industry, who because of that 750–hour restriction may not be able to qualify even though they had worked in 15 of those 20 years. One has to have no alternative job opportunity, not able to take advantage of any opportunity to move, and one's unemployment insurance has to have been exhausted in order to qualify.

Not everything about this Bill is negative. I do not want anyone to think, with even the percentage of people who will benefit, that the New Democratic Party in any way would wish they were not able to avail themselves of the Bill's provisions. The problem is, of course, that 100 per cent of people will be unable to do so. We will get to the percentage shortly.

Mr. Belsher: You want it both ways.

Mr. Fisher: What about the financing? We are told that there will be $125 million available initially for this program. By way of comparison, the Labour Adjustments Benefit Program which this program succeeded had $50 million available to it. On first blush that looks like a pretty good deal. The only problem is that the $125 million will be available over three years. What we have is a situation where whenever we get a statement from the Government, especially in terms of money and sometimes in terms of time, one has to divide by either three or five, because they work in three–year or five-year programs, to find out what the immediate benefits will be.

• (1610)

A very interesting thing happens when one does that with $125 million. When it is compared with the $50 million available under the LAB Program in 1985, one now has only $42 million available for aid to older workers in 1989. This is from a Government which daily tells us that it is putting more and more into programs to help Canadians. It is a comparison of $50 million in 1984 down to $42 million in 1989.

The maximum levels available under this program are $1,102. I commend the Government for the provision that these workers are able to earn up to $302 a month without being penalized. It is precisely the kind of philosophy that ought to prevail in many of the programs which are extant within this country, and particularly within some of the provinces. I would suggest, since I come from the Province of Saskatchewan, that is so within the Province of Saskatchewan because there a woman on welfare with three or four children has deducted, dollar for dollar, any amount of money she earns. I commend the Government for making it possible for these people to earn money over and above the allowances they will be receiving.

There is some more bad news. The Government's response includes some assistance for its corporate friends. Wonder of wonders. Unlike the Labour Adjustment Benefits Program which POWA replaces, POWA is to be administered by finance and trust companies.

I may be a bit off base, but I do not think so. My suspicion is that trust companies and insurance companies make a profit on services which they render. I would suggest that for the Government to hand over a portion of the money intended to aid our older workers to corporations which are going to make a profit on that money is unconscionable and I would hope it would be changed. We have able people within the Department of Labour and within the Government with as much expertise as we will find in the private sector anywhere. They are eminently able to administer this program as surely as the Labour Adjustment and Benefits Program was ably administered by the Department of Labour previously.

We have to talk about the number of people who will benefit by this plan because as it says one has to be part of a major lay-off before one is eligible. If it is broken down far enough and after the determinations are made, my suspicion is that it may turn out that all of the $42 million in a particular year might not be used.

At the very best, if one takes $42 million and divides it by $1,102 which is the maximum allowable—a maximum, I would point out, that is below the poverty level even for a single person—one ends up with somewhere between 38,000 and 40,000 people at maximum being able to avail themselves of benefits under this aid to older workers.

There are 415,000 Canadian citizens between the age of 55 and 65 who are unemployed. Some 300,000 of them have given up and are not even part of the statistics any more. Some 100,000 of them are not considered to be unemployed. Many of them are working part time. Many others have taken early retirement, which in itself is one of the most degrading things that can happen to the people who are so badly affected by lay-offs in our society today at this age.

I know a certain percentage of them have company pension plans, but if one is 55 years of age and takes early retirement, one is losing one-half of 1 per cent a month under most pension plans. If one looks at it over 10 years, it amounts to a 60 per cent reduction in the amount of pension one is able to collect. If one is not fortunate enough to get into the POWA program, one's financial ability is totally devastated, some 60 per cent of what one expected to attain and what one ought to have been able to attain at age 65. If one is in that age group, one is in the age group who was the most productive during the 1970s. They paid the taxes during the 1970s. They made society affluent, which we who were active within the Canadian society of the 1970s knew so well, yearn again and were promised as a result of technological change.

It is actually 40 per cent, by the time 60 per cent is taken off, of the pension one expected to receive. That is hardly an adequate recompense for a life of good, hard, honest work put into this country.

It is obvious that POWA is not adequate to meet the challenge of providing older workers with the financial resources they require to prepare themselves for retirement, a justly deserved retirement, as I have just said.

My Party and I call on the Government to fund the program for older workers to the extent required that all those affected by this Government's mismanagement be assisted. For the future and from today on we demand that the Government put in place policies which we have long championed in this House and which produce jobs. I would suggest that jobs are a far better solution, a far better way to correct the problem which these older workers are suffering and which of course would obviate the need for a POWA program at all.

These policies are already ingrained very deeply in the societies of many of our more progressive competitors. I know what will be said by Members opposite and by the business community. They will say that we have to get lean and mean in order to be able to compete, in order to be profitable, and in order to be efficient. A good many of our major competitors are already doing what my Party and I are saying ought to be done.

When the Government talks about the need to become competitive and efficient in relation to our competitors, it is not really talking about the progressive competitors. It is talking about those places where we have low wages. It is talking about the places where, for all intents and purposes, we have societies where the workers are often captive of their own Government, unable to unionize and put into free trade zones such as they have in Mexico where wages are low. I would point out that in that context they are really slaves; certainly in this day and age that is all they are. I would also point out that when we become competitors with slaves, as I would suggest the Government thinks we ought to do, that is precisely what we become.

The New Democratic Party and myself suggest that we ought to put into place policies such as pension reform enabling workers from this day forward to carry pensions with them after shorter vesting periods, regardless of who is their employer. Then when they reach perhaps 55, 60 or whatever, and happen to suffer unemployment they will not have to suffer the enormous penalties that people are suffering these days.

We have suggested for a long time that there needs to be a notice of lay-off. Notices of lay-off and notices of closure give people the opportunity to adjust before the occurrence. Statistics show that when people receive notice of lay-off, they are better able to acclimatize themselves to the eventualities of no longer being able to work.

We have been suggesting for a long time that compensation to the communities be put in place, paid for by the employers, not as the Government has suggested under its Community Futures Programs, paid for out of the pockets of the people who are becoming unemployed. We have been saying that lay-offs and closures have to be justified. A grant levy system has to be put in place to ensure that all employers contribute to the cost of retraining. Let me reiterate that the cost of training and retraining ought to be borne by the employer, not as the suggested changes to the unemployment insurance scheme would us move into, that is, the training being financed by the people who are suffering the worst in our society, those who are laid off.

Ironically the changes this Government has made in relation to pension and income severance pay have cost Canadian wage and salary earners much more than will be spent in one year under this POWA Program. I am referring to changes where people are penalized when they receive severance pay when they are laid off or when they take their pension at retirement and are no longer entitled to unemployment insurance.

I would conclude by referring to a notation which I saw in one of the Government's own publications as it relates to older workers. It says: "As a group older workers face the most serious problems coping with displacement. At the very least adjustment among older workers is extremely difficult, and more often than not, virtually impossible". As I said in the beginning, my Party and I support these amendments to the Act, but there are so many shortcomings to it that we would beg the Government to make improvements in it.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, finally we are getting legislation to help older workers who lose their jobs, but unfortunately this legislation is far from adequate. I will explain that in greater detail in a few minutes.

I said "finally we are getting legislation to help older workers" because it was more than three years ago that the Government announced this program. The Minister of Finance, in making his budget address in February 1986, announced that he was abolishing the Labour Adjustment Benefits Program. He was to replace it with a wonderful new program called "Program for Older Worker Adjustment".

Months went by in 1986, and we did not see this wonderful new program. Opposition members started to rise and ask questions on where the program was. We received no adequate answers. There was delay upon delay. Then 1986 passed, 1987 passed and 1988 passed, but once the election was under way, on October 6, 1988 finally the Government announced the program again with a few more details. However there was still no legislation of course; we were in the middle of the election campaign.

If the Government did not have this older worker adjustment program ready on that occasion, it should have kept the old Labour Adjustment Benefits Program in place until the new program was ready. No, it did not do that. It abolished the old program immediately with the Budget of February 1986. It has been some three and a half years and we still do not have the legislation, but at least we have started to debate it. We have gone all this time since February, 1986 with no program whatsoever.

Any reasonable Government would have kept the old program in place, a program which did help older workers when they were laid off permanently. It was not as complete as it should have been. It was not as perfect as it should have been, but at least it was a program that helped older workers who were laid off from work on a permanent basis. The Government abolished that program and promised a new one. As a matter of fact, it gave the impression in the Budget that the new program was going to come on in a matter of weeks, and here we are in 1989 finally debating this new program.

This situation has been allowed to carry on where, the situation where for more than three years we have gone without any program for older worker assistance, despite several reports to the Government pointing out how serious the situation was.

I refer first to a report prepared by the Canadian Employment and Immigration Advisory Council. This council was set up by the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Its report entitled "Older Workers, an Imminent Crisis in the Labour Market" was published in August 1985. In part it read:

> There are now more than 300,000 workers between the ages of 45 and 64 officially and unofficially unemployed in Canada. The unemployment rate for this age group increased significantly after 1981, and then took a major jump early in 1985 at a time when unemployment among other age groups decreased or remained stable. Furthermore older workers stay unemployed longer than their younger counterparts.

This report of the advisory council to the Minister of Employment and Immigration contained 10 recommendations on what should be done for older workers in this country, but the Government did not act on any of them.

We also had a report published by Statistics Canada in November 1987 entitled "Older Workers in the Canadian Labour Market". As a result of a special statistics study, this report pointed out: "Results from the 1986 Census show a rapidly aging Canadian population. This trend has its roots in rising life expectancy, low birth rates and the maturing of the post-war baby boom generation. In 1976 Canadians 55 years or more comprised about 17 per cent of the total population. By 1986, 10 years later, the proportion had risen to about 20 per cent, and by the turn of the century this age group could account for nearly one in four Canadians". That would be 25 per cent.

• (1630)

The report went on to point out that, in 1986, four years after the recession, unemployment among older workers was worse than it had been during the depths of the recession in 1982. The unemployment rate for those older workers had risen from 6.9 per cent in 1982 to 7.3 per cent in 1986.

A moment ago I referred to the report published by the Advisory Council. It published a follow-up report on June 22, 1988, one year ago. In publishing this follow-up report on older workers it stated: "It is evident that the unemployment situation of older workers has not improved since 1985 when the Advisory Council report on older workers was published and, in fact, it has deteriorated". From the report in 1985 to last year in June there has been a deterioration of the situation for older workers.

There have been other reports to which the Government should have been paying attention, but it was not. There is a very complete report on older workers by Gladys Dunn. She prepared a report for the Department of Employment and Immigration. She was an individual appointed by the Department to study this problem. Her report was published in 1985.

Among other things, she pointed out that it is a myth that older workers, meaning workers 45 and older, and in some cases it is defined as 55 and older, are unable or are very slow to learn or to be trained. She demonstrated that that was a myth. She also demonstrated that it is a myth that there is declining mental and physical capacity with age. She proved and showed that there are many things that older workers in that age category can do, and can do better than younger people.

The third myth is that older workers are less productive. Again, that is a myth. Older workers are not less productive. The fourth myth she demonstrated was that older workers have more on-the-job accidents. They do not have more on-the-job accidents. The fifth myth was that older workers are absent more often. Again, that was shown in her report not to be true.

In the last Parliament in 1987-88 the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration, of which I was a member and which has representatives of all Parties in the House, conducted a review of the Canadian Jobs Strategy. It referred to the problem of older workers. In Recommendation 2.7.8 it stated that older workers be identified as a target group under the Canadian Jobs Strategy. Despite the fact that that was a unanimous recommendation of the Standing Committee, it was not implemented.

Another Standing Committee of the House, the Standing Committee on Human Rights, again a committee representing all Parties of the House, put out a unanimous report on human rights and aging in Canada. Among its recommendations was that Employment and Immigration Canada designate older workers, especially those older worker groups prone to long-term unemployment, as a target group for the purposes of the Canadian Jobs Strategy. That was not done either.

There have been many reports and studies that indicated that action was necessary and was essential, but nothing was done for more than three years except another announcement in the middle of the last election campaign.

I have here a report by the Economic Council of Canada entitled: "Managing Adjustment". It also stated that special programs must be implemented for older workers.

I have stories from all over the country which have been reported in the press. In The Hamilton Spectator in August, 1988 there as a story entitled: "Unemployed older workers. Bad enough to lose a job held for years, but governments have done little to help". In the Winnipeg Free Press in August, 1988 there was an article entitled: "Older workers suffer most as industry carries out reorganization". In The Toronto Star on August 30, 1988 there was an editorial entitled: "Treat older workers with more respect", and the article comments on the problems to which I have referred.

That is the situation that prevailed during the last few years while the Government did nothing. We have a rapidly developing economy with many structural changes, with great developments, and technological change which require updating and restructuring. Sometimes this is very difficult for older workers. When plants are closed due to mergers, restructuring, or rationalization and large segments of the workforce are laid off, it has been found that those situations impact more on older workers than on younger workers. For some older workers it is difficult to adjust and retrain.

Some of the reports define older workers and the problems relating to older workers to be that group between 45 and 65. Other reports define older workers as being over 50, and other reports define them as being over 55. Let's be frank, people in that age group, whether it is from 45 or 50 are people who still have heavy responsibilities. Many of them have children in university with very high expenses. Many of them are still paying off mortgages. They cannot afford to be without income. Most of them would rather go on working. They feel that they have to go on working, and they want to go on working, but they cannot find work. There are others who are burned out and need enough help to see them through until they are 65 and collect pensions and Old Age Security.

The situation which impacts on older workers is a serious one. Nothing was done, despite many reports, for more than three years. However, worse still, while this situation was in existence and nothing was being done, the Government was taking action that was making it even worse for those workers. There have been cuts in unemployment insurance. We spent half of the last Parliament condemning the Government for cutting unemployment insurance for people who retired early. There were people in the Armed Forces, in the RCMP, and in many segments of Canadian life who were laid off early, most often against their will, who had paid into the Unemployment Insurance Program and finally the Government changed the rules in the middle of the game and cut those people off.

That action on behalf of the Government was responsible for the defeat of several government Members in the last election. The former Minister of Employment and Immigration, the former Member from Kingston, was the one who introduced the program for cutting unemployment insurance for older workers and people who had forced early retirement. She comes from a city where there are many retired military personnel, personnel from the Correctional Service, and many people who have retired early for many reasons.

Yet, despite those reports which stated that there was a crisis and that something should be done, the Government was going in the other direction and cutting unemployment insurance. From 1984 to 1988 the Government cut training and retraining programs by 32 per cent. The Government cut those programs from $2.2 billion in 1984 to $1.5 billion this year. It increased taxes. In this recent Budget the Government is clawing back Old Age Security, reducing Old Age Security, reducing unemployment insurance coverage, and cutting back on regional development and other things that would help workers who are seeking employment. The Government is finally taking action but the program is inadequate.

• (1640)

The Bill provides that special assistance for older workers should go to workers 55 and over, up to the age 65. I would like to hear evidence before the legislative committee whether the age should be 50 years or even 45 to qualify for this special assistance in view of the reports I have received. One has to consider whether the problems of older workers start earlier than 55, as some of the reports indicate.

Clause 5(1) states that subject to the approval of the Governor in Council the Minister may enter into agreements to provide periodic assistance to older workers who are permanently laid off.

The assistance provided under this legislation is not compulsory or automatic for older workers who lose their work permanently. It is subject to the discretion of the Minister, who may enter into agreements.

I and many others have suggested that when certain conditions prevail in the market-place of a certain community and workers are permanently unemployed, it should trigger an assistance program that is not left to the discretion of the Minister. Unemployment insurance is not subject to the discretion of the Minister. If one is laid off due to conditions beyond one's control, unemployment insurance is paid automatically.

According to this Bill, the Minister may enter into agreements to provide for this assistance. The legislation refers to the purpose of making provision for periodic income assistance payments to older workers permanently laid off. It does nor define "periodic income assistance payments". We are led to believe that this assistance could be up to $1,100 a month, but there is no authoritative statement on that. It is left to the discretion of the Minister and the Government so that we do not really know what range of assistance will be available for these workers.
