Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, most of the points that I wanted to make have been made. The concern that I have and what I found most interesting was hearing the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) and the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) because I am sure they heard the same arguments from the other side of the House, although not in exactly the same format because of course this particular Standing Order has not been used for a long time. But it is interesting to see the burden of responsibility of Government fall so heavily on their shoulders, to hear these arguments for reason and restraint in posing questions to the Government and the tremendous difficulty that that burden is for members of the governing Party. I am delighted to see them shouldering that responsibility. I am sorry to see that they quail such under the strain, but having said that, Sir, I want to suggest a way out of this difficulty.

I believe there is a bit of a problem here, as Your Honour knows and Hon. Members know. If these questions are transferred, they will go on the Order Paper under Notices of Motions for the Production of Papers. Every week the Government will ask that they stand or else they will stand and ask that they be transferred for debate. Then they go into the urn, as the Hon. Members pointed out and the chances of a draw are very slight. The debate on those drawn from the urn is an hour and a half. Then a vote is called, as Hon. Members know, and we are aware that there is a short procedure.

Prior to the change in the Standing Orders, my recollection is, and Your Honour will correct me if I am wrong, that there was at least a day a week in Private Members' Hour when these motions were debated automatically. In other words, there was not the draw on these particular items. There was not on anything, but Notices of Motion for Production of Papers got a particularly generous allotment of time in Private Members' Hour and that is no longer the case.

Given that, the way to resolve this difficulty might be to refer the matter to the Standing Committee on Procedure, Privileges, Elections and Private Members' Business—I may have got the names mixed up. As a member of that committee, I would ask the chief Government whip to consider referring the proposal of the Parliamentary Secretary to treat these questions as Motion for Production of Papers to the committee for consideration. The questions are not going to be answered anyway in any reasonable time. We all know that. If the matter is referred there, then the question of the possible amendment of the rule could be reviewed at the same time to see if there is some way we can provide for an expeditious dealing with questions where the Government does not want to or is unable or unwilling to answer. They could come back to the House and say: "We are unable or unwilling to deal with this question as a question. We will not provide an answer. We think it is unreasonable because it is going to cost $25,000 to do it." Then the matter can be decided here in an expeditious way. Surely we can come up with some means of allowing the Government to do that by way of a recommendation.

While the Government is at it, although I do not want to press my luck, I notice that on the Notice Paper, there is a Notice of Motion standing in my name which proposes an amendment to the same Standing Order dealing with questions. The motion will be transferred into the pile for the urn but it could be carried unanimously today and that whole question of amendment to the same Standing Order which deals with the questions and the number of questions permitted on the Order Paper could be sent to the same committee for study and report to the House. Since it would absolve Your Honour of the responsibility of making a ruling on this issue today and get the matter off to a committee, which could come back and make certain recommendations, it might assist Your Honour in this matter.

Mr. Speaker: First, I want to thank all Hon. Members on both sides for their interventions on this issue which frankly have been very helpful. I will consider what has been said and see if there is a way to resolve this. Just so Hon. Members are cognizant of what the difficulty is and it is important that the public understands this, there are some problems here.

I have been on both sides of this Chamber, as Hon. Members know. I think that all of us who have been here any length of time can accept the fact that some questions that are asked, either deliberately or otherwise, that are vague and difficult to answer. Other questions may be asked which are not vague but are serious and these may be very difficult to answer.

The Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Althouse) just put forward a question. It might be a very difficult task, with the best will in the world, to be able to track down quickly and efficiently all produce which is bought by government prisons, hospitals or other agencies. I see the Hon. Member for Mackenzie is nodding in agreement. There is clearly a problem there.

This rule, which would seem to indicate, looking at the Annotated Standing Orders of which we are all justly very proud, may well not have been used since 1923. Nonetheless it does put the Speaker in a very difficult position. When the Parliamentary Secretary rises and asks that a matter be referred through Order 39(6) to the Speaker for decision as to whether it goes to Motions, the Speaker then has to make a decision which the Parliamentary Secretary probably has spent some considerable pain and anguish in finally deciding, having been told probably by a number of people, look, we have done this and we have done that and are just getting nowhere, we cannot handle the matter.

The complaint that comes in from the Opposition is one which is certainly not unexpected. That is, that once it gets referred to Motions, the probability of it receiving debate on the floor of the House is not great, although I am not saying that it could not happen. We have a procedural process set out. I am conscious of course of the fact, as the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary pointed out, that there have been a number of reforms, and this rule has survived. I am also conscious that the Hon. Member for Mackenzie indicated that the McGrath Commission, upon which he served, had a very clear idea of what they were trying to do and the changes that they did make. The Hon. Member for Kamloops (Mr. Riis) has made some suggestions about working up some kind of a system whereby perhaps Hon. Members could, when the Government feels that it is in difficulty, deal with the matter and take the matter off the shoulders of the Chair. I am also intrigued with what the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands (Mr. Milliken) has said.

The fundamental concern is expressed extremely well and thoroughly by both the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and the Hon. Member for Kamloops and other Members. I will try to return as quickly as possible, knowing that the longer I take, the longer some Hon. Member may not get the answer to a question, whether that question was vague or otherwise, deliberately or merely by inadvertence. I will do the best I can.

I think that this discussion indicates that probably the House should really give the whole matter some further and considerable thought. I want to also say to the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes), who has had a great deal of experience in these matters, that I am indebted for some of the statistics that he put forward. If I remember correctly he said that during his experience of some considerable time, the Government was able to answer about 92 per cent of the questions within the 45 minutes.

Some Hon. Members: Forty–five days.

Mr. Speaker: Forty–five minutes would really be quite extraordinary. In any event, I would think that Members on the opposition side would want to know what kind of questions were the other 8 per cent. The Chair is quite aware of that, too. I will do the best I can and report back to the House as soon as possible.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 38, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: The Hon. Member for Fundy Royal (Mr. Corbett)—Revenue Canada—Use of Social Insurance Numbers; the Hon. Member for Erie (Mr. Fretz)—Canada Elections Act—Request for Study.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

PLANT BREEDERS' RIGHTS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Mazankowski that Bill C–15, an Act respecting plant breeders' rights, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Lyle Vanclief (Prince Edward—Hastings): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise in the House and speak briefly about Bill C–15, the plant breeders' rights Bill. I would like to say from the start that I am quite supportive of the opportunity in a Bill to enable more private research in the plant breeders' field. However, this Bill needs a little work. I look forward to it going to committee where collectively we can make some improvements to it. I would like to take a few moments to discuss some of the concerns that I believe would improve the Bill.

First, I do not believe that in the Bill we have enough assurance that we will continue to have research by Government in public institutions. There is a strong possibility that privatization can take place in that field. Many people in the agricultural community who have concerns about the actions of the Government at the present time on those types of issues come to the forefront again. The Minister made a statement this morning. The Hon. John Wise, a previous Minister of Agriculture, when discussing this Bill in public one year ago made a statement. There needs to be some assurance that the withdrawal of research funds will not continue as a practice of the Government as it has in the last few years.

Another concern I have has already been expressed today. Under this Bill there are 18 years in which the plant breeders' rights would stand. That is too long, in my experience, with the successful life of the majority of plants and seeds. There are some horticultural plants to which it may apply, but my feeling is that after a maximum of seven to ten years, and my preference would be seven years, the collection of fees and royalties should disappear.

Many chemicals have had long royalties and protection. The purpose of that is a valid one. It encourages the long hours and the millions of dollars that sometimes goes into the research and the creation of chemicals. However, once the royalties go off certain chemicals that the agricultural community has used, the cost of that chemical to the primary producer goes down to roughly one-quarter of what it was. When the royalty was applied, one wonders if there was not a little—for the lack of a better word—gouging, or a little over-collecting.

Another concern in the Bill is the reference to a "reasonable" royalty payment. For the protection of the purchasers of those products, and I will refer to them as products, that would be protected under a plant breeders' rights Bill, there should be a definition in the regulations of the word "reasonable". We have all seen what happens when something gets into the hands of one or two people.

Farmers are not against paying for something. Quite frankly, I believe that farmers are prepared to pay for a product as long as it proves itself in the bottom right-hand corner of the balance sheet in reference to that crop or product. Farmers will not be hoodwinked more than once. If they find out that they are paying for something on which they do not get a return, they simply will not go back to the counter and pick up that product again. I feel that 18 years is excessive for royalties.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture is in favour of the Bill. I believe that we also recognize that the Canadian Federation of Agriculture has voiced some concerns. I look forward to having discussions with representatives when the Bill goes to committee.

One of the Federation's valid concerns is the suggestion that only 60 per cent of the royalties that would be collected by institutions and/or government bodies that are doing research and creating new varieties would go back to that particular organization, institution, or government Department. I do not know why only 60 per cent would go back there, when a private company that did the same thing would receive 100 per cent. If 100 per cent goes back to the private organization that does the research, 100 per cent should go back to the public organization as well.

Another concern I have is the reference in the Bill to the establishment of an advisory committee. I agree with that, but I do not agree with the explanation of the duties of the advisory committee and the total control that the commissioner has over the duties of that advisory committee. I do not feel that the duties and the purpose of that advisory committee as outlined in the Bill have sufficient teeth for the purposes that it should serve.

In conjunction with the consideration of this Bill, perhaps we should look at the policies of Investment Canada and strengthen them in conjunction with Bill C-15 to ensure that ownership and control of seed stocks are not unduly concentrated in the hands of too few people. That may be a difficult task, but it is a concern of primary producers and purchasers of the products that would be licensed and the fact that, to a certain extent there would probably be increased costs with the putting in place of the Bill.

There should be a discussion on giving the commissioner, together with the advisory council, the opportunity for compulsory licensing if the holder of the control of one product was abusing that privilege.

The Canadian Federation of Agriculture has clearly voiced a concern about the retaining of germ plasm and clonal banks. I was pleased this morning when the Minister made the statement that a lot of this will be done at Smithfield, which is not too far from my home. I also appreciate the fact that all that needs to be kept cannot be kept in the climatic situation in Smithfield, and in the Bill there needs to be some assurance that, because Canada has the type of climate it has, it be assured that we keep those. Once they are lost it is impossible to have any plant breeder go back and pick those up and make use of them in the creation of new and better production tools that can be used in the agricultural community.

Perhaps it is lack of knowledge on my part, but we should double check the Seeds Act. That is a concern of the Canadian Seed Growers Association which also supports the Bill. That association has two major concerns. It feels that there has to be more assurance that contributions by the Government to research, as is presently being done, are not withdrawn over a period of time. It could very easily be seen by a Government as a way of saving money and cutting costs. Then the purpose of the Bill would be somewhat defeated. By doing that, we would slowly hand over the control of the creation of those plants and seed stocks to multinational companies, which we do not necessarily want to do. I believe that we should work very hard to guard against that.

The Canadian Seed Growers want to ensure that the registration of those seeds and new crops is done at least as well as it is under the present method in Canada, which is an excellent method. They have to prove their worth. Many things in Canada today are simply marketed without being up to scratch, and people may very well be misled. Before any organization, public or private, attempts to regain their costs under the opportunities provided by this Bill, we must make sure that they prove their worth.

I look forward to further discussion on this Bill in the committee.

Mr. Ken G. Hughes (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, judging by the debate we have heard so far today, the sex appeal of the question about the future of plant breeders' rights is undeniable. I do not want to understate the importance of Bill C-15. I too look forward to the discussion of this topic in committee.

In principle we are talking about tapping into the private and personal initiative and the benefits therefrom to ensure that all of society gains from it. I believe this legislation concerning plant breeders' rights will deliver a considerable economic benefit to this country. Once passed, it will give plant breeders financial incentives to produce improved varieties.

One result will be more and better varieties to improve the economic state of our agri-food industry. Much of our agricultural industry in recent years has suffered in the face of poor growing conditions, low prices, and unstable markets. As a result, we must do all we can to improve the lot of the agri-food industry as a whole.

In Canada, there is strong support for plant breeders' rights among plant research scientists in universities and the federal Government, as well as in other research institutions. Support also comes from the operators of privately-owned Canadian companies which breed such crops as corn, soybeans, cereals and forages. Support comes from farmer-owned co-operatives who do breeding work, and various farm organizations. We are talking about institutions and people with a direct interest in agriculture as a business, as a way of life, and a place of employment.

Concerns have been expressed in some quarters, some of which we heard today. I am sure we will hear some of those discussions in committee as well. Some may like the essential ideas in the legislation but may want to ensure the retention of the public system by which new agricultural varieties are registered for sale. This ensures the merit of new varieties that come into the marketplace from whatever source.

In this connection, let me note the 1985 amendments to the Federal Seeds Act, strengthening the registration system. Others want assurance that publicly run plant breeding programs will continue.

At Agriculture Canada, the home of commercial plant breeding in the federal Government, breeding programs for all significant crops will continue. Every year new plant varieties flow from the research efforts at Agriculture Canada. This is an important part of the research environment into which we hope to inject plant breeders' rights. Others want royalties collected on Agriculture Canada varieties reinvested in the Department's plant breeding programs.

Although it is not part of the Bill we are debating today, Treasury Board has agreed that 60 per cent of all royalty revenue will be returned to the research budget at Agriculture Canada. It is worth while reminding ourselves that under plant breeders' rights there will be plenty of opportunity for variety developers to recover capital investment in research through the royalty collection system. Varieties can also be protected from duplication by competing firms. This will, I hope, encourage small seed trade companies currently without a breeding program to start such a program.

It will also allow small companies to compete with larger seed companies more effectively when they come up with attractive varieties. I believe this Bill will promote development of a greater diversity of plant varieties available to growers because of the royalty incentive for new varieties.

I remind the House that there are well known dangers in any agricultural system dependent on too few plant varieties. If all farmers grow the same variety of a single crop, that crop obviously is vulnerable to an environmental catastrophe because of common weaknesses such as disease, insects or climate.

It is important that farmers have genetically different choices in the crops they grow. This reduces the possibility of common devastation in the fields.

As we debate plant breeders' rights, I want to remind all Members that we have a strong and stable system for developing new plant varieties in Canada both within the Government and outside of Government. One part of this system is dedicated to protecting and conserving the genetic components of plant life in the form of seeds and in the form of growing plants. Responsibility for this very important activity lies primarily with our federal Agriculture Department. It operates a gene bank, the Plant Gene Resource Centre at the Central Experimental Farm in Ottawa. That gene bank contains some 90,000 different seed types. These seed samples come not only from Canada but from other parts of the world.

The resource centre acts as the Canadian co-ordinator for collection, classification and conservation of plant genetic materials. This centre not only preserves material collected in other countries, but also older varieties no longer grown here in Canada. They are carefully preserved. In this way we do not lose genetic resources that may prove of great value in the future. They may help in the development of improved crop varieties to serve both the agri-food industry, our producers, and the country as a whole.

Parallel work is carried on at the Agriculture Canada Experimental Farm at Smithfield, Ontario. Here, genetic diversity is preserved in the form of raising a wild variety of apple and other trees as well as shrubs. Agriculture Canada is now in the process of strengthening its gene bank operation, partly through staff additions. The principal aim is to ensure that Canada will always have access to the widest possible range of genetic components of plant life. Strengthening the gene bank operations will also allow us to more fully meet our responsibilities to the international community in the collection and preservation of plant gene resources.

I want to refer to a comment made earlier by the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster) on the question of regional collection of genetic material in Canada. It has come to my attention that the research branch of Agriculture Canada has no less than 24 establishments across Canada involved in plant breeding activity. Some 129 professionals are involved directly in plant breeding or associated programs. The establishments and breeders maintain collections of genetic material which are used as tools in developing new lines or varieties. This extensive genetic resource base continually receives part of improved plant material which, when released, is incorporated in the appropriate central plant gene repository in Ottawa. If the material is of clonal nature, it is stored at Smithfield.

The Experimental Farm Stations Act will be amended shortly to ensure conservation in Canada of all germ plasm including plant, animal and microbial germ plasm.

I want to take a moment to respond to some of the points made earlier in debate by the Hon. Member for Mackenzie (Mr. Althouse). He referred to the Dark Ages and also mentioned that he has concerns about this way of handling intellectual property. I believe he suggested that this whole approach is wrong for all of the civilized world. I wonder which dark age the Hon. Member spends his time in. In which decade does he have breakfast? In which epoch does he do his thinking?

• (1640)

I simply make the point gently and with all respect to my experienced and honourable colleague that he should consider moving into, and drag his Party with him, this modern world. I refer to the world of modern, advanced research, the world of competition internationally, from which none of us can hide. It is the world in which progressive, forward-looking Canadians who wish to be masters of their own fate, of researchers who want to make a meaningful contribution to society in Canada, not to mention a meaningful contribution to the world. It is a world of researchers who might be encouraged and private investors who will finance the strengthening and deepening of research and development in this nation. It is the modern world of producers whose very economic viability depends upon having the most up-to-date technical and scientific means to compete in production.

I encourage Hon. Members opposite to shake their fossilized vision of this world and join us in seeking to build a modern Canada that has access to all the modern capacity and scientific means of competing in production.

This Bill will help bring Canada into the modern world of agriculture. It is a very sophisticated and complex world. It will help researchers and producers. It will help keep Canadians competitive and at the forefront of international agriculture. In the long run it will help all of Canada and all Canadians.

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Macleod (Mr. Hughes) on his speech. He obviously speaks with some knowledge of his subject. I understand that he comes from a riding where agriculture is a significant industry. Perhaps in his reply to my comment he can tell us how much plant breeders' rights are in fact of importance in his riding. I understand it is largely ranching country. Perhaps plant breeders' rights are not so significant as they would be in a mixed farming area.

Mr. Mazankowski: What have you against ranching?

Mr. Milliken: I think ranching is a great occupation. The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) knows that I would not suggest that anybody engaged in agriculture of any kind is not in fact engaged in a very worthy occupation and pursuit. In fact, I have heard it said that there would be a hope that some Hon. Members on the other side in particular would return to that calling after the next election. There were high hopes that it would happen after the last election. However, time will tell.

In any event, the Hon. Member for Macleod could perhaps also comment on a question I asked one of his colleagues earlier. It concerned the question of the length of time the Government has chosen to give protection to plant breeders in this legislation. An exceedingly lengthy period of time has been proposed for the protection of these rights. One of my questions was why the Government did not consider a shorter period in this legislation, possibly a seven-year period of protection instead of an 18-year period. As a Member who clearly has considerable influence with the Government, or at least who ought to after giving a speech like the one he gave, I would invite him to share with the House his views on this subject and tell us if he does not think that seven years is better than 18.

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, it is with some real pleasure that I respond and help fill the empty cup of knowledge that my colleague holds.

Canada is interested in joining the international union of countries which have agreed to accept common terms for intellectual property in respect to plant breeders. Most agriculturally developed countries belong to the international union. There are now some 18 countries which belong to it. They include Australia, Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Hungary, Ireland—this is alphabetical for the benefit of my hon. friend—Israel, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands, New Zealand, South Africa, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland, the U.K. and the U.S. Canada would like to join that group of countries to ensure that we respect the intellectual copyrights of those researchers who are involved in this field of endeavour.

My hon. friend might be interested to learn that one of the reasons why it is important to establish an 18-year time frame for a plant breeders' right is because it takes a long time to regain from the market-place the value that is invested in creating new kinds, new strains, and new varieties of plants. The intent of this proposal is to allow successful varieties to pay for the many failures that one encounters in the field of research.

My hon. colleague I know has always been keen on doing research. I know that he has probably encountered many failures in doing that research for the many successes which he has come across. He will recognize the important principle that not every plant that one would breed, not every success that one would achieve, is from the only try to be made. One has to have several tries before a success can actually be achieved. As a result of that Canada would like to join these 18 countries that I have just listed in recognizing the rights of plant breeders.

Mr. Milliken: I was talking about 18 years, not 18 countries.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I have just a brief comment to make following on the remarks of my colleague from Kingston and the Islands. I want to let him know that I have dealt with a couple of seed companies. Dominion Seed House of Canada was in my riding. I have now turned that over to my friend from Halton—Peel. Oseco Seeds in my particular city has been lobbying for this particular Bill for a considerable time.

One of the things I wanted the Hon. Member to know is that a great number of the seeds that we use at Oseco Seeds in Brampton come from the West. As a matter of fact, the West is a great supplier of seeds and does help the economy right across the country.

This is a very important Bill not only for the rural parts of our community but for those plant breeders, those who create new forms of plants which not only help feed but help beautify the country. I want to add my support for the Bill and congratulate my colleague for some brilliant remarks.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, in closing his remarks the Hon. Member for Macleod (Mr. Hughes) said that he thought that we needed plant breeders' rights because it would speed up development of plants and the progress that plant breeding can take. Yet a moment ago I heard him defending the right of the plant breeder under this particular law to have a monopoly over that variety for 18 years.

We have had the experience in this country of not having plant breeders' rights. I cannot think of a wheat variety that has ever lasted 18 years. I cannot think of an oat variety that has lasted for 18 years.

Why is he proposing to be behind a piece of legislation which on the surface seems to be intent upon delaying the move from one variety to the next by imposing this 18–year monopoly power over the control of the variety?

We have had varieties go out of fashion and be supplanted by better varieties in less than four or five years under the current system.

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raised a couple of points. One is the suggestion that I was calling for this kind of a change because it would speed up the development of plant varieties. I think he has perhaps twisted that. What I was saying was that it would develop, strengthen and create more research and development in the country, not necessarily speed it up. We all know that when it comes to any particular research program, it takes a long, long time. It takes a good variety to last 18 years. There are varieties, such as Thatcher which has been around since 1935. There are some varieties that have lasted for an extended period of time. This program does not stop people from developing and using other varieties. All it does is ensure that there are royalties collected for up to 18 years which allows the researchers to regain the investment that they have made in the initial program.

• (1650)

I believe that that is the essence of the debate today. The essence of this whole matter is that there are tremendous up front costs in research and development in this field. It takes a long time to develop any variety. It takes a lot of money, energy and commitment. It is only fair to ensure that those people have some prospect of recouping some of that investment in time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Supplementary question. The Hon. Member for Mackenzie.

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, if that was the intention, as the Hon. Member has said, of this legislation to permit other breeders to use the patented variety, why does the legislation not provide a complete automatic licensing provision, instead of being written as it is, to automatic licensing at the discretion of the registrar? I would feel much more inclined to believe the Hon. Member's description of the legislation if the legislation did not provide the registrar with the discretion to limit who can get the new variety in spite of being willing to pay the licensing fee.

Mr. Hughes: Just a quick response to that, Mr. Speaker. The Commissioner clearly would deal with any sorts of questions like this. I am sure that my hon. colleague will want to raise these sorts of questions in committee and we will have the opportunity to discuss them at further length.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Leeds—Grenville, question or a comment.

Mr. Jordan: I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that anyone would deny the need for this kind of protection for those who would choose to invest their time and their talents. Relative to this would be the protection that an artist would need for his or her product and an author would need for his or her product.

I am wondering if the parallel does not stop there. We are dealing with something quite different when it is something which could become a basic life commodity. We are talking about quality, and perhaps quantity, of future developments in food products. I do not think that we can put them in the same category at all. There is some risk that profit orientation might become the point at which we would or would not allow someone to control further developments among strains of grains, foods and fruit which could up the level of quality of life.

I do not think that anyone would deny the need for some protection. If we do not have some protection, who is going to invest? Quite often what happens, if we look at the record, is those who would claim that this is their invention, their investment and their brain power, have had an awful lot of Government support in many instances to get there. When it suddenly is about to break open and become a new strain, they claim it as their own. I would want some assurance that those who would claim such a record of a new development, have not got well along the road with a lot of Government support. The source of Government money being of course only one source, that of the people and they would deserve to have that taken into account.

What is to prevent those who would have this under their private domain from releasing it to the multinational corporations? They could actually tie up future development, trying to home in on what is considered to be their territory when a lot of people have made a big investment. I think the risk is there. I am not suggesting that we could go without any legislation, but I believe that we should have some precautionary clauses built in to protect the economy, to protect the quality of food and the standard of living for all of us.

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, it is important to keep in mind that most of the publicly-funded research and development in this field is done at Agriculture Canada. Agriculture Canada retains the copyright and retains the benefits of that investment for the period of the existence of that plant breeder's right. Clearly, nothing is perfect. We will have to look at all of these questions closely. The Hon. Member raised a couple of questions that are very, very hypothetical. I would not want to spend a lot of time talking about these sorts of hypothetical "what ifs". We would like to get it into committee and get on with discussing it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Northumberland on a question or a comment.

Mrs. Stewart: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment. It astounded me that my colleague across the floor would refer to the modern world and our place in that modern world, as if the 17 countries and Canada represented the only countries in the world. The comment that I have to make about Bill C-15 makes reference to the Third World. We can all support the need for plant breeders to have some rights. I consider plant life and germplasm to be a natural resource which belongs to all of the people in our global community. It is not the exclusive right of plant breeders in Canada and the 17 countries which belong to the union.

There is nothing in this Bill to protect the countries of the Third World. I do not mind protecting the rights of plant breeders here but I think it should be balanced with a protection of peoples of the other countries of the world who represent four-fifths of the world's population, and who have the greatest food needs and food problems.

I have been very concerned in my experiences in the Third World in dealing with multinational corporations and their taking over of seed production and marketing world wide. I have seen the very negative effects that have taken place when these seeds were introduced into Third World markets and development situations. I have watched poor farmers in these countries receive gifts of seeds from these multinational corporations, and then find that they were totally unable to produce a crop because they could not afford the complementary chemicals and fertilizers required to produce a crop.

When I worked on a committee that selected projects for Africa, trying to address the disaster situation in Africa, we had to be very vigilant to ward off the introduction of western nations' seeds into that country because of the vulnerable situation which these seeds put these countries into.

I would ask the Member if he does not feel that there is the need to balance the rights of breeders here in Canada with Third World needs?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Macleod. He has 30 seconds.

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, I would be delighted to wrap up in 30 seconds. The Hon. Member suggests that there is nothing in this Bill to protect the Third World. There is also nothing in this Bill that will harm them. There is no reason to expect that any single legislative initiative in this House is going to address all of the concerns that afflict other countries in the Third World and other nations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated.

It being five o'clock the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Member's Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

YOUNG OFFENDERS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Jim Karygiannis (Scarborough—Agincourt) moved that Bill C-229, an Act to amend the Young Offenders Act (murder), be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure in knowing that the Government has decided this issue is important enough to receive consideration in this House. It is the express desire of Canadians from coast to coast to see changes made to the Young Offenders Act.

In the past several months we have seen the Young Offenders Act receive widespread media and public attention. The Act, in general, seems to be working fairly well when dealing with the very young. Credit must certainly be given to the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) for having overseen the implementation of the Young Offenders Act during his term as Minister of Justice. For example, youths charged with minor offences are being dealt with in a manner that is acceptable both to the youth and to society as a whole.

It is interesting to note that more youths are being sent to correctional facilities under the Young Offenders Act than under the Juvenile Delinquents Act, which it replaced. However, the problems arise when the judicial system is forced to deal with young offenders who commit serious and violent crimes.

One of the problems we have noticed lately is the practice of adults employing youths to commit crimes on their behalf. Since the penalties for young offenders are considerably more lenient than for adults, these adults use youths to do everything from delivering narcotics to shop-lifting and robbery. The advantages to adults are twofold.

First, they know that even if the young offender is caught by the police, his sentence will be short enough that it will only be a brief time before he is back out on the street and in the employ of the adult.

Second, by using a youth to commit crimes on his behalf, the adult avoids the risk of being caught. This is clearly a situation that our society cannot tolerate. Not only does it contribute to an over-all increase in the crime rate, but it also exposes youth to the dark world of crime which is certainly in no one's best interest.

The sentencing provision of the Young Offenders Act can definitely be singled out as one of the causes for the current situation. The lenient sentences available to the courts make a mockery of our judicial system. Young offenders certainly have little respect for the system that gives them little more than a slap on the wrist. In fact, the low sentences actually encourage youths to break the laws since such low sentences can hardly be considered a reprimand.

In an age where youth gangs are becoming increasingly visible and more and more prone to violent acts, society needs measures in order to deal with the escalating tendency for youths to commit criminal acts. As far as the most serious crimes are concerned, the Young Offenders Act is even less able to distribute fair and equal justice to young offenders who are charged with such horrible crimes as murder. As the Act stands now, judges can only impose a three-year maximum sentence for youths convicted of murder. At this point you may ask yourself the following question: Why is it that an adult convicted of murder can look forward to 25 years in prison with no eligibility for parole, while a young offender convicted of the same crime can be walking the streets again after serving only three years? Obviously, there is a huge disparity between these two sentences, but unfortunately this is the way the system operates.

If the sentencing provisions of the Young Offenders Act are not bad enough, the Act adds insult to injury by allowing the youths themselves to decide whether or not they wish to receive psychiatric counselling.

Let us pause here for a moment and remind ourselves with whom we are dealing. We are dealing with children who obviously cannot be expected to make major decisions alone. Yet, the Young Offenders Act will have us believe that a 14 year old is mature enough to be able to decide whether or not psychiatric counselling is in his or her best interests. The reality of the situation is simple. It is often the young offender who needs counselling the most who refuses it. Therefore, every effort should be made to ensure the young offenders are encouraged to undergo such counselling when deemed appropriate by authorities.

One way which the Young Offenders Act attempts to deal with young offenders who are charged with a serious crime, such as murder, is a provision which allows a youth Court judge to have a murder case transferred to an adult court where the penalties for murder are much stiffer. Unfortunately, this is a good idea that has turned out to be an administrative nightmare.

First, we are faced with the fact that judges have huge discretionary powers over which youths should be transferred to adult court and which should be tried in youth court. While it is clear that this is no easy task for a judge, it is made even harder by the fact that no criteria exists which judges can use in making their decision. Therefore, judges are allowed to use whatever criteria they wish. This has resulted in a situation where, in one instance, in the Ontario Provincial Court a judge denied an application for a transfer of a youth charged with murder to adult court on the basis that the youth was "an average student and a good athlete". What kind of criteria are these? Such decisions serve only to make a mockery of the Young Offenders Act and ordinary citizens to lose faith in their judicial system.

Second, we have a situation in this country where each province has decided on its own whether or not it is appropriate to transfer young offenders to adult court.

Provinces such as Ontario and Quebec have demonstrated an unwillingness to use the transfer provision on the grounds that the adult prison system is too harsh for the young person and does not provide an opportunity for rehabilitation of the young offender so he or she will emerge from prison worse off than on going in.

On the other hand, provinces such as Manitoba and Alberta have no hesitation in using the transfer provision, citing the need to protect society as the most important factor to be considered in any transfer application.

What the law seems to be saying to our youth is that if they wish to commit murder they had better do it in Ontario or Quebec where they will get off with only a three-year sentence. Clearly, there is an urgency to make the system more uniform and more fair where the law is the same no matter in which part of the country one finds oneself.

After reviewing the deficiencies in the Young Offenders Act, I have taken it upon myself to introduce amendments to the Act which I believe will go a long way in protecting society and in dealing more fairly with today's young offenders. I will now go through these changes.

First, the three-year maximum sentence must be changed in order to reflect the seriousness of the crimes being committed by youths. Therefore, I feel that a maximum sentence of five years less a day more adequately reflects the desire of society to feel protected from violent young offenders.

Second, I am proposing that all youths, 14 years of age and older, charged with murder be automatically transferred to adult court. Not only will this serve to make the current system more fair, it will also reflect the distaste of society for this most despicable crime.

Automatic transfers will mean that youths will be dealt with in the same manner as adults. Therefore, the current provisions of the Young Offenders Act of not disclosing the identity of a young offender will no longer apply as it is in the interest of society, in fact, it is the right of society to know the identity of the young offender.

Automatic transfers will absolve judges of having to make the difficult decision of whether or not it is proper to transfer a young offender to adult court. It will also create a uniform system in which a youth charged with murder will face the same sentence in Vancouver as in St. John's. In order to protect the young offender properly, I have stipulated that any young offender convicted of murder in adult court will not have to face the adult prison system until the age of 18, at which time he legally becomes an adult. Until that time, the youth shall serve his time in a facility currently used for the custody of youths in order to ensure the safety of the young offenders.

While many people may urge that the incidence of youth charged with murder is so small that changes to the Young Offenders Act are unwarranted, I can only say this to them: Just ask the victims' families about how they feel about people serving only three years for the murders of their loved ones. I can assure Hon. Members that the response would be that they do not feel that justice has been served.

Furthermore, the changes to the Act that I am seeking are necessary in order to reinstate public confidence in our judicial system. Potential young offenders must realize that society does not look favourably on the commission of illegal activities. Youths must learn to respect the criminal justice system, but if the Young Offenders Act remains unchanged, they will continue to laugh at it.

For those who say that nothing can be done for the victims of young offenders, I have this to say: We can do something for these victims. We can show that we have learned that youths who commit murder are entitled to receive stiff sentences. How many more senseless killings must occur before the Government realizes that the Young Offenders Act must be changed? Too many have perished already. This is why I am pressing for an immediate vote on Bill C-229, an Act to amend the Young Offenders Act. The changes to the Act must be implemented now so that Canadians will be assured that we can continue to live in a caring and safe society.

In closing, I want to thank you for listening to me, Mr. Speaker, and I would urge Hon. Members not to drown this Bill but to let it go to a legislative committee. Society deems that we need changes. We need them now, not a few years from now.

Mr. Bob Horner (Mississauga West): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on Bill C-229 submitted by the Hon. Member for Scarborough—Agincourt (Mr. Karygiannis). There is no question that the issue underlying the Bill is one that we all must take seriously. I was therefore very pleased to hear of the commitment of the Government of Canada in the Speech from the Throne to thoroughly examine the Young Offenders Act and amend it as required.

While my words may be misinterpreted, I feel compelled to say that the issues posed by youth involved in the crime of murder are complex and defy simple solutions, so I fear that the attention that a few very sensionalized cases have attracted may make us feel compelled as legislators to silence the issue with quick amendments. In my opinion, Bill C-229 is a quick and ill thought out amendment.

Before we move to amend this legislation, I think it may be useful to stand back and reflect briefly on the process of reform leading up to the passage of the Young Offenders Act. I recall that the process of study and review of the previous Juvenile Delinquents Act commenced in the early 1960s and was actively continued throughout the 1970s with a Bill, several major reports and extensive consultation. What stands out in my mind particularly is the fact that Bill C-61, the Young Offenders Bill, was unanimously passed by the House of Commons in the spring of 1981.

While I do not wish to dwell on this, the point is that the overall approach of the Act was soundly endorsed, not only by Parliament, but by a broad cross-section of professional associations, interest groups and individuals involved in juvenile justice. While those provisions dealing with youth involved in murder may have since proven problematic for some provinces, any changes that we as Parliamentarians may contemplate should take into account the overall approach and philosophical underpinnings of the Act.

It is in this regard that one important aspect of the Hon. Member's Bill distresses me. The Bill addresses in two separate ways, as I understand it, the issue of appropriate sentences for youth charged with murder. The first would increase the sentence available to the youth court to five years less a day, whatever that might mean, but this disposition could only be ordered for 12 and 13 year olds. All other youth if charged with murder would automatically be transferred to adult court. The result, if convicted, would be that these youth would be subject to the same sentences as adults, life imprisonment without parole eligibility for 25 years in the case of first degree murder and 10 years in the case of second degree murder.

I do not wish in any way to diminish the gravity of the offence of murder and the irreparable loss that the families and friends of the victims must endure, but I cannot help but believe that this outcome for all youth, regardless of the circumstances of the offence and the offender, is unwarranted. I do not understand what purpose such a proposal would serve. Certainly, I recognize that such a sentence would provide for protection of the public for that short period that the youth would be in custody, five years less a day. It would also reflect, I suppose, society's repugnance for the crime of murder. I do not understand, however, why the Hon. Member considered it necessary to subject all youth to adult sentences without room for any distinctions to be made. I recognize that there may very well be hardened or hard-core youth whose past records of violence and the viciousness of their actions in the charge before the court necessitate long-term removal from the public if for no other reason than the protection of our communities necessitates it.

However, I must question whether the Hon. Member has satisfied himself that all youth involved with murder require a life sentence.

From time to time, one hears of murder charges being brought in family situations where, for example, a youth murders a parent in what seems to be a desperate attempt to put an end to what has been a long-term subjection of the accused or another family member to the violence and abuse of the victim. Surely such a case is distinguishable from the case of the chronic offender with a long history of violence.

While I am certainly not advocating taking the law into one's own hands, I am questioning the justice of sentencing such a youth who is a victim in his own right to life imprisonment with parole only possible after 25 years. I think this requires much more consultation, and I know that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) is looking forward to meeting with Ministers of Justice from across Canada to look at proposals for studying this at length.

What will 25 years in a penitentiary with adults convicted of crimes serious enough to place them in a penitentiary as opposed to the provincial correctional system due to a 14 or 15 year old or, for that matter, a 16 or 17 year old? In my view, and I certainly do not profess to be an expert, one could justifiably conclude that our communities would be faced with a far greater threat to public safety upon the release of an adult in his or her forties having spent his or her adolescent years and a substantial portion of his or her adult years in a penitentiary than would be the case if the youth had been placed in a carefully structured adolescent program.

We must, I believe, determine what it is that we should be seeking as Parliamentarians in the reform of the present provisions. While certain provisions of the Young Offenders Act have been sharply criticized, it is my sense that the basic philosophical approach taken in the Act has been endorsed. If I am correct in this, then it would seem that the principles of protection of the public and rehabilitation of the youth wherever possible must guide whatever reform is necessary.

While the Hon. Member's Bill would secure protection of the public for that short period of the youth's incarceration, his approach appears to ignore the principle of rehabilitation. I say this with the knowledge that one of the proposals would enable the adult court to order a transferred youth who is serving the first part of his adult sentence in a juvenile facility to be assessed. With all due respect, this concern appears misplaced for it would seem that the issue of amenability to treatment is one that should be central to the consideration of whether a youth should remain in the youth system or be transferred to adult court.

Linked to this proposal is the one which would make treatment mandatory where an assessment so recommends. While this proposal may appear at first a blush to respond to the needs of a youth and reflect a rehabilitative goal, the long-term benefits of a treatment regime followed by 20 some-odd years of incarceration appear questionable. In short, it is my view that the Hon. Member's Bill requires further reflection. Without further information to substantiate what appears to be a radical departure from the principles of the Act, I would feel very uncomfortable taking the path that he suggests.

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, I would like to comment on the Bill presented by the Hon. Member for Scarborough—Agincourt (Mr. Karygiannis) concerning the possibility of amending the Young Offenders Act.

All the citizens of our country, and especially the people of Québec-Est, are well aware of the importance of the Young Offenders Act and its impact on young people who have been in trouble with the law.

This legislation creates a special status for young people. It provides that although young people are responsible for what they do, they cannot be considered responsible to the same extent as adults. Because of their dependent status and their level of development and maturity, they have special needs and require advice and support, but also monitoring, discipline and supervision.

Society is afraid of delinquency. It is also afraid of violence. However, it has understood the need for rehabilitation. The treatment of young persons who are in trouble, in institutions provided for that purpose, should not only be tolerated, it should be actively sought, approved and supported.

It is not easy, however, to deal with the problem of rehabilitating young people. It is a task that should become the responsibility of everyone. I am convinced that with this proposal, the Hon. Member for Scarborough—Agincourt wants to improve the situation and promote measures that are more effective and more efficient in helping young offenders and at the same time protect the public.

For many years, Canadians have acknowledged the need for rules of criminal justice specifically for young people, as opposed to those that apply to adults. That is why we have a Young Offenders Act, and we take great satisfaction in the fact that at the international level, it is one of the most progressive pieces of legislation in the field.

It is progressive, but it is not perfect. Recent unfortunate incidents have shown that the legislation must be improved. We agree, but not in haste and not indiscriminately!

The amendments proposed by the Hon. Member for Scarborough—Agincourt are not realistic and fail to take into account some very important factors.

First of all, the Hon. Member suggests that all young persons accused of murder after attaining the age of 14 be heard in ordinary adult court. This would mean that the age difference, the circumstances of the offence, and so forth, would no longer be considered. It would also mean rejecting principles that are nevertheless well established in the Act, such as holding young people responsible for their acts, not in the same way as adults, but as young people who are developing and maturing.

It would also mean rejecting the principle that young people not be punished in the same way as adults; the young person's degree of maturity could no longer be taken into consideration.

It would also, Mr. Speaker, mean eliminating the principle that young offenders need not only supervision, discipline and control but also support, assistance and advice, because of their dependency and their degree of development and maturity. The Young Offenders Act clearly states that these requirements, especially those related to delinquent behaviour, determine the nature of the advice and support that the young person must receive. With this Bill, all this help would be denied to the young person.

The Hon. Member's Bill also raises the problem of increasing the charges—the more serious the offence, the stricter the penalty provided by the Criminal Code—and decreasing them—to avoid the severe penalties prescribed in the Criminal Code. Neither of these procedures is desirable or acceptable. Furthermore, if the young person is found guilty of an offence less serious than murder, he will not be able to benefit from the juvenile court system and will be treated differently from the others. It must be supposed that this situation would probably be challenged under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The Hon. Member for Scarborough-Agincourt also suggests that in case of murder, the maximum penalty for a young person of 12 or 13 be increased to 5 years less a day.

Because it is less than five years, if only by one day, Mr. Speaker, a jury trial is not required. It would be very hard to accept a child of 12 or 13 being put in a hearing room where he would have to face a judge, two lawyers and twelve jurors, not to mention the public. I am convinced that the Canadian people would not find the sentence appropriate to the crime committed, relatively speaking. Furthermore, it would mean increasing the penalties for all offences, adding to the present problem of too many young people in detention. Finally, limiting this proposal to young people of 12 and 13 would certainly raise objections under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

I do not believe, Mr. Speaker, that the Hon. Member's Bill reflects the complexity of the situation of young offenders, especially the application of penalties and the purposes of rehabilitation.

One might think that public safety is enhanced by longer prison sentences, but one must not lose sight of the real possibility that long prison sentences have harmful effects on young people, lead to greater criminality and worsen their moral, emotional, psychological, social and even financial situation. This result would be contrary to the purpose of the Young Offenders Act.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would remind you that several provisions of the Young Offenders Act are now being thoroughly reviewed by the Department of Justice, with the cooperation of the provinces and territories. I think it is essential to know the results of this important review before proceeding with any amendment to the Young Offenders Act.

[English]

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to participate in the debate this afternoon on this important subject of how we as society deal with young people who have committed criminal offences, in some cases very serious criminal offences and in some cases the most serious of all, the offence of murder.

I had the honour as a spokesperson for justice for my Party of participating in the debates on this legislation, both in the House in the early 1980s and in all of the committee proceedings which resulted in a Bill which was adopted unanimously by Members on all sides of the House. My colleague, the Member for Scarborough—Agincourt (Mr. Karygiannis), has proposed Bill C-229 as he is entitled to do in his capacity as a private Member of this House. This is a very important part of the proceedings of this House and one which I certainly respect. But I think it should be clearly understood that this legislation proposed by the Liberal Member for Scarborough—Agincourt does not in fact have the support of his colleague, the former Liberal Solicitor General and the current spokesperson for justice for the liberal caucus. the hon. member for york centre (mr. kaplan) disagrees fundamentally with his colleague, the member for Scarborough—Agincourt on this legislation, as he is entitled to do. I think it is important to note the fact that the hon. member in proposing this bill is not speaking for his caucus but rather is speaking for himself. Indeed his colleague who does speak on matters of justice, disagrees with the approach which is being suggested here.

It is also important to put this in an historical context. The Hon. Member himself has admitted and recognized that his Bill was drafted following a shocking murder in his constituency in April, 1985. A family of three were brutally murdered; a mother, a father, and a young daughter of seven years. Following his conviction in February, 1986, the offender, a 15-year-old Scarborough youth, was sentenced to a maximum term of three years in prison and was recently released.

All of us can understand the horror that was felt, particularly by the family, and by all members of the community at the sentencing in that particular case. We have to be very careful not to use that one case as an argument for the types of sweeping changes that have been proposed by the Hon. Member for Scarborough—Agincourt (Mr. Karygiannis). Let us for a moment look at the facts of that case.

In that particular instance there was no application for transfer because the Crown did not apply for transfer. The Crown was certain that the youth court judge would accept a plea of not guilty by reason of insanity, because that plea was supported both by the Crown and by counsel for the defence. Had that plea of not guilty by reason of insanity been accepted, the 15 year old would have been committed indefinitely for psychiatric treatment. That was not done. In fact, the Crown's decision not to apply for a transfer was fatal.

The youth court judge, a Cecil Ball, in fact stunned not only the Crown but all those who were watching, by ruling that the boy, who was a devil worshipper and had carved the satanic symbol 666 on his own chest with a knife, was sane when he shot those three people. Obviously, that was a decision which shocked all those who were watching and certainly it was in those unique circumstances that this sentence was arrived at. I share the concern about the sentence in that particular case.

However, we have to be cautious. I suggest that it is premature for us to be embarking upon the sweeping changes which have been advocated by the Member for Scarborough—Agincourt and which are disagreed with by his colleague, the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan).

The Hon. Member referred to the question of youth gangs. The reality is that youth gangs are a concern in a number of jurisdictions in Canada. However, they can be dealt with, and be dealt with firmly and effectively under the existing provisions of the Young Offenders Act.

Contrary to the view of the public that this Act has resulted in lighter sentences, the reality is quite the opposite. In fact, studies have shown that under the Young Offenders Act, there are more and longer custodial sentences. For example, there is evidence in Ontario that 16 and 17 year olds who were formerly dealt with under the Criminal Code rather than under the Juvenile Deliquents Act are receiving harsher sentences under the Young Offenders Act. It has been suggested that young offenders are being punished more severely under the new Act than adults who are charged with a comparable crime. Those are the facts. We must be very cautious to deal with the facts and not with myths.

One of the very serious problems with the Hon. Member's proposal is that it would remove entirely judicial discretion in dealing with young people aged 14 years of age and over who are accused of murder. For example, the Hon. Member's Bill would treat equally a 17 year old enforcer who killed someone for failing to pay a drug debt, who clearly should be dealt with in adult courts, and a 14 year old abused child who kills her abusive father in a fit of anger, rage and despair. The Hon. Member's Bill would force the courts to deal with that 14 year old girl in a manner which would allow no discretion whatsoever which would require a life sentence with a 10-year minimum before even eligibility for parole. That is the effect of the Hon. Member's Bill. Certainly, that elimination of any judicial discretion is one to which we take very strong exception.

We should recognize that the Supreme Court of Canada will be ruling on the whole question of transfers under Section 16 of the Young Offenders Act. It is premature for us to move ahead in this Draconian way without having had an opportunity for the court to clarify the provisions of that Act.

Yes, there are concerns. There are serious disparities in the application of transfer provisions by region in Canada. A young person charged with murder is much more likely to be transferred to adult court in Manitoba than they are in Ontario or Quebec. One-third of all successful transfers in Canada have taken place in Manitoba alone, and many of the rest occur in my own Province of British Columbia and in Alberta. Transfers are rare in Quebec and Ontario. We must look at that.

However, we must also examine the availability of treatment resources. They must be made much more equal across Canada. If we are serious about the level of crime among young people in our society, we must stop the hypocrisy of provincial and federal Governments in denying resources to deal with the causes of crime among young people.

I note that my own Province of British Columbia is threatening to close the only residential drug and alcohol program for teenage addicts. That is shameful. We should be putting more resources into assisting young people who are addicts, whether they be drug addicts or alcohol addicts. Instead, we are cutting back on those programs and we will pay the price as a society.

I have an article from the Ottawa Citizen with a headline: "Troubled teens low on long waiting list". That article points out that children who are abused by their parents must wait in some cases for months because of the chronic shortage of resources to deal with victims of abuse, whether it be sexual abuse or physical abuse.

There is no excuse in a civilized society for us failing to respond to the cries of our young people, young people who are abused, and then when they lash out in desperation and engage in criminal acts, according to the Hon. Member for Scarborough—Agincourt, we throw them into jail with adult offenders. We all know some of the consequences of that.

The approach suggested by the Hon. Member is fundamentally misguided. We should be putting more resources into prevention of crime among young people. We should be recognizing the concerns about regional disparities. If necessary, we should also recognize that the present choice which confronts judges between a sentence of a maximum of three years for murder, or a maximum of life with no parole for 25 years, may in fact be too harsh. Perhaps there should be provision, as has been suggested by Professor Bala of Queen's University, for some discretion in the hands of the judge.

You are signalling that my time on this issue is coming to an end, Mr. Speaker. I would appeal to the Hon. Member to reconsider this legislation, to consult with his colleagues, consult with those in the field, and to recognize that the legislation is premature.

We as a society have a responsibility to our young people not to condemn them to the adult penal system, but where there is hope for rehabilitation to seize that opportunity to work with the young people and to do what we can to ensure that they do become productive citizens in our society. Prevention is the key and recognizing that there must be a different approach. That is not the response of the Hon. Member for Scarborough—Agincourt. For that reason, I speak strongly against the proposed legislation.

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I want to say that being present in the House today I was asked to second my colleague's Bill this afternoon. Affirming what was stated by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Burnaby—Kingsway (Mr. Robinson), I felt that it was my responsibility to do so in that I respect the right of all my colleagues in the House to have time to express their opinions on various subjects. However, that does not mean that I support the Bill of my colleague.

In my own riding and in my own acquaintance I have many friends and colleagues who are involved in trying to deal with the Young Offenders Act. Many of them have expressed great frustration with certain aspects of it. I do have the opinion that we must review the Young Offenders Act, which is going to be done, and look at several aspects of it that bear revision, not merely the transfer of young offenders. People have expressed to me great frustration with regard to the anonymity aspect of the Young Offenders Act, and the ability of young offenders to reject psychiatric treatment. Victim's families are very frustrated by some of the inadequacies of the Young Offenders Act and the court's legal systems in trying to help youth and protect victims and victims' families.

My colleague, in introducing his Bill, explained himself, in his own good words, why his suggestion was inappropriate. It is true that there are youth who are exploited by hardened criminals. This is a fact and we cannot have youth bearing the injury for that injustice.

We must address this Young Offenders Act. I cannot agree with my colleague's method of redressing it, but I would urge the House to reconsider the Act.

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, the Bill tabled by the Hon. Member for Scarborough—Agincourt (Mr. Karygiannis), to amend the Young Offenders Act with respect to its provisions for murder addresses a very difficult issue.

I say this because the answers cannot be found just in our criminal laws. Rather, this issue is one that seems to demand that we meet our obligation as federal Members of Parliament to ensure that the criminal law is sound. But this issue also makes important demands of our provincial and territorial colleagues who have the responsibility for ensuring sound administration of the Young Offenders Act.

I begin my comments with this thought because, in my view, the past several months bear testimony to the fact that there is considerable confusion, if the media coverage of this issue is any indication, as to which government is responsible for what. It would appear that we as legislators have come to receive all the pressure for resolving the problem of youth involved in violent crime.

I do not want to in any way wish my remarks to be interpreted as an attempt to slough off what is our rightful responsibility. I do, however, believe that we might exacerbate this problem unless the approach we take to this issue is more global than sentencing change alone.

The public is fully entitled to have the best protection from crime, particularly violent crime, but it strikes me that some of the recent events speak as much if not more to administrative issues of programs, access to treatment, and security of the actual institution that young offenders are being housed in, as they do to the appropriateness of the law. These matters are provincial concerns.

They must be addressed as well. I was very surprised to learn of the differences of view amongst the provinces and territories as to the appropriateness of the current law for youth charged with murder. One must question what some jurisdictions are doing differently to give them the confidence that their communities are being adequately protected.

With respect to the Minister of Justice's handling of this issue, he has to be commended for the approach he has taken. It is my view that he has quite properly resisted the urge to propose quick amendments and has made it clear that he will await the results of a comprehensive study being undertaken by federal and provincial officials. I understand this study has the support of all provinces and that it is being conducted in the shortest timeframe possible.

It seems eminently reasonable to conclude that it would be premature for Members of Parliament to proceed with amendments to the Young Offenders Act in the absence of such a study. This is one of the reasons which makes me uncomfortable here today with the Private Member's Bill before us.

There are other points, however, which also cause me some difficulty. With respect to the sentencing approaches he proposes, I would first like to deal with the suggestion that the sentence be raised for 12 and 13 year olds. It does seem that this approach would offer more flexibility for extending the benefits of the treatment program to seriously disturbed youth, should that extra time be required.

My question to the Hon. Member is why such a program should not be considered for older adolescents? This would, of course, not be appropriate for certain youth whose past histories, age and circumstances of the current offence indicated that longer incarceration is required to ensure protection of the public. But it does seem viable for certain youth who may be older than 12 or 13 years of age.

The other proposal to have all youths 14 years of age or older automatically transferred to adult court seems unnecessarily rigid. I acknowledge that its strengths are that it reflects societal condemnation of the crime of murder and it also provides for protection of the public during the period of the youth's incarceration, but from my perspective, it may raise more problems than it will solve. While I do not wish to hold myself out as any expert on this issue, I thought of one of the reasons for having a distinct law for youth was that adolescents should generally not be held as responsible for their actions as adults. Therefore, from a common sense point of view, surely those of us who are parents place different expectations on our children based on their ages, and discipline them in ways that reflect this.

While I hope nothing I say here today will be misconstrued, for certainly the offence of murder is the gravest crime, I do not believe it should be necessary to subject all youth convicted of murder to sentences of life imprisonment. For the first offenders of first and second degree murder, the adult courts have no discretion and therefore must impose life imprisonment. Further, the Criminal Code establishes the minimum period of the sentence which must be served before the offender is eligible for parole. The result is that a 14 year old who is transferred and convicted of first degree murder would spend a minimum of 25 years in a federal penitentiary. Although I do not know a specific case, I suppose there may indeed be a case of a 14 or 15 year old for which there appears to be no other alternative than to impose such a sentence. This would indeed be a sad comment, but I acknowledge that our criminal laws must possess sufficient latitude to be able to respond to such a case where the paramount interest must be the protection of our communities.

I would be reluctant to accept, however, that this is the case for all youth who have been convicted of murder. In this regard I would ask the Hon. Member for Scarborough—Agincourt whether he is in possession of information that would suggest that protection of our communities demands the approach that he has taken. If so, I am at a loss to understand why certain provinces have expressed the view that the current law is adequate.

Hopefully the study which is being done on this matter will shed some light on this very important question.

The Hon. Member's Bill would require transferred youth who are subsequently convicted of murder to spend the first portion of their life sentence in juvenile facilities. Presumably this is to allow the young offender to be among peers and to be protected from the adult inmate subculture in which youthful offenders are vulnerable to homosexual abuse and so on. Once again, the approach recommended by the Hon. Member seems unnecessarily rigid. If the person is so dangerous that he requires a life sentence, then one must question whether it is appropriate to have such a youth housed with other youth who may be serving custodial terms of anywhere from three months to a couple of years.

While I suppose there may be candidates who would adjust well to the juvenile facility and be better protected from older and hardened inmates, the Hon. Member's proposal would have all youths transferred to adult court serve the first portion of their sentence in a youth facility. I also note that the proposal does not provide for the views of the correctional people to be taken into account for such matters as physical security.

In concluding, I would have to adopt the viewpoint of my distinguished colleague on this side of the House that this Bill would benefit from further review. In fairness, the complexity of the issue is clear. It also seems clear that as Members of Parliament we will need considerable information before us to do justice to this very important matter.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity today to comment on Bill C-229, introduced by the Hon. Member for Scarborough—Agincourt (Mr. Karygiannis). The purpose of this Bill is to amend several provisions of the Young Offenders Act.

Perhaps I should make it clear that the present Government has already started an exhaustive review of this legislation, under the supervision of the Department of Justice and with the co-operation of the Provinces and the Territories. This review will provide some invaluable information on situations that are peculiar to the various regions in this country and highlight problems that must be dealt with. Subsequently, it would be appropriate to consider amending the legislation to make it more effective and more realistic.

The law must protect the public, and in this case, protecting the public means rehabilitating young persons who are in trouble. Canadians have accepted this approach for a long time. It is why we have the Young Offenders Act. It is exceptional legislation because it is not general and does not apply to everyone. It is exceptional because it creates a different system for young persons. It is also exceptional because of its unique spirit and philosophy. And it is exceptional because it considers the special needs of our young people.

The Young Offenders Act considers certain elements that are important in striking a balance between the interests and security of society and the needs of the young person.

Once these elements have been put into perspective, we must remember that the interests of society include rehabilitation as well as society's security.

It is also in the interests of society to allow a young person to gain the necessary maturity to be able to deal with life and the real world. Protecting society may mean two things: the obligation to prevent the young person from committing criminal offences and the obligation to meet his need for help.

The Young Offenders Act provides a number of ways to respond to these two obligations, but they no longer meet with unanimous approval, and that is why the legislation is now under review, as I said earlier.

The Hon. Member has decided to present a bill suggesting a number of amendments which he believes would make the Young Offenders Act more effective.

With all due respect, I think that the Bill as introduced does not stand up to detailed analysis.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to give you my comments. First of all, the Hon. Member has taken a look at the practical aspects of enforcing the Young Offenders Act. He suggested that a young person, transferred to adult court and found guilty of murder, serve part of his life sentence in a juvenile institution, up to the age of 18. This suggestion ignores the fact that it may be entirely inappropriate, because of the high risk involved, to place a young person in that kind of institution.

By obliging the court to place a young person in an institution for juveniles, the legislation also ignores the importance of the correctional aspect: controls or lack of them, the "bad apple" factor, risk to other juveniles, and so forth.

More importantly, the proposed legislation tends to forget that the needs of a young person sentenced to life imprisonment will be totally different from the needs of a young person sentenced to maximum of three years: psychological support to help fight the despair, depression and anger caused by the prospect of life imprisonment, therapy to understand the causes and consequences of the situation, occupational support, and so forth.

The Hon. Member also submits that the court should order a young person, transferred to adult court but placed in a juvenile institution, to be assessed. With all due respect for the Hon. Member's views, this suggestion does not seem very realistic, since it completely ignores the needs of the young person.

It would be far better for the Youth Court, as is the case today, to request an assessment before deciding whether the young person accused of murder should be transferred to ordinary court.

The Hon. Member forgets that an assessment enables the court to identify the reasons and causes of deviant behaviour and the ability of the juvenile court system to treat and deal with these causes in the young offender. If a transfer has already been ordered, an assessment is useless.

The Hon. Member suggests making treatment of young offenders compulsory. I think this approach is contrary to our statutes and to the Criminal Code, as well as the provincial legislation on mental health, since it ignores the concept of consent. This kind of obligation would also draw protests under the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The Hon. Member for Scarborough—Agincourt also suggested that the records of young people found guilty of murder but not transferred to ordinary court be preserved. I think this suggestion warrants further study.

[English]

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I too have examined with interest and care the Private Member's Bill put forward by the Hon. Member for Scarborough—Agincourt (Mr. Karygiannis).

First, I share the concerns very ably expressed by the Hon. Member for Mississauga West (Mr. Horner), the Chairman of the Standing Committee on Justice. He outlined to the House, and I would like to point out as well, some of the pitfalls regarding some of the suggested changes to the Young Offenders Act.

What the Hon. Member is doing among other things is suggesting an unrealistic time frame for us to proceed with amendments to the Young Offenders Act, particularly proceeding at the present time.

Let me say something about my colleague, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) on this matter. I think he should be commended for, among other things, the very strong stand he has taken on the issue of the Young Offenders Act, notwithstanding the very real pressures he has had to respond to from his first days in this new portfolio including, I might add, the murder of a young woman in his constituency for which a young person has been charged.

While the Minister has publicly expressed his intention to examine thoroughly this issue in as short a time frame as possible he has also indicated the necessity of achieving a substantial degree of consensus among the provinces and territories. Assuming such consensus will be achieved, it is my understanding that the Minister will seek to move amendments in the fall. I think that is something that the Hon. Member who has proposed this Bill should consider seriously.

Along with other Members of the House and, indeed, our constituents, we are quite concerned about this matter. However, I am sure he is aware of the fact that in changes to the Criminal Code, or changes to an Act such as this, we are relying upon the provinces and the territories to administer this Act on our behalf. Something which has been encouraged and developed during the past four years of this present administration is that when we are expecting the provinces to administer an Act then it is only reasonable to consult with them.

In that regard you would be aware, Mr. Speaker, of the fact that there is a study that has the approval of all the provinces that is ongoing at the present time. They are looking at trying to develop a consensus, first among themselves, as to what the problems are, and then how best we can attack those problems.

I am sure the Hon. Member would be interested to know that this will be something that will be discussed at the upcoming meeting the federal Minister of Justice is to have with his provincial counterparts. It is a reasonable approach.

While the Hon. Member may be impatient for change, and he has very legitimate concerns, I believe he should wait at least for the outcome of this meeting. As I say, the Minister has said publicly that we are taking a very close look at this matter and will proceed expeditiously with it.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 38 deemed to have been moved.

REVENUE CANADA—USE OF SOCIAL INSURANCE NUMBERS

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, back in 1964, there was a system adopted by the Government of the day to identify pension and unemployment insurance claimants called the social insurance number system. From 1964 to 1967, social insurance numbers were used exclusively for those two purposes. In 1967, the Government decided that it would be expanded to be included as an identifier on income tax returns.

Since 1967, up until 1988, it was included for a whole host of reasons. It was used as an identifier for people who were making applications for fishing licences, for people who were applying for financial assistance, for people who were travelling abroad and a whole host of other things. It got to the point where it was out of control. Indeed, it was of such a concern that the Government decided last June it was going to do something about it. I will refer to that in a moment.

In my opinion, this should be of deep concern to anybody who has any concern for their personal privacy. In June, 1988, it was determined by the federal Government that it would be utilized for the identification of certain financial information with reference to the purchase of securities, T-Bills, stocks and bonds, stocks traded in minerals and precious metals and things of that nature.

At that time, it was also determined that the Government was going to move to eliminate the use of social insurance numbers in a host of other areas. I would just like to quote from a press release that came out from the Treasury Board of Canada on June 8. The Treasury Board President of the day, Pat Carney said: "Many Canadians feel threatened by the use of social insurance numbers as a universal identifier. With the rapid development of computer technology there is a growing concern that the SIN may be misused for linking personal information in ways that may pose a threat to personal individual privacy."

This is exactly the point that I was attempting to make with the Minister. I do not believe that the Government moved far enough when it took the initiative to eliminate the utilization of social insurance numbers for a whole lot of different things, some of which I have just previously referred to.

The difficulty, as I see it, is that it is not necessary for the Government to utilize social insurance numbers when individuals are making applications primarily through private concerns by a paper. The reason I say that is because Revenue Canada has alternate methods. As a matter of fact, it has primary methods, that it can identify the billions of dollars that are earned from investment income in this country. It is just now utilized by the Government as a back-up to systems that it already has in place.

The distressing part about it is that now people are going to be fined by the Government. At least, that provision is in place, that people can be faced with a $100 fine if they do not provide that information.

The interesting aspect of this is that senior citizens who now feel that they should have a secure place in our society are primarily those individuals who are expressing concern about the utilization of their social insurance number by a criminal element or unscrupulous individual. There is the potential in this computer-related society and technologically advanced world in which we live for people to gain access to information that they might not otherwise have access to, particularly in the private sector. Federal institutions are protected by Acts of Parliament. There are other institutions, such as banks that are regulated by federal authority as well. But private corporations are not nearly as restricted in their utilization and the way in which they handle social insurance numbers as are other authorities. It is linking social insurance numbers to private financial information with which I have great difficulty and with which many other people have also. A social insurance number can track all kinds of things, such as criminal records, school records and all types of financial information.

I just want to read an excerpt from a letter that I received from a lady who resides in my constituency. She is a senior citizen. Her name is Mrs. Lydia Scott. She lives in the Village of Gagetown. She writes in a communication to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and I will just quote it in part:

> I don't approve of my number being known all across Canada and I want my Government to know it makes us old "folk" not very comfortable to have our SIN splashed all across Canada.

That epitomizes the concerns expressed by senior citizens. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that a former and very respected Prime Minister of this country, the late Right Hon. John G. Diefenbaker when it comes to this sort of thing must be spinning in his grave.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleague raises the issue of the security of personal and confidential information provided by individuals to the government. I wish to reassure my hon. friend and say, as the Minister of National Revenue said in the House on April 18, that taxpayers should not be concerned or feel vulnerable because they provided their social insurance number on their income tax return. Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that Revenue Canada (Taxation) uses the social insurance number only as permittted by law and only when it is essential for the fair and consistent administration of the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member correctly stated that last June, the Government started to implement its commitment to reduce the use of the social insurance number as a universal identifier. The Government announced its intention to restrict the use of the social insurance number by federal institutions to the administration of income tax, pensions, social programs and benefits and specific federal Acts. This decision was the result of a government-wide study of the use of social insurance numbers. Mr. Speaker, the Government, recognizing that the social insurance number was often used for purposes other than those for which it was intended, asked that it not be used in many federal activities: for example, citizenship applications, credit checks for federal programs and commercial permit systems.

Since 1967, individuals are legally required to enter their social insurance number on their income tax return, thus facilitating the processing of returns, requests for adjustments and enquiries. It is true, Mr. Speaker, as my hon. colleague pointed out, that tax reform has increased the number of cases where individuals are required to provide their SIN for income tax purposes. For example, financial institutions must record the SIN on the information statements they produce to report individuals' investment income. Penalties are provided for non-compliance.

The purpose of this legislation, Mr. Speaker, is to make the administration of the tax system efficient by improving the processing of returns and compliance with the requirements of the Income Tax Act, because under this Act, all forms of income must be reported. This fair and consistent enforcement of the provisions of the Act for all taxpayers encourages voluntary compliance, the basis of the self-assessment system.

Mr. Speaker, I want to assure Canadians that this need to obtain information so that we can provide taxpayers with services is accompanied by appropriate provisions with respect to confidentiality. Confidentiality is obtained through the enforcement, control and strict respect of the access-to-information procedures. Canadians need not have the slightest concern about the protection of the confidentiality of personal information.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT—REQUEST FOR STUDY

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, on May 3, I posed a question to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) on reform to the Elections Act. I believe that amendments to the Canada Elections Act are required to ensure that all Canadians eligible to vote have the right to do so.

The Hon. Member for Don Valley West (Mr. Bosley) has already introduced Bill C-204, a measure that seeks to ensure that urban dwellers, like rural voters, have the right to vote on election day. The Hon. Member for Welland—St. Catharines—Thorold (Mr. Parent), in a recent Member's statement, also expressed his concerns that many of his constituents lost their right to vote because they were not enumerated. Many of us experienced the same problem in the last election.

Many of these problems were addressed and would have been resolved if the amendments to the 1987 Elections Act had passed through the House of Commons. Indeed, I recently asked this question, in May. The Minister responded by saying that the Government was examining this issue very closely to see whether in fact the Government could bring in emergency legislation to deal with that particular issue and that the Government was also looking very closely at the terms of reference for the commission as well as names of people who would serve on the commission.

One of the most cherished and fundamental democratic rights that Canadians have is the right to vote, the right to vote for the candidates and political Parties of their choice. This right was denied many eligible voters, frustrated, angry Canadians who found to their dismay that they were not enumerated when it came time to cast their ballots.

Nearly three out of four Canadians voted in the last federal election, but I am told that thousands of Canadians missed the opportunity to do so. Not only individual residences were not enumerated but entire apartment complexes and streets were bypassed. For example, an apartment building was missed in London, Ontario, and approximately 65 senior citizens at a nursing home in Regina were not permitted to vote because they found out too late that they were not enumerated.

An experienced volunteer who has worked in many of my election campaigns told me that he felt there was a 300 per cent to 500 per cent increase in complaints of eligible voters who found out too late that they were ineligible to vote because they were not enumerated. If the onus for exercising the right to vote rests with the individual, why was there so much dissatisfaction?

Consider the remarks of Mr. Jean-Marc Hamel, Canada's Chief Electoral Officer who said:

> People were far more conscious of their rights this time. And indeed, individual Canadians are more inclined to fight for their rights, including going to court for them.

That sort of conviction impresses upon me just how important an individual's voting privileges are. Did this dissatisfaction occur through ignorance? Was it through negligence or through carelessness on the part of enumerators? In some cases, perhaps this was true. However, it has been mentioned that the present system of voter enumeration has not kept up with the dynamics of our society. Cracks or flaws were exposed that may have made the process of enumeration impossible for enumerators to do their jobs adequately. For example, in urban areas where there is a large ethnic population, communication may be poor because the enumerator and the voter do not speak the same language. Another contributing factor is the tremendous growth of new residential areas which may indeed be unknown to the enumerator. It may be simply that no one is home because both spouses are working. This is an increasing phenomenon. Unfortunately provincial and in some instances municipal elections were held so close together that many voters were under the mistaken impression that once they were enumerated for the municipal or the provincial election, it carried over to the federal election.

Although the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms provides the right to vote to every Canadian citizen, there is no mechanism in the Act to permit Canadians living outside of Canada to exercise that right. There are exceptions as we know for members of the Canadian Forces, public servants, their dependents, teachers and administrative and support staff to the Canadian Forces to vote under special voting rules. But there is no mechanism by which a former constituent of mine, a Canadian now living in England, is allowed to vote. Bill C-79 contains provisions to enable qualified Canadians residing outside of Canada to vote in federal elections. The Bill includes provisions for disenfranchised Canadians as in the case of the constituent I mentioned earlier.

Canadians paid $37 million for a service that fell far short of meeting the expectations of all Canadians.

Canadians have confidence and faith in our democratic system. It must not be undermined by an antiquated system of enumeration. Surely there must be alternatives such as permanent voters lists that would be updated as frequently as possible to ensure that there are no oversights, no surprises and indeed no shocks when Canadians who are eligible to vote can do so.

Mr. Murray Cardiff (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Government has long recognized the need for reform of Canada's election laws. In June 1987, the Government introduced Bill C-79, "An Act to amend the Canada Elections Act and other Acts in relation thereto".

The Chief Electoral Officer indicated in his 1989 report that the amendments contained in Bill C-79 would, in large measure, have brought the Canada Elections Act in line with the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. In addition, those amendments would have introduced more flexibility into procedures to revise the preliminary lists of electors and would have expanded the rules for proxy voting. If those provisions had been adopted, a substantial number of otherwise disenfranchised electors would have been allowed to vote in the last election.

Unfortunately, these and other important amendments contained in Bill C-79 were not adopted prior to the last election. It is of course a serious matter when a single elector is unable to exercise their democratic franchise as a result of not having been enumerated. It should be noted, however, that according to Elections Canada, approximately 99.39 per cent of eligible voters were registered to vote in the last general election.

The Government remains committed to reforming our electoral laws and to making voting easier and more accessible to Canadians consistent with the provisions of the Charter. In order to facilitate the process of developing amendments which can be supported by Members on both sides of the House, the Government announced in the Speech from the Throne that a commission of inquiry would be established to make recommendations on changes to the electoral laws. The establishment of such a commission was recommended by the Chief Electoral Officer in his 1989 report. As indicated by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) on May 3, 1989, the Government is currently examining terms of reference as well as the potential make up for the commission.

REQUEST FOR ROYAL COMMISSION

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, the parade goes on at Canada Post. The parade of allegations of deplorable management, sexual harassment, bribery, fascist tactics, human degradation, unfair dismissal, and reprisals against employees. This parade of allegations started in Toronto and is now clearly evident in Ottawa.

Yesterday, I listened to an employee who worked in security for Canada Post. He stated that wallets placed in the postal system for safe return to their owners were stripped of cash and then discarded at the instruction of supervisors. These wallets often contained drivers' licences and other proper identification but still were not returned by Canada Post. He also alleged that keys with tags issued by the War Amputations of Canada organization were often discarded as scrap metal.

The losers in this deplorable internal battle in Canada Post are the Canadian people. Canadians deserve a postal system that operates properly. I demand the Minister carry out an unbiased investigation of Canada Post. The Minister must investigate these allegations through a royal commission.

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, the behaviour of some Members from both sides of the House during Question Period is totally unacceptable to the people of Canada. Not only are we calling upon ourselves the disgust and justifiable disillusionment of all Canadians, we are in danger of bringing this House and our institutions into disrespect.

Therefore, I offer you my total support and I respectfully request and urge you to use every rule and custom at your disposalto stop the outrageously long preambles, declare unacceptable the innuendo and character assassinations, and demand that both questions and answers be precise, tough and courteously put and answered.

NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION

ELIMINATION OF SHORT-RANGE NUCLEAR WEAPONS

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, the much vaunted agreement that was reached yesterday at the NATO talks as a result of negotiations between the Americans, the Germans, and other NATO countries in our opinion has one fatal flaw. It is predicated on a guarantee that there will be no elimination of short-range nuclear weapons.

It seems to me that any negotiation and any agreement worthy of this planet would have been one at least to head toward the elimination of these weapons. I think the Government of Canada, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) are not doing themselves any service by boasting about an agreement in which they had a part, the essence of which is the preservation of short-range nuclear weapons.

Short-range nuclear weapons are the most dangerous kinds of nuclear weapons because they have to be used within minutes of any kind of incident. They are precisely the kinds of weapons the Government should be committed to removing, not partially reducing and thereby preserving.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—St-Michel): Mr. Speaker, I rise in this House to express an overwhelming Canadian point of view in supporting and encouraging the restraint and tolerance being demonstrated thus far in China.

I am particularly impressed by the spirit of democracy expressed by His Excellency Wan Li, Chairman of the National People's Congress, during his recent stay in Canada, and support the commitment he has made to: "firmly protect the patriotic enthusiasm of the young people in China".

I am also heartened by the tolerance shown by the People's Liberation Army. It was not lightly that a captain said: "We will not shoot the people. We are very tolerant".

I ask the Government of Canada to encourage the Chinese authorities to end martial law as soon as possible in order to progress toward greater democracy and tolerance in China.

FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

INCLUSION OF GEOLOGISTS

Mr. Al Johnson (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to express my concern for a very serious problem that arises out of certain definitions in the Free Trade Agreement.

Annex 1502.1 of Schedule 2 in the agreement lists geological technicians but not geologists among those persons who are able to move freely to provide their services on both sides of the border. This is of particular concern to geologists in Alberta, as Alberta is the only province which specifically licenses and regulates the practice of professional geologists. In other provinces they are free to classify themselves as geological technicians, or they may practise as geological engineers. Engineers are also on the approved list.

I appeal to the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) to seek some way of obtaining an administrative ruling that will allow professional geologists in Alberta to be recognized as the equivalent of geological engineers in the other provinces pending the outcome of negotiations to have geologists included in the list of approved professions in Schedule 2 of the agreement.

CRISIS IN LEBANON—REQUEST FOR SPECIAL IMMIGRATION PROGRAMS

Mr. Tom Wappel (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, the crisis in Lebanon is certainly not a new situation. In fact, the fighting in this region has now lasted more than 15 years. The most unfortunate news is that it grows constantly worse, not better. Officials in the Department of External Affairs tell us that since the fall of last year the crisis has reached levels never previously seen.

In 1976, during the last escalated period of turmoil in Lebanon the Liberal Party established special immigration programs to deal with the vast number of Lebanese who wished to leave their troubled country for a better life in Canada. This resulted in 12,000 Lebanese immigrants to our country.

To date, the only action taken has been to open an office in Nicosia, Cypress, a country in which Canada has no official diplomatic status. This action is not adequate, as this tiny office has but one federal officer to deal with an average daily influx of between 200 and 300 Lebanese people per day.

I call upon the Minister to expand the facilities available so that the Lebanese who wish to immigrate can do so as quickly as legally possible.

THE HANDICAPPED

CUMBERLAND COUNTY FAMILY PLANNING VIDEO

Mr. Bill Casey (Cumberland—Colchester): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to bring to the attention of the House a most inspiring project initiated by Cumberland County Family Planning in Amherst, Nova Scotia. This group, under the leadership of Ruthie Patriquin, the Community Director, recognized an area of education taken for granted in public schools but not available for hearing handicapped—that of sex education for youth.

Once the problem was identified they applied to the Department of National Health and Welfare for funding assistance to write, direct, and produce a professional quality video and accompanying user's guidebook.

Cumberland County Family Planning is to be commended for this innovative and needed project for the hearing handicapped. I am pleased to say that funding has been approved. The project is now under way under the supervision of Linda Franchi, Project Co-ordinator. It will employ hearing handicapped as directors, actors, and production staff.

Interest in this video indicates that it will fill a void nationally and maybe even internationally.

RADIO AND REGIONAL TELEVISION SERVICES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, they are at it again. Thanks to the Conservative's Budget, the CBC is once again examining the reduction if not the elimination of regional radio and regional television services. That was tried by the CBC in the past and failed. This time the cuts may be even more disastrous for Canadians.

The rumours are that there will be only one CBC radio station left in each province. If that is true, then in Ontario the stations in Thunder Bay, Windsor, Sudbury, and Ottawa are in danger of being made into small news gathering storefronts and if they are lucky at getting on to the mother station once in a blue moon.

In Alberta, which station will they close, Edmonton or Calgary? That battle would make the Flames and Oilers rivalry look very simple.

What about B.C.? Does this rumour spell the end to regional services throughout that province?

Whatever the truth to these rumours you can bet, Mr. Speaker, that this caucus and the people of Canada will once again stop the Government from undermining our regional radio and television services.

TIMING OF KNOWLEDGE OF PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

Either the Conservative Government is playing a most dangerous game conspiring to hide the truth on the one hand and bullying anyone who reveals the truth on the other, or the Government lost control during a crisis to a group of bureaucrats. In either case the result for Canadians is both disturbing and fundamentally wrong.

The Minister of Finance took 28 days to tell the House the story that he did not know about the Mutual Life leak during Question Period on April 27.

The Deputy Prime Minister took three days to tell us the same story.

We are now at day 35 of this scandal and Canadians have still not heard from the Prime Minister's own mouth exactly what he claims he heard about the leak to Mutual Life.

During his overseas trip—

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): My question to the Prime Minister is this: When and how did he learn of the Mutual Life leak? When he did learn, why did he not immediately report to Parliament?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I was advised by the Clerk of the Privy Council about the telephone call from Mutual Life some time between 3.30 and 4 o'clock in the afternoon of April 27.

I was also advised by Mr. Tellier, the Clerk of the Council, that appropriate action had been taken, that the matter had been referred to the RCMP as part of their investigation which was already under way into this whole matter. I hope that satisfies my right hon. friend.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): No, Mr. Speaker, we are not satisfied with that.

THE SECOND BUDGET LEAK—REQUEST AS TO WHY INFORMATION WAS NOT TRANSMITTED IMMEDIATELY TO PARLIAMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): We have a parliamentary system of government. We only have this Parliament which represents the Canadian people. And when Cabinet Ministers mislead Parliament for 35 days, they mock our parliamentary system and the people are misled.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Would the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition please put his question?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, if the Prime Minister had already been informed around 3.30 p.m., why did he not immediately reveal the second budget leak, the one to Mutual of Canada, to Parliament, since he had promised this House the same day, April 27, at 3 p.m., half an hour earlier, that any new information would be immediately reported to the Parliament of Canada? Why did he hide the truth for 35 days?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, first of all, we must vigorously refute the Opposition Leader's allegation that the Minister of Finance misled Parliament, when the Minister of Finance provided full and complete answers. He speaks of the Prime Minister's obligation to report to the House. In fact, as reported on page 1035 of Hansard for April 27, following a question by the Hon. Member for Burnaby–Kingsway, and I quote:

[English]

> However, the Solicitor General has said if any information comes to him, he will report to the House immediately—

The Solicitor General has said, precisely at page 1032, and I quote him carefully:

> The investigation is underway, Mr. Speaker, and as soon as we have the facts, the findings, we will be able to disclose them.

So, indeed, Mr. Speaker, the commitment I gave to the House has been followed to the letter. The information had already been reported by the Solicitor General and my answer, like the Solicitor General's, was complete. If the Leader of the Opposition desires additional information, I will be pleased to provide it to him.

APPEARANCE OF SENIOR OFFICIALS BEFORE BAR OF HOUSE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): I say to the Prime Minister: don't play games with the House of Commons and the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I say to him: don't play with words and don't hide the truth.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader will put his question.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, for 35 days the Prime Minister and his top Ministers have hidden the truth from the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): In his response today he has corroborated what the Deputy Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance have told us, namely, that for two hours the three senior Ministers of the Government did not know.

My question to the Prime Minister is: In those circumstances, since bureaucrats were controlling what the Ministers and the Prime Minister knew about an essential fact, why does he not agree to my motion to call those three senior gentlemen before the bar of the House of Commons so that we can get the facts about why the truth was hidden from the people of Canada.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we have all become used to the Leader of the Opposition denigrating members of the cabinet and members of the government, but even for the Leader of the Opposition it is a first for him to try to tarnish the reputations of distinguished public servants. The Leader of the Opposition, as a former Prime Minister, should know better.

The decisions on the night before were taken by the Prime Minister, with his Cabinet colleagues—

An Hon. Member: What are you afraid of?

An Hon. Member: Not you, that's for sure.

Mr. Mulroney: I am attempting to respond to the Leader of the Opposition.

An Hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mr. Mulroney: On the evening that budget information was made public by a reporter, my first instruction to the Minister of Finance was to ask the Leader of the Opposition for the permission to come before the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: In the absence of that, I instructed the Minister of Finance to make the budget measures public immediately. I also requested that a Royal Canadian Mounted Police investigation be undertaken immediately. That undertaking was followed. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police investigation was ongoing from the night before.

The information that was imparted by the Clerk of the Council to me after Question Period on the following day was very much consistent with that investigation. The Royal Canadian Mounted Police began the night before with their investigation. They followed it carefully and fully, and it resulted in the laying of charges. Anything else would have been to interfere with the independence—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: —of an RCMP investigation and prejudice the rights of the accused, and that we will not do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

DIRECTION TO OFFICIALS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Prime Minister. It deals with the explanation that the Government has been giving us for its ignorance of the leak for a two-hour period.

The Government wants us to believe that the reason officials did not report the Mutual Life leak to Ministers at once was that the decision had been made the day before to release the Budget to the media, and that all of the rest was immaterial and flowed from that.

In other words, isn't the Prime Minister telling us and wasn't the Deputy Prime Minister telling us the other day that they had given instructions to officials not to give them further information about leaks and allegations, to keep them in the dark—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kaplan: —so they could benefit from being able to deny that they had information? Now that he is back, does the Prime Minister believe on reflection that that is an acceptable direction for Ministers to give to their officials: Keep us in the dark?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the question contains suggestions which bring discredit upon the Hon. Member as a former Solicitor General—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: —and is deeply offensive to senior members of the Public Service of Canada even to imply that they would ever accept such a suggestion from anybody. The Hon. Member should rise right now from his seat and apologize to the Clerk of the Privy Council, the Deputy Minister of Finance, and all the public servants of Canada who deserve better from the Hon. Member.

FURTHER DIRECTION TO OFFICIALS

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, if it was not the Prime Minister's direction or his other Ministers' direction to officials not to give them further information, why did they not give them further information?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already said that the Clerk of the Council, Mr. Tellier, informed me, as he properly should have—

Mr. Tobin: Two hours later.

Mr. Mulroney: —when the information was brought to his attention. When the information had come to the attention of the Deputy Minister of Finance on a telephone call, the day after the Budget—

An Hon. Member: That took two hours!

Mr. Mulroney: If the Member is interested in the response, I will try to give it to him.

When the call came to Mr. Gorbet, the Deputy Minister of Finance, he acted—

An Hon. Member: What time?

Mr. Mulroney: —in an appropriate and timely way.

An Hon. Member: How?

Mr. Mulroney: He verified the information. He consulted immediately with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. He passed on the information to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police who were already investigating—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: —this matter pursuant to a request the evening before. The inquiry was ongoing. This information was imparted by public servants to the Royal—

An Hon. Member: That took two hours!

Mr. Mulroney: —Canadian Mounted Police. The Clerk of the Council informed me in a timely and complete way, as he did the Deputy Prime Minister when he was advised—

An Hon. Member: And the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Mulroney: —when Mr. Tellier was advised.

An Hon. Member: A two-hour gap.

Mr. Mulroney: This information comes directly from the Clerk of the Council, Mr. Paul Tellier, and Mr. Fred Gorbet. They have made the proper explanations which I convey to the House. I know my hon. friend will believe those explanations because they come from distinguished and non-political public servants.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

BUDGET LEAKS—REQUEST AS TO WHO WAS FIRST TO BE INFORMED

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Prime Minister. He just informed the House that he, as Prime Minister, was not informed of Mr. Masterman's telephone call until 3.30 p.m. Perhaps the Prime Minister could answer the following question: Which Minister was the first to be informed about Mr. Masterman's call? When was that Minister informed? Was he informed before, during or after Question Period?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I already answered that question. As Prime Minister, I was informed between 3.30 and 4.00 p.m. In other words, it was after Question Period. I was informed by the Clerk of the Privy Council and Secretary to the Cabinet, Mr. Paul Tellier, who himself had been informed by Mr. Fred Gorbet, Deputy Minister of Finance. The information was quickly passed on to me by Mr. Tellier, and that is the answer I already gave the Leader of the Opposition.

• (1430)

EXPLANATION SOUGHT FOR 90-MINUTE DELAY IN INFORMING PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I asked the question because yesterday in the House the Deputy Prime Minister said that to his knowledge no Minister was told prior to Question Period. I want to make sure that no Minister, including the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General, was told during Question Period and, if some Minister was told, we should be informed of that now by the Prime Minister. The Prime Minister should also tell us why there was a 90-minute gap between the Masterman phone call and when the Prime Minister of Canada was told. That is highly irresponsible.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already answered that the Deputy Minister of Finance received the information in a telephone call, I am informed, sometime in the neighbourhood of 1.30 p.m. He immediately conveyed the information to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. As a responsible public servant would do, he sought to convey this to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police through his own security people. He sought verification. He then went immediately to consult and to advise the Clerk of the Privy Council, who having been advised called me when I returned to my office after Question Period.

Ms. Copps: Two hours later.

Mr. Mulroney: I was informed between 3.30 and four o'clock, pursuant to actions taken by the Deputy Minister of Finance and the Clerk of the Privy Council, both of whom acted in a proper and timely manner. I convey that information to my hon. friend as I did to the Leader of the Opposition.

EXPLANATION SOUGHT WHY 90-MINUTE DELAY WAS NOT MADE SUBJECT OF QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, does the Prime Minister not find it strange that these senior officials of the Government would not inform the Prime Minister for 90 minutes? Is it not strange that the Minister of Finance was not informed and that the Solicitor General was not informed? Isn't it strange that the Minister of Justice was not informed by the most senior officials in the Government of Canada? And finally, Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister did find out, and after there was a meeting on this issue after 3 o'clock in one of the offices of the Prime Minister, why didn't the Prime Minister come to the House? Or why didn't the Minister of Finance come to the House on a question of privilege, as we were dealing with privilege that afternoon anyway, and tell the House about this very serious leak?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend asks if there was a meeting on this matter after three o'clock and the answer to that is no. My hon. friend asks about coming to the House. I had already the night before instructed the Minister of Finance to make the Budget public, had requested that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police initiate immediately—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: This information was made part and parcel of an ongoing Royal Canadian Mounted Police inquiry that had been initiated the night before. To have impeded that inquiry in any way would have been to render a disservice to the pursuit of justice in that particular inquiry and to the rights of those who may or may not have been charged subsequent thereto.

MUTUAL LIFE BUDGET LEAK—DECISION NOT TO INFORM HOUSE OF COMMONS QUESTIONED

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It concerns the second or the so-called Mutual Life Budget leak. The Minister of Finance has admitted to the House of Commons over recent days that on April 27, sometime between three and five o'clock in the afternoon, the so-called Government, in the broad sense, in other words Cabinet, took the decision to hide the second Budget leak from Parliament and from the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: Now, as incredible as it is that the Prime Minister or any other Cabinet Minister would not have been notified of the Budget leak for two hours, I want to ask the Prime Minister specifically, he who is the chief executive officer of the Government across the way, why did he take the decision not to tell that information to the House of Commons and to the people of Canada? Why hide the facts?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the suggestion that the Government took a decision to hide information from the people of Canada is, of course, an absolute and complete fabrication and falsehood by the Hon. Member.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I will inform my hon. friend again, and perhaps if he listens carefully he may want to reflect upon this before he raises any more charges against public servants or Members of the House.

The information came to the Deputy Minister of Finance, Mr. Fred Gorbet. Immediately after 1.30 p.m. he began to contact the RCMP to advise them to verify information and to check back with the source. He consulted and advised the Secretary of the Cabinet and the Clerk of the Privy Council. This was done and information was conveyed to me by Mr. Tellier between 3.30 p.m. and four o'clock in the afternoon. This information was absolutely consistent with the information that the police were no doubt seeking in their inquiry that had already been unleashed the night before, of which the House had full knowledge. All of this information was then being acquired in a proper and normal way by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, which has always served Canada by acting in an independent and proper manner.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, at page 2147 of Hansard and on several other pages it is stated that the Government, in the broadest sense, was aware of this information some time between Question Period and 5.40 p.m. that evening.

I want to tell the Prime Minister those are not nice words that he said about his Minister of Finance.

REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put the following supplementary to the Prime Minister concerning the conduct of his Minister of Finance.

On April 27, at page 1032 of Hansard, the Prime Minister said, in referring to the Minister, and I quote:

> —the Minister has always discharged his responsibilities, in this case as well.

Considering the fact that the Minister, aided and abetted by the rest of Cabinet, chose to hide this information from the House of Commons for one month, does the Prime Minister still think the Minister acted in a responsible manner in this case? Should he not be called to Parliament today and asked to resign?

[English]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has served Canada and this House with great honour and perhaps one day, if the Hon. Member really changes his ways, he might aspire to the kind of honour achieved by the Minister of Finance.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I acknowledge that would take almost a miracle because the Minister of Finance has no lessons to take from that Member in terms of propriety and honour.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Translation]

Mr. Mulroney: I am asked whether the Government was informed, and the Hon. Member used the terms 'in the broad sense'. Of course the Government, in the broad sense, was informed. When the Deputy Minister of Finance was notified, he in turn notified the Secretary to the Cabinet and Clerk of the Privy Council. Indeed, as the Minister of Finance said, the Government 'in the broad sense' was notified, and all action taken by the Government and by the Minister of Finance was perfectly consistent with the statement made the day before, namely that a police investigation was already under way and that we would let the police finish its investigation.

[English]

REQUEST FOR NAME OF OFFICIAL WHO RECEIVED TELEPHONED INFORMATION FROM MUTUAL LIFE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the House and Canadians know that on April 27 Jack Masterman, Chief Executive Officer of Mutual Life of Canada, contacted a member of the staff of the Minister of Finance to inform that person that Mutual Life had been in possession of the Budget in Brief since April 25.

• (1440)

Precisely who in the office of the Minister of Finance was contacted? Who, in turn, did he contact and when? Were there any other calls made to the President of Mutual Life? By whom? Who in government contacted Mr. Masterman from Mutual Life? What instructions, advice or any—

Mr. Speaker: If the Hon. Member has a series of questions, perhaps someone on the other side might want to deal with them.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my information is that the original call came to the office of the Minister of Finance. In the absence of the Minister of Finance it was immediately turned over to the Deputy Minister of Finance. He proceeded with the verifications, the consultations with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, advising the police at that time, and then advising the Secretary of the Cabinet. That is my information. If my hon. friend has anything at variance with that, I will be happy to examine it.

REQUEST AS TO WHEN MR. HARTT OBTAINED INFORMATION AND TO WHOM HE COMMUNICATED IT

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, we learned that the Prime Minister was not aware of the leak for two hours. We also learned that for 28 days, the Government hid this second leak from the Canadian people. I would like to know at what time on what day Mr. Hartt, of the Prime Minister's Office, obtained the information and to whom he communicated it.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I got my information between 3.30 and 4 p.m. from Mr. Tellier, as I told the House. It was between 3.30 and 4 o'clock.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Hartt!

Mr. Mulroney: Pardon?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Hartt.

Mr. Mulroney: No, it was Mr. Tellier who provided me with this information, Mr. Tellier having obtained it a few minutes before from Mr. Gorbet, the Deputy Minister of Finance. So I find the process quite normal and logical. Now if the Hon. Member is asking me whether I was informed by anyone besides Mr. Tellier, the answer is no! I was informed in the circumstances by this individual, just as I said.

INSTRUCTIONS TO STAFF CONCERNING LEAKS

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): My question is for the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. We have seen how quickly the Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Justice and the Solicitor General inform the House. There were allegations of other leaks on the night of April 26 and on April 27. What instructions were given to the office staff of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance concerning the procedures to follow if they found out about a second leak?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is completely ridiculous to suggest that the day before, we would warn individuals at the Privy Council or in my office about what to do if there were a second, third or fourth leak. When we found out that there had been a leak, right after, we asked for permission to come before the House with the Budget. The answer from the opposition parties was no. So, I ordered the Minister of Finance to make it public immediately and the RCMP to launch an investigation. This investigation began the day before and will continue until it ends and charges are laid.

So everything that was done the night before and the next day was consistent with an independent inquiry by the RCMP.

[English]

POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, Canadians and this House are sick and tired of hearing from this Cabinet: "There ain't nobody here but us chickens".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Rodriguez: My supplementary question to the Prime Ministeris a question that not only this House but the whole nation wants to know the answer to. Who was on the bridge of the Canada Valdez on April 27 between 1330 hours and 1500 hours?

Mr. Ouellet: Nobody.

Mr. Rodriguez: Where was the captain, below deck? Who was in charge of the ship, the three bureaucrats?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have enough trouble some time. I hope he does not hold me responsible for the Valdez. The fact of the matter is that the information—

An Hon. Member: It was on automatic pilot.

Mr. Mulroney: Perhaps, then, let me take a second. The Budget was scheduled to be released. The night before we were advised, as was the country, of the fact that clearly a Budget document had been improperly or perhaps illegally released.

As a result of that I immediately convened my senior Ministers. We asked the permission of the opposition Leaders to come immediately before the House, to lay it on the floor of the House of Commons. That permission was refused. Because of that, I then instructed the Minister of Finance to make it public immediately via the media. I instructed as well that an inquiry by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, a complete police inquiry, be initiated immediately. That was done.

Any information subsequent thereto was conveyed by the Deputy Minister of Finance or by the Clerk of the Privy Council or by others to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, where it ought to have been left so that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police could conduct a thoroughly independent, impartial inquiry—

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

WAR AGAINST DRUGS

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General of Canada and concerns the national annual report on drugs published by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The report shows that the fight against drugs has been successful, since drug seizures have more than doubled. However, the report also mentions that the drug trade generates between $5 and $15 billion annually, and that the number of users has tripled during the last two years.

Could the Minister inform the House, and thus reassure Canadians, about measures that will be implemented to strengthen our collective resolve and deal with a problem that has become a veritable plague? Especially considering that in a recent report published by the Library of Parliament, costs related to drug abuse in Canada totalled $11.5 billion in 1984.

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member raises a very important point. The figures released this week are of considerable concern to our Government. With the help of police forces at both the municipal and provincial levels, we are trying to maintain a relentless campaign against drug trafficking. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, we have set up an anti-drug strategy costing over $200 million with the help of our colleagues at Customs and Excise, Health and Welfare and other departments, in order to provide better information for Canadians and keep our 10, 12 and 13 year—olds from falling into the drug trap laid by traffickers. I would urge all Canadians to help us in this campaign.

REQUEST FOR RESIGNATION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mrs. Diane Marleau (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I am told that when the Prime Minister is in this country, he likes to read all the papers every day. I have a message for the Prime Minister. In his absence—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member may have a message, but the Prime Minister is waiting for the question.

Mrs. Marleau: All the editorials across this country asked for the resignation of the Minister of Finance. The Prime Minister is facing a lack of confidence in his Minister of Finance.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member would like to get to the point and put her question, please!

Mrs. Marleau: Will the Prime Minister ask for the resignation of his Minister of Finance, since the Minister is no longer able to perform his duties?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

• (1450)

[English]

Mrs. Marleau: Mr. Speaker, that is what they said about Sinclair Stevens, too.

ROLE OF FIRST MINISTER

Mrs. Diane Marleau (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is again for the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister realize that by condoning the actions of his Minister of Finance he is demonstrating a fundamental lack of understanding of the role of a First Minister of this country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is clearly a divergence of views between my hon. friend and myself with regard to the value of the Minister of Finance. If my hon. friend clings to the view that she has just expressed, why does she not bring forward a motion of non-confidence in the Minister and see what happens?

QUERY AS TO CHARGING OF GLOBAL TV REPORTER

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Justice. On page 1012 of Hansard on April 27, 1989, the Minister of Justice in describing the events of the night before, that is the Global report on the Budget leak, said the following:

> I think you would find that the particular reporter in a responsible manner did not run the story until he had it corroborated.

I ask the Minister of Justice why a reporter who, in his own words, acted in a responsible manner, has been charged with a criminal offence?

Mr. Speaker: I pointed out yesterday the very important distinction in terms of the administration of criminal law in Canada, that with respect to this particular prosecution which is now public knowledge, it is being conducted by the Province of Ontario and law officers under the direction of that province. Now the question has been put, the Minister of Justice can respond to it if he wishes.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the matter is sub judice and I have no intention of commenting.

POSSIBILITY OF FAIR TRIAL QUESTIONED

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Justice this question: The Prime Minister of Canada has described what occurred, as long ago as a month, as a criminal act that could result in the incarceration of certain individuals. The Minister of Finance has described this whole matter as a wilful criminal act, as has the Deputy Prime Minister, and I believe, Mr. Speaker, the record will show so has the Minister of Justice.

I ask the Minister of Justice, given the principle on which he just refused to answer a question, whether he believes that any of the individuals involved can have a fair trial when the Prime Minister has already predetermined them to be criminals and likely to be incarcerated?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will not speak to the hypocrisy of that question.

Mr. Tobin: Answer the question. Hypocrite.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, on April 27, 1989, in the House of Commons, in response to a question from my right hon. friend, I indicated that we had seen comments of a reporter by the name of Mr. French of Global Television who was the first person to receive the call—

Mr. Tobin: He said a lot more than that, Prime Minister.

Mr. Mulroney: Perhaps I could conclude. Mr. French, who was a colleague at Global Television, was that same evening being interviewed on television. Mr. French was the first person who received the call from an individual who apparently took the documents. Here is what the line in the transcript said. The reporter, Mr. French, of Global Television said with regard to the individual, "I guess the criminal likes to return to the scene of a crime".

Mr. French of Global Television that night was referring to the individual who conveyed the information to Mr. Small. We believe that all these individuals who have been charged are entitled to the presumption of innocence—

Mr. Allmand: You called them criminals.

Mr. Mulroney: —and we should be saying and doing nothing in this House that would in any way diminish their full rights to a fair trial and the presumption of innocence.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby—Kingsway.

Mr. Nowlan: Aren't you going to recognize some of the Members in this institution? I have given you a note and—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burnaby—Kingsway has the floor.

Mr. Nowlan: Oh, boy, that's great.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, he can have my second supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Who gets your second supplementary is up to the Chair. Would the Hon. Member put his question?

POSITION OF DEPUTY MINISTER

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice and also deals with the criminal charges against Doug Small. The Minister admitted today that his Associate Deputy Minister took part in the discussions on the serious charges against Mr. Small. Mr. Speaker, what position did his Deputy Minister take on these charges? Did he notify the RCMP that these unprecedented charges against a journalist would constitute an attack against freedom of the press in Canada? What position did his Associate Deputy Minister take on these charges?

[English]

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have before me a transcript from the scrum yesterday in which I was asked whether or not there had been discussions with officials. I said there may have been the normal deliberations or consultations from official to official in the course of discussions.

My hon. friend will know that the RCMP was called in to do the investigation, that they completed their investigation, that they dealt with the Province of Ontario, which is the jurisdiction that has carriage of the action in the courts. The RCMP then came back and laid the charges. I am advised that Justice officials between the two jurisdictions routinely discuss matters in which the federal Government may have an interest in terms of this particular thing, being the Budget. This involves questions of law, questions of evidence and information. It is all quite normal.

POSITION TAKEN ON CONSTITUTIONALITY OF CHARGES AGAINST JOURNALIST

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, that is precisely the point surely. I am asking the Minister of Justice, in view of the fact that the RCMP consulted with his Associate Deputy Minister of Justice, Doug Rutherford—confirmed that to me this morning—what position did Doug Rutherford take on the constitutionality of these unprecedented charges being laid against a journalist? In light of the seriousness—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Robinson: In light of the seriousness—

Mr. Speaker: The question was very straightforward. What did somebody say to somebody else. He can ask the question. Whether there is an answer is up to the Minister.

Mr. Robinson: It is a serious question about the position taken by the Government. In light of the unprecedented nature of these charges against a journalist, will the Minister of Justice do the right thing and seek leave to intervene on behalf of the Government of Canada in these court proceedings to argue on behalf, not just of journalists, but on behalf of all Canadians against this massive attack on freedom of the press in Canada?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I can think of nothing which would be more of an interference in the course of justice than for me to answer that question.

ACTION OF OFFICIALS IN PUBLIC SERVICE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Minister of Finance and the Clerk of the Privy Council, the Secretary to the Cabinet, when they came into possession of information of a leak of a magnitude to Mutual Life, their prime course of action after years in the public service would have been to advise immediately the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister of Canada in time for them to meet the House at Question Period that same day.

• (1500)

Who gave him instructions not to inform the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, they were never of course given any such instructions. A suggestion of this kind that involves the integrity of senior public servants is profoundly unworthy of a former Prime Minister of Canada.

EXPLANATION SOUGHT FOR MUTUAL LIFE LEAK NOT BEING DISCLOSED

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this is the reason we want those gentlemen to have their say before the Bar of the House of Commons.

Once the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance knew at 3.30 or four o'clock in the afternoon, as did the Deputy Prime Minister—

Mr. Crawford: Or earlier.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): —or earlier, why did the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance not tell the House of Commons during the course of his presentation to the House of the Budget? Why, and on whose instructions, was the country kept in the dark on this Mutual Life leak for the next 28 days?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already responded to that question, and the Deputy Prime Minister has responded to it many times.

The evening before there had clearly been an unlawful dissemination of a very important federal document. An inquiry of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police was initiated. That inquiry began that very evening. At that point in time, any information thereafter was conveyed by Mr. Gorbet, Mr. Tellier and others to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, as it should be, with a view to allowing this independent group of investigators to conduct their investigations and to lay charges, if those charges were appropriate.

Anything else would have been at variance with our obligation to a complete hands-off policy with regard to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. That is what we have done. That is what this House traditionally has asked Governments to do.

Privilege

PRIVILEGE

COMPLAINT THAT MEMBERS MOCK THE VOICES OF FEMALE MEMBERS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, during the course of Question Period, and this is not the first time that it has happened, while the Member for Sudbury (Mrs. Marleau) was attempting to ask a legitimate question, the voice of the Member for Sudbury was mocked time and again by Conservative Members on the opposite side of the House.

It is not a low voice; it is not a tenor timbre. It is a woman's voice. I raise this issue because it is not the first time in the House of Commons that women on this side of the House who raise questions are mocked on a consistent basis because they have the voice of women.

I would like to ask the Speaker to review the "Blues" and the comments that were specifically addressed to the voice of the Member for Sudbury, and to advise all Members of the House that the timbre and tone of a person's voice is the product of their physiology, and that we as women in the House are sick and tired of having the Conservative Party mock us.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister of Justice.

RETRACTION OF REMARKS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, during Question Period the Hon. Member for Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte (Mr. Tobin), and I know it was in the heat of Question Period, deliberately called the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) a hypocrite. I would simply call on my hon. friend to withdraw.

Mr. Ouellet: Apologize first on what happened. Apologize for your cronies.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is, and I advise the Speaker and indeed the Minister of Justice (Mr. Lewis) to check the "Blues", the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) rose in his place and began his response to my question by talking about the hypocrisy of the Member opposite.

You had better not hold your breath while you're waiting for me to withdraw my comment about the Prime Minister—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East has raised a question. I will, of course, consult the "Blues" and if appropriate report back to the Hon. Member.

The Hon. Minister of Justice rises on a very different point of order. I will hear him further.

Mr. Lewis: We accept the suggestion of the Hon. Member opposite. We will check the "Blues". I believe the statement that was made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was the hypocrisy of the question, not the individual placing the question.

Once again I would ask, if that is accepted, that my hon. friend withdraw his suggestion that the Prime Minister is a hypocrite.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Windsor West.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw your attention to the list of expressions that have been looked at in the context of whether or not they are parliamentary as found in Beauchesne's latest edition. You will find there are occasions when the word "hypocrite" has been found to be unparliamentary, but there are also occasions when it has been found to be parliamentary. I suggest you look at those rulings as well, Mr. Speaker, in considering the very timely comments of the Hon. Member for Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte (Mr. Tobin).

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member for Windsor West could help the Speaker. On which side am I to apply the ruling in Beauchesne's?

The Hon. Member for for Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte.

Mr. Tobin: I would like to help, because of my great, profound respect for the Chair. It is greater than any other respect I have, other than for my mother, on this planet.

The Speaker knows I have great respect for the Chair. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), together with myself review the "Blues", and comes to the House after Question Period himself and is prepared to rise and explain what he meant when he used the word "hypocrisy", I will be quite prepared, upon reviewing the "Blues", to examine what I had to say across the floor of the House.

We cannot have an agent of the Prime Minister standing here and telling us what the Prime Minister meant or did not mean. Let the Prime Minister come himself and fight his own battles.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member and the Minister of Justice have addressed the Chair on a matter. I will examine what the record shows.

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS

Mr. Pat Nowlan (Annapolis Valley—Hants): Mr. Speaker, the whole situation has been blown because Question Period is over. I have as great and fond respect for the Chair as does my hon. friend from Newfoundland, but I do not want to get into a maternity or paternity situation. Therefore, if you mix it up, you may call them some sons of something or other. Be that as it may, Members on the government side and in Opposition very rarely rise on a credible supplementary. We know that the questions about the leaks could go on for days. That is a political issue. But when the freedom of the press is involved, if questions had not come from the loyal Opposition or from my good friend, the Hon. Member for Burnaby—Kingsway (Mr. Robinson) on the problem of a reporter being charged, then I certainly would have risen in my place and, in a provocative question of privilege, got in my question.

• (1510)

My question would not have been as political as some of the others, but it would have been a question to the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) about a most unusual situation, that is, a reporter being charged with stolen property. It deserves an unusual question. I was hoping to get this above board and in the public domain without all the problems of rumour and the perception of intrigue. You have stood, Mr. Speaker, so I have to sit down but—

Mr. Speaker: I take it the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants is rising on a question of privilege. I have listened to what the Hon. Member had to say. He has a complaint of sorts and there are probably other places in which he can express it. However, it is not a question of privilege.

CITIZENSHIP ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-247, an Act to amend the Citizenship Act (oath of allegiance).

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, in order to become a Canadian citizen under the existing Citizenship Act, an individual must pledge allegiance to Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth II, her heirs and successors. This Bill to amend the Citizenship Act would require a pledge of allegiance to Canada and the Canadian Constitution.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Petitions

PETITIONS

VIA RAIL CUT-BACKS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36 on behalf of a number of constituents from Kamloops, British Columbia, who are dismayed by the fact that the Government plans to cut out all or most of VIA Rail. They are asking the Government to reconsider the whole matter of these cut-backs. They point out that VIA Rail has provided good passenger service for a number of years and could do a first-class job if it were given the appropriate funding to do so.

They are asking that the Government reconsider its decision to reduce passenger rail service in Canada, to reconsider its decision to cut back on the moneys made available to VIA Rail.

REVISION OF EXTRADITION LAWS

Mr. Walter Van De Walle (St. Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present to the House of Commons a petition certified correct pursuant to Standing Order 36, which calls upon the Government to revise the extradition laws to allow for the extradition of criminals either immediately or after they have been fully dealt with by the Canadian penal system.

This petition represents the signatures of 2,145 concerned citizens from across Canada. These Canadians believe, as I do, that our present extradition laws make Canada a sanctuary for the most dangerous criminals.

CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY – VOLUNTARY RETIREMENT

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia-Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure today to present a petition which has been certified correct pursuant to Standing Order 36.

The 45 signatories, who are residents affiliated with the construction industry in the Sarnia—Lambton area, call upon the Government to introduce legislation which would recognize voluntary retirement at age 55, with no accompanying penalty for early retirement and with full provincial and federal pensions.

The signatories believe that such legislation would more readily recognize the realities of construction work and aid in the further hiring and training of younger workers in the industry.

DISCRIMINATION BASED ON SEXUAL ORIENTATION

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton Southeast): Mr. Speaker, I wish to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36. It is signed by approximately 100 residents of Calgary and Edmonton. They are calling on the Government to enact legislation that would remove sexual orientation as grounds for legal discrimination. The petitioners are calling on the Government to bring in laws which will ban discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation. I am happy to submit this petition.

REVISION OF EXTRADITION LAWS

Mr. Bill Vankoughnet (Hastings—Frontenac—Lennox and Addington): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition certified correct in form and content, from 2,300 Canadians who call upon the Government to revise current extradition laws so that the Minister of Justice can order the extradition of fugitives and prevent Canada from becoming a haven for escaped convicts from other countries.

SITUATION IN LEBANON—SOLUTION OF CONFLICT

Mr. Allan Koury (Hochelaga—Maisonneuve): Mr. Speaker, I have the privilege of presenting a petition on behalf of more than 12,000 citizens, stating that the genocide of the Lebanese people requires extremely urgent action; that the Syrian army occupies three-quarters of Lebanese territory and terrorizes the population; that only the withdrawal of all Syrian and non-Lebanese forces from Lebanon would restore peace to this war-torn country.

They humbly pray Parliament to do everything in its power to obtain an urgent meeting of the UN Security Council in order to demand the following for Lebanon: An immediate stop to bombardments; withdrawal of Syrian, Israeli and other non-Lebanese forces; a UN peacekeeping force for Lebanon; political and economic sanctions for those parties that do not abide by the decisions of the Security Council.

OPPOSITION TO CLOSURE OF CFB SUMMERSIDE

Mr. Joe McGuire (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present a petition from the residents of the greater Summerside area. This petition was circulated under the chairmanship of Mr. Jim Aikinson of the Downtown Business Association of Summerside and was signed by 12,000 Prince Edward Islanders. It has been certified correct as to form and content by the Clerk of Petitions.

The purpose of the petition is to demonstrate the degree of opposition to the closing of Canadian Forces Base Summerside which, if effected, would bring economic ruin to the town of Summerside, the village of St. Eleanor's, and many smaller communities of Prince County, and to the treasury of the Prince Edward Island Government.

I present this petition to this Parliament with the confidence that the Government will appreciate the degree of concern which exists and will reverse its decision before the required 45 days.

VIA RAIL CUT-BACKS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and duty to table petitions which have been certified correct by the Clerk of Petitions. These five petitions are signed by 225 residents of Canada from 35 different communities from Vancouver to St. John's, Newfoundland, from Churchill to London. These signatures were collected in the VIA Rail train station in Thunder Bay.

The petitioners call upon the Government to live up to its original pledge to support VIA Rail, and to abandon plans for cuts to VIA's budget and provide the necessary resources to allow VIA to operate as a modern, effective transportation company rather than a a museum. There would be a great many more petitions with more signatures, if there were more cars on the trains to accommodate people who want to ride on them.

INTERNATIONAL MARKETING OF ARMS AND POLICING EQUIPMENT

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to submit two petitions today pursuant to Standing Order 36.

The gist of the petitions is that they condemn the Government's involvement in ARMX '89. The petitioners also ask that the Government cease all involvement in the expansion of the international market for military and policing equipment.

These petitions were circulated at the annual peace walk in Victoria on April 22 in which 10,000 people participated. It is an annual event. It is the largest per capita peace walk in Canada.

The people of my constituency are very concerned that their Government is involved in expanding the international market of arms and policing equipment.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, if Question No. 46 could be made an Order for Return, the return would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that Question No. 46 be deemed to have been made an Order for Return?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. We have many new Members in the Chamber and we have not had all that many votes. There is a rule that Members should not vote if they arrive in the Chamber late. I think there were a couple, one from each side of the House. I do not want to draw attention to the specific cases but I thought it was a perfect opportunity to remind Hon. Members that they should be seated and present before voting commences. Some day it might be important.

Mr. Ken James (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I was in a meeting that took longer than expected. I had to remain. I did not vote because I came in after everyone was seated. I did want to tell you, sir, and all Members of the House that if I had had the opportunity to vote I would have voted with the Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre–Dame–de–Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I was at the same meeting as other Members. I respected the rule, stayed out and did not vote. I saw some of the people at the meeting that I was at come in here and vote.

I hope the admonition of the Chief Government Whip will be taken into consideration the next time.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint–Denis): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saint–Denis (Mr. Prud'homme), on a point of order.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, just a point of order. Perhaps we could avoid all these problems in the future if it were understood that when we are called in to vote in the House,—a duty that transcends all others—the House Committees do not necessarily have to meet. I had one this afternoon, and when the bells started to ring, I cancelled the committee as we are allowed to do under the Standing Orders. To avoid all these problems which could get worse in the future, those chairing committees, both legislative and standing, should realize that generally speaking, committees do not sit when we are called in to vote.

NORDION AND THERATRONICS DIVESTITURE AUTHORIZATION ACT

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)) moved that Bill C-13, an Act to authorize the divestiture of Nordion International Inc. and Theratronics International Limited, be read the second time and be referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I rise today to lead off debate on Bill C-13, which authorizes the divestiture of two Crown Corporations, Nordion International Incorporated and Theratronics. I hear the howling, the moaning and the groaning already from the New Democratic Party, the group that has held up the business of this House for two hours this afternoon for no apparent reason whatsoever. Now they are trying to shout down the Member who is speaking when we are debating a Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps we will wait a minute for those who must leave the Chamber to go to other business, then the Minister can begin.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, before I get into a clause by clause review of this legislation, I would like to say a word about the Government's privatization program in general. It is a very important policy of the Government, one that plays a vital role in our over-all economic strategy.

When our Government came to office in 1984, we made a commitment to revitalize the economy so that economic growth could be strengthened and productive jobs for Canadians created. As you know, we have created over 1.5 million jobs in this country since we came into office in 1984.

One of the ways we have pursued this goal is through a major review of Crown corporations. Those corporations which were determined to be commercially viable and which were no longer required to meet public policy objectives were considered for privatization.

Significant progress has been made since the program was first announced in 1984. All or part of the Government's holdings in 16 corporations have been sold to the private sector, two Crown corporations have been transferred to territorial Governments, and eight entities have been dissolved. These transactions have resulted in a transfer to the private sector of approximately $5 billion in assets and a significant reduction to the role of the federal Government in the economy.

One of the consequences of this has been an improvement in Canada's competitive position. Operating and financial performances of many of the corporations improved on being transferred to the private sector. I hear the NDP laughing. They think it is a great joke, when there has been improved employment in many of the corporations, including de Havilland when there are some 1,500 more jobs today than when the Government held de Havilland. I could go on with other examples.

Management of federal resources have improved as well. Future potential financial demands on the public purse have been reduced. Most important, these goals have been accomplished without reducing the quality of services that Canadians receive.

In the April 3 Speech from the Throne and in the Budget that was released several weeks later, the Government reiterated its commitment to building a strong economy, encouraged by incentive and opportunity.

The social programs that Canadians value so highly, and the high standards of living to which we have become accustomed, depend on the strength of our economy being fully competitive internationally.

In earlier periods of our history, government ownership was sometimes justified because it was necessary to provide a service to the public that the private sector was unwilling or unable to provide. Sometimes it was to protect the technology or industry that was just getting started in this country. Sometimes it was to continue the process of nation building that was so critical to our future.

Today, government ownership in many cases can no longer be justified. Our social and economic infrastructure is relatively mature. Services for which we were once dependent on government now can be more effectively and efficiently delivered by the private sector.

The Canadian economy has the ability to grow and prosper without intrusive policies such as government ownership. Our privatization program has proved that Crown corporations can compete more effectively in the market environment if they are not tied to the Government's apron strings. Most of the federal Crown corporations now in existence were acquired or established for reasons that were justifiable in the past.

If I may be so bold as to speak to the motivations of past Governments, there was more reason than ideology in their establishment. The same is true today.

The Government of Canada is divesting itself of Crown corporations where there are good reasons so to do. Contrary to the vociferous and misguided protestations of Members opposite, the success of these privatizations can be amply demonstrated. One just has to look at the number of individual Canadians who acquired Air Canada shares in the initial offering to see that the Canadian people have faith in the future of our national flag carrier and are willing to invest their own dollars to participate in that future. The first share offering attracted approximately 130,000 initial purchasers from across the nation.

Employees, as well, recognized the benefits of that privatization and what it can bring. In the case of Air Canada, many worked actively through employee associations to bring about its transfer to the private sector. Despite three of the four unions that advised them not to buy shares in it, over 80 per cent of the employees of Air Canada displayed their faith in the new company by buying shares.

The Government recognizes that employees are as important to the future success of the company as they were in the past. It works closely with employee representatives to ensure that employee concerns are kept uppermost in mind throughout the entire privatization process, and that the transfer to the private sector is equitable to all concerned.

In several privatizations attractive share ownership plans have been offered to employees. In the case of Teleglobe, for example, employees were given shares in Memotec at discounted prices and were offered interest free loans to help them finance the purchase. When Fishery Products International was privatized shares amounting to approximately 4 per cent of the company were given to employees.

The well-being of employees is a key element of the Government's privatization program because while we want to build a more competitive and market-oriented economy we will continue to do it in a compassionate and caring way. By working together Government, employees and management in true partnership we can prepare for the challenges of the 1990s.

Let us take a look at what has been happening in two companies since they were privatized. Canadair Limited was sold to Bombardier in December, 1986. The sale has resulted in new commercial opportunities for Canadair and an improved ability to compete in foreign markets. Through the financial strength of Bombardier the company has also acquired access to the resources necessary to finance future growth. Another benefit resulting from privatization is the emergence of a greater willingness to embark upon new projects that will expand the company's abilities to meet the needs of the aerospace market.

The Northern Transportation Company Limited is giving its new owners a commercial stake in the future of the Northwest Territories, and a means to participate in economic diversification. I could go on and on, Mr. Speaker, with success after success. Now it is time to allow two more firms their opportunity to grow and to prosper.

Let me turn to the future of the two Crown corporations that are the subject of this legislation, Nordion and Theratronics.

Nordion is a leading global supplier of industrial sterilization systems and medical diagnostic products for the radiation processing and nuclear medicine markets. It exports these products to over 100 countries around the world. In fact, over 90 per cent of its sales last year were to export markets. The company has been in business since 1946. It functioned as a division of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, called the Radiochemical Company, until last fall when it was transferred to the Canadian Development Investment Corporation in anticipation of privatization. This is a world-class company.

Nordion supplies over half the world's gamma radiation processing equipment, and 70 per cent of the world's Cobalt-60. The major application of this equipment is the sterilization of medical and consumer products, needles, sutures, bandages and rubber gloves. Nordion also produces a range of smaller research and clinical irradiators for applications such as irradiating blood, hardening electronic components and undertaking medical research.

In addition to these products, Nordion manufactures about two-thirds of the world's supply of bulk reactor produced and cyclotron produced isotopes for nuclear medicine applications. Its most recent development is an ultra pure iodine 123 which is creating new markets world wide because of its high purity.

Nordion and Theratronics

The strength of this company's technological and marketing abilities was recognized in 1987 when Nordion won both the Canada Award for Business Excellence in Innovation and the Canada Export Award.

Most of Nordion's 387 employees are based in Kanata, with the exception of a small group working at the TRIUMF facility in British Columbia and another group at the Canadian Irradiation Centre at Ville de Laval, Quebec.

Theratronics is also a former division of AECL, the Medical Products Division. It was incorporated last fall and transferred to CDIC at the same time as Nordion.

Theratronics produces and markets two main groups of products for radiotherapy: cobalt therapy machines and computerized planning systems for radiation therapy. These are major capital purchases by clinics and hospitals for planning and delivering radiation treatment to cancerous tumors.

As with Nordion, Theratronics is very much an export oriented company deriving over 90 per cent of its $41 million annual sales from the United States and overseas. However, Theratronics operates in a considerably more mature market than does Nordion though there is increasing market potential for its products in developing countries.

Currently, the company has over 329 personnel—

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think there is a fairly long-standing practice which is set out in the Standing Orders to the effect that we do not read directly from a text. This is a Minister with much experience who has the floor. Certainly, this is a practice which tends to be waived for new Members. However, if this Member who has so much experience has the document, then why does he not just table it and save us the pain of having to listen to him?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Minister may continue.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her interjection. I needed a drink of water.

As with Nordion, Theratronics, as I say, is very much export oriented in deriving over 90 per cent of its $41 million in sales from the United States and overseas.

I think the Government's rationale for turning these companies over to the private sector can probably be summed up by Nordion's own corporate philosophy statement which reads in part:

> 1. We are committed to providing all our customers with the best products, technology and service.
> 2. We are determined to retain our major share of current markets and attain leadership positions in new business areas.
> 3. We continually review and respond to changing market conditions, believing that a dynamic and flexible management approach serves to strengthen the company's competitive position.
> 4. We encourage growth and diversification, and seek opportunities for expansion or acquisition in areas compatible with the company's technological and management strengths.
> 5. We recognize that our success depends upon the drive and ingenuity of all employees.

Surely, such a market driven and aggressive corporate attitude demands the freedom of the private sector so that it can be given a free rein. Privatization will provide both companies with a new impetus for growth and development leading to new successes for them in the future.

In the case of Nordion, the company will be in a better position to pursue fresh opportunities and increase its domination of world markets in its high technology field.

Theratronic, as well, will be free to explore partnerships with companies in related industrial fields of activity which could lead to new markets and product lines for the new company.

In both cases Nordion and Theratronics will have increased operating flexibility, better access to capital markets and enhanced viability as independent commercial undertakings.

The opportunity for growth and expansion within the private sector will also benefit the company's employees.

As has been said many times in this Chamber, the best guarantee of jobs and future prospects for employees is a dynamic and growing company. Strengthening both these companies will also benefit the country as a whole because their export orientation is important to our economy's future development.

Before I get into the details of the legislation, I would like to identify briefly the process that the government will be following in the sale of these two companies. We have taken a different approach for each company because we want to capitalize on their respective strengths.

With Nordion, it is our intention to proceed by way of a third party sale as recommended by our financial advisors. This approach—

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. It relates to the fact that at 5.05 p.m., at a time when we were being called into the House for a vote, the environment committee began a hearing. This is contrary to the policy of this House and particularly puts us in an extremely difficult position.

When we are called to vote for our ridings on behalf of the people of Canada and a committee of the House holds hearings concurrently, it is a violation of the longstanding tradition of this House. Furthermore, we in the Liberal caucus, including myself, the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mrs. Catterall), and the Hon. Member for Kent (Mr. Crawford), were all absent from the committee due to the fact that we were discharging our responsibilities here in the House of Commons. This is a very bad precedent for this sitting of Parliament. It is something that should be nipped in the bud.

In particular, I am very disappointed with the members of the New Democratic Party. They wanted to have the third vote, which is their full democratic right, but they chose to ignore the longstanding tradition of the House and went to committee at the same time as they required a third vote, which took the attention of all Members of the House. In the meantime, they are expecting us to go to committee and ignore our responsibilities to vote. I consider it a breach of my privileges, and if the Speaker so finds, I would be prepared to move the appropriate motion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Maybe it is a matter that should be looked into by the procedure committee. By virtue of our Standing Orders, committees do have the right to sit during House hours.

An Hon. Member: During a vote?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Committees can do as they wish. Most of the time they do not have to stop for a vote. By virtue of Standing Order 108, they can do what they please.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point. In answering the question that the Member just put as to whether Members should be in the House when division bells are ringing, it has been a longstanding tradition that Members who are called to the House of Commons should come here to vote, to exercise their first democratic obligation for this House.

Having said that, I also understand the difficulties that we can get into when we have committees sitting during the ringing of bells. The Whips of all parties are always conscious of the number of Members that are in committee and the number that are in the House. I guess people looking in on the deliberations of the House wonder sometimes where the members are. They are indeed in committees.

I would like to have the Speaker understand that what we are asking for is a ruling as to what happens when the division bells are ringing. It is our purpose to assure the good working of the committee. Our presence at those committees is important. Our democratic right to be heard at those committees is important. Committees are a creation of this House and therefore should understand that the House comes first. When the House calls for a vote then this is where Members should be. I do not understand why we have not applied that Standing Order, that rule that states that the votes are first and foremost, which is what we should be doing here in this House.

I do not want to belabour the question, but I think there is a strong prima facie case here, Mr. Speaker, for consideration by a committee as to what happens in this Parliament now that the numbers are somewhat equalized. When a committee is sitting and the bells start to ring, does that committee continue to sit or is it going to be the practice of the committees to adjourn and have the Members come here to vote? I think that must be answered, otherwise some committees will pressure Members to stay and other committees will let them go. The Whips will have a difficult time deciding which committee sits and which committee does not sit. There has to be one rule for all of us, that we either come here to vote or we stay in committee. I would like to know what the answer is going to be to that question.

Nordion and Theratronics

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a point of order. The Hon. Member rose under the guise of a question of privilege and interrupted the Minister of State for Privatization for the second time during his remarks on a second reading speech. The rules, as I understand them, require that a Member of Parliament wanting to raise a question of privilege do so at the earliest possible opportunity.

Ms. Copps: That is what I did.

Mr. Beatty: If the Hon. Member was complaining about an incident that took place previously, which she could have dealt with previously, then there is no reason in the world why she could not have immediately raised this matter on the floor of the House of Commons.

Ms. Copps: I was voting.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member shouts from her seat now. Members will be very much aware of the fact that she had already risen prior to this with a frivolous point of order to interrupt the Minister of State for Privatization. She apparently did not feel, when she was on her feet previously, that this was a matter of any importance. The rules are quite clear. Members of Parliament are obliged to raise questions of privilege at the earliest possible opportunity. The Member who was recognized in the House chose not to do that—

Ms. Copps: I did not know about it.

Mr. Beatty: —and chose instead simply to interrupt on a frivolous question of privilege at a time which is not permitted under the rules, and in so doing interrupted the Minister of State on an important contribution that he was making to second reading.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that you have already given your guidance to the House and that any further discussion of this is a question of your ruling.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I think two points need to be made in terms of the latest interjection.

The Hon. Member for Hamilton East made the point of her prima facie case of privilege that she was explaining as a result of information brought to her attention. I can vouch for the same situation. A number of Members from the New Democratic Party caucus were in the same situation and brought to my attention the fact that they could not be in two places at the same time. They were wondering which should take precedence, a call to the House for an important vote—after all, Mr. Speaker, we were voting, virtually, on the implementation of the Budget, or a number of tax provisions within the Budget. All three votes were serious votes. It was important for Members of Parliament to be here to register, to stand in their places, either in support of this Budget or in opposition to it.

We put Members of Parliament in an untenable situation when they are attending committee meetings and are expected to be there representing their various caucuses, and yet the bells are ringing to call Members to a vote in the House of Commons. I might add, it was an important vote in the House of Commons, and I think that the Hon. Member for Hamilton East makes a very convincing case in terms of a prima facie case of privilege. I encourage you to take it seriously, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Prud'homme: Mr. Speaker, I did not know when I got up earlier today that what I was predicting could happen would happen so soon. It appears that some Members did not catch the translation. Sometimes people think I talk too often in English, according to an article in La Presse. I would still do this intervention in English because earlier today in French I said that it was a bad precedent and we should look into it.

When the bell calls us, that is our first duty, of many duties. I said that maybe we should look into that before we get into a long debate, eventually. I did not know that eventually would be today.

I liked the lecture of the ex-Minister of National Defence earlier on. I think he is totally wrong. I believe my colleague used what we call the first opportunity. What is the first opportunity? Next week would not have been the first opportunity. I consider that tomorrow may not have been the first opportunity. I think she was right in doing it today.

If anyone is interested in discipline, it is certainly the Chief Government Whip, as well as my Whip, and any other Whip from any other third party. I think that should be looked into so we have consistency.

I submit this to you for your consideration. A chairman of a committee states: "To hell with the bell, we will continue sitting". Then we have chairmen who state: "Oh, the bell is calling us. I am sorry, I will interrupt now." "What time is the vote? We shall interrupt later."

I suggest to the House that we should look into this matter because it will bring chaos to the House if some committees sit while the bells are ringing, when votes are taking place, and other chairmen prefer to show more respect for the House. The House is what should be primary. I would look into this with whoever is interested.

I submit to the Chair that he look into it. He need not render a decision today, but certainly it is an important issue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the Hon. Members for their interventions. Obviously this matter must be looked into, either by the Whips, the House Leaders, the Liaison Committee or a panel of chairpersons. When I figure out who, I will let Hon. Members know.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think the matter is a serious one and must be looked into. The point was raised earlier today by the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) and the Speaker will look into the matter and report back to the House.

It being 6 o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock.

The House adjourned at 6 p.m.

PARITY PRICES FOR FARM PRODUCTS ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville) moved for leave to introduce Bill C–249, an Act respecting parity prices for farm products.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nystrom: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this Bill is to provide Canadians farmers with parity prices based on a production price formula for wheat, oats and barley destined for human consumption in Canada and to create optional marketing boards for pork and beef. The Bill is intended to pave the way for setting parity prices for Canadian producers.

CANADA LABOUR CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-250, an Act to amend the Canada Labour Code (grain handling).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, drought and the international subsidy wars have given grain producers enough to worry about without the age old problems of slow-downs and shut-downs in the grain handling and transportation system.

This Bill would curtail work stoppages by grain handlers and those involved in the transportation of grain from farm gate to the port. Instead, both prolonged lockouts and strikes would be prohibited. The mechanism for resolution of disputes would be immediately implemented, thereby avoiding these work stoppages which are so harmful to the Canadian producer.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

IMMIGRATION—INCREASED ASSISTANCE IN LEBANON

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition on behalf of over 200 Canadians of Lebanese origin. The petitioners are directly affected by the Syrian aggression in Lebanon.

They are very concerned about the safety and well-being of their friends and relatives. As Canadians of Lebanese descent they are aware that the Arab League of Nations has tried and failed on four successive occasions to guarantee a ceasefire in that country.

They are also aware that their people have to travel to Syria and Israel to be processed as refugees to Canada and that the consular office in Cyprus processes only immigration applications.

The petitioners are calling upon the Parliament of Canada to urge this Government to take steps to facilitate the immigration of those Lebanese who are being forced to flee their country and to increase assistance to those Lebanese who are forced to stay behind.

They further ask the Government of Canada to call for an emergency debate in the Security Council so that the United Nations will intervene immediately and energetically to remove all non-Lebanese forces from its territory.

I urge this Government to take action in supporting the sovereignty and independence of Lebanon.

REVISION OF EXTRADITION LAWS

Mr. Al Johnson (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present petitions which have been certified by the Clerk pursuant to Standing Order 36.

These petitions, which contain 1,572 signatures, call upon the Government of Canada to revise the extradition laws and to allow the Minister of Justice to order the extradition of fugitives either immediately or after they have been dealt with fully by the Canadian penal system.

I join with the petitioners in urging the Government to toughen up this aspect of our criminal justice and extradition systems.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition duly certified under Standing Order 36 which deals with the whole question of unemployment insurance.

The petitioners urge the Government immediately to adopt the recommendations of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration in its first report to the thirty-third Parliament and not to proceed with the proposed changes to the unemployment insurance fund, which will disentitle up to a million Canadians from unemployment insurance benefits.

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Mr. Speaker, I too would address the same topic. I have a petition duly certified by the Clerk under Standing Order 36, the topic being the changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act and the disenfranchisement of up to a million Canadians as a result of those changes.

The petitioners are asking that the recommendations of the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration in its first report to the thirty-third Parliament, second session, be adopted.

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, I intend to file with this House a petition signed by a number of outstanding Canadian citizens and taxpayers who are deeply concerned about the pending unemployment insurance Bill.

These citizens are opposed to the harmonization of unemployment insurance in this House to conform with the Free Trade Agreement, which will destroy the historic role of unemployment insurance in this nation.

These people have taken the time out to sign this petition and to bring it to Parliament, with the hope that every ear and mind in this House of Commons will be bent closely to listen to their pleas, along with my insistence that this become a high priority with the Government.

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, I too want to bend the minds and the ears of the Members across the way if it is possible; I am not sure if it is. I also have a petition signed by a number of Canadians who are concerned about changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act which they feel will take about a million Canadians off the unemployment insurance payroll.

They are also saying that they are concerned that no reference was made to the Unemployment Insurance Act during the election campaign of November, 1988. A number of these Canadians are concerned about these changes and about the honesty and integrity of the Government across the way. They are hoping the Government will come to its senses and listen to what they are saying.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my petition is also for the benefit of the bent minds across the way. It is related to the Unemployment Insurance Act.

The people who have signed this petition indicate that they are upset that the federal Government made no reference to such changes in unemployment insurance during the recent election. They want to note that the only government position of record was the reference made by the all-Party Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration which called for improvement in benefits, cuts, and waiting periods.

Therefore, the undersigned petitioners humbly call upon Parliament to move immediately to adopt the recommendations presented to it by the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration in its first report to the thirty-third Parliament, second session, and to reject any proposals to fund much needed retraining programs from unemployment benefits.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36, on behalf of a number of people from Kamloops, British Columbia, outstanding Canadians who are concerned that the changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act proposed by the Government would prevent up to a million Canadians, annually, from establishing unemployment insurance claims. There is a long list of concerns but I will not go through them all. I will use a few days to raise them, day by day.

Fundamentally, they are calling upon Parliament to move immediately to adopt the recommendations presented to it by the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration in its first report to the thirty-third Parliament, second session, and to reject any proposals to fund the much needed retraining programs from unemployment benefit funds.

VIA RAIL SERVICES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, turning to another issue, I have a different petition from a large number of petitioners from Kamloops, British Columbia, who are concerned that the Government of Canada has failed to provide the financial resources necessary to enable VIA Rail to fulfil its promise of improved rail service. It obviously has the ability and yet it simply has never been given the resources by this Government to carry out its mandate successfully.

• (1120)

The petitioners are asking Parliament to maintain, improve, and modernize VIA Rail service, particularly in those areas of the country where it can provide a more rapid, economic, safe, convenient, environmentally sound, and energy efficient alternative to other means of transportation.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I rise hopefully to soften the hardened hearts of the Government. I am pleased to table a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36 on behalf of some great Canadians of Ontario. They, too, are protesting the proposed changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act which may, indeed, adversely affect one million Canadians.

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to present a petition dealing with changes in the Unemployment Insurance Act and signed by a number of Canadians from across the country.

They are protesting the taking of funds from those who are unemployed and directing those funds to re-training, rather than finding new sources of funds for retraining. They are also complaining about the fact that the Government did not mention this in its election platform and are concerned about the fact that it will take one million Canadian, annually, off the unemployment insurance lists, leaving them without any means of support other than at the behest of the provinces.

STARRED QUESTION

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, if would you be so kind as to call Starred Question No. 30, it would be answered today.

Due to the length of the response which is 27 pages, I would ask that it be made an order for return and that this return would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I ask that all remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all remaining questions be allowed to stand?

POINT OF ORDER

PLACEMENT OF MOTION ON ORDER PAPER

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I want to indicate clearly to the Minister who is about to speak that this intervention will be short and in no way is intended to keep him from making his presentation on this space centre.

I originally asked that I have an opportunity to rise on a question of privilege. I think, having reconsidered that, I am rising on a point of order. I want to just a few moments to explain my point of order.

There seems to be a misplacement on the Order Paper of a motion which I submitted yesterday. The motion reads as follows:

> That it be an Order of this House that Les McIlroy, Chief of Staff to the Minister of Finance, Bill Pristanski, Chief of Staff to the Solicitor General, and Phil Evershed, Chief of Staff to the Deputy Prime Minister attend at the Bar of the House when Orders of the Day are reached in the sitting of the House following the day on which this Order is made, for the purpose of providing information to the House concerning the receipt of information about the improper and unauthorized possession and distribution of budget material and the manner and time in which members of the Cabinet were provided with this information;
> That the aforementioned persons bring with them such papers and records as may be required for these purposes; and
> That the Clerk and Sergeant-at-Arms of the House take all necessary actions to ensure compliance with this Order.

I recognize that the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) also presented a similar motion referring to other individuals.

In my letter to the Journals Branch yesterday, I specified that it was pursuant to Standing Order 67(p) that I gave notice of this motion, and that Standing Order reads as follows:

> (p) such other motion, made upon Routine Proceedings, as may be required for the observance of the proprieties of the House, the maintenance of its authority, the appointment or conduct of its officers, the management of its business, the arrangement of its proceedings, the correctness of its records, the fixing of its sitting days or the times of its meeting or adjournment.

I cannot think of a more important motion concerning the maintenance of the authority of the House than one seeking to determine whether the responsibility for making decisions of government is held by Members of Parliament and Ministers of the Crown or public servants.

It has been ruled that motions relating to certain of these categories, specifically the business of the House, are the sole prerogative of the Government. However, I cannot find any records where a motion to call witnesses to the bar has become the sole prerogative of the Government. If you reflect upon those occasions when the House has considered motions to call individuals to the bar, Mr. Speaker, I submit that you will find that the privilege of moving such a motion has not been restricted to Ministers of the Crown. Indeed, in the few instances where the House has called someone to the bar, it has frequently been on a motion of an opposition Member.

In 1873, for example, several such motions were made; sometimes by Liberals, sometimes by Conservatives, and at least once by Prime Minister Macdonald.

In one example on June 7, 1894, during a Conservative Government a motion to call witnesses to the bar was moved by the Chief Opposition Whip, Mr. Edgar. It was moved without notice and the House adopted the motion.

A decade later when Liberal Sir Wilfrid Laurier was Prime Minister, a prominent Conservative rose on privilege and moved that a journalist whom he considered libellous be called to the bar. Although he rose on privilege and not during Routine Proceedings, it is interesting to note the observation of Sir Wilfrid Laurier who said: "Mr. Speaker, the motion of the honourable gentleman is undoubtedly according to the rules of the House, one which is altogether within his right to move and have adopted by Parliament".

Yet it seems that this same type of motion is not within our rights as opposition Members to move and have adopted by Parliament during regular House time. I have not yet been able to find a previous instance where a serious motion to call a witness to the bar has been denied through being relegated to Private Members' Business, especially after Private Members' Business has evolved to a tag-end hour of debate of little force or effect.

It is unfortunate on one hand to have such old precedents on this issue. The House, I realize, has not been forced to consider such dramatic and unusual steps to learn the truth of the matter. There is a perception that the precedents from the early years of the Canadian House of Commons are not necessarily relevant today. Some feel it was a different world in those days, a different relationship between Parties, a different type of Parliament and with different rules.

I hope that you, Mr. Speaker, will find that the fundamental question has not changed. There has been no change to the rights of the House of Commons and to the rights of Members of the House to seek information and to learn the truth.

Mr. Crosby: Yes, it has changed. We have the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Mr. Riis: I am at a loss to understand why Members of the House in 1989 are denied, if you like, the opportunity that was available to Members who represented our grandparents.

I trust that you will find an error has been made in the placement of Motion No. 490 in my name under Private Members' Business and will direct that it be moved to Notices of Motion.

• (1130)

I would like to address briefly the concerns that you and other Members have made about the risks of allowing a motion from this side of the House to be debated during Routine Proceedings. There is perhaps a genuine fear that these motions by the Opposition are an attempt to hijack the House. This argument is clearly false and trivializes serious questions that a number of Hon. Members, including the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) are trying to have answered in the House. If this motion and that of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition were to be placed under Motions, under the rubric of Routine Proceedings, at most three hours, and more likely two hours, of House time would be used to debate the motion. Subsequently, the motion would become transferred to Government Orders and it is only the prerogative of the Government to call it for debate. In other words, just as the Government can talk out Private Members' Hour, so too can it talk out any motion moved during Routine Proceedings. However, that does not diminish the seriousness and the importance of having such a motion debated.

This is a serious issue, Mr. Speaker, and we ought to have the right to have it moved to the proper place in Routine Proceedings so that an opposition Member may on occasion have such a motion debated.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, my reply will be very brief because I believe that under Government Orders we ought to proceed with the motion that was called for debate and has been moved by the Minister.

There have been many changes in the Standing Orders from time to time. If the Chair were to examine the titles of Routine Proceedings, there is private Members' Business, Government Business and Motions. By practice, most of the items that have been handled under Motions have been items of routine business and items where there has been agreement between the Parties that a matter would be dealt with in an expeditious manner under that heading. There has been ample opportunity for Members to put forward private enterprises or efforts.

At a later date, Mr. Speaker, I will be getting into the question of whether or not it is appropriate to flood, if I may use that word, private Members' motions and the actual text of the motions that are there. We are in the process of doing an analysis of that. I do not believe that is what Private Members' Hour was intended for. We feel, and it seems to have worked pretty well on the first mandate, that it was intended to allow Members to bring forward items which would be considered for full debate by the Private Members' committee. That has worked pretty well in the past. There have been Private Members' Bills passed right through all three stages because they were not "talked out".

The Government stands behind that principle, but I believe we will be suggesting some changes to that. As an aside, the Government's view is that the Table's slotting of motions has been impeccable up until now. Their judgment has been very sound. We believe that the Right Hon. Member from Vancouver Quadra's motion is in the right place and that when it is transferred from the notice paper my hon. friend from Kamloop's motion will be in the correct place. I would submit that these matters should be treated as a Private Member's motion.

Mr. Crosby: I would like to make a brief intervention, Mr. Speaker, in light of the arguments raised by the Member from British Columbia with respect to the procedures in the House of Commons. I would remind the Chair and all Members that in 1981 and 1982 we made a dramatic change in the laws of Canada. We passed constitutional provisions that included the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. The Charter contains provisions that dramatically affect the way the law is administered throughout Canada and the powers of Parliament. We stood and voted in favour of a Charter of Rights and Freedoms that dramatically restricted the powers of the House of Commons. When we try to rely on ancient precedents and traditions requiring people to appear before the Bar of the House of Commons in accordance with Parliamentary tradition, we forget that we have enacted a law that gives to those very people the rights and protection of the law. I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that when you are considering these parliamentary precedents, you recognize the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and its application to the people affected by our action.

What the Member from British Columbia is asking is that a person be brought before this Chamber for an inquisition by Members of this House of Commons when the Charter of Rights and Freedoms protects that person from such inquisition and says that they must have the protection of law.

Mr. Milliken: They can have counsel with them.

Mr. Crosby: This Parliament passed a law—if you do not want to pay any attention, listen to this: This Parliament passed a law which was interpreted in the case of the Province of Ontario as prohibiting the saying of prayers in public schools in Ontario. Yet we stand every day in our Chamber and say prayers. We deprived the schoolchildren of Ontario of that right but we maintain it for ourselves.

We are not paying enough attention in this Parliament to what we did in 1982. We dramatically changed the laws of Canada by enacting the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms. We cannot pick up our Standing Orders and say they govern in all cases. What governs in Canada is the Constitution, the rule of law. We cannot make these laws up day by day and change them as we go along.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the issue that you are being asked to rule on is not whether the procedure of calling someone to the Bar of the House is still available, but rather whether the motion of the Leader of the Opposition, and I presume a similar motion by the House Leader or another Member of the NDP, should be under Private Members' motions, or Motions as such.

I submit to you that this matter is of such importance, dealing as it does with the workings of the House and its role generally, that this motion should not be placed under Private Members' motions, but rather under Motions.

I do not intend to give a lengthy review of precedents in this regard. There is a Standing Order which I think you can rely on to have this matter placed under Motions. It seems to me that if the Government is concerned about clearing the air on this issue of cover-ups of Budget leaks and the like, it would be delighted to have this motion placed under the regular heading of Motions and dealt with as quickly as possible.

With respect to the representations made to you by the Conservative Member who has just spoken, it does not in any way follow that if this House made a motion to summon individuals to the Bar of the House, this is in any way contrary to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. It does not mean—

Mr. Crosby: They would not be able to have counsel.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): It does not mean that a person would not be able to have counsel and would not have available to him what the Charter of Rights says with respect to individuals and their freedoms. In fact, an individual summoned to the Bar of the House would have a protection not available in any other type of judicial or inquiry proceeding. That is, before any question could be put to such individual, a motion would have to be made specifically to put that question. That motion would be debatable and voted upon by all the Members of the House. That, Mr. Speaker, is a privilege not available to any witness before an ordinary judicial inquiry or any court proceedings.

Therefore, I say to my hon. friend that it is good to hear his concern about individual rights. It is good to hear what he has to say about the application of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. But if he is serious about that, let him bring those views to the attention of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice and let them as a result rethink what is being done or attempted to be done to Mr. Doug Small. I put him to the test on that matter. Therefore to conclude, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Halifax West.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to prolong this discussion but I just want to record what nonsense that last remark made. In this country, the administration of the criminal law lies with the provinces of Canada. Each province is responsible for the administration of the criminal laws in that province. If the Minister does not know that, he had better go back to law school. The Prime Minister has absolutely nothing to do with the enforcement of criminal law in Canada. The case to which the Member refers involves enforcement of criminal law in the Province of Ontario. It is in the purview of the Attorney General of the Province of Ontario and has nothing to do with the Minister of Justice or the Prime Minister of Canada. The Member must know that.

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to keep my remarks in order on the point of order raised by my colleague and focus on the role of Standing Orders in this Chamber and other similar Chambers.

My colleague has given a thoroughly researched presentation to this House about the history of the use of these kinds of motions. As much as I would enjoy a debate that shifted onto an interpretation of the Charter of Rights, Standing Orders is what we govern ourselves under in this Chamber and it has nothing to do with any other laws of the land. It is a method of running this Chamber and this Chamber alone.

Without Standing Orders, we could all be subject to the interpretation of legislation across this country. The House would return to the kind of chaos that we occasionally have when Members speak about a subject without reference to Standing Orders and with no judgment, Mr. Speaker.

The Member has raised an important question here. There is no precedent in this Chamber on which the motion should be shifted to Private Members' order. The fact is every precedent given in making a decision on this matter is exactly in the direction pointed out by my colleague, the House Leader of the New Democratic Party.

If in the rare use of the Standing Order and this motion it is summarily dismissed to being another initiative of a private Member rather than the business of the whole House, we lose the whole traditional thrust of calling somebody to the bar. It is an extremely rare request. It is not given frivolously. But it should be given the proper consideration under tradition and practice and the rule of Standing Orders.

I appeal to you, Mr. Speaker. It is an important decision aside from the substance. As much as I am tempted to stray into the substance, that serves no purpose. We can share opinions about the substance. That is separate and distinct from a decision that has to be made under Standing Orders.

If Standing Orders are to be worth anything, they must be consistent, they must obey tradition and interpretation by example.

The Member has done a first-class job for this House in his presentation, aside from the issue. But in terms of the presentation, I see no other course than to follow the tradition of the interpretation of the Standing Order and the precedents that exist. I know that you will take that under consideration. I know how important Standing Orders' consistency are to the Chair. Thank you for listening, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): I want to make a brief comment. The Hon. Conservative Member who just spoke appears to be asking you to rule out the point of order we are discussing on the basis that calling somebody before the Bar of the House is contrary to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. I note that neither the Government House Leader, nor in fact the Hon. Member I am referring to, has attempted to make that argument with respect to the notice of motion being listed under Private Members' Business.

If the Hon. Member who has just spoken is correct, then there should have been an objection taken on behalf of the Government for this notice of motion being under Private Members' Business. This has not been done.

I submit that the conclusion to be drawn from this is that the issue of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms is not relevant to whether this motion should be considered under either Private Members' Business or Government business. If it is to be invoked at all, it is after the motion is adopted by the House and the person named in the motion appears before the Bar and is dealt with in a way he considers infringes the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

I feel I have to make this argument to the extent that you wish to take into account both the point raised by the Hon. Conservative Member and the lack of that point being raised on behalf of the Government by the Government House Leader.

I conclude by again inviting you to consider on its merits the precedents that have been cited and the relevant Standing Order, which I submit allows this motion and in fact requires this motion to be considered under Motions during Routine Proceedings.

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, I would not want to belabour the point, but it seems to me that Standing Order 67(p) is quite clear on this matter. It says:

> The following motions are debatable: (p) such other motion, made upon Routine Proceedings, as may be required for the observance of the proprieties of the House, the maintenance of its authority, the appointment or conduct of its officers, the management of its business, the arrangement of its proceedings, the correctness of its records, the fixing of its sitting days—

While it may be that the practice has arisen that the Government House Leader alone introduces motions under Routine Proceedings for these purposes, it seems to me there are other purposes besides those which may be countenanced. Clearly, the precedents cited by the Hon. Member for Kamloops dealing with the right of the House to call persons to appear before its Bar and answer questions is one of those that is not necessarily a Government motion at all. Given that the two notices of motion we have—one from the Leader of the Opposition and one from the Hon. Member for Kamloops—deal with matters that could fit under this section (p), they are clearly debatable motions and ones that could be brought under Routine Proceedings.

I want to support the suggestion that the Hon. Member for Kamloops has made and reinforce the argument that under Standing Order 67(p), it would be possible for these motions to be brought under Routine Proceedings and not as Private Members' Motions and debated in the proper way there.

They do relate to the arrangement of proceedings of the House, to the management of its business, to the conduct of its officers, maintenance of its authority, and so on. These are all items that are dealt with in the two notices of motion that we have before us. I would ask that Your Honour consider them under that heading.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops has raised an intriguing matter. It is strongly supported by the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca and other Members.

The Hon. Member for Halifax West has raised an issue which is also interesting and probably bears some careful consideration. That is, whether or not the orders of this House ought to be examined on the basis that since the orders were originally made and then amended from time to time or added to or deleted, we now have a Charter of Rights and to what degree does that Charter of Rights affect the orders of this House.

I think I understand the Hon. Member's point that I will have to consider. I will try to return to the House as quickly as possible on this matter. I understand perfectly that the Hon. Member for Kamloops would want the decision made as quickly as possible. I thank the Hon. Members for their courtesy and help.

CANADIAN SPACE AGENCY ACT

Hon. William C. Winegard (for the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology) moved that Bill C-16, an Act to establish the Canadian Space Agency and to provide for other matters in relation to space, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, today this House once again plays a part in history. We are debating the establishment of the Canadian Space Agency, an historic step in the development of Canada's space program.

The establishment of the Canadian Space Agency will play an important part in the development of a Canadian economic capability based on a partnership between industry, government, and universities. Beyond that, it is another venture by Canada and Canadians into the newest era of human development, the space age.

Since our ancestors in very early times first realized that the lights in the night sky were physical bodies, humanity has wanted to learn more about the universe. Our fascination now with space travel is not new. There has always existed the urge to travel to the moon and to the planets.

Our understanding of the heavens has evolved slowly. The history of that understanding is studded with the names of the great scientists: Copernicus, Galileo, Kepler, Newton, Einstein and many others.

It was not until the second half of our own century that humanity was actually able to send objects and humans into space. It soon became apparent that the exploration and the understanding of the universe depended on bringing together all humanity's knowledge of the sciences, all humanity's engineering and technological knowledge and skills.

It soon became equally apparent that realizing the age-old dream of travelling to the stars was too massive an undertaking for one nation and that international co-operation is as much a part of space as the application of knowledge and science.

[Translation]

Among those who are listening to the debate today, some may have the impression that establishing the Canadian Space Agency is Canada's first step in space. That is certainly not the case. It is a step and an important one, but it certainly is not the first one in the long and distinguished history of our presence in space!

[English]

Canada's part in the exploration of space was underlined on September 29, 1962 when Alouette 1 was launched, making Canada the world's third nation, after the United States and the Soviet Union, to have an orbiting satellite. This remarkable achievement was built upon the ground-based scientific studies carried out by Canadian scientists, carried out since the early 1930s, and upon the advanced technology developed in Canada during and after the Second World War.

Since 1962, Canada has become a world leader in a number of space-related fields such as communications, remote sensing, and the development of space technologies such as the Canadarm. Canada's 60-year-old space activity has been marked by domestic and international partnerships; domestically between Governments, industry, and universities, and internationally between Canada and the United States, the European Space Agency, Japan, Sweden, and the Soviet Union.

In the 27 years since Alouette 1 was launched, Canada and Canadians have earned a reputation world-wide as a nation that is serious about scientific effort and about space. Canada has enhanced its reputation as a nation committed to peaceful international co-operation for the benefit of humanity.

The Government's space effort is currently housed in several federal Departments and agencies. The Government's long-term Canadian space program represents a total investment of approximately $3 billion over the 15-year period. That period is from 1986 to the year 2000.

The establishment of the Canadian Space Agency brings together under a new Department much of the space program activities of the Ministry of State for Science and Technology, the Department of Communications, and the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. The space division of the National Research Council will also become a part of the Canadian Space Agency.

The Agency will have direct management responsibilities of approximately $2 billion of the Canadian space program. Departments which serve specific user or client needs through the use of space technology will retain that ongoing role. For example, the Department of Communications will retain responsibility for telecommunications in Canada; the Canada Centre for Remote Sensing will continue to serve its own client base with products of space-based earth observations; the Department of National Defence will continue to operate its own space program. However, the Canadian Space Agency will assist the Minister to co-ordinate those programs. Those other aspects of the Canadian space program will amount to approximately $1 billion over that time period.

The object of the Canadian Space Agency will be the peaceful use and development of space to ensure that space science and technology provides social and economic benefits for Canadians.

I must stress the concept of the peaceful use and development of space. The Canadian Space Agency will be involved in only those activities which fall within Canada's international obligations as contained in the treaties in outer space to which we are signatories. It will ensure the development, transfer, diffusion, and absorption of space technology to Canadian industry by securing their active involvement, and also the active involvement of the academic and the research and development institutions of the country.

[Translation]

The space program will also provide for a balanced apportionment of spinoffs across this country. The Government's policy is quite clear in this respect. Regional development objectives will be observed to the greatest possible extent. This objective is now an integral part of the Agency's planning process.

The Agency will encourage the continuing development of automation and robotics technology, satellite communications and remote sensing and ground-based technology. In addition to the retrieval and processing of remote sensing data, the Agency will also promote the development of technology for ground-based control and rocket engineering, and the advancement of space science in all regions of Canada.

More specifically, efforts will be made to develop a space-linked high technology base in Atlantic Canada.

The Space Agency will have its headquarters in Saint-Hubert on the South Shore of the St. Lawrence. Montreal is above all a city of international caliber and an important centre for Canada's aviation and space industry.

[English]

Canada's space program has already provided economic benefits for this country. We have better communication networks and improved ability to manage our resources and strong exports of high technology products. All of those translate into economic returns either in new efficiencies or in direct job creation. The program will continue to do that. The Canadian space program will also contribute heavily to this Government's efforts to create and sustain a high technology base in Canada.

• (1200)

The technology developed by the Canadian Space Agency for use in the total space program will be transferred to Canadian industrial sectors. The potential spin-offs already show considerable promise. For example, robotics technologies for the Canadarm have applications in harsh environments here on earth. Remote sensing technology, a field in which Canada has already set the pace for the world and the field the Canadian Space Agency will continue to develop will contribute to better management of our precious resources.

The legislation has set the objective for the Canadian Space Agency to sustain those benefits. It will also provide the agency with the tools to carry out that mandate.

The agency will be a department of the Government, reporting to the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology. The Minister will be responsible for co-ordinating the space policies and space programs of the Government of Canada. That co-ordination will be done through the Canadian Space Agency.

The agency will also manage Canada's major international space commitments. For example, the agency will direct Canada's activities in the space station both in development of the mobile servicing system and in the best use of the laboratories in which Canada's astronauts will conduct experiments in microgravity, space technology, space science, and in life sciences such as space medicine.

As well, the agency will manage the Radarsat program, a co-operative venture involving Canada, the United States, nine provincial Governments and the private sector. Radarsat is unique in the nature and extent of its co-operative aspects. The agency will also manage and operate world-class space facilities such as the David Florida Laboratory located in Ottawa. It will also be charged with encouraging the commercial development of space related technology for use in Canada by Canadians.

The agency will continue on the course Canada has already set of international partnership in space exploration, working with other nations on space and space related programs and of course making our space related technology and goods available to the world.

Dr. Larkin Kerwin, who has had a long and distinguished career as an academic and administrator, will be president of the agency. He is a former rector of Université Laval, and I might add that he was rector of that university when I was performing a similar job at the University of Guelph. I knew him well in that capacity. As rector of that university and as president of the National Research Council, Dr. Kerwin will bring invaluable leadership and experience to his role as chief executive officer.

This new agency will work in close partnership with all other Departments with space related responsibility. Links with the Ministry, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Department of Communications, the National Research Council, and the Department of Industry, Science and Technology will be essential. This Government's priority is to put Canada and Canadians among the world players in the technological and scientific changes sweeping the world economy.

[Translation]

To achieve this, we must forge and maintain new alliances with the provinces, with engineers, companies and unions in order to attain new peaks in the areas of education, technology, development and innovation.

[English]

I am confident that we are building on that proud legacy with the creation of the Canadian Space Agency. With the Canadian Space Agency, we set a course for the future that will allow Canada to be a key player in a world economy based on science and technology.

We also set a course for the future in which Canada contributes its efforts, its energy, and its intellectual resources to humanity's age old quest for understanding of the universe. With the Canadian Space Agency we have taken one more firm step into an exciting future that I hope will interest many young men and women of Canada, many of our young students, to enter into the fields of science and technology and participate in not only this space program but also the general science and technology program for all Canada. We have an exciting future. The Canadian Space Agency will play its part in that future.

[Translation]

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity this morning to rise in the House and speak to the creation of the Canadian Space Agency and to discuss Canadian space programs and projects.

[English]

Every one of us in our youth have shared the fascination with space. I well remember in my own youth the fascination I had for everything I could find and read from that day in October, 1957 when we learned that the Soviet Union had launched a satellite into orbit. It is one of those days, as was the day nearly 20 years ago when man for the first time walked on the moon, that all of us remember where we were and what we were doing when we first heard the news.

Canada as a nation has demonstrated unusual ability in the field of space. I had the pleasure very recently of visiting the Dominion Observatory in Victoria, a place that when it was built in 1916 made Canada the nation in the world with the largest telescope at that time. When one thinks of it, that is an amazing thing.

In 1916 Canada was barely 50 years old. There at the farthest extremity of Canada, in Victoria, using anything but high technology—in fact using mules to haul these heavy instruments to the top of a hill—Canada became the proud possessor of this magnificent facility which still operates today and where we can still examine and observe the universe.

The Minister, in his remarks, mentioned the launch of Alouette I in 1962. Indeed Canada, by virtue of its geography and its demography, is a country that must rely on space technology. Satellite communications are an essential part of our national infrastructure. Remote sensing is crucial to the management of our natural resources. Weather satellites have become indispensable to us.

Indeed, the industrial benefits of Canada's space program have been noteworthy, an example in fact for other areas in which Canada lags behind in advanced technology.

We now employ about 3,500 people in the space sector. In 1986 we had $350 million in sales of which about 70 per cent was into the export market. These are industries which by and large are Canadian owned and which add significant value in Canada to the production of goods that are exported. This is a model for what we need to create in many other industries and sectors in Canada.

• (1210)

In effect, space is a source of pride in an otherwise rather dismal scene in Canada as far as science and technology is concerned. I have addressed this House before on my concerns about Canada's science, engineering, and technology performance. They are concerns that cannot be overstated or stated too many times.

[Translation]

Canada must realize how important engineering science and technology are if we want to be competitive on the world market.

[English]

The reality facing Canada today is that we cannot continue merely to rely on the exploitation of our natural resources if we are to maintain our standard of living. In a world in which sustainable development has become a global imperative, in which the continued burning of fossil fuels endangers our health and well-being, we must change our way of thinking and our understanding of economic development in the context of impending environmental crisis.

We have grown up believing that our natural resources are unlimited, that our wealth and standard of living is assured. This is simply not true. Our natural resources are limited in supply and the world demand for them is changing as more and more people consider a clean and healthy environment to be the most important natural resource of all.

The question we must now ask ourselves is: Are we prepared to invest in realizing the potential of Canada's most important resource, its people? The natural wealth that we have enjoyed has inhibited an appreciation of the necessity of investing in people, in education, and in skills in innovative technologies. All we need to do is look around us to understand the importance of science, engineering, technology, and advanced education, whether it be the now common use of a personal computer, the production of information technologies, or the fusing of two atoms to create energy.

Canada is being dragged, however reluctantly, into the 21st century. Whether or not we like it, we are engaged in a world-wide race for technological leadership, a race that is daily being intensified by international trading competitiveness characterized by the rapid and, in historic terms, relatively easy flow of goods and services between nations. With regard to the explosion of information technologies wealth is no longer simply a matter of control of durable goods. Just as brains over brawn has characterized human evolution, so will the innovative use of knowledge prevail over the mining of wealth and the production of goods over the next century.

The activities of transnational corporations, multinational trading companies, and international financial institutions, these corporate entities with the ability to move capital rapidly between nations, limit significantly the ability of nation states to control matters within their own jurisdictions.

As far as the involvement of national Governments in major technological enterprise is concerned, the United States through defence procurement has created the greatest industrial boondoggle in the history of the world. In Canada, we have the recent example of the proposed acquisition of Connaught Laboratories by Institut Merieu, a corporation controlled by the Government of France.

A comprehension of these phenomena is critical for Canada if we are going to be a nation that belongs to the 21st century.

As I review this Bill, I, as well as most Canadians, have come to the conclusion that the Government's strongest asset is its ability to recite rhetoric. As we all know, rhetoric does not imply a commitment to follow through. The Prime Minister has been a model student, perhaps even a teacher. After all, it was the Prime Minister who said:

> The starting line for me is the technological dimension. Either we go into the game and become important players in this major league, or we become a nation that will, during its entire lifetime, play in the Junior B circuit.
> Research and development and the resulting renovations are the lifeblood of a successful economy and country.

I also remind the House of the Prime Minister's stated goal for levels of research and development expenditures in Canada—2.5 per cent of Gross Domestic Product. Over the course of the mandate of this Government that level of spending has dropped. Federal government expenditures on research and development as a percentage of total research development have fallen from 37 per cent in 1984 to 30 per cent in 1988.

The National Research Council has been gutted and in that process the Government stopped the Black Brant rocket experimentation project in Manitoba. The Government shut down one of its observatories in Algonquin Park. As well, the energy division of the National Research Council was eliminated in 1984.

Space Agency

In the 1987 edition of the Canadian Association of University of Teachers' Bulletin the Prime Minister wrote:

> This Government stands ready to co-operate fully with the provinces and all others involved in post-secondary education and will help create and maintain a system of higher education capable of meeting the challenges facing Canada.

How can the Prime Minister expect Canadians to believe this given that only one year before his statement his Government capped the growth of Established Programs Financing, cutting support to post-secondary education? The recent Budget has once again taken a strip off an already beleaguered system of universities and colleges.

I share the frustration and cynicism that many Canadians have because of the actions of this Government in this crucial area. The Government is going to spend a considerable sum of money on the creation of the Canadian Space Agency, an institution that will derive its success from people, from an exciting convergence of ideas, the kind that led to events such as the launching of the ANIK A1 satellite in 1972, making Canada the first country to operate a domestic communications system based on a satellite in a geostationary orbit.

The frustration we feel is a result of the fact that we are losing the potential to maintain and expand our scientific expertise every time our universities and colleges are compromised by budget cuts and federal-provincial football games where education is the ball being kicked back and forth.

Even when one looks at the basic research in space science, the Government's performance clearly undermines the credibility that it hopes to gain from this Bill. The proportion of federal government space program expenditures devoted to space science has dropped from 14.2 per cent in the 1981-82 to 9.6 per cent in the current time frame. It was precisely this type of basic research in space science that led to the many success stories of which we are so proud.

It is worth noting for the record that the Prime Minister's own National Advisory Board on Science and Technology has made recommendations regarding the funding of university based research. Specifically, this board has called for the doubling of the base budgets of the research granting councils and subsequent indexing of these budgets at a rate of one and a half times the growth of the Gross National Product of Canada. However, that advice has been ignored by the Government.

It is no great surprise, albeit saddening and maybe even infuriating, when great Canadians such as Dr. John Polyani are quoted as saying "go to the United States" when asked to give advice to young Canadian scientists.

It is in the context of this pathetic state of Canadian performance and investment in science, engineering and technology that we must consider Bill C-16. It is in the face of our poor R and D performance, our enormous trade deficit in high and medium technology goods and the permitted deterioration of our institutions of advanced education, and in the absence of any discernible strategy on the part of the federal Government to transform Canada's industry to an aggressive export oriented high value added force, that we must look at this Bill.

In the face of those things, Bill C-16 is a weak and pathetic response by the Government. To be blunt, the Government's handling of the creation of the Canadian Space Agency is nothing short of embarrassing and irresponsible.

It was back in 1986 that the Government decided it wanted to create a space agency. It did so with great fanfare in the 1986 Throne Speech. I quote from that Throne Speech:

> My Government's commitment to high technology as a motive force in Canada's economic growth will be expressed in legislation to establish a Canadian Space Agency—Working in co-operation with industry, universities and provinces, the new agency will help to ensure that the benefits of Canada's role in space will be shared by all Canadians.

Here we are, nearly three years later, on second reading debate on a Bill to create the agency.

When it takes nearly three years for the Government to fulfil that kind of commitment to high technology as a motive force in Canada's economic growth, Canadians have every reason to doubt the Tory's ability to lead this country successfully through to the 21st century.

Unfortunately, this pathetic attempt at salvaging the Government's reputation and integrity is tarnished by further indecision at the cabinet level. This was demonstrated very well in comments by the Minister for Supply and Services when he was quoted by The Ottawa Sun on February 15, 1989, as stating the following:

> We have been carrying on the functions for 26 years in Ottawa, so it's perhaps an expenditure that we don't need.

That is what he said. Things do not end up with "to be or not to be". The former Minister of State for Science and Technology spent that two years of inaction telling us what the space agency would look like once the Government got around to doing it.

On March 20, 1987, the Minister, responding to a question in the House said, as reported at page 4390 of Hansard:

> Mr. Speaker, the comprehensive space program is a national program. There is keen competition from several regions in the country for the head office of the agency, which is not in itself a job creation effort. It will involve about 40 or 50 people.

He also said to the Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology, and again I quote:

> The head office of the agency will be a very small, compact unit with perhaps 40 or 50 people. All the various components and research facilities will perhaps initially stay where they are now but will be located where they are now or in different regions and centres in the country. It is not intended to establish the space agency with all its assets and facilities in one area.

If experience is our guide, it appears that we can tell that the Government is changing its mind when it changes Ministers. The current Minister of State for Science and Technology, as opposed to the Minister of State for Science and Technology who is a different person, announced a space agency with over 200 people at its head office.

That same Minister, also the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology, has shown just how arrogant the Government is when he refused to tell us exactly how much it would cost to set up the head office.

These kinds of antics give us the impression that the Government's appreciation of the importance of space technology amounts to no more than the interest a child has in a new toy.

This is not Star Trek. Canadians object to having their space program being treated like a scene from the comedy movie, Space Balls. I am sure you saw it, Mr. Speaker. It features comedian John Candy driving a Winnebago around the universe. That is the way this Government has played with this space agency issue. The Minister of Industry, Science and Technology plays the role of driver, and he sometimes resembles the driver of a getaway car. He is driving the space Winnebago around the country with a big sticker on the side which reads: "Vote Conservative", and he is leaving behind it chaos.

This comedy of errors has led to questionable expectations as well as unanswered questions. This entire matter of the establishment of the Canadian Space Agency is a case in point demonstrating at once the arrogance, incompetence, indecision, and political ineptitude of this Government.

What ought to have been a relatively simply matter was dragged out through political manipulation and indecision until the whole affair became a national tragicomedy.

Instead of creating a shining star in our high-tech universe, a focus of national pride in our achievements as a small but able nation, the Government has created a symbol of disunity, pitting region against region, province against province. It has ignored the concerns of our small but excellent band of space scientists who fear that controversies surrounding the creation of the agency will jeopardize their work.

I plead with the Government and with the Minister to launch this very day a peace initiative with the scientists and technicians upon whom the success of our space program depends. These people have genuine reason to believe that the bungling over the last three years augurs very badly for the space program. They do not want nor do they need to be associated with failure.

The success of the Canadian Space Program does not depend, with all due respect, upon the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology or the able Minister of State for Science and Technology. It depends upon the men and women with the expertise, the commitment and the years of experience, and they need to be taken into account.

I would also like to reflect some concerns that must be mentioned about Canada's space program such as the level of expenditures on space science. This was a matter that raised the concern of the Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology in its excellent report that was tabled in the last House. Many of its concerns are still relevant and still need to be addressed. It expressed the concern in its report about the level of spending on space science.

Members of the committees note, and I am quoting from their report, "funding has declined from approximately 15 per cent of the space program budget to less than 10 per cent. This level of funding is significantly lower than that provided in the space budgets of other western countries. In the United States, for example, NASA spends 20 per cent of its total budget on space science. It is crucial to us and to the future and success of our participation in space programs that we do the hard work that is necessary to develop that core of experience and expertise that basic research in space science provides."

There is our well publicized and important participation in the United States space station project. A number of concerns were expressed again by the Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology, a committee whose non-existence in this House is a matter of regret for many of us.

Those concerns should be stated—the concern about possible military uses of the U.S. space station; the concern that cost overruns on the space station project on the part of Canada could result in drains on other parts of the space program budget; the concern expressed by the committee that perhaps Canada lacks some of the ability to use fully the experimental environment that will be created by the space station and for which we are paying to have access; and the possible exaggeration of industrial spin-offs that arise from this participation. There is a concern over the regional development aspects of this program.

The Minister referred to that in his speech. The objective is to create program R and D funding in the following proportions: 35 per cent to each of Ontario and Quebec; 10 per cent to each of British Columbia, the Prairies and Atlantic Canada. It is noteworthy that in the period April 1984 to March 1988 what happened was somewhat different from that. In fact, in those years Quebec received 40 per cent of the spending; Ontario, 31 per cent; British Columbia, 11 per cent; the Prairies, 14 per cent; and Atlantic Canada, 0.1 per cent. In other words, there is a lot of work to be done in order to accomplish the regional development objectives of the Government.

Committee members expressed concern about this issue, and I quote: "We question, however, if it is practical, or at least over the short term, to attempt to distribute the limited resources of Canada's space program to areas lacking appropriate industrial infrastructure efficiently." They went on to state: "Long-term research projects which frequently are international in character must adhere to world-class standards. Short-term research must be driven by the specific requirements of the individual client." We have yet to see or hear from the Government how it intends to accomplish the objectives it has set forth.

Then there is the concern about people. It is concern that arises from inadequate post-secondary education funding in Canada, concern that arises from the inadequate amount spent on the program on space science, the concern that we are not building that cadre of expert and capable people to carry us forward in these projects. We know, for example, of the highly competitive nature of the employment market for space science. Even agencies such as NASA have had difficulty filling their requirements for scientists. We desperately need people.

The over-all objective of a science policy has got to be the promotion of Canada's ability to participate competitively in an international economy increasingly driven by technological innovation.

First, I believe the objective should be to enhance the climate for technological innovation in Canada. Governments should be seeking to stimulate and reward innovation and should be willing to share its cost.

Second, I believe there should be an objective of training and retraining a workforce of technologically literate workers. We require a new generation of blue and pink-collar workers whose special skills will lie in the areas of working with and applying new technologies in existing jobs and in occupations not yet thought about. High tech requires trained and skilled technicians and precision machine shops. To a great extent we lack these important skills in Canada. We must have a strategy to increase in absolute and relative terms our ongoing investment in research and technological innovation. We must use our relatively small size to our advantage by encouraging co-operation between the key players. I believe that the Centres of Excellence Program, the results of which we are eagerly awaiting, will contribute to this. But I fear that the program is underfunded and has created and will continue to create tensions and rivalries in the scientific community that did not exist before and need not exist.

We must improve existing incentives for the performance of industrial research. We must remove the obstacles to fair tax treatment of industrial consortia and wrestle to the ground the intractable problems of the definition of scientific research and experimental development in the Income Tax Act. We must use government procurement strategically to help create a viable advanced technology sector, and I must say that the cancellation of the unsolicited proposals program sends a very negative signal to the private sector in respect of the use of government procurement.

We must apply strategies to accelerate the commercialization of domestic and foreign technologies. Research, including applied research, as well as international marketing are expensive and require government support, direct or indirect. Our advanced technology sector must receive support similar to that received in other countries if it is going to gain a foothold in the global market.

We should not use our scarce resources to reinvent the wheel. Rather, our fundamental research should be world-scale and push back frontiers of discovery. Basic or fundamental research has a key role in the development of a scientific community and in setting a standard for a science culture to develop in this country. We do need to innovate and to tinker, but in our rush to be relevant we must not abandon the pursuit of excellence in science.

In addition to a science culture in Canada we need to beget a generation of entrepreneurs. We must recognize that entrepreneurship is a cultural process and has a social value. Entrepreneurs are risk-takers, men and women who take a chance and in so doing provide a pay cheque for others. They should be recognized as economic heroes.

In recent years practically all new jobs in this country have been created in the small business sector. Working in a small business, self-employment, entrepreneurship, owning and building a company of your own, must become credible options for our young people. Entrepreneurs are not born, they are developed.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, and perhaps most important, there must be resistance to the temptation to put high technology in the political pork barrel. It is too important, the sums of money too vast, and the public cannot take much more before cynicism is irreversible. Resources allocated to science, engineering and technology should be considered an investment rather than an expense. It must be invested wisely and carefully.

This is an exciting Bill. It is an exciting development in Canada's participation in space. We in our Party support the establishment of the Canadian Space Agency and look forward to it successfully pursuing its objectives and continuing Canada's success relative to the rest of the world in this important area of space. This step must be considered just a small step in the interest of science, engineering and technology. What we await from this Government is the giant leap that will bring Canada into the 21st Century.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, let me first take this occasion to congratulate my former academic colleague on his ascension to his present position of Minister of State for Science and Technology (Mr. Winegard). His experience in the academic world and his understanding of science is unchallenged. I hope he will be successful as an advocate for science, both basic and applied, in the Cabinet.

Let me also congratulate the Minister for the introduction of this Bill. We do not intend to unnecessarily prolong the debate because we think in most respects it is a good Bill.

Let me as well congratulate the Minister for his rhetoric. Indeed, I thought we were going to hear once more about the thousands points of light but I must confess I was intrigued by what he had to say about space flight and we on this side would encourage all Members on that side to become astronauts, and perhaps not return!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McCurdy: I found it interesting as well to listen to my colleague from Ottawa South. I believe I heard him recall the launching of Sputnik I. I do not know if that is a recollection from the womb or not, but I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, I can remember standing by my laboratory bench and hearing first about Sputnik, and subsequently experiencing the sense of panic that traversed the entire USA—because that is where I studied—over the fact that this backward, foreign and virtually enemy nation should have beat the Americans and the rest of the world into space.

I also recall that there was a crash program to improve post-secondary education and research in the United States. Indeed, as usual, following the leader, there followed a great increase in investment in universities and a movement in the direction of accessibility. That, of course, can be credited in large part to Liberal Governments of the time. If we, rather than discussing specifically this Bill, are to discuss the failure of Canadian science policy, then the Hon. Member for Ottawa South (Mr. Manley) ought to recognize that the greatest blame for the deep hole in which Canada presently finds itself is attributable, at least in part, to those years under Liberal Governments in which science was virtually ignored.

We can demonstrate it just by this example, Mr. Speaker. I speak from experience. I was in university at the time, struggling to be able to do research on a pittance in terms of funding, from year to year questioning how much the universities would be provided in terms of research funding through the granting councils. Each year, I waited until February to find out what the budget would be. That was in 1979. This is not an irrational partisan here. This is a scientist concerned about research and development in this country and pointing the finger where the blame belongs.

In 1979, the Tories won the election and immediately introduced a five-year funding program for the granting councils. It was cancelled immediately upon the ascension of the then Liberal Government which followed.

When the Hon. Member talks about the need to promote science culture in this country, let us be clear that the need to inculcate a science culture is as needed in this place as it is in the country at large. We must all be devoted to it.

I am not standing before you to attribute to the Conservative Government a revolutionary impact in terms of its devotion to meeting the Prime Minister's promise, also cited by the Hon. Member for Ottawa South (Mr. Manley), that he would indeed by next year ensure that the proportion of the Gross National Product expended for research and development in this country would be doubled. Mr. Speaker, as the Member says, it has not doubled. There are any number of areas in which we can see the utter failure of this Government to produce the commitment to science and research and development that was promised and that this country needs.

We are not today dealing with the issue of general, broad science policy. You, I know, will recognize that this Member has been on his feet many times, trying very hard to convince the Government, and indeed all sides of the House, that the kinds of considerations that the Member for Ottawa South set out before us need to become the basis for a real commitment to science and research and development in this country because there can be no doubt about it, to the extent that this country lacks economic independence, the extent to which it is unable to compete internationally are all indeed a result of too much emphasis on taking our quick crude resources and selling them off to the rest of the world where jobs are produced by selling products back to us. There is no question about that.

There is no question either that the excuse of the need to wrestle the deficit to the ground is not an excuse for the failures of this Government as exhibited until this time. Even as they say that we should not burden our youth with the mortgage for the future, this Government is in effect saying that it is better that they have no future. As sure as day follows night, if we do not turn it around, this country is going to be in serious difficulties. Although the rhetoric has been beautiful, the substance has not. You heard examples of it from the Minister on the Government's side. But no matter how grandiose the rhetoric, no matter how great the promises, if we do not meet our responsibilities in all areas of developing R and D, then this country is going to face a number of problems.

Let me for a moment iterate those problems that the Government has not addressed. They have talked about them, but not addressed them. There is of course the proportion of our GNP expended on research and development, poorest of all the industrial nations with which we have to compete. In order to turn that around, there is also the need to recognize what the root of that problem is. We have heard a great deal about too much Government expenditure on science. On the average, we spend about as much as anybody else in terms of Government expenditure on research. The fault lies in industry. What is the factor in industry that holds us back? As was cited by the National Advisory Board for Science and Technology—that eminent board of scientists and others—it is attributable in large part to the fact that our industry is foreign-owned. More than any of the other industrial nations, foreign ownership predominates in this country. If you look at the record of Canadian-owned companies located in Canada, they match any other industry in terms of their expenditure as a percentage of sales on research and development.

Is there any possibility of turning that around? Mr. Speaker, the Free Trade Agreement raises serious questions as to whether we will be able to use those tools that every other nation has used. I refer to direct grants, procurement, special forgivenesses, and so on. These would help our own companies to build up R and D.

It has also been mentioned that we must have the necessary trained and educated personnel in order to sustain a growth policy in R and D and, therefore, a growth policy in the economy. Even as I stand here, the transfer of payments to universities has been cut.

Once again, if one wants to look at the roots of these cuts and the failure of the federal Government to provide, in terms of its responsibility, adequate funding for post-secondary education, look back to 1977. It was a Liberal Government. Look back to five and six; a Liberal Government. We are casting the blame once more. The blame has to be spread among both parties that have held office as governments in this country.

An Hon. Member: What about NDP governments in the provinces? Tell us about that. There is no talk about their cut-backs.

An Hon. Member: You will get your chance.

Mr. McCurdy: I have riled my colleagues. I have riled them. I must be getting close to home. I will repeat, Mr. Speaker, I speak on behalf of those of us who have worked in the laboratories of this country under two regimes and seen both regimes fail us so desperately.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa South also indicated the need for having people who are trained in the technologies on the plant floor and so on to sustain the kind of transfer of technology to industry that is necessary to this country. With this, I agree. But again, the Government has failed us and has failed our youth. It ultimately will have failed this country.

Mr. Speaker, this is all background. We are here to credit the Government for at least one positive step forward. In turning to the specific legislation before us, Bill C-16—

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by saying that my party supports Bill C-16, an Act to establish the Canadian Space Agency and to provide for other matters in relation to space. The Bill specifies exactly where the Space Agency will be located, namely the Greater Montreal area. I would like to point out that we agree with this decision, although we may have some reservations about the specific location that was chosen and the manner in which the decision was made.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of Bill C-16 is of course to establish the Space Agency and to deal with certain other matters as described in the title. It is its purpose to establish an agency to co-ordinate certain Government research and to ensure the co-ordination of research which will essentially take place in the various other Departments of Government and in the private sphere. All of this is certainly necessary. It is clear that the dispersion of various functions having to do with space over so many Departments dictates the necessity of having some co-ordination. So we support this legislation in that respect.

• (1250)

As the Minister and my colleague from Ottawa South have indicated, Canada has a proud history with respect to space. After all, Canada was the third nation to put a satellite in orbit, Alouette I. That was followed by the Anik satellites, ending up finally with our participation in the American space shuttle program with our construction of the Canadarm which flew the Canadian flag in orbit around this earth. Canadians have a right to be proud. This was a signal accomplishment for this country. We were characterized, however, by a certain focus in our endeavours because our development of satellites has been largely committed to the need for effective communication in a vast country in which the population is widely scattered. We have continued this emphasis to this day and MSAT symbolizes the modern version of that kind of endeavour.

The space agency will have primary responsibility for our participation in the American space platforms through the construction of the mobile servicing centre. As well, it will have a role in the administration of the construction of RADARSAT. The RADARSAT project is very interesting and involves an example of the extraordinary expertise that this country has developed with respect to remote sensing. Its contribution to weather forecasting, to the environment and to the location of resources, its service therefore to the Department of Minerals, Mines and Resources has and will be signal. We regret that some portions of its functions have had to be cut back because of certain countries not signing in but nevertheless, even with the cut-backs, it is something that we are certainly proud to support.

Indeed, if one refers to the report of the former Standing Committee on Science, Research and Technology, it was the opinion of that committee that RADARSAT was so uniquely suited to the primary needs of this country, so much more likely to produce valuable spin-offs in this country, that it should be given priority over our participation in the American space platform.

With respect to our participation in the American project, of course that has been regarded as a particular kind of space mission. By its very nature, it attracts a great deal of attention. It has had a great deal of focus, but that focus can be described in terms of being a project particularly sexy. One of the things that has to be said about that is that it is part of an American mission and not a Canadian mission. I remind the House that when this project was announced, there were a number of us, including members of the board of the National Research Council and this Member, who warned that the projected expenditures of $800 million for that project would unquestionably be exceeded. Since then, the projected expenditures between the beginning of the project and the year 2001 have now been increased to $1.2 billion. We are warned that perhaps another $200 million will be necessary to ensure the downstream benefits of this project, such as would be desirable given the high priority accorded the project in terms of industrial spin-off. What was said was if those expenditures very much exceeded the $800 million original projection, there would be concern about that project depriving other perhaps higher priorities within the space envelope of adequate funding. Of course, the committee warned about that and expressed concern about that. Indeed, it was in consideration of the relative merits in terms of spin-off and industrial benefit that led that committee to identify RADARSAT as a preferable project.

In addition, Mr. Speaker—and this is edifying—many scientists felt that it was really unlikely that the over-all level of government expenditures for science would increase, that inevitably these overruns, mis-estimates of the cost of the project, would lead to the deprivation not only of space-oriented science, but all science, of necessary funding. As well, it would perhaps, indeed most likely, deprive those kinds of research and development that are more likely to make a significant contribution and produce the benefits that we hoped we could look forward to.

One of the benefits already mentioned with respect to this and other projects is the amount of spin-off that would be produced, the kinds of technologies that would be produced by private enterprise and the kinds of technical jobs and other jobs that would be produced as a consequence of this. This is where the real merit of the space endeavour will be shown. It is important to understand the significance of procurement in that respect. This is one of the reasons why so many of us talk in terms of the need for a unique Canadian scientific mission. We re-iterate that this is not Canada's national mission. This is an American mission and has not been defined in terms of benefit but in participation with their project for obvious reasons.

This gives me an opportunity to say that if Canada is going to have a national mission, it should seek missions which are uniquely Canadian and seek the participation of others. RADARSAT in part meets that criterion but our mission need not be in space. We should begin to look for national missions in terms of scientific endeavours that are more oriented to the particular needs of Canada on the ground. My hon. colleague mentioned the priority of the environment. We have a special advisory council recommending a special Canadian mission in hydrogen technology. This is a very promising area and one that, with a lot less expenditure, would through the process of procurement and so on have led to a great deal more benefit for Canadians than this project—that is the space platform or even RADARSAT—could ever provide. We should seek out those kinds of national scientific missions which are consistent with sustainable development and would contribute to cheap fuels which are environmentally neutral, which are renewable and sustainable so that Canada can make a real contribution to the needs of the world as well as itself and help reconstruct industry based on science.

To get back to the question of procurement, we recognize the great value of procurement in connection with space projects. This morning in committee I had great difficulty understanding what are the limits on procurement given the Free Trade Agreement, that it opens up procurement equally to both Americans and Canadians. What mechanisms will we use to ensure that Canada and Canadian-owned enterprises will benefit, that Canada, once having developed those technologies, will be able to keep those technologies?

I see that you are about to rise, Mr. Speaker. I will have to take a recess for now. I know you are disappointed but come back later and we can resume the audition.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Cook): The Hon. Member for Windsor—Lake St. Clair (Mr. McCurdy) has 17 minutes left for his remarks if he chooses to use them when we return to the debate.

It being 1 p.m., I do now leave the Chair until 2 p.m.

At 1 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

MARKETING OF OATS

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my dismay that a few days ago the Government saw fit to pass the Order in Council that removed oats from the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board, in spite of the fact that a survey commissioned by the prairie pools showed that 63 per cent of the farmers in western Canada opposed that move and that only 32 per cent supported it.

An overwhelming 76 per cent considered the Government's consultation with the farmers to be inadequate and only 18 per cent considered the consultation to be sufficient. There was nearly a two to one response in favour of the Government reconsidering its oats marketing decision. The Canadian Wheat Board has the confidence of 80 per cent of the farmers surveyed.

I am shocked that the Government would ignore the wishes of the producers and throw this industry to the laws of the jungle, in particular at a time when some United States producers were allowed to plant oats on set-aside acres without penalty.

YOUTH

CHALLENGE '89 STUDENT EMPLOYMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Larry Schneider (Regina—Wascana): Mr. Speaker, university students have been out of school for close to a month and in a few weeks high school students will join them.

It is time for those employers across Canada who have not already hired a summer student to give the idea serious consideration. Those students need the opportunity to gain valuable experience in order to prepare for the workforce. The Minister of State for Youth (Mr. Charest) and the Government have once again led the way with the Challenge '89 Student Employment Program. This year's focus is to provide career related experience for post-secondary students and also practical work experience for students at the secondary school level.

In my riding of Regina—Wascana the Summer Employment Experience Development Initiative has provided wage subsidies that allowed for the creation of 194 summer jobs with 72 employers. These projects will result in 2,254 weeks of employment.

I call upon all employers, including Members of this House, to make a difference and hire a student.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

GOVERNMENT NON-INTERVENTION IN THE POLICE INQUIRIES

Mr. Jean-Pierre Blackburn (Jonquière): Mr. Speaker, it is not customary in the House to question investigations by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I was quite simply amazed to hear the Hon. Member for Burnaby—Kingsway (Mr. Robinson) say that the Government should have intervened with the RCMP or the Attorney General to prevent charges being laid against journalist Small as a result of the budget leak.

Mr. Speaker, since when does the Government tell the RCMP or the Attorney General not to charge someone but to charge someone else? Is that the true face of the NDP? Should we create two classes of citizens by telling the judicial authorities what to do for some and not to do for others?

Mr. Speaker, I oppose that kind of procedure.

A responsible government cannot and must not intervene in the judicial process.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SITUATION IN EL SALVADOR—REQUEST TO CEASE BILATERAL AID

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, today marks the first day of the Presidency of Alfredo Christiani and the Arena Party in El Salvador. This event causes great concern for those who cherish human rights.

We have good reason to be concerned. In April, raids carried out against over 30 popular and community organizations by military and security forces led to the arrest and detention of over 100 people. As recently as last week, the national university was encircled and entered by machine gunning troops. More arrest were made and innocent people assaulted.

The violence is not restricted to Salvadorans. In January, after months of intimidation and threats from the military, Evan Fox-Decent, a Canadian aid worker, became a victim of the war in El Salvador. In the dark of night a grenade was lobbed into his dwelling leaving shrapnel in his arms and legs.

Church groups, development workers, and many non-governmental organizations are demonstrating today to voice their opposition to the tactics of the Government of El Salvador.

I call upon the Government of Canada to listen to those pleas, to cease bilateral aid to El Salvador, and to ensure that Canadian aid workers are protected.

FISHERIES

SITUATION IN THE ATLANTIC

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Beauséjour): Mr. Speaker, on May 16, in answer to the Hon. Member for Burin—St. George's (Mr. Simmons) who asked him what emergency plans he had to deal with the Atlantic fisheries crisis, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) said that he would appear the following week before the Forestry and Fisheries Committee to describe the Government's special program.

On Tuesday, the Minister finally appeared before the Committee, but he had no plan to deal with the crisis that now affects the cod and crab fisheries, other than the already existing programs, which his own Government has cut.

In New Brunswick, the federal Government is delaying spending its share of the joint $5 million program created by Ottawa and Fredericton to help the region's factory workers.

The Conservative Government has brought on a recession in the Atlantic region, which was already hit with drastic reductions in cod and crab stocks, and it is wondering whether the existing programs, which it has ravaged, are adequate.

Atlantic fishermen told the Government that there was no more fish; the Government did not listen! They are now saying that they need help and the Government does not want to hear about it.

I ask the Government to stop turning a deaf ear, recognize the problems of all those involved in fishing for cod and crab and act right away.

TRANSPORTATION

VIA RAIL SERVICES IN ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Greg Thompson (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, Atlantic Canadians are anxiously awaiting the verdict on the future of passenger rail service in the region.

Atlantic Canada is rural in nature and its residents have come to rely on VIA Rail as their major source of transportation to the rest of the nation.

In 1985 the VIA Atlantic Line was reinstated by the Government with the stipulation: "Use it or lose it". Atlantic Canadians have done this. More than 240,000 persons rode the rails in 1988, a quantitative increase over previous years.

Atlantic Canadians have kept their end of the bargain and are now looking to the federal Government to honour its commitment of 1985 to keep the VIA Atlantic Line open.

MUNICIPALITIES

SEVENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF FOUNDING OF VILLE DE LÉRY

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to join the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) in wishing all the people of Ville de Léry a happy anniversary because the town was founded 75 years ago, today.

Ville de Léry is a municipality in the riding of Beauharnois—Salaberry, on the banks of Lac St. Louis. Ville de Léry is proud of its history and proud of its residents. Thanks to careful management, the town has enjoyed balanced development, without incurring any debts, a rare exception in the annals of municipal history in Québec and Canada.

I wish all the people of Ville de Léry a very happy birthday party, and especially His Worship Mayor Jack Goodfellow, councillors Danielle Beauchamp, Arlette Vincter, Jean-Pierre Pilon, Jean-Louis Faubert, Richard Plamondon, and the chairman of these festivities, Mr. Yvon Gendron Junior, also a municipal councillor.

You may be sure that your Member of Parliament is proud of you and will take part in the festivities!

HISTORIC EVENTS

CELEBRATION OF CENTENNIAL OF DESBARATS

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, this weekend the community of Desbarats and the Townships of Johnson and Tarbutt are celebrating their one hundredth anniversary.

The community is named after George Pascal Desbarats, a prominent Montreal businessman and Queen's Printer in the 1800s who had mining rights in the area.

His great-great-grandson, Peter Desbarats, a noted broadcaster, author, and now Dean of the School of Journalism at the University of Western Ontario, will be our special guest to officially open the centennial.

The community of Desbarats has had a long and colourful history since the pioneer days. It is an important agricultural centre in the Algoma district and has been judged by Time magazine to be one of the best tourist locations in North America.

Today, many people commute to work in Sault Ste Marie. In recent years, it has become a centre of education with the establishment of the Central Algoma Secondary School there.

The people of Johnson Township have a long tradition of working together to improve community services and have built one of the finest arenas in the district for recreation and social events.

However, most of all it is noted for its community spirit. I have been proud to call it my home for the past 30 years.

TIME DEVOTED TO BUDGET LEAK

Mr. Bill Casey (Cumberland—Colchester): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I made a statement urging members of the Opposition to carry on with business other than the budget leak. They did not listen.

Day after day, members of the Opposition use the entire Question Period on the budget leak.

Surely Members from Prince Edward Island have a question or two about Summerside. I know that they do. Surely Members from Nova Scotia and Newfoundland have a question on the fishery. Surely Members from New Brunswick can think of a question on forestry. Surely Members from Quebec have a question on language, and I am sure Members from Manitoba can think of a question on defence. Surely someone in Canada has at least one question on VIA Rail, interest rates, or the Budget, but there are no questions.

While we spend weeks discussing who knew what in a two-hour period, issues that affect the entire lives of whole communities are being ignored.

Yes, ask some questions about the leak, but address some of the issues that are of concern to regular people too, not just the politicians and the media.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

MANDATE OF TASK FORCE ON COST BENEFITS

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, this week the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) changed the mandate of the task force on cost benefits for northern and isolated areas to remove the mandate that its report be revenue neutral and that the important recommendations it can make when it reports this fall neither increase nor decrease the fiscal burden on the Government of Canada.

The task force has toured the country and heard representations from individuals and community groups expressing the desire for a tax program that is fair and equitable to the residents of northern and isolated communities. The change in the mandate now asks the task force to consider the Government's new-found agenda of budget restraint which can only restrict the task force's options for recommendations.

I want to suggest and encourage that the task force remain true to its original mandate of preparing a report that is fair and equitable to the people in northern and isolated areas and strives to improve, not remove, that beneficial program.

FILMS

CANNES FILM FESTIVAL—TRIBUTES TO DENYS ARCAND AND GILLES CARLE

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, two Canadians distinguished themselves at the Film Festival in Cannes. For his film Jésus de Montréal, Denys Arcand received the most prestigious prize ever awarded a Canadian.

Once more, Denys Arcand returns to this country, after earning the esteem of his peers and receiving the praise—not a frequent occurrence—of the critics who judged his film as the best of all 22 films that were competing.

But there is more! Gilles Carle won the prize for short films with his 50 ans de l'ONF. In only two minutes and forty seconds, this filmmaker gave us an emotional and creative celebration of the National Film Board's anniversary.

Some Hon. Members may think Denys Arcand should apologize, but we prefer to congratulate these enormously talented Canadians for their contribution to the cultural life of our country and for making us so proud.

We wish them every success and urge movie theatre owners across Canada to screen these films, and we also urge Canadians to go and see 50 ans de l'ONF and Jésus de Montréal.

ORDER OF CANADA

TRIBUTES TO JEAN VANIER

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Brome—Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, in times that many people consider too materialistic, it is comforting to meet people like Jean Vanier, who is about to be awarded the most distinguished award in this country, the Companion of the Order of Canada.

The founder of l'Arche, a project that integrates the mentally handicapped in society, Jean Vanier has earned admiration and respect wherever he established his 90 homes. These mentally-handicapped men, women and children, whom a famous author lovingly nicknamed God's jesters, are treated by Jean Vanier as his own sons and daughters. L'Arche, which should be referred to in the plural form because there are so many today, has proved to be a haven of happiness and serenity, an oasis of peace and well-being in a world that is so often indifferent to the fate of the disadvantaged.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to be a Canadian. I am proud to belong to the same country as this man with heart, Jean Vanier, a great Canadian. This year marks the 25th anniversary of the founding of his work, and I hope that this extremely modest man will, for a long time yet, continue to prove the incredible power of love.

THE HANDICAPPED

NATIONAL ACCESS AWARENESS WEEK

Mr. Chuck Cook (North Vancouver): Mr. Speaker, this year National Access Awareness Week will be held from June 4 to June 10. This week gives us an opportunity to step back and reflect on the lives of 3.4 million Canadians, one out of every seven citizens in Canada, who have disabilities.

What disabled persons want is to participate in community life as fully as all other Canadians. They want equality and reasonable access to facilities and services.

Thousands of Canadians have decided to work together to improve conditions for people with disabilities. Their goal is to remove the barriers that prevent disabled persons from being fully independent and reduce their opportunities to become actively involved in community life. The work accomplished by the various committees at the provincial and community levels has been tremendous, and the many activities they have planned reach far beyond the bounds of this particular week.

Rick Hansen is just one of these thousands of Canadians who are striving to help the disabled. Rick is both a distinguished Canadian and a gifted athlete who, through his world tour and his work with the community, has served as an example to all of us. He is in Ottawa this week to help make all Canadians aware not only of Access Awareness Week but also of the potential of all disabled Canadians.

I call on all Members present to recognize the work of Rick Hansen and all those other Canadians who will make next week possible. Mr. Hansen and his charming wife have joined us today in the gallery.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

IMPORTANCE OF PROMOTION OF TWO OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

Mr. Ronald J. Duhamel (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, a little over a month ago, the Commissioner of Official Languages tabled his annual report in this House. Some of the conclusions of this report, I hope, have got Hon. Members and their constituents thinking about the state of our official languages.

It is our responsibility to do everything in our power so that these two languages can develop and citizens can use them as much as they wish.

As Mr. Fortier said: "Everyone has the right to remain unilingual if he wishes. But I believe that we should leave our children a country where a better knowledge of our two official languages will be an asset that will enable us to communicate better and will help us overcome our two solitudes."

Mr. Speaker, these words of wisdom seem to have been forgotten by some of our provincial governments. According to the findings of this same report, it usually takes a legal decision or substantial federal assistance for them to do something to develop the other official language.

PROSECUTION OF JOURNALIST

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, in this past month the House has witnessed not only leaks in the Budget but also leaks in the Government's judgment and credibility. With the statement yesterday by the Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants (Mr. Nowlan) that the RCMP erred in charging television reporter Doug Small, we are witnessing leaks in the Government's solidarity as well.

However, the Member from Annapolis Valley is not the only one with a distaste for press harassment, for disagreement exists within the Prime Minister's Cabinet as well. In 1983, the present Minister of National Health and Welfare made the following remarks in defence of freedom of the press after the RCMP charged The Toronto Sun under the Official Secrets Act:

> The Government has made an attack on the basic freedoms of Canadians—In no area is that more conspicuous than in the case of freedom of the press in Canada—Lip service is paid to the right of freedom of speech. Lip service is paid to the right to a free press. Indeed, the two are inseparable. In many ways what this Government has done is to attack one of the most basic liberties of Canadians, one of the most essential rights any Canadian must have if our democracy is to survive and flourish.

In view of these remarks I call on the Government to clarify its position concerning freedom of the press in Canada.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

POSITION OF COMMISSIONER OF RCMP

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Ever since the charges were laid in connection with the budget leaks, the Government has been distancing itself from political responsibility for these charges by saying that the legal advice to the RCMP came from the Department of the Attorney General of Ontario.

This morning we learned from the Commissioner of the RCMP himself that advice came also from Doug Rutherford, a senior federal Department of Justice official. Why did the Prime Minister and the Solicitor General give us only half-truths about these facts?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise my hon. friend that any discussions between the RCMP and officials of my Department were under the normal course of events during the normal investigation of the matter.

POSITION OF SOLICITOR GENERAL

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, we learned as well this morning information about an important point that the Government has been making to excuse itself from telling the Canadian people about the Mutual Life leak for 28 days. The Solicitor General himself confirmed that the RCMP had never asked the Government to keep secret the fact of the second and much more serious leak.

My supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. Is it not a fact that the real reason for keeping that information secret was that if it had been made public it would have destroyed the Minister of Finance's Budget?

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I must unfortunately make a slight correction to what my hon. colleague said, because I was there this morning, I appeared before the Justice Committee. I clearly stated that if this notification had not come from the RCMP— I did not ask for notification because automatically, when a police investigation is begun by the RCMP, the day before the events that happened on television, a police investigation, a criminal investigation was already under way, and we did not need notification from anyone that all information received should be turned over to the RCMP so that it could conduct a full and complete investigation of the events.

CHARGES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, nevertheless, the answer from the RCMP Commissioner was no. He did not ask the Government for that.

I would therefore like to ask the Prime Minister the following question: The Royal Canadian Mounted Police were able to charge Doug Small, although all Canadians knew that he was the one who had leaked the Budget on television.

How can the Government have us believe that if the general public had also been aware of the Mutual Life leak, it would have made it difficult to charge other individuals?

• (1420)

[English]

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend has referred to a specific case which is before the courts. We are in no position, either in our preambles to questions or in answering questions, to interfere with a fair trial.

Mr. Speaker: I think it might be helpful for Hon. Members and also for the public to have the Chair again remind the House that there has been a long-standing convention—and it is not a rule but a convention, one which we have imposed upon ourselves—that in a criminal case reference to the case itself in such a way that would cause unfairness or prejudice to the proper prosecution of that case is not accepted in the Chamber.

I have been listening very carefully to the questions. It is of course especially up to the Attorney General of Canada to take whatever position he ought to take when a question is put. The Attorney General of Canada will know more about these matters than the Speaker. I have to listen to the question.

However, I do ask Hon. Members to keep this in mind. As I say, the convention is there in respect to fairness of the proceedings.

I know Hon. Members will assist the Chair. I ask that they keep this in mind for the rest of Question Period.

INSTRUCTIONS TO SENIOR DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE OFFICIAL

Mr. George S. Rideout (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. We know that Doug Rutherford had conversations with Crown Attorneys and with the Office of the Attorney General for Ontario and that Rutherford brought forward considerations to the Attorney General.

In light of the comments of the Deputy Prime Minister and the Solicitor General that the decision to lay charges rested solely with the RCMP and the Ontario Attorney General, did the Minister of Justice instruct Doug Rutherford to consult? If so, what did he instruct him to do?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, there were no instructions to my officials to consult.

I quote from the Canadian Wire Press story of the interview with the provincial official who said that the call was no more than normal consultation. He said: "This is a normal consultation to give us some of their considerations". He then went on to say that it is ultimately up to the police whether or not they want to lay a charge.

POSITION OF SENIOR DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE OFFICIAL

Mr. George S. Rideout (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is anything normal in this situation at all.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rideout: When these discussions would be taking place I do not believe that either side would consider that they were just normal, routine questions or inquiries on criminal matters.

It would appear that Mr. Rutherford is acting on his own. Did he request the RCMP or the Attorney General to lay charges?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I refer once again to the transcript of the interview with the individual who referred to them as normal consultations.

Mr. Tobin: He works for you.

Mr. Lewis: He went on to say that it is ultimately up to the police whether or not they lay the charge. It is ultimately up to the police.

BUDGET LEAKS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice, on the same subject. Since the original Budget leak, the Government has refused to take the responsibility and has been trying to hide behind the RCMP, as it did yesterday and is doing again today.

[English]

Following up on what has just been said, my question to the Minister concerns his claim that a person said that these conversations were just routine. That is not what the official from Ontario said. The official from Ontario pointed out that the call originated from a senior person in the office of the Minister of Justice and that this senior official said he was calling on behalf of the Ministry of Finance. Ontario did not say that this was routine.

My question to the Minister is very direct. Will he tell the House what was the nature of that conversation? Was there a request coming from the federal official, for example, to have his provincial equivalent take action to have charges laid? It is very pertinent.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I have advised the House, the consultations were in the normal course of events. At least my understanding is that in fact the call came from Ontario to the federal official in question. However, I would advise my hon. friend that they were no more than the normal consultations which took place between the two officials.

POSITION OF GOVERNMENT OF ONTARIO OFFICIAL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, we have a matter I would suggest of considerable importance here. The Minister of Justice—and we have to accept his word in the House—should do some checking. His senior official, or someone, is telling the opposite to what the spokesperson for Ontario is saying.

The senior person representing the Government of Ontario in this matter, Mr. Hunt, has claimed that the conversation originated from Ottawa, not from Ontario, and that the person calling from the office of the Minister of Justice said he was calling on behalf of the Ministry of Finance.

Will the Minister confirm what he has just said, that the conversation did not originate in Ottawa? Does he stand by that? If he is not sure of that, would he find out and report back to the House? If it did originate from Ottawa what was the nature of that conversation?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I will endeavour to find out who made the first call. I will undertake to do that.

I can only go back to the transcript of the Canadian Press interview to which I referred earlier and in which the provincial official said that the call was no more than normal consultation. He then went on to say: "This is normal consultation to give us some of their considerations. It is ultimately up to the police whether or not they will lay the charge".

TRANSCRIPT OF CANADIAN PRESS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a copy of the same transcript which the Minister has. What the Minister did not read out is that when the provincial official was asked whether it was routine, he replied by saying: "You would have to ask Mr. Rutherford"—i.e. the federal official—"if it was normal procedure".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: In other words, he is saying that it is the federal person who made the call, and he was implying at least that this was not a normal call.

Since the Government has not been frank from the word go, why is it that here we are at 2.30 in the afternoon and the Minister does not seem to have the facts straight yet on this important matter?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I take my hon. friend at his word that he has a transcript stating that it was on behalf of the Department of Finance. I take him on his word there.

I repeat, and it is suggested in the wire service report from which I read, that they were normal consultations which take place. At the end of the consultations—and this is the important thing—it is the RCMP that makes the ultimate decision to lay the charge.

POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. He just said in answer to a question from the Hon. Member for York Centre that he cannot give an answer that would interfere with a fair trial.

If that is the case, then why did the Prime Minister say yesterday in this House during Question Period, speaking of the leak to Doug Small: "The evening before there had clearly been an unlawful dissemination of a very important federal document"?

I ask the Minister: How does that contribute to a fair trial for Mr. Small, or anybody?

• (1430)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, because of the reference, as my hon. friend will find if he consults Hansard and not the front page of a newspaper here in Ottawa, that there was no reference made either to a network or to an individual.

Mr. Tobin: Who else was charged in the media? There was only one person charged.

Mr. Mulroney: No, my hon. friend is wrong. He says there was only one person charged.

Mr. Tobin: One reporter.

Mr. Mulroney: There were a number of people charged. That is exactly the indication that I was conveying. Everything that I said was perfectly consistent with the facts and my hon. friend knows that.

DISREGARD FOR JUSTICE ALLEGED—RESPONSE BY GOVERNMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to again ask the Minister of Justice, the chief law officer of the Crown, how there could possibly be a fair trial for Mr. Small or anyone with these words on the record of the Prime Minister and in their context—and I am quoting from Hansard—they can only refer to one person. Why is the Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister showing utter disregard for justice in this country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this has been the course of the pattern in the House. The Hon. Member begins with a question based on prefatory remarks which turn out to be absolutely false. When the falsehood is pointed out, rather than withdraw and apologise for those remarks, he then moves on to another. What was said yesterday is in Hansard. Contrary to what the Member suggests, there was no reference to an individual. There was no reference to a network. There was a response to a question asked by the Leader of the Opposition in the best traditions of the Canadian Parliament.

MUTUAL LIFE BUDGET LEAK—RCMP INVESTIGATION LAUNCHED

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Prime Minister. It concerns statements that he made yesterday about the second or the Mutual Life Budget leak. Yesterday, in the House of Commons, the Prime Minister said about his own reaction to the first Budget leak, and I quote:

> —I instructed the Minister of Finance to make the budget measures public immediately.

Given how quick on the draw the Prime Minister was in reacting to the first Budget leak, does he still expect us to believe that in the second and far more serious leak, he did nothing for two hours, and once he did find out he never bothered to contact his Cabinet colleagues that day? Does he still maintain that? Does that not stretch credulity just a little bit?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this would have to be probably the tenth or twelfth time that question has been asked. My hon. friend—

Mr. Tobin: And never an answer yet.

Mr. Mulroney: I will reply again and perhaps give an answer that might satisfy the opposition Members who are asking questions. I said that I instructed the Minister to make the Budget public. That is quite right. I also indicated yesterday in response to the question from the Leader of the Opposition that apart from that instruction I requested immediately that evening that a full Royal Canadian Mounted Police inquiry be launched. Once that inquiry was launched that night there should never have been an attempt by anybody to interfere with the proper conduct of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police inquiry. Everything that was done from that moment on until today has been in keeping with that tradition.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I say to the Prime Minister that he has selective amnesia in terms of what he said and what he did not say.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): I have a supplementary. On May 23, the Minister of Finance explained his 28-day silence on the second Budget leak, saying that the second leak was a mere allegation. Yesterday, the Prime Minister informed the House that Mr. Gorbet, the Deputy Minister of Finance, received the call on April 27 and checked the information. I would like to ask the Prime Minister which truth is the right one. Was it information that had been checked or just an allegation? Which was it?

[English]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I point out for the House and those who care to observe, the clear double standard that my hon. friend and others are engaging in. When the Royal Canadian Mounted Police conducts police inquiries pursuant to objective criteria that result in charges being laid against Members of this Government, my hon. friend says that is terrific. When the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, using the same personnel and the same standards, lay charges against somebody else, the Member says there has been political interference by this Government. You cannot have it both ways. The evening of the budgetary leak, the Royal Canadian Mounted Police received the instructions. From that moment on all matters relating to that particular incident were being investigated by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police and all information was imparted by public servants and others in the pursuit of justice by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

QUERY AS TO TELEPHONE CALLS—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice and the Attorney General. We learned this morning that the Senior Deputy Associate Minister of Justice initiated calls to his counterparts in the Crown in Ottawa and in Toronto. We learned this morning in the Justice Committee that his senior deputy sat in on a meeting with the Commissioner of the RCMP.

I want to ask the Minister, how can he defend this blatant interference in the administration of justice by his senior deputy? Who was the senior deputy acting on behalf of? Was he acting on behalf of the Minister of Finance? Was he acting on behalf of the Minister of Justice? Why, according to the Commissioner of the RCMP, did he not bring to the attention of the RCMP the fact that to charge Doug Small would constitute a very serious attack on freedom of the press in Canada? Why did he not do that?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly willing to answer the first part of the question. I draw the Chair's attention and the Assembly's attention to the fact that any discussion of that case is sub judice.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, there seems to be one standard for the Government and another standard for other Canadians, when the Prime Minister through his accusation of criminal wrong–doing prejudiced this investigation from the very beginning.

CLARIFICATION REQUESTED—CAUTION BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is again for the Minister of Justice. It is extraordinary that this Minister still does not know at 2.30 this afternoon whether his official initiated conversations, or whether he was called. The Minister is either totally incompetent or he is deliberately covering up what happened in this—

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the Hon. Member could put his question, please.

Mr. Robinson: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister this: Will the Minister clarify, in view of the fact that his senior deputy was apparently acting on behalf of the Minister of Finance, what advice did his senior deputy give to the RCMP? Did he advise them that it would be a serious mistake to charge Doug Small, that it would be an attack on freedom of the press in Canada? What did he do—

Mr. Speaker: I am trying to be very careful in dividing two things here. There are questions that have been asked about what happened prior to charges being laid. Members are I think properly keeping away from questions and comments on what happened after the charges were laid. The Hon. Member is getting into a difficult area here because the question seems to go to the issue of whether or not a charge should be laid. That, it seems to me, is something that perhaps the court will have eventually decide. I think that I will have to, under the circumstances, not allow that question.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE

FREE TRADE AGREEMENT—REQUEST THAT GEOLOGISTS BE INCLUDED IN SCHEDULE II

Mr. Al Johnson (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister for International Trade, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Privatization. Geologists in Canada are some of the world's best. Their dedication and expertise have attracted international respect and have created a demand for their consulting services. This demand for Canadian geologists is particularly strong in the United States energy sector.

An Hon. Member: Question.

Mr. Johnson: The Free Trade Agreement has however left out these highly qualified Canadian professionals. Schedule II of the Free Trade Agreement provides a list of—

Mr. Speaker: I understand the importance of the question. I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Johnson: I would like to ask the Minister, when will geologists be added to the list provided in Schedule II of the Free Trade Agreement?

• (1440)

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, the Member's interest in this matter is very much appreciated. Indeed, I am aware that geologists, especially in Alberta, are interested in being included in Chapter 15 of the Free Trade Agreement. Their inclusion will be raised by Canada at a consultation later this year, which is allowed under Section 1503 of the Free Trade Agreement.

CRIMINAL CODE

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. It concerns the Criminal Code, clearly a matter of federal jurisdiction. Yesterday, no fewer than five members of his caucus were critical of the charge laid against a member of the press gallery. The Hon. Member for Annapolis Valley—Hants said it was a total error in judgment. In fact, a member of the Prime Minister's cabinet, a former journalist, said that he has used leaked documents, to use his words, "as a journalist would".

My question is this: When has using leaked documents "as a journalist would" become a criminal offence in this country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for a very important question because it goes to the heart of the issue of freedom of the press in which I, and I am sure all Members of the House of Commons irrespective of political affiliation, believe very deeply. It has been a concept that in many ways distinguishes our society and we are all very proud of it. It is a value that is in our Constitution, was in Mr. Diefenbaker's Bill of Rights and has been endorsed by all of us.

Mrs. Campbell (South West Nova): Overstepped by the Government.

Mr. Mulroney: I am attempting to respond to a serious question by your colleague.

Given that deep respect that we all have for the freedom of the press, it will be up to the courts to consider this matter fully, as they shall, and to render decisions based on Canadian law, custom and the values that we all support.

CHARGES LAID AGAINST MEMBER OF THE PRESS—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister may have deep concern about freedom of the press, but we cannot ignore what has happened in the last couple of days in this country.

Now that the door has been opened to laying charges against members of the media for embarrassing the Government, where does it all end? Will Canada become a country where journalists are tossed into jail for doing their work?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think it is very clear that this matter is now before the courts and should be kept there.

CONSULTATION BY RCMP PRIOR TO CHARGES QUESTIONED

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. Canadians are having trouble with the idea of prosecuting a journalist who was simply doing his job. Will the Solicitor General, who has responsibility for the RCMP, tell the House if he had been consulted by the RCMP prior to charges being laid?

Mr. Speaker: I am going to allow that question, but I am going to remind Members and the public, as I commented the other day, that there is a distinction between the administration of justice at the federal level and the administration of justice at the provincial level. I want that kept clearly in mind when questions and replies are given in this matter.

I will hear the Minister of Justice.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, any discussion of the actual charges or their propriety, either in this House or outside, is contrary to our traditions and since the case is before the courts I am not prepared to comment.

GOVERNMENT INVOLVEMENT IN CHARGES QUESTIONED

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister telling us that the Government did not encourage the RCMP to lay charges, after the Minister of Justice told the House on April 27 that this reporter acted in a responsible manner?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I repeat my answer of yesterday. The RCMP were called in immediately to investigate the case. The RCMP investigated it. They discussed their findings with the officials of the Province of Ontario.

Mr. Tobin: And?

Mr. Lewis: They came back and the RCMP laid the charge.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): And?

QUERY AS TO WHETHER SENIOR DEPUTY INITIATED TELEPHONE CALLS TO TORONTO OFFICIALS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is also to the Minister of Justice. I noticed in Question Period a few minutes ago he was referring to a CP transcript and a news story about a senior deputy, Mr. Rutherford. We have now had several hours, of course, since that newspaper was circulated. Has the Minister of Justice since this morning had a chance to speak directly with his senior deputy? Did he ask him directly whether or not he initiated the call to officials in Toronto? Did he ask him whether or not he was calling on behalf of the Minister of Finance?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): If I give an answer in this House I want to be speaking from fact and that is why when the Leader of the New Democratic Party asked me that question, I undertook to find out who initiated that call. I don't have that in front of me. I have in front of me a transcript of the Canadian Press interview—

Mr. Tobin: What was the advice given?

Mr. Lewis: —in which it was very clear from the comments of the provincial official that it was normal consultations which took place between the parties.

Mr. Barrett: Don't you know what happened today? What have you been doing all morning? It is unbelievable.

An Hon. Member: It is all part of a cover-up.

EXPLANATION SOUGHT AS TO CONFIRMATION OF TELEPHONE CALLS

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): The Minister of Justice now has had several hours to check out the facts with his senior Deputy Minister. I want to know now why the Minister of Justice did not speak with Mr. Rutherford. He has had several hours to do so. He knows this issue is important in the House today. He knows it is an important issue across the country. Why has he not picked up the phone and called the Deputy Minister into his office and said to him, did you call the officials in Toronto and who were you calling on behalf of? Why has he not done that?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, because from the very start I realized that one could get into a great deal of trouble by becoming actively involved in this discussion and—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: And—

Mr. Simmons: More, more.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Lewis: From the very start the consultations which have taken place between the officials at the provincial level and the federal level have been nothing more than normal discussions.

An Hon. Member: How do you know?

Mr. Lewis: Because I instructed my officials to do nothing abnormal, just conduct normal consultations.

INCREASE IN TAXES—EFFECT OF TOBACCO PRODUCTS ON HEALTH OF CANADIANS

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, my question is related to the Budget and directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. He will know that the tax on a carton of cigarettes increased by $4 in the Budget. Would the Minister indicate the implications for the health of Canadians and for Canadian health care systems as the result of that measure in the Budget?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to because it is a very important step which has been taken by the Minister of Finance. Tobacco remains the single greatest cause of preventable disease in Canada, costing the lives of between 30,000 and 35,000 Canadians a year. Indeed, the World Health Organization estimated yesterday that one individual dies every 13 seconds as a result of tobacco use.

Members opposite may not find this important, but I think Canadians do. Studies have shown that the use of tobacco, particularly among young Canadians, is extremely price sensitive. The action taken by the Minister of Finance should help to save lives in Canada, something which is important to us, even if it isn't to Members opposite.

ATTITUDE OF MINISTER OF JUSTICE TOWARD HOUSE

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint—Michel): Mr. Speaker, this morning in La Presse, Frédéric Wagnière referred to the Government's increasingly astounding negligence. I would like to put a question to the Minister of Justice. We now know that on April 26 at 5.30 p.m., Mr. Small called the office of the Minister of Finance about a Budget leak. We also know that the Minister of Justice, Leader of the Government in the House, tried unsuccessfully to extend the business of the House by moving a motion to that effect around 5.50 p.m. that afternoon, without any explanation. Why didn't the Minsiter speak frankly. to the House? Why didn't he tell the House then and there that he had reason to believe there had been a Budget leak? From the very beginning, we have been hearing the Minister answer as though he wanted to hide something. Why didn't he say what was on his mind at 5.50 p.m. on April 26?

[English]

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I reject out of hand the comment that the Minister wants to hide anything. I have made it clear to his House Leader. I believe I discussed it with the House Leader for the New Democratic Party. When I came into the House at about 5.30 or 5.40 on that particular day, Wednesday, April 26, I had an indication from the Minister of Finance that there might have been a Budget leak.

I made an effort to keep the House open in order that we would have a vehicle through which to tell the House of Commons and the public what had happened. Unfortunately, I did not get the approval of the House at that time and, later on, both Parties refused to let us come here and tell it.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—St-Michel): Mr. Speaker, it is now clear that the Minister of Justice took a sleazy action at that time to protect himself.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Member could find another way to put his position.

Mr. Ouellet: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will indeed rephrase my remark and say—

ANSWER FROM THE MINISTER INSISTED UPON.

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice has just acknowledjed, perhaps by accident, that he knew more about it that he wanted to admit. I would refer him to Hansard of Thursday, April 27, at page 1012, at the bottom of the page, where he said, and this is the Minister speaking:

We were aware of that story on the wire.

Mr. Speaker, if the Minister was aware of the story, why didn't he say so clearly and frankly in the House of Commons at 5.50 p.m. on April 26?

[English]

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, in answer to that question, I have to be a little bit of rhetorical and ask why did the Opposition Party, when they saw it on television, not agree to coming back and opening the House so that we could present the public with it in the House of Commons?

ACCOUNTING OF DELAY REQUESTED—GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, within one hour from the call of the President of Mutual Life of Canada to the Office of the Minister of Finance, he claims to have been informed. The Prime Minister, who believed his version, said that it took more than two and one half hours before he was told of a second, more serious leak.

We wonder sometimes who is in charge here. My question is this: Did the Finance Minister or the Prime Minister ever bother asking their public servants, the people who work for them, why the delay? Why were they were not told immediately upon receipt of this serious second leak?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have given my hon. friend and Members of the House a full and complete accounting of the time that was involved, the intervention of the Deputy Minister of Finance, Mr. Gorbet, the intervention of the Clerk of the Council, the advice that was provided to me after Question Period. That is fully on the record.

I have also indicated that I believe on the evidence that the Deputy Minister of Finance and Clerk of the Council acted in a timely and appropriate manner and given the fact that the inquiry had begun the night before it was entirely consistent with the ongoing and independent process of that inquiry.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): God help this country, Mr. Speaker, if a declaration of war comes upon it.

REQUEST CONCERNING KNOWLEDGE OF SECOND LEAK BY SOLICITOR GENERAL

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, if we are to believe the Government's hypothesis, disclosing any information about the RCMP's investigation would have been tantamount to interfering with or jeopardizing the investigation that was under way.

On May 17, the CBC's English network reported that a company in Toronto had the Budget in Brief, and the next day, on May 17, the Solicitor General rose in the House and hastened to give the House the assurance that Norman Inkster, the RCMP Commissioner, had informed him that although the investigation was not yet finished, there was every indication that so far, no one had benefited from the leaks.

Had the Solicitor General also been kept in the dark? Was he aware on May 18, 1989 that there had been a second Budget leak?

[English]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend refers to the question of war. The last time that word was heard there was the invocation of the War Measures Act by the previous Government where 419 people in the Province of Quebec, including journalists, were thrown in jail without trial, without accusation, without benefit of—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, this will interest all Members, including my friend from Winnipeg who just asked a very important question, because on October 16, the Leader of the Opposition, who was the Minister of Justice who authorized the invocation of the War Measures Act, said this when pressed for information as to why. I ask the Members to listen carefully. "It is my hope", said Mr. Turner, "that some day the full details of the intelligence upon which the Government acted can be made public because until that day comes the people of Canada will not be able to fully appraise the course of action that has been taken by the Government". You threw journalists in the slammer with neither trial nor presumption of innocence—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ACTIONS OF MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I cannot help but say that my father, who was then a Member of this House, was one of 16 Members who had the courage to stand up and oppose the War Measures Act.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: It was the Conservatives who did not have the political courage to join with the New Democrats on that occasion and vote against the War Measures Act.

Let me turn to the issue at hand. We have heard today an amazing admission from the Minister of Justice to whom my question is addressed. The Minister of Justice has said in the House this afternoon that despite a most serious claim emanating from Toronto about an intervention by his senior deputy in this unprecedented case that he has simply refused to find out what that conversation was about, who said what to whom and what was done. Are we to conclude then that it is the philosophy of this Government simply to hear no evil, see no evil and speak no evil?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, is the policy of this Government not to interfere in police investigations.

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS—DIRECTIONS TO RCMP

Mr. John Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, was it the policy of this Government even before this investigation started? Let us go back to the night of Wednesday, April 26. You were there. We were all there. An RCMP investigation was launched. I want to ask whether at the outset of that investigation, this Government directed the RCMP that whatever else happened, it was not to interfere with the freedom of the press and freedom of Canadians in this investigation?

Business of the House

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I respectfully suggest that any comment on the particular case in question would be sub judice.

ANNOTATED STANDING ORDERS

USE IN PROCEDURAL ARGUMENTS

Mr. Speaker: I want to bring to the attention of the House interventions from the floor of the House by the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) on April 27 and on May 30 by the Member for Kamloops (Mr. Riis). They may have caused some confusion on the question of whether annotations from the Annotated Standing Orders may be quoted in procedural arguments. I have also received private communications on this subject from Members.

It has never been my intention, even in private discussions, to imply that the text of the Annotated Standing Orders could not or should not be quoted. Members may find that an annotation supports their interpretation of a particular Standing Order and may choose to quote the annotation in their argument. On the other hand, a Member who may want to argue for a different approach than that contained in the Annotated Standing Orders is entirely at liberty to do so.

In brief, just as other parliamentary authorities, for example, Beauchesne, Bourinot or May, are invoked by Members to support their arguments, so too the Annotated Standing Orders offers Members a rich new source of information on Canadian parliamentary practice to draw from.

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Government House Leader to give us a statement of business for the coming week.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties. I would like to indicate that the business plan is as follows: Tomorrow, Friday, June 2, we will deal with second reading of Bill C–13. That is the Nordion Bill. We will follow that up with second reading of Bill C–16, the Space Agency. On Monday, June 5, we will deal with a Bill in the name of the Minister of Energy, Bill C–19. That is second reading, I should add. We will then follow that up with second reading of Bill C–21, the Unemployment Insurance Act amendments. On Tuesday, we will deal with second reading of Bill C–22, a Bill amending the Environmental Protection Act and we will follow that with second reading of Bill C–5, the Railway Act. On Wednesday, I expect we will continue, although it may in fact go very smoothly, debate on Bill C–21, the amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): With respect to the Minister's statement, I would like to ask him if he would consult with me about the time to begin debate on second reading of the unemployment insurance Bill. We want to have available our senior spokespersons on this. There may already be commitments made in that regard that cannot be changed. I want to ask him if we can meet and discuss that aspect of his report.

Mr. Lewis: Definitely.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Government House Leader would be so kind as to indicate the intentions with regard to the copyright Bill. We are in the last few weeks now of this session. Does the Government plan to proceed with that, or is there any thought being given to circulating a draft of that copyright Bill so people can have a chance to review it prior to it being introduced in the House?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, unless I have missed something, I do not believe that Bill is on the Order Paper yet. Right? We are not talking about a Bill presently on the Order Paper. Okay, fine. I will take that matter up with the Minister and get back tomy friend.

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Andre that Bill C–16, an Act to establish the Canadian Space Agency and to provide for other matters in relation to space, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House rose at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Windsor—Lake St. Clair had the floor.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, just to remind the Chair of where we were, we were talking about the establishment of the space agency as provided in Bill C–16. I had indicated that my Party supports this legislation. We approve of having such an agency to co–ordinate the Canadian space program. We are aware of the significant areas of responsibility that it has to co–ordinate in the space program as it is scattered among the various Departments such as the Department of Communications, the National Research Council and Energy, Mines and Resources. We understand its important role with respect to acting as Canada's representative and co–ordinator with respect to Canada's involvement in collaboration with international space enterprises such as NASA, the European Space Agency, and so on.

When I paused earlier, we were giving some consideration to the importance of the procurement aspects of the space program in building Canadian technology, which is a very important function of any mission which is to be construed as a national mission; for example, Canadian participation in the space platform through the mobile servicing centre. One of the examples of the importance of this is RADARSAT which has run into some difficulty, Great Britain having withdrawn from the program. The project has been slowed down. Although I understand that an off–the–shelf technology to replace the platform which was supposed to be constructed by Great Britain is possible and will mean a cut in the over–all cost by about $50 million. Another fly in the ointment has reared its ugly head in that Ontario is now pausing in making its commitment to the RADARSAT project because of what it perceived to be favouritism to the Province of Quebec.

The original intent was that there was to be a 35–35 per cent split between Ontario and Quebec with respect to contracts associated with RADARSAT. Whatever one may think of the role of space technology or the space program in respect to regional development, or the notion that perhaps it would be better to consider sharing the benefits of research with the entire context of science rather than specifically in the space areas, nevertheless it is clear that Quebec has a 40 per cent share as compared to Ontario's share. I make no specific comment on that, except to say that that fact, in addition to placing the space agency in Montreal has evidently led to quite considerable difficulty in getting Ontario to make its commitment. Ontario has cut its proposed contribution from $29 million to $22 million in reflection of the fact that, in respect to RADARSAT, while Ontario's share has been cut quite dramatically down to the level of $60 million, Quebec has an expenditure or contracts worth approximately $140 million.

We have a problem here, and I want to refer to the effect that this is having on one of the companies that is supposed to be benefiting from contracts as a result of the RADARSAT project. It is reported that Spar Aerospace is having considerable difficulty continuing its operation on a reasonable keel. In fact, attributable to that delay in RADARSAT, there has been a decrease in profits for the last year. It is of great concern that the RADARSAT project go on in terms of a reasonable schedule. I have been assured by the Minister that the RADARSAT satellite will be launched in 1993, although recently we have heard reports that it may not be launched until 1994.

Many of those involved in space research are concerned about the difficulties recently, including squabbling among various jurisdictions, and the failure by Great Britain to be a participant has delayed the project.

I cite RADARSAT because it is regarded by many, certainly the Committee on Research, Science and Technology considered that we should put our highest priority on RADARSAT because it is inherently more beneficial to Canada, both in terms of addressing specific Canadian needs, as well as having a higher probability of significant industrial and technological spin-off than can be attributed to Canada's participation in the space platform.

In respect of this, it is interesting to note that the committee called attention to the External Affairs suggestion for Paxsat, in effect the peace satellite. One of the recommendations of the committee was that the technology associated with RADARSAT be expanded to include a function which would allow it to be used for arms-control surveillance and verification. This is a very important recommendation and one that would be supported by most Canadians, and one that is reflected by what most Canadians think should be the highest priority for Canada in respect of its involvement internationally, and that is helping to aid the peace process. It is in quite considerable contrast to how the military sees space activity in terms of activities which could conceivably get us involved in somewhat untoward American notions of how space should be used.

Another area concerns not only Canada but the entire world, and I note that the committee was very forward looking in respect of it, because it preceded the international recognition of the dangers of the greenhouse effect. The committee further recommended, with again a slight expansion of the technology employed, that RADARSAT should be used as a component in the global change project which is specifically directed at looking at the physical, chemical, and biological processes affecting the whole earth. Now people are more familiar with the issue, that could be used as a euphemism for a study of the greenhouse effect. I hope that one of the highest priorities that would be accorded to the space program by the space agency would be those two functions. Those of us on this side of the House would consider that type of involvement in space of such high priority and of such importance to Canada and the world that perhaps it should be supported in lieu of some other aspects of the activities in which the space program would be involved.

Earlier this morning we were talking about the general issues surrounding science policy. I would like to call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to Recommendation 17. In that recommendation it states: "The committee recommends that the Canadian Space Agency in consultation with the Natural Sciences and Engineering Council carry out a comprehensive study of the training and supply of space scientists and engineers and develop mechanisms to ensure an appropriate supply of qualified personnel for future years".

In part, the need for such personnel could be encouraged by ensuring, as the committee recommended, that increased funding be provided for space science. The answer to the question, whether there will be an appropriate supply of such engineers, scientists, and technolo-gists is clear. The cuts in post-secondary education and in general university research certainly is not a contribution to ensuring that there will be the appropriate personnel to ensure that the space agency will be successful. We have to be concerned about the considerable deterioration and erosion of morale in the scientific community, particularly in government laboratories.

I do not choose now as the time to reflect upon the correctness or otherwise of decisions that have been made with respect of the location of the space agency because, as you know, Mr. Speaker, my Party supported the location in the Montreal area. However, parenthetically, the number of jobs that will be produced by the location of the space agency itself in any area has been exaggerated to a point of communicating a message to almost everyone that huge numbers of jobs will be produced in any location where the space agency is located. Let us put that impression to rest.

On a number of occasions we have attempted to ascertain what were the considerations that went into the decision to establish the space agency in the location in which the Government has decided. Such questions were posed as, what are the relative costs in this location as compared to other locations? What will be the additional operating costs in one location versus another location? How many scientists will be lost to the project because of relocation?

If we are going to ensure that our scientists are completely devoted to a program such as the space program, or any other program, it is important to recognize that there has to be reasonable consultation. Regrettably, it turns out that a survey taken of scientists associated with the space program indicated that a number of our top scientists are refusing to go for a number of reasons. For example, the absence of commutability from Ottawa to elsewhere, long establishment here, and what they see as being an inconvenience in the working conditions, and so on. There are 50 per cent in association with the space program who are saying that they will refuse to go. This is not a discussion of the merits of their point of view. However, it certainly does call attention to the utter failure of Government to provide reasonable evidence that the decision it took was a reasonable decision to have been taken, and evidence that there had been reasonable consultation with scientists to ensure that it would work.

It is not going to work if we lose scientists to the United States. They say that in the circumstances once they leave, they will leave the country. That is certainly not a contribution to the enhancement of our efforts in space research, space technology or science in general.

We support this legislation and do not intend to impede its passage. It is good legislation with respect to the specific matter, and we look forward to the successes that it will motivate in Canadian laboratories in universities and industry.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in concluding, I would like to formulate a wish for the Hon. Member. I say a wish, because I wouldn't want to force a promise on him. We all know that promises— In any case, my wish is certainly the wish of a large part of Canada's scientific community. It is that this Government should stop looking at space and come down to earth long enough to realize that here in Canada there is an urgent need for investing more in the future and enabling researchers and future generations of researchers to continue their work. If the Government keeps cutting transfer payments to the provinces for post-secondary education and forcing the National Research Council to do more with less, we will never make it.

[English]

It is important to see the space program within the context of the over-all scientific research and development policy in Canada. We look forward to signals from the Government that it will address all of those shortcomings that must be addressed if Canada is to mount to a position higher than it has heretofore occupied in the world of research and development, and therefore in economic competitiveness in the world.

[Translation]

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of State (Science and Technology)): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to rise in the debate on Bill C-16 to establish the Canadian Space Agency.

Allow me to refer to Clause 4:

> The objects of the Agency are to promote the peaceful use and development of space and to ensure that space science and technology provide social and economic benefits for Canadians.

Clause 5 provides a more specific definition of the objects of the Canadian Space Agency, but still I should like to emphasize the significant fall-out from the creation of the CSA and particularly its future impact on Canada's technological progress.

Our national space program already has a number of outstanding achievements to its credit. Our success in space technology dates back to the days of space research when balloons and space probes were first sent aloft. The 1962 Allouette I launch signalled Canada's entry into the space era. After this initial scientific success we concentrated our efforts on practical space technology to meet our specific requirements. Two examples which readily come to mind are the transmission of telephone and television signals from coast to coast and to the northern regions, and the use of teledetection data in resource management. The new Canadian Space Agency will enable us to derive further benefits from space research.

The advent of the Agency marks the opening of a new era of challenging space exploration and development for Canada. By gathering under one roof the main components of its space activities, Canada will indeed be in a better position to benefit fully from the economic, scientific and technological fall-out from space experiments.

As I said a moment ago Canada's reputation in the realm of space science and technology is second to none. The specific mandate of the Agency is to work with the space industry, universities and provincial governments to keep Canada in the forefront. Canadian companies already compete successfully with world leaders in teledetection, communication satellite systems and space automation.

Mr. Speaker, the establishment of the Agency is just another proof of our Gouvernment's commitment to promote high technology in this country. It simply confirms the fact that in the coming decades our space research activities will continue to be a major source of economic benefits for Canada.

To that end, I would like to quote Dr. Larkin Kerwin who yesterday, at the official signing of a ten-year co-operation agreement with the European Space Agency, had this to say:

> The Canadian space industry could get up to $500 million worth of contracts from the European Space Agency over the next ten years, which for Canada would mean some $2 billion in overall spinoffs.

That significant agremeent signed yesterday renewed two five-year ones that enables Canada to take part in certain programs of the European Space Agency.

Over the last ten years, some 15 Canadian corporations were awarded contracts for some $100 million with the European Agency. But Dr. Kerwin, the president of the Space Agency, predicts that over the next decade, contracts to the Canadian industry should increase to $500 million. Also, a study done in Europe showed that the overall spinoffs in the aerospace area are estimated at 3.7 to 4.5 times the value of overall contracts, which leads Dr. Kerwin to suggest that spinoffs would be in the order of $2 billion.

Here, Mr. Speaker, you have a good example that the establishment of that agency will generate significant spinoffs for Québec and Canada, while ensuring this country remains at the leading edge of that important industry with a future.

We needed a space agency, Mr. Speaker, because it will be the vital linch pin in the future growth of Canada's space program. It will help co-ordinate the various activities that are currently pursued in a number of federal Crown departments. This is what had been recommended by the Standing Committee on Research Science and Technology, of which I was a member, and which made recommendations in its report titled: Canada's Space Program: Voyage to the Future tabled in June, 1987.

The Agency will enable us to more efficiently manage our space resources, improve Canada's technological image internationally, but the industry in a position to improve its international competitiveness and also encourage young Canadians to make a career in science and technology. The Agency will be responsible for the space station program, RADARSAT, the space science program, Canadian astronauts, co-operation with the European Space Agency—whose first results were felt yesterday—, the David Florida Laboratories, space technology research and development, co-ordination of civil space activities entrusted to other departments such as weather, remote sensing and communication services, as well as relations with foreign agencies.

I would like, Mr. Speaker, to discuss the entire Canadian space program but, since time is limited, I will confine my remarks to some aspects of that important strategy.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that in May 1986 the federal Government announced the creation of a new Canadian space program focusing on the economic impact of space research in terms of job creation and additional revenue for the industry. The new program met Canada's needs by allowing us to manage our natural resources, improve communications throughout the country, exercise our national sovereignty and exploit industrial resources in every region.

The main element of the program is the development of an aeronautical mobile system or AMS for the American space station, as well as the creation of a development program centered on potential space users. Among others must be mentioned the maintenance of the Telesat Canada MSAT satellite, which serves a new satellite communications network for mobile users; the theoretical and practical design of advanced remote sensing techniques, especially continued planning work on the RADARSAT remote sensing satellite, strengthening cooperation with Europe through our participation in the ESA and European space projects; continuation of the program to train Canadian astronauts and finally, increasing funding for the space sciences program.

The U.S. space station is one of the most complex and ambitious technological enterprises ever conceived. This station, once in orbit and permanently manned, will have a useful life of 25 years and will be the base for many activities.

Along with other countries, Canada was asked to take part in this huge enterprise and we will contribute to the mobile service system, MSS. The part of the system in space, the mobile service centre (MSC), will be involved in building the space station, which will give the first stages of the plan a leading role.

The mobile service satellite is particularly important to the everyday life of Canadians. Indeed, most of our fellow citizens would have trouble imagining how they would live if they could no longer pick up a telephone receiver and call almost anywhere in the world. However, that is exactly the situation in which more than 100,000 homes in remote and northern regions of Canada find themselves.

Distance, uneven terrain and atmospheric characteristics especially in the Far North make conventional radio communications unreliable and sometimes impossible. For the police and those responsible for fighting forest fires and for medical services, the limited range of mobile communications systems, even some of the most modern, raises serious difficulties. The same goes for companies operating oil–drilling platforms and fleets of cargo ships and trucks.

The mobile service satellite, the first internal communications satellite in the world for traveling users, solves this problem. So there is no need to add how timely and important it is to develop such a tool!

The Space Agency will also be responsible for the important space station program. Indeed, you will recall that about a year ago, the federal Government approved the participation of Canada in the international space station project led by the United States as the main element of the important Canadian space program. Canada will provide the mobile maintenance and repair system, which is based on the CANADARM teleoperator system technology. This system will play an essential role in the assembly and maintenance of the space station and its instruments. Moreover, it will handle payloads such as satellites and space vehicles and will dock, load and unload shuttles that will bring supplies to the space station.

In the 1990's, when the space station is in operation, industry, government and universities in Canada will be able to use those facilities to further scientific, technological and business interests. They will be able to do research in astrophysics, earth sciences, life sciences and material processing in conditions of quasi–weightlessness possible only in space laboratories. The space platform will also be used to assemble and service other platforms and related vehicles and to explore the solar system.

By participating in the space platform project, Canada will be able to put to use its know-how in robotics and artificial intelligence. Great benefits will flow from this project, a cost-sharing venture with our partners, that is the United-States, the 13-country European Space Agency and Japan.

All regions of Canada will benefit from this project. The Canadian project manager, Spar Aerospace Ltd, has set up a group of Canadian companies from Nova Scotia, Québec, Ontario and British Columbia who will supply equipment and services. Canada's contribution to the space platform project will generate economic spin-offs of more than $5 billion over the next 15 years. The design and construction of the mobile servicing center will enable Canadian industry to develop many advanced technologies which will be applied and adapted to traditional earth-bound industrial activities.

In 1982, Canada made some preliminary studies on the spin offs generated from our contribution to the space platform project and the robotized service centre I just mentionned, which is being built by the National Research Council. Those studies concluded that Canadian industries and universities along with the federal government would gain major scientific, technological, economic and social benefits from this project.

I can assure you that today, perhaps more than ever as we are on the threshold of the 21st century, that conclusion still holds true.

Through another aspect of its impressive space program, the RADARSAT project, the Canadian government is opening up to the world.

Canada acts as the project manager on the final building stages of RADARSAT, a sophisticated satellite scheduled to be launched in 1994 and to collect, using radar equipment, sharp pictures of earth, even in the dark or during cloudy periods. It would give us reliable up-dated data on ice floes, navigation in the Arctic area and along the shores, humidity at ground level and caused by vegetation. This data could help develop new methods for farm control and forest development. RARADSAT is a Canadian initiative also involving the United States, several provinces and business enterprises.

RADARSAT will be the most sophisticated of its kind. Its distinctive feature would be its synthetic aperture radar, a powerful instrument capable of emitting and receiving very high frequence signals through clouds and darkness. Through RADARSAT, Canada will confirm its position as a leader in the field of remote sensing and its applications.

At close to 800 kilometres above the surface of the earth, the satellite will have a polar orbit, surveying the entire globe along 500 kilometre bands and producing high resolution images of lands and oceans.

The spin-offs will be felt worldwide. For instance, SAR is particularly useful in the tracing of geographical maps of areas under dense vegetation or heavy clouds. So RADARSAT will prove to be an invaluable instrument for tropical countries where the jungle and persistent heat haze make it very difficult to collect data through conventional methods.

Once again, the economic spin-offs of this project will be most important. The development of this system should require 10,000 persons-years in Canada and bring benefits of $1 billion to the private and public sectors.

The Canadian industry will therefore become a leader on the world market of radar data and services in the twentieth century. It is an achievement we can be proud of because, according to estimates, before the year 2000, this market should represent 30 percent of the space world trade.

Mr. Speaker, although I only touched upon some aspects of this ambitious space program, you realize how important it will be for the development and the future of Cnada.

In addition, the establishment of the space agency that will ensure an effective and strong co-ordination of all those programs will allow Canada to reap benefits as yet incalculable.

March 1, when the federal Government announced that the Canadian Space Agency would be located in Québec, in the metropolitan area of Montreal, should be remembered as a very important day for Québec and Canada, because on that day, we ensured that Canada would attain new peaks of excellence in space and technology. With a budget of $3 billion for the next decade and a staff of 300, the Agency will become a focal point for the development of advanced technology that will help Canadian industry make the switch to the twenty-first century.

Before I finish, I would like to congratulate Dr. Larkin Kerwin on his appointment as president of the Canadian Space Agency. He is an excellent choice, and we can only applaud this decision because it means that we will benefit from the talents of a well-known, respected and experienced scientist. Under his direction, there is no doubt that the Canadian Space Agency will bring benefits to Québec and Canada, even beyond our present expectations.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa West on a question or comment.

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member spoke for quite a while about a lot of things. She spoke very little about people, about ideas and about from where the space program in Canada has come. I cannot help but wonder if she and her Government are aware that the space program is more than hardware and circuit boards. It is people, ideas and intelligence, and that is the fundamental component.

My main question to the Hon. Member is, can she tell the House what studies, background papers and analysis were done to provide the scientists with an explanation of the step that is now being taken and the details? Can she provide assurance to the House and to the public of what the costs are associated with the establishment of the agency and where in the Estimates those costs are provided?

Mrs. Duplessis: First of all, if the Hon. Member had listened carefully, she would have realized what actually led up to the creation of the Agency. I am referring to a study conducted by the National Research Council in 1982, which concluded that it was important.

As for the costs, President Kerwin will certainly tell us how much he intends to spend on construction of the building and on the Agency's facilities. He has a general budget, and he has to remain within that budget, and it is not up to us to say how much he should spend on what. And when the Hon. Member refers to brains, I don't know what she is referring to, but I will wait for the next question, because hers was not very clear.

Mr. Harb: Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to congratulate the Hon. Member on her speech. I think it was clear that she supports Canada's role with respect to research and development, and she deserves to be congratulated for that!

[English]

Mr. Speaker, I have a statement as well as a question for the Hon. Member. When we talk about the manufacturing aspect, one of the most important elements is the research and development component; in particular, the research geared toward the development end of the product.

In the National Capital Region, we have in excess of 500 companies which deal with certain aspects of the research component. Some of them deal with the manufacturing end of it. We have the National Research Council and we have other agencies. We also have the presence of the international community which is represented by the embassies, including the Embassy of the United States. The United States is one of our major partners in the industry.

My question for the Hon. Member is the following one. Can she list five companies which would be considered as a support element to where the space agency is going to be located? In doing so, can she tell me what the rationale was when it came to the idea of putting the space agency in the location it was put in?

I have heard quite a bit about the discomfort that is taking place within the manpower that is going to be the brain behind the space agency. Could she elaborate a little bit for us?

[Translation]

Mrs. Duplessis: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for his kind words. However, in reply to the question put to me earlier by the hon. lady, I could have mentioned that it is based on my experience as a member of the Committee on Science and Technology which travelled everywhere in Canada and made recommendations dealing with science and technology.

With regard to Montreal being chosen as the location for the space agency, I should like to remind my hon. friend that long before the Government made a decision, this choice had been approved both by his Leader, the Righ Hon. Mr. Turner, and the Leader of the New Democratic Party (M. Broadbent). In reply to his question concerning companies in Montreal which could provide support elements, I am pleased to list such companies as CAE, Mitel, Oelirkon, Aerospace, Pratt & Whitney, and several other companies. There is also Spar which is one of the most important corporations which will be involved with the Space Agency.

Mr. Harb: What is their involvement in research and development?

Mrs. Duplessis: Mr. Speaker, could the Hon. Member rise when he wants to ask again question or make a comment, because I suggest that shouting as he does across the floor is somewhat strange. Do you not think so?

Mr. Rocheleau: Mr. Speaker, none will deny that we need a research and development agency. I, for one, am delighted that the Governement has finally come to a decision. But I was somewhat concerned to hear the Hon. Member for Louis–Hébert (Mrs. Duplessis) state that the Government does not have to impose on Chairman Kerwin any budgetary envelope for capital or operating costs. I think it is much too easy to turn over the responsibility of Government management to a corporation, something I should like the Hon. Member to comment on. Has the Government set up a budgetary envelope for that corporation? What is the amount? And what are the estimates?

Mrs. Duplessis: Mr. Speaker, I would indicate to the Hon. Member that the Agency will cost $3 billion over ten years, but it will be left to Mr. Kerwin and his board to allocate the funds. We have no intention of telling him what to do. In any event we already know exactly our share of the cost to build the CANADARM, our share to build the Canadian cybernetic engineer, and our share to build the space platform. Mr. Kerwin and his board members have full discretion as to how the funds are spent. Neither I nor the Government will interfere with the Agency's activities.

Mr. Rocheleau: What has me worried, Mr. Speaker, is that a few years ago a contract was awarded for the construction of the Museum of Civilization in Hull. The estimated cost was $80 million but now they are talking in terms of $250 million. This is why I would like the Government to give more specific instructions to the board or to Mr. Kerwin concerning the $3 billion which have apparently been earmarked for this project. I would like to have more details just so we will know the real construction costs for that building.

Mrs. Duplessis: Mr. Speaker, I would remind my colleague that Mr. Kerwin and the board have a very specific mandate to set up the Agency in the Montreal region, and that is the major consideration, Mr. Speaker. Besides, his allegations and the way he put his question cast doubt on Mr. Kerwin's competence. This is a man who was at the helm of the National Research Council for years and ran the ship in an extremely dignified and efficient manner. The way the Hon. Member phrased his remarks does raise questions, and it is altogether deplorable that a Member would want to imply that one of these days Mr. Kerwin might find that he has spent a lot more money than he was allowed to build the Agency's headquarters.

Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat to my colleague opposite that Mr. Kerwin was given a specific mandate to set up the Agency over a ten–year period. I, for one, am sure that a man of Mr. Kerwin's competence and outstanding intellect will indeed be able to discharge his responsibilities.

• (1550)

Mr. Rocheleau: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hull–Aylmer (Mr. Rocheleau) on a question of privilege.

Mr. Rocheleau: Mr. Speaker, I have never questioned Mr. Kerwin's skills. I have rather asked that the Government tell me what their projections were from a cost management standpoint and how they intended to spend the money. I think that the Hon. Member for Louis–Hébert (Mrs. Duplessis) is considerably mistaken when she deals with—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think that the Hon. Member straightened out the facts concerning Mr. Kerwin.

CANADIAN SPACE AGENCY ACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Andre that Bill C-16, an Act to establish the Canadian Space Agency and to provide for other matters in relation to space, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. David Berger (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, we are now considering the Bill to establish the Canadian Space Agency which was promised in the 1986 Speech from the Throne. Almost three years have gone by and at long last Parliament is about to create this famous Agency. In the meantime we witnessed the dispute between Ottawa and Montreal, and then, ridiculous though this may sound, the dispute between Montreal and the South Shore. Hon. Members, the media, and the public were mostly interested in the location of the Agency. That was of some importance, Mr. Speaker, but definitely not to the undue extent given the whole matter!

The location of the Agency itself entails the creation of relatively few new jobs. By that I mean the Agency will bring 100-odd new jobs to the city where it will be located. That is certainly a plus for the city, but it does not necessarily follow that getting the Agency headquarters comes with a whole slew of subcontracts. The mere presence of the headquarters does not automatically create the industrial capacity required to seek contracts. Moreover, the exaggerated emphasis put on the matter of the agency's location prevents us from looking at what must be done to create an industry that is competitive internationally, and that would create thousands of jobs in every region and every province throughout the land.

What benefits should accrue from the space program? There is almost no reference to that. What is the significance of the Canadian industry? What are its strong and weak points? What policies encouraged the establishment of that industry? What support is the Government currently giving the industry? Is it adequate? Is it well distributed? Does our participation in the American space station meet our own Canadian needs? Are we not in danger of putting all our eggs in one basket? And are we not thereby in danger of neglecting other needs?

How many jobs would occrue from the Space Agency? Are the estimates put forward by the Government accurate? There is almost no debate on those matters of vital importance to the country.

Too often, Mr. Speaker, political debates sidetrack the issues, which are not addressed.

If I had one wish today, it would be to invite Members who intend to rise in this debate to read the study on the Canadian Space Program prepared in 1987 by the Standing Committee of the House on Research, Science and Technology. It shows what is really at stake in the Canadian Space Program.

[English]

For example, one question that was dealt with by the committee which studied Canada's space program in 1987 was that of space science. The Committee on Research, Science and Technology heard considerable testimony about the need to support space science which about 15 years ago used to account for 15 per cent of the space program budget. But by 1987 this had dropped to less than 10 per cent.

Space science is the base or the foundation on which all industrial activity is built. If you do not have a base in space science there will be no industrial activity and there will be no jobs to fight about between Montreal and Ottawa or Montreal and the south shore of Montreal. It is absolutely vital to maintain a strong base in space science upon which the rest of space activity is built.

In the early 1970s the Canadian space industry included almost 100 researchers in government labs and universities. But for the last 20 years we stopped hiring space scientists and the physical infrastructure supporting this activity has deteriorated. Since 1971 not a single Canadian scientific satellite has been launched. This decline in support for space science has discouraged many high calibre graduates from seeking a career in space research. As a consequence Canada is faced today with a critical shortage of space scientists and engineers. The House committee recommended that the budget for space science be increased from less than 10 per cent to 15 per cent of the space program's over–all budget. This would put it at a level comparable to that in some other countries.

Indeed, I understand that in the United States approximately 20 per cent of NASA's budget goes to space science. We recommended that the Budget should be increased from less than 9 per cent to 15 per cent. Yet the recent figures I have seen indicate that the committee's recommendation has not been followed, that funding for space science will remain at less than 10 per cent of the total budget of the space program in the next five years.

What kind of program or industrial activity will we generate if we do not encourage young people to pursue a career in space science?

I cannot participate in this debate on this Bill without saying a word or two about science and technology in Canada in general. We simply do not do enough research and development in Canada.

Larkin Kerwin, the head of the new space agency and the former President of the National Research Council, often refers to the terrible factor of two. He refers to the fact that on average we do only half as much R and D in Canada as our major competitors like the United States, Japan, West Germany, France and Sweden. A number of other industrialized countries come into that average as well.

Further, we have only half the number of scientists and engineers in our workforce than the average of the industrialized countries. Now that should tell you that the situation is serious, Mr. Speaker, when we are only doing half of what our major competitors are doing. But saying we spend only half and reciting these averages really understates the magnitude of the problem, because averages often mask reality and in this case averages mask the grim reality.

While there are some outstanding R and D performers in Canadian Industry and many indeed in the space industry which we are talking about today, by and large there are whole industries in Canada and whole sectors of industry which do no R and D whatsoever.

Figures from the National Research Council tell us that only about 2 to 3 per cent of Canadian firms which depend on technology for their future and for their ability to compete actually do any R and D.

In much of Canadian industry, there is simply no capacity to do research and development. There are no scientists and engineers working in these companies. The officers and managers of most of these companies in Canada have no background in science. They lack familiarity with what science and technology can do for them or for their company.

In my comments, I have referred to Larkin Kerwin, the former President of the NRC who is taking on the job as first President of the Canadian Space Agency. What did he have to say about Canada's R and D performance very recently? I would like to quote from an article which was first printed in March of this year in The Globe and Mail but which was recently published in Canadian Chemical News. I quote Dr. Kerwin:

> Canadians must face some very unpleasant facts: among the industrialized nations of the world, we rank as technological illiterates; we have become incompetent in the unfolding scientific civilization.
> We cut down more trees than any other country yet we import chain saws. We have an elaborate health–care system yet we import stretchers. We import 76 per cent of our machinery, 40 per cent of our electrical products, 80 per cent of our health care equipment.
> In an attempt to balance these deficits—

He referred earlier to the deficits in trade of manufactured goods. He said:

> —we continue to export relatively raw natural resources at at a time when there is a surplus of virtually every commodity in the world, including food.

> Simply put, we are not able to compete because we lack the knowledge to do so effectively.

That is the assessment of Dr. Kerwin, the new head of the Space Agency.

There are many reasons for this dismal state of affairs, but it is generally agreed that there is one major reason for not having developed a knowledge-based economy in Canada. That is precisely our wealth in natural resources. Because we have plentiful natural resources, we have not been forced to rely on our wits. Other countries like Japan, which have no or relatively little wealth in natural resources, did not have the choice. They had to develop their intellectual resources, their human resources.

The world of today is one in which wealth in natural resources is becoming much less important and where knowledge is the critical factor in creating wealth. What we have to do in Canada is develop a strategy or plan which will increase our research and development capacity.

Canadians are told by the Conservative Government that there is such a policy to increase our research and development capacity. They will refer to the federal-provincial agreement signed in 1987, but I would maintain that this agreement is in fact only a statement of objectives. The objectives in this agreement are good, but to have an adequate policy, we do not just need a statement of objectives. We need specific targets. We need schedules for reaching those targets. We need an implementation plan.

It is one thing to say one is going to do something. It is one thing to say that we are going to increase the research and development capacity in this country. It is another thing to come up with a method and plan to do it and then actually do it. What we have now from this Government is not anything more than wishful thinking. Try cashing that in at the bank.

The Conservatives have been in power for about five years and over-all research and development spending in Canada has actually gone down since then, despite the promises of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to double our national output in research and development within his first mandate.

I admit that it is very difficult for listeners or for Canadians to make sense out of this debate because we have a Government which will refer to all of its policies over the course of the past few years. It will refer to its $1.3 billion fund. It will refer to the creation of this new space agency. It will refer to the Centres of Excellence Program. It will talk about funding that it has have given to the granting councils like the National Science and Engineering Research Council, the Medical Research Council and the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council. We in the Opposition and even some critical people in industry will tell you that it does not all quite add up. It really amounts to a shell game because the increases do not make up for even increases in the cost of living. They can talk about spending $1.3 billion. It sounds very impressive, but one really has to look at it in terms of percentages of national output or percentages of what existed before to get a real handle on it to understand what it actually signifies. As I say, the public has difficulty sorting out these conflicting arguments.

I would suggest that there is one way of sorting out this argument. That is to look at the bottom line, which businesses generally regard as the criterion of success. What does the bottom line tell us? If one adds up everything that the Government says it has done, the bottom line tells us that spending on research and development has gone down since this Government took office. It all adds up to zero.

I am reminded of what one of my colleagues referred to the other day in a debate in which she was referring to foreign aid spending. She gave us a demonstration in arithmetic. She said that zero plus zero is zero. This is what the situation is when it comes to R and D spending. When one adds up everything that this Government has done and looks at the bottom line and in terms of an internationally recognized indicator, one finds that spending, as a percentage of our Gross National Product, has gone down since this Government has taken office. That is the record it has to show for all of its magnificent statements, for all of its glossy brochures and pictures that it has put out in the last four years.

The bankruptcy of the Conservative policy is well illustrated by the recent statements of the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology (Mr. Andre), who now has taken to berating industry for not doing enough. Sure, industry is not doing enough. I referred to this in my comments. I referred to the very profound reasons why we have not developed a knowledge-based economy in this country.

The question that has to be put to this Government and to the Minister of Industry, Science and Technology is what solutions does he have? What strategy does he have to increase research and development spending in this country to increase our industrial capacity to perform research and development?

When I say that we want a strategy, we do not just want a lot of objectives and glorified statements. We want a policy with targets and schedules for reaching those targets. We want an implementation plan. When the Minister takes to criticizing industry, I would suggest that what one has is proof positive that he and his Government are at a loss for ideas. This again demonstrates that the Government has no plan to correct the situation. So while I take pleasure in participating in this debate and while I welcome at long last the establishment of a Canadian Space Agency, I suggest to Canadians and to my colleagues in this House that we have to put this initiative and the rest of the Government's initiatives firmly in perspective. It is only in that fashion that Canadians will be able to take stock of where we are and throw out a Government eventually which is doing nothing to improve the situation.

Mrs. Duplessis: Mr. Speaker, I would like first to commend the Hon. Member for Saint-Henri—Westmount (Mr. Berger) for his speech this afternoon. However, there is something I would like to remind him, because I listened throughout his speech and he is in effect stating the Government is doing nothing in the area of research and development.

I would like to remind him in the first place that what this Government wants for Canadians is a prosperous country, a country with a good life, a country where the quality of life is excellent, and we believe science and technology may be the best means of reaching that goal.

It has not always been easy, Mr. Speaker, as you well know. First, we had to raise provincial awareness. Everyone in the country had to be on the same wave length, so we implemented a science and technology policy that was supported and prepared by the science and technology ministers throughout the country.

So now no province is behind the other. They are all on the same footing. Moreover, it was so important for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Government that he decided to set up a science and technology advisory board. It makes extremely important recommendations that are absolutely essential for the future of the country, Mr. Speaker.

Also, we held a conference for industry in Toronto attended by some 200 industrial leaders and decision-makers. There were union representatives as well. There were representatives from many parts of the country and they were made aware of how Canadian industries could increase their profitability. They were also asked to upgrade and improve their products. They were also asked how to encourage more high tech industries to be established.

This exercise was repeated throughout the country, with five other conferences. So we can now say that we have laid the foundations and Canadians are aware. It was not easy, you know, to change Canadians' mentality and make them aware how the quality of life of all Canadians depends on the results of high tech research and development.

So, Mr. Speaker, we also identified strategies and fields of activity where Canada could be a leader. Among them were artificial intelligence and biomaterials. Companies, industries and Canadians were told what fields to go for, that it would be better to have specific fields where Canada would be really competent and could then compete throughout the world.

Mr. Speaker, we must not forget that Canada is not alone and that we have to face world competition. We are so aware of the importance of developing industry and increasing research in Canada that instead of keeping the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion, we changed its vocation. We even created a department that is now called Industry, Science and Technology.

Mr. Speaker, of course we won't be able to see all the results within a year. The seed has been sown, and in the long run we will see how important this will be for the entire country. When the Hon. Member says we have done absolutely nothing and that the Space Agency is only a tiny step, I disagree. It is a major step, Mr. Speaker. It is a major step because we are giving Canadians a new focus. In this area, at least, we are able to draw on some absolutely extraordinary skills. The Hon. Member says: Of course the Government says that the private sector is not doing its fair share. It is true, Mr. Speaker, that the private sector is not doing its fair share. And when he compares our Gross National Product with that of other countries, we see that the private sector in the United States, Japan, Germany and France invests a lot more money than the private sector here in Canada. So, Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member is so smart, suppose he tells us what kind of new ideas the Liberal Party has in mind to promote a really sound policy on science and technology. I wouldn't mind hearing him expand on his Party's policy!

Mr. Berger: I want to thank the Hon. Member for Louis-Hébert for confirming everything I just said in my speech. She referred to what the Government has done. It was necessary to bring the provinces on the side. She said that an advisory council was set up, that a national conference was organized and that five conferences were held across the country. She mentioned artificial intelligence and new materials. But looking at the bottom line, what was the result? As I said in my speech, when we consider this country's expenditures on research and development, spending has dropped since this Government came to power. The only way to measure everything this Government has done is to calculate total spending as a percentage of our Gross National Product. Again, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for enumerating everything her Government has done, but she admitted that as far as the bottom line was concerned, nothing happened.

[English]

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to my hon. friend's comments and found them to be very accurate and to the mark. I want to ask my hon. colleague whether or not it is rather discriminatory in terms of a research and development policy in that the Government is focusing more attention or increasing the expectations on private sector research and development when there are regions of Canada where corporate research and development would by definition take place at a different rate and have a different opportunity for success than in other regions? I am talking particularly about the North, the West and the eastern parts of our country. By the Government indicating that we will now rely more than ever on the private sector for research leadership, it is really saying that we are going to focus more attention than ever in terms of developing a knowledge-based economy on central Canada and once again at the expense of the regions of the country.

Mr. Berger: I thank the Member for Kamloops (Mr. Riis) for his comment about industry but, as I referred in my comments, it is really an industry where there is incredible weakness in Canada and an industry where the emphasis has to come. That does not mean that the Government can take comfort from that and sit back and leave it up to industry. There is a tremendous leadership role for Government to play and a tremendous leverage to be exerted by the Government in creating this capacity in industry. I have visited companies in Newfoundland, in Saskatchewan, in Ontario, in British Columbia, in Quebec, small towns, larger cities, not just hi-tech companies. I am talking about companies in the agricultural sector in Winnipeg or in Saskatoon.

There are tremendous research institutes in fisheries and in aquaculture in St. John's. There is tremendous potential out there. Much can be done with the right policies and incentives from Government. One program I have referred to on previous occasions in the House is the National Research Council's Industrial Research Assistance Program. It has permitted many small and medium-sized companies across the country to build a capacity in research and development with minimal contributions on the part of Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Edmonton Southwest.

Mr. Jim Edwards (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, in terms of the consciousness of North Americans, we became aware of space with the launching of the first sputnik in 1957. The impact was not truly driven home to the average person until we saw those remarkable pictures of earth from the moon orbit of Apollo 8 in its Christmas mission in 1968. Our imagination was triggered, and Canadians, together with all other neighbours in this global village, began to think of the opportunities in space and the manner in which the peaceful utilization of space could change our lives and expand our future.

So there came the realization in Canada that, as we often do, we should build on our strengths and we began to exercise Canadian ingenuity in two fields, the most prominent of which was space communication, and the second of which was the famous Canadarm project.

We have before us today a Bill which will set up the Canadian Space Agency, and which will give the opportunity to Canadians from all parts of our nation to participate. The location of the Agency will be in St. Hubert. I as an Albertan welcome the announcement and the opportunity for the expansion of the Alberta aerospace industry as a result of this development.

Historically, Alberta, along with the greater Montreal region, has been the cradle of aerospace activity, both during the Second World War and in the years immediately following. Indeed, in the last few years there has grown up in our province a number of industries that have relocated from central Canada in order to realize the benefits of regional economic diversification.

In the creation of the Canadian Space Agency, the Government of Canada is making a strong commitment to building on a world-class record of success in space technology.

Through the leadership of this agency, Canada is destined to reach new heights and excellence in space and scientific achievement. It will be a focal point for the development of key technologies, with broad application to Canadian industry, that will carry us proudly and strongly into the 21st century.

Canada's long and impressive history in space is, in large part, a reflection of the effectiveness of the Canadian space program. I would like to focus my remarks on the program in the context of this legislation.

Our national space program, as expressed in the long-term space plan the Government introduced in 1986, is tailored to meet Canada's special needs. We are a country with a small population spread over a large area, and in our country factors such as distance, rugged terrain, and atmospheric conditions, hamper normal ground-level methods of communication and resource monitoring.

Our current plan builds on the early efforts of the space program which focused on communications and remote-sensing applications and encouraged the growth of world-class firms in those areas. It continues to support Canada's high technology industries to ensure that our national needs in those areas will be met. An outstanding firm in that field which has recently relocated to Alberta is Amtek Testware Limited, a leader in our nation.

In recent years Canadian experience with the Canadarm has led to the growth of new firms working in the fields of automation, robotics, and artificial intelligence. Those are the critical high-technology areas of the future.

Through all of its various elements, the space program enables Canada to contribute to the international effort to extend human knowledge about our planet and about our place in the solar system.

Careful planning has ensured that the space program strikes the appropriate balance among the various components needed to meet our national needs and to reinforce our industrial strengths. Proper weighting is given to different program areas, to spending in different stages of each project, and to the relationship between ongoing basic research and large-scale operational projects.

The long-term space plan including RADARSAT and Msat and our contribution to the space station, recognizes the need to continue a national commitment to the growing space sector. Five years ago, spending on space projects was about $100 million per year; today it is about $150 million. By the year 1992 it is expected to double. By all measures the Canadian space program has produced outstanding results. In the last 25 years we have developed an industry that sets world standards in communications, remote sensing, and space robotics.

Canadians are among the world's largest users of space technology. Our once small community of space scientists and engineers has become an extensive national resource rich in technical capability. Our space industry has done remarkably well in a highly competitive field. Canada is one of the few countries in the world where the space industry sells more than the Government spends on space. The industry is made-in-Canada with over 90 per cent Canadian ownership. More than 70 per cent of Canadian space products and services are sold in export markets, and the industry has a growth record averaging 20 per cent per year over the past decade.

The history of Canada's space program confirms the experience of other countries such as Japan, the European Community, and the United States, that a well integrated and balanced space program attracts much of a nation's best talents and resources. There is the imagination factor, Mr. Speaker, that was first kindled by those pictures of the tiny planet earth, that blue orb in a black setting.

Our space industry has been a significant force in offering Canadians the opportunity to earn a living from their own ingenuity and their imaginations. The challenge for the Canadian space industry today is finding new ways to couple space-related research and technological development with other sectors of the economy where national needs and commercial activities can benefit.

The Canadian space program is composed of numerous major elements, monumental world-class research, scientific and technological projects which place Canada at the leading edge of development on a number of fronts.

For example, we are the leaders in the development of RADARSAT, a sophisticated satellite scheduled for launch in 1994, which will use radar to obtain detailed images of the earth, even in darkness and through clouds. The development of this system is expected to generate 10,000 person-years of employment in Canada, and provide more than $1 billion in benefits to the public and private sectors.

Canada is a partner in Space Station, the largest international development project ever undertaken. We will be contributing the mobile servicing system, which will play a main role in Space Station assembly and maintenance, moving equipment and supplies around the station, releasing and capturing satellites, supporting astronauts working in space, and servicing instruments. Again, the potential benefits to Canada are substantial, more than $5 billion and 80,000 person-years of employment.

The benefits flowing from the Canadian space program do not end there. The space science component of the program serves as a breeding ground for new ideas, inspires students to pursue technical careers, and provides a stimulating environment for the training of tomorrow's highly skilled space scientists and engineers. As well, there are program elements such as the Canadian Astronaut Program, the Canada Centre for Remote Sensing, MSAT which is the world's first communications satellite for mobile users, and a large range of space technology activities.

I could continue to describe the various elements of the Canadian space program and the substantial wide-ranging benefits they provide Canadians from coast to coast. However, I believe I have given the House a fairly thorough understanding of what we are dealing with.

As I mentioned at the outset of my remarks, the creation of the Canadian Space Agency will allow us to build on the excellence we have achieved in space technology. It will serve to enhance the effectiveness of the Canadian space program in a large number of ways.

First, space program activities have until now been managed by separate government departments. For example, the Department of Communications was responsible for satellite communications, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources for remote sensing, and the National Research Council of Canada for space technology such as Canadarm.

An interdepartmental committee on space has, since 1969, provided for the co-ordination of the disparate activities. It was successful, especially when one considers the inherent difficulties of management by committee. Still, the committee had no over-all management powers or budget.

Things have changed. Today there are more players involved. Projects involving international co-operation, a cornerstone of the Canadian space program, are becoming more complex. International competition is becoming increasingly formidable. A new approach is needed to ensure Canada's position in the space arena as we move confidently toward the 21st century.

Now we have an opportunity to create a single agency, the Canadian Space Agency, which will bring it all together. It will co-ordinate under one Minister the whole of the Canadian civilian space program. The advantages to be gained are numerous and will benefit Canadians, Canadian universities and the Canadian space industry across the country.

The agency will provide for more efficient management of the investment we are making in space, including centralized planning and monitoring. We will be able to make more effective use of resources, to ensure that all regions of the country benefit. We will have the means to strengthen efforts to promote the commercialization of space and the the spin–off of new technologies into other ground–based industries.

In conclusion, Canadians will get better value for each dollar invested in our space program. I might add that the Canadian space program is one part of our Government's commitment to strengthening Canadian capabilities in science and technology and building a competitive, prosperous Canada for future generations.

Ms. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member opposite spoke in laudatory terms about the Government's support for high technology industries. I wish it were so.

In my riding of Saanich—Gulf Islands there are many high–tech industries. They are small firms that are being jeopardized by the Government as a result of its budget cuts to the Unsolicited Proposals Program.

As the Hon. Member pointed out, there is an imagination factor in science and technology support work. The work done by one small firm will contribute to the work of another small firm, as is happening with the small firms in the Saanich Peninsula. The development of science and technology is improved as those companies help each other.

That type of work is seriously jeopardized as a result of the Government's cancellation of the Unsolicited Proposals Program. Many of the things those firms are doing on the Saanich Peninsula have application for the Canada space program. While they are particularly interested in the work associated with the Institute of Ocean Sciences, the Hon. Member will no doubt realize that deep ocean research has applications to space research.

I ask the Hon. Member if he would do as I did, and plead with the Minister responsible that the Unsolicited Proposals Programs be reinstated? It is crucial for research and development work in Canada.

Space Agency

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the Hon. Member's question. I think it is an important and significant question which deserves a proper response. I will try to give it.

The Hon. Member asks about the Unsolicited Proposals Program. I suggest to her that she offer to those aspiring firms and research incubators, if you like, in the Saanich Peninsula to do what is being done in my Province of Alberta, which is networking. The Hon. Member may be familiar with that in another context, but I think it would be entirely appropriate that she take a leadership role with those organizations and suggest they form the kind of collaboration that exists in Alberta with the Alberta Aerospace Council. It recognizes the reality of the funding difficulty as a result of the Unsolicited Proposals Program not being with us at this time.

She could seek to determine whether there is common cause not only among the firms in the Saanich Peninsula but also those firms in other areas of the country. This is an area in which all Members of Parliament in their own way can play a leadership role. I am sure her constituents would welcome her doing so.

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on this topic today.

The history of Canada is one of forging links, beginning with the voyageurs braving the rivers, then the spanning the nation by railroad, by radio communication, by air, by television and a host of other technologies that have drawn Canadians closer together over the years.

By developing the technologies that have allowed us to build a country in spite of geographic and natural forces, we have contributed vastly to the development of human knowledge and the development of technologies that are important not only to Canada but to the world.

Canada's contribution to space technology began many years before the launching of Alouette I at Vandenberg Air Force Base in 1962, and before Canadian scientists studied the ionosphere during World War II. Canadian space science began in the 1930s with the study of the upper atmosphere using ground–based instruments.

This history has established a strong foundation for Canada's contribution to exploring the stars with other space pioneers from around the world. We have established such an enviable international reputation that Canada is the only non-European nation involved in the European Space Agency.

But that history has also shown us the direction in which we should go. The frontiers are no longer geographical, rivers or mountains or prairies to be crossed, they are now the frontiers of the human mind and spirit. Canada is in a position as no other country in the world to make a unique contribution to the ability of the human race to survive and thrive on this planet.

I want to refer to the report of the Standing Committee on Research, Science and Technology on Canada's space program. It is called "A Voyage to the Future".

Very little has been said today about the future of that program. We have heard much about bureaucracies, budgets and administration, but nothing about vision. I want to talk about how our past can show us where we should go.

The committee stated in its report that the space program could provide challenging opportunities for our space scientists and at the same time be consistent with Canada's concept of its position in the world community.

That comment is made in the context of an initiative for Canada to participate in developing space-based remote sensing for verification of multilateral arms control. I have heard nothing this afternoon of our ability to make a difference to peace in this world and to divert our resources from arms production and destruction to productive uses.

I refer to the next page of the same report and the option for Canada to participate in the International Geosphere-Biosphere Programme: A Study of Global Change. We have heard a great many words about environment but we have heard nothing about this unique opportunity and what it means to the commitment and the concern of all our citizens to the environment. The report states that the objective of this program is:

> To describe and understand the interactive physical, chemical and biological processes that regulate the total Earth system, the unique environment that it provides for life, the changes that are occurring in the system, and the manner in which they are influenced by human actions.
> Among the technologies needed for this complex understanding is the ability to examine the Earth as a planet from space.
> It is in this context that the RADARSAT program was cited as a valuable technology for providing some of the: data that will be needed—

What we are talking about is some of the data that will be needed to save the world.

This should be a proud day for Canada. It should be a day of commitment and vision for the future, not only of our country and of our scientists but of the world and of the universe. I have heard very little with regard to that. I have heard more talk about commercial ventures, something which disturbs me greatly. If that is the motive, the driving force behind what will be done over the next few years to establish this agency, I fear for its future.

What is fundamental to the program is that labs do not function on their own, ideas do not come to fruition in a vacuum and technological miracles are not achieved without the lifeblood of a program, which is the dedication and commitment of talented individuals.

In its own personnel management manual Treasury Board states that in the development of policies and programs, human resources are no less important than financial and material resources. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that in this program they are more important.

In 1986, the space agency was introduced as a means to enhance space science in Canada by co-ordinating and managing the space program and the space industry. Yet, since then, we have seen three years of numerous delays. It was two and a half years ago that the media releases were already prepared to announce the space agency.

In those two and a half years not only the scientists involved in this program and the programs themselves, but the very industry has been in limbo. Long-term investments by industry were put off. Initiatives were shelved.

In November, 1987, a physics professor and interim director of the Institute for Space and Terrestrial Science at York University called the delay a disaster from a scientific and technological point of view.

Canada's competitive position in the world of sophisticated space science depends on careful, timely and long-range planning, financing and implementation. Delays threaten competitiveness because they focus constant attention on today and stifle a focus on future goals.

The Canadian Space Agency was to be a co-ordinating body of 50 people. Now it will encompass laboratories and offices which will house as many as 300 workers. The Government has not clarified the reasoning behind such a dramatic change in plan from what was originally announced to the people of Canada.

In December, 1988, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. de Cotret) told the House that the programs would not be moved. He said that there was no question of moving any facilities, and that it was never on the Government's list, never even studied. It is not much wonder that the people who have made up Canada's space program for the last 30 years are wondering where they really stand with this Government.

We asked about costs today. I think the answer confirmed the worst fears of the scientists who are wondering now whether they have a future with Canada's space program. What the Hon. Member said was that there is a global budget, that it has not been enlarged and that money dedicated to space science, space research and space technology will now have to be stretched to the building of a new space agency, and to all the other costs associated with establishing a new agency.

A former Member of the House alluded to the depletion that is taking place in the commitment to space science in this country. I want to point out that from the same report that commitment to space science as a proportion of the space budget has dropped from 14 per cent to 9 per cent. That is not a commitment to the type of science or the commitment to the scientists who have made this program and made Canada internationally famous.

It is disturbing that the very Minister responsible for the program refuses to tell Canadians what the program is costing them. The Minister refuses to make clear what the long-term commitment of the Government is and refuses to justify the basis for decisions leading to the Bill today and leading to what will happen in the next few years.

I want to talk now about people because I have heard virtually nothing about people today in the House from Members opposite. The space program is not technology. It is not hardware. It is not even laboratories. Nor is it satellites. It is the brilliance, the talent, the dedication and commitment of scientists and the people who work with them.

We have now passed exactly three months to the day since the announcement of the space agency was made on March 1 of this year. Those people are still waiting to understand what their future careers and their personal futures will be. The answers they need to make those decisions are not available to them yet.

I suppose all Hon. Members of the House have read the newspaper speculation about who will go with the agency and who will not go with it. Those decisions are being made not only for personal reasons but for program reasons. As they are being made, program decisions are being made.

I am sure there are some Members who sit opposite who believe that the scientists in this program are an expendable commodity and that their families are an expendable commodity. I am sure there are Members opposite who think that the technicians and technologists and the support people who work with them are an expendable commodity. I will let one of those people speak for themselves about the agony that the lack of information, the lack of clarity, the lack of commitment by the Government over the last three months and over the last three years has caused them.

"We were told the space agency was formed to make us more efficient. Does moving half our program people and leaving the other half here make us more efficient? Does losing half the people in the Space Mechanics Branch, some with 28 years experience, make us more efficient? Does losing all four members of the program we work with closely make us more efficient? Does losing Roy VanKoughnett, Director of Space Research Operations, a man who is probably the best manager in the Public Service, make us more efficient? People love their work. We are an efficient, effective organization where people come early, stay late, and don't charge for overtime. All that is gone now". It is not much wonder, when a letter from the Minister responsible for the program states that those groups going with the agency represent administrative and project management personnel. I wonder if the Minister himself knows who these people are and how valuable they are. Perhaps he thinks they are expendable.

Let me give you a few figures which tell you that they are not. When NRC tried to staff its Space Station Program, it took it over a year, from beginning to end, to fill 15 positions. The very people that we are undervaluing are in demand around the world. NASA is seeking to hire 1,500 people. These are jobs and career opportunities that these people can have when they simply say they want them. At the same time, we had our own Government in the Environment Department cutting atmospheric research that is related to the research program by 18 people in the last year.

I want to go back to the committee's report because it was such an excellent and thorough report. Here is what it had to say about the people:

> —the picture I am painting is one of an aging, over-committed group of researchers who have, in the past, served Canada and their science well. They are, however, being asked to do all the tasks they have done in the past plus many others and are lacking the infrastructure of support so necessary to the successful discharge of their responsibilities. The lack of career positions in the space sciences—has led to a significant drop in the number of young people prepared to pursue a research career—

The report was equally damning of our ability to train and attract new people. Canada is facing a critical shortage of space scientists and engineers in the years ahead. We cannot ignore the warning signs. Without our scientists, we do not have a space program. Without our scientists, we do not have their technicians and their support staff.

Yet we want to take them now through this Bill and through the establishment of this agency, remove the professional status that many of them have at the Canadian Research Council, and their freedom to progress in their careers according to their ability, and put them in a classification system under the Public Service that is neither suitable nor adaptable to the kinds of training, qualifications and experience.

For three months, they have been unable to get answers as to how those situations will be handled. The Bill tells us that it will not be handled. Astronaut scientists will be given that special status but the space program scientists will not.

One of them said to me when I talked to him: "I don't want to spend the next two years of my life being a mover. I am a scientist." They want to know why they have to move into temporary quarters, disrupt their work for two years and then move again. For three months these people have been getting unclear answers and half answers which do not allow them to make decisions. All of this is undermining their commitment to the careers on which they have spent a lifetime.

Whatever happens with this Bill, the Government has to wake up and deal with these people with the respect and with the appreciation that they deserve. It has got to do it quickly or we will not have a space program. There is a serious crisis of confidence among these people. They are only a handful of people but they are all this country has on which to build its space program. Without them, there is no technology, bureaucracy or industry. There is no Canada in the 21st century out there protecting the environment of the earth. We have the best ability in the world to do that.

This is more than a career for them. This is their life work. For many of them, it is the life work of themselves and their families. This is a completely unacceptable way to deal with the employees that this Government hopes will become the employees of the Canadian Space Agency. It is urgent that these problems be dealt with or we will miss the opportunity to make the contribution to the development of human knowledge which Canada has been preparing itself to make for over five decades.

Personal decisions are being made, and as personal decisions are being made, programs will either continue or not continue. The integrity of the program must be maintained. The respect and the confidence of our scientists and the people who work with them in this Government's commitment to our future and to the future of Canada in space must be maintained. It must be done quickly or it will be too late.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments. Debate. Question, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North.

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to debate on the Bill, however, at this time, considering the few minutes left, perhaps it is more appropriate to ask a question.

The Prime Minister some time in October, 1986 stated that he intended to establish a Canadian Space Agency, which he would have working in co-operation with industry, universities and provinces. This new agency would help ensure that the benefit of Canada's role in space would be shared by all Canadians. My concern is that he said, "by all Canadians". In the Bill there is a change in terms of how the employees will be governed in terms of employment by the Public Service Employment Act, which is different from the usual way that landed immigrants may not benefit from employment opportunities. Does she see in this Bill an indication from the Prime Minister that in fact he will consult with the universities?

Mrs. Catterall: I certainly do not want to speak for the Prime Minister. I suggest that might be asked of the Government. I see a very token consultation in the establishment of an advisory board. Frankly, I think the far greater indicator of the commitment to consultation is what has happened in the last three years. A lot of consultation took place in the production of this report on Canada's space program which is called "A Voyage to the Future". We knew at that time what the space industry wanted and what universities wanted, and it was the quick establishment of a space agency. It was a long-term, financial and program commitment. It was a commitment to science in space. In fact, over the intervening three years, we have had the betrayal of that consultation. We have had the delay of the establishment of the space agency. We have had a reduction of over one-third in the amount of money going into space science. I do not think the—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to have to interrupt the Hon. Member.

It being 5 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

Atomic Energy Control Board

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[English]

ATOMIC ENERGY CONTROL BOARD

SAFETY OF NUCLEAR POWER PLANT EMPLOYEES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should instruct the Atomic Energy Control Board to conduct a public review into the safety of nuclear power plant employees working twelve-hour shifts.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this motion is self-evident and is prompted by the fact that in nuclear power plants in our country and, more precisely, in Ontario and New Brunswick, we have a practice of working shifts that span a 12-hour period. The shifts include workers, engineers and operators. The support for the present regime of 12 hours has been forthcoming from the unions because of the social advantages that this shift offers to workers, namely, that it allows a better arrangement of free time and time with families. Support for this is undeniable and understandable.

Up to this date, as we all know, no serious problem can be attributed to the length of the work day or to the 12-hour shift. However, the International Atomic Energy Agency, in its 1984 guide book on nuclear power, says on the subject of plant personnel that most nuclear power plants in the world use eight-hour shifts.

It is interesting to note that at the seventh symposium on training of nuclear-facility personnel held in April, 1987, a paper prepared by Dolores S. Morriseau, Paul M. Lewis and J. J. Perensky, entitled "Improved Human Performance Through Appropriate Work Scheduling" notes, and I quote:

> Numerous reports on non-nuclear industries indicate that fatigue increases after eight hours and increases rapidly after 12 hours.

The authors go on to say that the reading speed slows after four hours and after eight hours a pilot's performance in flight simulators declines. In actual on-the-job situations, after eight hours aircraft accidents and occupational injuries increase and drivers take a greater risk.

The authors also cite one nuclear plant in the U.S. without identifying it by name which abandoned a 12-hour work day because the operators became too fatigued. As you will appreciate, Mr. Speaker, nuclear power plants are very complex installations. The incidents at Three-Mile Island in March, 1979 and Chernobyl in April, 1986 have altered the attitude of the public considerably and, in particular, to the potential dangers of nuclear accidents. Both accidents are still clear in the minds of the public and they raise questions, including matters related to operating safety. This is the purpose of this motion today.

It is a matter that directs the Government, through the AECB, to conduct a public review and to look into the safety of nuclear power plant employees' working shifts when extended, as it is now, to a period of 12 hours.

The public concern is one which not only prompts this motion but prompts the question as to what is our energy future. It is appropriate in the debate on this motion to raise the question as to what Canada's energy future is, because we really do not know what it is. We seem to be operating in a policy vacuum in this respect. No long-term plan has been proposed and no consultation preceding it by way of a parliamentary initiative, if you like, with the public and interested sectors as to the future.

We know, though, that in recent times because of the greenhouse effect and the pollution from carbon dioxide, the Canadian Nuclear Association has been promoting the notion that we should find the answers to the greenhouse effect through the construction of additional nuclear plants.

This is why it is extremely crucial at this stage that we approach the question of energy in its totality. I am using this motion in a way to piggy-back into the House the larger idea, namely, to call on the Government because we do need urgently some clearly defined plan which will lead us to the articulation and definition as to what will be the energy future for our country. We should pay attention to it because energy is an extremely important issue. It has environmental as well as very important economic ramifications.

I believe it is also dangerous to leave a vacuum at the present time and to allow the notion that nuclear power is going to be the answer. That is not the solution and there are many reasons for that.

First, there is the question of cost. A nuclear power plant is extremely expensive. The Darlington power plant, which will reach completion by the fall of this year, will start operations with one nuclear reactor and gradually, over time increase to four, is estimated to cost some $11.6 billion. This for one plant, Mr. Speaker. The cost, therefore, of a nuclear future for Canada is staggering.

Second, we know from experts who have studied this matter that if we want to tackle the question of carbon dioxide pollution in order to slow global warming, we are told that for each dollar that we invest in energy efficiency, namely, in ways of using the energy we already have and producing it in a more efficient manner that we can displace seven times as much carbon dioxide than with each dollar invested in nuclear power. The authors of the paper on the subject, Bill Keepin and Gregory Kats, estimate that even if 1,000 megawatt nuclear plants could be built every one to three days over the next 37 years, carbon dioxide emission would continue to grow.

I referred to cost and effectiveness. Let me now tackle the question of waste. A parliamentary committee worked on the question of nuclear waste in the last Parliament. It proposed a moratorium on the construction of new nuclear plants. Why did we do that? Because we felt that it would be better to have a moratorium until the matter of safe disposal of the used nuclear rods is established. At the present time when the nuclear-spent rods have to be disposed of, they are placed in water as a temporary measure. It is not their final destination. Of course once final disposal of the spent rods is established, a considerable expenditure will be required. As we know, studies are on their way in the Canadian shield to establish at what depth and to what degree of safety these spent rods can be disposed of. That final disposition has not been finalized. It is yet to be determined. It is a cost that is not yet known. It is an indication as to how this particular source of energy relies on a cycle that is yet to be completed. We therefore do not know the final cost of the final phase of disposing of the waste.

That brings me to the matter of decommissioning. When a nuclear plant goes out of business, so to speak, it has to be decommissioned. We do not know what exactly the process of decommissioning implies and what the cost of decommissioning is. All we know is that it is another very high cost. If one combines the question of waste and the question of decommissioning, one realizes how uncertain and how costly the nuclear future is if the entire cycle is taken into account of the utilization of nuclear power.

Needless to say, there is the whole question of risk related to potential accidents. There is an increasing amount of studies and reports that are reported mostly by newspapers and the printed media where we learn that children living near nuclear power plants suffer from a higher incidence of leukemia than children living a distance away and with whom comparisons have been carried out.

Combining the question of health risk, particularly in relation to children with the cost of decommissioning and of final waste disposal, we see a future shaping up for nuclear power that we would not like to pursue. We therefore want to look at alternatives in the interest of public health, the environment and the economy.

If the future is not to be nuclear, then what are the energy options for Canada? Obviously, efficiency and conservation are the most immediate and least expensive opportunities that are being offered. The International Energy Agency, in a study on how Canada uses its own energy, has concluded that we are inefficient in the use of our own energy to the degree of 30 per cent. That means that we could be using the same amount of energy that we dispose of at the present time by 30 per cent more with a utilization that is 30 per cent higher than at the present time if we only were to adopt certain measures that relate not only to conservation, but also to more efficient equipment, machinery, appliances, motors, and the like. That is a big percentage. It is a considerable figure that has been identified for us by the International Energy Agency.

Then there is the question that is increasingly knocking at the door as an opportunity and that is the necessity of finding ways of using renewable sources of energy which we have virtually abandoned as a result of budgetary cuts, the most recent one last April when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced the closure of 12 renewable energy offices under the auspices of the Department of Energy Mines and Resources.

Of course the picture is much broader than the opening or closing of offices. The potential of renewable sources of energy which range from solar, to wind, to biomass, to small hydro initiatives is enormous. If we were to put our subsidies and incentives behind renewable resources to the same extent that we have so far put behind the non-renewable sources of energy, we would be crossing the threshold of tapping this renewable opportunity very soon. Unfortunately, we are not as close as we could and should like to be.

In order for us to make decisions about the energy future of Canada which implies also making decisions about the environmental future of Canada, this whole matter of planning and of devising an energy policy is becoming more and more urgent by the day. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is by means of this motion and through you that I urge the Government to put its resources and available skills to work in order to give Canadians an idea as to what our energy future ought to be.

As I said, the process ought to start with a country-wide consultation which would then provide the main elements for an energy plan. It then could be the subject of debate in this House, finalized by way of perhaps a vote or deliberation that would give the final stamp of approval to initiatives of this kind. I know that my time is up. I will conclude by saying that it would be in our collective interest, in the interest of our economy and the environment to launch this process of designing an energy future for Canada at the earliest possible time. It is for this and for future generations that we must do it and I urge Members to support this concept.

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of the New Democratic Party to reply to the motion of the Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), that motion being:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should instruct the Atomic Energy Control Board to conduct a public review into the safety of nuclear power plant employees working twelve hour shifts.

May I say before I get into the meat of the matter that it is always a pleasure to listen to the Hon. Member for Davenport in this House and elsewhere. He was an environmentalist long before it was fashionable to be one. Now every politician in Canada is an environmentalist. Even the Premier of British Columbia, Mr. Vander Zalm and this Government are born-again environmentalists, except when some action is required. They like to talk about it but not act on it, but that is not true of the Member for Davenport. He is always worth listening to, especially on the environment. He does everything well. I will point out that I once beat him at a bocci game, an Italian bowling game, in the Commercial Drive section of Vancouver. I know he would never want me to tell that to anyone. So I will keep it to myself after this.

This is an important motion because it focuses on human error, not that we do not have wonderful employees in our nuclear power plants. We have some excellent and decided employees. But thank God we have not had any real big accidents. We have had some excellent dedicated employees. David Suzuki is the environmentalist who appears frequently on television and in the media. He also is from my home province. I remember David Suzuki telling me that the problem with this wonderful new technology in the world that is supposed to be safer and safer, is that most of it is run by human beings, by us, and we make mistakes. All it takes is a problem with your spouse or with the kids or perhaps there was drinking the night before or you are tired or your mind is on something else. Then there is a Chernobyl or Bhopal or Valdez.

We have seen accidents in the past and unfortunately we are going to see more of them in the future. We should be trying to do everything we can to cut down on human error. It is not going to be totally possible but there are some instances where we can improve. That is why health and safety for Canadian workers is so important. That is why health and safety measures to make sure those workers do not make mistakes are so important for the rest of us.

What the motion does, as I see it, is to have the AECB, the control board—in Canada there is the AECB, the board, and AECL which is the company that operates the Government's atomic energy research and atomic energy industry in Canada—to have the board in this instance do a public review into safety. I would like to see a bigger public review. The Conservative Party, when they were in opposition and when they put forward their Party platform for the 1984 election, said that there should be a royal commission into the future of the nuclear industry in Canada.

The nuclear industry has been troubled for some time. It has been a vast spender of public money. We have not been selling nuclear reactors abroad. So it has been virtually bankrupt for a number of years. The Conservatives in opposition proposed an inquiry into the future of that industry.

The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill (Mr. Blaikie) and myself a couple of years ago went across the country to hear delegations and to visit nuclear power sites. I visited Point La Preau in New Brunswick. We went right down into the Canadian shield. It was the most amazing trip. In White Shell, Manitoba, we went down an elevator into this mine that the AECL was experimenting with to look at water that was going through the Canadian shield. We asked one of the engineers down in the bowels of the Canadian shield, how can you tell the different water and he said, well the water that has been here thousands of years will not be radioactive but any water that is radioactive came in the earth after 1945. Therefore, all the water in the surface of the earth has a certain amount of radiation in it that is detectable. It is only the old water that is still pure.

The whole point of that site at White Shell, Manitoba was to research what the Hon. Member for Davenport talked about, the problem of the storage of spent nuclear fuel. I have seen at reactors in Ontario and New Brunswick swimming pools with this eerie blue colour where the rods are being stored. They are stored in this country and in other parts of the world. We have to do something with them. What are we going to do with them? Perhaps they have to be stored in the Canadian shield. It raises an interesting point. I am sure the Hon. Member for Davenport, if he had more time, could have talked about this and that is the whole ethical concept of the nuclear industry. The nuclear industry is now advertising that it is actually a pretty safe industry and it might be the way of the future. When you burn coal, you get acid rain. You are going to run out of oil and gas and there is lots of coal. They say that in the long run, it might be cheaper to use nuclear energy, but they forget that they still have not worked out the full costs or the methods of dismantling reactors or finding ways to store and deal with the spent fuel which is a world-wide problem.

The world is moving into a new system of dealing with the environment. I call Mrs. Brundtland the NDP or the Socialist Prime Minister of Norway. She did a report for the United Nations which talked about sustainable development. That is, future development should only take place in terms of whether we can deal with the environmental results of that development and apply it to the nuclear industry. If we apply her ideas to the nuclear industry, perhaps when it says expand the nuclear industry because we have not found the way with dealing with the wastes it does not make as much sense.. In my view, you should not start an industry or a development if you cannot deal with the waste. That is what sustainable development is about.

The Hon. Member also mentioned Canada's energy future, that we are in fact the biggest per capita consumers of energy in the world. I agree with him. That future involves conservation and efficiency. I visited Denmark and I saw how they use efficient heating, how they have motors and transport that are much more efficient than what we have. We are of course not Denmark. We are a bigger country and it is more difficult but we could be a lot more energy efficient. This Government has cut back on energy efficiency programs, conservation programs. We could use wood wastes in British Columbia. We could use solar and wind and of course the energy source of the 21st century will be hydrogen.

I could go on and on and talk about this, but I support this motion because the Hon. Member has put his finger on what David Suzuki talked about, and that is, you can have human error. We do not want human error in a nuclear power plant near the suburbs of Toronto, for example. That is why it is a good idea to review the situation of the shifts and the health and safety standards of the employees and of the plants.

Mr. René Soetens (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to participate in this debate on the motion brought by the Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). The motion is:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the Government should instruct the Atomic Energy Control Board to conduct a public review into the safety of nuclear power plant employees working twelve hour shifts.

Certainly that is a very commendable motion in its own right. However, as I listened to the debate presented by the Hon. Member for Davenport and subsequently the spokesman from the NDP, it seems they want to go into the whole concept of power and energy and get away from the motion itself. First, I would like to deal with the motion, and perhaps respond to some of the comments raised by the hon. gentleman.

An international agency report of 1984 was referred to. It deals with numerous types of agencies outside of nuclear power plants in the world where 12–hour shifts have been implemented. It refers to one particular nuclear power plant in the United States that abandoned the 12–hour schedule. I wish to deal with the 12–hour schedule.

Problems with rotational shift systems that have people working either the morning, the afternoon, or the night shift, each lasting eight hours, have caused organizations to search for an alternative shift design that would create fewer problems for shift workers while maintaining the desired productivity and, in particular, safety of the plant. As a consequence, modified schedules built on the 12–hour work day have come into use as part of management's efforts to decrease the undesirable aspects of shift work. Those schedules allow coverage of the continuous operation and, at the same time, provide the shift worker not only with more leisure time, but leisure time which coincides with the free time of family and friends.

There is no doubt that the effects of shift work on family life is not enjoyed by those many people who do in fact work shifts. There are perceived impacts on family life by absences, for example, when families participate in community events, school events, or simply quiet time in the backyard.

I have never worked shifts, but in my constituency there are numerous facilities that employ shift workers, including automotive plants, steel plants, furniture plants and others, as well as a plant included in the motion presently being debated that was presented by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). That plant is the Pickering Nuclear Generating Station. It is one of the largest in the world, and rates very highly world–wide for its efficiency. It generates some 4,220,000 kilowatts of power. It employs 1,500 workers, many of whom are unionized. Of those 1,500 workers, 1,000 of them work a 12–hour shift. That plant has been on a 12–hour shift since 1985, although its first unit went into operation as far back as 1971.

Atomic Energy Control Board

The Bruce Nuclear Generating Station on the shores of Lake Huron employs some 3,600 workers, of which 2,800 are on 12-hour shifts. It is also one of the largest and most efficient in the world. For your interest, Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform you of the magnitude of the nuclear-generation industry in Ontario.

The Bruce and Pickering plants combined produce more than 50 per cent of Ontario's hydro electricity. Pickering alone produces 20 per cent of the requirements for electricity in Ontario. Pickering's Unit No. 7 ran 100 per cent a year and is the world's leading lifetime capacity performance leader. Pickering's Unit No. 6 was the world's individual performance leader for the calendar year 1988. That is certainly not an industry that seems to be having efficiency problems of any consequence at all.

The Bruce heavy water plant, which is a part of the Bruce nuclear plant, is integral to the Ontario-based nuclear generating industry, and is a neighbour to the nuclear generating station itself. It has been on a 12-hour shift schedule since 1979. The Bruce heavy water plant has been free of a lost-time accident since July, 1983. In July of this year it will achieve six million man-hours of work since the last lost-time accident. It has one of the best safety records in Canada.

The employees of the Bruce Generating Station observed the benefits experienced by the employees of the heavy water plant of the 12-hour shifts. In their negotiations with management they requested the same schedule. In 1985, a year after the international report referenced previously, 12-hour shifts were implemented on a trial basis. A review took place and after one year, based on the trial period that was implemented, 17 parameters were monitored during the trial to provide data pertaining to public safety, employee health, safety, productivity, and costs. I would like to refer to a letter to the Director General, Reactor Regulation of the Atomic Energy Control Board in Ottawa from E. P. Horton, Director, Nuclear Generation Division. It is dated May 12 and I wish to quote one paragraph which states:

> Overall, the results of the 12-hour shift trial monitoring program indicate that human performance has not deteriorated following the change from 8 to 12-hour shift working. As a result, it is concluded that the risk to the public from the operation of Ontario Hydro's Nuclear Generating Stations has not increased due to the change in shift duration. Based on the results of the monitoring program, I request AECB approval for Ontario Hydro to change from temporary to permanent 12-hour shift working subject to continued support from the workers involved.

In discussions I have had as late as two hours ago with Ontario Hydro, the feeling is clear and the employees have not requested a change to the shift schedule, and it is only with their support that this shift schedule would in fact work. A passing comment was made to me that, if Ontario Hydro attempted to change it, it would perhaps have a wildcat strike on its hands.

One of the reasons the Hon. Member for Davenport feels that we should review the nuclear generating capacity in Canada and our program relates to health concerns. I, as well as every Member in the House, would certainly be concerned about the health of Canadians, particularly if it were impacted by nuclear powered generation. The Hon. Member for Davenport mentioned many newspaper articles that dealt with a report on leukemia incidents in and around nuclear plants.

I have a nuclear plant in my riding, and I made a point of reading that report. The report deals with the occurrences of leukemia in children aged zero to four years covering the period from 1971 to 1986. The report included a survey of a 775,000 population base. Not every person was contacted, but the base of population for the study included Scarborough, Markham, Ajax, Pickering, Whitby, Oshawa, and parts of Uxbridge. It was a substantial population base. The report concluded that there was no evidence to show that there were more cases of leukemia in my jurisdiction than would be found anywhere else in Canada with a similar population base. On a health basis, there is nothing to date available to indicate any concern with regard to health.

There is no doubt that all Members in the House would like to see less carbon dioxide in the air. That is why the Member for Davenport should be including nuclear energy in his comments as being a positive aspect. A nuclear power plant does not generate one pound of carbon dioxide. That point should be considered. It has also not been proven that a nuclear powered generation plant has any impact on the environment, water, or air quality in and around the plant, and therefore throughout the rest of the market-place.

We also must talk about the cost of Darlington in the process. I agree that $11 billion is a lot of money. However, a $11-billion will generate 10 per cent of the capacity that Ontario requires in electricity. That is twice as much as we get from Niagara Falls at this point. Based on the economics of nuclear power it certainly is an item that should be high on the agenda.

Part of Ontario's benefit has been its ability to attract industry, partially because of its low cost and partially because of its reliability of supply. Nuclear power generates 50 per cent of the supply, and it is substantially lower in cost than some of the alternatives, including coal and oil.

Although I like the gist of the motion which deals with safety in plants. There have been substantial reports conducted to indicate that there is no support whatsoever for the concept that employees working 12-hour shifts work less safely than those who work eight-hour shifts. Therefore, I see no reason to support the motion presented today.

• (1740)

Mr. Al Johnson (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, the question of safety in nuclear power plants is very important. Whether or not working 12-hour shifts would have an detrimental effect, however, is not at all clear.

First, no increase in accidents were reported for 12-hour shifts in various industries. There is no indication that absenteeism has increased with 12-hour shifts. Third, it has been found that resignations have been effectively constant and internal turnovers have in fact reduced.

Before I expand on some of the evidence in that regard, I want to respond to some of the comments made by the Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), the Member for Port Moody—Coquitlam (Mr. Waddell) and my hon. colleague, particularly with regard to nuclear energy within the concept of energy use in Canada.

I am concerned that people talk very loosely about such things as the greenhouse effect and other environmental questions which I believe are supported at this time by very soft scientific evidence. The proponents of nuclear energy say that their energy does not create carbon dioxide, which is an issue which the oil and gas industry is saddled. However, let us consider that this planet has produced a substantial amount of carbon dioxide over millions of years and life has continued to exist and evolve. We must be careful not to make assumptions without taking into consideration such things as the effect of the oceans in absorbing carbon dioxide, and extrapolate to conclusions which may or may not be correct.

I support the arguments made by the Hon. Member for Davenport and the Member for Port Moody—Coquitlam about the need for more study. The Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources, and various other groups in this country must make more detailed and effective study on the interrelationship of energy use. We should not single out nuclear energy, or oil and gas as particularly bad without first establishing a much more sound scientific hypothesis into the effects and consequences of the use of those types of energy.

I would ask Members to bear that in mind when we are dealing with a very complex scientific subject about which no one can make categorical statements. It definitely requires more study and I hope the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources will look further into the energy options study that began in the Thirty-Third Parliament. It needs a good deal more review so that we may focus on what we should be doing with energy in Canada in the long term.

Now that 12-hour shifts have been employed by most industries and companies in Canada and in many other countries for several years, we can review the experience that has been gained. This covers the reaction of shift workers at work and at home in relation to domestic and social requirements, and of the employers who are concerned with not only the health and well-being of their employees and the public, but also productivity and profit. The positions that have been taken by organized labour are also of interest when one considers this new way of working.

A primary concern about the introduction of 12-hour shift work is that tired workers may make mistakes and compromise safety, either for themselves, for their co-workers, or for the public. Surveys of petroleum and chemical plants that have been using this shift schedule provides us with some indication of the possible effects.

Because of fears about possible deterioration of safety performance, management tends to place increased emphasis on precautionary measures with the implementation of a 12-hour schedule. Employees, too, recognize that they might be more likely to make mistakes because of fatigue. Management usually feels that these initial fears lead to a greater conscientiousness and, thus, to safety performance that was at least as good as it has been on the eight-hour shift. Some plants have reported that they had operated for more than two million person-hours without a lost time injury, and one had operated for 10 million person-hours with the same results.

Absenteeism is another important indicator of how people feel about the work they are doing. Evidence shows that absenteeism is in fact reduced when plants are on the 12-hour shift. The primary reason is that employees who work three and four-day weeks do not want to lose the long holidays. For example, someone working a three-day week would lose one-third of their pay if they lost one day of work. There is a great incentive to be present, active and participating in the workforce during those three days in order to have four days of holiday. Many companies have reported that employees are much more effective and focused on their job with these 12-hour shifts.

Staff turnover has been looked at as a possible indicator of problems that have been created by the 12-hour shift. The available evidence seems to indicate that resignations have held constant, and internal turnover, in the form of transfers from shift work to day work, showed improvements in many cases. A number of plants have noted this internal turnover problem as one of the major motivating factors in evaluating employees' requests for the 12-hour shifts.

I submit that there is no particularly convincing evidence that working 12-hour shifts is detrimental to worker health or safety. Indeed, there is considerable evidence that workers not only prefer 12-hour shifts and a compressed three or four day work week, but they also perform as well or better with this organization of their work schedule.

In any event, I am sure that the Atomic Energy Control Board is well aware of the need to carefully supervise and monitor the implementation of any changes in working conditions and that as a responsible organization it has no need for directives or public hearings in order to deal with this fundamental aspect of their business.

In conclusion, I reiterate my statement about the need to diffuse the discussions on energy options. We need to study the question in order to develop a base of information that will allow the Government and this Parliament to make decisions that will benefit Canada in the future.

• (1750)

Mr. Scott Thorkelson (Edmonton—Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I too am very pleased to rise today to speak on this motion. I must say I am somewhat disappointed at the two opposition Members for using the motion as a vehicle to talk about the energy industry in general rather than the specific motion before us. I would be pleased at another point in time to talk about the energy industry.

In talking about 12-hour shifts as applied to the nuclear industry, I can speak from personal experience. In university I worked eight-hour shifts one summer and 12-hour shifts another. I feel I have experienced both rotations and know a little bit about them.

My memory about the one summer I worked eight-hour shifts is a very dark memory indeed. I can hardly remember any social activities or being able to do anything. All I remember is nights at work and days sleeping. The other summer, the summer when I worked 12-hour shifts, was a much more pleasant summer. I had to work fewer days although they were longer and I enjoyed myself much more.

In fact I would say that long rotations of eight-hour shifts are in fact more dangerous to worker safety than 12-hour shifts. I remember working seven evening shifts in a row and coming off a shift at 8 a.m. in the morning being very fatigued and spending quite a few days to turn myself around. However, I was able to adapt much more quickly working 12-hour shifts.

I would like to spend a little bit of time looking at some of the industry experience in implementing 12-hour shifts especially in the process industries. Shift work in one form or another is a fact of life in 25 per cent of the North American working population. Alternating day, night and afternoon shifts is no longer something that only industrial workers, miners, hospital and railway personnel have to accept. It is becoming more common in certain process industries where the technical processes cannot be interrupted without affecting the product, or where expensive equipment is used more profitably in constant operation.

Continuous process operations such as those found in oil refineries, chemical plants, seed and aluminum mills, glass plants, and paper mills require around the clock manning and present special problems in scheduling work so as to minimize worker dissatisfaction. The shift worker employed in such operations, usually on a rotating eight-hour basis, faces many problems.

Interest in shift work is skyrocketing as many experts are looking at rotating shifts as a factor in human error involved in nuclear power plant incidents, air crashes and other accidents. Many newspaper, magazine and television specials describe rotating shifts as involving problems for the shift worker, such as working at unusual times and having few weekends away from the job, and the adverse effects psychologically and physically because shift work is contrary to normal bodily processes. Family and social life are adversely affected because the shift worker, although working 40 hours weekly, finds leisure time occurring during hours when friends are at work, when children are at school and most people are sleeping. This is indeed difficult.

Humans seem to thrive on regularity while any irregularity appears to create psychological and physical problems. These in turn affect the occupational health and safety of the worker. On the other hand, some workers prefer shift work. It seems more relaxed. Weekends seem longer. There are opportunities to take courses. There are more daytime hours for personal activities.

The term "rotating shift work" covers a wide variety of work schedules. These shifts can either be continuous, running three shifts per day, seven days per week, or semi-continuous, running two or three shifts per day with or without weekends. Rotational shift work implies that shifts rotate or change according to a set schedule. Workers take turns working on all shifts that are a part of a particular system. Fixed shifts, such as working night shifts all the time, are not included in the definition of rotational shift work.

However, it should be remembered that workers on fixed night shifts and rotational shift workers have much in common due to the constantly changing schedules, night work and disruption to family and social lives. The shift workers must function on an abnormal schedule. The night shift worker sleeps when most people are awake and works when friends and family do not.

The typical North American pattern of a five-day work week followed by two days of rest is replaced by constant changes in schedules from one day or week to the next. Changing schedules like this can cause problems. Scientific studies throughout the world have demonstrated that shift work by its very nature is a major factor in the health and safety of workers.

What has brought many of the problems of shift workers to new light is the increased knowledge of biological cycles in the body. Many human physical functions follow 24-hour cycles. These cycles are called circadian rhythms. The word "circadian" comes from the Latin circa dies and means about a day. Many different bodily processes follow a daily rhythm. For example, they regulate sleeping, waking, digestion, secretion of adrenalin, body temperature, pulse and many other important aspects of body functions and human behaviours. These rhythmical processes allow for high activity during the day and low activity at night. Normally, the body uses cues from other body processes and from the environment such as clock time, social activities, the light-dark cycle and mealtimes to keep the various rhythms on track.

The health problems from rotational shift work arise partly because the body rhythms are disrupted by changing eating, sleeping and working schedules. The body temperature is a good example of a typical body rhythm. The body temperature is highest during the afternoon and early evening, roughly around 6 p.m., and lowest in the morning, 4 a.m., the typical times of activity and rest. However, if the activity pattern is changed, for example, if the person is working at night, the body temperature does not vary over 24 hours as much as normal, and it also does not totally adjust to the new schedule. The temperature rhythm as well as other body rhythms are out of phase both with each other and with a person's activity pattern. This can lead to feelings of fatigue and disorientation.

Jet lag is a term often used to describe these feelings. Most of us, especially those of us from the West, experience this on a Monday morning after a long flight when we lose two or three hours and have our schedules disrupted. I am sure many Members of the House can identify with that.

There is some question of which aspects of circadian rhythms can adapt when one is living on an abnormal routine. Some do not seem to adapt much at all. People have been asked to sleep according to an artificial day duration such as 21 or 27 hours rather than the usual 24 hours and measures have been taken of how their psyiological functions adapt. It may be that continuous exposure to changing abnormal conditions over a period of years would increase ability to alternate the pattern of bodily rhythms, but not enough is known at the present to speculate.

In closing, I would like to say that most people if offered the choice would take the 12–hour shift. They would opt for the rotating 12–hour shift because it presents them with opportunities for social time and being with their families. I would say that a happy worker is a safe worker. What is necessary is not to change the shift but to co–operate between labour and management to create a safe working environment and to put safety as a goal in itself.

THE BUDGET–BUDGET CANCELLATION SUGGESTED APPROPRIATE COURSE/RESPONSIBILITY OF THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, on May 24, I asked questions of the Solicitor General (Mr. Blais) in connection with the Budget leak in general. Of course, there has been a lot of water under the bridge since then, particularly the astounding statements made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) today about being prepared to leave the issue of press freedom totally to the courts. I want to come back in a moment to the other point.

The charge against a member of the media, or what the charge says, the simple possession of so–called stolen property, which is the way in which the Criminal Code might describe the simple fact of publishing a leaked document, is a great disappointment. It is one on which I think a comment has to be made since it is connected, at least by subject matter, to the issue that I have given notice of to speak on during the late show.

What the Prime Minister has suggested, in effect, is that we will leave it to the courts of the land to decide whether the publication of leaked information, as Doug Small is alleged to have done, is a crime or not. I do not accept that. I have to indicate my great disappointment in this increasing trend or tendency in one way or another for the Government to leave matters to the court, rather than taking a responsibility as a parliamentarian, which all of us are, for the state of the law of the land.

I am asking: Does this mean that the Prime Minister is prepared to say that if the court determines that journalists can no longer make use of leaked information, then so be it, and we are going to accept that? That to me is not an acceptable position, given the Canadian tradition, and given the well understood practice over decades, to which some Members of the Government admitted that they were themselves a party to having obtained leaked material to make it public. As far as I am concerned, the Prime Minister should not have said that this is something which is going to be left for the courts. He should have said that this is a well established feature of freedom of the press about which we are going to tell the courts of the land what we feel.

I have argued that I do not think that the charge against Doug Small should have been laid. I do not think it should have been proceeded with. I do not think that the Prime Minister should say, in a cavalier way, that this well established feature of the freedom of the press as we know it in our country is something that is going to travel through the courts of the land and perhaps be determined, if the Government decides to appeal it high enough, by the Supreme Court of Canada.

To turn to the specific point that I wanted to make and the question that I asked in the House of Commons on May 24, the first mistake that this Government made was the decision by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to proceed with a Budget that he knew had been leaked. It is true that the Budget in Brief was in the hands of Doug Small. The Government states that it did not know about the Mutual Life leak until the next day. I am not challenging the Ministers' statements about that fact. However, look at what they did know about Doug Small. They knew that Doug Small had said that he got it from someone in a car. We learned that same day that another journalist had been offered that Budget in Brief for money. We know someone out there was travelling around with a copy of the Budget in Brief. How long did he have it? Who else did he give it to or sell it to? How long had it been in their hands? These were all things that the Minister of Finance was prepared to risk when he decided to go the press building that night and read his Budget to the media.

My question to the Solicitor General, which I directed to the Minister of Finance at greater length is this: Knowing what the Government knew that day about the state of the leak, conceding as it has said in this House that it did not know about the Mutual Life leak until the next day, but that the Government did know the facts as I have stated them, how could the Minister bring that Budget forward and ask the Canadian people to accept it?

[Translation]

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to point out that the bulk of the Hon. Member's comments has no connection with the question he put on May 24, 1989. He knows perfectly well that this evening, Mr. Speaker, and the Hon. Member's insistence is of some concern, we cannot comment on a case that is already before the courts. I shall therefore direct my response exclusively to the question that was put on May 24 by the Hon. Member to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Speaker, I must repeat once again that the Government, that the Ministers who answered the questions about the leak cannot change the story, because the story is true. The matter has been discussed at length during Question Period. I will therefore repeat what was said.

A Budget leak was confirmed early in the evening of April 26. The Government tried to obtain the consent of the Opposition parties to reconvene the House. We all know, Mr. Speaker, that this consent was denied.

The Government therefore judged that in the circumstances, it would be better to release the Budget right away and to go before the public. The Minister sent copies of the Budget Papers to the clerks of the House and to the leaders of the Opposition parties. When the Minister announced his budgetary measures to Canadians, the Budget Papers were simultaneously distributed to the information media and officials of the Department of Finance were made available to the media to answer their questions.

Mr. Speaker, the media gave the budgetary measures complete coverage, both that evening and the next morning, so that when the Minister rose in the House on April 27 to formally bring down his Budget, the measures were already known to the Canadian public. In fact, certain measures had become effective as of 10 p.m. the night before.

The information contained in the Budget had been in the public domain for nearly 20 hours before the Minister of Finance was able to rise in the House, to bring down his Budget, at 5.40 p.m. on April 27.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, as the Minister explained at page 2092 of Hansard, it would have been quite inappropriate and disruptive to the financial markets if at that stage the Budget had been withdrawn.

Mr. Speaker, when the Government, when the Minister of Finance released the Budget Wednesday night, we reacted responsibly and as well as we could in the circumstances, Mr. Speaker.

CHILD CARE—GOVERNMENT INTENTION RESPECTING LEGISLATION/MINISTER'S POSITION RESPECTING CHILD CARE

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I rise pursuant to Standing Order 38 to pursue a matter I raised in this House on May 15. The issue is child care.

On that day I asked the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Beatty) to explain his intentions regarding introduction of a child care Bill that more truly reflects the needs of Canadian families and their children. I want to underline that question, Mr. Speaker, "that more truly reflects the need of Canadian families and their children".

The Minister responded by saying the Members opposite opposed the Bill from the outset, and he was referring to the Bill that died on the Order Paper in the last Parliament. Now we find when the Government has decided that it cannot proceed it cries crocodile tears and pretend it was in favour of it. My tears are not over the demise of a very bad Bill. My tears are because the Government does not yet seem to understand that it was a very bad Bill, much less why it was a bad Bill. My tears are because this Minister refuses information for parents and caregivers about the reality of what is needed by children in Canada. My tears are because the Government chooses to pit working parents against non-working parents in the most blatant divide and conquer technique and then says Canadians cannot agree on what is needed. Most of all, Mr. Speaker, my tears are for the children who need child care today now while they are children, not after more studies.

The shelves of the Library of Parliament groan under the weight of mountains of child care studies while the children of Canada cry for child care spaces.

There is a daycare centre here in Ottawa that has 250 children on the waiting list for six spaces. The only movement those names see is from the infant list to the toddler list and from the toddler list to the pre-school list. If the family is lucky, they will get a call when the child is ready to enter kindergarten.

Many of the provinces and territories made comprehensive plans for expanded child care programs based on commitments of this Government. Since the introduction of the Budget, these plans have disintegrated. They have disintegrated like a sand castle at high tide, washed away by this Government's Budget.

Indeed the Minister of Social Services in Ontario, because of the Budget of the federal government, is reported to have suggested that if daycare centres in Toronto are having a tough time financially, they should be sold to the private or profit sector. Hardly a solution.

The availability of culturally appropriate child care is absent from Indian reserves in this country. Health and Welfare officials have said they made a conscious decision not to fund child care on reserves, yet 40 per cent of the native population is under the age of 15. Of 663 reserves in Canada, less than 70 have child care facilities.

Before I close, I would ask the Minister who will respond to this statement not to give me a litany of how an increase in maternity leave will help children, as children need child care after maternity leave ends; or of how some women are willing to sacrifice and stay home. I ask the Minister to remember that often the sacrifice is to go to work. I would ask that the Minister not say that we voted against the Government's bad Bill, because with that Bill we would still be facing a crisis; or to have school boards apply for funding. In B.C., school boards do not provide child care. I would also ask that he not ask me if I am willing to pay more taxes for child care. I am willing to pay fair taxes along with every other sector of this country.

I appeal to the Minister to tell this House and Canadian families what is planned during the mandate of this Government to ensure that children will be in safe, affordable, accessible child care. I pray the Minister of National Health and Welfare is not going to travel this country and look into the question himself after rejecting all of the information before him and come back to us with the promise just before the next election of a grand plan. I pray that what we will hear is that there will be action now to fill the desperate need for child care.

Mrs. Lise Bourgault (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it stands to reason that as women and as Members on the Government side, we share the dismay of the Hon. Member about the fact that the Government was obliged to cancel temporarily an admittedly important part of the national child care project.

Mr. Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member doesn't think that the Government made this decision with a light heart. I hope the Hon. Member doesn't think that we made this decision coldly, without any emotion, because as Members we know what the situation is in our ridings and we know there is an urgent need for child care, now that women have fortunately decided to become an integral part of society and enter the labour market.

I can tell you that as Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister, I am most interested in this issue and I think that the Minister has shown that he too is very concerned about it.

We said, Mr. Speaker, that we were convinced—and I hope that the budget measures that we brought forward and coming budgets will show we are right—that we can attain our objectives before the end of our present mandate.

Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member said in her statement that the for-profit private sector was not the solution. I would like to say to her that perhaps she should change her position. I met with businessmen, particularly from my riding, Mr. Speaker, and I was extremely glad to see that they are now concerned about this issue. I brought together seven or eight very important businessmen and I asked them if it would not be possible for them to finance a day care centre in a specific area to help their employees who have problems, because there are people who come from Montreal to work in Mirabel, for example, or Saint-Janvier, and have trouble with traffic, etc. It would be much easier if there were a day care centre in the workplace, in Mirabel. So a group using the special projects fund will do a feasibility study on what would be required for such a day care centre, Mr. Speaker. I think that is one approach that must be considered. It is not only the Government or the provinces, because we must not forget that the provinces have a lot to do with it— Until (more) financial resources are available, the Government will continue to fund part of the day care costs for eligible children in the provinces from the Canada Assistance Plan.

In terms of the tax system, Mr. Speaker, we also have an important change to the child care deduction and the supplement to the child tax credit.

In closing, I know that my time is limited, I would like to reassure all Hon. Members that the Government is very concerned about child care and together, we will try to work to find new approaches. That is the purpose of the special initiative project, Mr. Speaker: so Canadians can think about new ways to provide child care. Thank you, and I obviously share the Hon. Member's regrets because I am sorry about it too.

EMPLOYMENT—CLOSURE OF PROCESSING FACILITIES/ EMPLOYMENT INSURANCE—QUALIFYING PERIOD.

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, on May 15, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) responded to my questions on the impact of the announced cut-backs by National Sea Products in Nova Scotia and the consequences of the new landing regulations for fish in British Columbia. She stated, "I do not accept the suggestion that this Government has destroyed those jobs". According to a document prepared by the Department of Fisheries as a backgrounder to the new landing regulations in British Columbia: "The relocation of the export restrictions could result in the export of large quantities of unprocessed fish. This will affect the raw material supply for processors. It is not possible to determine the time lapse for the employment and income impacts to be realized."

This Government has embarked on this policy and the long-term negative impacts have not been assessed. The Department of Fisheries study states that large quantities of Canada's unprocessed fish will be exported. That means fish processing jobs will also be exported. In Atlantic Canada, the recent quota reductions have placed in jeopardy some 6,500 processing jobs in Newfoundland and 2,500 in the Province of Nova Scotia.

An announcement has already been made by the largest fish processing company in Atlantic Canada that their facility in Lockeport, Nova Scotia will close permanently on October 1. This will mean the loss of 200 jobs. This will have a devastating impact on that community. The processing plant is the principal industry for the town and for the surrounding area. Indeed, in Atlantic Canada some 1,300 communities are directly dependent on the fishery. According to statements made as recently as today, the Government is predicting a bleak future for the Atlantic fishery. The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), and the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), have indicated that Atlantic communities may require massive assistance, similar to the $1 billion provided to western farmers in the form of drought relief.

In my Province of British Columbia, the future of the fishing industry looks disastrous. This is a direct consequence of actions taken by the Tory Government. In the B.C. processing industry there are up to 8,000 people employed during the peak season; 70 per cent of those employees are women, many visible minority women. The average annual wage is $21,400.

The new landing regulations of the Government have stripped the B.C. industry of the right to process our own Canadian fish prior to export. The new regulations of the Government will deny those workers and their families a secure future. We should have a right to our own Canadian resources. We should have a right to our own Canadian jobs.

According to the Minister, the solution for those women who will lose their jobs is to accept the fact that the jobs will be gone. At no time did she deny that jobs would be lost. Instead, she told the House that her Department would be working with the affected communities through the industrial adjustment service and would use other programs to assist those communities.

The Minister also indicated that unemployment insurance would provide the necessary fall-back for those forced out of work. The Minister did not accept the fact that her changes to the Unemployment Insurance Program will have a negative impact on those workers because: "The current UI Program remains in effect".

The Government's cut-backs to unemployment insurance will take effect next year. According to the Minister for International Trade, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the collapse of the Atlantic fishery will also likely occur next year. Those workers who once required 10 weeks to qualify for UI, will require up to 16 weeks to qualify next year.

The jobs being lost on both coasts are high paying union jobs. On the East Coast those jobs average more than $10 per hour. In B.C., the average is approximately $14 per hour. They are unionized jobs with safe working conditions and decent benefits.

The Government seems to be offering those workers, the majority of whom are women, two options: get out of the industry entirely, or accept jobs that will offer them and their families far less.

The House royal commission on employment and unemployment stated that the future directions for the less developed regions of our country lay not in the imposed plans from outside the region, but rather on the strength which is found within those communities. The report also stated that people who live in the smaller communities will require a revolution in the education of their citizens. The federal Government has cut back on funding for post-secondary education. The report stated that they will need to be linked into the development schemes geared to the regions, but funding for regional economical development will be cut severely in the next year, and they will require the security of an income security system which meets their needs. However, the federal Government is committed to withdrawing totally from the Unemployment Insurance Program.

The Minister referred to training as a salvation for those women and their families who will lose their livelihoods as a result of a crippled fishery. She claimed that the training programs will provide a more stable future for women which will end their reliance on cyclical jobs. The National Action Committee on the Status of Women, the Canadian Congress for Learning Opportunities for Women, and the Association for Community-Based Training and Education for Women, have all been highly critical of the Canadian Jobs Strategy Program which is so often referred to by the Minister as the answer to the question of training.

The type of jobs which have received funding from the program are low-paying, dead-end jobs which the Government describes as marketable skills. According to the Canadian Congress for Learning Opportunities for Women, almost 12,000 fewer women are being educated for new work under the Canadian Jobs Strategy. The Minister argues not for a secure industry in which women represent 70 per cent of the workforce, but for a system which women will recognize is designed to remove them from their jobs.

In conclusion, the Minister said on May 15 that the programs in place are adequate. Yet the very next day the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) said, as reported at page 1794 of Hansard:

—the Government and several Ministers are working on a comprehensive initiative to deal with the genuine human hardships that will occur in the coming months if we do not address this question as a high priority.

The women of Canada deserve better.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall), I am pleased to have this opportunity to discuss the matter of possible lay-offs in the fishing industry, raised by the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Burnaby (Ms. Black) on May 15, 1989.

The Government is concerned about the impact on the fishing industry of problems related to the international fishery and the need to conserve fish stock. A special cabinet committee, chaired by the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has been struck. One of the committee's objectives is to review existing adjustment and employment programs, and to judge the adequacy of the programs when dealing with long-term labour market problems such as those faced by the Atlantic fishery sector.

The federal Government has been involved in wide-ranging discussions to ensure the maintenance of a long-term fishing industry through the application of quotas, and in the short-term, to protect jobs that depend on that industry.

The Canadian Jobs Strategy was launched in 1985 to provide workers with the training and skills required in Canada's labour market. While the strategy focuses on the individual, it has the flexibility to assist the most in need in all industrial sectors, including fisheries. Through decentralized decision making, local and regional needs and priorities are assessed and funds are directed to the approximate mix of programs and services that work best in a particular area.

Employment and Immigration Canada has taken measures in the past to help workers in the fishing industry affected by difficult adjustment situations, short fishing seasons and adverse climatic conditions. For example, in 1987 the fishing season in certain areas of Newfoundland and the north shore of Québec was not long enough for a number of workers in the fishing industry to qualify for unemployment insurance. Employment and Immigration Canada, therefore, directed special funding of $3.5 million under the Job Development Program to assist these people.

We are currently looking at the possibility of setting up industrial adjustment service agreements to provide for joint labour-management action to deal with human resource planning and adjustment problems. The approach of having management and labour as equal partners in a consultative process identifying problems of common concern has proved to be extremely successful. The industrial adjustment service negotiates labour adjustment incentives agreements, each of which provides for the establishment of a labour adjustment committee which develops and carries out an action plan for that industry to meet its human resource requirements.

Employment and Immigration Canada will respond to the problem of dislocated workers as it has in the past, by providing income support through the unemployment insurance system, by providing funding from existing programs of the Canadian Jobs Strategy, and by extending services under the Industrial Adjustment Service.

The Hon. Member also speaks of women who will be adversely affected by lay-offs in the fishery sector, especially in fish plants across the Atlantic region. I want to reiterate what the Minister of Employment and Immigration has stated in the House on May 15, 1989, that first: "The current UI program is unchanged". Reforms will take place in January, 1990. Second: "The new program is going to benefit women in a way that unemployment insurance has not before because many of these women are in a position of needing training". Third, she stated: "The Government has bridging programs, training and language training programs". These programs deliberately moved away from the make-work programs of the good old days. She said that these programs will give women a more stable future, one in which they will not have to rely on a cyclical job at the low end of the scale.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow morning at ten o'clock.

The House resumed from Wednesday, May 31, consideration of the motion of Mr. McDermid that Bill C-13, an Act to authorize the divestiture of Nordion International Inc. and Theratronics International Ltd., be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, May 31, I had started the debate on Bill C-13, a Bill to privatize Nordion International Inc. and Theratronics International Ltd. I had reviewed the privatization program of the Government to date and its successes. Now I would like to carry on where I left off before the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) interrupted with a point of order.

Before I get into the details of the legislation, I want to talk a little bit about process and how we plan to divest ourselves of these two companies.

With Nordion, it is our intention to proceed by way of a third party sale as recommended by our financial advisors. This approach will provide maximum benefits to the existing company in terms of stability of operations, access to new capital, the opening of additional markets through the purchaser, and the synergy of the relationship if the purchaser is in a similar or complementary business.

Subject to the passage of the legislation that we are dealing with today, such a third party sale would take place through a bidding process into stage. The first round would identify a short list of serious bidders and then a final bidding process. I can see a winning bidder being selected and the deal being finalized shortly thereafter.

I must say in passing that there has been tremendous interest from the Canadian private sector in this company. I am sure that we will see some very active bidding on this company.

Theratronics is smaller and of lesser market value. It is, as a result, an appropriate candidate for an employee buy-out. Because of this we are giving employees priority in submitting a proposal to us. Furthermore, the Government is prepared to assist them in developing such a proposal by providing them with some financial resources to engage their own financial advisors.

I should add that Nordion employees have also expressed an interest in exploring the feasibility of purchasing all or part of their company. The Government has offered them a 5 per cent preference on price for a bid for 100 per cent of Nordion or a 10 per cent discount on shares for a minority interest. The Government has already provided employees with funding to cover the cost of hiring a financial advisor to assist them in evaluating these options.

It is interesting that we hear from time to time that unions oppose the privatization of these companies. However, the employees are very enthusiastic about it and are encouraging the Government to proceed with the privatization because they feel very strongly about these two companies, that they can do very, very well in the private sector.

Let me turn now to the actual provisions of the legislation. The Bill is a relatively simple one, so I do not want to take up too much House time. Clause 4 authorizes the Canadian Development Investment Corporation to sell or otherwise dispose of all of its shares in both Nordion and Theratronics in a manner to be approved by the Governor in Council.

Clauses 5 and 6 impose certain conditions relating to the shares of Nordion and limit total non-resident ownership to 25 per cent of the aggregate voting shares. Clause 7 restricts amendments to the articles of incorporation that are not consistent with the provisions of this legislation.

Clause 8 provides for a special continuity of employment pension option for Nordion and Theratronics employees. This is a very important point. This pension option has been legislated in all previous privatizations involving employees who were contributors to the public service superannuation plan. The provision allows employees to count the service with the privatized companies toward meeting service thresholds, for example, the early retirement service requirement under the public service superannuation plan.

Since employees of privatized companies cannot contribute to the public service superannuation plan, Clause 9 of the Bill permits the Governor in Council to delete Nordion and Theratronics from Schedule I of the Public Service Superannuation Act.

Finally, Clause 10 deems Nordion to have satisfied the requirements to make its equity an eligible investment for certain institutional investors. This legal for life provision simply facilitates investment by pension fund managers, trusted insurance companies,and Nordion shares should they so desire.

• (1010)

Because Nordion and Theratronics will both continue to serve Canadians and because their location is here in the national capital region, they will be required to provide service to the public in both official languages. This will be accomplished through the purchase and sale agreement for the two companies.

We have also imposed a 25 per cent non-resident ownership limit on the sale of Nordion because we wish to ensure that important Canadian technology remains under Canadian ownership and control now and in the future.

We have elected not to legislate similar restrictions for the sale of Theratronics. We are taking this approach in order to provide employees with the greatest possible flexibility in terms of structuring a proposal and arranging the necessary financing for it. As mentioned earlier, we are taking a different approach with each company in order to capitalize on their respective strengths.

As always, the concerns of the employees of Nordion and Theratronics stand uppermost in our minds throughout the divestiture process. In order to protect employee interests, the conditions of sale of both companies will require that the current terms and conditions of employment continue in force. In addition, collective bargaining agreements and bargaining agents will not be affected by the sale. The new owners will be required to put in place new pension arrangements that, as a minimum, meet the standards prescribed by the Pension Benefits Standards Act.

They will also be required to enter into a reciprocal pension transfer agreement which gives employees the option to transfer their pension benefits to the new plan. Pension benefits earned to the date of sale will be fully protected and employees will be able to choose from the full range of available options—annuities, return of contributions, continuity of service, and so on—depending upon the age and length of service in deciding how they wish to receive the benefits earned to the date of privatization.

Let me speak to the important issue of health and safety because I know that is an important public concern when dealing with companies involved with nuclear and radiation technologies.

No matter who ultimately owns either Nordion or Theratronics, privatization of these companies will not affect the regulatory environment in which they operate.

They have always been subject not only to Canadian regulations but also to the regulatory environments of the countries in which they do business.

In foreign countries, Nordion, for example, is responsible for setting up the plant, training workers, and ensuring the plant is operating safely before it turns the facility over to the local authorities who then take responsibility for it.

In Canada, regulatory authorities include the Atomic Energy Control Board, which regulates the safe handling and use of radio active products; Transport Canada, which regulates the safe transportation of dangerous goods; and Health and Welfare Canada, whose Bureau of Radiation and Medical Devices regulates medical devices, radiation sources, hazardous products and also enforces manufacturing and product standards. The role of these authorities will continue.

The United States, where there is a sizeable market for Nordion and Theratronics products, has a similar regulatory environment through the United States Nuclear Regulatory Commission, the Food and Drug Administration, and the Department of Transport. At the same time, both companies will still function within regulations established in foreign countries in which they sell their products and under conventions which promote the safe transportation of radioactive materials.

In approaching the divestiture of Nordion and Theratronics, our Government is seeking purchasers who will make a commitment to these companies, a commitment to their employees, and a commitment to the communities in which they operate. We will be reviewing purchase proposals on that basis, because we want these two companies to be stronger and more successful in the future.

I trust that as we debate this legislation all Members of the House from all sides will be looking at the positive contributions that Nordion and Theratronics can make to the economy as Canada as strong private sector corporations.

Hon. Roger E. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, the subject matter of this Bill falls within my area of responsibility as the opposition spokesman for privatization. It is in that context that in a minute or two, I will be saying some things about this Bill.

Before I do that, though, I just wanted to draw the attention of the House to the fact that the two companies we are talking about in this Bill, Theratronics and Nordion, are both situated in Kanata, not far from here, and have implications for that immediate area, including the nearby riding of Renfrew. My good friend and distinguished colleague, the Hon. Member for Renfrew (Mr. Hopkins), is in his riding today doing what he does so well—keeping in touch with his constituents. He will be speaking later in this debate and at that time, among other things, will talk about some of those local ramifications of the Bill.

I should first take a minute to respond to two or three things that the Minister said a couple of days ago when we began debate on the Bill. I want to thank him for his courtesy in providing me with a copy of his notes as he began speaking on Wednesday.

A couple of days ago, the Minister talked about the Government's commitment in 1984 to revitalize the economy so that economic growth could be strengthened and productive jobs for Canadians created. I do not disagree with him that that is a very laudable objective. It is worded nicely, it reads well, and it tickles the cockles of almost any hearts who are out there looking for jobs.

Of course, it is not 1984; it is now 1989. I say to him that the ultimate test of any of those fairly lofty statements is whether in retrospect the track record indicates they meant anything or whether the Government that melded them at the time took them seriously. I want to give him one example.

I will be the first to admit that with the very specialized products in the area of radiation, chemicals and so on, Nordion and Theratronics are at least a country mile from the fishery off the south coast of Newfoundland. I want, in passing, to demonstrate that the Minister's statement of a couple of days ago in this matter of economic growth and the Government's undertaking in that respect needs a little examination and, by extension, to show the complete relevance of what I want to say here today, to raise the larger question of if his statement on the economy is not exactly what it appears to be on the surface, maybe certain other things in this speech of his bear a little scrutiny as well.

Let us talk for a moment about the fishery, because here was an opportunity for the Government to put its money where its mouth was in 1984 when it said: "a commitment to revitalize the economy so that economic growth could be strengthened and productive jobs for Canadians created". That is a laudable objective. What happened in the fishery? What happened in the 3PS fishing zone off Newfoundland involving the St. Pierre and Miquelon area that Members will be familiar with at least on a map? What happened in the so-called northern cod stock area, the 2J3KL area in terms of the NAFO designations off the east coast of north Newfoundland, the northeast coast of Newfoundland, and the east coast of southern Labrador? What happened in those two instances, the south coast of Newfoundland and the so-called northern cod area?

If we look at the period leading up to and including 1984, at which time we had a Government of another stripe than the present one, in those two cases and in those two areas there was no overfishing. In the first case, there was no overfishing by the French. They stayed within their assigned quotas, quotas assigned to them pursuant to a convention and agreement between Canada and France. They stayed within those quotas every year up to and including 1984.

What happened in the northern cod area? Spain, Portugal, and all the other countries, both NAFO countries and non-NAFO countries, without exception in the years leading up to and including 1984, stayed within their assigned quotas. In some cases they were fishing surplus stock inside the 200-mile limit. In other cases they were just outside, on the nose and tail of the Grand Banks and on the Flemish Cap just to the east of the Banks. In all cases without exception those companies stayed within their quotas.

What happened beginning in 1985? Let me give a couple of figures off the top of my head. In 1985, the quota for France in 3PS was 9,500 metric tons. They took 25,800 metric tons. In 1986, the quota was 9,500 metric tons. They took 26,000 metric tons. What happened in the 2J3KL area?

For example, in 1986 the quota for the European Community, including Spain, Portugal, and other countries, was 19,200 metric tons. They took 110,000 metric tons.

What is the difference? One difference is there has been a change of government, but more than that there has been a change of signal being sent out by the Government of the day to foreign countries. The signal as of 1984 was: "Come, rape our resources, devastate the industry, take the jobs of our fishermen and fish plant workers; do what you want as long as you love us, as long as you are nice to our Prime Minister, and as long as you help him advance his career internationally". The fact that 15,000 or 16,000 fishermen and plant workers on the south coast of Newfoundland see their jobs in jeopardy is a mere detail.

Let us come back to the Minister's statement and to this Bill. It is very relevant, if people outside the Chamber really want to understand the agenda of this Government, what it is up to with this Bill, and what it is up to generally.

The Government in 1984, as the Minister reminded us, talked about a commitment to revitalize the economy. Where is the proof of the pudding in so far as the fishery of the south coast of Newfoundland is concerned? Where is the economic growth there? How is it manifested in the Government's policy?

I submit to the Minister and the House that the reverse is manifested. What is manifested is a devil may care attitude in terms of the workers and people involved. There is a larger agenda at work which does not take into account the inshore fishermen along the northeast coast of Newfoundland, along the south coast of Newfoundland, and in parts of Nova Scotia, plus the deep sea fishermen, the trawlermen, and the plant workers. In total, 98,800 fishermen and plant workers, in round numbers 100,000 people in Newfoundland and Nova Scotia alone depend on the cod stocks I have just talked about. That is not the total number depending on the fisheries in the Atlantic area. That is just the number who are depending on the cod stocks I have been talking about. There are 100,000 jobs at stake. What is the Government doing? It is fiddling while Rome burns. It is on to another objective altogether. "Jobs for fishermen," it says, "don't bother us with details."

Let me give another example which is probably closer to home in terms of the stated objectives of this Bill. The Bill has to do with privatizing two companies headquartered here in Ontario with some holdings elsewhere including out West, Nordion and Theratronics.

Let us talk about another company in the context of the Minister's statement. He goes on to say in his statement that one of the ways the Government pursued the goal of economic growth was through a major review of Crown corporations. That is an accurate statement. It not only reviewed Crown corporations; it went a step further. In the case of one Crown corporation called Air Canada, it removed completely its public policy objective. Anyone who knows the history of air transportation in this country, the history of railway construction in this country, the history of the Post Office in this country, anyone who knows that the transportation ties and the communication ties have to be east-west to keep this country together.

It was a contradiction in terms from the beginning. If we go back to 1840 or subsequent to 1867 where Newfoundland was trading with the Boston states, where the B.C. coast was trading into the western United States as it is and was then, and when central Canada was also involved in a fair amount of north-south trade relations, the whole concept of a Canada from sea to sea was made plausible by a railway network, by a postal network, and subsequently by some public policy relating to airline transportation. The instrument of that policy in so far as the latter was concerned was Air Canada. That was the reason for it. Canada just did not need another airline to compete with the other existing airlines of the day. Canada needed a particular airline that would ensure that places like Stephenville in my riding, Sydney and Sept-Iles, Quebec which did not have millions of population coming out of their ears, would be able to travel from point a to point b.

That was the whole concept of Air Canada as a public instrument of air transportation policy. That is what is being ripped apart here when the Government not only talks about but rushes forward to privatize Air Canada. Very recently Stephenville, Gander, Sydney and Sept-Iles are four areas that have seen the results in spades of the Government's privatization and airline deregulation policy.

The people in Stephenville and in the entire south-western part of Newfoundland, the Port aux Basques, the Burgeo area, the Port aux Port Peninsula, the Robinson-Codroy-Valley, are also seeing the results in spades. Abitibi Price, the giant pulp and paper employer in Stephenville, is on the public record as saying that Air Canada will pull out of Stephenville on June 17, a couple of weeks from now. It is going to be devastating to its ability to continue to perform and compete in the national market. This is not a question of moving a few passengers once or twice a year. This is a case in the Stephenville example of a company called Air Canada which could not carry all the passengers three or four months a year. It had to put on a larger aircraft every summer for the last couple of summers. My colleague, the provincial Member Mr. Kevin Allword, the Mayor of Stephenville, a delegation including the Mayor of Gander, and I met them a month or so ago in Montreal.

The best answer of the guys in Montreal who perpetrated this foul scheme was "we were not making enough money in Stephenville with the aircraft. We can put her somewhere else and make more money". I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that the original concept of having Air Canada as an instrument of public airline policy had nothing per se to do with making money. We as taxpayers hope that in the process of providing a service, Government would do so reasonably efficiently. One does not go out and squander money for the sake of squandering it. However, the idea that everything has to make money flies in the face of why we have a Government in the first place. If it is all bottom line and all predicated on how much money we can make, why is the Government involved in anything? Why do we not just give the whole thing over to the private sector? This strikes at the very heart of why we are having problems at this time in the country. We have at the head of the Government that gentleman from Baie Comeau whose complete resumé, his whole curriculum vitae, states: "Manager, American branch plant operation—shutdown Schefferville". That is the entire resumé.

Mr. Thacker: You ought to be ashamed of yourself. Do you want us to get into your personal record?

Mr. Simmons: I say to my good friend, the Hon. Member for Lethbridge (Mr. Thacker), that I am talking about the public performance in his job.

Mr. Thacker: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. If my friend wishes to get personal with people, does he want us to get into his personal record? We would be happy to give his dossier.

Mr. Manley: That is not a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Member for Burin—St. George's has the floor.

Mr. Simmons: I would like to respond to the gentleman. I thank him for the question.

Mr. Thacker: Don't get into that scum. You don't need to do that.

Mr. Simmons: It is interesting, Mr. Speaker, that the Member now chooses to characterize the time of the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) when he was President of the Iron Ore Company of Canada, a subsidiary of a Cleveland company, and his action in shutting down the Town of Schefferville while he was President of that company, as scum. Come on! Surely he has more respect for his leader than that. I am talking about two things that he did in his capacity as President of the Iron Ore Company of Canada. These are the credentials he brings to this job. He was a very successful President of IOC.

Mr. Thacker: You bring disgrace to yourself and your family.

Mr. Simmons: I have not mentioned the Prime Minister's family.

Mr. Thacker: You bring disgrace to your family.

Mr. McDermid: They unanimously voted for him.

Mr. Simmons: They also unanimously voted for me. What has that got to do with it? We are both Members of this House.

I say to the Member for Lethbridge that the performance of the Prime Minister as President of the Iron Ore Company of Canada is very germane to what I am talking about.

Mr. McDermid: It was brilliant.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would like to remind Members that this is not a question or comment period. I recognize the Member for Lethbridge on a point of order.

Mr. Thacker: I wonder if the Member would be kind enough to comment on the 1.4 million jobs that have been created since the Prime Minister became Prime Minister.

Mr. Manley: That is not a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Cut him off.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order. The Member for Burin—St. George's has the floor.

Mr. Simmons: I respect the fact that the views of the Member for Lethbridge are different from mine.

Mr. Thacker: Get out of that personal stuff, for Pete's sake.

Mr. Simmons: The Member goes on about personal stuf The Prime Minister was the President of the Iron Ore Company of Canada, an American branch plant operation. The Prime Minister shut down Schefferville in his capacity as President of the Iron Ore Company of Canada.

Mr. McDermid: Why?

Mr. Simmons: Because it did not satisfy the bottom line. That is exactly my point.

Mr. McDermid: They ran out of ore. Only the Liberals would keep a mine open when there is no ore.

Mr. Simmons: If the Member for Lethbridge and the Minister for Privatization (Mr. McDermid) think that is scum, they should take it up with the Prime Minister of Canada. There are an awful lot of people who used to live in Schefferville who do not think it is a very exciting idea either. They do not call it scum, but if that is the way that Member chooses to characterize it, he has an argument with the Prime Minister and not with me.

Let us move on to something more juicy. Let us look at the speech of the Minister on page 5 where he talks about a compassionate and caring way. This is the same Minister who, approximately 45 seconds ago, objected to my making any reference to the devastation caused to thousands of people who were told to pack their suitcases in Schefferville. Now he wants to talk about caring and compassion.

Mr. McDermid: I will talk about that. Every employee was so well taken care of up there that they voted for the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) completely when he ran there. Don't be silly.

Mr. Simmons: I know that this is a tender subject for the Minister for Privatization.

Mr. McDermid: Not at all.

Mr. Simmons: In his statement the Minister talked about some of the great successes of this privatization policy and he paraded Canadair that was sold to Bombardier, a national transportation company. Did you notice, Mr. Speaker, that in his litany and list of companies—I am sure he forgot this and will want to correct the record—he did not mention de Havilland. I wonder why he did not mention de Havilland. I am going to mention it for him.

Mr. McDermid: There are 1,500 more employees.

Mr. Simmons: And 700 people who lost their jobs.

Mr. McDermid: No, there are still 1,500 more employees there than when the Government sold it.

Mr. Simmons: Not to mention the fact that the Government is being sued for selling it under false pretences.

Mr. McDermid: You are wrong there, too.

Mr. Simmons: I may be wrong, but the Minister's argument is not with me, it is with de Havilland that has launched the suit.

Mr. McDermid: It was the safety standards. Don't you understand.

Mr. Simmons: It is not that I don't understand. It is that I do not agree with the Minister.

Mr. McDermid: I will brag about the de Havilland sale any time.

Mr. Simmons: I wish he had, because when he talked about the examples he conveniently forgot about de Havilland. I want to tell the House a bit about de Havilland. Yes, it was sold to Boeing in the United States for $155 million; yes, it cost 700 jobs; yes, the case is in the courts because the Government sold it under false pretences; yes, it was to be the flagship of the Government's privatization policy. As was said in Fifth Estate a few weeks ago on television, it is a case of a love affair gone sour.

Mr. McDermid: Not at all.

Mr. Simmons: Anyway, Mr. Speaker, I thought the Minister gave a good speech. I did not agree with it, but I thought he read it well.

For a moment or two I want to talk about the privatization policy of the Government. It is more of a political tactic than any common-sense economic strategy. The most charitable thing I could say about it is that it is a hare-brained scheme gone completely out of control. One only needs to reflect on the examples relating to Air Canada and to de Havilland to identify with what I am talking about. At best it is a hare-brained scheme and now it is completely out of control.

One of the reasons advanced for this privatization policy has to do with reducing the deficit. Aren't you glad, Mr. Speaker, that you live in a country where politicians still have those spontaneous, lightning insights? It is marvellous to live in a country where politicians have lightning insights. One day in early April, when the Government was shopping around for a good theme for a Budget, it said "deficit". It discovered the deficit about April 1. It did not know anything about it last November when it was going to build Hibernia and spend more money for the tar sands and have more economic thrust than it could handle.

Mr. Gauthier: How many billions again?

Mr. Simmons: I lost track of it. There were a lot of zeros on the end and a lot of billions up front. Coincidentally, last November there was an election on. However, that aside, last November things were going full speed ahead. All we heard about was economic growth and that things were going to be Utopia tomorrow morning about six o'clock. Then, thank goodness for lightning insights, the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) discovered the deficit. Suddenly we had a deficit. We did not have it last November, but we sure had it come about April 1.

• (1040)

Now, like closing down military bases, like ignoring the fishery, like socking it to the senior citizens, like the new national sales tax, like the new telephone tax and everything else, the Government has to wrestle this deficit to the ground. But who is doing the wrestling? Who is in there punching out for us? It is the crowd that took over the public debt in 1984 when it was $177 billion. What has the Government done in five years? It has taken that deficit from $177 billion to the point at which it is now only $330 billion after five years. It has managed to almost double it in five years.

Now the Government is going to tackle the deficit. I suppose next week it will be telling us how to nail jelly to the ceiling. The Government says that one of its objectives is to reduce the deficit. Let us take that at its face value and accept it as one of the Government's laudable objectives. Let us consider the fall-out from the reality of what is happening with privatization and the thousands of jobs that have been lost.

Mr. McDermid: Where?

Mr. Tremblay (Rosemont): Canadair, for example.

Mr. Simmons: A good example.

Mr. Tremblay (Rosemont): How many jobs?

Mr. Simmons: It is small comfort to the worker who has lost a job elsewhere that someone at Canadair has a job.

Mr. Tremblay (Rosemont): How many thousands of jobs more?

Nordion and Theratronics

Mr. Simmons: I understand the Hon. Member wants to focus only on the script he has been given by the Government. Why does he not do some independent investigating? He will find out that de Havilland cost the people 700 jobs.

Mr. McDermid: There are 1,500 more jobs there right now than there were. Be honest. I don't mind you poking fun at us, but be honest.

Mr. Simmons: What can be more futile than arguing with a bunch of closed minds? The hidden reality is that thousands of jobs have been lost.

Mr. Tremblay (Rosemont): What about Teleglobe?

Mr. Simmons: I will tell him about Teleglobe in a minute. Research and development funds by the millions of dollars are pouring into foreign firms. The de Havilland–Boeing marriage is one example of that. Millions of dollars in research and development are going straight to foreign companies, free of charge. The Member may be able to defend that. I cannot defend it. I will not defend it.

Mr. McDermid: Good. We don't need you defending it.

Mr. Simmons: The poor Minister is in a tender mood this morning. The fact is that the Government's handling of its privatization policy, whatever its objective, has been less than admirable. Part of the reason is that the Minister, who was previously the Minister of Housing and made that brilliant statement about the homeless, is now going to do for privatization what he did for the homeless. That is the threat. This whole policy is being very badly handled.

That is not to say that all the divestitures have not been an absolute boondoggle for the lobby groups. What a happy hunting ground it has been for them.

Let me give an example. Yielding to the admonitions of my good friends opposite, I will talk about the privatization of Terra Nova Telecommunications, a Newfoundland telephone company. That is something I know very well. Until recently, there were two utilities handling telephones in Newfoundland. They were the Newfoundland Telephone Company and Terra Nova Telecommunications, which heretofore had been a federal Government Crown corporation.

Quite recently the Government decided to privatize Terra Nova Telecommunications, which we know as TNT in Newfoundland. The letters have all kinds of connotations in the context of what I will say.

Newfoundland Telephone became the successful bidder and acquired TNT. Do you realize, Mr. Speaker, that along the way a former Member of this House, a very close friend of the Prime Minister, picked up $900,000 in fees? It had nothing at all to do in terms of affecting the legal transaction, the gentleman concerned is a very competent individual. They were straight lobby fees. He got $500,000 for going after the deal and another $400,000 bonus for landing the deal. Privatization has not been without its benefits for some people, but the people at large—

Mr Tremblay (Rosemont): Not for Canadians?

Mr. Simmons: That gentleman is a Canadian. I agree with him, he is a Canadian. I have no argument with that but I say to him that there are a lot of other Canadians who did not quite get $900,000 yet from the Government's privatization deals.

The problem is that the Government has no real master plan for privatization. Today the Government will cure the deficit, tomorrow it will be concerned with efficiency. Every day a new song, every day a new Minister. There is no grand scheme and it is the taxpayers, the people of Canada, who are suffering.

Let us talk about another subject relating to the privatization issue. Of course, Petro–Canada is a Crown corporation, an arm of public policy put in place by the former Prime Minister, Mr. Trudeau, to ensure that the people of this country through their elected representatives had a window on the oil industry.

Mr. McDermid: Some window!

Mr. Hawkes: Very expensive.

Mr. Simmons: We will remember the brave words in 1980 spoken by the former Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). He was going to—

Mr. Tremblay (Rosemont): What a big mess.

Mr. Simmons: He should not talk about the gentleman who is the Secretary of State for External Affairs in that vein. He would not like it. I do not believe he is a mess. I believe he is a respected parliamentarian but I believe he did the wrong thing insofar as the Petro–Canada issue was concerned in 1980. To his credit he realized he did the wrong thing because he changed his mind. The Liberals brought in Petro-Canada. The Tories were going to get rid of it in 1979 and decided it would not—

Mr. Hawkes: Never decided it would be a bad idea. That is not true.

Mr. Simmons: Then they decided to hold on to it. I say to the Government Whip that I am sure they still think it is a brilliant idea.

Mr. Hawkes: It is.

Mr. Simmons: But even the crowd over there are not completely politically stupid.

Mr. Hawkes: We do what is right for Canada, not politically expedient.

Mr. Simmons: They got the message from the public that the public wanted the Government to keep—

Mr. Hawkes: Political expediency versus what is right.

Mr. Simmons: Take your time. I believe it is your maiden speech.

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): You are certainly no maiden.

Mr. Simmons: The Minister knows I would not touch that one. Petro-Canada should stay where it is, in the public domain.

Mr. Hawkes: Government should own service stations. That is a basic principle of the Liberal Party.

Mr. Simmons: The public say so. The people of Canada have said very strongly over the past three or four years that if the Government wants to muck around with the oil industry it should address itself to the four majors which are organized from top to bottom, from oil fields all the way to gas stations, not only upstream but downstream, between Imperial, Texaco, Shell and Petro-Canada.

If the Government wants to do something with Petro-Canada and the other three I mentioned, let it divest itself of some of its downstream holdings so they do not have such a grip on the industry.

I have mentioned how they are looking after lobbyists. They are also looking after the visitors, consultants and lawyers. One thing we can say for a Tory is that a Tory is loyal to his or her friend. Do you realize, Mr. Speaker, that in April of 1986 the following advisers were put in place working in whole or in part on the privatization of Nordion and Theratronics, those two former AECL subsidiaries, until they were handed over to the other Crown corporation for disposal? This is now 1989. I am talking about three years ago. We are now finally getting around to privatizing Nordion and Theratronics. For three years this is what we have had working on the deal: three investment dealers, one legal firm advising AECL on the matter, one management firm and one accounting firm. I shall hate to see the bill when the Government starts to privatize Air Canada or CN, for example.

• (1050)

The question I am sure all Hon. Members have been waiting for—particularly my very attentive friends on the government side of the House—is this: Where does the Liberal Party stand on this question of privatization?

Mr. Thacker: How many Members do you have?

Mr. Tremblay (Rosemont): It depends on who is speaking. You stand anywhere—south, north, east, west.

Mr. Gauthier: You have woken them up now.

Mr. Simmons: I want to apologize. I thought they had their ears closed. I am so sorry. They are listening.

Where does the Liberal Party stand? First, we oppose privatization as a means of reducing the deficit. If there are some companies that ought to go to the private sector, then they ought to be considered individually on their merits as to what is in the public interest.

Mr. McDermid: Firmly on the fence.

Mr. Simmons: This blanket statement that we are going to do it, not because it is the right thing to do for that particular company or for the taxpayers but because it will help us get a few more shekels to bring down the deficit, is absolutely the wrong reason for privatization.

Mr. McDermid: Where did you see that in my speech?

Mr. Simmons: That is a good question. I believe we are having a meeting of minds here this morning. The Minister and I agree on something.

Mr. McDermid: Now he is on our side.

Mr. Simmons: He has now adopted the first tenet of the Liberal philosophy on privatization.

Mr. Thacker: Why didn't you ever privatize one?

Mr. Simmons: We reject those privatizations which lead to service reductions. In this regard I have already mentioned Air Canada where the economy is about to be devastated. I also mentioned the paper mill. I could have mentioned the fishery and the many people who depend on Air Canada to ship fish fresh out of Stephenville. We reject those privatizations where service reductions will take place, where there are job losses or where there is a poor return on investment for the Canadian dollar. Of course, de Havilland is a case in point. We oppose them in those particular cases. As I said a moment ago, each case has to be considered on its merits.

There are so many other things that could be said about this issue. We are talking about two companies that are relatively small in terms of the over-all context of Crown corporations. Nevertheless, this privatization Bill is a symbol of what the Government is up to.

What is it up to? The sad truth is that it does not have any clear objective of what it is up to, except it has an ongoing right wing policy which will continue to devastate all parts of the country. Apart from that, it is a symbol, a symbol that the Government is completely out of whack, out of touch with the people I mentioned in Stephenville, in southwestern Newfoundland, in Sydney, in those areas where privatization is—

Mr. McDermid: You're out of touch.

Mr. Simmons: I am almost out of time, Mr. Speaker. Thank you, Mr. Minister.

Mr. McDermid: Out of touch, not out of time!

Mr. Simmons: It is a symbol that the Government and that Minister is out of touch with some of the realities out there. They are out of touch with the fact that privatization, together with airline deregulation, the closing of post offices, rail line abandonments, the jacking up of taxes, and the job losses in the fishery are causing real havoc with the Canadian people who are not at all excited about the Minister's ideas on privatization.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, it is probably possible to say more about Nordion and Theratronics in the two or three minutes I have until 11 a.m. than the previous speaker has managed to put into 40 minutes.

This sale has some extremely serious problems associated with it. I will try to go through some of these problems after Question Period. However, I think that there are two points to make at this stage.

The first point is that the Government in its approach to privatization reminds me of a family which decides in the summertime that it makes sense to sell off the furnace because, after all, the furnace is not needed at that point in time. That is the philosophy of the Government. We do not need these companies at this stage. Thus, we will sell them off without looking to the future, without looking to the possibilities which have to be considered over the longer run. Various companies, from these companies to Petro-Canada, to Air Canada, have to be kept for the country's future and for the future of us as a nation.

Second, I am surprised, with the philosophy the Government is following, that we have not seen a more imaginative privatization program. I expect a Bill to be before us almost any day which will set out the privatization of the Parliament Buildings, the Supreme Court and all the public buildings right across the country. This would enable us to sell off everything—one great, grand fire sale. We will then face the future without any of the assets which we as a country have built up over years and years.

It is a silly approach on the part of the Government. It is an approach that it will come to regret. I hope it is an approach with which it will not persist in the future.

I see that it is eleven o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will now proceed to Statements by Members with the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

LEGISLATION TO CHANGE SYSTEM OPPOSED

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Conservative Government as part of its right wing agenda introduced legislation to cut massively and to change our unemployment insurance system.

This is the most severe attack on unemployment insurance since its introduction following the great depression of the 1930s. Unemployment insurance was introduced and improved over the years to make sure that Canadian workers have enough money to buy groceries and pay their rent when unemployed against their will.

Under this Bill, Canadian workers will pay more in contributions and get less in coverage. Under this Bill, the Government is cutting its legislative contribution which last year was $2.9 billion.

All this is being done despite the fact that during the last election the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), citing the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), categorically denied that there would be any change or cuts in unemployment insurance. So much for Conservative credibility.

We will oppose these cruel cuts with every means available to us. Hopefully, the Government will start to listen.

THE LATE ETHEL TAYLOR

Mr. Doug Fee (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a woman from Red Deer who contributed very much during her lifetime working tirelessly for the betterment of the people of Red Deer.

Ethel Taylor's political allegiance was to the New Democratic Party, yet she was very popular in traditionally Conservative Red Deer. She was Red Deer's first female city councillor, but she would insist very strongly and very rightly that she was elected for her abilities and her efforts and not for her sex.

I could also imagine Ethel standing beside me insisting that she did not need nor did she want any pious platitudes from a Conservative. She was a person who could work well with others whose political philosophy she did not share. She would work tirelessly to improve services for less advantaged people.

The City of Red Deer has named a street and a bridge in her honour, but her philosophy of caring and sharing and the results of her good work are her most important legacy.

ITALIAN REPUBLIC NATIONAL HOLIDAY

HOMAGE TO CANADIANS OF ITALIAN ORIGIN

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, today is the Italian national holiday and I take this opportunity to draw the attention of Members of this House to the important contribution of Italian Canadians to the growth of our country. Canadians of Italian origin were present in our cultural diversity long before we officially recognized multiculturalism as a fundamental characteristic of Canadian society. One might say that the first to leave his mark was John Cabot, or rather Giovanni Caboto, who in 1497 left England and reached the Atlantic Coast.

Mr. Speaker, the contribution of Italian Canadians has extended to many areas of our national life and reflects their vitality, their dynamism and their creativity. Canada would not have become what it is today without the invaluable contribution of Italian Canadians. They have understood the true meaning of Canadian-style multiculturalism. They have always been able to reconcile their deep attachment to Italy with their boundless loyalty to their adopted country.

Mr. Speaker, I call on all present here to join with Canadians in thanking the Italian community for the leading role it has played in Canadian life.

HOUSING

SUPPLY AND AFFORDABILITY OF STOCK

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Housing (Mr. Redway) continues to say mea culpa when he is asked to address the continuing problems of supply and affordability of housing in Canada.

In St. John's this week he told the Co-operative Housing Foundation that "there is little to suggest you should be happy with me."

In Quebec City, the Canadian Association of Housing and Renewal Officials could only wonder why the rental RRAP program was cut from the Budget when a two-year review had suggested no such possibility.

The Minister's notorious "give me a blast" statement over the Government's lack of action on housing only tells Canadians that the Government has failed.

It has failed to provide a minimal 5,000 units of co-operative housing. It has failed our poorest citizens who require low cost shelter on the rental RRAP program. Because of high interest rates, it has failed young Canadian families looking for affordable housing.

How can the Minister believe that admission of failure excuses the shortcomings of his Departments, himself, and his Government? Since when has mea culpa become a substitute for action?

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

THIRTIETH MEETING IN OTTAWA AND MONTEBELLO

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Your Honour will know of several important and valuable parliamentary associations involving countries around the world, but there is perhaps no more immediately fascinating and crucial few days for Canadian Members of Parliament and Senators to spend than in the Canada-United States interparliamentary group.

I am honoured to be a participant in this the thirtieth meeting of this unique organization. Members on all sides of the Chamber plays host this weekend in Ottawa and Montebello to a distinquished group of American Senators and Congressional representatives.

We will have a lot to talk about informally about an interesting week in both Canadian and American Houses. More important, we will trade views on issues which literally cross party lines and international boundaries: acid rain; the greenhouse effect; transboundary movement of hazardous waste products; east coast fisheries enforcement; bilateral trade issues such as steel; agricultural concerns; energy issues; the future of NATO. The list goes on, as will our very special relationship between Canada and the United States. Welcome, friends.

HIGHWAYS

LINK BETWEEN OTTAWA AND HIGHWAY 401

Mr. Jim Jordan (Leeds—Grenville): Mr. Speaker, the recent acknowledgement by the Ontario Government of the need for a four-lane link between the Nation's Capital and Highway 401 was good news for Eastern Ontario. What many do not realize is that the Ottawa-Hull area is the second largest centre in Ontario and the fourth largest in Canada.

Since the completion of this new road into and from the capital will be of great interest to the federal Government, it seems appropriate—and it is indeed the hope of all municipalities affected by this initiative—that the federal Government will extend co-operation to the provincial and municipal Governments involved in order that we can see this project started and completed in the not too distant future.

THE ELDERLY

THE GOLDEN AGE CLUBS OF THE MONTMORENCY—ORLÉANS RIDING

Mr. Charles DeBlois (Montmorency—Orléans): Mr. Speaker, in many parts of the country and more specifically in the riding of Montmorency—Orléans, this time of the year marks the winding down of activities in senior citizens clubs.

In the past few days, I had the privilege of taking part in a number of special activities organized by senior citizens in my riding. Everywhere I went, I was struck by the way these people enjoyed getting together and sharing some wonderful times.

The Government of Canada takes great pride in helping senior citizens clubs by supporting them financially through the New Horizons Program. This program helps to substantially improve the quality of life of those who built this country. It enables them to strike up new friendships by organizing activities that are a wonderful opportunity for them to get together.

I am delighted to see, Mr. Speaker, that the budgets for this program and for the Seniors Independence Program have remained intact for the new fiscal year, which shows once again how important senior citizens are to this Government.

In concluding, I would like to say to the seniors in the riding of Montmorency—Orléans that I enjoy the times we are able to spend together and that I consider it an honour and a privilege to be invited by those in charge of the senior citizens clubs to take part in their activities.

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS

PROSECUTION OF JOURNALIST

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, the decision by the RCMP to lay charges against journalist Doug Small sets a dangerous precedent that portends the erosion of fundamental democratic freedom.

Such action calls into question the operation of a free press in a democratic society and the public's right to know what its Government is up to.

The Government's actions are designed to label the issue as a wilful criminal act rather than to accept the consequence of its own sloppy security and subsequent lack of accountability.

At the same time that it casts the blame on the media, the Government conveniently hides behind the robes of the courts claiming it cannot comment for fear of prejudicing judicial proceedings.

The truth is that the conviction of Mr. Small would forever compromise the editorial freedom of every journalist in this country.

The charges by the RCMP involve issues fundamental to our Charter of Rights and Freedoms and jeopardize the concept of freedom of the press so crucial to a democratic society.

This is not a minor matter. The very foundation of a free democratic society is at stake.

FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

DOW CORNING CORPORATION RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT PLANT

Mr. David Bjornson (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, the Dow Corning Corporation of Michigan has received the go ahead on building a pilot research and development plant that will eventually employ 30 people. Phase 2 and Phase 3 of this project may eventually employ in the range of 500 people.

Triple S Investments, a federally funded Community Futures organization, was instrumental in attracting and selling Selkirk as a desirable location.

I welcome this opportunity to diversify and strengthen our economy in Manitoba. The Red River Valley looks forward to becoming the silicon valley of the 1990s. I think this is another example of the success of the Free Trade Agreement.

THE HANDICAPPED

THE SECOND NATIONAL ACCESS AWARENESS WEEK

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent): Mr. Speaker, I rise in the House today to urge disabled Canadians to celebrate the second National Access Awareness Week, to be held from June 4 to June 10.

The disabled have long been inconvenienced by lack of access to services and facilities and by various forms of discrimination.

[English]

This week draws attention to other problems that face handicapped Canadians, namely, the fact that this Government is insensitive to the real practical needs of the disabled in Canada.

This Government that has chartered itself as the creator of jobs has failed miserably when it comes to employment opportunities for disabled Canadians. More than 300 handicapped jobs have been lost according to the 1988 annual report on the Employment Equity Act.

SPORTS

CONGRATULATIONS TO KAMLOOPS—HOST TO 1993 CANADA SUMMER GAMES

Mr. Dave Worthy (Cariboo—Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate today the City of Kamloops, British Columbia. This beautiful and hospitable city in the interior of British Columbia has been chosen to host the 1993 Canada Summer Games.

This announcement was made yesterday by the Hon. Minister of State for Youth and Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Charest) and the Hon. Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Oberle).

As well as congratulating the City of Kamloops on its selection, I would like to commend the other cities for the excellence of their bids. The Canada Games Act is a catalyst in civic development and allows a community to show the rest of the country the measure of its hospitality and organizational ability.

I am sure Kamloops will do well on all counts.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

MOTION OF STANDING COMMITTEE OF LABOUR, EMPLOYMENT AND IMMIGRATION

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Mr. Speaker, the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration has passed a motion to send a delegation to various Canadian cities in order that Canadians may better exercise their democratic right to speak to drastic changes to the unemployment insurance system.

It is a modest tour of 13 cities, yet it would serve to let the people of Canada give direction to this Government. Incredibly, the Government is preventing a decision of this important committee from coming before Parliament for approval.

Throughout last year's election campaign, the Progressive Conservatives denied that there would be any changes to this fundamental Canadian institution, so the work of this committee is especially urgent now that they have done an about-face on this important matter.

By this action, whether devious or cowardly, the Government is again denying the people of Canada their legitimate voice on the changes to one of the most significant programs for the protection of Canadians—unemployment insurance.

SENIOR CITIZENS

CELEBRATION OF SENIORS WEEK IN ALBERTA

Mrs. Louise Feltham (Wild Rose): Mr. Speaker, next week is Seniors Week in Alberta. Alberta is a leader in offering seniors the support that lets them live their own life with dignity.

Many Albertans refer to Alberta's seniors as our pioneers. This is a society of men and women who see their older fellow citizens as a strong link in our social fabric. They built Alberta's wealth and developed such resources as agriculture and energy. They built something of value for themselves and for all Canada.

In the next decade and into the next century, the quality of seniors' lives will be a vital issue. We will work with our seniors to find a balanced program of leisure activity to fulfil the needs and wishes of those people.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

CONGRATULATIONS TO ROBERT LESAGE

Mr. Gilles Rocheleau (Hull—Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, our congratulations to Robert Lesage, the new Liberal MPP for the riding of Hull in the Québec National Assembly.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Rocheleau: Mr. Speaker, on May 29, by-elections were held in Québec in the ridings of Hull and Papineau.

Two more victories for the Québec Liberal Party, and I say this with great pride!

The riding of Hull, which I represented in the Québec National Assembly for over seven years and which is part of the federal riding of Hull—Aylmer which I represent in this House, will now be represented by Robert Lesage, and I want to offer him my sincere congratulations on his splendid victory.

Having served the city of Hull, Robert Lesage is well acquainted with the concerns of his riding, and I am sure he is admirably suited to the new responsibilities with which he has just been entrusted.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, he can count on my co-operation in defending vigorously and tirelessly the interests of the population of the Outaouais on issues as important as the completion of Highway 50, the train from Hull to Wakefield and other important projects involving both the federal and the provincial governments.

CONGRATULATIONS TO KAMPLOOPS—HOST TO 1993 CANADA SUMMER GAMES

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the citizens of Kamloops and central British Columbia, indeed all British Columbians and much of Canada, I want to say how much we appreciate the generosity of the Minister who yesterday announced in Kamloops that Kamloops would host the 1993 Summer Games. We appreciate the opportunity.

What I can guarantee the Minister is that by offering Kamloops this opportunity, we will not only make the Minister and the Government of Canada proud but indeed all Canadians proud of the way we are able to host the games.

SENIOR CITIZENS

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF FRED DOUGLAS LODGE

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, last week I was privileged to join the many Winnipegers who honoured the Reverend Dr. Fred Douglas on the occasion of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Fred Douglas Lodge, one of the first housing units in Winnipeg for seniors which he campaigned to build and continues to serve.

I would like to share that honour with my colleagues in the House of Commons. To pay tribute to Rev. Fred Douglas, a man who has an admirable life long record of helping people with problems and concerns, is truly a singular privilege. I am confident that my honourable colleagues in the House will share my wish to thank and salute him for the vision, leadership, and dedication he has shown in his work. He continues to inspire those who know him.

Indeed the greatest tribute we can bestow upon Reverend Fred Douglas is to dedicate ourselves to pursuing the goals to which he has so ably committed himself for more than a quarter century. The Fred Douglas Lodge in my constituency of Winnipeg North stands as a monument of service to all seniors.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

COMMENTS OF PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister, my question for the Deputy Prime Minister is about the Government's handling of the budget leak fiasco.

Yesterday, June 1, in Hansard the Prime Minister in speaking about what he did the evening of April 26 when he learned about the budget leak said:

> I requested immediately that evening that a full Royal Canadian Mounted Police inquiry be launched. Once that inquiry was launched that night there should never have been an attempt by anybody to interfere with the proper conduct of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police inquiry. Everything that was done from that moment on until today has been in keeping with that tradition.

How Canadians can take the words of the Prime Minister at all seriously when we know that the next day after April 26, on April 27 outside the House, the Prime Minister, speaking to reporters and talking about this leak, said: "We are talking about a crime".

How can the words of the Prime Minister be taken seriously when he used that offensive language?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I think the Prime Minister responded to the question in a very fulsome manner. If the Hon. Member is worried about allegations of a crime, he may be interested in what the press were saying on April 28.

For example, The Financial Post said: "Finance Minister Michael Wilson and the Government are victims of a crime". The Toronto Star, on April 28, said: "Wednesday's unprecedented leak in Ottawa appears to have been the result of a criminal penetration of budget security". The Financial Post said: "They are considering several potential criminal code violations, including theft, breech of trust, and a possible breech of the rarely used Official Secrets Act". I could go on.

What the Right. Hon. Prime Minister said yesterday was essentially quoting other news sources which suggested the same thing. As he said, he pointed the finger at no one, but there was obviously an illegal, unauthorized release of the Budget prior to the date on which the Budget was to be presented.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: It was for everyone to see on television. As the Prime Minister indicated, the Government took the only appropriate course of action.

COMMENTS OF MINISTERS OF THE CROWN

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to remind the Deputy Prime Minister that if he quotes editorials and he takes them seriously, let him take the editorial seriously that called for the immediate resignation of the Minister of Finance.

Second, if the Deputy Prime Minister is taking seriously the words of the Prime Minister yesterday that there should be no attempt to interfere with the inquiry and its aftermath, why is he here in this House this minute using the word "illegal" when there has been no finding to that effect by any court?

The record shows that on at least 23 occasions the Prime Minister and other Ministers inside and outside the House referred to the budget leaks in language that showed their conclusion that these leaks involved a crime or criminal act, and I say that this was done while the RCMP investigation was still under way.

How could the Prime Minister and Ministers of the Crown use this language and at the same time say they were not interfering with an RCMP investigation, not prejudicing a fair trial for anybody who might be charged and not at the same time sending a signal to the RCMP about how they wanted the investigation to end up?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the last statement is absolutely and totally false. If he has any evidence to prove that he should stand up and present it to the House now. Otherwise, withdraw.

Mr. Allmand: Answer the question.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, as the RCMP Commissioner said "were you pressured by the Government in this case", his response was "not in the slightest". Why would the Hon. Member want to smear the fine reputation of the RCMP Commissioner? Why would he do that?

In response to the other part of the question with reference to editorials, he knows as I do that editorials change like the wind, as does the position of the Liberal Party.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: I hope this Hon. Member isn't suggesting that the Finance Minister himself released the Budget prematurely.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, Canadians will draw their own conclusions about the language used by the Prime Minister and his Ministers. There is nothing that I have to say further than what is already on the record.

POSITION OF DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question for the Deputy Prime Minister is about the circumstances surrounding the budget leak. I want to draw to his attention that on May 31 in Hansard, the Prime Minister, speaking of when he learned about the Mutual Life aspect of the situation, said:

When the call came to Mr. Gorbet, the Deputy Minister of Finance, he acted—

Then later on he said about Mr. Gorbet, the Deputy Minister of Finance:

I have already answered that the Deputy Minister of Finance received the information in a telephone call, I am informed, sometime in the neighbourhood of 1.30 p.m.

Yet, the President of Mutual Life, Mr. Masterman, said in his statement that the contact was made at approximately 1.30 p.m., April 27, and "after contact was made with the RCMP I called the office of the Minister of Finance in Ottawa and gave the same information to a member of the Minister's staff"; not the Deputy Minister of Finance, Mr. Gorbet, but a member of the Minister's staff.

I want the Deputy Prime Minister to explain this discrepancy. Who got the call and what did he do with it?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member would go back over Hansard he would find at pages 2088, 2089, 2090, 2094, 2143, 2144, 2200, and 2203 where those questions have been answered.

Some Hon. Members: Not true.

Mr. Mazankowski: What I find incredible—and I am sure Canadians are finding it somewhat incredible—is the double standard of the Liberal Party.

When they were in office they sanctioned the seizure of CBC interviews by the RCMP back in March, 1978. They sanctioned the raiding of the offices of The Toronto Sun in that same period of time, and the Justice Minister charged The Sun and two news executives as reported in The Globe and Mail on March 22, 1978. They ran absolutely roughshod over freedom of the press, and now they stand up here and purport to be the defenders.

RECEIPT OF TELEPHONE CALL

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, the Deputy Prime Minister is falling on his own sword. If he is suggesting that previous Governments sanctioned certain actions, then he is admitting today that this Government has sanctioned a charge against a reporter of Global News.

The Prime Minister has tried to explain away the one and a half to two hour gap in information of a second budget leak being conveyed to senior Ministers, including to the Prime Minister, by suggesting that the matter was being handled by "distinguished and non-partisan public servants" for that period of time on April 27.

My question to the Deputy Prime Minister is straightforward. Given that Mary McLaughlin, the Vice-President of Public Affairs at Mutual Life, confirmed in a telephone call with me one hour ago that Mr. Masterman, President of Mutual Life, conveyed news of the second budget leak, not as suggested by the Prime Minister to Mr. Fred Gorbet, the Deputy Minister of Finance, but rather to a member of the Minister of Finance's personal staff, will the Deputy Prime Minister now answer, as was asked by the Liberal House Leader, who in the office of the Minister of Finance received that call from Mr. Masterman? We now know it has been confirmed one hour ago that it was not Fred Gorbet, the Deputy Finance Minister. Who was it?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Government was advised and the Prime Minister was advised through the offices of the Clerk of the Privy Council as I was. That is a matter of public record. Who received the initial call and what discussions took place are really immaterial—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: —because the decision as to how to handle the Budget was taken the night before.

The Budget was released prematurely on Wednesday, April 26 at 10 or 10.30 p.m. because of the leak that was obvious. Anything that took place after that with regard to potential leaks or related leaks, suggestions, or allegations all became a law enforcement matter. Those things were turned over to the RCMP. We were satisfied that the actions taken by the public servants and by members of the Finance Minister's office were appropriate. The action that we took is the only course of action that could be followed.

The Hon. Member may disagree but that course was decided upon on Wednesday, April 26.

INFORMATION WITHIN KNOWLEDGE OF DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister and indeed the Deputy Prime Minister have had no hesitation in talking about the actions of Mr. Gorbet, a senior civil servant, and Mr. Tellier, a senior civil servant. They have had no trouble making the case that you can rest assured that nothing fishy was going on for 90 minutes, or for two hours in the case of the Prime Minister, because "non-partisan senior distinguished public servants" were handling the whole matter. I am quoting the Prime Minister.

Why then does Mutual Life this morning refuse to name the individual in the office of the Minister of Finance who took the call from Mr. Masterman?

Why does the Deputy Prime Minister, when asked a very straightforward question both by the Liberal House Leader and again by myself, refuse to name the political staff member in the office of the Minister of Finance who had this information and tell us what that individual did with the information?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, what we have here is—

Mr. Tobin: Is a cover-up.

Mr. Mazankowski: —is an example of the Liberals attempting to cast aspersions or trying to cast aspersions—

Some Hon. Members: Give us a name.

Mr. Mazankowski: —against public servants. They are trying to smear the RCMP, and now they are trying to smear members of the Finance Minister's staff. You have struck out on the public servants, you have struck out on the RCMP, and you are going to strike out on this one, too.

POSITION OF MR. RUTHERFORD

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Yesterday I asked the Minister of Justice about an alleged report that his Associate Deputy Minister had phoned the Attorney General's department in Toronto allegedly on behalf of the Ministry of Finance.

I had wanted to know if this were true. In particular, I wanted to know the nature of the conversation to see if Mr. Rutherford was the person who had recommended that criminal charges be laid.

In a two-page reply I received from the Minister in my office this morning, the Minister confirmed that it was Mr. Rutherford who initiated the conversation with Toronto, but he does not answer the other questions.

Since the Prime Minister of Canada, the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs have all publicly prejudged the case by saying a criminal act had taken place, surely the people of Canada have a right to know if in that telephone conversation Mr. Rutherford claimed he was acting on behalf of the Ministry of Finance and if he was the one who recommended that criminal charges be laid.

• (1130)

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would have thought my hon. friend might have read the memo a little more carefully.

Mr. Broadbent: I did.

Mr. Lewis: First, yesterday's issue was, who initiated the call, the inference being that Justice initiated the call in order to "intervene".

My hon. friend knows very well that the aide-mémoire prepared by the Department of Justice stated that when the RCMP consulted with the Ontario provincial Attorney General's Office about the charges, they were advised—and here it is—that during these consultations it was agreed that there should be consultations on certain matters between the Ontario Crown law officers and the Justice Department. The RCMP advised the Associate Deputy Minister of the issues that required direct discussion between the Department of Justice and the Ontario Crown officers. Mr. Rutherford called the Crown law officers on May 19 to arrange a meeting.

It is very clear that the call from Mr. Rutherford to the Ontario law officers came about at the request of the RCMP.

INTERPRETATION OF DOCUMENT—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I read the Minister's letter and the aide-mémoire that he sent with care. I say to the Minister that he has said what his conclusion was, but I tell him that a careful reading of the document does not make it clear that the content of the conversation that took place was as a result of the request of the RCMP. Quite the contrary. In his own covering letter, he states that it had been agreed that there should be direct consultations with the Ontario Crown law officers. It does not say who was party to that agreement.

Mr. Lewis: It does.

Mr. Broadbent: We can both interpret the document, and I am not accusing the Government, in this instance, of bad faith. The Minister replied directly. I want to get the answer from the Minister.

In the call that Mr. Rutherford made to Toronto, did he or did he not claim that he was acting on behalf of the Ministry of Finance? Second, did he or did he not urge that criminal charges be laid?

I want no other particular information. They are the facts that are important to know. Three leading Ministers of the Crown have already publicly stated that a crime has taken place. I believe that is prejudging. I hope that no senior official of the Government was taking follow-up action that would compound this injustice. Is it yes or no?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I want to reiterate what is in the aide-mémoire in respect of my hon. friend's request yesterday.

During these consultations it was agreed there should be consultations, that is, consultations between the RCMP and the Ontario Crown law officers. It was agreed that there should be consultations on certain matters between the Ontario Crown law officers and the Justice Department.

The RCMP advised the Associate Deputy Minister of the issues that required direct discussion between the Department of Justice and the Ontario Crown law officers. Mr. Rutherford then called the Ontario Crown.

Mr. Gauthier: And said what?

Mr. Lewis: In respect to the question as to whether or not Mr. Rutherford told the Ontario Crown Attorney's office that he represented the Department of Finance, I have checked and I am advised that Mr. Rutherford has no recollection of saying that. However, that is a red herring because the consultations were entirely normal. The RCMP has confirmed that.

INFORMATION SOUGHT ABOUT RECOMMENDATION MADE BY SENIOR OFFICIAL—GOVERNMENT DENIES INTERFERENCE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister also knows that he did not answer the second part of the question about whether Mr. Rutherford recommended that criminal charges be laid. That surely is very pertinent to an extraordinary circumstance, and the whole country knows that in the history of our country we have not had Canadians accused of the type of criminal offences that have followed these particular Budget leaks. We have a very special circumstance. It may not be of particular concern to certain Ministers of the Crown, but Canadians are concerned with civil liberties and fundamental rights and honesty from the Government.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I would like to repeat quite clearly: Will the Minister of Justice, who responded with this aide-mémoire, make it quite clear to the House whether the Government, whether this senior official suggested to his counterpart in the Ontario Government that he should take official action under the Criminal Code against these people?

[English]

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, let us go back to the aide-mémoire that I offered to my hon. friend today in writing in order that he would not have these problems.

Ultimately, advice was given to the RCMP by Ontario Crown law officers and the RCMP laid the charges that are now before the courts. Or one can take the quote from Mr. Inkster who stated that he did reveal that he had met with Rutherford to discuss the questions of possible charges under the Official Secrets Act, a meeting that he said was just normal advice to the police from government lawyers.

An Hon. Member: Answer the question, Doug.

Mr. Lewis: I am answering the question. The question was, was there any interference? There was none.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST ALLEGED—GOVERNMENT'S RESPONSE

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. The Minister has admitted there were normal discussions between his Department and the RCMP. Given that an Associate Deputy Minister of Justice identified himself as counsel for the Department of Finance, and given that on April 27 at page 1005 of Hansard the Minister of Finance stated: "The premature release of details of the Budget appears to have resulted from a breach of trust, a wilful criminal act against which there can be no certain security", would not the Minister of Justice agree that the Associate Deputy Minister, Mr. Rutherford, was in a gross conflict of interest in conducting these so–called normal discussions?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I reiterate what I said to my hon. friend, the Leader of the New Democratic Party, that we checked and Mr. Rutherford has no recollection of suggesting that he was acting on behalf of the Department of Finance.

These are normal consultations which take place between the RCMP and the Ministry of Justice. The Commissioner of the RCMP has confirmed that. I do not know what more we can do except send aide–mémoires which confirm it from our side and have the Commissioner of the RCMP confirm it too.

CONSULTATION BETWEEN RCMP AND OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY GENERAL QUESTIONED—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I suggest perhaps the Department of Justice needs medical advice on its recurring amnesia.

In my personal experience as a Crown prosecutor, I have never heard that a senior Associate Deputy Minister of Justice would sit down with the RCMP to discuss the alleged possession of a stolen document worth three cents.

What was the nature of the advice that Mr. Rutherford offered the RCMP?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the consultations between the Attorney General's officials and the RCMP were entirely normal under the circumstances.

Mr. Tobin: What did Rutherford say?

Ms. Clancy: Define "normal".

Mr. Lewis: Define "normal"?

Ms. Clancy: What is normal?

Mr. Lewis: I won't touch that.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

NEED FOR SECRECY INQUIRED INTO—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister, and it also concerns the second Budget leak.

For 28 days the Government of Canada hid the truth about the Mutual Life Budget leak from Parliament. Once we did find out about the leak, the Government then tried to justify its behaviour by claiming that it had to hide this information in order to protect an RCMP investigation.

How can the Deputy Prime Minister pretend that the RCMP made them do this when yesterday the Solicitor General confessed, before a committee, that he had never even bothered to ask the RCMP whether or not this information should be made public?

Is it not obvious that the only person who was going to be protected by this was the hide of the Minister of Finance who was in deep, deep trouble?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the investigation started Wednesday evening. It was our responsibility to turn over all information to the RCMP. We did not interfere with the investigation in any way. My friend finds it unfortunate that that is confirmed by the Commissioner of the RCMP.

An Hon. Member: We don't believe it.

Mr. Lewis: The matter was a law–enforcement matter from the very start on Wednesday night. We kept it that way.

• (1140)

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I find it unusual that the Minister would make that claim of the Government not interfering with the RCMP investigation when there are no less than 27 different references by members of the Government to calling the incidents in question a criminal offence.

THE SECOND BUDGET LEAK—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): I would like to direct my supplementary to the Deputy Prime Minister. We have now just heard, and we all know that yesterday, when the Solicitor General appeared before a parliamentary committee, he admitted he never consulted the RCMP to ask whether he should or should not reveal the fact that there had been a second Budget leak, a major leak. Will the Deputy Prime Minister now admit what he should have said all along, that the facts are as follows: Wasn't the Conservative Government trying to save the hide of its Minister of Finance instead of protecting the RCMP investigation?

[English]

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, my friend refers to allegations that there was pressure put on the RCMP. Mr. Inkster has made it very clear that there was no pressure on the RCMP.

Mr. Boudria: I never said that.

Mr. Lewis: It has been very clear that this was a law enforcement matter from the start. That is where it should remain.

CLARIFICATION OF QUESTION—MINISTER'S RESPONSE

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, it seems the Minister of Justice is having difficulty with numerous questions that have been asked today on this matter. He seems to be having difficulty understanding the question in either French or English.

Since the Prime Minister, the Deputy Prime Minister, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs have already prejudged the decision, could the Minister of Justice very simply answer: Did Mr. Rutherford advise the RCMP on how to proceed?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): No.

ADVICE GIVEN TO ONTARIO LAW OFFICERS QUESTIONED—MINISTER CITES AIDE MÉMOIRE

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister if the law officers of Ontario indeed were advised how to proceed?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, let us go back to the aide-mémoire—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Yes or no?

Mr. Lewis: Yesterday when I did not have the information I offered to provide it to the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party. I provided it. It is too darned bad you do not have a Xerox machine in your office. You could give it to your colleague. And I could show you how to work it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh,oh!

Mr. Lewis: It might take some time.

The RCMP did the investigation. They went to the Ontario Crown officers to discuss the charges that were going to be laid because the carriage of the action would be by the Ontario law officers.

There were some consultations required, as it is laid out in the aide-mémoire, with the Department of Justice officials. Mr. Rutherford called in response to that request and then the RCMP laid the charges.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN THE GALLERY OF THE HONOURABLE SAM JOHNSTON, SPEAKER OF LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF YUKON TERRITORY

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw to the attention of Members the presence in the gallery of the Hon. Sam Johnston, Speaker of the Legislative Assembly of Yukon Territory.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

PRESENCE IN THE GALLERY OF DELEGATION FROM CANADA-USA INTER-PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw to the attention of Members the presence in the gallery of a delegation from the Canada-USA Inter-Parliamentary Association led by Senators Richard Bryan and Ted Stevens, Co-Leaders of the U.S. Senate Delegation and Congressman Sam Gejdenson, Co-Leader of the U.S. House of Representatives Delegation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

INVESTIGATION OF POSSIBLE PROFITEERING FOLLOWING MUTUAL LIFE BUDGET LEAK

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. The June 5 issue of Maclean's Magazine reports a spokesman of the Toronto stock exchange as saying that even though they had been asked to conduct an investigation into possible profiteering, they knew nothing of a second Budget leak to an $11 billion financial institution for 28 days. Yet the Solicitor General has continually told the House that there was no evidence of illegal profiteering.

Why was this critical and crucial piece of information, the leak to the $11 billion financial institution, withheld from the stock exchange officials conducting this investigation?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, When the Budget leak became public, the RCMP was called in and asked to investigate all matters in relation to the Budget leak. The investigation was carried out by the RCMP without any interference vis-à-vis that, and I have no knowledge of what my hon. friend refers to. I am not suggesting it is wrong, but I am saying that it was up to the RCMP to conduct the investigation. It was a law enforcement matter and that is the way it has been treated.

Ms. Callbeck: Mr. Speaker, it almost appears that the Government is more interested in concealing evidence of profiteering than in revealing it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dick: Give us some evidence.

STOCK EXCHANGE OFFICIALS NOT ADVISED OF MUTUAL LIFE LEAK—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. What kind of investigation is the Government conducting when officials at the stock exchange were kept in the dark for 28 days about this second budget leak? Does the Government have an obsession with secrecy?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, this Government came to the House with the Budget as soon as it was absolutely possible—

Mr. Tobin: Ten to six.

Mr. Duhamel: Ten to six.

Mr. Lewis: —in an effort to make it public. This Government has nothing to hide. In fact, it has been very clear that this Government is not conducting the investigation. The RCMP is conducting the investigation.

Mr. Gauthier: Cover-up.

Mr. Lewis: Some cover-up. We went public with it and we brought in the RCMP.

POSSIBILITY BENEFITING FROM BUDGET LEAKS—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, on April 27, the Prime Minister told us—and I would ask the Minister of Justice to go back to Hansard for April 27:

> The RCMP is conducting a full investigation. That investigation extends to the actions of presumably all of those involved in that part of it, and also extends to the stock exchanges to ascertain if anybody has profited in any way from any kind of information.

[English]

My question is for the Minister of Justice in light of what we now see in Maclean's Magazine. As far as the profiteering investigation is concerned, Maclean's has learned that the RCMP, while asking the Canadian stock exchanges to review records of stock trades that might have been made on the basis of the first Budget leak, did not even inform them of the second leak. As a result, spokesmen for the exchange said that they may have missed evidence of profit making by specific individuals or companies.

[Translation]

How can the Government continue today, on June 2, to maintain that no one profited from the leaks of this Budget? And how can the Prime Minister continue to keep the Minister of Finance, who has failed in his parliamentary duties?

[English]

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I compliment my hon. friend. He has it right, the RCMP is conducting the investigation. It is not a government investigation as alleged by his colleague. It is a law enforcement matter. It has been from the start. We have left it that way.

It really burns my friends opposite that we did not interfere. It really bothers you, doesn't it? It really bothers you that we did not interfere. We did not interfere then and we are not going to interfere now.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I would accept the word of the Minister of Justice except for what took place yesterday. We see the headlines: "Tories acted alone in keeping second leak secret", said the Solicitor General. Another states: "Mountie's testimony cut short by Minister". Is the RCMP doing its investigation on its own without any direct information and direct orders given by the Solicitor General? If it is the truth, then I would like the Minister of Justice to tell us today if he is sure, as the Solicitor General was a few weeks ago, that indeed no one profited from these leaks of the Budget.

• (1150)

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think when it comes to questioning pressure from this Government I can do no more than go back to the Commissioner of the RCMP who very clearly stated to the question: "Were you pressured by the Government in this case?" "Not in the slightest".

With respect to profit-taking as a result of the Budget leak, we will have to await the final report of the RCMP in this matter—

Mr. Tobin: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: The Hon. Member may not like it. He may want to have several reports so he can keep this up.

Mr. Tobin: That is different from the Solicitor General.

Mr. Lewis: One of these days Members opposite will really have to get back to what is bothering the nation.

Ms. Clancy: Yes, your terrible Budget.

Mr. Lewis: There are the fish problems on the East Coast, defence bases closing, forestry problems. One of these days they will have to go home to face the news.

HOUSING

AFFORDABLE HOUSING ON DOWNSVIEW LANDS

Ms. Barbara Greene (Don Valley North): Mr. Speaker, the first priority of concern for my riding is not old leaks that have been fixed, or a matter that is in the hands of the police or before the courts. My first concern is housing. I would like to ask the Minister of State for Housing a question concerning the Downsview Airport lands.

What is the Minister doing to ensure that the housing on the recently released federal lands at Downsview Airport is accessible to families with average incomes of $33,000 to $48,000, comparable to those in the surrounding neighbourhoods who currently enjoy housing and, second, does not result in excessive profits to developers and real estate speculators? Further, what does the Minister think of the proposal put forward by the Hon. Member for York Centre to sell all of Downsview Airport for affordable housing?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member's question certainly targets in on the real concerns of Canadians.

With respect to the Downsview Air Base property that has been released to Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation, CMHC is developing that property as the prime developer. We are not selling it off to private interests but keeping it ourselves in order to prepare and to put in place a development plan. In that way we can help to ensure that it will be housing that is affordable.

If we can work out the proper plan with the City of North York, the municipality that is involved, to put in place density on that site that will create housing that is affordable, then that is the real solution.

The suggestion that was made some time ago by the Hon. Member for York Centre that the property be sold off for the highest price would only create million-dollar houses on that site. It would not create affordable houses, the kind the Hon. Member and myself want to see there.

THE BUDGET

FOLLOW-UP QUESTION ON INFORMATION AVAILABLE TO STOCK EXCHANGES – RCMP INVESTIGATION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice. It is a follow-up to the questions asked by the Hon. Member from Papineau.

We have now been told that the four Canadian stock exchanges were not notified by the RCMP of the leak to Mutual Life Insurance. In fact, they had not even heard about it until they heard about it from the news media.

On May 18 in the House, the Solicitor General said: "—from the outset, the investigation—included the situation that was in the news yesterday", namely, the Mutual leaks. How can the Solicitor General say on May 18, on the one hand, that the investigation included Mutual Life from the beginning, while on the other hand the stock exchanges were not notified until they heard about the Mutual leak in the news media?

Can the Minister confirm in the House today that, indeed, the RCMP did not notify the stock exchanges? Can he tell the House why that was not done?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am in a position to confirm what my hon. friend has already alluded to, and that is this. It became obvious on the Wednesday night that the RCMP should be called in. They were called in. The next day, as has been mentioned several times, there was a call from Mutual Life to the Minister of Finance in his office.

Mr. Ouellet: At what time?

Mr. Lewis: It is my understanding that that was immediately confirmed to the RCMP. They were brought in on the fact that Mutual Life had notified them and that they had the document.

As to what the RCMP did with that information, I am not privy to that information as Attorney General. That is a matter for the RCMP investigation.

REFERENCE MADE TO SOLICITOR GENERAL'S STATEMENTS – ASSURANCES SOUGHT AS TO PROFIT-TAKING

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has not answered the question. It was the Solicitor General himself who said in the House that the investigation included the facts that were "in the news yesterday", namely, the Mutual leak. He also said in the House that there had been no indication of any profiteering.

I wish to ask the Minister of Justice this. How could the Solicitor General say that there had been no indication of any profiteering when the four stock exchanges had not even been notified by the RCMP of the leak from Mutual Life?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think that is a question that should be answered by the Solicitor General. I am acting on his behalf today.

I have advised my friend, and he knows very well, that the RCMP called him on Wednesday evening, that the information that came from the office of the Minister of Finance was turned over to the RCMP. We have not interfered with that investigation. It is up to the RCMP to continue its investigation. If it finds there was illegal profit taking as a result of the Budget leak, it is up to them to consult and to lay charges.

PRACTICE OF SENIOR OFFICIALS – GOVERNMENT REITERATES TIMING OF EVENTS

Mr. Ronald J. Duhamel (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I was an Assistant Deputy Minister and a Deputy Minister in two different government administrations. I know that it is standard practice to inform the Minister immediately of any major problem—wherever the Minister happens to be—which has occurred in the Department. If I had not, I would have been fired.

I personally believe that the senior civil servants immediately informed the Prime Minister and his senior Ministers of the Mutual Life leak. I cannot believe otherwise.

Mr. Charest: What is this? What else do you believe?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member may believe a lot of things. However, the Hon. Member is rising to put a question. I would ask him to put his question.

Mr. Duhamel: Mr. Speaker, does the Prime Minister think that Canadians believe that this did not happen, that senior officials did not inform Ministers immediately upon receiving the call?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has stated in this House when he learned of the information that my friend asks about. The Minister of Finance has stated in this House when he learned of the information that my hon. friend asks about. We have been very forthright on that.

I think it is a shame that we have these allegations of wrongdoing about respected public servants who cannot come in here to defend themselves.

Mr. Allmand: Let them come in.

SENIOR OFFICIALS' ROLES

Mr. Ronald J. Duhamel (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. I just want to say that there was no allegation about the Public Service. Is the Prime Minister using senior officials to protect himself and his Ministers and give himself credibility? Are these senior officials becoming scapegoats for the Government's incompetence in this matter?

[English]

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I think that is another very unfair and inappropriate allegation to make either of the Prime Minister or of senior Public Servants.

Mr. Duhamel: It is a question. Answer the question.

Mr. Kempling: It is a stupid question.

Mr. Duhamel: I wish you could come up with one that is half as good.

Mr. Lewis: We did. That is why you are in that position.

Mr. Duhamel: Not for long.

INFLUENCE OF MINISTERIAL COMMENTS—GOVERNMENT'S POSITION

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice.

On no fewer than 27 occasions since the first Budget leak was revealed the Prime Minister, the Deputy Prime Minister, the Minister of Finance, Minister of Justice, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs referred to the leak as a crime, a theft, a sabotage, and a criminal act.

Why for 37 days did the Prime Minister and members of the senior front bench prejudice the rights of Canadians? Why? Is saving the skin of the Minister of Finance more important than protecting the civil liberties of all Canadians?

• (1200)

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure there was a question there. Let me be very, very clear that there was an investigation going on, that there were no comments made which impinged on that investigation, and that there are going to be no comments made which impinge or interfere with a fair trial.

Mr. Speaker: Given the time I am going to proceed with a single question from the Hon. Member for Windsor—Lake St. Clair.

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS

THE SMALL AFFAIR—MINISTER OF JUSTICE'S POSITION

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. Since freedom of the press is explicitly guaranteed by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms; since some Conservative Members and the Prime Minister himself made statements yesterday on the importance of freedom of the press, is the Minister of Justice prepared to join with the leaders of the opposition parties and prepare a motion for adoption by the House that would express our concern about the threats to freedom of the press resulting from the charges laid against journalist Doug Small?

[English]

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend referred to the guarantee of freedom of the press. There is another guarantee which is just as important, and that is, the freedom to have a trial and not have any interference in it.

My hon. friend knows very well that I am not in a position, nor is anybody in this House either in answering questions or making allegations. No one should interfere with that right to a fair trial.

PRIVILEGE

PROBLEMS WITH SOUND SYSTEM IN CHAMBER

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): I am rising on a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, because it became evident to me during the course of the Question Period that there may be some problems with the sound system in this Chamber which make it very difficult for some of us as Members to participate fully in carrying out our duties.

I note that in response to the question which was put to the Deputy Prime Minister as to who in the Minister of Finance's office received the call from Mr. Masterman, the Deputy Prime Minister stood in his place and said that he had answered that question on numerous occasions and proceeded then to say what they were. Members behind him were nodding, as if they had also heard the answer.

However, I have been very attentive to the course of debates over the past several weeks, with my ear-plug in, and I have yet to find out who is that person. I look in Hansard and I see that Hansard was unable to hear it as well. I am wondering—

Mr. Speaker: I do not know if any comment is necessary. It is not a question of privilege.

[Translation]

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, without wishing to comment on what the Hon. Member just said,—that is not why I rose in my seat—perhaps I may recall one of our local sayings, which people use a lot where I come from. They say you can't put a gallon in a quart, and I think that aptly illustrates the problem facing the Hon. Member.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, since stating our intentions regarding upcoming government business yesterday afternoon, I understand that there have been discussions among the Parties, with the result that changes have been made to accommodate both official critics and Ministers of the Government.

Today, as far as government business is concerned, we shall continue second reading consideration of Bill C-13, the Nordion Bill, with Bill C-16, the space Bill as this afternoon's back-up.

On Monday, we shall commence second reading of both Bill C-19 and Bill C-4, the two energy Bills. At 3 p.m. we will commence second reading of Bill C-17, the customs Bill. The back-up Bill for Monday will be Bill C-9, the bank charges Bill.

On Tuesday, at 11 a.m., we shall commence second reading of Bill C-20, the excise tax Bill and at 3 p.m. we shall commence second reading of Bill C-21, the UI Bill.

On Wednesday, we shall resume second reading consideration of Bill C-21, the UI Bill.

I understand that this is in common agreement with both opposition Parties.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I will say that, yes, there have been extensive negotiations among the Parties.

I want to say that we appreciate this way of doing business, to ensure that we try to convenience as much as possible the Ministers who are expected to be here for these various Bills, as well as the critics. We have enjoyed the negotiation process to make the business of the House go smoothly all next week, hopefully.

WORLD WAR II

FORTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF D-DAY

Hon. Gerald S. Merrithew (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour as Minister of Veterans Affairs to remind the House, and indeed all Canadians, that next Tuesday, June 6, is the forty-fifth anniversary of one of the greatest days in the history of international freedom. D-Day was also one of the finest days in the history of the Canadian military.

All three of our Services were in action on June 6, 1944, the momentus day that spelled the beginning of the end for Hitler and the evil he represented.

Our sailors provided covering fire and manned some of the landing craft. Our airmen helped to keep the skies free of enemy aircraft. More than 15,000 Canadians landed on Normandy beaches to begin the hard fight of delivering millions of Europeans from captivity in their own country.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it will be my privilege to accompany Canadian veterans back to Normandy for this special D-Day anniversary. Together, we will be holding ceremonies at the many memorials and cemeteries that tell of the sacrifice for freedom.

[English]

Some 359 Canadians were killed on D-Day and another 715 wounded. Thousands more were killed in the subsequent Normandy campaign.

Next Tuesday let all of us pause in our normal routines and give thought to those Canadians who were called upon to put their lives on the line so that others might be free.

They did us very proud indeed 45 years ago on D-Day. Let us never lose our pride in them.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, June 6 indeed marks the day 45 years ago when the greatest assembly of soldiers, sailors, and airmen, attended by equally courageous nurses, doctors, medics, clergy, and many other support groups assailed the beaches of Normandy. They went, Sir, to bring to an end the awful carnage wrought by a maniacal madman. It was the greatest congregation of military might ever assembled. The training, the planning, the awesome courage of these men and women, effected the beginning of the end of Hitler's madness and carnage.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, many of those brave soldiers were Canadians, and Canadians they remain. The sacrifices they made so unstintingly, sometimes at the cost of their own life, are the price we have to pay to guarantee and preserve our freedom. I think it is entirely appropriate that this House should take a moment to commemorate and pay tribute to these brave and generous Canadians.

[English]

To fail to remember the truly important contribution to democracy of Canadians,to fail to remember them, truly means their ultimate sacrifice was indeed in vain, for in forgetting we condemn ourselves and future generations to its repetition.

These Canadians died so that we might have more abundant freedom and life. Let us never forget that.

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a privilege to respond on behalf of my colleagues to the Minister's comments.

June 6, 1944 was indeed an important day for world peace. The majority of Canadians today, especially those born since World War II, often take our freedoms for granted. That freedom was fought for and it exacted a heavy price. Thousands of our Canadian soldiers died or were injured so that the western world could continue as a democratic society.

• (1210)

The Canadians we are commemorating next Tuesday fought for the principle of peace and for the principle of social justice. Even today our fight for world peace continues as we emerge from the bellicose cold war rhetoric of the nuclear superpowers. The current movement today toward bilateral nuclear disarmament is encouraging and must be continued.

Perhaps the most significant way that we as Canadians can honour our veterans is to in fact honour the cornerstone of freedom for which they fought to preserve. The purpose of their sacrifice was to ensure a world that would remain a free and open society of humankind. We as Canadians are committed to that cause and will continue today through our international efforts hopefully and finally to turn our weapons into ploughshares.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

MEASURE TO CHANGE NAME OF ELECTORAL RIDING OF TÉMISCAMINGUE

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-251, an Act to change the name of the electoral district of Témiscamingue.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Desjardins: Mr. Speaker, it is an honour and a privilege to table in this House a Bill aimed at changing the name of the electoral district of Témiscamingue.

Mr. Speaker, for the sake of fairness and to provide more equitable representation of all my constituents, I suggest changing the name of Témiscamingue to Témiscabitibi.

The new name, Mr. Speaker, is based on geographical and historical considerations.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the Bill be read the second time? At the next sitting off the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

HUMAN RIGHTS AND THE STATUS OF DISABLED PERSONS

AUTHORIZATION FOR STANDING COMMITTEE TO TRAVEL

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): I move:

That the Standing Committee on Human Rights and the Status of Disabled Persons be authorized to travel to Toronto for June 20, 1989 to hold hearings in relation to disabled persons:

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe a standing committee has been seeking authorization to travel and to hold hearings into the changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act, that is, the Bill that is presently before the House. I cannot recall whether that request has come to the floor yet. I wonder if the Deputy House Leader could remind me.

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, I am informed by my colleague from Calgary West, who is also the Government Whip, that apparently there is some study of the budgets relating to travel under way now. If I understand correctly, once those issues and discussions have been held, these questions will be dealt with.

MILITARIZATION OF CANADIAN ECONOMY

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions today on behalf of a number of people from Kamloops, British Columbia.

In the first petition the petitioners point out their concern about the growing militarization of the Canadian economy, particularly the fact that Canada continues to export military and paramilitary equipment to countries known for their violation of human rights.

They are fundamentally asking for the Government of Canada to change this course of action to restrict arms sales to these kinds of countries and to reconsider the continuing militarization of our economy.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, the second petition concerns VIA Rail, again on behalf of a number of people from Kamloops, British Columbia who are of the opinion that the Government is destined to eliminate VIA Rail service in the country.

Certainly by the comments we recognize that VIA Rail will have serious curtailment of their passenger service. They are simply calling upon Parliament to maintain, improve, and modernize VIA Rail. In other words they are asking for it to be given the necessary resources to enable VIA to fulfil its promise of improved passenger rail service in Canada.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton Southeast): Mr. Speaker, as you know Members of Parliament from across Canada are submitting petitions with respect to the extradition laws of Canada.

I have the honour today, under the provisions of Standing Order 36, to present one with 1,323 signatures. It calls for the Government of Canada to revise its extradition laws in order that we can prevent Canada from becoming a safe haven for dangerous individuals from other countries. I have a feeling that most people who signed it have in mind people like Charles Ng.

I therefore would submit this petition. I might note that it is signed by individuals from addresses including the following: Peterborough, Westlock, Alberta, Ottawa, Taber, Toronto, Calgary, High Level, Drumheller, Regina, Estevan, Maple Creek, Saskatchewan, Didsbury, Alberta, Vanier, Gatineau, Nepean, St. Leonard, Hull, Manotick, Halifax, and Medicine Hat.

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to present, pursuant to Standing Order 36, a petition on behalf of residents of Scarborough, Pickering, Cobourg, Keswick, Mount Albert, Uxbridge, Markham, Thornhill, and Ajax.

The petitioners state that there are those accused of heinous crimes in other countries who are entering Canada as a form of obtaining sanctuary. The petitioners believe that the current due process and the incarceration of some of these individuals for crimes committed in Canada allow them possibly to escape justice in the country in which they are accused of other crimes.

Therefore the petitioners call upon the Government of Canada to revise the laws relating to extradition to allow the Minister of Justice to order the extradition of alleged or convicted criminals after their apprehension in Canada.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Hon. Jean Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons)): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

POINT OF ORDER

MR. GAUTHIER – REQUEST THAT THE ORDER PAPER AND NOTICE PAPER BE CORRECTED

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I simply want to ask the House to correct the Order Paper and Notice Paper under the item: Private Members' Business.

[English]

Your Honour will find that there was a draw yesterday for Private Members' Bills and Motions. I am advised by the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Mrs. Catterall) that Motion No. 485, which is recorded at page 17, is indeed not her motion and that there possibly could be an error as to who is the godfather or godmother of that particular motion.

I am also informed that a motion ofthe Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) was also chosen yesterday but that motion had already been disposed of.

I just wondered if we could have some correction made to the records to make sure that indeed when these draws are made the House is informed.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair was aware of the problem with respect to the motion of Mr. Allmand, but was not aware there was also a problem with Mrs. Catterall's motion. We will look into this.

I wish to inform the House that as a result of the Minister's statement, Government Orders' will be extended by six minutes.

Consequently, the hour set aside for Private Members' Business will begin at 2.06 p.m.

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. McDermid that Bill C-13, an Act to authorize the divestiture of Nordion International Inc. and Theratronics International Ltd., be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to start off with some comments of appreciation to the Minister of State for Privatization (Mr. McDermid) for the quite extraordinary lengths to which he has gone to see to it that critics on the other side of the House were able to receive briefings with respect to these companies, receive detailed financial information, question officials of the company and therefore put ourselves in a position to make comments with respect to the specific companies which are much more pointed and, hopefully, useful as a consequence.

I am going to start off by talking briefly about the whole question of public enterprise in our economy. As the Minister himself noted in his speech, there is a long tradition of public enterprise in this country. He suggested that that was perhaps a tradition on which we should be increasingly turning our backs. My sense is to the contrary.

It is a tradition which has served this country very well, has given us a railway system which is extensive, profitable and efficient. It has given us the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, Radio Canada, which has served us immensely well throughout all of Canada. It has given us in time of war a series of companies initiated by government which met crucial needs for materiel for our armed services during the Second World War. It is a tradition which has given us Air Canada which serves various parts of this country with a sense of duty and a sense of service as something in addition to the concern for private profit. It has given us Petro-Canada which as a corporation has been extremely active in seeing to it that we extend the resources which exist offshore, in the Arctic and in other parts of the country so that we can be more secure with respect to our energy future.

Is this then a tradition from the past which should be abandoned, or is it a tradition which we should build on? For our Party, there is not an ideological answer to that. There is instead a series of considerations which we would use in analyzing the different public enterprises which exist in this country, as to whether they should continue to exist, and also in analyzing the areas in which we do not at this stage have public enterprise serving Canada. Does it make sense to have such companies play a role in that tradition which we have so successfully built up in Canada?

First, it is important to recognize that there are certain activities that the thought processes, the time horizons of the marketplace, do not lead private enterprise to initiate, to undertake within our country, cases of activities which take too long a period of time to mature, for example. There are classic cases like large-scale dams which have pay-offs, but pay-offs which are extended over many years and which the intensely competitive private enterprise sector of our economy cannot afford to wait for returns from.

There are other cases in which the risks in the economic sense are just too high, cases, for instance, in which we are dealing with new and uncertain technologies and where it is very difficult to have a sense of what will happen in the development of those technologies. Often those are areas in which public enterprise makes sense because we can spread the risk over the entire community instead of putting it in the hands of a few private entrepreneurs who are not able to take that kind of risk. Often, too, we may have questions of extreme urgency in which we simply cannot wait for private entrepreneurs to see themselves capable of taking the initiative. That was certainly the case in war-time. It has been the case in other periods of our history.

The second reason why public ownership may make sense in certain circumstances is to give the community a role, a sense of some kind of information, some kind of capacity to help direct what takes place in Canada in circumstances where a small number of very large, often foreign, companies are dominating a key sector of our economy. This was the reason why the New Democratic Party pushed so strongly to have Petro-Canada established. We felt that it was absolutely central to our future as a country that this sector of our economy not continue to be dominated by a very small number of extremely large integrated multinational oil companies.

A third reason which pushes us to look at public enterprise as a response in certain areas is when we are talking about key sectors of our economy in which initiative and innovation is not taking place with the speed and dynamism which is crucial to our future as a country. There, too, it may be necessary to establish public enterprises.

For instance, in the case of the atomic energy area, this was one of the crucial reasons for the establishment of Atomic Energy Canada Limited. This was seen as an area of important innovation. Was it possible to see to it that nuclear power could have peaceful and safe uses within our society? If that was to happen, how was it to happen? Who was to take the lead? Partly because of health and security reasons, we in this country decided that that was an area within which it was important to take a public enterprise initiative.

There are other areas that we as a Party have thought of as areas where public ownership has to be examined. For instance, we have areas that economists often call natural monopolies in which the economics of cost make it important and obvious that one company can serve people at a lower cost than a number of competing companies. For example, two or three telephone companies reproducing a set of telephone lines across the country would not make economic sense. In those areas of natural monopoly it seemed to us to be sensible to look at public enterprise as a way of dealing with this particular economic situation.

Finally, we have looked at public enterprise in provinces where the New Democratic Party has held power. In arguments we have made in the House, we have looked at public enterprise as something that can earn returns and make profits for the people of Canada in order that we will have a return to the social and economic programs which are important to all of us within this country.

With that as a backdrop, let me ask some questions with respect to this particular Bill. What are the issues that emerge as one starts to probe this particular piece of legislation? There are some key process problems to start with. The Minister has brought a Bill before us and in his speech he talked about the importance of satisfying the concerns and aspirations of workers. Yet, we have a situation with both companies in which workers represented by the Public Service Alliance of Canada have been quite concerned with respect to the privatization that is taking place, so much so that workers in both companies voted 95 per cent in favour of strike action during the month of May this year because of their concerns, in part over privatization.

Mr. McDermid: No, no.

Mr. Langdon: I have to tell the Minister that I fear that that is the case, because we have talked with representatives of the Public Service Alliance which represents workers employed at those two companies. There is a tentative settlement which was reached last Friday, one week ago, with respect to Theatronics. It still has to go to the membership for final approval. With respect to Nordion, which is the most important of those two companies in terms of profitability and workers involved, there has not been even a tentative settlement which has taken place. In fact, there is a 95 per cent strike mandate which they will move to if a settlement is not reached. The pension plan is part of their concern. They are also concerned about employee benefits in the future under privatization, and they are concerned about safety issues under privatization.

This tells me there are some very important question marks that the Government has not succeeded in settling before bringing this Bill before the House. I must say I regret that. I asked some questions during the briefings which the Minister arranged about whether there were safety questions and whether there were questions with respect to pensions. I was told by the management of the company that there was no problem. Very shortly after I was told that a 95 per cent strike mandate was taken in these companies because of pension problems and safety problems under privatization.

Mr. McDermid: Not true.

Mr. Langdon: I suggest to the Minister that he spend some time talking to representatives of the Public Service Alliance in order to find out whether a 95 per cent strike mandate, which is the vote of workers in the company, does not indicate that there are serious problems with respect to this privatization.

Mr. McDermid: It has nothing to do with privatization.

Mr. Langdon: The workers say it is because of the privatization. They voted 95 per cent to strike because of the issues associated with privatization. Frankly, the Minister is going to have to clear this up before he has any hope of getting this Bill through the House on second reading.

• (1240)

It was suggested to us during the briefings arranged by the Minister that these were part of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, but were parts that could be spun off to the private sector because the relationship between these former parts of AECL and AECL itself were relatively unimportant. In fact, when one begins to examine the evidence one finds that these relationships are anything but minor.

In the case of Theratronics, for the most recent full year for which we have statistics, there is interaction with AECL which includes purchases of over $5 million worth of input from AECL. At the same time, Theratronics provides products to Nordion which, in the most recent year for which we have material, amount to almost $8 million.

We also have in the case of Theratronics over $1 million in support for the accelerator products being developed by AECL. In addition, there is a commitment on the part of Theratronics to purchase the key input which is used for this company's production, that is Cobalt-60, from AECL up to the year 2008. We are not talking about arm's length companies, we are talking about companies that have been closely linked in the past and which are closely linked at the present. That is the case of Theratronics.

Let us look at the case of Nordion. In the case of Nordion those same kinds of connections exist in terms of related party transactions with AECL, and Theratronics providing a lot of input to Nordion and vice versa.

What is perhaps the most serious problem with respect to this Bill in its present form is that there is a commitment within the financial statements of Nordion of almost $17 million. The company itself has assets of about $96 million. With net assets under $100 million, at the same time there is a commitment of $17 million to make in payments to AECL for the next reactor which AECL is setting up for isotope production. Isotopes are the key ingredients which AECL sells to Nordion.

What is most important, and frankly most unfortunate, is that that commitment of $17 million, which has to be put into effect before 1991, is not even included in the financial balance sheet of Nordion as a company. We can see the assets of Nordion, the liabilities and shareholders equity, but there is no mention whatsoever of the fact that this company which the Government of Canada is trying to privatize will have to pay out $17 million over the next two years. There is not one mention of that in the balance sheet of this company.

There is no conclusion that one can come to except that the Government is playing fast and loose with the balance sheets that have been set up for Nordion as a company.

There are also some important information questions which have to be raised. When we talked with the various officials at the briefing, we were told that there is no one in mind at this stage as a purchaser of Nordion. Yet research by The Financial Post, which the Government likes to quote during Question Period, indicates that in its view: "Lavalin Incorporated of Montreal is considered the leading candidate to buy Nordion".

I think the game is fixed. We have a situation where this very profitable company that can give a great deal in returns to the people of Canada is going to be sold to one of those corporations that has been close to the Conservative Party. It is a corporation in which one of the senior cabinet Ministers within this Government previously worked at an executive level. It would appear from what The Financial Post has discovered that that company will be able to purchase Nordion, the more profitable of these two companies.

Those are some of the questions that emerge as specific issues of concern which I think the Government must answer before it can hope to get this Bill through the House at second reading. They are major questions which I think should have been cleared up before reaching the stage at which legislation is presented to the House.

Even if those questions can be cleared up, the basic arguments still remain with reference to the sale of these companies to the private sector.

Both these companies are significantly profitable. This is especially true of Nordion. Nordion has the capacity to give back to the people of Canada some of the tremendous investment which the people of Canada have put into it and have put into the establishment of AECL over the years. If we were to keep this company in the public sector for the next five years, we would get back in profits as much as we are likely to get in the sale of this company to the private sector. Everything after that five years would be gravy, benefits for the people of Canada, which could be taken either in the form of lower taxes or in the form of improved services.

This case, if it leads to the privatization of these two companies, will represent the first time in Canada that part of the nuclear industry goes out from under the control of the public sector. When the Government put out this document about Cobalt–60, it made an important point about AECL, the company of which these two firms have been part. That is to say AECL is the only source allowed in Canada to market Cobalt–60.

Cobalt–60 is something produced in nuclear reactors. It has with it radiation which, as we all know, can affect very seriously the health of people in the country, the health of people working in these firms and the health of other people working in firms in which the products of these firms are used.

This would be the first time in Canadian history in which we took part of the core of the nuclear industry and put it into private hands. What has happened in the United States as a consequence of its nuclear industry in large part being in private hands is something which we would not wish upon our childrens' future.

In the United States it has become more and more difficult to guarantee safety in the core of the nuclear industry because of the short cuts and the cutting of corners which take place on the part of private companies. These are short cuts and cuttings of corners which simply cannot be accepted in a nuclear industry which has so much in the way of risks, so much in the way of security issues attached to it.

It is no surprise when Canadians were asked which of various companies they would like to see put up for sale that Atomic Energy of Canada Limited received the lowest amount of support and the greatest amount of opposition of any company in the country. I make the point that both of these firms that are supposedly not part of AECL are directly, intimately and continuously involved with AECL. They have commitments to help AECL build reactors. They have commitments to buy from AECL. In fact, these firms are part of Atomic Energy of Canada. Yet 50 per cent of the people of Canada in the most recent polling which has been done indicate that they disagree strongly with the sale of AECL to the private sector. They do so because they recognize that there are special health and security issues which come up in the nuclear industry and that both these firms being offered for privatization are part of the core of the nuclear industry.

Finally, I want to make a point with respect to the legislation. In the legislation Nordion is protected from any foreign take–over. We are quite pleased to see that. However, Theratronics, which also has played an important role in our economy, is not protected. There is no protection against a foreign take–over of this important company which Canadian taxpayers have built up over the years.

The last point I want to make, and it is a general one, is that with the Free Trade Agreement now in place, Crown corporations are one of the few means left to the Canadian Government to take independent action. Under the free trade deal it is possible for Crown corporations to have particular purchase policies, particular investment policies and particular regional development policies without there being any possibility of the United States calling them into question. Yet in this Bill the Government is taking two of these instruments which we still have to use, two of these Crown corporations, and suggesting that we strip from our capacity to act in the future these two corporations. It is a serious mistake to do that, especially in light of what the trade deal has brought to the Government and the country in terms of a limiting of policy possibilities.

There are some very specific and pointed problems that mark both these firms to which I want answers and to which our Party wants answers. There are some basic arguments against taking a part of the nuclear industry and putting it into the private sector.

In light of the policy limitations of the Free Trade Agreement, we should keep our Crown corporations, especially when they are as profitable as these two are, so that they can be instruments for us in other areas of policy activity in the future.

Ms. Mary Clancy (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, the nuclear industry world-wide has been since its inception a combination of a blessing and a curse, of questionable benefits now and in the future. Equally questionable are the dangers inherent in improper use and in the danger of accidents.

People across the country are both attracted and repelled. They are attracted by the benefits provided by nuclear medicine, by nuclear power and by other forms of nuclear research. They are repelled by the very real fears of the accidents that they have seen take place in nuclear power plants in the United States and in the Soviet Union, and more particularly, about the disposal of nuclear waste. They fear that research and development in both the peaceful purposes of nuclear elements and the ongoing improvements to perfect this colossal power will be lost if this power moves out of the hands of a Crown corporation and into the hands of the private sector. To make the nuclear industry acceptable and palatable to the people of Canada, it must be proven that it can be safe and that all humankind will benefit and not be destroyed. With this level of concern among the populace, with this need for close monitoring on the health and safety aspects of the industry, is this the time to hand over two such crucial components of this industry to the private sector? No, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that it is not.

We were told in the Speech from the Throne that certain Crown corporations would be privatized when they no longer had a public policy role to play. I fear that the Government is again fooling us with smoke and mirrors. These corporations still have an important role in public policy. From their operations, it would appear that they will have for some time to come. Surely the development of diagnostic and therapeutic materials is a matter of public concern and one that should not be left to the vagaries of the free market system so beloved by the Government.

Nordion, as we know, is a leading international supplier of nuclear-based products serving the world's health care industry. The Industrial Irradiation Division produces half of the world's Cobalt-60 radiation processing equipment and provides 80 per cent of the world's Cobalt-60. The Division's major application for its Cobalt-60 radiation processing equipment is the sterilization of disposal medical and consumer products such as needles, syringes, sutures, bandages and rubber gloves. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that for my constituents and indeed for the people of Nova Scotia, the fact that a company that has a great deal to do with the sterilization of products such as this is one of great public interest when sadly we see this kind of waste washing up on our beaches almost every day.

Increasing use of this technology to sterilize sewage and waste products promises to be an important factor in alleviating the growing waste disposal problem.

The Isotope Division provides approximately two-thirds of the world's supply of bulk reactor produced isotopes and also provides cyclotron isotopes. The isotopes are used primarily in nuclear medicine for diagnostic tests but are also occasionally used therapeutically.

Theratronics manufactures, sells and services radiotherapy equipment to cancer therapy clinics and hospitals throughout the world. Theratronics produces and sells Cobalt-60 based radiation therapy equipment and computer based cancer therapy planning equipment and software. The company also sells two types of treatment simulation equipment for radiation therapy.

This is a typical case of the Government arguing that these corporations have outgrown their mandate and are no longer effectively implementing the mandate for which they were created. Eldorado Nuclear, originally created Nordion, which was transferred to AECL in 1952. Theratronics International also commenced operations in 1946 as part of Eldorado Mining and Refining. It too was transferred to AECL in 1952.

It should be noted that Eldorado Nuclear was nationalized originally to provide a secure source of uranium for the Manhattan Project during World War II. The question which arises, and the question which arises in the minds of many Canadians, is whether or not Government ownership in this sector has been redundant.

Given again a personal note, Mr. Speaker, the feelings of citizens in Nova Scotia regarding the mining of uranium and the entire connection to the nuclear industry, I think this is a pertinent question to be asked. I think it is one that is of great relevance in the field of public policy. This clearly is not a corporation that has outlived its public policy role.

The whole question of security vis-à-vis the nuclear industry as well in the realm of exports has to be looked at. Again we have the question of whether the employees who have been offered an opportunity to purchase Theratronics before it is offered to corporate purchasers, and we have been told that the Government will assist in funding of an independent adviser if requested to do so. The Government will also assist in the funding of a financial adviser to the employees of Nordion if requested, to enable them to assess purchasing the company or buying shares in it. Why are we paying so much to rid ourselves of this company when it appears to be doing quite well?

While the federal Government clearly believes that privatization generally encourages market competition and thereby increases economic wealth, entrepreneurship is encouraged by the removal of political and bureaucratic constraints. It is not at all clear that this is true in the current economic climate. In the case of the sensitivity of the current economic climate. In the case of the sensitivy of the nuclear industry, more Government involvement, not less, should be the ideal in these particularly perilous times.

This idea of privatization is a political tactic rather than a common sense economic strategy. In four and a half years, the Government has sold 13 federal Crown corporations, agencies or subsidiaries.

An Hon. Member: Sixteen.

Ms. Clancy: Sixteen. The reason given to the Canadian public is to reduce the deficit and shrink the size of Government. We are getting used to figures being bounced about one way or another regarding the deficit and it just does not work. Such reasons hide the reality that privatization to date has caused thousands of jobs to be lost and, in some cases, millions of dollars in research and development funds have been handed over, free of charge, to foreign companies. Just ask the former employees of CN trucking about their treatment by Route Canada if you want to know what happens to some people left to the tender mercies of the post-privatization owners. The Government's divestiture process has been long and drawn out, and in some cases, in the middle of bidding, bidders have been caught in cross-fire of competing and conflicting interests. In the case of bidding on Teleglobe, material changes to the policy requirements were made during the course of the bidding which not only damaged the credibility of the process but made it expensive for the Government and the bidders.

Again, costs are going wild. The Government has gone completely overboard in its hiring of advisers, consultants and lawyers, all to rid us of companies that are doing quite well.

In April of 1986, the following advisers were in place, working in whole or in part on the privatization of Nordion and Theratronics, formerly AECL's radiochemical and medical products division: three investment dealers; one legal firm advising AECL/RCC; one management firm, and one accounting firm. Too many cooks in this case might spoil the isotope broth.

Privatization is not the way to reduce the deficit. Many divestitures lead to service reductions for the Canadian public, employment losses, or a poor return on the investment for the Canadian dollar. Each case has to be assessed on its own merits and in the socioeconomic interests of the country as a whole.

Forecasts tell us that left alone, revenues from Nordion and Theratronics will dramatically increase over the next four years, and any profits from these increases should go to the taxpayers who carried the financial burden of these companies during the bad times.

The sole source of Cobalt–90 is Ontario Hydro, which is opposed to any privatization in which Ontario Hydro does not play a role. If the connection is broken between AECL, Nordion and Theratronics customers and suppliers, research could be seriously affected. If changes are made to streamline the decision–making processes in these corporations, there would be no need to privatize them.

The feeling is that once these companies are privatized, the health and safety regulations so crucial to the well–being and the peace of mind of Canadian citizens will not be strictly enforced. The Government will argue that the Atomic Energy Board of Canada, the regulatory body, will more strict when these companies are moved into the private sector. However, will they? What kind of costs will be engendered to make sure that the regulatory body is out there keeping an eye on the industry. There are well–founded fears that the regulatory framework in Third World countries such as India may not be sufficient to maintain the stringent rules and regulations absolutely necessary to avoid accidents.

I mentioned before whether employees can afford to make an offer. Many of them, the employees themselves, express pessimism about being able to purchase whole or even part of these two companies.

A survey among the employees last fall indicated they could possibly raise $2 million, which is a pretty small lever for employees to buy out 100 per cent of one or two of these companies.

I bring up the question of food irradiation, one of the major potential sources of revenue growth for Nordion, but this is a highly sensitive and contentious field. Until the technology is well established and perfected, its ownership should remain in government hands.

The Government is determined to privatize Nordion and Theratronics. I do not suppose that any argument here will change that, even the argument over the safety of the people of Canada and safety in Third World countries where we have a responsibility to act in the best interests of our trading partners, and the over–all safety questions of the nuclear industry in general that plague and worry Canadian citizens should also plague and worry the Minister and this Government.

If we are to see the nuclear industry become the benefit thae nuclear industry, more Government involvement, not less, should be the ideal in these particularly perilous times.t it could be for humankind, we must focus attention on the forms of research and development that will ensure the health and safety of all concerned.

The Atomic Energy Control Board, which inspects and licences systems that cover all aspects of nuclear facilities and controls the packaging, preparation and receipt of radioactive materials, will have to reinforce its inspection branch in order to cope with any increased activity in the private sector.

National Health and Welfare and Transport Canada, which is responsible for the transportation of dangerous goods, and the Minister responsible for the environment will also have to beef up inspection and enforcement of regulations once the responsibility for products produced by Nordion and Theratronics go out of the control of the Government.

There is also a perspective dealing with the workers. The energy workers union had a reaction to privatization of Nordion and Theratronics. That reaction was not a good one. They disagree with the Government's direction to privatize these two companies.

Contrary to statements that employees could be given an opportunity to purchase Theratronics or Nordion, to date the employees have had very little input. There is no set program whereby the employees can purchase Theratronics. Most employees feel that there is little or no chance to purchase Nordion either in a whole or in part. Apparently Nordion had a huge profit last year, a net $23 million, which makes it very attractive for the vultures. The union would not have a fighting chance. The union is also concerned about health and safety problems which can arise with privatization. The employees are also worried about future research at AECL.

Once Nordion and Theratronics are stripped away from AECL, all it will be left with is research. Then the question arises as to how much funding the Government will be prepared to put into research in future. If a fee–for–service approach is introduced, the whole research program could collapse.

Even though the union shares concerns about health and safety, in my opinion, the employees do not have the energy, the ability or the time to resist this privatization with any great vigour. People of Canada need to be protected from acts such as this and not have this sensitive industry thrown away from Government control and left to develop or misdevelop on its own.

Since taking over the privatization portfolio, my friend the Minister, has not really given us any major indication of what the Government's long-term plans are in the area of privatization. His predecessor on the job, the Deputy Prime Minister, suggested that Petro-Canada—the gas stations and the refineries—might go on the block. Petro-Canada has always down-played that rumour. In the past couple of weeks, rumours are rampant again that the gas stations are going on the block.

The Minister told the meeting of the Cambridge Federal Progressive Conservative Association in April that the Government has sold 18 Crown agencies since 1984. You told me 16.

Mr. McDermid: Sixteen in the whole and two in part.

Ms. Clancy: Thank you. Now that we have our figures straight, that is good. Sixteen and two is 18, I think. VIA Rail privatization. What plans does the Government have in that direction?

In the fall of 1985 the Government-owned de Havilland Aircraft of Canada and sold it to Boeing for $155 million. Since the sale, the Government has sunk $30 million into Boeing and are being sued by de Havilland for $110 million.

This is the flagship of the Government's privatization program. The Fifth Estate said: "A love affair gone sour". What is going to happen with the privatization of AECL? What is going to happen with the privatization of segments of AECL, Nordion and Theratronics? What will be the future of the Canadian people when these two nuclear-based industries are out there with the vultures of the private sector and not under the consideration and the care of the Crown corporation acting in the best interests of the people of Canada?

We talked before and will talk again about the health and safety issues. The nuclear industry is one that can bring great benefit to this country.

I did not call them all vultures. Just a few.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Clancy: That is all right. You can say what you will.

An Hon. Member: Yes, you have. You can't get off that one.

Ms. Clancy: Yes, I can. I will wait until you ask me a question. The vultures are here and the vultures are outside. Most of them are wearing blue.

What will happen to the health and safety issues that are of such great concern to the people of Canada when these two companies and their revenues are no longer within the purview of a Crown corporation? What will happen to the future of the nuclear industry? What will happen to the health and safety standards that Canadians have a right to demand from their Government and have been able to demand from Crown corporations in the past? What will happen to a safe development of a colossal power that could be used for the good?

I do not know the answers to these questions. I suggest, sadly for the people of Canada, that the Government does not know either. They are just prepared to privatize at any cost with a cavalier attitude for the future of this industry, for the future of the workers, for the health and safety of Canadians in general. I think it is a shame.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment rather than a question. That was one of the silliest speeches that I have heard in this House in a very long time. The Hon. Member stood up and said that the private sector are nothing but a bunch of vultures. Those are her exact words. What absolute poppycock. What nonsense!

If she was sitting over here with her socialist friends in the little red rump, then maybe I would understand that speech, but I thought she was a Grit. Now we know where she is coming from. It has finally been exposed in this House.

I want to ask her to try to explain to this House why a Crown corporation obeys health and safety standards, are policed by outside agencies which police the private sector as well as the public sector and operate under the exact rules and regulations, what difference is it going to make with them being a Crown corporation?

By the way, these companies are not with AECL and have not been for about year now. They have been a separate corporation for a year under the Canadian Development Investment Corporation, just so that she understands that they have not been with AECL for some time.

Why would inspection have to be beefed up? Inspection is going on now by these outside organizations such as the Atomic Energy Control Board and so on. If this is her theory, then in fact all inspection that goes on from the Government, whether it be Transport or whether it be health safety standards in hospitals or food or anything else, should be in Crown corporations because it is better controlled there. I want her to try and explain how safety and the health of Canadians is being compromised by the privatization of these two companies.

• (1320)

Ms. Clancy: I do wish that brevity was the soul of wit. However, first, I would ask my hon. friend to check the "blues". I certainly would never cast aspersions on the entire business community suggesting they were all vultures. What I said was "the vultures out there". Gentleman, listen, you might learn something. I said "the vultures out there" and there certainly are vultures out there. With the greatest of respect, I would suspect that some of my hon. friends opposite may be more familiar with some of these vultures than I am myself. If they want to explain about the vultures, they can certainly do so. But for my hon. friends to suggest that I would say that the entire business community are vultures is a colossal misunderstanding and a distortion of my words.

Second, the Minister asks how I can say that health, safety and inspection regulations would have to be beefed up. This is the kind of answer that we would like to get from the Minister. We would like to know what the long-term plans are.

Who is going to buy Nordion? Who is going to buy Theratronics? Who is going to be in charge of these incredibly sensitive companies with incredibly sensitive products that are important to medical research and in the long term important to the over-all health and safety of Canadians? Who are the people going to be? Where are they going to be located? Answer us some of those questions, and tell us who is going to be in charge, who is doing what and how many Americans are going to be rushing in to take over this industry as well?

Mr. Hawkes: It is interesting to listen to new Members, Mr. Speaker. Crown corporation—Chernobyl, Three Mile Island—private sector. I ask myself which situation was the better investigated, the more open, the more honest and led to more safety changes for the future.

I have sat here for the last two and a half weeks in Question Period listening to suggestions that because the RCMP are paid by federal funds, because distinguished public servants work on behalf of the people of Canada, that there is something wrong with them, that they have no personal ethics, that they cannot do things the right way.

Mr. Manley: They cannot speak for themselves.

Mr. Hawkes: Then I hear a speech that says that one agency of government which is to regulate and be concerned about safety will perform its function less well when a private sector organization is being regulated and inspected than it will if it is a Crown corporation being regulated and inspected. We have had two and a half weeks of questions in Question Period about the need of separation of political control and influence and then a plea later on the same day that politicians stay involved in something more than the regulation and safety aspect. Government, run it over here and regulate it over here. Run it over here and inspect it over here. Surely the role of Government is more clearly on the side of regulation, inspection and protection of society. How on earth you could make a plea for the Government of Canada to own a service station in my neighbourhood and state it is an important public function, I will never know. You have been talking about honesty for two and a half weeks. If you want to be honest, stand up in this Chamber and tell the Canadian people what the 18 privatizations accomplished to this point. There are hundreds more people with jobs—

Ms. Clancy: Prove it.

Mr. Hawkes: Thousands of people.

Ms. Clancy: Prove it.

Mr. Hawkes: Go down and look at de Havilland and Canadair, look at Teleglobe. There are thousands more people with jobs because of the privatization by this Government. Then add up the subsidies that previous Parliaments were sending to those 18 that no longer exist and see how many billions of dollars of debt and interest payments have been saved on behalf of Canadians. Then go to the income tax files and see where those 18 privatized corporations are now paying taxes into the public treasury. More jobs, less expenses, more revenue; that is the Conservative Government's privatization.

If she is honest, if all the last two and a half weeks have to do with honesty, the Hon. Member should stand up and honestly tell Canadians, that is the story of privatization right there.

Ms. Clancy: I thank the Hon. Member for his comments. I am awfully glad to know that the avuncular attitude and patriarchal spirit of the Government is still alive and well across the way. For those of us new Members, it is really nice to know that we can be led so gently by our friends over there.

In so far as the question of honesty is concerned, I would suggest that the Government and the Hon. Member look to his own laurels. He brought up de Havilland. He should look at de Havilland. What an embarrassment for you people.

Now to the question of the jobs that you created, show us. We would like to see it. Show us how well you have done. More important than any of this, more important than the braying of the sheep or the bringing in of the sheaves, whichever you prefer, more important than all the smoke and mirrors that we get from over there is the future of the nuclear industry in this country. More important to the people sitting out there in Canada from coast to coast, from north to south is what you are doing to ensure that their children are protected.

Indeed the majority of the people in this country feel that the protection of the Canadian people is under a Crown corporation, not under your pals who want to make a quick buck on an industry that is not perfected yet. Look to your laurels, gentleman, and look to them fast.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles A. Langlois (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, I rise in the House today to express strong support for the measure proposed by the Minister of State for Privatization and Regulatory Affairs (Mr. McDermid). The divestiture of Nordion and Theratronics is by no means the most significant privatization endeavour of this Government nor, I am sure, the last. Still I am convinced that they can look forward to the same kind of prospects which awaited other Crown corporations which have been privatized: from the moment they are returned to the private sector they can expect new opportunities and a challenging future.

Mr. Speaker, this is a relatively short Bill with a limited number of clauses and provisions. In fact it does not reflect the care our Government gives each such privatization project. So much so that the Bill is only the tip of the iceberg, as it were, because it deals mainly with the implementation of the process. However there are four more stages, and Hon. Members who were in the House during the previous session when similar legislative measures on Air Canada and Eldorado were adopted are already familiar with our step–by–step approach.

The first stage is the preliminary analysis when the Government considers whether a given Crown corporation should be privatized. That is when the role of the corporation—if any— in achieving public objectives is assessed. Should the decision indicate that public ownership no longer serves the public interest, the Crown corporation under consideration undergoes the second stage, close scrutiny. That examination covers a wide range of factors such as national and regional policy objectives, the corporation's financial situation, the competitive climate, the regulatory framework, the employees' interests, as well as the privatization options best suited to that particular situation.

After evaluating all those considerations and identifying the advantages of various approaches, the Government proceeds to the legislative stage, when sales authorization and conditions to be approved are set out in a Bill introduced in the House of Commons. Members then study the Bill clause by clause and legislative questions are carefully examined. During study of the Eldorado privatization legislation, 67 separate questions were discussed, Mr. Speaker.

Another stage of the privatization process is sales preparation. It almost coincides with approval of the privatization plan by the Cabinet and involves preparing the company for its transfer to the private sector. A team of experts including financial advisers and lawyers works closely with the Crown corporation at this stage.

• (1330)

At last, we proceed with the sale. That step completes the sale and transfer to the private sector. Effective implementation depends on the sales method. For example, a public share issue is quite different from a sale to a third party.

Mr. Speaker, all members should understand why that process takes so long. It allows the Government to see to it that all questions are dealt with in a satisfactory manner and that the interests of all parties involved are protected. The interested parties include not only the corporation and the federal Government but also the Canadian taxpayers, as well as the corporation's employees, clients and suppliers.

If you will allow me, Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a few minutes to describe to this House the way the interests of a very important group have been protected in the privatization process of Nordion and Theratronics. I am thinking about the group without which no organization can survive: the employees.

Nordion and Theratronics are relatively small companies, which does not mean that the Government does not give a high priority to the needs and concerns of their employees. Nordion has 387 employees whereas Theratronics has 329. The two companies have 716 wage-earners, a great number of which can probably look after their families, and very well.

The majority of the workers of both companies are in Kanata, Ontario. Furthermore, Nordion has employees at the University of British Columbia and at Laval, in the province of Quebec. Theratronics has sales and service groups in the United States.

In privatizing these two corporations, Mr. Speaker, the Government took some measures to ensure that the interests of the employees of Nordion and Theratronics are well protected. For example, the terms and conditions of employment for all Nordion and Theratronics employees at the time of the sale will continue to apply after the sale.

This includes maintaining the present collective agreements and bargaining agents. I also understand that the unions whose members might be affected by the sale of Nordion and Theratronics are the Public Service Alliance of Canada, which represents nearly 100 employees in the two companies, and the Energy and Chemical Workers Union, representing 186 employees. These unions will still be free to negotiate on behalf of their members and to negotiate the future terms of employment that they consider in their workers' best interests.

Mr. Speaker, the Government now recognizes that after job security, employee pension plans are very important for the workers of companies that change status or owner. The employees of Nordion and Theratronics now pay into a Public Service pension plan under the Public Service Superannuation Act.

Under the terms of this Act, the employees will no longer be able to pay into the Public Service Plan when the two companies are privatized. Therefore, the Government will require the purchaser of Nordion and Theratronics to establish a new pension plan that at least meets the standards set by the Pension Benefits Standards Act.

The purchaser will also be required to conclude a reciprocal pension transfer agreement as a condition of the sale. One of the conditions of this reciprocal pension transfer agreement will be that all funds transferred from the plan under the Public Service Superannuation Act will be solely for the benefit of the employees transferred.

Mr. Speaker, this agreement will give the employees of Nordion and Theratronics the option to transfer their accumulated Public Service pension benefits to the new plan to be established by the privatized corporations. Thus, if an employee with 10 years of pensionable service under the Public Service Superannuation Act elects to transfer his benefits, he will have 10 years to his credit under the new pension plan.

Needless to say the federal Government does not intend to force employees to transfer to a private plan the pension benefits accured to them as public servants. After the sale, employees will have available to them a series of options regarding their pensionable service. Depending on their age and the number of years they have to their credit, they can choose the reimbursement of their contributions, payment of an immediate or deferred annuity or the employment continuity option.

As was the case in all corporations already privatized where employees contributed under the Public Service superannuation plan, the enabling legislation provides for a special employment continuity option. For the benefit of Members who do not understand that expression, Mr. Speaker, it allows employees of Nordion or Theratronics to count their years of service in the new privatized corporations as pensionable service to reach the number required under the Public Service superannuation plan. It is a big advantage for the person who is considering taking an early retirement or who intends to return to the public sector later in his career.

Those provisions, Mr. Speaker, will allow employees to use their pension credit in the way that is most appropriate for them, according to their long-term financial plans for retirement.

In fact, one of the other features in most of the privatizations this Government has achieved is share-buying by employees. That measure proved very popular among employees of privatized Crown corporations because it gives them for the first time an interest in the corporation they work for. For that reason, one of the Nordion sales conditions will require the buyer to give employees the opportunity to acquire a minority interest at a 10 per cent discount.

I would like to point out that Nordion employees are interested in the opportunity to buy all or part of the corporation. This way, the Government offers them the opportunity not only to acquire a minority interest but also to make an offer under the competitive bidding process while getting a 5 per cent discount on the price. The Government already finances the cost of hiring a financial adviser to help employees evaluate their options. In the case of Theratronics, its smaller size and lower market value could make it a good candidate for a takeover by its employees. Employees would then have priority when they make an offer. In addition, the Government is willing to help them develop a proposal by giving them money to hire financial advisers. We don't know yet, Mr. Speaker, if that approach will be successful but it shows that our Government is moving heaven and earth to meet employees' needs and address their concerns.

Mr. Speaker, during discussions on nearly all privatizations that have taken place so far, opposition members have asked the Government to give all employees the assurance of long-term job security.

I would remind Hon. Members that the best job security is a strong and dynamic company with future growth prospects. As evidenced in a number of previous cases, opportunities seem to mushroom once a Crown corporation has been privatized. Canadair would be a good example. Funded by the Government for years on end because the company was operating at a loss, Canadair management have just announced they will make newly designed aircraft and hire hundreds of new workers. That, Mr. Speaker, is good news.

So what about all the gloomy predictions? Why do Members of the Opposition who took the floor to warn that privatizing Canadair would lead to massive lay-offs not rise now to commend the Government for such foresight?

Mr. Speaker, I am afraid any attempt on our part to privatize will never meet with the approval of Hon. Members opposite. But then that is not the purpose of our program. What we are aiming at instead is to make sure that the requirements of the company and its staff are more efficiently met by a more dynamic organization subject to the vagaries of the market.

• (1340)

Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt in my mind that, notwithstanding the remarks of Members of the Opposition, the divestiture of Nordion and Theratronics will pave the way towards these objectives.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has made a number of references to the workers of these two corporations, saying that they can expect a better deal through privatization. I wonder if that is the case!

Why did the workers of the two corporations go on strike against privatization before the sale, a strike which in the case of Theratronics has to do with wage cuts and reduced benefits? And in the case of Nordion the dispute is related to issues of health, pensions and benefits as well.

The employees of both companies held a strike vote and 95 per cent of them decided to walk out if these problems were not settled.

With all that how can we possibly believe that all workers are indeed rejoicing over this privatization?

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the attitudes or choices of employees in these firms are part of the normal process of working conditions and labour relations in any business corporation, whether in the private or public sector.

That process is involved in corporations in the private and public sector that have labour agreements, whose employees are subject to the terms of labour agreements that expire every three or four years and are then renewable, and the strike mandate that was given to the negotiating agents who represent those employees in my view are part of the of the normal process of discussing a new labour agreement.

I do not believe, and there is no evidence to that effect, that the strike mandates given to the labour organizations in those firms were directly related to or connected with the privatization proposal.

In the private sector as in the public sector, labour agreements come up for renewal from time to time. Work conditions, safety conditions, retirement conditions, pension fund conditions and the hospital plan are discussed each time they are re-negotiated. And that is in my view a normal process, Mr. Speaker.

I emphasized earlier those labour agreements are not affected. Negotiating agents representing employees in those firms are not affected. Pension funds are protected, and the employees involved would have a number of options to protect their pension fund.

I believe the legislation, the Government's intentions and discussions that were held afford that level of security to employees. And to answer the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon), the Government took actions to protect the health, jobs and future of the employees in those two firms.

[English]

Mr. Funk: Mr. Speaker, I have been listening with interest to the debate. In the last year we went through a privatization venture in the uranium industry in my constituency. I refer to the amalgamation and ultimate privatization of the Saskatchewan Crown Corporation, Saskatchewan Mining Development Corporation and Eldorado Nuclear, and their operations in northern Saskatchewan.

Many of the similar concerns raised by my colleague, the Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) and the Member from Halifax, were raised at that time. The same assurances were given. A year later there are 100 permanent lay-offs at Rabbit Lake Mine. While we were assured of no lay-offs, 100 permanent jobs were lost.

There was a commitment that they would keep the community and northern perspective that SMDC and Eldorado Nuclear had, whereby they would guarantee local jobs and benefits for local contractors. It was promised that involvement with the local community would continue.

I had word recently that the office in La Ronge is being closed and the 11 employees who looked after the northern affairs of that corporation are being laid off without being replaced.

In my constituency we have a case in the same industry where 111 people have lost their jobs. The focus that gave benefit to the local community is being eliminated a year after promises that are similar to the ones we are hearing today were made. How can we be assured this process will be any different?

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, I can understand the concerns of the Hon. Member for Prince Albert—Churchill River (Mr. Funk).

I represent a riding that had to go through the same process with the iron ore mining industry in the 1980s. The price of iron ore dropped considerably and additional and new mines were opened in other countries. That brought competition and a surplus of iron ore on the world market.

The comments made by my hon. friend are in relation to world-wide market conditions. The price of uranium is not the highest at this time, in fact it is probably at its lowest.

One of the companies he refers to is Eldorado Nuclear. It had been doing exploration work in the northern part of my riding as well. Approximately a year ago they suspended all exploration work because the price of uranium did not make it worth-while to keep working on that mine.

We are facing world-wide conditions in the mining industry, specifically in uranium mining. I hope too that those conditions will improve so those people will get their jobs back. I do not think it would have been any different if those enterprises had been in the public sector. The private sector is more adaptive and has more means to take steps in those cases to make the conditions less severe for the people.

[Translation]

Mr. Langdon: In light of the Hon. Member's response, I have a brief supplementary question. He says that all these labour problems are a matter of course in labour–management negotiations. When I discussed these problems with the PSAC representative, Mr. Tom Dinan, he told me quite frankly that they were due to privatization, that, in Theratronics' case, management is trying to reduce benefits in anticipation of privatization. In Nordion's case, he said that, because of privatization, there are now problems related to health and pensions, issues of great importance to the workers. I asked him if all these problems actually existed. Does the Hon. Member agree with me that we should wait for a bill authorizing the privatization of these companies?

• (1350)

Mr. Langlois: The answer is no, Mr. Speaker. The Hon. Member refers to the employees of Theratronics and Nordion. Fifteen of Theratronics' employees are covered by a collective agreement which is being discussed as he mentioned. In Nordion's case, 86 out of 387 employees are covered by a collective agreement. Consequently, despite their small numbers, these employees are covered by collective agreements.

[English]

My hon. friend has referred to reductions in their benefits and discussions leading to possible reductions. I would like to point out to him that for the last four or five years there were reductions negotiated through bargaining and collective agreements in major industries and smaller industries throughout Canada to adapt the working and market conditions as well as the competitive position of these companies to the prevailing market conditions. This is nothing new.

Even if these companies remain in the private sector their responsibility would still be to assure a certain degree of efficiency and economic profitability. The fact that they are to be transferred to the public sector does not change the majority of the benefits of the working people. The Bill in front of us and the discussions carried on by the Government concerning these two privatizations assure these people of their benefits, better jobs and better job security after privatization.

Mrs. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, this Bill tells us a great deal about the beliefs on which the Government exercises the trust the Canadian public has placed in it. To be more precise, it tells us a great deal about the lack of beliefs, the lack of values and the lack of commitment to Canada, to and to the people of Canada.

I detect in the Bill, the debate and the history of privatization by the Government a bankruptcy of fundamental values that it brings to the area of public policy. I want to run through some of the ways in which I believe this debate demonstrates a lack of values on which public policy is now based.

First, clearly, the Government does not believe in Canada. It does not believe in government except as a framework in which to serve the interests of commercialization. It does not believe in any sense of national purpose. It seems to have forgotten that this is a nation built on public policy, built on struggling constantly to find the right balance between the public role and the private role and to keep the two in harmony.

Second, it seems obvious that the Government does not believe in the Canadian people getting a return on their investment. Otherwise, why would it be selling off companies that are producing profits, in the case of Nordion to the tune of $23 million per year with the prospect of millions of dollars of increased profits? Up until now those profits have been returned into research, the development of science and of future opportunities for the country at Atomic Energy of Canada Limited.

Third, the Government appears not to believe in its responsibility to the rest of the world. It is no secret that nuclear technology, with the processes and the products emanating from it, is both a miracle and a curse. It has the ability to do great good in the field of medicine, energy and in domains not yet explored. However, that power is also a power to kill, to do damage. There are dangers in its direct use. There are dangers in the remnants it leaves after its use.

The use of nuclear energy is not simply a question of the good it can do, but a question of its implications for the safety of employees, the safety of the environment and, ultimately, the safety of the world.

The issue has been raised in debate here as to what difference it makes if this technology is in the public domain or in the private domain. The fundamental difference is this—and the fact that the Government has to ask the question makes it clear that it has no understanding of public policy or of public good—Government has as its bottom line the public good. Business, the private sector, has as its bottom line a profit in dollars. That is as it should be. That is why it is finding the balance between those two interests that determines or should determine the role of government.

I said that the Government does not believe in the responsibility of Canada to the rest of the world. Let me mention just a few examples of that. Canada is in the process of financing the sale of equipment to irradiate food in Thailand. We are very careful in Canada to have in place regulations to ensure that the consumer knows and has the option to choose irradiated or non-irradiated foods. Yet we are prepared to put money into the irradiation of foods in Third World countries without having any concern whatsoever as to whether the people in those parts of the world are similarly protected. We are concerned only with profitability. We are concerned not with the public good of those Third World peoples. I am deeply concerned about the new economic colonialism that this type of practice seems to indicate.

There are many other areas in terms of our responsibility to the world. I refer to the disposal of hazardous wastes and to safe practices in the use of dangerous products, all of which argue for a continued public interest in both these companies.

Fourth, the Government does not believe in respecting and valuing the men and women who work for the people of Canada who have developed many of our greatest institutions. The previous speaker told us what is good for the employees. I prefer to listen to what the employees' representatives tell us is good for the employees. They have issued a press release and a news letter explaining why they are prepared to go on strike if this privatization goes through. They describe it this way: "Members are caught in the middle of a vicious privatization process".

Mr. McDermid: Vicious?

Mrs. Catterall: "Yes, employees are being given the opportunity to purchase shares, but only if they agree to a series of take-backs and concessions in their collective agreements. The employer insists on these concessions before any sale or purchase takes place. But the employer refuses to tell the people what their pension entitlements are until after the sale goes through". Is this fair and equal treatment of employees who should be valued for having produced two profit-making companies within the public domain?

We need only to go back to experiences we have already had. The points made by the Hon. Member opposite sound very much like assurances that were given to the employees of CN Express when it was made into CN Route Canada and then privatized into Transport Route Canada. The Government, the Prime Minister specifically, still has in his possession a request from the people representing those employees for a public inquiry into the bankruptcy of that company. The bankruptcy denied employees benefits, pay and salary that they were entitled to, while the company walked away with $50 million to $60 million worth of property assets bought and paid for by the people of Canada.

The Government failed to respond to that request for an inquiry. It is failing now to consider the interest of its employees. This Government does not believe in research, or why would it be selling off the rights to $23 million, and growing, profits that feed research at Atomic Energy of Canada Limited. Why would it have stripped space science research as it has done over the last four years? Why would it have stripped environmental research? Why would it have stripped agricultural research? The process continues of undermining science and research which build opportunities for companies and for individual Canadians for the future.

This Government does not even believe in the market-place when it works to the benefit of Canadians. Why is it that Crown corporations are not subject to the same land disposal policy that ensures maximum benefits to the Canadian public on disposition of assets? What are the rules that will apply here? Will it be a public process?

I mention the sale of experimental farm lands in Ottawa West in the last two years. These were lands that were appraised at $5.5 million, sold at $3.5 million. That sale was supported by a subsequent reappraisal that said they were really only worth $1.5 million to start with. Is it not about time that the Government of Canada was forthright in operating in the market-place to the best benefit of the people of Canada?

This Government does not even believe in good management. I am reminded today, and I see the background papers that tell me it is going to be better managed as a private corporation. Why is it that the Government is sitting there and conceding that with an operation in public hands it cannot achieve good management. We saw the same thing with the disposal of Air Canada. We have the President of Air Canada who said: "I can manage this company better as a private company than I can when it is in the public interest." That is a dereliction of duty.

This Government believes in ad hockery. Where is the plan for privatization? Where is the accounting? We now have done 16 plus two-halves privatizations. Where is the accounting by the Government of Canada to the people of Canada, when it is stripping our ability to establish and implement public policy through the privatization of assets for which the people of Canada bought and paid? Where is the accountability to them now, four years into a privatization program, to show them what they have gained from it and what they have lost.

This Government believes in privatization. That is what it does believe in. Without question, without analysis, without accountability, without commitment to employees, without commitment to the public good, it pursues privatization as a religion and a fanaticism almost, to be pursued for its own good, for its own sake and with no commitment to the public good.

The Deputy Speaker: On questions and comments, the Hon. Member.

Mr. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my hon. colleague for her remarks. I think that she raised a number of good points. I would just like to add an additional concern which I have about this Bill in the few minutes that remain, and that is what will happen to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited? It has not been mentioned in the remarks or in the briefing.

I notice that these two companies contributed something like 80 per cent of AECL's net income for last year. The question that remains is once this income is removed, what will remain? What does that mean for our policy with respect to the development of peaceful nuclear energy, if we are going to take out the income flow of this company and sell it off to the private sector, as well as the technology and research that has been embedded in this? I think that this is not only affecting these two companies but it is also affecting in a broader sense the capacity of the Government and Canadians to control our destiny with respect to the development of nuclear energy and our Candu reactors which has already been—

An Hon. Member: The best technology in the world.

Mr. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): That is right. And the Government is withdrawing its commitment to research.

An Hon. Member: Totally wrong.

Mr. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Absolutely not.

An Hon. Member: Show us the Estimates.

The Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member. It being 2.06 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Member's Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

PRIVATE MEMBER'S BUSINESS—MOTIONS

[English]

MULTICULTURALISM

PREAMBLE TO CONSTITUTION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, multiculturalism should be recognized as a "fundamental characteristic" of the Canadian nation in the Preamble to the Constitution.

She said: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased today to rise to speak on my private Member's motion which states:

That, in the opinion of this House, multiculturalism should be recognized as a "fundamental characteristic" of the Canadian nation in the Preamble to the Constitution.

I expect that Members on both sides of the House and indeed the general public will agree with this motion, because it reflects the reality of modern Canada. Our Constitution, of course, should be based on a Canada that was founded by many different nations of aboriginal peoples whose ancestors today are fighting for their rights amidst a pluralistic modern society. They should also be recognized in the Constitution as our founding people.

Canada recognizes the descendants of French and English-speaking Europeans who settled in Upper and Lower Canada and whose languages today are the official languages of Canada. But there is also a Canada where over one-third of the population, probably more now, has come from none of these origins, settlers from all countries of the world who represent many races and cultures, varied religions and languages and who will soon be a majority group in Canada.

My motion today concerns the official recognition of this latter group of Canadians of many cultures, who have made Canada a mosaic of colour and rich diversity.

Over the centuries Canada has become the home of people from every part of the world. People of every race, coming from many nations, believing in many creeds, have chosen to make a better life for themselves and their families in Canada.

Our history is rich with culture from early settlers. The Maritime provinces, long the home of Acadian populations, welcomed Scottish, Irish, German, New England and Black settlers. The Red River Valley became home to French-speaking voyageurs, English traders, Scottish clergymen, Swiss mercenaries, and the Métis people, the result of inter-marriage with the aboriginal people. The Prairies were opened up by southern and eastern Europeans, who came to Canada with the promise of a better way of life. British Columbia became the destination of immigrants from Asia, many of whom worked and even died to build our railways. Canada, as a whole, has received people from all over the world, people who are interested in preserving their cultural identity as can be witnessed by many active ethnocultural communities across the land.

It was not until 1971, however, that the federal Government recognized the ethnocultural variety within the Canadian nation. Political tokenism recognized ethnocultural groups with fine words but little funding. In 1988, our Multiculturalism Act was passed with strong support from all Parties and from ethnocultural communities.

A parliamentary standing committee on multiculturalism was promised at that time to monitor this Act. Unfortunately, this promise has yet to be fulfilled in this House. A separate Department of Multiculturalism and Citizenship will soon be established under Bill C-18.

Multiculturalism means many things to many people. To New Democrats it is more than an appreciation of different cultures, although our cultural diversity makes us a strong, vibrant, exciting country.

Multiculturalism should promote cross-cultural relations and racial harmony in our schools, our communities and places of work.

The primary goal of multiculturalism in Canada must be to achieve real equality for all Canadians in education, employment and all aspects of Canadian society. There must be equal opportunities for people to immigrate to Canada from all parts of this crowded world with fairer access to people from Third World countries. Immigrants must have adequate language training to settle, seniors must not be forgotten, and women must be protected from double discrimination. Visible minority persons must have equal access to jobs and we must remove systemic discrimination in the workplace with mandatory, not voluntary, employment equity.

Multiculturalism must attack all forms of racism with redress for past wrongs and protections for minorities in the present, and from future discrimination. As an example, the Government promised to acknowledge the injustices of the Chinese Head Tax and Exclusion Act and has not done this. There must be appropriate redress for other ethnic communities that also experienced injustices. We have recommended a redress policy.

Finally, multiculturalism should involve a much more conscious promotion in all of us of a Canadian identity which is greater than the sum of our diverse cultures and which supersedes our own particular heritage.

If multiculturalism is to be more than tokenism, we must acknowledge in our Constitution that multiculturalism is a fundamental characteristic of our Canadian nation. Our Constitution lags far behind our legislation and the principles and policies that now are legalized in the Multicultural Act of 1988.

Section 15 of our Charter of Rights and Freedoms is designed to protect minority rights when it states:

> Every individual is equal before and under the law and has the right to the equal protection and equal benefit of the law without discrimination and, in particular, without discrimination based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, sex, age or mental or physical disability.

Section 27 of our Charter also recognizes our multicultural heritage. It states:

> This Charter shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the preservation and enhancement of the multicultural heritage of Canadians.

Many of us thought that this would protect minority rights and preserve the multicultural character of Canada. However we share the growing concern of ethnocultural groups that the provisions of the Charter which I have just quoted may be superseded by Section 33, the "notwithstanding" clause of the Charter, which allows the federal or provincial governments to opt out of these obligations to protect minority rights. I quote Section 33(1) which states:

> Parliament or the legislature of a province may expressly declare in an Act of Parliament or the Legislature, as the case may be, that the Act or a provision thereof shall operate notwithstanding a provision included in section 2 or sections 7 to 15 of this Charter.

Provinces or even the federal Government could opt out of the earlier rights. We are concerned about this.

The Meech Lake Constitutional Accord passed by Parliament in 1987, which has not been approved by all provinces, is seriously lacking in the protection of minority rights. The Canadian Ethnocultural Council has stated their position. They would like to see the following amendments to the Meech Lake Accord either as amendments to the Accord or through a companion resolution having the same force as the Accord: "Recognition of multiculturalism as a fundamental characteristic alongside such recognition given to linguistic duality; guarantee that the Charter of Rights will not be overridden by the Accord; revoking the "notwithstanding" clause in the Charter of Rights, section 33, so that governments cannot override the rights of citizens when they choose."

The report of the Special Joint Committee of the Senate and the House of Commons which was entitled "The 1987 Constitutional Accord" contains our NDP position in a minority report which states:

Multiculturalism

> We recommend that serious attention be given to section 33 of the Charter (and that) the First Ministers should discuss its possible repeal in the (next round of Constitutional talks).

The minority report also refers to Canadian ethnocultural reality as follows:

> During the hearings, the multicultural associations emphasized the reality that one-third of Canadians are of neither English nor French origin. These Canadians have also made an outstanding contribution to our development as a nation. Today they are an integral part of the Canadian mosaic.
> The linguistic duality of Canada has now been recognized in the Accord as "a fundamental characteristic of Canada". The report of the committee states that the ethnocultural diversity of Canada deserves further study. We would go further than this, urging early consideration of the ethnocultural reality of Canada as a fundamental characteristic of our nation.

This, of course, is what this motion does. We would also add the recognition of our founding peoples in any Constitutional amendments.

Modifications to the Charter and a review of the Meech Lake Accord are essential to ensure that the rights of minorities are fully protected, that racism in any form is prohibited, and that the multicultural nature of Canada is promoted and enhanced.

In addition, however, it is important that the nature of Canada's peoples be recognized in the preamble to our Canadian Constitution. This requires reference to aboriginal peoples, reference to the two official language groups, as well as inclusion of persons of other ethnocultural origins. It is essential that our Constitution be modernized to reflect the ethnocultural reality of Canada as a basis for making multicultural policies an integral part of our Canadian culture.

I ask Members of this House and the public at large to support constitutional reforms that reflect the principles in my motion today:

> That, in the opinion of this House, multiculturalism should be recognized as a "fundamental characteristic" of the Canadian nation in the Preamble to the Constitution.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) has introduced a motion that reads as follows:

Multiculturalism

That, in the opinion of this House, multiculturalism should be recognized as a "fundamental characteristic" of the Canadian nation in the Preamble to the Constitution.

Mr. Speaker, we can hardly object to the underlying principle of the Hon. Member's proposal. And after listening to the Hon. Member enumerate all the people, all the groups that make up the Canadian mosaic, we can only support such a motion, or at least we cannot oppose it. All I hope is, and that is often where the trouble starts: When we start adding up various groups, we always forget a few, and that is often where our discussions on the Canadian Constitution hit a snag. In any case, the multicultural character of Canadian society is one of the fundamental aspects of the founding of this nation.

And in fact, last July the House adopted Bill C–93, an Act for the preservation and enhancement of multiculturalism in Canada. The preamble to the Act, apparently the first of its kind in the world, is quite clear.

And whereas the Government of Canada recognizes the diversity of Canadians as regards race, national or ethnic origin, colour and religion as a fundamental characteristic of Canadian society and is committed to a policy of multiculturalism designed to preserve and enhance the multicultural heritage of Canadians while working to achieve the equality of all Canadians in the economic, social, cultural and political life of Canada.

That is where it all started, Mr. Speaker, and I remember very well the discussions we had at the time, when we started to talk about the Canadian people, about race, country of origin, ethnic origins, colour and religion—some people mentioned sexual orientation, as they may, since we are in a democratic Parliament. Some people suggested other measures. Finally, after many discussions, we managed to reach a consensus, at least on those points.

The same Bill C–93, Mr. Speaker, also provides that it is the Canadian Government's policy to recognize, among other things, and I quote:

That multiculturalism is a fundamental characteristic of the Canadian heritage and identity and that it provides an invaluable resource in the shaping of Canada's future.

Mr. Speaker, I think that as Canadians and Parliamentarians, we may be proud that the Government, Parliament and our legislation went as far as they did to state that multiculturalism is alive and well in our society.

• (1420)

However, the motion introduced by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) asks us to do more, more than just recognize the fundamental characteristic of multiculturalism, which the House has already done. The motion also asks us to enshrine that recognition in the preamble to the Constitution. Earlier, in her speech, the Hon. Member mentioned revoking the notwithstanding clause.

When we refer to the preamble to the Constitution, we mean the preamble to the Constitution Act, 1982.

When we talk about the Meech Lake Accord, its purpose was to bring Québec back into the constitutional fold. It was not meant as a review of the entire Constitution. Its primary purpose was to bring Québec back and obtain its signature to the 1982 Constitutional Accord.

When the Hon. Member for Vancouver East talks about adding this to the preamble to the Constitution, we are talking about the preamble to the 1982 Constitution. In fact, during the constitutional talks in 1980, and the Hon. Member is certainly more experienced in this area than I am, because I was elected in 1984, while she was elected well before then, at the time, the intention had been to enshrine in the preamble the great common values shared by all Canadians.

Unfortunately, at the time, governements failed to agree on the wording of such a preamble or on any other item on the agenda.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to tell you about a personal experience. In 1978, before I entered politics, I had been appointed General Director of a School Board. At the time, people were starting to talk about— In Quebec, Mr. Morin had published a book which insisted that the school system should be used as a vehicle for teaching values. It became very fashionable at the time to insist on the fact that the values conveyed by our education system had to be defined. It was as though people had suddenly discovered the facts of life. Meetings were hurriedly organized and we suddenly discovered that our program of studies were pushing no values. We started working in earnest. When the lobbyists who had pushed for schools with values came to see us, we asked them to suggest something.

So we took the "something" they had proposed and we tried to improve on it by consulting people. We started by saying: The first value we should develop in education is quality teaching. That was great! So we started to work on this, so once you have a value, you have to define it. We tried to describe what we felt was quality education. So far so good. But there was another group of lobbyists who said: It is very nice to have quality education, but we should rather say religious quality education. That was another problem. That is when the trouble started. We said: That is fine, but what religion? A quality language education. But what language?

When people start defining things—because while one group was working on quality education, another group was working on religion. Still another group was working on language.

Then, because they did not want to be left behind, the teachers of physical education said: It is all very nice to have quality religious education, quality language teaching, why not also quality physical education? We were stuck and we have been stuck for the past eleven years because we wanted to include all the subjects and all the programs in our definitions. That is where the problem often arises. That is what happened in 1980. When we want to name values, when we want to name multicultural groups, when we want to start defining them, we very often forget some and we leave important items out of this definition. Discussions have been going on for 11 years. Three or four Ministers started to say that we really should define it in a "directive" way, but no one has dared to do so yet.

So after the attempt at unilateral repatriation, the Government of Canada and nine provinces agreed on the 1982 Constitution Act. Nevertheless, when we look at that Act, we see nothing about the nature of the society for which it is the fundamental law. There is no preamble, except in the Charter of Rights which recognizes the supremacy of God and the rule of law. That is the only preamble there is in the law. But the inability to agree on a preamble in 1982 does not mean that nothing has been done to define our basic values. It might be said that instead of starting with a preamble identifying these values, Canadians preferred to proceed in stages, and that is where Bill C-73 came in. In 1982, the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms was enshrined and is now a fundamental value shared by all Canadians. The Constitution has also recognized the rights of Canada's native peoples. The objective of promoting and maintaining the multicultural heritage of Canadians was also affirmed in 1982.

The Constitution also recognizes the importance of regional vitality in Canada by committing Parliament and the Government of Canada to respecting the principle of equalization.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, because my time is up, I am convinced that once such an initiative is complete, the process of ratifying the Meech Lake Accord will win over all Hon. Members, including my hon. colleague from Vancouver East. However, without Meech Lake—and I say this to the opposition parties because they are showing signs of weakening commitment in some quarters and even some candidates are starting to say different things—without Meech Lake, Mr. Speaker, the process of constitutional reform will remain blocked because we will never be able to agree on a whole series of worthwhile things that should be put in the preamble.

[English]

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak today in the House to the motion presented by the Member from Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell). The question that we must address is whether the House should recognize multiculturalism as a fundamental characteristic of the Canadian nation in the preamble to our Constitution.

Canada is a diverse nation with people from around the world choosing it as their adoptive home. We have become recognized globally as a nation that cares about the underprivileged and the troubled. Canada has opened its doors to the world. As a result of the various waves of immigration that have flocked to this country, its face has been permanently changed. At first Canada was home to a diverse array of people who had crossed into North America many thousands of years ago. Aboriginal Canadians have shaped Canada's history and heritage since before the arrival of Jacques Cartier, Champlain or even the Norse that established temporary fishing communities on the shores of Newfoundland.

The following wave of immigration to Canada saw the establishment of French colonies on the East Coast, mainly in Louisbourg, Nova Scotia, in Québec City and in Hochelaga. They were valiant immigrants who laid the foundations of Canada's French heritage. They were the fathers of French Canadian society, which can be found today in all regions of our country. These immigrants worked the land, hunted and fished, in circumstances made difficult by Canada's climate and geography. They laid the foundation on which those who came later would develop and contribute to this country. As part of one of the founding nations of North America, the French pioneers gave Canada its own identity which is unique in the world.

The people of the British Isles provided Canada with its other linguistic dimension. Communities in the Maritimes, Upper Canada, and post-conquest Quebec proved to be of ultimate importance to the evolution of Canada. The British gave this country its political heritage. After all, the institutions of Parliament and the allegiance to the Crown have been given to Canada by its British ancestry.

One cannot separate multiculturalism from the history of Canada. From the outset, we were a country of many different people.

When Canada entered this new century, its characteristics began to change quickly. In addition to the thousands of Chinese who immigrated to Canada to help us complete the CP Railway, there were vast immigrations of Ukrainians, Germans, and Poles. These people were instrumental in settling the western provinces and providing them with a distinct cultural and linguistic heritage.

The arrival of Jewish immigrants from Russia also proved to be an important element in the history of major centres such as Montreal, Vancouver, and Winnipeg. Those people proved to be the lucky ones in that they managed to escape the atrocities of Europe in the 1930s and 1940s.

Canada has opened its arms to those people, and they have had a profound impact on how we view ourselves and how the world looks at us. The potential is there for Canada to be an even better example to the world. We can show that all peoples of all backgrounds can live together in peace and prosperity. It is clear that Canada's multicultural heritage is an instrumental part of the Canadian experience.

It is for this reason that I feel the motion is worthwhile. The constitution of a country is supposed to reflect the fundamental principles upon which it is built. It is supposed to be representative of the people who live in the country. The entrenchment of multiculturalism in the preamble of the Constitution is obviously in the spirit of the document.

There are several problems with the motion presented by the Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell). First, it is not clear where the Hon. Member would like to see the Constitution amended. As far as I can see, it would be inappropriate in the Constitution Act of 1982, or the BNA Act of 1867. In fact, the only place that this would be appropriate would be in amending Section 2 of the Meech Lake Accord to include our multicultural heritage as a fundamental characteristic of Canada. If that is the case then the motion as presented by the Hon. Member would make more sense. In fact, this is the exact position that members of the Liberal Party have taken all along. It was on our list of proposed amendments that we introduced when Meech Lake was before the House of Commons in 1987.

I believe that the Hon. Member for Vancouver East feels that the House should nevertheless adopt this motion because of the positive signal it sends to Canada's ethnic communities, and for this reason I feel it is a productive move. However, I feel as Canadians concerned with the preservation and promotion of our ethnic diversity, we should be concentrating our efforts in other areas.

We should concentrate on promoting greater understanding among ethnic groups in Canada, as well as facilitating the transition of new Canadians into productive and participating citizens. Although the amendment to the preamble of Meech Lake would prove to be a positive symbolic step, it would do little in terms of concrete improvement of ethnic Canadians' standing within our society.

We must work toward the elimination of discrimination in employment practices through a strengthening of the Employment Equity Act. We can achieve greater ethnic harmony through a review of government policy, and through a more effective educational program that will facilitate this end.

Section 27 of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, an historic achievement of the previous Liberal Government, states quite clearly:

> This Charter shall be interpreted in a manner consistent with the preservation and enhancement of the multicultural heritage of Canadians.

I cannot think of any clearer way of articulating multiculturalism in the Constitution than has already been done by former Prime Minister Trudeau.

In July of last year our Party position was to strengthen this aspect, along with the entire Charter, by eliminating the notwithstanding clause of the Constitution. Through such an action, which I am afraid to say the Government has too small a backbone to do, Section 27 would be greatly enhanced and multiculturalism would become an unimpeded element of the Canadian Constitution.

In conclusion, I would like to say that this motion, although not terribly original, is a move that I feel the entire House can and should adopt. The entrenchment of multiculturalism in our Constitution is a gesture that should be welcomed by Members on all sides of the House.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton Southeast): Mr. Speaker, the motion before us today states:

> That, in the opinion of this House, multiculturalism should be recognized as a "fundamental characteristic" of the Canadian nation in the Preamble to the Constitution.

In saluting the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell), and in agreeing with her, I thank her for giving us the opportunity to debate this matter this afternoon. Some years ago I had occasion to work in what I believe is the boundary of Vancouver East at West Hastings and Main Street. I think the Hon. Member is extremely lucky to have that area within her riding. The diversity of Vancouver East is something that every Canadian should have a chance to see.

When jogging recently around the sea wall in Stanley Park, I was fascinated to hear that most of the other joggers were speaking languages other than English. I do not know if that is a comment on people who speak English or on the people who do not speak English as a preferred language.

Mr. Redway: Or on the people who jog.

Mr. Kilgour: Or on the people who jog, as my hon. colleague says.

In South Vancouver I am told that approximately half of the students going into grade one speak a language at home other than English. That, as I am sure the Member will agree with me, shows how important it is to have adequate resources to teach those students or their parents to speak English. Teachers of English as a second language feel extremely strongly about this matter, as I hope all Hon. Members do. All levels of Government must support the teaching of English or French to Canadians by choice rather than birth.

No MP in the House can be unaware of the fact that approximately 38 per cent of our population originate from countries other than France or Britain. I believe in the riding of Edmonton Southeast the percentage is approximately 60 per cent. There are people in that riding from literally every place on earth from Afghanistan to Zaire. I rejoice in that. We benefit from the contribution and the chemistry that is created in a dynamic society such as ours.

I must confess that increasingly the students who are receiving awards are people whose origin is not France or Britain. Last spring the student who received the Governor General's medal at J. Percy Page High School was born either in Hong Kong or Vietnam, and the second top student was also born in one of those two places.

Mr. Redway: They were both girls.

Mr. Kilgour: I am sorry to tell the Hon. Member that they were both the other sex, the minority sex.

We must all encourage a greater appreciation of the unique diversity of racial and cultural heritage shared by Canadians. It is vitally important that we emphasize what we have in common as Canadians; Canadian values, shared experiences, non–violence, understanding and mutual respect, if we are going to achieve the goals of enhanced harmony and economic prosperity for all Canadians regardless of national origin, religion, or cultural heritage.

Cultural pluralism constitutes a vital part of what it means to be Canadian. Mixing socially and in the workplace by Canadians of many races, cultures, and religions bonded by a common citizenship not only fosters social cohesion and national unity, but also creates a climate in which prejudice and bigotry cannot survive for very long. As an Albertan, I could make the comment that many people have said Alberta has a greater problem with bigotry than other provinces. Let me point out that according to a survey last year, there is less bigotry and feeling of racial discrimination on the Prairies than any other part of this country. Like all of us from the Prairies, I rejoice in that.

• (1440)

The number of visible minority Canadians has risen dramatically in major cities in the last decade. It is essential that we provide equal opportunity for them to gain a secure future for themselves and their families.

I am delighted that the new Lieutenant Governor of British Columbia appointed by this Government is someone of origin in Hong Kong and I am delighted that Lincoln Alexander has been appointed by this Government to be Lieutenant Governor of Ontario.

There is a new cultural generation of Canadians. Multiculturalism for them signifies not only pride in personal traditions but also enhanced prospects and opportunities for social mobility and economic security. They are thankfully determined to participate fully in the social, economic and political life of our country. We must help them achieve these goals and develop their full potential. This Government believes in equality of opportunity as a paramount objective of national policy.

Canada has an exciting new feature in multiculturalism policies. We know of the contribution that the many cultural groups have made to the economic and social development of Canada. We must also rejoice in the continuing benefits which flow from the multicultural and multiracial nature of our nation.

Still, too little attention has been paid to the economic dimension of multiculturalism in the past. As a friend of mine, Professor David Bai, has put it: "It is high time that immigrant medical doctors stopped working as unskilled labourers, people with MAs as taxi drivers, and design engineers from abroad as servicemen".

I am extremely pleased about this new growth in multiculturalism as indicated by the motion. Cultural retention remains a very important part of the mandate of any government. The Hon. Member will know that we in the West do not see the issue as being French, English and others. We are all minorities in western Canada and we have what we call permissive differentiation, respect for each other, which I believe is unique to our part of the country. My friend from Toronto will say that it is unique to his part of the country, but I put it to the Member that we knew what multiculturalism was in western Canada before they even knew the word in Toronto, and probably Montreal.

Their entrepreneurial skills, knowledge and energy will enrich Canadians generally and we intend to ensure that they have improved opportunities to make the maximum feasible contribution in every sector of economic endeavour.

We want to enhance the economic strength of Canada's cultural resources in international trade, the expansion of small business, the development of new products and markets, and the continued revitalization of our country's economy in general.

Much has been done. There is still a great deal to be done. In that spirit, I salute strongly the Member for giving us a chance to speak on this subject today.

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to rise and to this motion No. 293 introduced by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell).

What is a nation? What are the aspects that constitute a nation? According to Webster's Dictionary, it is a geography, a physical entity in any part of the world where not only cultural but social, economic and political aspects are considered in that given locality.

It is in this context as we speak today of the Canadian nation, that this Private Member's motion strives to include multiculturalism as a fundamental characteristic of our nation, that I rise with great pleasure.

The Canadian nation is about the Canadian people, those indigenous in the country, born here originally, and those who came after, the immigrants—those of French origin, those of English, Ukrainian, Polish, Jewish, Filipino, Indian origin and others. The Canadian nation is bonded together by the sinews of our diversity.

The character of a nation is and ought to be recognized in its fundamental document, its constitution. We have to recognize that all members of our Canadian society have equal rights and equal responsibilities.

The Meech Lake Accord failed to include an amendment from the Liberal Party that multiculturalism be recognized as a distinct feature of our Canadian society. Since the preamble of any constitution in essence can be considered its soul, the multicultural distinctness of our country has to be included and enshrined in this document multiculturalism as a fundamental characteristic of our Constitution to reassure the eight million Canadians of non-aboriginal, non-francophone, non-anglophone origins that they too are truly part of our great Canadian nation. This is important because multiculturalism is about human dignity. That an individual is honoured, respected, treated and even asked to serve irrespective of race, colour, creed and any physical characteristic.

Multiculturalism is about tolerance, that others not only should allow everyone to pursue his or her own individual aspirations, it should be allowed to be pursued notwithstanding differences in appearance, accent and traditions.

Multiculturalism is about employment equity. It is about affirmative action programs. Affirmative action programs are based on the principle that merit is the basis for employment, irrespective of colour, creed and physical characteristics. Regrettably, today we still see bases of inequities in the Public Service.

The Public Service Employment Act still gives preference to Canadian citizens and not quite equally to landed Canadian immigrants. I submit that immigration is the beginning of citizenship and the privileges of employment should be given to the landed immigrants equally with Canadian citizens.

Multiculturalism is also about equal access to affordable housing and it is also about human rights. Therefore, it was a great disappointment when the Government, despite its proclamation that it is committed to multiculturalism, saw fit in the Budget to reduce the budgetary allocation for multiculturalism. I had hoped that the Government would have introduced a Budget that would allow the growth and strengthening of multiculturalism.

Hence, this Private Member's motion by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East is a signal to us that yes, we must work together as a unified House so that we may promote social harmony, for we are all Canadians in a great Canadian nation. I salute and thank the Hon. Member for Vancouver East in introducing this motion.

Mr. Maurice Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, we have now before us a motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) calling upon the House to ask for the recognition of multiculturalism in the Constitution!

[English]

Mr. McGuire: Mr. Speaker, I rise on as point of order. I would like to bring to the attention of the House the presence in the gallery of the Speaker of the House of Assembly of Prince Edward Island, Mr. Edward Clark. With Mr. Clark is Douglas Campbell and his mother. Douglas just received the Medal of Bravery this afternoon and last Monday Mr. Clark received 77.5 per cent of the popular vote in his riding.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): You have said this is not a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I accepted the Chair's suggestion that I cut my speech short, but if Opposition Members want to nibble at my time, you will understand that although I am pleased to extend that courtesy to the House, I would like to have enough time to make my points clearly.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, we have now before us a motion by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East calling for the recognition of multiculturalism as a fundamental characteristics of our Canadian society.

Multiculturalism, Mr. Speaker, for the Hon. Member's information, is a fundamental characteristic of Canadian society. It is in Québec as well as in Ontario or British Columbia. Last year, for instance, this House unanimously approved the Canadian Multiculturalism Act, thereby emphasizing that multiculturalism per se is a fundamental characteristic of our society. That Act recognizes the pluralistic nature of our society and points to this Government's commitment to ensure the contibution and participation of every Canadian.

Wherever you go, whether it is Montreal, Vancouver or Winnipeg, you will find concrete signs of the importance of muticulturalism in our society. Canada was not built in a day. Our realities are not carved in stone; rather, Canada is a society forever growing! It grew with each new generation, each new wave of immigrants that came here to find a new kind of freedom. It grew because of the experience, customs and values they contributed. It grew, learned and developed socially and economically because it is an open society.

Mr. Speaker, this is what we should and will continue to do if our society is to improve. In my own province of Québec, some people don't quite understand the advantages of a multicultural society and refuse to contemplate, accept and enjoy those advantages. Canadian society is not perfect. It is not immune to prejudice and discrimination. It is questioned by all those who, throughout Canada, would like to go back in time.

Mr. Speaker, some people consider diversity a weakness rather than a strength. They believe that, to be a true Canadian, you must assimilate. They feel threatened by our modern pluralistic society.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind you and all other members in this House that if that attitude had prevailed in the past, the Canada we know would not exist today. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the principles entrenched in the Canadian Multiculturalism Act, including the principle that multiculturalism is a fundamental characteristic of our society, are among those which have sustained Québec and allowed it to preserve its uniqueness.

Mr. Speaker, the values and principles underlying the Canadian Multiculturalism Act, the notion that multiculturalism is a fundamental characteristic of our society, are some of the traits that distinguish Canada from its American neighbour. I cannot see how Canada could survive in an American ocean without the vibrant dimension which French Canada gives it. It is French Canada, it is the fact that we, as Canadians, have built a bilingual and multicultural society, that fundamentally distinguishes our country from the United States. I cannot imagine Canada not respecting its multicultural diversity.

Mr. Speaker, getting back to the motion moved by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) I say to her, as a Quebecer: Let us first finalize the Meech Lake Accord, and then we can consider the next series of constitutional changes. Her motion, although well meaning, is inappropriate. We should undertake now to bring the federal family together and Quebec back into the fold as a proud and full-fledged partner. Let us now ratify the Meech Lake Accord!

Mr. Speaker, this is the message I should like to convey to the Hon. Member, for we have an opportunity, with the Meech Lake Accord, to work together and build a Constitution made-in-Canada which truly reflects our identity.

For this reason, Mr. Speaker, I strongly urge the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Mrs. Mitchell) as well as her Liberal provincial colleagues in Manitoba and New Brunswick not to delay dally any longer, and stop opposing the century old dream of Canadians for a unique Constitution based on participation. With the full and enthusiastic participation of Quebec, we could all get together and create a complete constitutional framework which would reflect the best elements of our Canadian society.

[English]

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Saskatoon—Humboldt): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words on the motion of the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell). I come from a small town in Saskatchewan called Domremy, the namesake of the place where Joan of Arc was born in France. The basic population of the community is French. Some of my neighbours were the original people of Canada.

My parents came from Norway as children and later became Canadian citizens. The type of communities in which we live in western Canada are already multicultural communities. In Canada we decided not to become a melting pot like the nation to the south of us decided to become, but to recognize the differences of the people when they came to Canada as well as the culture of their original nations.

Saskatchewan is the only province in Canada where more than 50 per cent of the population is neither French nor English. In other words, as the Hon. Member from Edmonton pointed out, every group in Saskatchewan is a minority. We decided to become a mosaic rather than a melting pot.

I want to deal for a moment or two with the history of multiculturalism in western Canada. We went through a period of a great deal of friction, a great deal of confrontation between specific cultural groups. We solved that problem, sometimes with a great deal of difficulty. This gave us an acceptance of multiculturalism. Most of the immigrants who came to the West settled into communities and spoke their original language for a good portion of the time. If one travels to Saskatchewan now, one will see that in the West there are still communities in which the people speak German, Norwegian, French or Italian.

We made the adjustment. It was somewhat difficult for western Canada when suddenly one of those groups became more equal than the rest of the groups. It received a great deal of assistance for its culture. We must recognize that culture is very closely related to language. The people of that group received a lot more assistance for their culture as a result of the bilingualism decision taken by the Government of the day.

Western Canadians recognize the founding structure of Canada. They recognize that this was a good reason for having a bilingual country, and a good reason for leaving it that way. However, they do not have and did not have the protection or the recognition that they needed. There was a great movement when the Constitution was brought before the country in 1982 to make it a multicultural Constitution. That Constitution was accepted and we have a recognition of multiculturalism there. I agree with my colleague for Vancouver East, that it would strengthen the position of multiculturalism in Canada if we recognized it in the preamble of the Constitution. I would gladly sit down, Mr. Speaker, if I thought that this would come to a vote.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I am sure you are aware that we started this debate at 2.06 p.m. and I assume we would be going to that time. I wonder if my friend could have a few more minutes if he wished.

The Deputy Speaker: What I did, for the information of the Hon. Member for Vancouver East, as I have had many requests from speakers to speak today, is I have taken the last 15 minutes and divided it up with as many speakers as I could. That is why I have asked the Member for Saskatoon—Humbolt to speak for five minutes. That is why, in that sense, his time has expired. He has agreed to that.

Mr. Hovdebo: Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy, if this House and everyone who has spoken agrees with it, that we would stop a minute before the end of the debate and allow this motion to come to a vote, and consequently, in the opinion of this House, inform the Government that we do think it should be in the Constitution.

Mr. Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I rise to participate in this afternoon's debate, to consider the motion put forward by the Hon. Member for Vancouver East, to the effect that the phrase, and I quote: "multiculturalism is a fundamental characteristic of Canadian society", be included in the Constitution of the country.

I know that I am joined by every Member in this Chamber, when I say that all of us recognize that Canada is a land built by the contributions of people from all corners of the globe. Indeed, the noted economist Barbara Ward has said that Canada is the first international nation.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, last year this Parliament unanimously approved the Canadian Multiculturalism Act. That legislation was led through this Chamber by the Hon. Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State for Multiculturalism and Citizenship, the Member for Pierrefonds—Dollard (Mr. Weiner).

Unanimous approval is not something which we give in this place very often. That it was given in this case shows to me the extent to which Members from both sides in this House, and indeed Members from both sides in the other House, came together to recognize the importance of the parliamentary statements that are contained in that historic piece of legislation.

I would also like to take a moment to remind this House of the co-operative and conciliatory way in which the Canadian Multiculturalism Act was passed through this Chamber. The record is clear, the Government sought to develop and nuture a consensus, and it listened as it promised it would. It made changes to make the Act the best possible one, as it promised it would.

In considering this debate on the motion of the Hon. Member for Vancouver East, it is instructive to examine carefully the Canadian Multiculturalism Act, its Preamble, and its historic Section 3 which embodies the world's first national legislated multiculturalism policy, a policy which is light years in advance of that merely administrative instrument that the previous Liberal Government introduced in 1971, and did not change for some 14 years.

What strikes me about the Canadian Multiculturalism Act that we here in Parliament affirmed was the importance of multiculturalism in our society. We affirmed that our recognition of multiculturalism was founded, indeed rooted, in our constitutional framework, in the Statutes of Parliament and in several international conventions and instruments. I found at the end of the Preamble of the Canadian Multiculturalism Act a very ringing affirmation of how this House feels about multiculturalism. I think that we would all share this today. I would like to take a moment to read it if I may.

The last clause reads:

> And, whereas the Government of Canada recognizes the diversity of Canadians as regards race, national or ethnic origin, colour and religion as a fundamental characteristic of Canadian society, and is committed to a policy of multiculturalism designed to preserve and enhance the multicultural heritage of Canadians while working to achieve the equality of all Canadians in the economic, social, cultural and political life of Canada.

These are very moving words. Members may be aware that they came, interestingly enough, from an amendment brought to this place by the then Member for Thunder Bay, Mr. Epp, on behalf of the New Democratic Party and accepted without change by the Government. I want to emphasize those words "a fundamental characteristic of Canadian society."

I would further want to turn to Section 3 of the Canadian Multiculturalism Act. Section 3.1(b) reads:

> It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Government of Canada to recognize and promote the understanding that multiculturalism is a fundamental characteristic of the Canadian heritage and identity, and that it provides an invaluable resource for shaping Canada's future.

You are indicating that we have time problem, Mr. Speaker.

Parliament has spoken. Multiculturalism has been recognized by Parliament to be a fundamental characteristic of Canadian society. All Members who were here made that affirmation together.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I just want to get to the heart of the matter. The motion by the Hon. Member from Vancouver East is about amending our Constitution. It is a motion about the next phase of the evolution of the Canadian Constitution. I think surely that Meech Lake has to come first.

THE ENVIRONMENT

CANADIAN ENVIRONMENT WEEK AND WORLD ENVIRONMENT DAY

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to draw the attention of the House to two very important events. Today is the first day of Canada's National Environment Week, and June 5 is also World Environment Day.

As a result of its constant urge to create and its desire for economic prosperity, the human race has set off a process that, if allowed to continue in its present form, may well endanger our survival. Everywhere we see signs that our environment is deteriorating: degradation of the ozone layer, global warming, deforestation, declining fish stocks and the desertification of arable land. There are the toxic substances in our lakes and rivers, and air pollution has become so intense in some North American cities that joggers are being advised to train inside during the summer.

[English]

The cold facts of science insist we do not have the luxury of another decade of study, delay and inaction. Together with the international community and with the utmost urgency, we must come to terms with the causes of our deteriorating atmosphere which certainly constitutes the most serious pollution threat in the history of the human race.

We must find the means to continue our growth, and the growth of developing nations but we must, at the same time, change the way we grow.

Let me remind all Hon. Members, who, I know, share my concern about global warming, that half of the carbon dioxide added to the atmosphere by human activity has been added just in the last 30 years. Our generation has accelerated the decline of the environment that sustains us. Now we must work to reverse that decline. We must act individually, nationally and globally to set the world on a development pathway that is indeed sustainable.

While the situation is urgent, there is also cause for hope. As a nation and as citizens of this planet, we are capable of change. We can apply the same knowledge and creativity that have so raised our material standards of living, and so harmed our environment, to finding the means to sustain our economies in a manner harmonious with our environment.

Today we should remember the concept of sustainable development as described in the report by the World Commission on Environment and Development, and the need to translate that concept into decisions and concrete action.

[English]

I also want to pledge again this Government's commitment to developing the means through which economic development is—by law and regulation as well as by individual morality—harmonized with our environment.

We will continue to address these issues at home and at every international forum in which we participate.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we shall also continue to play a leading role as we did when the Montreal Protocol on protecting the ozone layer was adopted and in several other international conventions and agreements in which Canada participates.

At the international level, we occupy a privileged position. We can show the industrialized world and developing countries that a balanced environment is not synonymous with economic stagnation. We can prove that in the long term, there will be more jobs and better prospects for economic growth in a clean environment then a polluted one. We can show how the various groups in a society as complex as ours can, with a little good will, work together to achieve sustainable development.

[English]

Through such new bodies as the Cabinet Committee on the Environment and the National Round Table on the Environment and the Economy, we can make significant progress in the 12 months leading up to next year's important sustainable development conferences in Quebec City and Bergen, Norway. We can accelerate the pace in the three years between now and the 1992 United Nations World Conference on Sustainable Development.

All Hon. Members are partners in this national undertaking. Let us all, working within our Parties, our committees, our provinces and our communities, share in the individual and collective efforts that will bring about real environmental change.

Let us, as legislators, be able to look back one day and say we contributed substantially to setting the world on a new path.

On behalf of the Government of Canada, I invite all Canadians to show their determination by their actions.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I believe these comments on Environment Week are an excellent opportunity for us to examine the new Environment Minister's record so far. This is the Minister who took up his duties five months ago, when he said he was going to do some shaking and moving and thoroughly change the Government's approach to certain projects, from megaprojects like Phase 2 of James Bay on down.

Mr. Speaker, looking back five months later, we have had a lot of talk and rhetoric, but one wonders about the actual power the Minister has. Either he is impotent— If we look at all the projects being developed at the federal level, after the Minister's revolutionary or so-called revolutionary statement, we have to say the Government is either hypocritical or impotent.

I would like to look at a number of issues, for instance—

• (1110)

[English]

The environment—the Minister says "very positive". I could stand and give all the beautiful words in the world as the Minister has done for the last five months. Instead, I would like to examine his record in the Rafferty-Alameda case. He had an opportunity to revoke the decision of his predecessor to proceed with Rafferty-Alameda. He should have carried out a full federal environmental assessment. Instead, he forced the Canadian Wildlife Federation to take him to court. Is it not time in this country for the Government of Canada and not the courts to exercise the rights of individual Canadians to have a full national environmental assessment? In the Rafferty-Alameda case the Minister showed quite clearly that he was prepared to ignore the fundamental precepts of his own law. He is doing the same thing in the Hydro Quebec-James Bay project.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, last week, we heard the Cree explain that almost 25 per cent of the fish now in the waters adjacent to the James Bay Project are no longer fit for human consumption because they contain from two to three, four, five and even six times the amount of mercury they contained at the beginning of Phase 1.

And this is what they asked the Minister, and I think that is perfectly normal: They asked for a federal investigation of the environmental impact of Phase 1 of the James Bay Project.

Last week, the Minister refused to give us, Opposition Members, the assurance in committee that he would order a federal analysis. We know what he said: "Hydro-Québec takes care of that". However, asking Hydro-Québec to analyse the environmental impact of Phase 1 of the James Bay Project is completely ridiculous.

I would like to talk about the rain forest. We all know that in the Amazon, there is a serious problem with the disappearance of the—

I was shocked to discover that in British Columbia the rain forest is as old or older than the Amazon rain forest. It is about to disappear because the Government of Canada, together with the Government of British Columbia, has proceeded over overlogging and overcutting. That has created a situation where we do not have time. Within the next 12 years that precious resource which pre-dates civilization, or so-called civilization in our country, which pre-dates the arrival of Christopher Columbus, and which pre-dates even the arrival of Christ is about to disappear in our own country. It is fine to lecture about the Brazilian rain forests, but we have a job to do in our own country that is not being done.

We have heard a lot about water policy. Yet to date we have no firm water policy coming from the Government. I appreciate the Minister's concern about implementing the Montreal Protocol. It is unfortunate that after he announced in February that he was going to be working immediately on regulations for the Montreal Protocol that he has not done so. We are now in a situation where the Montreal Protocol implementation is at risk because of the negligence of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) in so far as the regulations are concerned.

This week alone the Minister of Energy, who is sitting two or three seats away from the Minister of the Environment, made a statement in support of megaproject subsidies. Time and again we have heard the Government state that it cannot afford to pay senior citizens' pensions. It cannot afford to pay family allowances, and it brought forward a taxation policy which discriminates against families. Yet the Government has no problem in coming up with $5 billion to subsidize megaprojects which are putting the air we breathe and our atmosphere at risk. The Minister continues to defend this stand, along with his partner in crime, the Minister of Energy, at the same time as they are closing down the only offices in the Ministry of Energy that are looking toward the development of alternative energy resources.

I could go on, but I have very little time. It is about time that the Minister of the Environment was called upon to put his money where his mouth is. Next week some national organizations will be coming to Ottawa. They have heard the rhetoric and they have been impressed with the vast promises and the anticipation of the Minister of the Environment, but he has not delivered the goods on every single major issue, including the importation of legal and illegal waste into the country. On Thursday, the very day that I was questioning the Minister in the House, his own officials and his own Government were trying to put the boots to a Washington initiative to put limitations on the exportation of hazardous waste into Canada.

Therefore, let us not only talk about the environment and not only celebrate Environment Week, but also make sure that government policy reflects the type of sustainable development commitment that was originally enshrined in the Brundtland report, and which the Minister is talking about on an ongoing basis.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak on June 5, the World Environment Day and also the first day of Canada's National Environment Week.

Many Members of the House wanted Our Common Future to be played on every broadcasting system in the country on Saturday. Many Canadians could have benefited from an opportunity to view Our Common Future. I would hope if another opportunity does arise that the Ministers of the Crown will ensure that such broadcasting is made widely available from East to West and North to South.

The Minister touched on a couple of matters. I would like to touch on some specifics. There is a great deal that the Minister and the Government can and must do. I issue two challenges today on the first day of Canada's Environment Week, one to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) and to Canada, and one to you, Mr. Speaker, that I will come to in a moment.

In terms of legislation there are a number of things that the Minister of the Environment must do. One is an environmental Bill of Rights. There must be amendments to Canada's Constitution on aboriginal rights to recognize the First Nations as founding nations of Canada. The Access to Information Act must be changed. There is no other field in greater need of access to information under federal law than in the environment. I would hope that the Minister of the Environment will see that the more than 100 unanimously recommended amendments that were made in the Standing Committee on Justice and the Solicitor General two years ago are brought before the House this month.

There must be a full environmental assessment and review. We know that the Environmental Assessment Review Process legislation is complete. It is sitting over at the federal environmental assessment review office and I would hope that the Minister will make it publicly available for assessment and review before bringing it before the House.

On crimes against the environment, Canada's Criminal Code must be amended to take into account the web of offences such as we have learned recently in terms of the addition of things like PCBs into fuel. There were nine million litres blended with gas in the U.S. and Canada and sold to unsuspecting consumers and buyers over the last year and a half.

There must be an environmental auditor. I would hope the Minister would ensure that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) openly supports that very soon. There should be a toxic substances inventory. There are now a 100,000 chemicals moving around in our enviornment. The 44 members on the toxic substances list are not enough. There must be a national inventory.

There must also be a national resources inventory of everything from forests and plants to mammals and fish. That is absolutely fundamental. A store cannot be run without knowing what the inventory is. A country must have a national inventory.

There must be fine-splitting in all forms of federal legislation. It is in the Fisheries Act and it should be introduced into CEPA and into all other federal regulations and law in order that the public knows there is a benefit, whether they are a worker in a facility or someone living in a community, to making sure that the environment is kept clean. That could be accomplished through fine splitting, making sure that those who participate in prosecutions receive half the benefit of the fine brought forward by the court.

There must be whistle-blowers' legislation, something that Parliament has talked about for a long time but must soon do. We have to have a super fund, the same as the United States, to clean up the past errors. Soon enough we will have to make moves on the international scene in terms of an international super fund to start cleaning up areas of the developing world that have been used as toxic and hazardous waste dumps and some other things during this particularly unethical period of human history.

There must be legislative, professional and ethical guidelines, something I will talk about later today. There must be a safe drinking water act. I understand the Minister plans to bring that forward this year. Canadians all look forward to it with bated breath. There also must be a clean air act. I would hope the Minister would move on that. There must be a national Act to protect endangered species.

The Minister knows, despite what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) had to say, that this year there will be $15.8 million less available for Environment Canada than there was in 1984. We are not going forward in terms of the level of funds that are required. We require at least 1 per cent of Canada's Gross National Product directed specifically to the environment. I hope the Minister picks that up later today as his target and that of his Department.

Twelve per cent of Canada's land and marine areas must be set aside for conservation. Perhaps our generation and in fact this Parliament, may be the last to have the opportunity to do so.

It will be a pleasure later today to hear President Kaunda speak. There are many African nations such as Tanzania that have set aside 17 per cent of their land base. Our whole national parks system consists of only 1.3 per cent of Canada lands. Many developing countries have done far better than us.

Let me spend a moment on you, Mr. Speaker, because I issued this as a double-barrelled blow today: One, to the Minister and the Government for things they can do, and second, to the Hill. The very first place that the principles of the Brundtland report must be applied and implemented is right here on Parliament Hill.

The buildings and the grounds are known from coast to coast as a symbol of Canada's parliamentary democracy and should be formally designated an environmentally friendly zone. Every aspect of our operation should conform to the principles of sustainable development. This would entail the purchase of only recycled or environmentally healthy products, the use of unbleached paper products, the banning of plastic cutlery and styrofoam cups from all restaurants and cafeterias, the use of non-toxic cleaning products and the grounds of Parliament Hill should be maintained using environmentally sound pest management techniques. More trees should be planted, buildings and facilities should be examined and altered where necessary to provide everything from the removal of dangerous building materials to secure parking facilities for bicycles. Parliament Hill should become a model of the sustainable community and an example for the rest of Canada and the world, of how Canada's elected representatives can put their own house in order.

BILL C-11

PRESENTATION OF COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. Clément Couture (Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present the report, in both official languages, of the Legislative Committee on Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority.

PETITIONS

PORT OF CHURCHILL DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present two petitions on behalf of the Port of Churchill. They are signed by people from Winnipeg, Ochre River, Makanac, Ontario, Dauphin, Thompson, Russell, Binfcarth, Burchill, Saskatchewan, Penticton, B.C., Beausejour, Pine Falls, Pinawa, Garson, Dencross, Tyndall, Selkirk, Lac du Bonnet, Flin Flon, and The Pas.

In their petition, the people humbly call upon Parliament to ensure that the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board ensures that at least 3 per cent of Canada's annual grain shipments be shipped through the Port of Churchill and the Government aggressively pursue additional ways to utilize this important seaport to ship exports other than grain.

VIA RAIL SERVICE

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and privilege to table a petition that has been certified correct according to Standing Order 36. The petition which is signed by a number of residents in the Windsor area raises their concern about the future of rail passenger services in this country. They humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain, improve and modernize VIA Rail service in those areas of the country where it can provide a more rapid, economical, safe, convenient, environmentally sound and energy efficient alternative to other means of transportation. I wish, Mr. Speaker, the Government would finally listen.

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to present a petition duly certified and signed by residents of Canada in the Windsor area expressing their concerns about VIA Rail and its future. In fact they call for an effective, efficient and economic VIA Rail, a triple-E VIA Rail and I hope the Government will listen to their message.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Parliamentary Secretary to Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 52

CRISIS IN CHINA

Mr. Speaker: I should advise the House that there are applications for an emergency debate from the Hon. Member for Windsor—Lake St. Clair (Mr. McCurdy), the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park (Mr. Flis), the Hon. Member for Edmonton Southeast (Mr. Kilgour) received in that order. I will hear the Hon. Member for Windsor—Lake St. Clair.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, I have already advised you by letter that today I would rise under the provisions of Standing Order 52 to seek leave to adjourn the House for the purpose of discussing a matter of urgent and pressing concern.

S. O. 52

This past weekend the world has learned of events in China which call for a re-evaluation of our relationship with that government, the future of Chinese citizens currently living in Canada on student and other visas and the need for a quick international response. It is our responsibility as parliamentarians to ensure a full and public debate on the options available to Canada and Canadians in response to the widespread violations of human rights by the Chinese Government toward the people of Beijing. For that reason I respectfully request an adjournment of this House for an emergency debate on this important issue.

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 52, I ask leave to propose a motion to adjourn the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely the turmoil in China and the danger it poses to Canadians in China and the consequences for Canada's relationship with that country.

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton Southeast): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 52 and to a letter you have received earlier, I would move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Don Valley North (Ms. Greene), that the House do now adjourn for the purpose of debating the unprecedented crisis and violence in the People's Republic of China.

One of the criteria, Sir, that you must use in deciding whether to allow such a debate is that the matter falls within the ability of Canada to do something about it. Our Government can do a number of things to indicate the outrage of Canadians generally at the senseless bloodbath in the streets of Beijing and horrors which appear to continue as we speak here.

First, there is the safety of all Canadians now present in the People's Republic. I understand that is an estimated 101 diplomats and dependents, 600 to 700 Canadian citizens and the indicated bedlam at the Beijing Airport.

Second, there is our ambassador and other officials at our embassy. Some or all of these could be called back to Canada, at least until the killing stops, in order to show that Canadians are outraged at the treatment of non-violent unarmed protesters.

There is our official assistance, which according to the Canadian International Development Agency as of this morning, last year amounted to $32.5 million in technical assistance and training.

Third, there is the concern of the estimated 360,000 Canadians of origin in China, many of whom I believe reside in your constituency, with both family in Beijing and elsewhere in China where violence is still occurring against dissenting civilians. Canadians of every origin must be fully in support of their fellow citizens of origin in China. There were demonstrations, yesterday, including in Vancouver where approximately 100,000 Canadians of origin in China live. There were demonstrations in Calgary, Winnipeg, Ottawa, and more than 15,000 people in Toronto alone. There are also many hundreds of students of origin in China studying in this country.

• (1130)

You are required, Mr. Speaker, to consider whether the situation constitutes a genuine emergency. No one in any country with a free media can have the slightest doubt as to the severity of the crisis.

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member, but he has gone perhaps further than he needs in the application. I do not need to hear anything further.

First, I want to thank the three Hon. Members who have risen on this matter. All the applications are on the same issue. They meet the conditions of the Standing Order and, therefore, pursuant to Standing Order 52(9) this matter will be considered later this day at eight o'clock p.m.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

I wish to inform the House that because of the Minister's statement, Government Orders will be extended 18 minutes past one o'clock today.

CANADIAN EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVE PROGRAM ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C-19, an Act to amend the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I wish to place before the House today for second reading a Bill to amend the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program Act. The purpose of the Bill is to implement the decision announced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his recent Budget to terminate CEDIP incentives on April 27, 1989, except for certain activities under way or required to be undertaken pursuant to written agreements as of that date.

It is important that we all understand the context in which the decision was taken to terminate CEDIP. Canada has a serious deficit problem. The national debt is growing more rapidly than our national income. Despite some tough measures by the Government over its last term in office, that debt is continuing to grow.

As Members of the House will know, as of April 1, 1989, at the beginning of this fiscal year, the debt stood at $320 billion. The Government has recognized the threat posed by the growing burden of public debt, and the 1989 Budget announced reductions in government spending affecting a wide range of programs including CEDIP.

These budget measures reflect the seriousness of the deficit problem. Tough action was called for in curtailing program expenditures, and difficult decisions had to be made. CEDIP was created in March, 1987 in response to the devastating impact uncertain world oil prices were having on the oil and gas industry in general and the economy of western Canada in particular.

We had announced as a Government the Western Energy Accord early in 1985, and it set in motion a process of deregulating the oil and gas industry within a market oriented policy framework. This was welcomed not only by the oil and gas industry but by those producing areas of the country that knew we had to move toward a market oriented approach.

We also knew the devastation the National Energy Program had on exploration, on incentives, on initiatives, and on investment. We also knew the unfairness of it, particularly in the producing areas of our country.

Step after purposeful step was taken to dismantle the National Energy Program and to lift the weight of government intervention which had stifled entrepreneurial drive. The response from the oil and gas industry was immediate. They were true to their word. In 1985 records were set for industry investment and drilling activity. However, the collapse of world oil prices in 1986 from $30 a barrel to $10 a barrel cut short the renewal which had been taking place.

The Government of Canada was sensitive to the disruption caused by the precipitous fall in oil prices, and industry needed a bridge to get it across the short-term difficulties it was facing. CEDIP was that bridge. A number of Members on both sides of the House were active in developing the terms for that bridge.

It was introduced as a temporary safety net, a safety net designed to assist the petroleum industries and to maintain upstream employment and investment.

CEDIP provided cash when it was desperately needed to stabilize exploration and development activity. The program also provided time for industry to adjust its investment plans to meet market conditions. The program was especially designed to help that part of the sector facing the most difficulty, the smaller and medium sized companies, many of which are Canadian owned. It was for this reason that entitlement under the program was capped at $10 million in expenses per company per year.

I should also say that there has been criticism that this money has gone primarily to the large companies. I can show Members later that that criticism, at least in some measure, is not valid.

Let me describe how events unfolded since the program was announced. Clearly, CEDIP has been successful in its objectives. Current projections are that the program will have provided more than $1.2 billion to industry over its life of little more than a year and a half.

It should also be noted that the Government and those who designed the program were estimating annualized costs of approximately $345 million or approximately $690 million to $700 million over the 24-month period. That cost is now projected to be $1.245 billion over the period of this program, that is, with the passage of this Bill.

The program will have supported over $3.7 billion in exploration and development activity, the bulk of that activity being in western Canada. For 1987 and 1988, the first year of CEDIP and the only one for which the deadline on applications has lapsed, industry will have been provided with $500 million in incentives, $150 million more than anticipated. It is also noteworthy that most of this increase was directed to those applicants spending less than the $10 million annual limit. It bears out that the program has benefited smaller firms more than the larger firms. In fact, roughly 59 per cent of the incentives for 1987 and 1988 will go to below limit applicants, even though such firms accounted for only 25 per cent of total exploration and development spending.

The Government believes that it is a good record, a record of accomplishments for the petroleum sector to which the petroleum sector responded after it had made very strong representations to the Government that it had to move toward a market oriented approach to the oil and gas industry. It has demonstrated the benefits of a less intrusive, more market oriented approach designed toward success.

The National Energy Program has been dismantled, as has the Foreign Investment Review Agency. The market oriented approach is also reflected in the initiative to deregulate gas markets, early removal of the PGRT, and efforts to open markets for oil and gas production.

We intend to stay the course in advancing the agenda begun last term, confident that a market oriented approach will best position industry to meet the challenges that come from the market-place.

What of the health of the oil and gas industry itself? Clearly all is not completely rosy out there in the oil patch. The first quarter of this year was one of the poorest quarters of drilling activity in recent years;that at a time when CEDIP was available. A number of market conditions contribute to this situation, including transportation bottlenecks, low gas prices, and some uncertainty over how well and how long the current world oil price of roughly $20 a barrel will hold.

As well, we have witnessed a major restructuring in the industry through acquisitions and mergers which, in the short term at least, has reduced activity levels and led to a further rationalization of investment decisions.

Nonetheless, over the last few years industry has strengthened its over-all financial position. It has developed a cautious approach in taking on major investments. Many companies have reduced their debt load and have increased the efficiency of their operations through cost reduction and other means. They are better poised today than two years ago to deal with market conditions and to take advantage of opportunities as and when they present themselves.

The Government's policy of non-intervention does not mean the absence of responsibility or a role for government. Indeed, we will continue to work closely with industry in addressing its concerns with the market oriented framework.

However, faced with competing priorities, this Government must also choose courses of action which respond to the national interest. That was the case with the decision to terminate CEDIP.

The termination of CEDIP will save the Government a projected $80 million. We have instituted grandfathering provisions with a view to honouring activities under way or committed to underwritten agreements. This grandfathering regime will cushion the impact of program termination. Incentives will be provided on grandfathered activities through December 31, 1989 when the program will be completely terminated.

The grandfathering regime will help many companies. Yet, we fully realize that by asking the oil patch to contribute $80 million toward the deficit, some companies will have more difficulty than others in adjusting their investment plans accordingly.

What I want to emphasize is that it is money that the companies did not have, money the companies did not have to spend. It was an expenditure of the Government of Canada. I believe when I look at the incentives or the projections as against the total amount invested by the Government of Canada that we have been fair.

We have made the decision to terminate CEDIP. I have said to the oil industry—and I have met with the industry and others in the mineral field—that it was not an easy decision to take but I believe it was the correct one. I have also been pleased with the response of the industry. The industry has been saying that while it would like to see in present circumstances possibly other decisions, it understands the over-all need by the Government of Canada to tackle both the deficit and the debt.

We know that the oil and gas industry would like to have had more notice provided on this decision. We also have to recognize that in a demand driven program, as this one was, decisions have to be made and they require a terminal date. It was for that reason that notice was not given. I think the House understands that as well.

I would thank the House for the time to explain CEDIP and Bill C-19. I would ask the House to demonstrate its commitment to deficit reduction by passing the Bill at second reading.

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on this Bill, because what the Government is proposing is one of the greatest injustices perpetuated on the oil and gas sector in many, many years. I say that knowing of the National Energy Program and that the Liberal Government suffered as a result of it. However, if they listen they will find out exactly what their Government is doing to the energy sector in western Canada.

The conventional oil and gas industry is now going through one of the most difficult times in its history. For the small companies, for the drillers, for the service industry, it is the most difficult time in its history. In the second quarter of 1989 the drilling industry was predicting that 171 wells would be drilled.This was its projection in March—171 wells.

Within one month, the industry reduced that projection by almost 50 per cent, to 89 wells drilled in the second quarter of 1989, which is only 17 per cent of the wells available for drilling in western Canada. That is almost half the number of wells drilled in 1988, which in itself was not a good year. That means that this year over last year, which was not a good year, there will be as many as 6,000 fewer people working in the energy sector in Alberta and Saskatchewan.

In light of that, why was the Canadian Energy Production Incentive Program cancelled? Why was CEDIP cancelled? The Minister stated: "Well, it was not an easy decision but it was a correct one." It was obviously a sudden one for the Minister because he was in Calgary on April 5 of this year and said that this program would continue until the end of the year. Some 22 days later, on April 27, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) in his Budget said that CEDIP was to be cancelled at that very time. It was obviously a very sudden decision that was imposed on the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Epp).

I do not believe that the Minister of Energy would mislead people in western Canada. I think the Government is cutting the legs out from underneath the Minister of Energy and the whole oil and gas industry. We are seeing here an attempt to try to fix in the minds of people in western Canada that everything is going well in the oil and gas sector in western Canada. Nothing could be further from the truth.

The Government states that it is to save $80 million by cancelling the CEDIP on April 27. The drilling sector states that in order for the Government to save $80 million there is to be a reduction in spending of $450 million. They say that $450 million has to be spent for the energy sector to be able to claim $80 million under the CEDIP. One heck of a lot of activity in the western sedimentary basin is going to be cancelled at a time when it looks like there is to be 6,000 people out of work in the oil and gas sector. These reductions are to be in the sectors that can least afford to suffer these kinds of reductions in employment.

The Government is going to state: "Well, we spent $1.2 billion in a little over a year and a half. Aren't we great?" The Minister states that he was to tell us that it was not the major companies that received this funding,we never did receive that information. The Government spent $1.2 billion, over 85 per cent of which went to the large companies.

• (1150)

In fact, 90 per cent of the companies that applied for funding under the CEDIP received less than 15 per cent of the financing. It is absolutely incredible that the smaller companies, which in the Minister's own words were targeted for the benefits of this program, would receive less than 15 per cent of the actual benefits of the program.

If the Government reduced the ceiling of the program from $10 million that would be available for a company to $1 million instead of cancelling it, it could still satisfy 90 per cent of the claims and save 65 per cent of the funding. Yet the Government will not do that at a time when activity in the western sedimentary basin in Alberta and Saskatchewan in the conventional oil sector is at the lowest it has ever been, with projections getting worse each passing day.

The Minister said that he has figures which indicate that the smaller companies received much of the benefits. I am asking the Minister to make those figures public. We certainly cannot get them through the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources because the Government, the Chairman, or somebody refuses to allow the committee to meet.

There have been two meetings of the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources thus far. The first was an organizational meeting. The second was also an organizational meeting which was held because the Chairman forgot to submit the seven names and alternates. Thus we had to have a second meeting to reappoint him as Chairman. That has been the sole activity of the standing committee. What a full calendar this committee has had. What a veritable brain thrust of activities is being contributed by the Government into the very important issue of energy, mines and resources. Of course the Government does not want the people of Canada to know the precarious state of the oil and gas industry at this particular time.

The Minister has said that we do not need CEDIP any more, that prices have gone up. The Minister and the Government know very well that the small companies are having a tremendously difficult time in obtaining funding and that they are still suffering from the time when they borrowed large amounts of money in the early 1980s when the banks were left with some bad accounts. These small companies are having a difficult time raising money. That is why CEDIP was so important.

It was important even though the Government reduced the amount from 33 and one-third per cent last October and stated that it would reduce it again on the first of July to 16 and two-thirds per cent and then cancel it at the end of the year. At least it was something that the small companies could use for a projection. However, to cancel it at the date of the Budget left the small companies without an opportunity to take advantage of the phasing out period.

The Minister and the Government did this when they knew they were obligated under the regulations in the Act to give a six-month notification period of the cancellation of the Act. Yet the Government still cancelled the provisions of this Act at the date of the Budget without any warning whatsoever.

We do not have CEDIP any more. One could say that in its largess the Government has showered the oil and gas industry with opportunity to get out of this most difficult time in which it finds itself. One could say that it has done an awful lot. One could say that there is the Canadian Exploration Incentive Program. One may say that this is marvellous because the companies have the right to make application under CEDIP. However, CEDIP was set up for the mining industry. At the urging of some of the back-benchers from western Canada the Government included the oil and gas industry at the last moment.

However, it created a catch-22 situation for the oil and gas sector. The Government put in place an exploration definition clause which is retroactive. Now a company can drill for oil and gas and actually receive funding under the CEDIP. Later the Government can designate the result as not a bona fide well for exploration and ask the company to pay the funds back with interest.

How many companies will ask for a rebate under the program only to have to pay it back later on with interest? If that is help then it is akin to the sort of help one gives by throwing an anvil to a drowning man.

Let us consider other matters. Perhaps there is something that the Government has done to help the oil and gas industry and in particular small companies. There is in the Budget what is called the large corporations tax. It is a good idea to tax large corporations and make sure that there is something coming in from some of these companies that like to put money where Governments cannot get at it. I think that is good. However, once again in its ignorance of the oil and gas industry the Government has failed to see the damage that it has done to small companies.

The Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion (Mr. Andre) is in the House. He is from Calgary. He does not even know the damage that this measure is doing. If he does not know, what chance does the poor Minister of Finance have in terms of knowing anything about damage to the country and Canadians?

The fact is that if the Minister of Finance knew anything about damage to the country and to Canadians, we would not be in the mess we are in right now with this absolutely Draconian Budget that is devastating the small business sector and low and middle income Canadians.

The Minister of Finance in his wisdom has said that the junior resource companies, as he calls them, are not liable for this tax because it does not affect companies with less than $10 million in corporate capitalization. He says that in complete ignorance of the oil and gas industry. Any company in the oil and gas industry with less than approximately $25 million in capital would consider itself as an emerging player. I do not think it would be enough cash flow to sustain a company.

Independent and small oil and gas companies are small businesses with a capital risk exposure that would be considered insane by a small machine shop, for instance, in southern Ontario. There is no comparison to be made between small oil and gas companies and small manufacturing companies. Yet the Minister of Finance has refused to acknowledge that, or he has not taken the time to find out the differences. The Minister of Finance was the energy critic for his Party between 1980 and 1984. Yet he shows an abysmal ignorance of the oil and gas sector.

The capital base of a small resource producer is entirely different from that of a manufacturing company. The problem is that we now have this taxing of small oil and gas companies when they are not making any money. They are not working because they cannot borrow money. The Government has cut the knees out from under them with the cancellation of the CEDIP and other retrogressive tax measures. They cannot explore or do anything. Yet they are still paying this tax because they are companies with capitalization of over $10 million. What this amounts to is a tax on the assets of the company. It is not a tax on revenue as was the PGRT, which was hated in the oil and gas sector. This is a tax on the very assets of a company.

I wish to quote from a letter dated May 9 written by the Small Explorers and Producers Association of Canada. Regarding the large corporation tax it is stated: "It is really a tax on assets, productive or not, and is more oppressive than the hated tax on revenue, the PGRT, under the National Energy Program". So this is the opinion of the energy sector, of the small companies that the CEDIP program was supposed to help, saying that the Government's policies to the oil and gas sector in western Canada are worse than the PGRT was under the National Energy Program. I can imagine that there is not one company in western Canada which believed it would say that about something this Government was going to do relating to oil and gas, this Government that takes such pride in developing the western accord and the American oriented system.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Epp) says the Government cannot continue to give funding under the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program, under CEDIP, because it has developed an American economy in the oil and gas sector. This is the same market economy that will be financing Oslo, the same market economy that will be financing the Husky upgrader. This is the same economy that presumably will be funding the Hibernia project. This is the American economy of this Government.

When it comes to the majors and multinationals, it is not a market economy. When it comes to jobs in the western sedimentary basin, to the small producers, to the drillers, to the service industries, suddenly it is a market economy in the oil and gas sector. This is absolutely incredible. It is a sham being perpetuated on the small companies, the service industries and drilling companies in western Canada.

What is going to happen with this assets tax which is supposed to be something that the Government feels is not going to hurt western Canada? The small companies that are not generating capital and having to pay a tax on their assets will have to sell their reserves to pay the tax. There we have the master plan of this Government: Get rid of the little companies, the small little companies that are a nuisance that are actually doing one-third of all the drilling in western Canada in the conventional sector. Get rid of them. Have them sell their reserves to the larger companies. The Government will only deal with the big players, the big guys, the ones that count with the Government. Then it will be as the Government's philosophy would have us believe that only the large companies can make it. The small companies cannot make it. The reason they cannot make it is because they are being sabotaged by their own federal Government.

We have seen what the large companies have done. We have seen this only too well. If the small companies are going to be forced to sell their reserves to the major companies, then, of course, there will be failures of the smaller companies and their reserves in the hands of the larger companies. This has been going on since this Government took office.

The Government is saying that the market system that works for the big companies is great and that it will generate more activity. The smaller companies are not drilling because they cannot raise the money. The banks will not give them the funding and the Government is taking away what incentive programs they had.

The question is, why are the large companies not drilling? Why is drilling down? These large companies that are declaring hundreds of millions of dollars in profit every year, why are they not drilling? The Minister stated that prices are supposedly up. So, why are they not drilling? Because they are not exploring for product. They are buying product through mergers. That way they can sit in their offices with their feet on the desk, lay off their geologists and seismic people, reduce their staff, save money and buy product. They just shuffle paper. This saves a lot of trouble. They don't have to get their feet dirty and muddy by going out into the oil patch to explore. They can just sit in their offices and buy and merge.

This is like a big monopoly game for these big boys. They just sit away while people in the service industries and drilling companies lose their jobs or go somewhere else. They can leave western Canada and perhaps go North to the pulp and paper industry. The prices charged by the drilling companies and service industries go down because so many of them have to compete for a smaller chunk of the business. The actual standard of living for the people working in the oil patch, which was improving, has declined. They have to wreck their trucks on poorly prepared roads. They buy their own clothes. They do not sleep in mobile units now. Some of them sleep in their pick-up trucks.

This is what this Government is doing. It is fine for the big companies and the executives, but what they are doing to the workers in the oil and gas sector, Mr. Speaker, is a travesty.

Let me just give some figures of the mergers that took place. We have had six major mergers. There is the three-company merger of Sceptre, Oakwood and SOQUIP which drilled 81 wells in 1987 and 116 in 1988. That group that was up 30 per cent in their drilling. That is one of the two increases. The other one was Husky and Canterra which drilled, in 1987, 154 wells and 185 in 1988. That is not to say what the situation is going to be in the first quarter. In week eight of this year as opposed to week eight of last year, the drilling in 1988 was 10 wells. This year with Husky and Canterra it is one well.

The merger of Amoco and Dome is an indication of what will happen. In 1987, those two companies drilled a total of 315 wells. In 1988, they drilled 256 wells; a decline of 23 per cent in drilling. In 1987, Esso, Sulpetro and Ocelot drilled 743 wells. After the merger in 1988, they drilled 407. That is a decline of 83 per cent. In 1987, Poco and Bonanza drilled 203 wells. Last year, it was 56 wells. That is a decrease of 262 per cent. In 1987, Westcoast and Canadian Roxy drilled 56 wells and last year, 45. That is a decline of 24 per cent.

Regardless of what the companies say when they merge—and they all say that this puts them in a better position to use the lands and to do more drilling—that the tendency is away from further drilling because they have used their resources to buy product. They are not drilling for product.

What about another tax, the Canadian goods and services tax? That is going to be very interesting because this tax is not going to apply for Canadian oil and gas that is exported, but it will apply for Canadian oil and gas that is consumed in Canada. This is something that is going to be very interesting to the consumers of Canada when it finally hits home.

I hate to think that the Government would know so little about such an important resource sector of this country. The Government refuses to realize that by promoting the tendency away from drilling and exploration that it is going to eventually kill the conventional oil and gas sector in Canada, because as the activity is reduced, more and more people are going to leave the oil patch and go into the new pulp and paper activity that is being created in northern Alberta. They are going to go to the labour-short manufacturing industries in southern Ontario. They are going to get tired of sleeping in their pick-up trucks.

• (1210)

The small companies that cannot raise money are gradually going to go under. They are going to have to sell their reserves to pay this asset tax that the Government has imposed. That is not progress, Mr. Speaker. The catchword phrase that the Conservatives used between 1980 and 1984 was that the Government was picking winners and losers, when referring to the former Liberal Government. That is exactly what the Tory Government is doing right now. It is putting big bucks in megaprojects, and I am not opposed to that. If the Government wants to finance megaprojects that is its choice, but it should not be done at the expense of sabotaging the conventional oil and gas sector. The present Government criticized the former Liberal Government for diverting activity away from the conventional oil and gas sector, from the western sedimentary basin, and this is exactly what the Government is doing now, and to an extent and at a rate that was unprecedented during the National Energy Program.

The activity in the western sedimentary basin was never as low or as bad during the National Energy Program as it is today. It is still getting worse. How long can the oil and gas sector even keep a fraction of its employment if all the major companies are going to buy the reserves instead of exploring for reserves.

I cannot accept the absolute decimation of the oil and gas sector in western Canada. It is completely without any feeling on the part of the Government. Then I say to myself that feeling about people and about the regions of the country is not something the Government is very strong on. I know first-hand what the Government has done to Atlantic Canada.

I can only hope that the Government changes its ways, that it puts back the CEDIP program with a ceiling of $1 million, services 90 per cent of the applications, in particular those from small companies, that it gets some activity going in the western sedimentary basin, stops stifling this activity and stops promoting higher levels of unemployment in the oil and gas sector. The only hope that we can possibly generate is that Members of the Government are going to change their minds because what they are doing now is counter-productive to the process and counter-productive to a healthy oil and gas sector in western Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I wish to advise the Hon. Member for Edmonton East that we are on Standing Order 74. The first three speakers will have 40 minutes with no questions or comments, then after that we go into an eight-hour debate with 20 minutes plus 10 minutes for questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Edmonton East has 40 minutes.

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I am still learning some of the intricacies of this institution and I appreciate your advice.

I am pleased today to rise in the debate on Bill C-19 which, in the view of some, would prematurely conclude the life of the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program Act. At the outset, I am delighted that the Minister responsible appears to intend to stay in the House for the entire debate. That is commendable, and I congratulate him for doing so. I would note with some astonishment that the only Members of the Standing Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources present for the debate are the Opposition Members.

Mr. McDermid: Order!

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): That is an observation on who is present, not on who is absent. I thank the Hon. Member. I find that absolutely astonishing. However, perhaps that is in keeping with the record of the committee to date.

CEDIP was first introduced effective April 1, 1987 to help the oil and gas industry overcome the decline in oil and gas prices and the impact of that decline on employment and investment, particularly in western Canada.

The second half of the 1980s have not been kind to Alberta in particular, and the western sedimentary basin generally. Living in Edmonton, I have seen the effects of the precipitous decline in oil prices at the time when Canada under Conservative Governments, federally and provincially, chose to go to a deregulated market. I have seen neighbourhoods devastated by unemployment. I have seen my own friends forced to abandon homes and move elsewhere. I have seen small businesses go bankrupt because communities they served no longer had the money to buy in those small businesses. I have seen what amounts to a devastation of entire communities in Edmonton, devastation which I am certain was reproduced throughout the Province of Alberta.

I have certainly seen an operating deficit in the provincial Government of Alberta, something which would have been inconceivable in the early part of the 1980s. I have seen the operating deficit in the Province of Alberta accumulate to somewhere between $6 billion to $7 billion in the fiscal year concluded March 31, of this year. We are looking forward to a provincial budget in Alberta on Thursday. Goodness knows what type of deficit we will find then, all because of the collapse in prices and hence the collapse of royalty and taxation revenues from the oil and gas sector.

There is no question that CEDIP was introduced to address the carnage in the oil patch and in the gas exploration industry occasioned by the collapse in prices. That is why all three political parties supported the Bill when it was introduced, and co-operated fully in ensuring its quick passage on June 10, 1987. The Opposition did chide the Government for taking so long to introduce it, given the devastation in the oil patch at that time, and pointed out that the Bill was in conflict with the Government's market-place ideology. I am certain that is a point that will be emphasized from time to time today.

As reported at page 6971 of Hansard, June 10, 1987, our then energy critic, the Hon. Member for Port Moody—Coquitlam (Mr. Waddell) stated:

> I should like to say that I am cautiously optimistic that the Bill will work. It favours smaller companies. It focuses on grants rather than on tax incentives, allowing some of the smaller companies which do not pay taxes to benefit. It acknowledges the plight of small oil companies as a national issue. It is a national problem about which we all must talk.
> It is still short-term. The long-term solution is to diversify the western economy—no mean feat but something which must be done—away from total dependence upon oil, but oil being a major part of it.

At the introduction of the Bill in 1987 it did enjoy the support of all Members in the Commons, and rightly so. It was a response, in part at least, to the devastation that gripped Alberta and the western sedimentary basin in general.

The point I wish to make today is that that devastation has not subsided. If anything, it has deepened. We all know that the price of oil in the last little while has gone up. The West Texas intermediate price has continually hovered around $20 a barrel. We also know that that has not translated into increased exploration and drilling activity in the western sedimentary basin. We may speculate as to why that is the case. The chief speculation seems to be that no one believes that price is going to stay there. Everyone believes that drilling undertaken now simply would not be economically sustainable.

I am in no position to quarrel with that estimation by the patch. I assume it to be correct. I assume that on the basis of straight forward market economics there is no good argument for extensive drilling and exploration at this time. It is the same situation as in 1986 to which CEDIP was the response in 1987.

Rig utilization was at a decade low in 1986 immediately before CEDIP was introduced. Only 35 per cent of the available rigs were drilling. In 1987 rig utilization was 37 per cent rising to 41 per cent in 1988. There is no question that CEDIP, and also some of the provincial programs did have a positive effect in the patch. For that the Government is to be commended. I congratulate the Government on that.

• (1220)

Spring is traditionally a time of low utilization. This spring has been much worse than expected. The president of the Canadian Association of Oil Well Drilling Contractors, Mr. Brian Krausert—by the way, hereafter in my remarks I will use the abbreviation of that organization, CAODC—recently stated the following. This is from the Edmonton Journal of May 26, 1989:

> We have just come through the worst period in our recorded history. The spring has been truly ugly.

At the end of May only 84 rigs were drilling in western Canada, a 60 per cent drop from the same period last year, a plunge the CAODC estimates has cost 17,000 direct and indirect jobs in the oil patch. Do not forget that this comes on top of 25 to 40,000 jobs lost as a result of the carnage of 1986.

The projections for the summer of 1989 were grim even before CEDIP was ended. CAODC forecast that only 40 per cent of rigs in western Canada would be drilling in the first quarter of 1989, only 29 per cent, about 153 rigs, in the second quarter, 28 per cent in the third and 48 per cent in the fourth. That was before the Budget and before CEDIP was prematurely ended. After the announcement that CEDIP was to be ended ahead of time, Don Herring, the managing director of CAODC said that even these low estimates would have to be revised. The Calgary Sun of May 12 states:

> Now we will have to revise that figure downward.

Many companies are on the brink of bankruptcy and many oil and gas producers are holding back until June's OPEC meeting on quotas and prices hoping against hope that some firm commitment by the world's oil producers will be made to raise and hold up the price of oil, and hence of gas, at a level which will result in economic drilling activity in the western sedimentary basin. I must say that hope seems not to be shared by the forecasters in the majors and is perhaps a hope, we pray not, but perhaps a hope doomed to be dashed as a consequence of the results of that OPEC meeting.

The early cancellation of CEDIP simply means less activity and fewer jobs. There can be no question of that. The early cancellation of CEDIP represents the withdrawal of a planned $80 million investment in the western sedimentary basin. CAODC estimates that the maximum impact of this could be a decline in activity of a further 50 rigs representing a loss in employment of up to 1,500 people on the rig floor and up to 3,700 jobs at the lease.

I was interested earlier this morning to hear the remarks of the Minister when he said—I believe I have got this quote correct—"I have been pleased with the response of the industry". Now perhaps the Minister was speaking of a certain sector of the industry but that part of the industry with which I have been in contact has conveyed to me a response which I had assumed would not please the Minister, unless the Minister is enamoured of truly negative responses. For example, the Small Explorers and Producers Association of Canada wrote to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to express their concerns about the Budget and the early elimination of CEDIP. In their letter of May 9, Corey Heerensperger, the chairman of the SEPAC stated that:

> The abrupt termination of the CEDIP program by the Government, which will be borne solely by the independent Canadian junior oil company, and the introduction of new taxes on the industry have eliminated at least $250 million in planned capital investment in the conventional oil and gas industry. It puts in jeopardy thousands of jobs in small exploration and producing companies as well as the service sector that conduct about one-third of the activity in the western Canadian sedimentary basin. It is unfair—

The thing we must bear in mind is that the cancellation of the CEDIP program now, the lack of any replacement for it either at the federal or provincial level, and continuing hard, low prices for oil can only result in the dismantling of the exploration and development industry in the western sedimentary basin.

That is not going to greatly hurt the oil majors that are continuing to reap substantial profits out of Canadian energy. There can be no doubt, when the price collapse hit in 1986, they simply transferred their profit-taking from their upstream operations, their oil patch operations, to their downstream operations, their refining and sales operations. The oil majors in consequence have not suffered greatly in the face of this devastating collapse of Canadian prices. There is no reason to believe they will suffer now. They have been able to maintain the very high pump price for gasoline in Canada that is the source now of their profits.

That cannot be said of the small independent Canadian companies that constitute the bulk of the companies engaged in exploration and development in the western sedimentary basin. They are going to be hit harder still in the face of the cancellation of CEDIP. They are going to go out of business. Thousands of jobs will be lost. Expertise will be lost. Capital equipment will be lost. These things will not be easily replaced. If I can issue one warning to Canada in this debate today, it is this. Beware of allowing the skill and capital that exists in the oil exploration and development industry in western Canada now to be eroded or lost because it will be needed again. There will be a time when again it becomes economic to explore and indeed becomes necessary for Canada's energy security to explore, and thus rebuild the industry at that time from the paucious level to which it will have been forced.

It will be an extremely difficult and expensive proposition. We can avoid that in the future by maintaining what we have of the industry now. But in the absence of effective price supports, the only way we will be able to maintain that industry is through some kind of public support.

Whether or not a government is ideologically opposed to such support, to such intervention, is utterly beside the point. The question before us is the maintenance of an effective Canadian energy industry. That is the only question before us and the cancellation of CEDIP does nothing to maintain such an industry. In fact it actively harms that industry.

It is not just a question of the impact on the industry. It is not just a question of how oil patch workers and small independent Canadian companies feel about that elimination. They are indeed distressed by the elimination of CEDIP but I think they are also perhaps even more annoyed by the way the Government went about the elimination.

I would once again note the program was originally announced with much hoopla by the then Minister of Energy, Mr. Masse, in Edmonton on March 25, 1987. He announced that the program would start on April 1 of that year at a rate of 33-1/3 per cent. On October 1, 1988, the rate would drop to 16-2/3 per cent and the program would eventually terminate on December 31, 1989.

Then came the run-up to the federal election. The Conservatives made announcements relating to Hibernia, Lloydminster, OSLO and the Vancouver Island pipeline. Small producers and Alberta MPs, we presume, joined together at that time to pressure the Government to modify the program which was about to decline in value to give conventional producers in the western sedimentary basin a wee bit of the sugar that was being sprinkled liberally over the other projects. By gosh, that announcement was eventually made. It was made by the Minister, who on September 30, 1988 announced that the program would be phased down less rapidly than originally announced. On October 1, 1988, the rate dropped to 25 per cent rather than 16-2/3 per cent and the drop from 25 per cent to 16-2/3 per cent would be delayed until July 1, 1989 and that as planned, the program would continue until December 31, 1989. This announcement made it possible for the Minister to claim:

> This—(delayed phase-down) will inject a further $80 million into the oil and gas industry.
> This revision will lead to an estimated 300 additional wells and will maintain 1,600 "oil patch jobs".

However, this extra $80 million announced in September before the election was taken away entirely when the Budget was announced last month, after the election. What was given one day was taken away the next, the principal intervening factor apparently being a successful election campaign.

• (1230)

This blatant manipulation was not well received in the oil patch. As was noted in a letter from Corey Heerensperger, Chairman of SEPAC, to the Minister of Finance on May 9, 1989:

> Based on the Government's November election platform, we were shocked by the manner in which CEDIP was handled. Although the Minister of Energy told the industry in Calgary on April 5, 1989, that CEDIP would end (on December 31, 1989) as planned, this budget terminated the program three weeks later in spite of a negotiated clause in the CEDIP Act that was to provide six months notice of such a change. This action is hardly the encouragement needed to create more investment in western Canada. It is unfair—

I feel somewhat compelled to offer a small warning to my friends on the government benches. Manipulating programs, fudging rules, and not telling the whole truth is an approach to politics that the people of Canada will not tolerate for long. It is a very serious matter when the Government of Canada tries again and again to fool the people who elected it. As has been correctly observed, one can fool some of the people some of the time but keep it up and try to fool all the people and one will find oneself in trouble.

The cancellation of CEDIP will unquestionably hurt Alberta particularly and the western sedimentary basin in general. Even allowing the contention that "the deficit made me do it", the Government may have forgotten other alternatives that should have been entertained. If the Government really felt that cuts had to be made, even after announcing the extra $80 million just before the election, the alternative approach of restricting the cap on the program, which is to say the maximum amount of funds any one company could receive rather than the proportion of expenses that could have been claimed back, deserved serious attention.

I do not know whether or not it was accorded serious attention.Perhaps someone sitting opposite could tell us that, but I would be most interested to learn the reason that proposal was rejected if indeed it was considered. It would have allowed the benefit of the program still to obtain where it was most needed, among the small producers and explorers, while cutting back on the over-all expense of the program if that was the principal concern.

I note that in the national context again we see that the energy market as such is not serving the needs of the Canadian energy industry. It is not serving the needs of the workers employed in that industry. It is not serving the long-term needs of the consumers who buy the products created by that industry.

The market is serving to destroy the exploration and development industry in western Canada. It is serving to eradicate the Canadian section of the industry. It is serving to foster non-productive mergers which in fact are further restricting exploration and development. It is serving to maintain artificially high pump prices in the face of low upstream prices so that the profits of the majors may be maintained at comfortable levels.

The market is not serving the Canadian people. The market is a hindrance. It is a positive problem for the Canadian people. It is only when we understand that we must regulate the energy market for the sake of the people who work in it, for the sake of the people who buy the product, for the sake of the long-term energy security of this country, that we will finally reach a point where we will not have to debate such matters as an incentive program here in the House of Commons and where they will not have to undergo such continuous debates in the Alberta legislature.

What I am saying, as I have been saying long before I was elected to this Chamber, is that we must have a regulated floor price for Canadian energy in Canada. That is the only long-term equitable solution to the problem of price fluctuations that will again and again, if left unchecked, devastate the industry and cause the massive waste of capital.

I realize that it is most unlikely that the Government will agree with me today, however forcefully it might find I have made my remarks, but I would hope by continuing to make the argument in this Chamber I will, over time, contribute to a glimmer of recognition emerging on the benches opposite that perhaps there is reason behind this argument. Perhaps it is in the nature of the Canadian Confederation and its peculiar economic imperatives to require a regulated energy market. Perhaps the free market mythologies that so exorcize our good friends to the south are not directly applicable here in what has been called the northern empire.

This is a debate that will be carried on for some time yet. Perhaps I can just conclude my remarks by noting that this premature cancellation of CEDIP caught the industry unaware. It is a disservice to the industry, will accomplish nothing of positive value, and will actively harm Alberta and the western sedimentary basin. Therefore I would urge all Members to vote against it at this second reading.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Now that we have concluded the first three speakers, we will now enter eight hours of debate with 20-minute speeches and 10-minute periods for questions and comments.

Mrs. Diane Marleau (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I am here today to speak to Bill C-19, an Act to terminate the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program Act. That program was put into place by the Conservative Government in 1987 to help small and medium sized firms in the oil and gas industry. The major objective was to encourage exploration and development of new reserves at a time of low world oil prices during a very difficult time for the industry.

I want to quote from Hansard on June 10, 1987, when the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources at that time spoke to the Bill. He said:

> It will address the devastation experienced by the oil and natural gas producing provinces because of the drastic drop in world oil prices.

It did, by and large. Perhaps the Government is saying that now that prices are up—approximately $20 a barrel—

An Hon. Member: They are.

Mrs. Marleau: But these prices certainly were not driven upward so much by market factors as by incidents such as the Exxon Valdez oil spill.

The industry has no confidence. No one in the industry believes the current price of $20 a barrel will be maintained. Therefore, there is no incentive for investment in the industry.

CEDIP is being cancelled at a time when capital expenditures in the oil and gas industry are at a very low peak. The Government is saying that it is going to be saving $80 million. What are the long-term implications of this saving when we consider that the spending of $80 million in this case would generate $450 million in expenditures in the gas and oil field? That means jobs, and jobs mean tax dollars.

When we look at the effect of these investments and the spin-offs, don't we perhaps think that the $80 million is not being saved at all? Actually, if we had invested the $80 million, we would be returning to the Government by way of tax dollars as much as the original investment.

It is not only that. Let us consider the impact on unemployment that will happen out West. Unemployment will rise. It will be a far bigger cost to this Government, although at this time the Government is saying it is pulling out of unemployment insurance. However, the cost in terms of Government assistance is devastating to any region. When one comes from a region such as northern Ontario, such as I do, one knows what happens when there is massive unemployment. We all know the cost, not just in terms of dollars but in terms of social costs. I would not wish that on any other area of the country.

It appears as if this Government is a Government of big business only. Let us note that all the promises and all grants in the megaprojects are intact. This is good, however, those grants benefit the large multinational corporations. What about the backbone of Canadian business, which is the small businessman? What about that small businessman? Do we have to sacrifice him at all costs? When we have a large corporation, especially in the gas and oil field, it can afford to move their operations to other countries where the business is more profitable. It can afford to wait.

What about the people? How do you explain that to the people of the western provinces? How do we say to them "you belong to this country also" when they are being ripped off and when the jobs are going? It is a very difficult time. I do not understand why this Government is cancelling CEDIP. It could change it so that it would cost it a lot less and benefit as many people, especially the small independent businessman and the small business person out there. Not only is the Government going to cancel this program, but it is also bringing in the tax on large corporations. In the gas and oil industry, $10 million is not a lot of assets. That is a small corporation in that respect.

These small companies will not be compensated for the huge amounts of up-front capital investment that they are obligated to make to go into the business in the first place. As a result, many of them will go bankrupt. Many of them will just choose not to go into business at all. Therefore, it would all fall back on the large multinational gas and oil corporations.

I am wondering why—and I realize that it has nothing to do with the Hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) but that it has everything to do with this Government—the Energy, Mines and Resources Committee has had nothing but two organizational meetings. Is it because this Government feels that it is not interested in hearing what the people of Canada have to say about energy, mines and resources? It is appalling. As a new memberI cannot understand it. Other standing committees have met many times. Most of these standing committees have at least dealt with their Estimates.

There has been absolutely nothing, and no formal meeting is scheduled before September. Over and above that, there are no members on this committee from the government side who have been on that committee in the past.

Is it a signal by this Government that it wishes this committee to be ineffective? It is certainly being ineffective the way it stands now. I would certainly request that it perhaps gives some incentive to the chairman, who is a member of its side of the House, to call a formal meeting as quickly as possible. If the chairman is not capable or is not here to call a meeting, then it should ask its vice-chairman to call a meeting as quickly as possible.

It is extremely important that we not neglect—

An Hon. Member: You want to ask the Minister to stay out of this.

Mrs. Marleau: I did not ask for the Minister to stay out of this particular committee. I asked for the Government to instruct its committee, its chairman.

At any rate, it is extremely important that the committee meet as soon as possible. Considering that the chairman and vice-chairman of the committee belong to that side of the House, I think it might be in order.

I would certainly like to see CEDIP reintroduced, at least with a lower ceiling of $1 million per company. This would satisfy 90 per cent of the applicants and save the Government 85 per cent of the cost of the program. Perhaps the deficit could be helped in that way and still help the people in the constituencies out West. Believe me, when it comes time for another election, they will remember and they might be grateful if they could perhaps be given a bit of a boost, especially the ordinary, every day small producer.

Let us not heighten regional disparity. That is what this Bill does. I believe that the Government knows this. Perhaps that is why, on April 5 or April 6 when there was a speech by the Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Epp), he stated that the Government would not terminate this agreement before December 1989 and that it would honour its commitment.

Not only did the Government not honour its commitment, but in effect it cut off the program as of April 27, despite a negotiated clause in the agreement that said that it would give them some six months' notice before terminating this agreement. It seems very strange to meto negotiate a clause of some kind that states "we are going to give you six months, fellows, to let you know well in advance" and all of a sudden, bingo, it is gone. It is not fair and it is not right, especially when the need is there, and the need is definitely there.

The Government is encouraging the megaprojects. I do not have anything against that. What I am against is the fact that we are forgetting the average Canadian. I would encourage this Government to change its way of thinking.

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Hon. Member if she has taken the time to look into her particular constituency of Sudbury, as I have in mine, just to see the industries that support the oil patch, how many of them are small and medium sized businesses, and the importance of the economic spin-off from energy.

In the riding of Brampton, for example, there are 52 companies. Most of them are small and medium sized companies which supply the oil patch with everything from furniture to valves, to widgets, and so on .It is a fascinating study.

I heard the Hon. Member talking about the megaprojects and how they affect the big guys, how they get all the good things and the little guys do not. My experience has been that the spin-offs from those megaprojects do in fact filter down to the small and medium sized businesses right across this country. I just wonder if the Hon. Member has looked into that matter in her particular constituency.

Mrs. Marleau: Mr. Speaker, my idea is to keep the thing going. That is why I am against cancelling CEDIP. In my area I have some experience as to what happens when grants are cut off to the small producers and the small explorers.

In the mining sector, which is what I am comfortable with, when we cancel incentive grants to small explorers we allow the large corporations to buy up all of the work that has been done by the small corporations and to stockpile.

These large corporations do not have to spend their money in a certain area if there is nothing going on in that country. They can afford to move their explorations to Indonesia or wherever they will. There is no guarantee that they will keep those jobs in the area. There is no guarantee that if they are not producing very much in that area they will purchase anything in that area. There are absolutely no guarantees.

I can tell all Hon. Members that the small explorers and the small business people are far more productive and more cost efficient than the companies which engage in large megaprojects. There is a much larger spin-off from every dollar that these small explorers spend in a community than the large megaprojects that in fact have not started up yet. There have been some announcements regarding them but they have not started up.

I like big corporations. However, I believe the backbone of the country is the small business man and the medium business man, not the large corporations that bail out as soon as they are not making a profit big enough. Large corporations only believe in huge profits; the bigger the profit, the better. That does not mean they believe in people. They believe in profits where they can get them, be it in Indonesia, China, or wherever. That does not guarantee jobs in an area.

I want to see every area of the country benefit, not just certain rich areas like Toronto, Vancouver, and Montreal. That is why I am fighting this measure. I believe the Government is forgetting one thing, that is, what Canadians are all about. It is not big companies but ordinary people who work hard and deserve more consideration than the Government is giving them.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether in view of the hour you would call it one o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Government Orders will be extended until 1.18 p.m. because of the Statements by Ministers. The Hon. Member will have plenty of time to finish his speech.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, in discussing Bill C-19 I must note, having listened to the Minister's speech, that even his best friends could not claim that he felt very inspired, very sure of himself, or really very motivated. He sounded unusually flat. He sounded as if his heart was not with the measure.

Strangely enough, I did not hear him making even one reference to the environment, not one reference to sustainable development. He certainly was concerned with the Budget. He certainly was concerned with market oriented approaches.

It seems to me that a Bill of this importance has to be dealt with in the context of the economy and in the context of the environment. The three are closely linked. As you know, Mr. Speaker, each one has an impact on the other two.

The importance of Bill C-19 is in what it does not say. It is important because it is surrounded by a vacuum. It is important because, as we debate it, Canadians do not know what is our long-term energy plan. Therefore, there are some questions that I would put to the Minister which need to be answered within the context of Bill C-19.

For instance, how long does the Minister think we can go on relying on fossil fuels while at the same time by the use of these fossil fuels, coal and oil mainly, we pollute the atmosphere with carbon dioxide? We do this in the full knowledge of what that carbon dioxide does in terms of strengthening the greenhouse effect which in turn is reinforcing the trend toward global warming. Cancelling the exploration subsidies in the North, as is implicit in Bill C-19, is no doubt a welcome move in a sense although it was inspired not by environmental reasons. Does this mean that it is an implicit invitation by the Government to rely more on fossil fuels developed south of 60? Is that what it means?

Why in the name of fiscal responsibility does the Government cancel one subsidy for fossil fuel development while at the same time, as we learned today from the media, the Government and the Minister are vigorously defending massive subsidies to fossil fuel megaprojects? The two do not gibe in terms of long-term policy. There has to be an explanation given. If something has to stop subsidized fossil fuel development for the sake of the Budget, why not then cancel the very large commitments made to Hibernia, OSLO, Lloydminster, and the Vancouver Island gas pipeline which require investments not by the hundreds of millions but by the billions? There is here evidently a contradiction.

Does Bill C-19 mean an implicit invitation for the construction of more dams, more nuclear power stations and more CO2 pollution from coal fired electricity generation south of 60? Why is this Bill introduced in the House in a vacuum, without a framework, without any of the ideas as to what Canada's energy future ought to be? Why therefore is the long term not on the Government's agenda? Does the cancellation of exploration subsidies mean that the Government intends to put in its place a policy of subsidies for renewable sources of energy?

After the decimation of what was in place until November 1984, which resulted in the cancellation of $40 million at the National Research Council alone on renewable sources of energy, it would be quite a conversion on the road to Damascus. We would like to believe that to be possible for the sake of the public interest.

Does Bill C-19 mean that with this Bill the Government is ready to move with energy efficiency, with energy conservation, intended for instance to capture that 30 per cent in efficiency on Canada's part as pointed out by the International Energy Agency, which sponsored an event attended by the Minister last week in Paris? Or, is this Bill the only policy thought necessary at this point in time, unfortunately by a Government which is myopic, which is preoccupied with the short term, which is obsessed by a deficit and incapable of giving Canada an energy policy that takes the environment, the climate, human health and the long-term costs into consideration? These are the questions that we would like the Minister to answer when presenting Bill C-19.

When I speak of the word "costs"in the context of this debate, what I meant is the cost to our economy if we do not succeed in slowing down the climate warming trend, the so-called greenhouse effect, coming about as a result of the pollution produced through the burning of oil, coal, and the like.

Such costs, as we know, could be immense. There would be public works to protect Canada's coastal cities from rising sea levels, agricultural land becoming desertified as a result of gradual increases in temperature, forest acreage lost because of fires triggered by warmer weather and inevitable changes in the species of trees brought about by new climatic conditions.

It seems to me that in this policy vacuum, we are running the risk of being lured into embracing the nuclear option. We know what that entails. It entails risks. It has unresolved health questions and implied high costs. We know the Darlington nuclear station was originally scheduled to cost just over $7 billion. Then the cost jumped to $11 billion. Last week, we learned that it is now at $13 billion. We do not know yet the cost of permanent disposal of nuclear waste, the cost of decommissioning reactors and, as lately discovered and reported in an article in The Financial Post a couple of weeks ago by Stephen Probyn, the hidden subsidies in the form of unrealistically low discount rates for the capital invested in such plants.

To resist the nuclear sirens, so to speak, we must launch energy efficiency drives and renew the drive on energy conservation. We must do that because by postponing every year our ability to achieve the efficiency that other nations have achieved and in capturing the 30 per cent of energy losses incurred, as reported in a study conducted by the International Energy Agency, we incur substantial costs. Why such a drive is not initiated by this Government is very difficult to understand. Is it lack of vision, inertia, or is it both?

Why is this Government approaching energy policies in such a piecemeal backward manner? Why does the Minister of Energy go to Paris rather than Calgary to make a statement—and I quote from his speech of May 30 which he distributed a few days ago. "While we are firmly committed to a market-oriented policy, we recognize that in its pure form, it cannot deal with so-called external environmental effects of economic activity". Why did the Minister not quote his speech fully instead of just half of the statement he made in Paris? The speech was quite interesting. He had the courage to make this statement abroad, but he does not have the courage to make it in Canada.

At the same meeting of the International Energy Agency, the Minister also said on May 30, and I quote: "We must pursue energy policy solutions available to us today such as energy efficiency improvements, while at the same time promoting sources of supply such as renewables".

Did we hear anything about it today? Did the Minister repeat his courageous and important statement at home? Why is it only good in Paris? Why is it only expressed across the Atlantic? Why does the Minister lose the courage when he comes home? We would like to hear it at home too in this Parliament.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources has to accept the reality and the political fact—and I will explain in a moment why—that he is also a minister of the environment. He cannot ignore the commitment made by his Prime Minister to sustainable development. It is a commitment that the Prime Minister made a year ago and repeated last night at the National Art Gallery by way of a videotape, in both languages, in which he commits himself to sustainable development. This makes this Minister of Energy automatically a minister of the environment. Therefore, if the Minister of Energy does not pursue an energy policy that takes sustainable development fully into account, he makes the statement of his own Prime Minister hollow, empty and meaningless.

The Prime Minister of Canada embraced, in August of 1988, the Brundtland report. He declared himself on the side of sustainable development. Therefore the Minister of Energy, if he intends to follow the leadership expressed by the Prime Minister, should fall in line with that policy direction, but he does not seem to, and C-19 certainly does not give us any indication or direction.

Through the Prime Minister's statement, the Minister has received his orders from the Prime Minister, who stressed again sustainable development in the Speech from the Throne just a few months ago. This mandate, Mr. Speaker, is being ignored.

Together with this Bill today, the Minister of Energy was expected to offer an environmentally sustainable plan, a broader picture, an indication to Canadians that he and his Government have a clear idea as to where we should be going with energy between now and the year 2030, if you like, to ensure clean and safe sources of energy and sustainable for present and future generations. That has not happened with Bill C-19.

We would like to think that this Government has a long-term agenda. If it is limited to Bills like C-19, we will continue to raise, from this side of the House, the imperative necessity that the Government of Canada, at the present time directed by the ideology of the Conservative Party, has a duty to consult Canadians and to develop a long-term energy plan with a number of factors in mind which makes the development of such a plan more difficult than ever before. We have to take into consideration factors of sustainable development and climatic change which did not exist when we made plans in the past. Therefore, the task is multidimensional and poses a challenge. It seems to me that the Government of Canada cannot escape that responsibility.

Mr. MacLellan: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the Hon. Member for Davenport's speech with a great deal of interest. I know of his interest in renewable energy, which I think is certainly a very important move for the future. The reason that I think we mainly find fault with the whole Government philosophy of just market orientation is because we know that long-term planning and energy is something over and above the short-term future which the market looks to. We need Government involvement because we are looking at energy needs in the distant future and which the private sector is not going to look after. Because of this lead time in new forms of energy, we of course need the energy we have. I would like to ask my colleague, the Hon. Member for Davenport how he sees the state of renewable energy today and where we are in respect to the time of the former Liberal Government? How long is it going to take us to get into this position because of the neglect of the Government in developing the renewable energy that we need for the future?

Mr. Caccia: I thank the Hon. Member for his question. The key word of course is the importance of "lead" time. Particularly in matters related to energy, lead time is a very important factor. I am sure that the Minister knows that very well.

What has struck me lately, both in reference to the previous Liberal Government as well as to the present Conservative Government, if in the last decade we had shifted the subsidies that we put behind exploration, particularly north of 60, for the discovery of additional sources of fossil fuels and had used those resources which in terms of funds were phenomenal, and I venture to guess that more than $8 billion in the past decade has been put behind exploration of fossil fuel research North of 60, and shifted even a modest portion of that resource, perhaps even half, behind photovoltaics, behind biomass, behind wind, solar, and other forms of renewable energy, particularly biomass and photovoltaics, that we would have done very well with the lead time required that the Hon. Member raises. I suspect that the lead time required would have been compressed considerably. Alone the price of photovoltaics per kilowatt hour has been reduced by half in the last 10 or 15 years.

We have invested our financial resources in perpetrating a dependence on non-renewable resources in a disproportionate manner, instead of shifting them, as we attempted to do after the oil shocks in the 70s, more and more behind the renewables.

Now we have to stop for a moment, reassess our strategy, think of the long term. Bill C-19 disappears in an ocean of considerations that are much bigger and more significant, and come to grips with the lead time and ask ourselves, are we putting our money where we should put it? My impression is that we are not.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Kootenay West—Revelstoke on a question or comment.

Mr. Kristiansen: I was interested in listening to the Hon. Member for Davenport, who is also a former Minister of the Environment in the Parliament in which I was present from 1980 to 1984. I was particularly interested in some of his comments regarding the closure of a number of energy conservation centres across the country. While listening to his comments, I could not help but think back to the last election when it also struck me, as it did the Member for Davenport, that there was a conflict between the Government's brave new push on the environment during the election, and its extraordinary commitment of billions of dollars of aid to fossil fuel megaprojects from one end of the country to the other. There seemed to be a bit of a conflict in the priorities of the Government at that time.

In his comments in relation to energy conservation and the priorities of the Government, the Hon. Member asked perhaps rhetorically, why not cancel energy megaprojects such as Hibernia. That struck me as being rather odd, particularly in view of the Liberal Party's vigorous pursuit of the Government on its alleged failure to maintain a commitment to the future development of Hibernia over the past number of weeks. Perhaps vigorous is an understatement, considering the more colourful comments of some of the Liberal Members to my right.

Is the Hon. Member for Davenport suggesting that it is now Liberal policy to cancel the commitment to Hibernia development and elsewhere? If so, is that view shared by the new Government of Newfoundland?

Mr. Caccia: It is a very fair question. What I am saying in essence is different. If we are serious about the question of energy and energy policy for Canada for the long term, we have to ask ourselves some pretty difficult questions, and perhaps also some embarrassing ones. We have to visit a situation that, if it is going to be dealt with effectively, will require us rethinking our position on a number of basic premises. When the megaprojects were approved, there was very little talk and knowledge about climate warming. Now we are increasingly being told by the scientific community that we can expect, within the next 40 or 50 years, increases in temperature in Canada ranging between 1.5 to 4.5 degrees Celsius. Such increases will have a considerable impact on our economy.

We also have to ask ourselves if we can therefore continue blindly supporting certain energy projects which will exacerbate the problem of the greenhouse effect, as if we were not surrounded by a new reality, or should we, as responsible politicians examine difficult questions, including some that may even be embarrassing. I believe that the latter is the route to go.

Mr. Kristiansen: Is there an interesting answer to the interesting question?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I call it 1.18, the Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Mr. Epp: There have been some discussions. In order to accommodate the schedules of a number of Members of the House, it is my understanding that we not see the clock and that by agreement we move to Bill C-4 at this time. That would enable the three Party spokespersons to speak to Bill C-4 before two o'clock. After Question Period at three o'clock we could then revert back to Bill C-19, the Bill we are presently debating, which would enable some other Members of the House to conclude their remarks on that Bill. The Government finds that acceptable, and I believe there have been discussions relative to the outline I have just given.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys on a point of order.

Mr. MacLellan: The comments made by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources are correct. He reflects the same understanding I have about not seeing the clock at this time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan.

Mr. Angus: There have been some consultations, but the information the Minister has presented to the House was only partially accurate. There has been no decision to change the schedule for three o'clock.

It is my understanding that there is another order that will cover the tariff Bill and that is scheduled to come up at 3 p.m. There will continue to be some discussions between now and three o'clock in order that we are all certain as to what is happening. It is my understanding that Bill C–19 will not be the business at three o'clock.

Mr. Epp: That is acceptable. The terms of the agreement are that we have the three speeches, and that we tailor our comments to the time available for the three Parties, prior to two o'clock. Whatever decision is agreed upon among House Leaders or the representatives as of three o'clock will be acceptable to the Government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): So agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): So ordered.

ENERGY SUPPLIES EMERGENCY ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources) moved that Bill C–4, an Act to amend the Energy Supplies Emergency Act and to amend the Access to Information Act in consequence thereof, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as I have mentioned in the prior intervention I will require approximately 12 minutes, and I think that will be seen as an equitable distribution of the time available for the other two Parties.

The Energy Supplies Emergency Act was assented to on March 26, 1979. It is now more than 10 years and much has happened in this House since then. Certainly there will be few here who remember the occasion, even fewer who will recall what it was all about. However, I know that my critic and I were here. Before addressing the particular business before us today, I believe it would be appropriate to give Hon. Members an understanding of the origin of the Act, at least briefly.

Emergency, as we all know, is the sudden juncture of events demanding immediate action. The elements may be known but the timing of their concurrence is not. We can all think of examples, dramatic ones such as earthquakes or disasters at sea or other situations including fire or flood. In many of these cases, it was only afterward with perfect hindsight that the absence or deficiency of contingency plans was sufficiently recognized and appropriate action taken.

The Energy Supplies Emergency Act itself has such a history, but as such it represents a determination to learn from experience through positive and corrective action. Its raison d'être focuses on the possible disruption of the international oil market and its impact on Canada. It is therefore expressly designed to ensure that Canada has appropriate contingency plans and the instruments essential for their implementation.

I am sure Members will recall the international oil crisis of 1973 and 1974 or the so–called oil shocks as they were described from that time on. Some members of the OPEC countries interrupted normal oil supplies as a political lever. In fact discussions are taking place in OPEC as we discuss this issue today. Market panic followed with a sharp escalation in the price of oil as buyers competed for supply. Under the leadership of the U.S., a direct result of the situation was the signing in 1974 of the International Energy Program by 16 countries. Today it is made up of 21 countries. I have just returned from those meetings last week, and I want to say that the co–operation in the IEA is as secure today as when it was originally formed.

Countries are joined through the International Energy Agency in mutually supportive planning aimed at enhancing their collective energy and economic security. Canada is an original signatory to the IEP and an active supporter of the IEA. A major component of the agency's programs is an established emergency oil sharing system.

Canada's national response in 1974 when the IEA was formed was the passage of the original Energy Supplies Emergency Act. This Act established the Energy Supplies Allocation Board or ESAB, which is responsible for the Act's objectives and programs. Chief among those were programs to allocate crude oil and oil products and to ration gasoline and diesel fuel during a period of oil shortage. In addition, the board was responsible for fulfilling Canada's obligations in support of the IEA's emergency oil sharing programs.

When the crisis passed, the Act lapsed in 1976 under a sunset clause. The events of 1979–1980, that is, the Iranian revolution and the subsequent Iran–Iraq war, again caused oil market disturbance and rapidly escalating prices. Accordingly, the Government introduced the Energy Supplies Emergency Act, 1979 with similar but refined and modified provisions of the earlier Act. This time there is no sunset clause on the Act itself but only on the duration of the board's powers and programs in the event of their activation. In this fashion, the requisite legal authorities are maintained against the sudden need to activate the planned response to a supply emergency.

Therefore, I think it is particularly noteworthy and of special interest to the House that the activation of ESAB's emergency powers and programs under the Act is a prerogative exercised only through a governor in council formal declaration by order of a national emergency or by reason of actual or anticipated shortages of petroleum. Further, this declaration is itself subject to the early concurrence of this House according to specified procedures set out in the Act.

Let me address one issue that may be raised in the context of this legislation, that is, the relationship between it and our obligations under the Canada–U.S. Free Trade Agreement. It should be understood that our obligations under the FTA to share oil supplies in an emergency are likely to be much less than those required by theoil sharing system of the International Energy Agency which would be implemented using the provisions of the ESE Act. Under the FTA we can share any reduction in Canadian oil supplies due to offshore disruption through a proportionate decrease in oil exports to the U.S.

Furthermore, under the FTA there is no obligation to provide supplies to the U.S. There is only a requirement to make them available on commercial terms. On the other hand, as a member of the IEA and a net exporter of oil, Canada would likely be required to increase its supplies to other member countries including the U.S. in that type of emergency. With respect to oil supply emergencies, our IEA obligations are clearly more demanding than those under the FTA.

Therefore the resurrection of ESAB necessarily triggered a complete review of the emergency organization and programs. This led to passage in 1982 of a series of amendments to the Act for improvements to the allocation and rationing programs. These amendments reflected an intense period of consultation by ESAB with both the petroleum industry and the provinces and territories. These consultations were mainly achieved through the formation of two consultative committees, the Petroleum Industry Advisory Committee and the Provincial Advisory Committee, and through consumer organizations and associations. This resulted in fully developed allocation and rationing programs that enjoy full support because they are recognized as realistic and compatible with industry and regional concerns. These committees continue to advise ESAB.

The programs for managing available supplies of petroleum and petroleum products necessarily must ensure fair and equitable distribution to consumers in all regions of our country. I believe therefore that Members of the House would benefit from a better understanding of how they operate.

First, it must be recognized that an international market disturbance would have a primary impact on the supply of crude oil. The programs are designed to use our western Canadian resources to support use in eastern Canada which is the area of import dependency. ESAB, with powers granted under the Energy Supplies Emergency Act, would activate a mandatory allocation program following a declaration of national emergency by the Governor in Council.

The terms have been with us for some time. Today, as I mentioned to the House, amendments are needed not only to continue with the program but to ensure Canadians that plans are in place in case emergencies take place. I could go through the amendments clause by clause to to clarify the definitions and the clause changes, but I do not have that time today. However, after second reading, if the House is so inclined, obviously I would want to discuss those terms with Members opposite in the legislative committee to make sure that Canada's interests are protected, our international obligations are met, and Canadians can be assured that the best plans are in place in case emergencies have to be met.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the words of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Epp) regarding Bill C–4. I think we are of the same mind with respect to the need for legislation such as this to safeguard Canada in the event of an international disruption and to ensure that Canadians have a secure supply of energy.

I want to say one thing with respect to the International Energy Association. With relation to the Free Trade Agreement, it may not in any way restrict our obligations under the IEA, unless the determination is that we must share 7 per cent of the oil under the agreement with the International Energy Agency and the United States and the shortage occurs in the United States.

The trade agreement, as the Minister of Energy has said, does not require us to sell oil to the United States. It requires us to make it available. Of course that is splitting hairs. I believe 40 per cent of our oil now goes to the U.S. That is not going to stop. We have now created that dependency on Canadian oil in the United States. There are contracts which assure that that oil is going to be there. Of course, when there is multinational oil companies, the supply of Canadian oil will continue. It may not be at 40 per cent, but an increasing amount of our oil will go.

We are obliged under the International Energy Agency to share up to 7 per cent of our oil with other countries at the time of an international disruption. That amount of 7 per cent that we are to supply may or may not be with the United States. If it is with the United States it would merge with our obligations under the trade agreement. If not, the proportion we share with the United States would come after the 7 per cent that was made available under our obligation under the International Energy Agency. As a result of the trade agreement, we have guaranteed that more of our oil will go abroad. It is certainly not reducing our obligations under the agreement with the International Energy Agency.

The most important point I want to impress upon the Government is the issue of energy security in Canada. I think the Minister understands that nothing must be allowed to reduce the energy security we have in this country.

We are blessed with having a great deal of energy in Canada in various forms. The problem we face is to maintain that security in the event of a crisis, international or otherwise. It is very important that these energy supplies be available to Canadians, and I believe the Minister has said this will not be changed under this Bill.

The fact the clause seems to reduce the ability to make information available in a court of law is a subject that I think we can discuss in committee. However, I am pleased the Minister of State for Privatization (Mr. McDermid) is in the House along with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The Bill proposes to eliminate the role of Petro–Canada, and I will ask the Minister at committee why this is done. It appears to be a housekeeping measure to remove the mention of Petro–Canada so that when the Government introduces a privatization Bill on Petro–Canada this Act will already have been dealt with.

I believe that Petro–Canada's role according to Section 3 and Section 12 of the Act has been meaningful. It stated that one of the six directors on the board must be a member of Petro–Canada. That was a sensible provision, but the Government is deleting the need to have one of the directors as a representative of Petro–Canada.

I find that very strange, if Petro–Canada is to remain a Crown corporation. However, if it is the Government's intention to privatize Petro–Canada, it seems the Government will deal with this legislation before doing so. I hope that is not the case. I will give the Minister the opportunity to state whether there is another reason for this Bill in committee.

According to Clause 12, the duties carried out by the representative from Petro–Canada will be taken on by an official of the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources. I believe that Petro–Canada is even more important to this country now because of the trade agreement. While certain segments of the oil and gas industry and all segments of the energy sector in this country believe a continental energy sector exists, there does not exist a continental energy policy. However, we do have our own Crown Corporation involved in the energy sector which can give a very clear picture from its involvement in the market–place.

I believe that Petro–Canada had much to contribute in this legislation by being involved. That involvement is disappearing, and I am concerned about that. I will expand that in committee, but I wanted to advise the Minister of my concern in that regard.

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I too will keep my remarks on this Bill mercifully brief. The Energy Emergencies Act, Chapter 89, was passed in 1979 to "provide a means to conserve the supplies of energy within Canada during periods of a national emergency caused by shortages or market disturbances affecting the national security and welfare and the economic stability of Canada".

Those are very worth-while objectives with which I do not believe any one in the House could have serious quarrel. The existing legislation provides for the establishment of the Energy Supplies Allocation Board. In the event of actual or anticipated energy shortages as determined by the Governor in Council, this board would proceed to use its broad powers to administer a mandatory allocation or rationing program, which could include diverting oil or gas from pipeline companies, ordering Canadian ships into service as required, regulating imports and exports, subject to the Free Trade Agreement one presumes, and generally ensuring that the limited supplies in Canada get to where they are needed.

I will not go into the implications of the FTA for energy allocation in emergencies. I believe there will be other opportunities to do so as the current session proceeds through its natural life. However, I will just note that I share the concerns of the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—The Sydneys (Mr. MacLellan) that the FTA has substantial implications for the allocation of energy resources in Canada within an emergency context.

Bill C-4 extends the powers of the board to regulate prices during a domestic emergency energy rationing program. Many of the changes that the Bill proposes are little more than wording changes and are, in fact, relatively unimportant.

However, there are a few proposals that I believe are important, even though at first glance they may appear not to be. I want to deal with three of them.

The first two concern Petro-Canada. Clause 2 has the effect of deleting from the Energy Supply Allocation Board, which currently consists of up to six people appointed by the Governor in Council, a representative of Petro-Canada. Clause 3 would amend the Act to delete from the International Energy Agency Canadaan appointment, being a Petro-Canada representative on that energy agency study group.

The International Energy Agency currently has a study group on energy questions, and current legislation stipulates that Petro-Canada is to be Canada's representative on that group, having responsibility to the board and to the Minister. According to the amendment, Canada's representative on the international study group will not necessarily be a Petro-Canada official. Instead, our representative will be a board member who, given Clause 2, obviously could not be a Petro-Canada official or some other official of Energy, Mines and Resources.

I believe that this constitutes a stripping away of at least some of the public policy prerogatives currently enjoyed by Petro-Canada. Of course, this is consistent with the Government's ill concealed antipathy toward Petro-Canada. It is certainly consistent with its long range privatization project. If Petro-Canada is to be privatized, then it necessarily must be stripped of its public policy functions.

It will come as a surprise to no Member of the House that we in the New Democratic Party caucus greatly oppose any such moves to limit or in fact remove Petro-Canada's public policy function. As this caucus fought for and indeed compelled the Liberal Government to create Petro-Canada back in the mid-1970s, we continue to believe it has a vital public policy role to play.

That is why for us these two provisions in this Act are of some substantial concern. I, too, look forward with eager anticipation to the Minister's remarks in this regard in committee.

The third elementis certainly a closely tied one of equal interest to the Minister of State for Privatization and Regulatory Affairs (Mr. McDermid) whom I note is present. This is not noting an absence; this is noting of presence for the debate today. It is set out in Clause 5 of the Bill. Under the current unamended legislation the Board can now prescribe retail prices of controlled product and of printed material. The existing legislation states that printed material required for a rationing program would be handled by the Canada Post Corporation.

Under the amendment proposed in Bill C-4, and I quote, "any Department or agency of the Government of Canada" could be used for that purpose. This does not preclude the using of Canada Post, assuming that Canada Post is at the time of such issuance still an arm of the Government. However it again is a stripping away from a Crown corporation of a public policy function. In the absence of any strong indication to the contrary, it cannot but be viewed, I would submit, as preparatory to a privatization in this instance of Canada Post.

It seems in fact that in this debate in principle at second reading we are debating two principles in this Bill. The first is that of the prudent allocation of energy resources in the event of an emergency shortage. To the degree that the Bill deals with that, I do not think any of us have any objection.

The second principle seems to be the preparation for the privatization, in part at least, of two Crown corporations. I must note that with that principle—

An Hon. Member: That is good. I wish I had thought of that.

An Hon. Member: You are making me feel better all the time. Thanks for giving us an idea.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): The Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Epp) and the Hon. Minister of State for Privatization are agreed. They consider me to be suggesting here what is a very good idea. They may so believe, but I can assure both hon. gentlemen that I very much doubt that the people of Canada would think those to be very good ideas. I look forward to further discussion in this regard in committee. However, knowing that there are other Members of the House who wish to participate in this debate and taking some cognizance of the hour, might I suggest that we perhaps adjourn to some subsequent time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I believe the arrangement was that we would not see the clock until the representatives of all three Parties had had an opportunity to speakon Bill C-4 prior to the adjournment for Question Period.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 1.45 p.m., I do now leave the chair until two o'clock later this day.

The House took recess at 1.45 p.m.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

POLAND

NATIONAL ELECTION

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, June 4, 1989, we were all witness to the first free elections held in Poland in over 40 years.

This historic event is one in a succession of events that promises to lead to the democratization of Poland and guarantees major social and political change in that country. However, 40 years of oppression have resulted in considerable damage to the economy of Poland. Poland's foreign debt stands at between $30 billion and $40 billion. The country's ability to salvage its economy will depend largely on the flexibility of debtor countries to forgive or, at the very least, reschedule the payments in light of current events.

The West has an obligation not only to Poland but to all countries that are in pursuit of democracy to support in spirit and in action an ideology that though not perfect is far the best one designed to date by human mankind.

The West also has an obligation to re-evaluate continually its relationships with countries that penalize its citizens for expressing opinions that differ from those of their own Government.

In short, we should not be afraid to support those people who are striving for exactly the same things that we in the West have fought for and for which will continue to fight.

MULTICULTURALISM

CANADIAN ETHNO-CULTURAL COUNCIL

Mr. Pat Sobeski (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, this morning the Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State for Multiculturalism and Citizenship (Mr. Weiner) spoke at the Canadian Ethno-cultural Council Parliamentary Day.

The purpose of this meeting is to find ways to bring Canadians together, to achieve equality throughout our society, and to give expression to our national identity.

Exercises and meetings such as today are very encouraging. However, there is much still to do.

Let us review the progress and continue to look ahead at what we can and must do together to ensure that all Canadians have an equal state in defining and building Canada's future.

Congratulations to the CEC.

LAUNCHING OF NATIONAL ENVIRONMENT WEEK IN CALGARY

Mr. Lee Richardson (Calgary Southeast): Mr. Speaker, this morning the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) launched National Environment Week to encourage Canadians to do our part to clean up the man-made mess that threatens our globe and jeopardizes our survival.

Calgary kicked off Environment Week yesterday with our annual river clean-up. It was a glorious day of sunshine that brought out thousands of Calgarians to scour the river banks, picking up garbage and cleaning out junk from the water—families with picnic lunches, community groups and individuals committed to a cleaner environment taking action to clean up our part of the globe.

The message of National Environment Week is awareness and action. There is no more time for study or delay. We must take action now as individuals, as communities, as provinces and as nations to stop the damage to our global home.

WORLD ENVIRONMENT DAY

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, today is World Environment Day, the beginning of Environment Week in Canada.

Somehow the sense of urgency necessary to deal with our national and global crisis must be instilled in the political leadership of Canada and every country. Let me deal with the greenhouse effect for just a moment as an example.

The Minister this morning mentioned that one-half the carbon dioxide added to the atmosphere by human activity has been added in the last 30 years. In North America, we have just 5 per cent of the world population but use 25 per cent of the world's energy and release over 25 per cent of atmospheric CO2 and even higher levels of CFCs.

Our oceans are rising. Unless we reduce greenhouse gas production, oceans will continue to rise in direct relation to CO2 and greenhouse gases. Entire nations such as the Maldives will be covered by the oceans as the ice caps melt.

The sense of urgency—where is it? In Canada, the Conservatives are closing the regional renewable energy offices and plan to give the fossil fuel industry billions of dollars in welfare to expand and prolong production.

Canada and the world must have action on the carbon cycle, action on reducing greenhouse gases, action on holes in the ozone and acid precipitation. That requires the sense of urgency which is lacking at every level.

Environment Day and Environment Week are appropriate for launching public education. However, let it begin here in this Chamber where decisions on environmental viability and human survival are determined every day by our decisions.

MULTICULTURALISM

CANADIAN ETHNO-CULTURAL COUNCIL

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent): Mr. Speaker, today all three parties met with members of the Canadian Ethno-cultural Council to discuss issues of concern to all Canadians. The service this group plays as a co-ordinating body for ethnic minorities in Canada is indispensable to the maintenance of harmonious race relations in our country.

[Translation]

Since 1980, the CEC has headed more than 35 national organizations representing the cultural communities, all of which are dedicated to better race relations and the struggle against all forms of discrimination based on race and ethnic origin.

This group is inspired by values like equality, justice and fairness. By its very nature and because of the credibility it has acquired, the CEC must be a key player in the development of any Canadian multiculturalism policy.

In closing, I would like to thank all members of the CEC for their contribution to building a more open country where equal opportunity for all is a fact, not just political rhetoric.

HEALTH

MONTREAL CONFERENCE ON AIDS

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Brome—Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, one of the most important conventions of our time is now being held in Montreal. It is so important because it is about the scourge of the twentieth century, AIDS.

The attendance of the Prime Minister of Canada and the Minister of National Health at the opening of this international meeting is most eloquent testimony to the importance the Government gives to this leading problem.

By warning us not to expect miracles but emphasizing dialogue, co-operation and information, health specialists from throughout the world are showing us how to fight this scourge. To do this, and especially to preserve the dignity of those who have AIDS, now is the time for cooperation, not criticism; for supporting others in difficulty, not discrimination. Above all, we must put a major part of our effort into information and dispelling the falsehoods about AIDS.

In this regard, the Treasury Board's recent directives on protecting, hiring and accepting people with AIDS in the workplace could be a model for all businesses, whether in the public or private sector. In doing so, our Government has shown leadership.

VIOLENCE IN CHINA

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all Members of the House will join me this afternoon in expressing our sorrow at the slaughter in China and in extending our sympathy to the Chinese people and their friends and relatives here in Canada.

The senseless and brutal actions of the so-called People's Army under the instructions of government authorities have resulted in the death or injuries of thousands of young people. These youth are innocent of any wrongdoing. Their peaceful presence in Tiananmen Square over the last number of weeks has been exemplary for its non-violence. Their contribution to the Chinese political discourse has represented the highest ideals.

Through its inexplicable actions the Chinese Government has shown the world a most horrifying face. Its actions should be harshly condemned by all members of the international community.

For its part, the Canadian Government must examine the best way to communicate in the strongest possible terms our outrage individually as a country and in concert with others. Immediate attention must be given to the safety of Canadians in China, and the safety of Chinese students here in Canada who must not be put in the position of having to return to China against their will.

The Chinese authorities cannot long ignore the calls of its own people for greater freedom and democracy. Murdering their brightest and best is for fascists. The spirit of the revolution is surely toward democracy, if it is a living spirit and not something only of the past. Let it be said that the students have not died in vain.

THE ARTS

OWEN SOUND LITTLE THEATRE

Mr. Gus Mitges (Bruce—Grey): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Owen Sound Little Theatre for winning the Ontario-wide festival for amateur theatrical groups held recently in Brockville, Ontario.

The Owen Sound's production of a Lanford Wilson play Talley's Folly took seven of eleven major awards. The awards included best over-all production, technical achievement and set design, as well as leading acting awards for the show's two-person cast, David Leslie and Cory Lapointe.

Congratulations are in order as well to director Ruth Gorbet and her crew for a challenging and a well-accomplished performance.

Owen Sound Little Theatre will now be representing Ontario in the all-new National Theatre Festival which will take place in Victoria, B.C. from July 9 to 16 where I am sure they will acquit themselves with honour and distinction.

Again, congratulations for a job well done.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIOLENCE IN CHINA

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, a crime against humanity has been committed in the People's Republic of China. My wife wept as we watched together in disbelief over the weekend as a once peaceful demonstration turned into a blood bath.

There were gruesome television accounts of tanks and soldiers armed with automatic weapons roaring down the Avenue of Eternal Peace toward Tiananmen Square, trampling and shooting hundreds of student protesters whose only defence was the courage of their convictions.

• (1410)

The great Russian writer, Dostoyevski, once wrote that "compassion is the chief law of human existence". The ruthless and merciless People's Army showed absolutely no compassion in the mass slaughter of students, women and children.

Members of the Hamilton—Wentworth—Halton Chinese Canadian community, which numbers some 20,000, express their shock and horror at the abhorrent events in China. They express their outrage at the Government's brutal suppression of the democratic movement for reform. They call upon the Canadian Government to do whatever is in its power to persuade the Chinese Government to find a peaceful solution to the crisis in China.

VIOLENCE IN CHINA

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, events in China have shocked and horrified Canadians. For over ten years, China represented a beacon of progress. China once offered a bold example to the Communist world by moving away from totalitarianism and responding to the will of its people. In two bloody days, that progress has been crushed. Today, the world watches as China reverts back to totalitarianism for a solution to its problem.

Canadians wonder how a nation that once taught the world to let a thousand flowers bloom could so brutally stamp out its own seeds of democracy. If China is to ever truly be a people's republic, let it stop killing and start rebuilding the progress that it once made.

VIOLENCE IN CHINA

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Mr. Speaker, I want to record for my constituents and for freedom-loving people everywhere the anxiety and sadness of Canadians in response to the brutality and death which has been perpetrated by a repressive military force in Beijing over the past weekend.

This event is both a shock and a lesson for Canadians in that the freedom of peaceful assembly clearly enshrined in our Constitution does not exist for them. It is repugnant to all of us to see internationally recognized human rights violated in so brutal a manner as has taken place in Tiananmen Square.

A China in turmoil is a China in agony, and I want to confirm our democratic resolve in solidarity with the citizens of the PRC that our world history will not be ruled by guns but by peace and freedom.

The carnage of Tiananmen Square demands a response from our Government, a response which will show the students and other citizens in Tiananmen Square and the world that their hopes and dreams for freedom and human rights live on with all of us today in this House.

CONDUCT OF MEMBERS

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada sent us here to govern the country and to address the very real and serious problems that face Canadians from coast to coast. Instead, for the past several weeks, the time of this Chamber has been taken up with the self-righteous indignation of Members opposite in their seemingly obsessive, if futile, quest to bring down a Minister or two over an issue which is at best of very limited interest to the public.

I spent last week in my South Shore riding, paroled, as it were, from this place. I must report that on the streets, in the plants and in the offices of Bridgewater, Liverpool and Lockeport, peoples' minds are on the future of the Atlantic fishery, on the need for economic diversification, on unemployment insurance and on ACOA.

They simply do not care about the tempest in the teapot in Ottawa, and they are beginning to conclude that Ottawa doesn't care about them.

Lest this Parliament become totally irrelevant in the minds of Canadians, let us turn our attention to the real issues of real people. Let's get on with the business of Canada.

STUDIES RELATING TO PROPOSED CHANGES

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Mr. Speaker, on April 10, we were told by officials from the Department of Employment and Immigration that the impact studies which related to the proposed changes to the unemployment insurance system would be made available to us within the week.

That week has come and gone, and after many calls to the Department asking the whereabouts of those studies, and after filing for them under the Access to Information guidelines, we are now informed that these figures have been exempted. Further, I have been told that the Minister herself has had printed copies of these for over two weeks.

As the days go by, we see a pattern developing. Anytime the people of Canada need access to information, this Government hides it from them. Never before has the Canadian Government spent so much energy hiding. They did it on free trade, they are doing it on the Budget, and now they are doing it on UI. What is next?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIOLENCE IN CHINA—STATEMENT BY MINISTER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. He knows and can sense the feeling in Canada that we are all filled with shock, dismay, anger and disbelief at the recent events in China, particularly the vicious move by the leadership of the Chinese Government to murder young students. Canadians cannot believe that a peaceful call for freedom by students in the capital of that country would provoke such a bloody massacre.

I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he would be good enough to bring the House up to date on the most recent information he has and advise us if he can about the situation relating to the safety of Canadians in China and what advice through our representatives he is giving to Canadians in that country?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition correctly states the shock and the disbelief of Canadians at events in China. He will know that we had called in yesterday at noon the Ambassador of China to Canada to express our profound disapproval of the events in China and our expectation that they would be brought to an end.

We were in touch this morning with Earl Drake, who is the Canadian Ambassador in Beijing, who reports that the situation in Beijing is calmer now. There are approximately 600 Canadians in China, about 300 in Beijing and 300 elsewhere. We believe that all are safe. We are urging them to stay in their residences for the time being. We are trying to gather Canadian students into one secure place, particularly in Beijing.

We are naturally following the developments in China very closely, and I will endeavour to keep the House fully informed of events as they arise.

REQUEST FOR VOTE ON RESOLUTION TO CONDEMN PEOPLE'S REPUBLIC OF CHINA

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Now that the brave dream of the Chinese students has turned into a nightmare, will the Canadian Government agree that in Parliament, in this House, that the House of Commons move and unanimously adopt a motion condemning the Chinese Government and send its motion to that Government?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Government is prepared to consider a motion that can be adopted unanimously by the House of Commons.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, I received a request for an emergency debate this evening. I think it would be worthwhile for Members of all Parties to have an opportunity to express their thoughts about the situation.

I made arrangements earlier today with the Chairman of the Standing Committee of the House of Commons to have a confidential briefing for all Members of the House. The briefing will take place in Room 253-D, the Railway Committee Room, at 4.30 p.m. Officials from my Department will be there to provide all Members with all the information we have available.

I had an opportunity to discuss these arrangements with the external affairs critics of the two Opposition Parties.

• (1420)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, as suggested by the Hon. Member for Papineau—Saint Michel and others, we will accept the Secretary of State's invitation to a briefing session.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, we all pray that if not today, and if not tomorrow, freedom will finally prevail in China.

REQUEST FOR EMERGENCY SESSION OF SECURITY COUNCIL

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Secretary of State, now that Canada occupies its new seat on the Security Council in the United Nations, whether he would not instruct our ambassador, Mr. Fortier, to present a resolution under an emergency session calling for international condemnation of the action of the Chinese Government in its massacre against committed innocent students.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are actively considering that initiative by Canada as a member of the Security Council. I think the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and others Members of the House would agree that an essential first step for us is to become as well informed as we can, as quickly as possible about the situation in China and consequently as to the most effective actions that we can take.

But I think we should be in a position to come to those kinds of decisions in the next couple of days. Certainly there is no question that this is the kind of horrible action that requires a reaction by the international community and certainly requires a reaction by Canada.

OPPORTUNITY TO GIVE POLITICAL ASYLUM TO CHINESE STUDENTS IN CANADA

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. The Minister is no doubt aware that many Chinese students now living in Canada and attending Canadian universities made some very harsh statements on Canadian television about their government and went so far as to openly condemn the Chinese leaders. Should some of these students prefer to remain in Canada instead of going back to China and an uncertain future, could the federal Government of Canada offer them political asylum?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are aware of the situation, which may be somewhat uncertain, of a number of Chinese students here in Canada, and my Government colleagues and myself are now considering various arrangements, such as extending their right to stay in Canada and perhaps other ways of guaranteeing their safety.

REQUEST AS TO WHETHER MINISTER SPOKE WITH WAN LI

Hon. André Ouellet (Papineau—Saint-Michel): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. The Minister will recall that only a few weeks ago, Deputy Prime Minister Wan Li was in Canada on an official visit. He also met members of the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade, and on that occasion he commented on the troubles that were starting in China, and he had been rather encouraging. He said he was prepared to act with all requisite understanding for the patriotic enthusiasm of the young Chinese. I would like to know whether the Minister had a chance to meet Mr. Wan Li, whether they discussed privately the situation in China and whether the Minister made it clear to the Chinese delegation at that time that Canada definitely would not approve of using the army to control the Chinese students.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I did not have a chance during the visit to have this kind of conversation, but Canada's attitude to the democratic aspirations and actions of the Chinese students was made clear to the Chinese authorities. We all hope that it will be possible to revert as soon as possible to a situation in which democracy can be encouraged, but for the time being, the main challenge for us is to have a detailed understanding of the events in China and to find out how Canada can first of all, help promote a stable situation; second, a situation that will enhance the safety of Chinese citizens; and third, a situation that will encourage democracy.

[English]

CHINA—VIOLATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate what the Secretary of State for External Affairs has said, not only today but during the weekend, in his condemnation of this horrific violation of human rights administered by the army in China, at whose instructions we may not know for some time.

I was a little concerned that the Secretary of State for External Affairs, in his reference to the Security Council, indicated that we may have to wait a couple of days before the Government of Canada takes some initiative there.

Considering that it is appropriate to wait for a couple of days before we know the answers to a number of matters, we certainly know now that there has been an incredible violation of human rights and totally needless bloodshed. This is something that ought to be debated at the United Nations.

When we have seen past unacceptable circumstances there has been very prompt action by the Security Council, would he kindly tell the House why he thinks it is necessary to wait for another two days?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party is quite correct in interpreting my remarks as suggesting that I wanted to be clearer than we can be in these circumstances as to what exactly is happening in China before we take action in the Security Council. It might be prescriptive or it might be designed to try to encourage positive developments in China. I accept completely the view that it would be appropriate for Canada to act as quickly as possible to occasion a debate in the Security Council.

The Prime Minister and I have had discussions about that possibility this morning and we are examining it. We will be in touch with Ambassador Yves Fortier and examining the circumstances which would be most appropriate for Canada to follow. We intend no delay, but I am sure the Leader of the New Democratic Party and other Members of the House would want us to be as well informed as to the situation in China as we can be before launching that debate. Certainly I do not intend, by that answer, to suggest a delay.

REQUEST FOR IMMEDIATE DEBATE IN SECURITY COUNCIL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to ask the Secretary of State to perhaps reconsider. He is acting, as all Members of the House are, with very good will to see what role an outside country can play in such horrific circumstances.

Would he not think it might provide precisely the kind of international pressure on the Government of China immediately, if they heard from the Security Council that there was a request for an immediate debate? If I can put it this way, I would like the Secretary of State to perhaps think this over. I especially point out that by demanding an immediate debate and insisting that the Chinese authorities come and justify what they have done, this may in fact force them to stop the violence sooner than otherwise would be the case.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, we are considering precisely that factor and weighing it against the possibility that in the immediate aftermath of developments in China, there might be some wisdom in waiting a day or two.

Those are precisely the kind of factors that we are weighing because in the circumstances, all Members of this House and all Canadians would want action that Canada initiated to be as effective as possible. We do not simply want to register our horror and dismay at these developments, but also hopefully to be able to restore a situation that conforms to developments that many of us hoped we had been seeing in China and that we had approved until these terrible recent events.

SITUATION OF CHINESE IN CANADA

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): A third question, Mr. Speaker! The Minister suggested the possibility that the Canadian Government might decide to allow Chinese students who are here now to remain here for an indefinite period, perhaps. Once again, the Minister suggested that the Government had not yet decided, but that the Government is considering this option. My question will be very direct. Can the Minister guarantee that all Chinese students who are here now and are afraid to return to their country can stay here in Canada for an indefinite period?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think that is a direct question and the most direct answer I can give is that we do not intend to create or contribute to circumstances that might threaten the safety of Chinese students who are here in Canada. The way to safeguard or guarantee their safety remains to be determined, but this question is already being considered by the Canadian Government.

POSITION OF MINISTER'S STAFF

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance and it concerns the budget leak, more particularly the phone call from Mutual Life to the office of the Minister of Finance.

Last Wednesday the Prime Minister stated in the House:

> —the original call came to the office of the Minister of Finance. In the absence of the Minister of Finance it was immediately turned over to the Deputy Minister of Finance.

I want to ask the Minister of Finance the following question. Since it was a member of his own staff, Mr. Ron McCutchan who received the call, could he explain by what logic his own staff told the Deputy Minister instead of coming here to the House, to the lobby, and immediately dispatching a message to the Minister? What kind of logic lies in there?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the individual's name in my office is Don McCutchan. Mr. McCutchan is a senior departmental assistant in my office who is on secondment from the Department of Finance.

When the call came from Mr. Masterman he went to see the Deputy Minister of Finance, and events moved from there for the further discussion that Mr. Gorbet had with Mr. Masterman and subsequently the RCMP.

REQUEST AS TO WHY MINISTER WAS NOT INFORMED IMMEDIATELY

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the Minister answered everything except the question. I want to ask him why his assistant informed someone else instead of the Minister. It is obvious that the Minister was in trouble. It is obvious that the Minister was here in the House answering questions about this. Did he ask his assistant, or will he ask him, why the Minister was not informed immediately?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me remind the Hon. Member that Mr. McCutchan is my senior departmental assistant. He is on secondment from the Department of Finance.

Mr. Boudria: So?

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): In my absence, my not being in my office, he went to Mr. Gorbet and told Mr. Gorbet of the details. The two of them called back Mr. Masterman, and by that time we were in the House of Commons and events moved from there in terms of the contact that they had with the RCMP and the things that followed from there.

POSITION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons.

Canadians want to know if our system of justice is responding to the so-called budget leak in a proper and ethical way. On April 26 the Government House Leader asked for extended sitting hours. After that was refused, the Budget was presented to the press.

On April 27 the Attorney General stated to the House that "there had been a theft of budget material".

The Department of Justice has since given advice to the RCMP and further has contacted Ontario Justice officials.

Has the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons acted in the best interests of the administration of justice in Canada, or has he acted in the best interests of his Government?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, there are several questions there, but let me try two. In the first question I think my friend made an error. We tried to extend the hours of the House at about 5.40 on April 26.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You didn't tell us why.

Mr. Lewis: No, that is correct, because your House Leader wasn't here to tell.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The House Leader was right here. You didn't tell us why.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister has been asked a question and deserves the courtesy to answer.

Mr. Lewis: We subsequently came back and went to the opposition Leaders and tried to go back to the House, but we were refused that. Therefore, we made it public to the media.

On the question as to whether or not I acted in the best interests of the administration of justice, the answer to that is yes, at all times.

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC REVIEW OF ACTIONS OF MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. A journalist and others have been charged in this matter. It is obviously before the courts. However, not all those persons who had access to the material have been charged.

If the Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons is confident that he and officials of his Department have acted competently and ethically in this matter, I would ask the Minister of Justice if he believes it is in the best interests of Canadians to ensure that the integrity of the system of administering justice in this country continue to be respected?

Would he agree that it would be useful to have a thorough and public review of how he has conducted himself as Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada and Leader of the Government in the House of Commons to find out if Canadians can trust the fairness and the integrity of the administration of justice in this country in the light of what we have gone through in the last month or so?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend has indicated, the matter is before the courts. That is the place where justice should be done. I am convinced that it will be done there.

TIME OF KNOWLEDGE OF STOCK EXCHANGES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. First, I want to welcome him back to the House.

My question is about an apparent contradiction to which the Minister of Justice was unable to respond on Friday. If the Minister goes back to May 14, he will see that the Solicitor General told the House that from the outset the Mutual Life leak was under the investigation of the RCMP. On May 18 he stated that there was no evidence of profiteering because of the Mutual leak or, indeed, the leak to Global Television.

I want to ask the Minister of Finance the following question: How could the Solicitor General say this on May 18 when representatives of the four stock exchanges are now saying that at that stage the RCMP had not notified them about the Mutual leak? In fact, they did not know about it until they heard about it from the news media five days later, after Mr. Masterman issued a press release.

• (1440)

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I clearly informed the House that the RCMP Commissioner had told me then—and I can reiterate again today that the whole question of whether people could have profited from the public disclosure of a budget document was under investigation by the RCMP. As soon as the Commissioner saw fit to inform me that so far, at the time I informed my hon. colleague, there was no evidence or indication that anyone had profited, he informed me and immediately, at the first opportunity, I told the House. I believe it is important to reassure Canadians on that.

And the Commissioner assured me that this investigation was looking into everything. The RCMP is conducting its own investigation on that, on all the possibilities people had to profit. This whole part of the investigation is continuing.

[English]

MOVEMENT OF CANADIAN DOLLAR—COST OF INTERVENTION

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, that response is absolutely incredible when the RCMP had not even notified the four stock exchanges. I want to go after the Finance Minister on a separate question.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member.

Mr. Nystrom: I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance. The Minister of Finance is aware that in the hours after the premature release of his Budget on April 26 there was considerable movement in the Canadian dollar in Tokyo and elsewhere around the world, and that the Bank of Canada also intervened because of movement in the Canadian dollar.

Can the Minister of Finance now tell us, first, what was the cost of that intervention to the Bank of Canada and, second, does he know whether or not there was any profiteering due to speculation in the Canadian dollar in Tokyo or elsewhere because of the premature release of the Canadian Budget?

Hon. Pierre Blais (Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I can repeat, as I said several times in the House, that the next day, people at the stock exchanges said that there was no indication of anyone having profited. And again, barely a week ago, people at the stock exchanges said that no one—

If my hon. colleague believes that people might have profited, you should go yourself to the RCMP and tell them whatever you know about it. That seems most important, because, definitely, the important thing is that Canadians be reassured and that the RCMP conducts its investigation as it ought to so as to make sure that no one profited from a Budget leak, and the Commissioner has assured me of that.

FAMILY VIOLENCE

EMERGENCY SHELTERS FOR VICTIMS

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary Southwest): Mr. Speaker, in June, 1988 the Government of Canada launched a very special initiative called Project Haven to support the development of additional emergency shelters for victims of family violence. Unfortunately not only in my own Province of Alberta but indeed all across Canada family violence is increasing.

Could the Minister of State for Housing tell the House what has been done to date on providing these shelters?

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member is aware, in the summer of last year the Government announced a program to produce 500 emergency spaces or shelter beds for the victims of violence in Canada. There were to be 500 additional beds over and above what was already in place. That project has been proceeding. There has been a proposal call put out. In fact, some 45 of those 500 places were set aside for the Province of Alberta.

Unfortunately to date there have not been any applications from the City of Calgary, but the Department is expecting to issue a second proposal call and hopefully we will get some proposals from the City of Calgary.

There have been many proposals across the country. All the provinces, with the exception of Ontario and Quebec, are prepared to participate in this program for new spaces. Ontario and Quebec are reluctant to provide additional maintenance funding for these spaces, but we do hope they will participate as well.

HEALTH

REQUEST FOR NATIONAL STRATEGY ON AIDS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. Yesterday the Prime Minister participated in an international conference on AIDS in Montreal and I believe learned first-hand of the agony and frustration of AIDS victims and those individuals working with them.

I want to ask the Prime Minister, in view of the seriousness of this critical situation: Is he prepared to tell the House when he will call a federal-provincial conference of Health Ministers?

When will he let Canadians, as well as the world, know the date for announcing a national strategy to address the situation of AIDS with its specific objectives, its courses of action, its time date and expenditure program? Can the Prime Minister of Canada inform the House on that most important initiative?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the policy of the Government of Canada involves the dissemination of information with regard to AIDS, funding research into treatment, making potentially useful and safe drugs available as rapidly as possible, protecting the rights and benefits of all employees in the federal work place, including those with AIDS or HIV infection, and ensuring that all personal records are protected.

That would be the basis of an improved and strengthened strategy that would be announced by the Minister of Health and Welfare who, as my hon. friends knows, is presently conducting very productive consultations with members of the community interested in this problem.

He has had consultations with leaders of groups who are affected with AIDS, who are living with AIDS, and who have very special and important points of view to bring forward.

Yesterday at the conference I chatted with him and with people involved in this process and all seemed to be reasonably encouraged by the progress that is being made by the Government and other intervenors. I would look forward to that strategy in all of its facets being announced in short order.

REQUEST FOR DATE OF STRATEGY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I want to assure the Right Hon. Prime Minister that we in the Opposition want to participate fully in providing meaningful suggestions in order to address this particular situation. In point of fact, I have given that undertaking to the Minister of National Health and Welfare in committee as of last week. The Prime Minister must know that his own Minister of National Health and Welfare has said categorically that there is no national strategy here in Canada to fight AIDS.

In fact, in April, 1988 the Royal Society of Canada provided a blueprint, if you will, for a national strategy.

I want to believe that the Prime Minister is sincere and that he is committed. Would he please give Canadians a specific date as to when he will announce a specific national strategy for the fight against AIDS, with its objectives, courses of action, as well as its expenditure program?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hope the Minister of National Health and Welfare, when he returns to the House after his participation at the conference in Montreal, will be able to provide my hon. friend with the specific date that he is seeking. In fact, he has spoken to me and others about the co-operation from the Hon. Member in regard to development of a strategy in this important area.

I have received a letter today from Mr. Braff, President and Chairman of the Canadian AIDS Society, a part of which I share with my hon. friend and the House:

> Mr. Prime Minister, the Minister of National Health and Welfare has noted that People Living with AIDS must be treated with respect and compassion. By allowing PLWA's to make their views known to this conference, you have shown this respect.
> It is now necessary to continue the process of recognition and involvement of which Mr. Beatty has so eloquently spoken. People Living with AIDS are expecting many and great things as a result of this conference, as well as a result of the initiatives begun by Mr. Beatty. It is my sincere hope that we will be able to continue to work in a spirit of co-operation and mutual respect.

In acknowledging that, I acknowledge as well the support and commitment of my hon. friend speaking I am sure on behalf of all other Members of the House.

U. S. TRANSPORTATION OF HAZARDOUS WASTEBILL—POSITION OF CANADIAN EMBASSY IN WASHINGTON

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. Today is World Environment Day and, as Canadians, we should reflect on the fact that we are fast becoming the garbage dump of the United States in respect of hazardous and dry wastes.

Canadians were shocked to learn during the PCB-laced gasoline affair that approximately 140,000 metric tons of hazardous waste is exported from the United States into Canada every year. Last week, specifically Wednesday, there was a Congressional Bill moved in the U.S. Congress that would have placed severe limitations on the capacity of U.S. companies to send their waste to Canada and to other countries.

Under whose direction has the Canadian Embassy in Washington already begun lobbying against that particular Bill?

[Translation]

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as the House is aware, Canada-U.S. relations with respect to the transportation of toxic waste are regulated under an agreement and by an Act of Parliament.

These rules set very strict standards, which include obliging companies shipping toxic waste to Canada or to the United States to provide guarantees that there are facilities at the point of destination capable of treating the waste.

As for the question of additional U.S. legislation, Canada hopes that controls on movements of toxic waste will be reinforced as much as possible. I have just checked with my Department, and no one in the Department objects to the passage of new U.S. legislation. However, we will not let Americans set Canadian standards. Those standards will be determined by Parliament and we will do so independently and in accordance with environmental requirements.

REQUEST AS TO WHETHER MINISTER HAS GIVEN CERTAIN INSTRUCTIONS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, we know perfectly well that Canada is becoming a garbage dump, whether we are talking about the Eastern Townships with discarded U.S. refrigerators all over the place or the matter of toxic substances.

More specifically, I would like to ask the Minister whether he himself asked the Canadian Embassy in Washington last Thursday—the same morning he spoke to our Committee, saying he was concerned about the waste issue—did he give the Canadian Embassy instructions to call the U.S. congressman's office to lobby against a U.S. bill that would put limitations on exports of toxic substances to Canada? Did he give those instructions?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I gave no instructions to our embassy in the United States. I may add that the problem of solid waste coming in from the United States is a problem we must deal with. We know, for instance, that these shipments include used refrigerators that are sometimes stored illegally in Canadian dumps.

During a friendly conversation with the Hon. Member last week, we indicated that we needed her help to make a technical correction in the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, and if she gives us her support, we will be able to regulate PCBs in solid waste.

EMPLOYMENT

VISIBLE MINORITY TARGET IN PUBLIC SERVICE

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. We on this side share the concerns of the Canadian Ethnocultural Council that systemic discrimination in the Public Service is continuing since there is a very low percentage of minorities employed in the Public Service and employment equity is not working.

Why has the Government established a target of employing only 3.1 per cent visible minority persons when 6.3 per cent are employed in the general workforce? Is this not a policy of institutionalizing discrimination rather than eliminating it?

[Translation]

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, Treasury Board, together with the various departments and Crown corporations, has been trying for several years to reduce all forms of job discrimation in the Public Service and in Crown corporations.

Objectives have been set to improve the situation by reducing those barriers that prevent people in various groups from having access to employment in the Public Service or access to promotions. So far progress has been made, quite substantial progress, Mr. Speaker, but we want to keep improving our record.

I can assure the Hon. Member that measures are in place, in consultation with the unions, to improve the situation and raise the targets set for the departments and Crown corporations.

EFFECT OF BUDGET CUTS IN PUBLIC SERVICE

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I think it is disgraceful that under 2 per cent of the Public Service employees whom we employ are people of colour. Surely we can do better than that.

Budget cuts will result in even more public servants being laid off and therefore fewer opportunities for visible minority people to get into the Public Service. What will the Government do about this? Will it establish a special fund that will assist in achieving employment equity for target groups?

[Translation]

Hon. Robert de Cotret (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, advisory committees have already been established with the President of the Treasury Board for each target group for hiring and promotion in the Public Service. I meet regularly with each of these advisory groups, which make very useful recommendations to us during their work, Mr. Speaker. These groups are generally satisfied with the progress made to date. In the last few years, they, like the Government, wished that progress were faster. With their help and the support of my colleagues, I am sure that I can improve the situation considerably in coming years.

IMMIGRATION

REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN LEBANESE IMMIGRANTS

Mr. Tom Wappel (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It concerns the sad situation presently being experienced by those fleeing the violence in Lebanon.

The Minister's officials stated last Tuesday that up to 1,500 Lebanese people visit the Canadian Immigration office in Nicosia every week. Yet after making their way through the fighting to the Island of Cyprus, up to 1,200 people per week, fully 80 per cent, face immediate rejection while the lucky few face months of delay.

Will the Minister undertake to the House and Canadians today to review the immigration criteria with a view to increasing the numbers eligible to come to Canada from this war-torn country and to streamline the already over burdened process?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Member and members of the parliamentary committee for their interest in this issue. It is a very important one.

We have been speeding up the process for family class and sponsored relatives. That system is working. We check into this very carefully on an almost daily basis.

I should say that Canada has done more than any other country in terms of alleviating the situation in Nicosia. We have been taking more proportionately than almost any other country. Of course we continue to watch the situation and will continue to handle it as expeditiously as possible.

PRIVATE SPONSORSHIPS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It also concerns the situation in Lebanon.

Despite the worst fighting in 15 years, the Government's special program is anything but special. To date, the number of people landed permanently in Canada is 131 Lebanese, compared to 1976 and 1978 when almost 12,000 Lebanese people were allowed into this country. In 1983, 3,000 people of Lebanese descent were allowed into this country under truly special programs.

Is the Minister prepared to have her Government match the number of private sponsorships by Canadians of Lebanese descent, as was done in 1979 and 1980 for the Vietnamese boat people when Canadians, in partnership with the federal Government, each sponsored 50,000 Vietnamese applicants? Is the Minister prepared to allow willing Canadians to sponsor and thereby help alleviate the tragedy in Lebanon?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, there is no limit on the number of private sponsorships. Of course, we will facilitate in any way we can those private sponsorships and the family class categories to which I have referred.

I should state that at the beginning there was some misunderstanding in the minds of some people about what we were doing, because many of the Lebanese who have been in Nicosia are not people who come from Lebanon but from third countries who were making an effort to take advantage of the program through I believe a genuine misunderstanding. That has changed.

ENERGY, MINES AND RESOURCES

EFFECTS ON OIL AND GAS INDUSTRY

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Four years ago, the Government said that energy was going to be the engine for economic growth in Canada. Since that time, offshore drilling on the east coast has collapsed. This year they are predicting that in the second quarter of 1989 only 89 drilling rigs will be in operation, a mere 17 per cent of the rigs available, which is almost half of the rigs that operated last year, although that was not a good year. This will mean that 6,000 fewer people will be working in the energy, oil and gas sector in western Canada this year.

Why is the Government in effect discouraging activity in the western sedimentary basin in the conventional oil and gas industry through its lack of energy policy and its Draconian financial and budgetary restraints?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Government is not bringing forward disincentives, as the Hon. Member is trying to put forward in his question. It was also debated today when we were looking at Bill C-19, namely, the ending of the CEDIP Program. I remind the Hon. Member that the Government has been dismantling the National Energy Program, which was very much a desire, not only from the point of view of economic activity in the country and from the point of view of investment but from the point of view of the industry.

I also remind the Hon. Member that the industry very much wanted the removal of the National Energy Program. I also say to the Hon. Member that we have been hearing some very disturbing signals from Members on the other side of the House. On the one hand, they say that they are not in favour of the megaprojects. On the other hand, they say they are in favour of the megaprojects. I would like to know where they stand.

The Government of Canada is ready to invest in Hibernia. The Government of Canada is investing at Lloydminster—

Mr. Speaker: We will proceed. The Hon. Member for Mission—Coquitlam.

THE BUDGET

FUNDING OF CHILD CARE—BUDGETARY CUT-BACKS

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Only 11 per cent of children in Canada receive licensed child care. The Government has reneged on its commitment to safe, affordable, universal child care in the Budget.

Will the Minister agree that just as it is not necessary to hold bake sales to purchase weapons, it should not be necessary to hold bake sales to fund child care?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in the Budget we made it very clear that we have an ongoing commitment to child care. We have put in place the tax elements of this, in which we have increased significantly the child tax credit for those lower income families who have children under six years of age. We have clearly indicated our commitment to come back to Parliament with the balance of this proposal some time within this mandate. That states very clearly the ongoing desire that we have to address this very important issue.

Mr. Speaker: I have a point of order from the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs.

NOTICE OF BRIEFING

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I just want it to be clear that the briefing that my officials want to present today at 4.15 p.m. in the Railway Committee Room, Room 253-D, is available to all Members of the House of Commons, not simply the members of the standing committee. It is on a confidential basis.

PREPARATION OF RESOLUTION TO BE PRESENTED TO PARLIAMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I have a different point of order on the same subject. During the Question Period the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) was good enough to say that the Government was responsive to the suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) that a motion be presented to this House for likely unanimous adoption, condemning the authorities in China for their brutal treatment of the young people in Tiananmen Square.

I therefore want to ask the Government House Leader if we cannot consult later in the day on the appropriate wording of such a resolution, which for certainty and adoption could well be presented by the Government and might well be dealt with tonight during the emergency debate.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, if I could reply to that, what I would do, if it meets the agreement of other Members of the House, is prepare a draft resolution which I could circulate in the later part of the afternoon. I will consult with the House Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Gray) and with the foreign policy spokesman of the New Democratic Party to seek language that we could consider during the debate tonight.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, further to this morning's discussion among the Parties which related to the business of the House, I want to clarify this afternoon's business schedule as a result of those discussions. I think we have reached a schedule which will accommodate the Opposition critics and the Government.

The first order of business this afternoon will be Bill C-17, the Customs Tariff Bill. Should second reading of this Bill be concluded before 5 p.m., it is the Government's intention to call a resumed second reading debate on Bill C-19, the energy Bill. If time did permit following the second reading of Bill C-17 and Bill C-19, we would resume second reading debate on Bill C-4.

[English]

CUSTOMS TARIFF

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Doug Lewis (for the Minister of State (Finance) moved that Bill C-17, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Hon. John H. McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to present for second reading Bill C-17, a Bill to enact some tariff changes emanating from the Budget.

[Translation]

As Hon. Members can see, the Bill that we are tabling today is not voluminous. However, it is quite important for many Canadian companies, industries and taxpayers. The Bill will implement the changes to the Customs Tariff made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) on April 27, 1989 as part of his Budget.

[English]

This Bill would essentially accomplish four things. The first group of amendments responds to requests from the private sector to take into account the evolving needs of Canadian business and industry. Specifically, duties are being removed on time recorders, vessels for scrapping, checking fixtures imported temporarily for manufacturing automotive production equipment, and here is one that has caused some smiles in the department, pheasant blinders and guards. I could get into that in greater detail if the House is interested. These goods are not available from Canadian producers and the duty removal will assist industries in their competitiveness.

The duty is also being reduced on low alcohol beer while the excise duty and sales tax are being raised to bring the treatment of imported low alcohol beer into line with that of domestic low alcohol beer.

Secondly, the Bill extends the authority to restore pre-harmonized system tariff rates. Members may recall that on January 1, 1988, Canada and most of its major trading partners converted their tariffs to the harmonized system nomenclature, generally known as the HS, an internationally agreed system for describing, classifying and recording imported goods.

The conversion was complex for Canada because the customs tariff had not undergone fundamental revision for decades. A major objective, and I might say successfully achieved, was to ensure the change would not affect revenue. For major trade items, the conversion maintained the same tariff rate. Because of the complexity of the conversion, however, all individual rates could not be guaranteed to remain the same, particularly in the smaller trade areas.

Since a completely neutral rate conversion could not be guaranteed, the new tariff approved by Parliament in December of 1987 included Order in Council authority to allow the Government, during an 18-month period after implementation, to respond to requests to restore rates existing before harmonization. This authority was extended to be used to rectify only those changes injuring Canadian manufacturers or importers.

As a result of a number of representations indicating the business community has not had time to fully assess the impact of the conversion and present requests for restoration of previous tariff rates, this Bill would extend that authority for a further 12 months until June 30, 1990. This extension will enable the Government to continue to respond to those cases where the conversion has had a negative economic impact on Canadian manufacturers or importers.

• (1510)

This Bill provides duty free entry for a range of imports which have previously benefited from duty remission by Order in Council. As Hon. Members know, the Government has the authority to remit customs duties by Order in Council in situations where it concludes such action is necessary, an authority which is used primarily where the application of the tariff laws or regulations are having unintended and undesirable results for specific imports.

In the past, the House has expressed concerns regarding the use of this authority. The Government has taken steps to address these concerns through the tabling of all remission orders valued over $20 million, and a semi-annual report of all remission orders approved by the Governor in Council.

In a further effort to deal with these concerns, the Government is taking a comprehensive look at all remission orders to determine those which can be converted to statutory provisions in the Tariff and thereby provide Parliament with the opportunity to consider them. Converting these items into the statute itself will provide the private sector with greater certainty regarding the tariff relief and will relieve the administrative burden which the remission orders place on the importing community.

As a result of this initial review, this Bill would convert to statutory provisions in the tariff remission orders providing duty-free entry for the following products: books and printed matter; satellites and satellite subsystems for testing, and articles for use in the manufacture of satellites and subsystems; materials for use in the manufacture of upper atmospheric research rockets; investigational drugs, placebos, and emergency drugs; machinery and equipment for the manufacture of original equipment automotive parts; chemicals and photomasks for the manufacture of semi-conductors; used foundry patterns, core boxes, et cetera, temporarily imported for the making of metal castings; xenon lighting equipment; lamp bulbs for the production of Christmas lighting sets, and laminated glass dinnerware.

Fourth and last, the Bill also extends the Customs Tariff prohibition of importation of pornographic, hate, treasonable and seditious materials scheduled to expire on December 31, 1989. This Bill would extend the prohibition indefinitely to ensure that such materials continue to be denied entry into Canada.

I have already indicated that although the tariff amendments in this Bill are few in number, they are important to the companies and individuals who will benefit from them.

It has been the policy of successive Governments to respond to the evolving needs of the business community and individuals by introducing appropriate tariff changes in annual Budgets. This Bill continues that process. I would ask that the House give it speedy passage.

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join the Minister in speaking briefly to this Bill. Like him, I trust it will receive speedy passage. It is largely a housekeeping Bill. It rectifies previous problems of an administrative nature that have arisen in the implementation of our Customs practices. It recognizes the need to accommodate the requirements of business to make further adaptations to the new tariff rates and practices.

I join the Minister in recognizing that importers may well require a further 12 months to accommodate themselves to new tariff rates that replace those in effect before the recent harmonization exercise. The harmonization exercise is part of a broader move by Canada toward adapting to more liberal global trading practices. We support the first part of the Bill to enable that process to go forward.

The conversion of certain remission orders to statutory provisions is equally welcome for those goods and products which previously entered the country duty-free. Again, the benefit should be to the business community and to the general prosperity of our country.

I noted the Minister's comments about the adjustments to the statutory tariffs in response to domestic concerns. I was glad that earlier in his comments he had referred to the more generous treatment of pheasants and their blinders. I regretted that the Minister in his brief comments did not also draw our attention to the fact that under this legislation mongooses will be allowed into Canada if imported by a zoological institution for display or study purposes. The mongoose, an admirable animal, able to dispatch venomous reptiles with great alacrity, is certain to be a welcome addition to Canada. I say that incidentally, in completely non-partisan terms.

Finally, I want to say a word about the extension indefinitely of the Customs Tariff prohibiting importation of pornographic, hate, treasonable and seditious materials. This is a difficult area. It is not easy for any Government to define or delineate what exactly is pornographic, hate, treasonable and seditious material. However, the Government has moved, I believe, in the right way to extend the present prohibition. There may be problems with it, but I think the move is the right one in the circumstances.

We on this side of the House welcome the introduction of the Bill. We are ready to join in giving it early passage.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to represent my Party in the debate on Bill C-17, an Act to amend the Customs Tariff. I will not spend any time dealing with the harmonization component and the delay by one year aspect of it.

I wish to focus on the change that comes in Clause 25 which states innocuously enough:

> Code 9956 in Schedule VII to the said Act is amended by striking out the words following paragraph (d) thereof.

A lay person reading that clause will not know exactly what it is talking about. This is the clause that deals with the change in how material deemed to be pornographic, hateful, seditious and treasonable under the Criminal Code of Canada is dealt with.

Currently, there is an annual obligation that the Government come back to Parliament to request the re-enactment of that particular piece of legislation. It has a lifespan of a year. This deletion change means that the section will permanently be in place and that the Government will no longer have to come back to the House for permission and approval. We question that.

First, we question whether this is the appropriate Act to deal with that aspect, in the sense that it goes beyond the normal rules of bringing materials in for the purposes of tariffs or taxation. This can really become a matter of the policy of Canada in terms of how it is to treat material that has been produced in another country, that is, a visual display, electronic, celluloid or in print which deals with pornographic, hateful, seditious and treasonable materials. It is the type of thing where we need that annual mechanism so that as a result of decisions made by the Government or employees of the Government—all we have do is to look back over the last few months and the Rushdie affair and how, as a result of one letter to one Government Department, a ban was placed on that book coming across the border for a short period of time. It was not a permanent ban. Maybe the use of the word "ban" is inappropriate. It was held up for examination even though it had been coming into the country since September of that year.

Without getting into the specifics of that, the concern we have is that by allowing for this amendment under the guise of changes in tariffs, we are making permanent the existing regime. Instead of having a full debate and an amendment coming forward to deal with how Canada approaches this type of material coming across our border, and that is separate from anything that is produced here, we believe this is the wrong vehicle. We believe this is an inappropriate step in this day and age when we do not have a clear definition in legal terms, because of an act of this House and the inability of the Government to proceed with its Draconian definition, a definition that reflects community standards, not just in one community but across this land. It is a mistake to include this in here. At the very least, we will be arguing in committee for its deletion so that we retain the year to year review.

In any case, because of that provision and because we feel it is that important, we in this Party will be voting against the Bill at second reading. We will not belabour the point. We will not, to my knowledge, add any additional speakers, and we will not call for a recorded division. However, we want to go on record as being opposed to this Bill because of Clause 25.

I appreciate the House taking the time to hear from me. Perhaps in committee we will perhaps be in a position to see, on one hand, the rationale of the Government as to why it is included in this way as opposed to some other more upfront vehicle which clearly says "an Act to Amend the Criminal Code of Canada dealing with pornography", and deal with it accordingly and have it go to the Justice Committee or a legislative committee dealing with justice rather than the route it will follow now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the Motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Angus: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Accordingly, the Bill stands referred to a legislative committee.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Exploration and Development

CANADIAN EXPLORATION AND DEVELOPMENT INCENTIVE PROGRAM ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Epp that Bill C-19, an Act to amend the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will take a few brief moments to make some comments regarding the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program which this Government unfortunately and prematurely terminated on April 27.

The program was announced with great acclaim just two years ago. At that time it was obvious from the Government's comments that it appreciated the Opposition's co-operation in helping it through the House and that it recognized the necessity for this program.

I wish to take a few moments to read to the Members of this House and to remind them of some of the comments made by Government Members at that time, keeping in mind that these comments were made less than two years ago.

On June 10, 1987 in this House, Mr. Jack Shields, who at that time was the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, spoke with respect to this Bill. He made some very interesting comments. He said:

> I am sure all Hon. Members are fully aware of the problems the Canadian oil industry and the western producing regions experienced, particularly last year because of the dramatic drop in international oil prices.

He went on to state:

> Hundreds of companies went into receivership and experienced bankruptcies. I believe we all appreciate the human and social costs of the situation.

This was a Bill that received a lot of unanimity, which is unusual in this House. In fact, it received a lot of support throughout this country as the Government consulted not only with the Opposition Parties but with representatives of the oil and gas sector. The Hon. Member at that time indicated:

> There is now a mood of optimism in the oil patch that has not existed for quite some time.

He also indicated again:

> The purpose of these consultations and briefings was to ensure that the financial support provided by the Government would do the greatest amount of good while respecting the structure of the industry.

He went on:

> —it is estimated that the program will attract up to $1 billion in additional investment in the petroleum industry and will create as many as 20,000 jobs in the oil and gas sector.

This was a Bill and a program that was widely accepted throughout this country, a program that was doing good and held a lot of benefit for western Canada, an area of this country that has, as Members know, suffered economically in the recent past.

The Member concluded his remarks, in part, by stating:

> The Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program is a signal to thousands of workers in the oil patch in western Canada and the producing provinces that we recognize the importance of the oil and gas industry and that we have confidence in its future.

Well, just as they sent a signal in passing the Bill, they have certainly sent another signal by withdrawing it so prematurely, something which is most unsatisfying and upsetting to western Canadians.

There was also a Member, Bob Porter, who was at that time the Member from Medicine Hat who in his remarks stated:

> While all energy companies will benefit, it is the hundreds of companies in the service sector and the smaller oil and gas producers that will benefit most from this program. An important feature is the provision to allow oil and gas companies to offer flow-through shares which will attract capital and offer Canadians an opportunity to invest in exploration and development in this country.

He went on to indicate that some 2,000 wells would result in some 4,500 direct jobs and over 12,000 jobs in the service and supply sector. I quote again:

> While the immediate benefits are obvious, it is vital that the expertise in manpower and technology that Canada's energy sector has developed over the last four decades is to be maintained.

This is a program that supported western development in the western provinces. It was a program that was developing jobs and securing jobs in western Canada. Now this Government has taken the initiative to pull away that program, to simply tell western Canadians that they are no longer important. "We are a Government that is concerned with other areas of the economy but not with western Canada." That is the message being sent by this Government, a message that is most unfortunate and most upsetting for Members. Western Members on both sides of the House are extremely disappointed with this procedure. As well, just before the last election, the Member for Calgary Southwest (Mrs. Sparrow) indicated that the incentive program was going to be phased out. I quote from Hansard of September 30, 1988. She stated: "The incentive rate would be dropping off and in fact it would be terminating on December 31, 1989".

• (1530)

The Member indicated at that time that the cap would remain at $10 million per company. She also indicated, and I quote:

> The Minister has also recognized the number of jobs in western Canada that are totally dependent on the petroleum industry. This incentive means a further $80 million will be injected into the industry which will keep the rigs working, protecting jobs and helping replace Canada's depleting conventional oil reserves.

That was just prior to the election call. That was $80 million added into the program. That was of the so-called guarantees that this Government had put forth.

In fact, the Government at that time indicated during the election campaign that it had not made promises, it had made commitments. That $80 million was part of some $23 billion or $24 billion or $25 billion of so-called commitments that the Conservative Party said it had made to the Canadian people. After the election, this Government came back and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) said that he was sorry, but these were not really commitments but were actually promises and now those promises cannot be kept, and this $80 million is simply part of that.

One thing you have to give this Government credit for is that they are very good when it comes to using smoke and mirrors. We could all learn some pretty good lessons from them if we wanted to learn those kinds of lessons, except we on this side of the House are not interested in those kinds of lessons.

This Government came forth with many promises which were supposed to be commitments, turned into promises, which suddenly vanished when the dust had cleared from the last election. This is a slap in the face for western Canada.

This is the Party that for years said it was the Party for western Canadians. It said it was the Party that was going to stand up for western Canadians, election after election, year after year. It seems strange now that they are in power and after they have their second majority that suddenly the West is not as important as it used to be. It is not as essential. I remind the Government that people in western Canada are observing this. Certainly these are items they will remember.

Nowhere in these quotes does one get the impression that perhaps the Government did not think the program was useful or needed. In fact, it was quite the opposite. It indicated that it was a good program. We on this side of the House indicated that it was a good program and that we supported the program as did the Liberal Party, the petroleum industry and the gas industry.

There are many small oil and gas companies in this country right now that are suffering. Certainly the major oil companies are. The Essos of the world are in no danger of going under, but this is a program that was designed to assist some of the smaller oil companies and to keep jobs in the service sector that was part of the oil industry. Now the program has been removed.

There were proposals that were put forth to this Government to not stop the program, not take away the money, but change it slightly. Maybe reduce the cap. Instead of a $10 million cap, reduce it somewhat so that the total amount of money is reduced but the smaller oil and gas companies could take advantage of the program.

In fact, as was indicated earlier, some 90 per cent of the oil companies and companies which applied for incentive grants received only 15 per cent of the income. Some of these smaller oil companies can use that money. They can use it at this time in their development. As the Government indicated in the last House, it is important to maintain that sector and to maintain its expertise in Western Canada. If it goes, it is gone for a long time.

It is this type of attitude and callous disregard that this Government is displaying to Canadians that is making Western Canadians and all Canadians very annoyed. It is a situation that Canadians are going to remember. It is like the old adage that it is not the Opposition that defeats a Government, it is the Government that defeats the Government. This Government is doing a very good job of it. This is a Government that with its second mandate and the first time there has been a second majority in some 35 years in this country, now is taking a high-handed approach to the Canadian public. It no longer has to listen to the Canadian people. That is the attitude it takes.

I remind this House that there will be another election within the next four years and at that time, these are points that the Canadian public is going to remember.

I would like to also quote from a Globe and Mail article by Drew Fagan, who was published on March 20, 1989. I quote:

> For drilling companies across Alberta this has been the winter of their discontent. Although there are 525 drilling rigs in Western Canada, only 160 actually operated in January. And while in February the number increased to 245, that still represents a 33 per cent decrease over the corresponding month a year earlier. At first glance, the situation seems surprising, as the world price of oil has risen substantially in late last year.
> That benchmark price is generally the major factor driving activity levels across the energy industry.
> But oil and gas companies planned their drilling levels for the key winter season last fall, when oil prices were cratering. And the rise in prices, even though it has been in place almost three months, has met decided skepticism about whether or not it can last—

To finish the quote:

> —other factors have also played a major part in making this winter one of the slowest in the past decade in terms of drilling activity.

The oil and gas industry is in a period of uncertainty. Certainly they are waiting for the OPEC meetings in June to see what sort of pricing they can count on. They are planning their activities long in advance. For this Government to come along, knowing the situation that exists in the oil patch at this time and to simply cut the feet from under the oil companies is a situation that borders on arrogance. This is a Government that prides itself on consultation? This is a Government that prides itself in listening to the Canadian public?

This is a Government that has its own small network of friends. This is a Government that is concerned only with that small group or that small clique that is calling the shots for this Party. To be quite frank, it is something that we, on this side of the House, find hard to stomach.

Although the Government announced just before the election that an extra $80 million would go into the program, that $80 million was taken away when the program was ended prematurely, just five months after the election.

The Canadian Association of Oil Well Drilling Contractors recently tried to put meaning to the numbers by calculating just what the cancellation of CEDIP would mean to their members.

These figures are from the oil and gas industry which indicate that up to 50 rigs could work with the $80 million stimulus that is now lost, that employment on the rig floor would have been 1,500 people, and at least 3,700 jobs would have been provided. This is a significant number of jobs in Western Canada and a significant number of jobs in a region that is now facing higher and higher unemployment. It is a region of Canada that has been suffering a drought for the last few years. In fact, an indication of the Government's concern for the West is from the Finance Minister, who indicated during the Budget debate that he thought that people in Western Canada were recovering from the drought. The Finance Minister is certainly out of touch with Western Canada when he makes comments like that. It is not surprising that this sort of legislation should come through as well.

Given the continuing need to protect jobs in the industry, especially among the small contractors and service companies, one must ask what the Government plans to do to replace CEDIP. Its premature cancellation has every appearance of short-term political expediency on the part of the Government. We on this side of the House hope that a suitable replacement will soon be put in place.

We suggest to the Minister that, instead of cancelling the program, it is restructured in order that jobs in the oil sector will be secure, the jobs in the service sector that supports the oil industry will remain in place, and that the expertise that is now in western Canada will remain there. Certainly, by lowering the cap from $10 million to $1 million or $2 million would go a long way in saving the Government money, which it claims it wants to do, but it would also go a long way to securing jobs.

A much higher cost is paid when jobs disappear. The Government may save a few million dollars on a program, but the indirect costs are significant. When direct jobs are lost, the spin-off jobs related thereto are also lost. Suddenly, the pressure on social programs and unemployment insurance programs rises at a very time when the Government is cutting the legs offof those programs as well.

We plead with the Government to take some initiative in dealing with average Canadians who are simply trying to pay for their mortgage and maintain some standard of living. However, the Government is ignoring that, has been ignoring it, and continues to ignore it. This Bill is another example of a Government that is out of touch, a Government that has lost complete control of its understanding of the nation's problems. That is why we are opposed to the Bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Edmonton East on a question or a comment.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): I was delighted to hear the Hon. Member bring up the question of the economic impact of the cancellation of the CEDIP Program in general in western Canada. The Hon. Member mentioned the drought and the spin-off effects of the loss of direct patch jobs. In Alberta, especially in northern Alberta, most of those who ostensibly make their living as farmers rely as well on off-farm income to keep their farm operations going.

It is a simple fact of life in agriculture, especially in Alberta north of Red Deer, the farm income itself is insufficient to fully cover the costs of the operation and allow a sufficient surplus to provide for a life of comfort and some dignity for the farm families still on the land. Therefore, off-farm income in the non-growing season has become a fact of life. As often as not, in Alberta, off-farm income means the oil patch. There are literally thousands and thousands of people who are registered as farmers for income tax purposes who, in the off-farm season, go to work in the oil patch, work on the rigs, doing the servicing, or even slinging the hash at the sites. Those people rely on that employment to allow them to continue to farm.

The effect of the cancellation of the CEDIP for those people, because the number of companies out in the patch drilling and exploring will be reduced because the over-all level of activity will be greatly reduced, will be far fewer of those jobs available for farmers seeking off-farm income. What we are talking about is not only a program the cancellation of which will be very bad news for the oil patch, which it certainly will be, but we are also talking about a program the cancellation of which will be very bad news for the farm community. I am certain that will prove to be the case in northern Alberta.

I was wondering if the Member for Moose Jaw—Lake Centre (Mr. Laporte), especially because of the natural gas activity that we know occurs in Saskatchewan, might comment on the degree to which the same might hold true in his province.

Mr. Laporte: I thank my hon. friend for his comment. He has precisely hit the nail on the head. Not only in Alberta and Saskatchewan, but in Manitoba, and I am sure in other areas of Canada, but in western Canada we have an infrastructure where each element is important to the survival of the entire infrastructure.

In Saskatchewan the family farm is the basis of our economy. That family farm structure also supports numerous communities. It supports numerous small businesses that rely on the family farm income. In the last few years because of the situation in agriculture in western Canada, many farmers are now seeking off-farm income. Certainly, the oil patch in Alberta and the oil and gas-related jobs in Saskatchewan have provided much needed extra income for the people of that region.

The federal Government and the Government of Saskatchewan have been talking about the need for diversification. This program was helping to maintain some diversification. By cutting that program, and the loss of jobs that will result from the loss of that program will have an effect directly on agriculture and the many small farmers who are trying to survive, many family farms will lose the extra income.

As my hon. friend mentioned, there are many people who work on the farms during the summer months and spend other months on the oil rigs or in the gas fields. This is one more area that will be lost to them, one more area from which they will not have the opportunity to derive extra income. It is extremely important in light of the fact of the Government's attitude toward agriculture.

In 1985 the then Minister of Agriculture indicated that the Government would be putting forward a permanent drought program. It never came. The Government has been promising some answers for agriculture which have not come forward. Now we know that in the fall the Government will be introducing programs with respect to agriculture, but that program will be dealing with the bottom line. The whole social infrastructure is in danger of collapsing as the Crow benefit is changed, rail lines are removed, and as family farms become larger. Those jobs that are now being lost are very important to the people in that region. If the Government would think of the social and economic benefits that will result from that program as opposed to always considering the bottom line, the Government would reconsider that legislation if it had a mind-set to take that approach and view western Canada from that philosophical point of view.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I want to join in the debate this afternoon on the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program. This program has been very beneficial since 1987 when it was first established to provide incentives to the oil and gas exploration industry.

In 1986 the price of oil dropped precipitously from $28 or $29 U.S. a barrel to as low as $10 a barrel. The whole industry collapsed during the latter half of 1986. By 1987 this incentive program was brought into being to assist the industry, especially the small producers and it has been beneficial in that regard. It could have been better if the cap had been lower as our caucus has been recommending in that the benefits would have flown to the small producers.

We have to realize that something very dramatic in terms of concentration of the industry has taken place since 1984. At that time we had the National Energy Program in place which was an incentive program to bring greater participation by Canadian oil and gas industry into the industry and to exploit our oil and gas reserves. With the Government's removal of all those incentives, with the collapse of prices in 1986, what we have seen is cash-strapped Canadian companies being bought up by the multinationals and a massive concentration taking place. This incentive program, especially if it had been restricted to $1 million for the smaller companies as the multinationals do not need it on the same basis, could have continued the development of small and medium-sized Canadian companies to prove up reserves and bring them on stream.

It is incredible that this program is being dropped at a time when the Budget seems to indicate that all the megaprojects are going forward. We are talking about a relatively small amount of money here, $350 million, and we are told that if this program were limited to a cap of only $1 million per producer, the cost would be dramatically reduced to only $80 million per year. It would meet 90 per cent of those who wanted to use the program. I find it amazing that for that relatively small amount of money in terms of jobs created and economic activity developed that the megaprojects, where we are talking about $4 billion or $5 billion for Hibernia and the upgraders and the tar sands projects, are apparently on stream. Whether that will actually happen or not is hard to say.

We are killing off this relatively small incentive program in the western sedimentary basin where we have small jobbers and exploration and development companies which could easily use it. They have their people and equipment in place. It is being killed off at a time when all the megaprojects are still on stream, or have not been cancelled formally.

I recently read a report by the Ontario Corn Producers saying that it is interesting that while the megaprojects are still on stream, for programs designed to encourage the development of ethanol plants using distress farm products or damage for farm commodities, there is no incentive there. In fact, a disincentive is there because of the cancellation of a number of farm programs such as the Advanced Payments Program which is beneficial to corn producers and to western agricultural producers. We seem to be favouring massive megaprojects over the small ones. I don't believe anyone is opposed to the megaprojects. They do bring on stream large reserves but at the same time small incentive programs like the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program are being wiped out.

You, Mr. Speaker, represent an Edmonton riding. We know how conscious you are of the some 6,100 jobs which have been lost because of the drop of 32 per cent in the first quarter of this year. We are told that only 70 per cent of the rigs in Alberta are operating today. We are told that if the DECET program is wiped out that another 3,700 jobs will be lost. This is at a time when agriculture generally has suffered in the West with loss due to drought last year and loss in the previous two years due to the international grain wars. All in all we are putting a heavy load on western Canadians at this time.

I know from your perspective, Mr. Speaker, that you are very concerned about this and do not want to see any action taken which would be harmful to the industry. We have to put this into the perspective of the cut-back in the federal-provincial agreements, the ERDA agreements because this has been an incentive agreement by the federal Government to the oil and gas industry. However, the provinces do have similar incentive programs where a portion of the royalties are foregone for a period of a few months to try to bring on stream greater oil and gas exploration and development. We have to be very conscious of the fact that we are selling massive amounts of oil and exporting it into the U.S. right now. We are making commitments well beyond the 25 year period in natural gas. Therefore there is a need to bring on greater and greater supplies and prove up greater reserves in the western sedimentary basin.

Rather than cancelling the program, we are suggesting to the Government that it should be lowering the limit from $10 million to $1 million. This would satisfy some 90 per cent of the applicants. It would save the Government some 85 per cent of the cost of the program. We recognize that this kind of incentive program and cash flow needs are not that great for the large multinational corporations. It is mainly for small exploration and development companies. We think for that reason it should be continued.

For instance, it has been estimated that under the CEDIP program, it would cost the Government some $80 million a year if they use the new proposed criteria which we are putting forward. The industry would generate some $450 million worth of activity and of course develop more gas and oil reserves. At the same time it would create thousands of jobs just by maintaining this program but at a lower level.

The Government should think twice about this. In its own way, it is a regional development program for portions of Saskatchewan and Alberta. Usually in regional development programs, you need to have a system or a mechanism that relates to the raw natural resources of the area. Clearly this is the resource. When the Premier of Alberta spoke dramatically and in very harsh terms about this to the government in 1987, the government responded by bringing in the program. it was one that was useful.

At that time the federal Government had refused to provide a loan of several hundred million dollars or a loan guarantee to the tar sands operations at Fort McMurray for expansion and development. The Alberta Government did it on its own. Then this program came in and the Premier spoke strongly to see it established. The Government responded. The Government should look twice at this proposal before cancelling it completely. We are talking about saving unemployment insurance, and welfare costs. We are talking about people having jobs and the dignity that a job provides. We are not sure how much more anguish there will be in the farm sector this year because of the uncertainty about crops and so on.

• (1600)

The Government should reconsider this proposal when it goes to committee. It could reduce the cap from $10 million to $1 million and specify it for small and medium size oil and gas exploration companies. I think it will find that CEDIP can continue to play a useful role in creating jobs and proving up oil and gas reserves in the western sedimentary basin.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, question or comment. I was interested in a number of the Hon. Member's remarks with regard to the impact of the Bill and the Government's ideological bent in the oil patch.

How would the Member respond to the contention that the Government is not one that is reluctant to interfere in the industry, at least nowhere near as reluctant as it claims from time to time, but rather one with a consistent history of interference in the marketplace in energy, and certainly one with gigantic plans for further interference in that marketplace? I am thinking in particular of the proposed programs for funding of the various megaprojects.

How would he respond to the contention that this is in fact a Government not shy of interference, not in reality opposed to interference but one that enjoys a predilection toward interference on behalf of a wealthy and powerful few in the industry while maintaining its much more rigorous ideological commitment to non-interference in that realm of the smaller independent Canadian companies that constitute the huge majority of companies in the patch but do not control anywhere near the assets of the foreign majors? Could the Member respond to that?

Mr. Foster: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Hon. Member's inquiry. I believe he has perceived the situation very much as it is. A year ago when we were facing the prospect of a general election, the Government made one announcement after another. Hibernia was obviously a massive intervention, with $1 billion or $2 billion, if one counts both the grants and the loan guarantees that were proposed. The tar sands and the upgrader projects are examples of a massive involvement by the Government.

I am surprised that this very small program, CEDIP, would even be noticed by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), considering the several billions of dollars under these massive programs which, as far as we know, are still on the table.

As the Hon. Member said, it seems that when we talk about massive programs there are billions of dollars to intervene to assist the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) in his riding, or to assist in the development of the tar sands plant in Fort McMurray, or to assist the Minister for International Trade (Mr Crosbie) to get re-elected in Newfoundland. However, when it comes to levels of funding of $80 million or $100 million, it becomes a question of market economy.

We have already seen a massive concentration of oil and gas reserves in the western sedimentary basin during the last four years. Before the crash in oil prices in 1986, these reserves were much more widely held by small Canadian companies, which was the purpose of the whole incentive arrangement under the National Energy Program. When the prices collapsed from $28 to $10 during 1986, these companies did not have the resources to continue for long and there was a massive buy-up. Now there is a concentration of those reserves into the names of the multinationals.

When one considers the purchase of Gulf Minerals by Petro-Canada, there certainly was no hesitation by the Government to intervene in the marketplace and buy up one of the largest Canadian oil and gas companies owned by Petro-Canada. What will happen with Petro-Canada is anyone's guess. I think the Member is generally correct that it is not as much an ideological issue as it is the size of the project. The decision of whether or not to intervene in the marketplace is whether the Government is trying to deal with a specific political situation or give specific advantage to a multinational. That seems to be the general direction the Government has taken.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in the debate at second reading of Bill C-19, an Act to amend the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program Act. When I read my briefing notes and listened to Hon. Members, I could not help but think back to another debate in a previous Parliament about the ramifications of a government's step to eliminate flow-through shares, and the hue and cry that was created throughout northern Ontario in particular because of the impact of that taxation change and the very quick decline of investment in mineral resource exploration in my part of the world. I wonder whether the Government will have the same problems as a result of its decision about CEDIP.

This program was introduced, effective April 1, 1987, to help the oil and gas industry overcome the impact of the decline in oil and gas prices on employment and investment, particularly in western Canada, caused in large part by the decision of the Government to deregulate energy pricing and marketing. In other words, it decided to take from the industry the system of stability that was in place within Canada so that producers would know their rate of return and purchasers would know the cost. This gave people the opportunity to have a stable lifestyle in the same way as we argue in the House for marketing boards for agricultural products to give some protection to both producers and consumers.

The price of oil at the time was $18.45 a barrel. It dropped to about $13 a barrel and rose again to $20. The program initially provided a cash incentive of 33.3 per cent on eligible exploration and development expenses incurred in Canada, up to a maximum grant of $3.3 million on $10 million in expenses per company.

To help debt-ridden small producers, the package allows companies that do not pay taxes to issue flow-through shares and pass tax credit money through to investors to help raise money. The program was expected to provide $350 million in assistance annually to the oil and gas industry.

A total of $1.25 billion was placed into the program from 1987 through to 1990. When the Bill was dealt with by this House back on June 10, 1987, all three Parties not only supported it but gave it quick passage.

There were concerns raised at the time that the Government took much too long to bring the legislation in. In some ways it was after the barn door was open and the horses had not only bolted but were well past the next pasture. Also we pointed out that it was in apparent conflict with the Government's free enterprise philosophy. This is something, Mr. Speaker, that I know you are very familiar with and would be concerned about if you thought that the Government of which you were elected as a Member was doing something different than its philosophy seemed to suggest.

In any case, that is how it was perceived and how it in fact occurred.

At that time during the debate, my colleague, who is now the Member for Port Moody—Coquitlam (Mr. Waddell) stated: "I should like to say that I am cautiously optimistic that the Bill will work. It favours smaller companies. It focuses on grants rather than on tax incentives, allowing some of the smaller companies which do not pay taxes to benefit. It acknowledges the plight of small oil companies as a national issue. It is a national problem about which we all must talk."

It is still short term. The long-term solution is to diversify the western economy. This is no mean feat but is something that must be done away from total dependence upon oil, but oil being the major part of it.

That is a very important component. As someone who comes from Ontario, but that part of Ontario which is not part of Metropolitan Toronto or the Golden Horseshoe, distance is a major factor, as it is in western Canada. Yes, we have our resources. Ours are of the mineral variety as opposed to the oil and gas variety in western Canada, and the agricultural resources. We recognize the inherent reality in the way the country is structured. The resources tend to gravitate toward the metropolitan areas, where there is a much larger consumer demand, so that when you add the value you can sell it more readily at a lower transportation cost. The real challenge that Canada faces is how do we develop our structures and our systems to encourage the development of secondary and tertiary industries in Alberta, in Saskatchewan, in Manitoba and in northern Ontario, so that we can use the resources closer to where we live and work so that we, too, can share in that benefit.

On the energy side I think there is a much greater need to provide mechanisms to allow that to happen. Unfortunately, this Government has seen fit to eliminate one of those elements that in effect encouraged processing in the Province of Alberta, or processing in the Province of Saskatchewan. That is a regret. It just makes even more distant the day on which Alberta residents can see additional jobs created. Not just the drilling and the direct employment opportunities related to exploration and drilling, but additional processing, additional manufacturing that we think they should have without having to get into the battle of stealing jobs from one part of the country to the other. Create the wealth in western Canada, where there is wealth in terms of resources, and use that for the benefit of the people there.

Back in 1986, in terms of western Canadian rig activity, utilization was at a decade-low. Just before CEDIP was introduced, only 35 per cent of available rigs were drilling. One year later, utilization was only 37 per cent, rising to 41 per cent in 1988. This is still well under half of the rigs being utilized for exploration.

I gather that spring is traditionally a time of low utilization but this year's spring is even worse than expected. The President of the Canadian Association of Oil Well Drilling Contractors, Mr. Brian Krausert, recently stated in the Edmonton Journal: "We've just come through the worst period in our recorded history. The spring has been truly ugly."

At the end of May, only 84 rigs were drilling in western Canada, a 60 per cent drop from the same period last year. This is a plunge the Association estimates has cost 17,000 direct and indirect jobs in the oil patch. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that if 17,000 jobs were eliminated in a Hamilton or a London or in Ottawa in the Province of Ontario over two or three months, it would not go unnoticed. In fact, to use the vernacular, there would be hell to pay. People would be clamouring in this House and in the Ontario Legislature for some action. Instead, because they are resource-based jobs, they are spread throughout and not any one particular community is hit by them. They are just bits and pieces around the provinces. It is an invisible kind of unemployment problem, Mr. Speaker, and because it is invisible it does not obtain the attention that is appropriate for the degree of impact, nor does it achieve or obtain the political sensitivity that I think is important for us to recognize. It is a very important situation.

Even before the projected ending of CEDIP, figures for the summer of 1989 were grim. CAODC forecast that only 40 per cent of rigs in western Canada would be drilling in the first quarter of 1989, only 29 per cent or 153 rigs in the second quarter, 28 per cent in the third, and 48 per cent in the fourth. That was before the Budget and before the end of CEDIP.

The managing director of CAODC, Don Herring, stated that after CEDIP even these low estimates will have to be revised. "Now we'll have to revise that figure downward." Many companies are apparently on the brink of bankruptcy. Many oil and gas producers are holding back until June's OPEC meeting on quotas and prices.

The early cancellation of CEDIP will mean less activity and fewer jobs. Early cancellation represents $80 million. CAODC estimates that the maximum impact of this is as follows: Activity for up to 50 rigs only, representing employment for up to 1,500 people on the rig floor and 3,700 jobs at the least.

The Small Explorers and Producers Association of Canada wrote to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to express its concerns about the Budget and the early elimination of CEDIP. In its letter of May 9, the chairman stated: "The abrupt termination of the CEDIP Program by the Government, which will be borne solely by the independent Canadian junior oil company, and the introduction of new taxes on the industry have eliminated at least $250 million in planned capital investment in the conventional oil and gas industry. It puts in jeopardy thousands of jobs in small exploration and producing companies as well as the service sectors that conduct about one-third of the activity in the Western Canadian sedimentary basin. It is unfair."

Not only are oil patch workers and associations distressed at the early elimination of CEDIP, they are also annoyed by the way the Government eliminated it. The program was originally announced amidst much hoop-la by the then Minister of Energy back in 1987. He announced the program would start on April 1, 1987, at the rate of 33-1/3 per cent. On October 1, 1988, the rate would drop to 16-2/3 per cent. The program was scheduled to end on December 31, 1989, about six or seven months from now.

Then came the run-up to the federal election. The Conservatives made announcements relating to Hibernia, Lloydminster, OSLO and the Vancouver Island pipeline. Small producers and Alberta MPs joined together to pressure the Government to modify the program which was about to decline in value.

On September 30, 1988, the Government announced that the program would be phased down less rapidly than originally announced. I repeat, less rapidly. On October 1, 1988, the rate would drop to 25 per cent rather than 16-2/3 per cent. The drop from 25 per cent to 16-2/3 per cent would be delayed until July 1, 1989, and the program would end as planned on December 31, 1989.

This announcement made it possible for the Minister to claim, "This delayed phase-down will inject a further $80 million into the oil and gas industry. This revision will lead to the drilling of an estimated 300 additional wells and will maintain 1,600 oil-patch jobs". However, this extra $80 million was taken away entirely when the Budget was announced. Give one day, just before the election, and take away the next, when safely elected, seems to be the Tory motto.

This blatant manipulation was not well received in the oil patch. The Chairman of the Small Explorers and Producers Association of Canada in a letter to the Minister of Finance dated May 9, 1989 stated:

> Based on the government's November election platform, we were shocked by the manner in which CEDIP was handled. Although the Minister of Energy told the industry in Calgary on April 5, 1989 that CEDIP would end (on December 31, 1989) as planned, this budget terminated the program three weeks later in spite of a negotiated clause in the CEDIP Act that was to provide six months notice of such a change. This action is hardly the encouragement needed to create more investment in Western Canada.

It is no wonder that the people of Alberta are beginning to wake up. That is why we now have for the first time a New Democratic Party Member from the Province of Alberta sitting in this House. The people of Alberta are beginning to recognize that they cannot trust the Conservatives, that the Conservatives say one thing before an election and do the exact opposite after. We need Members, such as our New Democratic Party Member, to ensure that the people of Alberta know what is really happening in the House of Commons and what their Government is doing for them and to them.

There are a number of other items that I want to talk about. If the Government really felt that cuts had to be made, even after announcing an extra $80 million just before the election, then the alternative approach—restricting the cap on the program, that is, the maximum amount of grant any one company could receive, rather than the proportion of expenses that could be claimed back—deserves serious attention. This would have given even greater relative support to the smallest companies. However, there is no evidence that this option was even considered by the Government. I am sure that my colleague in committee will question the Government as to whether in fact it did pursue that option as well as others before it arrived at the six-month early termination of the program.

There is really no substitute for a made-in-Canada floor price for oil to provide real stability for the oil patch in these downturns, and to provide employment stability for thousands of workers in the West. My constituents are the consumers of these products. They recognize that on the one hand there is a need for fairness in terms of the price they have to pay, whether it be at the pump or in their homes, no matter whether it is oil or gas. They also recognize on the other hand that the people of the producing provinces, both the workers and the companies, need a decent standard of living. They realize that they need to be assured of stable employment and therefore stable operation of the companies involved.

While I have gone to bat for my constituents before the Ontario Energy Board to make sure that whatever savings achieved by companies such as ICG Utilities were in fact passed on to the consumers and not just kept as additional profits for yet another mega-company, I recognize that there is a need for a stable situation in energy pricing in Canada. While eastern consumers can get energy at a reasonable level, it should not be at the expense of the economy of the prairie provinces. It should not be done at the expense of people who live and work in the prairie provinces. I support the approach that talks about a need for a made-in-Canada floor price for oil so that there will be some stability out there and so that the price cannot go below a certain amount. In that way those people may maintain their livelihood, as can the people in northern Ontario.

I would like to get the Government of Canada and the Province of Ontario to stop bashing my constituents and the rest of the people around northern Ontario by upping our taxes for fuel that we have to choose. We do not have the alternatives, such as urban transit, as there is in Toronto and other major cities. Then we would be able to take the pressure away from the consumers and allay the feeling that they are being gouged by all and sundry.

I mentioned earlier the intervention aspect and that this is a so-called free-market Government. I want to remind the Government and the people of Canada that in spite of the Government's rhetoric it does believe in interfering in the marketplace. It announced CEDIP in the first place. It announced its participation in Hibernia, Lloydminster and the Vancouver Island pipeline. Negotiations are still under way on some of these projects.

Mr. Speaker, do not let anyone say that the Government has an entirely market-oriented approach. No Government should have that approach. There is a role for Governments to play in ensuring stability so that, where possible, economic growth and wealth is not concentrated in only one part of the country. We have talked a fair bit about western Canada. There is no question that eastern Canada, the Atlantic region, has not had its fair share of economic growth. It is our role as parliamentarians to find ways in which we can ensure that those things happen. That is why it is important that we debate legislation such as this to its fullest.

I look forward to seeing what the committee has to say about this particular Bill. Hopefully, there will be some changes in it, where appropriate, which will make it better for the people of western Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Are there questions or comments? The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw—Lake Centre (Mr. Laporte).

Mr. Laporte: Mr. Speaker, I have a comment to make, followed by a question.

The effect this Bill is having on western Canada has been to cause uncertainty in the Government. The Minister indicated in April, just before the Budget, that the program would continue until its termination at the end of the year. Suddenly, some three weeks later, the legislation was removed completely. When the Minister makes such a comment and then three weeks later the whole program disappears, there is certainly cause for concern among members of the industry. There has certainly been that in western Canada. It certainly has an effect on the confidence that the people in the industry have in the Government. I know it has had an effect on western Canada.

In the Hon. Member's part of the country there is a great deal of mining. The mining industry is very prevalent in that part of the country. Has this announcement and others had much effect on the confidence that people in the industry in that part of the country have in the Government? What effect is it having on people in that area of the country in general?

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank my colleague for his question. We can point to a number of instances in which the governing Party has said one thing prior to an election and said another thing after it. It said one thing before the Budget and another thing after. VIA Rail comes to mind. The Government was not going to touch VIA Rail until it had its studies and reports in place. However, now we know that the Government has cut back drastically to the tune of $1.2 billion in VIA's operating subsidies. We will find out tomorrow when the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) appears before the Transport Committee what exactly it thought it was doing at that point in time.

I think the most condemning comment that ever came out of western Canada—actually it came up before the last election, and one wonders about some of the decisions that people made at the time they went to the polls, those who voted Conservative—is that the former Prime Minister of Canada, the Right Hon. Pierre Trudeau, is more popular in western Canada than is the current Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). If anything could send Tories quaking, it was the reality that these folks are so bad that it makes the last folks look better. We all know that they were rotten.

In terms of the mining industry and in terms of other industries in northern Ontario, we found out the hard way that even when it is in writing and signed it does not mean that it will happen. We do not believe it will happen until it happens.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I have a very brief and simple question to ask of the Hon. Member, having noted with approval his remarks this afternoon. I was wondering if he thought it strange that apparently this debate will conclude without any participation from a single Member of the Government benches from Alberta?

• (1630)

Mr. Angus: As a new Member, my colleague might think it strange, but we have discovered over the past four and a half years that government Members tend not to speak out, even on legislation they agree with. That is due in part to the fact they don't want to be identified publicly with it or because the Government wants to pass the Bill quickly. The Government leaves it to the members of the Opposition, both Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition and the New Democratic Party, to carry the debate.

So I say to the Member, don't be surprised. It is the normal procedure, particularly for Alberta Tories.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. The Hon. Member on debate.

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, in addressing Bill C-19, an Act to amend the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program Act, I want to start by concurring that my own experience matches in many ways those shared by my predecessor in this debate, the Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus). We are not a constituency with a component in the oil and gas exploration industry, but many of us within the West Kootenay region have been for over 100 years well versed in the difficulties faced by the mining industry. Considering the obvious comparison of what the changes to the whole flow-through share mechanism has been over the last couple of years and what is envisioned by the legislation before us, we are only too aware of the type of adverse impact the termination of this program may have on an industry that in many ways is similar to the mining industry that we are familiar with in my area.

I want to begin by making a few brief comments regarding the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program which this Government terminated very early on April 27. The program was announced with great acclaim two years ago. At that time, it seemed obvious from the Government's comments that it appreciated the Opposition's co-operation in helping the program through the House and that it recgonized the necessity for such a program. I want to read a few comments from some of the government Members at that time, keeping in mind that these remarks were made only one or two years ago.

I want to quote the then Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources when he said on June 10, 1987, referring to the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program:

> This legislation will make possible the implementation of the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentives Program which my colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse), announced on March 25 in Edmonton. I am sure all Hon. Members are fully aware of the problems the Canadian oil industry and the western producing regions experienced, particularly last year because of the dramatic drop in international oil prices. Just as an example of this, exploration and development spending in the western sedimentary basin plunged by more than 50 per cent and thousands of jobs were lost. Hundreds of companies went into receivership and experienced bankruptcies. I believe we all appreciate the human and social costs of the situation.
> I am sure all Hon. Members will agree on the soundness of the measures provided by the Bill and the urgent need to support recovery in this key sector of the economy. Just as an aside, let me say that, since the announcement of this program, there have been clear signs that exploration and development activities and plans as reported by the service sector in the oil industry have increased considerably. There is now a mood of optimism in the oil patch that has not existed for quite some time.

As an aside, I wonder, if that optimism was felt so strongly then, what the feelings are now in that same sector as a result of the Government's early termination of this program?

Going back to the remarks:

> The Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program is as relevant to the imperatives of social justice as it is to those of economic development. I would like to emphasize that the provisions of the Bill are the outcome of lengthy discussions and consultations with representatives of the oil and gas sector and provincial Governments as well as with my Liberal friend from Cape Breton—The Sydneys and my NDP friend from Vancouver—Kingsway.
> The purpose of these consultations and briefings was to ensure that the financial support provided by the Government would do the greatest amount of good while respecting the structure of the industry—it is estimated that the program will attract up to $1 billion in additional investment in the petroleum industry and will create as many as 20,000 jobs in the oil and gas sector.

He ended by saying:

> The Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program is a signal to thousands of workers in the oil patch in western Canada and the producing provinces that we recognize the importance of the oil and gas industry and that we have confidence in its future.

If the implementation of that program was a signal to thousands of workers and to the industry that this Parliament and Government recognized the importance of the oil and gas industry and that we had confidence in that industry's future, then what is the signal given by this early termination of a program that was so welcomed by the industry and so overwhelmingly supported by all Members in the House of Commons?

Next, I want to quote the Member for Medicine Hat in 1987. The Member for Medicine Hat at that time is recorded on page 4589 of Hansard, March 26, 1987. He said:

> Yesterday in Edmonton the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) announced the Canadian Exploration and Development Program. While all energy companies will benefit, it is the hundreds of companies in the service sector and the smaller oil and gas producers that will benefit most from this program. An important feature is the provision to allow oil and gas companies to offer flow-through shares which will attract capital and offer

Canadians an opportunity to invest in exploration and development in this country.

The drilling of 2,000 wells will result in 4,500 direct jobs and over 12,000 jobs in the service and supply sectors. While the immediate benefits are obvious, it is vital that the expertise in manpower and technology that Canada's energy sector has developed over the past four decades be maintained. This announcement should not be considered a short-term solution but an investment in the future security of energy resources for the benefit of all Canadians.

I want to go back to the last few words, that this announcement, that is, the establishment of the program, should not be considered a short-term solution but a long-term investment in the future security of that industry. Here we have the Government, after bravely announcing that this was not a short-term solution, coming in less than two years later and terminating, against the advice of many people in the industry, and closing it down. That is an example of short-term expediency, not long-term planning and certainly not the kind of consultation with an important area of the private sector in western Canada, that we should expect from the Government if it wants to appear to be doing the proper job for the long-term security of this industry and devout working Canadians.

I want to quote one additional source from Hansard. In a statement on page 19810 of September 30, 1988 of Hansard the then Hon. Member for Calgary South (Mrs. Sparrow) stated:

—the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Masse) announced today an adjustment in the phase-down of the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program. The incentive rate from October 1, 1988. to June 30, 1989, will drop from 33-1/3 per cent to 25 per cent. As of July 1, 1989, until December 31, 1989, the rate will be 16-2/3 per cent. The cap remains at $10 million per company or related companies.

The Minister has also recognized the number of jobs in western Canada that are totally dependent on the petroleum industry. This incentive means a further $80 million will be injected into the industry, which will keep the rigs working, protecting jobs and helping to replace Canada's depleting conventional oil reserves.

Nowhere in these quotes from government Members does one get the impression that perhaps the Government does not think the program is useful, or that the program was needed or is needed today. There are many indications that the program is needed just as much today as it was two years ago.

• (1640)

I quote from The Globe and Mail article by Drew Fagan published on March 20, 1989 as follows:

For drilling companies across Alberta, this has been the winter of their discontent.

Although there are 525 drilling rigs in western Canada, only 160 were actually operating in January. And while in February the number increased to 245, that still represents a 33 per cent decrease over the corresponding month a year earlier.

At first glance, this situation seems surprising, as the world price of oil has risen substantially since late last year. That benchmark price is generally the major factor driving activity levels across the energy industry.

But oil and gas companies planned their drilling levels for the key winter season last fall, when oil prices were cratering. And the rise in prices, even though it has been in place almost three months, has met decided skepticism about whether or not it can last—

—other factors have also played a major part in making this winter one of the slowest in the past decade in terms of drilling activity.

Although the Government announced just before the election that an extra $80 million would go into the program, that $80 million was taken away when the program was ended prematurely just five months after that election. This is the Government that said it was in favour of long-term planning, not short-term give-aways.

The Canadian Association of Oilwell Drilling Contractors recently tried to put meaning to these numbers by calculating just what the cancellation of the Canadian Exploration and Development Incentive Program mean to their members. As an addendum to their press release on the cancellation of the CEDIP, the association stated:

In terms of employment and activity the cancellation of CEDIP would have the following maximum impact:

(1) up to 50 rigs could work with the $80 million stimulus that is now lost.

(2) employment on the rig floor would have been 1,500 people and at the least, 3,700 jobs would have been provided.

This was was said with the following assumptions:

(1) money would have been spread evenly over the year. This means to earn $80 million, operators would have spent $450 million.

(2) average central Alberta well is $500,000, which means 900 wells could have been drilled.

(3) average central Alberta well takes ten drilling days, or 9,000 work days are lost.

(4) there are 240 days left in the year, and a rig could work 80 per cent of the time, or 190 days.

(5) using 9,000 days and 190 rig days/rig = 50 rigs running full time.

That is a major loss.

Given the continuing need to protect jobs in the industry, especially among the small contractors and service companies, one must ask just what this Government plans to do to replace CEDIP. Its premature cancellation has every appearance of short-term political expediency on the part of this Government. We in the New Democratic Party hope that a suitable replacement will soon be put in its place.

There is an old saying that if it ain't broke, don't fix it. The saying that this Government perhaps should listen to is if it is working, don't break it. That appears to be what is happening here.

I mentioned earlier that this was a Government that, almost as an article of faith, says that it is a business-like Government and a Government that consults with industry, business and those on the ground floor of our economy. It is a Government that administers on a long-term basis, not simply for the short-term and with grab-bag expediencies.

This action by the Government in the cancellation of this program, in spite of all of their words just a few short months ago, puts the lie to those assumptions. This is not a business-like Government. This is obviously not a Government that consults with major companies, workers or with communities who are engaged in large areas of the private sector, at least not in Western Canada. They have forgotten their roots on the other side of the House. They have forgotten their roots with not only level-headed people in the business community, but they have forgotten their roots in that section of the country that gave them some of their strongest political support over the last one or two decades.

An Hon. Member: That is right.

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Kristiansen: They had better think again, because just as the oil and gas exploration industry in Alberta and other major sections of the oil patch in Canada have been learning that this is a Government of short-term expediency as a result of what they have done with this legislation, so too have the people of my constituency and other historic mining exploration and development areas across the country learned that. Because of the shenanigans, over flow-through shares and the up-again, down-again changes to those programs, people have found out that they cannot rely on the word of this Government when they say they are going to do something for the long term and will introduce a program that lets industry and investors know what the ground rules are for a significant period of time so that they can make the necessary adjustments to gain the maximum amount of revenue and support to those communities and to those industries.

One cannot operate a country this way. For those on the other side who say things are a lot better in the mining and oil industry than they were in the bad old days—and we know which bad old days they are referring to when they use those phrases—I would like them to realize that in good measure because of the changes to the flow-through shares mechanism regarding exploration and drilling in the mining industry that in my own constituency of Kootenay West—Revelstoke, which historically is one of the major areas in Western Canada when it comes to mining exploration and development, unemployment levels have gone up from some 10 per cent, 11 per cent or 12 per cent back up to 16 per cent and 17 per cent. In some cases, it is as high as 19 percent. We are again approaching exactly those same depths of unemployment as we had during the worst years of the resource debt in the early 1980s.

This is the Government that pledged to begin to change that in the resource areas of this country and particularly in the resource areas of Western Canada. They ignore those commitments at their peril. I ask them to reconsider both this legislation and their whole attitude.

One of those changes that they might also consider, and it is relevant to this particular area of discussion, is their decision to place both the mineral development agreements and the forest resource development agreements under the Western Diversification Fund.

Again, that is a short-term fund for particular companies and particular industries. It does not lead to the kind of long-term planning that is necessary both in the forest industry and the mining industry if we are to see stable and planned growth take place whether publicly or privately within those important sectors.

The resource communities of this country need a long-term commitment. They need long-term commitments from industry, from the labour force. Most importantly, to set the ground rules, they need to have some long-term planning and commitments from the Government that when a program is in place for a specific period that it should at least last for that long so that we all know the ground rules and begin to work to change our resource communities and our resource industries from the boom-and-bust cycle into long-term, stable growth so that we and succeeding generations can count on an increasing share of the wealth that this country can produce.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On questions or comments the Hon. Member for Edmonton East.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): British Columbia enjoys a substantial natural gas industry. Certainly, New Democrats in British Columbia know this because it was the very far-sighted administration of the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett) who pioneered the creation of the marketing agency that the New Democratic Government in British Columbia put in place to handle that province's natural gas: collecting the gas from the producers in that province, and paying the small independent producers the best returns they ever had for natural gas in that province, marketing it, and pocketing a great deal of the rent earned thereby for the people of British Columbia.

There is still a substantial natural gas industry in British Columbia. It is still characterized by a fairly large number of independent Canadian firms.

I was wondering if my hon. friend might offer some speculation as to what the impact of this Bill could prove to be on those natural gas firms operating in his province that have benefited so handsomely from legislation put in place by a previous New Democratic provincial Government?

Mr. Kristiansen: If I were a Member from northeastern British Columbia, I would be in a much better position to answer the question.

As I stated earlier that while there are similarities between the oil and gas exploration sector and those within the mining industry, I am not directly familiar enough with the experiences to be able to relate back one or two lifetimes ago, in political terms, to be able to give a clear and concise answer to the question posed by my hon. colleague.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): Speculate.

Mr. Kristiansen: I hesitate to speculate. I wish the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett) was present. The legislation and the change in the marketing mechanisms that were brought in at that time did assist the industry within my own Province of British Columbia. I only wish that in the not too distant future we may see those types of initiatives taken again by a Government of a similar bent.

In responding to my hon. colleague, one thing I can be very clear on is that, unlike the Government that simply preaches being businesslike and talks about consulting with all sections of society before precipitating actions, I know that myself and my colleagues whether provincially in British Columbia or federally here are committed to consultation with all sections of the Canadian community, including all segments of the business and industrial community, to ensure that even though we may disagree on some particular points, we do understand the importance of stability and establishing ground rules that we can count on for a foreseeable period and thus plan both our private and our public activities in such a manner as to ensure the maximum benefit for the greatest number of Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Edmonton East on a question or a comment.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): The principal aspect of this Bill is that it will result in a withdrawal of federal government money from an area of the energy industry characterized, at least in Alberta, by a large number of small independent Canadian firms. One of the places in which the federal Government is continuing to promise at least the investment of substantial sums of money, certainly sums far greater than is accounted for by this premature cancellation of CEDIP, is in the proposed Vancouver Island natural gas pipeline. It was promised again during the last federal election.

Does the Hon. Member accord any greater credibility to the promise that was made during this federal election than he does now to the promise made during the prior federal election by the Government, or indeed at any of the provincial elections by the current Social Credit Government? Does he indeed accord any credibility to this promise whatsoever?

Mr. Kristiansen: I am not quite sure where to start, but I think I know how to finish.

The problem with the commitment, the sacred trust, or the promise, whatever it was, of the Government during the last election to the Government of the Province of British Columbia, and I do not think it was to the people of British Columbia because the people did not ever say that they really wanted it, was that it would provide significant money to build a natural gas pipeline to Vancouver Island. The Government appears to have done a bit of a shuffle on that. We are not really certain whether it is still committed to that.

Mr. Epp: Fully, $150-million worth.

Mr. Kristiansen: So the figure of $150 million is still there. I have a great deal of difficulty in keeping track of opinion in British Columbia in terms of whether or not the people of Vancouver Island want that natural gas pipeline. I know that most of the industries on Vancouver Island have stated that they have no great need for it. Many of the industries on Vancouver Island have suggested they have alternative means of energy production over which they have direct control that they would like to proceed with. This may or may not have a serious adverse impact on that development.

In the Throne Speech, as well as during the last election, the Government stated that the environment has the greatest of all considerations. Yet in the so-called planning process for this natural gas pipeline, the Government wanted to direct it through the main source of water supply for the greater Vancouver regional district. That has created an almost unheard of degree of unity and outcry among all the citizens of the lower mainland of British Columbia. All considerations of environmental impact studies were to be cast aside in somebody's headlong rush to establish the route for this pipeline. Apparently because of that strong, vociferous, and united stand by the citizens of Vancouver and the lower mainland of British Columbia, there has been a backtracking. We now have some assurances which I hope hold water, or gas as the case may be, that there will be a proper environmental impact study.

Now, apparently, there is also some due consideration, whatever that means, to finding an alternate route perhaps up the east side of Indian Arm in order to circumvent the watershed of the lower mainland, if such a pipeline does in fact go ahead. On both the grounds of actual need and perceived need by the public, which does not seem to exist in British Columbia, and by virtue of the environmental impact, plus the need of this Government to supposedly save money to spend on other priorities, we really wonder where it is at. Again, the Government seems willing to spend money on a program that we do not know is needed. The people who supposedly want it do not know if they want it. However, the Government wants to spend the money even though it states that it has not got it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have been instructed by the Chief Government Whip to defer the division to a later time. Pursuant to Standing Order 45(5)(a) the division on the Bill now before the House will be deferred until tomorrow at 6 p.m., at which time the bells to call the Members will be sounded for not more than 15 minutes.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I wish to point out to you, Sir, that at the point at which you called the question, the clock was very clearly past five o'clock. We had other speakers prepared to speak the next time the matter was brought before the House, but because of the haste in which you proceeded, we were unable to do that. That is why I forced the vote.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to bring to the attention of the Hon. Member that I have a clock in front of me. It was not quite five o'clock. That is why I proceeded with the vote. I regret I cannot watch every clock in the Chamber. The clock that is in front of me is the one that I watch. Therefore, it being 5.05 p.m. we will proceed now to consideration of Private Members' Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

MUSEUMS

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH CANADIAN MUSEUM OF OCEANOGRAPHY

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier) moved that, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider giving serious study to the establishment of a Canadian Museum of Oceanography in the National Capital Region, which would include among other things a national freshwater and saltwater aquarium containing specimens of all of Canada's aquatic fauna.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to debate a motion that is very important for the National Capital Region and I am even happier that my colleague from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) has kindly agreed to second this motion.

Mr. Boudria: With pleasure!

Mr. Gauthier: I hope that all the people of the beautiful riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell will have the opportunity to visit this fine museum, this wonderful aquarium, which I am sure will be built somewhere in the National Capital Region, which perhaps some day will extend to Plantagenet, as the Hon. Member for that riding and many of his constituents would like.

Mr. Speaker, I first thank the members of the Committee on Elections, Privileges, Procedure and Private Members' Business for choosing my motion and thus allowing it to be debated in this House for up to five hours.

Also, I wish to congratulate the task force on the National Capital Aquarium, a committee headed by the Aquarium Lovers' Society of the Ottawa Valley. This committee of businessmen and professionals from our community has laid the foundation for a project that I trust will soon take shape. Sincere thanks for their perseverance to people like Alan Emery and Robert McFethridge, who spared no effort to obtain the human and financial resources needed to move this issue forward.

[English]

This project is not new. It has been with us for some 20 years. In my case, it dates back about 10 years where it was the object of debate in my riding in 1979. Last year and in years gone by I did have the occasion to present a similar motion in the House for debate. Unfortunately, it was not always drawn. It sometimes happens that parliamentary initiatives just do not come to debate. But I am very happy today to have the privilege to debate this most important project.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, economic growth and increased tourism in the National Capital Region over the last few years have prompted attempts to find new attractions that could make our National Capital Region worthy of all Canadians, attract Canadians to their National Capital and interest them in our national institutions and museums. I, for one, believe that a Museum of Oceanography would do just that. Aquariums are very successful. Unlike some other cultural institutions, they are capable of supporting themselves. Of the 10 major aquariums in North America—and Ottawa's would be a major aquarium—none are going broke. Their financing sources are as diverse as the fish inhabiting their tanks. The National Capital Commission chairman, Jean Pigott, welcomed the idea when it was proposed in 1986. She said:

> We welcome the idea and would like to be very encouraging to the museum. Aquariums throughout North America are drawing large crowds and we recognize this.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, what are the advantages of a national museum of oceanography and a national aquarium?

A museum of oceanography with freshwater and saltwater aquariums would, in my view, be an essential adjunct to our cultural network. Looking at the various aspects of a project of this kind, we see there is a lot more to it than just a tourist attraction. There are any number of benefits, and these include meeting the educational, community and cultural needs of the Canadian people. A study carried out in 1986 showed that 60 per cent of the visitors interviewed visited a historic site and 40 per cent a museum. In addition to being an activity centre for all Canadians, offering shows and entertainment and showcasing Canada's aquatic life (mammals, water, plants), the Museum of Oceanography would be an educational centre for research and conservation, concentrating on pollution—a major concern today—, reproduction physiology and propagation, the impact of acid rain, and behaviour of fish and marine mammals, while demonstrating Canada's expertise in the fishery sector and stimulating the general interest of the public. We estimate attendance at 1.1 million visitors during the first year. That is a lot of people!

By giving visitors an insight into various conditions in our environment, our conservation practices and Canada's water resources, we can teach them to protect the environment and to show respect for our ecology.

The museum would of course be associated with well-known scientific institutions and maintain close relations with research centres, colleges, universities and other educational establishments.

There is much material available to those who are interested in this subject. In looking over the material, I was interested by the Scripps Aquarium Museum in La Jolla, California. It is an interesting example of an aquarium-museum. Founded in 1905 and affiliated with the University of California in San Diego, the institute has an extensive collection of marine animals. It specializes in the study of infections contracted by aquatic fauna, aquariology and pigmentation research. They publish a quarterly newsletter and were very proud to associate themselves with the twenty-fifth anniversary of the University of California at San Diego with a special edition of that quarterly newsletter.

Mr. Speaker, here in the National Capital region, the issue of financing and relations with educational institutions has been given very serious thought. A study started in July 1988 by the National Capital aquarium committee shows it would be economically, financially and socially feasible to build and operate this kind of aquarium. The project I favour and endorse would become financially self-supporting and could be directed by a non-profit organization. Self-financing would be based on admission fees, private investment —the municipality selected would also invest a certain amount—, membership fees, donations, product sales, franchises, special events, funding campaigns, and other sources. The Vancouver Public Aquarium, which is a similar project, makes an annual profit.

Although a substantial financial contribution from the federal Government is expected and would be desirable, a minimum contribution might include the gift of a lot of at least 20 acres plus the expertise the government has among its employees.

Mr. Speaker, we have some major human resources in both science and technology, in aquatic sciences and research that has been done by our scientists in this field, and I think this would be a major contribution on the part of the federal Government in setting up the museum.

As for cost and economic spin-offs, construction costs are estimated at about $51 million, while the total start-up cost would be $67,721,000. However, total economic spin-offs during the first year of operations would amount to $204 million. It would create 1,752 jobs during construction and thus fill the void left with the completion of the National Gallery and Museum of Civilization; as well, 150 permanent jobs would be created in this new museum.

I appeared to make my comments to the committee considering Private Members' initiatives. The Member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Thorkelson) had asked me if I would consider accepting an amendment to strike out the words "in the National Capital Region" from my motion if it was put forward. Of course, I said at the time that I was mainly interested in the project because the study that had been done was made for the National Capital Region and I cannot speak for any other region. I am here to present something for the region that I know best.

A great number of factors have been taken into consideration, such as the number of visitors we have every year, the existing facilities, other attractions and more. However, this project does not prevent other municipalities from wanting their own aquariums. On the contrary. If other municipalities have the same potential as my region, then they should present such a project. I believe very strongly that a country which has borders on three oceans and has one third of the fresh water resources of the world should have in its national capital a national aquarium–museum of oceanography.

In the National Capital Region we need not seek the public will, we already have it; we need not seek the leadership, we already have it; what we need now is the political will and I hope both sides of the House will give their approval to this project.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, six municipalities have suggested possible sites for a national aquarium. The City of Ottawa has proposed nine: the Le Breton Flats, Victoria Island, Britannia Park, the DesChênes Rapids, Lansdowne Park, Dow's Lake, Mooney's Bay, Bayview and the Arboretum. The City of Hull has suggested Leamy Lake, Jacques Cartier Park and the Armory; the City of Gatineau, La Baie Park; the City of Gloucester, Green Creek; Nepean, Shirley's Bay, Black Rapids and Jock River; and Hull West has suggested Meech Creek.

So we see that the municipalities have shown a fair amount of interest in this affair and they have all participated in developing this project.

Obviously, site selection will be based on the following essential criteria. The committee that conducted the study considered the following criteria to be essential: proximity to water, amount of land (18 to 20 acres), adjacency to an urban area, public services and minimal environmental impact. Also, location on the Ottawa River, accessibility on foot from other tourist attractions, accessibility from major arteries, etc. will be considered.

With these criteria, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the committee will choose the best possible site for the success of this project.

Let me conclude by saying that the National Capital Region is Canada's fourth largest, with 820,000 inhabitants. The most important museums are found here. However, the region is also one of the few national capitals in the world that does not have its own aquarium. The Museum of Oceanography with a freshwater and saltwater aquarium would fill this gap.

As I said, according to the study, the participation of the federal Government is essential to this cultural, touristic, educational and environmental project.

Mr. Speaker, I conclude my remarks with the hope that both sides of the House will support this motion, which asks the government to give the project serious consideration. Let us proceed quickly.

[English]

Mr. Howard Crosby (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, let me begin by complimenting the Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) who just gave that sermon on behalf of the location of an aquarium in the National Capital Region. It is always dangerous to compliment Members opposite.

The last time I spoke in the House of Commons, the Member for Ottawa–Vanier was protesting the rise in interest rates on behalf of the debtors of Ottawa–Vanier and the National Capital Region, paying no attention to the fact that there are many more investors in this area than there are debtors.

• (1720)

Now he comes before us with a novel venture, paying no attention to the fact that there is no ocean in the National Capital Region and there are no ocean species or ocean facilities of any kind. That is why I credit the Member, because he is always there looking after the National Capital Region. Of course in the end, he made the worst possible argument, that they have all the national museums of Canada right here in this National Capital. It apparently comes as no surprise to him that they should have one more. I do not want to make sport because I know his intentions are of the highest order. I know that he wants to do the best for his constituents and all the residents of the National Capital Region. However, I am sure the rest of the country would take the very firm, honest and clear position that the National Capital Region has had more than its share of national institutions and that other areas of the country should be considered for any more national institutions.

I do not want to put down the Member any further than to indicate what the definition of oceanography is. What the Member is suggesting is a Canadian Museum of Oceanography. I have the Oxford Dictionary which states that oceanography is a "Branch of science concerned with the study of the ocean, the composition and characteristics of the water, plant and animal life, and the ocean floor."

Now, what worse place to study oceanography than Ottawa, the National Capital Region? I could rest the case there but I want to go on in a more positive vein, without any further criticism of the Member, and point out the advantage of east coast locations.

The place that I have in mind, of course, is the Port of Halifax, which obviously has all of the advantages which the National Capital Region does not in terms of the definition of oceanography. We have an ocean. We have a year-round port, a harbour that can accommodate any kind of vessel and any kind of facility. Indeed, we have many of the facilities in place. In terms of the museum-type operations there is already in the Port of Halifax the Maritime Museum of the Atlantic which has over 150,000 visitors a year. It includes over 15,000 artifacts of a Maritime nature. There is not a great facility in terms of an aquarium, but I am sure there are ample facilities to which an aquarium could be attached if the national Government were prepared to fund such a venture. I did not catch all the financial implications that the Member for Ottawa—Vanier indicated, but I am sure he is calling upon the Government of Canada to assist financially in this project.

If you have been to the Maritime Museum of the Atlantic in the Port of Halifax, Mr. Speaker, and I think you have, you will know that it houses the famous Acadian Canadian Scientific Survey Ship and a number of other facilities. We now have one of Canada's famous corvettes available to the public for inspection. Beyond that, there are enormous other oceanography institutes in the Halifax Metropolitan area.

First and foremost is the Bedford Institute of Oceanography, a federal Government institution that has broad services related to oceanography. There is of course Dalhousie University facilities and the other university facilities. Halifax is one of the outstanding university centres in North America with seven degree granting institutions in the area. Beyond that, there is international flavour, the International Centre for Ocean Development is located in the Halifax area. I am beginning to think we are almost as bad as the National Capital Region but we have facilities that relate to ocean activities and to the fishery.

I could go on with the facilities that are available which would form a welcome environment for a Canadian Museum of Oceanography and for the related aquarium facilities but I am sure they are pretty obvious to anybody who is familiar with the Port of Halifax. I do not want to be negative, as I indicated, and indicate the reason why such an institution should not be located in the National Capital Region. Besides that, I have only 10 minutes and I am sure I could fill a much longer period of time with the negative side of the Member's proposition.

Let me speak in broader terms. I am sure the Member will understand and he will not take this as criticism. The National Capital Region is blessed not only with the normal institutes of Government but beyond that, it has the National Gallery, the new Civilization Institute and a myriad of other facilities. I cannot imagine anybody seriously suggesting that to this great mass of public facilities should be added yet another facility when other parts of the country suffer from economic difficulties and suffer from the need to attract tourists and visitors to the area. Just as I am saying that, I see he is nodding. I think the Member for Ottawa—Vanier will agree that on second thought the Port of Halifax would be a better place for such an institute. He did indicate in his presentation that he was only involved in the proposition for the National Capital Region.

I am sure, as I have already indicated, the facilities available in the Port of Halifax, he will realize that that proposition is preferable to his own. He indicated that he is not open to any amendments. I would not ask him to consent to an amendment. However, I would ask other Members to consider the proposal put forward in light of other areas of the country, particularly the east coast of Canada. I will allow the Members from the west coast make their own arguments.

I should add, Mr. Speaker, because of my colleague from the federal constituency of South Shore, that there is a close connection between the Maritime Museum of the Atlantic in the Port of Halifax and the Fishermen's Museum in the Port of Lunenburg. They have always worked on a joint basis to cover the area. We would have that kind of co-operation so we would be helping not only the provincial capital of Nova Scotia but we would also be helping the whole of Nova Scotia.

I think that is what we all want to do. We want to benefit the whole of Canada. We realize that the National Capital Region is a fine place but it has had its day in the sun. I think it is time that Members from the National Capital Region share with the rest of the country. I do not think that anybody can seriously disagree with that proposition.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I just want to make a very brief intervention to the motion put forward by the Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier). I certainly support the principle of the motion, the desire to establish a Museum of Oceanography in the National Capital Region. As the Hon. Member has pointed out, it already has the catchment area, both in terms of people who reside in the region as well as the vast number of tourists to support such a facility.

Where I do have some concern, it is over whether or not this is the National Museum of Oceanography. I am sure that if not the Member for Ottawa—Vanier, his colleague who seconded the motion will agree that one of the things that we as parliamentarians have got to stop doing and what we have to start doing, and particularly impose upon the Government, is to develop an appropriate public process for designation of communities and locations within those communities to establish federal Government buildings or museums and so on. I say that in the context of the kind of battles that we have seen over decentralization, where jobs are taken out of the National Capital Region and moved to Charlottetown, or moved to North Bay. We have seen in Ontario where the Ontario Government is arbitrarily moving ministries from southern Ontario to northern Ontario. In all of those, what has happened is that it has been hands-on, the laying on of hands. Somebody decides: "Well, we need something in Thunder Bay, so what are we going to send up there?" This is as opposed to going through the process of saying: "Here are the needs. Here are the resources." After we have decided to decentralize, or in this case to develop a new facility, where is the most appropriate place to put it? Do we put it some place where perhaps it does not have as large a catchment area but needs the economic stimulus?

What I think we need to do is develop a process that can be imposed upon the Government of the day no matter which Party forms it. In this way decisions can be taken in the public realm. That is to say that if the Government decides to decentralize a particular government Department then it will put out proposals. It will say what things upon which it will judge an area. The Government will be able to say the following. "We will judge you on your unemployment rate". "We will judge you on your connections with electronic services since this is an electronic services Department". "We will judge you on transportation components because we have to have access to major communities across the country", and on and on.

• (1730)

I quite clearly support the development of a Museum of Oceanography here in the National Capital Region. I also support the concept of developing a similar facility on the Great Lakes somewhere, or wherever it is deemed to be appropriate. However, I say that not necessarily supporting it as the national museum or the Canadian museum of oceanography.

Mr. Boudria: The motion does not say that.

Mr. Angus: I realize that it does not say that. However, there is a minor twist. As Hon. Members know, we deal with words and their interpretation in the House. When one states: "Canadian Museum of Oceanography", some will interpret that as the only one, the one supported by the federal Government. In all sincerity, I understand the intention of the Hon. Member. He is working hard on behalf of his constituents as he always does. I support the concept he is promoting.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I too am pleased to take part in this afternoon's debate on Motion M-361 moved by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

First, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier for his excellent initiative and I am sure that all Hon. Members of this House are glad to know that some of us have the talent of coming up with innovative ideas of this kind and proposing them in the Parliament of Canada. The Hon. Member opposite from Halifax—

Mr. Gauthier: —from Halifax West, I think!

Mr. Boudria: from Halifax West (Mr. Crosby), that's it— I am sure that he too is a little envious of the good idea suggested by my colleague from Ottawa—Vanier. He almost said so. He almost admitted it. It was almost a confession on his part, Mr. Speaker, when he said that the centre should be located in Halifax. It is like saying, "I find that a good idea too, except that I am sorry I did not think of it."

Mr. Gauthier: That's right!

Mr. Boudria: That is what the Hon. Member opposite has just admitted to us today. We had that admission.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier has already suggested this initiative in the past. I remember it well. It is the second time he suggested it to us. I trust that the Conservatives across the way will understand once and for all. Usually even Conservatives should be able to understand after a second explanation— if one speaks slowly enough, of course! But in any case, we shall try to make them understand and to make the Hon. Member for Halifax West understand that such a museum is desirable for the National Capital Region.

[English]

It has been said earlier that this would be the national museum of oceanography. That is not quite what the motion states. It states:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider giving serious study to the establishment of a Canadian Museum of Oceanography—

I say to the Hon. Member from Halifax and all other Hon. Members that if they, too, have a good idea like this there is hope for them yet. If they do not have a good idea they could always consult us. We will provide them with a few good ideas, free of charge. Mr. Speaker, we in the Official Opposition are very co-operative in terms of assisting the Government in providing better representation for all Canadians, as I am sure you know very well being the non-partisan person that you are as the Speaker.

The motion proposes to have this museum of oceanography in the National Capital Region. The Member from Halifax said that maybe it should be in his riding. The Member from Thunder Bay said that perhaps it should be located in his riding. The Hon. Member from Halifax uttered the word "costs" some place in his speech. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), did not ask the federal Government for any funding for this project. I know that is awfully hard for the Hon. Member across the way to understand. However, I will repeat it. Obviously, what would be required, at least in my opinion—or what could be required—would be for the federal Government possibly to contribute the land. We have the Lebreton Flats here in Ottawa which we have been saving for about 30 or 40 years for some good idea.

Mr. Gauthier: Here it is.

Mr. Boudria: We have a good idea right now. It is something that could be of benefit to all Canadians. The Hon. Member is not asking for a federal Government grant or anything of the sort. There is a good spot here to locate it. There is a good catchment of people. There are half a million people in the national capital, three-quarters of a million if we include the ones living on the other side of the river. We have people from all over the country and from all over North America and elsewhere who come to visit the National Capital Region. Those tourists could come to visit this fine centre, this aquarium, this oceanography museum and contribute financially, as they do in this sort of establishment.

[Translation]

The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier mentioned similar centres in Vancouver and California, which are privately-owned, fairly profitable enterprises. We should not assume that a museum of oceanography, an aquarium of this kind is an expensive hobby, because usually, the reverse is true. And I think that here in the National Capital region we could use something like this. This time, Mr. Speaker, we are not asking for a museum that will cost $250 million to build. We are not asking for anything like that. What we want the federal Government to do is to take a serious look at the feasibility of establishing a museum of this kind in the region. Studies have been made. My colleague from Ottawa—Vanier, as we all know, always does his homework, we have had ample proof of that today! There are any number of reports, Mr. Speaker, including a report by Lavalin's Éconosult, a company well-known to the Government opposite, to say the least, which prepared a report on this type of museum in the National Capital region and made a favourable recommendation.

I myself, as a Member from the National Capital Region, although I would like the National Capital to expand somewhat into my riding, as I have said in the past, and I am taking this opportunity to say it again, I would like a museum of this kind in our region. Mr. Speaker, this is the kind of museum and the kind of facility that attracts the whole family, and there are many Canadians, many people that would like to see this kind of facility. The Hon. Member for Halifax says: Well, Ottawa has to be the worst place for this kind of centre. He wasn't listening very carefully to the eloquent speech by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier, because he would have realized that we are here in part of what used to be the Champlain Sea. In the National Capital region, we are close to Pink's Lake, a very historic body of water that goes back to prehistoric times, if I am not mistaken, and has certain kinds of fish that used to live in the ocean and have now become freshwater fish. A facility of this kind would include saltwater and freshwater fish and the rest. It would be an aquarium, which I think would be a very useful, very attractive and very desirable facility as far as tourism is concerned.

After all, Canada has the largest expanse of ocean surrounding it of any country in the world. We have oceans on three sides, and here in Ottawa, in the national capital of our country, when citizens come to visit, they will be able to see something really Canadian, the ocean. There is nothing more Canadian than that. I want to congratulate the Hon. Member on his excellent initiative.

• (1740)

[English]

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise to participate in this debate. I wish to compliment the Hon. Member for Ottawa Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) for bringing forward this very important topic. The idea of a Canadian Museum of Oceanography is an excellent one. I confess that I cannot totally agree with his suggestion as to where the museum should be located, the National Capital Region. I am a little closer to buying the suggestion of my friend, the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby). However, if we look at the museum complexes that already exist, we will find that in Lunenburg, Nova Scotia, we have the basis of what could be a Canadian national museum of oceanography and marine life in the Fisheries Museum of the Atlantic.

One of the reasons this suggestion is a meritorious one, that we should consider designating a national museum of oceanography, is the important role that the ocean and marine life has played throughout Canadian history. Who knows exactly when the first Europeans crossed the Atlantic, but when they came, whether it was in the 14th or the 15th century, they came looking for our fish. We are still looking for our fish. In fact these days, we are having difficulty finding as many fish as we might like to have. However, it is still an important part of the life of Canada, not just Canada and the Atlantic, but indeed the sea life impacts from one end of Canada to the other. We are after all surrounded by three oceans: the Arctic, the Pacific, and the Atlantic. There is no question that marine life has played a very important role. One could tell, through such a museum, a very stirring story of courage and enterprise, of centuries of history and development.

We could look at the evolution of the fisheries as a source of economic wealth and development and the technological changes that have occurred throughout the years. Indeed, it would be very appropriate today to see such a museum focus on environmental issues and concerns and ecological needs.

My home is about 15 feet from the Atlantic Ocean, literally. The cove around which I live in the community of Hubbards, I have seen over the last 40-odd year changes in the ecology of that cove. Saturday last I was in fact swimming in it and observing the bottom and snorkelling. It is extraordinary to see the changes that take place. If we had a museum that properly demonstrated how the environment of the ocean and the ecology can be impacted, it would be a tremendously valuable education for our young people.

I think the idea of a national museum is simply an excellent one. We are particularly aware in Atlantic Canada today of how important our ocean is to us and how we can be in difficulty when the resources of that ocean are not readily available to us.

My hon. friend from Halifax West talked about some of the facilities that already exist in Nova Scotia that provide the basis for an excellent museum of oceanography as well as marine life generally. He spoke about the Maritime Museum of the Atlantic which is a beautiful facility on the shores of Halifax Harbour, that has with it one of the earliest oceanographic vessels that were in use in this country. Generally speaking, it provides as a museum a concept of sea life in the shipping industry going back over the last couple of hundred years, wherein the Province of Nova Scotia has played a central role.

He might also have mentioned the Atlantic Command Museum which is located in HMCS and CFB Stadacona in Halifax which provides a naval history museum as a complement to the Maritime Museum of the Atlantic. He spoke of the Bedford Institute of Oceanography, one of the premier oceanographic institutions of the world. Surely there could not be a better location to expand on that facility and make it available to people visiting that area to see the impact and the role that the oceans play in our life in our society.

There is one other extremely fine institution that exists in Nova Scotia, and it happens to be in the famous, historic town of Lunenburg. When we think of the ocean what town in Canada is better known than the Town of Lunenburg; the town where the Bluenose was built; the town where the Bounty was built? We have today an outstanding Fisheries Museum of the Atlantic in Lunenburg. I would encourage my hon. friend opposite to come and visit the Fisheries Museum of the Atlantic. I would encourage all Members to come there. There is no better place to spend the summer than the South Shore of Nova Scotia. I look forward to doing that myself, and the sooner the better.

The Hon. Member will find there a marvellous aquarium of the sea life of the Atlantic; live fish, lobsters, scallops and clams. You name it, they have got it in their natural habitat as it has been recreated. We already have a marvellous aquarium in this facility. The museum also provides an opportunity to understand the harvesting of the ocean. We have a display, for example, that traces the technology of the fishing industry, over 400 years as it has evolved both in-shore and on the Grand Banks. It also provides an opportunity to visit two floating museums, the Theresa Connors, which was a two-masted schooner that was active in the Grand Banks fishery in the 1920s, and a salt banker, the Cape North, which was one of the early steel hull longliners. It seems to me that we already have a marvellous facility.

The previous speaker made the suggestion that possibly we should have more than one of these museums. He, I am sure, would be pleased to visit the Fisheries Museum of the Atlantic, which provides the basis of the kind of oceanographic museum that the Hon. Member for Ottawa Vanier anticipates. It would be marvellous to have all types of museums in all parts of Canada. However, the reality is that when you talk about national museums, you have to focus on a major centre.

I do not see how anyone could seriously propose to have an oceanographic museum anywhere but by the ocean. You can build a beautiful building in Ottawa, and they have. I have taken advantage on occasion to visit the beautiful museums that we have here that are being built. We will soon see the opening of the Canadian Museum of Civilization. We have the wonderful National Art Gallery. We have the National Aviation Museum and wee have the Canadian Museum of Contemporary Photography. We all look forward and I would encourage the Government to provide the resources so that we can soon have a new National Archives. However, there is no reason that everything national in Canada must be in Ottawa.

The country began on the East Coast. Our first industry was the fishery. That is what brought people here before they began the settlements of Newfoundland. We have had settlements close to the ocean and involved in the sea life for over 200 years. To me it is inconceivable not to mention the fact that it is not particularly practicable: How can you have an oceanographic museum without the ocean? You can build a great-big tank, but it would be a better idea to encourage people to travel to the East Coast so they can develop a real sense of the ocean. The concept of an aquarium gives people the opportunity to see up close what various types of marine life are like, both fish and the flora and fauna in the ocean. If you see it in a tank in a big city like Ottawa or Toronto, Ontario, it is not the same as being right beside the ocean when you can walk down the shore and see some of these things as well.

It is important to understand that as we evolve our museum system in Canada, we have an opportunity to share these resources for the benefit of all Canadians because not all Canadians have the same opportunity to travel.

In Atlantic Canada, we live by the sea. The sea is the pinnacle of our lifestyle. The obvious place for the jewel of the museum system that does focus on the ocean, it seems to me unquestionably is Atlantic Canada. I humbly suggest that Lunenburg, Nova Scotia, one of the most beautiful towns in Canada, would be the ideal place to implement this otherwise excellent idea put forward by the Hon. Member for Ottawa Vanier.

[Translation]

Mrs. Marie Gibeau (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the arguments of my hon. colleagues in favour of adding another museum to the National Capital region of Canada, in this case a museum of oceanography. We can readily understand the advantages of this plan, especially with regard to Canada's history and present-day environmental and ecological issues.

As shown in a federal document published in May 1988, Challenges and Choices: Federal policy and program proposals for Canadian museums, museums have fundamental importance for Canadian society. Serving the collective memory of the nation, they are symbols of national identity and pride, centres of creativity and learning, places of magic and enjoyment.

• (1750)

In short, small town community museums or major center multidisciplinary institutions are important in Canada, for they serve to preserve certain aspects of the world's human and natural history for the enlightenment of present and future generations. The activities of our national museums and the Museums Assistance Program which benefit Canada generally confirm the Canadian Government's commitment to this important component of our cultural life.

We are about to officially open in Hull the new Canadian Museum of Civilization. The new National Gallery of Canada opened its doors last Spring to a concert of universal praise and the National Aviation Museum has just completed phase I ot its relocation project in Ottawa East.

Moreover, new facilities for the Canadian Museum of Contemporary Aviation have been announced and the construction work should begin within a few months.

Yet, I question the advisability of a proposal seeking the Canadian Government's help for another major heritage establishment in the Ottawa-Hull region which is already properly served, as everyone knows, by four national museums and their ancillary out-buildings.

In the area of heritage museums, my Hon. friends should not overlook the fact that several very worthy and valuable initiatives have been taken in various parts of our country which are not so well provided for in that respect as the Ottawa-Hull area. I should like to emphasize the fact that Quebec has only 90 museums, while Ontario has 265, nearly three times more, and British Columbia 126.

However, the official opening in Hull of the splendid new Canadian Museum of Civilization which will take place this month indicates a will to rectify this inequality.

Elsewhere in Quebec, however, creative and hard working people are impatiently waiting and anxiously hoping for a positive reply from the Canadian Government which would help them realize their heritage projects.

Several of these projects for which there is no funding available at this time would be just as important for the cultural development of our country as a Canadian museum of oceanography, because they would meet likewise real needs as far as education opportunity, community enlightenment and tourist attraction are concerned.

While we are considering new initiatives, however exciting and important, let me remind you that Québec still does not have a great science and technology museum. Why? Because we can not find the money for such a project even though serious feasibility studies completed in 1986 recommend it. It is unfortunate that there is no such museum in Québec, especially since we are living in an era of rapid and inevitable changes when we should show and even celebrate scientific and technological accomplishments in order to develop our scientific knowledge and that of our children.

The substantial number of valid projects in Québec in relation to available funds is only part of the problem. Several museums face serious requirements regarding exhibition, protection and preservation of their own collections. For example, to name only a few in Montreal, the Montreal Museum of Fine Arts, the McCord Museum, the Musée d'Art contemporain, the David M. Stewart Museum and the Musée des arts décoratifs are all seeking new funds to complete renovation and expansion projects required to adequately preserve collections they are already responsible for.

Therefore, I would like to make sure that in looking at the proposal to further examine the new proposed museum of oceanography, we keep in mind that many other important projects, in Quebec as well as in the rest of the country, have long been confined to a priority list awaiting for a favourable response.

Our enthusiasm towards a new project, as legitimate as it may be, should not lead us to forget that several other valuable and well prepared projects deserve as much consideration and support from us.

In concluding, M. Speaker, I would like to say to my honourable colleague from Ottawa—Vanier that his proposal is certainly valuable, interesting and surely very creative. However, on the one hand, we should consider that in a context of budgetary restraints where funds and resources are no longer flexible, as we had hoped, it is not possible for the time being to envision such a venture.

In a context of budgetary restraints, the funds that remain available for everything that relates to culture should be directed first at reinforcing the existing institutions, particularly the museums which have a history and a tradition and which already have collections that, for a lack of funds, cannot be developed, and at the same time, at making available to these institutions funds to expand, or at least to renovate the structures that accommodate these collections.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, should we have enough funds available, I would suggest to my hon. colleagues that we implement the numerous initiatives which are as good as the one proposed by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier and which have already been considered and found to be meaningful and profitable for the whole country. It has already been planned that these initiatives would be implemented throughout Canada to enhance the various regions of our beautiful country.

Thirdly, I would like to remind my colleague whose motion stated that:

> the Government should consider giving serious study to the establishment of a Canadian Museum of Oceanography in the National Capital Region—

— that even though my colleague from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) said that it did not cost anything, we have to realize that as soon as the Government undertakes a study, it needs money. A study of this magnitude cannot be conducted without the allocation of funds and, should it find this project warranted, we will have an addition to the long list of projects that are considered priorities. We should not be naïve enough to think that, should this project be accepted, the next step would not be to ask the Government for funding. Our colleagues in the House are all aware of the financial problems we are facing as a Government.

In these circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I recognize the validity of the motion presented by my colleague from Ottawa—Vanier. I think that his proposal is indeed very worthwhile, creative and interesting, but at the moment, I suggest that we postpone it until a later date and give priority to other projects that have already been found to be worthwhile.

Mr. Eugène Bellemare (Carleton—Gloucester): Mr. Speaker—

[English]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I know it is close to six o'clock and I can well understand why my colleague from Carleton—Gloucester would like to have the floor at this time. I also know that there are certain negotiations going on about the debate tonight at eight o'clock and that there are certain things which possibly could be done now that would allow for the debate tonight to be a little more focused. Could the time allocated to my colleague from Carleton—Gloucester be just taken up until negotiations are terminated so that we can come to the House before we adjourn for supper so that we can pretty well get our understanding here as to what happens after eight o'clock?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it so agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Eugène Bellemare (Carleton—Gloucester): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to speak on this important motion which reads as follows:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the governemnt should consider giving serious study to the establishment of a Canadian Museum of Oceanography in the National Capital Region, which would include among other things a national freshwater and saltwater aquarium containing specimens of all of Canada's aquatic fauna.

I think that is an absolutely essential educational project for Canada, a country that opens on the Atlantic ocean in the east, the Pacific ocean in the west and the Artic ocean in the north. We have a multitude of big and small lakes, everywhere.

I can understand Government Members wanting to establish, maybe, an aquarium or a museum of oceanography in their region, be it Halifax or Vancouver. If the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy) or for Tuktoyaktuk were here, I imagine he or she would probably want the museum to be located there. All things considered, it is not a matter of a very specific location. should the museum be in an area here of there to develop what exactly we do not know? Would a museum on the Atlantic ocean be a fair representation of the Pacific ocean? Would a museum on the Pacific ocean, in British Columbia, be representative of James Bay and the Far North? I do not think so. But I know very well, Mr. Speaker, that the Capital is indeed the City of Ottawa, and that this is where the core, the home of the Canadian Government is, and we should not play and fiddle with it and scatter every activity almost everywhere in Canada when refering to the Capital which should represent everything national and not just local. If we must have a national museum, it should be located in the National Capital Region.

Obviously, Mr. Speaker, it has to be located in a place where there is some land available, and I can assure you that in my riding of Carleton—Gloucester there is indeed available land—

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to interrupt the Hon. Member, but he will have approximately six minutes left in his debate the next time this private Member's Bill comes up.

It being six o'clock p.m. I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m. at which time the House will proceed to discuss the question of recent events in the People's Republic of China.

At 6.04 p.m. the House took recess.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 52

[English]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CRISIS IN CHINA

Mr. Speaker: The Chair has granted leave to the Hon. Member from Windsor—Lake St. Clair (Mr. McCurdy) to move the adjournment of the House pursuant to Standing Order 52 for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely, the recent events in the People's Republic of China.

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair) moved:

That the House do now adjourn.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I stand before you in this democratic Chamber of a nation which is a member of the fellowship of civilized nations, to join with my colleagues on all sides of the House in shocked revulsion at the horror and brutality visited upon those who wished only that their country would continue its, until now, significant promise of joining that very fellowship to which we belong.

I refer to the bloody China, the violent China exposed on the television screens of the world in these last few horrific days in scenes that could only be judged obscene. These events have occurred because many Chinese have been encouraged to believe that the great counter-revolution led by Deng Xioaopeng in economic reform, and indeed in other areas, offered the hope that democratization on the political front could be hoped for. The rigid, monolithic, centralized communism of the past was to be abandoned in favour of a new approach to building a Chinese economy that was described by Ding Xiaoping in the aphorism, "It doesn't matter whether a cat is black or white as long as it catches mice."

This was to become the basis of a new approach. Practice became the soul criterion of truth in meeting the material needs of the Chinese people. There was some success. Communal farms were broken up. More and more small private enterprises appeared. Control of industry became decentralized. Factories were allowed to keep their profits. Local governments and enterprises managed their own export and import of goods and services. China became more open to western investment and technology exchange. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, most strikingly perhaps in September of last year, bond and stock markets were opened in Shanyang and Shanghai.

Canada has benefited from these changes. Canadian imports to China have risen rapidly over the last few years, to a point where in the last year we had about $2.5 billion worth of exports, just about doubling the $1 billion of imports. Canadian investment has grown considerably. Thirteen Canadian companies and four major chartered banks have opened offices in China. Canadair has been operating a plant in Chien-chiang province producing parts for its Challenger aircraft since the early 1980s.

However, these economic changes were not without their problems. We know that increasingly inflation, profiteering and rapid corruption began to characterize the Chinese economy. These became the subject of widespread discussions as economic change was reflected in a loosening of the strictures of free expression and on the press. But as so often has happened before with reform, there were rising expectations and increasing demands for change in the direction of democracy. This rising tide of expectations was distilled into the massive student protests that earned the admiration of the world for their manifestly restrained and civil exhibition of youthful idealism in the pursuit of democracy.

Remember those smiling faces and the expressions of comradeship between the students and those very people who would become their executioners. We had a notion, as I am sure they did, of a kinder outcome. Remember, too, how during the weeks of fear of imminent confrontation between the Government and the students, our attitude turned to admiration for a society which appeared to be capable of withstanding massive protests with such restraint.

Few leaders of democratic governments would have tolerated, we thought, for so long such massive disruptions of one of their largest cities without some response. We should have been forewarned because it was only a year ago, rather silently, rather quietly, ignored by many nations, that China exercised its army to oppress the efforts in Tibet to pursue freedom. There were deaths there. How many? Few know. There were many injured as well. Many were placed in prison for no other reason than that they sought freedom for an independent Tibet.

Few would have been surprised then had there been used tear gas or water hoses or similar riot control devices. But it was shocking, after such restraint when the protests were weakening to see the full force of Chinese armed might unleashed, to see tens of thousands of battle-hardened troops supported by tanks, personnel carriers and helicopters, a complete and terrible arsenal attacking without quarter the unarmed youth of the country. Who will forget the sputter of AK-42s, the falling bodies, some crushed under tanks, the tearful efforts at rescue. When it was all over, 2,600 of China's young people lay dead in Tiananmen Square. Many, we understand, were trucked off by the army to be incinerated so that their numbers would not be known. At least 60,000 were wounded. Thus, did the People's Army declare war on the people and the Communist leadership held a glorious victory over thugs and robbers. But we know differently. The battle may not yet be over. The leadership, having displayed their contempt for the people, may have to face the Chinese masses.

• (2010)

In the City of Wu Kang, students blocked the railway tracks. There is a general strike in the Province of Chien-chiang. Students have mounted barricades in Shang-hai.

We know too of an internal power struggle continuing in the centre of Chinese power, between the voices of reform and the forces of oppression. As well, it is increasingly evident that the army that was so visible in Tiananmen Square is itself divided between those who sympathized with the struggle and those who support the regime.

The world's leaders, with virtual unanimity, have reacted with shock and horror to the events in China. And so did the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark). When he spoke, I am sure he spoke for all of us and all Canadians in condemning what has happened in China.

We understand and sympathize too with the hurt and frustrated anger of the nearly 4,000 Chinese students in Canada who mourn their brothers and sisters. Canada must say to them: "You are free to stay and benefit from the protection that this democracy affords its citizens as if you were one of us".

As well, we must assure Canadians that our compatriots in China are protected. Some 600 students and embassy staff already have been moved to a safe haven. But there is fear that we know too little about how many Canadians are in China and where they may be. Some are workers, some are tourists. We must make every effort by consulting travel agents, airlines and all possible sources to ascertain their identities and their locations.

It may be that the struggle in China will lead to a new leadership and a new regime that will renounce the terror. So long as there is a glimmer of that possibility, then we should not act precipitously. But we dare not wait too long before translating words of condemnation into action unless they be remembered as empty rhetoric.

There is no doubt that China will suffer immensely as a result of the events there. It is now a nation characterized by chaos and disorder. Inevitably their efforts at economic reform will suffer.

China's foreign relations and its trade with other nations will also suffer because there cannot be business as usual for a nation that treats its own citizens as the Chinese Government has treated theirs.

We must be prepared to take action if events do not quickly translate themselves into the kind of change that is tolerable. If there is no progress we should consider recalling our Ambassador.

In respect of trade with China, which is considerable, we may want to consider that we cannot do business as usual in that sphere as well. But we have a policy on which all sides of the House agree: That is, we cannot continue to provide aid to those governments characterized by the abuse of human rights and the lack of respect for democracy.

At present we provide something of the order of $115 million in aid to China. I would call attention to the Three Gorges Dam for which Canada has already provided $14 million in terms of feasibility studies. It is not only a large and important project, it is a questionable project. It is one which will displace about one million Chinese and it has not been subject to an appropriate environmental appraisal.

There is no doubt that this kind of examination would raise serious questions on its own merits whether that project should be continued. We should serve notice that it will not be a project to be supported in the future and we should withhold our support on the basis of conditions as they are now any increase in foreign aid to China, and if matters do not change, to terminate government-to-government aid completely.

I am sure the result of this debate will be unanimity on all sides of this House in expressing horror and condemnation. But I hope there will also be agreement in this House that we should not proffer empty words and that unless there has been certain progress we will tell this Chinese government that this country will not allow business as usual so long as the youth of that country, just as in any country in the world, are being slaughtered by a government that is supposed to support them, to aid them, to allow them to have the benefits of a future rather than death in the struggle for democracy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Liberal Party, I join people throughout the world in denouncing the brutal repression of defenceless demonstrators by the Chinese armed forces. The whole world watched with amazement, horror and disgust as a peaceful call for freedom and democracy was repressed in bloody fashion. The first day Tiananmen Square was occupied by the students, Canadians, like others throughout the world, witnessed this struggle for freedom and human rights. All of us here in the House and across the country are dismayed to think that these students whom we saw on television every evening were victims of such a barbarous act.

I am sure that the 360,000 Canadians of Chinese origin share our indignation. Through you, Mr. Speaker, we extend our heartfelt condolences to them. We also extend our condolences to all Chinese students in Canada who saw their brothers, sisters and friends perish.

In adopting this measure today, we clearly show that Canada will not stand idly by while this struggle for democracy and human rights goes on.

The situation in China is troubled, to say the least. It is reported that shooting is continuing. It is also reported that major demonstrations are going on in other centres, like Shanghai.

We shudder when we hear the Chinese authorities announce that the repression of the "counter-revolutionaries" has just begun.

It is also reported that the army, in its desire to crush the democratic movement, is considering other attacks, in particular on the University of Beijing.

We should be indignant about the repugnant acts of the Chinese leaders. The excuses invoked by the Chinese authorities are in my opinion both flimsy and upsetting.

In the last few weeks, the world has seen hundreds of thousands of young Chinese demonstrate peacefully for democracy, freedom of expression and the press and an end to government corruption.

[English]

These demands of the Chinese students are not outrageous. The students were not attempting to topple the state. The critical element before us in this House is that the students were acting peaceably with hope, even with joy, with a genuine excitement, with a sense of pride in their country, with a sense of fulfilment that they could make China a better place.

• (2020)

The world will not buy the argument of the Chinese leaders that they were putting down a dangerous insurrection. We saw those peaceful students and then we saw those students killed by AK–47 rifles and crushed by armoured personnel vehicles.

There is no rationale to this. There is no justification within the human condition for what is happening. It is a blatant murder of Chinese young people authorized by the Chinese authorities. Surely the Chinese Government must be made to understand that any further actions of this sort will only worsen the situation.

It is particularly sad for me and other Members of the House who have followed this issue to realize that over the last 20 years China appeared to be making strides, and indeed, was making strides to enjoy better relations with countries around the world, to take its rightful place on the international councils of power as the most populous nation in the world.

The Chinese Government, the leaders in China must be made to understand that all the good–will built up over the last several years, all the international friendships, all the increase in commerce, all of the increasing influence of China over world affairs can be shattered by the ferocity and brutality of the past few days.

It is frightening to think that innocent students are the victims of power struggles, internal, invisible power struggles at the top of China's hierarchy. Struggles for spheres of influence at the top of the Communist Party in China is no excuse for genocide.

Chinese leaders must be made to understand that acts of repression debase all moral authority for a government and inevitably debase all moral authority anywhere. The Chinese leaders are sowing the seeds of their own destruction by what they are authorizing now.

Canadians have a special bond with China, stretching back a century to the missionaries, Mr. Speaker, your own family, stretching back to the genius of Norman Bethune. The Chinese have recognized and honoured Canada's humanitarian interest in their country. We urge them to recognize and honour the humanitarian interests expressed by an all–Party resolution and the moral authority that this Chamber can reflect of the opinion of the country.

Canadians were proud when Prime Minister Trudeau helped lead the way in recognizing mainland China, and in recognizing Communist China as a real and legitimate voice of the Chinese people. We were proud to recognize the legal authority of China's leadership to speak for their country. We were proud to use all of Canada's influence in helping China find a solution to a series of problems they had at that time as it related to their international recognition.

That is why an emergency debate, which you have, if I might say so, Mr. Speaker, so wisely allowed in this House of Commons is so critical. That is why the proposed unanimous resolution from Canada's Parliament is so vital and so relevant. The Chinese Government and the Chinese people have long understood Canada's attempt to be good friends. We have never asked China to adopt our way of government. We have never asked China to adopt our way of life. We have never asked China to adopt our economic system.

We understand that China is a great world power and that we are not. We understand that China must find Chinese solutions to Chinese problems. We also understand as members of the human condition, that these solutions must reflect human justice, must recognize human rights to which China now ascribes as a member of the United Nations.

When Canada played a role in prodding the western world to recognize China, we did it because it was fundamentally right, because it was the right thing to do. We urge the leaders of China today to understand that their actions over the weekend and now are abhorrent to all notions of humanity. We ask them to understand that the fundamental and right thing to do is to end the oppression, to understand that a world which has reached out to China, and rightly so, will never turn its back on the Chinese people again. However, the world will turn its back on the leadership in China if this barbarism continues.

Attempting to clamp down on the news media is only making the situation worse for China. Attempting to destroy freedom of the international press to report what is going on merely underscores the essential validity of the protest of the Chinese students.

Chinese leaders cannot allow press reporting of uprisings, or protests, only when it suits their convenience. They cannot allow international television crews to film their leaders meeting on a friendly basis and amicably with student leaders, and then a few days later engage in total censorship of the press when Chinese leaders are having troops fire on those same students.

All of us who value freedom are grateful to Canadian journalists in China, and indeed American and other reporters who remain in China attempting to tell the truth to the rest of the world, even at the risk of their own lives. It is a very dangerous role they are playing on behalf of the world.

Similarly, we are grateful to our own Canadian Government personnel and their families who remain in Beijing, also at considerable risk themselves and who are there to help other Canadians, and to retain what we can of discourse with the Chinese Government.

There are a range of issues on which we expect the Government to provide Canadians with answers in the very near future. What actions will Canada take with regard to our $2.6 billion of exports to China, or our $955 million of imports from China? What of our more than $35 million of overseas development assistance to China? Indeed, what of China's total debt to foreign banks of some $13 billion? What of China's close to $50 billion of foreign exports? What individual economic or diplomatic initiatives are being considered by Canada and other nations? What new advice can our Government provide to Canadian students and tourists in China?

I know these are difficult questions and we do not expect immediate answers. There must be time to think it through. The essential elements of our response must be clear to everyone and soon.

First, Mr. Speaker, I repeat that I am grateful once again that you allowed this emergency debate so that individual Members of Parliament from all stripes and all Parties can express their outrage on behalf of Canadians and on behalf of our constituents at the actions of the Chinese Government.

Second, I am glad that all Parties have agreed upon the proposal I put to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) this afternoon upon a resolution of condemnation. That resolution must make clear to the Government of China that the Government must take total responsibility for what was clearly a premeditated order to fire on peaceful protesters.

The House of Commons resolution before Your Honour is a unanimous statement by the elected people of a free country which has attempted over several years to help China open doors to the rest of the world. We are doing it in a constructive and, indeed, with respect to the people of China, a friendly mode and a friendly posture.

Third, the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) must continue to voice Canada's outrage forcefully and directly in the highest echelons of all world organizations and with all other governments. We are not going to be satisfied, I do not think in this country, with the nuances and the niceties of diplomatic language when we are clearly shocked and revolted at the actions of the Chinese Government.

I believe that our Canadian Government must give favourable consideration to allowing Chinese students permission to remain in this country beyond the expiration date of their visas, if they so request. We should give favourable consideration to allowing more Chinese citizens who fear repression to leave their country and to come to Canada.

The Chinese Government must understand that it has violated fundamental international principles of human rights.

Canada moved to admit China into the United Nations, a move fervently sought by the Chinese government of the day. Now we must move within the United Nations to use our new influence at the seat of the Security Council to call for an emergency session to condemn China and to censure the Chinese Government for its massacre. The less delay in doing so the better, because the Chinese Government must understand that we will not tolerate their sickening justifications for their despicable actions. The Government of China must be told by the world to put an end to its repression.

Of all the western nations, Canada has had a unique relationship with the People's Republic of China. We were there, we helped open those doors. We must use every ounce of moral suasion that this House can give, the unanimous voice of the people of Canada, and use our special relationship to put an end to this murder and massacre.

• (2030)

In the course of human history Governments all too often have taken decisions which come from the dark side of human nature. The decision of the Chinese Government to use tanks against young students comes from that dark side of human nature. Such a decision taken by a single human being would be madness. Such a decision taken by a group of human beings is collective madness.

We have witnessed an extraordinary few days in contemporary world history. We have seen food riots in Argentina at the very time of the successful renewal of democracy in that country. We have seen a changing and desperately uncertain time in Iran, a small but tremendously important step toward pluralism in Poland, and major steps in the arms talks between the two superpowers.

However, all of these, important as they are, pale for ordinary Canadians when contrasted with the terrifying images coming from the most populous nation in the world. They are terrifying images as more than a million young military conscripts are turned by the Chinese Government against more than a million young Chinese students.

Alongside those terrifying images is the uplifting image that we saw of a single defenceless student on his own standing in front of and climbing up into a tank. We have witnessed an act of terrorism of a Government against its own people.

The force of the House of Commons and the moral influence we have on behalf of our people must indicate to China that that Government must cease its brutality or the repercussions for China and the world would be incalculable. The repercussions for the future in terms of human events will be unfathomable.

I want to thank you again, Mr. Speaker, for exercising your discretion in this matter. Because you cannot speak for yourself in this Chamber I want to unite your voice with mine and the peoples of the constituencies we share in the Pacific city, conscious of these events perhaps even more sensitively than are people in other parts of Canada.

I want to say to you, Sir, on behalf of the Official Opposition, the Liberal Party, that it is with great sorrow and real anger that I join with other Members of this House and other Canadians in a total and utter condemnation of the current leadership in China.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want also to express my appreciation to you, Sir, for granting this emergency debate and to commend the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), the Hon. Member for Windsor—Lake St. Clair (Mr. McCurdy), and other Members of the House who have sought this debate tonight. I know that all Members of the House of Commons and, indeed, all Canadians share a deeply felt sense of horror and of outrage at the events that have unfolded over the last few days in China.

We have watched a country's Armed Forces turn on its own citizens in an indiscriminate and brutal fashion. We have seen unarmed students and citizens gunned down and overrun by tanks. We have witnessed troops shooting from behind at fleeing crowds. We have heard of military units dealing summarily with even non-violent acts of resistance.

Tiananmen Square, which has been the site of so many important historical events over the decades and over the centuries, now adds to its legacy one of the most tragic occurrences of modern China.

The situation is evolving very rapidly. The latest news we have had from our Embassy in Beijing only minutes ago is that the violence which started in the Chinese capital is now spreading across the country. There is growing evidence that the military is at odds with itself. We have received reports that there is now fighting between various factions of the military. The appearance is one of military chaos. Those forces who unleashed the initial program of violence against the students in Tiananmen Square appear to have set entrain a chain of violence that cannot now be easily contained.

How could this have happened? As the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has said, we had hoped and believed that China was on the road to extensive and fundamental reform. For 11 years the Chinese leadership has been pursuing a range of policies aimed at opening China up to the outside world. Hallmarks of this welcome reversal of earlier centralism and isolationism have been the decentralization of decision making, the encouragement of private enterprise, and the welcoming of increased trade and economic exchanges with Canada and other western democracies.

During the past few years we have also seen welcome change on the political front, even if the depth of reform has been less than in economic areas. We have seen more freedom of the press, more freedom of speech, more freedom of association, less control on travel, more flexible policies on emigration, and even some tentative signs of willingness to accept legitimate political action expressed through vehicles other than the Communist Party.

Indeed, the last few weeks of political difficulty were in some ways a signal of the great strides that China seemed to have taken. Students in great numbers were tolerated in the non-violent expression of their desires for further change. Their cries for greater democracy, for the establishment of basic rights and freedoms appeared to be getting through to the Government. We watched some of China's leaders express sympathy, understanding and, most important, respect for the objectives of the intentions of the students.

Those were positive signs of a nation in the process of change. Many among us believed that China would somehow manage this pressure for change by becoming more democratic, more open and more respectful of its own people.

When the tanks and the troops moved in on Tiananmen Square on Saturday night, it was clear that the forces of darkness and not of light had triumphed. It was clear that leaders who had urged restraint were being brushed aside. It was clear that the aspirations of a few were being placed ahead of the aspirations of the many.

It is very much because of the great strides forward which China has taken over the last decade that the events of the last few days are so tragic for China and so tragic for those principles and freedoms which we hold dear and which we had thought were starting to find their proper place in Chinese political life as well.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, our relations with China have been very important to us and they still are. In 1970, we were one of the first Western countries to resume diplomatic relations with the People's Republic after that country's twenty years of isolation.

Since then, our relations have become such that anything that happens in China is a matter of great interest to Canadians.

Exchanges involving scientists, students, cultural groups and teams of athletes became common and have been encouraged by both sides.

Our two countries have organized the twinning of many provinces and cities. All this has enabled us to have high level discussions with the Chinese leaders on matters of common interest. Such matters might range from regional disputes to protecting the environment and how to make the world trading system more sensitive to the needs of our two economies.

Our trade has benefited both our countries. Thanks to our development assistance program, we have expanded China's ability to modernize and we have introduced in China the Canadian way of doing things. I firmly believe that the range and intensity of our relations with China has enriched both our countries.

[English]

The extent of the friendship between Canadians and Chinese that has grown over the last decade makes the carnage in the streets of the Chinese capital particularly difficult to accept. As we examine what our response should be, however, we must remember that we will cherish our friendship with the Chinese people, that we are not going to become in this country anti-China.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Our condemnation and our outrage should be focused on the violent and aggressive actions that we cannot and will never condone and on those who initiated and encouraged those actions.

• (2040)

As soon as the military strike against the civilians in Tiananmen Square became known to us on Saturday, we made clear our abhorrence of the unnecessary and indiscriminate use of force against unarmed students and citizens. As the events unfolded and the extent of the violence and the killing became clear, we called on the Chinese Government in the strongest possible terms to take steps urgently and immediately to stop the aggressive and senseless killing by its Armed Forces.

Yesterday at noon I had the Chinese Ambassador called in to underline the seriousness with which we viewed the situation and to ensure that he passed to his authorities our call for a stop to the killing and also passed to them the depth of our outrage.

We, of course, have not been alone in calling on the Chinese leadership to stop the carnage and to return to peaceful methods to resolve their political crisis. Most western Governments, Governments from around the world, even Communist Parties in other countries, have joined in condemning the brutality of the methods chosen to clear Tiananmen Square and to crush all and every expression of dissent by the students and other civilians once the military action had begun. This Government remains ready to offer humanitarian assistance or supplies if those are requested or needed.

In assessing the actions which should accompany our condemnation of the violence and the killings, we must bear in mind the need to safeguard Canadian lives, as well as the need to build pressure on the Chinese government.

At the time of the outbreak of violence there were approximately 600 Canadians resident in China, roughly half of whom were in Beijing. In addition, there were a number of business visitors and tourists scattered around the country. Our first concern, because of the violence, has been the security of those in the capital. As a precautionary measure in case of further military action against the universities, our Embassy evacuated all Canadians from the city campuses and is currently providing temporary accommodation to the 75 or so students who are affected.

We are in constant contact with our Ambassador Earl Drake, and we have contingency plans for the evacuation from Beijing of the students, other Canadians, and the staff of the Embassy. We have put into place arrangements whereby aircraft can be made available at short notice for evacuating Canadians to nearby Asian cities, and then onward transportation arrangements can be made after that if necessary.

After consultation with officials in Beijing, we decided about an hour ago to advise Canadians in Beijing to leave that city now. Our Embassy will be assisting them in making their departure. I will of course keep the House advised if we decide to proceed with a complete evacuation.

I should take the opportunity to indicate to Canadians who might be concerned that if they have questions to raise, we have established an 800 number, 800–267–6788. I know there are many Canadians who have relatives or friends in China who would want to call officials. We will hope to provide them with as accurate information as we can.

With respect to bilateral actions that we might take in response to the crisis, we have already deferred or cancelled all events that were planned in the immediate future. We have postponed the signing of a series of memorandum of understanding on development assistance projects which were to be signed later this week. We have suspended the nuclear co–operation consultations that were begun after China joined the Atomic Energy Agency and which were to proceed early next week. We will be taking similar action with respect to other scheduled negotiations and discussions. We are advising the provinces and non–governmental organizations with planned consultations with Chinese counterparts to follow suit.

Although there are no high level visits in either direction planned for the coming few weeks, we would deflect such visits until a more appropriate time. At the multilateral level I have asked our Ambassador at the United Nations in New York to begin immediately consultations with other UN members and with the Secretary General on means by which the moral suasion of the United Nations might be brought to bear to support the voices calling for moderation and restraint in China. Canada fully supports the statement issued by the Secretary General today calling for restraint.

With respect to the large numbers of Chinese students in Canada, and I believe there are some 4,500 here at the moment, we recognize the troublesome time for them. While we trust that before long the situation in China will no longer be repugnant to them, we understand their concerns. As my colleague, the Hon. Minister for Employment and Immigration announced earlier today, we will be sympathetic to any requests for extending their stay until calm returns to their homeland. My colleague has also taken steps to suspend for at least a two–month period all removals to China under the terms of the Immigration Act.

Some countries have announced the suspension of programs of bilateral military co–operation and sales to China. Canada does not have any such formal arrangements and has sold in the past only very small amounts of non–lethal equipment to the Chinese military. I can assure you, however, Mr. Speaker, that the Government would not grant export permits for military sales of any sort in the current situation. Furthermore, I have asked that the modest program of defence relations between the Canadian Armed Forces and the People's Liberation Army which saw a visit to China last year of the Chief of the Defence Staff, I have asked that those relations be suspended immediately.

Sir, what is transpiring in China is tragedy of global proportions. Let us hope that the events of the coming weeks see China and its great people emerge without unnecessary bloodshed and with renewed commitment to fundamental rights and freedoms in an increasingly democratic country. I only wish that I could find greater cause for optimism at the moment.

There have been consultations among the Parties in this House, and I believe you would find that there is unanimous consent to adopt the following motion which I have the honour to put, seconded by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and the Member of Parliament for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent):

> That this House, noting that:
> –the relationship between Canada and the People's Republic of China is important to Canadians and has been of benefit to both countries over the past many years;
> –authorities in the People's Republic of China have directed the armed forces of China to attack the unarmed civilian population of Beijing in contravention of all humane principles of conduct;
> –the students and citizens of Beijing were peacefully advocating democratic principles and human freedoms as is the fundamental right of all peoples of the world; and
> –the authorities of China resorted to the use of excessive and indiscriminate armed force on a scale and scope which appalls all Canadians and has resulted in the tragic deaths of large numbers of innocent civilians; therefore:
> unequivocally condemn this brutal use of force against the peaceful populace of Beijing and call upon the authorities of China to cease this senseless killing and immediately adopt a course of dialogue with the people of China.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Minister have the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been further consultations among the Parties. I think you would find unanimous consent within the House for the allocation of the normal time for 20–minute speeches for the balance of the debate this evening and that as it comes due to each Party, each Party have the right to share that time among two Members, three Members or simply with one Member, but that each Party make its choice for the balance of the evening thus allowing many more Members of the House to be able to make comment on what is indeed a very serious situation.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, I want to concur with the comments of the representative of the Government that there have been some discussions, and we do agree that each Party allocate their time appropriately.

However, I want to raise a second point. As part of the previous discussions with regard to the motion moved by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, there were to be a few comments as part of the seconding process by the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition and the Hon. Member for Oshawa. I wonder if perhaps the opportunity could be given at this moment now for that to occur.

Mr. Hawkes: That would be very appropriate.

• (2050)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have had an opportunity to express my views fully in the House. For those reasons, I am glad to second the motion of the Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs in expressing what I believe reflects the view of the entire House and, through the House, the entire country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on behalf of members of my Party to second this motion as well. I would like to say at the outset that not only do we totally agree with the content of the motion, but I listened with care when the Secretary of State for External Affairs had his say. I want to commend him without reservation for an excellent speech on a most serious subject. He gave a response on the part of the people of Canada that the nation would expect.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, to speak briefly on the motion, I would like to begin by saying that like many Members of this House I saw today in a local newspaper, The Ottawa Citizen, a photograph of a young Chinese woman. It was one of the most poignant photographs that I have seen in my political life. Perhaps in terms of all the rather horrible images the world has seen in the last 72 hours, it symbolizes in a terribly graphic way what is going on. It was of a young women who, on the one hand, was in a very militant pose with her fist clenched in obvious anger at what was taking place. At the same time, there were two large tears obvious on the young woman's cheeks. You saw simultaneously the rage being expressed by a person against the violation of human rights that her Government at home was inflicting and, combined with that rage, you saw a sense of horror, a sense of total and profound grief. That is what I was reading into it. I am sure that that was there. That person abroad was reflecting what happening in her own nation.

It is a terrible event in the course of our times to witness what is taking place in one of the world's great nations. Like the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Leader of the Opposition, I too have witnessed the evolution of what has gone on in China in the last few years with a considerable degree of optimism. I thought that the rigid Stalinist communist model was breaking down and that there was a move toward freedom, toward a pluralistic society, a peaceful, conflict laden but not violent conflict, not murder but verbal conflict, an evolution toward an open society not unlike what we were seeing elsewhere in the communist world.

In Poland and Hungary another remarkable event took place this past weekend. For the first time in that part of the political universe since the Second World War—or I suppose more precisely since 1956 in Hungary and events leading up to that that were suppressed in 1968 in Czechoslovakia—there has been what seemed to be a hope for humanity in these parts of the world. High among these nations was what was taking place in China. It was led with remarkable courage not only by the students in Beijing but with overwhelming support by the population in that cityas we have seen in recent weeks.

We saw this courageous reaching out for freedom of one of the colossal nations of this world brutally and violently suppressed by a Government or part of a Government, by the Army or part of the Army, certainly those with power in China, in a way that is clearly unconscionable.

There are times in human history when violence is justified, that is, only to defend oneself or one nation defending itself. However, to use violence against the defenceless, to use violence against men and women who have been peacefully demonstrating for freedom and democratic rights is an abomination that ought to be condemned by free people everywhere.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Broadbent: In concluding, I simply want to say, Mr. Speaker, that we support the Government's decision to take the action announced by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) this evening. We hope that the Chinese people, in the days to come, will develop an approach that is without violence.

[English]

We hope that people who have authority in that great nation will sense the indignation and moral revulsion that is occurring among people in every nation of the world, whatever the political ideology. There seems finally emerging among the majority of nations a sense of human rights and human dignity that is causing us all on a global basis to respond to this callous and cruel action in China.

Let us hope that those with power and authority, rather than dissolving as the Minister has indicated is likely into what can turn out to be an horrific civil war, will come together, will bring peace to that troubled land, and will make up to their own people having created now a date that will live forever in the history of China. Those with authority now have a lot of mending to do and a lot of soul wrenching acts to take. Let us hope those with power and authority will come to peace with their own people in China.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, I wish to congratulate and thank the Hon. Member for Edmonton Southeast (Mr. Kilgour) and the Hon. Member for Windsor—Lake St. Clair (Mr. McCurdy) who this morning called through their motions for an emergency debate, together with my motion on behalf of my Party.

I congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, for having the wisdom to adjourn the House to allow this emergency debate to take place.

It is with a heavy heart that we hear the news from the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) that the violence is spreading across the country and may even cause a chain reaction. That is very sad news that we hear during our emergency debate.

Over this weekend the world was witness to one of the most brutal incidents in modern history. It is an incident which was in itself shocking, but even more so when it seemed only last week that a peaceful demonstration held by the most promising of populations, that is the students of a country, was going to be met with restraint and that eventually this restraint would lead to discussions that would be of mutual benefit to all parties concerned.

However, this was not to be. Somebody decided that enough was enough and that the acceptable method of dialogue and discussion was not the route to take. Somebody decided that the only route that would be successful was that of violence, of bloodshed and of murder, as expressed by our Leader just a few moments ago. Yes, Mr. Speaker, murder. That is what it was. It was the murder of thousands of young people who were unarmed, defenceless, and wanted to save their country from a Government that they believed was immoral, unethical, and a Government that they now believe is evil.

There are many theories as to who was behind this entire episode. Some believe it was the Army. Some believe it was a move made by an opportune politician to slander the reputation of the present Government. Some believe it was the Government itself.

Whoever was at fault, the reality lies in the number of young people dead and the number of young people dying. At a time when historically positive events are taking place in other countries around the world, when the Soviets promised to pull out of Afghanistan and are opening their doors to political and economic reform, when Poland's Communist Party has relinquished a sizeable amount of power to a trade union, Solidarity, when we are all looking forward to free elections in Namibia and the occupied territories, it is a travesty to see China so robbed of any semblance of respect for the human rights of its citizens.

One could have foreseen, were we still in the early 1900s, that Gorbachev's visit to China and the reaction of students to it would be the cause of more than a little unrest. But today, with China being governed by so-called moderates and its movement toward economic reform, it seems inconceivable that such an event could ever take place.

Our relationship with China has increased, as has China's relationship with the rest of the world. Canadian exports to China nearly doubled in 1988. Our imports rose by nearly 20 per cent. China's foreign trade in general has doubled since 1982 and stands at approximately $40 billion.

What is the world's reaction going to be if this situation continues to get worse? We in the West are all known for making grandiose statements with respect to our relations with countries that have human rights problems, but we are also known for taking into account ad nauseam the implications of such actions on our relationship with these countries.

Our own country has gained a reputation for rhetoric on the question of human rights. We swore economic sanctions to South Africa and then suddenly found that our trade with South Africa has more than tripled this year alone. We updated our export control regulations so that trade with countries with gross human rights violations would be more difficult. Yet we find that we continue to import and export to countries such as Panama, Colombia, Chile, and Iran.

In response to the statement by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) that Canada had no military sales to China, I would like to point out that, according to Statistics Canada, Canadian exports to China in 1988 included arms and ammunition, aircraft and space craft for nuclear reactors and associated equipment amounting to over $80 million.

We continue to insist that emergency debates in the Security Council would do no good toward resolving the situation in Lebanon. We give in to threats from terrorist Governments by quietly scolding them and then looking the other way. We then send messages of condolence on the death of a man who was known to have detained and executed thousands of people for no reason other than political expediency.

Now, faced with an event that has shaken the world and involved one of the world's most powerful countries in terms of technology and nuclear superiority, what are we going to do? At the very least, are we going to re-evaluate our relationship with China? In so doing, are we going to reconsider our ODA commitments which totalled close to $36 million in 1988?

What about the mega Three Gorges Dam project that we have entered into with China? Granted, the Chinese Government has agreed to put off the project for five years. However, what kind of guarantee do we have now that the project will not continue? At the cost of $17 million to the Canadian taxpayer, it was like pulling teeth to even get the Government to admit to the cost of the project.

Last year we celebrated the 40th anniversary of the UN Human Rights Declaration. This year, Canada will sit on the UN Human Rights Commission after an absence of four years. In January of this year, in a press release announcing the annual consultations in preparation for the 45th Session of the UN Human Rights Commission, the Minister for External Relations (Mrs. Landry) stated in the House: "In previous years, we have played an active part in the Commission's work in an observer capacity—but this year we will be able to play a leading role. We can submit resolutions and exercise a greater influence." She went on to say: "When we are confronted with flagrant violations, our short-term goal internationally is to work toward rapidly improving the conditions of those who are deprived of the full enjoyment of their human rights".

The Bush administration has outlined at least major initiatives in order to improve the situation somewhat for the people in China and those connected to it. Although Mr. Bush clearly stated that he will not take any steps to precipitate a breakdown in U.S.-China relations, he announced U.S. humanitarian aid to be provided to victims of the military assault through the International Red Cross and hearings for visa extensions for Chinese students studying in the United States. Mr. Bush also stated that all aspects of United States-Chinese relations will be reviewed in light of the developments. This is why we welcomed the news made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs tonight in the preamble to the resolution.

The European Community has strongly hinted that relations with China will suffer as a result and in fact stated that planned talks next month with the Chinese on expanding economic contacts are cancelled.

I am a bit puzzled by the reaction of our Government to the situation. When our Leader asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he would call a meeting of the Security Council, the response was at best non-committal. We have not as yet heard of what action we intend to take with respect to our seat on the UN Human Rights Commission. Neither have we heard what assistance, if any, we will provide for the victims of this bloody event. What are we waiting for? The precedent has been set already. If we are not going to be the first in doing something, let us not be the last.

Canadians across this country are lending their support to the victims of this massacre and to Chinese Canadians. The Ukrainian-Canadian community and other ethno-cultural groups have already sent messages condemning the Chinese Government's actions giving full support to those who are fighting for democracy and freedom in China.

Canadians all over the country are concerned that, although the situation is a bit calmer, it could once again erupt and lead to a civil war. That is why I say it was with a heavy heart that we heard the comments that this crisis may chain react into something more serious. Yet the Government makes statements such as being encouraged that there appears to be more calm. There was more calm before this weekend, but as we heard today from the Secretary of State, that calm has disappeared.

We are very concerned about the safety and security of the 600 Canadians who are reported to be in China. I would like to ask the Government to do whatever is necessary, even if it results in an adverse change in our relationship with China, to ensure their protection. I would also like to urge the Government to grant political asylum to those Chinese students who request it so as not to put their lives in danger upon return to China. Again, that was welcome news that we heard from the Secretary of State on this item.

I would like to remind the Government that Canada was the first western country to actively support China's admission to the UN back in 1971, as we were reminded in the House by our Leader. Our role, therefore, will be critical in arriving at a solution to a situation that involves one of the most internationally powerful countries whose very mood affects the peace and security of our planet.

In closing, I would like to thank members of all three Parties for lending their unanimous support to the resolution which we just passed in this House. The summary of the resolution needs repeating. It states:

> That this House—unequivocally condemn this brutal use of force against the peaceful populace of Beijing and call upon the authorities of China to cease this senseless killing and immediately adopt a course of dialogue with the people of China.

Mrs. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, it is with heaviness that I rise this evening to voice the outrage, the profound disappointment and the moral condemnation felt by Canadians because of the brutal, evil act that has occurred on the part of the Chinese Government in oppressing well-meaning, freedom-loving people, especially the students and the workers of China. There is not a Canadian who has been watching television in the last week or 10 days who is not appalled by what has happened over the last 48 hours in China.

We all stand here to condemn the Government of China. The military of China have personally acted against the students, but it is the Government of China that must take responsibility for this act. We condemn that government for their acts. However, it is important as we stand here this evening, each of us individually condemning the acts of the Government of China, that we remember the acts of the students and remember to applaud the students of China and do whatever we can to support them and let them know that we will never forget their model of non-violent confrontation with the authorities of their country.

I personally was breathless over the last days as I watched the news broadcasts coming out of Tiananmen Square. As I watched the proceedings, I could not believe that if a group of students in the same numbers with the same emotion were gathered together in a square in North America, that we would see the same demonstration as we saw in Tiananmen Square. It was a scene of non-violence, of love, of caring, one person for another, committed togetherness, but most important there was a great show of non-violence. We must take our lesson from the students of China and the workers who stood with them to confront their government and the difficult situation they were facing at the time. The recent history that they demonstrated to us showed not only their hope but filled us with hope that there were other ways and means of resolving difficult conflicts in our world.

The Government of China has now violated international principles of human rights. We cannot watch this happen without a reaction. We do have a reaction. We have the reaction of the millions of Canadians, coast to coast in this country, who are all affected by the scene that has taken place in our living rooms. The reaction of the Government of Canada must occur at different levels. Tonight we have all supported the resolution of condemnation against the Government of China. On the other hand, as a second action we must look at our aid and trade programs with China. As has been said earlier, Canada at the moment is contributing about $36 million in bilateral assistance, that is, government to government assistance to China. As the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) said, we cannot in our condemnation of the Government confuse the issue and end up by condemning the people of China. We must try to assist them however we can. But government to government assistance is not going to help the people of China at this time. I think that this Government must look for ways and means of supporting the people of China through non-government organizations' activities.

We must look at our trade with China. The value of Canadian exports to China at the present time is $2.6 billion, while the value of imports from China to Canada at the present time is about $955 million. We must consider what we are importing to Canada. As thousands of students in Tiananmen Square have sacrificed their lives and their hopes for peace and democracy in their country, perhaps it is time for Canadians to look at what we can sacrifice to help these people to achieve peace and democracy in their country. Do we really need imported clothing, footwear, electronics in this country that are produced in China? These things must be looked at.

We must continue to let our condemnation be known in the type of meetings and negotiations we have with the Government of China. I am pleased to know that at the present time we would not sanction any further high-level talks and negotiations with the Government of China. The people of Canada cannot forget what is happening in China at this time.

As I near the end of my allotted time, the question comes to my mind, where do we go from here? In my religious tradition, Mr. Speaker, there is a story of a man who was blinded on the road to Damascus. It is the story of a man who persecuted people, who caused people to die because of his causes and his issues, but at an instant of blindness he realized the evil of his ways and he converted. I pray to God that the Government of China can come to realize the evil and error of their ways and turn the sacrifice of the thousands of students into a base for a renewed and a different China, a China in which people can look forward to living in peace and hope and democracy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Kilgour (Edmonton Southeast): Mr. Speaker, thank you once again for permitting tonight's emergency debate on the all-Party motion now passed to the effect that the House > unequivocally condemn the brutal use of force against the peaceful populace of Beijing and call upon the authorities of China to cease this senseless killing and immediately adopt a course of dialogue with the people of China.

Probably every Canadian with a radio, TV or newspaper has been transfixed by the events unfolding since Saturday in the People's Republic of China. For example, my daughter's Grade 5 class discussed the events today at length. They were all horrified, I am told, that the soldiers had turned their guns on unarmed civilians. Can there be a Canadian of any age anywhere who has not expressed his or her outrage in different ways over the past 72 hours to a spouse, neighbour or friend? Is there one person among us who did not marvel at the virtual absence of violence, the presence of love, which was just indicated, during the almost two months of civilian protest for democracy? With these non-violent beginnings, the bloodshed of the past 72 hours has been much more outrageous in the eyes of the world. With every student and civilian who protested in Tiananmen Square was the hope of greater freedom and a peaceful transition toward democracy. These dreams and aspirations were shattered by the first machine-gun fire and the first casualty.

As other Members have said tonight, we MPs must make it perfectly clear that our protest and our indignation lies not with the People's Liberation Army but with the Chinese Government itself. There have been conflicting reports as to who ordered the troops to fire on the civilians. Some believe that it was senior Party leader Ding Xiaoping. Others believe it was President Yang Shangkun. One newspaper asserts that much of the shooting was done by the 28th Army, believed to be personally controlled by troops loyal to Yang. Whoever issued the initial order, I believe it is now incumbent upon the entire global community, particularly Canada, to condemn the Chinese Government itself for its earlier actions and aid the Chinese citizens.

A protester in Vancouver yesterday cried out "We want the whole world to condemn the brutal massacre by the Chinese Government". Mr. Speaker, we MPs are doing our part tonight from all sides of the House in the best tradition of Canadian representative democracy. Canadians must be willing to lead the way in forging new paths for the Government and the protesters to settle their disputes free of guns and free of molotov cocktails. Lest we believe that the worst is over, today's Ottawa Citizen reports that the military took the offensive in the streets and on the airwaves, warning that the capture of Tiananmen Square from pro-democracy protesters was "just an initial victory" predicting a long fight against the "dregs of society."

Again, Canadians from the Ville de St. Jean jusqu'a Nanaimo, jusqu'a Yellowknife must publicly insist that this is a government to government dispute and not one primarily between the Canadian Government and the People's Liberation Army. We are all here tonight to speak out against the massive human rights violations by the highest levels of the Chinese Government.

• (2120)

I believe that it is important that we state some of the abuses witnessed by both demonstrators and reporters and to advise the House of the outrage now being expressed by much of the international community. French President François Mitterrand said yesterday: "A regime that is reduced to firing on its youth to survive, when the youth it has educated rises up in the name of freedom, has no future".

According to The Toronto Star today:

> "Perhaps the most horrid scenes of the Government's slayings occurred on Tiananmen Square. Tanks crushed to death several students who remained huddled in the tents set up on the plaza during three weeks of demonstrations", eye witnesses said.
> There was also a report from one Beijing student eyewitness that tanks had crushed students who had linked arms in a last ditch embrace of the snow-white "Goddess of Democracy" statue, a sort of Statue of Liberty made of plastic that students had put up in the square.

The Star reported that a "story of carnage emerged as victims of the violence in Beijing recalled how the People's Liberation Army soldiers shot, clubbed and even strangled their way through a sea of unarmed protesters". The Star went on to report that one doctor said he examined the body of a man in his mid-20s who had been chocked to death by metal chains the soldiers had hidden in their hats for crowd control. One man, who was near a foreign reporter, asked: "Does America know what happened here? Does the world know?" These words echo the fears of many Chinese people. They fear that their blood is running in the streets and not being seen by the world.

The People's Republic governmentally controlled media called yesterday's military raid on the square, "A glorious victory over counter-revolutionary turmoil". The only mention made of the human carnage that accompanied the assault was when a "maverick for Radio Beijing's English language service asked listeners to protest the most barbarous suppression of the people". What courage that individual displayed.

Similarly, courage was shown by many thousands of people, young and old, in Beijing and many other centres in the People's Republic.

The Vernon Daily News quotes a student leader as saying: "The whole city, the whole country, the whole world is watching. We students are not here just for the people of this city but for the sake of history and all society".

It would appear that the brutal force with which the Government suppressed the recent protests has forged the will of the Chinese population.

Today, many of us watched as a single man risked his life while for several minutes he stalled a column of tanks in Beijing.

One reporter from this continent reported the general feeling amongst those newly anointed freedom fighters:

> An art student nearly incoherent with grief and anger as he watched the body of a student being carted away, his head blown up by bullets, said: "Maybe we will fail today, maybe we will fail tomorrow, but someday we will succeed. It is a historical inevitability".

What we are witnessing now is a government at war with its own people. The Globe and Mail reports an old Beijing resident as saying:

> "In 1949, we welcomed the army into Beijing,"—referring to the crowds who hailed the arrival of Communist troops at the end of the Communist revolution. Then he waved toward a line of 50 army trucks that were blocked in a sea of more than 10,000 angry men and women, and added, "Now we're fighting to keep them out."

The Chinese people and the world are now both at one in finding it difficult to understand why the People's Army is killing its own people. That feeling, combined with dissension amongst some of the troops, may provide the setting for a tragic civil war.

I implore my colleagues to do all we can in our own ways, to the limited extent that we can do anything, to ensure that this tragic civil war does not occur, to ensure that more blood does not flow in Beijing, Shanghai and elsewhere, to ensure that those crushed under the armoured carriers yesterday and the day before, protecting their Statue of Liberty, have not died in vain.

Finally, let me remind Members that China, with more than one billion people, roughly one-fifth of the planet's population, is a pre-eminent player on any world stage and all Canadians of goodwill have nothing but fond hopes for the Chinese people.

I was told today by the president of the Chinese Canadian National Council, that Canada has something between 500,000 and 700,000 residents of sole or part origin in China. Toronto has up to 250,000. Your city, Mr. Speaker, has approximately 100,000, Edmonton and Calgary each 20,000, and so on across Canada.

They and all of us, whatever our origin, are fully united in this issue: the killing must stop.

[Translation]

The killing must stop immediately.

[English]

To sum up, I am certain that all of us here in this House are united on five principles: first, a non-violent way of settling this government-citizen dispute must be found immediately; second, these events, which so strain Canada-China bilateral relations, are something we all regret; third, this is essentially a human rights issue and Canada must be loyal to its best tradition by speaking out without any hesitation to condemn these killings; fourth, this is a government-to-government dispute, not a Canadian-Chinese issue, as the Secretary of State so properly put it earlier tonight.

Above all, as I said before, the killing must stop.

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the privilege to speak on this issue tonight. It is of global proportions. Before I talk about China and this terrible tragedy, I would like to bring it down to a human level.

Tonight, Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Duckman are worrying about their son Owen. Owen left for China in late April on a three-month study group with 24 students from Ontario. Owen is from Queen's University. A couple of hours ago, Judi was telling me how excited her son was about the prospect of going to China. He is in Yang Sue at the University of Sue Shaw, about 90 miles from Shanghai. They are very worried because they are getting almost no news out of that area. She talked with Owen about a week and a half ago and things were relatively quiet at that time. I have assured her the Canadian government will be doing everything possible to make sure that Owen and the other students come safely back to this country.

It is ironic that one of Owen's tasks in addressing the Chinese students was to explain and discuss democracy, what it was all about, what its benefits were and so on. I know every Member in the House will pray that not only Owen but all of our Canadian citizens over there, whether they are studying, on business trips, or visiting, will have a safe return.

I noted the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) mentioned that they just recently decided to advise all Canadians to leave Beijing. Perhaps that may spread to other areas. I have assured Mrs. Duckman of our co-operation on that concern.

I think most people were excited these last few years about how the world was moving toward a global village of more peace and greater respect worldwide for human rights.

Some remarkable things have happened in the U.S.S.R. over the last few years. It will host a human rights conference in 1991. It is allowing refusniks to leave in very large numbers compared with just two years ago. It had a form of election when I was there in late March. People like Mr. Sakarov, a long-time dissident, was elected. Mr. Yiltsen in Moscow got almost 80 per cent or 90 per cent support. Let us hope and pray that country continues in the direction that it seems to be taking.

China as well, for many years, began opening the door and moving toward greater freedom, greater respect for fundamental human rights.

• (2130)

Along came this terrible shock just a few days ago. No one in the world predicted this. It was a difficult issue they had, but they had these thousands of students simply protesting for greater freedoms, for a move toward democracy, and then because I guess of the power struggle at the highest levels, the so-called moderates and the rights, the rights certainly for the sad hour won out with the loss of who knows how many lives of students and other people. In a very balanced way, I know our Government led by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), will try to bring pressure on the officials in China, whether it is direct to them through the ambassador or through the United Nations. We do hope that some solution can be found in the very short time before there is a further massacre of innocent human lives.

I wish to thank my colleague for allowing some time for me to speak on this important matter in a very personal way.

[Translation]

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all Canadians are astonished and horrified at the events in China. Ten years after the first Beijing spring and 21 years after the Prague spring, a surge of hope and rebellion against an ossified regime appears to have been crushed once again.

[English]

The first time I visited China was in 1973 at the end of the cultural revolution. Since then as commercial, educational and cultural relationships between our two countries increased, I had the occasion to visit China on many occasions. I must say I took great joy in watching the evolution of that great country and the standard of living of its people and the joie de vivre on their faces as their living standards and freedom increased. In fact, it was not just joy with China but it was joy with the capacity of humankind to improve on its condition.

Throughout this period, however, as material conditions improved, two matters of increasing importance continued or began to appear on the scene. The first for those of us who talked to students either in China or here, the problem of favouritism began to manifest its face, the difficulty that young Chinese students who were not plugged into the Party, to the hierarchy, had in obtaining positions abroad or positions within China, or improving their own lives as indeed their education should have warranted.

The second was the fact that with increasing economic freedom came the demand for increasing political freedom, political freedom that was not forthcoming. It is paradoxical that in the Soviet Union the regime there has come to the conclusion that economic freedom and economic growth is not possible without increasing political freedom. It was manifested that China which in fact took the first steps along the road to economic freedom did not realize this fundamental fact. Many of us took the occasion to talk to the Chinese leadership, those that we had access to, as to how they would handle the problem. We were assured that they could, and we believed them, as indeed we were assured that they could handle the sit-ins in Tiananmen Square, and that this would simply be one more stage on China's march to progress.

It is with deep tragedy that we came to the realization that we were wrong. At the news of the army's action, the world was outraged. When we see pictures and television of wanton death, the world is horrified. When we talk to the Chinese students who are here in this country, we are pained by their isolation. Equally, we are affected by a profound sense of loss. So much progress has been halted by a leadership which is so very much out of touch.

It is very clear that we must move to protect the Canadians who are in China. Clearly, we must move to protect the students who are here in Canada. We must also ask ourselves if at some point, as we begin to study the evolution of the United Nations itself, Canada should not begin to ask whether it should not extend its ability to react to situations where Governments make war on their people. We have all been brought up to understand and to agree to the principle that the United Nations must not interfere in the internal affairs of individual states. Surely at some point the actions of some Governments become so reprehensible that the world cannot stand by. Surely in any event it is not too much to ask that the great powers themselves come together and bring some kind of concerted action to this great tragedy.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that I rise to support the Government's resolution. I would like to say one thing on a slightly different issue. As a new Member, I have now been in this House for some six months. There have been highs and lows. I have watched partisan and petty bickering. I have seen things happen in this House which I do not think should have happened in a democracy. Sometimes, as with many others, we have asked ourselves: "What are we doing here?" I must say that it is on a night like tonight when this House comes together to express the total indignation and repugnance of our country that I am very proud to be a Member of this House.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I also am joining with my colleagues on all sides of the House in supporting the resolution of condemnation. I am sorry that we did not have a chance to debate a similar resolution when the people of Kurdistan were gassed by the thousands and left dead in the streets, and when the people of Tibet were massacred by the thousands.

In each of these cases I think what causes us to rise and to swell in one collective indignation is the fact that in China this week, as we have seen in Kurdistan and Tibet, we see a small snapshot of man's inhumanity against humanity. We wonder whether it is a political system or whether it is in fact the collective reflection of how desperate people can be in the search for power. I too had an opportunity to visit China in 1982. I must say that it was a very fleeting visit.

It was a visit where I was struck by the thirst for information, not only by the Chinese students, because being somewhat of an extrovert myself, while I was there I took to the streets. I had a small Chinese dictionary and learned a few phrases and went out and spoke with the people. Many of them had never spoken on a one-to-one basis with a westerner. They had questions that they wanted to ask me about our civilization, about our so-called capitalist system and how in fact we could go out and speak in a democratic fashion.

One Sunday morning, in a covert fashion, I was taken by a taxi driver to a Catholic church. I had an opportunity to witness a Catholic ceremony at six o'clock in the morning. Afterward, we spoke with the priest who himself had been a victim of the cultural revolution.

I spoke with him and I said: "How can you follow through the Catholic religion in China when in fact the Chinese Government has made it quite clear that Rome and the Pope have absolutely no place to play in your particular religion?" He said: "When you have gone out and worked in the field, and when you have suffered as we have under the hands of the Gang of Four during the cultural revolution, you accept this particular restriction as one step on the road to democracy."

Just as I spoke to the students, I spoke to the workers in the streets. I saw the look of fear in their eyes, not in 1989, but in 1982, when worker organizers would stand on the corner and if they spoke too long to a stranger, if they spoke too long in their halting English, organizers would come up and say: "It's time to move on." The quiet peace-loving Chinese people, even though they were thirsting for information would follow instructions and would move on.

In one particular case, in one surreptitious visit, I was invited to visit the home of a Chinese person. In that home lived a young man, his mother and father, the three of whom shared one bathroom with about 15 other families. It was the China that we did not see according to the official vista. He and his mother and father shared a room which was approximately 10 feet by 20 feet.

They invited me into their home and served me crabs. To them it was a dinner of luxury, something which they spent a whole month's salary to put together. When I saw the crab legs I thought that we in Canada would probably toss off the amount of fish that they were so proud to offer to their guest. They hungered for information.

That is why when I saw the throngs of students gathering in Tiananmen Square recently who were prepared for the first time in a long time not only to throw off the shackles of the cultural revolution but also to stand up and be counted for democracy I as one from the West was in my heart rooting for them saying: "Thank God that the wave, the undercurrent, the search for democracy that has so touched the people of China over the last number of years has found its fruition in of all places Tiananmen Square".

What we saw this weekend was the brutal hand of anarchy, the brutal hand of totalitarianism striking down those students—not just the students but the workers and people who were coming together to speak for freedom, to bring forward the Statue of Liberty. When the armed forces came through and started to shoot them down brutally in the streets, we saw phalanxes of students forming a human chain going to certain death because they believed in a democracy and a freedom which China has not seen for many, many years.

We in the western world and Members on all sides of the House, as well as other Governments around the world, are not seeking ways to blame the people of China. The people of China, as the people of Poland, have kept alive their hope in the face of oppression and in the face of certain death in some cases, and in other cases the anarchy of the cultural revolution. They still have the memory of working on the farms, of having intellectuals and people who had so much to contribute to their culture being sent off to work in the rice paddies to do the bidding of the Government.

What we do reject as a Parliament and as the people of Canada is the fact that the armed forces of China and the Government which was directing those armed forces is moving to smote down a movement to freedom which we should be embracing.

I must hope that the Government of Canada will not only condemn the armed forces but that it will also condemn the Government. I hope that it will consider moving with economic sanctions.

Yes, it is true that we carry out $2.6 billion worth of business with the Chinese people. However, I do not think that should be a reason for us to prevent movement in the area of sanctions. I was most concerned that the Government has not yet put that particular issue on the agenda.

We need commitments so that those young people who are now speaking out in Canada will not be sent home, not only in the short term while the situation remains unstable but in the longer term. We also need an expedited process so that those people in China who want to flee the certain horror of the current situation are given every opportunity by the Canadian Government and the Canadian people to seek comfort and freedom in another land. We have much work to do.

There is an inscription on the outside of the House which I saw coming into the Chamber tonight. What I would like to say to the people of China and to those who may be listening to the word of the outside through the English-language dailies which are still publishing in China is this. It is from an inscription in one of the stones outside which I think characterizes what we should be saying, something which has been said before:

> To you from failing hands we throw the torch, Be yours to hold it high. If ye break faith with us who die, we shall not sleep though poppies grow in Flanders field.

That is something which happened once. It can happen again. I urge all of us not only to support the resolution but to do everything that we can to encourage that flame to continue burning in China for the people of China.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Marie Gibeau (Bourassa): Mr. Speaker, all Canadians followed with intense concern the tragic events in Beijing on the weekend. Like many Canadians, I had been fascinated by the unprecedented demonstrations by students on Tienanmen Square, since the middle of April. This blossoming of a democratic spirit that we also saw in other communist countries in recent months proves that a political system cannot prevent indefinitely the expression of a people's fundamental values or go against the dynamics of the human spirit.

We were profoundly moved by the sight of immense crowds in their quest for democracry, taking great risks to reinforce their demands for a more open and more representative political life in the People's Republic of China. The Government has already expressed our profound dismay at the aggressive measures taken by the Chinese military against their own unarmed citizens. The fact that there were so many victims has shocked and appalled the Canadian people.

As pointed out by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) in his press release on June 4, we have appealed to the Chinese Government to act immediately to put an end to the indiscriminate killing by its military forces. The same press release also expressed horror and outrage over the indiscriminate use of force against the students and civilians of Beijing and the inexcusable behaviour of the Chinese military.

We know that many other countries have also expressed their revulsion at the tragic loss of life caused by the military attack on student demonstrators and their supporters. The whole world cannot be other than shocked at the extent of the tragedy. We want to express our heartfelt sympathy for the families of the victims.

History teaches us, however, that such repressive measures will not necessarily prevail against the courage of an entire people, because the desire to see a more open and more representative political system will not be repressed lightly among the millions of Chinese who took part in the recent demonstrations, and this despite the very high price some had to pay for their convictions.

During the last decade, Mr. Speaker, China has opened the door to the West and started some very important economic reforms. These developments had given us hope that the most populous country in the world would also be able to respond to the appeal of its students for greater political openness. We continue to hope that their country has not gone down a path from which there is no return.

Canada has long had ties with China. Many Canadians owe their living to our trade with China, to having a window open on the Pacific. Our country is becoming increasingly involved in Trans-Pacific affairs. In addition, the Chinese-Canadian community adds an important dimension to our interest in China. I know that many members of this community have relatives in China, and I share their concern for the well-being of those relatives. What is happening there cannot be held indifferent to Canada and Canadians. The efforts of the media to draw our attention to what is happening in the People's Republic of China and the response of Canadians have shown that distance does not dim our concern.

We think it is very important to secure the safety of the Canadian community in China. We are monitoring the situation very closely—it is our priority concern—, in co-operation with our embassy in Beijing and our consulate general in Shanghai.

We are relieved to hear that the necessary measures have been taken to ensure the safety of Canadians in China.

We are also setting a priority on re-examining our bilateral relations with China to ensure that the Chinese authorities have a clear understanding of our concern regarding the human rights situation in that country.

• (2150)

The events of the last few weeks showed that the students' protest movement was greatly debated by the Chinese leaders. When the demonstrations began, the Chinese government handled the students' discontent with great restraint. How unfortunate it is that the caution of the early days gave way to brute force; how unfortunate it is that negotiation was ruled out in favour of guns.

Human rights and fundamental democratic rights are at the centre of Canada's foreign policy, wherever these values are threatened. We cannot let the events of the last few days in China go by in silence. I know that all Hon. Members here today share my anguish at the suffering of the students and citizens of Beijing.

Mr. Speaker, a few years ago I had the privilege to know one of these Chinese students who had chosen to learn French as a second language as a way to learn about the western world. French was a difficult language for this student, who had also been able to obtain a training position with a firm of consulting engineers. He was eager to learn, full of intellectual curiosity and wonder at everything going on in our world. The symbolism of the Statue of Liberty on Tiananmen Square seems to me to represent this curiosity and this desire for independence and freedom.

Mr. Speaker, in unequivocally condemning this brutal use of force against the peaceful people of Beijing and asking the Chinese authorities to stop this senseless killing immediately in order to begin dialogue with the Chinese people without delay, the House of Commons of Canada did not speak lightly. We are a peaceful people. We are a people who do not necessarily have a tradition of interfering in the communities or internal affairs of other countries. But the action taken by the Chinese Army is something that we cannot tolerate and for this reason, Mr. Speaker, I felt I had to rise this evening to join my colleagues in the House and denounce this decision of the Chinese government.

[English]

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State of Canada and Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, it is with deep concern and outrage that I participate in this emergency debate this evening. In the past two days, we have witnessed a remarkable and a tragic thwarting of democracy in China. Nearly two months ago, students first gathered in Tiananmen Square to call for democratic change in their country. Their demonstration was peaceful and courageous. They caught the attention of the world; they captured our hearts; and they spoke for repressed people around the world.

As events unfolded in the Square, I remembered the visit that I made to Tiananmen Square just one year ago. In April 1988, I participated in the inaugural China Airlines flight between Toronto and Beijing. When I visited Tiananmen Square, I marvelled at its size and its openness, and I shared a sense of history that as a Canadian I was visiting China at a remarkable time in history. But, as I watched the tanks roll into Tiananmen Square over the weekend, crushing the barricades erected by the students and firing on defenceless people, I sat horrified and despondent, horrified at the senseless slaughter of innocent people and despondent about the future course for China.

For over 10 years, the world has stood in awe of the dramatic changes underway in China. We applauded the economic reforms first announced by Deng Xiaoping in 1978 as he turned back the excesses of the Cultural Revolution and challenged his country like never before. Deng's promises of readjustment, restructuring, consolidation and improvement made the world sit up and take notice at this incredible country once again. Business ties between China and Canada expanded as western nations were invited to join in a remarkable position of reform. Joint business ventures involving Canadian companies have expanded and China has even considered establishing a bank in Canada. In my community of Scarborough, China has also announced plans to open a huge trade centre.

Well, in 10 short years, China overhauled its economy and turned communism upside down. changes to agriculture and industry opened new opportunities for both peasants and city dwellers alike. New contacts were also made with the outside world as China encouraged the West to participate in their reforms. Here in this Parliament we formed a Canada—China Parliamentary Friendship Group of which I am very honoured to be a member.

The reforms that began in China also helped usher in changes throughout the communist world. Communist systems in eastern Europe, Africa, Central America, began re-examining their thesis of the command economy, one-party rule and state-run societies. They began to focus their resources on responding to and meeting the will of the people.

In fact, we have experienced an incredible irony. On the very day that the Chinese communists violently repress a call for democracy, the communist party in Poland is conceding defeat to Solidarite after a free election. Ten years of reform in China today mean very little indeed.

After nearly two months of indecision and confusion, the Chinese leadership demonstrated that it has no capacity for political change. The tragedy over the past days reveals a country where politics is dominated by personality and where leadership is cloaked in mystery. China's political weaknesses have resulted in the horrible spectacle of an army charging down the Avenue of Eternal Peace, opening fire on thousands of unarmed students who were calling for freedom.

Just as the democracy wall was destroyed a few years ago, Chinese leaders have again shown their intolerance to freedom. By using violence to sustain its political power, the Chinese leadership has chosen a course that is uncivilized and certain to fail. Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn once wrote:

> Anyone who has once proclaimed violence as his method must inexorably choose the lie as his principle.

Well, it is time for the lies and the killing in China to end. Canadians can only wonder about the future of China and indeed the prospects of Hong Kong when it becomes part of China in 1997.

I applaud the actions of our Canadian Ambassador in China. Canadian students in Beijing University have been placed in secure accommodations and other Canadians in the country are being contacted. I also understand that Canadians seeking information on their relatives in China can contact the 800 number, 800-267-6788. The role of our embassy in this situation is to guarantee the safety of Canadians in China, and I believe all Members should commend the Ambassador for the very difficult job that he is doing in Beijing.

I support the resolution that condemns the brutal use of force against the peaceful populace of Beijing and call upon the authorities of China to cease this senseless killing and immediately adopt a course of civilized dialogue with the people of China.

To the over 40,000 Chinese Canadians in Scarborough, I offer my condolences for your countrymen and my sincere hope that peace and freedom will again prevail in China.

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Transcona): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak during this important debate tonight, and I want to thank you for allowing this emergency debate.

The violence of the events in China has shocked and saddened us all, and I am pleased that the motion presented by the Secretary of State for External Affairs received the unanimous support of the House.

[English]

The Hon. Member for LaSalle-Emard (Mr. Martin), who spoke earlier said that this was one of the evenings on which he was particularly proud to be a Member of Parliament. It is always a high point in the life of Parliament when we are able to come together as one mind and express on behalf of Canadians a particular view. Of course tonight what we have expressed, both in the granting of this emergency debate and in the debate itself, and particularly in the unanimous resolution adopted by the House, is the unanimous outrage that Canadians feel about the events in China.

I think the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) put it well, though, when he said that it should be clear to all who may be listening, both here in Canada and abroad, that what we are talking about here is an unequivocal condemnation of the actions of a particular Government in a particular time and place in the history of China. We are not talking about the Chinese people themselves. We begin this debate with a tremendous respect for the history of China as a civilization and for the Chinese people themselves.

We begin, I dare say, with a respect for the Chinese Revolution, something which many people have studied over the years and have recognized as not only a great struggle, but a struggle that has resulted in many achievements for the Chinese people. Many people have looked with awe at the ability of a country with so large a population to feed and provide for itself in a way that has been the envy of many other countries of the world. That is why what has happened this last weekend is a political as well as a human tragedy, that a revolution which begins with the long march and with so much struggle and passion for social justice should come to a point where the People's Liberation Army is firing on the people themselves.

I think a great many Canadians are saddened not only by the loss of life but by the tremendous and painful irony that that must be for all who have watched the struggle for justice in China and which has its antecedence in the Revolution and in the overthrow of the Nationalist Chinese regime, a regime noted for its brutality.

I also want to say that I wish the House had more of these kinds of opportunities to express our unanimous condemnation of gross violations of human rights. As someone else said earlier, we know that tragedies of this proportion sometimes happen without the world taking any notice at all, or taking very little notice. I am reminded of the genocide which has happened against the people of East Timor, or the chemical warfare which the Iraquis used on their own people in Kurdistan, or the actions of the Chinese Government not so long ago in Tibet. The list goes on and on of events which do not receive the kind of attention that this event has.

We are glad that this event has received that kind of attention, but I think we also have a responsibility to say that there are many more occasions on which the House of Commons could unite to condemn human rights violations. Perhaps we should see this as a precedent setting move for further parliamentary action in the future, should such occasions arise. We, of course, hope they do not.

I would like to go over some of the things that have been suggested in terms of a Canadian response, things which the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has covered. I would like to just speak for the record as to how we, in the New Democratic Party, view some of the areas which we have to concern ourselves with as a result of the tragic events in Beijing.

It has been suggested that Canada—and my Leader raised this in the Question Period earlier today—call for a debate in the Security Council. It was also suggested earlier that a self-understanding of the United Nations may well prevent the kind of full debate that one would like to see in the United Nations.

I am told that the Security Council's mandate has to do with conflicts between nations rather than within nations. If that is the case, as I believe it is, in many respects that is a very serious limitation. It is a limitation reflected in the statement by the Secretary General today. It is only a paragraph long. It says that this is essentially a matter within the domestic jurisdiction of a state, and he urges utmost restraint. It seems to me that more should both be required and permitted within the context of the United Nations than now seems possible.

I urge the Canadian Government to explore every opportunity, as it said it will, to see how the moral suasive powers—I think that is the way the Minister put it—can be used to put pressure on China in this instance to make sure, first of all, that the killing does stop and, second, that the road to democratization which China was on and which the students so ably represented is a road that is resumed.

Some people have called for the immediate withdrawal of the Canadian Ambassador to China. Certainly this is something that the Government must consider in the days ahead, particularly if it becomes obvious that those who ordered the troops on the students are solidifying their power in the country. Although, as you know, we are not sure. I do not think anyone is sure at this point just exactly what is happening in China. There are strong indications of conflicts within the People's Liberation Army itself. It may be some time before we know who it is appropriate to speak of when we are speaking about the Government or authority in China.

In any case, this traditional gesture of protest is something the Government must consider, but we appreciate that in the next few days and perhaps for the next little while this will be a judgment that will have to be made. Having the Ambassador on site may well be something that will be useful in terms of advancing the security of Canadians who are in China, although as the Minister said, it may well be that all Canadians will have to be evacuated from Beijing and not just the Ambassador in the form of a withdrawal.

With respect to Chinese students in Canada, I was glad to hear the announcement by the Government as to how to deal with the predicament in which many of those students find themselves. The point is well taken that the Government must now begin to think about what it will do with respect to those students if there is a long-term problem. Even if things were to return to an acceptable state in China, these students may still have a long-term problem in terms of having identified themselves as people who were afraid to go home and who may have stayed here longer than they had originally planned. There are some long-term considerations with which the Government will have to deal with respect to Chinese students here in Canada. We urge the Government to do everything possible to facilitate both the safety of the students in terms of staying here, or in China, should they eventually return there.

This past weekend I was at the New Democratic Party convention in Manitoba. Everyone was upset to hear what had happened in China. What struck me and even made me feel old for a moment was how upset the Manitoba Young New Democrats were, how upset students were, and how upset students around the world are. They feel an identity with those students in China.

Whether they have ever been in China, or know Chinese, or whatever the case may be, they identify with those young people who for so many weeks now have gathered in Tiananmen Square in a non-violent, idealistic and courageous way. I was struck by the way that young Canadians identified with those students.

Not so long ago I was a student. I remember the events of 1970 when students were fired upon at Kent State University. I believe at that time only four students were killed. This obviously was not something ordered by the national Government. It was an order that came from much lower down the totem pole than that. Yet that event, along with others, so eroded the moral credibility of the policy that the American Government was following at that time in Vietnam that it was not very long before that policy crumbled altogether.

It did not bring on an election victory for the students in 1972, just as this much more massive, tragic, and hardly even comparable event may not bring an immediate victory for the students and what they are seeking. However, I think that I can say with confidence that this much blood will not be shed in vain. This much blood is never shed in vain when it is the blood of the non-violent which is shed at the hands of the violent. Always out of this kind of violence comes a victory that may not be apparent today, and it may not even be apparent in the months or years ahead. We hope that it will be readily apparent in the near future. However, I am confident that this much blood of the non-violent shed by the violent will not be shed in vain, just as the blood of incomparably fewer students in previous situations in other countries was never shed in vain.

Those who know me know it is not my habit to say complimentary things about journalists, but a word needs to be said about many of the Chinese and international journalists who have brought us the coverage of events in Tiananmen Square that they have over the last few days at great risk to life and limb. It is the type of event that gives one a certain respect for the profession when journalists are willing to persist in obviously dangerous situations so that word and image can get out to the world so people can know exactly what is going on.

There is an irony here that should not be missed. People are doing a lot of talking about the hardliners. In this context, if I understand it correctly, the hardliners are the people who want to see the economy of China westernized. Deng Xiaoping and others have become known for their economic reforms. In that sense they have not been hardliners when it comes to economic ideology. It turns out that they have been hardliners when it comes to political ideology. It is important to say that because so often the concept of being a hardliner is used with a broad brush and implies both political and economic rigidity which in this case is not an accurate way of describing what is going on.

The task for the western world will be to drive home the point, particularly if the so-called hardliners, in this case the people who ordered the troops on the students are the people who emerge victorious from the struggle which is now going on from the chain of violence that they set in motion, not only in rhetoric and motions here in the House of Commons, however important they may be, but to drive home the point in practical and concrete actions about how much offence is taken by the world at what has happened in China. At the same time China must not be driven into isolationism and hostility toward the rest of the world. That will be dangerous for us all. In this I do not care one whit about who happens to have investments in China or joint ventures. I am not talking about the economic dimension. Economic matters should always be subordinate to larger moral and political values. I am talking about the fact that we are dealing with one of the largest countries in the world, a country which, if things go awry in China, can affect all kinds of things which are either progressing well at this point or have the hope of progressing well.

Recently I had occasion to speak to the Asia-Pacific Foundation in Vancouver. It was an opportunity for me to have a good look at many things that are happening in the Asia-Pacific region. One of the things one was delighted to note was that it was an era of reconciliation and so many old enemies were reconciling. When I spoke in late April it was just previous to the first visit by a Taiwanese Minister to the mainland since the revolution. China-Japan relations are warming, Russian-Chinese relations are warming, Russian-Japanese relations are warming, and the Southeast Asian countries are trying to find a solution to problems in Indochina. Without a China that knows its mind it may be very difficult to solve the problem in Cambodia. All of this will have a profound effect on a great many international situations that are important to us all.

Therefore it is incumbent upon all of us to think very carefully and of course it is even more incumbent upon the Government because they are the ones who have to act, but it is incumbent upon us to think how we react to these events. Whatever we do, we have to do actual things. We cannot be guilty of saying our piece tonight and being done with it. Whatever we do, we have to do it from that sense of outrage which is unanimously shared by Canadians, and particularly shared by Chinese Canadians and others who have had the good fortune to visit China over the last few decades. I notice that people who have been to China in the last decade or so have had a special pain in their hearts about what has gone on there. I believe that speaks well of the Chinese people. It speaks well of the hopes that many have had and should still have for the future of China. China as a civilization and as a nation has been around for a long time. It will be around for a long time yet. What those students were after, and what I believe in great measure they will have achieved by their deaths, will yet come to pass.

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is a great distance between our country and China in geographic terms. There is a great distance as well between the Chinese and most Canadians in cultural terms. There is no distance between us whatsoever tonight in the shared emotional response to the tragedy that is unfolding in China.

This century which in so many ways highlights steps of human advancement and progress, is also the century of the most unspeakable horrors inflicted by mankind upon other humans. It is perhaps one of the most discouraging things for people around the globe tonight to see on the news that has just been broadcast, the unfolding events in China. The often hoped for sense of progress towards civilized methods of government, orderly and peaceful methods of resolving differences, in fact represents a stage of human progress. It is black chapters like the one that is being written now that bring us up short with the realization that too often the veneer of civilization is just that, a very thin veneer.

As this tragedy unfolds as one more chapter in China's long history, it is perhaps very important for all of us in this country and elsewhere around the globe to make a distinction between the people of China and those who are currently in authority in China and have set in motion this chain of events.

It is very clear that China with its centuries of rich culture and human endeavour has a very great deal to teach the rest of the world. But China has nothing to teach the rest of the world about how to deal with political change. What we have seen in the last two days represents the most complete and abysmal failure of a government to respond to change within its own country. When the point is reached where armed soldiers turn and fire on unarmed civilians within their own country, no more greater statement of bankrupt political thinking could be made than that which was carried by the signature of those machine guns firing and those tanks moving along the Boulevard of Eternal Peace.

The Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) when he spoke earlier referred to events in Europe, particularly in Hungary in 1956. I was 11 years old in 1956 and delivering newspapers on my paper route door to door. After several days of seeing photographs on the front page of The Toronto Telegram showing students in running shoes with Molotov cocktails in their hands up against the heavy-booted soldiers and the steel-plated tanks moving through the streets of Budapest, I became very depressed and for a number of weeks was inexplicably in a state of melancholy. I feel the same sense tonight, and I mention Budapest in 1956 for two reasons.

First, because that image of students standing before those tanks as the troops of repression swept into Hungary is a direct parallel with the scene that Canadians saw just a few moments ago on national television. They saw students standing before tanks in the streets of the capital city of China with nothing but their human bravery and their commitment to their beliefs in democracy against that awesome military threat that was only feet and inches away from them. Therefore we see a parallel in a sense.

If we are to see some similarities between now and 1956, let us see another one. In retrospect, many people saw Budapest in 1956 as a time of lost opportunity because coming from the people was a strong drive for political freedom in a communist controlled country. The West did not respond at that time because the West was preoccupied with other activities; the French and the British in the Suez and the Canadians also in the Suez crisis. The Americans were preoccupied in 1956 with electing their popular general, Dwight Eisenhower, as President.

There were many other distractions. It was only in retrospect that many people regretted that there had not been a greater sense of the historic moment so that those within Hungary could have felt appropriate support.

We are now witnessing another moment of history. It is more than right for all of us to stand here as representatives of an outraged Canadian populace and give expression to the justifiable horror which we all feel. It is not only right, it is necessary that around the world those who are democrats express that feeling unequivocally.

Beyond expressing outrage, I am saying that we must be creative in how we are viewing this unfolding situation in China. Most assuredly this is another historic moment. There may be opportunities if we think creatively, if we view the situation with an open mind and listen especially to those forces within China which in some form or other we can assist at this time. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Transcona spoke about the ironies in this situation and the distinction between who are the hardliners and who are not the hardliners. Following on his line of thinking, I believe it is very important that we do not at this time fall too easily into putting labels and categories to a situation that is extraordinarily complex.

• (2230)

Using all of the resources of our country, including not only Canadians with experience in China but many who are now Canadians of Chinese background, and being open to all the possibilities that this situation presents, we must speak as we are tonight and act as a Parliament as we are tonight. However, in the days ahead, as this chain of events continues to unfold, we must look for ways that we can, as one of the world's countries that has a very special relationship with China, continue to support those forces of democracy and those forces of reform within the country. To do less might very well mean that in 10 or 15 years we would look back and see that an opportunity had been missed.

The upheaval that is currently taking place in the communist world is truly remarkable. Events are happening these weeks and months that two years ago people would have thought quite impossible. Certainly in the example from China, in contrast to the example in eastern Europe, we are seeing that economic reform must be accompanied by political reform.

For these reasons I join with other elected representatives of the Canadian people to stand in the House of Commons of Canada tonight and express, as all others have, support for our resolution which unequivocally condemns this brutal use of force against the peaceful populace of China, to issue our call to the authorities in China to cease the senseless killing, and to adopt immediately a course of dialogue with the Chinese people.

Mr. J. W. Bud Bird (Fredericton): Mr. Speaker, it would be impossible for me to improve upon the moving words that have been spoken by so many of my colleagues from all corners of the House tonight about the tragic massacre which has occurred in China over the past few days.

However, I want to take this opportunity to add my voice on behalf of my constituents in full support of this unanimous motion of condemnation against the senseless and vulgar decisions taken by the Chinese Government to slaughter its own citizens. Surely such actions demonstrate the total vacuum of leadership which exists in China at this time, and surely all the world deplores any system of government that must resort to violence as the final measure of its incompetence and its inhumanity.

Yesterday in Fredericton, New Brunswick, a peaceful and orderly demonstration was conducted by Chinese citizens to express their shock, anguish, and anger over the events that had just taken place in Beijing. They were joined by students, both foreign and Canadian, and by local citizens of several cultures and languages, in a community expression of sympathy for those who suffered and of outrage that this world is capable of such atrocities.

That demonstration in Fredericton cannot help but cause us to realize how truly fortunate we are in New Brunswick and in all of Canada to enjoy a system of democracy that is so stable, so secure, and truly so peaceful. It surely cannot help but cause us to reflect upon the values, the challenges, and the opportunities which we are privileged in this country to pursue in the future building of our own great nation.

After watching the horrors of China this weekend, surely we shall realize how blessed we are to have the chance to join with the many people of Canada, with the several world cultures that make up our population and the official languages of our population, in one magnificent, unified nation.

I am moved by the accord that exists in this House tonight condemning this unspeakable scene from a country so far away. I cannot help but be brought back close to home and express the wishes others have expressed here tonight, that such accord as we feel on this subject will move us on to other subjects closer to home, that we shall remember this evening and be moved to make this House more an instrument of progress and resolution, reconciliation and peace in building our own great nation.

It is a privilege, as the Member of Parliament for my constituency, to rise in the House and be able to express the sadness, the dismay, the anguish, and the anger of the citizens whom I represent over the atrocities that we have seen this past weekend and to express the wish that the unfolding of these events will in due course move us to greater goals and pursuit of the unification and strengthening of our own country.

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, as I rise in my place tonight to join in this emergency debate on the situation in China, I am aghast when I think of the terrible atrocity that has taken place.

Television and mass media bring these events much closer to us than ever before possible. Yet the horror we have seen on our TV sets is in reality magnified one hundred times for those who find themselves in the middle of it. I simply cannot understand why this has happened.

Television has brought catastrophes into our living rooms before: mass genocide in Jonestown, airline disasters, Bhopal, Ethiopia, but this one is different. Over the last month we have watched student calls for reform blossom into a full-fledged movement for democracy.

Now we see the Government's attempt to crush it, a brutal, sadistic, deliberate, unprovoked, unforgivable attack on its own citizens.

This carnage is like nothing we have witnessed since the Second World War. Indeed, it is the first time in the 40-year history of communist China that the Government has turned its guns on its own people. This is a state driven human slaughter. It has happened when global expectations for peace and freedom are at an all time high.

Yet, it is an avowal of failure. Because of its actions, the Chinese Government has not crushed the movement for democracy. Far from it. The blood of the student protesters and their civilian supporters will give impetus that will shake the Chinese Government to its very foundation.

There are many questions on our minds this evening. The first of these is about what the Government in China will do next. Another is about what we in the outside world can do. Certainly there is little encouragement from these Chinese officials, whereas yesterday we heard their promises that this was only the beginning, that more needed to be done to bring what they call dissidents in line. We must condemn the actions of the Chinese Government. We must offer our voice of condemnation to that of the world reaction.

If the Chinese Government could order this course of recent events, perhaps Canada should re-examine our expansion of trade with China. In 1988 there were $2.6 billion in exports from Canada to China, nearly double the $1.4 billion of the previous year. Chinese imports to Canada rose from $812 million to $955 million in 1988. China needs Canadian knowledge and technology to propel it into the 21st century. For most Canadians, respect for human rights is as important as technological advancement. We must demonstrate this belief through our trade policies.

In this trying time of world drama and tension, it is a blessing that with our country's wonderful system of democracy, our three political Parties chose and were able to conduct this emergency debate this evening. I personally feel so exasperated at being so far away, so much appalled and yet so unable to help. Many people globally have expressed their shock and horror. Now is our moment to do something with our emotions and turn them into actions. It is Canada's moment to help turn world-wide opinion into nation-wide action.

We have heard so many pleas from people in China that reporters must get this story out to the world. We now know that they have and it is our turn to get our message in the strongest possible terms to the people of China, to tell them—no, to show them—that our heart and our thoughts are with them.

In my own riding of Nepean, over 2,000 people are of Chinese ethnic origin. Over half that number consider the Chinese language their mother tongue. That 2,000 figure in my riding is exceeded only by one other Ottawa area riding and represents almost exactly one-quarter of the persons of Chinese origin in all Ottawa area ridings. To put that in perspective, one out of 100 national capital resident is of Chinese origin.

The immediate concern of all Canadians, particularly Chinese Canadians, is for the safety of their family and friends in China. Our concern, however, is also for the future, the future of China and the future of Hong Kong. I join my colleagues and all Canadians in calling on the Government to use any measure at its disposal, be it diplomatic or economic, to indicate clearly to the Chinese Government that we will not tolerate nor easily forget such abhorrent action.

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent): Mr. Speaker, it is with great sorrow that I rise to take part in the emergency debate on the events of the past weekend in China. The actions of the Peoples Liberation Army, in their crushing of the pro-democracy movement, can only be described as crimes against humanity.

The horrors that all Canadians witnessed on their television sets over the past couple of nights are completely repulsive to the human mind. Canada's reaction to these atrocities should be swift and conducive to the magnitude of the crime committed by the People's Republic of China against its own people.

We can trace the roots of the unrest to the initial reforms set out by Deng Xiaoping in the late seventies and the early eighties. The former premier of the Peoples Republic of China set out a brave agenda for the economy of China that would turn the isolationist tide that characterized that nation's foreign policy for the better part of 40 years.

Premier Deng seemed to infuse a breath of fresh air into the stagnating Chinese economy. Unfortunately, this political stalwart has outlived his welcome and has exercised a rational vengeance against his own people. We have learned from various media sources that it was upon his order that the Chinese military violently dispersed the youth demonstrations in Tiananmen Square.

I say that this is the most reprehensible action that a political leader can take against his own people and should not go without strong international retribution.

The demonstrations in Beijing are a result of the rising expectations precipitated by the economic reforms of the past 10 years. The Government of the People's Republic of China seemed to be opening up its doors to allow foreign investment and greater free market interaction so as to facilitate a more rapid pace of economic development.

As a result of the successes of this policy, the Chinese people demanded what seemed to be part of the natural progression towards freedom. They demanded that justice and equality be part of the Chinese communist system. They demanded that rules of fairness and equity be followed by the upper echelons of the Communist Party and that no one should profit from their position within the state system.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, thousands of Chinese gave their lives for these principles. As Canadians, we cannot afford to take for granted the principles of freedom enshrined in our Constitution. In fact, we should become very much aware of them as a result of these recent events.

The expectations of the students in Beijing were heightened by the political reforms taking place throughout the Communist world. Since the Soviet Union was preparing for its first democratic election in over 70 years, the Chinese people could not remain unaffected by this new attitude. Unfortunately for the Chinese, glasnost has not yet reached the People's Republic of China.

Instead of forging ahead and preparing for a more democratic system, the Chinese political elite decided it was better to protect their entrenched positions within the system than to secure the freedom and prosperity of the Chinese people.

Mr. Speaker, political changes in China have always come through the student activist wing. During the past few weeks, the whole world was able to witness that the massed students on Tienanmen Square were peaceful, only demanding their basic political rights and the principles of freedom. That is why the violence shown by the government was in no way justified.

Unfortunately, Deng Xiaoping and Li Peng preferred to use brute force instead of showing understanding and initiating some kind of compromise, faced with this movement for freedom and democracy.

[English]

All Canadians looked on with dismay as the statue erected in the square called the Goddess of Democracy was destroyed by a tank over the weekend. The image of armed vehicles roaring up and down the Avenue of Eternal Peace in the heart of Beijing could only make one think of the paradox that China is today.

On the other hand, we have the youth of China. The students at these universities represent the best and the brightest of the Chinese people. The youth of the country are being sacrificed for the political ambition of an ever ageing gerontocracy. For the first time since the Communists have taken over Mainland China, innocent civilians have been victims of their own Armed Forces. As a Canadian, I find this fact most reprehensible.

This is indeed a heinous crime. Estimates of the casualties in Beijing range from 500 to 3,000 people killed and up to 10,000 people injured. China has not seen such absolute bloodshed for decades. Instead of joining the trend toward global peace and understanding, the Chinese Government has shown its true colours and has demonstrated that it will not tolerate any challenge to its totalitarian political power. The fact that the people being shot were unarmed and being passive in their resistance heightens the revulsion at this deed.

Students, women and children being shot at random is simply unacceptable in today's world. The immediate evil tactics of the Chinese Government will not be forgotten by our world. Stories emanating from Beijing are indeed horrible. One unconfirmed incident, as reported by The Globe and Mail, told of 100 people linking arms to act as a human barricade against the oncoming tanks. Soldiers then opened fire against these unarmed civilians killing scores and injuring many others.

A second wave of people stepped over their fallen comrades to act as a second barrier against the armoured column. To everyone's horror they, too, were mowed down. News reports from Beijing indicated that many were killed or crushed by the tanks. Others reported that indiscriminate shooting by soldiers killed many innocent bystanders.

Through any examination of the facts the truth is undeniable. The political leadership of China must be held accountable for the crime it has committed.

As one of my Party's spokespersons for multiculturalism, along with my colleague the Hon. Member for Broadview—Greenwood (Mr. Mills), I am particularly concerned for the Chinese population here in Canada. The shock to many Canadians who still have family and friends in Beijing must be enormous. I hope the federal Government will co-operate to the fullest of its ability to alleviate any undue anxieties these people may feel. I also hope that the federal Government assists these people through whatever means possible to send necessary aid to their people in China who desperately need our support in their struggle for democracy and freedom at this time.

I am also concerned with respect to how events in China will affect Canada's refugee system. It is highly likely that the events of the past weekend will create a new tide of immigrants from Hong Kong who are ever more fearful of the colony's reunification with the mainland, as well as from the mainland as prospects for political reform grow fainter.

I hope that the federal Government treats these anticipated cases with great care and compassion. Canada should open its doors to those refugees from the turmoil in China who will obviously be affected as a result of their involvement in the student demonstrations.

[Translation]

The Canadian Government must consider the options open to it. As a country that cherishes the sacredness of human life, as well as the basic rights of freedom, we must make known our anger very clearly. The Canadian Government must first recall its representative to the People's Republic of China as a sign of disapproval. It should also consider the possibility of economic sanctions to express the horror felt by Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, Canada should use the opportunity provided by its seat on the United Nations Security Council to gain the support of other states for unanimous condemnation of the reprehensible acts of the Chinese Government. It is high time that this Government used Canada's good reputation as an involved country and passed a firm resolution on this subject.

[English]

China is an ancient land that has in its history endured much hardship and oppression. The events of the past weekend demonstrate that this unfortunate trend will continue and, according to some reports, expand to other cities.

I hope that the Government of the People's Republic of China reconsiders its decision to crush the peaceful demonstration. Until the time when this wrong can be corrected, I hope that the Canadian Government and the global community take the strongest measures possible to condemn this horrible act.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton Southwest): Mr. Speaker, just when we thought the world had taken a small tentative step out of Churchill's broad sunlit uplands, hope has turned to heartbreak, exultation to dejection.

How did it happen? What happens now? What should Canada do? What should Canadians and China do?

When I heard the news that the tanks had moved into Tiananmen Square I was in Drumheller to get a progress report on the Canada-China dinosaur project, a joint venture of our two countries that has as its objective a travelling exhibition which will, if all goes well, attract some 12 million visitors in the great cities of the world and show the palaeontological resources of our two countries which have yet that one other item in common.

A visiting palaeontologist who was in the Drumheller region on the weekend from the People's Republic of China had a son who was demonstrating in Tiananmen Square. He was full of anxiety as to his son's fate.

Since the Second World War there have been notable public uprisings of this kind. There was one in 1951 in East Germany, in Budapest in 1956, and Tibet in 1959. There was the one in the Prague in the spring in 1968. There was that wonderful moment in February 1986 in Manila when an 82 year old grandmother with the power of prayer and a flower stopped a tank which had rolled out of the barracks. In the words of Jaime Cardinal Sin: "People power defeated the weaponry of the oppressor".

Now, in 1989, we have the slaughter in Tiananmen Square. What has led to the uprising? What has led to the tyranny which put it down?

I am told that there is a dichotomy in Chinese society between the urban and the rural population. Life is more difficult in the cities. Prices are higher. There is crowding and tension which leads to a good deal of anxiety. There is, of course, the yearning for freedom, a yearning for political freedom and perhaps more economic freedom. It is a yearning which might to our eyes and our ears be somewhat naive and idealistic.

I had the opportunity this afternoon to speak with Professor Leslie Green, a distinguished international jurist, a Professor of International Law at the University of Alberta who just in the last seven days has returned from lecturing at Beijing University and at Harbin University in Heilongjang Province of northern China. While in Harbin, Professor Green was asked questions about human rights by the Chinese students. To quote the Professor directly:

> —their questions were excellent. Let me give you an example because I think it reflects the student mentality in the area.

The question posed to the professor was:

> In your country, Professor, if students wish to demonstrate, do they need Government permission?

Professor Green replied by pointing out:

> —in Canada you don't need government permission but the police have to approve your route, and if you deviate from the route they will push you back. They didn't like that answer, they had been led sort of by western reaction to assume that all students have to do is come out and everything in the garden will be lovely.

They also said to Professor Green:

> —in your country, if a visiting dignitary, a head of state comes, and wants to invite people to dinner, will the Government interfere if he invites a leading dissident?

You may remember, Mr. Speaker, that that is what happened with President Bush. Professor Green replied:

> —I don't think it would happen in Canada, because the Chief of Protocol of External Affairs would ask to see the guest list in advance, and I think that is correct. They didn't like that answer, either. So you can see the sort of temper they were in, but they asked their questions the way that wouldn't embarrass me.

Within the Chinese society and the Chinese culture students have traditionally had a special place. The scholar has had a special place, as the incubator of tomorrow's intelligentsia.

Another factor which I believe has led to this tension in Chinese society is something that perhaps no society is immune from. We see it on our own continent, that is to say a resentment of the life-style of a leadership elite.

• (2300)

We also must examine the role of the western media both in the encouragement of liberation movements and sometimes in their collapse. We look back to the Budapest situation of October of 1956 and there is no doubt that in that situation there were broadcasts by liberation radio organizations in Western Europe which led the Hungarian people to the belief that if only they threw off the Soviet oppressor the western nations would soon come to their rescue. Of course, that was not to be. The West chose not to act in Hungary in 1956.

So we examine in the age of television what role the western media, playing to a western audience but bringing the picture directly out of the Forbidden City and Tiananmen Square from Beijing into our own homes, may play in interacting with the attitudes of the students themselves.

Professor Green again had some comments to offer. He said:

> When marshal law was declared and the western press made so much of the non-action of the military, the presentation of flowers and the hugging and the sitting crosslegged without weaponry, would have been the sort of thing to lead the government to assume that this was the beginning of something more than just a student protest. I also had the feeling from what we could see and sense that it was dying out, that if the government would have sort of let it run, it would have subsided quietly. Again, the students were a little unreasonable. You couldn't really expect the government to agree > that the conversations between government and student leaders would be televised to the public.

Yet, paradoxically, the students told Professor Green, both in Beijing and Heilongjang, thank God for the BBC, because that wonderful public broadcasting organization which had established such a great reputation for reliability during the Second World War and the years since then was the main source of the students for active accounts of what was happening within their own country.

Are we going to have another Budapest, another night of darkness? I asked Professor Green that question this afternoon when we discussed the situation in Beijing. He said:

> I think to a certain extent, that is what has happened in China. And I am not blaming the western press. What I am saying is that with their reactions, with their comments rather than straight reporting, they may have encouraged the students to go a little further to make more extreme demands and to terrify the government into believing that what was starting as a pure passive resistant demonstration by youngsters, which could be disregarded and allowed to wear itself out, was becoming the beginning, the seeds of the civil war.

So we listened tonight with great concern and apprehension when the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) reported that minutes before he spoke reports had come from our embassy in Beijing that there were reports of some civil strife among military units in various parts of China.

Canada's interest in all of this is, first of all, human and humanitarian. I share the sentiments of other speakers tonight who are horrified by the unnecessary use of force that has taken place and the blatant disregard for human rights.

In Alberta and British Columbia over the last few years, as indeed in other parts of Canada, there has been a blooming of activity with China, joint ventures, delegations constantly going, the twinning of communities. My own City of Edmonton is twinned with Harbin and the Province of Alberta with Heilongjang.

The Middle Kingdom is truly the centre of gravity of the world's population. It began with the missionaries, as the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition pointed out tonight, and continued with Norman Bethune. Alvin Hamilton first sold wheat in China and we led many of the western democracies with the Trudeau Government recognition of the PRC in 1970 and leading its sponsorship for UN admission later on.

Canada has $36 million of overseas development assistance with China, $771 million worth of imports into Canada, and double that in exports to China. The Chinese have built our country, our railways, our service industries, and many are active in our professions and in Government. We now have a Lieutenant Governor of our western-most province who was born of Chinese parentage and who came as an immigrant to this country.

So what should Canada do in this situation? First of all, we endorse the resolution. Second, we must give comfort and reassurance to the families of Canadians in China. I am pleased at the rapid action of the Government in ordering a plane sent to Beijing for those who are unable to get out through civilian airlines.

We should offer a haven in Canada to those Chinese who seek it, be they students or refugees. I submit that finally, and I say this with great regret because of my deep interest in the Canada—China dinosaur project of the Ex Terra Foundation, we should withhold the hand of new co-operation from the regime responsible for the slaughter.

Mr. Larry Schneider (Regina—Wascana): Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to address this very serious matter, a matter that has left us and the world thunderstruck. As one who has experienced the peace and tranquillity of the Chinese people, a peace-loving people, I would like to urge some caution and restraint in the handling of this matter which, while I quite readily concede has affected lives, nothing we can say or do will reverse what has happened. What we can do and what we should do remains very important, not only to other lives, but as well could quite well prevent the rebirth of a cold war between Canada and the People's Republic of China. Our international diplomacy and our international diplomatic maturity is currently at test.

We have a peaceful and friendly existence with the Chinese people, it having lasted over a period of many years. That in itself is worth life. Our friendship is of value to them as is theirs to us.

The indiscriminate taking of life that has occurred is something that should be condemned and every human being, every father, mother, sister and brother, has a right to take issue with what has happened in Beijing. Perhaps at the beginning of our day tomorrow it would be appropriate to observe a moment's silence to acknowledge the sacrifice for peace and democracy that those young Chinese students gave.

We should make the point that we would hope that some day every government in this world would be democratic and would provide for an individual's right to speak, to be heard and understood. We make this claim as an attempt to strive toward a more perfect life and to do so driven by peaceful motivation. It is most unfortunate that a segment in this world has not complied with our basis for the attainment of individual human rights.

What exists is a breach in what appeared within a natural flow towards the attainment of individual status and accomplishment and the opportunity for people to feel better about themselves and to some day soon attain those rights and privileges which we as Canadians enjoy and perhaps sometimes take for granted.

I want to give some history as to my involvement with the People's Republic of China. It was at the urging of our local Chinese community that the City of Regina began the pursuit of establishing a twinning relationship with a city in the People's Republic of China. It was, as well, with the urging of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities that this move be encouraged and undertaken as a measure for, not only economic development for municipalities all across Canada, but as well for an opportunity to assist in providing the People's Republic of China with some of the municipal technologies that we had available that could provide them with a better life. As well, and perhaps even more importantly, there was the opportunity to establish a relationship, to build bridges, to make friends, to build trusts so that we might both mutually enjoy each other's peace. It was often theorised that the button to the bomb would not be pushed by your twin.

This pursuit was followed to the point where the City of Regina was twinned with the City of Jinan, Shandong Province in PRC. This relationship and trust was extended further, to the point where the City of Jinan agreed to exhibit at an industrial trade show to occur in Regina during the months of July and August at the Regina Buffalo Days Exhibition.

The trust that was required was enormous in that they are, without any guarantees, bringing a display that they hope to sell that is worth somewhere in the order of $150,000 to $200,000. This does not include the freight, set up, tear down and commitment required to bring this display to Canada. I now believe that this exhibition to be in jeopardy and I am therefore anxious that dialogue commence as quickly as possible.

This exhibition is the faith that the Chinese people have placed in us and is not something that we should take as a commitment given lightly. Therefore I would encourage that those of us who have comments about the situation do so in a manner that is constructive, compassionate, and which will not seal the doors to a renewed friendship that was so long in the making. Kindness and understanding can retain this friendship. Arrogance may lose it. Spontaneity may weaken it. Diplomacy may be the only tool we have to retain this relationship.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the support of the motion that conveys our concern with the loss of life that has occurred, our compassion and sympathy for the relatives of those who are the survivors, our support for the continuation of the establishment of human rights for those living in the People's Republic of China in a peaceful way, and our support and encouragement to those who participated in Tiananmen Square who did so with the resolve of the attainment of their pursuit in a peaceful manner.

We should be sending to the People's Republic of China our expression of continued interest and concern and hope that the Chinese Government seek a speedy truce to the civil conflict and continue in a fashion which encourages dialogue and rejects bullets. We should not be acting out of haste. There are no medals to be won by being first. We should act carefully, with determination, and with the objective to assist in the resolve of this turmoil facing the world's largest population.

We should offer our prayers to the effort and cause of those who lost their lives and to those who continue the pursuit. I entreat Members of Parliament to be diligent and understanding, to have the peaceful goals of the Chinese people as our goals as well, to cast aside aspirations for being on the front pages of our newspapers, to pursue that which can be done in the true spirit of Dr. Norman Bethune, and to seek no other gratification other than knowing that we can continue to be leaders in striving for world peace.

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak and condemn the inhuman acts perpetrated by the Chinese Government against her own people. I understand the aspirations of the Chinese people who protest for freedom. I cannot fathom the insanity of action by the Chinese authorities.

Indeed, Beijing's Tiananmen Square will henceforth stand in world history as a slaughterhouse for innocent civilians whose only aspiration is for the betterment of their own people, for the dignity of their families—the very foundation of freedom, justice and peace in the world.

The brutality which the military has used in quelling the forces of democracy is horrifying indeed. Civilians of all ages and from all walks of life are being slain. All are being sacrificed because they had the courage and determination to pursue the universal goal of freedom. The catastrophe in China affects all human beings irrespective of race, religion or political allegiance. In Canada, our collective indignation is symbolized by the unanimous consent and agreement of all political parties to debate this issue in the House of Commons tonight and I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your consent.

We must not only speak as enraged democratic people, but also in consciousness of the many Chinese Canadians who must feel particularly shocked by the events in Beijing. Chinese Canadians have participated fully in the economic and social growth of our country and have helped build some of our most important national institutions.

What is behind this sudden surge of support for democracy on the part of the students? This is a question that must be examined. Why suddenly are these students protesting against the political party that has ruled their lives all along?

Basically, China has given her citizens new economic freedom but has denied them political freedom. The current Chinese leadership believed that economic reform would be enough. They believed that the Chinese population could be seduced by the importation of consumer goods and would be apathetic to the demand for political freedom. The authorities were wrong.

The demonstrations by these students signalled to conservative Communist Party members that they were wrong. The demonstrators called for specific political reforms; for increased funding for education which would make it possible for more Chinese citizens to escape poverty; for the publication of the income and assets of top party leaders to provide public accountability and prevent corruption; for the support of liberal policies and greater democracy; for open dialogue between the students and government that would be open to the public and broadcasts uncensored on national television. Above all, they called for the freedom of the press, speech and assembly, values which all societies in the world strive for.

Instead of granting the desired pday olitical freedom, the Communist Party acted desperately to preserve their control at the expense of human lives. By setting the military on unarmed civilians, the Chinese leaders illustrated that they are barbaric, without a heart and who govern without consent. They obviously adhere to Mao's maxim that power grows from the barrel of a gun and ignore that true power emanates from the people.

This morning, Beijing Mayor Chen Xitong warned that the Government and the Communist Party had reached the end of their patience, and I quote: "If anyone continues their resistance, they will be severely punished."

It has also been reported that Deng has said, and again I quote: "Even if they're functioning out of ignorance, they are still participating and must be suppressed."

It is the people of China who have reached the end of their patience with Chinese leaders who are ignorant. They are ignorant of the needs of their citizens: the need for political freedom and for personal independence. Indeed, the very basic need to live and to be free to live.

The concerns that these events cause us are many. We are concerned about the lives of the protesters in China as well as the Canadian citizens whose lives may be in danger.

The brutal way in which the Chinese Government is reacting to the quest for political freedom also makes us realise that the political, social and ethical values for tolerance, of the need to protect human dignity, which we see as a given in Canada, have not yet spread to the leaders of China.

We must also be concerned about the future of the citizens of Hong Kong. The poor example set in Beijing in the past couple of days bodes ill for the people of Hong Kong after its integration with China in 1997.

We must also be concerned about the future of Chinese students currently in Canada. They must never suffer because they have expressed indignation about the way their government is treating Chinese citizens.

Government over-cautiousness as a response to the violence in China when human lives are involved is in itself a threat. Inaction on the part of other countries might encourage the Chinese Government to proceed with its use of force in the belief that it will not be punished on the international scene.

I therefore salute all freedom-loving governments and peoples who unite to condemn the inhuman acts of the Chinese authorities. Our Government must ask China to take note of the lessons of successful revolutions, of solidarity in Poland and of the victory of Corazon Aquino in the Philippines. The signals that we send to China now will have a far-reaching effect beyond China and might encourage democratic forces in other oppressed countries. We must apply diplomatic and economic pressure, including asking for an emergency Security Council session of the United Nations. This will send a clear message that the international community stands behind the students and workers, the men and women, the youth and the elderly in China who have sacrificed their lives to obtain a universal human value—freedom.

Now is not the time to worry about our trading relationship with China. The urgent priority is to take action to stop the bloodshed. Economic considerations must be subservient to consideration of human lives. We must provide moral support for the oppressed and suppressed people of China, and signal to the Chinese authorities that we condemn their actions. We must tell the Chinese leaders to react with tact and not tanks, to give goods and not guns.

I add my voice and those of my constituents in Winnipeg North to those in the House who have expressed deep indignation at the unspeakable action of the Chinese authorities. By our united action we demonstrate to the whole world and, more importantly, to the freedom-loving people of China that we Canadians are committed to freedom, justice, and peace for all peoples. We are behind them. We love and care for them. Indeed, we ask the Chinese Government as we demonstrate tonight in Parliament to give her people both life and liberty.

Mr. Dennis Mills (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to speak about the tragedy of this weekend's massacres in Tiananmen Square. The past months and years have been especially hopeful for the world. We have witnessed glasnost and perestroika, the hopeful talks for arms reduction, increased international trade and global integration, and a spirit of openness is being felt throughout the world as we address problems such as environmental degradation and the AIDS threat.

In the past week alone we watched students gather in Tiananmen Square to fight for democratic reforms. In another part of the world, the people of Poland have participated in their first semi-democratic election. People gathered in Montreal this weekend to talk openly and candidly about the AIDS threat.

After the malaise of the last years caused by arms escalation, increased cold war tensions, and the poverty of the Third World, our generation has played an important role around the world in returning hope to mankind and nowhere more so than in China where, in the last six weeks, students took it upon themselves to demand that democratic reforms follow the Government's economic reforms.

The student movement in Tiananmen Square owes its beginning to the strength and courage of a few young men and women who understood that democracy does not just happen. It is built, and the price of reform is hardship and self-sacrifice. They soon discovered that their strength and courage, camaraderie and character were contagious.

By Sunday morning Beijing time, Saturday morning our time, the dreams that began in the hearts of a few idealistic students had permeated men, women and children of all classes in Beijing society. People around the world watched as they fought in unison to prevent the Chinese army from removing them from Tiananmen Square. I watched on television as a woman on the street explained very matter of factly that all they had to do was explain to the armed soldiers moving in on trucks that they, the soldiers, were people first and that they should not attack the students. For a while, the world was transfixed awaiting reform somewhat anxiously. Perhaps we were too complacent. Perhaps we should have been encouraging the students and supporting them rather than waiting.

We as Canadians have a history of looking outward. One of our former Prime Ministers, a personal hero of mine, Mr. Lester Pearson, was awarded a Nobel Prize when he saw tensions grow in the Suez Canal region and he provided a release valve. Canadian peace-keeping troops have been awarded the Nobel Prize for their ongoing peace-keeping missions around the world. Those peace-keeping missions reflect the Canadian notion of duty to brother. We have a glorious history; at least we have had a glorious history. As has often been said in times of crises, the price of democracy is eternal vigilance. Perhaps it slipped our minds that the welfare and the future of the Chinese students was inextricably bound to our own, that we too had to stand up to be counted in this time of reform.

Perhaps our caution was justified and our reluctance to hope for too much was vindicated. The bloodshed of the last few days has set the world spinning. Yet despite ourselves, despite the distance between our two countries, somehow we were bound to the fate of the Chinese community at the other end of the earth. Because we are tied to the situation, it is now incumbent upon us to act unanimously in condemning the Chinese Government. We cannot shy away from the situation twice, not when lives have been lost. The hope that was dashed from the students who were demonstrating peacefully, and that hope which was dashed from ourselves, must be reclaimed. And it shall be, for hope springs eternal in the heart of man.

In order to achieve this end, in order that the lives of the young students were not lost in vain, it was imperative that a unilateral resolution be passed immediately in the House. I congratulate the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) for acting so promptly this evening. It is imperative that we commit ourselves right now, openly and honestly, to use any powers we may have to stop this violence.

Canada has a very special tie to China, and a very special relationship. China's increased international trade has benefited us greatly. Canadian exports to China nearly doubled in 1988, rising to $2.6 billion from $1.4 billion in 1987. Imports from China rose to $955 million in 1988 from $812 million the preceding year.

We have a history of relations with China stemming largely from early and continued Chinese immigration to this country. We owe our Chinese community a great deal, not the least of which was the construction of large tracts of the trans-Canadian railroad. At times, as we all know, we were less than honourable to the Chinese community. But we have grown as a nation and we have grown to respect one another. In my own riding of Broadview-Greenwood, the Chinese community is vibrant and dynamic and a tremendous asset. The Lee family in the housing community, Mary Shih looks after health care, King Wong works diligently with the seniors, Y.S. Pong works with the youth, the Lum family, Dennis Leung, the students of Riverdale Collegiate and Eastern Commerce, these people are all making contributions to our economy, our culture and to our way of life. The pain they are feeling is our pain just as the pain of the international student organizations is and that of those who believe in fundamental human rights.

Mr. Ross Reid (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, like other Members in this House that tonight, I rise with great sadness and frankly great anticipation. Much that is very important has been said here tonight. I intend to be brief, and like the Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps), perhaps a little personal. I too have had the opportunity to travel in China. I have travelled in China twice for extended periods of time. I stand here tonight, having viewed the events of the weekend, and having, as other Members have done, watched the footage tonight and heard the analysis. My greatest concern is for the people of China, but not just for their safety. The people of China are willing to make their own decisions and sacrifices. I am concerned for the spirit of the Chinese people, a people that has had a long and proud history, that has a great culture which has found its way through much of eastern Asia. But while that history and culture are well-known and strong, they are full of strife. It is a history that is full of conflict, foreign invasion and foreign imposed conflict that has led to much hardship, not the least of which has been in the last 80 years.

Despite that, they are a people who are dedicated to their families, who love and cherish their children, a happy people, a people that love fun, jokes, that love to play games and as my friend my Hamilton East said, a terribly inquisitive people, a people of great searching for knowledge, for education, a people who want nothing more than the ability to make their own decisions, to have discretion in their lives and to have the responsibility for those decisions. While there has been some economic reform in China, there has not been the political reform that is so essential to reinforce it. Sadly we in North America have had a picture painted of that great country that I am afraid is inaccurate.

Perhaps if I might be a bit pejorative, the American media has painted a picture of a country that has not come as far as our friends to the south would like perhaps, but it is a country that would like to come that far some day. I am particularly concerned when I think of the people of Shigatze in Tibet that had 20,000 monastaries and today has 34 as a result of the Cultural Revolution. There are people who walk hundreds of kilometres to observe their religious practices in a society that does not understand the Chinese, the regime that has been imposed upon them. The Chinese do not understand the lamism of the Tibetans. We have seen death and bloodshed.

My friend has talked about the students in Shanghai who walk up to any foreigner and say hello, how are you, where are you going, what are you doing, what is your name, are you alone, who are your friends. I think also of a very old man who came up to me in a park in Shanghai and said, you are going the wrong way. In a park on a sunny morning at 11 o'clock there is no wrong way but this man wanted to speak English. He had not spoken English for 20 years. He was taught English by a forestry company and he spent 15 years working for an agency relocating Jews who were in Shanghai after the second war. All he wanted to do was talk to someone from outside to learn more.

I spent four days on a boat going from Muhan to Chong King and for two of those days I was the only non-Chinese on the boat of 800 people. The curiosity of the people that came to watch this not terribly slim, blond, bearded, left-handed foreign devil use chop sticks—all there was was curiosity and an urge to know. They wanted to know why I did not wear two pairs of pants like everybody else wore against the cold. They wanted to know what they could about Canada, anything they could find out. I spoke very little Chinese and they spoke no English, but in two days there was a remarkable exchange of information.

The spirit of those people despite the state, and perhaps in spite of the state, wants to move ahead in terms of knowledge, in terms of understanding. They are an inventive people who know that with their own resources can make their lives better and better for their children. What we have seen in the last three or four days is a repression of that spirit. If that spirit is what is broken, then China, and I would say the world, would be the losers for it. If that spirit if not rekindled and supported by the Members of this House, the people of Canada, the people of the western world, we cannot expect them to come on their own. This motion and the sentiments of all Members of this House bring that moral support that is so essential.

In closing, I spoke a few moments ago with an American friend who taught for a year in Shanghai. At the end of the phone conversation, he said to me, the old leaders used their benchmark as having participated in the long march. The new leaders will comment that they were in Tiananmen Square.

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, because of the severity of the debate and the intenseness of the debate and the seriousness of the topic, many Members of Parliament from all three Parties want to take part in the debate. I think that you will find that we have unanimous agreement to extend the sitting to 1 a.m.

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, speaking for the government side, we give our unanimous consent to permit all Members who wish to speak until 1 a.m. the opportunity to do so.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Members have indicated, it is a very serious issue and there are a number of speakers for the New Democratic Party who want to express a number of concerns but I think we can accommodate the concerns we would like to raise between now and one o'clock. Therefore, we give our unanimous consent to extend the sitting to allow adequate participation in the debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It is agreed and so ordered.

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, like the previous speaker from Newfoundland, I think when you hear of a tragedy to another nation and you have had a chance to have a relationship with individuals and with that nation itself by visiting it and coming to know it, indeed you have a very special feeling when the nation stands in turmoil as China stands tonight.

I can remember only too well sitting and talking with students in China at their universities in larger groups and in smaller groups in their dormitories. They were the same kind of questions, the same kind of young people you would find at any university in Canada with the same hopes and aspirations for their nation. In fact perhaps in China this group is more special because they have only been learning about freedom and liberty in the sense that we know it since 1978. As I listened to them talk about freedom and try to understand what freedom and democracy meant, as naive as they may have been, their hope and their enthusiasm for freedom and democracy and opportunity was contagious. As they told us about this, we started to feel the great hope of the young people for their China. One could feel the power of that new found liberty alone beaming from the eyes of these new young warriors of the reform generation. These young people were only 10 years old in 1978 when things started to happen in China. Each year of their life has been a new opening, a new growth and a new sign of hope.

How my stomach turns tonight in revulsion as I think about how the bayonets of a ruthlessly led military have poked out the brightness of their eyes, the passions of their hearts and now treads on the spirit of China. It is a spirit that was beginning to feed the nation. It is a spirit that was beginning to industrialize the nation and provide new opportunities, a higher standard of living and greater opportunity for all Chinese. That spirit has been trampled.

After the shock, the horror, the anger and the pain, we stand in the House tonight to cry out in frustration with the world: "Let the carnage stop now". I wish I could believe it would. As we speak tonight, let us honour the memory of those who died. Let us honour not just those who died but those who are dying in hospitals throughout China tonight. Let us honour not just those who are dying tonight in China but those who will die in the next days.

This is not the end. It is the beginning in China, hopefully to a renewed China.

In tribute to these martyrs let us turn away from the anger and passion of the moment and look ahead toward a stable China that is at peace with itself and within the world community. Condemn, yes. Sanctions, yes. Review our policy and express our outrage. Let us do all of these things, but do not burn all our bridges. We will need those bridges to help rekindle the brightness of their eyes and the passion of their hearts and their spirit.

A stable, free prosperous China must be the goal of this Parliament and the result we are trying to project from this debate. If we are to be part of that, while we condemn those who have caused or condoned these atrocities, we must also buttress the bridges of those friends so many of us in this House and across the world have started to make inside China. They need our moral support and our strength now like they have never needed it before. We need a strong free China restored in order that peace and prosperity will prevail throughout the entire region.

Two weeks ago we welcomed Wan Li, the chairman of the National People's Congress. We talked with him and his group of Parliamentarians about reform, about hope for their nation.

Tonight, many of us, as members of the Canada–China Parliamentary Association, have been invited not to be here tonight but to be at the Chinese embassy with the ambassador and his staff to celebrate another in-road, the establishment of the Canada–China Parliamentary Association.

When he phoned me this morning in Vancouver and we talked about the reception tonight, I was quite angry. I had been up watching the news and I saw these things happening. My first reaction was to cancel the whole initiative, take a stand.

As I listened to the ambassador, I could hear the anger and sorrow in his voice at the tragedy of his nation. I could begin to understand the suffering that must be going on in the embassy among those who spend their lives trying to build bridges to us in Canada. I realized that we must not cancel, that we must postpone. We must postpone that so it can be one of the bridges on which we will start to rebuild, pending a renewed China moving toward freedom and prosperity.

Through its actions, the Government of China has learned and taught many hard lessons. It has demonstrated the fragility of trust and co-operation between itself and the world, and between ourselves. Out of respect, Canada has largely accepted China's counsel on the region, in world bodies or discussing international politics. We have even turned a blind eye occasionally because we have developed a trust in its view. But it has damaged that.

As I turn my blind eye a little bit toward the remote region of Tibet, I wonder if history may show us in default for benign apathy and neglect when we should have investigated and should have raised that issue more aggressively in the international forums of the world.

China is important not just to Canada, it is important to the world. It is more important than it was 10 years ago. It is a powerhouse of the world, economically, socially, and politically. It is in turmoil now.

That turmoil has left a large vacuum. There is the Chinese-Soviet initiative on Kampuchea. How will China exert controlling influence over the Khmer Rouge to prevent another blood bath in the killing fields of Kampuchea? Will the front line states of Vietnam and Thailand fill the vacuum or will ASEAN collectively pull together to prevent another civil war in Kampuchea?

Let Canada begin to prepare its part in a peace-keeping mechanism so that we will not sit here again for another night on a debate on Kampuchea. Instead, we will begin making the peace.

In 10 minutes it will be morning for us. It is 12:45 p.m. in China right now. It would be my hope that as we condemn China in this resolution, we would also unanimously pray for the safety and reform of the reform leadership, young and old, inside China, that China will know peace and prosperity, and will return to fulfil its rightful and full role in our international community.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I think this is probably one of the most emotional debates of my 10 years in this House.

We join unanimously in all parties to condemn the present leadership of China that has brought about such carnage and violence against the young students in Tiananmen Square in Beijing. These were students who were demonstrating peacefully, not to overthrow the Government but to demand a hearing, more freedom, and an end of corruption of high officials.

• (2350)

We pay tribute to these students tonight, many of whom died for their cause. The massacre of fellow citizens by the People's Army will never be forgotten in Chinese history or in the minds and consciences of all who uphold human rights.

We in the New Democratic Party support the position taken by Canada as outlined by the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) tonight. Canada has strongly protested the carnage and violence. It has taken steps to protect Canadian nationals in China. It has extended visas for Chinese students in Canada, has suspended certain bilateral events and it has supported the statement of the U.N. Secretary General calling for restraint.

In my remarks I want to briefly mention some of the information that I had, having consulted with leaders and friends in the Chinese Canadian community in order to bring their views to the House tonight. I might say that we learned about an hour ago that the People's Liberation Army now has moved into most of the major universities in China. Most Canadian Chinese people that I spoke to are stunned, are very concerned at the bloodshed and totally condemn the Government actions in China. They condemn the infringement of human rights, the taking of human life and the fear of security for persons who were involved in the demonstrations or those who supported the students. Canadians of Chinese origin oppose the violation and the slaughter. Many demand the resignation of the present leaders for their incompetence, their corruption and as one friend said: "their craziness".

My contacts in Vancouver stress the strong need for continued monitoring of violations of human rights. Some are preparing to donate blood as are persons in Hong Kong. Other aid is difficult to plan at this time until things stabilize. The Chinese Canadian National Council whom we contacted has met with External Affairs asking that Canada demand an emergency meeting of the U.N. Security Council, urging close monitoring with the withdrawal of diplomats and economic sanctions if this becomes necessary. I must say that I think many of us will agree with earlier statements in this House, however, that it is important not to isolate China and to do everything positive to support progressive change.

The Chinese Canadian National Council ask that Canada use every means possible to stop the massacre and to influence world opinion to return China's leadership to sanity.

I want to conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker, by urging Canadians not to allow the carnage and violence which we have seen on television, and which has been so intolerable and upsetting to all of us, the kind of repression that leaders in China have promoted, to prejudice us against China and all that has been achieved by this great country.

China's civilization began thousands of years ago and is the oldest civilization in the world. The People's Republic of China in the early days of Mao Tse-tung, and I was in China in 1973, learned how to feed 1.2 billion people who were starving. This was a miracle. They developed health services and universal child care services, and care for children and respect for the elderly that Canada might well emulate. It is tragic that Deng Xiaoping who introduced economic reforms and normalized foreign relations should be the one to condone the repression of rights and the brutal massacre of Chinese students. We must remember that there were other moderate leaders, like Zhao Ziyang, whom we hope will rise to lead again.

Canada and China have a special friendship. For me, I must say, it is symbolized in a memory that I have of a little girl whom I encountered by accident in 1973 when I was visiting a village on the outskirts of Shanghai. This little girl was sitting at a table of children playing teacher. I asked the interpreter what she was saying and I was told that she was saying: "You must serve the people like Dr. Norman Bethune."

Many of my constituents and friends in Vancouver East can trace their families back 12 generations in their villages in China. I join them in deep sorrow tonight which I know they must be feeling. China has always survived and overcome disasters in the past. The people of China are strong. I cannot help but feel that the spirit of the courageous students in Tiananmen Square will rise again and that a long march will commence to renew a peaceful revolution that will lead to human rights, justice and greater freedom in the great country of China.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In view of the fact that it is getting awfully close to 12 o'clock, I think that we should allow the pages to go home. I do not think that we require them any longer, as they will have to be here early in the morning to commence. Can I have agreement?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Agreed and so ordered.

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, we know a special kind of horror when we see those who would bring a message of refusal to acquiesce any longer in the leaden monotony of an oppressive regime; those who would bring a message of greater freedom and deeper humanity and a richer future; and those who would bring these things in the spirit of peace and non-violence and love, when we see them gunned down on the orders of evil and barbarous men, utterly corrupted by their contemptible thirst for unyielding power. I first knew this horror in 1970 when I saw on television, and heard on the radio and read in the newspapers of the gunning down of four students at Kent State University of Ohio, and the gunning down of six black students at Jackson State University in Mississippi. I hoped then never to see such hateful barbarism again.

However, I have seen it again, over the last 72 hours on a scale that dwarfs those crimes against its own citizens committed by the Nixon administration.

There are three stages, I think, in our response to this all but unimaginable tragedy. First, we cry out in horror at the staggering inhumanity of the events we see before us. Then we cry out in anguish with the pain and the fear that those events evoke. Then we cry out in rage that all basic tenets of justice and humanity should be so obscenely brushed aside, that mass murderers should stride through the squares and avenues of one of the world's great cities with cold, ruthless state sanctioned determination. Our responses across this country run the gamut.

I would like to read a couple of quotes that were reported in today's newspaper. Today's Edmonton Sun stated that more than 200 emotional Chinese students and their supporters staged a rally at the University of Alberta. The article states at that rally: "Medical student John Zhag said his wife—a doctor in Beijing—spoke over the telephone yesterday about her experience in Tiananmen Square.

• (2400)

"First they used clubs, then they used bayonets", said Zhag. "Some people stayed there, so the soldiers used machine guns."

The article continues:

As Zhag's wife took cover, a neighbour's 14-year-old daughter had her head shot off at the neck by what the wife believes was an explosive bullet—

And the Edmonton chapter of the Chinese Canadian National Council yesterday denounced the government of Deng Xiaoping and Premier Li Peng in telegrams to the United Nations, Ottawa, the Alberta government and the City of Edmonton, said chapter president Ken Kwan.

"We call upon three levels of Canadian government and the UN to take immediate action against the Chinese government," said Kwan.

The following is a quote from the Edmonton Journal:

Ken and Maylee Kwan quietly fastened banners to Edmonton's China Gate, then placed flowers at its base.

"Putting flowers here is our way of expressing our sorrow," explained Ken Kwan, a 34-year-old landed immigrant. "My heart ached, literally."

I received the following letter today. It is dated June 5. I received it this afternoon. It reads as follows:

Dear Ross:

I and my family are very worried about our friends in China. Over the past five years we have come to know well a number of Chinese students posted to the Alberta Research Council and to the University of Alberta. Because these men were not allowed to bring their families to Canada, they "adopted" my children as substitutes. In many ways they have become like uncles to my two little girls.

We fear that these men and their families, if they have not already been harmed, will become the victims of future purges. It would be a double tragedy if this were to happen. They have already lost a decade of their lives because of the "Cultural Revolution".

We want the Canadian government to do more to protest the slaughter of China's best and brightest. A simple statement of the Canadian Government's "shock" is not enough, in our opinion. At the very least we expect the Government of Canada to grant asylum to any Chinese students now in our country.

Yours sincerely,
Bob Brunelle, Becky, Robin, Elizabeth

Tonight in this Chamber and across the country, we join in pain, rage, resolution and hope. We hope fervently that the beleaguered Chinese people may find quickly an end to the violence and to the Government of these murderers who launched this violence. We hope for wisdom and justice on the part of the Canadian Government as it represents all of us in these dark hours and days.

We resolve to redouble our efforts in aid of those brave, terribly brave Chinese students and workers whose vision of a free, democratic socialist China still shines brightly through the darkness which seeks to envelop that unhappy land.

We will all progress. China will be free. However, why must the price be so painfully high?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, it is with a sense of obligation on behalf of the constituents who I have the honour to represent in this Chamber that I rise to join my colleagues from all sides of the House in a fine moment in this parliamentary democratic tradition to condemn the Government of China for its brutal actions in the last number of days. Not to be moved by the footage which we have seen on our television screens would be almost impossible and bordering on the inhuman.

Just over one hour ago on CBC's The National it was particularly moving to witness the courage of the one individual who challenged a tank and who, in the end, overcame. The savagery and butchery that we have seen and the death of innocent defenceless students was indeed deeply and profoundly moving. When life is snuffed out in the manner that we have seen it, no one man or woman, no matter how powerful, how rich or how strong can condone that type of brutal action. Yet when it happens to young people, young students who are standing up for principles that they and we in this country deeply believe in, I think the feeling runs deeper. We feel a deeper sense of loss, not only because their hope came to a premature end but perhaps, more important, because they will not be able to share in that day when China will finally see its way to re-establishing the dignity that belongs to each and every one of us by right and not by privilege as anointed by the state.

When I was watching the mobilization of troops and armed vehicles moving in on the people in the square, I was reminded of very similar scenes not too long ago in Manila when the same type of human uprising was taking place. People were mobilizing and standing up for freedom. The response of the Filipino regime was to mobilize the tanks, the guns and the artillery. In that particular experiment, the people won. The people silenced the machines. The people silenced the guns. "People power" won.

I remember being in Manila shortly thereafter and buying a T-shirt with the illustration of persons lying in front of a tank with a victory sign and stating: "People power rates". I had a hope that somehow in the Chinese context we would have the same ending, the same victory, that the people would be able to silence the tanks and the guns. However, unfortunately, that was not to be. The ending to this particular chapter was very different. It was very dark and sad. It is for that reason that this evening in this Chamber is so important.

We all know that we live many miles away from Beijing. To be precise we are 7,000 miles away. Yet it is as important for us to speak as we are in one united voice so that this ripple, hopefully, will join the other ripples around the globe. In the end we will have a tidal wave of public opinion which will render a measure on Chinese society, particularly on the Chinese Government.

On the one hand this public opinion will begin with a ripple this evening, started in the House of Commons in Ottawa, Ontario, Canada. It will find its course around the globe. It will send not only strength to the people who have had the courage and the conviction of their principles to stay the course but at the same time send a message to the Government of China that we will not tolerate or condone such action.

Indeed, our voice of frustration, our voice of disgust and of anger must be expressed loudly and boldly. In the face of such action it would be morally irresponsible for nations which call themselves progressive and civilized to turn a blind eye to developments on the face of the globe. If history has taught us one thing, it is to be vigilant and not simply to be silent in the face of conflict and controversy. If we condone it through silence, it is far easier for similar events to be repeated. Therefore, it is important not only to register a comment on what has happened but, hopefully, to avert what may happen in the days and weeks ahead, to inform the Chinese Government through this international understanding that there must be a better way.

While China lost many young sons and daughters, the civilized world as well, including Canada as a member of that international community, suffered yet another set-back. While the scenes are fresh in our minds and China has occupied and dominated public opinion in the last number of weeks, we have other tragedies around the globe every single day. We rise in our place one day and talk about the situation in Lebanon. We rise on another day and talk about the calamities in the Soviet Bloc countries. On another day, it is the question of refugees in Latin America. This time, unfortunately, our thoughts and our minds have been registered on China where Chinese citizens, students who mobilize peacefully as human beings, have been made enemies of their own state, strangers in their own home, refugees in their own backyard.

How many are there in the world? We talk today of perhaps up to 3,000 individuals who perished, 10,000 people injured, scores of others intimidated, pressured and tortured. Yet there are some 10 million to 15 million people in the world today who are on the move. Therefore, I hope that through this action in the House today, and I commend the Government and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) for showing expeditious leadership and a sense of grace, it is my deep hope that the outpouring of world opinion will move the Chinese government, not the army, to revisit its own conscience, to express its guilt, to admit and recognize that it erred, and to reinvest once again its trust and its confidence in its own people.

If it does that, then at the very least the lives that were quickly spent would not have been in vain. It is through those deaths that would have set in motion the ultimate catalyst, the ultimate force that will trigger a dynamic return to dignity and respect for human beings and the ability to express themselves in liberty and freedom. For this, I commend and congratulate all my colleagues for showing Parliament and Canadians that we can rise to the occasion and affect the life, changes and movements of the world around us.

Mrs. Diane Marleau (Sudbury): I must express today the horror that the people of my riding have expressed as they viewed the events of the last 48 hours in Tiananmen Square.

I must say that never before in the history of mankind has this kind of tragedy been brought so quickly into the homes of each and every one of us. Nowadays, we have almost instant telecommunications. We have out in China reporters who are every day, and this minute, risking their lives to bring us what is happening. We must make every effort to ensure that our media is ever free to react and to report courageously the events that are around us. We may not always like what we see, hear or read, but it is essential so that we may govern and shape our future accordingly.

I react today to this horror in many different ways. First, I react as a mother and as a parent. I have children of university age. As a parent, I know that after having nurtured them through childhood, taught them as much as I could, now they are in fact shaping their future, the future of our country. We may not as parents always agree with what our children do, but we must always respect them, for they are our future. To have them cut down so savagely is a horror that only someone who has lost a child could really understand. As such, I want to offer my condolences to all of the families of those who have been slain.

I react also as a woman. It perhaps strengthens my resolve as a parliamentarian that we do need more women in politics. I cannot help but believe that had there been women in power in China right now, we would not have had this senseless slaughter. Somehow I have to believe that women would never allow this kind of thing to happen. I believe that we value life very highly.

I react also as a parliamentarian. I am very proud what we in this House have accomplished today by joining together to condemn what is happening in China. We must impose some sanctions, but we must also be very wary not to harm those whom we seek to help. It is a great dilemma for any Government.

How anyone can condone the slaughter of their best and brightest is absolutely impossible to understand. But there is one thing in which I have great faith, and that is that somehow, some day, those who have not been slaughtered, those who have been spared, will rule China. So there is hope.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, world public opinion, it can be said, is horrified and saddened by what has happened in China. Exercising raw power, the state has established its authority, and it has done so through violence, killing, repression, and with the use of brute force. This is a hard blow to civilization. I would describe it as a step backward in the evolution of humanity.

Why does the conflict of ideas have to be resolved through the taking of lives, one inevitably must ask? How can the rulers in China assume, on behalf of the people they are supposed to represent, that they have the mandate to repress and steamroll the population when dialogue and peaceful change seem to be the processes leading eventually to a solution? I don't know the answer to those questions, but those are certainly questions that trouble me.

So we are involved tonight in this debate in which we are all converging to the same conclusions with the hope that this Government will find the wisdom and the strength and the foresight in the name of decency and in the name of the values we cherish, to make some difficult decision and perhaps suspend the pursuit of Canada's economic interest in China until the present regime is replaced by people who respect the lives of their own citizens. We have to call on the Government from this side of the chamber to put human interests before economic interests and even to go so far as to stop government-to-government aid. This is not so much because we believe in the effectiveness of sanctions, but because this is the only way we can express the frustration, shock and moral indignation of what we have seen and heard through the media over the last few days.

Canada evidently has a role to play in the world community. The United Nations definitely offers a forum to Canada to advance some of our ideas. Inevitably, thought goes to the forum of the United Nations as the place where matters of this kind ought to be resolved. We know that technically this matter cannot be raised there because the Government of China is part of the Security Council. Nevertheless, ways must be found to raise this matter at the United Nations because that is the only body where international indignation can converge, can find full expression and generate the pressure that maybe will have impact on the present ruler in Beijing.

Therefore, we have to find ways of registering, through this Parliament, a message which only parliamentarians can register and, with the help of parliamentarians in other jurisdictions, mount a campaign that will eventually cross the oceans and reach the sensitive nerves of the decision-makers in that great country of China.

We are all saddened by what has happened. Words are inadequate to express the emotions. Others have expressed them here tonight and others will speak, but it is clear that from all sides of this House the strong political will is emerging that something must be registered beyond the scope of speeches with the decision-makers of Beijing to bring them to their senses.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to join my voice to all Members of this House in denouncing and condemning the officials of the Chinese Government for their flagrant disregard of human life. In this emergency debate, we are addressing the turmoil in China, the danger it poses to Canadians in China and the consequences for Canada's relationship with that country.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I believe it is important to recall what the debate is about. It is on a motion which reads as follows:

> That this House, noting that:
>
> the relationship between Canada and the People's Republic of China is important to Canadians and has been of benefit to both countries over the past many years;
>
> authorities in the People's Republic of China have directed the armed forces of China to attack the unarmed civilian population of Beijing in contravention of all humane principles of conduct; > the students and citizens of Beijing were peacefully advocating democratic principles and human freedoms as is the fundamental right of all peoples of the world; and
> the authorities of China resorted to the use of excessive and indiscriminate armed force on a scale and scope which appalls all Canadians and has resulted in the tragic deaths of large numbers of innocent civilians; therefore unequivocally condemn this brutal use of force against the peaceful populace of Beijing and call upon the authorities of China to cease this senseless killing and immediately adopt a course of dialogue with the people of China.

[English]

We are outraged by the violent suppression of freedom of expression, violence against unarmed students resulting in the tragic loss of life through brutal force. This violence and bloodshed has shocked all democratic societies. We saw, in Tiananmen Square, unarmed students and civilians who formed human barricades through their sheer will to stand up for democracy in the face of incredible odds. We saw raw courage on the faces of students fighting for issues which we take so much for granted here at home: freedom of speech, freedom of assembly, freedom of the press. We saw the most uncivilized, brutal approach by the Government. We saw complete disregard of the necessary standards of human conduct in a civilized society. We have seen this horrendous story unfold before our eyes.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I feel that we should express our respect and appreciation to all members of the press and electronic media who are really responsible for bringing this painful experience of the students and indeed the Chinese people into our daily lives. We must thank them for their courage and their presence on the scene, and also for having stayed there to make us aware of this dramatic situation.

[English]

I believe that the members of that profession of journalism—all journalists, reporters, cameramen, audio-visual men—those brave crews who have brought this unfortunate, regrettable, unthinkable uprising to the world stage require our respect. They have shown us the face of youth thirsting for a more democratic society while maintaining pride in their country and their heritage, the vision of the tanks rolling down the Avenue of Eternal Peace, the destruction of that symbol of democracy referred to as the goddess of democracy. We have seen the tears and felt the horror, the anger, the hope and the hopelessness. All expression of human emotion have entered our homes on our screens because of these professionals. They have brought the unerring eye of the camera to bear witness to the horrors, to the killings, to the unfairness of this struggle.

These reporters have shown a commitment to their profession, to responsible reporting, to the courage of their convictions that have of course shown the kind of concern for human rights that is the only way the world could have seen and now express their total repugnance for these acts.

There have been genocides, atrocities, unconscionable aggression and mass loss of life around this world that have not been addressed, but left in silence because these visual reports, these scenes, were not available. The doors were closed. The media had no access and so no one spoke out. It was like a complicity of silence. Often that is not really so. It is just the absence of our fearless, competent journalists to report and so bring the pressure of world censure to bear.

We are grateful to all these very brave people for staying and for facing the risks in the name of democracy.

Canada's daily journalistic broadcast through Radio-Canada International in English and Chinese is vital and all the more so right now. Canada is a tempering, calming, sobering voice of influence and can bring solace to those mourning their loss because they know we are watching, listening and speaking out.

The killing must stop. These very sad scenes demonstrate that Chinese authorities have lost their moral authority. They have violated fundamental principles of human rights. The brutality of the dark side of human nature has unfolded before our eyes. We are outraged, shocked and revolted at these despicable actions. This tragedy has touched the hearts and homes of millions of Chinese.

• (0030)

We as Canadians have to review our stand and determine whether or not and when to take economic and political sanctions, if the situation does not change. We do not want to push the Chinese people back into isolation and a more closed society. We do not want to bring more suffering. However, this maintenance of our political and economic contact should be conditional upon a change, and a move for a peaceful and respectful solution to the needs of the Chinese people by a caring and open Chinese leadership.

[Translation]

I say to the anguished families in mourning, be comforted because in spite of the great sorrow you feel now, your loss will not be in vain; freedom will definitely triumph.

[English]

To all the families whose hearts and homes have been touched, know that the torch has been passed to you and that in the end democracy and freedom will survive. Be assured that these brave young lives which have been snuffed out will not have been in vain. You and they have given hope to millions of Chinese and to the citizens of China. They shall be remembered and their dreams will one day become a reality, for you and I know that repression cannot forever be subdued.

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Mr. Speaker, tonight Members of the House meet to debate in emergency session the significance of the events which have just taken place in Beijing, and to articulate the reaction of Canadians.

Why is this important? Why do we call this emergency session? Perhaps the first reason is the sheer size and importance of the Chinese population of over one billion. Another is the shocking number of casualties on the weekend. Last is the stark contrast between the ideals manifested by the peaceful demonstration in Tiananmen Square and the brutality and loss resulting from the armed intervention.

We in the House represent more than 300,000 Chinese- Canadians. We must record the common sense of sorrow and fear for the future felt not only by Chinese-Canadians but by all of us.

As we watch events unfold, we see human rights, often taken for granted by us, disregarded and violated by a misguided military force. Those rights include the right of peaceful assembly, and the right to life, liberty and security.

History shows us that few places in the world have escaped the pain and sorrow associated with growing democracy. Revolution has little regard for life, and usually renders life subordinate to power. Canada itself has known its Papineau Rebellion, the Mackenzie revolt in Upper Canada, and the Riel Rebellion. Each was in its own way a building block of our nation and spilled our blood. Most of the democratic freedom we have today has been bought and paid for with the blood of those who fought the battles of revolution and liberation, liberation from tyranny, oligarchy, and fascism.

However, what is perhaps so cruel about the blood of Tiananmen Square is that it has been shed at a time when men and women around the world could rejoice at progress in achieving democratic change without the bullets and the bayonets. Such changes can be seen to be taking place all around us, for example, in the Philippines, in Poland, and in the U.S.S.R. We pray that the people of Panama may yet attain the democratic change they seek without armed struggle. That is why we find the events of Saturday night so cruel.

We collectively must record our justifiable disgust and condemnation of those who ordered and carried out this brutality. We must hope that the blood that has been spilled and the life that has been lost will cause all citizens of the People's Republic of China, on all sides of the conflict, to pause before more bullets fly, pause before there is more retribution and bloodshed and seek out peaceful means of resolving the current political conflicts.

That is the only road that will truly fulfil the goals and justify the sacrifices made by so many in all the rebellions, revolutions, and wars that have preceded us.

I call upon the Government to tangibly manifest the indignation of Canadians at the violence in Beijing, and take steps to assist wherever it can in bringing about a peaceful resolution of this disturbing conflict.

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is 12.35 a.m. and this evening Members from all sides of the House rose to disapprove of the Government of China's action against its own people. I am no different. I am fortunate and happy to be a part of the House and part of this democracy, one of the best democracies in the world. It is a model democracy. I hope that some time Canadians have the opportunity to travel abroad in order to compare our democracy with what exists elsewhere.

Nothing can stop the people from voicing their concerns, nothing at all.

Over the years the Chinese people have become known as achievers. With close to one billion people living in China they have managed their own affairs peacefully and from time to time have been forced to voice their concerns. The Chinese revolution was a decision of the people at the time. Today, from what I am able to see and hear, the Chinese people have once again set their minds to achieving democracy.

On Sunday I attended the demonstration in front of the Chinese Embassy. I saw a group of students who exemplified a peaceful and non-confrontational approach. Those were students here in Canada who spoke out in support of their colleagues in China. I was somewhat disappointed when I saw the Government of China, and I have the opportunity to know the Ambassador here in Canada, use its own army to fight its own people. I was disappointed when I saw the armed forces moving in in order to crush a peaceful movement conducted by a group of peaceful students. That criminal act committed by the Chinese army cannot be tolerated. We in Canada have to exercise everything that we can in order to stop it.

Many people spoke about the possibility of economic sanctions. What we have to keep in mind is that if we take those actions we do not want to harm those who need our help the most. We do not want to harm the Chinese people. When the Canadian Government supplies assistance through our programs, we supply it to the people and not to the Government. We hope that our assistance goes to those who need it in those countries.

Because we are part of the United Nations and we occupy a very important role on the council, as the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has suggested, we should exercise our role and use all means possible for us in order to ensure the Chinese Government stops its action.

S. O. 52

I wish to commend the Hon. Secretary of State on his speech today in the House in response to questions from the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). I am very proud to be part of this society that not only speaks of democracy but exercises democracy.

I would like to commend the members of the Chinese community who were out in full force on Sunday in support of the Chinese people. I also want to congratulate members of my community who are anglophones, francophones, Italians, and people from all walks of life who marched on the embassy in order to voice their concerns in support of the Chinese people.

• (0040)

Mr. Jim Karygiannis (Scarborough—Agincourt): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak today with great sorrow. One has to have had first hand practice or knowledge of things that happened to share not only in speaking but in sorrow. In my early days, my parents fled a dictatorship from the country of my birth to come to my home country which is now Canada. Relatives of mine were lost in the Polytechnical Institute in Athens, Greece, in 1974 when the Government of the day decided to do what the Beijing Government did a couple of days ago. In 1974, the Government of the day in Greece overran peaceful students and killed hundreds of them.

I have a large community of Chinese people in my riding. My heart, thoughts and sorrows go out to them. At this particular time, as we speak, there is a vigil at some churches. I would like to take my turn here today along with my colleagues and Members of this House to condemn the happenings in Beijing. Canada must take a positive step in order to send a strong message to the Beijing Government. One has only to watch the news and speak to people to see unarmed students run over by tanks, cut down in cold blood. What did they have to protect themselves? Just their bodies. Thousands of people were killed and thousands wounded. The cameras were only able to show us part of the realization, perhaps only one-fifth or one-tenth of what happened. It is not over yet. As we speak at 12.45 on this debate, the killings still continue. I shudder at the thought that at this particular moment, a bullet is flying at a student and a student's body is just about to fall.

We have to commend the reporters who brought this to us. In 1974 when things like this were happening in my country of birth, it was 24 to 48 hours before we learned anything. But in this age of fast telecommunications, we are able to find out first hand. I join with the rest of my colleagues and condemn those killings in Beijing.

All Canadians of Chinese origin are watching with horror as the events unfold and friends and brothers are being killed. The price of democracy is a high one. In many countries the price of democracy has to be paid with thousands of lives. In this particular instance, we were told one time that 63 students were killed, at another time 2,600 were killed. I am wondering what the real number was. You can watch on television and you can see the smoke going up in Tiananmen Square. What were they burning? Were they burning people's bodies? How can anybody stand there and think that people were being burned, not even given a decent burial. I shudder.

The price of democracy is indeed a high one. The students are paying as we speak with their lives that price of democracy. I hope that the price of democracy not only in China, not only in Panama, South Africa and other parts of the world comes soon as we on globe of ours are able to stand up one day and say that we indeed have the best democracy. It will be a long road. A lot of sacrifices will have to be made. I guess history will take a look at Tiananmen Square and say that this was part of the sacrifice. How much longer, how many more mothers, how many more fathers have to sit there and shudder? I join my colleagues and I condemn what happened in Beijing.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 12.45 a.m., this House stands adjourned until later this day at 11 a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 12.45 a.m.

PETITIONS

VIA RAIL CUT-BACKS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and honour to present a petition pursuant to Standing Order 36. The petitioners from Kamloops, British Columbia, point out that the Government has failed to provide the necessary resources to VIA Rail to enable it to fulfil its mandate to provide first-class passenger rail service.

We heard the news today that we are going to experience significant reductions in passenger rail service in Canada, so this petition makes more sense than ever.

The petitioners call upon Parliament to maintain, improve and modernize VIA Rail service, particularly in those areas of the country where it can provide a rapid, economical, safe, convenient, environmentally sound and energy efficient alternative to other means of transportation.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I have a second petition which points out the concern that an increasing number of Canadians have with the changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act proposed by the Government.

The petitioners are asking that the Government come to its senses and not proceed with the legislation that would make those changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act and take money from the UI area for training. The petitioners feel that training ought to be funded from a more appropriate source.

• (1110)

VIA RAIL CUT-BACKS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a petition with regard to the Government's plans to cut back funding to VIA Rail and the fact that this is going to increase the danger in passenger transportation in this country. The announcements that have been made over the last couple of days indicate that they are going to be putting crews on for longer periods of time.

As a result of that, it does increase the danger and the threat to passenger safety in our country. Therefore, the people who have signed this petition humbly pray and call upon Parliament to maintain, improve and modernize VIA Rail service in those areas of the country where it can provide a more rapid, economical, safe, convenient, environmentally sound and energy efficient alternative to other means of transportation.

REMOVAL OF OATS FROM JURISDICTION OF CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a duly certified petition sent to me by residents of southwestern Saskatchewan who note that the federal Government's decision to remove oats from the marketing jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board will severely reduce the income of oat producers and place them at the mercy of grain speculators.

They note that this decision will further erode the powers of the Canadian Wheat Board. They call upon the Government to place oats back under the Canadian Wheat Board and as well to include canola under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Wheat Board.

VIA RAIL CUT-BACKS

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, I too have the honour and duty to present a petition to the House today regarding VIA Rail. The petitioners who come from different parts of the country urge the Government, in light of news reports yesterday about threats to the funding of VIA Rail, to provide for a triple-E VIA Rail; economical, efficient and reliable—

Mr. Lewis: Triple-E with an R? To err is human.

Mr. Gardiner: —so that we can have a VIA Rail service in this country that is effective as well.

VIA RAIL SERVICE

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to present a petition today signed by a number of residents, principally of Ontario and Quebec, which requests that this Parliament maintain, improve, and modernize VIA Rail service in those areas of the country where it can provide a more rapid, economical, safe, convenient, environmentally sound and energy efficient alternative to other means of transportation. There is much wisdom in this petition, Mr. Speaker, and I commend it to the attention of the House.

Mr. Gardiner: Hear, hear!

INGREDIENT LABELLING IN TAKE-OUT RESTAURANTS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I have the duty to table a petition in the name of several constituents to the effect that many restaurants do not place a complete list of take-out fast food ingredients on food packaging and do not provide easy customer access to the same information as eat-in restaurants.

The petition goes on to ask that the House ensure legislation and regulations be enacted to require ingredient labelling of take-out and fast foods, with public access in all restaurants to a complete list of food ingredients for sale in restaurant establishments. There are people who may be allergic to food items who would like to have that information made public.

VIA RAIL SERVICE

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 36 with a petition again on the subject of VIA Rail, signed by a number of residents of Sarnia, London and Toronto, Ontario. The petition has been approved as being proper by the Clerk of Petitions.

The petition calls upon Parliament to maintain, improve and modernize VIA Rail service in those areas of the country where it can provide a more rapid, economical, safe, convenient, environmentally sound and energy efficient alternative to other means of transportation. I hope the Government will listen, Mr. Speaker.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 37 and 65.

[Text]

MOBILE MX NUCLEAR MISSILE SYSTEM

Question No. 37—Mr. Volpe:

Has the Government sought public assurances from the government of the United States that a mobile MX nuclear missile system will not be based in an area near the Canada-United States border where it could utilize its proximity with Canada to avoid nuclear attack by moving near to the border, or even across it and, if not, is it the intention of the government to take such action before the United States government decides whether to go ahead with this MX mobile missile system?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The new U.S. Secretary of Defence, Dick Cheney, has proposed that the MX missiles currently based in silos in Wyoming could be placed on special train cars so that they can be shunted along the United States commercial rail network. This proposal is not new and is just one of several still being examined by the U.S. military.

There are no current requests to have the trains enter Canada. The USA is aware that our policies prevent them entering or transitting Canada with nuclear weapons without the prior approval of the Government. The USA has a large number of railway lines to meet any of their requirements and although Canadian security relies in part on the USA nuclear deterrent, they have no need to use Canadian territory. It is well known that in times of rising conflict, the trains would be constantly on the move to make detection more difficult. To ensure these weapons act as a deterrent, it is clear that they would not be bunched on the Canada/USA border or any other central point that could make their detection easier.

There are mechanisms in place for ongoing consultations on issues of national and joint concern with respect to the defence of North America.

TAX EVASION

Question No. 65—Ms. McLaughlin:

1. For each year since 1984, did the government estimated the tax revenue lost because of (a) personal (b) corporate tax evasion and, if so, what was it?

2. For each year since 1984, did the government estimated the number of (a) personal (b) corporate income tax evasion cases and, if so (i) what was it (ii) what was the average amount of evaded income tax?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): 1. Attempts have been made both within this Department and outside to measure the extent of the "underground economy". However, these estimates vary significantly and none are confined to "tax evasion".

2. The number of individual and corporate tax evasion cases prosecuted through the criminal courts pursuant to Section 239 of the Income Tax Act is as follows:

	Individuals	Corporations	Total Federal Income Tax Evaded (Million)
1985	146	49	$13.7
1986	114	53	4.8
1987	141	44	5.3
1988	94	34	5.3

[English]

Mr. Lewis: I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I want to bring to the attention of the Government House Leader a question that has been on the Order Paper since April 6, asking for certain information of the Government.

Again, we seem to wait until the House reminds the Government or those officials in charge of preparing answers before we receive an answer. This question on April 6 in fact became dated on May 21. Today is June 6, Mr. Speaker, and I know you have reminded the people in charge of preparing answers in the past to answer them.

It is a very basic question, asking how much money we give per year for leases to the Campeau Corporation. One should be able to find that out with a phone call to Tory headquarters, of all places.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, as a former member of the Public Accounts Committee, which studied these matters from 1980 to 1984, I must tell my hon. friend that that is not where one would go looking for that information. However, I would say that I will look into the matter and get back to the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

EXCISE TAX ACT AND THE EXCISE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Gilles Loiselle (Minister of State (Finance)) moved that Bill C-20, an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker, this Bill implements the changes announced in the Budget of April 27, 1989, concerning excise taxes and duties on tobacco products and gasoline, and increases in sales tax rates pending the implementation of the goods and services tax. These measures reflect our commitment to deal with the problem of our substantial and increasing national debt. Meeting this challenge and meeting it successfully is a responsibility that we have to present and future generations of Canadians.

During the past four years, we have acted to restrain public spending. We have closed tax loopholes for business and high-income individuals. These measures have reduced the annual deficit and slowed the growth of the debt. Additional measures are needed, however, to ensure that the national debt does not jeopardize our ability to maintain programs valued by Canadians and to sustain the economic growth and high standard of living they expect to enjoy.

The measures taken in this Budget to control the debt affect government spending and revenues. They were carefully chosen to ensure a balanced approach that takes regional situations into account and that imposes the heaviest burden on those who are most able to bear it. The revenue measures are also distributed in a balanced way among several categories, including the federal sales tax and excise duties and taxes.

The federal sales tax is also the centrepiece of another key element of our strategy to strengthen Canada's economy and preserve essential programs. The present sales tax will be replaced by the new goods and services tax on January 1, 1991. The new tax will provide a more stable foundation for dealing with the public debt problem. It will improve the overall fairness of the tax system. It will make federal sales taxes more visible to consumers. Finally, and most important, it will result in significant gains for economic production in all sectors of the economy and all regions of Canada.

[English]

One of the key elements of the Bill we are considering today is an across-the-board increase in the existing federal sales tax rates in advance of federal sales tax reform.

Some Hon. Members may question why the Government would raise the tax rates under the current federal sales tax system at this time, when it is widely recognized as being seriously flawed. These rate increases provide a revenue bridge to the new goods and services tax. They will provide much needed revenue to address the deficit and debt problems pending sales tax reform, while avoiding more substantial increases in other taxes, in particular personal income tax. Given the major deficiencies of the manufacturer's sales tax, it is only possible to use the existing system to help meet the Government's fiscal needs now, because it will be replaced in a little over 18 months. The relatively short time that the system will remain in place will minimize the incentive for business to engage in the tax planning and avoidance activities that have helped undermine it.

• (1120)

Moreover, the problems associated with the current system will not be seriously compounded by the rate increases because of the brief period during which the rate increases will apply.

The rate increases include a 1.5 per cent increase in the general sales tax rate from 12 per cent to 13.5 per cent, effective June 1, 1989. The other sales tax rates will all be increased by 1 per cent to 19 per cent for alcohol and tobacco products, effective April 28, 1989; 11 per cent for telecommunication and telecommunication programming services, effective June 1, 1989; and to 9 per cent for construction materials, effective January 1, 1990. Together, these measures will contribute about $1 billion in 1989 and $2 billion in 1990 toward reducing the deficit.

It is the policy of this Government to provide assistance through the tax system to help those in need. In the February, 1986 Budget, the Government introduced the refundable sales tax credit to benefit low-income Canadians. With the implementation of the goods and services tax, we will be introducing a new sales tax credit which will involve a substantial expansion in current benefits. The new credit will ensure that families earning less than $30,000 per year will be better off as a result of sales tax reform.

In the interim, the existing sales tax credit is being doubled and the threshold increased in order to more than compensate recipients of the full credit for the sales tax rate increases. The budget Bill to implement changes in the Income Tax Act will increase the refundable sales tax credit for adults from $70 to $100 in 1989, and to $140 in 1990. For children under age 19, the credit will be increased from $35 to $50 in 1989, and to $70 in 1990. The income threshold for credit will be increased from $16,000 to $18,000 in 1990. Therefore, a two parent family with two children, and an income of up to $18,000 will receive a maximum credit of $420 in 1990.

[Translation]

To come back to the Bill that we are considering today, I would like to draw your attention to the changes implementing increased excise duties and taxes for tobacco products.

Under the Bill, excise duties on cigarettes, together with the federal sales tax, will increase the federal revenue from cigarettes by $4 a carton. The excise duty and tax on cigars increases proportionally. These measures should generate some $535 million in additional revenue in 1989 and $770 million in 1990.

The Bill provides two increases in excise duty and tax for manufactured tobacco. The first amounts to $4 per 200 grams and took effect on April 28, 1989. The second will add $1.30 per 200 grams to the sales and excise taxes and the excise duty and will take effect on October 1, 1989.

As well as adding revenue to lighten the debt burden, the increased duty and taxes on manufactured tobacco will bring the rates on this product closer to those for cigarettes. The wide gap between them encourages consumption and development of manufactured tobacco products such as fine-cut tobacco which make it possible to avoid paying the higher duties and taxes on cigarettes. Thus, federal government revenues decreased as regular cigarette smokers turned to other tobacco products.

Mr. Speaker, these changes to tobacco taxes, in addition to providing the government with revenue it greatly needs, are part of its overall strategy to reduce tobacco use in Canada.

[English]

The Bill also implements increases in the excise taxes on gasoline and aviation gasoline. With these increases, excise taxes will rise by one cent per litre as of April 28, 1989, and by an additional one cent on January 1, 1990, to generate $250 million in 1989 and $660 million in 1990.

As part of the changes in taxes on motive fuels, the excise tax on leaded gasoline is increased an additional one cent per litre, effective April 28, 1989. This measure will help to accelerate the decline in the use of leaded fuel as we adjust to the phasing out of lead in gasoline by December 1, 1990.

Under the goods and services tax to be implemented on January 1, 1991, all commercial users will be entitled to recover federal sales tax on motor vehicle fuels used for business purposes. To provide a bridge to the new system, the sales tax portion of the fuel tax rebate program for farmers, fishermen and other primary producers, which is scheduled to expire on December 31, 1989, will be extended for one additional year. For the period after December 31, 1989, until the goods and services tax commences on January 1, 1991, farmers will continue to be eligible for a sales tax rebate of 3.5 cents per litre while other primary producers will receive sales tax rebates of three cents per litre on motive fuels used for off-highway production purposes.

Finally, this Bill contains a number of technical amendments. New marking requirements are being introduced in the Excise Act to address concerns that cigarettes are being imported illegally without payment of federal taxes and duties. Also, certain archaic provisions regarding the burden of proof in offences under the Excise Act are being amended. In the Excise Tax Act, the point of imposition of the tax on laundry detergent is being shifted from the manufacturer's level to the wholesale trade level to correct anomalies in the application of sales tax to these products.

In conclusion, I want to emphasize that this Bill is an important part of the responsive and responsible action plan to deal with the public debt, as set out in the Budget. It recognizes the need to build on our progress to date and to take firm action at this time to ensure that we can pass on to the next generation the ability to protect and strengthen the fundamental values that are so much a part of life in Canada.

Therefore, I urge the Hon. Members to give their full support to this Bill and to ensure that it is approved by this House as quickly as possible.

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, the Minister, in introducing his Bill this morning, has placed it squarely in the context of the Budget and the Budget's objectives in attempting to reduce the deficit costs which have mounted steadily since the Government took office almost five years ago.

The impact of continuing high rates of deficit spending and the demands of interest obligations on the debt has been such that the Governments attempting to counter those increases by major tax increases, less by government expenditure control and more by tax increases.

• (1130)

Here we have today the first tangible evidence of the Government's intention to move against its deficit by taxing Canadians in what is a regressive way. The Minister knows full well that the sales tax increase that he has proposed today, from 12 per cent to 13.5 per cent, which will be in place as he pointed out for the next year and a half, is a regressive tax. It impacts more on the lower income Canadians than it does on the more affluent. It also continues a tax that by the Government's own recognition is what the Minister of Finance has called "a silent killer of jobs".

The manufacturers' sales tax is an outdated form of taxation. We have had it in place since 1924 when we were the first country to introduce such a tax. Today, we are the only country still with a manufacturers' sales tax. The Government is now increasing that same sales tax, which it recognizes is regressive and which it recognizes is an outmoded form of taxation, from 12 per cent to 13.5 per cent.

It is a sales tax which is largely hidden from consumers. It is concealed in the price of goods. It may well be that some Canadians will not be aware immediately of the impact of this regressive tax measure intended to reduce the size of the Government's deficit.

The manufacturers' sales tax, by the Government's own recognition, has another major problem. It impacts much more severely on Canadian exporters, Canadians attempting to export abroad, than it does on importers. Yet, the Government has gone ahead and increased that adverse impact even more than it has in the past.

The manufacturers' sales tax, in that sense and indeed in a variety of ways, distorts the production and distribution decisions of corporations. Most corporations, with any imagination, attempt to find ways of transferring the impact of the tax from manufacturing to the non-taxable part of their activities, that is, marketing and distribution. The result is a further distortion in the impact of the manufacturers' sales tax.

I would submit that in addition the manufacturers' sales tax which the Government is now increasing—not reducing, not eliminating, not replacing by any other tax, but rather seeking to increase it—is complicated in its administration. We have several levels of sales taxes in Canada, such as the manufacturers' sales tax and the excise taxes, which the Government is again increasing today. The effective tax rates for a number of items vary substantially, again causing distortions in our sales tax system.

I could go on for some time about the inadequacies and the distortions of the manufacturers' sales tax. I am sure the Minister will want to reply, if he has the occasion to do so, that the goods and services tax is intended to eliminate some of those problems.

However, the fact remains that today the Government is increasing from 12 per cent to 13.5 per cent that same tax which it regards as unfair, inequitable, and distorting. We are expected today to accept that increase as a sensible policy in the total government effort to reduce its deficit.

I would say to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the Minister, that this piece of legislation today confirms what Canadians have recognized, that is, that the Government of Canada, in attempting to reduce its deficit very late in the economic cycle, long after it should have taken corrective action if indeed it were serious about reducing its deficit, is doing so in a way that is regressive and impacts more on lower income Canadians than on the more affluent.

I said a moment ago that the Government has left it late in the economic cycle to take any corrective action with regard to the deficit. It is well recognized that the Government took no action from 1986, for whatever reasons; we can all speculate. My own view is that they were directly related to its standing in the public opinion polls at the time. From 1986 to 1988, it took no effective action on reducing the deficit.

Now, at this late stage in the economic cycle when a downturn is expected, we see the Government introducing a variety of measures in the name of deficit reduction, including an increase in the sales tax which may well have the impact—and this is a point I shall return to in a moment—of making the expected downturn even more severe than had hitherto been anticipated.

It is a traditional role of government that in prosperous times such as Canada has enjoyed for the last six or seven years, a Government acts to reduce its intervention in the economy and its spending and to put funds aside for what inevitably will be less prosperous times. This Government failed to do so. This Government has moved at the end of the economic cycle in a way that, as many independent economic forecasters and experts would have us understand, is more likely to create hardship in Canada than in fact rectify this Government's deficit problem.

I want to turn for a moment to the impact of this tax on the Canadian people. I have said that the increase in the manufacturers' sales tax is regressive, despite the fact that the Government had initially and indeed throughout its recent mandate taken the position that expenditure control was the primary focus of its fiscal management; not tax increases but expenditure control would be its chosen tool for deficit reduction.

What we have in this Budget is a program of tax increases. Far more important in this Budget is the tax increase element rather than expenditure control. The result is that we have a Government that has not lived up to its promises of four or five years ago. We have not seen the Government carry out its commitment to ensure that taxes were reduced and not increased.

The net effect of the Government's actions in this Budget is to increase the tax burden on all Canadians further. In the case of sales taxes, taxes directly on the products which Canadians consume, we have had an increase in the sales tax rate from 9 per cent to 12 per cent during the previous mandate of this Government. That sales tax has now been increased again. Today the Minister is introducing a Bill increasing that same sales tax from 12 per cent to 13.5 per cent. Thatof course must be added to a 10 per cent tax on long distance telephone calls, which has now become 11 per cent. There was already a 5-cent per litre increase in the gasoline tax, which has now become 7 cents per litre. For those of us who are affluent enough to travel by air, there has been an increase in air transport taxes without, it appears, any additional safety in the air.

The central question in any tax increase is whether they are fair or spread equitably among taxpayers. The Minister, the House, and Canadians know that sales taxes, whatever the credits the Government may wish to bring forward, are by their very nature inequitable. A sales tax is regressive. It will hurt lower income Canadians more than it will hurt more affluent Canadians. It is the opposite of a progressive income tax. A sales tax impacts inequitably. It impacts more on lower income Canadians.

The record of this Government in increasing inequitable and regressive taxes is deplorable. I could cite a number of instances. The National Council of Welfare, for example, recently demonstrated in a study that during the first four years of this Government's mandate, the personal income taxes of a working family went up by 60 per cent, those of a middle income family went up by 17 per cent, while those of an upper income family went down by 6 per cent. Those are personal income taxes, and of course it is a result of this Government's determination to deindex income tax, which it has done in previous Budgets and again in this one, and to impose a 3 per cent income surtax in the past which in this Budget now becomes 5 per cent.

The real increases in taxes during the past four years have not only been in income tax, but it has been in sales taxes. For example, the increase in the manufacturer's sales tax in the past from 9 per cent to 12 per cent. The combination of higher income taxes and higher sales taxes in the recent Budget means that an average income family will now pay $700 more in taxes annually. This means in turn that the average Canadian family is now paying $2,000 more in taxes since the Conservative Government was first elected in 1984.

With that piling of tax upon tax, of income tax upon income tax through the surtax, through the deindexing of income taxes, and through the increase in the manufacturer's sales tax and excise taxes today, no wonder we have heard nothing more from the Minister of Finance about his 1984 election promise not to raise taxes. Here is another example of a Conservative Government that makes promises before a campaign, the 1984 promise to reduce taxes, but have had nothing but increases in taxes for the last five years.

Prior to the recent election, we had a series of promises totalling some $17 billion about the great measures the Government would undertake. The day after the election, however, the Government found surprisingly that its cupboard was bare and that it had to increase taxes in order to meet the demands of interest payments on its debt, a debt that has risen from approximately $170 billion when this Government took office to $350 billion today.

In this Bill we are talking about increases in the sales taxes and excise taxes. The $2 billion to be generated by the federal sales tax compares to total income tax increases of less than $1 billion. Quite obviously, this means that the Government is relying more on a regressive than a progressive form of taxation. A greater reliance by the Government on sales taxes rather than on income taxes to generate additional revenue means that the burden of taxation is being moved even more from high income earners to lower income Canadians who pay a greater proportion of their incomes in sales taxes.

Let us look at that matter for one moment. I want to draw the attention of the House and indeed of all Canadians to the fact that we as a result of a combination of income tax and sales taxes, taxes on families with children are being increased more than taxes on families without children. For a one income family, taxes on an average family with two children have gone up more than $900, compared to an average one income earner family without children. We see here a greater impact on Canadians families with children than those without.

The budget measures the Minister brought forward today, combined with other aspects of the Budget, means that total taxes on an average single parent family with two children have been increased over $250 since 1984. For a family with two children where both parents work, the total taxes paid by a family at the poverty line have almost tripled since this Government took office.

In contrast, total taxes paid by a family with two children where both parents work and earn more than $100,000 have increased only 11 per cent since 1984. In other words, the taxes of a family near the poverty line, with two children, and both parents working, have gone up 176 per cent, whereas the taxes of a comparable family with $100,000 or more of income have gone up only 11 per cent. If that is progressive and fair taxation, it is not my definition.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacLaren: When the budget measures are fully implemented,as I gather is the intention of the Government, the additional tax burden borne by Canadians will be increased by an average of $382 per family—$151 in personal taxes and $231 in the type of consumption tax which the Minister is bringing forward today. Of the 10 million families in Canada, 8.3 million will see their after tax income drop as a result of this Budget. Of the 3.6 million Canadian families whose income is less than $25,000, over half will see their after tax incomes drop as a result of this Budget.

The Budget impacts most severely on two parent families with children. I have already pointed out the impact on them. The sales taxes which the Minister has introduced today will have an especially adverse impact on families, an intent that this Government denies but has nevertheless given constant expression to during its previous mandate and during the course of this mandate.

I want to turn to the question of regional considerations of a federal sales tax change. The Minister will recognize that the regions of Canada, those distant from the principal areas of production and distribution in our country, incur higher taxes and pay a higher part of a sales tax than those Canadians living in what is called central Canada, near or at the places of manufacture and production.

The costs of shipping goods to the more remote regions is embedded in the final price of those goods. Therefore, when the Minister imposes higher transport costs as a result of the increases in fuel taxes, the basic price of goods, and hence the sales tax paid on them, will be higher in remote regions. People living in more remote regions will pay more sales tax than those living in central Canada. The tax credits available, which the Minister extolled in his speech this morning, make no allowance for regional considerations. The adverse impact on Canadians living in the regions are greater than on those in central Canada. There is no offset, no credit, no effort on the part of this Government to compensate those in the regions for the fact that they must pay higher taxes.

This is from the same Government that in a variety of ways has imposed a severe burden on the regions. A greater burden as a result of this Budget has been imposed on the regions than has been imposed on what has been called central Canada. I say that because we are all conscious of the fact that the reduction by this Government of transfer payments to the provinces, the way in which it introduced the tax-back of old age pensions and of family allowances, has the indirect result of reducing further the tax revenues of the provinces.

The closing of military bases, the changes in the way in which UIC will be provided for those in high unemployment areas combine to have a major impact on the regions. Today we have yet another piece of legislation, namely, the increase in the excise and sales taxes, which will only exacerbate the already severe impact of this Budget on the regions.

I want to turn for a moment to the question of the inflationary impact of sales taxes. The Minister knows, the House knows and the Canadian people know that sales taxes are by their very nature not only regressive but inflationary. They increase the cost of goods and services. Increased prices drive up inflation. They are an expression of inflation within our country. What we have then today is a situation which as a result of this Budget will make yet more serious the possibilities, not only of economic recession as I mentioned a moment ago but of higher inflation. Indirect taxes are one cause of higher inflation.

I am sorry that the Minister has chosen to leave the House and not continue to participate in the discussion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I think the Minister is probably outside watching it on television, but I do not think the Hon. Member should mention who is and who is not in the House. He has been here for quite a while and he knows as an Hon. Member that he should not do that.

Mr. MacLaren: Mr. Speaker, it was only that I was so flattered for the Minister to listen to me I hoped he might persist, but never mind.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacLaren: I was saying that the indirect tax increases embodied in this Budget will cause higher inflation, so the dilemma facing this Government has not really addressed.

The risk of inflation is enhanced, leaving Canadians without any prospect of significant cuts in interest rates. On the contrary, the indirect tax measures which the Minister has introduced today, and indeed the goods and services tax which the Government intends to become effective January 1, 1991, will fuel inflation. The increases certainly will not encourage the Governor of the Bank of Canada to lower interest rates in what he sees as his fight against inflation. Indeed, the direct result of the sales tax increases will put upward pressure on interest rates.

Many in the business community in particular are concerned that this Budget, by choosing the tax route and not the expenditure control route, has not given room for a more accommodative monetary policy by the Bank of Canada. Therefore, in those circumstances we can be quite certain that we will see, partly as a result of these major sales tax increases, a further increase in interest rates or at least a continuation of the present high level of real interest rates in Canada and a major difference in those rates between U.S. and Canada.

This Government has in the past got wrong its mix of high interest rate policy and high deficit spending. Those two policies combine to make life more difficult for all Canadians in the sense that higher interest rates drive up the cost of the deficit, and the Government then imposes higher sales taxes to pay for those higher interest rates. However, in so doing the Government drives up inflation. The bank says "well, we must now have higher interest rates to counter that inflation". We are into a vicious circle, and this Budget and the sales tax measures brought before us today only make that vicious circle yet more difficult.

Real interest rates are simply too high. They are now at a level where they themselves contribute to inflationary pressures. It is not surprising that the Conference Board of Canada, one of the more respected of the economic institutions in our country, has noted that the Budget is disappointing on the one hand to the financial and business communities that were expecting larger expenditure cuts and, on the other hand, is damaging to consumers who were hard hit with tax increases.

The Conference Board has raised the very real question of whether the present mix of high interest rates and high government spending is right. It has raised the question of whether this Budget, even late in the economic cycle, has addressed that central problem.

The Government acts as if it had nothing to do with interest rates, that it is something to do with a man along Wellington Street at the Bank of Canada. That of course is nonsense. The Government has pursued the high interest rate policies. It fully agreed with the Governor of the Bank of Canada in imposing high interest rates, higher than they have been in the past five years.

There is little evidence that the pursuit of that high interest rate policy during the past two years is in fact countering inflationary pressures. Certainly the Government is doing nothing to offset this unequal regional impact of high interest rates.

I spoke a few moments ago about the fact that sales tax increases and the Budget generally have a particularly harsh impact on the regions. High interest rate policies, of course, have yet a further harsh impact on the regions.

The inflation which the Governor of the Bank of Canada so fears is generated largely by central Canada. The Government and the Governor of the Bank insist on pursuing their high interest rate policies in an effort to stifle what they see as the inflationary pressures coming out of central Canada, but the only way that they can compensate the regions is by introducing fiscal measures for regional development that will offset that adverse impact of the monetary policy.

However, what do we see in the Budget? In fact, we see a net reduction in the transfers to the provinces and to the regions, not an increase in the amount of transfers to help the regions counter the adverse impact of higher interest rates.

• (1200)

The further result of the high interest rate policies that this Government has pursued, and gives every reason to believe will be further pursued in light of the inflationary impacts of this Budget and of the sales tax increases, is that we have been attracting U.S. dollars into Canada which seek a higher rate of return than they would receive domestically. The result is that the value of the Canadian dollar has been driven up.

A further result is that Canadian exporters encounter yet more and more difficulty in pursuing their export opportunities in the United States and elsewhere. So we have a further result of high interest rates, which is that Canadian exports have been adversely impacted.

A third problem with high interest rates and high Government borrowing is that generally affluent people benefit from that borrowing. It is higher income people who have the money to lend to the Government, yet it is all Canadian taxpayers who have to pay for that Government borrowing. They have to pay for the interest on the Government borrowing. The net result of that is that we get sales tax increases today. In part, we are getting sales tax increases so that Government has some additional revenue to pay for the interest on the money that it borrows from more affluent Canadians, the rentiers, if you wish, of Canada.

The net social impact of all this is simple. It is a transfer of money from poorer Canadians, lower income Canadians , less affluent Canadians who are paying a disproportionate amount of the sales tax to help repay the higher income Canadians who lend their money to the Government to help the Government meet its debt obligations. It will be clear from what I have said that I am very much convinced that the current mix of monetary policies, high interest rates and fiscal policy, because of its undue reliance on monetary restraint, has adverse implications for our economy, for unemployment, which the Government itself acknowledges is going to increase as a result of this Budget; for the regional disparities that I have mentioned; for investment levels and hence on greater productivity which Canada needs in a more global trading economy.

I have perhaps said enough to indicate that we on this side of the House are not much enamoured of these excise tax increases which the Government has brought forward in its Bill today. They have a severe impact on lower income Canadians that will not be offset by any credit that the Minister wishes to introduce.

Sales taxes are regressive. They have an adverse impact on those who can least afford to pay them. We see also that regional disparities are increased as a result of this Budget. Inflationary pressures will be further increased as a result of the measures which the Minister has introduced today and will be further stimulated by the goods and services tax which the Government intends to put in place in 18 months.

It will come as no surprise to you, Mr. Speaker, that on this side of the House, we shall oppose and oppose vigorously, this Bill which does nothing to rectify the errors and the disadvantages of the existing sales tax. It only makes those problems worse by increasing the level of the tax. Its worst feature of all is its impact on lower-income families who will not receive adequate compensation for the impact of this tax.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, today we are debating Bill C-20 at the second reading stage. I think there has been a mistake on the Bill itself because the title says this is an Act to amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act. Perhaps the title ought to have read that this is the largest tax grab in Canadian history. That would be a more accurate reflection as to what we are debating today.

The topics put on these Bills sound rather innocuous. It says, "An Act to Amend the Excise Tax Act and the Excise Act". When one hears that, it does not sound too bad. One thinks that this is something that Governments do. It has to amend these Acts from time to time.

When we actually get into it and starts analyzing what all this legislative gobbledegook actually says, it says that the Government has decided to reach into the pocket books, wallets and purses of Canadians like we have never experienced in the entire history of our country before. This is the most massive tax grab we have ever seen. It goes beyond everything people ever imagined.

I do not recall during the last election campaign when the Members from Prince George—Peace River, or from Lanark—Carleton were out on the hustings describing a plan to have this incredible tax grab occur if they were elected.

The Hon. Member was in Kamloops. I remember his visit well. I cannot recall press reports that said the Hon. Minister of State for Forests was going to be planning this massive tax grab if the Conservatives were elected. As a matter of fact, I do not recall even a mention of increased taxes.

Perhaps we should not even be discussing this Bill C-20 today. As a matter of fact, there is a better reason that we should not even be discussing Bill C-20 today. That is because this whole process is illegitimate. The Government should never have introduced its Budget from which this particular Bill flows because of the way it was handled.

It is the only time in parliamentary history in the face of the earth where a Government has leaked out a Budget days in advance and says that that is just the way it is and there is nothing one can do about it. It says that this is the way we do business here.

It is the only time in world history where a parliamentary system has seen a Minister of Finance who has ample evidence his Budget has been leaked, and knows that many people in privileged positions have had advance copies of the Budget, yet says that that is just the way it is and we are not going to do anything about that. Then he continues on with the Budget, reading it on television.

I think we have to look long and hard in the annals of history to find a Minister of Finance that introduced a Budget via press conference the day before the scheduled presentation in the House of Commons.

We consider the Budget itself to be illegitimate. We ought to be considering Bill C–20 to be an illegitimate piece of legislation before the House.

This Government has decided to ignore all of the advice that has been given. It has decided to ignore every reflection that Canadians have been able to provide the Government and every editorial writer of financial affairs saying that the Minister should resign and start over. It just sort of blunders on, regardless of the people.

In the last few days, we have been reminded of another Government in another part of the world that has done a similar sort of thing in terms of attitude: forget the people. " We know what is best". Father Knows Best. Remember that old television program? The Government says it knows what is best for Canadians. It is going to impose this incredible tax grab at this very critical time for the people of Canada. What is this going to do to our country?

The justification of the Minister was that something had to be done about this deficit problem. We all agree.

Once again my memory fails me because I do not recall the Minister of Finance or the government Members who were running the last federal election making a big to–do about the deficit and indicating how to reduce it. Now we are finding out. We are finding out the real agenda, because rather than do it in a fair, just and equitable way, there will be a continuation of this regressive path of increasing sales and excise taxes on ordinary working people.

There is another way, as we are well aware. That other way is to start collecting a few taxes from some of the large profitable corporations that do not pay anything. Those people listening and watching today just do not believe that there are thousands of large, profitable corporations that fail to pay one penny in income tax year after year. People do not believe it because it sounds too ridiculous and incredible. Yet I have here the Minister of Finance's own statements where he identifies a number of profitable corporations that do not pay any income tax. There are more than 60,000 profitable corporations that exist in Canada that do not pay a penny in income tax. That is to say nothing of the thousands that may pay 50 cents or $20 in income tax. This is a list of the ones that do not pay anything.

They are not the small Mom and Pop shops, the auto–body shop at the corner, or the hair salon down the street. They are companies such as Alcan of Canada that made a profit of $312 million in 1986–87 and did not pay one penny in income tax. There are others such as Hees International, Cadillac–Fairview, and Trilon Financial. There are 60,000 that do not pay any income tax at all.

Why would the Government on the one hand state that we have to struggle against this deficit yet fail to take an obvious course of action? For example, in 1986 the United States administration stated that it was unreasonable, unjust, unfair and discriminatory to allow large corporations to pay no income tax, so it introduced a minimum corporate tax. I give the United States credit for that. Now those corporations that are able to take advantage of the dozens and dozens of loopholes that are listed in the Government's handbooks still have to pay at least a minimum corporate tax. Does the Conservative Government in Canada follow suit in a fair and equitable manner? No, that is not in the cards. There is a better way. Let's get ordinary people again. Let's pass more of the tax burden to ordinary men and women.

In 1950 we had a tax system that was essentially balanced. The revenues coming in from people and the revenues coming in from the corporate sector were relatively balanced at 50–50. With all due respect to the Liberal finance critic who has just spoken, over the years as a result of successive Liberal and Conservative Governments this 50–50 balance has now shifted to 85 per cent of the revenues coming from people and less than 15 per cent coming from the corporate sector. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, is it a fair system when 85 per cent of the revenues come from people and only 15 per cent come from the corporate sector?

It does not matter whether a Liberal or a Conservative Government is in power. As a matter of fact, I believe the present Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) when he was Minister of Finance in a previous Liberal Government, introduced this whole myriad of corporate loopholes that resulted in 100,000 profitable corporations in those days, not 60,000, that paid no income tax. The Tories have moved to close off the most ludicrous loopholes and have got it down to only 60,000 large, profitable corporations that manage not to pay any income tax year after year.

What else could be done? If we are concerned about the deficit, which we are, let us take some real action and introduce a tax system that treats the various sectors of the economy in a fair and just manner. Who pays income tax in the business sector? Small and medium-sized businesses are paying more than they should because the large corporate taxpayers are getting away scot-free in many cases.

There is another issue and that is the whole matter of the interest rate policy. I am sure when you read all the newspapers this morning, Mr. Speaker, you also noticed that the Americans have reduced their interest rates. Now their interest rates are 2.5 per cent lower than ours in Canada. When one crosses the border there is an extreme variation in interest rates. Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, what the difference would be in our country if the Minister of Finance came into the House this afternoon and made a statement that tomorrow morning interest rates in Canada will be reduced 2.5 per cent to harmonize with those in the United States.

Two things would happen immediately. It would send a clear signal to those people in the country who want to expand their operations, purchase new goods or supplies, or new services. With interest rates 2.5 per cent lower many economic initiatives make sense. We would have a generation of new economic activity which would result in additional jobs, lower UIC pay-outs, lower welfare pay-outs, more jobs, therefore more sales taxes, personal taxes, and corporate taxes collected. That would be a way to bring in more revenue to reduce the deficit. Not only that, reducing interest rates by 2.5 per cent would save an incredibly large amount of accumulated debt. If 2.5 per cent was knocked off the cost of $320 billion, billions of dollars would be saved.

Why wouldn't someone with the brains of a Minister of Finance not do that? Why would he not do something that everyone is advocating? Every premier in the country has come to Ottawa on a number of occasions and said: "For goodness sakes, give our regions an opportunity and drop the interest rate down two or three percentage points". However, the Government refuses to do that. It refuses to take action that would result in economic activity, decreased unemployment levels, and increased opportunities for entrepreneurs, builders and workers. The Government has a better idea: add more taxes on the people who are presently working.

I believe that we are desperately close to a tax revolt. I am not sure what form that tax revolt may take, but on balance Canadians know that they pay too much and will not take it any more. When they get the next opportunity to evaluate the Government and say whether or not they support it continuing in office, there is no question in my mind that those people are going to state that, in spite of some of them being half-decent people, we cannot afford it any longer. They cannot afford to raise their families, continue in business, or continue in farming. People have been pressed too hard.

As parliamentarians, one of the concerns that we must have, and about which the Government ought to be worried, is the development of the underground economy as a result of people's loss of faith in our tax system. Now billions of dollars of transactions are taking place underneath the table. There are no records and no taxes being paid. The best estimate of the size of this sector of our economy is that between $60 billion and $120 billion of transactions every year are moving underground because people have lost faith in the system.

They know that while they work and struggle to pay taxes, many people do not pay any taxes. Perhaps some people who live down the block do not pay any income taxes at all, be they individuals or high-income earners. You and I both know, Mr. Speaker, there are many people earning $200,000 or $500,000 a year who do not pay any income tax and are able to use the various loopholes. The person who is struggling in a small business, the backbone of the country in terms of employment, knows that while he or she is paying a lot of income tax, Alcan Aluminum does not pay anything, not a single cent. Hees International does not pay anything. Some years the Bank of Montreal does not pay anything. The Royal Bank of Canada does not pay anything.

Why do we not change the system? I wonder if one of the reasons, and I hate to say it but it is a suspicion of mine when one sees which large profitable corporations that do not pay any income tax give financial support to in terms of political Parties, lo and behold, the Conservatives get the lion's share, the Liberals get a fair share, in case they form a Government again, and the one Party that does not get any hand-outs from the Bank of Montreal or the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce or the Royal Bank is the New Democratic Party. We do not take that type of money. Why does this improper, unjust, biased system remain? I suspect that might play some role in why some of the legislation does not change to resolve it.

I think it is now time to be specific. We are discussing the principle of the Bill, and I want to mention some items. We have to warn Canadians about what this Government is going to do to them. A lot of damage has already been done, but the big blow is yet to come. Talking about the damage so far, the Government wants to increase the sales tax on construction material at a time when our economy is very sensitive in terms of its recovery, particularly in the regions of Canada where the construction industry drives a lot of the employment opportunities. If there is a lot of housing, office and plant construction, not only are there jobs in building, but all of the infrastructure that goes into those buildings, all of the manufacturing, all of the service industries and so on. The Government says, we think we have got a good idea. We are going to increase the sales tax on construction material. Why would a Government that has any brains want to increase the cost of building houses, factories and office complexes? That is what the Government is doing, and it just perplexes me.

The Government is going to slap the usual sales tax increases on alcoholic beverages and tobacco products. These are up from 18 per cent to 19 per cent. That is an area that is going to get hit, I suppose, on a regular basis. Again it just drives up the cost of living for so many people.

It is going to increase the sales tax on telecommunications and programming services from 10 per cent to 11 per cent beginning June 1. That sales tax on telecommunications has already been introduced. Then there will be an increase in the sales tax on all other goods to which it applies from 12 per cent to 13.5 per cent. Where does this end, Mr. Speaker? There will be an increase in the excise tax on gasoline by one cent a litre beginning April 28, then again on January 1, 1990 as well as a further 1 per cent per litre increase on leaded gasoline beginning April 28, 1989.

It does not sound like much when you look at it on an individual basis: one cent per litre on gasoline, a few cents on a carton of cigarettes, a 1 per cent increase in telecommunications costs, a 1 per cent increase on all construction materials. But when it is added up carefully, what it means to the average family—we have done some very thorough analysis and I am going to define the average family as being a family of four individuals with two working adults with two children and with a combined family income of $44,000. Some people will make more than that and some less, but that is your average combined income in Canada today from the cities of central Canada and into the regions. When you add it up, what does this one budget so far mean in terms of additional costs? It means an addition of $710 per family. We know how in 1984, 1985, 1986, 1987 the Conservatives increased all of those taxes year after year, budget after budget, but on top of all of that, this is an extra $710 per family.

What is silent, of course, is the national sales taxes coming next year. There is no mention in this particular Bill of that, but I think I would be remiss if I did not at least refer to it. It is stage two. This is the softening-up punch and the big one coming on January 1, 1990 is going to knock them right out.

What is it going to cost? Leaving aside next year's budget that will probably end up being more, this average family with two people, two children and earning an income of $44,000, it is going to cost them next year an additional $1,000 a year in sales taxes. It will be applied to everything. If you get your hair cut, you are going to be paying an extra 9 per cent. When you go to the movies, you are going to be paying an extra 9 per cent. When you go bowling, you will be paying 9 per cent. When you fill out your will, you will be paying 9 per cent—9, 9, 9 everywhere you go. That is why we call this the beginning of the largest tax grab in Canadian history because next year it is going to be worse.

Your constituents, Mr. Speaker, are living in Edmonton and the Hon. Minister of State (Forestry) (Mr. Oberle) has a number of his constituents living in Prince George and Dawson Creek and a little further west. Both of you will know that an extra $1,000 per family in many cases cannot be handled. That is $700 this year, an extra $1,000 next year, $1,700 out of the pocket of every family in Edmonton, Red Deer, Prince George, Kamloops, Montreal, Toronto. It is a form of highway robbery.

There is something sinister at work here, and I am not going to suggest that any Minister has had sinister motives by imposing this. I do think it is a plain ordinary tax grab, but what does it mean in the regions of Canada where for every family you pluck out $1,700 in sales and excise taxes and take it down to Ottawa to be used in some cases for rather questionable purposes? What it means is that $1,700 a family will not be in Prince George, $1,700 a family will not be in Edmonton. For all those families circulating between the businesses during the year it will be plucked out in sales taxes and excise taxes and sent down to Ottawa. It means that we are going to be curtailing business opportunities; in other words, the ability of local small businesses to do more business in the future. The money just will not be there. The disposable income just will not be there. When you reach in and pull $1,000 out of your pocket every single year from now on, on top of all the other money you pull out, you will not have that money to spend locally on a pair of new snow tires or some children's running shoes.

This national sales tax is actually going to put a tax on children's clothing, running shoes, lunch kits, books, and hats. When you think of it, it is rather a dastardly kind of tax. Yet, while this is taking place, there is no minimum corporate tax being introduced. There is no effort to reduce interest rates. There is no interest reducing the huge corporate loopholes that exist.

I want to refer to some of those corporate loopholes. When one looks at the corporate loopholes and one adds up what they cost taxpayers in taxes not collected, it comes to almost $30 billion. In other words, corporations, if they were paying taxes as most people do, would be paying an extra $30 billion. What is our deficit a year? It is about $30 billion. So the deficit we have is the money that we essentially lose in terms of corporate loopholes. I would ask anyone to find anywhere in our country a single tax lawyer, tax expert or accountant to identify a single corporate loophole where we get good return on the money that we lose.

I have asked some of my colleagues to use this debate to identify which corporate loopholes give us value for money. The financial advisers, tax lawyers and accountants that I have heard from cannot identify one, at least not in public. They like them because corporations get good deals. I challenge anyone here or anyone listening or watching to identify a single corporate tax exemption that costs taxpayers money and lost revenue where we get more than that investment in the long term. I do not think it can be done.

I ask the question: when you add up the $30 billion in lost taxes, is it worth it? What are we getting for it? This is an analysis that must be done. If we are going to slap every working family with an extra $1,700 in sales and excise taxes, surely to goodness at the same time we should be spending time looking at other ways and means of increasing income as opposed to simply relying on those same taxpayers that have none of these tax incentive programs of which to take advantage. The few that they did have have now been eliminated, such as the regular tax deductions for medicare, medical costs and so on as well as the investment income. Now they have to be declared as well. Where are we going?

• (1230)

Mr. Oberle: I am going to Kamloops on Thursday.

Mr. Riis: My hon. friend, the Minister of State for Forests, indicates that he is going to Kamloops on Thursday. When he has the opportunity to talk in Kamloops, I hope he will explain the value of the national sales tax that takes effect next year.

There is another problem associated with this national sales tax of which the Minister will be aware. A 9 per cent increase on all goods and services will obviously increase the cost of living. The cost of a haircut will go up 9 per cent. The price of children's shorts will go up 9 per cent. The cost of running shoes will go up 9 per cent. The cost of everything will increase by 9 per cent.

What will the Governor of the Bank of Canada do in his usual knee-jerk reaction when he sees the cost of living go up by 9 per cent? He will predict that inflation will rise by some 3 per cent, making the inflation rate in Canada about 7 per cent or 8 per cent. John Crow, the Governor of the Bank of Canada, will flip out and say that now is the time to increase interest rates substantially.

Not only is the Government going to hit consumers with $710 worth of sales and excise taxes, and on New Year's Day hit them with another 9 per cent sales tax across the board for another $1,000 out of the pockets of every family in Canada, the Governor of the Bank of Canada will surprise Canadians by jacking up interest rates immediately to curtail any increase in inflation.

Canadians cannot and will not take it any more. There is a limit. Canadians will no longer stand for it because of the discrimination in our tax system. They know that while Bill C-20 will result in many additional taxes for them other people will pay nothing.

I hope my hon. friends across the way will stand in their places during this debate and explain why they think this is a good idea. I hope they can explain how ordinary families can be taxed, while companies like Hees International, Cadillac Fairview, Alcan Aluminium, and Brascan do not pay any taxes in many years.

I ask my hon. friends opposite to explain the benefits of this policy and to explain why they believe an increase in these taxes at this time is a good idea when the Government at the same time is dismantling the Canadian economy as part of the trade deal.

The construction aspect of these tax increases is particularly interesting. I had an opportunity to speak to the Interior Construction Association in British Columbia about what it thought of this recent government initiative. I asked whether it thought an increase in the tax on construction materials made much sense.

I was rather astounded by the association's response that it had been to Ottawa to talk to some of the cabinet Ministers about this construction tax and thought it was told that the Government would actually eliminate the tax on construction materials. It is not surprising that it was before November 21 that the Government informed the association that it would actually eliminate tax on construction material.

The elimination of such a tax would make much sense in terms of kick starting the construction industry into high gear, to say nothing of what it would do for the forest industry in light of the additional home construction across the country. That too would have incredible spin-off for job creation, investment, and economic development.

Not only did the Government not eliminate the tax on construction material, it decided to increase it, to the disbelief of the construction industry.

I will not say that the industry was misled or misinformed, because that would be too obvious. However, it is perplexed at how the Government thinks this will help the economy or generate additional economic activity and revenue to the Treasury.

Perhaps I have said enough for the moment on this matter of taxes. The Bill we are debating represents an unprecedented tax grab. This debate will be the acid test to see whom Members represent in the House. While I do not know about members of the Liberal Party I assume they will oppose this measure.

Mr. Milliken: We have already said we will.

Mr. Riis: I have not heard members on the government side say that they will represent their constituents this time as opposed to supporting a Minister of Finance who should not be there. Every financial writer in the country I know has said he should not be the Minister of Finance, but the Minister does not listen and simply stumbles ahead.

This is a test to see whether Conservative Members opposite represent the construction industry in their constituencies. If they do, they will surely not suggest that an increase in tax on construction materials will be appropriate.

Will they represent ordinary working families? If so, I do not think ordinary working families want to see an increase of $1,700 a year on an already incredibly high tax burden that is weighing them down. Do Hon. Members want an inflationary factor introduced with the introduction of a new sales tax? If they really want to hold down inflation in an effort to keep interest rates down, they will vote against this Bill.

Let me return to the whole matter of the legitimacy of this initiative in the first place. The Minister of Finance said that the federal sales tax he would introduce will be revenue neutral. Subsequently he said that it would really generate a whooping $23.5 billion a year in revenue.

The Hon. Member for Mississauga South, the chairman of the finance committee, said that this would be an incredible tax grab, essentially a printing press for money.

Mr. Reid: He said that before the election.

Mr. Riis: Before the election. Now that he has been made chairman he toned it down somewhat. He still stands by his words.

This will be a massive tax grab by an illegitimate Minister in a Budget that should not proceed, through legislation that we should not be debating.

How does this affect our international reputation? What do countries throughout the world think about Canada when they see its Government loading such an incredible debt on working Canadians, a small portion of the population, while letting others go tax exempt? What does it say about a Minister of Finance and a Government that will do nothing about these leaks of budget information to privileged people in advance?

The best barometer to judge this is the money markets. There was a downward movement of the Canadian dollar as a reflection of the loss of faith in the Minister. I assume they are waiting for him to resign. They will be waiting for that good news for a long time.

We oppose Bill C-20, even its title. Normally, the Opposition opposes various clauses of a Bill. However, when we are eventually asked if we support the title of this Bill, we will have to say no because it is not accurate. The title should read: "A massive Canadian Government tax grab of working families". We hope that government Members will speak for their constituents, do the honourable thing and vote against this Bill so we will not have to examine it clause by clause in committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre H. Vincent (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak to Bill C-20, a Bill that will increase certain taxes. When we look at tax increases, we wonder, and I am sure Canadians are wondering, why we have these tax increases. Why did the Government take a step that is not necessarily very popular? I don't think many Canadians are delighted to hear they will have to pay more taxes. So why? Because, Mr. Speaker, and we often forget this, because the figures involved are enormous!

• (1240)

We must remember that in 1984, when this Government was elected, the national debt, in other words, the money Canada owed, was $200 billion. In other words, before 1984, over the years from, let us say, 1968 to 1984, the Government of the time annually spent more money than it was receiving in the Treasury, and it did that for 20 years, leaving the Conservative Government which took its place a bill for $200 billion. I often hear Opposition Members say: Yes, but you made it even worse. I agree, Mr. Speaker, that the national debt has increased by $120 billion since 1984, but if we calculate the interest charges paid annually since 1984 on their debt, these charges add up to $120 billion. So since 1984, if we exclude the interest charges on the debt that was a legacy from the previous Government, this government has had a balanced budget practically every year. However, we now have a situation where our debt is $320 billion.

Expressed in figures more readily understood by you and me, this means 3 million per hour. Our national debt, the money Canada owes, is increasing by $3 million per hour or $80 million every day, just because a previous Government spent a lot more money than it was able to collect. So now, Mr. Speaker, we have a situation where some very vigorous concrete measures must be taken if we are to control our annual deficit and the national debt, which has grown to enormous proportions.

Last week I was talking to people in the riding of Trois-Rivières, as the Hon. Member for the NDP said, to small business people, Mr. Speaker, people who have a business and employees, and so forth, who are aware of the national debt problem, and who are in favour of the measures that have been taken, although they realize they will have to pay a little more.

The Canadian people, Mr. Speaker, want a Government whose first goal is a healthy economy, because a healthy economy means new jobs, and new jobs in turn mean bread and butter for everybody. And if we are to have a healthy economy and new jobs, the starting point is good management putting our own house in order. This is what the last Budget is all about. This is what has been done with increases in certain taxes—19 per cent on liquor. I am not aware of anyone opposing increased taxes on liquor and tobacco products. Nine per cent on building materials is still less than the general federal sales tax. Starting January 1st, 1990, there will be an 11 per cent tax on communication services. Finally, the rate will be 13.5 per cent on every other product already subject to the federal sales tax!

It is interesting to note the Liberal Finance critic stated the federal sales tax was regressive. The federal sales tax as we know it is 65 this year. And I believe, Mr. Speaker, the time definitely has come to retire it. This is why we came up with a new tax, a new way of taxing, that will be introduced on January 1, 1991. But in the meantime we had to increase the existing tax. But the reason why this sales tax is not regressive is that we are the first Government to innovate, as you will recall, before 1984 the previous Liberal Government used to increase the federal sales tax, period! We have introduced and this is why I refer to our being innovative a refundable federal income tax credit on sales tax. In the case of adults in 1989 it increases from $70 to $100, and for children, from $35 to $50. In 1990, the credit for adults increases from $100 to $140, and for children, from $50 to $70. This means that in 1990, a family with two adults and two children with an income of $18,000 or less will receive $420 to make up for the increase in the federal sales tax.

When I hear a self-appointed finance expert suggest that tax is regressive, Mr. Speaker, I believe he is on the wrong track. Statistics reveal that with an amount of $420 the two-adult family with two children will not be affected at all by this tax increase. I referred to the $18,000 threshold, Mr. Speaker, because you know that this year it is set at $16,000. It will rise to $18,000 next year.

I heard the Hon. Member say that the federal sales tax costs more in remote regions such as that of my colleague from Newfoundland and others. Well, Mr. Speaker, that is precisely one of the reasons why our system has to be overhauled. The tax now applies at the manufacturer level. Nobody knows about it, it is hidden. Just ask your constituents who knows there is a 12 or 13.5 per cent manufacturer tax on practically all consumer goods.

In addition a number of provinces levy a sales tax on top of the federal sales tax. In other words the Canadian consumer, say in Québec, now pays close to 23 or 24 per cent in provincial and federal sales taxes. That is sheer lunacy! What we want is to levy a 9 per cent retailer sales tax on goods, products and services. This way the Canadian consumer will see for himself how much the tax costs because it will no longer be hidden. Since the tax will apply to all goods and services it will be the same everywhere, easy to collect and more equitable as well.

I repeat that we will not hit low income families because the refundable tax credit we have devised will be maintained and even paid in advance. To put it another way, when the new tax becomes effective on January 1, 1991 families will already have received their first advance cheques. That, Mr. Speaker, is what I call fairness, justice and innovation, something both Opposition Parties have not even thought of!

Mr. Speaker, in speeches on the Budget after it is presented or on any bill having to do with taxation, unfortunately, we never hear positive suggestions from the Liberals or New Democrats. What did they suggest to improve the tax system, as we are prepared to do, to lower the deficit while at the same time ensuring that the Canadian economy will continue to operate well as it has done? You know that nearly one and a half million jobs were created in the past four years. But why were the jobs created? They were created because there was a government that managed the economy in such a way that jobs were created.

Mr. Speaker, eleven years ago, in 1978, I was studying for my master's in taxation at the University of Sherbrooke and the professor, a brilliant tax expert, especially on the federal sales tax, Normand Guérin by name, said in 1978: "The present federal sales tax system is archaic and no longer meets the needs of the country, much less of manufacturers, business people and the general public".

He said: It is unfortunate that the government in power is afraid to make changes because it is very complicated and it is not necessarily easy to tell people, "There is a hidden 12 per cent tax. We will abolish it and replace it with a 9 per cent tax that you will see". Certainly, the people must understand that there is now a 12 per cent tax, which will be replaced by a 9 per cent tax!

So, that Liberal Government never had the decency, the courage or the nerve to implement a system that would benefit everyone and that at the same time would help reach this Government's first objective: restoring public finances.

Mr. Speaker, I am flabbergasted when I realize that the Government of Canada will have to pay this year $39 billion only to cover the interest on the debt which the previous Liberal Government left us as a legacy. Imagine, $39 billion!

Mr. Speaker, you know as I do what we could do with so much money. If we did not have to pay our national debt, we would have money a-plenty for Old Age Security pensions, daycare programs, research and development, environmental protection, etc. But we are saddled with this burden, we have this almost grotesque problem to solve before even considering any further investments in social, economic and cultural programs.

I was listening a while ago to a Member of the New Democratic Party who claimed that many corporations do not pay any corporate income tax. I do not know just how many do not, but my Honourable friend failed as usual to indicate that the corporations who do not pay any income tax may have one of two perfectly legitimate reasons for not doing so.

One of these reasons could be that they might have incurred losses in previous years and had elected, pursuant to the Income Tax legislation, to apply these losses against their profits for the current year. But this is something which is available not only to corporations, but to ordinary Canadian men and women, including you, Mr. Speaker, as well as all the Members of this House. If your corporation came out the loser following a bad transaction in 1989, and if it shows a profit in 1990, you may apply this loss incurred in 1989 against your profit in 1990. You would certainly run the risk of being revilled by my NDP friend as one who does not pay income tax. I am not saying that he tried to mislead the public, but he certainly failed to thoroughly explain the fine points of the Income Tax legislation as it applies to corporations and individuals.

Another reason which might explain why your corporation does not pay any income tax is if you have made a major investment which entitles you to amortization. It is a well-known fact that amortization is deemed an admissible expense which can be applied against a corporation's profit.

These are the two reasons which might explain why you are not paying any income tax.

The Hon. Member forgot to mention on the other hand that it was this Conservative Government which has implemented since 1986 a minimum income tax scheme, so that individuals earning $100,000, $50,000 or $25,000 have a minimum income tax to pay. This obviously was an oversight on his part.

He also emphasized the fact that all Canadians will be paying more income tax. But he forgot to point out, Mr. Speaker, that with the 1988 tax reform 85 per cent of Canadians pay less income tax than before. That he forgot to mention. Eighty five per cent of Canadians pay less income tax and if I remember correctly, Mr. Speaker, one million Canadians do not pay income tax any more because of tax reform. Measures have been implemented and Canadians have realized it after filing their income tax returns this year.

Many residents of my constituency of Trois-Rivières, who were skeptical after tax reform was announced, have told me: "Sir, you were right. It's true! We are paying less income tax for 1988 than 1987. Your reform is good and worthwhile." At the same time, companies and businesses have seen their income tax rates go up.

I think it is normal that businesses pay their fair share but we should bear in mind, Mr. Speaker, that they are the ones that create the jobs in this country. If we had the same rationale as NDP Members, we would tax businesses 100 per cent. They would not make any profits at all and would only pay taxes.

Mr. Langlois: They would not be in business for long.

Mr. Vincent: My colleague, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for the beautiful riding of Manicouagan (Mr. Langlois) made a quite logical and realistic comment: "They would not be in business for long". As a matter of fact, if we want our Canadian businesses to make progress, they should make normal profits, they should pay a reasonable tax rate to be able to reinvest their profits, thus make a move forward and automatically create new jobs in the process.

Mr. Speaker, if we compare the 1980–84 Liberal Government with ours regarding job creation, we created 10 times more jobs than the previous Liberal Government. Even better, 9 jobs out of 10 that we created were permanent, while under the Liberal Government, 9 jobs out of 10 were temporary. You will recall, M. Speaker, the nice programs implemented by the Liberals about painting fences, doing housework, repairing different residences, presbyteries, etc. They were calling that job creation. Certainly, the community that was offered a grant was very proud and happy. But those were not permanent jobs. When the construction is over and the painting done, the job is gone!

So there was a "work/no work" cycle. That was the cycle we had from 1980 to 1984, but now, we see the real job creation that has taken place, despite tax increases, Mr. Speaker, since 1984.

No company or government can go into debt all the time and hope that one day the debt problem will solve itself. Once again, Mr. Speaker, I challenge the Members of the other two parties to come up with ideas—concrete, realistic suggestions—for, first, reducing the deficit and, second, creating jobs, while solving the national debt problem.

Mr. Speaker, you are indicating to me that my time has expired. Thank you. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I urge all Hon. Members of the House to vote for the adoption of Bill C–20 as quickly as possible.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

The House took recess at 1 p.m.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

[English]

THE ENVIRONMENT

CARBON DIOXIDE POLLUTION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, while anxious to reduce the deficit, the federal Government proposes to finance a very costly project named OSLO for the extraction of oil from tar sands. This would significantly increase carbon dioxide pollution at a time when scientists are urging a reduction if we really want to slow down the global warming trend.

If the Government is really concerned about global warming, if the Government cares about the greenhouse effect it must put a stop to the OSLO oil sands project and any other fossil fuel megaproject which increases our dependence on oil.

The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Epp) is a minister of the environment. His energy policies are of great environmental importance. Oil extraction megaprojects and nuclear power are not the foundations on which to build a sound environmental energy policy. If the Minister of Energy is to keep the promise made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on sustainable development, he should cancel these projects.

SOLIDARITY

ELECTIONS IN POLAND

Mr. John Reimer (Kitchener): Mr. Speaker, the Solidarity Union movement, outlawed until two months ago, appears headed for a massive victory in Sunday's Polish elections.

Millions of Poles eagerly and gladly seized their first opportunity since World War II to exercise their limited yet very significant freedom through secret ballots to vote against the Communist Government and for their Solidarity candidates.

I am sure that all Members of this House would want to join with me in congratulating the Solidarity movement, and its leaders for their persistence and courage over the years and for their excellent performance Sunday, June 4, in this historic milestone in democratic reform in Poland. Father Popieluszko would have been overjoyed to have seen what took place in Poland on Sunday.

I urge the Government of Canada to do all in its power to support the democratic reform process under way in Poland today.

WORLD WAR II

REMEMBRANCE CEREMONIES IN NORMANDY

Mr. W. C. Scott (Victoria—Haliburton): Mr. Speaker, much of the world is looking and remembering D-Day. We Canadians in particular have a special reason to recall June 6, 1944.

This morning representatives of all Canadian units involved in D-Day and the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Merrithew) were at the Beny-Sur-Mer Canadian war cemetery in Normandy. There are over 2,000 Canadians buried there, young men killed either on D-Day itself or in the follow-up drive to push inland.

We naturally think of D-Day as an event colossal in scope but in truth D-Day was like any other battle. Success or failure depended on a series of individual engagements.

Today let us bless the memory of those Canadians who fought those individual battles. Some are buried in Beny-Sur-Mer. Some went on to liberate The Netherlands less than a year later. All helped to restore freedom to Europe. Our gratitude has not faded with time, and let us hope it never will.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HEALTH

CANADIAN CENTRE FOR OCCUPATIONAL HEALTH AND SAFETY

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, on May 19, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Labour (Mr. James) handed a little note to the Canadian Centre for Occupational Health and Safety, the contents of which will spell death to the centre and its work by 1991. Their demand for full cost recovery by the centre is nothing less than unjustifiable discrimination. Why the double standard?

If 1,000 Canadians per year were to die, 20,000 permanently disabled and hundreds of thousands suffer illness or injury due to any one choice of personal life style, unhealthy diet, or smoking or drinking, the Government would and does pay the bill, however inadequately, for research and dissemination of free public health information and warnings.

But if you are a Canadian worker who will, in fact, suffer these casualty rates every year as a result of simply working for a living—not much choice there—the Conservatives say "Root, hog or die" and pay your own way.

This is not a class act. This is an act of class discrimination. I urge the Government to reverse its decision, restore funding to the centre and allow Canadian workers equal access to the information which will grant them the right to work and to live in the safest environment possible.

RAILWAYS

LEVEL CROSSING ACCIDENTS

Mr. Pat Sobeski (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I rise today in the House to bring to the attention of the Government a matter of grave concern.

A publication of the Library of Parliament Research Branch entitled "Railway Safety, 1988" points out that more people are killed at level crossings than in derailments and collisions. The Foisey Report and the inquiry into the Mississauga derailment addressed the latter two issues. These inquiries also point out safety concerns regarding crews and equipment. A constituent believes that an inquiry into level crossing accidents would point out several deficiencies with inadequate visibility being the most common.

On November 12, 1988, three young people were killed and in 1975 two people were killed at Mile 46.76 of the CPR mainline north of Cambridge. In correspondence and interviews with my constituents there is reason to believe that these accidents could have been avoided if proper warning signals were in place. As five people have now died at this crossing, I urge the Department of Transport to install automatic railway crossing signals at side road 30 in the Township of Puslinch.

HISTORICAL EVENTS

COMMEMORATION OF EXECUTION OF GURU ARJAN DEVJI

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow, June 7, Sikh Canadians will join the 15 million Sikh adherents world-wide to commemorate the execution of a great religious leader, the Guru Arjan Devji, who compiled the Sikh teachings into a single volume that became the scriptural base of Sikhism. The Guru Arjan Devji was executed for his refusal to renounce the principles of his faith.

More than 100,000 Canadians adhere to Sikhism. Their teachings have since the 16th century stressed the equality of men and women, opposed discrimination in all its forms and emphasized philanthropy, family and the maintenance of a moral, responsible and selfless everyday life.

Sikh Canadians have made, and continue to make, a great contribution to Canada. They hold firmly the noble principles of their faith and their origin. I would like to convey to them my respect and admiration and to join with them in commemoration of this special day of remembrance.

THE HANDICAPPED

NATIONAL ACCESS AWARENESS WEEK

Mr. Maurice Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, on the occasion of National Access Awareness Week, I think it would be appropriate to ask ourselves individually and collectively whether we are really doing enough to help disabled people participate fully in community life. The disabled have the same basic needs as the rest of the population. However, obstacles have sometimes hindered their autonomy—in transportation, housing, employment, recreation or education.

To pay tribute to the communities that have done the most to integrate the disabled in each of the five areas that I just named, the Department of the Secretary of State together with the Federation of Canadian Municipalities is sponsoring the Five-Star Community Prize Program. The Five-Star Community Prize is the highest award a community can obtain in recognition of its efforts to integrate the disabled. Mr. Speaker, many organizations in my riding are working on this and I am sure that they all deserve this prize!

AIR CANADA

CANCELLATION OF DIRECT FLIGHT OTTAWA-CHARLOTTETOWN

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, later this month at the beginning of the tourist season on Prince Edward Island, Air Canada will end its direct flights from Ottawa to Charlottetown. This move will add time and money to the cost of doing business on the Island. It will discourage tourists from visiting and it will create an inconvenience for Islanders. It is also insulting that a provincial capital is losing its direct flight from the nation's capital for economic reasons.

Economics is all this Government seems to care about. But 125 years ago when the Fathers of Confederation met in Charlottetown to plan this country, they had a vision for Canada which included more than economics. So I urge this Government to reconsider its transportation policy because the people of Prince Edward Island deserve better.

FISHERIES

"LOBSTER CAPITAL OF CANADA"

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, during the past few months there has been some considerable discussion as to which area of Canada truly deserves the title of "Lobster Capital of Canada".

Some have suggested Shediac, New Brunswick because of its long history of participation in this industry. But clearly that participation is dwindling. Some have suggested Yarmouth, Nova Scotia because so many lobsters have been shipped through that historic port.

But surely so distinguished a title can only rightfully be attributed to the place in Canada where the most lobsters are caught, the most lobsters are landed, where the dollar value of landings is the greatest, and that place clear and away is Shelburne County, Nova Scotia.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCreath: Accordingly, with the mandate given to me by the people of South Shore, Nova Scotia, I hereby declare and proclaim, without fear of retribution or contradiction, that Shelburne County, Nova Scotia is the lobster capital of Canada.

Furthermore, I would like to bring to the attention of Parliament and all Canadians and issue an invitation to all to attend the Third Annual Shelburne County Lobster Festival to be held this weekend, June 9 to June 12 in the Lobster Capital of Canada, Shelburne County, Nova Scotia.

FORESTRY

EXPIRY OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENTS

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, forest resource development agreements between the federal Government and six provinces expired on March 31. Yesterday, at the signing of the Constitution of the Canadian Woodlot Owners Federation, the president of the organization said that the lack of new agreements is wreaking havoc on planning by woodlot owners and other producers in the forest sector. He went on to say that further delays will be disastrous.

Recent Budget cuts clearly indicate that this Government is prepared to sacrifice the future of the forest industry. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) will be in B.C. this week to address a Conservative Party fund-raising dinner. In light of the Minister of Forests failure to deliver forestry agreements, the Prime Minister should make a commitment to British Columbia and this country to fund forest agreements.

TRANSPORTATION

DEVELOPMENT OF PORT OF CHURCHILL

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, the situation is desperate at the Port of Churchill in northern Manitoba.

After signing a $90 million agreement just four years ago to rebuild the port, the present Conservative Government has allowed the Canadian Wheat Board and CN to renege on their commitments. Just two weeks ago, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) confirmed that no grain shipments will be made through the port this year. Rather than look for alternate and creative ways of utilizing the port, the Government has preferred to ignore the problem.

I would like to draw the attention of the House to an innovative proposal which has been put forward by the Member from Niakwa in the Manitoba legislature. He has introduced a private members' resolution recommending that the federal Government designate Churchill as the port for federal commodity and foreign aid purposes. Rather than losing Churchill to further neglect, the federal Government could give this new mandate to ship all foreign food in through the port of Churchill and thereby provide aid for the countries of Africa, and to provide major stimulus and economic health for a port in our own country.

I applaud and support this creative initiative. I recommend it to the federal Government as a way of dealing with an important port in an important province.

NATIONAL ENVIRONMENT WEEK

Mr. Garth Turner (Halton—Peel): Mr. Speaker, last weekend I worked with a number of citizens in communities in my riding, Bolton and Burlington, doing something for the environment.

We did not have a meeting. We did not talk. We did not prepare a report or pass any resolution. Instead, we got our hands and our boots dirty, scouring ditches for litter and pulling old car parts from a creek.

There were not as many people out helping as I had hoped, but I think this tells us something valuable. This is Environment Week. It comes at a time when our public opinion polls show that environmental concerns are of the utmost importance to average Canadians. It is still easier to talk about the environment than to do something about it. My weekend experiences certainly reinforced that.

It is time for a change in attitudes. It is time to recognize that we all have an activist role to play when it comes to ensuring that future generations of Canadians have a clean world to inherit from us.

In our everyday lives, we have choices about buying groceries with excessive packaging, about the disposal of paint cans and batteries, about whether we substitute natural substances for harmful household cleaners, and about conserving our water and making sure we drive in a way that does not create air pollution. Protecting the environment is not somebody else's job, Mr. Speaker. It is yours and mine, so it is time we all did something about it.

HEALTH AND SAFETY

WORKPLACE HAZARDOUS MATERIALS INFORMATION SYSTEM

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, over 800,000 work days are lost annually by Canadians to disabling injuries and over 440 lives are lost annually in Canada due to industrial accidents.

As a result, more than $7 billion is spent annually to cover medical expenses, compensation for lost earnings, pensions, insurance and loss of production. Accidents carry a high price. Recently, the Workplace Hazardous Materials Information System was imposed by Governments across Canada. It ensures access to data and instruction on how to handle dangerous material by workers. This, however, did little to change the working environment.

Canadian occupational health and safety statistics are abysmal and becoming worse. In spite of this, the Government has seen fit to decrease funding by over 11 per cent towards occupational health and safety.

Canadian workers do not deserve more cuts, Mr. Speaker. They deserve action and more direct input into resolving and eliminating occupational hazards in the workplace.

THE PUNJAB

FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF STORMING OF GOLDEN TEMPLE

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, today marks the fifth anniversary of the storming of the Golden Temple in the Punjab by the Indian army. It is therefore appropriate to reflect on the ongoing problems faced by the Sikh community in India.

Amnesty International reports allegations that dozens of political prisoners in Indian prisons have died after being tortured while in police custody and also that there have been staged encounters by the police in which political activists were killed. Other reports indicate that hundreds of Sikhs are being kept in jail awaiting trial, many without any formal charges against them.

Included among those imprisoned is a Canadian landed immigrant, Mr. Amarjit Singh Sohi, a member of the Punjabi Literary Association of Edmonton. He went to India last April to work in drama and human rights groups, and was arrested in November while attending a convention. He was charged with being a Sikh terrorist. There is apparently no evidence to support the charge, but Mr. Sohi remains in detention.

Mr. Speaker, the vast majority of Sikh people favour a peaceful resolution of the difficulties in the Punjab. Continued harassment and repression by Indian authorities contribute nothing to such a resolution. I urge the Canadian Government to use its influence and express our concern to India regarding that country's treatment of Sikhs, and particularly Canadian Sikhs who visit India.

NATIONAL ENVIRONMENT WEEK

Mr. J. W. Bud Bird (Fredericton): Mr. Speaker, in the context of National Environment Week in Canada, I wish to remind Canadians that there are two distinct perspectives evolving in the world's approach to managing our planet earth, both for our and future generations.

Dr. Jim MacNeill, Secretary of the World Commission on Environment and Development, has made these two perspectives very clear. The first is environmental protection, the area with which we have thus far been primarily concerned. It is critical that we intensify our efforts to clean and protect our environment from the ways we abuse and misuse its resources. We should understand though that in so doing, we are generally reacting to effects from our activities.

The second is sustainable development, the more recent recognition that merely reacting to protect our environment is not enough. We must do more. We must pro-act to manage our future use of the world's resources so that we may cause both those resources and humanity to be sustained in perpetuity.

In both of these perspectives—environmental protection and sustainable development—the world has much to accomplish. Canada can set that lead.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

VIOLENCE IN CHINA—EVACUATION OF CANADIANS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I have a question or two for the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Canadians and the world watch in horror as events unfold of the terrifying spectacle in the most populous nation on earth. The world watches as young Chinese are killed because Government leaders there are playing power games and because the Chinese authorities refuse to recognize the legitimacy of a valued and brave struggle for freedom.

When does he anticipate that Canadians will have been evacuated from China? How many Canadians does the Government expect will remain in that country?

I would like to ask him whether, upon reflection overnight, he has come to a decision, which I urge him to take, to use our seat on the Security Council of the United Nations to initiate a motion of censure in that body against the People's Republic of China.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition for his questions. He placed three.

A chartered Canadian Airlines International aircraft is on its way to Beijing. It will be leaving Beijing, carrying more than 200 Canadians out. It will be leaving in about 12 hours from now en route to Tokyo. There are about 210 Canadians who have indicated an interest in being on the aircraft. There are still spaces available.

It is our intention to remove all Canadians from Beijing with the exception of about 20 of the more senior officials of the Department of External Affairs who will remain on site for the foreseeable future. If circumstances require their removal, then that will be done.

• (1420)

At the moment we are not recommending the evacuation from other points in China of other Canadians who are there. There are about 300 other Canadians elsewhere in China. We have identified the whereabouts of virtually all of them, although we are checking to make sure that we know the exact location of tourists or business persons who might be in some more remote parts of the country. We have arrangements in place, if necessary, to bring them out.

We have dispatched today a Canadian Air Force plane which will stand by on a military base in Japan in case there is a need for further evacuation.

With respect to the actions in the United Nations, as the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and other Members of the House made clear last night, this country has been very active in the recent and, until this point, progressive history of China. We have excellent credentials to exercise a leadership role in responding to these tragic events.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition will know the judgment of the Secretary General of the United Nations who drew attention yesterday to the requirements of the Charter of the United Nations, that the United Nations should abstain from intervention in regard to matters that are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction of states. Obviously, disorder and conflict in a country as large and as powerful as China cannot long remain an internal matter.

One hour ago I was in touch with Ambassador Fortier in the United Nations. He is continuing his active consultations with members of the Security Council and other members of the United Nations to explore every possible and practical opportunity for Canada to exercise leadership in allowing the United Nations also to express its outrage at these actions and perhaps to have an influence that could encourage Chinese leaders to adopt a more positive, less dangerous course.

CONSULTATIONS WITH OTHER NATIONS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the thoroughness of the Minister's answers on the information I requested in the first part of my question.

I would urge him with respect to the United Nations to recognize that human rights know no boundaries or frontiers and that this is an issue involving human kind. I know he wants to act prudently. I hope that he acts decisively on behalf of the people of Canada in the United Nations.

Could the Secretary of State be good enough to advise us what consultations his Government has had with the United States, Great Britain, and other nations as to the possible consequences for the world if the current thrust of the Chinese Government persists in that country?

Will the Chinese Government be advised that we in this country will have great difficulty in accepting a transfer of Hong Kong to the jurisdiction of the People's Republic of China if these events continue?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and the House would expect, we are in active consultation with a range of other countries, not simply our normal allies but a range of other countries with an interest in the stability of China. We are doing that bilaterally. We are doing it at the United Nations, particularly with regard to other members of the Security Council. To a limited degree we are exchanging information on the ground in Beijing among missions that are there.

There are a number of other questions that will have to be faced in the days, perhaps early days to come with relation, for example, to the status of the Chinese application to the GATT, with relation to the future of CIDA projects, with relation to the EDC line of credit, and with relation to the specific question the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has raised concerning the status of Hong Kong.

We are fortunate in this country to have very experienced officials who have spent a lot of time in China. We are making full use of their expertise.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition would agree that we do not want to make any of those decisions too quickly, but we want to be in a position to take them immediately when the time is appropriate. I hope that we are following the course that I believe will put us in that position.

REQUEST AS TO PLANNING OF HUMANITARIAN AID

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Finally, Mr. Speaker, could the Minister inform the House of the new steps that have been taken or will be taken by Canada to provide humanitarian aid through the Red Cross or other volunteer organizations?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I made it clear last night during the emergency debate here in the House that Canada is prepared to offer humanitarian aid, in response to official requests from the Red Cross and other organizations. So far, I don't think we have received any official requests, but I made it clear that Canada is prepared to make an affirmative response to such requests.

IMMIGRATION

SPONSORSHIP OF FAMILIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Immigration and it too concerns the situation in China.

Yesterday's announcement to halt deportations of all rejected Chinese refugees for 60 days, along with the Secretary of State's decision not to send back some 4,500 Chinese students presently studying in Canada, was an exemplary response to the tragedy we have all witnessed during the past few days. I commend the Minister and her colleagues in the Government for those decisions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchi: Last year, only 2,700 people were landed in Canada from the People's Republic of China. Today the Canadian-Chinese community, which numbers somewhere in the area of 400,000 across Canada, is somewhat concerned for the safety of family members, not only in Beijing but throughout China.

Given the circumstances of the events in China, and the low acceptance rate in the last number of years of Chinese citizens, is the Government prepared to specifically relax the family class and the assisted family class criteria in order that more Canadian-Chinese families will have an easier and more successful time in sponsoring relatives from China to Canada?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the Hon. Member for his support and sensitivity to the issues before us all in the House.

We will be working closely with my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs to ensure that Canadians of Chinese origin have all the help that they can get in terms of information having to do with their own families.

As the Hon. Member knows, part of the problem has traditionally been the difficulty getting exist visas from China. We will be pursuing every avenue that we can in humanitarian terms with my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

REQUEST FOR SPECIAL PROGRAM FOR CHINESE IMMIGRANTS

Mr. Tom Wappel (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is also directed to the Minister of Immigration and, of course, it concerns China.

All Members of the House and Canadians are well aware of the problem and are sympathetic to the Chinese people in their struggle for democracy. While we hope and pray that the situation will improve, in view of the explosive nature of the situation, will the Minister consider setting up a special program to deal with those people who wish to escape China as it presently is?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in my first answer, we have great concern and will be working with the Secretary of State on any measures that the Government can do as a whole that can be helpful.

We will also be discussing those measures with the UN High Commissioner on Refugees, as we do when special situations arise, and we will continue to ensure that we are doing everything that we can to help the Chinese.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I would like to preface my comments by complimenting the Government, specifically the Secretary of State for External Affairs, for the high level of competence and the deep level of concern that the Government of Canada is showing in this tragic situation in China.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1430)

Mr. Broadbent: I assume the Minister will continue to keep the House informed both of new developments in that country and what the Government of Canada is doing.

TRANSPORTATION

VIA RAIL SERVICES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I would like now to address my question to the Minister of Transport.

I have here a copy of the letter sent from a special adviser to the Prime Minister dated October 14, 1988, that is to say in the middle of the recent federal election campaign, in which this sentence occurs with reference to the plans for VIA Rail:

> The plan is for specific capital programs to enhance the quality and reliability of VIA's services.

It goes on to say: "commitment is made to expand the dollar amount and improve the service of VIA Rail".

Is the Minister of Transport happy that a letter in the middle of an election should be sent out in which a commitment is made to expand and improve VIA Rail service and then after election the Government moves in precisely the opposite direction?

An Hon. Member: Double-cross.

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I believe the April Budget brought down by the Minister of Finance was quite clear on the matter. The new reference levels we gave the Crown Corporation VIA Rail basically reflect our ability to invest in a transport mode that Canadians use only 3 to 4 per cent of the time. There is work to be done in developing transportation in Canada, something we have been trying to do since 1984, with relatively conclusive results. However, I repeat, Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear we can no longer afford to invest $600 or $700 million annually in a corporation that Canadians are using less and less or not at all. That is why, in consultation with the Department of Finance and the Government as a whole, we have used reference levels that will enable VIA Rail to let us know, to make proposals that the Government will deal with accordingly, in turns of the interests of developing transportation in Canada.

REDUCTION OF SERVICES – GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, one thing is quite clear: During the election campaign, the Government promised one thing, but after the campaign it did the exact opposite. Canadians have no trouble understanding that!

According to a report published today in the Globe and Mail, the Government intends to cut back services in the province of Québec. The Government promised during the campaign to increase services. There are 33 regional trains running in the province of Québec, but according to today's report, the Government intends to reduce those 33 regional trains to zero. Is that correct, according to the Minister?

[English]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the Leader of the New Democratic Party knows very well what I think about leaked documents.

For Quebec or for any other province, it is exactly the same. This report has not been given to anybody in the Department. I have never seen the report.

Before the end of June VIA Rail will give the proposals that we have requested. They will be considered by the Government, and then we will give the answer. Until then I have nothing to do with a leaked document.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, we know what the Government thinks of leaked documents, and we know what the people of Canada think of this Government, too.

POSITION OF GOVERNMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, considering the Minister says that he has not received the report yet, will he give us assurances that the Government will not move in the direction indicated in this report?

Specifically it says with reference to regional service in Atlantic Canadathat the recommendation will be to reduce regional service from 52 trains to zero. In terms of western trains the recommendation is to reduce service from 36 trains to 8. As I said earlier, in the Province of Quebec regional service will go from 33 trains to zero.

Since this would amount to the complete decimation of rail service in Canada, will the Minister give us his assurance that these regional trains will not be reduced along these lines and that the Government will live up to the commitment it made in the 1988 election campaign?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first I want to deal with what Canadians think about our Party and the Hon. Member's Party. They saw the difference on November 21.

Second, of course I will not give any commitment. VIA Rail will make proposals. We will consider the proposals. We will make a decision. Once again, I will not give any guarantee because VIA Rail has not even given any proposal.

IMPACT OF CORPORATE PLAN

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Transport, and it concerns the future of VIA Rail in our country.

Today we were advised that VIA Rail's five-year corporate plan will eliminate almost half or 48 per cent of all VIA Rail's total operations as we know them in Canada. This plan calls for the elimination of all 52 regional services in Atlantic Canada, 33 in Quebec, all 23 in Ontario, and 7 in the West. Now that we have heard what the VIA Rail budget cuts were, we know what is the plan for VIA Rail and VIA Rail workers in Canada.

Will the Minister tell the House and Canadians today, especially the workers at VIA Rail, what are the plans for their future employment in Canada?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my friend is lucky to have been advised about the future of VIA Rail. I have not been yet. I will be, yes; the Minister will be advised, but by VIA Rail of course. We can be advised by the Leader of the Opposition, but what does it mean? I want to be advised by VIA Rail, and when I will be advised by VIA Rail I will make up my mind.

Mr. Comuzzi: Just in reply to the Minister, some of us were not advised about the Budget, either, but we had to make a comment on it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, how has the Minister allowed this corporate plan of VIA Rail to proceed to this extent, to the end of the month when it is going to be revealed, without involving the people who are going to be unemployed, laid off, without involving the communities in small towr or rural Canada that are going to be so disastrously affected? Will he answer that question?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is again assuming that a certain proposal will be made in a document submitted by VIA Rail. I think it only makes sense to wait until proposals are made in terms of the references we have given. Then, and only then, will we be able to criticize the choices that were made, but until those choices are made, I do not intend to refer, I repeat, to leak documents. This is certainly not the way to take a serious approach to the proposals that will be made by VIA Rail. That is quite clear!

THE BUDGET

POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister, and it concerns failed attempts by the Government to hide the second budget leak.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: On May 31, 1989 the Prime Minister said, as reported at page 2374 of Hansard and in response to my question:

> The suggestion that the Government took a decision to hide information from the people of Canada is, of course, an absolute and complete fabrication and falsehood.

Given the latest revelations that Mr. Stanley Hartt, the Prime Minister's Chief of Staff participated in a top level meeting of officials at which it was decided to hide information from Parliament and from the people of Canada, is the Prime Minister now ready to stand up in the House of Commons to tell us how it really happened?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated to the House, the statement made by the Hon. Member on that date was false and a fabrication, and the statement contained in Maclean's magazine this week is false and a fabrication.

Mr. Boudria: It is interesting to note that everyone is false except the Prime Minister.

[Translation]

THE SECOND LEAK—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary. According to Maclean's magazine, Mr. Hartt, the Prime Minister's Chief of Staff, advised the Prime Minister to keep quiet and to hide the second Budget leak from the Canadian people.

Considering these facts, is the Prime Minister now prepared to inform the House why the decision was made to hide the second Budget leak? And who was party to this decision to hide the leak?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the suggestion was false in English and is equally false in French.

TRANSPORTATION

VIA RAIL SERVICES

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

During the election campaign in 1988, there was a promise made through the Prime Minister's Office to enhance the quality and reliability of VIA services. In the Budget, not many months later, $1.2 billion was cut from the level of subsidy going from the Government of Canada to VIA Rail. The Government was saying one thing before the election and did exactly the opposite after the election.

Will the Minister be so good as to tell the House what was the difference before and after the election, other than a desire of the Conservative Government to hoodwink the people of Canada just to get elected?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my friend is referring to before the election. On April 27 the Minister of Finance tabled his Budget in which $500 million less was given to VIA Rail.

We have asked the corporation to tell the Government what it intends to do with the new referred levels. I repeat what we have always said, that we cannot afford to put more money into VIA Rail. We will try to give the services but within the new referred levels.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, there was not much difference in the economy between the time of the election and the Budget. What changed overnight so that in 1988 the Government felt it had enough money in order to enhance the viability of VIA Rail and then turned around and said it did not have the money?

Second, did the Government, not VIA, do any studies whatsoever to determine the level of operating subsidies for VIA Rail, or did it just pick that out of the air?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the studies which have been done were by the Department of Finance on the capacity of Canada to put money in a corporation that is not used by Canadians.

Mr. Benjamin: Where is the Department of Transport?

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): The NDP wants to keep VIA Rail. They do not use VIA Rail.

An Hon. Member: There are not enough seats.

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): I am sorry, we on this side of the House do not have the money that you have.

THE BUDGET

POSITION OF STAFF MEMBER

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The saga continues. On May 25, the Hon. Minister of Finance, in response to a question, said:

> Mr. Speaker, I made it quite clear that my office knew at 1.30. I found out later in that afternoon.

That was referring to the budget leak. I understand that the questions cause some concern, but they cause concern to a great many more Canadians than just those who sit in the House. That is why they need to be pursued.

On June 5, the Minister of Finance said in response to a question:

> When the call came in from Mr. Masterman he went to see the Deputy Minister of Finance, and events moved from there for the further discussion that Mr. Gorbet had with Mr. Masterman and subsequently the RCMP.

The Minister indicated yesterday in his response that it was non-political people who had been involved in this process. My question to the Minister of Finance is fairly direct—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Let's hear it.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, the question is very difficult to put because the answers have been tough to get.

Is Mr. Richard Rémillard a political appointment on the Minister's staff?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Rémillard is a political assistant on my staff.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Gloucester on a short supplementary question.

Mr. Andre: Follow his example and keep it short.

Mr. Young (Gloucester): The Hon. Minister is pretty short, and a lot of people know that, in a lot of ways.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Sometimes being short is helpful. Please put the question.

POSITION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister of Finance still going to stick to his version of how this matter has unfolded, that he is satisfied that his staff did not advise him from 1.30 when they were made aware of this so-called second leak, that he did not advise the House—

Mr. Speaker: The Minister may wish to reply.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the question.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Burin—St. Georges.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

TRANSBOUNDARY FISH STOCKS DISPUTE

Hon. Roger E. Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It relates to last week's establishment of a working committee between the European Community and the Government to deal with the dispute relating to the transboundary fish stocks off Newfoundland.

The Minister will be aware that his colleague, the Minister for International Trade, has already publicly stated that he does not hold out much hope that the foreign fleets can be convinced not to continue overfishing. He has also dismissed the idea of extending jurisdiction to include the nose and tail of the Grand Banks.

Has the Government already thrown in the towel on the whole issue, or is it just diverting attention while it proceeds to cave in to the European Community as it has already done to France in relation to the 3PS fish issue?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, none of the above. What was signed and agreed to in Brussels is an important step forward in terms of process. The Vice-President of the European Community, on behalf of the commission, agreed with Canada to establish a process that would be based upon two very important principles: one being the conservation of the stocks and the other being the principle of rational management.

The case that Canada has been making to the Europeans, to the Community; making bilaterally when the Prime Minister met with the Prime Minister of Spain and the Prime Minister of Portugal; and has been making generally is that if current European overfishing practices continue, there will be no fish left for Canadians, no fish left for Europeans. It is consequently important for us to have the Europeans accept the principle of conservation as a basis of this discussion. That is what has occurred.

FISHERIES

SPECIAL CONTINGENCY PROGRAM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. William Rompkey (Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans. In Hansard on May 16, in answer to a request by the Hon. Member for Burin—St. George's for a special contingency program for the east coast fishery, the Minister said:

> I will undertake to appear before the Standing Committee next week and describe in detail the plans which he has asked me to enumerate.

It was a special contingency plan. Yet the Minister came before the committee on May 30 and said: "Business as usual. There will be no special relief plan".

Why did he mislead the House and the fishermen and plant workers of Atlantic Canada? Why does the Government not have a special relief program for Atlantic Canada as it did for farmers in the Prairies and auto workers in Ontario? Why will he not stand up and commit himself to an income support program for Atlantic Canada?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, first, the plans that I spoke of related to the direction of the question asked by the Hon. Member who asked the previous question, with respect to matters within my jurisdiction as Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, dealing with quotas, with enforcement measures, and with the management of the fishery.

I did indeed appear before the committee and attempt to describe those plans in detail but for the insistent interruptions of opposition Members who were more inclined to make speeches than to listen to my detailed response.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

HEALTH

NATIONAL STRATEGY ON AIDS

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It deals with the AIDS situation. Yesterday he made another speech on the question. It was full of words but there was no substance, just as he has done in the last year or so in the House. For example, on May 3—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

• (1450)

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question, please.

Mr. Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, in spite of the many commitments the Prime Minister has made about the programs with regard to AIDS, we have a situation in which the Minister of National Health and Welfare said a couple of times over the last month that we have no AIDS strategy or plan.

Is it the Prime Minister who is right with his grandiose statements about what the Government has done on AIDS, or is it the Minister of Health who is right, who has said we have been slow and we do not have a plan or a strategy to deal with AIDS?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, I must say that in the past two years, the federal government's contribution to the conference being held in Montreal has been very substantial.

In June 1988, we added a budget because as a government, we are very concerned about a major social issue that is international in nature. As the Prime Minister said so eloquently yesterday, our concerns are in the areas of education, public awareness and research. The Minister of National Health and Welfare is engaging in consultations at this very moment, and we certainly intend to take the present situation very seriously.

[English]

TIMING OF NATIONAL STRATEGY

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. When are we going to have this strategy? We have had a 2,200 per cent increase in the number of people suffering from AIDS in this country in the five years this Government has been in power and still there is no program.

When are we going to have a strategy? When are we going to have a program to deal with AIDS?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Vézina (Minister of State (Employment and Immigration) and Minister of State (Seniors)): Mr. Speaker, how can a Member of the House of Commons issue this kind of ultimatum? This is a serious matter. We are concerned, and we are engaged in consultations. We have invested substantial funding, and after these consultations, we intend to respond to specific needs. This Government consults. I think that is to its credit, and we will decide on our strategy when we are ready.

POSITION OF MINISTER OF FINANCE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, why does the Minister of Finance find it so difficult to recognize that it is hard to believe that when his departmental assistant was informed by the President of Mutual Life at 1.30 on the afternoon of April 27 of the budget leak the Minister was not advised immediately? It is equally incredible to understand why, when his politically appointed press secretary was informed about the same time, the Minister was not immediately informed.

This being said, why did the Minister at least not come clean with the House of Commons later that afternoon when he presented his Budget? Who authorized this cover-up, not only on April—

Mr. Speaker: I think the question has been put.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, a number of those questions have already been answered, but there is one question that I believe the Hon. Member from New Brunswick was trying to put and the Hon. Leader of the Opposition has put in relation to my press secretary. He was advised some time around three o'clock. I think that that is something that the Right Hon. Member should understand.

POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is incredible that the Minister was not informed immediately. Why did he not present the facts later that afternoon? He has to be involved with an entire governmental decision led by the Prime Minister.

Who authorized the cover-up? Why did the Minister of Finance, knowing the necessity for his credibility in the country, accept the judgment of the Prime Minister to cover it up for 28 full days?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I have heard a number of definitions of cover-up. How can there be a cover-up when we went straight to the RCMP and provided them with the information—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

IMMIGRATION

NUMBER OF LEBANESE IMMIGRANTS

Mrs. Edna Anderson (Simcoe Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Yesterday in the House, the Hon. Member for York West criticized the Government for its record on Lebanese immigration to Canada. In the course of doing so, the Member provided certain figures which he said demonstrated the Government's shortcomings in this respect.

Could the Minister please confirm or deny—

An Hon. Member: Question.

Mrs. Anderson: —the figures provided to the House yesterday?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to have a chance to clarify this matter. As I said yesterday, I have been monitoring this situation virtually on a daily basis.

I know Hon. Members who have an interest in this issue will be glad to know that family class applicants are now receiving service in Cyprus on a walk in basis. I did want to clarify that the number of Lebanese who have been landed in Canada this year is 1,179. That compares with 813 in 1983.

CONFIRMATION OF OFFICIAL FIGURES

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question—

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mr. Marchi: Relax.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member on a supplementary question.

An Hon. Member: What is the subject again?

Mr. Marchi: Loosen the pants, Harvie.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put his question.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question because one of her own Members is alleging that I misled the House, and I did not.

Would the Minister confirm whether or not in the last month after she announced the official person in Cyprus, more than 131 people were landed permanently under her so-called special programs. If that is not the case, then why did her officials give us those figures at last week's committee meetings?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I think what is important about this is that the Government has been doing everything that it can in Lebanon.

An Hon. Member: Answer the question.

Mrs. McDougall: Perhaps the Hon. Member would like an answer. The special measures are a continuation of the special measures program that has been in place in Lebanon for some time. They were the special measures which were put in place by the former Government. It is a program that we are proud to continue. We think it is a good program. What we have done is speed up the process, through doing it in Cyprus, and we have landed 1,179 people.

JUSTICE

EXTRADITION ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, our extradition treaty makes it possible to send someone back to the United States from a Canadian prison at any time the Justice Minister sees possible and would like to do it.

Since the Act does not allow this and it states "shall not send back", and since the departmental officials of the Minister of Justice have agreed that the Act does not agree with the treaty, would he be willing to consider changing the Extradition Act so that it would agree with the extradition treaty with the United States and we could send these American criminals back to the United States from our Canadian jails before the expiration of their complete sentence, which in some cases is life?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the act clearly states that where there is an extradition arrangement the provisions of the arrangement or the treaty take precedence over the Act.

The decision whether or not to extradite is a decision with discretion in the hands of the Minister of Justice. I appreciate the concerns with respect to the treaty and the Act. As I said before, we are trying to balance our responsibilities under the treaty with the rights of every individual to due process of law.

REQUEST FOR FULL PUBLIC HEARINGS

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina—Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment. He will know that the preliminary report on the impact study on the Rafferty–Alameda dam project was released yesterday. He will also know that that report identified some very major negative impacts of that project, as well as some major deficiencies on the impact study done by the Province of Saskatchewan.

Is the Government prepared to move to full public hearings, rather than the public meetings they are having now, and an independent panel to deal with this project?

• (1500)

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as all Members of the House know, on April 10, Federal Court Judge Mr. Justice Cullen issued an order setting aside the licence granted in June of 1988 on the grounds that the environmental assessment review process had not been complied with. As a result of that court decision, this Government naturally agreed to comply with that request, and we are now in the process of doing so. In fact, what was made public yesterday, or perhaps this morning, was the initial assessment, which is the first stage in that process.

The Minister also agreed, although it is not required by the guidelines, that public meetings be held in several locations in the Provinces of Saskatchewan and Manitoba so there be ample opportunity for public input. Those meetings have now been scheduled. They will be held in three localities in Saskatchewan and three localities in Manitoba. There will be ample opportunity for the public to make representation at those meetings.

As a result of this process, and the public input will be a part of that process, the appropriate authorities will then make a recommendation to the Minister, when required, as to whether or not there should be a second stage. That second stage would be the independent panel to which the Hon. Member has referred.

REQUEST FOR FULL PUBLIC HEARINGS TO BE ANNOUNCED

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina—Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. The report was tabled yesterday revealing the major deficiencies of the Saskatchewan impact studies, on which the licence was issued by this Government, surely that is enough for the Government to declare that there be full public hearings held. In other words, move the process over. Don't wait to decide whether you will hold public hearings somewhere down the road.

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated, there are guidelines in place. I would note as well that Mr. Justice Cullen in his review of the case before him gave those guidelines virtually the force of law. We are now complying with those guidelines.

In this particular case, as the Hon. Member said, a detailed document was made available to the public. I note that the detail in this document surely puts to rest the criticisms of those groups which have said this process is a white–wash. It very clearly is not a white–wash.

FINANCE

TAX BENEFITS FOR NORTHERN AND ISOLATED COMMUNITIES

Mr. Guy H. Arseneault (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. The present system of tax benefits for northern and isolated areas is unfair. Some towns manage to qualify, while nearby communities are denied the benefits.

Last week the Minister of Finance announced in a press release that he was changing the mandate of the Task Force on Northern Benefits because it would provide more flexibility.

[Translation]

The press release issued by the Minister of Finance was obviously intended to influence the task force's report. Could the Minister inform the House whether he intends to eliminate these benefits in communities that already receive them, or could the Minister inform the House whether he now intends to deny these benefits to the communities that deserve them and are not receiving them, as is the case with the communities in my own riding of Restigouche?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member has said, we did ask a task force to review the whole system of northern benefits. That task force is still operating. I expect we will have its report sometime later this year, October or November. After we receive the report, we will be able to make decisions based on the recommendations they make.

PANEL OF CHAIRMEN OF LEGISLATIVE COMMITTEES

DESIGNATION OF ADDITIONAL MEMBERS

Mr. Speaker: I wish to inform the House that the names of the additional Members appointed under the provisions of Standing Order 112 to constitute the Panel of Chairmen are as follows: Maurice Dionne, Louis Plamondon, Geoff Scott, Marcel Tremblay and Brian White.

POINT OF ORDER

BILL C-19 – DISPUTE AS TO TIME

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order, having given you notice at the first opportunity since I discovered some new information.

Yesterday in this House, dealing with a piece of legislation at approximately five o'clock, the Acting Speaker put the question on the approval at second reading. By my eye, the clock was past 5 p.m. When I raised the matter with the Deputy Speaker, he indicated that his clock showed it was not yet five o'clock.

However, I noticed in today's Hansard on page 2579, and you will note that Hansard duly records the times based on ten-minute intervals, but immediately following the notation of (1700), Hansard reads:

> The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

I want to make two brief points. It is clear that there is some disagreement as to which clock says what. I accept the words of the Deputy Speaker when he indicates to us that his clock showed it was not yet five o'clock. However, that is different from what Hansard shows and what the clock in the Chamber showed.

Mr. Speaker, I want to respectfully request, because two out of three clocks said it was after five o'clock, that you rule the matter is still before us. Therefore, the vote that is scheduled for six o'clock should be cancelled and we can resume debate on this particular Bill under Government Orders at the appropriate time.

Secondly, and I think more importantly in the long term, we should move to have electronic digital-display clocks that are clearly visible to all of us, both the Speaker and the Members of the House, so there can be no question on this matter. This has happened a number of times before, usually around the adjournment hour. Clearly, the Standing Orders show that at exactly five o'clock on Tuesdays we go to Private Members' Business. In fact, my colleagues and I assumed that would happen and were quite surprised by the quick move to complete the debate on that particular Bill.

Point of Order--Mr. Angus

I accept your judgment, Mr. Speaker, and I want to draw it to your attention and ask that you pursue these two matters.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, that was legislation standing in my name. It is quite clear that when the Acting Speaker was in the chair yesterday that he was seeing the clock and felt it was well within the rules that the question be put.

There is another question that must be addressed, and it relates to something that has been ongoing for some time. It is one thing to make an argument the day after that the clock was not seen accurately. However, the Hon. Member who just spoke, was not in his seat. In fact, he was speaking to the Whip of the Liberal Party at that time. When he was speaking to the Whip of the Liberal Party at the Whip's desk, the Acting Speaker called whether there was any further debate, and the NDP had exhausted the number of speakers they had in the House at that time. So there was the time-honoured attempt by the NDP to put forward a specious point of order in order that they could get the time past five o'clock so that the Speaker could not put the question.

That is what happened yesterday, and I believe the Acting Speaker was well within the rules of the House.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the Hon. Minister, I must disagree. We all recognize that this place operates on goodwill.

Mr. Milliken: On rules, too.

Mr. Riis: As well as rules.

At about five o'clock, there were considerable negotiations taking place between the parties. The Whips, Deputy Whips and Deputy House Leaders were discussing the matter of achieving unanimity on a motion that could be put before the House in terms of the Adjournment Debate later in the evening.

Just prior to five o'clock, when the Hon. Member was in the lobby watching the clock so that he could come in to participate in the debate, he noticed that the clock said 5 p.m. When the clock says 5 p.m., very clearly that is when the adjournment occurs in terms of the debate.

As Hansard points out on page 2579, it is very clear that five o'clock had arrived. After five o'clock is when the Acting Speaker then asked, "Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?"

• (1510)

It is very clear by reading Hansard that that was after five. Naturally, no one from the government side or the opposition side would be rising to speak because five o'clock had come and passed.

What we are doing is suggesting that the vote scheduled to occur at six o'clock is out of order, that had the Speaker followed the traditional rules, followed the traditions of the House and been sensitive to the very important negotiations that were under way at that moment, no way would we have had the question put in a period after 5 p.m.

We are asking that you rule on this matter and suggest that we have two or three additional speakers, Members who were awaiting an opportunity to participate in this important debate. There was no filibuster effort, as the Minister knows. He rose. There were a few speakers and there is no suggestion of any effort to prolong the debate. He knows it is an important piece of legislation. There were two or three NDP Members interested in participating in the debate, but now they have been curtailed from participation at the second reading stage of this important legislation.

I assume it was an oversight on behalf of the Acting Speaker at the time. But, as Hansard points out very clearly, the question was put after five o'clock when we should have been on Private Members' Business.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, back in 1980, perhaps early 1981, I rose in the Chamber at some length on a question of privilege related to the clocks. It might be wise to check the precedents, but my recollection is that the Speaker at that time did indicate clearly to the Chamber that the clock in front of the Speaker was the dominant clock in terms of the Speaker's world. That was several years ago. I think that was part of what was said yesterday. I just draw your attention to the precedent.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, if this House is going to be running on clocks that nobody sees except the Speaker, we have a problem. This House runs on good will, debate, and on the understanding that people can rise in their places and debate Bills on which they decide to speak. Liberals had no intention of speaking. It is true, since my name was brought into the debate, that I was negotiating with the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) when the Speaker rose at five o'clock sharp and put the question. At that time, the Member ran to go to his seat because he wanted to object to that procedure and call for debate. That is what I was told, that is what I believe and, as far as I am concerned, the procedure yesterday was rather quick.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I believe there is a way to resolve this situation. As my hon. friend, the Whip for the Official Opposition indicated, this House operates on rules, regulations, traditions and, most importantly, goodwill. There is no intention to cut off debate prematurely. The Official Opposition Whip has described accurately the effort of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) to get to his seat. It was simply a matter of wrong time viewed by the Acting Speaker. Perhaps there would be unanimous consent of the Members to not have the vote tonight and so allow those few Members an opportunity to complete their remarks at a later day.

Mr. Angus: Mr. Speaker, not to belabour the point but I am reminded by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw—Lake Centre (Mr. Laporte), that when the Hon. Member for Kootenay West—Revelstoke (Mr. Kristiansen) started speaking, the clock in the Chamber showed 4.32 p.m. for a 20-minute speech followed by a 10-minute question and answer period. But the Member from Moose Jaw—Lake Centre was, in fact, on his feet at the time the Acting Speaker rose, trying to get the floor to pursue the remaining two minutes in terms of questions and answers. I think that should be taken into consideration and perhaps, Mr. Speaker, you might wish to check the very meticulous records kept at the table in front of you in terms of the start times for various speakers, because I know that that is what the Speaker has to adhere to.

In any case, I do want to remind you that the long-term result is to have one clock that we can all see so there can be no question about not seeing the clock unless we all agree that we are not going to see the clock.

Mr. Murray W. Dorin (Edmonton Northwest): Mr. Speaker, I would want to intervene briefly. I was present yesterday when the events took place as described by the Official Opposition Whip, and they were essentially as described. I would point out that if there is any question at all, it is whether or not there should be a deferred division. It is true that the Deputy House Leader for the New Democratic Party did try to make his way back to his seat to get the floor, but he had already spoken as had the other three Members of that Party who were present in the House and there were only four Members in the House.

Mr. Epp: Every one of them.

Mr. Dorin: The Liberals had no intention of speaking and when the vote was called, only four Members of the NDP were present and rose to request the recorded division. After some time a member of the Liberal Party rose but initially there was an indication that there would only be four Members seeking a recorded division. If there is any question at all, it is whether or not we should be having a recorded division. Frankly, there were not enough Members initially seeking that division.

Mr. Epp: That is right.

Mr. Dorin: I think it is clear that the matter came to a vote and one could argue that the Bill actually passed and there is no need for this recorded division.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, this is unfolding into a very strange debate. The point is that the House made a decision yesterday. We proceeded with the calling in of the Members. The Whip from the Government side requested, according to our rules, that the vote be deferred. That decision has been taken. I disagree with the procedure but I say a decision has been taken. It is there. We have to stand by it.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) who has been here for many years and who understands the working of this place as well as any of us has, of course, reduced the discussion to its essence.

The Speaker cannot go back in time, whatever the time was.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: What we have now is several things. We have an argument over which clock was right. I have been here when none of them were.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: But that does not take away from the fact that there was a complaint here. Clearly, members of the New Democratic Party did not wish at that point to proceed in answer to the question put by the Acting Speaker. It was not—I have to very gently and with great courtesy correct the Hon. Minister—"Shall the debate continue?" or words to that effect. It was "Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?" Now, whether that was said before five o'clock or after five o'clock, we have to accept the word of the Acting Speaker who was in the chair at that time and has clearly indicated that he was watching the clock.

The point I want to make is this: There has been discussion about the fact that this place operates ultimately on goodwill and that is true. All I can say to my hon. friends in the New Democratic Party is that I accept that what happened was not what they intended to happen. I think that Hon. Members will agree with me. I have deliberately allowed some discussion on this so that the members of the NDP are entitled to make their point. I had the feeling that even in the strong representations they made they realize that the Speaker cannot go back to yesterday and undo what has been done. As the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier has pointed out, the House has taken a decision.

However, it is a caution to all of us, those in the chair and those on both sides of the Chamber, that we must be alert, we must be following debate carefully and we must do it in such a way that nobody feels at any time that he or she has been unfairly treated or in any way prejudiced in trying to present the point of view of a particular Member or the point of view of a particular Party.

I regret that there has been this dispute. But I think Hon. Members can understand that we must accept what the Acting Speaker says as to his own point of view with respect to time. We also have to accept and I have to so rule, according to what the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier has so clearly stated, which is absolutely correct procedurally, that I cannot go back and undo what happened yesterday even if some particular Members might feel aggrieved. All I can ask is the co-operation of the House to be sure that these things happen very seldom, if at all.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration) moved that Bill C-21, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act and the Employment and Immigration Department and Commission Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to open the debate on Bill C-21, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act.

As Members are aware, these changes are a part of the Government's Labour Force Development Strategy. As such, they should not be considered in isolation from other elements of the strategy designed to improve the amount and quality of training in the private sector.

[English]

In fact, Mr. Speaker, failure to come to terms with training concerns throughout our labour market will severely affect Canada's ability to compete in the future.

All Ministers in the Government have been looking at the issues we must address to make Canada more competitive, more confident, and more compassionate. This means asking some tough questions.

How can Canada compete when our private sector spends on training only half of what its U.S. competition spends? How can we give our workers the skills they need to provide them with a more secure personal future? How do we better help our less prosperous regions? Can we afford any longer to have the easiest entry into unemployment insurance of almost any western country? Is our unemployment insurance program doing all it can to help Canadians get back into the workforce quickly and permanently?

The answers which our Government has come up with are clear from the announcement that I made on April 11 and in Bill C-21 which I was proud to introduce on June 1.

We did not expect any or all of these initiatives to be popular with everyone. In many ways, they redefine roles and responsibilities and they challenge vested interests. But we know that our approach works and we have the record to prove it.

Since we came to office in 1984, our philosophy as a Government has recognized that the private sector is the key to the future success of the Canadian workforce and the Canadian economy. Privatization, deregulation, tax reform and free trade are all parts of the same agenda for revitalizing the Canadian economy to meet the requirements of increased globalization of markets and rapid technological change.

[Translation]

The Labour Force Development Strategy will build on the Canadian Jobs Strategy model by bringing the private sector—business and labour—together to set the course for each sector and industry.

In 1985, our Government radically changed the approach to employment programs. We ended the mish-mash of more than 40 ineffective make-work programs with the Canadian Jobs Strategy.

We believe not in making work but in making jobs. Our new approach was to focus on the individual and his or her training needs. It also recognized that bureaucrats in Ottawa are not the people who should be determining what local labour market needs are. We brought in an approach that recognizes that the people who best know what is needed in a local economy are the people who live there.

Let us look at Bill C-21. Our Government believes that the unemployment insurance program can work better. The current variable entrance requirement was designed to reflect more closely the labour market differences across the country. However, with the many varying economic conditions across the country, the current system is too inflexible and limited. The result has been that people in areas such as Montreal, Moncton and St. John's face the same entrance requirements while facing very different employment prospects.

[English]

We have designed a new variable entrance requirement which is much more regionally sensitive. The result is that in areas of lower unemployment, where there are greater employment opportunities, Canadians have to wait a little longer to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits. As well, if you live in a low unemployment region, the duration of the benefits will be shorter. I stress that this will occur in areas where greater job opportunities exist.

As the unemployment rate rises, entrance requirements will be progressively easier to meet. Similarly, the duration of benefits available will reflect the varying degrees of difficulty that Canadians face in finding new jobs. The current entrance requirement ranges from 10 weeks to 14 weeks. We will increase the range from 10 weeks to 20 weeks, maintaining the 10-week requirement for regions with unemployment over 15 per cent.

The Government believes that the UI program must continue to reflect regional differences in unemployment. The new entrance requirements are therefore more regionally sensitive and fairer in this regard.

Mr. Speaker, those who are legitimately out of work, or who leave a job with good reason, deserve support. They will continue to receive it. The small minority who simply chooses not to work at various times should not be encouraged by a system paid for by all Canadians.

[Translation]

The UI system was not designed to serve that purpose. The Government has a responsibility to Canadians to see that the system helps those who genuinely need help and discourages those who just do not want to work.

Mr. Speaker, it is an irrefutable fact that in the world we now live in, people drive economic growth—"brainpower" and "skillpower"—and that our future growth will depend more than ever on a highly skilled, flexible labour force.

In individual terms, this means satisfaction and the rewards which go with better job qualifications.

Mr. Speaker, that is why under the Labour Force Development Strategy, the Government is doubling the money spent on training by the unemployment insurance program. There have been a lot of inaccurate statements made by Members opposite on what the Government is proposing in this area.

First, let me clearly state that the unemployment insurance program has been providing training to UI recipients for many years. This practice was initiated by the previous Liberal Government.

[English]

The UI account currently spends $255 million annually in income support for those who take training while on unemployment insurance. Many of these people need additional assistance. Through the Canadian Jobs Strategy, the Government also spends considerable funds to purchase the courses, to provide dependant care allowances and transportation costs for these UI recipients.

Mr. Speaker, under Bill C-21, clause 20, it will be possible to pay for a portion of the current CJS costs devoted to UI claimants out of the UI account. This makes room in the Canadian Jobs Strategy to pay for the programs outlined in the labour force development strategy which do not go directly to UI recipients.

We are doubling the funds allocated to section 26 training under this program. This is consistent with recommendation 40(a) of the report of the Standing Committee on Labour and Employment Immigration from the last Parliament on their study of the Forget Report to increase the use of section 26 training. Hon. Members can clearly see from Bill C-21 that UI funds will continue to be used to assist only UI recipients.

Another important aspect of this Bill is contained under clause 20. That is the provision for claimants to be able to receive assistance in helping them move to places where they may have found employment. Again, this is similar to the recommendation in the standing committee report that I mentioned earlier. I might add that this was a report signed by the employment critic for the Official Opposition, the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand).

• (1530)

Mr. Allmand: There were 90 recommendations.

Mrs. McDougall: The funds freed up under the Canadian Jobs Strategy brought about by Clause 20 of Bill C-21 will allow redirecting $230 million under CJS to increased training activity in the private sector through co-operative programs. Our intent is to stimulate an additional $1.5 billion each year from the private sector for training from now until 1994.

We plan to spend $65 million annually on sectoral human resource planning. The pilot projects done to date have shown encouraging results. We will also be creating a new entry level skill program akin to the apprenticeship program which we believe will train an additional 40,000 to 50,000 people per year. We are quadrupling the funds that we provide for co-op education under CJS.

We will be doubling the budget of the Industrial Adjustment Service in response to its effectiveness in dealing with labour force adjustment.

In addition, under this section of the initiatives, we will be providing an additional $50 million to the Community Futures Program of the Canadian Jobs Strategy.

Finally, we will be providing an additional $50 million from CJS for training for social assistance recipients. Under this program, begun by our Government in 1986, the Government has committed $400 million to train 60,000 social assistance recipients annually. Together with provincial funds, this will bring total expenditures under this program to $800 million. It is a very successful program, Mr. Speaker.

It is in everyone's interest clearly that this approach work. Canadian productivity is lagging far behind most industrialized countries. As 60 per cent of the people who will be in the workforce in the year 2000 have already left school, the private sector will have to train and retrain those people if we are to remain competitive. That is why we believe that these expenditures will generate $1.5 billion in expenditures on training annually by the private sector, because we have seen this work before.

Someone mentioned older workers. Ours is a workforce increasingly dependent on Canadians who are 45 years of age and older. It is imperative that their talents and experience not be lost either through market changes or entrenched hiring practices. Our new strategy recognizes this phenomenon specifically by providing $100 million in new programming for older workers to complement existing programs. From an equity standpoint, the strategy recognizes that older workers do want to work and should have access to income protection past age 65. I should add that this means that older workers will continue to pay premiums after age 65 if they choose to remain in the paid labour force.

Women have also changed the face and the faces of our labour force. We have recognized the importance of their participation and contribution by providing not only additional training, but also other supports through enhanced maternity, parental, and sickness benefits. Contrary to what some critics in the business community may say, these supports are essential to them as well to maintain a highly trained and effective Canadian workforce in the 1990s.

Women represent 52 per cent of our population, and that is 52 per cent of the talent in this country. They are a key to our competitiveness in the future. When I speak to groups of Canadian women, especially young Canadian women and girls, I ask them to go out and to raise their sights, to go for the good jobs and not to settle for second best. Today I am telling Canadian business, labour, and members of the Opposition the same thing: raise your sights, recognize that the labour market in Canada is changing and that we must treat each individual Canadian worker as a vital national asset. Men, women, older workers, young workers, minority groups, everyone, and business particularly ignores this great store of talent to its peril.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Government is determined to adjust the Unemployment Insurance Act to reflect the realities of today's work patterns—and the equity provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

With this in mind, we are proposing that 15 weeks of maternity benefits be available during the period surrounding the birth of a child, that 10 weeks of parental benefits be available to natural and adoptive parents, for either mother or father or shared between them, and that there be fewer restrictions on a claimant's ability to collect the entitlement of 15 weeks of sickness benefits.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, we are putting forward adjustments to ensure that claimants have the flexibility to draw a combination of special benefits up to a maximum of 30 weeks, that special benefits are available to claimants involved in a labour dispute, and that those who delay retirement past the age of 65 are eligible for UI benefits.

These are important adjustments, Mr. Speaker. These changes make Canada's unemployment insurance program more equitable, more flexible and more relevant to evolving social and work patterns.

[English]

The Government believes that through these measures we have taken important steps to make the UI Program more sensitive to the changing needs of Canadians. Canada is a very complex country. In some areas we have relatively high rates of unemployment, while in other areas jobs go begging for applicants. Paradoxically, even in some of the higher unemployment areas there are job vacancies because of skills shortages in that area. Clearly, facing such a challenge, there must be many approaches, not only one. That is why we rejected some of the sweeping proposals of earlier studies.

We cannot solve all of the labour market's problems in one fell swoop through government intervention. That is why we have chosen an existing mechanism—there already are training problems under the Unemployment Insurance Act—to redirect passive programs to more active uses. Even this approach has been done with moderation and with sensitivity to the needs of individual Canadians. That has been our approach all along: point people in the right direction and they will find their own way and it will lead them to a better future.

We have been accused of merely shifting people from unemployment insurance to welfare. Nothing could be further from the truth. Past experience has shown when entrance requirements for unemployment insurance have been increased—this is nothing new. The Opposition, the previous Liberal Government, did this in 1977 so do we do have some behavioural evidence—people did in fact adjust their behaviour. In the worst case, they got the extra weeks necessary to qualify for UI. In the best case, they obtained permanent and frequently better employment.

Before I close I want to talk about the financing of the Unemployment Insurance Program. In the Budget the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) announced that the Government will no longer contribute funds from general revenue to the unemployment insurance account.

As I stated earlier, Governments are elected to make difficult choices. Our Government was elected to restore fiscal responsibility to the spending of Canadians' tax dollars. Years of irresponsible financing by previous Governments has meant that it is this Government that has had to make those tough choices. The Government has made a commitment that it will be there to ensure that the funds do not run into a deficit position. I would like to remind Hon. Members that government funds are tax dollars and as such the UI account has always been a fund financed by the taxpayers of Canada. That is not changing.

We recognize that Canadians want to work and we are doing something positive and constructive about it. Since we were elected in 1984, 1.4 million more Canadians are working. We do not have to take a back-seat to anyone, particularly the opposition Parties, on this subject. Clearly, the best income security for any Canadian worker is a job, and the second best form of income security is the wherewithal, the skills, and the training necessary to obtain those jobs.

• (1540)

Income support is very important. We recognize that, but we must return to the principle that it is a temporary measure rather than a permanent remedy. In fact a fundamental principle of our strategy is to establish a continuum of programs and services for unemployed and employed Canadians that link income support, employment services, federal Government labour-market programs and skill development initiatives and bring in the provinces and labour and business in providing the solutions. These are necessary steps to help meet all the needs of a changing labour-market, the needs of current workers, of employers and of those Canadians wishing to find a productive place in our labour market. The status quo is no longer an option. In fact, the status quo does not even exist. The competitive challenges Canada faces in this world are real and they demand a co-operative response which mobilizes all of our resources and all of our talents.

[Translation]

To continue to grow and prosper in the 1990s and beyond, Canada needs a dynamic, flexible and highly skilled workforce. Individual Canadians need to know that they have a productive role to play that will produce a better life for them.

I am continuing to consult business, industry, labour and the various provincial governments about how we can best prepare Canadians for the changes to come.

Your input, and your cooperation, are essential if Canada is to build on our recent economic growth and achieve our great national objectives.

[English]

By working together now in this Chamber and with the other groups that I have mentioned, we will ensure that Canada is poised to take advantage of a future of unprecedented opportunity and to meet those objectives that I have talked about before, the objectives of competition, confidence, strength, compassion and sovereignty.

I look forward to the study and timely passage of Bill C-21 so Canadians can benefit from these very positive initiatives.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, the principal purpose of this Bill, the legislation which is before us, is to massively cut back on our unemployment insurance system, a system which has served Canadians well since it was introduced in 1940 following the great depression of the 1930s. In 1940, the unemployment insurance program was introduced by the Liberal Government of Mackenzie King in the aftermath of a depression where thousands and thousands of Canadians were unemployed and had no unemployment insurance, very little social assistance and had to rely on breadlines and soup kitchens which, by the way, seems to be a trademark of Tory Governments because they are back with us again in many parts of this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, that program was introduced to make sure that Canadians, unemployed against their will, had enough money to pay their rent, buy their food and take care of their children. Since that time, it has been improved on two main occasions, in 1955 and again in 1971.

The principal goal and purpose of Bill C-21 is to cut back on that program. The reasons seem to be three-fold. First, the Government is using the unemployment insurance program and the cuts that it is proposing today to cut back on the deficit. We agree that the deficit has to be dealt with, but never on the backs of the unemployed, the people who are less capable of paying for such a huge cut. That is obviously one of the goals of the Government in introducing this Bill, to deal with their deficit-cutting program.

Another obvious reason for this Bill is the Government's goal to create a level playing field to facilitate the implementation of the Free Trade Agreement. We warned Canadians during the election campaign that the Government would try to cut social programs to create this level playing field with the United States in order to create conditions so that Canadian businesses would be able to compete on a more even footing with American companies which are now allowed to come into this country without tariffs. We said that they would cut programs or the companies would move to the United States or threaten to move to the United States, and that is what is happening with this Bill and other Bills like it.

Finally, I believe the third reason which was alluded to by the Minister in her remarks, is based on a real Conservative philosophy that a progressive unemployment insurance system encourages laziness, that it makes it difficult for employers to find workers. Let us look at the record in this respect. If we look at the countries of the world with the most advanced, the most progressive unemployment insurance systems, it is in those countries that we have the lowest rates of unemployment. If we look at Sweden, Switzerland, West Germany, France, Austria, all countries with progressive, advanced unemployment insurance systems, they have very low rates of employment. All those countries, Sweden, Austria, Switzerland, have rates of unemployment less than 5 per cent.

In Canada, from 1965 to 1980 over a period of 15 years under Liberal Governments, the average rate of unemployment was 5.6 per cent. We had what I would call an excellent system for unemployment insurance. Therefore, it is a myth, a fallacy that just because we have sound social programs, sound and advanced systems of unemployment insurance, that we encourage laziness and make it difficult for employers to find workers. Sure, there are a certain number of cheaters, and I will refer to that in a minute. Sure, Canadian workers will not take jobs of poor quality, low wages, jobs where there are no unions and where there are poor working conditions which some employers, not all, would like them to do. The Government would like to make it so hard and difficult for the unemployed that they would take those jobs. We will not support that.

Very briefly let me refer to the figures that were given to me by the Department of Employment and Immigration with respect to cheaters. In the period 1987–1988, I am told that there were 5,507 claimants under the unemployment insurance system who were caught cheating on their unemployment insurance. That is 5,507 out of a total number of beneficiaries amounting to 2.4 million. That means that the number of cheaters was 0.2 per cent of the total number of beneficiaries under the system in that year, a very low number.

If we also look at the figures on those who lost their benefits because they refused a job, there were 6,215 who refused a job and therefore lost their benefits. Again this is out of 2.4 million beneficiaries which means that 0.25 per cent were disentitled because they refused a job. Those figures indicate that the vast majority of Canadians want to work. The main reason that they go on unemployment insurance is because they are put out of work against their will. They need that money to help them get along until a new job is given to them, to help them support their families, to buy their groceries, to pay their rent or their mortgage.

The House should know that in the Unemployment Insurance Act as it already exists, in order to collect unemployment insurance you must be ready and available to work. That is in Sections 25 and 55. It is in the legislation that you must register with a Canadian employment centre to make yourself available for work. It is in the legislation that you must accept interviews, in Sections 40 and 107, that you must accept an available job if it is a suitable job in your area of work. The legislation already requires that. Therefore, there is no evidence that unemployment insurance creates laziness and cheaters. It is true that we have a small percentage of cheaters and a small percentage of people who refuse to work, but they are less than 1 per cent of the total number of claimants under the fund.

I want to refer briefly to that history. The reason for this program, and the reason it was improved in 1955 and 1971, always by Liberal Governments, was based on the horrible experience Canadians had with the great depression of the 1930s. it should be pointed out that not only does a sound and progressive unemployment insurance system help workers when they are unemployed, it also helps the economy and prevents a depression from growing deeper.

In the 1930s when a plant closed in a particular community and the workers were put out of work without any unemployment insurance, it was not long until they stopped buying groceries, stopped paying their bills and stopped paying their rent. There was a snowball effect and more industries went in the hole in that community.

By having a sound and progressive system of unemployment insurance, we make sure that the lay-offs and the closing of firms does not snowball into a deepening and widening recession. The people who are receiving the unemployment insurance spend every cent of that money when they are unemployed. They do not go to Florida, put it in the bank or under the mattress, they spend it to survive. That money goes back into the community and helps other businesses. The program is not only sound for the individual who is unemployed, but also for the community.

I want to describe how the moneys in unemployment insurance help some of the less developed provinces. In 1988, Newfoundland workers paid $169 million into the fund but collected $670 million. A lot more money went back into Newfoundland because of the unemployment situation there than the workers in that province paid into it.

In Prince Edward Island, workers paid $39 million into the fund and collected $138.5 million. Quebecers paid $2.7 billion into the fund in Quebec and collected $3.3 billion in benefits. Those moneys have flowed into those provinces and kept the basic economy of those provinces going despite high rates of unemployment in certain sectors.

The record will show that in six provinces more money has flowed into those provinces in unemployment insurance funds than has been paid into the fund by the workers. It is only in the Provinces of Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta that last year more was paid in than they received in benefits. I point that out because that will change as a result of the cuts proposed by the Minister in this Bill. Less money will go into the underdeveloped provinces than has gone in until now.

According to the changes put forward in this Bill, Canadian workers will pay more into the unemployment insurance program and get less in the form of benefits. In addition, because the Government is eliminating its legislative contribution to the fund, employers and employees will pay more in contributions once again.

I want to give a few examples to the House of what the results of these changes will be. Under the changes in Bill C-21, it will be more difficult for Canadian workers to qualify for unemployment insurance. Once they qualify they will be covered for shorter periods of time.

Let us look at some of the examples as a result of these changes. In St. John's, Newfoundland, where 10 weeks of work are required to qualify for unemployment insurance, under this legislation 14 weeks of work will be required in order to qualify. In Halifax, Nova Scotia, where 12 weeks of work was required to qualify, 18 weeks of work will be required to qualify. These are not areas known for their wealth.

In Saint John, New Brunswick, where 10 weeks of work were needed to qualify, 15 weeks of work will be required to qualify. In Quebec City, where one needed 12 weeks of work to qualify, one will now require 18 weeks of work to qualify. In Montreal, 10 weeks of work were required to qualify. Now 16 weeks of work are required in order to qualify.

In Ottawa one needed 14 weeks of work to qualify. One will now require 20 weeks to qualify. In Sudbury where 12 weeks was required, it is now 18 weeks. It is the same in Winnipeg, Saskatoon, Edmonton and Vancouver. There are very few communities in Canada where the qualification period will not be more difficult.

The same is true with respect to the duration of benefits. The duration of benefits in St. John's, Newfoundland, is changed from a minimum of 40 weeks to a maximum of 50 weeks, to a minimum of 33 weeks to a maximum of 50 weeks. In Halifax the duration goes from 28 weeks to 21 weeks; in Saint John it is from 36 weeks to 30 weeks.

Again, I could demonstrate for the record that the duration of benefits for most communities in Canada is shorter as a result of this Bill.

Who will pick up the burden for these unemployed people who will be left by these cut-backs? While we do not have the correct numbers because the Government has not given us its impact studies, it is obvious that if it is more difficult for Canadian workers to qualify then fewer will qualify. If their benefits are cut off in a shorter period of time then they will be left without any benefits while still unemployed.

Who will take care of those unemployed people who do not have any unemployment insurance benefits? There are only two options. They are either picked up by the provincial welfare systems or they go on breadlines or to soup-kitchens and rely on charity. Although we are seeing more and more of that, I think we have decided that we do not favour that option in this country.

We must question whether this is a phoney, false saving? While the federal Government cuts back on unemployment insurance, there are people who will be unemployed and not covered by unemployment insurance. They must be picked up by provincial welfare systems. Everyone knows that there are means tests under provincial welfare systems, where inspectors continuously check into one's affairs. It is a demeaning process in many cases.

In addition, many provinces say they cannot shoulder that burden. I have a press report from the Halifax Chronicle Herald of April 17, just after the Minister announced her plans on April 11. Premier Buchanan of that province said that these changes in the unemployment insurance system are a real threat to the social service budget of Nova Scotia. The Minister of Finance in Quebec said the same thing.

Mr. Buchanan said: "This is of grave concern to me because that means there is a transfer of funding for these people from the unemployment insurance books to our social service books".

The Government is creating a real problem for the provinces and has not suggested any way in which it will be resolved.

In addition to cutting back on the benefit period and the qualification period for Canadian workers, it is also cutting out entirely the legislative government contribution to the fund. Presently, the unemployment insurance fund is made up of premiums paid by Canadian workers, premiums paid by Canadian employers, and a Government contribution. The Government contribution is based on the principle that it is up to the Government to ensure some sort of full employment policy. The law states that when the rate of unemployment goes beyond 4 per cent, measures come into effect which extend the benefits and the federal Government should pay for those extended benefits. The Government said when it introduced those provisions that until there is approximately 4 per cent unemployment, the workers and employers will pay. However, once unemployment goes beyond 4 per cent, on an increasing basis the federal Government must pay because the Government is responsible to a certain extent for the unemployment situation.

• (1600)

That has been the situation in the legislation for some time, this tripartite contribution, workers, employers and the federal Government. In this Bill, the Government is cutting out its legislative contribution which last year was $2.9 billion, almost $3 billion. Who is going to make up that $3 billion? It is obvious it is going to be the workers and the employers. This is being taken in a very serious way, not just by the workers of Canada but also by the employers. What this will amount to is a payroll tax and an increasing payroll tax. What do payroll taxes do? They act as a disincentive to hiring workers. If a firm has to pay so much in an increasing amount for every worker they employ, they are going to look for ways for not employing workers. They are going to use contracting out. They are going to use part-time workers. They are going to use machines and more and more automation. It will mean that we will have less and less employment for Canadian workers, and in areas which have been traditionally labour intensive.

In the budget brought down by Mr. Lévesque in the Province of Quebec earlier in the month of May, he calculated that the cost alone in Quebec for the Government of Quebec for its own employees as a result of these measures would be over $100 million. Because the Government of Quebec is a large employer and will have to pay the employer contribution, he says that the increased cost, as a result of this Bill, will be over $100 million for the Government of Quebec. That, by the way, if the Minister would like to refer to it, is taxpayers' money. It will be taxpayers' money in the Province of Quebec to the provincial government, while this Government is carrying out cut-backs on the backs of the unemployed and shifting the burden to the provinces.

I want to now say a few words about the measures in the Bill for job training and job development assistance. Listening to the Minister's speech, one would have thought that this was only a Bill dealing with training. She spoke of the Bill as if it were the Canadian training act, that it did not deal at all with cuts in the unemployment insurance system and massive changes in the unemployment insurance system. She went on to speak about the training measures that the Government hopes to introduce with the moneys it is taking out of the Unemployment Insurance Fund.

I want to make it absolutely clear that for years in this House we have been pleading for more and better training programs. But not once did we suggest that those programs should be paid for principally out of the Unemployment Insurance Fund.

In the existing unemployment insurance legislation, about 2 per cent of the funds are used for special training programs. We saw room for making some changes and improvements. But never did we suggest that the principal burden for the payment of training programs in Canada, especially for the unemployed, should be on the Unemployment Insurance Fund. To pay for those programs out of the Unemployment Insurance Fund is a regressive form of taxation to pay for programs which are for the benefit of all Canadians, not just for the workers who receive the training but for the firms that get the trained workers and for the entire economy that benefits from the productivity of these trained workers. Those training programs, which are good programs, co-operative education, apprenticeship programs and entry programs, fine, let us have more of them. But let us not pay for them principally out of a fund that was contributed to in order to help people pay the bills when they lost their jobs.

What the Government has done is to look into the unemployment insurance books last year and it found that there was a surplus in the Unemployment Insurance Fund in 1988 of $2.8 billion. Then it said: "Let us take out $2.9 billion and use that to pay for training programs" which, by the way, it had cut back by 32 per cent from 1984.

In the period from 1984 to 1989, the Government cut training programs from $2.2 billion, which was the amount spent in 1984 at the time of the election, and it cut that back to $1.5 billion. That is a figure of $700 million. Now it puts back in $800 million after five years and takes the money out of the Unemployment Insurance Fund to do it because it wants to cut the deficit.

We have always supported training programs and more of them but not to be paid for in this way. In addition, we ask the Minister, because she is doing this in conjunction with cutting funds out of the Unemployment Insurance Act, what she is going to do to ensure that persons trained in slow development areas of this country are going to benefit from that training. Let us say that we use some funds under this program to train workers in Summerside, P.E.I., where the Government is about to close the military base, is the Government going to create jobs in that area so that the people trained in high tech, or whatever it might be, will be able to work in Summerside, Prince Edward Island? Or will they have to go to Toronto, Calgary or some other place to get a job? It is not good enough. The solution to unemployment is not simply training. That will help in some cases, because for some people all they need to get a job is to have the proper training. There are a lot of people in Atlantic Canada who are fully trained, who are highly skilled, but there are no jobs for them. The Government has not done very much about that.

I get a kick out of the Minister and other Ministers who brag about their great success in unemployment. The rate of unemployment is 7.8 per cent; 7.8 per cent five years after the recession. In the year before the recession, under a Liberal government, it was 7.5 per cent. In the 15 years prior to that we had an average of 5.6 per cent. The Government has not even got it down to 7 per cent, although it is five years after the recession. There are still over one million Canadians unemployed in this country. The Government is going to take money away from the unemployed, from the Unemployment Insurance Fund, and put it into training. It does not say what it is going to do once they are trained. It has cut back on regional development. It has no commitment to full employment. It has no commitment to an industrial strategy. We are going to have trained workers in many parts of the country with no jobs to go to. Should they get on the train to the greater area of Toronto, which is the only area with full employment in this country because it is under a Liberal government in Ontario?

With respect to the training programs, the Minister states that the Government is on the right track. We have had several reports recently which do not confirm that. The de Grandpré report was critical of the Government for its cut-backs in training and recommended changes. As a matter of fact, what the Government has done is taken up some of de Grandpré's recommendations but it is not paying for them in the way de Grandpré recommended. It is using unemployment insurance funds to pay for them.

I have an article from the Financial Post dated May 24, 1989. "Workers want better training". The editorial is dedicated to the proposition that the present training programs are not sufficient.

I have another article from the Financial Post dated May 17. "Employers don't provide needed training in Canada". I have an article from the Toronto Star, dated May 22. This is an article written by Arthur Donner, in which he refers to the recent report of the Canadian Labour Market and Productivity Centre. It was highly critical of the training programs that this Government is operating.

The headline on the article is: "Public Private Sector Fail in Job Training". Referring to a recent report by Armine Yalnizyan and David Wolfe, who completed a report entitled "Target on Training Meeting Workers Needs in a Changing Economy", they say that the federal programs for training are not appropriate for even a fraction of Canada's unemployed.

Yes, we want improvements in training but let us not have the Minister telling us that the programs that are now in place are just wonderful and we just want more of the same. That is not true.

As you can see, Mr. Speaker, this unemployment insurance system which we have is a complicated one. It is not one that is easily understood by Canadians. We are dealing with a lot of complex terminology, funding, benefit periods, qualification periods, a lot of tables, a lot of graphs and so on.

• (1610)

Despite the fact that this is a complicated area of legislation, the Minister said the other day in committee and in a press conference that she does not intend to consult on the unemployment insurance changes in the program she is giving us. She said she will consult on her new approach to training, but she will not consult on the proposals with respect to changes in the Unemployment Insurance Program.

That is totally unacceptable. Here we have something that affects millions of Canadians. As I pointed out, last year 2.4 million Canadians had claims under the unemployment insurance system. These people change from year to year because the situation changes in the different regions. Here she is making important and serious changes and cuts in the program, and she will not consult.

I want to tell her and the Government that it is our intention to continue this debate so that Canadians will understand what is happening to them and what the Government is doing to them. We feel the only way to make the Canadian public understand is through this debate in the House of Commons, which is televised. We hope through the speakers who will speak to the interests of different regions in this country that we will help Canadians understand what the Government is doing to them.

Recently we passed a resolution in the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration that the committee should travel throughout Canada to get the views of Canadians on these changes. However, when the report of the committee reached this House it was sabotaged. It did not go forward. The hearings were to start more than a week ago. This Government sabotaged the report.

Once again, this morning we attempted to pass a resolution that the committee of the House should travel and hear the views of Canadians once this legislation has passed its second reading. In this debate, we are exchanging views of Members of Parliament. That is fine. But there is nothing better than getting out into those regions of the country where they have serious problems and listening to the people of Canada tell us directly what they think about these changes.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Allmand: It is shameful that the Government should attempt to prevent that type of travel.

In the last Parliament, the same committee travelled throughout Asia, Africa and Europe to visit immigration offices because they thought that was important. I supported it at the time. However, surely if the committee can do that, it can visit the different regions of this country experiencing high levels of unemployment. The people will want to tell us what they think about these changes.

The Minister says we do not have to travel. She does not have to consult because this issue has been studied for quite some time. Well, it is true that the Government set up the Forget Commission in 1984. The Forget Commission sat through 1985 and reported in 1986. However, very few of the recommendations made by the commission were taken up by the Government. As a matter of fact, the Government is legislating in many areas in a manner completely opposed to the recommendations of the Forget Commission.

The same thing is true about the parliamentary committee. In the last Parliament, the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration spent one year studying the Forget recommendations. The committee made 90 recommendations. I stood by all but one of those recommendations, 89 of the 90. The Minister, however, has not taken up the thrust of that report. She says two or three of her proposals are based on those recommendations. That may be so, but they are clearly not based on the recommendations; they are partly based on them. The fact is that many of those recommendations were totally contrary to the legislation being proposed today.

I refer to that committee report to indicate to the House and the Canadian people that the Liberal Party is not against improvement and reform of the unemployment insurance system. Far from it. We stood for 89 out of 90 of the recommendations in that report, which were directed toward reform and change in the unemployment insurance system. We still stand by those recommendations.

I want to refer again to the issue of credibility with respect to this matter. During the election campaign, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) on October 13, 1988, right in the middle of the election campaign, when asked by certain reporters and others whether the Government had any intention of changing or cutting back the unemployment insurance system after the election, said, and I quote from The Evening Telegram of St. John's on October 14:

> "It's complete nonsense," he replied to questioning by reporters at Hotel Newfoundland following a Progressive Conservative rally for Prime Minister Brian Mulroney.

He then went on to say that he asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) about the report that they may cut unemployment insurance and the Prime Minister said:

> —no the government has no plans to make changes to the plan.
>
> "You're damn right I asked him (prime minister) about it. And he said no.
> "No one is planning any changes in the unemployment insurance program.

Mr. Speaker, only a few months later we have Bill C-21 that not only changes the unemployment insurance system but drastically cuts benefits and qualifying periods for unemployment insurance and in which the Government totally withdraws its financial contribution, which last year was $2.9 billion. No wonder there is cynicism with respect to Government in this country when we get such opposing positions from different Ministers. One Minister is saying, "Absolutely no, never. The Prime Minister backs me up. There will be no cuts, no changes in the unemployment insurance system." Here we are a few months later with a Bill bringing in cuts.

Mrs. Blondin: Shame!

Mr. Allmand: The Government has done so much of this that Canadians are beginning to turn it off. There have been so many instances of scandal, corruption, and breaking of promises that it is all rolling into one bad dream. Canadians do not want to listen to it any more. It is certainly a sad commentary on our governmental system.

In conclusion, we in the Liberal Party support changes in the unemployment insurance system, but they must be changes that will improve the program for workers and employers. We will not support cuts that make it more difficult for unemployed Canadians to pay their rent, buy their groceries and take care of their children. We will not support that kind of Bill, nor will we support cuts which simply transfer the burden of the unemployed to the provinces. We will not support that kind of Bill.

We want this Government to begin listening to Canadians. We want this Government to withdraw this Bill and send it back to the drawing board. For that reason, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. Volpe) that:

> The motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "that" and by substituting the following therefor:
>
> Bill C-21, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act and the Employment and Immigration Department and Commission Act, be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1620)

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to Bill C-21 now before the House. I would like to state my opposition to the Bill by showing how little credibility the Government of the day has in relation to its philosophy, programs and platforms which it has put before Canadians.

Someone said Conservatives get elected by promising the poor that they will look after them and assuring the rich that they will not. I think what we have before us right now is one of the finest examples that that is eminently true. I heard Ted Kennedy say that. It is absolutely true.

The Government has said how compassionate it is and how much it cares for the unemployed when, in actual fact, what we have is a vast transfer of what used to be a very good program into the private sector. That is consistent with the philosophy of this Government, a philosophy which seems to believe that if you deregulate things the market-place will take care of the economic situation, the country will prosper and the people within the country will prosper. I would like to give a few examples to show that this is simply not the case.

For example, let us look at airline deregulation in the United States. I refer to that because that same philosophy to deregulate the airlines in the United States is extant in the Government of the day here. Arguments were heard that there was too big a concentration among the larger airlines and fares were too high. What you had to have was deregulation of the industry so that competition could flourish and the free hand of the market-place could have its way. People would then receive better air fares as a result of that greater competition.

Deregulation of the airlines started in 1979. At that time the five largest airlines in the United States had cumulative profits of 55.5 per cent. By 1984, after deregulation had run its course, the picture had changed somewhat. We know, because the evidence is there, that the airlines flourished. We also know that there was a plethora of bankruptcies among airlines that started up. We know that fares initially went down and we know that subsequently they became higher than ever.

One of the major tenets of deregulation, that of producing more competition, had in fact come to a point where in 1984 the proportion of profit of the five largest airlines in the United States, where it had been 55.5 per cent, was not 60 per cent, was not 70 per cent, was not even 75 per cent, but 94 per cent. So much for competition.

Free trade is a similar example and it certainly demonstrates how much this Government really lacks compassion. When this Government became involved in free trade with the United States, rather than going for what was the highest common denominator between our two countries, or possibly even in the larger region, if you want to include some of the other countries in North America, which was, of course, our own country and which was the course taken by the European Common Market when it set up its association several years ago, what this Government tied us into is being associated with virtually the lowest common denominator in North America. The Free Trade Agreement has tied us inexorably to compete with the very, very, very low wages which are now the norm in the northern part of Mexico adjacent to the United States border, called the "Micila Dora Strip". We are in a situation where several Canadian employers are saying that unless workers in this country accept lower wages they are going to be moving either to the southern United States, where wages are lower, or else they are going to move to Mexico. So much for compassion.

I am glad the Minister referred to compassion and I am glad she referred to free trade and deregulation because there is just no evidence that any of those concepts are of any benefit to Canadian workers, and certainly Bill C-21 is an example of something else which is not very healthy in so far as Canadian workers are concerned.

One would not really be surprised either by a report from the Fraser Institute, actually commissioned by the Government of Canada. I find it extremely difficult to believe the results the institute arrived at and I am at a loss to understand why the Government, having commissioned the report would not—it is a wonder the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs has not gone after it for false advertising.

In the report, Michael Walker of the Fraser Institute declares that 99 per cent of the economy's total output of goods and services could be produced by the service sector. I do not know how the Fraser Institute can possibly in one sentence combine services and goods because in the usual description of economic parlance goods and services are two different things.

That being the case, I would like to make some references to the actual situation in relation to what has happened in this country which relates to the constant claims we get from the other side of the House on the number of jobs the Government has created.

The fact is that since 1974 there have been no jobs created in the goods producing sector at all, and that by virtue of the fact that the employment statistics for the goods producing sector are still not up to the pre-recession levels. Therefore, by definition, any of the jobs created since then have been in the service sector.

There are two significant points to remember in relation to these numbers. The first is that in the goods producing sector, which predominantly employs blue collar workers, they are for the most part well paid.

In the report of the Fraser Institute it claims there is a tremendous amount of viability within the service sector. The claims are made for the goods producing sector as well. In in a limited way credit is given to the goods producing sector for being a well paid sector. In spite of the fact that the institute took information out of context, if you have an understanding of which sector is which you are at least able to extrapolate that much. There are several points to be made within the framework of the jobs the Government has claimed to create. As I said, jobs have been totally within the service sector, and there are three or four different things to take into account when you are talking about that sector.

• (1630)

First of all, a good many of the jobs are part-time jobs. Second, many of them are poor paying jobs. I will get into that in a minute. Third, a lot of the National Jobs Strategy initiatives which the Government have taken are in the service producing sector as well. I will get into that later. The first thing to remember is that the average hours worked by people in the service sector is 28 compared to 38 in the goods producing sector.

The second thing to remember is that, for the most part, in the goods producing sector, most of the jobs are unionized and well paid. That accounts for the well paying jobs in the goods producing sector.

There are predominantly three types of jobs within the service sector. About one in five jobs is available within the trade and finance sector where services are provided primarily to business and finance. Those one in five jobs are relatively well paid; roughly $497 per week as compared to $230 for those in the straight service sector of the economy. The top one in five jobs can be described as those being services to business and industry.

The second sector which accounts for two out of five jobs are in the services to people industry part of the sector. These are the servant jobs where people are extremely low paid. Pay can range from as low as $150 per week for those in the tourist and food industry to a high—if one would want to refer to it as a high—of somewhere around $218 in the retail sector.

When we look at the compassion and wonderful things that the Government has done in relation to job creation in relation to their initiatives and free trade deregulation and so on, it is rather obvious that this claim for compassion is just simply not something that is part of their delivery system.

Last fall during the election, there were assurances on several sections and by several people. It was referred to by the previous speaker. The Government said there would be no changes to the unemployment insurance system. There were promises that there would be no changes. I guess it is again part of that philosophy where one promises the poor that they will be looked after. If that is the philosophy under which one operated, those are the things one would have said last fall in trying to assure people that if the Government was re-elected, there would not be these changes that were supposed to be coming about.

Today, we are debating changes to the unemployment insurance system. The changes are so vast that it will leave an indelible mark on the economic fabric of this country. I say that because if we were to consider that over the last several years—certainly through the depression which we came into and which we were actually in the process of coming out of about the time the Government opposite was elected in 1984—without the unemployment insurance system having been in effect, this country would have been immeasurably less well off.

Now this Government is putting into place something which is almost certainly going to guarantee that if we have another recession that we may not be able to pull out of it to any extent that would have any meaning for the people of this country, for the unemployed of this country. Certainly, business and industry in this country would suffer as a result of that.

It will be difficult for the people of Saskatoon to realize, presumably after January 1, 1990, that where previously they would be able to qualify for unemployment insurance after working for 10 weeks, they will now have to work for 16 weeks. That is at an unemployment rate of 9.2 per cent. It is one of the higher percentages which we have in Canada. Those are the facts. Anyone who puts in a program where people compared to that example are going to have to work those longer periods of time and claims that to be compassionate, I would suggest certainly has a rather warped idea of what compassion is.

In a policy paper called Success in the Works, the Government said that employers, employees and the federal Government together pay for the UI program which will cost an estimated $13 billion in 1990 and that employers and employees contribute to the premiums. In the introduction to the paper which the Minister gave before the Budget, there was an addendum. It was almost as an afterthought. In spite of the fact of having referred to the fact that the Government does contribute to it, it goes on to say that changes to the way the UI program is financed will be announced by the Minister of Finance in his forthcoming Budget.

It is after the Budget. We now know that after January 1, 1994, the federal Government will no longer be contributing to the unemployment insurance scheme.

I would suggest that had the Minister of Employment, Immigration and Labour done the proper thing, after the Budget was tabled in this House—and I do not want to get into an argument about the way in which it was tabled—but after it was tabled, I suggest that the whole context within which this paper was first of all formulated and, second, in the way it was conceived ought to have been removed.

There is a fundamental difference between what Canadians had a right to think the unemployment system was in spite of the massive changes before the Budget and after the Budget. I think that it was inconceivable to Canadians on the day the Minister first introduced the policy paper that Canadians would ever have thought that the federal Government would withdraw its participation in UI.

A phrase oft repeated since is that the Government is allocating funds. We have to ask, as far as UI is concerned, what funds after 1990? What funds? The program goes on to make claims for programs which have no connection any more to the unemployment insurance scheme, yet the Minister does make references to programs which I think would unjustifiably lead Canadians to believe that there is going to be some security for them insofar as some of the the programs are concerned. I will get to that in a minute. I am talking about people who, for the most part, would have no claim to the unemployment insurance moneys.

When the Minister talks about allocating funds, we have to ask what funds she is talking about. The funds the Minister is talking about are funds which, through juggling within the unemployment system itself, she claims to have made available. She found those funds in the pockets of the unemployed and by making it more difficult for Canadians to qualify, as I alluded to in the references to Saskatoon.

In St. John's, Newfoundland, with an unemployment rate of 10 per cent, before this legislation someone would be able to qualify for unemployment insurance after 10 weeks and now it will be 14 weeks. I guess there is a magic about using numbers. If the document had stated that it would take one month longer to qualify it would have certainly sounded longer than going from 10 weeks to 14 weeks. In Quebec City with an unemployment rate of 7.1 per cent it will now take 12 weeks to qualify. Once the legislation goes into effect it will take 18 weeks. The same applies to Sudbury. Vancouver and Saskatoon share the same unemployment rate and in those areas the qualifying period will go from 10 weeks to 16 weeks. That is one of the areas where the Government found almost $1.29 billion.

Another area which is directly tied in with the figures I mentioned is the length of time people will be eligible to receive unemployment insurance. In St. John's, Newfoundland where a recipient would qualify for a period of 40 to 50 weeks, that person will only receive benefits, after having put in a longer qualifying period, for 33 to 50 weeks, and so on down the line.

In Quebec a person could receive benefits for 26 to 50 weeks and that will go to 22 to 41 weeks after the legislation comes into effect. In Sudbury where it was previously 28 to 50 weeks, it will be 21 to 41 weeks. In Saskatoon and Vancouver it was 32 to 50 weeks and now it will be 27 to 49 weeks after the legislation passes.

The Government states that the program it is introducing is one that is predicated on compassion. When a person has to work longer in order to qualify for benefits, and having worked longer receives benefits for a shorter period of time, and in addition because of the changes in the Budget has to pay a higher premium to receive any benefits, it is inconceivable and a mystery to me how anyone could claim there is any compassion within that system.

Having heard that those changes were coming about, on several occasions we asked the Government for a study on the impact of those changes. At one point in committee we were told that we would receive them summarily. Perhaps not unexpectedly we did not. We tried to receive an indication of the impact of those changes through the use of the Freedom of Information Act. We were told that these impact studies had been exempted from the Act for a rather technical reason. However, it is probably quite well known to all Members in the House this afternoon that the reason that those figures were not made available to us is that they will prove to be extremely embarrassing to the Government.

The results are that it will obviously take longer to qualify and the benefits will not last as long. There are a couple of other ways that the Government will be able to juggle money around in order to provide for some rather questionable training as a result of having this money.

The Government is going to penalize people who quit their jobs without just cause. As the present legislation stipulates, people who quit their jobs because they are hazardous, because their spouses move, or because of sexual harassment will not be penalized. However, by implication, and in spite of the fact that the Minister stated that not very many people are cheaters, she made a second reference which I believe pretty much indicated how the Minister and the Government feel about that. They feel there is an exorbitant amount of cheating. I am not in favour of cheating. I would suggest that the figures put forward by the Hon. Member for Notre–Dame–de–Grâce (Mr. Allmand) were very small and indicated that the unemployed people of this country are immeasurably more honest than a good many other segments of the population.

There is another interesting aspect of this whole idea of cheating and those who are disqualified from receiving benefits. I would certainly enjoy seeing within the legislation provision for an advocate to assist people to wend their way through the bureaucracy, not the civil service part of it, but the bureaucracy of the unemployment system. That would be very helpful. When people have an advocate who is able to appeal their exclusion from full benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act, which is their right, 80 per cent of those who appeal are found to have not been in violation of the provisions, as far as quitting is concerned, and they receive the full unemployment insurance benefit. I have no idea of the percentage of people who appeal. I am virtually sure that it is a small portion.

Can you imagine, Mr. Speaker, the number of Canadians who are excluded from full benefits under the UI Program because in the view of the bureaucracy within the Unemployment Insurance Commission they have committed some type of a dishonest act and have quit without reason. We can be certain from the amount of evidence available that if those people had an advocate they would be receiving benefits as well. The whole claim by the Government that there are cheaters is spurious from the very beginning.

The Government has claimed to find approximately $1.29 billion from the four methods it has used to capture this money: the longer qualification time; shorter duration of receiving the benefits; penalizing people who quit, according to the Government, unfairly; and when the Government prosecutes people, and saving money in that manner.

The Government upbraids the private sector for not spending enough money on training in Canada. Approximately 25 per cent of the private sector in Canada does train. I would suggest that we do not need to be talking about all the training that will happen under the changes to the unemployment insurance program if the private sector did the type of training that it ought to have been doing all along. As I said, $1.4 billion is the amount of money the private sector spends on training.

• (1650)

Through these changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act, the federal Government has captured very nearly $1.4 billion from the workers of the private sector. In effect it has added a tax on the worker insofar as they are receiving less benefits. If you do not get the money, it does not come, it does not accrue to you and it is money that you do not have. If it is the Government that takes it away from you, I think it quite legitimately can be called a tax. The Government has forced on to the workers an amount of money equivalent to what the whole private sector spends on training and it has said, hey, this is what we are going to use for training, we have such a wonderful gift for you.

I think we ought to be emphasizing here that the majority of training really ought to be taking place within the larger corporations in our society. As a matter of fact, within my experience, I know that a goodly portion of the training really takes place in small business, with small contractors. More often than not the large multinationals or the larger Canadian corporations suck up these training people at the expense of small business which is not able to afford that kind of a drain on its earning power.

There are four or five programs which I believe the Minister ought to have come clean about and said: "Listen, since the Budget, these things are no longer relevant. It might be nice for us to be able to talk about them in Parliament, but they really do not have any claim on the unemployment insurance funds and, therefore, are irrelevant to this discussion."

I would have thought that the Minister at least would have had the decency not to refer to the entry level skill jobs where she was talking about co-op training. Co-op training occurs in high schools. There is no way that a high school student is going to be able to amass enough unemployment insurance credits to be able to draw on the unemployment insurance fund. I cannot understand why the Minister would be making reference to that kind of training at all when the Bill is supposed to be talking about changes to the Unemployment Insurance Commission.

I would repeat, as the speaker before me has done, that it would be foolish for me as an individual, as someone who has been a worker all my life, as a Member of the New Democratic Party to stand here and say that we are opposed to training. What we have here are two different subjects. One is unemployment insurance which is to protect people when they become unemployed. This Government must be very fond of unemployed people because it sure has created enough of them. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) is absolutely right. Unemployment still has not risen to the level of the pre-recession level. The Government makes a lot of claims about the growth in the Canadian economy, but when you start from so low, even the 4 per cent that they claim does not really amount to very much. The Government ought to recognize that and confess it.

The Community Futures Program is a similar program. It should not have been included here. By definition social assistance recipients are not eligible to receive unemployment insurance. The reference to social assistance recipients in this context is abhorrent to us. I know it happened back in the Province of Saskatchewan. What we are really talking about is work for welfare, and the federal Government should not be involved in that kind of a scheme. It is something which borders so closely on enforced slavery that it is not something that the Government of this country should be involved in.

With reference to self-employment and entrepreneurship, can you imagine, the Government is bringing in legislation that is going to allow unemployed people to be able to take out lump sums of money in order to start businesses. I would suspect that most young people who become unemployed are totally unaware that 90 per cent of all new businesses fail within the first year. A federal Government should not be involved in a scheme that gives money to an unemployed person in the hope that they will be able to start a business. Maybe they are trying to make them think that they will be able to start a bank.

I saw in the paper on the weekend that the bank profits are up again. That is certainly not much of a surprise. Maybe these young people are going to receive assistance to form a bank. If that is the case, they probably will do well, but I suspect the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce and a few others might have a few words to say about that.

It is a mystery to me how the Government can make claims as it does that these things are part of the unemployment assistance program. With regard to the industrial assistance program that is in place, I found out from the Government today that indeed it will continue to put in its portion. However, unemployed people, when they now go to take courses, will have their tuition paid for out of the unemployment insurance fund. This whole program is nothing more than a scam by this Government in order to privatize the unemployment insurance system, in order to privatize the training within the country.

The Canadian Jobs Strategy brought in in 1985 has proven to be nothing more than that. The numbers available on it are atrocious. I would like to give an example of one of the Canadian Jobs Strategy Programs in Peterborough, Ontario which states that a good example of the fly-by-night training resulting from the Tory strategy occurred in Peterborough, Ontario. After cutting back on purchases of space at Sir Sandford Fleming Community College, a $340,000 contract was given to the newly created Gowrie Computer Systems to train 50 people in computer skills.

I certainly have discovered that computer skills among the Canadian Jobs Strategy proponents in the Government seems to be very high on the list. We find that after a one-shot course, the company's training work was finished, but they still got to keep $100,000 worth of computer equipment purchased with CEIC money, and meanwhile the computer facilities at the community college have been allowed to deteriorate.

This epitomizes the problem which we are facing with these changes to the Unemployment Insurance Commission. I cannot do anything but vote against this motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I call it five o'clock, the Hon. Member's time has expired. I assume that Members do not want me to call a question this evening on this Bill?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 5 p.m., the House will now proceed to the consideration of Private Member's Business as listed on today's Order Paper.

TRANSPORTATION SAFETY

INCREASED FUNDING FOR SAFETY INSPECTORS

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kootenay West—Revelstoke) moved:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of increasing funding for transportation safety inspectors.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to bring forth this motion today, particularly on behalf of my colleague, the Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus), who is presently busy in the Transport Committee on a matter not totally unrelated to the subject matter of this motion.

• (1700)

Safety is always an important concern, especially with regard to the transportation industry. I suspect that in the minds of most Canadians and Members of the House it is even more important when it comes to the matter of airline safety.

The subject matter of the motion before us is that in the opinion of the House, the Government should consider the advisability of increasing funding for transportation safety inspectors. That is rather a broad motion that could cover air, marine, long-distance interprovincial hauling by truck and other modes, and rail. I believe the main thrust of the remarks this evening will be related to the airline industry.

Most Canadians and Members of the House perceive a real problem in safety and safety inspections throughout the airline industry in Canada. We have all been only too familiar with the many stories about near misses and the increasing concern by the travelling public and those associated with the industry directly about safety with transportation and what appears to be a deteriorating standard of safety inspection. This has taken place over the past number of years, beyond the terms of any one government, and has been creating a considerable state of concern within the body politic.

In studying this complicated question of transportation safety, particularly air safety, I want to begin by talking about deregulation and its increased stresses on the transportation industry. The deregulation of the transportation industry, begun by the Liberal Government in 1983 and continued by the Conservative Governments since that time, operates under the theory that increased competition is good for the travelling public. Undoubtedly there may be cases where that is so, but there are problems.

One problem with deregulation is that it allows a number of smaller carriers into the industry. Again, while that may be good in some instances, it also creates problems particularly in the area of safety and inspection.

For example, let us look at the air passenger industry. Previously, the vast majority of air travel was handled by the big three: Air Canada, Canadian Airlines and Wardair. These airlines tended to police themselves with self-inspection and random checks by Department of Transport employees on safety regulations. These DOT inspectors were assigned to work with the major airlines on site. That was their prime mandate in the past, and is quite different from the work they are required to perform now.

Two things have happened since deregulation. First, the big three have become the big two, and there has been a proliferation of smaller, short distance airlines.

It is to be assumed that the big two are still operating under the old system of self-policing and random checks by DOT officials. The problem occurs with the smaller airlines and smaller aircraft. They are often small operations with less than 10 aircraft, aircraft which tend to be hand-me-downs discarded by the majors both nationally and internationally.

Second, these smaller companies do not have the qualified personnel nor the cash to pay to have these qualified personnel on staff as maintenance workers.

Third, they are operating in the hub and spoke system, which means that many smaller aircraft are flying into the major airports like Toronto, Vancouver and Edmonton, where passengers are transferred to the major airlines for long distances. This means that there are more aircraft with more parts, and more varied parts, flying more often.

For example, where a major carrier used to fly a 747 carrying some 400 passengers once a day, a small feeder airline will fly a Dash-8 with 20 passengers five times a day.

I am the Member for an area with an airport that is both famous and infamous to many Members of the House, past and present. Castlegar Airport used to have one or two flights a day, with fairly large passenger jets carrying a significant number of passengers. Now there are some four or five flights a day, almost every day, by two different airlines. In addition, there is a small regional airport that also serves as a training base for a pilots' school operated in conjunction with a community college. The number of flights going in and out of what until recently was the airport with the least proportion of successful landings and take-offs in the western hemisphere, has created more than a normal share of problems in terms of safety.

Luckily, and largely due to the skill and dedication of the people employed in and around the industry, to my knowledge there have not been any near misses or serious incidents. We are thankful for that, but unless there are improvements other airports in similar situations to ours may find themselves running out of time and luck. I hope not.

As a result of deregulation there are more flights on feeder routes and more flights into minor airports without state of the art technology and often in very difficult locations.

There are more take-offs and landings per hour of aircraft operation. Those familiar with the industry will know that it is during the take-offs and landings that serious incidents are more likely to occur.

There are also more people travelling as a result of deregulated prices. That has been one of the benefits of deregulation. The locations are much busier.

During this process the number of inspectors have been dropping due to budget cuts. In a recent article on April 14 in the Times-Transcript of Moncton, New Brunswick, Dick Peters, chairman of the Aircraft Operations Group Association, said that Budget cut-backs and insufficient staffing levels make it difficult for staff inspectors of the Department to keep up with changes in the industry.

The association represents some 440 civil aviation inspectors.

I want to quote from this article. The headline states: "Budget cuts creating unsafe airline industry?". The article states:

> "The skies won't be safer unless the federal Government begins keeping pace with changes in the airline industry", a spokesman for civil aviation inspectors said Thursday.
>
> R.A. Peters, chairman of the Aircraft Operations Group Association, said budget cut-backs and insufficient staffing levels make it difficult for inspectors to keep up with changes in the industry.
>
> "Nothing has changed," said Peters, noting his predecessor made similar comments in an interview here last year.
> "In fact, it's gotten worse."
> Peters, whose association represents about 440 civil aviation inspectors, says insufficient salary levels also means many of their numbers are also being hired away by private industry.

There are some Members, I am sure, who are going to say that this is obviously a self-serving statement. To some extent, it possibly is. However, it does not alter the facts of the situation that the salary levels are far below other areas and are not sufficient to keep the very highly qualified people they must have in order to do their job. It is an important job.

> Peters pointed out a recently leaked memorandum that confirmed inspector workload in the large aircraft field has increased 400 per cent and yet the numbers of inspectors have declined by 50 per cent.

How many of us would put up with that kind of situation in our own line of work, whether it is in this House or elsewhere? Maybe we would put up with it here, because nobody drafts us for this job. In the case of most Canadians, they would find a situation intolerable where there was a workload increase of 400 per cent and a reduced workforce, down by half.

To go back to the story:

> "Numbers have declined partly to attrition but also because we're not attracting people from the military any more," said Peters.
>
> He said trained aviators from the armed forces either re-enlist or are hired by private airlines.
>
> Peters explained civil aviation inspectors must be as well trained as pilots because they must regulate the industry.
>
> However, low staff levels means training time is increasingly difficult to come by.
>
> "In Toronto at Pearson Airport, some inspectors haven't been on training courses for four to eight months" he said.
> "If we don't keep up with the industry, we'll start losing credibility and our ability to assess the industry," he said.
> Working conditions and salaries just aren't attracting new inspectors. "In order to be an inspector, you have to be as qualified as a pilot, and our inspectors are going out the door like you wouldn't believe," he said.
>
> Inspectors earn about 50 per cent less than an average airline pilot, Peters estimated.
>
> "The gap in salaries must become a more realistic one", he said, pointing to the situation in Great Britain—

In Maggie Thatcher's Great Britain, in fact—

> "—where inspectors automatically earn two-thirds the salary of a British Airways captain".

I hope the Government will listen to that because we have to bring these salaries more into line with the situation in other countries in order to keep and attract the best possible people. Nobody can argue that we need the very best people when it comes to this kind of occupation, where lives are at stake.

> "With the public's increasing concern on health and safety", said Peters, "the government would be wise to ensure safety standards are maintained in the skies.
> The industry", he said, "is not capable of auditing itself. "We need an adequate third party to ensure federal standards are met."

Surely, Members on the other side of the House and all Members will want to ensure that the standards that we do have, whether they are fully adequate or otherwise—and we hope that they are—that at least those standards that we do have are met. I am sure that will not be argued by anybody.

• (1710)

I just want to quote briefly another story from the Toronto Star of May 27 of this year, entitled: "Union says safety may be threatened by shortage of federal pilot inspectors". It largely draws on the same sources but a number of the facts and figures are different.

> A shortage of pilot inspectors may threaten air safety, their union warns.

The federal Transport Department may be forced to have airlines inspect themselves, leading to a possible drop in standards—

They state that:

—an airline employed inspector may pass unqualified pilots to please management. He's liable to come under pressure from management. After all, where does the employees' allegiance lie?

I think all Members here recognize that that may be the case. It is why we go to great pains in a variety of agencies, whether they deal with occupational health and safety or public health and safety, or many other areas of jurisdiction, to ensure that there are two-party or tripartite boards which represent a number of different constituencies so that the public will know or feel secure in the knowledge that those decisions are made not by someone with a gun to their head, directly or indirectly, but by somebody who knows what they are doing and whose only duty is to the travelling public.

"Large numbers of senior pilots are due to retire", Peters said. One airline that Peters refused to name faces 700 inspections next year so its pilots can fly newly introduced aircraft, move from one aircraft to another and move up to captain from first officer.

Seven hundred inspections next year in just one airline.

"This is where the benefits of an independent checking system get thrown out of the window— There are 180 vacancies in the transport department's pilot and pilot inspector group", he said, "and management has made little effort to fill them".

A transport department official said the shortage is smaller than Peters claims and the Department does not expect to let airlines do inspections.

But Roger Burgess-Webb, a spokesman for the Canadian Airline Pilots Association, agreed that the inspector shortage could lead to declining standards, particularly on smaller airlines.

"The pilots association believes the Transport Department, which sets the standards for pilots, should accept the responsibility to enforce them", Burgess-Webb said.

I might add that the Canadian Airline Pilots Association has a great deal of credibility. If any one hedges, usually on the side of caution in making statements that seem alarmist, it is certainly not the Canadian Airline Pilots Association. They tend, and understandably so, to be very defensive of their role and their own right to refuse to fly aircraft that they deem to be unsafe. If they are alarmed, I suggest there should be more than a little concern amongst the rest of us.

My colleague for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) spoke with Mr. Peters just the other day regarding one of the memoranda mentioned in the article. He says that he has just done a tour of airports out West and it is "chaotic" out there. Inspectors are leaving daily, 10 this month and 30 or so next month. That is alarming, considering the drop in inspectors we have already had. If we are continuing to see this kind of demise of an occupational group upon which so much depends, we have to be more than a little alarmed and concerned.

To wrap up this point in brief, there is increasing workload, a decreasing number of inspectors, less time available for training to keep up with new technology.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the matter of Bill C-2, an Act to create the Transportation Accident Investigation Board: This Board is going to amalgamate accident investigations presently carried out under the various air, marine, rail and commodity pipeline boards. Because of the possibly expanded scope of the new board, to include such areas as passenger boating, there will be a need for more safety inspectors for this board to function well.

The reduction of inspection staff is further complicated by this Government's decision to replace the Canadian Aviation Safety Board and other transport safety inspection agencies with one super board. I think that does not need much explanation. However, there is a story here dated May 19, 1989, in the Ottawa Citizen which, in quoting a number of sources including the Pilots Association, it says:

—warned that the proposed new board would lack the expertise to properly investigate air accidents and would likely degenerate into the internal problems that plagued the safety board.

Some board members obviously felt their investigators were not pursuing enough leads before. That I suspect, Mr. Speaker, is probably due to the fact that there were not enough of them. That is what the motion before us is all about.

The Pilots Association recommended that the government retain an exclusive aviation safety board and not submerge it in an agency that investigates a broad range of transportation accidents.

There is enough in what was said and directly quoted by those most intimately concerned with the inspection of air safety people in this country to realize that we have a problem on our hands. The Government has acknowledged that there is a serious problem and that there has been a serious backlog in terms of staffing levels. We must begin to make changes now that will ensure we pay appropriate levels of salaries, that we get enough people with the experience to do the required job if flying and other methods of transportation in Canada are to be as safe as the public has the right to expect them to be.

• (1720)

I support the motion and ask that other Parties in the House give it their support as well.

Mr. Ross Belsher (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate this opportunity to address the House on the important issue raised by the Hon. Member for Kootenay West—Revelstoke (Mr. Kristiansen) on behalf of his seat-mate, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus), namely the adequacy of the present level of funding for transportation safety inspection.

I want to thank my hon. friends for the opportunity to set the record straight once and for all. Transport Canada employs some 550 federal civil aviation, air-worthiness, passenger safety and dangerous goods inspectors and others who have had day-to-day responsibility for ensuring air safety. These people are recruited into Transport Canada as highly qualified professionals in their respective medium. They then undergo training for up to a year to become fully qualified. Their jobs and responsibilities are as diverse as the aviation industry itself, but Transport Canada has ensured that aviation regulation staff numbers and the qualifications they bring to their respective jobs are adequate to meet the increasing demands brought about by rapid expansion and restructuring of the aviation industry.

Air-worthiness inspectors verify that civil aircraft are in compliance with air-worthiness standards by inspecting companies for adherence to regulations and by inspecting aircraft to determine that safety standards are met. Inspectors also examine and licence aircraft maintenance engineers and approve maintenance manuals and procedures for all air carriers. They collect and analyze data related to aircraft defects and take corrective action where necessary.

Since 1986-87, the number of air carrier inspectors grew to 137 from 102 across Canada. In 1988-89, 29 of these inspectors oversaw large air carrier operations. Air carrier inspectors conduct initial and continuing inspections of air carrier operations, air crew and facilities.

The number of dangerous goods inspectors in the aviation sector has increased to 15 from 9 since 1986-87. Dangerous goods inspectors conduct on-site inspections of all air carriers to ensure the safe transportation of dangerous goods by Canadian and foreign aircraft operating in Canadian air space.

The number of person-years in the passenger safety inspection activity increased to 16 from 11 in recent years. These inspectors conduct inspections of air carrier passenger operations, cabin attendant training courses and perform audits to ensure compliance with regulations.

Staff in the inspector engineering training section of the aviation group develop training courses and provide training to all the departments' civil aviation inspectors, air-worthiness technical inspectors and air-worthiness engineers to ensure they are fully qualified.

Transport Canada's licensing inspectors, 112 in number, conduct flight tests associated with the issue and endorsement of aviation personnel licences. They also monitor and inspect the activities of flight training staff and organizations, corporate passenger aircraft and special aviation events. Industry personnel who exercise licensing authority on behalf of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) are monitored by these inspectors. They also develop and implement policies and standards for the licensing of aviation personnel such as pilots, aircraft maintenance engineers and air traffic controllers and for the registration of aircraft.

The need for comprehensive investigations relating to air carrier operations and air-worthiness infractions resulted in ten more person-years being added to the aviation enforcement section of Transport Canada. The unit which employs 48 is responsible for preventing, detecting, investigating and processing infractions of the Aeronautics Act, air regulations and air navigation orders. This includes the preparation and preservation of court cases before the Civil Aviation Tribunal and the application of regulations addressing occupational safety and health of crew members aboard aircraft. They also are responsible for developing national policy, procedures and training for maintaining functional control of the aviation enforcement organization.

The inspector workforce in the aviation safety programs unit has increased to 17 in 1988–89 from 12.5 person–years in 1986–87. Inspectors in this component conduct accident prevention programs for commercial aviation, the Civil Air Search and Rescue Association, private and recreational aviation, as well as passenger safety education. They also conduct confidential safety surveys, company aviation safety officer courses and aviation safety briefings.

There are 31 inspectors in the Aviation Regulation Directorate who are not directly available for inspection duties. These inspectors are managers who are responsible for ensuring inspection responsibilities are carried out in accordance with departmental policies, procedures and standards.

While my preceding remarks have discussed the 550 inspector resources, there is a total of 900–plus employees engaged in regulatory activities. Further, the aviation group of Transport Canada, whose principal mandate is aviation safety, number some 7,000 employees.

These human resources are supported by an excellent aviation navigation system that has been developed over many years and is continually improved and modernized to take advantage of new technology and to meet the changing need of the air transportation system. In Canada and world–wide, air navigation systems exist to prevent aircraft from colliding with one another. Transport Canada has a mandate to reduce the threat of mid–air collisions and in fact has recently set up a mid–air collision avoidance committee. It is now studying a number of proposals it has received from other groups on this issue.

The Department also asked for public comment from the aviation community last year. At this moment, it is studying all the comments received.

The Department will also develop policies on technical equipment designed to avoid airborne collisions through the use of what are termed Mode C and Mode S transponders. It is expected that within three years, most Canadian carriers will have equipped their aircraft with these traffic alert collision avoidance systems.

It should be mentioned at this point that Transport Canada last fall organized a conference in Ottawa on collision avoidance agencies to exchange ideas and information. Many of the participants were given airborne flight demonstrations to see how the systems worked. The reaction was most optimistic.

For the past several years, the microwave landing system project that involves replacing and improving current systems that are used in guiding aircraft during approaches and landings has been under way. The new MLS will be much more accurate and reliable in determining the flight path to a runway. Approximately 150 such systems will be installed right up to the year 2000. A number of private organizations have purchased MLS units, and Transport Canada's specialists are installing them and helping with instrument design.

Transport Canada is constantly looking for ways to improve its services to the flying community through its flight services stations. Recently, improvements have been made by the provision of new electronic displays and storage of aeronautical information, pilot self–briefing systems and automated weather observation services. Transport Canada is also testing an automated system that displays meteorological and other operational data for pilots. It is known as MIDS or Multi–purpose Information Display System. Four stations in the Arctic are using earlier versions and so are five sites in Ontario. Within a few years, it is expected that about 100 new MIDS units will be in operation.

Another major modernization program currently under way and expected to be completed within the next two or three years is the RAMP Program. This is one that will re–equip all major radar sites across the country with more sophisticated technology. This kind of equipment does not come cheap. The total cost is estimated to be close to $800 million. The team that got this project under way was formed early in the 1980s. Its task was to produce and install 24 primary and secondary surveillance radar systems, along with 17 independent secondary radar systems, plus 29 display and data processing systems at various locations across Canada.

• (1730)

New radar systems have been installed at Ottawa and at Transport Canada's training institute in Cornwall, Ontario. There are other systems at sites in Hamilton and Goose Bay, Newfoundland. Installation work has started at other sites in Sept-Iles, London, Calgary and Victoria. A new system goes into operation at Toronto this fall and others will follow in due course across the country.

My time has run out but there are other things, Mr. Speaker. There is a CAAT system, the Canadian Automatic Air Traffic System. It is a major Crown project which has become a focus for air traffic control modernization. It will produce extensive automation for handling of flight data and the use of common controller work stations. Transport Canada is now evaluating two requests for proposals that were released to the industry in September, 1988.

Incidentally, many of the projects I have outlined represent only a part of the Canadian Airport Systems Plan or CASP which is Transport Canada's approach to the modernization and restoration of the technical infrastructure of the country's air navigation system. This is a strategy for an evolutionary development of the technical infrastructure into the 21st century.

I could go on but I see time has taken over, Mr. Speaker, so I rest my case.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to speak during Private Member's Business to motion M-272, tabled on April 4, 1989 by the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus), which reads as follows:

> That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability on increasing funding for transportation safety inspectors.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to provide an overview of Transport Canada's programs for the maintenance and improvement of aviation safety in Canada. Transport Canada has established a company aviation safety management program. This innovative program is free and is designed to help companies with risk management. The program has three components, which include an executive safety seminar, a company aviation safety officer course and a follow-up service provided by Transport Canada's regional aviation safety officers.

The seminar was launched in 1987 in the Aviation Group's six regions. The purpose of the seminar is to motivate and encourage company chief executive officers to establish and maintain a safety program within their companies. This approach has proved to be very effective, and a number of executives have already taken steps to set up programs of this kind. The course designed for company aviation safety officers has existed for many years. In 1987, course content was restructured to adjust to changing needs. The course is designed to teach officers or representatives of company chief executive officers methods for risk management within their own companies. Regional personnel responsible for the aviation safety program offers one course per year. Between 30 and 50 people participate, depending on the region.

In the same program, the regional aviation safety adviser offers a follow-up service whose main objective is to ensure the continued existence and effectiveness of company aviation safety programs. Basically, the overall objective of the company aviation safety management program is to help companies help themselves.

There is irrefutable evidence that this type of program is profitable for the airlines. It helps save lives and keep aircraft in good condition. It is one more way of providing Canadians with a safe and efficient air transportation system.

Mr. Speaker, the company aviation safety management program is only one of many accident prevention programs that regional aviation safety officers offer directly to the industry. New programs are being designed daily.

International experts on aircraft accident prevention have confirmed tht at least 80 per cent of aircraft accidents are the result of human actions or the absence thereof. The remaining 20 per cent are attributed to flight equipment and atmospheric conditions. Pilot decision-making is involved in and determines the majority of accidents in the human factor group.

To reduce human error, a new program was made available to all pilots in 1987. The pilot decion-making program is the result of joint efforts by American, French and Canadian civil aviation authorities.

A decision-making course has also been incorporated in the Canadian program for student pilot training. This part of the program will be directed by the services responsible for Canadian aviation regulations. Decision-making workshops conducted by regional aviation safety officers in all regions of the Aviation Group are offered to pilots.

In preparing these workshops, experts on safety awareness reviewed reports on specific aircraft accidents and incidents and the reports on occurrences drafted by the Canadian Aviation Safety Board.

Mr. Speaker, Transport Canada's aviation safety programs also acknowledge the important role of education.

In Canada, over 70,000 licensed pilots receive the Aviation Safety Letter six times a year, as well as the changes published in the Transport Canada aviation information bulletin. Every year, Transport Canada receives positive comments on its news bulletin.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, Transport Canada will produce and publish about 1,600 publications on aviation this year. Among these publications, the Aviation Safety Letter has the widest circulation and the largest number of readers. It is read by pilots, operators, mechanics, air traffic controllers and the industry. It is even read by experts in other countries who use the information in the news letter in their own aviation safety services. This publication even gives information obtained from foreign air safety services that can be useful to Canadian pilots.

Transport Canada's national verification program is a key and essential strategy for performing the Department's duties and ensuring an adequate level of service to the aviation community and users of air services. During the period from April 1, 1988 to March 31, 1989, 504 checks were performed nationally under this program.

Mr. Speaker, this overview of Transport Canada's air safety programs shows—as if it were necessary—the care, vigilance and great importance Transport Canada gives to maintaining and constantly improving air safety.

Despite what some claim, one must realize that the resources, efforts and initiatives for this purpose are not lacking.

The International Civil Aviation Organization itself thinks that Canada has one of the best safety records in the world and our Government wants to do everything in its power to maintain and even improve this image.

The commitment to maintain a high level of safety in the Canadian transport system is a top priority. Section 3 of the 1987 National Transportation Act enshrines this commitment to safety and the legislative and regulatory framework gives the Department the power to ensure air safety.

[English]

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, my comments are directed toward safety inspection in the marine sector. First let me state that this Government is dedicated to the development and operation of an efficient and safe national marine transportation system. This mandate is a prime responsibility of the Canadian Coast Guard.

In discharging this responsibility, the Coast Guard operates in a demanding environment. First, economic and technological advancements have expanded both the scope and complexity of the Coast Guard work in marine safety matters in recent years. Larger and more technologically complex vessels pose new challenges to marine regulators. The Canadian Coast Guard continues to work in this regard toward improved safety in the marine environment.

The marine surveyors of the Ship Safety Branch of the Coast Guard assume many of the tasks associated with responding to recommendations from investigations and inquiries following any major marine accident. In the course of their analysis, existing safety regulations and standards are thoroughly reviewed. Revisions are incorporated to be certain that prevention of marine accidents is improved.

The Ship Safety Branch administers, on behalf of the Minister of Transport, those parts of the Canada Shipping Act involving all aspects of the programs for ship safety and ship-source pollution.

In order to achieve this objective, approximately 310 inspectors, including professional management staff, are located across the Dominion of Canada providing services from six regional offices and overseeing 30 district offices distributed from Newfoundland to British Columbia, including the Canadian Arctic.

All of these offices receive guidance on the application of the Canada Shipping Act and other pertinent legislation from Ship Safety headquarters located in Ottawa. The distribution of human resources reflects the level of activity in each area.

In order to ensure a safe marine transportation system, Coast Guard marine regulatory activities include development and enforcement of marine regulations for Canadian and foreign ships visiting Canadian ports; assessment and design approval of all commercial ships to ensure the adequacy of their construction; inspection and certification of these ships to ensure their safety and sea worthiness; examination and certification of marine officers and crews to ensure that ships are properly and competently manned; inspection of marine cargoes, including dangerous goods; and the registration of ships and licensing of vessels.

Under the pollution prevention function, regulations are developed and ships inspected to reduce incidents of ship-source pollution in Canadian waters and to ensure that ships satisfy international convention requirements. Investigations are also carried out to obtain evidence for prosecution purposes where ship-source pollution occurs.

I would like to take this opportunity to spell out some of the services provided by the Canadian Coast Guard designed to facilitate safe navigation of all vessels, including particularly those with potentially polluting cargoes. These remarks are particularly pertinent in the wake of the Exxon Valdez incident. I would like to provide a summary of some of the measures already in place in Canada to ensure that such an incident as the Exxon Valdez accident does not occur in Canadian waters.

These services include an extensive network of conventional and electronic aids to navigation; the broadcast of safety information by a network of Coast Guard radio stations; a system of traffic lanes and traffic separation zones in waters with significant volumes of traffic; and a series of vessel traffic management stations which monitor and guide ships through areas of significant traffic or in areas where large volumes of potentially polluting cargo are routinely carried by ship.

In Canada, high level traffic management systems, including radar surveillance and real time communications, are provided in areas with substantial tanker traffic and similar systems with VHF radio coverage but without radar are provided in three other sites. The radar equipped sites include Placentia Bay, Newfoundland; Halifax Harbour; approaches to the Bay of Fundy and to Saint John Harbour; the areas of Les Escoumins, Quebec City, and Montreal in the St. Lawrence; the Straits of Juan de Fuca; approaches to Vancouver Harbour, B.C., and the lower west coast of Vancouver Island. Sites monitoring traffic by radio only operate in Prince Rupert, British Columbia, the Detroit—St. Clair River area and in St. John's, Newfoundland. Participation in these traffic management systems is mandatory for all vessels over 60 feet in length.

This system of traffic management centres with trained regulators and standardized procedures is among the most extensive in the world. It has been put in place specifically to reduce the risk of collision, grounding and striking accidents involving large ships, particularly where they carry potentially polluting cargoes.

In addition, Canada has established a unique system of off-shore reporting systems in which ships wishing to enter Canadian waters first file with the Coast Guard, by radio, information relating to their voyage and the condition of their vessel to ensure that it meets Canadian standards and does not pose a pollution risk.

Once entering confined waters, a comprehensive system of pilotage provided by the four Crown corporations responsible for this service ensures that a trained mariner thoroughly familiar with the local area boards each vessel to provide guidance and local expertise.

In addition to these systems designed to facilitate safe passage, Canada also has an extensive regulatory regime under which tankers must meet stringent standards of design, construction, manning and operation. In addition to these standards applying to Canadian flag vessels, Canada imposes additional requirements on foreign flag vessels beyond those already required by international convention. We require that ships of foreign registry carry a non-Canadian ship compliance certificate to demonstrate that they meet these standards.

Current Canadian requirements regarding oil pollution prevention are contained in the oil pollution prevention regulations and non-Canadian ships compliance certificate regulations. They were both made pursuant to the Canada Shipping Act. Safety regulations regarding construction, equipment, operation, officer certification and safe manning requirements are similarly made pursuant to the Canada Shipping Act.

In addition, under the same legislation, pollution prevention officers are created and empowered to take action to prevent a pollution incident within Canadian waters or fishing zones. These powers require that a ship allow boarding and inspection by a pollution prevention officer, produce information or documents demanded by such an officer, and enter or leave certain areas as may be designated by the pollution prevention officer. This is all with a view to preventing a pollution incident or mitigating its consequences.

Notwithstanding the various systems and provisions outlined above designed to reduce the risk of a similar accident as happened in the waters of Alaska, Ministers have recently directed their deputies to carry out a thorough review of various tanker safety systems. I think that is very appropriate at this time, particularly in view of the fact that we are recognizing Environment Week in Canada.

I would like to inform this House that we are committed to safe marine transportation systems. We are confident that the present level of funding allocated for this purpose is adequate. It is something that we will continue to look at in the future to make sure that we maintain those standards.

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I rise to address the motion of the Hon. Member opposite as it applies to the work of two groups of inspectors; those dedicated to ensuring the safety of the railway system in this country and those who ensure that dangerous goods are transported safely. I would first like to put forward some historical background on the place of railway inspectors in the system.

• (1750)

The federal Government is responsible for the regulation of safety on much of the railway system in Canada. This responsibility has been successfully carried out by a highly qualified, professional staff ever since widespread development of railways was undertaken in this country.

For many years, regulation was performed by a regulatory agency, most recently the National Transportation Agency. The NTA, and its predecessor boards and commissions, derived powers to regulate safety from the Railway Act, one of our older and more durable pieces of legislation. Nevertheless, as Members will recall, it became increasingly clear that railway regulatory staff were burdened with outdated legal requirements which limited their powers and impeded the modernization of regulations. There was also the need to separate safety regulation from economic regulation and accident investigation.

For these and other reasons, Parliament passed the Railway Safety Act in 1988, proclaimed on January 1, 1989, making railway safety regulation a responsibility of the Minister of Transport.

The Government made it clear when the Railway Safety Act was introduced in the House that safety inspectors had been doing an excellent job. The excellent safety record of the Canadian railway industry testifies to that performance. The Government also made a commitment to strengthen railway safety by the passage of the new Act. This is being implemented as the provisions of the Railway Safety Act replace those of the old Railway Act.

First, the new Act has substantially reduced unproductive regulatory activities by removing paper burden from the inspectors. For instance, under the old legislation, regulatory orders had been issued at the rate of more than five for each working day, mostly because the Railway Act required them, not because it was in the interests of safety. Written orders are now only produced when the resolution of a safety problem cannot be agreed upon by the inspector and a railway company or other party. In other words, improved communication, backed up by the powers granted by the new Act, has replaced detailed regulation by written order.

For railway construction and alteration projects, the old legislation required inspectors to review plans, visit construction sites, issue pre-construction orders, inspect completed works and issue final approvals. The majority of these works were routine alterations, often in remote locations, which posed no threat to safety. Field forces now are no longer forced to carry out multiple inspections and can choose sites to visit on a random basis, exercising professional judgment as to what railway works ought to be monitored.

Work is already under way on a major overhaul of the operating rules which are critical to the safety of the movement of trains. Safety inspectors can now move quickly with a minimum of bureaucratic paperwork to modify and update rules that previously were locked into the cumbersome regulatory process. This was one of the key concerns of Mr. Justice Foisy in his inquiry into the Hinton train collision.

What is the impact on railway safety? The Government has retained all the railway safety inspection resources that were available under the previous legislation. By giving the inspectors greater ability to direct resources toward the most productive safety activities, Canadians are getting more for their regulatory dollar. Both the regulator and the industry spend less time on paper-pushing exercises. The Government can focus on essential safety activities and the industry must respond.

There are 97 railway safety inspector positions in Transport Canada's Railway Safety Directorate. Inspecting staff have expertise in the three major disciplines of safety regulation: railway operations, railway equipment, and railway infrastructure. These persons are certified to enter and inspect railway premises as necessary to carry out their responsibilities. They are knowledgeable about railway rules and operating practices, about the operation and maintenance of equipment and machinery, about the construction and maintenance of railway track and structures, and train movement control systems.

The staff of 97 inspectors are located across the national railway system. There are 23 in headquarters in the National Capital region. The balance of 74 are in regional offices maintained in Moncton, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Calgary and Vancouver. Each regional office has available inspectors with expertise in all aspects of railway operation and maintenance. The regulatory staff carry out a program of inspections on a continuous basis and are available to respond to requests, inquiries and complaints from local authorities, from railway employees, or from private individuals.

Persons appointed as railway safety inspectors are no longer encumbered with other duties to perform, such as accident investigation or cost arbitration. As well, the inspectors have greater powers under the new legislation than were available under the old Railway Act. Again, I point out that changes brought about by the Railway Safety Act mean that the resources, particularly the inspectors' time and talents, are better employed. We have had a tangible increase in resource-utilization because of this realignment.

The Railway Safety Act provides the inspectors with right of access to investigate anything pertinent to safe railway operations. Companies and individuals are compelled to assist the inspectors in carrying out their legitimate duties. Most important, the inspectors can intervene and take direct action where they see a threat to safety.

To an increasing extent, government inspectors are monitoring how the railway companies are performing safety-related activities and spending less time attempting to duplicate these functions themselves. Inspecting to ensure that railways are managing safety provides Canadians with effective regulation.

After three months of regulation under the new legislation, the results are positive. Inspectors have welcomed their new powers and freedom to exercise judgment. Of equal importance is the fact that the industry, both management and unions, and other involved parties, have reacted in a co-operative manner and are assisting in the development and implementation of modernized regulations, standards, and rules. Indeed, the Hon. Member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Nicholson) knows that the Government is monitoring the implementation of the Railway Safety Act very closely. He also knows that the measure of success will be the safety performance of the industry and the ability of our inspecting staff to influence it.

The Canadian railway system has an excellent safety record. Our goal and the goal of railway safety inspectors is to ensure that this record is preserved and improved.

I would now like to turn to a somewhat separate but nevertheless related matter. In 1985, regulations designed to promote public safety in the transportation of dangerous goods were put into force pursuant to the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act. These regulations reduce the possibility of an accidental release of a dangerous good by requiring that all dangerous goods, as listed or defined in the regulations, be identified, be classified, be marked, be handled in an appropriate manner, be contained in approved packages, tanks, cylinders or containers, and that individuals involved in their transportation be trained with respect to both the requirements of the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act and regulations, as well as in the characteristics of the dangerous goods being moved.

The dangerous goods regulations also ensure that in the event of an accidental release of a dangerous good, the consequences will be minimized. The requirements are that there be immediate notification of the release, remedial measures be undertaken, dangerous goods being transported be marked with identification labels and placards, and that shipping documents clearly identify the dangerous goods, thereby providing immediate information to emergency response personnel.

In addition, for certain more dangerous goods, the regulations require that before shipment occurs, the shipper have in place an emergency response assistance plan detailing how the shipper will respond to correct the effects of any accidental release.

To further support emergency response measures, Transport Canada produced a book entitled Guide to Initial Emergency Response. This has received wide distribution in Canada. It provides advice on initial actions to be taken in the event of an accidental release.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret to advise the Hon. Member that the time provided for the consideration of Private Members' Business has now expired.

Pursuant to Standing Order 96(1) the Order is dropped from the Order Paper.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

THE NUNCIATURE—SITUATION OF MONSIGNOR ANGELO PALMAS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard): Mr. Speaker, Mgr. Angelo Palmas, posted in Ottawa since December 1975 as the Vatican's representative in Canada, has become Dean of the Diplomatic Corps in Ottawa on the basis of seniority.

I was astounded and shocked this morning, Mr. Speaker, when I heard that the Prime Minister had downgraded the Apostolic Nuncio. This kind of gesture from the Tory Government is both petty and outrageous. Today, when Canadians hear the news, they will feel insulted by the Government.

The Prime Minister should immediately apologize to the Vatican and to Mgr. Palmas for his decision and reinstate the latter as Apostolic Nuncio and Dean of the Diplomatic Corps in Ottawa.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GUYANA—ECONOMIC AID

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, many of us are convinced that Canadian aid, particularly bilateral aid, should be linked to respect for human rights and the progress of democracy in recipient nations. It should benefit the people most in need.

Those who share this view are concerned about Canada's role among seven industrial nations in providing financial aid to Guyana linked to IMF austerity measures, near neo-colonialist measures which in other developing nations have exacerbated property and promoted instability. With an international debt of $1.8 billion and a level of poverty nearly the worst in the western hemisphere, Guyana does need help but not just in the economic sphere.

The people of Guyana are not helped if the poorest are ignored, their voices unheard and if human rights abuses continue and democracy is persistently compromised. Canada must not be implicated in a new colonialism that perpetuates the sins of the past. Its aid must serve those most in need. It must enhance human rights. It must promote free and fair elections in Guyana. That is the plea of the Guyanese to the Canadian Government. I ask that they be heard.

ENVIRONMENT WEEK

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, today more than every before, Canadians are concerned about their quality of life.

The federal Government shares that concern and has designated the week of June 4 to June 10 as "Environment Week".

This year's theme, "Our Common Future: It's in Our Hands", is very apt.

Canadians are demonstrating their concern by becoming more active in community clean-up projects and consumer awareness programs.

The federal Government has shown leadership in this area at the international level.

In fact, Canadians have earned the respect of the international community for having made the environment a national priority.

This week is a special opportunity for us all to demonstrate our environmental awareness and to become personally involved in protecting our heritage.

S. O. 31

I am proud of the initiative taken by the Chamber of Commerce in the riding of Drummond, which is carrying out some important clean-up jobs on the banks of the Saint-François River, within the territory of Saint-Charles de Drummond, Saint-Nicéphore and Drummondville.

AIRPORTS

FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF L. B. PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Harry Chadwick (Brampton—Malton): Mr. Speaker, it was a memorable day some years ago when a Lockheed L-14 became visible in the sky, carved a path through some cloud cover and landed safely at its destination.

The first Canadian scheduled flight to land at this site was filled to its capacity. Fourteen passengers stepped out of the aircraft and headed toward the terminal, a converted farmhouse which also served as the headquarters for the airport's administration operations and weather office. The year was 1938. The place was the present site of Lester B. Pearson International Airport.

On Saturday June 10, the Airport will celebrate its fiftieth birthday, a celebration which marks not only the progress of the airport but the progress of air travel in Canada.

As Canada's busiest airport, more demands are being placed on Lester B. Pearson International to allow for maximum efficient use of the facilities while maintaining safe, equitable levels of service and a positive relationship with the surrounding communities. While this has not always been easy, I am confident that a co-operative relationship can exist and that these communities will continue to reap the indisputable economic benefits—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

REGIONAL INDUSTRIAL DEVELOPMENT

COMPLETION OF AUTOROUTE 50

Mr. Gilles Rocheleau (Hull—Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, my intervention relates to the federal Government's financial involvement in the completion of Highway 50 between Masson and Lachute.

Quite recently, Mr. Speaker, Québec Transport Minister Marc-Yvan Côté was in Hull to announce that even without Ottawa's participation his Government would go ahead and complete the Highway 50 Masson-Lachute stretch.

Mr. Speaker, I still dare believe and hope that the federal Government will make a financial contribution to what has often and rightfully been referred to as the backbone of expansion projects in the entire Outaouais region.

Mr. Speaker, I still dare believe and hope that, just as the federal Government had quickly come up with the funding required to build roads in the Prime Minister's riding, it will do the same thing in the case of Highway 50. Again I seek the support of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) in favour of an affirmative decision at the earliest opportunity so that such an important issue might be covered under the next Canada-Québec highway construction agreement.

NATIONAL ENVIRONMENT WEEK

Mrs. Edna Anderson (Simcoe Centre): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are more concerned than ever before about the environment. The week of June 4 to 10 marks Canada's National Environment Week. This year's theme, "Our Common Future: It's in Our Hands", emphasizes the personal contributions we can all make toward preserving our environmental heritage.

While individual Canadians have shown their concern for the environment through a new involvement in community clean-up projects and consumer awareness groups, the federal Government too has made record progress in environmental issues. Through federal projects such as the Environmental Choice Program, Canadians will be encouraged to waste less and recycle more.

• (1410)

Consumers will be able to purchase a growing variety of products made entirely of recycled materials. It is Environment Week and the meaning is clear: The environment is everybody's business.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

NATIONAL ACCESS AWARENESS WEEK

Mr. Dave Worthy (Cariboo—Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, I want to draw the attention of the House to the fact that this week is National Access Awareness Week. Rick Hansen, "The Man in Motion", who set in motion this annual event, is perhaps the most famous Canadian to have come from my riding of Cariboo—Chilcotin.

We of the Cariboo are very proud of Rick's accomplishments. We are especially proud of the heroic way in which Rick brought national and world-wide attention to the plight of disabled persons.

The job which Rick Hansen began, however, remains far from finished. I want to urge all Canadians to do their bit to help disabled Canadians become fully integrated into Canadian life.

Rick Hansen showed us what he could accomplish in a wheelchair. Let us show disabled Canadians what we can accomplish by providing better access for them.

THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Ms. Beth Phinney (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise today to pay tribute to a distinguished Canadian who has reached a milestone in his life. Today the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) celebrates his sixtieth birthday. He is a distinguished parliamentarian who has demonstrated time and time again integrity, honesty, decency and dignity.

He is a courageous politician who has always placed government and public service before himself, a man whose commitment to Canada and Canadians has been completely unqualified.

He is a true Liberal, injecting passion and reason into politics while always emphasizing human dignity; a great Canadian who has been able to strike that delicate balance between politics, family and friends. Within each facet of his life, his is a story of success.

I know that each Member of the House joins with the constituents of Hamilton Mountain to wish the Right Hon. Member continued health and happiness today and in the future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

NATIONAL ACCESS AWARENESS WEEK

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches—Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, on this National Access Awareness Week for disabled people, I want to bring to your attention one of the major problems disabled people face, which is employment opportunities.

Many barriers to equality of opportunity exist to disabled people. Several Canada Employment Centres are not accessible to persons with disabilities. Many personnel are not aware of the needs of the disabled community. Many of those offices are located in buildings which are not physically accessible, and few disabled people qualify for the Canadian Jobs Strategy Program.

There are many disincentives to employment as well. Given that in most provinces a person loses social benefits when employed, many people just cannot afford to work.

The Government has a leading role to play in ensuring that disabled Canadians can and do participate in the mainstream of Canadian life. So far, the Government is not doing a very good job of that. A good place to start would be to straighten out the problems I have just outlined. Disabled people in Canada deserve better.

TRADE

EXPANSION OF AUTO PARTS PLANT IN CONSTITUENCY OF DELTA

Mr. Stan Wilbee (Delta): Mr. Speaker, on June 1 a new wave of investment hit the shores of British Columbia, bringing with it more jobs, new technology, and a bright future for auto parts manufacturing in British Columbia. Canadian Auto Parts Toyota Inc. or CAPTIN, is located in my riding of Delta, and was the first major manufacturing investment in Canada by a Japanese auto firm.

The tremendous success of this wheel manufacturing plant has meant that expansion was necessary, bringing new investment of $23 million. This included a $3 million contribution from the federal Government, in addition to a previous $2.75 million toward the first phase.

Some 130 people will now be employed at the plant, which is up from 70 people. An investment of $800,000 was made on air pollution control and waste water management, and a total of 10 high-tech robots are now in use at the plant.

This plant is a model of industrial co-operation, and shows the federal Government's commitment to improve the B.C. economy by strengthening links with Japan. We are diversifying our industrial base, while at the same time creating jobs and supporting the transfer of technology to Canadians.

I commend the Government of Canada for its forward-thinking trade and regional development policies, and for fulfilling the Progressive Conservative promise of prosperity and fair treatment for British Columbians.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

GUYANA—ECONOMIC AID

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent): Mr. Speaker, in early April of this year, Frank Jackman, the Canadian High Commissioner to Guyana came out in strong support of the austerity measures proposed by the Government of that country. This amounts to the support of a regime that came to power through illegitimate means and has been constantly in violation of all international standards of human rights.

The Government of Guyana adopted the stringent conditions of the International Monetary Fund so that it would qualify for developmental assistance from countries such as Canada. But unfortunately this aid is not going to those that need it the most. This has resulted in a situation whereby the average Guyanese cannot afford the very basic necessities of life.

I urge the Canadian Government to insist that democracy return to Guyana before any further aid is sent and that the Government encourage the participation of the people of Guyana in an equitable distribution of foreign development assistance.

CUTS IN POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION FUNDING

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, as stated by the president of Northern Telecom "the most important investment in the future of Canada in the long run is education". Without education, our children will be left on the sidelines as the so-called information age dawns. It is critical for Canada to increase the excellence and effectiveness of its higher education system. However, the Government believes that deficit reduction is more important than investing in our young people and in our future.

It has cut $1.8 billion from post-secondary education funding over the past four years and plans now to cut another $960 million over the next six years. The Government says that these are not cuts, but before it took a chain saw to education budgets, post-secondary education was to receive billions of dollars more. According to any definition in any dictionary, that is a cut.

We are seeing the consequences of this neglect. Canada's universities are forced to walk the streets with cap in hand, pleading with the public for $1.25 billion. Educating our youth is too important to leave up to philanthropists. The Government must restore fair funding for post-secondary education and cancel the further cuts proposed in the Minister of Finance's (Mr. Wilson) Budget.

RAILWAY TRANSPORT

VIA RAIL—SUPPRESSION OF SERVICES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Speaker, I think that Canadians have less and less confidence in this Government which misled them before and after the last election. They no longer trust a government that does not keep its word. Today, we have a classic example from the Minister of Transport.

Yesterday, he refused to answer the questions he was asked in the House about the future of VIA Rail. Then, he left the House and told journalists that he could imagine simply eliminating rail passenger service.

How can the Minister go so far as to consider the total elimination of rail passenger service for Canadians throughout our great country?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is absolutely no difference between what I said in the House yesterday and what I said outside the House. It is also what I said on May 3, 1989 in a press release, namely that VIA Rail, in preparing its new plan, should consider all possible options whereby it can operate within its budget.

What I said yesterday is exactly the same. All the options VIA Rail is to present to us must be within the new reference levels and, again, I do not presume what conclusions VIA Rail will come to, but I am prepared to examine those that will be presented to me.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, the Minister was much more frank outside the House than he was here in the House.

• (1420)

[English]

ELIMINATION OF ROUTES IN ATLANTIC CANADA

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): We all know that the President of VIA Rail quit because he would not go along with the Government's plan to suppress rail passenger service in Canada. Is it not true that those corporate plans include the destruction of all rail service in Atlantic Canada, particularly the elimination of the Halifax–Sydney route, Halifax–Saint John, Halifax–Yarmouth, Moncton–Edmundston, Moncton–Campbellton, Moncton–Charlottetown and Halifax–Montreal?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would expect the Leader of the Opposition to follow the normal procedure when we ask a corporation to provide some proposals in terms of the future of VIA Rail. What he is referring to, Mr. Speaker, is essentially something from a leaked document, which I have not received myself, which is not in the Department of Transport. I would expect that he would wait, as I do, for the proposal to be officially presented by VIA Rail before making a decision.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That answer does not fool anybody. The Minister better get on top of the job and find out what is going on in VIA Rail.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT BANK LOAN

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): According to the United States transportation journal, which is called Passenger Transport, the U.S. passenger rail service Amtrak is purchasing 100 passenger cars from Bombardier in Canada. This is what the magazine states, and I want to quote from the article. "The order is being financed through the Export Development Corporation of Canada."

We are all for export sales, but will the Minister of Transport explain how it is that the Canadian Government has enough money to finance the purchase by Amtrak of Canadian rail passenger cars for American passenger service, and yet has not got enough money to purchase railway passenger cars for Canadian passenger service?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I must understand, obviously— I am always glad when the Leader of the Opposition refers to the United States, because it depends on what is at issue, not on basic principles. Usually, we are told that anything done in the United States is not good for Canada. Now all of a sudden, the Leader of the Opposition uses a line of argument that is completely contrary to the principles he developed previously.

Mr. Speaker, it is very simple! Canadian companies have a right to do business and they do business with all companies that can provide work for Canadians, and I think that should be encouraged. However, Mr. Speaker, that has nothing to do with the reference level we set for VIA Rail. Once again, Canada can no longer afford to put $700 million a year in a corporation that transports 3 per cent of Canadians.

Again, I repeat what I said yesterday: Everyone is for the train, but no one takes it.

[English]

CUT-BACKS IN VIA RAIL ROUTES

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, Sir John A. Macdonald built the railway in this country, and now his own Conservative Party wants to tear it down.

Would the Minister answer the last question posed by my Leader? Canadians are very happy to help our Canadian companies develop exports. I have trouble today understanding why help cannot also be provided to our own Canadian VIA Rail.

Why is there Canadian money available for Amtrak at a time when 36 of the routes of our Canadian rail are being diminished and 22 of those routes are being eliminated, leaving only 14 routes in Canada? Why is that happening at this time?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am very proud to say that there is an increase in all modes of transportation in this country. In air transportation, deregulation has been well done by the Deputy Prime Minister. There is increased traffic in air transportation, and in rail transportation at the freight level. There is increased traffic in marine transportation. Canada has to deal, first of all, with all those modes of transport and they have to be considered as the future of transportation in Canada.

Once again, how can my friend explain putting that much money in VIA Rail, with the scarce resources we have to consider the future of transportation. This is what I am trying to do within this Government.

RAIL PASSENGER SERVICE

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I think what the Minister forgot to say is that there is also an increased load in our Canadian railway passenger service in this country.

The Minister cannot keep giving those answers. He alone fired the president of VIA Rail because the president of VIA Rail would not go along with his Government's plans. Does this Minister understand that the destruction of rail passenger service in this country will destroy or go a long way toward destroying most small communities in this country which are served by VIA Rail? Does he think that this is what Sir John A. Macdonald had in mind when he started the passenger rail service in our country?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my friend said that the ridership has increased on VIA Rail. It is the kind of financial operation I have been used to seeing with the Liberal Party. It is 13 per cent or $26 million more income for VIA Rail. Ninety-four million dollars, Mr. Speaker, and for $26 million. Once again—

An Hon. Member: What about ridership?

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): The ridership is 13 per cent more. In 1981, the ridership was 21 per cent more than in 1989. This is not the way that we manage the country, to do what the Liberal Party did for 20 years.

CUT-BACKS IN VIA RAIL SERVICE

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister.

Yesterday, I asked the Minister of Transport about the report that VIA Rail was going to be either shutting down completely or making major reductions in passenger service in Atlantic Canada, in Quebec, in northern Ontario, in the Prairies and across British Columbia.

The Minister in his reply yesterday in the House suggested the possibility that he might go along with it. Outside the House, he was even more explicit, and said that he would be quite willing to contemplate the shutdown of the whole passenger service.

Does the Prime Minister accept this totally irresponsible attitude toward railway passenger service as demonstrated by his Minister of Transport?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as usual, we will repeat for the benefit of the Leader of the NDP what we said to the Leader of the Liberal Party. On May 3, I said that all options were to be considered by VIA Rail for conducting its operations within the budget it has been given. In a few weeks, VIA Rail will submit proposals to the Government, defining exactly how the Crown corporation should operate. At that time, the Government will make a choice, after examining VIA Rail's proposals, whatever they may be. This does not mean the proposals will be accepted. It means they will be considered, and that is what I said earlier, and it is what I now repeat to the Leader of the New Democratic Party.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign, the Prime Minister's Office promised to increase VIA Rail services, not the Minister, but if he intends to answer my questions, I have another one.

If we look at all transport modes in Canada, there are subsidies for roads and federal subsidies totalling $700 million for airports, but yesterday the Minister, said that the federal Government's policy is that only the railways have to make a profit. The Minister wants to continue to subsidise cars, buses and airports and even exports by rail to the United States, but no subsidies at all for our railways here in Canada. Is that the federal Government's policy.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first of all, the Leader of the NDP is making assumptions, because no decisions have been made so far. Second, there is something I think he should recall. When we look at the transport modes used in this country by passengers between municipalities, of course support is given to highway transportation, but this mode is used 85 per cent of the time while the railway mode is used only 3 per cent of the time. Mr. Speaker, we have to keep things in perspective. Regarding air transportation, the same Member of Parliament was condemning or deploring the situation at the airport in Toronto, where eventually, we will be announcing certain measures. Transport decisions made are on the basis of use by passengers, Mr. Speaker.

• (1430)

RAILWAYS—FEDERAL GOVERNMENT FUNDS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my last question is directed to the same Minister. If no capital investment is put in and a system that does not function properly is created, of course it is not attractive and people will not go on it. If it is starved, that is what happens. People understand that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Considering that in the private sector General Motors Corporation, which thinks not just five years ahead but ten years ahead, put $2 billion in my constituency alone to modernize equipment for the automotive sector, does the Minister not believe that in the public sector for railways the federal Government has an obligation to invest and to create a modern, efficient railway,just like they are doing with Amtrak in the United States?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to have that much money in my riding. It would be much easier.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): Second, I would like to say seriously that the Government has put $5.4 billion into the rail transportation system which we have. That is $5.4 billion since 1978.

Mr. Broadbent: So what?

Mr. Bouchard (Roberval): If General Motors were to put that much money into a system in which the ridership is 20 per cent less in 1989 than it was in 1981, it would not be where it is today.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CRISIS IN CHINA—MANDATE OF UNITED NATIONS

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It pertains to the crisis in China.

On Monday, the Secretary of State for External Affairs said that Canada was considering as a member of the United Nations Security Council an initiative to put pressure on the Chinese leadership to stop the bloodshed.

On Tuesday, he said that the United Nations had no mandate in a country's internal affairs.

The conflict may well be within the walls of China. However, considering China's nuclear capability the general instability poses an imminent threat to global security.

In light of this, will the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell us what steps he has taken to convince the Assembly that the situation does pose a potential global threat and therefore does indeed fall within the United Nations mandate of ensuring global peace and security?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the House will recall that I made the point yesterday that in a country of the power and size of China the disorder that is occurring cannot long remain an internal matter. However, I know that all Members of the House of Commons would want the United Nations to respect the letter of its charter, and that they would also want the Government of Canada to respect the charter.

Today, the Prime Minister has signed a letter to the Secretary General of the United Nations which does two things. First, it conveys to the Secretary General the resolution adopted unanimously by the House of Commons on Monday night and the record of debate.

It also indicates to the Secretary General that Canada would support very strongly both his leadership and action that might be taken through ECOSOC and action that might be taken through the Human Rights Commission. It indicates that it is our view that in these circumstances the United Nations and the Secretary General should act in a way to have the fullest impact possible within the terms of the charter.

Mr. Flis: I thank the Minister for that detailed answer.

EVACUATION PLANS FOR CANADIANS IN CHINA

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, in this morning's news reports we heard that an emergency evacuation of American Embassy staff and dependants was unsuccessful and that they were still trapped in the compound. We have also heard that the Army is getting ready to move against students on university campuses around China.

I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs how many Canadians are still trapped in Beijing. What is being done to evacuate those Canadians who are still in other Chinese cities and on other university campuses that are not in the vicinity of Beijing or Shanghai?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the House would be pleased to know that a chartered Canadian Airlines International DC-10 left Beijing with 251 Canadian passengers last night. It has arrived safely in Tokyo.

There would be in the neighbourhood of 30 to 40 Canadians remaining in Beijing. Some of those are Canadian Embassy officials. They will be remaining there for the foreseeable future to maintain Canadian activities there.

I have issued an advisory to Canadians elsewhere in China that it is the view of the Government that it would be wise for them to leave other parts of China. We are putting in place arrangements that will help them move out.

There are some complications that I should draw to the attention of the House. One is that some Canadians are in particularly remote parts of China. Jet aircraft cannot land in some of those locations. We are looking into the chartering of smaller aircraft that might be able to get into those more remote areas.

These are problems which are not faced by Canada alone. Other countries involved, such as the United States, as the Hon. Member mentioned, Australia, the U.K., and others are facing similar difficulties. We are pooling our resources.

For example, we have made an arrangement with Australia by which vacant spaces on one of its planes coming out of Beijing and Shanghai tomorrow will be made available to Canadians. In exchange we will make available to Australians and to others vacant spaces on another chartered Canadian Airlines flight that will be leaving Beijing and Shanghai on Friday.

We believe we have identified the location of Canadians throughout China. There are some technical problems in ensuring that we can get to all of them as quickly as we would like to, but in working with other countries we are doing our best.

NUCLEAR WEAPONS

NON-PROLIFERATION TREATY

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

In last month's issue of the Science and Government bulletin the Minister of Energy said that in his attempt to sell the CANDU reactor he was going to review all the regulations regarding the sale of nuclear elements out of Canada, including a review of Canada's position in the 1970 treaty of the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons. To quote the Minister, he said: "For instance, you take China. Some people are putting China forward as a potential area for sales. Obviously the NPT becomes an issue."

Will the Minister today renounce the dangerous policy review that he has undertaken, especially in light of the recent events in China? Does the Minister not recognize that Canada's participation in the non-proliferation treaty is crucial?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the article to which the Hon. Member referred and subsequent articles which have been written deal with the examination of AECL's work. The regulations refer to the joint partnerships that AECL at the present time has difficulty entering into, as well as the up-front loading of costs that AECL and the Government of Canada have had to bear. Those are the regulations to which I am referring.

At no time did I refer to the NPT to say that I am reviewing it, that we want to change it, or that we will lessen it.

When I referred to China and the NPT, obviously until China signs the NPT specifically for CANDU reactors or any other nuclear technology Canada could not co-operate.

SALE OF REACTOR TO CHINA

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the direct quote is still on tape. The Minister and nobody else but the Minister raised the issue of the sale of a nuclear reactor to China. He directly said: "For instance, you take China. Some people"—including AECL—"are putting China forward as a potential area for sales. Obviously the NPT becomes an issue."

Will the Minister not categorically reject any review of Canada's participation in the NPT? Does he not understand that the sale of nuclear reactors should obviously depend upon the economic and political stability of the countries involved? How could he make a statement like this? How can he justify, especially in light of the current turmoil in China, even discussing the possibility of the sale of a nuclear reactor to China?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is simply twisting again the words that I used.

With respect to when the article and the interview was done—

Ms. Copps: You are on tape.

Mr. Epp: I am glad I am on tape. That is where the truth is. I wish she would also express it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: Obviously, in view of what has happened in China, before there would be any decision taken on an AECL or CANDU reactor, whether it is the present situation or China's adherence to the NPT, China would have to adhere to the NPT. I raised the NPT for exactly that reason. Until the Chinese will conform to the NPT, obviously, Canada with its policy would not be able, and should not be able, to sell AECL or nuclear technology.

Ms. Copps: You are reviewing your policy.

Mr. Epp: In terms of review, I said that it is with respect to the manner in which AECL functions, not a review of the NPT, Canada's adherence to the NPT, or that Canada will force anyone who buys nuclear technology from Canada to conform to the NPT.

THE ENVIRONMENT

IMPACT OF VIA RAIL CUT-BACKS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister. In June, 1988 the Prime Minister said, and I quote: "We have established mechanisms to ensure that economic decisions take environmental impact into account". I am sure the Prime Minister will realize that any shift from use of rail to road and air will have a negative impact on the environment.

In light of the Prime Minister's policy statement—was it a commitment or a promise; I am not sure which—back in 1988, did the Government have an environmental impact study done on the budget decision to reduce the subsidy levels for VIA Rail?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT ASSESSMENT

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Minister of Transport said that his Department did not do any studies into the impact of VIA Rail on the subsidies. The Prime Minister said that there has been no environmental impact done.

In light of the Prime Minister's statement of June, 1988 in which he said there were mechanisms in place, will he now indicate to this House and to the people of Canada that before VIA's report is implemented in whatever form it is there will be a full environmental impact assessment done to ensure that whatever the changes are there is no detrimental impact to the environment?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport has indicated many times that VIA Rail is in the process of producing some recommendations that will be brought forward for consideration by the Government, presumably some time in the month of June.

The reference levels to which allusion has been made are those brought forward by the Minister of Finance and budgetary provisions, the statement of numbers, usually do not involve environmental impact studies.

DAY CARE

CANADA ASSISTANCE PLAN—SUBSIDIES IN METRO TORONTO

Ms. Barbara Greene (Don Valley North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

There are 5,000 families on the approved waiting list for subsidy for day care in Metropolitan Toronto. This year, in spite of the fact that Metro Toronto residents pay the highest taxes in North America and confront the highest living costs in Canada, the provincial Government has authorized an increase in subsidy that will still leave property taxpayers footing a bill of $12 million for day care subsidy costs.

As Minister responsible for the Canada Assistance Plan which funds 50 per cent of these subsidies to low income families who are predominantly single parents, many of whom would otherwise be on welfare, will he request Premier David Peterson of the Province of Ontario to stop discriminating against residents of Metropolitan Toronto and provide the subsidies residents are eligible for under the Canada Assistance Plan?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am very much aware of the Hon. Member's concern. While the Province of Ontario has the jurisdiction to determine—

Ms. Copps: That is why you killed the day care issue.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I think this is a serious issue and Members of the House of Commons should listen. The Province of Ontario—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: Apparently, Mr. Speaker, they are not interested.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: It was a serious question and it was a long one. I hope the Minister will keep that in mind.

Mr. Beatty: I will indeed, Sir. I will give a very short answer. First, the Government of Canada is responsible for the allocation. Second, this year we expect to be transferring under CAP $114 million. Third, when I meet with the provincial Minister I will convey the Hon. Member's concern to him.

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

OFFSHORE DEVELOPMENT FUND—CONSTRUCTION OF ROAD

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency.

Would the Minister confirm to Members of this House that he is the owner of some 2,000 acres of land in Pictou County in Nova Scotia and that he is also the sole owner of Beaver Lumber Company Limited, a private investment company in New Glasgow, Nova Scotia?

Would he also confirm that $9.2 million in funds from the offshore development fund were used to build a road which the Auditor General says has nothing to do with offshore development but in point of fact benefits Beaver Lumber Company Limited?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I can inform my honourable colleague that I own some land in Pictou County. I do own Beaver Lumber Company. I own some land in Pictou County, and I am aware of this crock that has been peddled around for some months now that somehow the construction of this road has benefited me or some person close to me. I categorically deny that. As a matter of fact, the construction of the road, if anything, has a detrimental effect on properties I happen to own beside the road.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dingwall: I thank the Minister for his frankness.

POSITION OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is for the Prime Minister.

The Minister or the Prime Minister must be aware that the Auditor General referred to the Privy Council Office a letter which was delivered to the Auditor General raising some very serious questions with regard to this particular situation.

I would like the Prime Minister to stand in his place and to inform Members of the House on the nature of the discussions that took place between him and the Minister responsible for Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, and whether or not there was any real or perceived conflict of interest in this entire matter. If not, would the Prime Minister table that report for benefit of Members of Parliament?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of some of the allegations to which my hon. friend makes reference. They apparently came forward in an unsigned, anonymous poison pen letter from an individual to an officer of Parliament, I think the Auditor General. It was referred to the Clerk of the Privy Council who with the appropriate—

Mr. Nunziata: Another leak.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I am trying to answer and the Liberals apparently having asked the question refuse to—

Mr. Marchi: Get off that.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, the matter was referred to the Clerk of the Privy Council who with his officials met with me, then met with the Minister, reviewed all relevant documentation, and interviewed the appropriate people and the Minister. He concluded that there was no conflict of interest and that the Minister discharged his responsibilities at all times consistent with the finest traditions of this House.

It is true that funds were expended by the Government of Canada in co-operation with the Government of Nova Scotia to build a road through Pictou County, a road that had been overdue by some 50 or 60 years. It was one of the few areas in Canada deprived of this kind of infrastructure. The Government of Canada made the decision along with the Government of Nova Scotia, under appropriate arrangements, to build that road through Pictou County. It was a proper investment of public funds in the Province of Nova Scotia and in Pictou County.

The Member of Parliament from Pictou and his family are widely known in the area as having over many generations been involved in the wood lot business. This highway, as I understand it, was designed and the road bed chosen essentially by the provincial Government. There was no benefit, direct or indirect, to the Minister, and everything that he did was designed to enhance what my hon. friend speaks of in this House often, the well-being and the economic advancement of the people and the Province of Nova Scotia.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

HIGH LEVEL OF UNEMPLOYMENT IN MONTREAL REGION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister, who designated the Minister of Labour responsible for the Montreal region. We found out today that, according to the Minister, Montreal doesn't need federal programs. Nothing could be further from the truth. Our unemployment rate is twice as high as in Toronto. The closing of Vickers, the east-end refineries and the railways clearly shows that we have been abandoned by the Conservatives. How can the Prime Minister justify his appointment of a Minister who has admitted giving up even before having fought for the interests of the people of Montreal?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend from Ville LaSalle has obviously failed to mention that, since this Government came to power, the unemployment rate in Montreal has been reduced from 11.3 per cent to 9.7 per cent and that 99,000 new jobs have been created in Montreal itself—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mulroney: Also, 313,000 new jobs have been created in Québec, a record level for the past few years. A $35 million industrial revitalization program for east-end Montreal has been announced, as well as $125 million in industrial loans and $115 million for the Canadian Jobs Strategy programs. In case my friend has forgotten, the Canadian Government, with the support of the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party, has recently established the Space Agency in Montreal.

An Hon. Member: In Saint-Hubert.

REQUEST FOR CONCRETE MEASURES

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): It is clear, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister has not visited Montreal in a long time. As far as I know, Saint-Hubert is not located on Montreal Island.

Mr. Speaker, this answer makes clear that nobody is defending the interests of Montreal Island. My question is this: Is the Prime Minister ready to support concrete proposals in order, first of all, to provide the kind of funding needed in South-West Montreal, which, like the East side, is affected by economic decline and Conservative neglect?

Is the Prime Minister ready to support tax measures needed to further Montreal's international role? Is the Prime Minister ready to support a reversal of the RRAP program cuts, that senseless discrimination against the East side's poorest tenants?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is referring to Montreal's international role. Where was he when the Liberals tried to kill Bill C-22, the effect of which was to attract $700 million in investment money into the drug industry in Montreal? Although it had the support of every research centre in Montreal's large universities, the Liberal Party attempted to kill Bill C-22 that was so urgently needed in Montreal.

In addition, the President of the Treasury Board has announced $100 million of investment money for Montreal's old harbour. There are a series of projects throughout that great area. But amazingly the Hon. Member seems to believe that Saint-Hubert, as well as the North or East sides of Montreal, should not benefit from the same moves directed at downtown Montreal. In our view, all Montrealers are first-class citizens.

VIA RAIL CUT-BACKS—REQUEST FOR IMPACT STUDY

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Prime Minister.

The Prime Minister has, in his answers to the Hon. Member from Thunder Bay—Atikokan, revealed surely the shallowness of his understanding of the concept of sustainable development by being so flip in his rejection of the notion that there may well indeed be an argument for an environmental assessment of the VIA Rail cut-backs.

The Prime Minister made a commitment that all economic decisions would be environmentally assessed. Does he not think that budgetary decisions are economic decisions?

Does he not think, therefore, that the cut-backs in VIA Rail will have an environmental impact with increased use of cars, buses and other emissions? Does he not think that that is an environmental issue? Why will he not order an environmental impact study of the VIA Rail cuts?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure my hon. friend will agree that we made a great deal of progress with the concept of sustainable development.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Not in Winnipeg.

Mr. Mulroney: In fact, a centre for sustainable development will be established at Winnipeg. I think that will bring a great benefit to Canada. I know that my hon. friend, the representative from Winnipeg, will celebrate this very important occasion.

The concept of sustainable development is being progressively incorporated into the plans of the Government of Canada. The Minister of the Environment has made remarkable progress in a brief period of time. We hope to make more. We will be able to do so with the ongoing co-operation of the Member for Winnipeg.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, the point is that centres, as welcome as they may be, rhetoric, and awards in the United States from phoney environmental organizations as well—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put his question, please.

Mr. Blaikie: —are not enough. Does the Prime Minister not see that there is an opportunity here for him to put his money where his mouth is with respect to the Brundtland Commission, sustainable development, et cetera, and to have an environmental impact assessment done of a major economic decision, the decision to cut back on subsidies for VIA Rail?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend cannot have it both ways. On the one hand, he celebrates the name "Brundtland", the Prime Minister of Norway. Then he refers to a "phoney" award that Canada received in the United States. Prime Minister Brundtland was there to present me with the award.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PUBLIC WORKS

OLD GOVERNMENT HOUSE IN FREDERICTON

Mr. J. W. Bud Bird (Fredericton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. One of the most prestigious federal properties anywhere in Canada is old Government House in Fredericton. It was once the residence of New Brunswick's Lieutenant-Governor.

It is my understanding that after several decades of occupation and ownership by the RCMP as its headquarters, this property has been conveyed to the Department of Public Works for future utilization planning or for disposition.

Has the Minister entered into negotiations with the Province of New Brunswick with a view to returning this priceless historical structure to its original use or to some comparable priority purpose?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that about two years ago the Department of Transport and Department of Public Works did in fact enter into negotiations with the Province of New Brunswick with the object of transferring, under proper circumstances, this historic property along with other assets to the province. However, it is my understanding that the negotiations have not yet been completed.

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY OWNERSHIP

Mr. J. W. Bud Bird (Fredericton): Mr. Speaker, in view of the lack of progress in the comprehensive exchanges proposed, is the Minister prepared to negotiate the transfer of this property on its own merits with the Province of New Brunswick?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, subject to first offering this property to any federal Department that has a requirement for it at fair market value, I would be prepared to enter into negotiations if the Province of New Brunswick so desires to obtain it.

REVENUE CANADA

THE SATANIC VERSES

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister.

According to media reports today it was the Prime Minister's own office which initiated action to ban the novel The Satanic Verses. Given that the Prime Minister, on March 13, blamed the action on what he described as "Revenue Canada functionaries", why should we now believe the Prime Minister when he tries to blame public servants for keeping Cabinet in the dark for two hours on the second budget leak?

Given the Prime Minister's record, why should we believe him now?

• (1500)

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, what the Prime Minister said earlier in the year was 100 per cent correct. What he said today is consistent and is 100 per cent correct.

What is totally incorrect is that the Prime Minister's office initiated in any way, shape or form The Satanic Verses action by Revenue Canada. The matter was carried out in a routine and standard procedure. Revenue Canada officials carried the matter forward in a routine and standard procedure. In the end, it was determined that the book did not constitute hate literature, therefore, it was never banned at the border in the first place.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I suppose that's the sacred truth. My supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Finance.

[Translation]

REQUEST FOR TRUTH

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, the Minister of Finance, in reply to a question, described Mr. Richard Rémillard from his office as, and I quote, "a political assistant of my staff". Considering Mr. Rémillard had been made aware of the budget leak even before the question period, on April 26, why does the Minister keep on explaining here he was unaware of the leak for two hours because of officials? Is it not about time to come clean once and for all?

[English]

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I stated in the House that Mr. Rémillard first heard of this matter around three o'clock on the Thursday. That is as much as I can say. The question has been discussed time and time again in the House. The answer is there and is very clear for people to see.

* * *

THE BUDGET

STATEMENT OF GOVERNOR OF BANK OF CANADA

Mr. John R. Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance.

When the Governor of the Bank of Canada appeared before the Finance Committee on May 29, he stated that he had discussions with officials from the Minister of Finance's office on the evening of April 26 after the first budget leak. In fact, he stated to the committee that there were discussions with officials of the Ministry of Finance and the appropriate intervention program was put in place.

I would ask Minister of Finance whether one of the reasons for this appropriate intervention program was that there was a possibility of profit from the advance knowledge about the Budget, not whether there was any profit, but was there any possibility of profit, and that was one of the reasons for the program of intervention?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the policy of the Government of Canada on intervention in the foreign exchange markets has been the same for many years. We resist pressures going up or going down in the exchange markets. That is the appropriate intervention policy, and it is the intervention policy that I presume was followed then, as it has been followed many times before and will be followed many times after.

DESIGNATION OF OPPOSITION DAY.

Hon. Jean Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, after discussions, the Government and opposition parties have agreed that Thursday, June 8, that is tomorrow, will be an allotted day.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Government Acting Leader. As is his right, he has designated tomorrow as an opposition day. Is it a fact that Friday will also be an opposition day?

Mr. Charest: Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker. As of this moment, it has not yet been decided that Friday would be designated as an opposition day. But true to character, we would be ready to discuss it with representatives of both opposition parties.

M. Gray: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Deputy Government House Leader to discuss the matter with the House Leader as well as with the Minister of Justice? Indeed, information I have received from him lead me to believe that Friday will also be an opposition day.

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat that, as far as I know, Friday, June 9, has not been designated as an Opposition Day. Now, as my Hon. Colleague, the House Leader of the Liberal Party of Canada, knows, we usually discuss it among ourselves and so will we discuss it with him and with the House Leader and the representatives of the NDP. He should be advised reasonnably in advance, as has always been the case, Mr. Speaker.

PETITIONS

VIA RAIL CUT-BACKS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour and privilege to present a number of petitions today. I will do them all at once.

They are from residents of Thunder Bay, Ontario, in my constituency but they also come from residents of Saskatoon, Medicine Hat, Victoria, Ingersol, Barrie, Cremona, Alberta, Calgary, Alberta, Toronto, Montreal, Ignace, Kenora, Winnipeg and a number of other communities throughout Canada. All the petitioners have one thought in mind and that is a repudiation of the budget component that reduces VIA Rail by $1.2 billion over the next five years.

They call upon the Government to live up to its original pledge to support VIA Rail, to abandon plans for further cuts to VIA's budget and to provide the necessary resources to allow VIA to operate as a modern, effective transportation company rather than a museum.

BACKLOG OF REFUGEE CLAIMANTS

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and duty according to the Standing Orders to present a petition from some 100 people in the city of Toronto who are concerned for the condition of people who have made refugee claims and are in the backlog prior to 1989, many of whom still do not have work permits.

They therefore request this House to direct that the Minister of Employment ensure that all refugee claimants who have notified Canada Immigration of their intention to make a claim be considered eligible for immediate employment authorization and that a case by case review of their claims be made on humanitarian and compassionate grounds, taking into account the presence in Canada of relatives and the successful establishment of these people in Canada. They ask that special consideration be given to those fleeing war zones, oppressive governments and natural disasters.

COST OF TAX PREPARATION

Hon. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to present a petition on behalf of the undersigned residents of Canada who now avail themselves of their ancient and undoubted right to present a grievance to this House.

Whereas the cost of basic tax preparation by Canadian taxpayers is not deductible from taxable income, they are asking that we should have the cost of basic tax preparation deductible from taxable income for all Canadians.

VIA RAIL CUT-BACKS

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty today to rise to present a petition on behalf of some residents of my riding in Moose Jaw—Lake Centre and of some other residents in western Canada with respect to the future of VIA Rail.

They call upon the federal Government to ensure that rail passenger service in Canada be retained, modernized and expanded as an important part of our national transportation system.

CLOSURE OF CFB LONDON

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour once again to stand in this House and present, on behalf of thousands of Londoners and people in the area, petitions asking and demanding that this Government rescind their action in the closure of CFB London.

REQUEST FOR CHANGES TO EXTRADITION LAWS

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary Southwest): Mr. Speaker, Members of Parliament from all across Canada are submitting petitions with respect to the extradition laws of Canada.

I have the honour today under provisions of Standing Order 36 to present hundreds of petitions containing over 4,200 signatures from Alberta in general, but more specifically from my riding of Calgary Southwest.

These petitioners call for the Government of Canada to revise its extradition laws in order that we can prevent Canada from becoming a safe haven for dangerous individuals from other countries. I join with these petitioners who humbly pray and call upon Parliament to revise the laws of Canada relating to extradition to allow the Minister of Justice of Canada to order the extradition of alleged or convicted criminals at any time after their apprehension in Canada even during their period of incarceration for crimes committed in this country.

VIA RAIL CUT-BACKS

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I again have the honour to present a petition on behalf of Canadians who wish the federal Government to maintain and improve VIA services across this country.

The petitioners call upon Parliament to maintain, improve and modernize VIA Rail services in those areas of the country where it can provide a more rapid, economical, safe, convenient, environmentally sound and energy efficient alternative to other means of transportation. The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to do this.

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 36 to present several petitions signed by Canadian citizens, almost all of whom are resident in the astonishingly beautiful riding of Edmonton East, calling on the Government to live up to its original pledge to support VIA Rail, to abandon plans for further cuts to VIA's budget and to provide the necessary resources to allow VIA to operate as a modern, effective transportation company rather than as a museum.

I would just note that one gentleman in Edmonton has scrawled beside his signature the suggestion to restore the service to Banff.

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF YOUNG OFFENDER'S ACT

Mr. Harry Chadwick (Brampton—Malton): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour to submit this petition to the House pursuant to Standing Order 36. The petition is certified correct by the Clerk of Petitions. There are some 2,500 names in respect to the Young Offender's Act whereupon the undersigned humbly pray and call upon Parliament to review the Young Offender's Act.

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to rise under Standing Order 36 on behalf of residents right across Canada to present to this House a petition that asks the Government to provide the resources necessary to fulfil its promises of improved rail services.

These residents are concerned with the cut-backs and the budgetary restraints that have been imposed upon VIA Rail and have requested that the Government improve and modernize VIA Rail services in those areas of the country where it can provide a more rapid, economical, safe, convenient, environmentally sound and energy efficient alternative to other means of transportation.

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION AT TORONTO LETTER PROCESSING PLANT

Mr. Tom Wappel (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to present today 13 petitions signed by a total of 323 people. What is interesting about the petitions is that each and every one of the 13 deal with the Toronto East letter processing plant alleging discrimination with respect to the treatment of part-time employees. These employees and their supporters pray that Parliament intervene on their behalf to ensure fair and equal work schedules and working conditions.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

The House resumed from Tuesday, June 6, consideration of the motion of Mrs. McDougall: That Bill C-21, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act and the Employment and Immigration Department and Commission Act, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee; and the amendment of Mr. Allmand (p. 2685).

Mr. André Plourde (Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to take part, on behalf of the Government, in the debate on second reading of Bill C-21 amending the Unemployment Insurance Act.

This Bill is of great importance for the future of our country and for working men and women. It shows once again our Government's determination to help workers adjust to technological changes and meet competition in the next decade. While their prosperity depends on a healthy economy, it also depends on their ability and their productivity.

In the 1990s, working men and women will operate in a much more complex world where microelectronics, telecommunications, robotics and automation will impinge on all trades and professions. The pressures of competition, technological change and the demands of the market will thoroughly change the structure of the labour market in Canada and mean that there will be fewer and fewer positions for workers with little education and training.

Already, Mr. Speaker, more than a million workers have difficulty finding work because they lack skills. This trend is expected to increase because of certain demographic factors. In the 1970s, the labour force grew by about 300,000 annually, but the number of workers is expected to grow by only 180,000 (annually) in the 1990s. Statistics Canada reports that 14 per cent of Canadian manufacturers already have production difficulties due to a lack of skilled labour.

Mr. Speaker, we must always keep in mind the background for this reform: workers want to work and to have steady jobs in which they can fulfill themselves as human beings.

Too many workers are still caught in the vicious circle of odd jobs, unemployment insurance or welfare, which we must break.

In Canada, Mr. Speaker, we spend $12 billion a year on unemployment insurance benefits and only $400 million on training for workers. Our country is falling behind other industrial powers with respect to worker training and retraining.

The strategy we are proposing to Canadians, Mr. Speaker, is to change the present use of unemployment insurance funds and reallocate them to train UI recipients, while of course preserving the income safety net unemployment insurance represents for all workers.

Mr. Speaker, the changes are intended to make the Unemployment Insurance Program an active program. Why spend $12 billion to keep people at home? In fact, one of Québec's greatest poets, Félix Leclerc, said that the best way to kill a man was to pay him to do nothing.

Whatever our friends opposite seem to think, we are not saving any money. Twelve billion dollars will be spent, except that a larger part will go to training, to give additional tools to those who want to meet the challenges of the 1990s. The level of assistance has been definitely enhanced.

The reform would not be worth the paper it was written on if the Government cannot depend on the support of all its economic partners, especially the private sector, which will be asked to play a far more important role. Job training is above all the responsibility of employers and employees, and in the present situation, the private sector must be a more active force. It is in their own interests and those of their employees, whose skills and productivity are essential if businesses are to be competitive.

Today, Canadian businesses are not working hard enough on occupational training. This must improve, Mr. Speaker. It is true that we as a government intend to inject $230 million into increasing training activities in the private sector through co-operative programs. The private sector will be urged in turn to invest its share of funds in training. The National Skills Development Advisory Board which the Government intends to establish will provide the Government with guidance on the needs of the private sector.

The $230 million designated for the private sector breaks down as follows: $65 million will be spent on sectoral human resources planning; $100 million will be spent on developing the skills of young Canadians who do not have the qualifications for today's jobs and need help to make the transition from school to work; $15 million will be used to provide more assistance to businesses in adjusting their labour force when they are either expanding, shutting down or introducing technological change; $50 million will be used to help 200 designated communities whose economic situation has been affected by market developments. This amount is in addition to the $148 million already earmarked by the Government for job creation.

All these measures, Mr. Speaker, not only infuse our training programs with greater vigour, they are also adapted to the situation in disadvantaged regions.

The Unemployment Insurance Program will not only be more active, it will also play a development role. That is what I call making the most of our resources for the common good!

At this point, I think we should remember that having a job means a lot more than getting a pay cheque every week. It also means feeling that one is participating fully in the economic growth of our society. When someone is unemployed and finally gets a job, that very fact often means restored dignity and self-esteem and, especially, a chance to realize, to explore potential that would have been wasted.

In addition, the Government will be providing an additional $50 million to the $50 million already available under the Canada Assistance Plan, in order to help social assistance recipients acquire the skills and experience they need to get a job.

This particular group consists of a large number of young people between the ages of 18 and 25. As someone who has worked for many years in education and business, I find it particularly sad that one young person out of three is unable to finish high school. We must pay special attention to these young people who constitute a tremendous resource for our society. If we fail to act quickly to bring a large number of the 18 to 25 group into the labour force, we run the risk of excluding them forever from the mainstream of society, with all the social costs that implies.

Together with provincial funds, more than $200 million more will be spent annually on re-employment of social assistance recipients. In concrete terms, 20,000 recipients will have a chance to upgrade their training. Considering the extent of the federal Government's contribution, it is obviously false to claim that the legislation's new provisions would have the effect of increasing the number of social assistance recipients, and thus increase the financial burden on the provinces. We must not forget that first of all, under the Canada Assistance Plan the federal Government is responsible for funding half the costs of social assistance, and second, that the training and re-employment programs proposed under the new strategy will reduce the number of welfare recipients.

• (1530)

The Government also believes that more must be done to improve the situation of unemployed older workers. One hundred million dollars will be provided to cover the costs of hiring and training workers laid off as a result of changes in technology and demand.

Other incentives for this kind of worker to find another job quickly are also planned. These will be in addition to those already provided by existing Jobs Strategy programs.

The Bill submitted for the approval of the House, Mr. Speaker, thoroughly changes the present special benefits plan.

In order to meet the requirements of the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, our Government intends not only to guarantee parental benefits for natural and adoptive parents but also to make the special benefits provisions of the Unemployment Insurance Act more flexible. Under the new provisions, both parents will be able to share 10 weeks of benefits after the birth or adoption of a child. The new plan will allow beneficiaries to combine sickness, maternity and parental benefits up to the maximum allowable, 30 weeks.

The combination of maternity and sickness benefits, now limited to 145 weeks, will therefore be eliminated. These new provisions will cost the Unemployment Insurance Plan another $450 million. This is, Mr. Speaker, a beautiful example of a Government that is concerned with the condition of women and young couples and that is not afraid to act in a tangible way to enable them to reconcile their carreer objectives with their parental responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker, I consider that all forms of discrimination towards older people must disappear. I am happy that this bill allows people who are 65 years of age or more to be treated as full citizens. Older people will be able to contribute to the unemployment insurance system and to take advantage of all its benefits. These new provisions which will cost $40 million are not only in keeping with the Charter of Rights but they recognize the privilege of Canadian men and women who are 65 or more to retire later. We must recognize that senior citizens have the inalienable right to decide for themselves.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, the Bill has other provisions whose goal is to eliminate some unfair restrictions on eligibility to benefits during work action.

Presently, Mr. Speaker, the legislation does not allow the paying of benefits for sickness or maternity during work action. We think that this an inequitable and retrograde provision that this House would like to do away with.

It would have certainly been easier to leave things the way they were by simply bringing in some minor amendments for window dressing and thus being seen as doing much while doing very little actually.

Bill C-21 and the Labour Force Development Strategy are not just a masking exercise. They go straight to the source of the problem, that is to give Canada a skilled labour force capable of facing up to the challenges that the 21st century will bring.

Our goal is to preserve the important role of Unemployment Insurance as an income maintenance program, while eliminating elements that encourage inactivity, especially in areas where the economy is strong.

To respect regional differences, we have also taken into account regions like mine, Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup, where the unemployment rate is high.

In addition to training programs, Mr. Speaker, these regions will get special assistance for community development as well as measures supporting local entrepreneurship.

As I said before, Mr. Speaker, all that has been done while taking into account the differences between Canadian regions, despite those who would like us to treat all parts of Canada as one and the same.

In brief, in regions where there are more available jobs, people will have to work a greater number of weeks to be eligible for benefits and their benefit period will be shorter. Conversely, in regions with high unemployment rates, workers won't be affected by those measures, Mr. Speaker.

As a Government, we fully recognize the vital role played by the unemployment insurance system as a social safety net and we have no intention to undermine it. On the contrary! However, we are aware that the present system has shortcomings and doesn't offer any alternative. Bill C-21 proposes alternatives, Mr. Speaker. The risk was high but my Government has made a commitment to improve the lot of the unemployed, not to please unions, employers or the electorate but to assume its responsibilities, and that is what we have done.

All the changes proposed in Bill C-21 have essentially been designed to make that system more efficient and equitable and to meet the needs of workers. Like any Government measure, Mr. Speaker, this Bill imposes restrictions and obligations. As legislators, we have to look beyond the selective disadvantages which so often arise from the measures that we are taking. We must look at the potential long-term advantages of these measures, certainly for the people concerned, but also for the collectivity as a whole.

M. Speaker, Bill C-21, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, is a legislative measure which will be beneficial for workers as a whole. Once again, its purpose is to give additional tools and a hope for a better future to thousands of Canadiens presently unemployed. Having valued for a long time leisure, physical fitness or consumption, the time has come to value work. That is what this Bill does.

For all those reasons, M. Speaker, I would urge my colleagues to support this Bill.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On questions or comments, the Hon. Member for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception.

Mr. Mifflin: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great interest to what the Hon. Member for Kamouraska—Riviere-du-Loup had to say and I did find it very interesting.

There are certain aspects of this proposed amendment to the Unemployment Insurance Act which I would certainly like to bring to the attention of the House and on which I would certainly like to make some comments. I have spent the last couple of weeks dealing with an upset that one aspect of this amendment has caused in my riding.

I would like to read the press release of the Hon. Minister of Employment and Immigration dated June 1, 1989. In part it reads, and I am quoting verbatim:

> The legislation, part of the government's recently announced Labour Force Development Strategy "Success in Works", strengthens the ability of the UI program to continue to act as an economic safety net by focusing on those in need.

There is an aspect of this legislation which has impinged on my riding in a very unsatisfactory, devastating, and disconcerting manner. I speak now of one particular aspect with which I am sure many Members certainly on this side of the House are very familiar. I am talking about the job development strategywhich has been put in place. I speak not only for my riding, but I am sure I speak for the other ridings in Newfoundland, and certainly for other parts of Atlantic Canada because it was discussed this morning at various meetings.

The whole problem with this business is that the job development strategy has been a benefit to my riding not only as a safety net for insurable earnings under UI but as part of the community development programs. I have ten rural development committees in my riding. They have all been absolutely devastated by the abruptness of this change.

• (1540)

It was quoted in the press release that this change will have the program continue to act as an economic safety net. I am in receipt of a letter to one of my constituents. I wish to quote from part of it. It involves a job development application. There are hundreds of these letters in my riding right now. The contents of it have been sent without consultation with me, without consultation with the rural development associations and their committees, and without consultation with any of the leaders of the community. I am talking about 260 communities in my riding. Your Honour can imagine why my office and my constituency assistant are inundated with telephone calls. We do not have enough people to man the two lines that we have. The letter states in part:

> Your application for funding under the Job Development Program has been assessed.
>
> The Job Development Program is not designed to be a safety net which provides insurable employment, or a mechanism which provides community infrastructure and nothing else. The objective of Job Development is to assist long-term unemployed individuals by providing them with training and work experience in occupations with real potential for employment.
> Your application is not being recommended as the training is for occupations that are either surplus to the labour market or are not in demand.

I live in a riding that is essentially a one industry riding. The transfer of $800 million for training does not make a lot of sense to me. That equates to $30 million that will not be used for unemployed people in Newfoundland. A great deal of it will pertain to my riding.

When people call me up, what do I explain to them? I say: "Yes, this was meant, I believe, for retraining programs." Retraining is fine in Toronto, Oshawa, or any other of the urban communities where there is not one industry but 50 or maybe 100 such as sheet metal works, fabricating companies, car factories, and ship building factories. There is no ship building in Bonavista, Newfoundland. There is no sheet metal works in Clarenville. None of these things exist. We have the potential for job training, but where are the jobs? I do not know what I can tell my constituents when they call. I do not know what I should say. Should I say: "Go back and submit a project where you have a strong element of job training"? They will ask me: "What kind of job training, trained to do what kind of jobs?"

I do not want to become repetitive, but I hope many of my constituents watching this debate. I hope that in the next three or four days or the next week or so, as long as we can talk about Bill C-21, that as a minimum they will have a better understanding for what the Government is trying to do. I do not understand it. I certainly cannot support it. I have to speak up for what might have been a well intentioned macro change for the country, but which certainly does not pertain to my riding. I suggest that it does not pertain to many other rural ridings in Canada.

It grieves me to no end that on the one hand the Minister for International Trade says that Newfoundland is going to get $15 million moreand on the other hand the Minister of Employment and Immigration comes out with a document in which the result is that we are going to get $30 million less; $30 million minus and $15 million plus still gives me a minus $15 million.

I want to go on record to acknowledge that I am going to do as much in my power as I can to ensure that the Canadian public is aware of the inconsistencies. I will do my utmost to make the people of Canada aware that these letters have been going out to well intentioned people who are expecting something for their communities, something for their unemployment insurance, something to boost their earnings. They get nothing but a cold letter indicating that there has been an abrupt, terrible and disconcerting change.

As their Member of Parliament, unfortunately I have to say to them: "I have not been consulted. I have not been briefed. I have not been made aware of these changes for which I have to answer to you and to the people of my riding."

I suggest that there are many other people certainly on this side of the House, and I would suggest on the other side of the House although they may not want to admit it, who are in exactly the same position.

I beg your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, to allow me to wrap up this by saying that I wish there were some other way that we could look at this.

I wish that the Minister of Employment and Immigration as a minimum would have a look at the concerns of Atlantic Canada and the rural ridings to see if there is something positive that can be done so that we can slow down this abruptness. I hope that there will and can be some amelioration of this job development program as a minimum to allow us more flexibility in those areas. It does not matter what we train people to do if there are no jobs for areas in which there can be no industry.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If the Hon. Member for Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup would like to comment, I will recognize him.

[Translation]

Mr. Plourde: First, Mr. Speaker, I did not get the impression that the Hon. Member for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception (Mr. Mifflin) asked a question in the course of his remarks, but I do want to make a correction. The riding I represent is Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup. Still I should like to remind him that none of us has chosen the city, the province and the country where he or she was born. I too represent a remote riding, Kamouraska—Rivière-du-Loup, and we too have high unemployment. Mr. Speaker, this is precisely why this Bill was introduced in the House. Given the current unemployment rates, it will correct conditions which otherwise would have prompted a lot of people in the Province of Québec or in Newfoundland to pack up and leave for Ontario to seek work. Mr. Speaker, I want to tell him that under the job development strategy we will earmark $775 million more for new labour-oriented programs to respond more adequately to the needs of the unemployed and to upgrade the skills of the Canadian labour force.

I fully appreciate the concern of my colleague from Newfoundland, what with their unemployment rate probably hovering around 20 per cent or more. And I understand very well when he refers to 24-week-or-more job development programs for high unemployment regions. Well, Mr. Speaker, that is the corrective course we want to steer by launching new training programs with the co-operation of the provinces. I am sure the Province of Newfoundland, like all other provinces in Canada, will be convened to discuss job training, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question and comment period is over. The Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. Volpe) on debate.

[English]

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the most appropriate view of the proposed changes under this Bill has been most aptly expressed by a Quebec based labour group.

[Translation]

It is better to be rich and healthy than poor and sick.

[English]

For it is clear that the less advantaged economic regions of our country and our fellow Canadians who fashion out their lives in these areas will have little cause to celebrate this Government's arcane approach to curing economic and labour ills, an approach with has as its motto: "Bleed them a little more." Those who were not sick, euphemistically speaking, before may well yearn for the days when the Minister had yet to launch her frontal attack on Canada's labour force.

This same Minister claimed on June 1 before the Standing Committee on Labour, Employment and Immigration that she was ushering in "a new comprehensive labour force development strategy." As a strategy it would appear that it sweeps under the rug the social economic consequences of both the proposed changes of Bill C-21 and the negative impact of the Government record regarding labour and business.

The more we examine the actual results of the Government's rule, the more Canadians will ask themselves: "Why this punitive legislation?"

[Translation]

Why does the Conservative Government want to pervert the traditional role of the unemployment insurance system as financial support for the unemployed in hard times? Note that we could make those who quit their jobs wait an extra six weeks for a total of three months before they become eligible for benefits. And, depending on the region of residence, the benefit period could be even shorter for many of them, about nine weeks in some cases.

[English]

For their misfortune due to economic factors outside their control, workers will have to pay longer into an insurance plan from which they will derive fewer benefits. This unfairness will be compounded by a 15 per cent increase in premiums as well. Workers will, in effect, be subjected to an increased payroll tax at a time when officials in the Department project a UI fund surplus of $1.2 billion.

• (1550)

Even worse, Mr. Speaker, according to departmental officials every year some 350,000 people who have occasion to leave their jobs do so without just cause as defined by the Department. By severely restricting access to benefits of some 70 per cent of those who feel the need to change their work—that is 35 per cent of all unemployed—the Minister is generating a substantial saving by reducing benefits pay out.

A cynic, and I hesitate to say that there are many in this House, might suggest that a further tightening up of the just cause definition would be appropriate and that the resulting penalties and the duration of benefits would encompass still more workers. This is not an unattractive outcome, mind you, if it is the Minister's objective to make labour more pliant, less mobile and more flexible in its negotiations with employers, and I read "willingness to take less".

My hon. colleague from Notre-Dame-de-Grace has already referred to analysts and critics in business and in the media who are calling this a crude and primitive effort aimed at increasing worker productivity. The mean spiritedness of this legislation will be felt everywhere as the effects of the restrictions inflict themselves upon all regions. While attention in this House has been centred on the negative consequences in the East, other parts of Canada are no less affected.

From eastern Ontario to Toronto, to southern Saskatchewan, and as far west as Vancouver, the period for which people must work to qualify for UI has increased by 40 per cent to 60 per cent, while the duration of UI benefits or qualifications for it has decreased by 15 per cent to 22 per cent.

I add that under Sections 51, 55(3) and 55(4) the Tories will ensure that Atlantic Canada appreciates the full meaning of its economic and labour strategy by withdrawing government involvement in regionally extended benefits and fishermen's benefits, a not altogether indifferent portion of the total of $2.9 billion government commitment now being withdrawn from UI.

What happens when local economies lose this injection of cash? Where will the unfortunate unemployed go to make up the resulting drop in personal and family income? The Minister has already indicated that the appropriate provincial welfare agencies should take up their dutiful responsibilities. The provincial taxpayers should bear the burden. That is a strange beast, this provincial taxpayer, because he shares the same wallet as the federal taxpayer. Moreover, the climate of concern for deficits and public debts that the Government so conveniently and purposefully insinuated into the debate to justify its slashing of programs and its imposition of taxes is in turn imposing heavy repercussions upon the provinces.

Consequently, workers' needs may be rebuffed by shortage of funds statements and by their own sense of self worth and desire to avoid the dole and, as a result, accept whatever work is available. The weakest will be hurt the most. There will be 10,000 fewer participants in job development programs next year, and participants in those programs normally earn an average of less than $240 per week. Lest we lose the significance of that figure, let me refer you to the report of the National Council on Welfare, the 1989 version, Mr. Speaker. It estimates that the poverty level for a single person in this country rests at $245 per week and for a family of four at $573 per week.

The outlook for workers does not brighten with the knowledge that the increased premium rates imposed upon businesses during an anticipated economic slowdown—in fact, one predicted by the Minister of Finance—will spur employers to pass on the cost to employees by using either fewer workers or by opposing more vigorously employee demands for pay and benefits increases to meet the rising cost of living. For all these reasons and others this Bill is a very regressive social statement.

Canadians had become accustomed, and rightly so, to the concept of a society where a Government could be expected to contribute to the gradual betterment of its people if for no other reason than to give its citizens a sense of economic security during hard times. The UI system is an integral part of that concept, and the most widely used by Canadians to balance off disparities is being challenged and threatened by this Bill. Through this legislation the Tories are attacking Canadian's hard won gains to buttress collective advances over the decades. Our own Government is telling us that it will not participate in any plan to help Canadians on a rainy day. Then, it proceeds to limit the amount of help we can give ourselves with our own money. Having thus amended the legislation, the Government or the Minister would then have us still believe that it will backstop any deficit in times of need.

However, there is nothing in the proposed legislation that would legally bind the Government to cover the UI fund should it go into deficit after January 1, 1990. Moreover, the legislation gives the Department undue discretion to allow UI premiums to be funnelled into non-UI training programs in the CJS system, even though federal law specifically prohibits the use of UI funds for non-UI programs. The fund is for its participants. The Government should develop its own sources to satisfy its obligations to other Canadians rather than resort to deceptive measures to draw upon funds that have been entrusted to the Government for the administration of the unemployment insurance fund.

If I appear sceptical it is because this Government acts only when pressed and then, as my colleagues on this side of the House know, ever so reluctantly and ever so slowly even when constrained by Supreme Court decisions. I cite an example. The extended benefits for seniors, for parental and sick leave have only come about in the Minister's own words:

[Translation]

"To respect the equality provisions of the Charter and because recent court challenges to current provisions have brought to light the iniquities of the present system."

[English]

This Bill is not only unfair. It is anything but honest. Last year 1.4 million Canadians worked for less than three months. Yet knowing this, the Government has embarked on a path to deprive these people of the meagre individual benefits to which they might otherwise be entitled, as it proceeds to retract previous contributions to regions through the UI system.

Does it make good economic sense to withdraw this injection of cash from local economies where the much missed consumer spending is likely to touch off further rounds of lay-offs and shutdowns?

• (1600)

The first half of the Government's two-pronged labour development plan seems to be saying that the onus, the burden, will be on the employee to find and keep a job. Any job. Worth noting is that 60 per cent of all new jobs created since 1984 have been created in the lowest categories of work. It is important to keep this fact in mind as we look at the second of those prongs, the Labour Force Development Strategy. This is the complement to Bill C-21.

The Minister has said, both within and without this House, that her Government will be trying to develop a training ethic. On the surface at least, there are those who certainly agree that the co-existence of labour shortages and high rates of unemployment underscores a deep-rooted structural problem that cannot simply be resolved with further economic growth.

The Canadian Federation of Independent Business, which the Minister is fond of quoting, says that 37 per cent of its members would hire additional employees to date if suitable workers were available. One would think that the Government would quickly and easily rise to that challenge. Yet, as we have noted, the Government is moving away from programs that provide long-term unemployed—those with few if any transferable skills—with the training opportunities and work experience activities that will help them fill those available jobs.

Instead, it prefers to invest more in further training of those people with proven employment skills. Those are the ones whose typical pretraining jobs earned them, on the average, better than $450 per week. For which industries and for whose benefit then is the Government developing this labour market?

I will be kind, colleagues, and say that the Minister probably does not know, although she is not nearly so gentle in admonishing Canadian businesses for their low rate of participation in employee training relative to their U.S. counterparts.

An Hon. Member: Does she care?

Mr. Volpe: No. I doubt it. Even the CFIB, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, begs to differ with the Minister on the question of training ethic. It claims that 70 per cent of small and medium-sized businesses employ 80 per cent of all Canadians. These businesses already provide on-the-job training of the type that has the greatest impact on productivity. Of all businesses, 40 per cent to 50 per cent already provided at least two to three weeks of formal short-term training. As an example I might cite Toronto's largest industrial employer. It is adjacent to my riding. It provides a three-week pre-work program to determine a person's employability before training begins. According to this firm, the skills required in today's factories are reliability, adaptability, and compatibility. This industrial employer joins the CFIB in slamming the Minister's training proposals as focusing "only on the tip of the training iceberg."

Clearly, the Government lacks credibility even among employers. Only one third of small and middle-sized businesses rate the service of the Canada Employment Centre offices as good. Little wonder. Small and medium-sized firms do not draw heavily on Government funding. While training policies of the Government focus on big business and big labour approaches, both are increasingly irrelevant because labour force growth is taking place almost exclusively in small and mid-sized firms.

If the Government were truly serious about its training objectives—and there is considerable doubt about its recent record as there is a 27 per cent reduction in training, a total of some $700 million over the course of the last four years in training without so much as a "how-do-you-do"—surely the Minister would have targeted the areas or industries where she could point to anticipated growth and then proceed to develop the labour skills required.

Instead, as she points out that 50 per cent of new jobs in the next ten years will require five years of post-secondary education and/or training, her Government cuts transfer to the provinces for education by $4 billion over the next six years. She casually ignores the provincial jurisdictions in a position to develop the strategies and programs to meet those needs.

She points to a national drop-out rate of some 30 to 35 per cent amongst high school students and an adult illiteracy rate of one in six. She dismisses this as a provincial problem and proceeds to then throw money at industries that will upgrade the skills of those already capable of working.

She looks at a failure rate of small business of approximately 50 per cent in the first five years of operation and forgets that a sound labour strategy might include financial support for business opportunity centres, like the York Business Opportunity Centre in my riding, whose programs are designed to ensure the success of small and medium-sized businesses and therefore of prospective employers.

No, Mr. Speaker, that might make good economic sense as would, for example, the allocation of funds to the establishment of local industries. That might be classified as employment strategy. Instead, according to Finance Department projections, the Tories will make regional development cuts in 1990 of some 16 per cent in Western Canada, 18 per cent in Atlantic Canada, 30 per cent in Quebec and 32 per cent in Ontario.

In this context, Canadians might well ask for what jobs are the Minister's training projects planned? I know that the unemployed will ask how, in a bleaker job market, will they make ends meet with reduced benefits and longer qualifying periods. The Minister shrugs her shoulders and says it will be tough.

Mr. Speaker, this Bill has to be changed. It contains no employment or industrial strategy. In its benefit squeeze, it will force people to relocate and disrupt communities as people search for jobs. Moreover, it proposes to make those at the lower rung of the labour ladder pay for the high skills, high-tech training from which they will never be in a position to profit. Worst of all, the Government is abdicating its national responsibilities by withdrawing from its national socio-economic obligations.

Mr. Speaker, it is not too late for the Minister to effect changes to this Bill. She might begin by reviewing her Cabinet's decision and allow the committee that will be studying this Bill to travel throughout Canada to hear the voice of Canadians on the matter. Then let the Minister also use some of her much vaunted clout in Cabinet to make a case for an employment strategy that will actually create jobs and increase the security and well-being of all Canadians.

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my colleague for his brilliant insight into this legislation. He helped the House understand just how dreadful a job the Minister is doing with this particular piece of legislation which is so important to all working people in this country. It represents, perhaps better than anything else we are dealing with, an indication of just how miserable the Government can be when it wants to be.

I would like to direct my comments and question to my hon. colleague on the question of the impact of this legislation for new Canadians.

Canada has, from one generation to the other, very generously welcomed newcomers and helped them adjust to the labour market. Newcomers typically receive the lowest paying jobs and are the most vulnerable to changing conditions from one season to the other. They often work in the oldest factories and the most run-down parts of our economy. That is where they get started. That is where they make their best efforts.

For example, I know that in the City of Winnipeg, in my own constituency, there are many people who find it difficult to maintain jobs in our declining economy. As the Speaker knows and as people in this House know, the City of Winnipeg is having a difficult time since the Conservatives took office five years ago in maintaining a strong economy. We are very concerned that newcomers in particular are going to have a difficult time maintaining themselves in the job market.

It seems to me that when you add weeks onto the number of weeks per year that you have to work and add conditions onto the accessibility to the Unemployment Insurance Act you decrease the social security we provide for new Canadians. Although nobody raises this issue in those terms, it is something that we should take into account.

As new Canadians adjust to this country, we find that they often need language training and upgrading of their skills. We have used community colleges, and in some provinces private institutions, to assist new Canadians in receiving the skills necessary to survive in a very tough job market.

I know that my colleague took a great deal of interest in the problems of young new Canadians in his previous life before he became a Member of Parliament. He understands the training issues very well. Perhaps he would like to share with us some of his observations of the negative impact when young people cannot get access to training through UIC-sponsored programs, and how they begin to play labour against business when money is taken out of training, how the lack of government participation in this programming can make everyone more selfish. When people become more selfish they turn on newcomers, whether it be a province, a city, or a country, and increase pressure on them to look after themselves because they cannot look after them.

This legislation has many side effects which are very negative. That is one of the reasons my Party is committed to fighting it to the bitter end and to proposing as many constructive changes as possible to the legislation. We think it is harmful not only to current workers but to the future workforce. The more we can do as a Parliament working together to create better legislation, the better off we will be. For example, the desire for parliamentarians to travel across the country to reach out to Canadians to discuss this more fully is a need that is not being met. The fact that some Canadians have had to get on a train themselves—one of the last trains in the country—to meet other Canadians to discuss this, is an example of how impoverished the attitude of the Government is toward the unemployed.

My succinct question to my colleague is the following: What impact does he imagine this will have on new Canadians?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence.

Mr. Volpe: I thank my colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Walker). It is a most insightful question, because it also included many of the impacts of the legislation before us today.

I want to point out to the Hon. Member and to the House that employers who are currently experiencing the greatest growth are those in the construction industry. Even in boom town areas of southern Ontario, those employers state that what they have proposed to the Government is legislation for training funds to be used for genuine employment opportunities. They see nothing in an area where there is a crying need, and that is in the apprenticeship training program. There is only an oblique reference, and that is it.

In answer to the other part of the question posed by my colleague, newer Canadians need the linguistic skills to be able to adapt the particular skills that they bring, together with their energy and desire to achieve, and put them into force in a productive fashion. In some areas of Toronto and in other major centres throughout the country, many of those people have to wait five or six months before they can get into a program. How are those people going to be productive, not only toward Canadian society, but for their own personal well-being and the growth of their families if they are kept waiting for five to six months?

The only thing they can do is take up positions of labour that are obviously well below what we would classify as minimum wage. In fact, many of the jobs that newer Canadians and their children are forced to take are in the areas of minimum wage. One of the consequences in many downtown schools is that often the children of those Canadians are forced to supplement the family income by taking jobs which are initially part-time and turn out to be full-time and deprive them of an opportunity to continue their studies in school. Studies indicate that a very large portion of those who drop out of high schools in major centres are children of immigrants.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On a question or comment the Hon. Member for Hamilton Mountain.

Ms. Phinney: I would like to thank my colleague for a sensitive and clear explanation of this Bill. We know that there have been cuts in training indicated in the Bill. Could the Hon. Member give us an indication of where these cuts will take place?

Mr. Volpe: I thank my colleague for the question. It gives us an opportunity to highlight the deceptive nature of this Bill and the reason why it must be brought to the attention of all Canadians in order that they, as well as Members of the House, can address it with the vigour it requires. It has to be changed.

According to the Estimates presented for 1989 in job development, the area my colleague the Hon. Member for Bonavista—Trinity—Conception (Mr. Mifflin) referred to earlier, there will be a $53 million cut. This is a Government states that its two-pronged labour development strategy will include a new training ethic. It is taking away $53 million from job development programs where the long-term unemployed are given an opportunity to develop skills.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Walker), asks what happens to youth and to women who re-enter the market-place. There has been a $50-million cut. Does this sound like a sincere approach to developing a training ethic? Does it sound like a serious approach to developing a market for labour in this country?

In the question of skills investment, the Government, which already made a very meagre contribution, is cutting a further $1 million.

My colleagues would probably be interested in knowing that in job development there was an average increase of 18.5 per cent in salaries for those people who were part of a job development program. Those individuals who were gaining $240 per week, as I cited in my presentation earlier, have an opportunity to increase their productivity and their remuneration. I am sure it will scandalize all Members of the House that in the area of job entry, where the Government has cut $50 million, youth and women who re-enter the market-place were capable of improving their remuneration by 45 per cent and 56 per cent on average.

Finally, in the area of skills shortages, the Government is cutting an additional $8 million. It is important to keep in mind that participants in the skill shortages program were capable of improving their remuneration on the average by 8.3 per cent per annum.

Obviously, on the questions of productivity, increased remuneration, and allowing people to contribute more productively in taxes, in consumer spending, and by withdrawing from government social programs, the Government is going in the opposite direction.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. On debate, the Hon. member for Burlington.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I must say at the outset, listening to the Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. Volpe), that I never heard a more poorly informed speaker since I have been in the House of Commons.

Mr. Volpe: Did you listen to your own Minister?

Mr. Kempling: He talks about entry-level skills. An additional $100 million is being devoted to training, including a new program to meet the needs of growing industries especially those in the service sector. The Member does not know what he is talking about. He is talking about cutting and we are talking about spending more money.

On this Bill, I want to talk about labour skills. I do not know whether the Hon. Member who just spoke ever worked a day in his life, or whether he ever had callouses on his hands, but he does not sound as if he did. I want to talk about labour skills and upgrading those labour skills and how that will help us to ensure that our industries remain on the leading edge of competition in the global market-place. That is the purpose of our labour force development strategy as set forth in Bill C-21. Within the programs in Employment and Immigration, there is one entitled Skill Shortages. In that program, every four months we list the skill shortages province by province. The gentleman from Newfoundland who asked a question earlier—the Hon. Member from Bonavista—Trinity—Conception (Mr. Mifflin)—after we have completed this, I will show him the list of skilled jobs that are crying out for employees in Newfoundland. I have two pages of them here. I think he will be surprised when he has a look at them.

• (1620)

That is the basis of how we are going about this. Canada today wants to do more than hold its own in an era of global competition. Canada wants to excel. To do that, we need to embrace technological change. We cannot afford to lag behind other countries when it comes to improving productivity through high technology product development and enhanced trading of our labour force. We realize today that many of the machines that are being used in industry are—

Mr. Walker: Where did you work?

Mr. Kempling: Do you want to know where I worked?

Mr. Walker: Yes, very much so.

Mr. Kempling: I was working long before you were born.

Many of the machines that we use today cost hundreds of thousands of dollars and require people to operate them. They are not just ordinary lathes, drills and shapers. They are very sophisticated, computer-controlled machines that are required in order that we can be productive and profitable in our business operations. Therefore, we cannot afford to lag behind other countries when it comes to improving productivity through high technology product development and enhancing the training of our labour force.

The extent to which technology can be harnessed depends upon the skills of the people who direct, maintain and operate it. In this context, the development of a skilled work force will be a determining factor in our future prosperity.

A recent report of the Economic Council of Canada shows that 85 per cent of all companies surveyed expect to be using computer-based technology by 1990. That is only a year or so away. It also points out that those companies that adopt new technology are generally companies that are growing faster and becoming more efficient than their competitors. The result is clear. We have a responsibility to direct our resources into education and training so that we will have skilled people to make industry competitive. We are talking here about a shared responsibility involving the federal Government and the private sector; in fact, a shared responsibility that involves all Canadians.

The labour force development strategy is designed to put into practice these objectives, to rechannel our resources into improving the amount and quality of skills training. It is also encouraging industry to take a leadership role in training as their counterparts have done in Japan, the United States and other leading economic powers around the world. In addition to increased training for employed Canadians, we will also under this strategy use the unemployment insurance program for more constructive ends. Greater emphasis will be placed on actively developing workers rather than providing passive income support. What we are saying is that instead of giving them a cheque when they become unemployed, we will train them and give them a skill that will allow them to go into the market-place and maintain an active job.

Today in Canada we spend almost $12 billion on unemployment insurance and only $1.8 billion on employment programs designed to get people back to work. It is evident that if we want to prepare people for jobs in the 1990s, we must help them become equipped with the skills that the 1990s will require.

Bill C-21 therefore provides a major expansion of active employment programming within the unemployment insurance program. It commits the vital resources unemployed workers need to get back to work in productive long-term jobs. The current budget for development uses in the UI program is just over $400 million per year. The measures contained in Bill C-21 will see this grow by over three times to an expected full implementation budget of over $1.4 billion, not the cut-backs that the Members on the other side are talking about.

We are convinced that Canadians want to work. They want to be part of a productive and contributing force in the community. That is why we are proposing that UI claimants who have viable business plans in hand be able to capitalize on those benefits to help defray business start-up costs. We have many people working in a business for a number of years who have a desire to get out on their own. Perhaps the business environment has changed for them. Perhaps they have other interests and we are looking forward to interviewing those people to see if we can help them get into their own businesses.

The beneficiaries of such a plan go beyond the enterprising worker to include the entire community. Instead of workers sitting at home, or—let us admit it—participating in an underground economy, they will now breathe the same air as someone with a legitimate product or service to offer. We are also proposing that claimants be able to receive some portion of their UI payments in a lump sum as may be necessary to help finance their move if they wish to relocate to an area where job prospects are more plentiful.

We are not forgetting the displaced and older worker who is sidelined by a plant closure or a setback in the local economy but whose talents and experience this country cannot afford to lay aside. We propose a substantial increase in funding for educational upgrading, retraining and job-finding resources to help the older workers regain their place in the market-place. This is a fact of life in some of the more industrial areas of Canada where older workers on occasion find themselves taking early retirement. They then find early retirement rather boring and decide they would like to re-enter the labour force but find that their skills should be upgraded so they can take advantage of the new machinery and technologies being used today in industry.

Complementary to these training initiatives, we are also changing the UI Act to reflect the realities of today's work place. This means, in effect, respecting both the principle of equity and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. That is why we have proposed the following major changes: Making 15 weeks of maternity benefits available during the period of a child's birth; making 10 weeks of parental benefits available to natural and adoptive parents to be shared by either mother or father; ensuring that claimants are able to draw a combination of maternity, paternal and sickness benefits up to a maximum of 30 weeks; making UI available to those who delay retirement past the age of 65.

This is another fact of life in this country. We have many people who reach the age of 65, who still have many years of productive life ahead of them, and who do not want to sit around. Many of us know neighbours and friends who reach the age of 65. Their company policy is that they must retire and they find themselves at loose ends with nothing to do. Some of them, of course, become consultants. In fact, I was watching a television program the other night in which a 92-year-old gentleman was being interviewed by a young lady. She said, "What do you at 92?" He said, "I am a consultant". She said, "Who would consult a 92-year-old man?" He named a list of companies that are all in the Fortune 500. She said, "What do you charge an hour?" He said he charged $1,500, and she said "You wouldn't have many takers at $1,500 an hour". He said, "My dear, I have enough work ahead of me to last me until I am 108". I stood up and cheered because that is the kind of experience that is out there that can still be productive in our society and we should not let these people go.

We have made these adjustments to the UI program because Canadian society has changed. Canadian men and women now want to be equal partners at home and at work. We have a responsibility, therefore, to make the UI program relevant to that reality. We also have a responsibility to Canadians to ensure that the unemployment insurance program is efficient and economical, and that it does not provide a disincentive to work. In part, we want to be able to finance some of these improvements by raising the qualifying period for unemployment insurance in areas of low unemployment, and we propose to increase penalties for those people who quit their jobs without just cause or who fraudulently collect benefits. There is a substantial underground economy in this country and, in fact, in all the western countries. We want to see those people go back into the regular taxpaying community.

It should be noted that when New Zealand went to the value added tax, it found 225,000 more people in business than before the tax was put in. In order to get the advantage of the claim back on the tax, they had to be registered. There were 225,000 underground businesses operating in New Zealand that the Government knew nothing about.

I am not saying that there are that many here, but there is a substantial number, which we all know about but do not like to admit. Our goal is to strengthen the unemployment insurance program so that it truly serves as a safety net for those in need, especially in those areas that are not participating in the fast growing economy. To do nothing more in their interest would be an admission of defeat for thousands of unemployed Canadians who desperately want to work.

One of the largest groups in our economy who are disadvantaged are single mothers. They are caught in a welfare trap, living in subsidized housing and relying on that cheque once a month to keep themselves going.

Many single mothers have been to my office, and there is not one of them whom I met who does not want to work. They want a productive job and want to contribute to society but they do not have skills. They do not want to be a net recipient of welfare.

Many single mothers who are asked if they can go to school for a certain course will say they cannot do so because they have no transportation and cannot afford a baby-sitter. Our Government will provide funds for baby-sitting and transportation to see that those skills can be made available to them so they can find productive work in our society and enjoy some of the benefits we have in this country. They do not want to be left in that welfare trap and we have a responsibility to help them as much as we can. We have a responsibility to foster a training culture with the Government acting as a facilitator in encouraging the private sector to contribute to a greater share of the skills development.

I was in Washington some 10 days ago at a meeting of the American Iron and Steel Institute, where I learned that the American steel industry, on its own, is putting $200 million on the line to upgrade the present employees of the steel industry. Rather than providing people from the industry with skills to work somewhere else because it is downsizing, it is recognizing that the very useful and productive machinery it will be installing in the plants will require employees who can operate those machines. The industry is investing $200 million of its own money, just as a down payment. If we are going to be competitive we will have to do something similar to that.

The Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence (Mr. Volpe) stated in his comments that businesses provide some two to three hours training per week.

Mr. Volpe: Two to three weeks.

Mr. Kempling: A recent Statistics Canada study shows that Canadian businesses provide an average of only two hours of training per year. Is he suggesting that current levels of training by Canadian businesses are sufficient and that there is no room for improvement? That is nonsense. There is much room for improvement. If we are going to remain competitive in the global market, we will need a large supply of skilled workers.

Thirty per cent of our Gross National Product depends on our ability to export. we can only export if we are productive and competitive in the market-place. Part of the training culture means never giving up on the unemployed worker who needs timely assistance that will propel him or her back into the workforce. Bill C-21 provides an important shift in that direction. It is a Bill that dares to face up to the future and I am pleased with it.

I believe it is a timely Bill that will give us what we need. When one looks at the job lists at Canada Employment and Immigration offices throughout the country to see the job shortages in the market-place, one can see that there are not the people to fill them. I am sure all Hon. Members have people come to their offices asking if they can bring in skilled workers like tool and die makers from other countries because Canada is not training enough tool and die makers here.

Let me illustrate by referring to one job list for example. It lists such jobs as geological technician, prospector, landscape architect, marine surveyor and a job for claims staking.

Incidentally, these are jobs in Newfoundland. There are jobs for a systems software programmer, application programmer, mini-micro computer specialist, human services worker, mental retardation worker, day care worker, dispensing optician, dental technician, net assembler, logger, drilling machine operator, diamond driller, scoop tram operator, mining helper and the list goes on.

These jobs which are going begging in Newfoundland include ones for a dragging and flotation operator, leaching operator, first-line supervisor, quality control inspection, a machinist, sheet metal worker, welder-fitter, stone cutter, optician and the list goes on. There are two and a half pages of jobs just for Newfoundland alone. Every province has a list of jobs like that which are going begging because the labour force does not have the skills to fill those jobs. Our duty is to help fill those jobs. That is what Bill C-21 is all about.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I have three comments I want to make to my hon. friend, the Member for Burlington (Mr. Kempling). First, let me suggest to him that it is not a question of whether Members on this side of the House or Members on that side of the House have a sense of the desperate need for training in this country. Certainly that is something to which the commitment on this side of the House is at least as strong as the commitment on the other side of the House. In fact, what we see in our constituencies is significant cut-backs by the Government in the kind of funding for training which has been possible for people who are out of work. I do not think training is the issue.

In considering the comments by the Member for Burlington, there is one clear point that I want him to pin down more carefully.

• (1640)

He talked about the importance of what he called an underground economy. Certainly my experience with what, as the Member said, all of us recognize as an existing underground economy, is that the people who are part of that underground economy are more often people who are themselves employed and are doing part-time work and unregulated work.

An Hon. Member: Moonlighting.

Mr. Langdon: Call it moonlighting, if you like. They are people who in fact are taking the skills which they have got, often in the construction field but there is a wide section of other parts of our economy in which this is true also. They are working outside, in a kind of shadow economy for which they do not pay taxes. They do not make contributions to various benefit programs, et cetera.

The question which I would like to ask is what makes the Member think, and what evidence can he point to that in fact it is people who are facing unemployment and suffering the deprivation which the situation of unemployment has put them into and which this legislation is going to worsen, that in fact it is people who are unemployed who are part of that shadow economy or that underground economy? Certainly I do not see any evidence to that effect in the experiences that I have had with people who are, if you like, moonlighting.

I would like to raise a last point with the Member. As somebody who is concerned and has expressed his concern in the past about the arbitrary exercise of government power, I wonder how the Member would justify the parts of this Bill which, as the news release from the Minister put it, indicate that there will be people who will be excluded from some of their benefits in the future if they refuse, as it is put quite clearly here, a suitable job.

The question is, who decides what a suitable job is? The answer seems to be that a suitable job will be something which bureaucrats in a government bureaucracy will themselves decide is a suitable job. Is that in fact the kind of arbitrary power that we should be giving to the unemployment insurance authorities in this country? Is that not in fact quite a dangerous mechanism which puts far too much authority to act in quite an arbitrary way with respect to individuals who are searching for work in their field or searching for work which will support the family which they have to support, and yet are told in an arbitrary way that they have to accept a given job or else they are cut off benefits for a penalty period?

Is that really the direction that we should be taking to an increase in that kind of arbitrary government authority?

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, what the Member calls arbitrary government authority or bureaucratic authority has always been there. As long as the Unemployment Insurance Act has been in place, where jobs were available, if people were not taking the jobs, someone had to make a judgment call. Someone has to say: "Is that person capable of doing that job?" I will readily admit that there are errors. I have seen them, and I am sure the Hon. Member has experienced them in his constituency the same as I have. There are things like a 50-year old woman refused a job as a gas pump jockey. I do not blame her. I would not take it myself. We always get those distortions but by and large, I think they are fairly reasonable.

On one occasion I had a lady come to me and say that she was a comptometer operator and she could not find a job as a comptometer operator. I had to think because it has been so long since they have used comptometers in business. I think the last one I saw was in a museum. She was a comptometer operator and she would not take a job in an office doing any sort of clerical work unless she could operate a comptometer. To me, that was a very unusual decision on her part. She was subsequently told that if she did not take a job that her funding would be cut off. She subsequently took a job in an office. We run into that sort of thing.

I think the people in the Canada Employment Centre offices try to be sensitive to the individuals out there. If they get an individual who is not being altogether forthright with them and arbitrarily refusing employment, they bring them in and interview them and try and determine the reason why. The individual has a source of recourse to appeal and ultimately they can come to their Member of Parliament, which none of us really want, but they can ultimately do that and appeal the matter that way.

As far as the underground economy goes, I mentioned that because if anybody believes there is not an underground economy, he is not in the real world. I am not saying that there is anything wrong with it either. If a person wants to have two jobs or three jobs, there is nothing wrong with that, if they can do it, if they can and stand it. I recall when my son was going to college, I think he had three jobs beside going to school. He was pretty proud of it. He is proud of it today, and I was proud of him for taking that sort of initiative. However, there are people who we know are unemployed who are drawing unemployment benefits and who are also working under the table. When they are found out then of course they are dealt with by the administration because that is not what they are supposed to do.

There is a fair little bit of it going on particularly in the large cities. There are all sorts of jobs. I walk up the main street of some of the towns and cities in this country and see day jobs offered, "cash at the end of the day." There is all kinds of it out there. There is nothing wrong with a person taking it but the point is, they have not declared their income and the Minister of National Revenue takes a dim view of that sort of thing.

The underground economy is something that all Governments are concerned about. I think by giving people skills that they can enter into a more productive job, that is one way of overcoming that problem.

The Acting Speaking (Mr. Paproski): Well, a very succinct question and an answer, the Hon. Member for Eglinton—Lawrence. The Hon. Member's time has expired.

• (1650)

Mr. Volpe: Most assuredly, yes, Mr. Speaker. I really do not want to have a response to my comment. However, I do want to correct the record lest the Hon. Parliamentary Secretary get away with vilifying the unemployed, or conveying the impression that there is some connection between good social programs and the unwillingness of people to work.

Yesterday, my colleague from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce put on the table for the consideration of all Members of the House an indication that there are other countries in the world, countries such as Austria, Norway, Sweden and, I dare say, the United States in which the social programs and the level of insurable earnings much exceed that of Canada. I say that primarily in respect to the first three on the list. Sweden, for example, is at a rate of 95 per cent. Under this Bill we will be dropping our insurable earnings to 60 per cent. In fact, the unemployment rate in Sweden is half our own.

Second, I cannot let the Hon. Member perpetrate the old misconception that there are a great many cheaters out there. In fact, last year only .02 per cent of all UI participants or claimants were cheaters.

As a last comment, I would like to indicate to the Parliamentary Secretary that if he would like to match curriculum vitae in all sectors of employment, perhaps he will pale in comparison to my own. I speak without false modesty.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If the Hon. Member does not want to say anything in rebuttal, then the time allotted for questions and comments has now terminated. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Hillsborough on debate.

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure to rise today in debate on Bill C-21, an Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act and the Employment and Immigration Department and Commission Act.

On April 11, 1989, the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) announced the federal Government's intention to reform the Unemployment Insurance Program. This position was directly opposite to promises made by the Government during the 1988 election campaign.

The Unemployment Insurance Act, as most people in this room at this time realize, was originally introduced in 1940 by the then Minister of Labour, the Hon. N. A. McLarty. The fundamental purpose of the Bill was to promote the economic and social security of Canadians by supporting workers from the time they leave one job until they get another.

Inherent in this legislation was the fact that unemployment insurance was to be protection against unemployment. It was a limited measure with the theme of giving income protection to those who lost their employment after having been employed for a period of time. This insurance benefit was to be a person's right as established by past contributions.

Throughout the 1940s and 1950s the unemployment insurance program was readjusted in response to myriad circumstances. However, coverage remains universal.

Two significant changes occurred in the principles inherent in the original Act. They were the coverage of self-employed fishermen and the introduction of supplementary benefits which later became seasonal benefits.

Throughout the 1960s and the 1970s the legislation continued to change in response to socio-economic conditions. As we head toward the 21st century and the end of five decades of UI as we know it, the Government is proposing sweeping changes to one of our social programs. They are changes that have been introduced in the wake of the serious inflation and relatively high unemployment of the early 1980s coupled with increased regional disparities.

The unemployed are now being told that they are obligated to contribute to the easing of the federal deficit. How much do the poor of the country have to pay to finance a deficit reduction plan? Employers and employees under the present Unemployment Insurance Program pay into the fund knowing that the money will come back to them in the form of benefits should they become unemployed, sick or pregnant. Under the new legislation they have no guarantee that the money they paid into the fund comes back to them.

It is highly probable that a worker in an economically depressed region of the country would contribute to the unemployment insurance program for a work period and then not be able to draw on this program if his or her weeks of employment fall short of the magic number of the Government's graphs and charts.

The Minister stated yesterday that it was foolish to believe that there would be a flow over to the provincial welfare systems of each province. I would like to know what these workers will do if this is not the case.

The Minister has claimed and even bragged about the Government's plan to retrain these people. Retrain for what? A job that could send them half way across the country? In my opinion the Government is hypocritically using the pretext of adjustment to finance its deficit reduction plan at the expense of unemployed Canadians. I cannot support this legislation for it is not an adjustment. It is no more than a massive cut by Government. How then will these Canadians pay their rent and buy their food?

The deficit and deficit reduction has been the Government's main target. Even the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised to balance the budget within three years. Prior to the 1984 election the Prime Minister was quoted as saying that there would be no drastic reduction in the deficit until interest rates and unemployment levels were lower.

Soon after, the agenda for economic renewal was tabled. With it came a grave warning of the tough times ahead. However, the commitment to deficit reduction did not last long. It became no longer a political priority. Perhaps this was because of the prosperity of the central Canadian economy in 1987. Perhaps it was because Government had fallen into disfavour with Canadians. Regardless, the initial plan to trim the deficit was scrapped. Now, today, we are facing one of those results.

I am an Atlantic Canadian. It is with much anger that I sit in this House as the Government attempts to ravage Atlantic Canada, one of the poorest regions of the country. It is one of the poorest regions but a part of Canada none the less.

I have watched the Government attempt to kill a large segment of the Prince Edward Island economy with the impending closure of CFB Summerside. What will happen to the civilian employees who will lose their jobs, not to mention the indirect jobs that will be affected, such as the gas station attendant, the clothing store employee and the hardware employee?

The Government states that these people will be retrained and move on down the yellow brick road to future success. I contend that the retraining road to success will have many cracks and gullies and will soon be filled by the unemployed workers.

The Atlantic economy has been hammered. We have had our transfer payments reduced. Our ERDAs have been put on hold. We have had cut-backs to VIA Rail. We have lost control of our fishing rights. This is to name but a few examples.

It is inevitable that Atlantic Canadians as a result of the Government slashing will now need unemployment insurance more than ever just to survive. However, even now, that system of support is being crushed.

Canadians, in particular Atlantic Canadians, have been listening to the tune "jobs, jobs, jobs" for over four years now. "Unemployment is down and employment is up." Unemployment has not gone down in Prince Edward Island. It is the only province in Canada that has seen its unemployment rate go up since September of 1984. Where are all these jobs, jobs, jobs?

Over the course of the parliamentary session I have listened to statistics spewed forth by the Government. It is always careful not to mention the 14 per cent unemployment in Prince Edward Island. Given this statistic, the Government's actions are nothing short of astounding to Prince Edward Islanders and, indeed, to all Atlantic Canadians.

We all know that the national unemployment rate has been reduced to 7.8 per cent down from 11.7 per cent in September of 1984. That is good. However, it is important to note that the Canadian Government benefited at that time greatly from a buoyant U.S. economy. Prior to the recession and under a Liberal Government the national unemployment rate was 7.5 per cent. Thus we are really no better off today than we were six years ago.

Newfoundland's present unemployment rate is 14.5 per cent. Nova Scotia's unemployment rate is 10.4 per cent while New Brunswick's is 12.2 per cent. Although these rates have been reduced, they are still much higher than the national rate. Given the Government's newest agenda, these rates will surely go up.

The Government has had almost five years to bring the federal deficit under control. It slips in and out of its promises of reduction. Now the Government is back on to it again. Canadians are sick and tired of having to pay a continually increasing price for government mismanagement. This is quite evident as reported today in the national media. Consumer confidence has sunk to its lowest level in five years. If the results of the recent provincial elections in Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island have not sent a clear message to the federal Government, then yesterday's Angus Reid poll should. Fifty-seven per cent of Canadians feel that the April Budget was unfair. They feel that their personal financial situation will be worse and that the provincial economy will suffer. It is obvious to most Canadians that the Government has gone too far.

Given that 50 per cent of Canadians feel that our economy is going to get worse, one would be correct in assuming that now is not the time to revamp the unemployment insurance program. What this legislation does in real terms is eliminate the Government's portion of money formerly committed to the program. The Government is blatantly turning its back on the poor of this country. Based on current UIC spending, the elimination of federal financing will cut between $1.3 billion to $2 billion from the $13 billion program. Under the Government's proposed plan, there will be a reallocation of 10 per cent amounting to $1.3 billion. Of the $1.3 billion UI expenditures forecast for 1990, approximately $800 million will go toward human resource planning and skills upgrading of the labour force.

A strong labour force strategy depends on a sound, full employment policy that supports research and development, post-secondary education and literacy initiatives. The more basic an education a person has, the easier it is to retrain. Given that in the near future almost half of the new jobs will require more than five years of combined education and training beyond completion of high school, the Government should be developing a comprehensive full employment policy.

Various labour, business and community groups have expressed outrage toward the Government's proposed UI changes. They firmly believe that these changes will lead to a drastic reduction in the number of unemployed people becoming eligible to receive UI. At the same time, Canadians feel that the proposals fail to address the facts, that the number of unemployed is poised to increase as a result of the Free Trade Agreement, high interest rates, not to mention the multitude of Budget cuts. These groups feel that the federal Government should be concerned with the expansion of the unemployment insurance safety net.

In addition, they firmly believe that the Government's proposal to pay increased amounts of money for enhanced training is not the correct approach. This is based on the principle that current job creation is in the low-paying dead-end service sector. Privatized training that subsidizes companies does little more than train people to fill low-paying jobs. Regions of Canada, similar to Atlantic Canada, can expect to suffer the most. My province of Prince Edward Island has an economy that is based on three major industries, namely, farming, fishing and tourism. They are all seasonal industries. A significant percentage of our labour force is dependent upon these seasonal industries. Why then would UI be important to P.E.I.? The answer is simple. One cannot fish lobster in winter, nor will tourists visit our beautiful province in the middle of winter.

The Government's proposal to increase the number of weeks needed to work to be eligible is based on the assumption that the work is available. In some regions of Canada and in some industries, this is correct. But it is not correct in Atlantic Canada. The Government believes that the work is out there but people do not want to work. That is also not very often the case.

With respect to P.E.I.'s industries, as previously mentioned, we have a short tourist season. Where are these Canadians supposed to get the number of weeks required if their employers can only operate in a ten-week season? Can the federal Government actually expect these businesses to stay open after the end of the tourist season so employees can get the required number of weeks to qualify? I doubt that they would, especially after having paid into the program at an increased cost. To Atlantic Canadians, the proposed changes will be devastating and the proposed programs to replace the reductions of benefits are equally devastating because the whole thrust of the Canadian Jobs Strategy is to involve the private sector in training, and the training is geared toward a growth economy that is providing short-term jobs for a large number of private sector employers and a significant number of skill shortage occupations.

Mr. Speaker, this does not describe Atlantic Canada's economy, and certainly not that of my own province. As I have explained, P.E.I. has a unique economy and the present unemployment insurance program recognizes this. P.E.I. and the rest of Atlantic Canada have many strengths, but they also have many weaknesses which the present system addresses. I am quite sure that all Canadians would agree that they do not wish to have to rely on unemployment insurance. But given the disparities within our country, unemployment insurance has become an inherent need and is most certainly not abused by Canadians.

It was stated here earlier that in 1987-88 only 0.2 per cent of all UI claimants were charged with cheating. That is 5,507 claimants out of a total of 2.4 million.

Canadians have reason to be proud of their social programs. While I know there is a spirit of fair-mindedness, tolerance and compassion among all Canadians, I believe the Government is turning its back on the needs of many Canadians. If that agenda proceeds unchallenged or unquestioned, I believe it will lead to a steady erosion of the kind of Canada which provides security and opportunity for all its citizens.

The federal Government will somehow realize that its policies threaten to undermine the economies of the have-not regions of this country. The Government has a duty and a commitment to protect and promote economic development and social justice throughout all areas of this country. It has a responsibility to the poor, the elderly and the disadvantaged. Since 1940 we have seen changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act, changes aimed at improving assistance for workers and employers. We in the Liberal Party initiated many of these changes but we will not support such drastic measures aimed at increasing the difficulties of unemployed Canadians.

Mr. Thompson: We want to put Canadians back to work. We don't want to keep them on welfare.

Mr. Proud: I join my Liberal colleagues in calling for the Government to withdraw this Bill, to listen to the average Canadian citizen and come back to the House for the last Draconian piece of legislation.

Mr. Crawford: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member several questions, mostly for clarification. I feel I am qualified. I still have callouses on my hands. Statements were made earlier by the Hon. Member from Burlington (Mr. Kempling) on unemployment insurance. In my riding unemployment insurance has been cut back. The number of days one must work has been raised. When a person cannot collect unemployment insurance he goes on welfare. Being a past warden of my riding, I know the welfare costs are directly on the people.

Let me speak about the benefits of retraining. I certainly believe in retraining programs. Unfortunately, in my riding the retraining programs have been cut back. They have been cut back and the people who suffer are those that the Hon. Member referred to, such as single parents. St. Clair College had its retraining programs cut back. What about the number of jobs available?

I believe the Hon. Member mentioned quality control. I was Chief Inspector for a company on quality control.

You do not retrain for quality control in five weeks or five months. It is now a high-tech college degree.

• (1710)

If you could answer the questions about unemployment, how this is going to benefit us when our training programs have been cut back, and the different jobs that are available.

Mr. Proud: Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for the comments and questions. The first area he mentioned was people who are not eligible for unemployment insurance because they do not have the necessary number of weeks. This is an area that I mentioned during my remarks in the debate. It is an area that bothers me as a person from Atlantic Canada where we see the seasonal type of work. Granted, if we could enjoy some of the work in the industry that is prominent in certain parts of Canada, I could certainly see the concept of their program. But in those areas you are just painting everybody with the same brush. In those areas where seasonal work is part of the norm, concessions have to be made. I asked the Minister that question a couple of weeks ago. Concessions have to be made in this area until something takes its place, or the unemployed will be on the welfare roles of the provincial Governments.

As has been stated by some of the Premiers, this is a great worry to the provincial Governments.

The retraining programs. I have full support for retraining programs. There is a part that bothers me about them. I mentioned it at a committee meeting the other day. I think where Canada and North America has failed is in apprenticeship programs.

The exceptions are the areas that were mentioned: the steel industry, the auto industry, and the electric utility industry. They have ongoing training programs within their companies. The general training of apprentices in the high-tech industries have been failed.

As Canadians, we took the outlook that if you are not a university graduate and if you went to a trade school, you are a different class of citizen. That is unfortunate. I think most people agree that that is the mentality that has developed in North America in the last 150 years. It is unfortunate because this is not the mentality that has developed in Great Britain and other places where they have great apprenticeship programs.

The other question I have asked time and time again on retraining is that in certain areas of Canada, what do you retrain people for if there are no jobs for them to go to?

The Hon. Member from Burlington has lists there. I will ask him for one for my province. If there are areas to train these people for, yes, I can see the validity of it. In a lot of cases, I cannot see where these people are going to be trained unless they are prepared to move to another part of Canada.

Ms. Langan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a couple of questions. I was most interested in the reply and in the speech just given by the Hon. Member. The speaker before him said that the UI program was going to address child care for those people who require it to return to the work force. However, he did not explain how indeed the program would do that. I would ask if the Hon. Member joins me in being quite concerned about the lack of definition of just how that will happen.

I would also like to ask the Hon. Member if he shares the views of many of us that it is wrong to be denigrating and condemning all unemployed people on the basis of a few who may in fact be abusing the system. I think it is a very serious concern that all of us have about that kind of statement. I would appreciate it if he would comment on it.

Mr. Proud: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her questions. I, too, am concerned about the lack of a description as to how these things are going to take place, especially in the child care area.

The child care issue has been tossed around for a number of years. As yet, I see nothing coming forward that is concrete. It is the same with the Bill in general. We are going forward without the regions of the country in place before the Bill becomes law.

Child care today is a very important issue. The Hon. Member from Burlington (Mr. Kempling) talked about single mothers going to work. Until we have a definition of how this becomes a reality, I will remain very concerned about it.

In the area of condemning the unemployed, this is a great way out for a lot of individuals. You hear it from all across the country. They condemn these people on unemployment insurance.

I would suggest, as figures do indicate, that there are very few people in this country today who like to be on unemployment insurance. The majority of people want to get out there and work. I know that in the region I come from, they want to work 12 months of the year if they can. Unfortunately, it is not available to them in a lot of cases.

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, I say to the Hon. Member from Hillsborough that on Prince Edward Island today, the following jobs are available: biotechnology technologist; electro-mechanical technician; early childhood worker; licensed nursing assistant; resident care worker; dental hygienist; executive chef; hog farm worker; dairy farm worker; officer—fishing vessel over 40 tonnes; silviculture worker; machine tool set-up operator; machinist; truck body and trailer builder; industrial sewing machine operator; fibreglass laminator; automotive diagnostic technician; millwright; brick layer; tile setter; reinforcing iron worker; marine deck officer; marine engineer; typesetter; offset press operator; and stationery engineer. I would be pleased to give the Hon. Member a copy of it.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the Member from Hillsborough. I will follow up on what the Parliamentary Secretary just mentioned.

Currently in Canada, 55 per cent of all jobs require 12 years or less of education. We are going to find that that is going to change. They are telling us that between 1986 and the year 2000, it is projected that 64 per cent of all the work force will require more than 12 years of education and training.

What that tells us is that we must adjust to the future. That is what this program is doing. It will educate Canadians and upgrade their skills so that they will be able to meet the demands of the future.

To follow this through, I want to point out a couple of very interesting statistics. The number of people trained under the UI program presently is in the vicinity of 75,000, or about 2.5 per cent of all people on UI. We are going to approximately double it to a number in the vicinity of 140,000.

Our goal is very simple. We are going to give those people that are unemployed the skills to get out there and find a job in a very competitive workplace. Times have changed. They are changing very quickly.

Part and parcel of this unemployment insurance program Bill is the training necessary to put people out there in the workplace to meet the demands of the 20th century. That is exactly what we are going to do.

Mr. Proud: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. colleague. I have no problem with training programs. I am a great promoter of apprenticeship programs and programs in the high-tech industry. The problem I have with it, and he certainly knows as well as I, are the problems we face in Atlantic Canada.

One of the big problems I have is the Government getting out of funding the program and the private sector business and employees funding it. The employee who is working in a fish plant will be paying for training for someone who will have to move to a job somewhere else in Canada. If regional development programs are put in place, that will enable those industries to provide the full-time and high-tech jobs that we are looking for.

• (1720)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Questions and comments are now terminated. On debate, the Hon. Member for Fredericton.

Mr. J. W. Bud Bird (Fredericton): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to participate in this debate and to address myself to the benefits these changes to the Unemployment Insurance Act will bring to Atlantic Canada.

Since 1984 the Government to which I now belong has helped to engineer fundamental changes in the economies of the Atlantic Provinces. We have co-operated with business, industry and labour in creating employment programs and services that reach those workers most in need and those which yield the best long-term results. The Government has shown leadership in helping Atlantic Canadians prepare for the labour market of the future.

It is irrefutable that in the world we now live in people derive economic growth through brain power and skill power. Our future growth will depend increasingly on a highly skilled, flexible labour force.

In 1985 the Government radically changed the approach to employment programs. We replaced the mish-mash of more than 40 ineffective programs with a co-ordinated regionally driven initiative called the Canadian Jobs Strategy. Rather than making work, we set out to make permanent jobs.

This new approach focused on individual training needs. The Canadian Jobs Strategy also recognized that bureaucrats in Ottawa are not the people who should be determining local labour market needs. The Government brought in a flexible approach that recognized that the people who know best what is needed in a local economy are the people who live there.

Building on the philosophy and the success of the Canadian Jobs Strategy, last month the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) introduced an important national program that will lead to further improvements in the training and employment structure of the Canadian labour market. The new labour force development strategy will enlist the involvement of business, labour and Government in a unique co-operative effort to address the skill demands of today's labour market. The new labour force development strategy will continue to help those most in need in Atlantic Canada today.

We are seeing in our part of the world the economy transform from resource-based to service and skill-based employment. This means that education and training are extremely important for the future of workers in the Atlantic region.

Given the pressures to mobilize all human resources in new directions, under this strategy we have proposed important reforms to the Unemployment Insurance Act. These changes will allow the unemployment insurance program to help Atlantic Canadians find productive and more permanent places in the work force.

Providing Atlantic Canadians with the old unemployment insurance system is not good enough any more. Action is needed to help workers get the training and skills that match today's business needs.

The Opposition has been too quick to criticize us for lengthening the qualifying periods for unemployment insurance. Yes, it is true that some unemployment insurance claimants will have to work longer to qualify for benefits and the duration of their benefits will be shorter in many cases. However, only in areas where there are more job opportunities will those conditions prevail. In areas of continuing high unemployment, including many places in Atlantic Canada, the number of weeks of work needed to collect unemployment insurance will not change. In particular, self-employed workers in the fishing industry will not be affected. Seasonal workers will now benefit from the elimination of the repeater clause which previously forced them to find extra weeks of employment before qualifying for unemployment insurance benefits again.

This more flexible application of eligibility requirements, contrary to what our critics say, will not force unemployed workers to collect welfare. Past experience has shown that when entrance requirements have been increased, as happened during a Liberal Government in 1977, people actually adjusted successfully by either working the extra weeks necessary to qualify, or in many cases by finding permanent employment.

Atlantic Canadians are eager to work and to create prosperity in our region. Our Canadian Jobs Strategy under the new labour force program to extend the use of unemployment insurance funds for meaningful job training means that more Atlantic Canadians will have the skills needed for tomorrow's labour force.

For those people who are caught in the welfare trap, the labour force development strategy offers new alternatives. The federal Government is ready to commit an additional $100 million to train social assistance recipients for satisfying, steady jobs. If the provinces agree to match this money, together we will have an additional $200 million available to significantly improve employment prospects for 20,000 social assistance recipients across the country. This is in addition to $600 million already available in an existing jointly funded program which has already had an encouraging success rate and which was started by the Government in 1986.

As well, $350 million will be spent to provide job training under Section 26 of the Unemployment Insurance Act, formerly Section 39, allowing workers to collect unemployment insurance while they learn up-to-date skills. This represents a doubling of funds under Section 26.

Unemployment insurance claimants with viable business plans will also be able to defray some business start-up costs under the new strategy. Claimants will be able to receive their unemployment insurance benefits in a lump sum in order to move to an area where they have a better chance to find work. These are two innovations which are very significant.

For older unemployed workers we have earmarked $100 million for training. This reflects our labour market's increasing dependence on the human resources already in our work force.

Ours in Canada is a labour force in transition. The Government feels that it is essential to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act to reflect the realities of today's work patterns and to respond to the equity provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. These are important amendments because they recognize the need for greater equity and flexibility in our social programs.

Under this new strategy, 15 weeks of maternity benefits will be available during the period surrounding the birth of a child; 10 weeks of parental benefit will be available to natural and adoptive parents, either the mother or the father or shared between them. There will be fewer restrictions on women's ability to collect their entitlement of 15 weeks of sickness benefits.

The strategy proposes further equity measures. Claimants will have the flexibility to draw a combination of special benefits up to a maximum of 30 weeks. Claimants involved in labour disputes will be able to collect benefits, as will those who delay retirement past the age of 65. That is also a very significant development in today's world.

It is imperative that government programs reflect today's changing work patterns. In this regard, the labour force development strategy, as well as refocusing the Unemployment Insurance Program, will improve the training provided to employed as well as unemployed Canadians.

Under this strategy, $230 million will be directed toward human resources planning and training. The following is how the money will be divided. Almost half of those funds will be spent on entry level training to be provided by the private sector where we are significantly deficient in our training requirements and training programs relative to our compatriots and neighbours in the United States.

Co-operative education funds will be quadrupled. Human resource planning will be made available to industries in order that they can plan for the future job market. The industrial adjustment service will have its funds doubled. As all Members of the House know, the industrial adjustment service has become an international model for dealing with labour market adjustment. The service works with management and workers in finding solutions to such problems as obsolete skills, the need for new technology, and major lay-offs. The labour force development strategy addresses long-term need for a labour force that will demand more highly skilled workers. By facilitating training by the private sector as well as expanding training to the unemployed, this Government will help improve the employment and re-employment opportunities of Atlantic Canadians. These new measures will supplement continuing programs that have proven viable across the country and especially in Atlantic Canada.

Since 1986, the Canadian Jobs Strategy has provided funds for job training and work experience to those who are most in need: to women who want to work outside the home, to aboriginal people, to disabled persons, to the young and to unskilled workers. The recent employment figures are but one indication of the Government's commitment to helping this region prepare for tomorrow's labour force demands.

Clearly the labour force development strategy is following in the footsteps of programs which our Government has introduced in the past. It recognizes that assistance must be available for specific groups of people. It recognizes that specific skills and knowledge are needed. At the same time it incorporates the flexibility to allow regions and the private sector to use their initiative and energy to generate these skills and opportunities.

Four and a half years of experience by this Government has shown that this approach works in Atlantic Canada. It works because we have ensured that the training and job experience which participants receive is relevant to the modern workplace and will lead to meaningful long-term employment.

In closing, I would like to say that income support is at times important and necessary. But we must return to the principle that it is a temporary measure rather than a permanent remedy. Finally, the best income security is a job. The people of Atlantic Canada know this. They want to work and through economic growth and relevant training, this Government will give them an increased opportunity.

Mr. Rompkey: Mr. Speaker, I listened with great attention to the Hon. Member. I cannot believe some of the things he said. I noticed that he kept his head down which led me to believe that maybe he really did not want to say the things he was saying.

Whether he comes from the same area I do, I do not know. He made a statement that the economy of the Atlantic provinces is changing from resource base. There is something going on called a crisis in the fishery. I do not know what area he is talking about but in my area and in the areas most of us represent on this side of the House represent, there is a crisis in a resource-based industry called the fishery which is fundamental to the Atlantic area. This Government through its inaction is doing nothing but allowing foreign countries to rape the very stocks we depend on, the very resource we depend on. You can talk all you want about unemployment insurance but unless you give people fish to catch and something to process in the plants, it is useless to talk about unemployment insurance or training or any other program.

Then the Hon. Member said that bureaucrats in Ottawa should not be determining local market needs. This plan we have now is something that has leaped full blown from the fertile minds of central Canadian bureaucrats. Are we supposed to take a 40 year old fisherman in Ros Blanche or in Caitlin Cove and move him to Ottawa, train him as a high-tech operator so he can work for Mitel? Will the Hon. Member comment on what we are supposed to do for those people who have no skills except in the fishing industry, who are in the age bracket between 30 and 50 years old and who are out of work as a result of the inaction of this Government? What the Government says to them is:"We are not going to give you fish. We are going to give you is training." What kind of training are they going to give to those people? That is what I want to know and that is what they would like to know.

The Hon. Member said that the self-employed in the fishery will not be affected. I have just pointed out the only alternative now that the Government is offering to self-employed fishermen and plant workers is training. We can no longer offer them jobs, even part-time jobs, even jobs which can keep them in the system. We cannot offer them those jobs anymore. We are starting to get rejection slips from CEIC now. It has not fully hit the fan yet, but it is going to very soon. CEIC is starting to reject applications from people who have work programs in communities where that is the only alternative. This training that the Government talks about is a figment of somebody's imagination.

The Hon. Member talks about matching money for the provinces. That is fine but we have gone through that decade after decade and we know that a province in a have-not area of this country cannot match funds. You can have all the offers you want, but if the province has to match the funds and it has not got the wherewithal to do it, that kind of program just does not work. If the Government wants to do something creative and imaginative, why does it not bite the bullet, why does it not bring in a guaranteed annual income? You would see all over this country where imagination is working, namely in some native communities.

Take the James Bay agreement as a model. In the James Bay agreement, one of the fundamental essentials of the land claims negotiations and agreement was an income support program and a guaranteed annual income for those people who wanted to be freed from trying to beat the system. What this Government has done is to put another layer on that we have to beat. We have been beating the system for years. Instead of showing imagination and creativity and instead of bringing in a timely idea which is being utilized in many rural parts of this country, what the Government has done is simply add on another layer that we have to beat in order to stay in the system.

I do not know if the Member wants to take some time to answer these points, Mr. Speaker, but this is a very serious matter for us. I think those of us from the Atlantic area, if we are going to do our job in this Chamber, no matter what Party we come from or what side of the House, we have to stand up and say to the Government, this is a sham, this is a charade, this is not good enough. Let us do something meaningful for the people of the Atlantic.

Mr. Bird: Mr. Speaker, first of all, when I hear the hon. gentleman talking about the guaranteed annual income, it seems to me he should be sitting on the far right over here. That is in my opinion a socialist concept that does nothing but perpetuate the unemployment psyche that we have experienced across this country for so long in so many areas. The crutch of guaranteeing people an income whether they want to work or not, removing any incentive to work, I certainly reject that and with my head held very high. It is another Liberal socialist concept that will lead to nothing but deterioration of spirit and productivity and performance.

The Hon. Member says that what the people want us to give them is fish. The principle reason we are having a fishing crisis is that the fishing resource has become depleted. You cannot cause a God-given resource like fish to be recreated overnight. It has got to be managed. I think the decisions which have been made by the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) are responsible if not courageous decisions to protect the resources for future generations that should have been taken years ago. If there is anything that underlines the need for training, if there is any crisis that emphasizes the value of this significant shift to training in the Unemployment Insurance Act, it is the realization that a traditional resource upon which we depended for centuries is no longer abundant. Something else must be done.

Mr. Tobin: Are you declaring the end of fishing?

Mr. Bird: I am not saying that it is the end of the fishery at all, absolutely not. As a matter of fact, the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans has taken a management approach that will see that these fish stocks are preserved and managed and that we use them in the context of the harvest that we can afford. The stark reality is that for the foreseeable future the fishery will not be able to support the traditional numbers of people it has in the past. There will have to be a transition to new kinds of jobs, new kinds of industry. There is nothing that is growing faster in the Atlantic region or anywhere else than the service jobs—

• (1740)

Mr. Tobin: A & W, McDonald's, Harvey's.

Mr. Bird: I heard the other day that in McDonald's and Harvey's and places like that—you may laugh, my friend, but in those places today you have to know how to operate a computerized cash register.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Bird: Mr. Speaker, those gentlemen have been so long ensconced in the security of this House as their way of life that they do not realize what it takes to get a job today. I have worked in the private sector for a few years—longer than you, young man—and more recently in it. I can tell you that you can sit there and shoot your yap off, as you do day after day, but you are about as ineffective as anything I have seen.

This unemployment insurance legislation will give more employment to your constituents than all the words you have ever uttered.

As my hon. colleague has suggested, the transition to aquaculture in the fishery will be significant.

I support this Bill. I support the training that it will provide. I support the concept and the direction it is going. I totally reject the crutch of a guaranteed annual income. If that is the best idea the Hon. Member for Labrador (Mr. Rompkey) can come up with, I think it speaks to his bankruptcy of ideas on this question.

[Translation]

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, what I just heard from a Member for New Brunswick is absolutely incredible! As if we should train people in the Atlantic region to work at McDonald's! Maybe he should have talked about A&W and all the other small stores that employ many people part-time. That is exactly what has happened in Atlantic Canada. I would like to ask him whether he agrees with his government when it cut funds for regional development programs in the last budget, when it cut the ACOA program, for which the Prime Minister had promised Atlantic Canadians $1.05 billion in new money, over and above all other programs. But now they are not singing the same tune. The period is being extended from five to seven years and we no longer have the money for development subagreements. So I ask him, with the changes that are being considered for the unemployment insurance program, whether he agrees with his government, with all these cuts that take needed job creation opportunities away from Atlantic Canadians.

[English]

Mr. Bird: Mr. Speaker, the regional development spending in Atlantic Canada in 1989-90 will be $500 million, which is the largest amount ever spent on record. It compares to an average of $182 million a year that that Government spent in the period 1978-1982.

Mr. Tobin: False.

Mr. Bird: That is a fact. The young people and older people of Atlantic Canada are not ashamed to work in McDonald's or wherever. They take jobs where there is work. The Hon. Member may not like to work at places like that, but let me tell him my constituents stand in line for things like that.

Mr. Chris Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, having listened to some of the debate and having watched other parts of it, I am sure the unemployed people in my riding only wish some of the things Members opposite said actually had something to do with what takes place.

The Government's approach is a further illustration of its Conservative business oriented agenda of privatization and reducing government responsibility for the economy and social programs. I can use my Province of Saskatchewan as an example, along with most of the United Kingdom and large parts of the United States. In my province, following a similar agenda to that of the federal Government, but having started it a little earlier, there are now extremely high levels of unemployment. Saskatoon has the third highest level of unemployment in the country. We have higher income and sales taxes than before, a deficit where none existed before, lower quality and higher priced social services with long hospital waiting lists which we never experience before, and we have the highest rates of people leaving the province than ever before.

We are facing major battles over privatization of our important utilities. All this has led to a Conservative Government that will lose the next election to a New Democratic Party in Saskatchewan that is committed to a people-oriented full employment strategy and cares about the regions of Canada, and which says what it thinks and does what it says.

The agenda which the federal Government is following, and which is exhibited clearly within the changes it is suggesting to unemployment insurance, includes the notion which we have seen only too clearly in the states immediately south of the province in which I live. That notion is: Don't take jobs to the people, take people to the jobs. As a result we will have provinces that will look like North Dakota, which is basically a wasteland with huge areas of space because the residents have been sucked to some other part of the country with no effort made to provide for the communities in which they grew up and no effort made to ensure that they can earn a living in their own communities.

The Government's economic and political motto has always been: Never accept responsibility for problems that with a little imagination you can blame on somebody else. That is clearly exhibited in the overhaul of the funding and administration of the unemployment insurance program, which is the subject of Bill C-21.

During the course of my remarks I will touch on several topics which clearly indicate that the Government is not nearly as concerned about the well-being of the unemployed as it is about the perceived need to harmonize Canadian society and Canadian social programs with those south of the border. Bill C-21 represents some of the first shots in this harmonization process.

I want to assure Canadians from coast to coast that New Democrats are ready to fight this fight to the end. The country is beginning to find out just what is in the Government's soul, given the fact that the unemployed are one of its very first targets. One would think that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), a self-styled friend of the people, would take on a group with greater capacity to protect itself and fight back, such as the profitable corporations which do not pay any income tax, rather than attack the unemployed.

Clearly what Bill C-21 does, as if anyone needed to be made aware of it, is signal the end of the myth that there is anything progressive about these Conservatives.

I want to begin in dealing with the specifics of unemployment insurance by reminding the House about the purpose of unemployment insurance and about the social contract that Canadian workers thought they had with the Government as to the uses of the money collected through their premium deductions. Unemployment insurance is, at its core, an income replacement program. It is meant to give Canadian workers for a time when they might be without a job the security of knowing that during personally difficult times the bills will continue to be paid and their children will continue to be fed. It provides Canadians with the dignity of knowing that of the money they receive much of that they contributed themselves. It is not all a hand-out, it was money that was contributed largely from their employers and from themselves as employees. This is how workers perceive the deductions made from their cheques.

Bill C–21 changes all of that. The Government is in reality telling Canadians that the responsibility for the unemployed rests with the unemployed, and that the money that working people had put aside for that time when they might be unemployed is not necessarily available to them anymore.

• (1750)

In the process it is telling food banks, service agencies and the churches that they had better get ready because they are going to have more work to do in the future, as we turn thousands, perhaps 300,000 people off the unemployment rolls, not to work, Mr. Speaker, because in a city like my own, we have 12 per cent unemployment. They would be just turned off the rolls and left to presumably collect welfare or do as best they can. We are asking those service and welfare agencies to pick up the slack even more than they have before.

The Government uses two main reasons for forcing these changes on Canadian workers and their families. The first well warn reason is deficit reduction. We did not hear very much about cuts to Government spending during the federal election. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) and the rest of the Conservative candidates focused on the deficit reduction only after the votes had been counted and they were back in Ottawa.

In fact, Tory promises during that election campaign totalled billions of dollars. I cannot help but think that a responsible Government would have been up–front with Canadians during that process. I cannot help but think that it would have made its intentions about the deficit known at that time.

One also is to wonder why, even if it was legitimately concerned about over–all government spending, why it chose to pull out of the unemployment insurance program in the way it has, when other initiatives could have been taken, and when it would not have been necessary to attack one of the most vulnerable groups in our society.

After all, of the $13 billion budget last year that the federal Government utilized, only about $2.9 billion of that was in the unemployment insurance fund, the rest being covered by employee and employer contributions.

Some other initiatives could have been taken. Just let me mention one. If the Government, instead of attacking the UI fund to the tune of $2.9 billion in Bill C–21 had suggested collecting interest even at a reasonable rate of 10 per cent on corporate deferred taxes, that would have raised $3.6 billion, much more than it has taken off the backs of the unemployed. That is just one example of something which could have been done without attacking the most vulnerable group in our society.

Instead, though, the Government chose to attack the unemployed, perhaps because the unemployed lacked the resources to fight back. I would remind Members opposite that during the attempt to deindex seniors' pensions, another group which perhaps the Government might have thought was not going to fight back, that group fought back most effectively and changed the Government's mind. I want to say that the New Democratic Party will be involved in this fight to change the Government's mind on unemployment insurance, just as it was involved in the fight on the part of the seniors just a short while ago.

Second, the Government is telling us that it wants to prepare Canadian workers for the next century. In fact, the Government's policy statement suggests and I quote: "This effort is designed to ensure that the Canadian labour force of the 1990s will be highly skilled and capable of adapting to an evolving work environment brought on by technological and demographic change."

This gives the impression that what the Government is trying to do is present a far–reaching, forward looking and innovative approach to a skills development problem. However, a closer look reveals something quite different. The Government has slashed the number of weeks for which claimants can receive unemployment insurance. It has made it harder to get unemployment insurance in the first place. It has dropped its commitment to funding unemployment insurance for necessary programs like maternity, sickness and regionally extended benefits.

Only a Conservative Government would have the nerve to suggest that those kind of changes better prepare Canadian workers for the future. It just makes it more unpleasant to be on unemployment. What the Government should have been looking at were ways to create more real jobs for people, not the vast majority of low paid, low quality jobs which have been created over the last four or five years, still leaving the unemployment rate in my city at 12 per cent.

The Bill and its companion policy paper are nothing more than rehashing of old Tory programs, programs which do nothing more than provide people with short term employment in order to relieve public pressure to create long term jobs, programs designed to hide the fact that this Government really does not have any idea what to do, having put all of its eggs in the free trade basket, leaving everything to be decided by the market-place.

We can see that this is the case because the money that has been freed up by cutting benefits to the unemployed has simply been ploughed back into existing programs. These are training programs which are inadequate to take on the challenges of the 1990s, and programs which do nothing to look into the future to see what the workplace will be like in 10 or 20 years' time. Such initiatives are a sad testament to the lack of vision and imagination in dealing with this situation of unemployment which we face today.

Additionally, the Government has suggested that it wants to create a training ethic in Canadian business with these changes. Quite properly, it identifies that the private sector spends far too little on training and retraining its employees. The Department itself suggests that only 25 per cent of Canadian businesses institute such training, at a value of about $1.4 billion a year. This is about half of the per capita spending in the American private sector. Accordingly, the Government's policy paper states that it seeks to achieve a substantial increase in the private sector's role in training workers and in ensuring that training is more responsive to labour market needs.

It is also worth pointing out that a recent report by the Canadian Labour Market and Productivity Centre identifies a critical problem with the way business approaches training that the Government has done nothing to address.

It states that those firms which do engage in training do so primarily to meet their own short term needs that are particular to their tasks at hand. This is a critical point because those businesses' sole concern is with the maximization of their own profit, not with the welfare of the worker, not with the strength of the local community and not with the long term skill needs of any worker. They care about saving money and that is why they do it. They do not do it to intensify and increase the skills of their employees so that those employees can be better trained for the future.

What exactly leads the Minister to believe that because extra money has been made available to train workers that suddenly businesses will be interested in the development of skills with broad long term application? Does she have some facts to back up her claim that businesses will get involved in some meaningful way, or does she just have a gut feeling about it all?

We were hoping on this side of the House to get a look at the impact studies which have been done by the Department before this legislation was run through the House, so that we could be sure of what in fact the Minister is basing her assumptions on. We were told by the Minister on more than one occasion that she sees no reason to consult with labour and other interested groups on matters dealing with unemployment insurance and that we will not have those impact studies until after this legislation is passed, when of course it will be too late.

On a further point, dealing with training, one would have thought if the Government is going to make these assertions that business is going to pick up on some of the training needs, that it also would feel committed to do the same thing. The Government lacks credibility here also. Spending on job creation and job training in this country has decreased by 32 per cent since this Government came into power.

Using 1984 dollars, federal spending is down from $2.2 billion in 1984 to $1.7 billion in 1988. We have seen cut-backs in programs to fund apprenticeship schemes in colleges, and we have seen major funding cut-backs in post-secondary education and transfers to the provinces also. This Government totally lacks credibility in terms of its training commitments.

The proposals which are being presented in Bill C-21 do not offer any new or innovative training options for Canadian workers, who are rightly apprehensive about their future under free trade. It is just money ploughed back into the same—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I call it six o'clock, the Hon. Member will have five minutes in his debate, plus 10 minutes questions and comments the next time the Bill comes up.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

BROADCASTING—REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, after the usual discussions between the Government and opposition Parties, I would like to put forward the following motion:

That the entire subject matter of both radio and television broadcasting of the proceedings of the House of Commons and its committees, including the legal, procedural and technical aspects thereof, be referred for examination, study and report to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges, Procedure and Private Member's Business, with such study, to include an examination of the subject matter of the proposal by Cableco and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation for licence to operate a specialty programming network, styled the Canadian Parliamentary Channel CPAC;

That, the committee and members of the committee have the power, when the committee deems it necessary, to adjourn or travel from place to place inside and outside Canada and that, when deemed necessary, the required staff accompany the committee or members of the committee, as the case may be; and that, notwithstanding the usual practices of this House, if the House is not sitting when an interim or final report of the committee is completed, the committee shall report its findings by depositing with the Clerk of the House and the report shall thereupon be deemed to have been laid upon the Table; and

That the committee shall report to the House not later than December 31, 1989.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME DURING ALLOTTED DAY

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, if you check with the House you will find unanimous agreement that when we come to Orders of the Day for the discussion of the opposition motion, that the Parties may divide the 20 minute slots among the number of speakers as they so wish.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, this is something we would very much like to have in place for this debate today, with this one nuance, if I can put it that way, that it should be left to each Party to decide whether they wish to divide up their time for each slot or have that slot used entirely by one speaker.

The concept we have in mind is what was done Monday during the emergency debate on the situation in China.

Mr. Speaker: I understand the situation. I thank the Hon. Member.

• (1110)

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the Government is also prepared to go along. I think it is a step forward in parliamentary reform that we be able to do this. I agree with my hon. colleague across the way, that it should be up to each Party to decide how to use their 20-minute slots right from the start.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member.

PETITIONS

VIA RAIL CUT-BACKS

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure pursuant to Standing Order 36 to present a petition on behalf of a number of people from Kamloops, British Columbia.

They indicate their concern regarding the Government's decision to curtail VIA Rail services in a number of the regions of the country. They believe that had the Government provided the necessary resources, that VIA could have not only lived up to its mandate but gone beyond its mandate.

They are calling upon the Parliament of Canada to pass legislation, presumably, to maintain and improve and to modernize VIA Rail as opposed to curtailing its service throughout many parts of Canada.

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is my duty and honour today to present a petition on behalf of residents of the Moose Jaw area who are petitioning the Government with respect to VIA Rail.

It is their concern that the Government provide VIA with the necessary support to fully realize its potential to develop the kind of national rail network that Canadians want and deserve, and they call upon the Government to act immediately.

PORT OF CHURCHILL

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, today we have a delegation coming in to meet with the Minister responsible for Grains and Oilseeds (Mr. Mayer) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) on the Port of Churchill.

I have the honour today to present three petitions signed by residents of the communities of Nipawin, Ridgedale, Arborfield, Garrick, Choiceland, Love, White Fox, Ile des Chênes, Saskatoon and Creighton, Saskatchewan.

Also in Manitoba, Gillam, Bird, Flin Flon, The Pas, Cranberry Portage, Thompson, Sundance, White Lake, Ilford, Churchill, Winnipeg, Brandon, Cowan, St. Martin, Arborg, Dallas, Selkirk, Leaf Rapids, Lynn Lake, Minnedosa, Erickson, Rapid City, Gimli, Dauphin, Lorette, Miniota, Dugald, Morden, Cartwright, Boissevain, Glenbow, Clearwater, Souris and Deleau.

AUTOMATION OF LIGHTHOUSE

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me to rise today pursuant to Standing Order 36 to present a petition signed by 250 residents from Thunder Bay, Nipigon, Red Rock, Beardmore, Dorion and Pass Lake.

They are concerned that this Government is planning to automate the lighthouse at Lamb Island on Lake Superior. The lighthouse keeper serves many vital functions and should not be removed.

An automated system cannot respond to distress calls from the many commercial fishermen who use these waters. It cannot prevent incidents of costly violence and theft, nor can it respond quickly to a malfunctioning of the light which is so important to the safety of these fishermen.

The petitioners thus call upon Parliament to order the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) to ensure that the lighthouse keeper be maintained in his position on Lamb Island.

REQUEST FOR LIBERALIZATION OF LAWS CONCERNING EXTRADITION OF CRIMINALS

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, I also want to present a petition prepared and signed by 1,414 Canadians concerning the possible extradition of criminals now in Canadian prisons. We know that these criminals might have, or have allegedly, committed crimes in other countries as well and they should be prosecuted by the authorities of those countries; however, because of some of our laws, these criminals are beyond the reach of other countries.

The purpose of the petition is to encourage a change in our legislation to make these criminals who are now here in our jails extraditable by foreign countries, so that justice can also be done in those countries.

REQUEST FOR REVISION OF MEDICAL STANDARDS FOR IMMIGRANTS

Ms. Barbara Greene (Don Valley North): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour today to present a certified petition organized by residents of my riding and signed by a number of residents from Metropolitan Toronto and other parts of Ontario.

The petition requests the Ministers of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall), and National Health and Welfare (Mr. Beatty) to revise the medical standards for admission to Canada with a view to compliance with the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and the enhancement of the human rights and dignity of the disabled.

I strongly urge the Ministers and other Members of the House to support this request. People should not be discriminated against because of a disability, particularly Downs Syndrome.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: Nos. 36, 48, 54, 57 and 74.

[Text]

LEASED OFFICE SPACE

Question No. 36—Mr. Boudria:

At the present time, does the government, its agencies or Crown Corporations lease office space from Robert Campeau or Campeau Corporation and, if so (a) what is the total number of square metres (b) what is the total amount paid per month (c) did or does any of these leases expire during fiscal year (i) 1988–89 (ii) 1989–90 (iii) 1990–91 and, if so, what is the total amount of square metres affected?

Mr. Albert Cooper (Parliamentary Secretary to Government House Leader): I am informed by the Department of Public Works, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation and the Canada Post Corporation as follows:

At the present time, the Department of Public Works, through its Accommodation Program, leases from Campeau Corporation a total of 388,884.0 square meters of office and associated storage space for occupancy by various federal government departments and agencies. The Department pays rent totalling $5,993,570.00 per month for this space. None of the lease or lease/purchase agreements involved expire in fiscal years 1988–89, 1989–90 or 1990–91.

The Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation does at the present time lease office and storage space from Campeau Corporation.

Square Metres	Montly Rent
1176.0	$25,631.59

One lease (65.6 square metres) expires in March 1990.

While Canada Post Corporation can confirm that the Corporation does lease office space from Campeau Corporation, the commercial details of lease portfolios are proprietary to Canada Post Corporation and, pursuant to policy, are confidential.

All other Departments, Agencies and Crown Corporations have no information on this subject.

BUDGET PUBLICITY

Question No. 48—Mr. Rodriguez:

Did the government enter into a contract with Nancy Jamieson and Heather Conway of Public Affairs International for services related to publicity for the Budget and, if so, what sums of money (a) have been paid (b) remain to be paid under the contract?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): No. The Government did not enter into a contract with Public Affairs International. Neither of these individuals is affiliated with P.A.I. Their duties relate to strategic planning and communications advice with respect to the goods and services tax.

The services of Ms. N. Jamieson have been retained (through the company N.L. Jamieson Strategic Consulting) for a six month period at a per diem rate of $600. Ms. Jamieson left the employ of Public Affairs International in May of 1988.

Ms. H. Conway was hired on the Minister's staff on a six month contract at the Special Assistant Exempt Staff Level which has an annual salary range of up to $52,740.

DETERMINATION OF RAILWAY COSTS

Question No. 54—Mr. Angus:

In the determination of railway costs under the Western Grain Transportation Act and the National Transportation Act, what is the (a) cost-of-funds rate used, for (i) debt (ii) equity, before and after tax (b) total weighted average cost-of-funds rate used before and after tax?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): The Western Grain Transportation Act (WGTA) indicates that the cost of funds approved for the Canadian rail division of Canadian Pacific Ltd., adjusted for the risks associated with the movement of grain, shall be used to determine railway costs under this Act. The cost of funds rates for the crop year 1988/89 are as follows:

a.	i)	Debt rate	= 10.1%
	ii)	Equity rate*
		-before tax	= 20.4%
		-after tax	= 11.3%
b.	i)	Total weighted average cost of funds rate:
		-before tax	= 13.5%
		-after tax	= 8.7%

*Blend of Preferred Equity and Common Equity and Common Equity rates.

GINN AND COMPANY

Question No. 57—Mrs. Finestone:

1. Does the government own all or any part of Ginn and Company and (a) if so, on what date did this acquisition occur (b) if not, has the government made an offer to purchase the Company from Gulf and Western and, if so (i) what was the price offered (ii) what amount of equity in the company would the government acquire through its offer (iii) would the government acquire *itde facto*ro control of the company (iv) would there be any provision for Gulf and Western to be represented on the Company's Board of Directors and, if so, what provision (v) on what date will the government's purchase offer expire?

2. Has the government corresponded with Gulf and Western regarding the Company and, if so, what was the content of that correspondence?

Hon John McDermid (Minister of State (Privatization and Regulatory Affairs)): 1. The Canada Development Investment Corporation (CDIC) and Gulf + Western Inc. (G + W) signed an agreement on May 2, 1989, for the purchase of a 51 per cent interest in Ginn and GLC Publishers Limited (GLC) at a purchase price of $8—$9 million, subject to final adjustment. The transaction closed on May 26, 1989, with the following payments made by CDIC; CAN$ 3.1 million; US$ 4.6 million. The final adjustment for GLC is to be determined through arbitration.

The terms of the offer to purchase the Ginn Business stipulate that the Ginn Business will be transferred to a newly incorporated entity created by G + W with which GLC will be merged. The terms and conditions of sale establish that CDIC will acquire a majority (51 per cent) voting and equity interest in the new Company, that CDIC will nominate three of the five Directors on the Board, and that the Chairman will be selected from among the Directors nominated by CDIC. However, the terms do limit the Board's ability to make decisions on some strategic matters in that four out of five members of the Board must support such motions as changes to the current product lines and investment of borrowed capital.

2. CDIC has held negotiations with G + W for the purchase of 51 per cent of Ginn and GLC. (In response to the CDIC offer, G + W put together a combined package for Ginn and GLC, another company acquired by G + W and subject to divestiture requirements pursuant to the Baie Comeau Policy.) These negotiations established the terms and conditions of sale as set out in the acquisition agreement. The acquisition agreement between CDIC and G + W stemmed from the agreement signed by Investment Canada and G + W to satisfy Investment Canada's Canadian ownership requirements. Investment Canada correspondence constituted setting deadlines and monitoring negotiations with G + W.

BUDGET PEAK OF APRIL 26, 1989

Question No. 74—Mr. Milliken:

Did the Minister of Finance consult with non-governmental constitutional experts following the Budget leak of April 26, 1989 and, if so, what are the full names and occupations of those experts?

Hon Micheal Wilson (Minister of Finance): Yes.

1) Mr. Roger Tassé, O.C., Q.C. Mr. Tassé is currently Executive Vice-President, Legal and Environmental Affairs at Bell Canada. He is former Deputy Minister of Justice and Deputy Attorney General of Canada and former Deputy Solicitor General of Canada.

2) The Hon. Eugene Forsey, O.C., Ph.D., D.C.L., L.L.D., D.Litt., P.C. Dr. Forsey is a distinguished consitutional scholar. He was summoned to the Senate in 1970 and retired in 1979. He is the author of numerous articles, books and pamphlets on constitutional issues, Canadian history and economics.

3) Professor Peter W. Hogg, Q.C. Professor Hogg is a professor of law at the Osgoode Hall Law School of York University. He is the author of the leading text on Canadian Constitutional law.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

*Question No. 33—Mr. Taylor:

Since January 1, 1985 has Canada Post reclassified or deleted any full-time positions and if so what number (a) have been reclassified to other full-time positions (b) have been reclassified to part-time positions (i) under 20 hours a week (ii) over 20 hours a week (c) have been deleted?

Mr Benoît Tremblay (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Canada Post Corporation informs me that the information required to answer the question is not available. Therefore the following is the most complete answer possible.

The breakdown of the full-time and part-time employees is as follows:

	1985	may 1989
Full-time	57,382	53,386
Part-time	8,797	8,982
Total	66,179	62,386

Note: The above does not include casual or seasonal workers.

Total reclassification to full-time (estimate) is 1703 and to part-time (estimate) is 678. Sufficient detail is not available to provide an accurate breakdown of more or less than 20 hours.

PCB STORAGE SITES IN KAMLOOPS

*Question No. 61—M. Riis:

Are there any PCB storage sites in the constituency of Kamloops and if so, for each site (a) what is the frequency of inspection to ensure proper safeguards are being maintained (b) what steps are being taken to safely dispose of these PCBs?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): 1. There are 22 PCB waste storage sites (3 federal, 19 private) in the constituency of Kamloops.

(a) The proper safeguards for these wastes are contained in the CEPA Storage of PCB Wastes Interim Order issued on September 22, 1988. Every owner and operator of PCB storage sites is required to maintain monthly reports of inspections carried out to ensure all proper waste management procedures are being followed. Since September 1988, all federal and private sites have been inspected at least once either by Environment Canada or the B.C. Ministry of Environment. Repeat inspections by government inspectors to verify compliance with regulatons have been conducted as required.

Four storage sites have been inspected twice: 1 federal—Transport Canada Mount Lolo Radar Station 3 private—Highland Valley Copper Ltd. —Aimsworth Lumber Ltd. —Nelson Machinery Ltd.

Two storage sites have been inspected three times: 2 private—Caribou College —The Weyerhauser pulp mill and sawmill

One storage site is inspected at least once a month by the B.C. Ministry of Environment 1 private—Mohawk Oil Ltd.

(b) The responsibility for the safe disposal of PCBs stored in the Kamloops areas rests with the provincial government. The B.C. government is assessing various options for establishing destruction facilities for PCBs and other hazardous wastes. There is not time estimate known when such facilities may become available.

The federal government is in the process of leasing two mobile or transportable incinerators for eliminating federal PCB wastes. The contract for one unit at Goose Bay is expected to be awarded this summer. A contract will be let for the second unit once a federal site has been selected. The federal government intends to consider the destruction of non-federal PCB wastes in these incinerators on a cost-recovery basis.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

VACANCY—CONSTITUENCY OF CHAMBLY

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, on a short point of order, could I ask the Deputy Government House Leader, since the constituency of Chambly essentially has not had a representative for the past six months, I wonder if the Minister could indicate if the Government has passed an Order in Council calling for a by-election, or setting a by-election date. If not, does he have any indication as to when that might occur?

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, I will take that as a representation made by the House Leader of the New Democratic Party. I am sure the Government will want to attend to this matter as rapidly as it can.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME DURING ALLOTTED DAY

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief point of order. I believe that earlier this morning we made a tentative arrangement whereby we would divide up the time in a way similar to what we did on Monday night. Perhaps it escaped all of us that at that particular time on Monday night, because it was an adjournment debate, there was no such thing as a question and answer period after the speeches.

I would like to suggest to my colleagues in the other Parties that we should proceed in the following way; that in each round the Party in question decides whether they will have a 20-minute speech, followed by a 10-minute question and answer period. Alternatively, there could be a 10-minute speech, followed immediately by a five-minute question and answer period, followed again by a subsequent 10-minute speech and another five-minute question and answer period. In this way, we will not lose the opportunity to have questions and answers, but we will pro-rate them depending on the length of the speech. In other words, a 20-minute speech will have a 10-minute question and answer period and alternatively, a 10-minute speech will have a five-minute question and answer period.

I have had some discussions with my colleague from the New Democratic Party on this subject. I would like to offer that as a suggestion to the Whip of the Government to see if it has their agreement as well.

I think that we have perhaps inadvertently forgotten that part of the equation in the earlier discussions this morning.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Calgary West, and then I will hear from the Hon. Member for Kamloops.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the Government is quite prepared to see the ratio discussed. I think if we had a 13-minute speech and a seven-minute question and answer period then it should as closely as possible approximate the length of the speech in terms of its relative proportion, if that is not too onerous for the Chair. It may turn out to be too fine a line at some point, however, we could basically try that.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I agree there have been discussions. I would like to support the suggestion for two reasons.

One is that we are dealing today on an opposition motion put forward by the New Democratic Party on a number of environmental concerns. I think it is in the House's interest to have as many Members as possible participate in the debate if they wish.

Second, I think that it is a way to experiment with a change to the Standing Orders without actually changing them, to see if in fact it is an effective way to involve Members of the House on critical issues.

For those two reasons, we are anxious to proceed with the suggestion.

STARRED QUESTIONS

Mr. Speaker: In the normal course starred questions Nos. 33 and 61 would be the subject of oral answers. If that is not the case, then perhaps the Hon. Minister of State could let the Chair know and the answers will be tabled.

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, with respect to starred questions Nos. 33 and 61 I am informed that the reason why the Government suggests that they be tabled is because the responses are very long. We felt that it would take up the time of the House to read them. Thus we suggested that they be tabled.

Mr. Speaker: The House has heard the remarks of the Hon. Minister of State. Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ALLOCATION OF TIME DURING ALLOTTED DAY

Mr. Speaker: In terms of the suggestion made today, which seems a very sensible one, that the Parties divide the 20 minutes as they see fit, presumably all Parties consider that this 20-minute period would be used by either one or two of their Members. The suggestion has been made by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell that when a Member has spoken for 10 minutes, then immediately at that point there be five minutes for questions and comments. That seems to me to be the tidiest way to approach it. If the House is in agreement, then that is the way the debate will be conducted.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the Government has no objection to doing it that way today. I would like the House to consider perhaps an alternative suggestion for the future which has just occurred to me. That is to say we use the 20 minutes and then have 10 minutes for questions and comments for the whole of the 20 minutes which could be directed at one or more Member.

Parties might on occasion want to use four Members with five minutes apiece. To move to questions and comments immediately after a five minute speech might turn out to be a problem.

However, if we just had the speeches in the course of 20 minutes followed by questions or comments to be directed at whatever part of the 20 minutes is appropriate, then that might be something to consider in the future. It might make things a little easier.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the comments of the Hon. Member. I am very conscious that it is an Opposition Day today. I think that probably the House would want to get on with debating the motion. Unless there is any adjustment that needs to be made in this understanding we will proceed with it.

However, the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell was rising. I will certainly hear him.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I was rising just to indicate that I am certainly prepared to entertain that proposal at some other time. We will try one system today. Perhaps on another Opposition Day we could try the variation suggested by the Hon. Member and subsequently incorporate whatever method is thought to be best in our rules to improve the debating procedures of the House.

Mr. Hockin: Mr. Speaker, we have with us today in the gallery students from the John Dearness Public School of London, Ontario, who are following this debate on the environment. I am concerned that their audio systems may not be working. Perhaps the security staff could acknowledge the presence of these fine students and help them with that situation.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 81—THE ENVIRONMENT

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands) moves:

That, in recognition of the importance of contributing to an environmentally sustainable future, it be an Order of the House that:

(1) the Government introduce by September 30, 1989 an Act to require environmental assessment of major federal projects, programs and undertakings, such Act to provide for the appointment of an environmental officer of the House of Commons whose duties shall include the assessment of all practices of the House, and who shall be charged with the responsibility of reporting to the Speaker on ways in which the House can contribute to a safe and environmentally healthy future;

(2) the Government table, within five sitting days of the first sitting day after June 30, 1989, its plans for the safe disposal of toxic wastes; and

(3) the Government table by December 31, 1989 its plans to achieve minimal discharge of deleterious substances into Canadian fresh and coastal waters.

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with respect to the wording of the motion today. I want to try to do it in a spirit of co-operation, trying to be helpful first to the Chair and then to all colleagues of opposition Parties. I will try to make my points as succinctly as possible so as not to take up the precious time of the House, especially considering the nature of the substance of the motion which I think we all agree is a very important issue for all sides of the House.

My point is procedural. It has to do with the wording in the first paragraph of the motion which states, "—that it be an Order of the House that:" followed by the other paragraphs of the motion.

My basis concern is with the phrase: "That it be an Order of the House that:". The problem is that we know of no tradition of Parliament whereby this type of motion, if passed, because of its wording using a phrase like this, ipso facto becomes an order to the Government to introduce specific legislation, to table policy, or to do other things.

According to our knowledge and our research, the ancient and valid tradition, of course, is that Parliament recognizes in its forms and words the difference between a motion which, if agreed, becomes a resolved resolution and, by distinction, a motion which, if agreed, becomes an order.

To put it precisely the House expresses itself to the Government by "resolution" as distinct from an "order" that is given to execute a decision of the House or an order given to different officers of the House in the view of executing that decision.

To support our argument we wish to cite the 1970 edition of the parliamentary dictionary by Abraham and Hawtrey, page 185 where it is stated under the word "Resolution":

> An expression of the opinion of the House with reference to some subject or a declaration of its intention to do something. A resolution is sometimes ordered to be communicated to the other House with a request for its concurrence, e.g. a resolution that it is expedient that a joint committee be appointed to consider a certain subject. A resolution may be rescinded.
> Resolutions must be distinguished from Orders, i.e. directions or commands addressed by one or other House to members or officers of that House or to other persons. Thus the House of Commons resolves that an address be presented to the Queen, but orders it to be presented to her by those Members who are privy counsellors or members of the royal household.

In light of that argument, we submit the proper way of wording the motion would be, as has always or long been our practice, not to say, "it be an order of the House that—" but instead say, "this House calls on the Government to—". That is the wording which we respectfully submit should be included in this motion.

Having made that point, I want to reiterate to colleagues of opposition Parties that, consistent with Citation 480 of Beauchesne's, we certainly do not expect the Chair to come back immediately with a ruling on the arguments I have just presented. Consistent with the practice of the House, we should get under way the debate of the very important issue that is put before us today.

In that light I think it is reasonable and important for us to obtain a ruling from the Chair so that in the future we can know what to expect. This would reasonably give us a good idea of a distinction between the use of one set of words or another set of words.

I humbly suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that in the meantime while Your Honour is reflecting on this matter that perhaps you, Sir, could indicate the different circumstances, if any, which allow or require the use of the phrase: "It be an Order of the House—" such as is used in both Notices of Motions under Private Members' Business in the name of the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Hon. Member for Kamloops (Mr. Riis) with respect to calling individuals to the bar of the House. I think that is a good example of something the Chair may wish to clear up.

Our basic point is that the use of the words that are proposed to us today would break some new ground. In that context we feel compelled to bring Your Honour's attention to this matter so that it may be clarified and that in the future we know exactly what to expect.

• (1130)

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the interjection by my hon. friend and colleague, the Deputy House Leader for the Government, on this issue. I want to explain the reason that these particular words were chosen. I see this issue as different from most issues brought forward on opposition days. I think it is fair to say that on most opposition days the Opposition brings forward a motion which the Government tends not to support. A motion is often aimed in a rather critical way at the Government and, of course, a votable motion normally is actually even designed that way.

On this issue, we felt that it would be appropriate to ask that it be an order of the House that certain initiatives follow because of the non-partisan nature of this particular motion.

We are simply making the assumption that all Members, Government Members, as well as members of the Official Opposition and Members of the New Democratic Party, will be supporting this opposition day motion today. Who would not think it appropriate that we should have an environmental officer of the House? After all, we have the responsibility of providing leadership on critical issues. Second, who would not say that it was appropriate to have plans in place for the disposal of toxic wastes and so on?

We are offering this motion today. I appreciate the points made by the Deputy Government House Leader that perhaps there is an alteration in the traditional wording. However, we felt that this issue certainly was above the usual partisan concerns found in the House of Commons and that it was an item that all of us would support.

With due respect to my hon. friend, if that were to cause problems, in other words if that were to provide a reason that might make it awkward for government Members to support this initiative, we would welcome an amendment. As a matter of fact, we would propose an amendment if the Government would see that appropriate. We will wait your ruling, Mr. Speaker, as the day goes on.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, just in case there is some confusion, let me say that today is a supply day and that the support of an opposition motion on a supply day would be treated, I think, in terms of our precedents, as a matter of confidence. I would not want to leave any sense of confusion about that as the chief government Whip. Supply days have a special purpose in our Standing Orders. Today is a supply day and the motion is a votable one. I could signal to the House that it is my intention to defer the vote until Monday if that is helpful to Members. I would not want to leave any sense of confusion. The wording of the motion is one issue. The purpose of a supply day is a very different issue.

Mr. Riis: I know it is important that we begin this debate, Mr. Speaker. I simply want to say that we appreciate the interpretation that the government Whip might place on this, but I want to make it very clear, before the debate begins, that in no way would we consider this to be a motion of confidence in the Government, absolutely not. This is an issue that must rise above partisan concerns. It is an item on which we all have very strong feelings. To consider it to be a vote of confidence is something that we would not anticipate, and I want to declare here and now that in no way ought it be construed as a vote of confidence in the Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair will take the matter under advisement and report back to the House as soon as possible. In the meantime debate will proceed with the Hon. Member for Saanich—Gulf Islands. On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Kamloops.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, when we debated the issue of South Moresby, which you will recall, it was not considered to be a confidence motion. It is in that same spirit that I make this point. We feel that this case is not dissimilar to the South Moresby case. With all due respect, I want to make it very clear that confidence is not an issue here.

Mr. Charest: Mr. Speaker, I do not want to prolong this debate though it seems that is what is happening. We do want to point out that the issue of wording is important for future debates in this House. We bring that to Your Honour's attention, at the same time recognizing the fact that we expect debate to go on. The wording for future debates is important for us; it is important that it be clarified.

I also want to indicate, as the government Whip has done, that there is no mistake on this side of the House on the nature of this debate. I think the answer to that argument is found in the words of the House Leader of the New Democratic Party when he referred to the nature of an opposition motion. He said that it was often critical and admitted that this motion had been designed to be critical of the Government. I understand that maybe today is something of a non-partisan nature for him.

We have stated and the Minister for the Environment has said often that the issue of the environment is a non-partisan one. However, the simple fact of the matter in life is that we are now in the House of Commons in Canada. We cannot pretend that we are not here. The rules and traditions of the House are something with which we have to live and by which we have to abide in that spirit. I am sorry to say that it is part of the rules of today. For that reason the Government considers this motion to be a confidence motion, and we intend to behave accordingly.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to say very briefly that while the points of order which have been raised deal with serious matters of concern with respect to the operation of the House, I hope we will be able to get on with debating the substance of the motion very soon. If you, Sir, are reserving judgment on the points of order, it would be understood that your ruling would not be such that the entire motion would be deemed out of order and the debate would not continue today.

Rather, the NDP House Leader will be making such amendments in the light of your ruling, I am not anticipating it, but, in any event such that the debate can continue. We in the Liberal Party have some things we consider to be important and want to say about the environment. We hope, whatever the outcome of the consideration of the points of order, it will not result in the motion being swept aside so that we have to go on to other business.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the Members. I do not think that was the intention of the Deputy Government House Leader when he made his proposal this morning. We will start the debate immediately with the Hon. Member for Saanich—Gulf Islands

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to be addressing the House today during Environment Week. It is a shame that there has been such a delay in the debate which has forced the school children, who were here to observe the beginning of it, to leave.

The Government has endorsed the recommendations of the Brundtland Commission. It has failed, however, to demonstrate a willingness to go beyond rhetoric and deliver the substantive changes necessary. Decisive political action is required now. The motion before the House is an humble attempt to begin that process.

Yesterday in the House the Prime Minister responded to a question from the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan about economic decisions and the environmental assessments connected to them. In June 1988 the Prime Minister said: "We have established mechanisms to ensure that economic decisions take environmental impact into account". He was asked whether the cuts to VIA Rail had been considered in this context. The Prime Minister was very concise. He answered: "No". The beginning of this motion addresses the requirement for environmental assessment. As I stand today in the House I want to tell Members opposite that they must make a fundamental change in their thinking about what is required, if we are to make the changes necessary and solve the real environmental problems in our country.

Another example of the kinds of contradiction that are myriad within government policy is the fact that the Government is still giving our tax money to the oil companies. For example, in Alberta there is $1 billion for the Hibernia oil field, $650 million for the OSLO tar sands plant, and $325 million for the Lloydminster heavy oil upgrader. This is in the context of being told over and over again that we must reduce our dependency on fossil fuels and that the effects of global warming are so extreme it puts all human life at risk.

In the same context we have cuts to conservation and alternative energy programs. Conservation and renewable energy funding has declined from $400 million per year between 1980 and 1984 to a paltry $49 million for 1989–1990. This is from the post budget departmental briefing estimates.

When we talk about environmental assessment, we also must consider the larger picture of over–all government policies: why the Government is giving money to one portion of the energy sector and taking it away from the kind of conservation and renewable energy sources so necessary to form real alternatives.

The information we have before us on the effects of global warming is most frightening. In the environment committee we heard reports from Jim McNeill, the former Executive Director of the Brundtland Commission. He talked movingly about the testimony of the President of the Maldives, an island nation, before the Brundtland Commission, that if global warming continues at the same rate, that country whose highest elevation is 1.5 metres above sea level—that is about five feet—will disappear beneath the waves in 40 to 60 years.

When we think in those terms and see that our Government is still using our tax dollars to fund fossil fuels, we wonder where the sense of it all is. Global warming will cause a phenomenon that we have not yet experienced, a phenomenon of environmental refugees on a scale unheard of to date. We are talking about multi–millions of people trying to get to higher levels because the oceans will make their homelands disappear.

At a time when we have the contradiction of the Government funding megaprojects, it is crucial for the House to understand that we want environmental assessments of a non-partisan nature but of a crucially political nature. As the Member opposite pointed out, this is the House of Commons. It is a political body. It does not necessarily have to be a partisan body on this issue. We must think in the long term and not the short term, not respond to government polls but respond to the very real and sincere concerns of not only Canadians but of citizens of the world.

We are concerned about the transition to a sustainable society, and the questions arising from that are undeniably large ones.

Fundamental changes are required in the way we weigh costs and benefits and make decisions. The federal Government must be prepared to demonstrate leadership in adopting these changes, not just in matters of national policy but its own day to day operation. In this spirit, this is why we want an environmental officer of the House.

Parliament Hill, as those of us who are new here perhaps see more clearly, is a city within a city. We have an opportunity to demonstrate to Canada and to the world that we are serious about this environmental concern by getting our own house in order and by recycling the paper used here. I come from the Province of British Columbia where we had over the centuries complete destruction of forests. It is not necessary if we recycle wisely.

Implementing the Brundtland report entails more than just mouthing the words of sustainable development and attaching environmentally friendly stickers to everything in sight.

The report envisaged a whole new approach to economic development. We could begin here on Parliament Hill in some of the things that we are doing. We do not just want to tinker at the edges. We must show that we are prepared to undertake fundamental change.

In environmental assessment, we are asking the federal Government to begin an immediate re-evaluation of all its policies and programs asking if each is environmentally sound.

That brings us to my area of interest, that is, international development. In the last Budget, it was clearly demonstrated by the Government that it did not understand the recommendations of the Brundtland Commission or its concern and observation that not only are we interconnected internationally but we are interlocked. We are interdependent. We in a developed country seem to think we are immune from the kind of damage that is occurring internationally in the Third World. The Government felt that immunity sufficient to be able to bring the budget cuts to foreign aid.

What that means is we may reduce our deficit. We are looking after ourselves, but we are exporting the environmental degradation to those countries that can least afford it, those people who are the most vulnerable.

It makes no sense if we place that on a large international scale. Many scientists and other esteemed people have told us that we are on this planet together; if we violate one part of it, all of it is violated. It is the budget proposals on foreign aid, reductions to foreign aid, that demonstrate that the Government has no understanding of that dynamic at all.

As to the concerns about waste products and use of toxic waste, we have a priority substances list under the Canadian Environmental Protection Act. There is a need to ensure, however, that time lines for elimination are set. There is a need for targets and timetables for reduction of chemicals in our environment. We must see sustainable development distinct from cleaning up the mess that we are already in. Some 10 per cent of world trade is now in chemicals. They move into the environment. Many work their way up through the food chain to plants, animals, and humans.

Much of our drinking water has been contaminated by toxic substances such as PCBs, dioxins, and furans.

The recent revelation of high PCB levels in the breast milk of Inuit women substantiates the need for national and global action, for zero discharge standards, to prevent pesticides and other potentially harmful chemicals from moving through the atmosphere to be deposited in areas far from their application, storage, or disposal.

With some 100,000 chemicals on the market and some 600,000 new chemicals coming on to the market per year, it is clear that workers and the public are best protected by prohibiting contact in as many locations as possible. It is also increasingly important that producers be required to determine a method of safe disposal of chemicals prior to marketing.

I am quoting from a report just released this week, Towards a Sustainable Future. I was fortunate to be one of five New Democrat Members on a task force that travelled across Canada. This is our offering to the House, Towards a Sustainable Future. I recommend it as reading for all Members of this House, because it is our sincere hope that they will educate themselves about the crucial issues confronting us. As legislators we talk a lot about sustainable development and concern for the environment, but in this place we have a responsibility to act and to legislate. It is not good enough to talk. People have a great deal of disrespect for politicians, and the reason is that they think we are all talk and no action. As the Member for Saanich—Gulf Islands I have no intention of falling into that category.

• (1150)

I want to talk about the concern for water resources, both the fresh water and ocean resources of our country. We have concerns about the dumping that is going on, and the "solution to pollution is dilution" type of thinking that we can no longer afford.

In my province where the pulp and paper industry is large pollution is rampant. We have legislation but no enforcement. We must have enforcement and the powers of our federal Government to come down on those polluters and say "no more" in the interests of Canadians.

We must establish a super fund for cleaning up our environment, in the same manner as the United States. We must come up with a funding mechanism to clean up toxic waste. The U.S. effort to clean up its own environment has been to the detriment of our environment. Recent figures confirm that more that 170,000 tonnes per year of toxic and hazardous waste are presently entering Canada from the United States. Its solution is to export pollution. That is not acceptable. We have a responsibility to clean up our own house, but the United States also has a responsibility to look after its.

We must have a national recycling program. We must have taxes on polluting products, on excess packaging, and on packaging that is not recyclable. We have to make it economically unviable to degrade our environment. There are many things that we have to do.

An Environment Canada report recently leaked to Greenpeace indicates that pulp and paper mills are responsible for at least 50 per cent of all water pollution in Canada. That is staggering when one considers the bottom line that those companies use as their determining factor in action. Those people are polluting our environment in order that they can profit from it. Once again, we should be making sure that it is not economically viable to degrade our environment. We should also be giving economic incentives for clean activities.

Finally, I want to talk about oil tanker traffic on the West Coast. As one of the Members representing Vancouver Island, I was intimately connected with the oil spill that occurred off our coast in January. That has brought about many cries for a full public inquiry, not only from Members in the House but from many citizens with high profiles. I know that the Minister of the Environment has met with many of those people. In committee he assured me that there would be a public inquiry. I want to make it clear that what we are asking for, and what they are asking for, is a full public inquiry under the Inquiries Act in order that people can be subpoenaed and we can hear the full story on what happened in that oil spill. We can also look into the exploration of oil in order that we can be more informed about our ocean.

Recently I heard that there has been a fifteenfold increase in barge and crude oil exports out of the Port of Vancouver. As the Member for Saanich—Gulf Islands, as the name implies, the Gulf Islands are in my riding and this is of deep personal concern. Those ships and barges go right by the beautiful Gulf Islands on their way down to Cherry Point, Washington where the oil refinery is. With a fifteenfold increase over five years we certainly have to think of the time bomb ticking and how long we have before the beaches of my riding are befouled by oil. That is why it is crucial that a full public inquiry under the Inquiries Act be implemented. We have to answer those questions about long-term planning to prevent the befoulment of beaches of the Pacific Rim National Park.

This motion is put forth as an humble attempt to address the sustainable development agenda of the House. The clock is ticking and we are running out of time. There is an urgency, and the public is aware of the urgency. I think the public is way ahead of us in its thinking. Politicians who do not listen to the public are not politicians for very long. We must address this issue. We have to be courageous with the type of decisions that we have to make. We have to put aside partisan interests and stop trying to make political points on one another. We have to change. We as human beings do not like to change. It is a scary thing to change, but it is necessary, or we are all doomed. On that light note I will bring my remarks to a conclusion.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On questions or comments, the Hon. Member for Dauphin—Swan River.

Mr. White: I listened with interest to the comments of the Hon. Member for Saanich—Gulf Islands. I would like to make a brief comment and also ask a question.

I am fortunate to come from an area in rural Manitoba where we have clean air and clean water. The people I represent have come to realize, as have all Canadians, that the number one issue that we are facing as Canadians and as residents of the planet earth is the protection and preservation of our environment. I believe that it will be the number one issue in the future, starting now, as a matter of fact.

The Hon. Member talked about going beyond rhetoric and the fact that politicians cannot only talk about environmental concerns, that there has to be action. I have to take the Hon. Member to task on that comment, because there has been talk from this Government and also action. There was a federal environmental assessment and review process on the Sea Island fuel barge facility where it was concluded by the panel that the Minister of Transport unconditionally rejected the proposal submitted by the North Fraser Harbour Commission. That is an example of where the federal Government has taken action.

Up until the spring of 1988 Manitoba had an NDP Government. We had a perfect example with the NDP Government in Manitoba of all talk and no action. A group of environmental organizations did an assessment, province by province, of all the provincial Governments in late 1987 or early 1988. The New Democratic Government in Manitoba ranked dead last. That is a perfect example of a Government that was all talk and no action. I have a question I would like to ask. I do not think that there is any Member in this House that would disagree with the fact that we have to develop alternate sources of energy.

• (1200)

The Hon. Member mentioned in her remarks that there is a contradiction in spending the money that is being spent on the fossil fuel megaprojects. I would like to ask the Member what we as a nation would do if we did not invest in the megaprojects and there was a time gap between a future serious fuel shortage and the development of a viable alternate source of energy? What would we as Canadians do if we were faced with a time gap if we quit investing in the fossil fuel megaprojects?

Ms. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, I welcome the question and applaud the Member in a spirit of non-partisanship for any action that the Government takes on reducing the damage to our environment. I welcome the example that he has given to this House.

Addressing his question about the time lag, I realize that we have to wean ourselves away from fossil fuels. We cannot do it overnight. The examples I have of program cuts illustrate that at the time we are giving money to subsidize those megaprojects, there have been cuts to the programs such as Canada Oil Substitution Program, that went in 1986, the Canadian Home Insulation Program, that went in 1986, the Canadian Energy Audit Program, that went in 1986, the Atlantic Energy Conservation Investment Program, that went in 1986, the Solar Energy Demonstration Program, that was gone in 1989, the Remote Community Demonstration Program, that went in 1989, the Forest Industry Renewable Energy Program, that was gone in 1989, Industrial Conversion Assistance Program, that went in 1987.

So my answer is that we have to change our thinking. I realize that a weaning away process is necessary but we also have to start funding other types of program so that real alternatives are viable.

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to indicate to the House my pleasure in having an opportunity to address this very important issue. I would like to thank the Hon. Member for the motion she has presented today and for the spirit in which it is presented.

I would also like to state to Members of the House that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) regrets that he cannot be present at this time, but will be returning shortly to the House from Montreal. As Members may know, the Minister is in Montreal this morning announcing details, in co-operation with the Province of Quebec, of the implementation of the St. Lawrence Action Plan. I think all of us who are aware of the deterioration which has taken place in the quality of the St. Lawrence will welcome this initiative on behalf of the federal and Quebec governments.

As Members of this House also know, this Government and this Minister have given a very strong commitment both in our actions and in the Throne Speech, to the environment in general and in particular in the Throne Speech, to the need to introduce legislation in the House for the environmental assessment of its activities. I can assure the Members of the House that officials at this very moment are preparing the necessary documentation for the introduction of that legislation to the House.

I think that at the outset of a debate of this importance, it is necessary to establish some sort of groundwork or framework in which to judge what is being done, what has been done in the past and what is needed for the future. It is important to the Members of this House and for the public to have a clear awareness of the way in which Government goes about the process of assessment of environmental effects of its activities.

There has been a process of environmental assessment in place since 1974. That initial process, started by the Liberal Government of that day, contained a rather loosely worded cabinet directive which placed a great deal of faith in government's voluntary willingness to do the right thing by the environment. The process at that time did not have a great deal of public credibility. There was not very much progress until the present Speaker of this House, at a time when he had other responsibilities during the Government of 1979-1980, initiated what proved to be time-consuming and complex policy development work including very extensive consultations needed to produce credible legislation in this most important area.

This legislation is absolutely fundamental to having environmentally effective Government decision-making. I believe that this Government and all Members of this House would accept the fact that it is exceedingly important that what be done be done properly and effectively. Many of the principles in the existing process are valid if conscientiously applied. Since returning to office in 1984, this Government has over the past five years paid particular attention to ways of improving the process with respect to day to day practice in advancing towards the stage where we are now, the preparation of environmental assessment legislation.

I would like to explain to the House some of the more important aspects of the way in which environmental assessments are done as of now and some of the principles we would propose to incorporate into the new law as soon as it is available.

The Canadian federal approach is based on a judgment that is shared by most of the industrialized world and I believe to a significant degree by the developing world. That judgment is that environmental impact assessment is an essential element in the applying of economic development initiatives. Such assessments will help avoid potentially serious environmental and related social problems which could greatly reduce the value of apparent economic progress. Good environmental assessments result in good development and makes good economic sense.

The federal environmental assessment and review process, which we know as EARP is an administrative process set out by Order in Council applicable to proposed federal Government initiatives or private sector undertakings for which the federal Government has some decision-making responsibility. Their process is a self-assessment procedure in that the government agency with the main decision-making responsibility in each instance undertakes the preliminary screening and, if needed, the more detailed initial assessment of the proposed activity. However, where in the opinion of that agency there is likely to be significant environmental effects, the project must be referred to the Ministry of the Environment for public review by an independent panel appointed by that Minister.

The Federal Environment Assessment Review Office, known as FEARO, is a small agency which reports directly to the Environment Minister, organizes a review, provides logistic support and often provides a panel chairman. Historically, I would note in passing that only a small percentage of the projects undergoing initial assessment have proved to have sufficiently severe environmental effects that they have required the public review of which I am referring.

Upon the completion of this review the panel provides a report to the Minister of the Environment and to the initiating Minister, the Minister responsible for the agency proposing to undertake or authorize a project. This report which is a public report, contains the recommendations of the panel. While these recommendations are not binding, the initiating Minister is expected to outline publicly his or her response to that report. Certainly those recommendations are of monumental significance.

In early 1984 the Federal Environmental Assessment Review Office completed its own review, initiated, as I referred to earlier by the present Speaker in another capacity, of the operation of EARP and made recommendations for improvements to the then Environment Minister.

These recommendations were incorporated in the present guidelines as of June 21, 1984. These guidelines and the Act under which they are operating, the Government Organization Act of 1979, give the Minister of the Environment the responsibility to initiate, recommend and undertake programs of the Government of Canada that are designed:

> To ensure that new federal projects, programs and activities are assessed early in the planning process for potential adverse effects of the quality of the natural environment, and that a further review of those projects is carried out of those projects, programs and activities that are found to have probable significant adverse effects, and the results thereof taken into account.

Earlier this year, the Federal Court when rendering a decision on the Rafferty-Alameda project in Saskatchewan determined that the guidelines to which I have now referred are in fact the binding regulation. The main thrust of these guidelines is to require government Departments to conduct their screening and initial assessment activity in a systematic, open and documentable fashion. Detailed instructions to assist Departments in how to do this are provided. The hallmarks are brevity, simplicity, and openness.

It was recognized from the outset that the concerns and responsibilities of the provinces must be taken into account in the operation of the Environmental Assessment Review Panel. Consequently, in regard to any public review, FEARO is required, where needed, to negotiate co-operative federal-provincial or territorial arrangements. Co-operative reviews between jurisdictions are intended to avoid duplication, to reduce costs and to expedite the decision-making process. Most of the public reviews conducted by the Environmental Assessment Review Panels have involved varying degrees of federal-provincial co-operation, ranging from co-chairmanship in some cases, to a case where jointly appointed single chairmen through the appointment of a provincial member to a federal panel. Because of the importance of federal-provincial co-operation in this area, and the realization that such co-operation must continue to exist, it is important to look at a number of examples as to how the process has worked to date.

Several of the reviews are being conducted by panels jointly appointed by federal and provincial Governments and are operating under the terms of reference negotiated between them. Because the reports are purely advisory, they tend to develop without regard to jurisdictional divisions, thus providing a holistic view of the social and environmental impact of a given project.

In fact, some joint environmental reviews, such as West Coast offshore drilling, have been undertaken on proposals where a jurisdictional dispute was still occurring. But that assessment has taken place without prejudice to the final result of that dispute.

The degree of federal or provincial participation in each case has generally reflected the extent to which the major decisions are being made by one or the other government. For example, a panel set up to assess the expansion of the Vancouver airport, which was clearly a federal responsibility but with some impact on provincial responsibilities, is federally chaired and supported but has amongst its members a provincial nominee. At the other end of the spectrum are the panels which assess the Arctic pilot project's southern terminals in Quebec and Nova Scotia. These are provincially chaired and supported but contain federal nominees.

The nuclear generating project in New Brunswick was planned by a joint federal-provincial Crown corporation to be operated by the New Brunswick Power Commission, a provincial utility. Substantial federal financial credits from the federal Government were needed for the project to proceed. Thus, both Governments had major responsibility and it was decided that a fully joint assessment would be most appropriate. In Nova Scotia, the Venture offshore gas development project was conducted in a similar manner.

In 1983 a federal Government-B.C. memorandum of agreement called for a joint federal-provincial review of environmental and related social and economic effects of a renewed program of petroleum exploration off B.C's northern coast. The review was held without prejudice to the ultimate ownership of the resource and managed within the joint framework of the Provincial Environmental Management Act and the federal Management Act and the federal EARP.

In view of the evolving situation in Canada's North, it seems very logical that territorial Governments must be a part of this process in the future. By the same token, the importance of land claims agreements are resulting in larger roles for native communities in managing environmental assessment procedures. EARP's flexibility must be sufficient to accommodate both of these developments.

It is appropriate to note that the guidelines often required federal government agencies to take into account environmental impacts external to Canada. I believe the Hon. Member referred to that.

This is the basic outline of the environmental assessment process as it now exists and how it works in co-operation with the provinces.

Not surprisingly, environmental assessments, whether they be federally, provincially or jointly managed, have over the years given rise to concerns about costs, uncertainty as to data and research requirements, potential regulatory duplication and delays.

Costs affecting the economics of a proposed activity are of concern to all developers. It follows that every effort must be made by administrators to ensure that information requirements and other obligations imposed upon proponents are reasonable and restricted to those necessary for the conduct of a responsible and adequate review.

Obviously the collection and the analysis of environmental and related social data and, in the case of formal public reviews, the appointment of a panel and the conduct of hearings carry a cost in both time and money. Such costs must, however, be weighed against the very considerable costs that can be incurred if mitigating measures involving significant redesign have to be introduced after the construction of the project is under way or even completed because of the emergence of an unanticipated environmental damage and a weak or strong public opposition.

Underlying such more obvious costs are the costs in lost opportunities, slowed natural productivity, reduction in environmental sustainability, and even health risks that can result from insensitively designed projects. As a general comment on the costs of environmental assessment, it should be noted that these costs historically average only 0.5 per cent of the capital cost of the project.

It should also be stressed that one of the objectives of the EARP is to facilitate and place in a constructive context public input to government decision-making.

The concerns of society at large must be taken into account when dealing with possible changes in the natural environment. Resource managers, whether they be private or public, are expected to be responsible stewards. People affected by a proposed activity have a right to be heard and in a setting in which they can have a reasonable expectation that there views will be seriously considered. Experience has shown that information derived from such local knowledge is exceedingly valuable in deciding on project design, timing and management. This process, if done correctly, can be considered to be an important and legitimate part of the cost of the entire project and will ultimately contribute to a far better project.

Experience has shown all of us that the technical quality of planning and design has often been enhanced by the demands of a public review, sometimes even to the point that such reviews may well prove cost effective for industry in the longer term, quite apart from their environmental benefits. Moreover, when the results of work under the EARP have been incorporated into project planning and design, proponents have realized that they can proceed with greater confidence about the long-term acceptability of what is proposed. This is reassuring to them, to government and certainly to society in general.

It is our experience that industry is supportive of environmental assessment activities as long as the information demands are reasonable, duplication is avoided and a clear, timely decision results.

There exists a similar potential for duplication between the EARP and formal regulatory processes within the federal structure.

A notable example is the National Energy Board which, under its enabling legislation, is assigned regulatory powers which include the licensing of the export of oil, gas and electricity, the issuance of certificates of public convenience and necessity for interprovincial and international pipelines and international power lines, and the setting of just and reasonable tolls for pipelines under federal jurisdiction.

Under the board review procedures there is a standing requirement for environmental impact assessment of projects needing board approval. If a given project has also been subject to public review under the EARP, criticism can arise over apparent duplication.

The EARP is most effective when it is used as a planning tool rather than as a regulatory device. Used as a planning tool, it should be brought into play at the earliest possible opportunity to assist in identifying potential environmental problems and to help design solutions for them. Such an approach encourages better project design and allows for the required regulatory activity to occur without duplication but with the benefit of substantive early environmental planning.

Obviously, early application of the EARP, including public reviews as needed, is also the answer to concerns over delays whether or not a formal regulatory process is involved.

It is our experience that well-managed environmental assessment can reduce delays in securing project approvals. Not only can it reduce public conflict about a given project, but early environmental assessments, particularly those involving public reviews, can also cause early project planning to be carried out at an impressive level of detail and quality. This in turn often means that projects are better thought out resulting in fewer and shorter delays during construction and fewer cost overruns. Good environmental assessment is good planning, which is good business.

In closing, I wish to reinforce the importance of legislating this process to ensure that this and future governments are required to assess the environmental effects of our actions. The Canadian public must be assured that potential environmental problems will be caught before they can become significant public problems.

Environmental considerations must be at the heart of our decision-making.

• (1220)

There is a new ethic evolving in Canada which is making environmental considerations a determinant of economic change, rather than the historical pattern, of the economy being a determinant of environmental change. We are all well aware, too much aware in fact, Mr. Speaker, of the problems that result when the latter strategy is in place.

I suggest in closing that what is even more important, however, is to ensure that when the guidelines are brought into legislation, as they will be hopefully in the very near future, that the process is done properly, that the guidelines are properly, adequately structured into law. It is more important that the process be done correctly, than it be done hastily. This issue is too important for mistakes to be made.

We understand that the task before us, the task to which the motion in part refers, is exceedingly important and we give it a very high priority, and agree in principle with the motion that is being presented and debated today.

The Government will be unable to support the motion because of at least in part the inappropriate deadlines which it imposes.

Again, in closing, the task is an important one. I believe there are no partisan differences in the House on that. The need, however, is to ensure that it is done correctly.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, given the serious environmental impact on the potential for a Government decision to close down passenger service for VIA Rail, I wonder if the Member could tell us whether there will be an ERP panel invoked to examine that particular Government decision, and if not, why not?

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, as all Members know, this issue was addressed in the House at least in part yesterday during Question Period. I dare say it will probably come before us again. It may well be that speakers later in the day will want to address the point which the Hon. Member has made.

I think it is exceedingly important that one of the things which the new legislation does is spell out far more clearly than the guidelines have done to date exactly what will be the federal Government's responsibility, bearing in mind that there are many provincial responsibilities. It is important to spell out very clearly what the ERP requirements are going to be. One of the things which troubles me, and undoubtedly troubles the Hon. Member, is that the present guidelines are not explicit enough in indicating when the process occurs. What is very clear is that if there is to be involved new expenditures of money, as is the case with some of the projects in the West, or federal lands being involved as Justice Cullen ruled in his decision with respect to Rafferty–Alameda, then the ERP process clearly applies.

Whether it would apply in this instance at this point in time, I am not able to say. I would suggest that in looking at a VIA Rail proposal, we have to bear in mind not just VIA and where it fits into our preferences for transportation within the country, but we would have to bear in mind the entire transportation needs of the country, to what degree VIA has moved people, the percentage of transportation which occurs on its system, and what part it then plays in the whole transportation mode of people within the country. Certainly how we move is obviously environmentally significant.

The Hon. Member might even suggest that perhaps governments in the past should have considered the environmental impact assessments before TransCanada highways were constructed from one side of Canada to the other. This is not something which in any way would be unique to the consideration of train travel.

I would think that if we are going to use the ERP process to look at transportation, we would have to do so within the entire context of transportation practices. In doing that, we would then have to consider to what degree and what percentage of transportation in Canada is provided by VIA, and bear that in mind in our evaluation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops on a question or comment.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have first of all a comment. It sounds like a lot of gobbledegook to me. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Clark), with all due respect, has spent 20 minutes explaining how the Government plans to take all of these initiatives to ensure that proper environmental assessments are made whenever the federal Government takes a major initiative. Here is a major initiative, the curtailing of passenger rail service, and yet there has been no appropriate environmental initiative taken. I think that we are hearing a lot of rhetoric.

My question to the Parliamentary Secretary is as follows, Mr. Speaker. In the newspapers this morning we read that the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) is saying that it is absolutely essential for the Government to look at policies to reduce reliance on fossil fuels which produce carbon dioxide and accelerates the global warming crisis cited by most scientists.

We also read that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Epp) is saying that the Government has to subsidize fossil fuel megaprojects in the future. There seems to be some inconsistency with one Minister saying that we have got to enhance and encourage the megaprojects of fossil fuel development, and the Minister of Environment saying that we must reduce them. That is my first question.

My second question is, does the Parliamentary Secretary support the Minister of Environment who also is reported in the press this morning as saying that the federal Government believes that there should be no logging activity at all in the disputed Carmanah forest. Does he also stand by the Minister in his decision not to support any logging in this pristine valley whatsoever?

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, while I have not had an opportunity to read the news reports in question, or to verify their accuracy, I can say as Parliamentary Secretary that if this country is to continue to make use of fossil fuels in any kind of intensified manner, we will have to be well aware of the cost and be prepared to pay that cost. All activity will not cease, whether with respect to providing fuel or providing transportation systems across the country.

What we need, and what I think the concept of sustainable development refers to, is a realization first of all of the cost of that development, and then a willingness to have that developed in such a way that it is consistent with our environmental needs. It may be, for example, that we continue to make use of fossil fuels and maybe even increase the use of fossil fuels. We will have to be prepared to pay the additional cost, whether it is in the form of scrubbers or whatever else it might be.

With respect to the Carmanah forest, which was discussed in committee at least on one other occasion, the federal Government has made it very clear in correspondence with the Minister in the Province of British Columbia that we are anxious to be a part of the process. We offered the federal Government's technical advice to the provincial Minister. The Minister, I think responded in a letter just some few days ago accepting that advice. What the Minister was saying in committee was that certainly with respect to the identified area of the Sitka spruce that there absolutely was a need to preserve it. If we look at the correspondence, what is not clear in what has been said is the extent of the area to be preserved.

I do not think that any individual as such has spelled that out as yet.

Mr. Waddell: I just have a comment and a question. First, I find this incredible concerning VIA Rail, because if the Federal Court can apply the ERP guidelines as law to the Rafferty-Alameda project, as the Parliamentary Secretary mentioned it did, why cannot the Government, which purports to be environmentally conscious, apply the law and the guidelines to a megaproject or a mega change like VIA Rail?

If VIA Rail is wiped out, we will have more cars, and we have the whole problem of fossil fuels. We are in a new era. We have to understand that we are in a new environmental era. We have to put our minds into that. That is why the Government should be responding positively to the suggestion of doing an environmental assessment on the changes in VIA.

Perhaps we could have done it with the highways years ago, as the Member mentioned. We might have had a different way of getting around the country, more environmentally conscious and better. My question is is on a different matter.

• (1230)

The motion today is not that difficult. The Hon. Member who proposes it has said that it is non-partisan. We are asking that we put our own house in order as she said, that is, the House of Commons and Parliament Hill.

Why can the Government not accept the fact that it is not a non-confidence motion? If it does not like parts of it, then why not amend it? Members opposite can get along with the Hon. Member for Kamloops. He could accept some amendments, if they are good ones, as can the Hon. Member who presented the motion.

The Hon. Member from Saanich—Gulf Islands said that there had been a lot of talk but very little action. If the Government votes against this very mild, non-partisan resolution to put our own house in order, then surely the Government is being hypocritical about it being pro-environment.

I ask the Parliament Secretary this question: How about proposing some amendments or some changes to the motion so that we can send a message to the Canadian public that at least on Parliament Hill we will begin by putting our own house in order and then later put the country in order?

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, with reference to the first part of the Hon. Member's remarks concerning VIA Rail and automobiles, I do not think there is anyone in the House who would pretend for a moment that, irrespective of the type of train system we might have in the country and its acceptability by the public, there will continue to be a massive amount of automobile travel throughout all of Canada. In all likelihood, again regardless of the quality of service and the extent to which it is used, that automobile travel will grow as the public grows. I suggest to the Hon. Member that if indeed that is of primary concern, he should be on his feet applauding the Government for its decision, for example, to abolish the use of leaded gasoline by 1990. As he knows, we moved that date forward.

Mr. Waddell: I suggested that in 1981.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Let us address each part of the problem in turn.

With respect to the motion before us, the Government has indicated that we are supportive of the motion in principle. As I have already indicated, we understand the need to address many of the concerns raised by the motion. We are indicating that that legislation will be introduced.

The Hon. Member's House Leader referred to the number of minutes in which I talked of the nature of the legislation and the principles on which it will be founded. I suggest that those principles are exceedingly important since the legislation, if it is going to do the job we require, must be adequately designed. I suggest to the Hon. Member that the guidelines which are now there, guidelines which were drafted in an earlier era, were not well designed. In fact, their lack of clarity has contributed to some of the confusion which now exists.

What is not crystal clear—otherwise we would not have had the court case which we had—is the exact circumstances on which EARP is applied. That is an evolving situation. By the time legislation comes before the House, hopefully early when we return in September, the Hon. Member will find that the areas needing to be well defined will in fact be well defined.

I suggest that the principles involved in this motion are important rather than the timetables which it incorporates. If we are concerned about the environment, we must work together in a co-operative manner to ensure not that the legislation be introduced to the House within five days, or whatever the case may be when we return in the fall, but that we work together to ensure that the legislation, when it is introduced in the House, does what we all wish it to do.

If that same type of co-operation had been sought and secured when the guidelines which are now operative were introduced in 1984, we might not have the same confusion that has been in place since that point in time.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to congratulate my colleague, the Hon. Member for Saanich—Gulf Islands (Ms. Hunter), because I think it does deal with a number of the issues. It is particularly timely in that its introduction is during National Environment Week.

The issues that have been put forward today by way of resolution obviously involve a response specifically by the House of Commons since it deals with an environmental officer of the House. However, it also deals with the question of environmental assessment and setting for the Government a timetable in relation to the quality of our waters, whether they be sea waters or fresh waters, and also the specific issue of the disposal of toxic waste. Those are certainly critical issues.

I am somewhat encouraged to hear the response of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Clark) in relation to the interdependence of transportation systems across the country and specifically as they relate to VIA. I asked the specific question about VIA because you will recall, Mr. Speaker, that when the new Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) took the job back in late January, he was heralded with much fanfare as the Minister who was going to put the e for environment into every aspect of the Government's daily operations and every aspect of national policy. He announced that there would be a radical change in government decision making, giving him a virtual veto with respect to all federal projects that put economic or political advantage ahead of the environment.

In assessing the effectiveness of the Minister who has been in his current position for five months now—allegedly, he has been given the mandate by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) as the key spokesperson in the area of the environment—we must examine not only whether his veto power applies to federal government projects but also to the issue of sustainable development. I hesitate to use the term "sustainable development" since I think that, with all due deference to the work which has been done by the Brundtland Commission, the people of Canada want environmental action. Sometimes they do not even understand the implications of so-called sustainable development.

In that regard we have to examine the Government's and the Minister's input into every decision made across all Departments. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard) this week stated that if a recommendation emanates from VIA Rail he is prepared to kill passenger service across Canada. That statement by a Minister of the Government indicates just how far from achieving his objective of veto is in fact the Minister of the Environment.

As the Minister himself has pointed out, we are the most wasteful country in the world from the perspective of energy. We waste more energy on a per capita basis than any other country in the world. Our size and our climate, of course, has some bearing on that particular waste, but it also relates to the fact that we have been seen to be a land of abundant and plentiful energy. We have not developed the systems which encourage not only security of supply, as the Minister of Energy is wont to speak about often, but also conservation.

In that regard one has only to travel to Europe where the elements of conservation have been practised for years, elements which have escaped Canadians for the most part probably not only this decade but since the work of the Brundtland Commission. If one goes to a grocery store on a daily basis, one sees plastic garbage bags by the thousands being given out to individual consumers. We do not recycle our plastic bags. We see people in Europe for the most part doing their shopping while carrying a permanent shopping bag which they are willing to take with them from day to day. That is why when Canadians think about the issue of the environment and when we in the House think about the issue, we think globally and act locally. When we act locally let us put it into the context of the House of Commons.

This wad of paper in my hands now, most of which is printed only on one side, is a collection of what has come across my desk in the last week. It does not include what I have thrown out, what my staff has disposed of, and what was not relevant to make it into the files. This relates only to my file in relation to the environment. In so far as the House of Commons is concerned, we certainly have much work to do in that area. I think the notion of having an environmental officer is indeed a very sound one.

• (1240)

Do Members of the House of Commons know, for example, that we force our employees in the House of Commons, in many instances, to work in unsafe conditions? Under any other circumstances those conditions would be subject to a complaint under the Canada Labour Code. Have you, Mr. Speaker, ever visited the refinishing area of the House of Commons where our employees are forced to work in poorly ventilated areas with toxic chemicals that would, under any other circumstance, be banned because the circumstances for work are unsafe? Yet we as the House of Commons, because we are the House of Commons, are not subject even to some of the minimal requirements that currently apply under the Canada Labour Code. We exempt ourselves. We set up special rules for smoking on that particular basis. Unlike other workers under federal jurisdiction, the House of Commons, for the most part, is exempt from health and safety laws. That is because the current Government has not yet moved to invoke sections of the legislation passed in the last Parliament which gave basic, minimal safety and health laws to the workers on Parliament Hill. Yes, we have much work to do in that area.

[Translation]

However, Mr. Speaker, since it has now been five months since the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) was appointed, I think it is high time to take a look at what he has been doing in his Department. Canadians are being asked to think globally about the environment and to act locally. I suggest we analyse the action taken by the Minister of the Environment who said when he was appointed in January that he would radically change the Government's approach to decisions affecting the environment.

But why just this Minister? In the same vein, Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with several issues, and first of all with the decision announced by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard), the other Bouchard, on the changes at VIA Rail.

The Minister of Transport even said this week that he was prepared to kill VIA Rail passenger services. In the Environment Committee this week, we asked whether the other Bouchard, since we have "mini-bouche" and "maxi-bouche", whether the other Bouchard had been consulted as he implied he would be, when he was appointed.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Solicitor General of Canada and Minister of State (Agriculture) (Mr. Blais), on a point of order.

Mr. Blais: I have been listening to her comments since the beginning of her speach. She may have taken advantage of the fact that certain Members weren't paying attention, but I believe that we are obliged to use a person's full name. We have certain rules here in Parliament. I don't think we should insult people, using nicknames that are entirely uncalled for. If the Hon. Member has a point to make, she can do so without stooping—without trying to make a play on words, as she usually does, especially since she is the first to rise in the House to criticize every comma and semi-colon and to raise questions of privilege for no reason at all. I believe that in a case like this, the rules of this House should be strictly observed, Mr. Speaker.

I would advise the Hon. Member to be careful and perhaps to withdraw certain terms that are almost rude.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) knows the Standing Orders, and I am sure that she will do her best to abide by them.

Ms. Copps: Oh, absolutely, Mr. Speaker. I didn't think "bouche" was rude.

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): It's the way you said it!

Ms. Copps: Excuse me, Mr. Speaker, I seem to have touched a sore nerve in the Conservative Party. However, I will continue my analysis of the situation at VIA Rail. In fact, I can understand why the Tories are upset when we talk about VIA Rail, because we all know that the decision to close down VIA Rail's passenger service will affect every part of the province of Québec and communities across Canada, including my own city, Hamilton. When I asked specifically, and we did not get a good answer, Mr. Bouchard, the other Bouchard, the Minister of the Environment, said—

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, as I said before, I think there is a proper way to refer to Ministers and Members in this House. The Hon. Member was worned once before!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to refer to ministers by their title.

Ms. Copps: I was talking about the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Lucien Bouchard). When he was appointed, he announced that he would have a veto right on any federal decision respecting the environment. Well, a decison has been made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Benoît Bouchard). When we asked in the Environment Committee whether he had been consulted, because as you well know, Mr. Speaker, as far as transportation is concerned, if we want to become a conserving society, not conservative but conserving, as far as transportation and our ecology is concerned, I think we must have a transportation policy that encourages Canadians to travel by train and to use public transit. Whether we are using VIA Rail or other transport modes, I think that conserving the environment should be one of our main objectives in drafting an environmental policy for the twenty-first century.

Mr. Boudria: Absolutely!

Ms. Copps: Even today, the Government doesn't realize. . . If we look at the situation at the airport in Toronto, there are a lot of Torontonians who are now starting to take the train, since 1988-89, because of the fact that air traffic is so congested. They are now starting to use other forms of public transportation which are far more efficient in the environmental sense. And now the Government decides to close down VIA Rail, without any consultation with the Minister of the Environment! So, as far as VIA Rail is concerned, I will have to give the Minister of the Environment an F on his report card for the last five months, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Boudria F minus.

Ms. Copps: An F, because he was never consulted on a matter that should be a priority issue as far as the environment is concerned.

Second, Mr. Speaker, there is the Rafferty-Alameda Project, and I know that the Minister's parliamentary secretary made a reference to the court's decision. Well, Mr. Speaker, thank God for this decision by the court which acknowledges the fact that, as far as the Rafferty-Alameda Project is concerned, there had not been adequate federal assessments as required under the Canadian Environmental Protection Act passed in 1987. But Mr. Speaker, do we, as parliamentarians, have to go to court all the time before we get a decision that will protect our environment? On the Rafferty-Alameda case, I will have to give our Minister an E, not an F.

Mr. Boudria: E minus.

Ms. Copps: I give him an E and I shall tell you why. He gets an E because he failed by not deciding himself to have a federal assessment done as it should have been according to the regulations of his own law. But at least we must admit that, following the good decision rendered by Judge Cullen, which unfortunately was criticized by some Conservative Members who claim that it was made by a Liberal judge, the federal Minister of the Environment at least had the good sense not to appeal, whereas the Government of Saskatchewan is appealing to overturn this good decision made by Judge Cullen. At this time, I must give the federal Environment Minister an E.

Mr. Boudria: You are too generous.

Ms. Copps: Now, this week, we see that the federal study on the Rafferty–Alameda project that was just released clearly shows that the studies that should have been done before beginning the project were not done and I ask the Minister whether he wants to improve his mark on his report card a little. I think it would be in the Minister's interest this week not to wait for the final exams but to realize that there must be a complete review of the Rafferty–Alameda issue, because it is quite obvious, with the results of the assessments this week, that the appropriate studies were not done.

• (1250)

Now the third project, Mr. Speaker, under consideration at the Environment Department is James Bay. Mr. Speaker, on that subject, I know that the Minister is in Québec City today, announcing that he was doing some things about the St. Lawrence River, which is well and good, coming after the recommendations made by our leader (Mr. Turner) during the last election campaign, and I am glad that he is continuing with them. But on the James Bay project, the Environment Minister must get an F minus.

Mr. Boudria: F minus!

Ms. Copps: F minus, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Boudria: That is all he deserves!

Mrs. Copps: Because the Cree Indians who appeared before the Environment Committee last week told us in heartrending terms that they can no longer eat the fish they catch because it is full of mercury. They ask the government of Canada, if not to withdraw from Phase II of the James Bay project, at least to order an independent study of the results of Phase I.

Do you know, Mr. Speaker, what was the response given by the Minister of the Environment? He said that federal studies would only duplicate Hydro–Québec's. But to ask Hydro–Québec to study the environmental effects of Phase I is like asking the fox to survey the chicken coop. Therefore, all we are asking, and I think it is quite normal since the Minister claims that he has a right of veto on all national projects, is for the Government to carry out a study to determine if, following Phase I of the James Bay project, certain environmental compensations were given to the native people who, after all, were living in the James Bay region long before so–called civilized Europeans came to Canada.

Consequently, on James Bay, I must give him an F minus.

Mr. Boudria: That is all he deserves.

Mrs. Copps: Concerning toxic wastes, which are also mentioned in our motion, I am absolutely astonished at the Government's record. During question period some two or three weeks ago, the Minister said, concerning the importation of fuel laden with BCP's, that he was going to do his best, that he was going to put a stop to it. He even closed three quarters of all border crossings where gasoline was coming into Canada from the United States. He appears to have acted rapidly in response to newspaper articles describing an intolerable situation for all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, if we examine closely the toxic waste issue, we must recognize that Canada has become a dumping ground for American toxic waste such as PCBs as well as dry waste. For example, we know that in the Eastern Townships we see refrigerators full of CFCs, which are imported from the United States and end up in public dumps everywhere releasing CFCs into our atmosphere. It is all very well to say that he is doing his best but, Mr. Speaker, to have a real toxic waste policy, we must know where that toxic waste comes from, whether it is legal or illegal, and to define criminal offences so that companies and individuals producing toxic waste must take responsibility for their own actions.

[English]

For us to clean up our own mess we have to adopt a basic principle, which to date has been ignored by this Government, that as Canadians and members of the human race we have to be prepared to deal with our own waste.

In this particular case, we are making a megabusiness out of the importation of waste from the United States. Americans love to get rid of their waste because as soon as it leaves the American border, they no longer are legally responsible for it. There is a built-in incentive for Americans to send toxic wastes to Canada.

We are importing toxic waste. Last year, we brought in 140,000 metric tons of hazardous waste legally into this country from the United States. Who knows what came in on an illegal basis? That particular incentive has got to be cut off at the pass. This why I am shocked, disappointed, disturbed, and completely dumbfounded at the fact that the Minister of the Environment is not encouraging Congress to pass the Hazardous Exports Control Act which was moved last week by Mr. Synar, the Congressional Democrat from Oklahoma.

That particular initiative should have some modification, but it would go a long way in closing our border to the export from the United States of hazardous waste that will end up being dumped illegally. That initiative is being not only disregarded but deliberately thwarted by the Minister of the Environment in the Government. For that, he receives an f minus.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, with regard to the Montreal Protocol, the Minister said in February that he was quite willing to get to work on regulations. Last week he told us that he cannot proceed with regulations because the law is poorly written. But what did they do between February and June? The Minister must assume that responsibility.

[English]

I think he better get back to the drawing board because so far his report card has been a disaster in the first five months. During National Environment Week, I think we should make sure that the Minister of the Environment realizes that he is going to be held accountable for his Government and its deplorable environmental record.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, Congressman Synar's Bill which has been introduced in Congress would provide for inspection of Canadian dump sites by American officials. It would also provide for the application of American standards to Canadian dump sites.

Does the Hon. Member and the Party which she represents favour that extraterritorial equality aspect of that Bill?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, it is interesting the Government should now claim that it does not want extraterritorial sovereignty in terms of U.S. moves in this area. When the Free Trade Agreement was being negotiated, the federal Conservatives seemed to see nothing wrong with allowing Americans in to examine the books of Canadian logging companies.

I think that if we look at the non-proliferation treaty, there is a specific initiative in that treaty which permits host countries to make sure that the material they are sending out of a nuclear nature is being properly utilized.

In so far as Congressman Synar's legislation is concerned, I think there could be a bilateral accord. The current bilateral accord is not worth the paper it is written on in so far as the concerns about sovereign use of our own territory are concerned.

Congressman Synar's Bill could be modified and worked upon in a bilateral way between Canada and the United States. The intention of it is to prevent U.S. companies from using other countries, including Canada and Third World countries, as a dumping ground for unwanted American waste. The intention of making sure that the waste is disposed of in a proper fashion is built in to give that assurance. I think we could work out something in a bilateral way which would achieve Congressman Synar's objectives without in any way inhibiting Canadian's right to control and develop our own regulations.

I think that the Government's immediate knee-jerk response to try to block the Synar Bill is in fact a response which has been motivated by big business, which has been motivated by two or three Canadian companies that have made multi-millions of dollars in importing hazardous waste. It has very little to do with an intrinsic concern about Canadian sovereignty.

I do not buy the sovereignty argument. It is a red herring. If the Government is truly concerned about dealing with the issue of importing waste from the United States, which is coming in by the hundreds of thousands of tonnes, I think it should support Synar's Bill in principle and work to modify those areas of concern.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock later this day.

AGRICULTURE

DAIRY INDUSTRY – MILK PRICES

Mr. Jim Jordan (Leeds—Grenville): Mr. Speaker, recent decisions by the Government have left the Canadian dairy industry facing a very serious and immediate crisis, and a highly uncertain future.

The cap that has been put on industrial milk prices until December, 1990, while allowing decreases in industrial milk prices if the cost of production formula goes down, has left the dairy farmers of Canada wondering where is that commitment that the Government claims it has to protect the dairy industry?

When is the Government going to stop hammering the dairy farmers' managed supply system, while at the same time claiming commitment to the industry while it watches it disintegrate?

THE ECONOMY

INCOME REDUCTIONS IN ATLANTIC CANADA

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, some families in Atlantic Canada are faced with income reductions of 50 per cent or more this year, and the prospects for the next two years are not much better. Particularly hard hit are young families who, despite significant reduction in income, must still meet mortgage and boat payments. With recent rises in interest rates, those payments certainly have not been reduced, let alone in proportion to income reductions. For those young families, and in some cases those of their parents who have co-signed mortgages, foreclosure would spell disaster.

Canada needs those hard-working young people, economically strong and healthy. During their short-term difficulties they need our help in order that they can contribute to Canada for many years once our fishery recovers.

Accordingly, I urge the Government to establish special support measures to assist those families through their short-term time of difficulty.

If, Mr. Speaker, as you walk through the forest you encounter a fire, you digress from your path to put it out before it spreads. This fire of economic crisis must be put out now.

PUBLIC WORKS

CANCELLATION OF CONSTRUCTION OF TRANSPORT CANADA BUILDING

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, on May 9 the Minister of Public of Works (Mr. MacKay) stated in the House that the Government's decision to shelve the construction of a new building for Transport Canada in favour of renewing the Department's lease with Mr. Robert Campeau had "resulted in considerable savings". Similarly, the budget speech of the Minister of Finance refers to the cancellation of a new building as an "expenditure reduction".

Yesterday, in his appearance before the Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs, the Minister of Public Works flatly contradicted his earlier statement and stated that he has no idea if the renewal of Transport Canada's lease with Mr. Campeau will result in any savings, and that it might actually end up costing the taxpayers hundreds of millions of dollars.

In a more disturbing admission, the Minister also stated that the decision to shelve a new building in favour of a renewal of the lease was motivated by political and not financial considerations, the decision did not actually have to save money as long as the cancellation of a new building gave the "perception" of belt tightening.

I call upon the Minister to come clean with the Canadian taxpayer and remove the inefficiency and double dealing that has plagued the Transport Canada project from its inception by stating clearly and unequivocally—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

NATIONAL ACCESS AWARENESS WEEK

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, this is National Access Awareness Week, and I would like to take this opportunity to remind my colleagues in the House, and all Canadians, of the importance of promoting the full integration of disabled persons into all sectors of Canadian society.

Canada is a country that respects the rights of all people, a country where everyone is encouraged to do his or her best. Yet for disabled Canadians, who represent close to 15 per cent of the population, even simple, every day activities can pose enormous problems.

This week should be an occasion for us to work together to find ways to remove physical and other types of barriers that prevent persons with disabilities from participating fully in Canadian society.

May I congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, on the special attention you have personally given to this week, declaring, among other things, yesterday June 7, as Employment Day on the Hill. Further, I commend the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on the declaration of National Access Awareness Week, as one way to help improve attitudes of Canadians toward their fellow citizens who are disabled.

FISHERIES

THE CRAB INDUSTRY IN THE ACADIAN PENINSULA

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, a joint meeting was held on the weekend in the Acadian Peninsula to report on the crisis now raging in the crab industry.

At this meeting, all concerned were able to make recommendations to broaden the economic base of the Acadian Peninsula.

Mr. Speaker, the whole fishing industry of northeastern New Brunswick is going through an extremely difficult period and this industry alone cannot continue to support the region economically.

That is why I ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to mandate the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs and Member for Madawaska—Victoria (Mr. Valcourt) to set up a task force, together with the Minister of Public Works and Minister for the purposes of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency Act (Mr. MacKay) and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall), to find solutions to help these courageous and capable workers who now find themselves in an intolerable situation.

Mr. Speaker, the federal Government must deal with this question immediately to show that it understands the frustration of these Acadian workers who are entitled to live and work in respect and dignity.

THE BUDGET

RESOLUTION IN MAGAZINE WESTERN REPORT

Miss Deborah Grey (Beaver River): Mr. Speaker, I draw the attention of Hon. Members to the May 22 issue of Western Report magazine and the growing popularity of Resolution No. 1. Resolution No. 1 states that all future tax increases should be exceeded by expenditure reductions until the Budget is balanced. This is the first sign of a taxpayer backlash to the recent Budget.

The PC Budget does not show restraint. It increases the deficit and it increases spending on an over-bloated public sector. I urge someone, anyone, in the PC Caucus to speak out against this. Where are the fiscal conservatives?

I wish Resolution No. 1 well. Western Canadians have learned that the most effective protest is done at the ballot box. I warn members of the Progressive Conservative Party, continue your tax and spend policies and it is only a matter of time until Tories all across Canada will face a new political option based on free enterprise and fiscal responsibility.

THE LEAKING OF VISCOUS LIQUID IN SENNETERRE

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, a June 4, 1989 Canadian Press article by Camille Beaulieu is headlined "Viscous liquid leak from American railroad car at Senneterre". He is referring to car No. 524335 which was part of a CN convoy and belongs to an American company, Southern. It has been shunt lined in the Senneterre switching yard because of damage. CN repair work order No. 6229 dated June 2 indicates that "as a result of damage to the car which was side lined at Senneterre for repairs, it was noted that it contained a few copper plates. It is in fact loaded with barrels containing all sorts of unidentified products and the barrels are unsealed. Some of them have been tipped over and liquids seep under the car". This car crossed into Québec around May 19, 1989, which means that CN management have let this car travel across Québec cities and villages for a number of days without being concerned about the liquid seeping under the car.

Mr. Speaker, thank God the CN employees at Senneterre are competent and look after the environment in Abitibi!

THE BUDGET

GOODS AND SERVICE TAX

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): Mr. Speaker, the Budget of the Government has imposed some of the most brutal, callous, and regressive taxes upon Canadians, including a goods and service tax which will even tax the homes that Canadians want to buy.

Officials in the office of the Minister have stated that this tax may be refundable, partially refundable, or not refundable, depending on who one speaks to. Home buyers and home builders deserve to know what is going on in order that they can make their plans.

In addition, the Minister of State for Housing (Mr. Redway) states that the cancellation of the rental RRAP is because this program is not fully targeted to needy Canadians. Nothing can be further from the truth. Housing groups in municipalities across the country disagree. In fact rental RRAP is a program that is very effective and targeted to those tenants who deserve decent accommodation. The Government should look at the real facts.

CENTRE FOR ATMOSPHERIC RESEARCH

Mrs. Edna Anderson (Simcoe Centre): Mr. Speaker, June 4 to June 10 is Canadian Environment Week. To mark this important week, I see fit to announce a federal grant of $435,000 to the Centre for Atmospheric Research (CARE), in Egbert, Ontario, to allow the facility to expand.

Construction of the addition to this Centre is under way. The Centre will develop new weather monitoring instruments, as well as research and study climate change on water resources and forests.

CARE is the only research station of its kind in Canada. The Centre is located in a rural environment in Simcoe Centre to ensure that measurements are not affected by the higher air pollution levels usually found in urban areas.

The CARE facility will permit new technology to be developed that will keep Canada at the forefront of environmental, atmospheric research.

RAILWAYS

UPGRADING OF BIG RIVER SUBDIVISION RAIL LINE

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, on April 13, I attended a meeting of grain producers and concerned citizens in Debden, Saskatchewan where the discussion centred almost entirely on the need for the upgrading of the rail line between Debden and Big River, Saskatchewan.

On June 2, in response to a letter that I sent to him, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Bouchard), conceded that the line known as the Big River subdivision had been designated for upgrading in May, 1984. However, immediately following that year's general election, the project was cancelled in September, 1984.

The Minister now states that the early termination of the branch line rehabilitation program, which had enough money in it to complete the Big River subdivision upgrading, has killed the project, and no funding for this line will now be approved.

The Minister and the Government are playing with the future of entire communities here, and I call upon the Minister to immediately rethink the elimination of the branch line rehabilitation program, and to honour previously agreed to commitments such as the Big River subdivision.

THE PRESS

REPORTING OF EVENTS IN CHINA

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, as a 20 year member of the parliamentary Press Gallery, including several years on a Gallery executive, I am well aware of the hits journalists take from politicians and the public. But they are nothing like the hits that journalists are risking right now in Beijing, Shanghai and elsewhere during this tragedy in China. Our contributing journalists to Canadian newspapers, TV and radio newscasts are witnessing scenes totally beyond human understanding. They are living and reporting a horrible piece of history on the run.

I was moved to hear The Globe and Mail's Jan Wong tell first hand on CBC Morningside:

> I saw that young man climbing upon a tank and stopping a whole convoy. It happened right outside my window and I couldn't help crying.

The passing of a brown envelope at a west end Ottawa gas station pales by comparison to the heroism of reporters defying martial law in a country where they beat foreign journalists and shoot at random through windows of diplomatic residences. Vive la presse libre.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

PHIL LATULIPPE FOUNDATION FOR HANDICAPPED CHILDREN

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Phil Latulippe is an outstanding Canadian who at 70 years of age is running across Canada with the key desire to raise $300,000 for the Phil Latulippe Foundation for recreation programs for handicapped children. As generous Canadians, let us all get behind this remarkable man and his wonderful and dedicated wife, Lucie.

I first met Phil Latulippe when he was a Sergeant in the Canadian Forces and stationed with the Second Field Ambulance at CFB Petawawa. He decided 22 years ago that he was going to stop drinking and smoking and get himself into shape. The base race track was one-half mile long. So he decided to walk it non-stop 365 times, once for each day of the year. It took him nearly two days to walk the 182.5 miles. During that time General S.V. Radley-Walters who was base commander asked me and several others to take turns walking with him to keep up his morale, and we did. The retired Canadian Forces chief warrant officer who used to smoke three packs of cigarettes a day is out to beat his own cross-Canada running record which he set in 1981.

All Canadians wish Phenomenal Phil well and Godspeed. Thank you, Phil, for being such an excellent example to all of us.

INTERNATIONAL MARITIME ORGANIZATION

APPOINTMENT OF CANADIAN AS SECRETARY GENERAL

Mr. Charles A. Langlois (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, it is my great privilege to advise the House that yesterday morning in London, England, the governing body of the International Maritime Organization, a specialized agency of the United Nations, selected William O'Neil as their next Secretary General.

This is the first time that a Canadian has headed a specialized United Nations agency for over 40 years and it is something of which all Canadians should be proud. It reflects Canada's deep commitment and participation in the affairs of IMO since its founding in 1948.

The IMO is committed to enhancing the safety of life at sea and promoting a cleaner marine environment by the prevention of pollution from ships. These admirable objectives are supported by all Canadians. Canada should be proud that these goals will be pursued by a Canadian who has dedicated himself to public service in the marine world for over 40 years.

Mr. William O'Neil was the first Commissioner of the Canadian Coast Guard and for the past 10 years he has been the President of the St. Lawrence Seaway authority. His election as Secretary General reflects highly on his personal credibility in the international maritime circles and also reflects highly on Canada's reputation as a supporter of safer shipping and cleaner oceans.

SPACE AGENCY

COMMENTS OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, I rise in response to certain comments the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) made to the media yesterday about the refusal of many scientists to relocate with the space agency.

No government would make a decision on health care without consulting the medical profession. No one would consider changes to the court system without consulting the legal profession. This Government has demonstrated that it makes no decisions about business without consulting with business. Why then should the Prime Minister treat with contempt the space scientists who claim only the right to the same consideration?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister also stated that he is not concerned over the fact that only 4 of the 56 scientists now working in Ottawa are prepared to move to Saint-Lambert and that there are a lot of people who are just waiting to pick up the challenge.

[English]

I invite the Prime Minister into the real world, a world where underfunded universities struggle to produce qualified scientists and a world where experienced scientists are so hard to find in this country that they do not have to tolerate the ignorant contempt of opportunistic politicians. There are other places where they can go and where they will go if this Government fails to recognize their voices in decisions affecting them and their families.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ANNUAL BASEBALL GAME

Mr. Scott Thorkelson (Edmonton—Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, the struggle between age and beauty came to a head last night as the MPs took on the Pages in a game of baseball.

For the first time in 11 years, the MPs decided to let the Pages win. The starting pitcher, the Member for Kitchener (Mr. Reimer), had the Pages trailing 12–2 but then the so-called "terminator" from Bonaventure—Iles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Gray) let the MP's lead slide and consequently had to take his first loss of the season at 14–13. Lawrence "superpage" Weiner drove in the winning run. Page Petra Kuret slid home to score in the bottom of the ninth.

In total 35 Pages took on a puny squad of 22 overweight, out of shape Members of Parliament. Captain Richard Gabruch masterminded the complex strategy to lead the Pages to a narrow victory. The Member from Lethbridge (Mr. Thacker) summed up the game nicely: "Good guys don't always finish last".

CALL FOR BAN ON OIL EXPORTS FROM PORT OF VANCOUVER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this being International Environment Week and as the Prime Minister is speaking on the environment in Vancouver today, I have questions for the Minister of the Environment.

Following the Gray's Harbour and Exxon Valdez spills, the Minister of the Environment refused our request to have a public examination of the situation. Instead he said he would have a "short, swift and strong" bureaucratic review. He will know that British Columbia's oil spill adviser has now called for a total ban on all exports of oil from the Port of Vancouver. Since he has refused our proposal for a public inquiry and since he is going to review this matter himself, would he now give us the quick answer that he promised us and tell us what his reaction is to the B.C. adviser's proposition to ban all exports from the Port of Vancouver?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, this is only one aspect of the question. The question deals with the general concern on the B.C. coast, and all over Canada, of possible disasters of great magnitude in terms of oil spills off our coasts. We have set up this internal committee which is now working. We are in the process of setting up another way of dealing publicly with the question.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We are no closer to any answers. I would have hoped that the Minister would have given us his reaction to the British Columbia Government's proposal to ban oil exports from the Port of Vancouver, Mr. Speaker, of special interest to you and me.

MEETING WITH CANADIAN FEDERATION OF MUNICIPALITIES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is no surprise that the Prime Minister is speaking on the environment at a Tory fundraiser tonight.

He will not be joining myself and other Members of Parliament at the annual meeting of the Canadian Federation of Municipalities dealing with the fundamental problems of the infrastructure of our cities and towns and the environment. The Minister will know that there are 138 cities and towns in Ontario where sewage treatment plants do not meet environmental standards. He will also know that there are east coast cities which dump their sewage directly into the ocean. There are western cities with an incredible overflow and leakage problems in the sewage facilities. The federal Government has steadfastly refused to participate with the municipalities in meeting this problem.

Can the Minister of the Environment explain why, with all the Prime Minister's grandstanding on the environment, particularly tonight in Vancouver, the federal Government has done nothing to deal with the sewage treatment problem? Why is it that the Minister of the Environment does not want to get to the problem right at its source?

• (1420)

[Translation]

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the task before us is enormous. Governments must do their share as dictated by their jurisdictions. The federal Government will do its share, and it expects other levels of government to do the same. It so happens that sewage treatment systems are a municipal and provincial matter, and that here in Canada we have a serious problem because of the fact that water is not taxed at a realistic level. If Canadian municipalities were to tax water at the same levels as their U.S. counterparts, they would have no trouble in raising the billions of dollars required to renew these systems.

THE EFFECTS OF THE CLOSURE OF VIA RAIL ON THE ENVIRONMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the problem is not exclusively municipal or provincial, because all Canadian municipalities and all the provinces are agreed on a proposal to share the cost three ways. The Minister and his Government continue to reject these proposals.

The Minister, I imagine, must be very surprised, if I may look at his twin, the other Bouchard, without wishing to violate the Standing Orders. He must be very surprised at the words of his colleague, the Minister of Transport, who tells us that an environmental assessment review is not necessary to evaluate the impact of closing down VIA Rail passenger services.

After careful consultation with the experts and after consulting the Government's body of documentation, we found that on average, for every passenger transported over a distance of one mile, the automobile uses four times as much energy and creates four times as much pollution as the train in rural regions, and uses ten times as much energy and creates ten times as much pollution in urban areas.

Since VIA Rail produced 1.5 billion passenger-miles last year, would the Minister of the Environment agree that closing down VIA Rail will have a very negative and even disastrous impact on our country's environment?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, first of all, the Government's position is that the EARP process does not put any legal obligation on the Government to assess measures that have the effect of reducing the Budget deficit. The Leader of the Opposition, himself a former Finance Minister, knows perfectly well that budgetary decisions are sovereign decisions.

Regarding the deficit-reducing measure applying to our railways and its impact on the environment, Mr. Speaker, I fail to see how maintaining, at great expense—an annual deficit of $500 million—trains that criss-cross Canada empty and produce pollution can help the environment. What will help the environment is funds that will become available as result of the deficit reductions and which can then be allocated to other sectors, including the environment.

[English]

REQUEST FOR REGULATIONS TO PROTECT GREAT LAKES

Mr. Rex Crawford (Kent): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. He is aware that the Great Lakes are becoming a massive toxic soup. The recent International Joint Commission report outlines the current and future danger. We can only guess at the health effects of the 30,000 different chemicals used there.

Two years after amending the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement, which promised programs to deal with all sources of contamination, the Government still has not followed through. Will the Minister finally support a two-pronged effort to both clean up the Great Lakes and create new, strong regulations to protect this vital national resource?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is forgetting that the Government is in the process of defining 17 remedial action plans for the Great Lakes. There are 17 hot spots for which we will have remedial action plans, with funding of $125 million. This action must be seen in comparison to the $110 million plan announced today to de-pollute the St. Lawrence River. I call that action.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Rex Crawford (Kent): Mr. Speaker, since 1,000 new chemicals a year are generated around the Great Lakes and at least 500 are suspected to affect human health, will the Minister commit further funds today for the research, regulation and reduction of toxic chemicals before the crisis becomes irreversible?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, this question is of great concern to the Government and all Canadians. We agree with the Opposition that we must pursue the programs we have set up to eliminate as soon as possible this high level of toxics in the Great Lakes. We have had success. We have taken drastic measures. Last year we strengthened agreements with the United States, and there will be more action.

TRANSPORT

DEREGULATION OF AIR LINES

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. When the Conservatives wanted to deregulate the airlines we were told that deregulation would mean lower air fares and greater consumer choices. That was in January, 1988. Today, in June, 1989, two airlines control 98 per cent of the domestic market and effective competition has died. The author of a recent study is predicting that air fares will go up 30 per cent in the next year. What steps will the Minister of Transport take to ensure that Canadians have real competition in the air?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, first I should point out that I did not read the Roman report, so I am not in a position to comment on it.

One thing I can say though, as I pointed out yesterday with respect to the deregulation process launched by the then Minister of Transport and current Deputy Prime Minister, is that all regions of Canada now derive benefits from deregulation in the sense that a number of services which are now available were not even offered five or six years ago.

As to the fare issue, it is of course a very complex problem because depending on regions and flight types—transcontinental fares, for instance—some fares are down by as much as 80 per cent. All told, I would suggest that Canadians have benefited from deregulation.

[English]

INCREASE IN FARES ON VIA RAIL

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, the Minister said he has not read the report, but he has the answers. He has not read this report, and in the last two days he admitted to our Leader that he has not read VIA's proposal on cut-backs. Does the Minister not understand that there is a place for air travel and rail travel in this country, and that by the Government's actions which is forcing VIA to increase fares, abandon routes, and reduce services, it will also destroy rail transportation in this country?

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we realize that that question is not about air transportation. It is always a question about VIA Rail and it means having the same answer. VIA Rail has to consider increasing fares, cutting routes and so on. VIA Rail first has to consider living within the reference levels we have given it.

Once again, we cannot afford to put as much money as the Hon. Member believes we can into empty trains.

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, we are talking about transportation in this country. We have lost all forms of competition in the air. The Government is cutting back on VIA Rail.

Let me give a specific example of what it is doing in my area. The Government is forcing the same train crew on the route from Winnipeg to Churchill to stay on that train for 80 hours. That goes against all the recommendations of the Foisy report which stated that there must be well-rested crews. Not only is the Minister destroying competition, he is destroying safety. What will he do?

[Translation]

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, one can always try to make the situation appear more critical. My colleague from Churchill knows full well that train travel and railroad beds in that region are further complicated by recurrent frost, that rail maintenance is extremely difficult, and that CN management have done everything possible to find a solution to the problem.

My colleague seeks to bring up the case of the port of Churchill. Later this afternoon at 4 o'clock we will meet with a Churchill delegation to listen to what they have to say in an attempt to find answers acceptable to both sides.

ATLANTIC CANADA OPPORTUNITIES AGENCY

CANADA-NOVA SCOTIA OFFSHORE DEVELOPMENT AGREEMENT

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. The Prime Minister of Canada is in direct disagreement with the Auditor General concerning the expenditures made under the Canada-Nova Scotia Offshore Development Agreement. The $20 million gift of federal taxpayers' money spent on a project not even related to the purposes of the fund in the riding of the Minister responsible for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency is appalling.

• (1430)

How can the Deputy Prime Minister justify such pork-barrelling schemes when, on the other hand, this Government as a result of its recent Budget has cut back on child care spaces, has slashed ERDA funding in Atlantic Canada, and has dismissed hundreds of applications made under the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency? How can the Deputy Prime Minister and the Government of Canada justify such appalling action?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I take it from the Hon. Member's question that he is opposed to improving the economic infrastructure of the Province of Nova Scotia.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: Maybe for the benefit of all Hon. Members and particularly the people of Nova Scotia, the Hon. Member would outline what other projects which have been funded by this program he is opposed to. Let him stand up and tell the people of Nova Scotia what he is against. We do not know what he is for, but we certainly know that he is against anything that helps the people of Nova Scotia have a better life and better opportunities and the opportunity for jobs.

Mr. Dingwall: I will tell the Deputy Prime Minister what I am opposed to. I am opposed to pork-barrelling schemes which only benefit friends of Tories. That is what I am against.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General said, and I quote: "The project rationale does not explain how this highway will support offshore oil and gas activity." Will the Deputy Prime Minister not now admit that the Government spent millions of dollars on this road for which there is little economic justification and no connection whatsoever to the offshore oil and gas development, and that its real purpose was to pork-barrel his friend and colleague, the Minister responsible for the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Hon. Member knows that these projects are in fact initiated, as I understand it, by the Government of the Province of Nova Scotia. In this particular case they provided a project which was deemed to be appropriate and fitting within the criteria that was established, and it was done.

He said that he is against projects which are in Tory ridings. My understanding, and I stand to be corrected on this, is that there was a Sydport access road built under this program which happens to be in his colleague's riding, Cape Breton—The Sydneys. Is he opposed to that one too?

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF CONGRESSMAN GEORGE E. BROWN

Mr. Speaker: I wish to draw to the attention of Hon. Members the presence in our gallery of Congressman George E. Brown who represents the Thirty-sixth District, California, the United States of America.

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF KOREAN NATIONAL ASSEMBLY DELEGATION

Mr. Speaker: I also wish to draw to the attention of Members the presence in our gallery of the delegation from the Korean National Assembly, led by the Honourable Jae Hee Nam, Chairman of the Seoul City Committee of the Ruling Democratic Justice Party.

REDUCTION OF DEFICIT

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Prior to the recent Budget both he and the Prime Minister had repeatedly assured Canadians that the Government would not attempt to reduce its deficit at the expense of lower income earners.

However, according to a recent study based on Statistics Canada models, over half of all families with incomes of less than $25,000 a year, a total of almost two million households, will suffer a further drop in their incomes.

My question is how, in light of this fact, does the Minister justify reducing the Government's deficit at the expense of the already disadvantaged families in our society?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I just draw the Hon. Member's attention to some of the elements in the Budget which increased the surtax on upper income Canadians by a considerable amount. It also introduced a large corporations' tax of $1 billion which had the effect of spreading the burden over the large corporate sector. It is these specific items that have eschewed the burden in the tax side of the recent Budget so that it is borne much more by those who are better able to bear that burden.

IMPACT ON LOWER INCOME FAMILIES

Hon. Roy MacLaren (Etobicoke North): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows full well that the various tax measures in the Budget, aside from those which he may have mentioned, indicate that some 800,000 families with incomes of less than $15,000 annually will pay higher taxes, partly as a result of the regressive taxes he introduced this week.

Has the Minister made such an analysis of the impact of his Budget on lower income families and, if so, will he now make it available to all Canadians?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in this particular Budget we have increased the refundable sales tax credit to offset the impact of sales tax measures on those who are in lower income brackets, precisely the people to whom he referred, those families earning less than $15,000.

Mr. Peterson: You are wrong.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): The Hon. Member for Willowdale states that it is wrong. Obviously he has not read the Budget, because it is there in black and white, and I would suggest the Hon. Member read the Budget.

THE ENVIRONMENT

NUCLEAR WASTE IN OCEANS

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Minister of Environment is in regard to the growing public concern about the presence of nuclear waste in the world's oceans.

Is the Minister aware of the recent U.S. defence report, which states that on February 13, 1950 a U.S. Air Force B–36 bomber dropped an atomic bomb into the waters between the Queen Charlotte Islands and Vancouver Island? Is he aware that the weapon partially detonated on impact with the sea, scattering its radioactive warhead in Canadian waters?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, yes, we are aware of those facts.

RESPONSIBILITY OF MINISTER TO INFORM PUBLIC

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. If the Minister is aware of such an event, does he not have a responsibility to inform the Canadian public of that?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I think the question to which the Hon. Member is referring is the one as to whether or not the Government of Canada, exercising a jurisdiction that belongs to the Government, should somehow stop the docking at Canadian ports of—

An Hon. Member: It is a cover-up.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): —should stop the practice which has been followed by Governments for some time in this country of allowing the docking at—

An Hon. Member: That was not the question.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I am being interrupted by the new candidate for the leadership in the New Democratic Party who is rarely—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Mr. Speaker, the concern of the New Democratic Party is that we live in an age of nuclear weapons. When there are nuclear weapons there are going to be accidents. There have been accidents at sea with respect to submarines carrying nuclear weapons. There have been other accidents. Those are recorded.

There is also an issue in this country as to whether Canada should continue a practice, in place for some long time, of supporting North Atlantic Treaty Organization arrangements by allowing foreign ships to dock occasionally at Canadian docks. We have decided that it is in the interest of the deterrence which is at the basis of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization to allow that kind of practice. I know the Hon. Member would prefer if there were a world in which nuclear weapons did not exist. The way to achieve that kind of world—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

RAILWAY TRANSPORT

TRANSPORTATION OF DANGEROUS PRODUCTS—PROPOSAL FOR MORE RIGOROUS CONTROL

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Transport. Railroad car No. 524335 belonging to the American Southern company is shunt lined in the CN switching yard in Senneterre. CN work order No. 6229 dated June 2, 1989, indicates that as a result of damage to the car, several unsealed barrels containing all sorts of unidentified products tipped over and that some liquid seeps under the car. Here is my question, Mr. Speaker: Could the Minister confirm today that CN will be subjected to the same stringent controls as the transportation of dangerous wastes from the United States, because in Abitibi we are suffering another episode of CN management incompetence in environment matters concerning the movement of that American railroad car towards Rouyn-Noranda.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for his question. Of course, the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act is enforced at the present time, and through the inspector responsible we ordered the car in question to remain in Senneterre until samples are taken of the substances which do not seem to be dangerous, but the car will not be allowed to leave the switching yard before we get the results of the analysis of the samples we have taken.

TOURISM

IMPACT OF BUDGET CUTBACKS

Mr. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism. The cuts in the Government tourism promotion budget and the new taxes which increase the costs of the Canadian tourism industry are very disturbing and certainly negative for that sector. To that we must add the VIA Rail cutbacks which will aggravate the disastrous consequences for the tourism industry.

Can the Minister tell us why he could not convince his Cabinet colleagues of the disastrous consequences of these cuts on Canada's most important industry?

[English]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. It gives me the opportunity to remind the House that in ten years tourism will probably be the largest industry in Canada. In fact, it has been increasing enormously over the past five years, to the tune of over 10 per cent per year.

The provinces and the federal Government met last week on this subject. We are finding that there are opportunities that have never been pursued before—certainly not by previous Governments—such as co-operative advertising with the provinces and the private sector to give us more exposure, not less.

TOURIST INDUSTRY CUTS

Mr. Mark Assad (Gatineau—La Lièvre): Mr. Speaker, I had a supplementary question but after hearing an answer like that I won't bother.

The Government's budget for tourist development has been cut. The budget of the tourist industry in Canada has been cut because of the Government's activities. Members of the industry have told me that. How does less plus less equal more?

Some Hon. Members: Hear hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, we could do a lot more if there was more co-operation in this country between the tourism industry, the provinces and the federal Government. We could then do a lot more.

INDUSTRIAL EXPANSION

GRANT TO VIFAN

Mr. Lyle Vanclief (Prince Edward—Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology.

Mobil Chemicals in Belleville, Ontario employs 250 workers and has an $11 million payroll.

Mobil's $70 million investment, without government grants, has made it the leader in the industry whose total production capacity is only 80 per cent utilized.

How can the Government justify a $5.7 million grant to Vifan, an Italian owned company, to establish a plant in the riding of the President of the Treasury Board producing the same product as Mobil?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member being new here is probably not aware—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: —that if he wants detailed answers like that in Question Period he should give warning. It is part of the tradition of the House. I would have prepared the information.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: Indeed, there are regional development programs for the resource and central regions of Quebec which have a high unemployment rate, much higher than in the Province of Ontario. We give those grants to promote employment in those high unemployment areas. We do so proudly and properly.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lyle Vanclief (Prince Edward—Hastings): Mr. Speaker, the Minister said that they do it proudly and properly. I think he will recognize that if the normal procedure had been followed, his departmental staff would have consulted with the other manufacturers of the product in Canada to see if there was a need for another producer of that same product.

Why did the Minister's staff not do that in this case and still give nearly a $6 million grant to build a plant in Lavaltrie—Paroisse?

Hon. Harvie Andre (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the staff of the Department of Industry, Science and Technology consults widely. They are experts on the industry. They consult widely with the industry representatives.

I repeat to the Hon. Member, he ought to follow the traditions around here, give warning and then he will get detailed answers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

NATIONAL REVENUE

CORPORATE TAX DEDUCTIONS

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue. Canadians know by now that the Government has little dedication to sharing the tax burden equally. However, there are more glaring discrepancies which I think taxpayers do not need to be financing.

One example I would like to present to the Minister is the question that those companies and corporations which supported and advertised for the Government on the trade deal, in the support of it, are allowed a tax deduction, while those corporations or businesses which did not agree with the Government's position and advertised against the trade deal are not. There are different rules for different people. If one is Hurtig Publishers there is one rule. If one is Domtar or the Royal Bank there is another rule.

How does the Minister justify this unfairness?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I do not know from where the Hon. Member gets her information. The only time that I made a public comment on this matter was Thursday, May 18 of this year when I said: "I cannot make blanket statements whether pro or anti free trade advertising is deductible or not. I would be irresponsible if I made a blanket statement that said those who support free trade can write it off and those who don't support free trade cannot write it off. I am not saying that and that is not the case".

DISCLOSURE AND FAIRNESS RULES

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest to the Minister, then, that he speak to his Department. In committee the Deputy Minister said that there does not have to be tangible proof that a contribution has gained or produced income for a firm or business, but that they would be able to deduct this for income tax purposes. It seems to me that we see that the Government's friends still set the agenda and the Canadian taxpayers pay for it.

The Minister is saying it is not clear. When will the Minister stop this arbitrary system of rewards and punishments? When will he set rules clearly on full disclosure and fairness?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, what this Hon. Member is saying is totally and absolutely untrue and dishonest.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I want the Minister to make it very clear that he is not accusing the Hon. Member of dishonesty. He may very well want to take the position that what she has asserted is not so, but there is another way of putting it.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I was not suggesting that the Hon. Member is a liar. I am saying that her facts are not the facts.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Hon. Minister could try again.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, the fact of the matter is that under the Income Tax Act each case is looked at on its own merits. It is possible that if companies which advertised pro-free trade or against free trade could show under the provisions of the Income Tax Act that there was benefit accruing to their company as a result of that advertising, then that advertising could be written off.

However, there is absolutely no evidence, nor is there any suggestion, nor is there any directive as the Hon. Member from Winnipeg said a couple of weeks ago in this House, that a directive has been given by myself to support those who were for free trade and oppose those who were against free trade. There is no such policy on this side of the House. There may be some policy on the other side of the House.

• (1450)

AUDIT OF CORPORATIONS

Mr. David Berger (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Seeing that there seems to have been some anomalous and contradictory decisions regarding the assessment of companies that were opposed to free trade as opposed to those which supported free trade, will the Minister undertake to audit those companies that were in favour of the Free Trade Agreement to see that they are being treated in the same manner and that all Canadians are being treated equitably?

Hon. Otto Jelinek (Minister of National Revenue): If that is the Liberals example of fairness then they are on the wrong side of the issue, let me tell you that, Mr. Speaker. To make the fact of the matter very clear to the Member I will read it: "The Income Tax Act provides that deductions from business income are limited to the extent that they are for the purpose of gaining or producing income from a business."

Each case is looked at on a case by case basis. If it is determined in a non-partisan, non-political, objective manner that the company has gainfully gained as a result of that advertising or that business transaction, then a write-off can take place. It has nothing to do whatsoever—and I underline that—with whether someone supported free trade or opposed it. I think the Liberals and the New Democrats should forget about continuing the battle which they lost last November.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR LAND SPECULATION TAX

Ms. Barbara Greene (Don Valley North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Housing. In The Toronto Star of June 7, 1989 an article referred to a report by the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation indicating that 20 per cent to 30 per cent of privately owned housing in the Toronto region is bought for speculation and that speculators are helping to fuel price increases.

In view of the magnitude of the problem now evident, will the Minister bring forward a housing speculation tax with such revenues allocated to provide social housing in regions where people are victimized by land speculation?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Alan Redway (Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member may know, some months ago there was a study done by CMHC with respect to land speculation. There have been other studies done since that time by other bodies, such as Royal Lepage.

I am sure the Hon. Member may have seen in the paper today the fact that the Toronto Real Estate Board reports that not only have housing sales paused dramatically in the Toronto area, but on top of that, housing prices have fallen since last month by $10,000 on average. It would appear that this may not be the appropriate time to introduce a land speculation tax even if the federal Government had the jurisdiction to do so. It is my current advice that that is not the case.

I must say that I have previously asked the Premier of Ontario to introduce a similar tax. If and when it is appropriate, I am sure that I will be raising that question again with him.

VIA RAIL

LAY-OFFS—ATTITUDE OF CROWN CORPORATION

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Laurier—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for the 7,500 VIA Rail lay-offs across Canada, of which 54 per cent will be in Québec and 3,241 in Montreal. Those workers have a right to know the Minister's position, not only that of VIA Rail's management. Is the Minister ready now to state he asked VIA Rail's management to proceed to humane rather than wild rationalization and lay-offs, and if so how are they to implement that?

Hon. Benoit Bouchard (Minister of Transport): The Hon., Member for Montreal—Sainte-Marie enjoys his own reality as usual. Let me try and make a few corrections. There is absolutely no question of my giving any guarantee to you, because I did that yesterday, Mr. Speaker, to other Members. I am simply saying this, VIA Rail received reference levels for the next five years. The Corporation was asked to submit to us a series of proposals that would allow them to live within those reference levels. When the Government has received them, when we have reviewed them, we will accept or reject the Corporation's business plan, and in the meantime I would like to ask the Hon. Member for Laurier—Sainte-Marie, rather than making VIA Rail employees feel insecure, to wait for this Government's decisions.

MINISTER'S RESPONSIBILITIES

Mr. Jean-Claude Malépart (Laurier—Sainte-Marie): Mr. Speaker, VIA Rail employees cannot be made to feel secure because the Minister in charge who should defend them is acting as a loudspeaker for VIA Rail's management. If the Minister earns $50,000 more than we do, it is because he must assume his responsibilities. And if the Minister wants to take his own responsibilities and recommend a humane rationalization, would he be ready to recommend that VIA Rail be designated under the older worker adjustment program so that the latter applies and lay-offs are done humanely, on the basis of early retirement, rather than having management do a hatchet job? Take your responsibilities, you do not rate a chauffeur just to ride around.

Hon. Benoît Bouchard (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, anything can be said in this House, as we have just seen. I think the Hon. Member already decided there were lay-offs. He already decided to implement programs that come under my Government colleague. He already decided, in his own world, to live with fancy realities.

Under the administrative process, Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member should know, reports are made by a Crown corporation, an arm's length corporation which submits reports to the Government, on the basis of which the Government then makes decisions. This is how things have always been done and this is how they go on being done.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

GRAIN NEGOTIATIONS WITH SOVIET UNION

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. As the Minister knows, the Port of Churchill is the best port for shipping grain from the West to the northern ports of the Soviet Union. Will the Minister confirm that the Canadian Wheat Board is currently negotiating with the Soviet Union for a wheat sale and September delivery of 2.5 million tonnes of grain? If this negotiation is successful, will the Minister direct that Churchill be used for these shipments?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of Western Economic Diversification and Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member will know that the Prairies suffered a very poor crop last year and the amount of wheat that we are going to export will likely be about half of what we exported a year ago. Consequently, there is going to be less grain for all ports including Churchill, Thunder Bay, Vancouver, and Prince Rupert.

With regard to myself, as Minister responsible stepping in and interfering with the day to day operations of the Wheat Board, I am very surprised that it is the position of the Liberal Party that we now have direct political interference in the operations of a Crown corporation. I stay out of the day to day operations of the Canadian Wheat Board. What I will do is make the Wheat Board aware of the Hon. Member's concerns, and I am sure the Board will do everything it can to see that there is an opportunity to sell grain through Churchill as long as it is in the best interests of western farmers.

REVITALIZATION OF PORT OF CHURCHILL

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the same Minister. Perhaps in his role as Minister for Western Economic Diversification he will be willing to intervene and help this community.

Given that the Port of Churchill will be standing idle for another year because of Canadian Wheat Board decisions, will the Minister tell us what, if anything, his Department of Western Economic Diversification will be doing to revitalize the economy of this port? Have any economic impact studies been done? What is being done to help tourism? Will the suggestion to use the port for humanitarian food aid exports be taken up? Will the Minister act now to save Canada's only Arctic port?

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of Western Economic Diversification and Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member should know that we have been in conversation with the Government of the Province of Manitoba discussing many of the issues including tourism. There are some things that we can look at for Churchill. However, in terms of the port, the Hon. Member should know that there is a very limited time in which Churchill operates. The Port of Churchill normally opens about the second week in August and runs to about the second week or the middle of November. It is very difficult in terms of selling grain to some countries to say them: "Look, we want you to wait until September or October to buy grain through Churchill". Our customers may very well decide to go elsewhere.

We are aware of the concern. We are working with the provincial Governments to see what we can do on behalf of Churchill. In fact, the Minister of Transport and myself will be meeting this afternoon with a group of people from Churchill to look at what can be done for Churchill.

TOURISM

RENEWAL OF SUB-AGREEMENTS WITH THE PROVINCES

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Tourism. The Minister recently acknowledged, during committee hearings, that the tourism industry sub-agreements with the provinces would not be renewed. Would the Minister advise the House whether he has in fact consulted with the tourism industry before cutting them off at the knees?

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, we certainly have not cut the tourism industry off at the knees. There will be various programs of economic co-operation with the provinces through the regional agencies. We have other agreements yet to expire. In fact, the industry itself is looking forward to co-operating with us on marketing and advertising. We will do this. We are looking forward to increasing the yield of the Canadian tourist industry next year as a result of this co-operation.

FUNDING OF TOURISM DEVELOPMENT IN THE YUKON TERRITORIES

Mr. Lyle Dean MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, representatives of the Tourism Industry Association of Canada in fact indicate that no consultations have taken place. The Minister also indicated that federal tourism funding will now be funnelled through regional agencies, such as ACOA and Western Diversification.

I wonder if the Minister would explain how he intends to finance tourism development in the Yukon Territories, whose agreement has now expired, when in fact the Yukon Territories cannot access the funds in these regional programs, such as Western Diversification.

Hon. Tom Hockin (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism)): Mr. Speaker, with the Yukon, that is a separate conversation and separate agreement which can be discussed in the future. I would remind the Hon. Member and the NDP in particular that the success of the tourism industry in Canada today is not just because of Government contributions. It is the strength of the private sector and strength of the industry on its own two feet together with the marketing help of the federal Government.

THE BUDGET

IMPOSITION OF GOODS AND SERVICE TAX—EFFECT ON BUILDERS AND HOME BUYERS

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. The Government's Budget has imposed some of the most brutal, callous and regressive taxes upon Canadians, including a goods and services tax which even will tax the homes that Canadians want to buy.

Officials from the Minister's own office have said that this tax may be refundable, partially refundable, or not refundable, depending on who you speak to.

Home buyers and home builders deserve to know what is going on so that they can make their decisions. Will the Minister tell this House how the goods and service tax will be reimbursed? Will it be fully rebatable or partially rebatable according to an income test?

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that is a valid question. It is a matter that has been discussed with the industry on an ongoing basis since I made the commitment last September or October that the new goods and services tax would not be a burden to the affordability of housing.

We are studying precisely the ways of implementing that commitment. Once we have the technical paper out later this month, that information will be available.

Mr. Speaker: I must advise Hon. Members that the time for Question Period has expired. The Right Hon. Secretary of State for External Affairs.

POINT OF ORDER

CORRECTION TO THE RECORD

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In my first and considerably briefer response to the questions from the Member from Saanich—Gulf Islands (Ms. Hunter), I used the word "facts" when I intended to use the word "allegations". I apologize to the Member and the House for the mistake.

Mr. Speaker: The point of order from the Hon. Member for Port Moody—Coquitlam (Mr. Waddell).

POINT OF ORDER

REPRESENTATION CONCERNING USE OF HOT LINE ON CHINA

Mr. Ian Waddell (Port Moody—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I raise a point of order with respect to the Minister's hot line on China. I do so in a non-partisan way in keeping with the debate that we had in the House last week.

There is a Professor Norman Robinson from Simon Fraser University who is missing in China. He was at the University of Beijing since May 27. He has not been heard from by his wife.

His wife called the hot line. There was a quick response from the hot line in the sense of getting through, but no response afterward. I found out independently that in fact the Minister's Department, as it so often does very well, was making the appropriate enquiries but it had not found out anything. I urge the Minister to consider arranging that his officials inform the families even if nothing has been found out. I think it would be very helpful in the operation of the hot line.

As well, I would hope the Minister might, since he is a House of Commons person, perhaps give a statement later on—

Mr. Speaker: It may very well be that the Minister may want to give a statement. I think in the interests of other Hon. Members who also may want to proceed with the debate, we will have to interrupt the Hon. Member because that point of order is getting beyond being a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Does the Hon. Member for Port Moody rise on another point?

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I think you misunderstood me. I did not mean now. I meant perhaps next week during ministerial statements, the Minister might be able to give a statement on the operation of the hot line and Canadians still missing in China.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): I would like to ask about the business the Government intends to call for the coming week. In that connection and in line with its responsibilities through having the majority of Members in the House, I want to ask the Government what it can do to ensure that the Energy Committee of this House begins to operate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I am informed that the committee has had no meeting whatsoever subsequent to the organizational meeting. Following that, I am told that the Chairman, a Conservative Member elected by the majority of Members on the committee, who are Conservatives, had to withdraw because he did not put in his list of substitutes. Since that time, there has not been a single meeting of the committee. The Chair and Vice-Chair, for some reason, do not seem to be ready to carry out their responsibilities.

I ask the Deputy Government House Leader, if they are not ready to have the committee operate through the Chair and Vice-Chair that they have selected, to co-operate with us and let us get somebody else who will do the job. The energy issue is too important in this country to allow it to be ignored through the committee not operating.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean J. Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) and Deputy Leader of the Government in the House of Commons): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the first question raised by the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), tomorrow will be an opposition day, like today.

On Monday, June 12, 1989, the Government will ask for Bill C-11, an Act to provide borrowing authority, to be reported to the House. At three o'clock, Mr. Speaker, we will also have the report stage of Bill C-2 concerning transportation safety.

Tuesday, June 13, Mr. Speaker, will probably be an opposition day as well.

I would also like to remind you, Mr. Speaker, that the vote that was to have taken place this evening will be postponed until next Monday.

Finally, in answer to the second question of the Hon. Member for Windsor West, it is not customary for us to make deals on the floor of the House of Commons. Nevertheless, we cannot ignore what he said. You are signaling to me to make a deal, to negotiate on the floor of the House. What I can tell him is that I shall go myself to check on what is happening in the Committee on Energy, Mines and Resources and report back. We will have the usual discussions that we should have among ourselves when this kind of question arises. I hope that from now on we will avoid wasting the time of the House of Commons in discussing what we could very well discuss among ourselves, the New Democratic representative, the Government, outside the House of Commons.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I must make an important clarification. The usual discussions among the leaders of the various parties already took place. Because the committee on energy policy has not sat to date, in spite of these discussions, I felt it was necessary, in the interest of this important policy, to raise the question here in the House this week, which is Environment Week.

I ask my colleague to cooperate with me to have the energy committee working as soon as possible.

[English]

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Striking Committee and Chief Government Whip, I would like to correct the record. There have been several meetings of the Energy Committee, including the organizational meeting and several meetings in-camera for the purpose of briefings.

I think Members would be well advised to remember the responsibilities of the Striking Committee, which are to put Members on committees.

There were 49 new Members of Parliament in our Party. There are approximately twice as many committee slots to fill, with fewer Members available. I think it is wisdom, when Members are asked to go on committees, to have a series of meetings, which Members are free to attend or not attend, for the purpose of briefing before they move into substantive examination so that they can make better choices. Whether or not the Opposition chooses to attend meetings is in the hands of the Opposition, but meetings were indeed called, and many of them.

• (1510)

Mr. Allmand: Boloney.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): In fact, there have been two meetings of the committee. To my knowledge there have been four briefing sessions hosted for members of the committee, called by the Department, but they were not meetings of the committee; of those there have been two.

It is my understanding that the Estimates of the Department automatically stand referred to the committee which is charged by the House to consider those Estimates and report back. We have thus far utterly failed to even attempt that. I say "we" because I am a member of this ghost committee.

I want the committee to meet. I do not want to be in contempt of the House. I do not want to ignore the orders of the House.

Mr. Riis: I take it that the Deputy Government House Leader has had sufficient reaction to follow through now and ensure that those meetings begin as quickly as possible.

My point of order refers to an earlier discussion regarding opposition motions on Supply. Since this morning, I have had an opportunity to do some research to see if there have been opposition motions on Supply adopted by the House and motions that were not considered to be motions of confidence.

The record is quite clear that there have been at least 30 occasions where opposition motions on Supply were not considered to be votes of confidence and have seen the vote of the House of Commons. The most recent was on May 14, 1987 when the Government accepted a motion standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). That was the motion to take action to see South Moresby Park declared. That was certainly considered to be not a non-confidence vote in the Government and a vote was held and passed unanimously in the House.

I urge the Government to reconsider some of the comments made earlier that, by definition, it would have to consider this motion to be a motion of confidence. I want to suggest that there have been many occasions when that has not been the case. On this matter asking for an environmental officer of the House and a number of other initiatives, all Members who have spoken have indicated their support. When we vote on Monday next I hope the Government will reconsider its position.

Mr. Caccia: Contrary to what the Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) proclaimed a moment ago, this Parliament has 13 Members more than the last Parliament.

Mr. Charest: I can only note that the Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) is a point of order too late. I suppose we should not be surprised.

With respect to the point made by the House Leader of the New Democratic Party, I can only say to the House and remind myself of the words spoken by the Deputy House Leader this morning in his own remarks when he referred to the nature of the opposition motion put before the House this morning. He stated to you, Mr. Speaker, and to Members of the House that the motion had been designed to be contradictory, or to be a nuisance in some way, shape or form to the Government.

If those are his own words, how can he expect representatives on this side of the House to see the motion otherwise? As things presently stand, we have informed the House of our intention to defer the vote until Monday. We see this as a vote of confidence and we intend to behave accordingly.

Mr. Riis: I appreciate the interjection by my friend and Deputy Leader of the Government. As the "Blues" show, and as Hansard will show, I did not make those remarks. Quite the contrary, I was indicating that this motion is put before the House in such a manner that it would be a non-controversial motion.

The only concern in opposition that I have heard is from the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Clark) when he spoke earlier and was concerned about the time limits. He thought that perhaps there would be some problem in taking action in adequate time. That can always be amended and a few weeks or months can be added, if that is the request.

However, if the Deputy House Leader for the Government is concerned because of the remarks I made earlier, he will see that I made remarks quite to the contrary. The "Blues" show it, and Hansard for today will also show it. I suspect when he sees those words he will have a different view on Monday before the vote.

Mrs. Marleau: In respect to the point of order raised on the Energy, Mines and Resources matter, if the Chairman and the Vice Chairman of the Committee from the Government are not willing to do their jobs, I am very willing to offer my services to chair that committee.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Marleau: Perhaps the members would be far better served to start considering the Estimates on their committee. They might know more about what is going on in the Energy, Mines and Resources field in our country, rather than visiting some country, goodness knows where.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair thinks that we should proceed with the Allotted Day and continue debate.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY, S. O. 81—THE ENVIRONMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Ms. Hunter:

That, in recognition of the importance of contributing to an environmentally sustainable future, it be an Order of the House that:

(1) the Government introduce by September 30, 1989 an Act to require environmental assessment of major federal projects, programs and undertakings, such Act to provide for the appointment of an environmental officer of the House of Commons whose duties shall include the assessment of all practices of the House, and who shall be charged with the responsibility of reporting to the Speaker on ways in which the House can contribute to a safe and environmentally healthy future;

(2) the Government table, within five sitting days of the first sitting day after June 30, 1989, its plans for the safe disposal of toxic wastes; and

(3) the Government table by December 31, 1989 its plans to achieve minimal discharge of deleterious substances into Canadian fresh and coastal waters.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When the House adjourned at one o'clock there were seven minutes left in the question and comment period on the speech of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East. The Hon. Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of the Environment.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Prior to the one o'clock adjournment, the Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) had referred to the Bill introduced into Congress by Congressman Synar. I wish to make it very clear that no Minister of the Government in any way expressed opposition to the Bill. The individual in question who phoned Congressman Synar on June 1, Mr. Ross Glasgow, who is the First Secretary of environmental matters, indicated to the Congressman Synar or his officials, or to whomever he spoke, that the Government of Canada and the Embassy in Washington had no reservations with the principle of the Bill, but did express reservations about the extra-territorial nature of the Bill. That was the difficulty the Embassy officials were expressing. That is the only reservation about the Bill that has been expressed by anyone on behalf of the Government of Canada.

Ms. Copps: I am a little confused. The Parliamentary Secretary states that the Embassy individual involved was not acting on behalf of any Minister. It is my understanding that when the Embassy calls, and in this particular case Mr. Glasgow stated that he was calling on behalf of the Ambassador, the Ambassador is a servant of the Government and he is acting on instructions either from the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) or the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard).

I do not believe that the Ambassador picks up the phone and makes calls, or asks someone to make calls in relation to a piece of legislation, without having first checked on the Government's position with his political masters. The current Ambassador knows enough about government process that I am quite sure he was fully briefed by the Minister of the Environment and the Secretary of State for External Affairs before his First Secretary placed that call.

If I am to understand the Parliamentary Secretary, the Ambassador or the Embassy is somehow acting on their own. If they are not acting on their own, on whose behalf in the Government did they call to express their concerns about the legislation? Was it the Minister of the Environment, or was it the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): The Minister of Environment (Mr. Bouchard) indicated in the House when this issue first arose that the officials in Washington were clearly not acting on the instructions of the Minister of the Environment. He made that very clear during the discussion in the House early last week.

The point I wish to make, and the question I wish to ask, is to indicate that that official expressed support for the principle of the Bill, but expressed reservations about the extra-territorial nature of the Bill. I would like to ask the Hon. Member again whether or not that Hon. Member and the Party she represents does not also share those reservations about the extra-territorial nature of Congressman Synar's Bill?

• (1520)

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Am I to understand that the First Secretary was acting on instructions of the Secretary of State for of External Affairs (Mr. Clark)? I am still confused. If in fact the Canadian Embassy in Washington is making calls to a congressman's office on an environmental matter without first having vetted their contact and having been briefed specifically by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard), then I maintain my original premise that the Minister of the Environment is not doing his job. Remember, this is the Minister who came into office five months ago stating that every government initiative and every project and step taken by the Government would first be cleared through the Minister of the Environment. Now we hear the Parliamentary Secretary saying that a call was made to a congressman's office with respect to a waste management Bill, and the Minister of the Environment was not involved in developing a position on that particular issue. If that is so, then who is developing Canadian environmental policy?

Mr. Clark (Brandon–Souris): Mr. Speaker, it may well be that this question and answer routine is becoming somewhat reversed in the sense that I think I asked a question of the Hon. Member. I asked a very specific question as to whether or not the Hon. Member and the Party that she represents do not share reservations about the extra territorial nature of Congressman Synar's Bill, which was the only reservation expressed by that Embassy official. By the way, I would think that Embassy officials located in Washington do have a certain responsibility to gather information, so that they can report back to the Ministers here in Canada.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, the Parliamentary Secretary was here before one o'clock when I made the position of the Liberal Party quite clear.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: I am sure that the Member from Winnipeg is not interested in the fact that 140,000 metric tonnes of toxic waste is imported into Canada every year from the United States. A lot of Canadians are interested in that issue. That is specifically why I raised the position of a Canadian Government which is currently trying to block a specific piece of legislation in Washington which would put restrictions on the exportation of hazardous waste from the United States. Since Canada currently receives approximately 80 per cent of the hazardous wastes that are exported from the United States, it is my belief that we are rapidly becoming the dumping ground for American waste of a toxic nature and also of a dry nature. We should start putting in place some systems to prevent that. My first line of attack would be to have a bilateral agreement which is at the very least patterned along the lines of the convention that was signed in Switzerland with respect to the international agreement on toxic waste which the United States has not yet signed.

As a second line of attack, there is a Congressman in Washington who is trying to do something in the international arena to prevent American companies from trying to dump their toxic waste on Third World countries and on Canada and the Canadian Embassy and the Canadian Government is preventing that.

My point in Question Period as well as in the continued exploration of this issue is to suggest to the Minister of the Environment and to the Government that at the very least they should be working with Mr. Synar to develop a bilateral approach which will see cradle to grave legislation on both sides of the border so that American companies cannot escape the legal liability, as they are currently able to do, by exporting their waste to Canada, and conversely, so that we Canadians who create toxic waste are ultimately responsible for the disposition of that toxic waste. The only way we will be able to address the horrendous problem of legal and illegal disposition of toxic waste in this country is if we create cradle to grave legislation which puts the onus for the ultimate disposition of the waste on to the shoulders of the company that creates the waste. That is the intention of the Synar Bill. That is why I was somewhat shocked to see the Canadian Embassy in the person of the First Secretary phoning the Congressman's office to express opposition to the Bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Minister of the Environment.

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, the three issues raised in the resolution are all very important. Basically, the objectives set out in the resolution seem to be totally compatible with Government action, and we have even gone beyond them.

First, I would like to talk about the issue of environmental assessment. That very important issue is at the center of most Government concerns and our present problems. Over the years this country with its highly developed economy has launched a large number of energy exploration projects and developed an extremely productive agricultural sector. We are one of the largest food producers in the world. We have built a very strong economy, which has created a lot of jobs but which now requires us to take different measures in order to reverse the negative effects of economic growth.

The assessment part of the resolution seems to have been handled very seriously, since we are experiencing a situation that can be changed with basic assessment legislation.

A number on unknown factors are still to be determined in the current debate. For example, I would refer to the Rafferty–Alameda reservoir construction project which has been stopped by federal court order. We often wonder to what extent the federal Government participates in such projects. For example, the Cree are wondering what role the federal Government should play in addition to what it is already doing in connection with the James Bay project. We have megaprojects which were given the green light after being the subject of assessments. However, others are now being assessed. There is not a single economic project in Canada which must not first be the subject of an assessment procedure.

Since 1984, Mr. Speaker, this Government has implemented the directives issued during the last days of the previous administration. The previous Governement did not have to follow up on those directives and live with them on a daily basis because the whole thing began before the change in Government, before the 1984 general election. We have had to live with these directives for four years—sometimes in an atmosphere of ambiguity and uncertainty—and the federal court has just issued a ruling to the effect that the directives involve legal restraints and ordered a stop to further work on the Rafferty–Alameda site.

Like everybody else we feel it has become urgent to replace these directives which were issued through an order in council and which can be amended by administrative action on the part of the executive branch. Indeed we believe that the directives must be replaced by an act of Parliament. With this legislation there will be an opportunity for a comprehensive approach under which Canada as a whole, following consultations which have already been completed, and of course for Parliament as well, will be able to set up an assessment system which will meet current environmental needs, clarify situations, identify respective roles and allow for inputs from all interested groups. It is essential that this legislation we have in mind should reconcile environmental concerns with economic development imperatives.

The Government, therefore, is drafting such a legislation. Mr. Speaker, I am commited to tabling next Fall a bill which I am finalizing, a proposal which will be submitted to Cabinet early in the Fall, that we may return to the House with a well–drafted if somewhat complex bill which will open the door to a new area of environmental assessment. That is why we just cannot accept a fixed time frame which would compel us to work in a way which would not be consistent with the interests of the situation. This is not going to be a half–baked, short–sighted kind of thing. We want to set up the foundation of a new assessment environmental process, and our commitment for us to do just can be found in the Speech from the Throne. Of course, I can confirm that my Department is currently drafting a proposal for the Cabinet and that no later than next Fall, we will be in a position to provide Parliament with a legislative instrument of major significance.

[English]

The second aspect dealt with by the resolution of the Opposition is about toxic substances. The resolution would like the Government to table within five days of the first sitting day after June 20 the plans for the safe disposal of toxic waste. There is something very strange in this because it looks like nothing has been done on this very important topic. The Opposition should know, and I am sure they do, that we have a law governing the movement of toxic and dangerous goods from the United States to Canada and from Canada to the United States, that this has been doubled by an accord duly signed between the two countries and there are enshrined very tough and strict rules governing the movement and transportation of dangerous goods. The Opposition knows perfectly well that those rules provide for such things as a very precise and detailed notification of the export of contingent goods from the states to Canada or from Canada to the states, so that the provinces and the states are duly notified in advance that toxic materials will be transported in their territory. The states can refuse those exports if they have reason to do so. When they refuse an exportation, they have the right to return the goods to the exporting country.

• (1530)

There is also an obligation to set up a manifest which must contain all the details referring to the export. It is possible for the customs and environmental inspectors at the border to verify if the contents of the truck correspond with the details appearing on the manifest.

The House should also know there are laws obliging countries to provide adequate facilities for the treatment of those toxic wastes. No one can import toxic wastes from Canada or the states without the necessary facilities to destroy them or recycle them.

Much has been said about the fact that the American export of toxic wastes to Canada are greater than toxic wastes to the states. There have been many figures cited, but I suggest it is approximately 140,000 tonnes of American waste to Canada compared to 40,000 tonnes of Canadian toxic waste to the states. The Opposition is correct to hope that at some point we will be able to exclude all possibility of American export to Canada of toxic waste. But we have to be careful and practical. Right now Canada needs to export its own toxic waste to America because in some areas we do not have the required facilities to treat our own material. Let us be practical and responsible. It would be a terrible decision to forbid any import of toxic materials when we have the facilities to destroy or treat them, because the immediate result would be for us to be stuck with stockpiles of toxic materials which we cannot treat or destroy. It would be very damaging and very irresponsible toward public health and the environment to do so.

This being said, we must establish a serious and strong policy to provide Canada with the required facilities for the treatment and destruction of our toxic wastes so we may be in a position as soon as possible to be strict with the importation of toxic wastes.

Let me point out that the Opposition does not mention the fact that the new law enacted last year, the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, gives us all the tools to control the full life cycle of toxic materials. It is impossible for anyone now to introduce into the market new toxic substances without a full assessment by the Government. The Opposition also forgets to remind the people that the Canadian Environmental Protection Act gives us the power to establish a priority list where known toxic substances will be fully investigated and scientifically assessed.

This power has been exercised by the Government. A few months ago I had the honour to sign and publish a list of close to 50 toxic substances that will be analysed in priority. Those are concrete measures and constructive actions by the Government to assure Canadians and Canada that we will get rid of all toxic materials.

We have also announced numerous programs to destroy all federally owned PCBs in Canada, and have provided this program with a $21 million budget.

In Nova Scotia, for example, we launched a $34 million clean-up program of the Sydney tar ponds.

The Government has also been able to benefit from a dialogue with the provinces. We do not fight with the provinces. That is one of the main benefits of this open and civilized policy which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) established four years ago. The provinces are no longer an enemy of the federal Government. They are part of Canada and we can talk with them and work together for the environment in Canada.

One of the main benefits of this is that we now have devised a national PCB phase-out strategy and within five years we will get rid of all PCBs in Canada. As well, a few weeks ago in Montreal we had a meeting with all the Ministers of Environment in Canada, where we agreed to set up a waste action plan to reduce by 50 per cent all municipal waste in Canada by the year 2000. This action is taken without legal fights in the Supreme Court. It is done without political feuds between the different Governments. It is done quietly in meetings with serious people who are talking about the future of Canada and our environment.

By the year 2000 Canada will have reduced municipal waste by 50 per cent. This is very important because Canada holds two infamous records. We are on record as the most wasteful country in the world, more wasteful than the Americans. Canadians are so rich and so used to spending and using material that we produce the biggest amount of municipal waste per capita in the world.

The second terrible record we have is that we are the least recycling country. If we would recycle our municipal waste at the same rate as Japan, for example, we would spare the total number of trees taken in Ontario for one year. We have much to do and this policy is a step in the right direction.

Of course we agree with the purpose and intent of the resolution. The Opposition is perfectly right to be worried about the necessity to tighten and improve our record as far as waste and toxic waste is concerned. At the same time, we must fear demagoguery. We must admit that sometimes some of us in the House are tempted by that demagoguery, and sometimes some succumb.

I deplore the fact that the Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) has succumbed to that temptation today, as she has sometimes in the past. I am surprised that she complains about what was said by this official in our Washington embassy. One of the purposes of that American Bill is to control and devise the specifications of the Canadian sites while giving the American Government the power to send American inspectors to Canada to control our own sites. This young Canadian diplomat thought he should discuss this with our American friends and tell them not to do that.

• (1540)

He said: "This is our country." Canada is not a state of the United States. They cannot adopt a law for us. We have a Parliament to do that. We have great concern for our Canadian environment. We cannot do that alone. I do not understand what the Member for Hamilton East is doing. She is very clever. She is trying to blur the lines of discretion.

The reality is that this young diplomatic read this Bill, and he said: "Well, that does not make sense. I am a Canadian. I am paid to protect the sovereignty of Canada abroad. I will tell the Americans not to do that." He does not need special instructions from the Minister of the Environment to do that. I was an ambassador in France.

The Member from Hamilton East is right in saying that when people are Canadian diplomats who are posted in foreign countries, they must act on instructions, and most of the time specific instructions from the political masters of the Government. Some things are very obvious.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, the day I would have seen a French Bill trying to give French inspectors the right to go to Canada and impose new laws and inspect our facilities, I would not have waited for instructions from a Department, I would have jumped and told them: "Do not do that. This is not your business. This is Canada's business, do not touch our sovereignty." This young diplomat should receive the congratulations of the Member for Hamilton East. I cannot imagine that the Member for Hamilton East would not protest if she were a diplomat. Maybe under a very different appearance, she has great diplomatic talents. I cannot imagine the Member for Hamilton East not protecting the Canadian sovereignty when it is threatened by a foreign country. That is what this diplomat did. I completely endorse what he did.

As far as the purpose of the Bill is concerned—

Ms. Copps: Shame!

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): It is a shame to protect Canada's sovereignty, Mr. Speaker, you have heard what she said.

Ms. Copps: Shame. I will say it again.

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint Jean): It is a shame. The Liberal Party has a campaign to scare Canadians. That Party has told Canadians that we in the Conservative Party were threatening the Canadian sovereignty with the trade Bill. She is crying shame because a young Canadian diplomat has defended Canada's sovereignty in Washington.

This is politics. We all know that. The problem is that we are not dealing with politics now, we are dealing with the environment. When it comes to the environment we should be faithful to our commitments.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the third point of the resolution deals with Canadian fresh and costal waters. The House is aware that 18 months ago, the Deputy Prime Minister defined an all inclusive policy for the Federal Government dealing with the quality of water and Canadian waters. This policy provides for general guidelines which were later refined by the Canadian Council of Environment Ministers. Moreover, last April, we announced that to protect the quality of Canadian waters, we had been involved in the last few months, in fact close to two years in a quality impact study of papermill wastes.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, papermill wastes are responsible for one of the major pollution problems in Canada. Our Government, our Department, together with the provincial governments is carrying out a testing program that will tell us exactly what is discharged by pulp and paper mills into our rivers. We know there are two very serious problems, and I am referring to dioxin and furan, two very dangerous toxic substances. So far, on the basis of the information requested and received from the pulp and paper mills, we know that furan and dioxin levels in Canadian rivers are far too high, sometimes alarmingly so. In some cases, this has lead to a ban on fishing, and in others, I am thinking of the St. Maurice River, for instance, people have been advised not to eat too much of a certain type of fish.

When the testing program has been completed, Mr. Speaker, by the end of 1990 we will be able to draft a set of very strict regulations that will apply to all pulp and paper mills throughout Canada, to control furan and dioxin levels.

We know there is a set of regulations adopted under the Fisheries Act which, since 1971, is supposed to regulate the problem of toxic substances in water, covering the entire range of toxic substances, in addition to furan and dioxin.

The problem is that these regulations are obsolete and do not apply to pulp and paper mills built before 1971, which happen to be the majority as well as the worst polluters.

We are also working on a set of regulations that will apply to all pulp and paper mills in respect of all other toxic substances, and we think we will be ready in two or three years, since this is an extremely complex operation.

Today, in Montreal, I had the pleasure of announcing a very special program which illustrates the kind of action we want to take. We have now entered the age of environmental action. People are concerned, and they want us to give them a sense of direction.

People want to know what governments are prepared to do, how, and why.

Mr. Speaker, this Government is now in the active mode. We have passed legislation, approved regulations, and provided for clean-up programs. Today, I announced that the $110 million for the clean-up of the St. Lawrence is now operational. We have signed a harmonization agreement with Québec, so that Québec can complement the efforts of the federal action plan. Mr. Speaker, concrete action is now the order of the day.

We have all made too many speeches. Everybody makes speeches on the environment. What we need now is action! I hope that from now on, we will only hear about action plans and that such plans will be integrated into a master plan. As I see it, my responsibility as Environment Minister is to respond to these expectations and to translate the concern of citizens into concrete action within a comprehensive plan, which I intend to submit to the Government within the next few months.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Calgary West.

Mr. Hawkes: I am sorry to interrupt the question, Mr. Speaker. There have been consultations among the Parties and I think you would find unanimous consent in the Chamber for the following statement. I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Beaches—Woodbine (Mr. Young):

> That notwithstanding the provisions of Standing Order 45(5)(a), any recorded division on today's allotted day motion be deferred until six o'clock p.m., Monday, June 12, 1989.

I think the Chamber would be well served with that certitude.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the proposal made by the Member for Calgary West. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is agreed and so ordered.

The Member for Beaches—Woodbine on the same point of order.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, on the same point of order that the Parliamentary Secretary raised, the reason that this Party has agreed to this highly unusual process is to allow the Government Members to have an additional four days to seriously give thought to the implications of this motion. Hopefully, in the finest of parliamentary tradition, some brave soul over there will lead a parliamentary revolt against what this Cabinet is apparently trying to do.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments, the Member for Hamilton East.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, in the month of February the Minister announced that he was going to be moving immediately to examine the drafting of new regulations with respect to CFCs. As he will know, CFCs are at the root of some of the problems that we have been having with respect to the ozone layer in the atmosphere.

I would like to ask him what he did between February and June with respect to the CFC regulations.

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, this Government entered into an agreement in Montreal in 1987 to control and protect the ozone layer. The obligation was to the effect of reducing by 1989 the CFC emissions by 50 per cent. I announced a few months ago that not only would we comply with this obligation, but we would exceed it and increase our reduction effort to 85 per cent.

• (1550)

I also announced that if, as we believe, we find alternative technologies and substances that we will be able to eliminate practically all use of CFCs and emissions in Canada by the year 2000. Thus I proceeded to issue the new regulations restricting the use of CFCs.

In this process my departmental lawyers discovered that when Parliament enacted the Canadian Environmental Protection Act last year that a technical problem was introduced into the Bill. This technical problem is to the effect that for a certain number of specific substances, among them CFCs, which are listed in the law, we cannot move to modify the regulations without coming back to Parliament. Instead of proceeding by way of regulation, which is the normal way to do it and which was the purpose contemplated by the law, there are technical problems and we must amend the law. That was told to me by my departmental lawyers and confirmed by the Department of Justice.

I moved to meet my fellow Members of the House. I courteously informed them that I would have to table an amendment and I requested their help. The only answer I got from the Hon. Member for Hamilton East was an inflammatory statement as reported in the papers saying that the Government was inefficient, that it would not move on CFCs, et cetera. That was the answer to a friendly request for collaboration from the Opposition to fight CFCs and to protect the ozone layer. They built politics into their reaction. Thus today they dare to ask a question about it.

Ms. Hunter: Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is on record as having made a commitment that all economic decisions should be environmentally assessed. I would like to ask the Minister's interpretation of whether or not budgetary decisions are economic decisions.

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, that is a grey zone in the assessment process. The assessment process which was in effect under the guidelines four years ago dealt with projects. It is true that policies and programs were also mentioned in the process. What we know is that a court of law recently announced that the provisions to the guidelines dealing with projects were legally binding. Of course, the Government's position is that budget decisions and, mainly, deficit decreasing measures built into the Budget are decisions of the Department of Finance and are located at the core of the Government's sovereignty. It is absolutely certain that no country in the world should or could be able to submit to a prior environmental assessment the definition and the construction of a Budget. The Budget is at the heart of the Government's actions. It deals with the margin of manoeuvre of a Government. It does not have to be preceded by an environmental assessment. The position of the Government is that ERP does not create any legal obligation for the Government to submit to a prior assessment of budget decisions.

That being said, we care for these kind of considerations. We are concerned about them. We know that in some cases financial decisions have economic results. They might also have environmental consequences. This is the kind of consideration we have to deal with in the process of establishing or devising a new law on environmental assessment.

We think that as far as policies and programs are concerned there should also be an assessment process. However, we do not think that this assessment process should be identical to the process dealing with projects.

These are interesting and fundamental questions. They will have to be dealt with by Parliament when we have our debate on the enactment of the new law.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The last question and comment will be from the Hon. Member for Davenport.

[Translation]

M. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I would like to congratulate the Minister for his participation in the environment debate on an opposition day, because it is probably the first time since November 1984 that a Minister of Environment takes part in an opposition day on this issue. I really congratulate him.

I would like to ask him a question following the last one. When is the Government, which the Minister is a member of, going to give the mandate of environmental protection and sustainable development promotion, which ought to be the concern and the mandate of each federal Department? I am not talking about an assessment system, but about a mandate for each Department.

Therefore, I would also like to ask him if he agrees with the spirit and the essence of the policy on energy megaprojects, which are now proposed by his colleague, the Minister of Energy Mines and Resources (Mr. Epp).

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for the kind words he had for me and for recognizing that fact. I think it is very important that the Minister of Environment be present for this kind of debate which gives us an opportunity to go beyond those simple questions and answers during Oral Question Period and to elaborate on the Government's intentions about future projects.

That being said, as for the first part of the question, the interdepartmental committee on environment which I chair does have, I think, the primary responsibility of recommanding to the Government the adoption of new rules for it's decision—making process.

I believe it is important that under the new decision—making framework each department have a basic responsibility with regard to environment. I agree with the Hon. Member that environment should not and shall never be the Department of Environment's only concern. It is a basic concern which goes to the very heart of governmental responsibility, and that must be reflected in the adoption of a new decision—making process which permits each department to play its role to the fullest and to assume its responsibilities. We are aware of the fact that this way of seeing things implies radical changes and that basically what the situation asks for is to make fundamental alterations and mutations to the way governments work. There is need to change drastically bureaucratic attitudes. There is need also, something certainly more difficult, to change political attitudes.

That is the way things are and I intend, in fact I already started, to suggest some amendments and a decision-making frawework to the Cabinet.

On the other hand, the Hon. Member alluded to policy statements on energy from my colleague, the Hon. Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources.

Whether we like it or not, the energy problem goes to the heart of environmental concerns. There will be no environmental solution to the real problems we are faced with, that is the global warming trend and the thinning of the ozone layer, nor will there be any solution to those great issues without going through a new definition of energy policies.

My colleague, who is involved with the Interdepartmental Committee on the Environment, agrees completely with me that energy policies do have immediate effects on the environnment, but more importantly, that they also have long term, effects on the way we act towards our ecosystem and natural heritage. On the one hand, that means that we are experiencing some kind of conflict and, on the other hand, that we must resolve that conflict through daring policies aimed at the future.

So, why this conflict, why this dilemma? There is a dilemma, Mr. Speaker, because we are in a period of economic development dating back in history more that 150 years and, suddenly, we would have to stop this development, to change radically the way the economy works. We know it is not possible, because the impact would be too disruptive and would not allow us to keep people employed, for example. Consequently, we have to make a transition and plan for the future, which means devising an energy policy which would anticipate the development of new forms of energy and would allow for a smooth but strong transition towards forms of energy more respectful of the environment.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will resume debate. A point of order, the Hon. Member for Port Moody—Coquitlam.

[Translation]

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I want the consent of this House. Since the environment is such an important issue, could we put questions to the Minister of the Environment for ten more minutes and get answers from him?

An Hon. Member: He is a good minister!

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the request by the Hon. Member for Port Moody—Coquitlam (Mr. Waddell) to the effect that we would extend the question and comment period for 10 minutes for the Hon. Minister. Is there consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: We will give the first question to the Member for Port Moody—Coquitlam.

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I might say in English, I have a comment and a question.

The Minister mentioned the Environmental Protection Act and he mentioned that we have to work with the provinces. I sat on that committee before he came to the House in the last Parliament for a couple of weeks. The Bill was really a very strong one. The then Minister, Mr. McMillan, changed it quite dramatically because of the objections of the provinces.

I agree we have to live with the provinces because that is our system. The Bill, I think, fell in the cracks between the federal Government and the provinces. The Minister has to watch that. I think the public will demand strong action from the federal Government on the environment because it has real national power and some international clout to act. I ask the Minister to look at that.

I would trade with him in a minute to be the Environment Minister. What a chance he has. What a great portfolio it is. Why is he being a Minister who reacts to things rather than one who initiates? He reacted to the oil crisis. He had to. Suddenly there is an oil crisis there, but he reacted to it. He reacted to the toxic gasoline that was coming in from the United States. We understand that one has to react to crises, but why is the Minister not becoming a Minister who initiates?

Here is a perfect example, as the Hon. Member for Beaches—Woodbine (Mr. Young) has said. Here is a resolution. It is not quite motherhood; I will not call it that or use that expression, but it is almost. This is not a very radical proposition that we have put on the floor today, to reform our own House, our own Parliament, Parliament Hill, to make it environmentally conscious, if you like. We are going to set the trend. Why doesn't he as the Minister say, "We are going to support this. We are going to make it even better. We are going to take this initiative"? He could then be a Minister who initiates rather than reacts.

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, this Government is not a reactive Government. It is easy for the Opposition to nag the Government and say, "Do this. Do that. This is not yet done. This river is dirty. Why didn't you clean up this river last year instead of reacting to our own protests and hesitations?" I do not think this is the way to deal with the environment. Yes, we must be bold. Yes, we must show the road to Canadians. Yes, we must have political courage, and we must prove it not by words but by budget and by tough decisions. Many of those things have been done now. We have much more to do. I understand that. I can understand ordinary Canadians who are watching their TV screens saying, "Well, this Minister, this Government, is reacting to the Valdez crisis."

What else could the Government have done about this crisis? This crisis was an oil spill resulting from an accident which occurred up north involving an American oil tanker in American waters. We monitored the situation for weeks, every hour, almost every minute. We knew what was happening with the oil spill and, happily for us, Canada was spared. What is the meaning of saying this Minister is a reactive Minister because he only reacted to the Valdez crisis? Who on earth could have prevented this accident? The only thing that God is asking from the Minister, as any ordinary man, is to react swiftly to an act of God, sometimes human error, as was the case of the Valdez crisis.

We are bold sometimes and we will be bolder when the Budget allows us to do so. We know we are operating under very difficult fiscal restraints and that we must be responsible for the future of Canada and the financial health of any provincial government in Canada. But at the same time, we will be bold. The Member must understand that sometimes it is very difficult.

In Montreal today, I announced a plan under which a brand new team of 25 people will be set up to cover the St. Lawrence. We have today published a list of 50 companies that are located along the St. Lawrence which pollute that river. These 25 commandos will in a few weeks be investigating each company and defining new norms and technology requirements in order to cut pollution and to establish pollution protocol. The cost will be borne by the companies themselves, amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars.

Representatives from these companies said that this new plan would be very difficult and worrisome. It is. I know that. Everything will have to be done within five years with an objective to reduce the St. Lawrence pollution by 90 per cent. The Government is doing all it can and it will do more. We know we have to be tough. We must not cancel the job.

In my riding there is an aluminum smelter plant which employs 500 to 600 people. It is one of the two major employers in the City of Alma. This plant is not on the list of polluters which was published today, but it does pollute the environment. The Government could close this plant, but it would put 500 or 600 pères de famille out of their jobs. What we must do is to say to Alcan "Well, you have five years to reduce pollution by 90 per cent. We have a fund of $50 million to help you define and develop new technology, but the company will have to pay for the pollution". That is what we are doing, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I too would like to thank the Minister for his participation in this debate today, and I want to ask him this question. A few moments ago, the Minister was talking about his clean-up program for the St. Lawrence River. As he probably knows, I represent an area that borders the river, an area which may be the most polluted on the river. I am talking about Cornwall Island, where the Akwesasne Saint-Regis Indian reserve is located. The Minister is certainly aware of all the pollution problems originating mostly from plants on the American side, in Massena, particularly from the Reynolds plant and from General Foundries, a General Motors plant in the United States.

I would like to know from the Minister whether the St. Lawrence River depollution program he was referring to earlier only includes the Québec part of the river, because often, on the matter of the St. Lawrence River depollution, the reference is to the River in Québec and the Great Lakes in Ontario. There is however a part of the River in Ontario that extends between the Great Lakes and the Québec border, which is my riding and one or two others to the West. Can the Minister tell me whether his program includes the Ontario section and whether his "commando team" as he referred to them himself this morning will also be in my riding and elsewhere? I see the Minister is going through his notes, but if he is not in a position to give me an answer today, would he be kind enough to send that information along, because our area is neither in the great Lakes nor the Québec River; it is that part of the River between the Great Lakes and the Québec border, and sometimes we feel a bit left out in the whole process. I hope this will not be the case this time.

• (1610)

Mr. Bouchard (Lac-Saint-Jean): Mr. Speaker, I promise to provide a list of firms that were identified as the most serious polluters before the end of the afternoon. Unfortunately, I do not have the list with me. I hoped I had, but I will be pleased to make it available to the Hon. Member.

This being said, let me add that indeed it is not good enough to clean-up one part of the St. Lawrence—we must depollute it overall. It is not good enough to clean-up the St. Lawrence River, we should also be concerned with the Great Lakes. One of the facets of the program we announced today would ensure that we can identify the contribution of Great Lake pollution to the pollution of the River.

Furthermore, we as a Government have provided for the establishment of a Great Lakes clean-up plan, which has already been operational for some time; it is now entering Phase II and will be significantly strengthened over the coming months, when we announce corrective plans for specific situations, the 17 hot spots on the shores of Lake Ontario in particular. But let me repeat my promise to provide the Hon. Member with the information he requested.

[English]

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, this motion is very clear. It makes very practical suggestions. They are most desirable at a time when talk about sustainable development is still wrapped in a lot of rhetoric and vague thoughts. I support it. I regret that the Government does not see fit to do so.

In particular, the portion of the motion that is particularly commendable is the creation of a parliamentary commissioner for the environment. That is an excellent proposal.

New Zealand created such a commissioner just recently, as you know, in 1986. We seek your support to make this idea become a reality for the benefit of parliamentarians and of Canadians at large.

In making contributions to environmentally sustainable development, as the motion reads, and actually attain an environmentally sustainable future, we have to examine the structure of Government and the mandate of its Departments. We have to examine its energy policies and incentives to develop the technology to come closer to zero rather than minimum discharge. We have to look at its lack of ecological tax reform in the present tax system. We have to look at the weak enforcement and compliance of environmental laws. We have to look at how we have managed until now and are running the risk now to change in the approach to our forestry, fisheries, soil and water.

Mr. Speaker, I will briefly go over some of these facets of an environmentally sustainable policy then propose amendments at the end.

It seems to me that it can be said, as has been stressed in Our Common Future, the report of the World Commission on the Environment and Development, that an environmentally sustainable future can hardly be achieved if the present mandate of government Departments remains unchanged, because it relegates their responsibility for the environment to one Department, that of the Environment. Regardless of the sincerity and compassion of the Minister of the Environment—and this one has a lot of both—he does not have the legislative mandate to override critical policy recommendations or decisions that are not environmentally sustainable but which are proposed by his colleagues in Cabinet every week, almost every day.

In fact, when he appeared before the Environment Committee a few weeks ago, the Minister himself admitted that while federal projects will be reviewed for environmental impact, what will not be reviewed are policies and programs. Even this afternoon, he confirmed that a Budget cannot be examined from an environmental point of view. I disagree with him. I apologize if I am somehow interrupting his dialogue with colleagues, but I think it is important for this very keen Minister of the Environment to disagree with his own Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) as to the untouchability and independence of the Minister of Finance to come forward with a Budget that may be counterproductive in ecological terms instead of producing one that contains what one could describe as ecological tax reform.

It would help him, as Minister of the Environment, to introduce incentives that he needs, for instance, to improve the quality of water or to remove existing disincentives from the tax system. In effect, he will then have achieved what is the ultimate desire and passion of any Minister of the Environment, which is to transform the Minister of Finance into an environmentalist. That is not bad for anybody.

Mr. Speaker, we all know that very important and far-reaching decisions are made every day by the Department of Energy. This is why we are constantly grilling this Minister on the question of megaprojects.

The same is true for the Department of Agriculture. We know that certain agricultural practices are damaging the environment, particular topsoil and water. The same can be said about forestry. The same can also be said about practices in the past in the fishing industry.

The Minister and Department of Transport make decisions that have far-reaching implications, for instance, on air quality. Perhaps most important of them all is the Department of Finance, to whom I alluded a moment ago. It is through Budgets, through fiscal measures, through incentives or disincentives that exist in the system and which should be examined and where possible, offered or removed to consumers as well as to industry at large.

Mr. Speaker, we can therefore see what I would call the inadequacy of the way in which governments—and not just the federal Government—operate today. It is therefore necessary to change mandates of the Departments so as to spread the responsibility for the environment across the board, to making environmentally sustainable development the mandate of each and every government Department and agency. Every Minister of the Crown and every Department should, in effect, be made responsible for environmental objectives.

The Department would thus be relieved from the competitive struggle with other Departments. It is quite a heavy burden. They would be able to dedicate energy and time to the development of long-term policies, to the co-ordination of activities between Departments, where necessary, and to anticipate and prevent environmental problems instead of reacting to crises most of the time, as my colleague from Vancouver alluded to a moment ago.

• (1620)

There is even a special rule for a Department such as Supply and Services. The Prime Minister's endorsement last year of sustainable development gives this Department of Supply and Services a special mandate. It is one of the largest purchasers of goods in Canada. Does the Department purchase environmentally friendly products? Does it have a procurement policy to purchase recycled paper or recycled oil? At least, is recycled oil given priority when the purchase has to take effect? Does it apply a policy that new government buildings be equipped with the latest in energy and water conservation technology? Is the environmental record of the company that wishes to have the Government of Canada as its customer made a factor in the eligibility of that company for government contracts? If the Department of Supply and Services has developed such a policy, it is the best kept secret in the country.

We all know that global warming is a reality. Not only is it a threat to Canada, but to the entire globe. Energy policies can have other devastating impacts on the environment and will play a key role on whether or not we will succeed in attaining an environmentally sustainable future as indicated in the preamble of this motion.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that energy policy should be the flagship policy of sustainability. At the present time we have the absurd and very alarming situation whereby the Government, while committed to the idea of sustainable development, is pursuing an outdated energy policy which, among other issues, includes the abandonment of any effort in renewable energy promotion research and development. Not only that, but it is committed to the abandonment of energy efficiency as a goal. To make it even worse, it has a commitment to very expensive megaprojects which will increase our dependency on fossil fuels and make carbon dioxide pollution worse. This in turn will add to the greenhouse effect and increase the momentum of global climate warming.

This paradox is captured in the headline of an article in today's Ottawa Citizen. It states: "Fossil-fuel energy vital to Canada's future, Epp says". Toward the end of the article, the Minister of Energy (Mr. Epp) argues that Canada must also reduce emissions of carbon dioxide. He cannot have it both ways. In addition, the Minister proclaims a belief in the market setting Canada's energy policy. Yet he defends $5-billion worth of subsidies to fossil-fuel megaprojects. How can he reconcile those two positions? It is mind-boggling to me. It takes the acrobatic feat of a major performer in a circus. However, here we are dealing with serious matters, and a statement made by today's Minister of Energy who is giving us profound reasons to be extremely worried about him and his policy.

Therefore, it is clear that there is what I would term utter confusion at the helm of the Department of Energy. No one seems to be paying any attention to the Prime Minister's commitment to sustainable development, judging from the behaviour and the statements that I referred to a moment ago. The Minister of Energy, and perhaps Cabinet, seem to have failed to realize that energy policy is environmental policy at its best. It is of particular significance because of its impact on the environment.

Therefore, to give this motion extra teeth in terms of an environmentally-sustainable future, I propose some amendments that will bring energy to the very centre of the thrust of this particular motion. The motion before us calls on the Government to produce a plan to achieve a minimal discharge of deleterious substances into the environment. That is fine.

How can such a plan, desirable as it is and as urgent as the matter is, be successful without ecological tax reform and without powerful disincentives for those who do not comply? It seems to me that achieving minimal discharges for activities inside and, even more importantly, outside the scope of the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, requires the establishment of enforceable national standards. Not guidelines, not codes, but standards. The ability to establish national standards was dropped at a time when the environmental protection Bill was in committee and went through the House last year. That was because of the virulence at that time of the Meech Lake virus. For this reason, paragraph 3 in the motion before us today needs to be strengthened.

In conclusion, the motion is a very good one. The following amendment is offered to strengthen the desirability for the House to support and to approve it.

Therefore, I move that the motion before us today be amended by adding, after the last line, the following:

> (4) Each Department and Agency of the Government review its policies, programs, projects and budgets to determine their contribution to a sustainable future and the Government table, by June 5, 1990, the findings;

June 5, 1990 would be the beginning of Environment Week next year. Keeping in mind that anniversary, the motion further states:

> (5) The Government table, by June 5, 1990, a strategy to reduce by at least 20 per cent Canada's carbon dioxide emissions by the year 2005 based on 1988 levels;
> (6) The Government introduce, by September 30, 1989, amendments to the Canadian Environmental Protection Act to allow Canada to have enforceable national standards to prevent pollution.

Only with enforceable national standards will we be able to get somewhere in doing the cleanup and in maintaining the standards that we wish to achieve in our country.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair will consider the admissibility of the proposed amendments of the Hon. Member for Davenport and make a ruling shortly.

In the meantime, we will proceed to the question and comment period. The Hon. Member for Mississauga West.

• (1630)

Mr. Horner: We all agree with a lot of things that have been said by the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia). We know when we sit day after day and pass legislation that it is not worth a thing if we do not look after the environmental issues that face this country today. However, I think the Opposition is being simplistic about the whole situation. The Member from Davenport has since 1984 doggedly brought up environmental issues. For that, I congratulate him. Mr. Speaker, since you and I were elected in 1984, we have recognized his work in this field. But prior to that the Member for Davenport was the Minister of the Environment. I want to ask him a number of specific questions.

Why were there no specific emission control plans in place and Canadian actions to reduce emissions were contingent upon the United States taking action? Why was there no specific financial assistance to develop much needed new pollution control technology? Why was there no financial assistance available for industry to clean up major emission sources? Why was funding for vital acid rain research, monitoring and communications activities about to lapse? There were many things that were wrong then and that does not make it right now that action is not being taken fast enough. How can he put a time limit on as of June 5, the start of environment week next year, when emissions standards for new cars and trucks had not been tightened in almost 10 years?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I regret to interrupt the Member for Mississauga West but I have counted five or six questions so far. The Member for Davenport will only have six or seven minutes. I would suggest that the Member not ask too many more.

Mr. Horner: I will finish off by saying that I want to know from the Member for Davenport why significant amounts of lead were still being allowed in gasoline in 1984?

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for raising these questions. Since his premise was that we all agree on the motion before us, if I understood him, I hope that he will be here on the appropriate day and vote for this motion since he is favour of it.

To answer these very legitimate questions, let me start with lead. It was the Liberal Government in December, 1983 that launched the reduction of lead to bring it down from .76 milligrams per litre at that time to .29 milligrams. I am glad to say that that measure was continued by the present Government to bring it down further. In this business, we must reinforce each other and not be distracted by rhetoric.

As to funding, we provided in 1981 the funds for the modernization of pulp and paper companies. We felt that was one way of reducing the pollution in our water. As it turned out, that program ought to have been done in a more sophisticated manner but nevertheless it was a form of funding that had the environment in mind.

Who brought through this Parliament the Ocean Dumping Control Act? It was a Liberal Government. Who brought to this House the Arctic Waters Pollution Prevention Act? Imagine, the word prevention was in the name of the Act. It was a Liberal Government in the seventies. Who was it that launched in 1970 a Bill for the creation of the Department of the Environment over which the present Minister now presides? It was Prime Minister Trudeau. Who was it who introduced the Clean Air Act which was subsequently incorporated into the Canadian Environment Protection Act last year. The pioneering legislation was the Clean Air Act and it was passed by the Liberal Government through this House. The same can be said about the law on national parks which was passed for the first time by the then Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs, now the retired Mr. Chrétien, through this House in the late sixties.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caccia: I would not want to be accused of making commercials in the process of answering these questions.

The Hon. Member for Mississauga mentioned car emissions and quite rightly so because we were slow on that. However when the Party of which the Member for Mississauga is a Member came into power in September 1984, we had in that summer started to launch the public hearings that broke the ground for the control policy that came into effect the following year.

Finally, because I do not want to blow too much the Liberal trumpet but this opportunity comes only once in every Parliament, the memorandum of intent on acid rain was signed in August 1980. I don't need to ask you who was in power in Canada at that time. At that time we had President Carter south of the border who was quite receptive and we had very keen public opinion. The Liberal Party was glad to be able to move on that initiative.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Caccia: In March 1984 two things happened in Ottawa that should not be erased from the collective memory of all of us. Representatives of nine European nations that came to Ottawa on our invitation to sign a declaration with Canada that would cut SO2 pollution by 30 per cent by 1993 as a minimum. That was a fine Liberal initiative. This is the last item. It is important to make the point because in the Minister's mind there is this erroneous notion that before 1984, federal–provincial relations were negative.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Caccia: Before you laugh, it was in March 1984 here in Ottawa that seven provinces and the Government of Canada agreed on a joint action on acid rain and to go it alone. I see the Member for Muskoka is in the House. His memory can reach back to when the then Minister of Environment for Ontario, Mr. Brant, and the other six provincial Ministers, agreed with Canada that even though there was indecision south of the border, we wanted very badly to have the Americans come on board with us. Obviously we were assuming a burden on our own rather than jointly with them. It was our hope that they would as long as Mr. Ruckelshaus was the head of EPA. Once he left in despair at his lack of success in convincing President Reagan to move, then it was the seven provincial Ministers, to their credit and that of Canada, that in March 1980 made that commitment to go it alone and to cut by 50 per cent SO2 pollution by 1994.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Debate, the Hon. Member for Lotbinière.

Mr. Maurice Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to take part in the debate on the motion introduced by the Hon. Member of the New Democratic Party, particularly on the provision urging the federal Government to table, within five days of the resumption of the parliamentary session, a plan for the safe disposal of toxic wastes in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, we all know that the handling of hazardous and toxic wastes creates problems with which industrialized nations, including Canada, are anxious to come to grips. We all know it is imperative to set up an effective waste management system, but we must first appreciate the extent of the problem before moving trite and overly simplistic motions such as coming up with a controlled disposal plan within the next three months.

Depending on where it comes from, Mr. Speaker, hazardous waste falls into four categories: (1) by-products of manufacturing processes; (2) consumer products which have become useless or contaminated; (3) residues of dangerous substances accidentally spilled in the environment in the course of transport or storage operations; (4) waste chemicals from laboratories and other specialized institutions.

• (1640)

Among the most common dangerous waste products we include acids generated by metallurgic processes, caustic soda from pulp and paper mills, and oil refining residues. These waste products contain oils, phenol, arsenic, mercury, lead and a number of other chemicals.

There are also such dangerous products as PCBs and pesticides which, owing to their toxicity and lasting presence in the environment, must be subjected to special neutralization or disposal processes.

A simplistic motion does not give us a clue as to how we can achieve the controlled disposal of toxic waste. What we need are sound and logical solutions which will not pollute our atmosphere, our water, and our soil. We must not act with undue haste lest we harm the environment and imperil human, plant and animal life.

What are the environmental and health considerations? Unless they are confined in a space especially designed for that purpose, waste products dumped in landfill sites may contaminate both ground and surface water. We now know that certain chemical substances contained in these products may enter the food chain as a result of being absorbed by plants, which are then eaten by animals and fish. These substances, Mr. Speaker, become increasingly concentrated as they progress up the food chain. This increased concentration in turn increases the risk of biological, physical and physiological changes that may lead to serious problems such as mutations, cancer and sterility, not only in animals but also in man who, as we know, is at the top of the food pyramid.

The answer, Mr. Speaker, as I said before, is not simple. We must see to it that hazardous waste products that cannot be treated or disposed of locally are monitored from their initial appearance as a result of industrial processing until they are treated or disposed of in licensed facilities.

Mr. Speaker, our objective is to switch from the common practice of crisis management to planned management. Canadians must realize that facilities for the treatment and disposal of waste products provide a practical solution. These facilities should not be perceived negatively, especially since current technology provides for efficient and safe operation of well-designed treatment systems equipped with the best possible anti-pollution devices.

So we have the technology for waste treatment and the destruction of waste products by incineration, but the problem is choosing the location of facilities and plants that will receive the end products of the treatment process.

Aware of the reservations of Canadians with respect to this technology, the Department of the Environment, with the participation of the Canadian Council of Environment Ministers, has set up a municipal incinerator testing and evaluation program. Canadian communities have started to consider incinerators with energy-from-waste facilities as a major component of a comprehensive waste management plan. About 16 million tonnes of solid waste is produced in our urban communities every year. Every tonne of garbage, when burnt, produces a little more energy than a barrel of crude oil. At today's prices, Mr. Speaker, this adds up to $350 million annually.

Properly designed and operated, incinerators with EFW can reduce the need for expensive landfill sites. However, since waste products contain toxic substances that may be produced by the incinerator, we must monitor what comes out of these incinerators. We must have very strict standards that require full combustion of waste products, thus minimizing the possibility of toxic emissions.

Last year, the Canadian Council of Environment Ministers published its report on incinerators with energy-from-waste facilities. The report contains recommendations for guidelines and deals with a broad range of subjects, including the design and operation of this type of incinerator. It recognizes also the important role that reduction, reprocessing, recycling and re-use can play in waste management, for a national waste management system must put a particular emphasis on reduction and recycling, the prefered means of keeping dangerous wastes to a minimum.

Our recycling programs are still in their infancy. Only 2 per cent of our wastes are recycled, Mr. Speaker, while Western European countries are recycling 30 per cent of their waste and the Japanese more than 50 per cent. We can now recycle almost 300 000 tonnes a year of waste products, but that would naturally have to increase by 25 per cent every year.

Take for example the Waste Exchange which helps transform one company's waste into another's profits. We believe, Mr. Speaker, that that allows for the exchange of 280 000 tonnes of waste a year, a volume that will increase by 70 000 tonnes a year approximately. The value of raw matter reprocessed this way is of some $10 millions per year. That is a real success if one considers that the annual running costs of the Waste Exchange is only $60 000. Furthermore, the Provinces and the Canadian Government are keeping their firm commitment concerning the efficient and profitable management of waste products.

In July 1985, the Minister of Transport promulgated regulations on the transport of dangerous waste under the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act. Those regulations set national uniform standards for the transportation of dangerous waste, be it by boat, train, plane or truck. They establish a national system of manifests which enables us to keep track of every shipment from its point of departure to its destination. The Act covers only interprovincial and international transportation. All intraprovincial transportation is of course under provincial jurisdiction. The provinces have either adopted all the regulations promulgated under the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act or have made regulations similar to the federal ones.

• (1650)

This is a wonderful example of federal-provincial cooperation that our government continues to promote since environmental protection concerns us all.

Furthermore, in October 1986, in Banff, Alberta, at the meeting of the Canadian Council of Environment Ministers, both levels of government approved a national dangerous waste management plan because they recognize the need to work together in order to make great strides in this area.

The national plan has four objectives. Firstly, to harmonize nationally all dangerous and toxic waste legislation as well as policies and programs, like in the case of the Transportation of Dangerous Goods Act which I just mentioned. Secondly, to reduce the quantities of dangerous wastes which need to be treated, and that is another objective that has been at least partially achieved through the waste materials exchange I spoke about earlier. Thirdly, to promote cooperation in the location and establishment of centralized dangerous waste treatment and disposal facilities. And fourthly, to promote public awareness of the complexity of the problem of dangerous wastes.

But, Mr. Speaker, the federal and provincial ministers have not been idle since their 1986 meeting in Banff. On June 30 1988, the Canadian Environmental Protection Act came into effect. It enables us to regulate all aspects of the life cycle of toxic wastes from their production to their final disposal. That act is something else! As far as the government of Canada is concerned, it serves as the framework for its future initiatives, policies and programs relating to environemental protection. We are prepared to recognize the fact that the legislation is not perfect, that it can still be improved. However, as we learn more about the most efficient ways of protecting our environment, including the best possible waste management system, we will undoubtedly act in the best interests of all Canadians.

The St. Basile-le-Grand disaster, in Quebec, on August 23, 1988, reniforced the federal and provincial government joint efforts to get rid of PCBs in Canada. In September, the federal and provincial Environment Ministers agreed to intensify their efforts to eliminate this type of pollutant.

For one, the federal Minister issued an emergency order, in accordance with the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, to regulate storage of PBC waste. The standards for storing PCB and gaining access to the storage areas are tough, but necessary.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, the federal government announced it would rent two mobile incinerators to dispose of waste containing PCB, in order to destroy as soon as possible the waste stored in federal sites. The renting cost is $21 million. The first mobile incinerator will go to Goose Bay, Newfoundland, where it will start burning off PCB waste now stored in federal sites in Eastern Canada. We will start with 3,000 tonnes of PCB-contaminated soil. Naturally, we work with the people in the communities and hold public meetings to make sure that they understand the need to dispose of all waste contaminated by this very harmful pollutant.

In the next few months, our government will introduce, in accordance with the Canadian Environmental Protection Act, regulations concerning the operation of the mobile incinerators used to destroy PCB waste.

These regulations will relate only to federal facilities and organizations, federal Crown Corporations and federal land and waters.

Last March, representatives of countries from all over the world met in Basle, Zwitzerland, under the aegis of the United Nation Organization on the Environment, in order to put into place a convention to regulate the transport of hazardous waste from one country to another. This is an important achievement because all the participating countries recognize that the environment is a matter of concern for everyone. There is not probably one area in the World which is not affected by the problem of toxic and contaminated waste. We do not exaggerate when we say, Mr. Speaker, that all the countries in the World will benefit from the convention signed in Basle.

At its April 19, 1989 meeting, the Canadian Council of Environment Ministers examined the alternatives to improve the hazardous and toxic waste management system in Canada. All the Ministers recognized the challenges we will have to meet in the present and in the years to come. Therefore they decided to set programs to reduce waste produced in Canada by 50 percent by the year 2000.

Finally, I would like to take a few minutes to mention some provincial projects and programs in the area of hazardous waste management. First, in Swan Hills, in Alberta, there is a centre for the handling, treating and disposing of toxic waste. This centre uses state-of-the-art technology and sets an example for the other provinces.

In Ontario, there is a centre for treating and disposing of inorganic and organic waste. In addition, in recent years, the Ontario Waste Management Society has been getting ready to build and open a centre similar to Swan Hills.

In Québec, the Stablex company handles inorganic waste only. The Western provinces such as Manitoba and British Columbia have set up programs to find appropriate sites to build centres for processing and eliminating hazardous waste. As I already explained to you, the technology is not lacking, but there is no consensus on where to locate the facilities. However, we are making progress, Mr. Speaker, we are making progress!

Even at the municipal level, the authorities are organizing in many communities throughout Canada to have residents get rid of solvents, oils, paints and pesticides that are no longer needed and require careful handling if they are to be disposed of safely. These municipalities bring in special trucks or large containers that are then carried by truck to an appropriate treatment centre. The public does not hesitate to take part in this kind of program to collect and recycle these hazardous substances and materials because Canadians recognize, perhaps more today than ever before, how precious and irreplaceable the environment is.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that I have managed—I hope—to explain that the national plan which the Hon. Member calls for in her motion is not at all necessary and will not be the solution required in the Canadian context.

Our Government has an active role to play in managing hazardous and toxic waste and it is not neglecting its responsibilities. In the years to come, we will continue our efforts to adopt policies, set up programs and pass the legislation and regulations required for us to have an effective waste management system which will be safe both for Canadians and for the environment. The provinces also have their role to play. In Canada, we have a confederation and it is not up to the federal Government to act unilaterally and hastily to impose on the country plans and projects that will not eliminate the problem of hazardous and toxic waste in Canada.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the Hon. Member and I would like to ask him a question because I think that he didn't mention the municipal infrastructure and the need to improve it in order to protect the environment.

For example, in my riding as well as in many others, municipalities sometimes spill polluted waters in our rivers, in the St. Lawrence River, and so on.

Would the hon. Member opposite agree with me that the plan proposed by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) during the last election campaign which called for a joint action by the federal, provincial and municipal governments was an excellent initiative for the environment? And I will give the following example to try to make my hon. friend understand why that is important.

In my riding, near Lancaster in Ontario, or Saint-Anicet if you are on the Quebec side, there is Lake Saint-François which is a broadening of the St. Lawrence River. Lake Saint-François in that region has serious erosion and pollution problems, which could be alleviated by the infrastructure improvement program. Every year serious erosion problems eat away at the shores of Lake Saint-François and increase the lake area.

That problem has caused considerable damage to lakeside property. There is no local solution. A small municipality can certainly not spend thousands of dollars to protect lakeside property. Property owners don't have a solution either. After all, it is the St. Lawrence Seaway passing through the middle of the lake which is mainly responsible for erosion damage.

Would my colleague agree with me that the plan proposed by the Right Hcn. Leader of the Opposition could be used to restore the shores of Lake Saint-François, like I just said, or to improve municipal sewer service, and that the Government should adopt that excellent initiative? Even if the Government were slightly guilty of stealing the Opposition's ideas, we would be willing to give up our copyright, Mr. Speaker, because it would be a good initiative.

What does my colleague opposite think of that idea?

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, as I was just saying at the end of my speech, Canada is a federal state. Just as federal-provincial relations are important, as I think my colleague opposite will realize, federal-municipal relations are even more important, and we have had examples of this.

Mr. Speaker, it makes me think of trying to define virtue. As I said in my speech, everyone is in favour of the environment and environmental protection. But how to do it is another matter!

The Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) in his eloquent talk just told us of the challenge facing us and the complexity of the situation.

When the Leader of the Opposition during the election campaign suggested a plan, he forgot something important—the municipalities' consent. He forgot to consult the municipalities, just as when he was in power himself, he forgot to consult the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, that is one reason why in Québec we have Bill 38 which, as a consequence of the doings of the Liberal Party when they were in power, forbids direct or indirect (federal) intervention in municipal jurisdiction. It is all very well to propose virtue, but you still have to be credible!

What we are proposing in fact— I just mentioned many examples of cooperation, not only with the provinces but also with the municipalities, because since 1984, we have credibility in our relations with the provinces and municipalities. That is why our overall project has the best credibility. There is no question of plagiarizing. There is no magic formula. No extraordinary invention is needed. What is needed is steady work by effective, competent people and by a serious-minded government.

[English]

Mr. Kristiansen: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have had the opportunity to have heard the remarks made by the Hon. Member for Lotbinière (Mr. Tremblay). I believe that he has been a Member of this House since 1984. Thus he was here during the passage of the Parliamentary Relations and Staff Relations Act in June of 1986, almost exactly three years ago. This is relevant to the matter before us today, particularly in respect to the first part of the motion proposed by my colleague from the New Democratic Party who has placed the motion before us today which relates to the appointment of an environmental officer of the House of Commons whose duties shall include the responsibility of reporting to the Speaker on ways in which the House of Commons can contribute to a safe and environmentally healthy future.

I am pleased that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Corbeil) is here since that particular Act, if it were all proclaimed, would fulfil part of the purpose of the motion before us, particularly with regard to asbestos within the House of Commons.

The National Association of Broadcast Employees and Technicians represents some 60 or so employees on the Hill who provide television coverage and the in-house Oasis network information systems that are used by all Members of the House. These employees work literally behind the walls of the House of Commons installing wires in the communications system. As a result of that they get face to face with the asbestos insulation that Governments generally only recognized as a problem just a few years ago. That is to say, the life threatening nature of this substance which the life insurance industry recognized as far back as 1918. It took a long time for governments to catch up.

One of the problems is that when the House of Commons passed Bill C-45 on June 25, 1986, it proclaimed Part 1 of the Act only. The Hon. Member for Lotbinière has said, as previous Members on his side of the House have said, that it takes time to do these things. However, we passed the legislation. Part I has been proclaimed. Part II and Part III which, in particular, deals with occupational safety and health have still to be proclaimed. The legislation is in place. We have been waiting now for three years to protect the lives of people who work here on the Hill.

Just a little while ago workers were working up above the ceilings across from Room 147 in the West Block, which used to be my office before 1984 and which is now the office of our agriculture critic. It is right next to the messengers who service the West Block. Some of the asbestos insulation simply started falling out of the ceiling. These were contractors who had not been advised of the substances they were going to have to be dealing with. Finally, work was stopped in that instance, but in many cases contractors have been brought into the House to do work and are simply not aware of the hazards that exist. Oftentimes when they come with complaints to the responsible officers of the House they are met with the answer: "What is the problem? There is not a problem". Does the Hon. Member know—or perhaps the Minister of Labour at some point on questions or comments can tell us—when we are going to have Part III of the Act proclaimed in order that we can protect the lives and health of people who work for us here on Parliament Hill?

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, my Hon. friend refers to that part of the motion I could not of course oppose. The best proof of that, as he says, is that we passed that act.

Clearly, Mr. Speaker, I am not an inspector myself and cannot determine whether indeed in our own premises there are or are not dangerous goods that could infringe upon the act. But if that were the case, Mr. Speaker, every party of course, every individual would be in a position to use those provisions. Now, he is referring to cases where the inspectors, if they were made aware, did not follow up. The inspectors involved and their comments as experts have not been determined.

So, Mr. Speaker, all those regulations or provisions already are in place. If ever complaints come up they should be filed with the authorities concerned.

SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia) proposed to move an amendment to the motion on the environment which we have been debating throughout the day. I am now prepared to rule on the acceptability of the proposed amendment.

An examination of the wording of the proposed amendment suggests to the Chair that the Hon. Member is attempting to expand and add to the proposition envisaged in the original motion.

If I may remind Hon. Members of Beauchesne's citation 437(2), it is not in order by means of an amendment to raise new questions which should be considered as distinct motions moved after proper notice. With regret, I must therefore rule the proposed amendment of the Hon. Member for Davenport out of order.

Now to the second ruling. Earlier today, the Deputy Leader of the Government in the House rose to object to the wording of the Opposition motion under discussion today on the grounds that a motion which might, if agreed to, become an Order binding on the Government, was out of order.

After deliberation, I am ready to rule on the point of order.

Beauchesne's Fifth Edition at citation 412 says:

> By its orders the House directs its committees, its members, its officers, the order of its own proceedings and the acts of all persons they concern—

It appears to the Chair that there are instances in which the House, in directing "the order of its own proceedings", also gives orders to the Government. Such instances are found in Standing Order 36(8), which directs the Ministry to answer petitions; Standing Order 111(4), which directs a Minister's office to produce documents; and Standing Order 123(1), which specifies that a committee report on delegated legislation, when concurred in, becomes an Order of the House to the Ministry.

The Chair notes that the relevant parts of the motion proposed today involve the introduction of a Bill and the tabling of documents, processes which are, at least arguably, parts of the procedure of the House in the same way as the examples cited above. Furthermore, both Speaker Lamoureux, on March 6, 1973 and Speaker Jerome, on November 14, 1975, have expressed strong reluctance to interfere with the freedom of the Opposition to choose the motion to be debated on an allotted day.

For these reasons, I am also reluctant to infringe this freedom, except in the clearest cases of irregularity. I therefore find that this particular motion is in order.

Before closing, however, I wish to advise the House that this decision should not be taken as a precedent by which any Opposition motion could order or instruct the Government on a particular course of action. The Chair will continue to examine each motion before the House with close attention as to its form and content, and will not hesitate to rule against any motion that it finds irregular.

Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Beaches—Woodbine.

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches—Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, I take great pleasure in having the opportunity today to say a few words about the motion that was put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member from Saanich—Gulf Islands (Ms. Hunter).

The purpose of the motion itself is to embrace the principles that this Government has already accepted, and those are the principles that were put forward in the Brundtland Commission report from the United Nations. The Government itself has said that it supports the thrust of that report and all that this motion is doing is allowing the Government the opportunity to take some concrete action on the recommendations that the Brundtland Commission made on sustainable development.

In the course of the Minister's comments earlier this afternoon, I was encouraged to hear him say that finally this Government will be moving on establishing regulations on the quality of water and, in particular, drinking water.

Several years ago under the Liberal administration, I chaired an environmental task force on the quality of water in the Great Lakes system. I asked the then Minister of Health, Monique Begin, why we in Canada had established a level of what was considered to be safe contamination of dioxins in fish at 20 parts per trillion when the United States established a safe contamination level of ten parts per trillion, 50 per cent less than Canada. The rationale behind the establishment of those standards was that Canadians on a per capita basis ate less fish than Americans. That was the response. Therefore, our bodies could absorb twice as much contamination from fish. That response did not make too much sense to me so I pursued the matter with the Minister and her officials in meetings of the Standing Committee on Health. The Minister repeated the same answer that she had given in the House and seemed to be supported by her officials.

I am of the same opinion today as I was then. I hope someone who happens to like fish understands that if he or she eats twice as much fish as an American he will be in deep trouble. I am pleased to hear the Minister say the Government is finally going to bring in realistic standards based on, I hope, scientific data rather than some figure that someone plucks out of his head when trying to come up with a response to questions from people seriously concerned about the safety of drinking water, particularly in the area of the Great Lakes.

I was less than pleased when I read a report in the newspaper the other day quoting the Minister in committee as saying; "But nobody yet knows how a government can make it happen within its own jurisdiction and not—". He was commenting on how the Government could launch an offensive against pollution of the environment. I found that to be a bit strange, to say the least, for a number of reasons.

There have been a number of proposals made over the years. One of them came from myself and members of my caucus at the time, following the task force to which I just referred that we led in the Niagara region into the quality of water in Lake Ontario in particular, the Great Lakes system generally and the Niagara River specifically.

After we had done that there was a debate in the House on a New Democratic Party motion similar to the one before us today. I asked the House at that time whether I could table that report in the House because no doubt there may be some disagreement particularly from the Government side as to the conclusions arrived at in the report. I felt the information on the environment in the report would be useful to the House when it considers what has developed into one of the major concerns of Canadians, namely, the environmental front. At that time the House agreed to table the report for the information of Members and it was useful. The Minister told me privately that it was useful to both him, his Department and, I assume, to members of his caucus.

Earlier this week our critic for the environment, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), after extensive consultations across the country with Canadians, environmental groups and others, presented a report on his consultations. It is a full document which is very helpful. I found it very informative and it reflected what I heard myself when I joined the Member for Skeena in the Toronto area to hear the delegation express their concerns.

• (1720)

Mr. Speaker, in the interests of adding to the debate in the House, I wish to be helpful and offer to table this report in the House for the consideration of the Minister and Members. If there are no objections from any side of the House, I would indeed be pleased to table this report for the edification and use of Members from all sides of the House on a non-partisan basis.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Young: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what kind of formalities we should go through to do this, or whether the Members of the Government and Official Opposition would consider it a contribution in a non-partisan way. That is the way I mean it to be.

Mr. Speaker, if I could have your attention, I wonder if I could seek the unanimous consent of the House to in fact do that: to table this report on the environment that was put together by my colleague, the Hon. Member from Skeena (Mr. Fulton).

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tremblay (Lotbiniére)): I am informed that it is not up to a single Member to table a document. I regret that there is no precedent for it.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the point that the Hon. Member has made and is asking. He is seeking the unanimous consent of the House to table the environmental report. With unanimous consent, I submit that it can be accepted.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tremblay (Lotbiniére)): I understand quite well that that was the point of the Hon. Member. However, I am informed that the document is not in both official languages. It is the policy of the House that documents to be tabled must be in both official languages.

Mr. Lee Clark (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, perhaps in an effort to be helpful, we might simply note that indeed when the request was made, there was no objection from the House. You might want to defer the request of the Hon. Member to the Speaker on his return. We would certainly, I would assume, be willing to accept that decision. Naturally, I am sure all Members of the House would want to stand by the ruling of the Chair, but there was no objection in the House to the request.

[Translation]

Mr. Boudria: Mr Speaker, I simply wish to reiterate that as far as I am concerned, the document is unacceptable if it is not bilingual whatever the circumstances under which it is tabled. Let me repeat that, and hopefully all Hon. Members are agreed on that. After all, this is an established tradition that should be upheld.

[English]

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the thought would never occur to table a document in this House that would not be in both official languages. I want to make that perfectly clear. It was the intent of the Hon. Member, when he asked for unanimous consent to proceed with the tabling, that it would of course be tabled in both official languages.

Mr. Boudria: Then it is agreed.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière)): Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

[English]

Mr. Young: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I want to express my appreciation on all sides of the House for that courtesy. I know it is unusual and therefore much more appreciated.

Mr. Speaker, when the Minister says that he is not sure whether a Government can really make environmental concerns a major part of its agenda, I think there is a good place to start. For example, on some of the reductions in Government programs already, it would be a good thing for the Government to reconsider the actions they have taken which, in my view, will be seriously detrimental to the advances that were made over the years, small though they may be. They would be seriously detrimental to future advancements on the environmental front.

The Hon. Member from Saanich—Gulf Islands listed some of the program cuts the Government has already made which we would like to see reinstated.

Another thing I would like to refer the Government to is a motion that has been put on the Order Paper by my colleague from Mission—Coquitlam (Ms. Langan) which I would recommend for reading to Members on all sides of the House. It refers directly to possible programs that the federal Government could initiate, such as establishing policies to only use recyclable products.

The Hon. Member from Mission—Coquitlam will be speaking directly after me and will address that more fully. But in the interests of doing something in a very concrete way, I would highly recommend to all Members that we take a look at that particular motion.

Mr. Speaker, I see you are signalling to me that my time has practically expired. I will not take up much more of your time.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière)): I am sorry, but pursuant to an understanding you had with your colleague from Mission—Coquitlam (Ms. Langan) on the sharing of your time, I do now provide for five minutes for questions, after which I shall recognize another Member. So, five minutes for questions.

[English]

Ms. Langan: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I believe the procedural discussion cut into the Hon. Member's time to the tune of about four minutes. It would seem that the Hon. Member should have time to finish his speech.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): I regret, but the information I was left with was that the Hon. Member for Beaches—Woodbine (Mr. Young) had ten minutes, which I even let overrun by a few seconds. Again, I will allow the Hon. Member five minutes for questions.

[English]

Mr. MacWilliam: Mr. Speaker, you have ruled that in fact my hon. colleague had utilized his time at the point where the discussion of House proceedings did in fact take place whereas, with all due respect, I happened to be timing the Member at that point. It was in fact seven minutes and 30 seconds. Given the fact that considerable debate did take place on the point of order that was raised at that point, I would estimate that the time left for the Member was in fact two and a half to three minutes.

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière)): With deepest regrets according to the information available to me I complied with the directions I received when Mr. Speaker left the Chair, and again I will allow five minutes for questions from Hon. Members.

[English]

Mr. Walker: Mr. Speaker, during this debate I have been listening very carefully to the comments of people from different regions of this country. Perhaps I can share at this time, in response to the last speaker, some of the concerns that have been raised on the Prairies about the environmental issues that we have raised directly in our motion.

For example, consider what this Government has done in not following up its promises for the Centre for Sustainable Development. They moved from the language that they are going to be sponsoring this centre into the language that they may be participating. Right now, we have no centre.

Second, right now the Quebec and Alberta Governments are negotiating the transport of PCB liquids and solids from Quebec to in and around the City of Edmonton. That goes through the Provinces of Ontario, Manitoba and Saskatchewan. Where are the Minister of Transport (Mr. B. Bouchard) and Minister of Environment (Mr. L. Bouchard) on that issue? They are silent.

Third, the City of Winnipeg right now has the problem of the Shoal Lake water system being threatened by a mining venture in the middle of the lake. Is there any environmental impact assessment being undertaken by the federal Government? The answer is no. Are they asking the provincial Government to undertake one? The answer is no. They are silent again on that issue.

• (1730)

Another issue facing us in the West is the Rafferty–Alameda Dam. The Government had to be yanked into court by the Canadian Wildlife Federation in order to get it to agree to do an environmental assessment. Lo and behold, what was found out in that environmental assessment? Sure enough, there would be a lot more damage than the Government anticipated, and maybe now it will conduct public hearings into the process.

The Alberta Government has announced that if the federal Government is going to adhere to the stronger environmental protection regulations, it will not allow its forestry industry developments to be influenced in any way, shape or form by those new regulations. In other words, the federal Government cannot convince its close political allies to participate in environmental impact studies when that is the essence of the way that we should be making decisions nowadays.

The federal Government has been very slow to take up on a new project in northwestern Manitoba. A smelter needs to be modernized in Flin Flon. Many jobs are dependent upon it. There is acid rain pollution throughout the central part of this continent which comes from this plant. The Government has been willing to modernize plants in other areas, but has not been able to come to an agreement on this one. It is a very important project for Manitobans.

I wanted to raise those issues in the House in this debate on the environment. We must become very national in our orientation and very sensitive to how the environmental issues affect not only people in large cities, but also people in isolated communities. These concerns are equally important for all Canadians.

Mr. Young (Beaches—Woodbine): I am not sure if the Hon. Member had a question, as much as it was a comment. However, I certainly appreciate the concerns the Hon. Member expresses on behalf of his own constituents, and certainly the people in western Canada.

In the whole thrust of this debate, I do not think there is any strong disagreement along partisan lines in the House. Most legislators have now come to the conclusion that the environment does not belong to us. We borrow the environment from future generations. We have absolutely no right at all to despoil it by our irresponsible actions. That is something that Members on all sides of the House can readily agree with.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Tremblay): Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Mission—Coquitlam.

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Hon. Member for Beaches—Woodbine (Mr. Young) made the very important observation that indeed we borrow the environment from future families, from our children, and from our grandchildren.

I wish to speak to the motion before us today from the point of view of protection of the environment as it begins in the House of Commons. I want to speak about what happens in the House, and what happens in numerous houses in my riding of Mission—Coquitlam.

When I inquired at the House of Commons Printing about having my Householder and stationery printed on recycled paper, I was told there were no Canadian suppliers for recycled paper. In fact, we would have to import recycled paper to use it in the amounts that we need in the House of Commons.

If the House were to put the pulp and paper industry on notice that, on a certain date in the future, the House and the Government would only use recycled paper, the sheer volume of government paper use would have the entire pulp and paper industry clamouring to get the first mill up and running to produce recycled paper in order to get that lucrative government contract.

There are a number of matters that can be raised about the health and safety and environmentally sound practices in the House of Commons. Are the plastic bags degradable that are used in recycling bins in our corridors, in our kitchens, and for garbage pickup in the precincts of the House? Do the kitchens separate paper, bottles, cans, and are they recycled? What about the paint, stains, and glue containers used by the many people who keep the House together. Are they disposed of properly by the House? Then there are the styrofoam cups. They are in every cafeteria. In the Opposition lobby and in the Government lobby surely it is possible for us to be using a more safe and environmentally sound container from which to drink water, juice, or coffee?

In the corridors there are recycle bins for papers. Tricil, the company which picks up all the House of Commons garbage, does not recycle garbage or anything else. We have attempted to check and double-check to see where the recycle bins in the corridors are sent. We have been unable to find that out. I would very much appreciate if, in future, we could be told where the contents of the recycled paper bins in the House of Commons are sent.

Has the Government examined more energy-efficient and environmentally-sound ways to run the buses? Have we thought about natural gas for the green buses that run us around the Hill?

I wonder if it would make some sense for Ministers' cars to be shut off while waiting for Ministers who are in the House, especially during the winter months. I know it might be inconvenient for them to have to put on their coats, but it would certainly be more environmentally sound to put on a coat rather than getting into a warmed up car.

One of the most serious points that clearly illustrates why we need an environmental officer in the House of Commons is the numerous areas within the parliamentary precincts where asbestos materials have been found. My colleague, the Hon. Member for Kootenay West—Revelstoke (Mr. Kristiansen) raised this question earlier today. It was brought to the attention of the Department of Public Works months ago. The response has been that the asbestos will be removed in good time. Walls in this temple of democracy are filled with asbestos insulation. The endless renovations that are going on in this building are being handled unsafely daily. Workers are not protected. The Department of Public Works is not responding in a way that is occupationally healthy or safe.

I now wish to speak about recycling at home in our ridings. My riding of Mission—Coquitlam has the Ridge Meadows Recycling Society. It has won numerous awards for the efforts it has made as a small society toward recycling. Yet, it is a victim of fickle markets, of the lack of interest at higher levels of Government, and a victim of doing a lot of work to recycle paper, glass, cans, and plastic goods and then not be able to have a market. It has to depend on grants from the federal Government, and when possible, the provincial Government just to hang together. That is not good enough. In my view, it does not show Government leadership. It is putting a band-aid on an idea instead of promoting it.

It is time we began to think about requiring producers to be responsible for recycling a portion of what they produce. It is time the Government of Canada made recycling a priority and made it clear to Canadians that recycling is required, and make it clear to companies that they are expected to do their share in recycling what they produce.

It is time that we establish a national waste reduction goal which will see a 50 per cent reduction in waste by the year 2000, and no waste within 50 years.

It is time to introduce legislation that will regulate and reduce packaging used for consumer and other goods. It is possible to purchase endless products that have cellophane over a box over a foil package over individual cellophane packages. Many packages are produced for all manner of products with between three and five layers. Almost all of that packaging material has a long decomposition life and with toxic ink used in printing on every layer. This packaging often has little value except for promotion.

It is time that we develop a cradle-to-grave policy for manufacturers in order to provide a market for goods once they serve their original purpose.

I have spoken of the Ridge Meadows Recycling Society and its work. The work of this society would not be possible if the whole community were not committed to participating and supporting recycling.

In Mission all Grade 5 students have launched an environmental week project to clean up local streams. They are spray-painting symbols of salmon on storm sewer covers in Mission to remind people to think about the kind of waste they are dumping into our sewer system. Next fall they will be working on a salmon fry project. The schools in Maple Ridge are participating in a love a tree project where they recycle the school paper. All communities on the north side of the Fraser River are vitally concerned about the disposal of cedar hog fuel that sits in huge piles along the side of the mighty Fraser River and streams that feed into the Fraser. Hog fuel has a toxic leachate that has a devastating consequence for the aquatic habitat. The people of my riding are looking to the federal Government to move to protect this tidal waterway, and are very conscious of the sensitivity of the environment. They know that protecting the environment begins at home, and they believe they have started. Now it is time for the Government to support their efforts through effective legislation. They believe it is time we set an example and put our own house in order within the precincts of Parliament.

This House has to become conscious and include in its program federal Government procurement practices which encourage the use of recycled materials; in particular that a minimum percentage of post-consumer waste paper be utilized, that there be introduction of legislation which will regulate and reduce the amount of packaging used for consumer and other goods, that there be the establishment of a national waste reduction goal which will see a 50 per cent reduction in waste by the year 2000 and no waste within 50 years and the development of a cradle-to-grave policy for manufacturers in order to provide a market for goods once they no longer serve their original purpose.

Mr. Kaplan: I want to ask the Hon. Member about one of her ideas which sounded like quite a good idea. That is that the Government seek to award contracts for recycled paper as a way of providing an incentive to the Government and to government employees to use recycled paper. What she neglected to mention is that such a contract would never be awarded unless there was some Conservative firm in the country that was in the business of preparing recycled paper. I want to ask her if she has looked into whether there are any Conservative firms in the paper recycling business.

Ms. Langan: I would like to thank the Hon. Member for what I am sure is a tongue in cheek question.

Mr. Kaplan: No.

Ms. Langan: Indeed there are no companies that are in any major way in the recycling of paper business. When you speak to companies, Conservative, Liberal or otherwise which are in the pulp and paper business about recycling, usually the question that is raised refers to the contaminants that leach out of and are the result of recycling of bleached paper and the inks and so on. There is the technology, however, albeit somewhat expensive, to protect the environment from those contaminants and to in fact recycle paper in a safe manner and to save numbers of trees in so doing.

Mr. Boyer: The answer was much better than the question.

Mr. MacWilliam: Mr. Speaker, my colleague raises some very salient points about the difficulties in recycling that we are experiencing right across this country. It brings to mind an incident which occurred in my family in the Ottawa area when my children were visiting here. I think it is a good example of some of the problems that we have. As a parent I try to discourage my children from drinking pop as much as possible but they always manage to get a can of Coke once in a while.

On one of the days that we happened to be touring the Ottawa area, my daughter had just finished a can of Coca-Cola or Pepsi and wanted to return the can. In British Columbia we have a five cent return on the cans. It is the law in British Columbia that if you purchase a bottle or can of pop that in fact the retail outlet that sold you that commodity will in fact take the recycled material back. We found to our dismay, because she came out looking quite perplexed, that in fact there was no refund policy in Ottawa, no refund policy I assume throughout the Province of Ontario. I think it brings to question what is happening province by province across this country. Perhaps it is indicative that the federal Government needs to send a very strong message throughout the country that we do need encouragement of the recycling of our non-renewable resources.
