He quoted St. Paul's testimony of the vorking of the 'n.ystery of iniquity' n his day, and portrayed the apostacy hat led to the awful scenes which arken the pages of history. dent of the Great Republic few will question. And in Mexican affairs he has doubtless acted with discretion. In refusing to recognize Huerta and in scepping in to bring about peace and order in Mexico, he has acted as a wise and strong ruler. If we interpret the Monroe Doctrine rightly, it was the duty of the United States to intervene in Mexico, not only in the interests of her own people but in these of other nations as well. What has happened is only what we have for months been expecting. When Huerta refused all offers of conciliation with Pres. Wilson and in the end captured and imprisoned her marines at Tampico, as well as refusing to salute the American flag when requested, then surely matters had reached a crisis. Orders were given to land the marines and bluejackets, and a few hours later, after a stubborn but short lived resistance, the stars and stripes floated over Vera Cruz. And now foes have become friends (?). Huorta and Villa, beforehand bitter enemies, have now united in defence of their country against the common enemy.
