THE CRIMINAL CODE

(CANADA)

An Act Respecting the Criminal Law

(R.S.C. 1906, ch. 146, and amendments 1907-1918.)

SHORT TITLE.

1. This Act may be cited as the Criminal Code.

Origin]-Criminal Code 1892, 55-56 Viet. Can., eh. 29; draft English Criminal Code as reported 1880 by Royal Commissioners to the British Parliament but not adopted; various Canadian statutes dealing with eriminal law and procedure.

General effect as a Code [-The Criminal Code was intended to make complete and exhaustive provision as to the subjects with which it deals, in so far, at all events, as its provisions relate to procedure. It is explicitly called a code by the first section of the chapter in which it is embodied and its utility as a code will be greatly impaired if it cannot be so considered. R. v. Snelgrove, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 189, per Russell, J.; Vagliano Case, [1891] 1 A.C., 144.

Sec. 16 (Section 7 of the 1892 Code) which expressly makes common law justifications and excuses applicable to charges under the Act, implies that, in the absence of such a provision, the common law was meant to be superseded by the Act or else expressly embodied in it in the terms of a statute. For this reason sec. 999 of the Code is held to provide exhaustively for the cases in which and the conditions under which the depositions taken on the preliminary examination can be used on the trial in the event of the deponent's decease, and that the common law procedure as to this matter has been superseded.

See also notes to secs. 15 and 16.

Citation of Code in other statutes]-In the general Interpretation Act for the statutes of Canada there was introduced, 6 Edw. 7, ch. 21, sec. 6 (now R.S.C., ch. 1, sec. 39), this provision: "any such citations of, or reference to any Act (in any Act, instrument or document) shall, unless the contrary intention appears, be deemed to be a citation of or reference to such Act as amended."

Marginal notes in official text of Code not part of statute1-See. 3 of the Canada statute 6-7 Edw. VII, ch. 43, enacts as follows:

"The Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906, are hereby confirmed and declared to have and to have had, on, from and after the thirty-first day of January, 1907, the force of law as if herein enacted.

The marginal notes thereon, the reference to former enactments at the foot of the sections, and the explanatory notes and tables inserted by the Commissioners, shall form no part of the said Revised Statutes, and shall be held to have been inserted for convenience only, and may be corrected or omitted."

Further it has been said that the enactment itself should be read and not the sense or meaning given to it in a margin note by the official who saw to the publication of the statute. R. v. Battista, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 1, 9 D.L.R. 138 (Que.).

Official text in both English and French]—Where statutes are officially printed in two languages and the text of one version appears to be in conformity with the intention of the legislature, while an ambiguity exists in the other version, the former may be followed in interpreting the statute. Corporation of Coaticook v. People's Telephone Co., 19 Que. S.C. 535.

Juvenile Delinquents]—In cities in which the Juvenile Delinquents Act, 1908, Can., is in operation, any provisions of the Criminal Code inconsistent therewith are superseded as regards such cities. 7-8 Edw. VII, ch. 40 and amendments; 2 Geo. V, ch. 30; 4-5 Geo. V, ch. 39.

Crimes]—The distinction of public wrongs from private, of erimes and misdemeanours from eivil injuries, seems principally to consist in this—that private wrongs, or eivil injuries, are an infringement or privation of the eivil rights which belong to individuals, considered merely as individuals; public wrongs, or erimes and misdemeanours, are a breach and violation of the public rights and duties due to the whole community, considered as a community, in its social aggregate capacity. 4 Bl. Com. p. 5. As defined in Russell on Crimes, vol. 1, p. 1, crimes are:—

"Those acts or omissions involving breach of a duty to which by the law of England a sanction is attached by way of punishment or pecuniary penalty in the public interest." See also, 1 Austin's Jurisprudence, Lecture 17, p. 405.

Federal jurisdiction over criminal law]—Sec. 91, sub-sec. 27, of the British North America Act, 1867, reserves for the exclusive legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada "the criminal law, except the constitution of courts of criminal jurisdiction, but including the procedure in criminal matters." The fact that from the criminal law generally there is one exception, namely. "the constitution of courts of criminal jurisdiction," renders it more clear, if anything were necessary to render it more clear, that with that exception the criminal law, in its widest sense, is reserved for the exclusive authority of the Dominion Parliament. Attorney-General v. Hamilton Railway (1903), 7 Can. Cr. Cas, 326 [1903] A.C. 524.

It is competent also for the Parliament of Canada to declare that what previously has constituted a criminal offence shall no longer do so, although a procedure in form criminal was kept alive. Toronto Ry. Co. v. The King (1917) 29 Can. Cr. Cas., 29 at 34, [1917], A. C. 630, reversing 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 183, 34 O.L.R. 589.

The Canada Temperance Act was, by decision of the Privy Council, upheld on the ground that it might be referred to the general powers of the Dominion Parliament in respect of "the peace, order and good government of Canada." That legislation does not rest upon the execution of Dominion powers with regard to criminal law, although having direct relation thereto. Russell v. The Queen, 7 A.C. 829, 840; Hodge v. The Queen, 9 A.C. 117, 129; and see re McNutt, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 157; 47 Can. S.C.R. 259; 10 D.L.R. 834.

"Their Lordships cannot think that the Temperance Act in question properly belongs to the class of subjects 'property and civil rights.' It has in its legal aspect an obvious and close similarity to laws which place restrictions on the sale or custody of poisonous drugs, or of dangerously explosive substances. These things as well as intoxicating liquors can, of course, be held as property, but a law placing restrictions on their sale, custody or removal, on the ground that the free sale or use of them is dangerous to public safety, and making it a criminal offence punishable by fine or imprisonment to violate these restrictions, cannot properly be deemed a law in relation to property in the sense in which those words are used in the 92nd section. What Parliament is dealing with in legislation of this kind is not a matter in relation to property and its rights, but one relating to public order and safety. That is the primary matter dealt with, and though incidentally the free use of things in which men may have property is interfered with, that incidental interference does not alter the character of the law. Upon the same consideration the Act in question cannot be regarded as legislation in relation to civil rights. In however large a sense these words are used, it could not have been intended to prevent the Parliament of Canada from declaring and enacting certain uses of property, and certain acts in relation to property, to be criminal and wrongful. Laws which make it a criminal offence for a man wilfully to set fire to his own house on the ground that such an act endangers the public safety, or to overwork his horse on the ground of cruelty to the animal, though affecting in some sense property and the right of a man to do as he pleases with his own, cannot properly be regarded as legislation in relation to property or to civil rights."

Commenting upon this in re Richard 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 204 at 216, Duff J. of the Supreme Court of Canada said:

"Their Lordships, it is true, abstain from deciding the question whether the competence of Parliament to pass the enactment can be supported on the ground that it was passed in exercise of the exclusive power to legislate respecting the criminal law conferred by section 91 of the British North America Act, 1867. But it seems to me that there is no good ground for holding that, where Parliament under its power to make laws for the peace, order and good government of Canada declares in the interests of public order that certain acts shall be offences punishable by fine or imprisonment, the proceedings by which such laws are enforced are any the less proceedings in a 'criminal case' because in enacting them Parliament did not formally profess to be dealing with the criminal law."

The Manitoba Liquor Act of 1900 for the suppression of the Liquor traffic in that Province is within the powers of the Provincial Legislature, its subject being and having been dealt with as a matter of a merely local nature in the Province within the meaning of sub-sec. 16 of sec. 92 of the British North America Act, notwithstanding that in its practical working it must interfere with Dominion revenue, and indirectly with business operations outside the Province. (Re Liquor Act, 13 Man. L.R. 239, reversed.) Attorney-General of Manitoba v. Manitoba License Holders' Association [1902], A.C. 73.

In Hodge v. The Queen, 9 App. Cas. 117, where the validity of a local regulation prohibiting the playing of billiards in taverns on Sunday, made under a Provincial License Act, Sir Barnes Peacock said: "Their Lordships consider that the powers intended to be conferred by the Act in question, when properly understood, are to make regulations in the nature of police or municipal regulations of a merely local character for the good government of taverns, etc.. licensed for the sale of liquor by retail, and such as are calculated to preserve in the municipality peace and public decency, and repress drunkenness and disorderly and riotous conduct. As such they cannot be said to interfere with the general regulation of trade and commerce, which belongs to the Dominion Parliament." Speaking of this case, the Chief Justice of Canada, in Huson v. The Township of South Norwich, 24 Can. S.C.R. at page 147, said: "That these words, 'municipal institutions,' do confer a police power to the extent of licensing and regulating was decided by the Privy Council in the case of Hodge v. The Queen."

A provincial law dealing with the prohibition of acts within its legislative authority may impose fine and imprisonment for infraction. Union Colliery Co. v. Bryden [1899], A.C. 580; Cunningham v. Tomey Homma [1903], A.C. 151; Re McNutt, 47 S.C.R. 259, 21 Cau. Cr. Cas.

"Indictable offences" and "offences"]-Every Act (of the Parliament of Canada) shall be read and construed as if any offence for which the offender may be,--

- (a) prosecuted by indictment, howsoever such offence may be therein described or referred to, were described or referred to as an indictable offence; and,
- (b) punishable on summary conviction, were described or referred to as an offence; and, all provisions of the Criminal Code relating to indictable offences, or offences, as the case may be, shall apply to every such offence. Interpretation Act, R.S.C., 1906, ch. 1, sec. 28.

Provincial laws of evidence]—The provincial laws of evidence are made applicable to criminal prosecutions by the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145 in so far as that Act itself or some other federal statute does not make provision.

2. In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires,—

(1) 'any Act,' or 'any other Act,' includes any Act passed or to be passed by the Parliament of Canada, or any Act passed by the legislature of the late province of Canada, or passed or to be passed by the legislature of any province of Canada, or passed by the legislature of any province now a part of Canada before it was included therein;

Origin of sec. 2]—Sec. 3, Code of 1892, 63-64 Viet., ch. 46, sec. 3; 1 Edw. VII, ch. 41, sec. 11; 6 Edw. VII. ch. 4, sec. 4; 6-7 Edw. VII, ch. 8; 6-7 Edw. VII, ch. 9; 7-8 Edw. VII. ch. 10, sec. 4; 3-4 Geo. V, ch. 13, sec. 3.

Same words elsewhere in Code]--Where the same words occur in different sections of the Code they should be given the same meaning unless a contrary intention appears. R. v. Romer, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 23.

CRIMINAL CODE (DEFINITIONS)

Interpretation under prior Code]—Where a judicial interpretation had been placed upon a section of the Code prior to the re-enactment in R.S.C. 1906, ch. 146, without material change, Parliament presumably recognizes and adopts such interpretation. See sec. 7 of the Act respecting the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1906. It would not be safe to draw the conclusion that, because Parliament placed in the revision the section under a different title, it was its intention that the section should receive an interpretation other than that previously adopted by the Courts. R. v. Shing, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 463, 20 Man. L.R. 214.

Interpretation of penal statutes generally]—Beal, on Cardinal Rules of Legal Interpretation, 443, says: A penal statute is to be interpreted, like any other instrument, according to the fair common sense meaning of the language used.

Penal statutes should be construed strictly so that no cases shall be held to be reached by them but such as are within both the spirit and letter of such laws.

If there are two possible interpretations of a penal clause in a statute, one which would mitigate and the other which would aggravate the penalty, we ought to adopt that which will impose the smaller sum.

If there is a reasonable interpretation which will avoid the penalty in any particular case, it must be adopted.

If the words are merely equally capable of an interpretation that would, and one that would not, inflict the penalty, the latter must prevail. R. v. Eaves, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 23 at 32; London County Council v. Aylesbury Dairy Co. [1898], 1 Q.B. 106; Blackpool v. Johnson [1902], 1 K.B. 646.

The Court must see that the thing charged as an offence under a statute is within the plain meaning of the words used: Dyke v. Elliott (1872), L.R. 4 P.C. 184, at p. 191; R. v. Cohen (1915), 24 Cau. Cr. Cas. 238 at 241, 33 O.L.R. 340.

(2) 'Attorney General' means the Attorney General or Solicitor General of any province in Canada in which any proceedings are taken under this Act, and, with respect to the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory, the Attorney General of Canada;

Attorney-General^T—An acting Attorney-General is in a very different position to that of a deputy or agent of the Attorney-General. He is the Attorney-General for the time being, and elothed by statute (in British Columbia) with all the powers and authority of the office. R. v. Faulkner, 19 Can. Cr. Cas. 47, 16 B.C.R. 229, per Macdonald, C.J.A.

(3) 'banker' includes any director of any incorporated bank or banking company;

DEFINITIONS

(4). 'bank-note' includes all negotiable instruments issued by or on behalf of any person, body corporate, or company carrying on the business of banking in any part of the world, or issued by the authority of the Parliament of Canada, or any governor or other authority lawfully authorized thereto in any of His Majesty's dominions, or by the authority of any foreign prince, or state or government, and intended to be used as equivalent to money, either immediately upon their issue or at some time subsequent thereto, and all bank bills and bank post bills;

(5) 'cattle' includes any horse, mule, ass, swine, sheep or goat, as well as any neat cattle or animal of the bovine species, and by whatever technical or familiar name known, and shall apply to one animal as well as to many;

(6) 'chief constable' includes the chief of police, city marshal or other head of the police force of any city, town, incorporated village or other municipality, district or place, and in the province of Quebec, the high constable of the district, and means any constable of a municipality, district or place which has no chief constable or deputy chief constable;

(7) 'court of appeal' includes, as is by the legislature of the said provinces respectively substituted therefor;

(g) in the Yukon Territory, the Supreme Court of Canada;

(8) ' copper coin ' includes any coin of bronze or mixed metal and every other kind of coin other than gold or silver;

(9) 'deputy chief constable' includes deputy chief of police, deputy or assistant marshal or other deputy head of the police force of any city, town, incorporated village, or other municipality, district or place, and, in the province of Quebec, the deputy high constable of the district;

(10) 'district, county or place,' includes any division of any province of Canada for purposes relative to the administration of justice in the matter to which the context relates;

"District" or "county"]—As to summary conviction matters, see also sec. 705.

(11) 'document of title to goods 'includes any bill of lading, India warrant, dock warrant, warehouse-keeper's certificate, warrant or order for the delivery or transfer of any goods or valuable thing, bought and sold note, or any other document used in the ordinary course of business as proof of the possession or control of goods, authorizing or purporting to authorize, either by endorsement or by delivery, the possessor of such document to transfer or receive any goods thereby represented or therein mentioned or referred to;

"Document"]-See sees. 73, 705 (c).

(12) 'document of title to lands' includes any deed, map, paper or parchment, written or printed, or partly written and partly printed, being or containing evidence of the title, or any part of the title, to any real property, or to any interest in any real property, or any notarial or registrar's copy thereof, or any duplicate instrument, memorial, certificate or document authorized or required by any law in force in any part of Canada respecting registration of titles, and relating to such title;

DEFINITIONS

(13) 'every one,' 'person,' 'owner,' and other expressions of the same kind include His Majesty and all other public bodies, bodies corporate, societies, companies, and inhabitants of counties, parishes, municipalities or other districts in relation to such acts and things as they are capable of doing and owning respectively;

"Everyone"; "person."]-" Everyone" is an expression of the same kind as " person," and therefore includes bodies corporate unless the context requires otherwise. Union Colliery Co. v. R. (1900), 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 400, 31 Can. S.C.R. 81. The expression "everyone" is, whether in a legal or popular sense, a wider term than the word "person," and in the case of Pharmaceutical Society v. London and Provincial Supply Association, 5 App. Cas. 857, Lord Selborne says: "There can be no question that the word, "person" may, and I should be disposed myself to say primâ facie does, in a public statute include a person in law; that is, a corporation as well as a natural person." That if a statute provides that no person shall do a particular act except on a particular condition, it is primâ facie, natural and reasonable (unless there be something in the context, or in the manifest object of the statute, or in the nature of the subject-matter, to exclude that construction) to understand the legislature as intending such persons, as, by the use of proper means, may be able to fulfil the condition; and not those who, though called "person" in law, have no capacity to do so at any time, by any means, or under any circumstances, whatsoever."

(14) 'explosive substance' includes any materials for making an explosive substance; also any apparatus, machine, implement or materials, used or intended to be used, or adapted for causing or aiding in causing, any explosion in or with any explosive substance; and also any part of any such apparatus, machine or implement;

(15) 'form' means a form in Part XXV. of this Act, and 'section' means a section of this Act;

(16) 'indictment' and 'count' respectively include information and presentment as well as indictment, and also any plea, replication or other pleading, any formal charge under sec. 873A, and any record :

"Count"]—By sec. 951 every "count" shall be divisible. This includes an information on a summary trial. R. v. Coolen, 36 N.S.R. 510, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 157.

(18) 'justice' means a justice of the peace, and includes two or more justices, if two or more justices act or have jurisdiction, and also a police magistrate, a stipendiary magistrate and any person having the power or authority of two or more justices of the peace;

(19) 'loaded arms' includes any gun, pistol or other arm loaded with gunpowder, or other explosive substance, and ball, shot, or slug or other destructive material, or charged with compressed air and ball, shot, slug or other destructive material;

(20) 'military law' includes the Militia Act and any orders, rules and regulations made thereunder, the King's Regulations and Orders for the Army; any Act of the United Kingdom or other law applying to His Majesty's troops in Canada, and all other orders, rules and regulations of whatsoever nature or kind to which His Majesty's troops in Canada are subject;

(21) 'municipality' includes the corporation of any city, town, village, county, township, parish or other territorial or local division of any province of Canada, the inhabitants whereof are incorporated or have the right of holding property for any purpose;

"Municipality"]—By the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 1, sec. 34 (17), the name commonly applied to any country, place, body, corporation, society, officer, functionary, person or thing, means such country, place, body, corporation, society, officer, functionary, person or thing, although such name is not the formal and extended designation thereof.

(22) 'newspaper,' in the sections of the Act relating to defamatory libel, means any paper, magazine or periodical containing public news, intelligence or occurrences, or any remarks or observations thereon, printed for sale and published periodically or in parts or numbers, at intervals not exceeding thirtyone days between the publication of any two such papers, parts or numbers, and also any paper, magazine or periodical printed in order to be dispersed and made public, weekly or oftener, or at intervals not exceeding thirty-one days, and containing only or principally advertisements;

(23) 'night' or 'night time' means the interval between nine o'clock in the afternoon and six o'clock in the forenoon of the following day, and 'day' or 'day time' includes the interval between six o'clock in the forenoon and nine o'clock in the afternoon of the same day;

(24) 'offensive weapon' or 'weapon' includes any gun or other firearm, or air-gun, or any part thereof, or any sword, sword blade, bayonet, pike, pike-head, spear, spear-head, dirk, dagger, knife, or other instrument intended for cutting or stabbing, or any metal knuckles, or other deadly or dangerous weapon, and any instrument or thing intended to be used as a weapon, and all ammunition which may be used with or for any weapon;

(25) 'Part' means a Part of this Act;

(26) 'peace officer' includes a mayor, warden, reeve, sheriff, deputy sheriff, sheriff's officer, and justice of the peace, and also the warden, deputy warden, instructor, keeper, guard, or any other officer or permanent employee of a penitentiary and the gaoler or keeper of any prison and any police officer, police constable, bailiff, constable or other person employed for the preservation and maintenance of the public peace or for the service or execution of civil process;

(27) 'public department' includes the Admiralty and War Department, and the Ministry of Munitions of His Majesty and also any public department or office of the Government of Canada, or of the public or civil service thereof, or any branch of such department or office;

[As amended by Order-in-Council, February 24, 1917, under the War Measures Act, 1914.]

[§2] CRIMINAL CODE (DEFINITIONS)

(28) 'public stores' includes all stores under the care, superintendence or control of any public department as herein defined, or of any person in the service of such department;

(29) 'public officer' includes any inland revenue or customs officer, officer of the army, navy, marine, militia, Royal Northwest mounted police, or other officer engaged in enforcing the laws relating to the revenue, customs, trade or navigation of Canada;

Public officer]—The phrase "public officer" may be traced to the Fifth Report (1840) of the Commissions on Criminal Law (Eng.), pp. 40, 47 and to Stephen's Digest of Criminal Law, 3rd ed., 82.

A "public officer" is one who discharges any duty in which the public are interested, for which he is paid out of moneys provided for the public service, and must either be a "judicial" or a "ministerial" officer. R. v. Whitaker (1914), 10 Cr. App. R. 245.

(30) 'prison' includes any penitentiary, common gaol, public or reformatory prison, lock-up, guard room or other place in which persons charged with the commission of offences are usually kept or detained in custody;

(31) 'prize fight' means an encounter or fight with fists or hands, between two persons who have met for such purpose by previous arrangement made by or for them;

" Prize-fight "]-See secs. 104, 105.

(32) 'property' includes

- (a) every kind of real and personal property, and all deeds and instruments relating to or evidencing the title or right to any property, or giving a right to recover or receive any money or goods.
- (b) not only such property as was originally in the possession or under the control of any person, but also any property into or for which the same has been converted or exchanged and anything acquired by such conversion or exchange, whether immediately or otherwise,

(38) 'trade combination' means any combination between masters or workmen or other persons for regulating or altering the relations between any persons being masters or workmen, or the conduct of any master or workman in or in respect of his business or employment, or contract of employment or service:

(39) 'trustee' means a trustee on some express trust created by some deed, will or instrument in writing, or by parole, or otherwise, and includes the heir or personal representative of any such trustee, and every other person upon or to whom the duty of such trust has devolved or come, whether by appointment of a court or otherwise, and also an executor or administrator, and an official manager, assignee, liquidator or other like officer acting under any Act relating to joint stock companies, bankruptcy or insolvency, and any person who is, by the law of the province of Quebec, an administrateur or fidéicommissaire; and 'trust' includes whatever is by that law an administration or fidéicommis;

(40) 'valuable security 'includes any order, exchequer acquittance or other security entitling or evidencing the title of any person to any share or interest in any public stock or fund, whether of Canada or of any province thereof, or of the United Kingdom, or of Great Britain or Ireland, or of any British colony or possession, or of any foreign state, or in any fund of any body corporate, company or society, whether within Canada or the United Kingdom, or any British colony or possession, or in any foreign state or country, or to any deposit in any savings bank or other bank, and also includes any debenture, deed, bond, bill, note, warrant, order or other security for money or for payment of money, whether of Canada or of any province thereof, or of the United Kingdom, or of any British colony or possession, or of any foreign state, and any document of title to lands or goods wheresoever such lands or goods are situate, and any stamp or writing which secures or evidences title to or interest in any chattel personal, or any release, receipt, discharge or other instrument, evidencing payment of money, or the delivery of any chattel personal:

Valuable sceurity]—The true criterion as to whether a document is an order for payment of money or only a request, is, whether, if the instrument were genuine, and the person to whom it was directed paid it, he could recover the amount from the party by whom the order was given, or charge it to him, for if such be the case it is an order. R. v. Carter, 1 Cox 172; R. v. Ferguson, 1 Cox 241; R. v. Dawson, 3 Cox 220; R. v. Vivian, 1 Den. C.C. 35; R. v. Steel, 13 U.C.C.P. 619. R. v. Tuke, 17 U.C.Q.B. 296.

A lien note is a "valuable security," R. v. Wagner, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 113. Where the value of the security is material to the offence, Code sec. 4 fixes a mode of determining it, for the purposes of the offence.

A document may be a "valuable security" within sec. 90 of 24 and 25 Vict., c. 96, the Larceny Act, 1861 (Imp), although invalid as the instrument it purported to be; it is not open to persons to obtain an acquittal on the ground that there was a defect in the document which might have made that document invalid if they had attempted to make use of it. R. v. Graham (1913), 8 Cr. App. R. 149.

In R. v. Prentice, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 436, 7 A.L.R. 479, the charge was of fraud in obtaining a "valuable security" to wit, a cheque or order on a bank not shown to be for the entire fund. It was argued for the accused that whereas the opening words of sub-sec. 40 are "any order, exchequer, acquittance or other security entitling or evidencing the title of any person to any share or interest in any public stock or funds, etc., or in any fund of any body corporate, company or society, etc." and it then says: "Or to any deposit in any savings bank or other bank," the use of the words "any share or interest in" in the first case go to show that, these words not being repeated before the word "deposit," the intention was not to cover any share or interest in a deposit, but a deposit as a totality. Beck, J., held this argument not sound. (23 Can. Cr. Cas. at 447). He said: "The expression 'share or interest' does not mean merely any kind of an interest, share being taken in the sense of an interest only coupled with the idea of proportion, but means a share-in the sense in which it is used in speaking of a share in the capital stock of a company-or other interest of a like nature, such as stock, funded exchequer bills, or funded securities guaranteed by the Government. In this view the comparison or contrast is between 'deposit' and 'share or interest.' not 'any public stock or fund'; and 'any share or' other 'interest' of a like nature is then seen to be in the same category as 'any deposit,' and each is a totality in the same sense, and then, as the greater includes the less, and the whole includes all its parts, to both 'any share or interest' and to 'any deposit' may be added the words 'or any part thereof or interest therein.'"

CRIMINAL CODE (DEFINITIONS)

(41) 'wreck' includes the cargo, stores and tackle of any vessel and all parts of a vessel separated therefrom, and also the property of shipwrecked persons;

(42) 'writing 'includes any mode in which, and any material on which, words or figures, whether at length or abridged, are written, printed or otherwise expressed, or any map or plan is inscribed.

"Writing"]—See also the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 1, sec. 34.

(43) 'in Part XII and in Parts XXII, XXIII and XXIV of this Act 'Part III' means such section or sections of the said Part as are in force by virtue of any proclamation in the place or places with reference to which the Part is to be construed and applied; and 'a commissioner' means a commissioner under Part III.

3. For the purpose of this Act a postal card or any stamp referred to in the last preceding section shall be deemed to be a chattel, and to be equal in value to the amount of the postage, rate or duty expressed on its face in words or figures or both.

Postal offences generally]—See Code sees. 3. 207, 209, 265, 364, 365, 366, 407, 451, 510D, 516, 538, 850, 867, 869, and the Post Office Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 66.

Valuable security.

4. Valuable security shall, where value is material, be deemed to be of value equal to that of the unsatisfied money, chattel personal, share, interest or deposit, for the securing or payment of which, or delivery or transfer or sale of which, or for the entitling or evidencing title to which, such valuable security is applicable or to that of such money or chattel personal, the

"Valuable security"]—Sec. 4 is specially referred to in Part XVI, dealing with summary trials, and it is declared in sec. 771, sub-sec. (2), that where the value of any valuable security is necessary to be determined (for the purposes of Part XVI) it shall be reckoned in the manner prescribed by sec. 4. Sec. 773 gives special jurisdiction to certain tribunals where the value of the property stolen, unlawfully received, or obtained by false pretenses, does not exceed $10. A similar condition applies to jurisdiction under sec. 777 (5) and see sec. 782.

Value is also important under sec. 387, where the charge is of theft of something worth more than $200, and it is sought to make the accused liable for the added punishment which sec. 387 provides for such cases,

As to what is a "valuable security" see sec. 2, sub-sec. (40).

Finding indictment .-- Possession .-- Joint possession.

 - (a) finding the indictment includes also exhibiting an information and making a presentment;
 - (b) having in one's possession includes not only having in one's own personal possession, but also knowingly
 - (i) having in the actual possession or custody of any other person, and
 - (ii) having in any place (whether belonging to or occupied by one's self or not) for the use or benefit of one's self or of any other person.

2. If there are two or more persons, and any one or more of them, with the knowledge and consent of the rest, has or have anything in his or their custody or possession, it shall be deemed and taken to be in the custody and possession of each and all of them.

Application of Act to Saskatchewan, Alberta and the Territories.

9. Except in so far as they are inconsistent with the Northwest Territories Act and amendments thereto as the same existed immediately before the first day of September, one thousand nine hundred and five, the provisions of this Act extend to and are in force in the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta, the Northwest Territories, and, except in so far as inconsistent with the Yukon Act, the Yukon Territory.

Yukon and North-West Territories]—In the Yukon the provisions of the Yukon Act are to prevail, see R.S.C. 1906, ch. 63, amended 1907, ch. 53, 1908, ch. 76; 1909, ch. 37; 1912, ch. 56.

By sec. 105 of the Yukon Act, ch. 63, R.S.C. 1906, it is provided that certain persons, including "every commissioned officer of the Royal North-West Mounted Police shall, ex officio, have, possess and exercise all the powers of a justice of the peace or of two justices of the peace under any laws or ordinances, civil or criminal, in force in the Territors."

By sec. 89 of the said Act, authority is given to the Governor-incouncil to appoint police magistrates for Dawson and Whitehorse in the Territory, who shall reside at those places respectively and shall ordinarily exercise their functions there, but who shall have jurisdiction respectively in such portions of the Territory as are defined in their commissions.

By sec. 777 of the Criminal Code, sub-sec. (2), the provisions of the section are made to apply to police magistrates in the Yukon and to judges of the Territorial Court.

But the extended jurisdiction so given by Criminal Code, sec. 777, sub-sec. (2), to "police and stipendiary magistrates of cities and incorporated towns" to try with the consent of the accused, is intended to apply only to a special kind of police or stipendiary magistrate whose official capacity is designated in terms conforming to the statute, and not to magistrates for a whole province or judicial district with merely consequent jurisdiction for a city or incorporated town within the territorial limits. A commissioned officer of the R.N.W. mounted police, not being a police magistrate in the Yukon Territory, has no jurisdiction to try an offence of theft of over $10, and the consent of the accused could not confer such jurisdiction: The King v. Breckenridge, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 116. R. v. Kolember, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 341.

The speedy trials clauses, Part XVIII, secs. 822-842, do not apply to the Yukon Territory or to the North-West Territory. Sec. 822.

For special provisions governing the practice in the present North-West Territories, with the exception of the Yukon Territory, see the N.W.T. Act, R.S.C., ch. 62, secs. 36-59.

R.N.W. Mounted Police]—The Royal North-West Mounted Police force exercises jurisdiction in Alberta and Saskatchewan and the northern part of Manitoba as regards police duties and the enforcement of both Federal and Provincial laws by special arrangement with these provinces. In the Yukon Territory and the North-West Territories the R.N.W. police force is under the direct authority of the Government of Canada, which has charge of the enforcement of the eriminal law in these Territories.

Criminal law of England applicable to Ontario.

10. The criminal law of England, as it existed on the seventeenth day of September, one thousand seven hundred and ninetytwo, in so far as it has not been repealed by any Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom having force of law in the province of Ontario, or by any Act of the Parliament of the late province of Upper Canada, or of the province of Canada, still having force of law, or by this Act or any other Act of the Parliament of Canada, and as altered, varied, modified or affected by any such Act, shall be the criminal law of the province of Ontario.

Adoption of English Criminal law in Ontario]-After the Treaty of Paris in 1763, by which the French possessions in North America were ceded to Great Britain, a Royal Proclamation was issued on 7th October, 1763, introducing the law of England, both civil and criminal, into the whole of the ceded territory, and forming a portion of it, lying towards the East, into the Province of Quebec. The Governor of the new colony received power and direction "so soon as the state and circumstances of the colony would admit thereof, to summon and call a General Assembly," but until this was done, the Governor and council were invested with "authority to make such rules and regulations as should appear to be necessary for the peace, order and good government of the Province." In 1774 the Quebec Act, 14 Geo. III, c. 83, was passed, by which French law was re-introduced in civil matters and the limits of the Province of Quebec were enlarged, so as to include the whole of the territory afterwards formed into Upper Canada. The Quebec Act produced dissatisfaction, especially among the British colonists, and in 1791, the Imperial Act, 31 Geo. III, ch. 31, was passed by which the Province of Quebec as it then existed was divided into the two provinces of Upper Canada and Lower Canada; the powers of the legislation of the Governor-in-council were taken away; and a legislature was granted to each Province, consisting of a Governor, a Legislative Council, and a Legislative Assembly. R.S.O. 1914, vol. 3, p. CXL. 11.

The Legislature of Upper Canada, in 1800, by the statute 40 Geo. III, c. 1, affirmed the introduction of the criminal law of England, as it stood on the 17th day of September, 1792, "and as the same has since been repealed, altered, varied, modified or affected by any Act of the Imperial Parliament having force of law in Upper Canada, or by any Act of the Parliament of the late Province of Upper Canada, or of the Province of Canada, still having force of law, or by the Consolidated Statutes relating to Upper Canada exclusively, or to the Province of Canada." See R. v. Malloy, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 116. That enactment was consolidated in the R.S.C., 1886, c. 144, s. 1 (now Code sec. 10), A similar provision of the Legislature of British Columbia introducing into that Province the English criminal law as it stood on the 19th day of November, 1858, became s. 2 of R.S.C., 1886, ch. 144, (now Code sec. 11).

APPLICATION

The Ontario law dealt with by the Upper Canada statute of 1800 and by the present sec. 10 of the Code makes no mention of ordinances passed by the old Province of Quebec in the few years' interval between the Quebec Act, 1774, and the institution of the Province of Upper Canada, and these ordinances are presumably excluded.

In the Royal Proclamation issued in 1763 it was declared that power had been given the governors of the colonies therein referred to (Quebec, as it was then called, being one) "to enact and constitute, with the advice of our said councils respectively, courts of judicature and public justice within our said colonies for the hearing and determining all causes, as well criminal as civil, according to law and equity, and as near as may be agreeable to the laws of England with liberty to all persons who may think themselves aggrieved by the sentences of such courts in all civil cases to appeal under the usual limitations and restrictions to us in our Privy Council."

The Quebee Act of 1774 (14 Geo. III, ch. 83), it was by s. 11 contained the following: "And whereas the certainty and lenity of the criminal law of England, and the benefit and advantages resulting from the use of it, have been sensibly felt by the inhabitants from an experience of more than nine years, during which it has been nuiformly administered. Be it therefore further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that the same shall continue to be administered and shall be observed as law in the Province of Quebec, as well in the description and quality of the offence, as in the method of prosecution and trial, and the punishments and forfeitures thereby inflicted to the exclusion of every other rule of eriminal law or mode of proceeding thereon which did or might prevail in the said province before the year 1764 anything in this Act to the contrary thereof in any respect notwithstanding."

The "Province of Quebee" in 1774 meant the territory afterwards known as Upper and Lower Canada, and what is known now as the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec.

By this legislation the criminal law of England, at least so far as adapted to the circumstances of the colony, became the law of the then Province of Quebec. This law included not only the common law, but a considerable body of the statute law scattered through various statutes passed from the time of Henry III to the time of George III.

Many Imperial statutes relating to the criminal law which were in force in England in 1764 or the later date of 1792, adopted for Ontario, have since been repealed by the Imperial Parliament; but it would seem that the repeal as to Ontario must be under Canadian law subsequent to the Quebec Act or by an Imperial statute expressly applying to this country.

Vankoughnet, C., in an Ontario case, said: "While I admit the power of the Imperial Legislature to apply by express words their enactments to this country, I will never admit that without express words they do apply or are intended to so apply." Penley v. Beacon Assurance Co., 10 Gr. at p. 428.

In view of the origin of Code sec. 10, it is submitted that the section is to be construed in a like manner as the Quebec Act and the Upper Canada statute of 1880, from which it originates. The words "criminal law of England" will not eover everything which was indictable in 1792 as a crime in England, but will be interpreted in the general way in which the term originally used and so as to exclude statutes, and possibly a part of the common law also, the provisions of which were (to use the words of Robinson, C. J., in Shea v. Choat, 2 U.C.Q.B. 211, "inapplicable to any state of things that ever existed here." And see R. v. McCormick, 18 U.C.Q.B., 131; Code sec. 589, and note to same.

In Shea v. Choat, 2 U.C.Q.B. 211, it was held that the statute 5 Eliz., c. 4, is not in force in Ontario, but the statute 20 Geo. II, c. 19 is, though both statutes are of a date long anterior to the introduction of the English law in this Province. In giving judgment, Robinson, C. J., said, in reference to the 5 Eliz., c. 4, that "it cannot possibly admit of doubt that its provisions are inapplicable to any state of things that ever existed here. A clause here and there might be carried into effect in this colony, or anywhere, from the general nature of their provisions, but that is not sufficient to make such a statute part of our law, when the main object and tenor of it is wholly foreign to the nature of our institutions, and is, therefore, incapable of being carried substantially and as a whole into execution." (Ibid. at 221.)

In Reg. v. Mercer, 17 U.C.Q.B. 602, it was held that 5 and 6 Edw. VI, c. 16, against buying and selling public offices, is in force in Ontario, under 40 Geo. III, c. 1, as part of the criminal law of England, as well as by virtue of the Imperial statute 49 Geo. III, ch. 126. See now Code sec. 162.

The statute 32 Hy. VIII, ch. 9, prohibiting the buying of disputed titles subject to adverse possession, was held to be operative in Ontario. Beasley v. Cahill, 2 U.C.Q.B. 320.

Criminal prosecutions for champerty and maintenance are obsolete in England, and it was recommended by the English Criminal Law Commissioners who drafted the Code upon which the Canadian Code was based, that a statute should be passed declaring them no longer indictable. (Fifth Report, pp. 34-39).

No criminal prosecution of the kind appears in contemporary law reports in Canada, nor is the offence dealt with by the Canadian Criminal Code. But it is a common law offence, and the invalidity of agreements on the ground of champerty and maintenance has been frequently set up on the ground both of the criminality and as being against public policy. See Meloche v. Deguire, 34 Can. S.C.R. 24, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 89.

Pre-Confederation provincial statutes]-A pre-Confederation criminal law of a province becomes, after Confederation, subject to repeal only by the Dominion Parliament; but the distinction between what is federal "Criminal law" and what is a regulation of a local provincial evil to be still dealt with by the province primarily as a matter of civil rights, is to be drawn by reference to the B.N.A. Act, 1867. R. v. Halifax Tramway Co. (1898), 30 N.S.R. 468, Can. Cr. Cas. 424. It does not follow that it remains criminal law for federal purposes because the pre-Confederation statute had treated it as a matter of criminal law at a time when the province enacting it had complete legislative power over criminal as well as civil matters. Ex parte Green, 35 N.B.R. 137, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 182. So also there may be subjects of police regulation which may properly be dealt with by the province until the Dominion Parliament deals with them as part of the criminal law and so overrides the provincial legislation in so far as the two statutes may conflict. Hudson v. South Norwich (1885), 24 Can. S.C.R. at 160; Blouin v. City of Quebec (1880), 7 Que., L.R., at 22.

"Criminal law" as a subject of legislative authority under the B.N.A. Act includes "laws purporting to deal with public wrongs; that is to say, with offences against society rather than against the private eitizen" and not being merely a local, municipal, or police regulation. Ouimet v. Bazin (1912), 46 Can., S.C.R. 502; 20 Can. Cr. Cas. 458. Quong Wing v. The King, 6 W.W.R. 270, 49 Can. S.C.R. 440; 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 113.

Statutes passed by a province prior to its admission into Confederation and which created new criminal offences would remain in effect in that province if not inconsistent with Dominion legislation until repealed by the Dominion Parliament. See R. v. Strong (1915), 43 N.B.R. 190, 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 430, holding a pre-Confederation statute of New Brunswick making adultery an indictable offence, to be still operative in New Brunswick, although the Dominion Parliament had, in 1886, repealed the pre-Confederation statute of the province which dealt with the procedure on prosecution for the offence.

English criminal law in Quebec]—The Quebec Act, 1774, followed the cession made by the Treaty of Paris in 1763, and declared that the criminal law of England should be operative. This introduced the English common law as to crimes so far as adaptable in a ceded territory and also the prior statutory English criminal law with the like limitation, but as to the statute law, sec. 589 now, in effect, provides that no prosecution shall take place under the English Acts (either before or subsequent) unless made applicable in express terms to British possessions so as to include Canada. A decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in 1903 in the civil case of Meloche v. Deguire, 34 Can. S.C.R. 24, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 89, affirms the introduction of the offence of champerty in the Province of Quebee as part of the criminal law under the Quebee Act, 1774. See also Price v. Mercier, 18 Can. S.C.R. 303; Giegerich v. Flentot, 35 Can. S.C.R. 327; Newswander v.Giegerich, 39 Can. S.C.R. 354; Craigv.Thompson, 42 N.S.R. 150. Champerty is not obsolete as a ground for setting aside the champertous contract. Power v. Phelan, 4 Dorion (Que.) 57; Hopkins v. Smith, 1 O.L.R. 659; Colville v. Small, 22 O.L.R. 33, and 22 O.L.R. 426. It has been doubted whether a corporation can be guilty of the common law offence of "Maintenance."

In Oram v. Hutt [1914], 1 ch. 98, Lord Parker, of Waddington, said: "It may well be that a corporation cannot commit the common law offence of maintenance. . . I cannot doubt, however, that an agreement which if entered into by an individual would be void as au agreement to commit an illegal act would if entered into by a corporation be similarly void, and if this is so, payments made pursuant to any such agreement would be ultra vires unless they could be justified on other grounds." In that case it was held that the payment of certain costs out of the funds of a trade union was, in the circumstances, obnoxious to the law of maintenance, and ultra vires.

Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island]—There are no statutes, either Imperial or Canadian, expressly dealing with the introduction of English criminal law in the Maritime Provinces. The English common law as to crime became operative on the settlement of these provinces so far as it was applicable to local conditions. Uniacke v. Dickson, James, 287; Emerson v. Maddison [1906], A.C. 569; R. v. Burdell, 1 Old, 126; R. v. Porter, 20 N.S.R. 352.

For the purposes of introduction of English law, the Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick are considered as acquired by settlement rather than by cession of Acadia under the Treaty of Utrecht in 1713. Uniacke v. Dickson, James (Nova Scotia), 287.

An English colony instituted at a place which was practically unoccupied does not, on being peacefully annexed to the British Dominions, absorb the law of England further than the latter is reasonably applicable to the circumstances of the colony. eight, in so far as it has not been repealed by any ordinance or Act—still having the force of law—of the colony of British Columbia, or the colony of Vancouver Island, passed before the union of the said colonies, or of the colony of British Columbia passed since such union, or by this Act or any other Act of the Parliament of Canada, and as altered, varied, modified or affected by any such ordinance or Act, shall be the criminal law of the province of British Columbia.

Introduction of English criminal law in British Columbia]—By Royal Proelamation the English criminal law had been expressly proclaimed in the colony of British Columbia as of November 19, 1858. English criminal law continued the law of British Columbia except as varied by its colonial statutes down to the union with the Dominion of Canada in 1871. Sec. 11 of the Code is a declaration of its further continuance.

British Columbia was admitted into the union by the Imperial Order-in-Council of May 16th, 1871; see Vol. 4, R.S.C. 1906, p. 3165.

The Sunday Observance Act, 1863, as contained in the Laws of British Columbia Revised 1871, was the law in British Columbia at the time of the union, see. 1 of that Act reading as follows:—" 1. The law, statutory and otherwise, and the penalties for the enforcement thereof, as at present existing and in force in England for the proper observance of the Lord's Day, commonly called Sunday, as referred to in the schedule hereto, shall be deemed and taken to have been included in the proclamation made and passed on November 19, A.D. 1858, and to be of full force and effect in the said colony, with and under the same penalties mutandis in all respects as if the said laws had been specially mentioned and enacted in the said proclamation of the 19th day of November, A.D. 1858."

In the schedule to the Act the following appears:—"29 Car. II., ch. 7, so far as the same is applicable to the said colony." Sec. 53, subsec. 130, of the Municipal Act (ch. 170, 2 Geo. V, R.S.B.C. 1911), being held to be in its nature criminal law and ultra vircs, as beyond the competency of the British Columbia legislature. (R. v. Waldon, 19 B.C.R. 539, 6 W.W.R. 850, 20 Cr. Cas. 405), it may follow that in British Columbia 29 Car. II, ch. 7, is in force as well as the Lord's Day Act (Dominion) (ch. 153, R.S.C. 1906), by virtue of sec. 16 of the latter statute.

The offence of breaking into a counting-house and stealing money therefrom as declared by the English statute 7-8 Geo. IV, c. 29, s. 15, was a part of the criminal law of British Columbia prior to its admission into Confederation, and remains in force under Cr. Code, s. 11, subject to the change made by the Criminal Code as to the nature of the punishment. See Cr. Code, s. 460, re Dean, 48 Can. S.C.R. 235, 3 W.W.R. 1037.

Champerty and maintenance]—The laws of maintenance and champerty as they existed in England on 19th November, 1858, are in force in British Columbia, and an agreement for a champertous consideration is absolutely null and void. The defence that an agreement is champertous and therefore void is open to others than those who are parties to the agreement. Briggs v. Fleutot, 10 B.C.R. 309, affirmed sub nom. Giegerich v. Fleutot, 35 Can. S.C.R. 327; Newswander v. Giegerich, 39 Can. S.C.R. 354; and see cases cited under sec. 10 supra "English criminal law in Quebee," and cases cited under sec. 12, infra.

As to English statutes not expressly adopted in the province and not expressly made applicable by any Imperial legislation, see Code sec. 589.

Criminal law of England applicable to Manitoba.

12. The criminal law of England as it existed on the fifteenth day of July, one thousand eight hundred and seventy, in so far as it is applicable to the province of Manitoba, and in so far as it has not been repealed, as to the Province, by any Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom, or by this Act or any other Act of the Parliament of Canada, and as altered, varied, modified or affected, as to the Province, by any such Act, shall be the criminal law of the province of Manitoba.

Origin]-51 Viet, Can. ch. 33, sec. 1.

Introduction of English criminal law in Manitobal—Champerty as a criminal offence is to be considered as having become obsolete in England prior to 1870, and the older English criminal law of champerty consequently did not become part of the law of Manitoba under the English Law Introduction Act. The latter case was discussed in Thompson v. Wishart, and emphasis laid on the words "in so far as it applicable" which appear in Code see, 12. It will be observed that these words do not appear in sees. 10 and 11, which were consolidated from a different statute.

The Imperial Order-in-Council admitting Rupert's Land (by which name the territories of the Hudson's Bay Company were called) into the union was made on June 23, 1870, and sets forth the deed of surrender made by the Hudson's Bay Company to the Crown, dated November 19, 1869, the text of which is to be found in Vol. 4, R.S.C. 1906, pp. 3143-3163; and see The Rupert's Land Act 1868, Imp., 31-32 Viet., ch. 105.

APPLICATION

The Manitoba Act 1870 (33 Vict., Can., ch. 3) made provision for the organization of the Province of Manitoba from part of the territory so surrendered and the establishment of its local government from and after the passing of the Order-in-Council of June 23, 1870. The boundaries were extended by the statute 44 Vict., Can., ch. 14, and Canadian statutes 1912, ch. 32.

Alberta and Saskatchewan]-When the Provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta were formed by the Saskatchewan and Alberta Acts, the North-West Territories Act ceased to apply to them, as by the North-West Territories Amendment Act passed at the same session of the Parliament of Canada, and which came into force on the same day as the Saskatchewan and Alberta Acts, namely, 1st September, 1905, the words "North-West Territories" used in that Act were changed to mean only the territory north of those Provinces and the Province of Manitoba, excepting the Yukon Territory, but it was by the Saskatchewan and Alberta Acts expressly provided that all laws, so far as they were not inconsistent with anything contained in those Acts, or where those Acts contained no provision intended as a substitute therefor existing immediately before the coming into effect of those Acts in the Territories thereby established into Provinces, should continue in those Provinces as if those Acts had not been passed. R. v. Standard Soap Co., 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 290, at 295, 6 W.L.R. 64.

The Provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan were established out of part of the Canadian territory previously known as the "North-West Territories." This was done by the Statutes of the Dominion of Canada assented to on July 20th, 1905, the "Alberta Act" being ch. 3 of 4-5 Edw. VI. (Can.) and the "Saskatchewan Act" being ch. 42 of the same session. Each of these Acts provides that all Courts of civil and eriminal jurisdiction in the new province shall continue, subject to change by competent authority, and that on the abolition of the "Supreme Court of the North-West Territories" and the constitution in either of the Provinces of a Superior Court of criminal jurisdiction. the procedure in criminal matters which then obtained in respect of the Supreme Court of the North-West Territories shall, until otherwise provided by competent authority, continue to apply to such Superior Court, and that the Governor-in-Council may at any time and from time to time declare all or any part of such procedure to be inapplicable to such superior court.

While the Supreme Court of Alberta has taken the place of the Supreme Court of the N.W.T. in Alberta, it is an entirely different Court, and is not bound by decisions of that Court any more than it would be by the decisions of its sister Court of the Province of Saskatchewan which occupies the same relation to the earlier Court. R. v. Thompson, 1 W.W.R. 277, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 81; per Harvey, C. J.

Effect of Act on Remedies.

Civil remedy not suspended.

13. No civil remedy for any act or omission shall be suspended or affected by reason that such act or omission amounts to a criminal offence.

Origin]-Code of 1892, sec. 534.

Criminal torts]—This section was probably intended to separate the criminal consequences of a criminal tort from the civil consequences, and to abrogate the rule which prevailed prior to the Code that public justice must first be vindicated before a civil action could be brought for a felonious act. Walsh v. Nattress, 19 U.C.C.P. 453; Pease v. McAloon, 1 Kerr (N.B.), 111; Brown v. Dalby, 7 U.C.Q.B. 162; Livingstone v. Massey, 23 U.C.Q.B. 156; Williams v. Robinson, 20 U.C.C.P. 255; Taylor v. McCullough, 8 Ont. R. 330; E—, v. F—, 11 O.L.R. 582.

The effect which the criminal law had upon the tort could be removed only by the Federal Parliament having jurisdiction over the criminal law; but it would still remain for the provincial legislature to decide whether or not there should be any "civil remedy" under a particular state of facts. Sec. 13 does not declare that there shall be a civil remedy immediately exercisable notwithstanding the crime, although that result may follow in most provinces because of their existing civil law. Sec. 13 deals only with the effect of a crime upon whatever civil remedy the provincial law may allow. It still remains for the provincial legislature to declare, if it chooses, the conditions precedent to any civil remedy or to declare that there shall be no civil remedy for a criminal tort. In that view of the matter there is no suttempted infringement of provincial constitutional rights such as was suggested in Paquet v. Lavoie, 7 Que. Q.B. 277, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 314.

If however, the enactment had been of wider scope than the present sec. 13, and had declared that notwithstanding any provincial law to the contrary, the person wronged by a criminal act should have a claim for damages whether or not the wrongdoer were otherwise proscuted, it seems probable that the federal authority would be held to override the provincial law to that extent. See re Location plans and City of Regina 5 W.W.R. 413. The provincial legislative authority as to "property and civil rights" is necessarily subject to such federal legislation which brings a particular civil right within the ambit of the subject "Criminal law and procedure" which the B.N.A. Act assigns exclusively to the Federal Parliament. Compare Code sec. 223 as to the separation of civil and criminal matters and see Toronto Ry. Co. v. The King 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 29, reversing 34 O.L.R. 589, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 183 (as to civil and criminal nuisances). See also sees. 23-26, 29-36, 41-43, 46-64, sec. 314 (2), 734. 1131, 1143-1151.

[§13]

In Manitoba the question of the constitutionality of Code sec. 13 was raised in Attorney-General v. Kelly, 9 W.W.R. 243, affirmed 9 W.W.R. 492, but it did not become necessary for the court to decide the point. It was there held that it is not a positive rule of law or practice that a stay of proceedings will be granted in a civil action until after the trial of a criminal charge based on the same facts; the matter is one of discretion. Attorney-General v. Kelly, supra. If the defendant were within the jurisdiction and willing to be tried by the courts in the regular way on the criminal charge, it might be proper to restrain the civil action at least to the extent of not compelling the defendant to make production or be examined for discovery. Attorney-General v. Kelly, 9 W.W.R. 492; per Richards, J. A.; but the fact that a defendant is out of the jurisdiction and is resisting extradition on the criminal charge will ordinarily be a ground for refusing a stay of the civil action. Ibid.

Distinction between felony and misdemeanour abolished.

14. The dictinction between felony and misdemeanour is abolished, and proceedings in respect of all indictable offences, except so far as they are herein varied, shall be conducted in the same manner.

Origin]-Code of 1892, sec. 535.

Felony and misdemeanor]—As to provisions of the former law which remain unaffected by the Code, the former distinction is still important. So, if a practice as to bail is limited to misdemeanors and the case is not specifically covered by the bail provisions of the Code, such practice will not apply to an offence which but for sec. 14 would be termed a felony. R. v. Fox, 2 O.W.R. 728, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 457; Ex parte Fortier, 13 Que, K.B. 251, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 191.

But a provision in a pre-Confederation Habeas Corpus Act for the prisoner's discharge on failure to prosecute for the felony for which he was committed, has been held to apply equally to a charge of an indictable offence which was formerly a misdemeanor. R. v. H. B. Cameron, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 169 (Que.).

And the consent of counsel for the accused to the use of evidence previously given on the hearing of a charge against another person will be equally effective whether the offence which is the subject of the trial was formerly a misdemeanor or a felony, although before the Code such a consent was legal in misdemeanor only. R. v. Fox, 2 O.W.R. 728, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 457.

Calling the offence a misdemeanor in the statute creating it will not affect a jurisdiction to try the same clearly conferred on magistrates. R. v. Kennedy, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 29, 35 N.S.R. 266.

CRIMINAL CODE (PART 1)

When offence punishable under more than one Act or law.

15. Where an act or omission constitutes an offence, punishable on summary conviction or on indictment, under two or more Acts, or both under an Act and at common law, the offender shall, unless the contrary intention appears, be liable to be prosecuted and punished under either or any of such Acts, or at common law, but shall not be liable to be punished twice for the same offence.

Prosecutions at Common law1-The Code of 1906 amplified sec. 933 of the Code of 1892 in making express mention of the retention of common law offences. Matters of defence at common law had been retained by sec. 7 of the former Code, now sec. 16, but the question of punishment for offences declared by statute without express mention of a penalty, and the question of possible common law offences not covered by the penal clauses of the Code were left open for judicial determination. The English draft Criminal Code had contained a clause expressly abrogating the common law with respect to criminal offences so that, if it had passed, a prosecution could not be laid if it should develop that some class of common law offence had not been provided for in the Code. The draft Code did not become law in England, there being strong opposition on the part of the judges who were asked to report on it, to this proposed abrogation of the common law. Pollock, C.B., said he had "no such confidence in the sagacity of any man or any set of men as to expect that every contingency be provided for." The Canadian Parliament left out this objectionable clause of the English draft Code in formulating the Canadian Criminal Code of 1892 and furthermore enacted what is now sec. 16 as to matters of defence or of justification or excuse under the rules and principles of common law. This was followed by several judicial decisions on the point.

In Union Colliery Co. v. The Queen, 31 Can. S.C.R. 81, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 400, it was said that Parliament never intended to repeal the common law, except in so far as the Code either expressly or by implication repeals it. So that if the facts stated in an indictment constitute an indictable offence at common law, and that offence is not dealt with in the Code, then unquestionably an indictment will lie at common law; and even if the offence has been dealt with in the Code, but merely by way of statement of what is law, then both are in force. Union Colliery Co. v. The Queen, per Sedgewick, J.

In Ontario it was held that the common law jurisdiction as to crime was still operative, notwithstanding the Code of 1892, and even in cases provided for by the Code, unless there was such repugnancy as to give prevalence to the latter law. R. v. Cole (1902), 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 330, 3 O.L.R. 389.

In Nova Scotia it was held that the Code of 1892 was intended to make complete and exhaustive provision as to the subjects with which it dealt, in so far, at all events, as its provisions related to procedure. R. v. Snelgrove, 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 189, 39 N.S.R. 400.

As to common law offences not included in the Code, the right of prosecution is founded on the omission from the Code of any clause abrogating the common law in such manner as was proposed by the English draft Code. Sec. 15 refers in terms only to such common law offences as are provided for in the Code or in some other statute, and this for the purpose of declaring that the offender may be punished either at common law or under the particular statute dealing with it. But an important qualification is added and that is that the alternative remedy shall not apply if a contrary intention appears. The Code will prevail over the common law wherever there is a repugnancy. R. v. Cole (1902), 3 O.L.R. 389, 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 330; R. v. Walkem, 14 B.C.R. 7, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 122. And as between different statutes, the law which is later in date, as well as later in position in the statute book, must, in case of inconsistency or repugnancy, prevail against the earlier in time and place; per Boyd, C., in R. v. Rose, 27 O.R. 195.

The criminal common law of England is still in force in Canada except in so far as repealed either expressly or by implication. Brousseau v. The King (1917), 56 S.C.R. 22.

Defences available at common law]-See sec. 16.

For the same offence]—In R. v. Pope, 5 W.W.R. 1070, 7 A.L.R. 169, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 327, Stuart, J, said:

"With respect to see, 15 of the Code which says that a man shall not be punished twice for the same offence we have the high authority of Archbold (24th ed., p. 177), for the view which. I think, is the correct one, that this means, "for the same act or omission." Referring to the parallel English statute Archbold says: "Perhaps the enactment would have been clearer if, for the word 'offence' at the end had been substituted the words 'act or omission.' But it does no more than extend to statutory offences the common law rule laid down in The Queen x. Miles, 24 Q.B.D. 423." And see Reg. v. Grimwood, 60 J.P. 809, Code see, 907.

. Sec. 1079 declares that when any person convicted of any offence has paid the penalty or undergone the punishment awarded he shall be released from all "further or other" criminal proceedings for the same "cause."

Defences of antrefois convict or antrefois acquit for substantially the same offence]—See Code sees. 906 and 907.

Justification or Excuse.

Common law rule in force.

All rules and principles of the common law which render any circumstances a justification or excuse for any act, or a defence to any charge, shall remain in force and be applicable to any defence to a charge under this Act except in so far as they are hereby altered or are inconsistent herewith.

Origin]-Sec. 7, Code of 1892.

Except in so far as altered, etc.]—The exception at the end of Code see. 16 is specially referred to in R. v. Bonner (1913), 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 442, 447, per Martin, J. A., in support of the proposition that dangerous explosions otherwise within Code see. 111 are not excused by the fact that the property injured belonged to the accused.

"Without lawful excuse."]-Some offences under the Code are expressly qualified in the enacting clauses by appending the limitative words "without lawful excuse" to the description of the act or neglect which is to be penalized. Were the jurisdiction in civil and criminal matters vested in the same legislature such a limitation would appear superfluous for an act could not be lawful and criminal at the same time. But with the division of legislative authority under the Canadian constitution it will be seen that the matters of justification or excuse referred to under Code sec. 16 and following sections may not cover certain matters which may be justified under provincial law and which it is not desired to make crimes under the supervening powers of the Dominion Parliament as to criminal law. As to such the limitation of the offence by the words "without lawful excuse" would involve a consideration of provincial statutory law. Under Code sec. 229, for example, it is an offence to be found in a disorderly house "without lawful excuse." The defence may presumably set up not only circumstances which would at common law justify his presence in the house but show that he was rightfully there in pursuance of a duty imposed under municipal or provincial authority, for example, a sanitary officer on inspecting the premises under a Public Health law or ordinance. The words "without lawful excuse" will be found in Code secs. 229, 237, 241, 242, 243, 244, 246, 247, 248, 252. Compulsion from necessity arising from hunger does not excuse a crime. R. v. Dudley (1884), 14 Q.B.D. 273; compare R. v. Stratton, 21 St. Trials, 1040 at 1223, 1230.

Common law jurisdiction]—The common law jurisdiction as to crime is still operative notwithstanding the Code, and even in cases provided for by the Code, unless there is such repugnancy as to give prevalence to the latter law. R. v. Cole, 3 O.L.R. 389, 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 330; R. v. Walkem, 14 B.C.R. 7.

Legal incapacity for crime]—This is in accordance with the common law under which a child under the age of seven years is doli incapax and no evidence was admissible to rebut that presumption. Marsh v. Loader, 14 C.B.N.S. 535.

Children between seven and thirteen.

18. No person shall be convicted of an offence by reason of an act or omission of such person when of the age of seven, but under the age of fourteen years, unless he was competent to know the nature and consequences of his conduct, and to appreciate that it was wrong.

Origin]-Sec. 10, Code of 1892.

Child between seven and fourteen]—Sec. 18 deals only with the mental capacity of the child to distinguish between right and wrong. R. v. Hartlen, 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 12 (N.S.). Sec. 298 specially provides that no one under the age of fourteen can be guilty of rape. As to other sexual offences, see secs. 202-206, 292-294.

The evidence of malice, which is to supply age should be strong and clear beyond all doubt and contradiction; but if it appear to the Court and jury that the offender was doli capax and could discern between good and evil, he may be convicted. 1 Russell on Crimes, 6th ed., 115; Roscoe's Crim. Evidence, 12th ed., 856; R. v. Waite [1892], 2 Q.B. 600.

A charge of perjury cannot be sustained against a child under fourteen without proof of guilty knowledge of wrong doing. Code sec. 18 has not changed the common law which presumed against guilty knowledge where the accused was under the age of fourteen. R. v. Carvery, 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 331.

Juvenile Courts]—Where Juvenile Courts have been established under the Juvenile Delinquents Act, Can., 1908, ch. 40 as amended by 1912, ch. 30 and 1914, ch. 39, its provisions will control as to trials of children under sixteen years of age.

19. No person shall be convicted of an offence by reason of an act done or omitted by him when labouring under natural imbecility, or disease of the mind, to such an extent as to render him incapable of appreciating the nature and quality of the act or omission, and of knowing that such an act or omission was wrong.

2. A person labouring under specific delusions, but in other respects sane, shall not be acquitted on the ground of insanity, under the provisions hereinafter contained, unless the delusions caused him to believe in the existence of some state of things which, if it existed, would justify or excuse his act or omission.

 Every one shall be presumed to be same at the time of doing or omitting to do any act until the contrary is proved.

Defence of insanity1—It is for the defence to prove that the accused was not same at the time of committing the acts. R. v. Coelho (1914), 10 Cr. App. R. 210; R. v. Hawkes, 9 W.W.R. 445, 32 W.L.R. 720, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 29; McNaughten's case, 10 Clark & F., 200.

The proof is to be by a preponderance of evidence to the satisfaction of the jury. R. v. Anderson, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 455; R. v. Jefferson, I Cr. App. R., 95.

It is misdirection to say that the defence must be made out beyond a reasonable doubt. R. v. Anderson, supra; and see R. v. Myshrall, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 474.

The rule laid down by the judges in reply to a question put to them by the House of Lords, in McNaghten's Case (1843), 4 St. Tr. N.S. 847, 10 Clark & F. 200, 1 Car. & K. 130, was as follows: "Notwithstanding the party accused did the act complained of, with a view, under the influence of insane delusion, of redressing or revenging some supposed grievance or injury, or of producing some public benefit, he is nevertheless punishable, according to the nature of the crime committedif he knew at the time of committing such crime that he was acting contrary to law; by which expression we mean, the law of the land." And this rule was followed and applied in R. v. Riel (No. 2) (1885), 1 Terr. L.R. 23. Leave to appeal was refused by the Privy Council. Riel v. The Queen, 10 A.C. 675, 16 Cox C.C. 48.

The words "the nature and quality of the act" in the second and third answers of the judges in McNaghten's Case (1843) 10 Cl. & Fin. 200, 210, refer only to the physical character of the act in question, and are not meant to distinguish between its physical and moral aspects. Rex v. Georges Codere, 12 Cr. App. R. 21.

In Reg. v. Ross Tuckett, 1 Cox C.C. 103, where the defence was insanity, counsel for the accused tendered evidence that the accused's maternal grandfather had been confined in a lunatic asylum. Maule, J., said: "I know that these questions are generally admitted. It is a matter of fact, and not a matter of law, that insanity is often heredit ary in a family, but I think you should prove that in the first instance, by the testimony of medical men and then your question will be legitimate."

The Court in its discretion will read a doctor's report of the mental state of an appellant founded on an examination made before, but drawn up after, the date of the act charged, and not put in at the trial. R. v. Coelho, 10 Cr. App. R. 210.

It is not a good defence that defendant, though he can distinguish between right and wrong, is so affected by disease that he is incapable of controlling his actions. Rex v. Coelho, 10 Cr. App. R. 210; 30 T.L.R. 535; R. v. Creighton, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 349; but see contra R. v. Hay, 22 Cox, C.C. 268; R. v. Fryer, 24 Cox C.C. 403. For a discussion of the question of insanity see Mercier on Criminal Responsibility and McNaghten's Case, 10 Clark & F., 200, 4 St. Tr. N.S. 847.

A warrant may be issued by the Lieutenant-Governor of the province for the detention in an asylum of a prisoner acquitted on account of insanity, at the time of the offence, (Code, sec. 969), although found same at the time of trial. Re Duclos, 8 Que. P.R. 372, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 278, 32 Que. S.C. 154.

Insanity of prisoner]—No person can be rightly tried, sentenced or executed while insane. If there be sufficient reason to doubt whether an accused person is unable, on account of insanity, to conduct his defence, the question whether by reason of such insanity he is unfit to take his trial should first be tried. Rex v. Levs, 16 O.W.R. 544.

Whether there was any evidence of insanity to support the acquittal on that ground is properly reserved as a "question of law" at the instance of the prosecution. R. v. Phinney, 36 N.S.R. 264, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 469.

Drunkenness as affecting sanity and questions of intent]—Drunkenness is not a good defence to murder unless it can be positively proved that it was of such a nature that the accused did not know the difference between right and wrong. R. v. Galbraith (1912), 8 Cr. App. R. 101; R. v. Davis, 14 Cox C.C. 563.

A man is not excused from crime by reason of his drunkenness. But, although drunkenness is not to be taken as any excuse for crime, yet where the crime is such that the intention of the party committing it is one of the constituent elements, the fact that a man was in drink is to be looked at in considering whether he formed the intention necessary to constitute the crime. If his drunkenness prevented his forming such an intention in a homicide case, he would be guilty of manslaughter and not murder; though such an act in a sober man would prove an intention to do grievous bodily harm. R. v. Doherty, 16 Cox C.C. 306; R. v. Wilson, 46 N.S.R. 59, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 448.

In The King v. Meade [1909], 1 K.B. 895, the trial of a prisoner for murder, evidence was given that he was in drink at the time of the commission of the act charged, and the judge gave the following direction to the jury, which was upheld by the Court of Criminal Appeal:

"In the first place, everyone is presumed to know the consequences of his acts. If he be insane the knowledge is not presumed. Insanity is not pleaded here, but where it is part of the essence of a crime that a motive shall exist in the mind of the man who does the act, the law declares this—that if the mind at that time is so obscure by drink, if the reason is dethroned, and the man is incapable, therefore, of forming that intent, it justifies the reduction of the charge from murder to manslaughter."

And see R. v. Studdard, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 81; R. v. Jessamine, 19 Can. Cr. Cas. 214, 3 O.W.N. 753; R. v. Moke [1917], 3 W.W.R. 575.

So drunkenness is not an excuse for attempted suicide, but may be a material fact on the question of intent. R. v. Doody, 6 Cox C.C. 403.

Procedure and defence of insanity]-See secs. 966-970.

Instruction to jury on insanity defence]—An instruction to the jury on a plea of insanity in a case in which evidence is adduced under Code sec. 19, sub-sec. (2), as to specific delusions, should not be limited so as to exclude from them the right to find on competent evidence that the accused could apart from that sub-section be acquitted on the ground of insanity. R. v. Moke [1917], 3 W.W.R. 575 (Alta.).

Compulsion by threats.

20. Except as hereinafter provided, compulsion by threats of immediate death or grievous bodily harm from a person actually present at the commission of the offence shall be an excuse for the commission, by a person subject to such threats, and who believes such threats will be executed, and who is not a party to any association or conspiracy, the being a party to which rendered him subject to compulsion, of any offence other than treason as defined by this Act, murder, piracy, offences deemed to be piracy, attempting to murder, assisting in rape, forcible abduction, robbery, causing grievous bodily harm, and arson.

Origin]-Sec. 12, Code of 1892.

"Except as hereinafter provided"]—This refers to the special exception made by sec. 131 as regards taking an unlawful oath to commit a crime or the taking of a seditious oath.

Compulsion as a defence or matter of mitigation]—Upon the subject of sec. 20, it is said in Note A of the English Royal Commissioners upon codification of the criminal law (p. 43):

"There can be no doubt that a man is entitled to preserve his own life and limb; and, on this ground, he may justify much which would otherwise be punishable. The case of a person setting up as a defence that he was compelled to commit a crime is one of every day. There is no doubt on the authorities that compulsion is a defence when the crime is not one of a heinous character. But killing an innocent person, according to Lord Hale, can never be justified. He lays down the stern rule: 'If a man be desperately assaulted and in peril of death, and cannot otherwise escape, unless to satisfy his assailant's fury he will kill an innocent person then present, the fear and actual force will not acquit him of the crime and punishment of murder, if he commit the fact; for he ought rather to die himself than kill an innocent man.'"

The commissioners pointed out that the rule appeared to have been relaxed in the high treason cases in 1746, but they conclude by saying:

"We have framed sec. 23 of the draft code (Eng.) to express what we think is the existing law, and what at all events we suggest ought to be the law."

And Cross, J., delivering the opinion of the court in R. v. Farduto 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 144, 19 Rev. Leg. 165, said, in quoting from the commissioners' report:

"That must mean, I take it, that the view of Lord Hale has received the approval of the high authority of the English commissioners upon whose report our code is based. Hence the rule of sec. 20. It does not follow that compulsion is never an excuse for killing, but the compulsion must be such as to make the accused person a mere inért physical instrument." Thus it is said in Russell (Can. ed.), p. 90:

"Persons are properly excused from those acts which are not done of their own free will, but in subjection to the power of others. Actual physical force upon the person and present fear of death may in some cases excuse a criminal act. . . Thus, if A. by force takes the arm of B. in which is a weapon, and therewith kills C., A. is guilty of murder, but B. is not; but if it is only a moral force put upon B. as by threatening him with duress or imprisonment, or even by an assault to the peril of his life, in order to compel him to kill C., it is no legal excuse. . . Sir J. Stephen expresses the opinion that in most, if not all cases, the fact of compulsion is matter of mitigation of punishment, and not matter of defence."

Wife's crime committed in husband's presence]-See sec. 21.

21. No presumption shall be made that a married woman committing an offence does so under compulsion because she commits it in the presence of her husband.

Origin]-Sec. 13, Code of 1892.

Compulsion of wife not presumed from husband's presence]—Referring to the legal presumption still in effect in England but negatived by Code sec. 21, Alverstone, L.C.J., in R. v. Court (1912), 7 Cr. App. R. 127, said he was not certain that this rule of law is beneficial in the administration of justice, and that it certainly ought not to be extended. In that case it was unsuccessfully urged that the accused woman should have the benefit of the presumption as regards the coercion of the man with whom she was living as his wife, or at least that the jury should have been invited to acquit, if they thought that she was acting under the man's influence.

In Brown v. Attorney-General for New Zealand (18 Cox, 658; [1898] A.C. 234; 67 L.J.P.C.), Halsbury, L.C., said: "The mere fact that the parties are married never even formed a presumption of compulsion by the husband. Even as early as Bracton's time, if the wife was voluntarily a party to the commission of a crime, her coverture furnished no excuse."

In R. v. Baines, 69 L.J.Q.B. 681; 19 Cox, 524, husband and wife were jointly indicted for feloniously receiving stolen property, and were convicted. Russell, L.C.J., in his judgment, said that "the mere fact of the marriage does not raise any presumption of coercion by the husband. If the wife has taken an independent part, even if the husband is in the neighborhood, she is guilty."

See also R. v. Green, 24 Cox C.C. 41, 9 Cr. App. R. 228; R. v. Williams 42 U.C.Q.B. 462; R. v. McGregor, 26 Ont. R. 115; R. v. Howard, 45 U.C.Q.B. 346; R. v. Torpey 12 Cox C.C. 45.

Ignorance of the law.

22. The fact that an offender is ignorant of the law is not an excuse for any offence committed by him.

Origin]-Sec. 14, Code of 1892.

Ignorance of the law]—The maxim ignorantia juris non excusat has long been applied in English criminal haw. See Regina v. Crawshaw (1860), 8 Cox C.C. 375; Rex v. Bailey (1800), R. & R. 1; McNaghten's Case (1843), 10 Cl. & F. 200, at p. 210. The rule is put thus in Archbold's Criminal Pleading, 23rd ed., at p. 33:

IGNORANTIA LEGIS

"Ignorance of the law will not excuse from the consequences of guilt any person who has capacity to understand the law."

The general rule of law is that a person cannot be convicted in a proceeding of a criminal nature unless it can be shown that he had a guilty mind. In Cundy v. LeCocq (1884), 13 Q.B.D. 207, at p. 210, Stephen, J., however, says: "In old time, and as applicable to the common law or to earlier statutes, the maxim (actus non facit reum, nisi mens sit rea) may have been of general application; but a difference has arisen owing to the greater precision of modern statutes. It is impossible now. . . to apply the maxim generally to all statutes, and the substance of all the reported cases is that it is necessary to look at the object of each Act that is under consideration to see whether and how far knowledge is of the essence of the offence created." And see Bank of N.S.W. v. Piper [1897], A.C. 383.

Where the defendant was well aware of the facts, and his only mistake was as to the law, that is no defence. R. v. Brinkley 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 454 at 469, per Maclaren, J.A., distinguishing Macleod v. Attorney-General of N.S.W. [1891], A.C. 455.

All persons are bound to know and obey the laws. R. v. Mailloux. 3 Pugsley (N.B.) 493; R. v. Moodie, 20 U.C.Q.B. 399. Although ignorance of the law is not a defence, it constitutes a ground for an application to the Executive for mercy. R. v. Madden, 10 L.C. Jur. 344.

But a person acting under a bad warrant or process is protected under the circumstances stated in Code sec. 29, which expressly declares that ignorance of the law shall in such case be an excuse. Sec. 20 thus forms an express exception to the general rule declared in sec. 22.

It seems that this section does not cover ignorance of foreign law; the question of the validity of a divorce under the foreign law of the state where granted would be a question of fact but the question whether or not the foreign decree was valid in Canada as a defence to a bigawy charge laid in Canada is one of law. Meredith, J.A., in R. v. Brinkley, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 455 at 477, 14 O.L.R. 434.

Execution of process.-Gaoler.

24. Every ministerial officer of any court duly authorized to execute any lawful process of such court, whether of a civil or criminal nature, and every person lawfully assisting him, is justified in executing the same.

Every gaoler who is required under such process to receive and detain any person is justified in receiving and detaining him.

Origin]-Sec. 16, Code of 1892.

"Any lawful process"]-The third resolution in Semayne's Case, 5 Coke 91, 1 Sm. L. Cases, 11th ed., p. 105, was:

" In all cases when the King is a party, the sheriff (if the doors be not open) may break the party's house either to arrest him or to do other execution of the King's process if otherwise he cannot enter. But before he breaks it, he ought to signify the cause of his coming and to make requests to open the doors."

It was pointed out in Wah Kie v. Cuddy (No. 2), 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 383 at 386, 8 A.L.R. 111, that this resolution refers to process, for example, a warrant which does not expressly give the right to enter, as does a search warrant. Again he refers to a house—a dwelling house, not a room for occasional or habitual assembly only.

And see Hodder v. Williams [1895], 2 Q.B. 663, and Code see. 39.

Erroneous process or process without jurisdiction]—See sees, 26 and 27.

Execution of warrants.-Gaoler.

25. Every one duly authorized to execute a lawful warrant issued by any court or justice of the peace or other person having jurisdiction to issue such warrant, and every person lawfully assisting him, is justified in executing such warrant.

2. Every gaoler who is required under such warrant to receive and detain any person is justified in receiving and detaining him.

Origin]-Sec. 17, Code of 1892.

Force used in arrests]-See secs. 39:47.

Arrest of wrong person]-See sec. 28.

Warrants without jurisdiction or erroneous]-See sees. 27 and 29.

EXECUTION OF PROCESS

Execution of erroneous sentence or process.

26. If a sentence is passed or process issued by a court having jurisdiction under any circumstances to pass the sentence or issue such process, or if a warrant is issued by a court, justice or person having jurisdiction under any circumstances to issue the warrant, the sentence passed or process or warrant issued shall be sufficient to justify the officer or person thereby authorized, to execute the same, and every gaoler and person lawfully assisting in executing or carrying out such sentence, process, or warrant, although the court passing the sentence or issuing the process had not in the particular case authority to pass the sentence or to issue the process, or although the court, justice or other person in the particular case had no jurisdiction to issue, or exceeded its or his jurisdiction in issuing, the warrant, or was, at the time when such sentence was passed or process or warrant issued, out of the district in or for which such court, justice or person was entitled to act.

Origin]-Sec. 18, Code of 1892.

Erroneous warrant or process]—The officer is justified under the circumstances stated in 26 although the warrant or process was in the particular case made without jurisdiction and was afterwards set aside. Sleeth v. Hurlbert, 25 S.C.R. 620; Mott v. Milne, 31 N.S.R. 372.

A warrant of commitment issued by justices having jurisdiction over the offence may afford justification to the constable although it required as a condition of release payment of certain costs beyond the jurisdiction of the justices to award. R. v. King (1889), 18 Ont. R. 566.

But the magistrate who unlawfully issues a warrant of arrest without a sworn information may himself be civilly liable for false arrest. McCatherin v. James, 41 N.B.R. 367, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 116. And he may be liable for issuing a warrant wholly unjustified if he signed it without making any inquiry of the complainant as to the causes of suspicion upon which the warrant was applied for. Murfina v. Sauvé, 19 Que. S.C. 51.

Defective process or warrant]-See sec. 29.

Court or justice not regularly constituted or appointed]—See sec. 27. Resisting or obstructing peace officer]—See secs. 169, 608.

Sentence or process without jurisdiction.

sibility if he acts in good faith under the belief that the sentence or process was that of a court having jurisdiction, or that the warrant was that of a court, justice or other person having authority to issue warrants, and if it be proved that the person passing the sentence or issuing the process acted as a court under colour of having some appointment or commission lawfully authorizing him to so act, or that the person issuing the warrant acted as a court, justice or other person having such authority, although in fact such appointment or commission did not exist or had expired, or although in fact the court or the person passing the sentence or issuing the process was not the court or the person authorized by the commission to act, or the person issuing the warrant was not duly authorized so to act.

Every one duly authorized to execute a warrant to arrest, who thereupon arrests a person, believing in good faith and on reasonable and probable grounds that he is the person named in the warrant, shall be protected from criminal responsibility to the same extent and subject to the same provisions as if the person arrested had been the person named in the warrant.

2. Every one called on to assist the person making such arrest, and believing that the person in whose arrest he is called on to assist is the person for whose arrest the warrant is issued, and every gaoler who is required to receive and detain such person, shall be protected to the same extent and subject to the same provisions as if the arrested person had been the person named in the warrant.

30. Every peace officer who, on reasonable and probable grounds, believes that an offence for which the offender may be arrested without warrant has been committed, whether it has been committed or not, and who, on reasonable and probable grounds, believes that any person has committed that offence, is justified in arresting such person without warrant, whether such person is guilty or not.

Arrest without warrant]—See Code secs. 646 to 653 inclusive for schedule of offences for which arrest without warrant is authorized in certain contingencies and with certain restrictions as to the parties exercising the power.

For any of the offences scheduled in 646, the person "found committing" may be arrested by "any person"; a "peace officer" (see Code see. 2 (26) as amended 1913) may arrest without warrant any person whom he "finds committing" any criminal offence. Code see. 648. And any person may arrest without warrant any one whom he finds committing any criminal offence "by night." Code see. 648 (2).

So also any person may assist arresting the criminal on fresh pursuit by those lawfully authorized to arrest from whom the accused is escaping. Code sec. 649. Peace officers have additional powers of arresting a loiterer at night on suspicion for good cause that the accused has committed an indictable offence or is about to do so, Code sec. 652. If a person is found committing a criminal offence in respect of any property real or personal, Code sec. 2 (32), its owner may arrest without warrant. For the offence of procuring, Code sec. 216 (as amended 1913) a peace officer may arrest without a warrant any person whom he has good cause to suspect of having committed or being about to commit any of the offences mentioned in sec. 216. Belief on reasonable and probable grounds as justification]—The protection afforded by see. 30, applies only where the officer stands indifferent, so that he may act without bias or partiality in deciding whether or not there are reasonable and probable grounds for the arrest. R. v. Belyea, 43 N.B.R. 375, 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 395; and see Trebeck v. Cronduce, 34 Times, L.R. 59.

The officer may be held liable for false imprisonment if there was no warrant where a warrant is required and he had no reasonable ground of belief that the person arrested was one of the guilty parties. Mack Sing v. Smith, 1 Sask., L.R. 454; Pon Yin v. Edmonton, 8 W.W.R. 809, 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 327, 31 W.L.R. 402; but where the officer has acted in good faith and on information which excuses him to some extent, these facts will be taken into consideration in assessing the damages. Mousseau v. Citv of Montreal, 12 Que, S.C. 61.

The justification of sec. 30 applies to relieve the officer from both civil and criminal proceedings in cases to which it applies; it makes the arrest lawful where its conditions exist. R. v. Cloutier, 12 Man. R. 183, 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 43.

There may be a justification under sec. 30, although there was a defective warrant which was produced and read to the accused, if the constable honestly believed, on reasonable and probable grounds, that the accused was one of the guilty parties. R. v. Sabeans, 37 N.S.R. 223,

The question whether a peace officer, under s. 30 of the Criminal Code, on reasonable and probable grounds believed that an offence for which the offender might be arrested without a warrant had been committed and whether the officer, on reasonable and probable grounds, believed that a fugitive had committed that offence, is one for the jury and not for the judge to decide. Rex v. Smith, 17 Man. L.R. 282, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 326.

Arrests flagrante delicto]—Unless there is statutory authority for so doing, neither a magistrate nor a constable should act officially in his own case except flagrante delicto while there is otherwise danger of escape, or to suppress an actual disturbance and enforce the law when it is in the act of being resisted. Powell v. Williamson, 7 U.C.Q.B. 154; Ex parte McCleave, 3 O.L.R. 438, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 15; R. v. Heffernan, 13 Ont. R. 616; R. v. Belyea, 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 395, 43 N.B.R. 375.

Breach of the peace in view of a justice]—If a justice sees a felony or other breach of the peace committed in his presence, he may in his own person apprehend the felon. And he may also by word command any person to apprehend him, and such a command is a good warrant without writing. But if the same be done in his absence then he must issue his warrant in writing. 5 Burn's Justice of the Peace, 30th ed., p. 1114.

If the justice is not himself personally arresting the offender on view or upon suspicion, or calling in some one to assist him in doing so, he can only act by issuing a warrant to apprehend the offender in the manner authorized by law. It is the former case to which sees. 30 and 31 are applicable, the actual personal interference of the justice and those whom he calls to his assistance in making the arrest. There is no authority for saying that as peace officer he has any authority to send B. as a constable to arrest anywhere in his county a person whom he suspects of having committed an offence for which he may be arrested without warrant. B, may as constable or private person be in a position to justify the arrest by reason of his own suspicion. He cannot, in such a case, justify under A.'s (the justice's) command, and if he cannot justify by reason of his own suspicion, both A. and B. are wrongdoers, for A. cannot justify under sec. 30. If the constable can justify the arrest as upon his own suspicion it may perhaps be said that it was his arrest alone and not that of A. the defendant upon his command. But where the constable was acting under the defendant's warrant alone, and was not professing to assist the defendant (the justice) in making a personal arrest upon suspicion, the warrant, and not any suspicion of his own as to the commission of the crime, must be his justification. If that warrant turns out to be illegal, the justice cannot claim that the arrest was ministerial only. McGuiness v. Dafoe, 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 139, 23 Ont. App. R. 704; Appleton v. Lepper, 20 U.C.C.P. 138.

Persons assisting peace officer.

31. Every one called upon to assist a peace officer in the arrest of a person suspected of having committed such offence is justified in assisting, if he knows that the person calling on him for assistance is a peace officer, and does not know that there is no reasonable ground for the suspicion.

Peace officer]—See definition in sec. 2, sub-sec. 26, as amended 1913, eh. 13.

Force in assisting peace officer]—See. 30 of the Code being read with see. 31, it seems plain that what both point at is the personal or individual act of the peace officer. See, 30 justifies the officer—justice or constable—in personally arresting a suspected person under certain eircumstances without warrant; that is to say, just as if he had a warrant in his possession authorizing him to do it; and see. 31 justifies everyone who is called upon to assist the peace officer in making the arrest, if he knows that he is a peace officer, and does not know that there are no reasonable grounds for the suspicion which justifies the latter in acting. These sections are merely a codification of the common law. McGuiness v. Dafoe, 3 Can, Cr. Cas. 139, 23 Ont. App. R. 704.

Sec. 169 makes it an offence to resist or wilfully obstruct any peace officer in the execution of his duty, or "any person acting in aid of such officer."

If a person is lawfully called upon to assist a peace officer in the execution of his duty, he is bound to go to the officer's assistance, and will be justified in using force to the same extent as the officer himself.

Arrest without warrant on suspicion]—See sees. 30, 31, 33, 37, 47, 649, 652, 652A.

Arrest of persons found committing offence.

without warrant, it was held that the magistrate who issued a warrant without the necessary information being laid before him was responsible in damages for false arrest thereunder and was not entitled to rely upon the fact that the constable might have arrested without a warrant. Arrest after commission of certain offences.

33. If any offence for which the offender may be arrested without warrant has been committed, any one who, on reasonable and probable grounds, believes that any person is guilty of that offence is justified in arresting him without warrant, whether such person is guilty or not.

Offence actually committed by someone]—Sec. 33 cannot be invoked in justification merely because there was reasonable and probable cause for suspicion, if the party making the arrest cannot show that the particular offence for which he arrested the other, was in fact committed by someone. McKenzie v. Gibson, 8 U.C.Q.B. 100; Walters v. W. H. Smith & Son, Limited [1914], 1 K.B. 595, 83 L.J.K.B. 335, 30 Times L.R. 158; but see see. 30.

The powers of a constable to make arrests without warrant depend either on the common law or on statute. At common law, speaking generally, a constable may arrest a person whom he finds committing a felony, a misdemeanor, or breach of the peace, or whom, on reasonable grounds, he suspects of having committed a felony: Russell on Crimes, p. 724. And by the Criminal Code he may arrest any person whom he finds committing a criminal offence: Criminal Code sec. 648. But neither at common law nor by the Code is there any authority for arresting a person without warrant found committing a breach of a city by-law. Section 648 of the Code uses the words "criminal offence," showing clearly that the right to arrest given there is in the case of the committing of an offence under that Act which would include offences punishable on summary conviction as well as indictable offences. Sec. 35 of the Code says that every peace officer is justified in arresting without warrant any person whom he finds committing any offence. This section is not for the purpose of authorizing the arrest but is for the protection of the officer making the same from the consequences of his act either in a criminal or civil proceeding. It would only protect him in cases in which he was authorized to make the arrest, i.e., in the case of a person found committing a criminal offence. This section is merely a codification of the common law.

In the report of the Commissioners on the English Draft Code, referring to this and other similar sections, they state that the word "justified" is used when there "is no change in the law as it previously existed, while in other cases the words "protected from eriminal responsibility" are used. These words were used because in cases where an enactment extended the existing law for the purpose of protecting a person from criminal proceedings they did not think it right to deprive the person injured of his right to damages, and where it was doubtful whether the enactment extended the law or not they thought it better not to prejudice the decision of the civil Courts by the language used Plested v. McLeod (1910), 3 Sask., R. 374, at pp. 377, 378; 15 W.L.R. 533; R. v. McMurrer, 18 Can. Cr. Cas. 385; R. v. Pollard [1917] 3 W.W.R. 754, 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 35.

In Kelly v. Barton, 26 Ont. R. 608, Boyd, C., said: "The officer was not bound or required as a matter of duty to arrest the plaintiff, although he was violating the provisions of a city by-law in that he was driving a city omnibus without having a license so to do. That conduct was merely the infraction of a police regulation, which falls far short of being a crime. There was no state of law or of facts which did exist that could justify this summary arrest, though the officer may have bona fide believed that he had such a legal right, and that such was his official duty."

The right to regulate the procedure for enforcing the penalties provided for the infraction of a provincial statute, including the right to arrest without a warrant for its breach, is a matter for the province and not for the Dominion. The offences under sec. 35 of the Code for which an offender may be arrested without a warrant are therefore limited to those within the legislative competence of the Parliament of Canada, that is to say, to criminal offences. Plested v. McLeod (1910), 3 Sask. R. 374, 15 W.L.R. 533. Lamont, J., added: "This view seems to be supported by sec. 38 of the Code, which provides, 'nothing in this Act shall take away or diminish any authority given by any Act in force for the time being to arrest, detain, or put under restraint any person.' Here it seems to me that Parliament expressly recognizes the right of a province to authorize an arrest for an infraction of a provincial statute. If a provincial enactment provides that for an infraction of a provincial Act a person may be arrested without a warrant, a peace officer would be justified in so arresting, as was held in Res v. Sweeney (1910), 8 Eastern L. Reporter 16."

Force in executing warrant, process or sentence,

39. Every one executing any sentence, warrant or process, or in making any arrest, and every one lawfully assisting him, is justified, or protected from criminal responsibility, as the case may be, in using such force as may be necessary to overcome any force used in resisting such execution or arrest, unless the sentence, process or warrant can be executed or the arrest effected by reasonable means in a less violent manner.

Origin]-Sec. 31, Code of 1892.

When demand necessary before breaking into dwelling on search order]-Launock v. Brown (1819), 2 B. & Ald. 593, 106 E.R. 482, was a case of a search warrant under a statute (22-23 Car. II., ch. 25, sec. c

USE OF FORCE

2) which empowered game keepers and other persons, authorized by warrant under the hand and seal of any justice of the peace for the county in the day time to search the houses, outhouses or other places of certain persons for guns, bows, greyhounds, etc., and to seize, detain and keep the same, etc. The Court en banc of four Judges, affirming the decision of the trial Judge, held that a search warrant under the statute was unlawfully executed inasmuch as no demand of admittance had been made before breaking open the outer door of the dwelling house of the plaintiff's house. This rule is applicable to all search warrants or orders for search unless it is clear from the statute authorizing the search warrant that a demand to open is not necessary when the place is to be searched is a dwelling house. Wah Kie v. Cuddy (No. 2), 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 383, 30 W.L.R. 167.

In Hodder v. Williams [1895] 2 Q.B. 663, the statement made in Smith's Leading Cases in the notes to Semayne's Case is approved: "The maxim that 'a man's house is his eastle' only extends to his dwelling house; therefore a barn or outhouse, not connected with the dwelling house, may be broken open in order to levy an execution (Ponton v. Brown, 1 Sid. 181, 186), but not to make a distress for rent: Brown v. Glenn, 16 Q.B. 254."

Resisting or obstructing peace officer]-See sec. 169.

Duty of person arresting .- Notice .- Failure in duty.

40. It is the duty of every one executing any process or warrant to have it with him, and to produce it if required.

2. It is the duty of every one arresting another, whether with or without warrant, to give notice, where practicable, of the process or warrant under which he acts, or of the cause of the arrest.

3. A failure to fulfil either of the two duties last mentioned shall not of itself deprive the person executing the process or warrant, or his assistants, or the person arresting, of protection from criminal responsibility, but shall be relevant to the inquiry whether the process or warrant might not have been executed, or the arrest effected, by reasonable means in a less violent manner.

Manner of arrest]—Where a constable tells a person given into his charge that he must go with him before a magistrate, and such person, in consequence, goes quietly, and without force being used, it is an arrest. Chinn v. Morris, 2 C. & P. 361; Joyce v. Perrin, 3 U.C.O.S. 300. And where the constable said to the plaintiff, "You must go with me," on which the plaintiff said he was ready to go, and went with the constable towards a police office, without being seized or touched, this was ruled to be an imprisonment. Pocock v. Moore, Ry, & M. 321; Forsyth v. Goden, 32 C.L.J. 499.

If the party is under restraint and the officer manifests an intention to make a captive, it is not necessary that there should be an actual contact. Grainger v. Hill, 4 Bing. N.C. 212, Vaughan, J.; McIntosh v. Demeray, 5 U.C.Q.B. 343; Wilson v. Breeker, 11 U.C.C.P. 268; R. v. O'Hearon, 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 531.

Defendant was convicted of a fourth offence under The Canada Temperance Act. A warrant was placed in the hands of a constable, who after keeping it for some time went to defendant to execute it, and told him he would have to come to gaol with him. Defendant, complaining of the great inconvenience he would be put to if placed in custody at that time, induced the constable to hold off for a week or two longer by agreeing to deposit $100 with him. Later on, the constable arrested the defendant on the same warrant and lodged him in gaol. It was held on an application for his discharge by habeas corpus on the ground that he had been twice arrested on the same warrant, that even if an arrest had been effected on the first occasion when the constable agreed to hold off, it was called off by defendant's own request and he was therefore estopped, and the application was refused. Exparte Doherty (1899), 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 94 (N.B.); and see R. v. O'Hearon, 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 531.

Right of search on arrest]- The right of an officer to search the person of one arrested for felony has always been assumed, as well as the right to keep the goods found-on him if necessary for the purposes of the trial. See Tomlin's Law Dictionary, sub-tit. Constable, IV, "A constable must keep goods found on a felon till trial, and then return them according to the directions of the court;" see also Mayer v. Vaughan, 11 Que. K.B. 340 (search of letter-carrier on arrest for alleged post-office offence). In the case of Dillon v. O'Brien, 16 Cox C.C., at p. 245, the Irish Exchequer Division extended the rule to cases of misdemeanor. Palles, C. B., says: "If, then, the right here claimed, does not exist, even in treason and felony, it would follow upon the arrest of a murderer caught in the act and on the moment lawfully arrested whilst the weapon with which the crime had been committed was in his hand it would be illegal for the constable to detain that weapon for the purpose of evidence; so also would it be illegal for the officers of the law to take possession of poisons found in the possession of one who had caused death by poison, and even in treason letters from co-traitors evidencing the common treasonable design, found in the possession of a traitor, would be safe from capture upon his arrest. although from the earliest times it has been the settled and unvarying practice to seize such proofs of guilt and give them in evidence at the trial." The case of Leigh v. Cole, 6 Cox C.C. 329 (cited with approbation by the Ontario Court of Appeal in Gordon v. Denison, 22 A.R., p. 326), was a charge to the jury by Mr. Justice Vaughan Williams on the subject of the right of constables to search and handcuff persons in custody for breaches of the peace, and the learned judge made use of the following language: "With respect to searching a prisoner there is no doubt that a man when in custody may so conduct himself, by reason of violence of language or conduct, that a police officer may reasonably think it prudent and right to search him, in order to ascertain whether he has any weapon with which he might do mischief to the person or commit a breach of the peace; but at the same time it is quite wrong to suppose that any general rule can be applied to such a case. Even when a man is confined for being drunk and disorderly it is not correct to say that he must submit to the degradation of being searched, as the searching of such a person must depend on all the eircumstances of the case." In the case of persons in custody not accused of an indictable offence no general rule can be applied, and it would always be for a jury to say whether the case is one in which a search should have been made.

Peace officer preventing escape.

41. Every peace officer proceeding lawfully to arrest, with or without warrant, any person for any offence for which the offender may be arrested without warrant, and every one lawfully assisting in such arrest, is justified, if the person to be arrested takes to flight to avoid arrest, in using such force as may be necessary to prevent his escape by such flight, unless such escape can be prevented by reasonable means in a less violent manner.

Origin]-Sec. 33, Code of 1892.

Shooting at person fleeing from arrest — When a peace officer, pursuing a fugitive whom he had a right to arrest without a warrant, found that the fugitive was, in his opinion, likely to escape for the time being owing to superior speed, it is a question for the jury, on the trial of the officer for manslaughter in killing the fugitive by a shot from his revolver intended only to wound and so stop his flight, whether, under all the circumstances, the officer was justified under s. 41 of the Code in such shooting in order to prevent the escape of such fugitive, or whether such escape could not have been prevented by reasonable means in a less violent manner. Suppression of riot by magistrate.

48. Every sheriff, deputy sheriff, mayor or other head officer or acting head officer of any county, city, town or district, and every magistrate and justice of the peace, is justified in using, and ordering to be used, and every peace officer is justified in using, such force as he, in good faith, and on reasonable and probable grounds, believes to be necessary to suppress a riot, and as is not disproportioned to the danger which he, on reasonable and probable grounds, believes to be apprehended from the continuance of the riot.

Excess in force used]-See sec. 66.

Aid in suppressing riot]-See secs. 48-51, 88, 90-95, 167, and the Militia Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 41, secs. 80-90.

Suppression of riot by persons commanded thereto.—Question of law.

49. Every one, whether subject to military law or not, acting in good faith in obedience to orders given by any sheriff, deputy sheriff, mayor or other head officer or acting head officer of any county, city, town or district, or by any magistrate or justice, for the suppression of a riot, is justified in obeying the orders so given unless such orders are manifestly unlawful, and is protected from criminal responsibility in using such force as he, on reasonable and probable grounds, believes to be necessary for carrying into effect such orders.

2. It shall be a question of law whether any particular order is manifestly unlawful or not.

Origin]-Sec. 41, Code of 1892.

Unless "manifestly unlawful"]—Where the imprisonment and other acts complained of were done by a military officer in the ordinary discharge of his military duty and under orders from his superior officers, it was held that they were not "manifestly unlawful," as the officer was bound to obey the orders of his superiors. [§ 48]

Suppression of riot by persons apprehending serious mischief.

50. Every one, whether subject to military law or not, who in good faith and on reasonable and probable grounds believes that serious mischief will arise from a riot before there is time to procure the intervention of any of the authorities aforesaid, is justified in using such force as he, in good faith and on reasonable and probable grounds, believes to be necessary for the suppression of such riot, and as is not disproportioned to the danger which he, on reasonable grounds, believes to be apprehended from the continuance of the riot.

Origin]-Sec. 42, Code of 1892.

Common duty to suppress riot]—By the common law, a private individual might lawfully endeavour, of his own authority and without any warrant or sanction from a magistrate, to suppress a riot by every means in his power; he might disperse or assist in dispersing those assembled and stay those engaged in it from executing their purpose, as well as stop and prevent others whom he saw coming up from joining the rest. Phillips v. Eyre, L.R. 6 Q.B. 15. If the occasion demanded immediate action and no opportunity occurred for procuring the advice or sanction of a magistrate, it was the duty of every subject to act for himself and upon his own responsibility in suppressing a riotous and tumuluous assembly, and the law protected him in all that he honestly did in the prosecution of that purpose. Ibid, per Willes, J., approving the charge of Tindal, C. J., to the grand jury of Bristol (1832), 5 C. & P. 261 (n).

Aid in suppressing riot]—See secs. 48-51, 88, 90-95, 167, and the Militia Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 41, secs. 80-90.

Protection of persons subject to military law.-Question of law.

51. Every one who is bound by military law to obey the lawful command of his superior officer is justified in obeying any command given him by his superior officer for the suppression of a riot, unless such order is manifestly unlawful.

2. It shall be a question of law whether any particular order is manifestly unlawful or not.

Origin]-Sec. 43, Code of 1892.

Use of force,-To prevent commission of offence.-Act amounting to offence.

52. Every one is justified in using such force as may be reasonably necessary in order—

(a) to prevent the commission of any offence for which, if committed, the offender might be arrested without warrant, and the commission of which would be likely to cause immediate and serious injury to the person or property of any one; or,

Excess in force used]-See sec. 66.

Force in defence of person under protection of defending party]-See secs. 55, 59, 60.

Justification of manslaughter]—In his dissenting opinion in R. v. Moke [1917], 3 W.W.R. 575, Beek, J., said that the prisoner would be justified in killing the deceased if on reasonable grounds he believed that was necessary to prevent the deceased from killing him; that is the effect of sec. 52 of the Code. "Justification on this ground," said Beek, J., " is not precisely the same as justification on the ground of self-defence. (Stephen's History of Cr. Law, vol. 3, p 14). In the course of centuries the defence of self-defence has accumulated about it more or less technicality. The defence calls for a most careful consideration of all the particular circumstances of the particular case under consideration and necessitates a careful direction upon them by the trial judge."

Repelling assault.-Extent justified.

53. Every one unlawfully assaulted, not having provoked such assault, is justified in repelling force by force, if the force he uses is not meant to cause death or grievous bodily harm, and is no more than is necessary for the purpose of self-defence.

2. Every one so assaulted is justified, though he causes death or grievous bodily harm, if he causes it under reasonable apprehension of death or grievous bodily harm from the violence with which the assault was originally made or with which the assail-

"Not having provoked such assault"]-See sec. 54, sub-sec. (2).

Belief "on reasonable grounds"]—The previous conduct of the assaulting party towards the person assaulted may be shown by the accused in support of his defence that he had reasonable grounds in defending as he did. R. v. Drouin, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 205. R. v. Hopkins, 10 Cox C.C. 229; R. v. Rose, 15 Cox C.C. 540; R. v. Ritter, 36 N.S.R. 417, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 31; R. v. Scott, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 442.

Self defence in case of aggression .- Provocation.

54. Every one who has without justification assaulted another, or has provoked an assault from that other, may nevertheless justify force subsequent to such assault, if he uses such force under reasonable apprehension of death or grievous bodily harm from the violence of the person first assaulted or provoked, and in the belief, on reasonable grounds, that it is necessary for his own preservation from death or grievous bodily harm, if he did not commence the assault with intent to kill or do grievous bodily harm, and did not endeavor, at any time before the necessity for preserving himself arose, to kill or do grievous bodily harm, and if before such necessity arose, he declined further conflict, and quitted or retreated from it as far as was practicable.

2. Provocation, within the meaning of this and the last preceding section, may be given by blows, words or gestures.

Origin]-Sec. 46, Code of 1892.

Where violence expected by defending party]-

The violence which the defending party had reason to expect may also be shown by proving the violent temper of the assaulting party and knowledge of this by the defender. R. v. Scott, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 442.

Prevention of insulting assault .-- Disproportionate hurt not justified.

55. Every one is justified in using force in defence of his own person, or that of any one under his protection, from an assault accompanied with insult, if he uses no more force than is necessary to prevent such assault, or the repetition of it.

2. This section shall not justify the wilful infliction of any hurt or mischief disproportionate to the insult which the force used was intended to prevent.

Defence of brother]-See R. v. Callahan (1915), 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 93.

From assault "accompanied with insult"]—In the absence of statute (in some of the United States, there are such statutes) no words, however approbrious, disgraceful, annoying or vexatious, will justify an assault or battery, though they may mitigate the punishment. "Breaking and entering a dwelling house."]—For the purposes of Part VII of the Code a definition of the phrase "dwelling house" is given in sec. 335, sub-sec. (e), supplemented by sec. 339. As the offence referred to in sec. 59, of "breaking and entering" is dealt with by Part VII, it seems that reference should be made to it to interpret not only the phrase "breaking and entering" but the word "dwelling house" which is the subject of the breaking and entering. Defence of real property .- Assault by trespasser.

61. Every one who is in peaceable possession of any house or land, or other real property, and every one lawfully assisting him or acting by his authority, is justified in using force to prevent any person from trespassing on such property, or to remove him therefrom, if he uses no more force than is necessary.

- (c) abets any person in commission of the offence; or.
- (d) counsels or procures any person to commit the offence.

2. sec. 161, it was thought to be a substantive offence under sec. 69, differing from the offence solicited. Archambeault, C. J., said, in reference to sec. 69, that if the offence itself is not committed, it cannot be pretended that the person counselling it is guilty of that offence. Sec. 72 was also considered, and it was held that the councillor could not be convicted of "attempting" the offence of which the other party would have been guilty had he offered to bribe the councillor as It is arguable, however, that sec. 69 is intended, as is suggested. outlined by the heading "principals," to declare what participants in a crime actually committed are to be chargeable as principals and to abolish former distinctions as to principals in the first degree or in the second degree, or accessories before the fact. It will be noted that it is declared by sub-sec. (d) that every one is a party to and guilty of an offence who "counsels or procures any person to commit the offence." Does the language there used extend to the solicitation of an offence neither committed nor attempted; or do the words "the offence" mean only the offence participated in by the counselling or procuring, and which may be either a completed offence or an attempt to commit it ? If the offence counselled is neither executed nor attempted, the counselling or procuring is still a substantive offence whether it be under sec. 69 or at common law, which still applies in cases to which the Code does not extend; R. v. Cole, 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 330, 3 Ont. R. 389; R. v. Union Colliery Co., 31 S.C.R. 81, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 400; Brousseau v. The King (1917), 56 S.C.R. 22; and see Code 15 as to offences punishable both by statute and at common law.

Responsibility for natural consequences of act]—The general rule is that a person is responsible for the natural consequences of his acts, but there are many cases in which it would be obviously unfair to make a person criminally responsible for doing a particular act, though under ordinary circumstances such an act would undoubtedly be an offence. A child is considered to be incapable of committing an offence before the age of seven years; Code, sec. 17; and any act of a child between the ages of seven and fourteen can only be held to be an offence if it is shown affirmatively that the child had sufficient capacity to know the nature and consequences of his act, and to appreciate that he was doing wrong. Code, sec. 18.

Mental deficiency]—A person cannot be convicted on a criminal charge in respect of an act done by him while labouring under such unsoundness of mind as made him incapable of appreciating the nature and quality of the act he was doing, or that such an act was wrong. Code, sec. 19.

Drunkenness as affecting intent]---If a person is accused of wounding another with intent to murder him, the fact that the accused was very drunk at the time ought to be taken into account in considering whether the intent is established; though even in such a case the intent may be proved by evidence of premeditation, or other facts. See R. v. Meade [1909], 1 K.B. 875.

Acts of omission]—A person is not ordinarily considered to cause injury to another by the more omission of an act; thus, if a man sees another drowning and is able to save him by holding out his hand, but omits to do so, even in the hope that the other may be drowned, still he is not criminally responsible.

On the other hand, where the law imposes upon a person the duty of performing some particular act, he is held responsible if he omits to do so. For example, every person who has charge of another, e.g., a lunatic, an invalid, or a prisoner, is bound to provide him with necessaries if he is so helpless as to be unable to provide himself: and if death results from a neglect of such duty, the person in charge is held responsible unless he can show some good excuse. See Code, sees. 241 and 244.

So, in the case of an animal known to be dangerous, the person in charge is bound to take such precautions as will safeguard the public from danger. Code, sec. 247.

Similarly, if a person undertakes to do any act, the omission of which may endanger human life, and without lawful excuse omits to discharge that duty, he is responsible for the consequences. Code, sec. 248. Again, if a person undertakes (except in extreme cases of necessity) to administer surgical or medical treatment, or to do any other act which may be dangerous to human life, he is responsible if death results from a want of reasonable care and skill on his part. Code, sec. 246.

Accident]—A person is not criminally responsible for the result of a pure accident which is not to be attributed in any way to any carelessness, or negligence, or to an unlawful act on his part.

Thus, if a woodcutter is lawfully cutting down a tree and the head of his axe flies off, or if a man is lawfully riding down a road and his horse is whipped by another person and caused to start off, or if a man is lawfully shooting at game or any other object, and in any of these cases there result to a bystander injuries which cannot be attributed to negligence on the part of the woodcutter, rider, or shooter, as the case may be, he will not be responsible for the injuries caused. As to culpable and non-culpable homicide, see Code, sec. 252.

Assisting the principal offender]—If a person assists another in the commission of an offence, he is responsible as though he had committed it himself; and even if such assistance is indirectly given, as, for instance, if two or three men go out together to commit a burglary, and one waits at the corner of the street to keep watch while the others commit the burglary, the watcher will be guilty of burglary equally with the others. R. v. Lloyd, 19 Ont. R. 352. On the other hand, if the offence charged involves some special intent, it must be shown that the assistant was cognizant of the intentions of the person whom he assisted; thus, on a charge of wounding to murder, it must be shown that an assistant not only assisted the principal offender in what he did, but also knew what his intention was, before the former can be convicted on the full charge. R. v. Smith, 38 U.C.Q.B., 218; and see R. v. Esmonde, 26 U.C.Q.B., 152 (attempt to steal).

Mere non-interference when a person sees that a crime is about to be committed by another in his presence, is not enough to constitute aiding or abetting. R. v. Curtley, 27 U.C.Q.B., 613; but see see. 71 as to assisting the escape of the criminal. Other aid rendered "after the crime" is not sufficient to make the aiding party liable as a principal under see. 69. R. v. Graham, 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 388.

An aider and abettor of a misdemeanor was liable as a principal at common law, and the declarations in this respect contained in the Accessories Act, 1861, Imp., are to that extent merely declaratory of the common law. Du Cros v. Lambourne [1907), 1 K.B. 40, 43; R. v. Greenwood, 1 Den. C.C. 453; R. v. Harkness (No. 2), 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 199, 207, 10 O.L.R. 555.

Mere knowledge that the principal intends to commit crime does not constitute an accessory before the fact: there must be some particular crime in view. R. v. Lomas, 9 Cr. App. R. 226; R. v. Bernard, 1 F. & F., 240.

A man who procures a woman, not his wife, to sign as his wife, to bar dower in a conveyance of his real estate, while she knows that the true wife is still living, is punishable as a principal under sees. 69 and 466. United States v. Ford (1916) 10 W.W.R. 1042, 34 W.L.R. 912, 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 430.

In ex parte Baird, 34 N.B.R. 213, it was held that the president of an incorporated company may be convicted for a violation of the second part of the Canada Temperance Act, where the sale is made by a clerk under general instructions received by him from the president.

A clerk or manager in a money-lender's office, who takes part in an act which amounts to the offence of usury, is guilty as a principal, and it is no defence to the charge that he acted merely as an agent. Lalonde v. The King, 18 Que. K.B. 267, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 72; Moneylenders' Act, R.S.C., 1906, ch. 122; R. v. Kehr (No 3), 18 Can. Cr. Cas. 202, 2 O.W.N. 133, 17 O.W.R. 213. But, presumably, the act of the clerk must be such that knowledge that the transaction is usurious can be imputed to him and not merely to the principal. Ibid.

The employee or agent is liable if he aids and abets in the illegal transactions negotiated by his employer or principal. R. v. Smith and Luther, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 445; Lalonde v. The King, 18 Que. K.B. 267.

A person in the employment of another person, not a resident of Canada, whose money is lent, acting as the manager of his business, although paid by salary and having no share in the excessive interest charged, may be convicted as a money-lender under the Money-Lenders' Act, R.S.C. 1906, c. 122, and s. 69 of the Criminal Code. Rex. v. Glynn, 19 Man. L.R. 63, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 243.

PARTIES TO OFFENCES

The continuous supply of goods with knowledge that they were being illegally sold in contravention of a criminal law, is an aiding and abetting of the criminal sales. Cook v. Stockwell, 84 L.J.K.B. 2187; but whether the buyer of intoxicating liquors can be said to be an aider or abettor of the offence of the seller in contravening a federal law, e.g., the Canada Temperance Act, is a question not free from doubt. See R. v. Heath, 13 Ont. R. 471; ex parte Armstrong, 30 N.B.R. 425; ex parte Barker, 30 N.B.R. 406; Fairburn v. Evans [1916], 1 K.B. 218, 85 L.J.K.B. 479. In the latter case the person who purchased goods on a Sunday from a shopkeeper whom he knew to be contravening a Sunday observance statute, and whom he knew to have been convicted several times for such offence, was held guilty of aiding and abetting.

Sec. 69 of the Code expressly declares that every one is a party to and guilty of an offence who (b) does or omits an act for the purpose of aiding any person to commit the offence; or -(c) abets any person in commission of the offence. That is to say, by aiding or abetting in the commission of an offence he becomes a party to and guilty of the same offence. Thus he becomes a party principal, and there appears to be no reason why he should not be indicted or charged as a principal under the Code. R. v. Harkness (No. 2) 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 199 at 207, 10 O.L.R. 555; R. v. Gregory, L.R. 1 C.C.R. 77; Benford v. Sims [1898] 2 Q.B. 641; R. v. Holley, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 510; see The Queen v. Campbell (1899), 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 357.

The shooting of a constable in charge by one of the conspirators in the prosecution of the common design of escaping from custody may be under such conditions as to justify the conclusion that it was or ought to have been known to be a possible consequence of the prosecution of such common purpose. Criminal Code, s. 69 (2); each of them would then be a party to such offence, and the offence, being murder in the actual perpetrator thereof was murder in the prisoner, even if he were not the actual perpetrator thereof, and he was properly found guilty by the jury of that offence. Rex. v. Rice, 4 O.L.R. 223, 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 509.

Any person who before the commission of an offence does something to aid in its being committed, or to help or to facilitate its commission, or to furnish the means to accomplish its commission, although he may not be present when the offence is actually perpetrated, may be treated and dealt with as a principal, and such a person falls directly under see. 69 of the Code as having done an act for the purpose of aiding any person to commit an offence. R. v. Roy, 9 Que. Q.B. 312.

But mere acquiescence by a director of a company in illegal acts of the company will not alone make him an aider or abettor. R. v. Hendrie, 11 O.L.R. 202, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 298.

A spectator who had paid for admission to a Sunday show held in contravention of law, has been held liable to a penalty expressly enacted for those "taking part and assisting" in such shows. Tremblay v. [§ 69]

City of Quebec (No. 1), 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 253; Tremblay v. City of Quebec (No. 2), 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 487.

If the owner of a house leases it to another person for the purpose of keeping a disorderly house, or does so with the knowledge and with his concurrence that it is to be so used and kept, he, in leasing the house would aid the lessee to commit the offence of keeping a disorderly house, and he consequently would become liable equally with the actual offender for the offence committed and he would be prosecuted, tried, convicted and punished as a principal. In such cases, the indictment, or the information, may either simply charge the accessory or aider with the offence committed by the person aided, or may state the aid which was given and charge the accessory's or aider's participation by reason thereof in the offence committed. R. v. Roy, 9 Que. Q.B. 312; and see also sec. 228A as to the liability of the landlord for knowingly permitting such use of his premises.

Where the alleged abettor and the alleged principal are jointly indicted as principals, there may be a conviction of the abettor for counselling the crime, although the alleged principal is acquitted. R. v. Burton, 13 Cox, C.C. 71.

A person is not an accessory if, without any guilty knowledge, he acts as broker for the parties entering into stock transactions which as between them were gambling transactions, prohibited by Code, sec. 231. R. v. Dowd, 17 Que, S.C. 67; 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 170.

An act done which may enter into the offence, although the crime may be complete without it, may be considered as a continuation of the criminal transaction so as to make the participator an aider and abettor, although his participation occurs only after such acts have been done as in themselves would constitute the crime. R. v. Campbell, 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 357.

To establish a conviction for "counselling and procuring" another to bribe a peace officer, it is essential to prove that the peace officer had in fact been bribed. R. v. Ryan, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 115.

But if an official offers himself as a man to be bribed he thereby "counsels" those to whom he makes the offer and may be convicted, although they do not respond to the advances by making him any offer. Brousseau v. The King (1917), 56 S.C.R. 22, affirming 26 Que. K.B. 164, 28 Can. Cr. Cas. 435, in the result.

A statutory prohibition may be so wide in its terms that noncompliancy by the employee with the conditions without which a transaction of the principal could not legally be completed, will make the employer liable under a penal law, e.g., the illegal sale of wood alcohol without a proper label under the Inland Revenue Act, R.S.C. 1906, eb. 51, and 7-8 Edw. VII, eb. 34, sec. 27; R. v. Russill, 29 O.L.R. 367, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 131.

And the employer may be liable to conviction under liquor laws for illegal sales made by his employee without his knowledge or connivance, if the sales were made in the course of the employment. R. v. Conrod, 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 414. Compare Caldwell v. Bethell [1913], 1 K.B. 110; Strutt v. Cliff [1911], 1 K.B. 1; R. v. Williams 42 U.C.Q.B. 464.

Aiding under compulsion]-See. secs. 20, 21.

Place of trial for aiding and abetting a crime punishable on summary conviction]—See sec. 707.

Extra-territorial offence]—Counselling a woman in Canada to submit in a foreign jurisdiction to an operation which, if performed in Canada, would be a crime, is not an offence against the criminal law of Canada. R. v. Walkem 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 122, 14 B.C.R. 1.

Attempt to solicit another to attempt a crime]—See sec. 72 as to attempts generally. It is an offence to attempt to solicit a person to attempt or conspire to commit an offence. R. v. Brousseau, 28 Can. Cr. Cas. 435, 26 Que. K.B. 164; R. v. Ransford, 13 Cox C.C. 9; R. v. De Kromme, 17 Cox C.C. 492. So there may be a conviction for the attempt to incite to an attempted crime by sending a letter which might not amount to a solicitation because of the receiver not reading the letter but handing it over to others without being made aware of its contents. R. v. Ransford, 13 Cox C.C. 9.

And see Brousseau v. The King (1917), 56 S.C.R. 22, affirming in the result, 26 Que. K.B. 164.

Special provision as to servant's liability for trade mark offences]--See sec. 495.

Variance from the offence which was counselled]—See sec. 70. Accessories after the fact]—See sec. 71.

Person counselling theft and afterwards receiving the goods]—One who is a principal to a theft cannot be convicted of receiving the goods knowing them to have been stolen, upon evidence merely showing that he stole the goods. The offence of theft must have been completed before the separate offence of receiving can be committed. R. v. Hodge 12 Man. R. 319, 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 350. The same doctrino has been held to apply to a principal in the second degree; i.e., to an aider and abettor, but not to the case of one who counsels or procures the theft without becoming a principal in the second degree. Such an accessory before the fact is liable under sec. 69 as "a party to and guilty of" the theft and if he afterwards becomes a receiver of the goods he may be convicted also of that offence under Code sec. 399. R. v. Hodge, 12 Man. R. 319, 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 350.

Every one who counsels or procures another to be a party to an offence is a party to every offence which that other commits in consequence of such counselling or procuring, and which the person counselling or procuring knew, or ought to have known, to be likely to be committed in consequence of such counselling or procuring.

[$70]

Principals and accessories to criminal offence]-See sec. 69.

Accessory after the fact .- Husband or wife.

71. An accessory after the fact to an offence is one who receives, comforts or assists any one who has been a party to such offence in order to enable him to escape, knowing him to have been a party thereto.

2. No married person whose husband or wife has been a party to an offence shall become an accessory after the fact thereto by receiving, comforting or assisting the other of them, and no married woman whose husband has been a party to an offence shall become an accessory after the fact thereto, by receiving, comforting or assisting in his presence and by his authority any other person who has been a party to such offence in order to enable her husband or such other person to escape.

Origin]-Sec. 63, Code of 1892.

"Receives, comforts or assists"]—There must be an act to assist the criminal personally in order to constitute an accessory after the fact; mere failing to notify the authorities of the crime is not usually enough, except as to treason. R. v. Chapple, 9 C. & P. 35; see see. 76 as to accessories after the fact to treason. But to "conceal" or procure the concealment of a felony was a common law misdemeanor known as misprision of felony. Burbidge Cr. Law (Can.) 508.

Acts intended to destroy or conceal things which may be produced in evidence against a prisoner on his trial, make the doer an accessory after the fact. R. v. Levy, 7 Cr. App. R. 61; R. v. Butterfield, 1 Cox C.C. 39; 2, Hawkins Pl. Cr., ch. 29, sec. 26.

Punishment of accessory after the fact]-See secs. 574 and 575, and as to treason, sec. 76; and murder, sec. 267; concealment of deserter, sec. 82.

Accessory both before and after the fact]—A defendant may be charged as an accessory before the fact in one count, and as accessory after the fact in another count, and may be convicted on both counts R. v. Blackson, 8 C. & P. 43; R. v. Mitchel, 6 St. Tr., N.S. 599, 620, 621.

72. Every one who, having an intent to commit an offence, does or omits an act for the purpose of accomplishing his object is guilty of an attempt to commit the offence intended whether under the circumstances it was possible to commit such offence or not.

2. The question whether an act done or omitted with intent to commit an offence is or is not only preparation for the commission of that offence, and too remote to constitute an attempt to commit it, is a question of law.

Origin]-Sec. 64, Code of 1892; English Draft Code, 1879, article 74 (part).

Act done with intent to commit crime]—An attempt implies an intent; but intending to commit a crime is not the same as attempting to commit it. R. v. McCarthy, 41 O.L.R. 153; R. v. Snyder (1915), 34 O.L.R. 318, 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 101; and see see. 949, as to convicting for an attempt on a charge of the completed offence, "if the evidence establishes an attempt." R. v. Weiss and Williams (No. 1), 4 W.W.R. 1358, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 438 (No. 2), 5 W.W.R. 48 and 400, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 42.

Mental intentions may be changed at any time before being carried out. When not accompanied by overt acts in the direction of a crime they do not constitute even an attempt at crime. Pockett v. Pool (1896), 11 Man. R. 275, at 286.

An assault with intent to commit an offence involving violence will ordinarily be held to be an attempt to commit that offence. R. v. Johns, 15 S.C.R. 384.

In some instances, some preliminary act as to which it might be doubtful whether or not it was too remote to constitute an "attempt" may, by statute, be created into a substantive offence. So under Code see. 397, a trader concealing his own goods for a fraudulent purpose, cx. gr. to defraud insurance companies, commits an offence although the fraud was not carried out and no claim was ever made by him against the companies. R. v. Goldstaub (1895) 10 Man. R. 497, 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 357. CRIMINAL CODE (PART 1)

There must be a connection between the act done for the purpose of an intended crime and the crime itself. Sub-sec. (2) indicates that an act done with intent may be too remote to constitute an "attempt." The question of remoteness is declared to be a question of law, but the doctrine of law governing this is left undefined by the Code and is left in an unsettled state by the many cases in which it has been discussed. It is said, however, that it is material to consider whether there is any further act "on the defendant's part" remaining to be done before the completion of the crime. R. v. Eagleton, Dears, 515, 538; Dugdale v. The Queen, Dears, 64, 22 L.J.M.C. 50; R. v. Hensler, 11 Cox C.C. 570, R. v. Roebuck, Dears, & B. 24, 23 L.J.M.C. 101; R. v. Cheeseman, L. & C. 140, 31 L.J.M.C. 89; R. v. Ring, 61 L.J.M.C. 116, 17 Cox C.C. 491; R. v. Linneker [1906], 2 K.B. 99, applied in R. v. Snyder (1915), 34 O.L.R. 318, 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 101; R. v. Robinson [1915], 2 K.B. 342, 84 L.J.K.B. 1149.

There is an obvious distinction between doing a thing with intent to commit an offence and attempting to commit the offence. For instance, A, may load his gun with the declared intention of shooting B. whenever he may meet him, but if he does not take his gun with him, it would be vain to pretend that he had attempted to shoot B., or if he bought poison with the intention of killing B, but did nothing more, it would be impossible to say that he attempted to poison B. So, if a prisoner conceals himself with the intention of escaping, that may, or may not, be sufficient evidence of an attempt according to the circumstances, but it is not the offence in itself. For instance, if the prisoner (while locked up in his cell) hid himself under his bed with the intention of escaping, it would be an extraordinary thing to say that he had attempted to escape; while, on the other hand, if he were found concealed near an open gate awaiting a chance to slip past the guard. that would be enough to warrant a conviction for an attempt. R. v. Labourdette (1908), 13 B.C.R. 443, 8 W.L.R. 402 (B.C.), per Hunter, C.J.; R. v. Button [1900], 2 Q.B. 597, 69 L.J.Q.B. 901; R. v. Robinson [1915], 2 K.B. 342, 11 Cr. App. R. 124.

Although an attempt implies the intent, an intent does not necessarily imply an attempt. There may be cases very near the line as regards the attempt although there is no doubt as to the intent. It is always necessary that the attempt should be evidenced by some over act forming part of a series of acts which, if not interrupted, would end in the commission of the actual offence. R. v. Mooney, 15 Que. K.B. 57, 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 333; R. v. Linneker [1906], 2 K.B. 99, 103; R. v. Robinson [1915], 2 K.B. 342. The interruption is not necessarily that of an outside cause or of a third party; it may be due to a change of mind on the part of the accused. R. v. Gooman, 22 U.C.C.P. 338 (arson); R. v. Esmonde, 26 U.C.Q.B. 152 (theft).

The physical impossibility of completing the crime is no defence to a charge of attempting to commit it. Code sec. 72; R. v. Williams

ATTEMPTS

[1893], 1 Q.B. 320, 62 L.J.M.C. 29; R. v. Duckworth (1892), 2 Q.B. 83, 17 Cox 495; R. v. Ring, 61 L.J.M.C. 116 (pocket picking); R. v. Brown, 24 Q.B.D. 357, overruling R. v. Collins, 33 L.J.M.C. 177 (pocket picking).

Under sec. 69 (d) every one is a party to and guilty of an offence who counsels any person to commit the offence. This has been held to create a substantive offence even where the offence counselled, i.e., advised or recommended, was neither committed por attempted. Brousseau v. The King (1917), 56 S.C.R. 22, 39 D.L.R. 114, affirming 28 Can. Cr. Cas. 435, 26 Que. K.B. 164.

It has been said that where the solicited party does nothing for the purpose of accomplishing the solicited offence, the party guilty of the soliciting is not guilty of an "attempt" of that offence. Brousseau v. The King, 28 Can. Cr. Cas. 435, 26 Que. K.B. 164. The solicitation is in such case punishable either as a substantive offence under sec. 69 (d), or the solicitation itself although unsuccessful may in some cases be a common law offence and, except in so far as the common law of England has been repealed either expressly or by implication, be the subject of an indictment at common law. Brousseau v. The King (1917), 56 S.C.R. 22, 39 D.L.R. 11, per Fitzpatrick, C.J.; Union Colliery v. The Queen, 31 S.C.R. 81, 87; and see Code sees. 10-12, 15, 16. It is an indictable misdemeanor at common law for any person in an official position corruptly to use the power of his position by asking for a bribe. Brousseau v. The King, supra; compare Code see. 161.

Drunkenness as affecting intent]—See note to sec. 19. The presumption of a criminal intention which would otherwise arise from an act may be rebutted by showing that the prisoner's mind was so affected by drink that he was incapable, at the time, of knowing that what he was doing was dangerous or wrongful. R. v. Meade [1909], 1 K.B. 895. R. v. Doody, 6 Cox C.C. 403; R. v. Jessamine, 19 Can. Cr. Cas. 214; R. v. Stoddart, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 81; R. v. Kane, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 443; R. v. Intent may be material ingredient of completed offence]-In some cases the intention with which an act is committed becomes essential. Where this is the case, the intention may either be proved by independent evidence, as, for instance, by words proved to have been used by the offender or by a previous course of conduct. R. v. Sutton, 2 Str. 1074; R. v. Bailey, L.R. 1 C.C.R. 374; or may be presumed from the act itself, according to the maxim that a man intends the natural consequences of his own act. R. v. Prince, L.R. 2 C.C.R. 154; R. v. Jolson, 23 Q.B.D. 168. In other words, the mode of discovering a man's intention is to consider what were at the time of his act the natural consequences of that act. R. v. Ford, 13 B.C.R. 109, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 555. Thus, if A. sets fire to B.'s mill, the intent of A. to injure B. is inferred as being a natural consequence of the act of A, setting fire to the mill. Intention in this context means the immediate intention as distinguished from motive or ulterior intention. If a man bound by law to perform any duty does an act which necessarily causes, or most probably will cause, a failure in the performance of that duty, he will be held in law. to have intended to fail, and therefore to have wilfully failed, to perform that duty. R. v. Birmingham & Gloucester Ry., 3 Q.B. 223; R. v. Great West Laundry Co., 13 Man. R. 66.

The doctrine of mens rea]-

Mens rea is a necessary ingredient in a criminal offence, unless the statute either expressly or by necessary implication from its language dispenses with it. Strutt v. Clift [1911], 1 K.B. 1. R. v. Russill, 29 O.L.R. 367, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 131 at 139; Coppen v. Moore [1898]. 2 Q.B. 306; R. v. Newcombe (1918), 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 249 (N.S.); Patenaude v. Thivierge, 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 138.

In R. v. Russill, 29 O.L.R. 367, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 131, Hodgins, J.A. speaking for the court said: "It cannot be doubted that the intention of the section of the Inland Revenue Act (Can.) cited was to prohibit absolutely the sale of wood alcohol, a poison, except in labelled bottles. It would fritter away the statute to hold that the sale of the article proved in this case, if made by a servant, absolved the employer, because he did not actually conduct the sale. The prohibition is explicit; the sale was in law the sale of the master; and there is no saving clause, such as is found in Coppen v. Moore, enabling the employer to free himself. It seems to fall fairly within the exceptions quoted. And, as stated by Hagarty, C.J., in Regina v. King, 20 U.C.C.P. 246: "If it be contrary to law to sell liquor or any other article in a shop, the keeper of that shop is, we think, responsible for any sale made by any clerk or assistant in his shop; prima facie it would be his act."

ATTEMPTS

There was a clear delegation of authority or of the master's power to prevent a sale contrary to the statute, by putting the servant in charge of the store and of the vessel of wood alcohol from which the quantity sold was taken. Moreover, the statute in question is one of a class to which the construction given in this case is most readily applied, as recognised even by Brett, J., in his dissenting judgment in Regima v. Prince, L.R. 2 C.C.R. 154; R. v. Russill, 29 O.L.R. 367, per curian.

Osler, J.A., in R. v. Brinkley, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 454, at 462. 14 O.L.R. 434 said: "In the recent case of Sherras v. De Rutzen [1895] 1 Q.B. 918, Wright, J., speaking of the presumption that a knowledge of the wrongfulness of the act is an ingredient in every offence, says (at page 921), "that presumption is liable to be displaced either by the words of the statute creating the offence or by the subject-matter with which it deals, and both must be considered: Nichols v. Hales (1873), L.R. 8 C.P. 322. One of the most remarkable exceptions was in the case of bigamy. It was held by all the Judges on the Statute of 1 Jac. 1, ch. 11 that a man was rightly convicted of bigamy who had married after an invalid Scotch divorce, which had been obtained in good faith, and the validity of which he had no reason to doubt: Lolley's Case (1812), R. & R. 237. The dictum in that case that no sentence or Act of any foreign country can dissolve an English marriage a vinculo matrimonii for grounds on which it is not liable to be dissolved a vinculo matrimonii in England. was afterwards overruled in Harvey v. Farnie (1880), 6 P.D. 35, 44, but in other respects the decision is not affected."

See sec. 22 of the Code as to the doctrine that ignorance of the law is no excuse.

On a charge of unlawfully and maliciously killing cattle it appeared that the animal was killed by the prisoners, when it was in a helpless and dying condition, and that the prisoners thought it was an act of mercy to kill it:—it was held that the killing was not malicious; that the implication of malice was rebuttable, and had been in fact rebutted, a mens rea on the part of the prisoners being disapproved. The Queen v. Mennell, 1 Terr. L.R. 487.

Where intent is an ingredient of a crime there is no onus on defendant to prove that the act alleged was accidental. R. v. Davies, 8 Cr. App. R. 211, 29 T.L.R. 350.

Where there is a question whether a person committed an offence, evidence may be given of any fact supplying a motive or constituting preparation for the offence, of any subsequent conduct of the person accused which is apparently influenced by the commission of the offence, and of any act done by him, or by his authority, in consequence of the offence. R. v. McBerny, 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 339. Thus, evidence may be given that, after the commission of the alleged offence, the accused absconded, or was in possession of the property, or the proceeds of the p. perty acquired by the offence, or that he attempted to conceal things [§72] which were or might have been used in committing the offence, or as to the manner in which he conducted himself when statements were made in his presence and hearing. R. v. Barrett, 9 C. & P. 387. R. v. Letain [1918], 1 W.W.R. 505, 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 389 (Man.).

The motive may in some cases ameliorate the crime; so, where the loser in a card game took by force from the winner money out of which he thought he had been defrauded, it was held that the bona fide belief, whether mistaken or not, negatived the charge of theft, but a conviction might be made for assault under the indictment for robbery. R. v. Ford (1907), 13 B.C.R. 109.

While it is not always necessary to show a guilty knowledge in order to convict a person of an offence, where the words of the statute creating it impose an absolute prohibition, on the other hand, when by the language of the statute a guilty knowledge is made an essential element of the offence, then in order to ensure a conviction the guilty knowledge must be clearly shown. The Act of the legislature must be looked to in order, to see when knowledge is necessary to complete the offence. Ex parte Murchie (R. v. Gloucester), 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 228, at 236; R. v. Ritchie, ex parte Blaine, 27 N.B.R. 213, 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 193; ex parte Baird, 34 N.B.R. 213; R. v. Quirk, 44 N.S.R. 244 R. v. Verdi (1914), 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 47 (N.S.); R. v. Irish, 18 O.L.R. 351, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 458; R. v. Labbe, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 417; R. v. Perras, 6 Terr. L.R. 58, 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 364; Brown v. Foot, 61 L.J.M.C. 110; Bank of New South Wales v. It is impossible to apply the maxim as to "mens rea" generally to all statutes and it is necessary to look at the object and terms of each Act to see whether and how far knowledge or a particular intent is of the essence of the offence created. R. v. Law, 19 Møn. R. 259, 275; Nickle v. Harris, 3 Sask. L.R. 200, 14 W.L.R. 515; Baldwin v. Snook [1918], 2 W.W.R. 314; R. v. Newcombe (1918), 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 249 (N.S.), 40 D.L.R. 85.

- (b) expressions referring to communications include any communication, whether in whole or in part, and whether the document, sketch, plan, model or information itself or the substance or effect thereof only be communicated;
- (c) 'document' includes part of a document;
- (d) 'model' includes design, pattern and specimen;
- (e) 'sketch' includes any photograph or other mode of expression of any place or thing;
- (f) 'office under His Majesty' includes any office or employment in or under any department of the Government of the United Kingdom, or of the Government of Canada or of any province.

Origin]-Code of 1892, see. 76; 53 Viet. Can. ch. 10; the Official Secrets Act 1889, 52-53 Viet. (Imp.), ch. 52, since re-enacted and amended by the Official Secrets Act 1911, 1 and 2 Geo. V. (Imp.) ch. 28.

Illegally obtaining or communicating information of military value] -See secs. 85, 86.

CRIMINAL CODE (PART II)

Treason and other Offences against the King's Authority and Person.

Treason.-Definition.-Penalty.

74. Treason is,-

- (a) the act of killing His Majesty, or doing him any bodily harm tending to death or destruction, maim or wounding, and the act of imprisoning or restraining him; or,
 - (b) the forming and manifesting by any overt act an intention to kill His Majesty, or to do him any bodily harm tending to death or destruction, maim or wounding, or to imprison or to restrain him; or,
 - (c) the act of killing the eldest son and heir apparent of His Majesty, or the Queen consort of any King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; or,
 - (d) the forming and manifesting, by an overt act, an intention to kill the eldest son and heir apparent of His Majesty, or the Queen consort of any King of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland; or,
 - (e) conspiring with any person to kill His Majesty, or to do him any bodily harm tending to death or destruction, maim or wounding, or conspiring with any person to imprison or restrain him; or,
 - (f) levying war against His Majesty either
 - (i) with intent to depose His Majesty from the style, honor and royal name of the Imperial Crown of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland or of any other of His Majesty's dominions or countries, or
 - (ii) in order, by force or constraint, to compel His Majesty to change his measures or counsels, or in order to intimidate or overawe both Houses or either House of Parliament of the United Kingdom or of Canada; or,
 - (g) conspiring to levy war against His Majesty with any such intent or for any such purpose as aforesaid; or.

TREASON

- (h) instigating any foreigner with force to invade the said United Kingdom or Canada or any other of the dominions of His Majesty; or,
- (i) assisting any public enemy at war with His Majesty in such war by any means whatsoever; or,
- (j) violating, whether with her consent or not, a Queen consort, or the wife of the eldest son and heir apparent, for the time being, of the King or Queen regnant.

2. Every one who commits treason is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to suffer death.

Origin |-Sec. 65, Code of 1892; 57-58 Viet. ch. 57, sec. 1; the Statute of Treasons 1351 Eng., 25 Edw. 3, statute 5, chapter 2.

Assisting alien enemies to leave Canada]—Inciting or assisting an alien enemy to leave Canada may under certain circumstances he treason punishable under see, 74, and under less serious circumstances an offence punishable under see, 75A which was introduced into the Code in 1915. Compare R. v. Ahlers, 84 L.J.K.B. 901, 11 Cr. App. R. 63.

Assisting any public enemy at war]—It has been held in England that on a true construction of 25 Edw. 3, st. 5, c. 2, the Statute of Treasons 1351, to "be adherent to the King's enemies in his realm," which is one of the subjects of treason therein specified, the adherence need not be that of a person within the King's "realm." Rex v. Casement, 12 Cr. App. R. 99, 115 L.T. 267.

Correboration]—A conviction for treason cannot be had upon the evidence of one witness unless such witness is "corroborated in some material particular by evidence implicating the accused." Code sec. 1002.

Aliens levying war and British subjects assisting]-See sec. 77.

Overt acts must be stated in the indictment]—When a man is charged with treason the law gives him every opportunity to make his defence. The indictment is required to state the particular overt acts complained of: the power of amending indictments is expressly stated not to extend to authorise the Court to add to the overt acts set out in the indictment (sec. 847, sub-sec. 2), and 10 days before his arraignment there must be delivered to him a copy of the indictment, a list of the witnesses to be produced on the trial to prove the indictment, and a copy of the panel of the jurors who are to try him returned by the sheriff (sec. 897). It is further provided that the list shall mention the names, occupations and places of abode of the said witnesses and jurors and that all the documents mentioned shall be given to the accused at the same time and in the presence of two witnesses. These provisions clearly are intended to enable the accused to know exactly what is charged and what is intended to be proven against him. The indictment will be quashed if it does not set forth with precision the offence charged and does not in sufficient terms state any overt act of treason. R. v. Fehr, 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 245 (N.S.). Overt act expressed by "open and advised speaking." |--See the limitation provided by sec. 1140 (2).

Conspiracy to assist enemy]—To conspire with any person to commit an indictable offence is indictable under Code sec. 573 and punishable with seven years' imprisonment. See note to sec. 573.

Attempting to assist public enemy]-It seems to have been assumed in R. v. Snyder, 34 O.L.R. 318, 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 101, that an attempt of the offence under sub-sec. (i) would be indictable; sec. 72 relating to attempts is in general terms as to any offence under the Code. The indictment was for a completed offence but the Crown asked a conviction for the attempt to commit treason and such was the verdict. On a reserved case it was held that a conviction for an attempt to assist a public enemy was not shown by his agreeing to convey certain alien enemies out of Canada when the transportation was never begun and it appeared that they had no intention of leaving Canada but were being used by the police to entrap the accused. R. v. Snyder (1915) 34 O.L.R. 318, 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 101. The Snyder case occurred prior to the passing of Code sec. 75A in the year 1915, and it will be noted that the latter makes it an offence either to "incite" or "assist" an alien enemy to leave Canada, while sub-section (i) of sec. 74 relates only to "assisting." An attempt of the offence created by see, 75A would it seems, be indictable and punishable under sec. 571 with imprisonment up to half the maximum term for the completed offence; but neither of the secs. 570, 571 and 572 are applicable to an of ence punishable with death as is treason under sec. 74. Sec. 72 seems merely to amplify the definition of an attempt and not to declare the attempt an offence. Sec. 949, however, declares that "When the complete commission of an offence charged is not proved, but the evidence establishes an attempt to commit the offence, the accused may be convicted of such attempt and punished accordingly." But even this seems to imply that there must exist elsewhere some provision whereby the attempt is in itself made indictable otherwise sec. 949 would not apply. Certain treasonable offences consist of the treasonable intent manifested by an overt act (sec. 74, sub-sections (b) and (d) and sec. 78); but it seems at least doubtful whether there is such an offence as "attempting" to assist any public enemy (sec. 74 (i)) either under the Code or at common law ..

Treasonable conspiracy]-See also see. 75.

Treason by levying war; insurrection]—See R. v. Riel, 1 Terr. L.R. 23 and 2 Man. L.R. 321, and same case on motion for leave to appeal.

TREASON

Riel v. the Queen, 10 A.C. 675, 16 Cox C.C. 48; R. v. Slavin, 17 U.C.C.P. 205, R. v. Marais [1902] A.C. 51.

An insurrection differs from a riot in this—that a riot has in view some enterprise of a private nature (see sec. 91) while an insurrection savours of high treason, and contemplates some enterprise of a general and public nature. R. v. Vincent, 9 C. & P. 95. See also Lord Mansfield's charge on the trial of Lord George Gordon in 1781. R. v. Gordon, 21 State Trials, 485 at 644. R. v. Frost, 9 C. & P. 129.

Failure to inform justice of the peace on learning of intended treasonable act]—See sec. 76.

Espionage and war treason]—Although any person who makes or endeavours to make unauthorized or secret communication to the enemy or to collect information secretly for him, is ordinarily spoken of as a spy, the Hague Rules provide a definition of a spy as regards land warfare which does not cover all such cases.

According to No. 29 of the Hague Rules a person can only be considered a spy when, acting clandestinely or on false pretences, he obtains, or endeavours to obtain, information in the zone of operations of a belligerent with the intention of communicating it to the hostile party.

The fact that a person acting as a spy is in the naval or military service of his State, does not screen him from punishment should he be apprehended by the enemy. Nor does the fact that he is in uniform make it impossible for him to be a spy.

If the act of espionage is committed by anyone in the home territory the laws of the land usually provide for its punishment. Thus in England a person can be tried for high treason on the counts of traitorously compassing, imagining and intending the deposition and death of the Sovereign and of traitorously adhering to, aiding and comforting the Sovereign's enemies. The leading case is that of the French Colonel De la Motte who was resident in London, and was, in 1781, tried for collecting and forwarding to his Government reports in regard to the number of British ships and forces. It was then laid down that whilst a foreigner is under the protection of the laws of this kingdom, he owes allegiance to it equal to that of any natural-born subject, and that the fact that this allegiance is local and temporary is of no consequence in law. R. v. De la Motte, 21 State Trials 687.

Naturalization in enemy country during war]—A British subject commits a treasonable act by becoming naturalized in the enemy's country during hostilities and is liable in respect of subsequent treasonable acts notwithstanding such attempted naturalization. R. v. Lynch, [1903] 1 K.B. 144, 72 L.J.K.B. 167.

Bail)—It was held in Rex v. Rowens (1914) 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 340, 7 O.W.N. 467, that a person committed for trial in time of war upon a charge brought before the enactment of sec. 75A for assisting the enemy by aiding the King's enemies to leave Canada, was properly Overt act of treason.

75. In every case in which it is treason to conspire with any person for any purpose, the act of so conspiring, and every overt act of any such conspiracy, is an overt act of treason.

Origin]-Sec. 66, Code of 1892.

Overt acts of treasonable conspiracy]—The conspiracy itself and each overt act of the conspiracy is an overt act of treason where it is treason to conspire for the particular purpose, ex. gr, to conspire to levy war to intimidate Parliament (sec. 74 (g)). The indictment must state the overt acts relied upon, and no evidence is to be admitted of any overt act not stated unless it is otherwise relevant as tending to prove some overt act stated; nor can the court amend the indictment by adding to the overt acts stated. Code sec. 847. As to when evidence of acts of one co-conspirator may be given on a charge against another, see note to sec. 573.

Defendant charged with treason to be given copy of indictment, list of witnesses, etc.]—See sec. 897.

Assisting, etc., alien enemies to leave Canada.

75A. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who incites or assists any subject of any foreign state or country at war with His Majesty to leave Canada without the consent of the Crown, unless the person accused can prove that assistance to the enemy was not intended, and provided that such inciting or assisting do not amount to treason.

Origin]-Statutes of Canada, 1915, ch. 12, sec. 2.

Assisting alien enemies to leave Canada]—As to assistance amounting to treason see sec. 74, sub-section (i) of which declares that assisting any public enemy at war with His Majesty in such war by any means whatever is treason.

Indictment]-Sec. 847 applies only to treason and to offences under sections 76 to 86 inclusive and not to the offence here declared.

Assisting Alien Enemies

Where the subject of a foreign state at war with His Majesty intends to leave Canada and starts for the boundary line with such intention, he is in the act of leaving Canada on every part of the journey for that purpose, and if any person knowing that the foreign subject had such intention does any act furthering that intention, such person thereby "assists" the foreign subject to leave Canada within the meaning of sec. 75A of The Criminal Code, whether the latter got across the boundary line or not. Ibid.

Internment of alien enemy]—The Grown is entitled in the exercise of its prerogative to imprison an alien enemy and the court has no jurisdiction to interfere with the exercise of the prerogative when the status of alien enemy is proved. R. v. Vine Street Superintendent, Ex parte Liebmann [1916] 1 K.B. 268, 85 L.J.K.B. 210.

Corroboration]-See. 1002 which is applicable to a charge of treason under sec. 74, does not apply to a charge brought under sec. 75A.

Accessories after the fact to treason.-Omitting to prevent treason.

76. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who.—

- (a) becomes an accessory, after the fact, to treason; or,
- (b) knowing that any person is about to commit treason does not, with all reasonable despatch, give information thereof to a justice of the peace, or use other reasonable endeavours to prevent the commission of the same.

Persuading to desert .-- Concealing deserter .-- Penalty.

82. Every one is guilty of an offence punishable on indictment, or on summary conviction before two justices, who, not being an enlisted soldier in His Majesty's service, or a seaman in His Majesty's naval service,—

- (a) by words or with money, or by any other means whatsoever, directly or indirectly, persuades or procures, or goes about or endeavours to persuade, prevail on or procure, any such seaman or soldier to desert from or leave His Majesty's military or naval service; or,
- (b) conceals receives or assists any deserter from His Majesty's military or naval service, knowing him to be such deserter; and is liable, on conviction under indictment, to fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court, and on summary conviction before two justices, to a penalty not exceeding two hundred dollars, and not less than eighty dollars and costs, and in default of payment to imprisonment for any term not exceeding six months.

Origin I—Sec. 73, Code of 1892, 52 Vict., ch. 25, sec. 4; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 41, sec. 109; compare secs. 153 and 154 of the Army Act, 44-45 Vict. (Imp.), ch. 58.

Descrition from military or naval service]—This section applies to desertion from either the military or naval service. Provisions for desertion from merchant ships are to be found in the Canada Shipping Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 113, sec. 287, as to ships of Canadian register, and in the Merchants' Shipping Act, Imp., as to ships of British register. The Canadian Naval Service Act, 9-10 Edw. VII, Can., ch. 43, deals with the Canadian Naval Forces.

The offence of desertion—that is to say, of deserting or attempting to desert His Majesty's service—implies an intention on the part of the offender either not to return to His Majesty's service at all, or to escape some particular important service; and a soldier must not be charged with desertion, unless it appears that some such interation existed. Further, even assuming that he is charged with desertion, the court that tries him should not find him guilty of desertion, unless fully satisfied on the evidence that he has been guilty of desertion as above defined. On the other hand, absence without leave may be described as short absence, unaccompanied by disguise, concealment or other suspicious circumstances, as occurs when a soldier does not return to his corps or duty at the proper time, but on returning is able to show that he did not intend to quit the service, or to evade the performance of some service so important as to render the offence desertion.

British Manual of Military Law, 1914 edition, p. 18.

Persons subject to military law may be proceeded against under the Army Act (Imp.), sec. 12, by court-martial for desertion or persuading others to desert, while the civilian who persuades a soldier to desert is to be prosecuted under sec. 82 of the Code.

83. Every one who resists the execution of any warrant authorizing the breaking open of any building to search for any deserter from His Majesty's military or naval service is guilty of an offence and liable, on summary conviction before two justices, to a penalty of eighty dollars.

Origin]—Sec. 74, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 169, sec. 7. A similar provision is contained in sec. 657, sub-sec. (3).

Warrant to search for suspected deserter]-See sec. 657.

Bail—Code sec. 699 makes certain restrictions on the giving of bail in regard to "an offence under any of the sections 76 to 86 inclusive," but, read in conjunction with secs. 696-698, the restriction seems to be DESERTION limited to indictable offences and not to apply to an offence such as this which is made punishable only on summary conviction, i.e., proceedings under Part XV of the Code. Sec. 699 is contained in Part XIV, which gives the procedure before justices on a preliminary enquiry for an indictable offence. As to bail on remands under Part XV, see Code sec. 722 (4).

Persuading men to desert.-Assisting.-Concealing.

84. Every one is guilty of an offence and liable, on summary conviction, to six months' imprisonment with or without hard labour, who,—

- (a) persuades any man who has been enlisted to serve in any corps of militia, or who is a member of or has engaged to serve in the Royal Northwest Mounted Police Force, to desert, or attempts to procure or persuade any such man to desert; or,
- (b) knowing that any such man is about to desert, aids or assists him in deserting; or,
- (c) knowing that any such man is a deserter, conceals him or aids or assists in his rescue.

Origin]—Code of 1892, sec. 75; 52 Vict., ch. 25, sec. 4; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 41, sec. 109; compare sec. 153 of the Army Act, 44-45 Vict. (Imp.), ch. 58.

Unlawful Assemblies and Riots.

Definition of unlawful assembly.-Intention not necessary.-Protecting dwelling house.-Exception.

87. An unlawful assembly is an assembly of three or more persons who, with intent to carry out any common purpose, assemble in such a manner or so conduct themselves when assembled as to cause persons in the neighbourhood of such assembly to fear, on reasonable grounds, that the persons so assembled will disturb the peace tumultuously, or will by such assembly needlessly and without any reasonable occasion provoke other persons to disturb the peace tumultuously.

2. Persons lawfully assembled may become an unlawful assembly if they conduct themselves with a common purpose in such a manner as would have made their assembling unlawful if they had assembled in that manner for that purpose.

3. An assembly of three or more persons for the purpose of protecting the house of any one of their number against persons threatening to break and enter such house in order to commit any indictable offence therein is not unlawful.

Origin]-Sec. 79, Code of 1892.

Indictable offence]-See sec. 89.

Unlawful assembly]—The commission of an act of violence by any one or more of those assembled is not necessary to make the assembly unlawful, if its character and circumstances are such as to be calculated to alarm, not only foolish or timid people, but persons of reasonable firmness and courage. R. v. Vincent, 9 C. & P. 95.

When an unlawful assembly has begun to disturb the peace tumultuously, it becomes a "riot." Code secs. 88 and 90; R. v. Kelly, 6 U.C.C.P. 372; R. v. Corcoran, 26 U.C.C.P. 134; Field v. Metropolitan Police [1907], 2 K.B. 853.

A meeting lawfully convened may become unlawful if seditious words are spoken of such a nature as to be likely to produce a breach of the peace. R. v. Burns (1886), 16 Cox, C.C. 355.

Assemblies to obstruct the officers of the law are unlawful. R. v. McNaughten, 14 Cox C.C. 576; or to witness a prize fight. R. v. Billingham, 2 C. & P. 234 (and see Code sec. 106). R. v. Perkins, 4 C. & P. 537.

Assembly for an otherwise lawful object but provocative of riot by others]—It would appear from sub-sec. (1) that an assembly which is primarily lawful becomes unlawful if by assembling they "needlessly and without any reasonable occasion" provoke a riot. If there is no reasonable occasion for this assembling and they must have had reason to believe that their doing so would cause a riot, the assembly would probably be unlawful under sec. 87. R. v. Mailloux, 3 Pugsley, N.B 493; R. v. Clarkson, 17 Cox C.C. 483; Wise v. Dunning [1902], 1 K.B. 167; compare Beatty v. Gillbanks, 9 Q.B.D. 308, 15 Cox C.C. 138.

Dispersing an unlawful assembly]—The magistrates and the police are justified in dispersing an assembling which is unlawful. O'Kelly v. Harvey (1881), 15 Cox C.C. 435, 10 L.R. Irish, 285; and see secs. 16, 46-52.

Definition of riot.

88. A riot is an unlawful assembly which has begun to disturb the peace tumultuously.

Origin]-Sec. 80, Code of 1892.

Rioting]—To prove a person to be a rioter, it is not sufficient to merely show that the riot took place and that the accused was present among them. It must be shown that he did something by word or act to take part in, help or incite the riotous proceedings. R. v. Atkinson, 11 Cox 330; R. v. Corcoran, 26 U.C.C.P. 134.

The acts of the rioters may be proved severally, as in conspiracy, before evidence is given to connect their fellow rioters. R. v. Cooper, 1 Russ. Crimes, 6th ed., 585.

Origin]—Sec. 83, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 147, secs. 1 and 2; I Geo. I (Eng.), stat. 2, ch. 5.

Riot Act proclamation]—The Riot Act (1 Geo. 1, stat., 2 ch. 5), passed in England in 1715, introduced the form of proclamation now contained in Code sec. 91, and the reading of the proclamation is commonly termed "reading the Riot Act."

The Riot Act does not destroy any power which lawfully existed before its passing for the suppression of riot; but it admits the inference that, as a general rule, it would be extremely imprudent to use armed force against a mob until the proclamation required by the Act has been made and the appointed space of an hour elapsed, except in circumstances where either the proclamation caunot be read owing to the violence of the mob, or the mob, before the expiration of thirty minutes after it has been read (Code sees. 92 and 93), perpetrate or are evidently about to perpetrate some outrage which formerly would have been classified as felony.

Even before the reading of the proclamation the magistrate is justified in repelling force by force. R. v. Kennett, 5 C.A.P. 282. The force should not be out of proportion to the danger to be reasonably apprehended. Stevenson v. Wilson, 2 L.C.J. 254.

In the riots excited by Lord George Gordon in 1780, the mob were allowed to proceed to great excesses without any interference by the civil or military authorities: and this appears to have been allowed under the impression that until the proclamation in the Riot Act was read the dispersion of the rioters would be illegal. To correct this impression Lord Loughborough made use of the following language:---"It-has been imagined because the law allows an hour for the dispersion of a mob to whom the Riot Act has been read by the magistrate. the better to support the civil authority, that during that period of time the civil power and the magistrate are disarmed, and the King's subjects, whose duty it is at all times to suppress riots, are to remain quiet and passive. No such meaning was within view of the legislature, nor does the operation of the Act warrant any such effect. The civil magistrates are left in possession of those powers which the law had given them before. If the mob collectively, or part of it, or any individual, within or before the expiration of that hour attempts or begins to perpetrate an outrage amounting to felony, to pull down a house, or by any other act to violate the law, it is the duty of all present, of whatever description they may be, to endeavor to stop the mischief and to apprehend the offender." R. v. Gordon, 21 Howell's State Trials, 493. It will be noted that the time limit under the Code is 30 minutes, not one hour, as in the English law cited. See also Code sees. 96 and 97.

It was held under the corresponding English statute that the Riot Act is not validly proclaimed if the concluding words of the proclamation, "God save the King," are omitted. R. v. Child, 4 C. & P. 442.

Calling out militic to suppress riot]—See the Militia Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 41, sees. 80-90.

The following summary of the law as to the duties of soldiers in case of riot was given in their report by the Committee who inquired into the facts of the Featherstone riots in 1893. (British Parl. papers 1893-94, C. 7234):

"By the law of this country every one is bound to aid in the suppression of riotous assemblages. The degree of force, however, which may be used in their suppression, depends on the nature of each riot, for the force used must always be moderated and proportioned to the circumstances of the case and to the end to be attained.

"The taking of life can only be justified by the necessity for protecting persons or property against various forms of violent crime, or by the necessity of dispersing a riotous crowd which is dangerous unless dispersed, or in the case of persons whose conduct has become felonious through disobedience to the provisions of the Riot Act, and who resist the attempt to disperse or apprehend them. The riotous crowd at the Ackton Hall Colliery was one whose danger consisted in its manifest design to set fire and do serious damage to the colliery property, and in pursuit of that object to assault those upon the colliery premises. It was a crowd accordingly which threatened serious outrage, amounting to felony, to property and persons, and it became the duty of all peaceable subjects to assist in preventing this. The necessary prevention of such outrage on person and property justifies the guardians of the peace in the employment against a riotous crowd of even deadly weapons.

"Officers and soldiers are under no special privileges and subject to no special responsibilities as regards this principle of the law. A soldier for the purpose of establishing civil order is only a citizen armed in a particular manner. He cannot because he is a soldier excuse himself if without necessity he takes human life. The duty of magistrates and peace officers to summon or to abstain from summoning the assistance of the military depends in like manner on the necessities of the case. A soldier can only act by using his arms. The weapons he carries are deadly. They cannot be employed at all without danger of life and limb, and, in these days of improved rifles and perfected ammunition, without some risk of injuring some distant and possibly innocent bystanders. To call for assistance against rioters from those who can only interpose under such grave conditions ought, of course, to be the last expedient of the civil authorities. But when the call for [§ 91] help is made, and a necessity for assistance from the military has arisen, to refuse such assistance is in law a misdemeanor. ren

"The whole action of the military when called in ought, from first to last, to be based on the principle of doing, and doing without fear, that which is absolutely necessary to prevent serious crime, and of exercising all care and skill with regard to what is done. No set of rules exists which governs every instance or defines beforehand the contingency that may arise. One salutary practice is that a magistrate should accompany the troops. The presence of a magistrate on such occasions. although not a legal obligation, is a matter of the highest importance. The military come, it may be, from a distance. They know nothing, probably, of the locality or of the special circumstances. They find themselves introduced suddenly on a field of action, and they need the counsel of the local justice, who is presumably familiar with the details of the ease. But, although the magistrate's presence is of the highest value and moment, his absence does not alter the duty of the soldier, nor ought it to paralyze his conduct, but only to render him doubly careful as to the proper steps to be taken. No officer is justified in English law in standing by and allowing felonies to be committed merely because of a magistrate's absence.

"The question whether, on any occasion, the moment has come for firing upon a mob of rioters depends, as we have said, on the necessities of the case. Such firing to be lawful, must, in the case of a riot like the present, be necessary to stop or prevent serious and violent crime as we have alluded to; and it must be conducted without recklessness or negligence. When the need is clear, the soldier's duty is to fire with all reasonable eaution, so as to produce no further injury than what is absolutely wanted for the purpose of protecting person and property. An order from the magistrate who is present is required by military regulations, and wisdom and discretion are in favor of the observance of such a practice. But the order of the magistrate has at law no legal effect. Its presence does not justify the firing if the magistrate is wrong. Its absence does not excuse the officer for declining to fire when the necessity exists.

"With the above doctrines of English law the Riot Act does not interfere. Its effect is to make the failure of a crowd to disperse for a whole hour after the proelamation has been read a felony; and on this ground to afford a statutory justification for dispersing a felonious assemblage, even at the risk of taking life. In the case of the Ackton Hall Colliery, an hour had not elapsed after what is popularly called the reading of the Riot Act, before the military fired. No justification for their firing can therefore be rested on the provisions of the Riot Act itself, the further consideration of which may indeed be here dismissed from the case. But the fact that an hour had not expired since its reading did not incapacitate the troops from acting when outrage had to be prevented. All their common law duties as eitizens and soldiers remained in full force. The justification of Captain Barker and his men must stand or fall entirely by the common law. Was what they did necessary, and no more than was necessary, to put a stop to or prevent felonious erime? In doing it did they exercise all ordinary skill and caution, so as to do no more harm than could be reasonably avoided?

" If these two conditions are made out, the fact that innocent people have suffered does not involve the troops in legal responsibility. A guilty ringleader who under such circumstances is shot dead, dies by justifiable homicide. An innocent person killed under such circumstances, where no negligence has occurred, dies by accidental death. The legal reason is not that the innocent person has to thank himself for what has happened, for it is conceivable (though not often likely) that he may have been unconscious of any danger and innocent of all imprudence. The reason is that the soldier who fired has done nothing except what was his strict legal duty."

A leading English case on the question of military assistance to the civil authorities is Redford v. Birley, 1 State Trials N.S. 1071, an action of tort against a militia officer. Lord Haldane, when Secretary of State for war, 1908, pointed out before a Parliamentary Committee that the head note of this case was misleading and that the case when analysed was not inconsistent with the current of authority. He said further (British Parl, papers, 1908, H.C. 236): "The law to my mind is clear that the soldier is in no different position from anybody else. He must obey the civil authority by coming to its assistance, where it is necessary that the soldier should give assistance to the civil authority, but it must be necessary that he should do so, and excess of force and excess of display ought not to be used. The soldier is guilty of an offence if he uses that excess, even under the direction of the civil authority, provided he had no excuse as that he was bound to take the facts, as distinguished from the law, from the civil authority. Now the officer, of course, is placed in an extremely difficult position. He is in the same position as his man is. If an officer orders his own man to fire unnecessarily and clearly unnecessarily, the command of the officer does not absolve the private from his duty to obey the common law. On the other hand, under the law of the Army, the private is bound to obey his officer. He is, in other words, in peril of being, on one hand, tried and shot by a court-martial, and on the other hand, of being tried and hanged by a judge and jury. But in practice it is one of these situations which is really perfectly simple. In 999 cases out of 1,000 it does not arise. People are very sensible in this country. Two principles which may come into conflict have to be reconciled, and they are reconciled by taking the case in the concrete. The result is that, while the commanding officer is bound to pay great respect to the opinion of the civil authority, and on a mere question of fact, when he comes from a distance, to accept it until he sees that it is obviously wrong, he is not absolved, in law, from his duty not to use more force than is necessary."

The following opinion of law officers of the Crown in England (Aug. 18th, 1911) on the duty of soldiers called upon to assist the police, was signed by Sir Rufus Isaacs and Sir John Simon:

"A soldier differs from the ordinary citizen in being armed and subject to discipline; but his rights and duties in dealing with crime are precisely the same as those of the ordinary citizen. If the aid of the military has been invoked by the police, and the soldiers find that a situation arises in which prompt action is required, although neither Magistrate nor police are present or available for consultation, they must act on their own responsibility. They are bound to use such force as is reasonably necessary to protect premises over which they are watching, and to prevent serious crime or riot. But they must not use lethal weapons to prevent or suppress minor disorder or offences of a less serious character, and in no case should they do so if less extreme measures will suffice. Should it be necessary for them to use extreme intention."

Origin]-Code of 1892, sec. 141.

Neglect to aid peace officer in quelling riot]—To support an indictment for refusing to aid in quelling a riot it was held that it was necessary to prove, first, that the constable saw a breach of the peace committed; secondly, that there was reasonable necessity for calling on the defendant for his assistance; and, thirdly, that the defendant refused without any physical impossibility or lawful excuse. R. v. Brown, 1 C. & M. 314; 34 J.P. 129; and see R. v. Sherlock, L.R. 1 C.C.R. 20; 10 Cox C.C. 170; 13 L.T. 623.

Assisting in suppressing riot]-" If the riot be general and dangerous, every subject may arm himself against the evil doers to keep the peace. Such was the opinion of all the judges in England in the time of Queen Elizabeth in a case called 'The case of Arms' (Popham's Rep., 121); although the judges add that it would be more discreet for every one in such a case to attend and be assistant to the justices, sheriffs, or other ministers of the King in doing this. It would undoubtedly be more advisable so to do; for the presence and authority of the magistrate would restrain the proceeding to such extremities until the danger was sufficiently immediate, or until some felony was committed or could not be prevented without recourse to arms; and, at all events, the assistance given by men who act in subordination and concert with the civil magistrate, will be more effectual to attain the object proposed than any efforts, however well intended, of separated and disunited individuals. But if the occasion demands immediate action, and no opportunity is given for procuring the advice or sanction of the magistrate. it is the duty of every subject to act for himself and upon his own responsibility in suppressing a riotous and tumultuous assembly; and he may be assured that whatever is honestly done by him in the execution of that object will be supported and justified by the common law." Charge of Chief Justice Tindal, quoted in R. v. Pinney, 5 C. & P. 262, note. From early times the duty of sheriffs and magistrates to suppress riots and apprehend rioters, and the obligation of the people of the country to assist them have been laid down and enforced by English Statutes. See 15 Rieh. II, c. 2 (1391), 13 Hen. IV, c. 7 (1411), 2 Hen. V, st. 1, c. 8 (1414).

If rioters destroy a building by fire the offence is within this section, and they need not be indicted under sec. 511 for arson. R. v. Harris, Carr. & M. 661.

If some of the rioters set fire to the house itself, and others carried furniture out of the house and burned it in a fire made outside, it will be for the jury to say whether the latter were not encouraging and taking part in a general design of destroying both house and the furniture, and if so the jury ought to convict, under sec. 96. As to arson and attempted arson, see secs. 511-512, and as to threats to burn, see secs. 516 and 748.

Riotous damage to property .-- Bona fides no defence.

97. All persons are guilty of an indictable offence and liable to seven years' imprisonment who, being riotously and tumultuously assembled together to the disturbance of the public peace, unlawfully and with force injure or damage any of the things mentioned in the last preceding section.

2. It shall not be a defence to a charge of an offence against this or the last preceding section that the offender believed he had a right to act as he did, unless he actually had such a right.

Riotous damage to building, machinery, etc., where demolition not begun]—The first sub-section deals with this offence which is somewhat similar to that declared in sec. 96 but in a less aggravated form.

Where the rioters break the doors and windows of the house and then go away, although there was nothing to prevent them committing further injury, the offence is not within sec. 96 but is the lesser offence under sec. 97, for their going away under the circumstances shows that they have completed their purpose and had done all the injury they Prohibition of assemblies.—General or special.—Being present for purpose of drilling others.—Drilling others.

98. The Govenor in Council is authorized from time to time to prohibit assemblies, without lawful authority, of persons for the purpose of training or drilling themselves, or of being trained or drilled to the use of arms, or for the purpose of practising military exercises, movements or evolutions, and to prohibit persons when assembled for any other purpose from so training or drilling themselves or being trained or drilled.

2. Any such prohibition may be general or may apply only to a particular place or district or to assemblies of a particular character, and shall come into operation from the publication in the Canada Gazette of a proclamation embodying the terms of such prohibition, and shall continue in force until the like publication of a proclamation issued by the authority of the Governor in Council revoking such prohibition.

3. Every person is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who, without lawful authority and in contravention of such prohibition or proclamation,—

- (a) is present at or attends any such assembly for the purpose of training or drilling any other person to the use of arms or the practice of military exercises or evolutions; or,

Definition of forcible entry.-Definition of forcible detainer.-Question of law.

102. Forcible entry is where a person, whether entitled or not, enters in a manner likely to cause a breach of the peace, or reasonable apprehension thereof, on land then in actual and peaceable possession of another.

2. Forcible detainer is where a person in actual possession of land, without colour of right, detains it in a manner likely to cause a breach of the peace, or reasonable apprehension thereof, against a person entitled by law to the possession thereof.

3. What amounts to actual possession or colour of right is a question of law.

Origin]-Code of 1892, sec. 89.

Forcible entry as a crime]—Since the statute, 5 Richard II., st. I., ch. 7 (1389), it is a criminal offence to enter, in a manner likely to cause a breach of the peace, upon the property of another (sections 102 and 103 of the Criminal Code). Riopelle v. City of Montreal (1911) 44 Can. S.C.R. 579 at page 581; R v. Martin, 10 L.C.R. 435.

To constitute the offence of foreible entry upon land under Cr. Code, sec. 102 and 103, the entry must have been made under circumstances either of actual violence or of terror. R. v. Campey, 20 Can. Cr. Cas. 492.

As to foreible entry by a separated wife upon her husband's premises and the liability of those assisting her, see R. v. Smyth, 5 C. & P. 201, 1 M. & Rob. 155.

But although liable to indictment for forcible entry it seems that the true owner having a right of entry on property is not liable to an action for trespass for making a foreible entry and evicting an occupier wrongfully in possession. Allan v. Kirk [1917] 2 W.W.R. 527; Jones v. Foley [1891] 1 Q.B. 730, 60 L.J.Q.B. 464; Davison v. Wilson, 11 Q.B. 890, 17 L.J.Q.B. 196; Lows v. Telford, 1 App. Cas. 414; Edwick v. Hawkes, 18 ch. D. 199.

A breach of the peace or apprehension thereof under Cr. Code, sec. 102. is not to be anticipated as a natural sequence to a re-entry by breaking when made by landlords upon office premises overheld by their tenant effected at night when neither the tenant nor any of his employees was present. R. v. Campey, 20 Can. Cr. Cas. 492.

"Entering" means in sec. 102 not merely going upon land or trespassing upon it; there must accompany the act of going upon the land some intent to take possession of the land itself and deprive the possessor of the land. Such an interference with the possession as trespassing upon it for the purpose of taking away chattels upon the land is not an "entering" within the Code. R. v. Pike (1898), 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 314, 12 Man. L.R. 314.

To enter upon lands with such force as to exceed a bare trespass and so as to cause a public breach of the peace was an indictable offence at common law. R. v. Wilson, 8 T.R. 357; R. v. Bake, 3 Burr, 1731.

Actual force is not an essential. R. v. Walker, 4 W.L.R. 288, 6 Terr. L.R. 276, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 197.

A landlord may not so eject his tenant although the term of the tenancy has expired. Taunton v. Costar, 4 R.R. 481. But it has been held that the English statute regarding foreible entry (5 Ric. 2, ch. 7) does not apply to the ejectment of a mere trespasser. Browne v. Dawson, 12 A. & E. 624; Scott v. Brown, 51 L.T. 747.

Actual possession does not necessarily imply actual residence, either personally or by a servant or agent. 13 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law, 2nd ed., p. 750.

Restitution]—On a conviction for forcible entry the court is not bound to order a writ of restitution, but may in its discretion grant or refuse the writ. R. v. Jackson, Dra. Rep. (U.C.) 53; R. v. Wightman (1869), 29 U.C.Q.B. 211; R. v. Smith (1878), 43 U.C.Q.B. 369; R. v. Connor, 2 P.R. (Ont.) 139.

Where an order of restitution is asked it must be proved that the prosecutor is still kept out of possession, 1 Hawk, ch. 64, sec. 41. Under the statute 31 Eliz. ch. 11, no restitution shall be awarded if the defendant has been permitted to remain quietly in possession for three years previous to the finding of the indictment.

103. Every one who forcibly enters or forcibly detains land is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to one year's imprisonment.

Origin]-Code of 1892, sec. 89, sub-sec. (4).

Prize Fights.

Challenging .- Accepting challenge, etc.

Prize fight defined]-See sec. 2 (31).

Special authority to certain tribunals]—Every judge of a superior court or of a county court, judge of the sessions of the peace, stipendiary magistrate, police magistrate, and commissioner of police of Canada, shall, within the limits of his jurisdiction as such judge, magistrate or commissioner, have all the powers of a justice with respect to offences against provisions of this Act as to prize fights. Code sec. 606.

Engaging as principals in a prize fight.

105. Every one is guilty of an offence and liable, on summary conviction, to imprisonment for a term not exceeding twelve months and not less than three months, with or without hard labour, who engages as a principal in a prize fight.

Origin]—Sec. 94, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 153, sec. 3; 44 Vict. Can., ch. 30.

Special jurisdiction of certain tribunals]—See sees. 606, 627, 628, 1059.

Distinction between price fight and boxing exhibition]-In all the cases a distinction has been made between a "boxing or sparring exhibition" and a "fight." In Rex. v. Orton, 14 Cox Criminal Cases, 226, upon a trial of an indictment against some persons for unlawfully assembling together for the purpose of a "prize fight," the law was stated as follows:---

110

PRIZE-FIGHTS

"A mere exhibition of skill in sparring is not illegal. If, however, the parties meet intending to fight till one gives in from exhaustion or from injury received, it is a fight and a breach of the law, whether or not with gloves."

Judge Snider, in the Wildfong case (1911), 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 251, said: "In a boxing exhibition one of the contestants may be knocked down, but that is not the intention. In a fight it is the intention of each to so injure the other that he can no longer continue the encounter. The former has been held to be legal, the latter under the common law illegal. So in football a man may be knocked out, or have a leg or arm broken, but that is not the purpose or intention of those engaging in the game.

"Although an assault without intent, often doing grievous bodily harm, frequently occurs in football, it does not make the game unlawful. If, however, in football, as anywhere else, a person assaults another with intent to do him grievous bodily harm it is an illegal act and punishable. So far then as the word 'fight' in the definition of 'prize fight' in sub-sec. 31 of sec. 2 of the Code is concerned it must be held to have the meaning which the English decisions have given it, namely, an encounter between two persons, each intending to so injure the other that he cannot or will not continue the contest.

"Then does the word 'encounter' with hands or fists enlarge the meaning of 'prize fight.' 'Encounter' by the dictionary definitions and by common understanding applies to a great many acts and events of vastly different natures. In football men constantly tackle each other with hands, and this is an 'encounter' with hands, but not such as is intended by that word in the Code. Dozens of 'encounters' might be mentioned coming within the true definition of this word, but clearly not within the meaning of it as used in the Code. 'Encounter' in the definitions given also includes a 'fight'; it is a synonym for 'fight' and it is in that sense that it is used in the Code definition.

"At common law a 'prize fight' was unlawful, and was defined as 'an encounter with fists or hands with or without gloves for a number of rounds, limited or unlimited, for a purse, stake or prize, but in which it was intended to fight until one or the other of the combatants should give in from exhaustion or injury received.' Here in the law as it stood before in the statute or Code the words 'encounter with fists or hands' are used when defining a 'prize fight' as distinguished from a 'boxing match.'

As the words 'encounter with fists or hands' had always been used at common law and by the Courts in speaking of prize fights as synonymous with the word 'fight' and not including a boxing match, they must be so construed in the Code." R. v. Wildfong, supra.

ill the exhibi-3, 226, In R. v. Littlejohn (N.B.), 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 212, it was said:--"There is also authority that a sporting match with gloves, according to well-known rules, is no offence in law, that is, if it be a mere exhibition of skill in sparring; but if parties meet intending to fight till one gives in from exhaustion or injury received it is a breach of the law and a prize fight, whether the combatants use gloves or not."

A boxing match which would otherwise not be a prize fight is not made a prize fight by the circumstance that the participants were each paid a fixed sum for the match. R. v. Fitzgerald, 19 Can. Cr. Cas. 145.

The consent of the contestant in entering into an illegal prize fight does not prevent the blows received from being considered as a criminal assault. R. v. Coney, 8 Q.B.D. 534, 51 L.J.M.C. 66, 15 Cox C.C. 46. An encounter with gloves may become illegal when one of the parties fights on when so much exhausted as to be likely to fall over to own injury, it being against the public good that a combatant should so endanger himself even where the contest is held in private and without malice and would, therefore, not provoke a breach of the peace by others. R. v. Young, 10 Cox C.C. 371; R. v. Coney, supra. Cf. R. v. Moore (1898), 14 Times, L.R. 229; R. v. Canniff, 9 C. & P. 359.

"Prize fight"]—See 2, sub-sec. (31), declares that "prize fight" means an encounter or fight with fists or hands between two persons who have met for such purpose by previous arrangement made by or for them. It may be doubted whether this eliminates the question of a prize.

Sec. 108 deals with the case of a fight arranged between the parties to a quarrel without any "prize" dependent upon the result and without the handing over or transfer of money or property being involved. In that case the magistrate may in his discretion discharge the accused or impose a penalty not exceeding $50. The marginal note to that sec. is: "When fight is not a prize fight"; but whether sec. 108 is a provision for a distinct and separate offence from that to which see. 105 applies, or merely a provision for certain extenuating circumstances, is a question which can hardly be said to be settled by the authorities. If a prize or other valuable consideration is an essential to a "prize fight," sec. 108 would be for a distinct offence not constituting a prize fight but an arranged fight following a quarrel or dispute, which might be the subject of an assault charge; R. v. Perkins, 4 C. & P. 437; but would not be within the power of a justice to try under the summary convictions procedure, but for the express provision of sec. 108. In charging the jury in a manslaughter case arising out of an alleged prize fight, Harvey, C.J., said that the presence or absence of a " prize" which is suggested by the word "prize fight" has no significance. R. v. Pelkey (1913), 4 W.W.R. 1055, at 1057, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 387, 24 W.L.R. 804. A dictum to the same effect is contained in R. v. Wildfong, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 251 (Ont.). In the latter case, as well as in R. v. Littlejohn, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 212, and R. v. Fitzgerald, 19 Can. Cr. Cas. 145.

convictions by the magistrate were set aside on appeal to the court presided over by the county judge. In Steele v. Maber, 19 Que. S.C. 392, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 446, a district magistrate made a conviction for prizefighting where an admission fee was charged and it was announced that the contestant who knocked out his opponent in a certain number of rounds should receive the prize, and it was held that it was no defence that there was in fact not a bona fide fight but a feigned exhibition of fighting. Steele v. Maber, supra (in which the gain to the contestants is emphasized).

Indians and provincial laws]—An Indian who commits an offence against a provincial law, beyond the limits of an Indian Reserve, may be convicted and punished just as all other persons may. R. v. Martin, 41 O.L.R. 79, 82; R. v. Hill, 15 O.L.R. 406; R. v. Beboning, 17 O.L.R. 23.

Explosive Substances.

Causing dangerous explosions.

111. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for life who wilfully causes, by any explosive substance, an explosion of a nature likely to endanger life or to cause serious injury to property, whether any injury to person or property is actually caused or not.

Origin]—Sec. 99, Code of 1892; R.S. 1886, ch. 150, sec. 3; Explosive Substances Act, 1883 (Imp.) sec. 2.

"Wilfully" causes]—"Wilfully" does not mean "maliciously" in see. 111, but "deliberately." R. v. Bonner, 4 W.W.R. 1255, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 442, 447, per Martin, J.A. Compare the use of the word "wilfully" in sees. 112, 113, 136, 168, 169, 172, 180, 184, 205. The indictment or charge should allege that the offence was committed "wilfully." Ex parte O'Shaughnessy, 13 Que. K.B. 178, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 136.

"Explosive substance"]-See definition in sec. 2 (14).

"Likely" to endanger, etc.]—It is not necessary to prove actual injury, and it is sufficient if such exposure to risk or chance of injury be shown as will satisfy the jury that actual danger to life or serious injury to property was caused. R. v. McGrath, 14 Cox C.C. 598. The causing of danger is the gist of the offence. R. v. Holmes (1884), 17 N.S.R. 499.

"Serious injury to property"]—The use of explosives in land clearing or mining operations, or ex. gr., to remove useless buildings, does not, as conducted in the usual way, cause an explosion "likely to cause serious injury to property." R. v. Bonner (1913), 4 W.W.R., 1255, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 442, 447, per Martin, J.A.

"Property" means either real or personal property. Sec. 2 (32).

Claim of right]—A bona-fide belief in a claim of right will not justify the employment of the dangerous means here prohibited in the exercise of the supposed right. The language of the section is wide enough to cover a case of serious injury to the property of the necused himself. R. v. Bonner (1913), 4 W.W.R. 1255, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 442; per Martin, J.A.

Attempt to destroy property with explosives.

112. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to fourteen years' imprisonment who wilfully places or throws any explosive substance into or near any building or ship with intent to destroy or damage the same or any machinery, working tools, or chattels whatever, whether or not an explosion takes place.

Origin]—Code of 1892, see, 488; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 168, sees. 14 and 49; 24-25 Viet. Imp., ch. 97, sec. 10

"Explosive substance"]—In view of the definition of this phrase by see 2, sub-see. (14), it is probably not necessary that it should have been physically possible for an explosion to have occurred. Any materials for making an explosive substance are now included in the definition and so is any apparatus intended to be used with an explosive, or a part of such apparatus. The extended definition originates in the Explosives Substances Act, 1883, Imp., 46, Vict., ch. 3, see. 9, and supersedes the decision in R, v. Sheppard (1868), 11 Cox C.C. 302, where a fuse was attached to an explosive, but as the fuse was not lit when thrown, the case was held not to come under the earlier statute, 24-25 Vict. Imp., ch. 97.

2. Upon sufficient cause being shown, any officer of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police or commissioner of Dominion police or superintendent of provincial police or stipendiary or district magistrate or police magistrate or acting police magistrate or sheriff or chief constable of any city, incorporated town or district municipality may grant any applicant therefor, as to whose discretion and good character he is satisfied, a permit in Form 76, for such period not exceeding twelve months as he deems fit. 3. Such permit, upon the trial of an offence, shall be prima facie evidence of its contents and of the signature and official character of the person by whom it purports to be granted.

4. Whenever the Governor in Council deems it expedient in the public interest he may, by proclamation, suspend the operation of any of the provisions of this section in the whole or any part of Canada, and for such period as he deems fit.

5. Nothing in this section shall apply to any weapons, devices or contrivances authorized to be carried by any member of His Majesty's naval, military, or militia forces, or carried by any peace officer, or to any bona fide sale made by any manufacturer of, or person trading wholesale in, such weapons, devices or contrivances, to any person bona fide dealing in such articles and having an established and fixed place of business.

6. Every peace officer may search any person whom he has reason to believe and does believe has upon his person any weapon, device or contrivance contrary to the provisions of this section, and may seize any weapon, device or contrivance illegally in the possession of any person without a permit. Any such weapon, device or contrivance had or carried in violation of this section shall be forfeited to the Crown to be disposed of as the Attorney General of the province in which such forfeiture takes place may direct.

OFFENSIVE WEAPONS

Selling pistol or air-gun to minor.-Exception.

119. Every one is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars who sells any firearm or gives or sells any pistol or air-gun, or any ammunition therefor, to a minor under the age of sixteen years unless he establishes to the satisfaction of the justice before whom he is charged that he used reasonable diligence in endeavouring to ascertain the age of the minor before making such sale or gift and that he had good reason to believe that such minor was not under the age of sixteen years.

Origin]-Sec. 106, Code of 1892.

Sale of gun to boy under sixteen]—In Fowell v. Grafton (1910), 20 O.L.K. 639, the defendants, who sold an air-gun to a boy of thirteen, were held liable to the plaintiff, who was injured by shot fired from the gun in the hands of the boy, for their negligence in selling it to a minor under sixteen; reference being made to Code, see. 119, and the English case of Dixon v. Bell (1816), 5 M. & S. 198, followed.

Prosecution within one month]—See sec. 1140 (f).

Having pistol or air-gun on person when arrested.

120. Every one who when arrested, either on a warrant issued against him for an offence or while committing an offence, has upon his person a pistol or air-gun is guilty of an offence and liable, on summary conviction before two justices, to a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars and not less than twenty dollars, or to imprisonment for any term not exceeding three months, with or without hard labour.

Origin]—Sec. 107, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 148, sec. 2. Confiscation of weapons on conviction]—See Code sec. 622. Exception as to officers in discharge of duty]—See sec. 125. Prosecution within one month]—See sec. 1140 (f).

Having pistol or air-gun with intent to injure any person.

121. Every one who has upon his person a pistol or air-gun, with intent therewith unlawfully to do injury to any other person, is guilty of an offence and liable, on summary conviction before two justices, to a penalty not exceeding two hundred dollars and not less than fifty dollars, or to imprisonment for any term not exceeding six months, with or without hard labour.

Confiscation of weapons on conviction]-See Code Sec. 622.

Prosecution within one month]—See sec. 1140 (f).

"Upon his person"]—A conviction for "procuring" a pistol with intent unlawfully to do injury to another person, is not to be held a sufficient conviction for "having on his person a pistol, etc." and is bad as not disclosing an offence known to the law. R. v. Mines (1894), 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 217, 25 Ont. R. 577.

Pointing any firearm or air-gun at any person.

122. Every one who, without lawful excuse, points at another person any firearm or air-gun, whether loaded or unloaded, is guilty of an offence and liable, on summary conviction before two justices, to a penalty not exceeding one hundred dollars and not less than ten dollars, or to imprisonment for any term not exceeding thirty days, with or without hard labour.

Origin]—Sec. 109, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 148, see. 4. Confiscation of weapons on conviction]—See Code see. 622. Prosecution within one month]—See see. 1140 (f).

Pointing fire-orm]—On the summary trial of concurrent charges of assault and pointing a fire-arm the magistrate, after hearing the assault case, reserved judgment to take up the second charge but no further evidence then being adduced except the examination of the defendant, the magistrate dismissed the second charge and entered a conviction upon the charge of assault. There is no presumption under such circumstances that the intermixing of the trials has prejudiced the accused, and the conviction should be sustained unless such prejudice is clearly shown. The King v. Reid, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 352.

Carrying offensive weapons .- Sale.

123. Every one who carries about his person any bowie-knife, dagger, dirk, metal knuckles, skull cracker, slung shot, or other offensive weapon of a like character, or secretly carries about his person any instrument loaded at the end, or sells or exposes for sale, publicly or privately, any such weapon; or, being masked or disguised, carries or has in his possession any firearm or airgun, is guilty of an offence and liable, on summary conviction before two justices, to a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars and Seditious words .- Seditious libel .- Seditious conspiracy.

132. Seditious words are words expressive of a seditious intention.

2. A seditious libel is a libel expressive of a seditious intention.

3. A seditious conspiracy is an agreement between two or more persons to carry into execution a seditious intention.

Origin]—Sec. 123, Code of 1892. Seditious intention]—See secs. 133, 134. Speaking seditious words]—See sec. 134. Publishing seditious libel]—See sec. 134.

Intentions not seditious.

133. No one shall be deemed to have a seditious intention only because he intends in good faith,—

- (a) to show that His Majesty has been misled or mistaken in his measures; or,
- (b) to point out errors or defects in the government or constitution of the United Kingdom, or of any part of it, or of Canada or any province thereof, or in either House of Parliament of the United Kingdom or of Canada, or in any legislature, or in the administration of justice; or to excite His Majesty's subjects to attempt to procure, by lawful means, the alteration of any matter in the state; or, .

(c) to point out, in order to their removal, matters which are producing or have a tendency to produce feelings of hatred and ill-will between different classes of His Majesty's subjects.

Origin]-Sec. 123, Code of 1892.

Seditious intention]—A seditious intention is an intention to bring into hatred or contempt or to excite disaffection against the person of His Majesty, his heirs or successors, or the Government and constitution of the United Kingdom or of Canada, as by law established, or either House of Parliament, or the administration of justice, or to excite His Majesty's subjects to attempt, otherwise than by lawful means, the alteration of any matter in the State by law established, or to ineite any person to commit any erime in disturbance of the peace, or to raise discontent or disaffection amongst His Majesty's subjects, or to promote feelings of ill-will and hostility between different classes of such subjects. R. v. Felton, 9 W.W.R. 819; R. v. Collins, 9 C. & P. 456; Burbidge Criminal Law of Canada, 92; 2 Stephen's History of Criminal Law 298; R. v. Aldred (1909), 74, J.P. 55; R. v. Most, 7 Q.B.D. 244; 50 L.J.M.C. 113; R. v. Burns, 16 Cox 355; R. v. MeHugh [1901], 2 Irish R. 569; R. v. Giesinger [1917], 1 W.W.R. 595, 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 53.

It is not enough that the words used were calculated to stir up hatred and hostility against the person who uttered them and that they were unpatriotic. R. v. Trainor [1917], 1 W.W.R. 415, 10 Alta. L.R. 164, 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 232.

One of the forms of seditious intent is an intention to raise discontent or disaffection among "His Majesty's subjects" or to promote feelings of ill-will and hostility between different classes of His Majesty's subjects. To be a "subject" within this definition, it is not necessary to be a natural-born or naturalized British subject. The term will include all the persons subject to His Majesty's laws, whether included in the term British subject in its narrower acceptation or not. R. v. Felton, 9 W.W.R. 819, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 207; R. v. Cohen, 10 W.W.R. 233, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 302.

The chief field of sedition in the past has been in attacks upon the State and its form and methods of Government, but it is also clear that the offence is by no means limited to that sphere, but covers a very wide field inasmuch as anything affecting public order affects the tranquility of the State, and during the great war words which, in ordinary times, would have no outward effect in creating disorder cannot be used now without much greater danger. R. v. Felton, 9 W.W.R. 819, 823.

On the principle that a man is presumed to intend the natural consequences of his act, it would always be open to a judge or a jury to infer the intent from the words and the circumstances under which they are spoken. So jf the words used were undoubtedly a slander on Englishmen, and a slander on the British Government, the natural inference is that they were uttered with the intent that the hearers would accept the speaker's view, or for the purpose of insulting and annoying them. In the one case, there would be the intent to bring into hatred and contempt the Government, or in the other case, to promote ill-will with the probable consequences of a breach of the peace, either of which, according to the definitions, would be a seditious intention. R. v. Felton, 9 W.W.R. 819, 822, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 207.

This intention is of the essence of the offence. It may, of course, be inferred from the nature of the publication; but in the absence of an intention of this kind the publication of writings, be they ever so defamatory, does not constitute the offence of seditious libel, and the question of the existence of this intention, in any particular case, is one for the jury. R. v. Giesinger [1917], 1 W.W.R. 595, 598, 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 53 (Sask.), in which R. v. McHugh [1901], 2 Irish R. 569, 584 was approved, and R. v. Aldred (1909), 22 Cox C.C 1, 74 J.P. 55, criticised. R. v. Manshrick, 27 Man. R. 94, 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 17; R. v. Cohen, 10 W.W.R. 333, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 302, 9 Alta, L.R. 329, 34 W.L.R. 210.

Criticism of Government]—A writer may criticise or censure the conduct of the servants of the Crown or the acts of the Government; he can do it freely and liberally, but it must be without malignity and not imputing corrupt or malicious motives; the law only interferes when plainly and deliberately the limits of frank and candid and honest discussion are passed. R. v. Sullivan, 11 Cox C.C. 44; R. v. Burns, 16 Cox C.C. 355; R. v. Lambert, 2 Camp. 398, 11 Revised Reports, 748.

Compare R. v. Bainbridge (1917), 28 Can. Cr. Cas. 444; R. v. Bainbridge, 13 O.W.N. 218, 338, 459; R. v. Bainbridge, 42 O.L.R. 203.

In R. v. Tutchin (14 St. Tr. 1097; Holt, 424), Lord Holt said, "that if men shall not be called to account for possessing the people with an ill opinion of the Government, no Government can subsist; nothing can be worse to any Government than to endeavor to procure animosities as to the management of it; this has always been looked upon as a crime, and no Government can be safe unless it be punished." And Lord Ellenborough, in R. v. Cobbett, 29 St. Tr. 49, said that if a publication be calculated to alienate the affections of the people, by bringing the Government into disesteem, whether the expedient resorted to be ridicule or obloquy, the writer, publisher, etc., are punishable. And whether the defendant really intended by his publication to alienate the affections of the people from the Government, or not, is not material; if the publication be calculated to have that effect, it is a seditious libel. R. v. Burdett, 1 St. Tr. (N.S.) 1; 4 B. & Ald. 95. It is also a seditious libel if the accused published it with an intention to inflame the minds of the labourers and working people, and to incite them to acts of violence, riot, and disorder, and to the burning and destruction of property, R. v. Cobbett, 2 St. Tr. (N.S.) 789, 899; Archbold, 22nd ed., 943.

FALSE NEWS

[§ 136]

Procuring publication of false reports affecting immigration]--By the Immigration Act, R.S.C., ch. 93, sec. 45, every person who does, in Canada, anything for the purpose of causing or procuring the publication or circulation, by advertisement or otherwise, in a country outsidg of Canada of false representations as to the opportunities for employment in Canada, or as to the state of the labor market in Canada, intended or adapted to encourage or induce, or to deter or prevent, the immigration into Canada of persons resident in that country, or who does anything in Canada for the purpose of causing or procuring the communication to any resident of such country of any such false representations, shall, if any such false representations are thereafter so published, circulated or communicated, be guilty of an offence, and liable, on summary conviction before two justices of the peace, to a penalty for each offence of not more than one thousand dollars and not less than fifty dollars.

Piracy.

Piracy by the law of nations.—Punishment in case of violence to person.—Other cases.

137. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence who does any act which amounts to piracy by the law of nations, and is liable,—

- (a) to the penalty of death, if in committing or attempting to commit such crime the offender murders, attempts to murder or wounds any person, or does any act by which the life of any person is likely to be endangered;
- (b) to imprisonment for life in all other cases.

Origin]-Sec. 127, Code of 1892.

Piracy by the law of nations]—Piracy by the law of nations is defined by Stephen (Digest of Criminal Law art. 104), as "Taking a ship on the high seas or within the jurisdiction of the Lord High Admiral from the possession or control of those who are lawfully entitled to it, and carrying away the ship itself, or any of its goods, tackle, apparel, or furniture, under circumstances which would have amounted to robbery if the act had been done within the body of an English county." Piratical acts.—British subject; hostility or robbery or adhering to King's enemies.—Entering British ship and destroying goods.—Certain acts done upon British ship.—Pirate supplies. .—Fitting out ship for pirate trade.—Assisting pirate.

138. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for life who, within Canada, does any of the piratical acts specified in this section, or who, having done any of such piratical acts, comes or is brought within Canada without having been tried therefor, that is to say:—

- (a) Being a British subject, on the sea, or in any place within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England, under colour of any commission from any foreign prince or state, whether such prince or state is at war with His Majesty or not, or under pretense of authority from any person whomsoever commits any act of hostility or robbery against, other British subjects, or during any war is in any way adherent to or gives aid to His Majesty's enemies;
- (b) Whether a British subject or not, on the sea or in any place within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England, enters into any British ship, and throws overboard, or destroys any part of the goods belonging to such ship, or laden on board the same;
- (c) Being on board any British ship on the sea or in any place within the jurisdiction of the Admiralty of England,
 - (i) turns enemy or rebel, and piratically runs away with the ship, or any boat, ordnance, ammunition or goods,
 - (ii) yields up voluntarily any ship, boat, ordnance, ammunition or goods to any pirate,
 - (iii) brings any seducing message from any pirate. enemy or rebel,
 - (iv) counsels or procures any persons to yield up or run away with any ship, goods or merchandise, or to turn pirate or to go over to pirates,
 - (v) lays violent hands on the commander of any such ship, in order to prevent him from fighting in defence of his ship and goods,

." On board any British ship."]—On an indictment for an offence committed on board a British ship upon the high seas, it is not necessary in order to prove the nationality of the ship to produce its register; the fact that she sailed under the British flag is sufficient. R. v. Moore, 2 Dorion (Que.), 52; R. v. Von Seberg, 11 Cox, 520; R. v. Bjørnsen, 10 Cox, 74.

Preliminary consent to proscention for Admiralty offences]—See sec. 591.

Jurisdiction over foreigner for offence on board British ship on his subsequent arrest in Canada]—The Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (Imp.), sees. 684-687, confers power on a British colonial court of criminal jurisdiction to try a foreigner or a British subject found within its jurisdietion for any offence committed by him on board of a British ship on the high seas, provided such colonial court could have tried such a person if the offence had been committed within the limits of its ordinary jurisdietion. But it seems that such an offender when he comes within the jurisdiction of the colonial court is subject to the general law of the place regulating the procedure for trying such offences; the Admiralty Offences Act of 1849, 12 and 13 Vict. (Imp.), ch. 96, must receive a like construction. R. v. Heekman (1902), 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 242.

Foreign warships in British harbors]—In Stephen's Digest of Criminal Procedure, p. 6, it is stated that the criminal law of England "probably does not extend to acts done by persons subject to the discipline of foreign ships of war in British harbors or other waters, so long as such acts affect such persons only, and if such persons are not Consent of Governor-General]—In R. v. Heekman (1902), 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 242, it was held, per Ritchie, J., and Weatherbe, J., that a charge against a seaman not a British subject on a British ship for ineiting a revolt upon the ship while on the high seas cannot, if taken only under the Code be made without the consent of the Governor-General obtained prior to the laying of the information. (Code sec. 591).

Per Ritchie, J.—If the proceedings for the offence are taken under the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (Imp.), sec. 686, the consent of the Governor-General is not required and Code sec. 591 would not apply.

Per Weatherbe, J.—Code sec. 591 applies to the procedure in Canadian Courts in respect of offences committed within the Admiralty jurisdiction whether the proceedings are taken under the Criminal Code or the Imperial Merchant Shipping Act or the Admiralty Offence Act, 1849 (Imp.).

A foreign seaman on a ship of Canadian register cannot be summarily convicted for insubordination under the Canada Shipping Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 113, sec. 287, unless leave to lay the information has been granted by the Governor-General under sec. 591 of the Criminal Code. PART III.

RESPECTING THE PRESERVATION OF PEACE IN THE VICINITY

OF PUBLIC WORKS.

Interpretation.

Definitions.

142. In this Part, unless the context otherwise requires,---

- (a) 'this Part' means such section or sections thereof as are in force, by virtue of any proclamation, in the place with reference to which the Part is to be construed and applied;
- (b) 'commissioner' means a commissioner under this Part:
- (c) 'public work 'includes any railway, canal, road, bridge or other work of any kind, and any mining operation constructed or carried on by the Government of Canada, or of any province of Canada, or by any municipal corporation, or by any incorporated company, or by private enterprise.

Origin]-The Act Respecting the Preservation of Peace Near Public Works, R.S. 1886, ch. 151, sec. 1.

Commissioners under Part III of Code]—See also sec. 2, sub-sec. (43).

Commissioners of Police]—See the Dominion Police Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 92. A commissioner of Dominion police for a province may exercise his judicial functions at any place within the province in respect of offences within the locality in respect of which he is specially designated by a separate commission. R. v. Wells, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 218.

Defects of form]-By Code sec. 1132 no action or other proceeding, warrant, judgment, order or other instrument or writing authorized by any provisions of Part XII, relating to Part III, or necessary to carry out its provisions, shall be held void or be allowed to fail for defect of form.

Summary conviction procedure]-Any commissioner or justice may hear and determine, in manner provided by Part XV, any case arising within his jurisdiction. All the provisions of Part XV shall, in so far as they are not inconsistent with Part XII, apply to every commissioner or justice mentioned in Part XII or empowered to try offenders against Part III. Every such commissioner shall be deemed a justice within the meaning of Part XV, whether he is or is not a justice for other purposes. Sec. 618.

Proclamation.

Part III may be declared in force.—Or declared no longer in force.— No effect in city.—Judicial notice.

143. The Governor in Council may, as often as occasion requires, declare, by proclamation, that upon and after a day therein named, this Part, or any section or sections thereof, shall be in force in any place in Canada in such proclamation designated, within the limits or in the vicinity whereof any public work is in course of construction, or in any place in the vicinity of any public work, within which he deems it necessary that this Part, or any section or sections thereof, should be in force; and this Part, or any such section or sections thereof, shall, upon and after the day named in such proclamation, take effect within the place or places designated therein.

2. The Governor in Council may, in like manner, from time to time, declare this Part, or any section or sections thereof, to be no longer in force in any such place, and may again, from time to time, declare this Part, or any section or sections thereof, to be in force therein.

3. No such proclamation shall have effect within the limits of any city.

4. All courts, magistrates and justices shall take judicial notice of every such proclamation.

Origin]-R.S.C. 1886, ch. 151, sec. 2.

Districts proclaimed]—See 1915 Can. Statutes, p. 161, for an index to the proclamations of Part III of the Code from 1907 to 1915, with references to the volume and page of each in the Canada Gazette, and subsequent proclamations in the Gazette.

Intoxicating Liquor.

Sale of liquor prohibited in proclaimed districts .- Exceptions.

150. Upon and after the day named in such proclamation, and during such period as the proclamation remains in force, no person shall, at any place within the limits specified in the proclamation, sell, barter, or directly or indirectly, for any matter, thing, profit or reward, exchange, supply or dispose of, or shall give to any person, any intoxicating liquor, or shall expose, keep or have in his possession any intoxicating liquor intended to be dealt with in any such way.

2. The provisions of this section shall not extend to any person selling intoxicating liquor by wholesale, and not retailing it, if the said person is a licensed distiller or brewer, nor shall they apply where liquor is supplied for bona fide medicinal purposes upon the prescription of a duly qualified medical practitioner.

"Intoxicating liquor"]-See definition in sec. 2, sub-sec. 17, as amended by 6-7 Edw. VII, ch. 9.

Defects of form or substance]—By Code sec. 1132, no action or other proceeding, warrant, judgment, order or other instrument or writing authorized by any provisions of Part XII, relating to Part III, or necessary to carry out its provisions, shall be held void or be allowed to fail for "defect of form."

See sec. 724 as to variances and defects in substance or in form. An information was laid against L. for "keeping for sale" intoxicating liquor contrary to the provisions of s. 150 or the Code, but the summons charged that L. "unlawfully did sell." L. appeared to the summons in person and by counsel, and pleaded to the information. His counsel at once objected that there was a variance between the information and summons, and on the application of counsel for the prosecution the summons was amended to conform with the information. L.'s counsel then applied for an adjournment on the ground that L. was not prepared to meet the new charge, but offered no affidavit or other evidence in support of his application. The Commissioner, having refused the adjournment, the cause was heard and L. made his defence: Held, the adjournment was in the discretion of the Commissioner and was not a Search for and science of liquors in proclaimed districts]--The special procedure of Code sees. 613 and 614 (as amended 1907, ed. 9) and of sees. 615 to 617, applies to offences under sees. 150, 151 and 152. In addition to these there is see. 6 of the Can. Stat. 1907, ed. 9, which, strangely enough, was not made an amendment to the Code. It reads as follows:---" Every officer appointed under Part III of the Criminal Code, and every constable appointed under any law of Canada, may seize upon view anywhere within the limits specified in any proclamation under the said part any intoxicating liquor in respect of which he has reason to believe that a violation of the provisions of the said part is intended, and he shall forthwith convey any liquor so seized, together with the owner or person in possession thereof, before a commissioner of Justice, who shall thereupon proceed as is provided in see. 614."

Selzure of liquor under Part III.

6. Every officer appointed under Part III of The Criminal Code, and every constable appointed under any law of Canada, may seize upon view anywhere within the limits specified in any proclamation under the said Part any intoxicating liquor in respect of which he has reason to believe that a violation of the provisions of the said Part is intended, and he shall forthwith convey any liquor so seized, together with the owner or person in possession thereof, before a commissioner or justice, who shall thereupon proceed as is provided in sec. 614.

Describing the offence]—See the special provision of sec. 617, as to liquor offences under the Code.

Defects of form or substance]—By Code sec. 1132 no action or other proceeding, warrant, judgment, order or other instrument or writing authorized by any provisions of Part XII (see sees. 613-618), relating to Part III, or necessary to carry out its provisions, shall be held void or be allowed to fail for "defect of form." And see the general provision of sec. 724 as to defects either "of form or substance" in summary proceedings.

A misdescription of the official capacity of the magistrate in the proceedings prior to the final adjudication whereby a "commissioner of police" was wrongly described therein as a "justice of the peace" will not invalidate a summary conviction made by him as a "commissioner of police" if he was correctly designated as such both in the memorandum of adjudication and in the formal conviction. R. v. Fitzgerald, 19 Can. Cr. Cas. 39, 19 W.L.R. 462.

Summary conviction before a commissioner or a justice]—See sees. 144, 613-618, 1132.

Seizure of prohibited liquors]-See secs. 613 to 617 inclusive, and Can. Stat. 1907, ch. 9, sec. 6, supra.

Summoning owner of liquor]—Sec. 614 provides for the summoning of the owner or keeper of the liquor in proceedings to condemn it to forfeiture and to order the liquor to be destroyed. The owner or person in possession may be convicted without any further information or trial where the liquor is declared forfeited in such proceedings to which he has been summoned. Sec. 615.

Semble, the order for destruction would have to be quashed before an action could be brought against the commissioner for alleged illegal conversion of the liquor destroyed. Townsend v. Judicial, etc., officer accepting or obtaining office for consideration. —Giving or offering bribe.

156. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to fourteen years' imprisonment who,---

- (a) holding any judicial office, or being a member of Parliament or of a legislature, corruptly accepts or obtains, or agrees to accept, or attempts to obtain for himself or any other person, any money or valuable consideration, office, place, or employment on account of anything already done or omitted, or to be afterwards done or omitted, by him in his judicial capacity, or in his capacity as such member; or,
 - (b) corruptly gives or offers to any such person or to any other person, any such bribe as aforesaid on account of any such act or omission.

[§156]

Bribery of a legislator]-In R. v. Biddinger, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 217, 15 D.L.R. 511, Charbonneau, J., held that a magistrate made judicious use of his discretion and rendered a good judgment in deciding that there was no primâ facie offence in the complaint and that there were no grounds for the issuing of the warrants as long as the persons mentioned in the complaint were under the protection of the safe conduct accorded them by the Legislature of Quebec. He said in that case: "The petitioner has not shown that the fact of having assumed a fictitious name in seeking a legislative incorporation was a criminal offence. On the other hand, the offence of attempted corruption, set out as it would have been by the amendment which petitioner might have made in his complaint, was not sufficiently elaborated to permit the magistrate to act. Corruption is an act which essentially implies the participation of two persons, the corrupter and the corrupted. If it were solely an act of attempted corruption that was involved, it would have been sufficient as in every unilateral offence, to make mention of the corrupting person. It was incumbent on the complainant alleging an act of corruption to denounce not only the corruption but also the corrupted ones. As it made mention only of the corrupters, the complaint was apparently nothing but an act of malice." See also to the same effect Marsil v. Lanctot (1914), 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 223. Compare R. v. Bunting, 7 Ont. R. 524, as to the offence at common law. Leave of Attorney-General to prosecute]-See sec. 593.

CRIMINAL CODE (PART IV)

[§ 160]

Breach of trust by public officer.

160. Every public officer is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to five years' imprisonment who, in the discharge of the duties of his office, commits any fraud or breach of trust affecting the public, whether such fraud or breach of trust would have been criminal or not if committed against a private person.

Origin]-Sec. 135, Code of 1892.

"Public officer"]--Unless the context otherwise requires, the words "public officer" include any inland revenue or customs officer, officer of the army, navy, marine, militia, Royal North-West mounted police, or other officer engaged in enforcing the laws relating to the revenue, customs, trade or navigation of Canada. Sec. 2, sub-sec. (29).

Jurisdiction of Sessions excluded]-See sec. 583.

Municipal corruption.

161. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars and not less than one hundred dollars, and to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two years and not less than one month, and in default of payment of such fine to imprisonment for a further term not exceeding six months, who directly or indirectly,—

(a) makes any offer, proposal, gift, loan, promise or agree-

Time limit for prosecution]-See sec. 1140 (b).

Extradition for bribery]—On 21st December, 1906, a supplementary Convention, dated 12th April, 1905, was ratified between Great Britain and the United States, and became operative in 1907 on due publication (Canada Statutes, 1907, lxxii) whereby additional crimes were made extraditable, including amongst them (14), "Bribery, defined to be the offering, giving or receiving of bribes made criminal by the laws of both countries."

This latter Convention is to be treated as an integral part of the Convention of July 12, 1889, and December 13, 1900, and as if these additional crimes had been therein specified. (Article 2).

In an extradition case in regard to an assistant eity engineer of a city in the State of Ohio, with the supervision over certain of the streets which were being improved by a firm of contractors, he accepted from the firm the sum of $50 for the purpose of influencing him in his work of supervision:—Held, that the offence did not amount to bribery at common law, where it could only be predicated of a reward given to a Judge or other person concerned in the public administration of justice; but that it constituted bribery both under the laws of the State of Ohio, as well as under sub-sec. (c) of sec. 161 of the Criminal Code. In re Cannon (1908), 17 O.L.R. 352, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 186.

Selling office .- Purchasing office .- Forfeiture.

162. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence who, directly or indirectly,---

- (a) sells or agrees to sell any appointment to or resignation of any office, or any consent to any such appointment or resignation, or receives, or agrees to receive, any reway, or profit from the sale thereof; or,
- (b) purchases or gives any reward or profit for the purchase of any such appointment, resignation or consent, or agrees or promises to do so;

and in addition to any other penalty incurred, forfeits any right which he may have in the office and is disabled for life from holding the same.

BUYING OFFICIAL POSITIONS

As to municipal offices]—Sec. 162 aims to prevent the selling and purchasing of the office itself, and in this respect differs from s-s. (b)of s. 161, which aims to prevent the purchasing of the influence of the officer or member of the council in securing the office. R. v. Hogg (1914), 7 W.W.R. 107, 112, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 228.

Jurisdiction of Sessions excluded]—See sec. 583. Punishment]—See sec. 1052.

Receiving reward for corrupt municipal act.—Giving or procuring any reward.—Being a party to negotiations.—Keeping office for the purpose.

163. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence who, directly or indirectly,—

- (a) receives or agrees to receive any reward or profit for any interest, request or negotiation about any office, or under pretense of using any such interest, making any such request or being concerned in any such negotiation; or,
 - (b) gives or procures to be given any profit or reward, or makes or procures to be made any agreement for the giving of any profit or reward, for any such interest, request or negotiation as aforesaid; or,
 - (c) solicits, recommends or negotiates in any manner as to any appointment to or resignation of any office in expectation of any reward or profit; or,
 - (d) keeps any office or place for transacting or negotiating any business relating to vacancies in, or the sale or purchase of, or appointment to or resignation of offices.

Origin]—Code of 1892, sec. 137. "Any office"]—See sec. 155 (c).

Bribery at common law]—Bribery at common law was "the receiving or offering any undue reward by or to any person whatsoever, in a public office in order to influence his behavior in office and induce him to act contrary to the known rules of honesty and integrity." It is an indictable misdemeanor at common law to bribe or attempt to bribe any person holding a public office. Rex v. Vaughan, 4 Burr. 2494, Rex. v. Cassano, 5 Esp. 231; R. v. CRIMINAL CODE (PART IV)

An attempt to improperly procure an office by offering a bribe or other improper inducement is an indictable misdemeanor at common law. Rex. v. Vaughan, supra; Rex. v. Pollman, 2 Camp. 229.

Wilfully disobeying statute of Canada or of provincial legislature.

164. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to one year's imprisonment who, without lawful excuse, disobeys any Act of the Parliament of Canada or of any legislature in Canada by wilfully doing any act which it forbids, or omitting to do any act which it requires to be done, unless some penalty or other mode of punishment is expressly provided by law.¹

Origin]-Sec. 138, Code of 1892.

Wilful infraction of a statute whether federal or provincial|—This section has been applied to a clause in the Ontario Municipal Act prohibiting the deposit of fraudulent ballots in a ballot box used at a municipal election; R. v. Durocher (1913), 28 O.L.R. 499, 4 O.W.N. 1057, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 382, affirming R. v. Durocher, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 61, 4 O.W.N. 867; and to unlawfully voting twice at the same municipal election. R. v. Mechan (No. 2), 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 312, 3 O.L.R. 567.

There must be an active participation by the manager of a corporation in the wilful disobedience by the corporation to make the manager personally liable under sec. 164. R. v. Hays (1907), 14 O.L.R. 201, 6 Can. Ry. Cas. 480, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 423, and compare R. v. Hendric, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 208.

In the Durocher case it was suggested by Maclaren, J.A., that sec. 164 did not extend as far as the common law, and that there may be cases beyond the scope of sec. 164, which may still be prosecuted at common law.

Where an act or omission, which is not an offence at common law, is made punishable by a statute, the question arises whether the criminal remedies are limited to the particular remedy given by the terms of the statute, or, in other words, whether the remedy given by the statute is exclusive of or alternative to other remedies given by other statutes or the common law. Where an act or omission is not an offence at common law, but is made an offence by statute, the common law permitted an indictment if there was a substantive prohibitory clause in such statute, though there be afterwards a particular provision and a particular remedy given. R. v. Durocher, 4 O.W.N. 867, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 61 (affirmed 28 O.L.R. 499). Clegg v. Earby Gas Co. [1896], 1 Q.B. 592. If the case be one within the sections of the Code then the maxim

Disobeying orders of court where no other procedure provided.

165. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to one year's imprisonment who, without lawful excuse, disobeys any lawful order, other than for the payment of money, made by any court of justice, or by any person or body of persons authorized by any statute to make or give such order, unless some penalty is imposed, or other mode of proceeding is expressly provided, by law.

(b) any person in the lawful execution of any process against any lands or goods or in making lawful distress or seizure; is guilty of an offence punishable on indictment or on summary conviction and liable if convicted on indictment to two years' imprisonment, and, on summary conviction before two justices, to six months' imprisonment with hard labour, or to a fine of one hundred dollars.

What is "obstruction"?]-Under sec. 291, sub-sec. (3), of the Railway Act, 1903, Can., which provided that every person who wilfully obstructs or impedes any officer of a railway company in the execution of his duty upon the premises of the company, shall be liable to the penalties imposed by that Act, it was held by the Court of King's Bench of Quebec, that it was an obstruction of the railway officer for a cabman, having no right upon the railway cab-stand, to refuse to move away from same with his cab on the demand of the officer whose duty it was to enforce the company's regulations respecting the station property, although the cabman offered no physical resistance, but simply refused to leave when ordered. Rex v. Leclaire (1906), 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 332.

So, also, it has been held that a workman "obstructs" his medical examination under the Workmen's Compensation Act, Eng., if by his own acts he prevented examination or made it impossible, e.g., by going away to some unknown place without giving any intimation to his employer. Finnie v. Duncan [1904], 42 Sc.L.R. 192.

By the Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871 (Imp.) 34 and 35 Vict., ch. 112, sec. 12 provides that "where any person is convicted of an assault on any constable when in the execution of his duty, such person shall be guilty of an offence against this Act." By the Prevention of Crimes Amendment Act, 1885 (Imp.) 48 and 49 Vict., ch. 75, sec. 2, "the provisions of the twelfth section of the said recited Act (the Prevention of Crimes Act, 1871), shall apply to all cases of resisting or wilfully obstructing any constable or peace officer when in the execution of his duty."

Two constables, having measured certain distances on a road much frequented by motor cars, were watching in order to ascertain the pace at which each car passed over the measured distance, with a view to discovering whether it was proceeding at an illegal rate of speed. One Little gave warning of this fact to approaching cars, which then slackened speed. There was no evidence that Little was acting in concert with any of the drivers of the cars, or that any car when the warning was given, was going at an illegal pace. In a prosecution against Little for wilfully obstructing police constables in the execution of their duty the magistrates were of the opinion that the acts of Little did not in law constitute an obstruction of the police constables in the execution of their duty within the meaning of the sections of the Acts mentioned, and dismissed the information, but stated a case for the opinion of the King's Bench Division. It was there held that the magistrate had come to a right conclusion, but Darling, J., in the course of his judgment in the case, says, (p. 63) :--" I do not wish to be understood to say that, in order that there should be an offence under this section there must be some physical obstruction of the constable. In my opinion a policeman who, in seeking information which might lead to the conviction of the perpetrators of a crime, was wilfully misled by false information, would be obstructed in the execution of his duty, and I should not like to say that the person who so wilfully misled him was not committing an offence within the meaning of this section ": and Lord Alverstone, C.J., said:-"'I also would wish to guard myself

A warning given to motorists who were exceeding the speed limit that constables further on would time them at a police trap distance, has been held in England to be an "obstruction" under the Prevention of Crimes Act. Betts v. Stevens [1910] 1 K.B. 1, 79 L.J.K.B. 17.

The refusal of permission to search which the officer was entitled to make is an obstruction. R. v. Matheson, ex parte Guimond (1913) 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 312, 13 E.L.R. 58, 12 D.L.R. 480.

There must be a "duty" to arrest or the obstruction to the arrest will not be punishable under this section. R. v. Cook, 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 32; R. v. Carley, 18 C.L.T. 26. So also if the officer is making an illegal seizure the obstruction is not within the section. R. v. Finlay, (1901) 13 Man. R. 383, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 539.

If the officer has power to arrest without warrant under the particular circumstances, he may justify under that power although he had a warrant if the latter was defective. R. v. Sabeans, 37 N.S.R. 227, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 498.

Science under lien agreement]—The retaking of possession of a chattel by the vendors thereof under the provisions of a conditional sale agreement, is not a seizure within the meaning of the Code, so as to subject the purchaser of the chattel, who resists the right to retake it, to the penalty prescribed in section 169. Rex. v. Shand, 7 O.L.R. 190, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 45 (C.A.).

Seizure for rent]—On a charge of obstructing a lawful distress for rent, the prosecution has to prove that rent was in arrear. R. v. Harron (1903), 6 O.L.R. 668, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 543.

Seizure under execution]—The power of a court bailiff to appoint a deputy to make a seizure under execution may be implied from the statute under which the court is constituted. R. v. Polsky [1917], 1 W.W.R. 451, 27 Man. R. 271.

Summary conviction or summary trial]—The offence is expressly made punishable under the summary conviction procedure of Part XV of the Code, and being also an indictable offence, the procedure by indictment, or of a formal charge substituted for indictment in Alberta and Saskatchewan, may be followed. As to sub-sec. (a) of sec. 160, there is an alternative procedure of "summary trial" under Part XVI, see sec. 773, sub-sec. (c) if the offence be charged as wilful obstruction of any person acting in aid of any such officer. Charges under sub-sec. (b) of sec. 169 are not affected by sec. 773, but they may, of course, be summarily tried under sec. 777 if brought before a tribunal qualified under the latter section.

A question has been raised as to whether the alternative of summary conviction can apply if the person accused under sec. 169 is brought before a police magistrate or other tribunal having "summary trial" jurisdiction under Part XVI, as well as a general jurisdiction-under the "summary convictions" elauses (Part XV). In Ontario it is held that this joint jurisdiction does not prevent the magistrate from proceeding under Part XV and that Part XV (summary convictions) and Part XVI (summary trials) are quite independent of each other in that respect. R. v. West (1915), 35 O.L.R. 95, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 145, affirming R. v. West, 34 O.L.R. 368, 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 249. The same theory is upheld in New Brunswick; R. v. Folkins, ex parte McAdam (1915), 43 N.B.R. 538, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 365, 27 D.L.R. 32; and in British Columbia, R. v. Nelson (1901), 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 461, 8 B.C.R. 110 and R. v. Jack, 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 304, 9 B.C.R. 19. The theory is denied in Manitoba; R. v. Crossen (1899), 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 153, 12 Man. R. 571; in Nova Scotia, R. v. Carmichael (1902), 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 167; and in Quebec; R. v. Van Koolberger (1909), 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 228, 19 Que. K.B. 240. In the latter case it was held that as two justices sitting together are a statutory "magistrate" under Part XVI for certain offences (Code sec 771 (a7) and are further qualified to make a summary conviction under sec. 169, the procedure of Part XVI is ancillary to that of Part XV on such a charge because of the reference in sec. 706 to any "special provision otherwise enacted;" and that there could be no "summary conviction" without taking the consent of the accused under sec. 778 to being tried by the justices. The Manitoba and Nova Scotia decisions above referred to are, in effect, that if the tribunal is qualified under Part XVI the procedure must be under that Part Falsely representing himself as peace officer.-Badge.-Uniform.

169*a*. Every one who falsely represents himself to be a constable or other peace officer, or who, not being a constable or other peace officer, makes use of any badge or article of uniform or equipment in such a manner as is likely to make persons believe that he is a constable or other peace officer, is liable upon summary conviction to a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars and costs, or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three months, or to both such fine and such imprisonment.

Origin]—Can. Stat. 1913, ch. 13, sec. 7. Peace officer]—See definition in sec. 2 (26).

Misleading Justice

Definition of perjury .- Subornation .- Evidence before grand jury.

170. Perjury is an assertion as to a matter of fact, opinion, belief or knowledge, made by a witness in a judicial proceeding as part of his evidence, upon oath or affirmation, whether such evidence is given in open court, or by affidavit or otherwise, and whether such evidence is material or not, such assertion being known to such witness to be false, and being intended by him to mislead the court, jury or person holding the proceeding.

2. Subornation of perjury is counselling or procuring a person to commit any perjury which is actually committed.

3. Evidence in this section includes evidence given on the roir dire and evidence given before a grand jury.

Origin]-Sec. 145, Code of 1892; Perjury Act, R.S.C., 1886, ch. 154; 32-33 Vict. Can. ch. 23.

Punishment]-See sec. 174.

"As to a matter of fact, etc."]-Perjury cannot be assigned in respect of a mere promissory oath; and a court bailiff issuing a false certificate purporting to be made under his oath of office cannot be convicted of perjury in respect of its falsity. R. v. Tremblay, 26 Que. K.B. 37.

PERJURY

"It is laid down," says Hardwicke, L.C., in Omychund v. Barker, Willes R. 538, 1 Atk. 21 at 45, "by all writers that the outward act is not essential to the oath. It has been the wisdom of all nations to administer such oaths as are agreeable to the notion of the persons taking." And Lord Mansfield says in Atcheson v. Everett, Cowp. 382 at 389, "that upon the principles of the common law there is no particular form essential to an oath to be taken by a witness."

In Curry v. The King (1913), 48 S.C.R. 532, Sir Charles Fitzpatrick, C.J., said :-- " It is now admitted to be the absolute right of every person in the English Courts to be sworn for every purpose in Scotch form without the use of any book and without any question being asked. It may be open to question whether it is not better as a matter of public policy for our Courts and other persons administering oaths to adhere to the time-honoured custom of swearing witnesses upon the Bible or Testament in all cases except those where the witness or party claims to have conscientious objections to swearing in that mode or form. But we think, however that may be, that where no such objection is raised and the oath is taken voluntarily by a person with uplifted hand and calling God to witness the truth of his evidence or statements, it would be alike a mocking of justice and a disregard of the common law as we understand it to allow such a person on an indictment for perjury to escape on the sole ground that he took the oath without being sworn on the Bible or New Testament." Curry v. The King (1913), 48 S.C.R. 532, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 191, affirming a conviction as to which the court below were divided. R. v. Curry, 47 N.S.R. 176, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 273.

In Regina v. Pah-Mah-Gay, 20 U.C.R. 195, a case of a non-Christian Indian witness, who believed in a Supreme Being and a state of rewards or punishments, being sworn in the ordinary way upon the Gospels, Robinson, C.J., after referring to Omychund v. Barker, Willes R. 538, 1 Atk. 21, said, p. 198:---"If the witness had belonged to a nation or tribe that had in use among them any particular ceremony, which was understood to bind them to speak the truth, however strange and fantastic the ceremony might seem to us, it would have been indispensable that the witness should have been sworn, if we may use the term, according to such ceremony, because all should be done that can be done to touch the conscience of the witness according to his notions, however superstitious they may seem."

CRIMINAL CODE (PART IV)

In R. v. Lee Tuck, 2 W.W.R. 605, 21 W.L.R. 669, 19 Can. Cr. Cas. 471, it was held that a Chinaman cannot be convicted of perjury when presented as a witness in the case in which false testimony was alleged to have been given, if, in response to a question from the clerk of the Court the accused stated that he was a Christian and that he desired to be sworn on the Bible, but under the direction of the trial Judge, without further inquiry or any assent on the part of the Chinaman, the clerk administered the Chinese oath by burning paper, as under such circumstances no binding oath was administered.

There need not be any express admission by the witness that his conscience was bound in a case where he was sworn in the form usual to persons of his race or belief. R. v. Shajoo Ram (1914), 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 334, 30 W.L.R. 65 (B.C.), applying Curry v. The King, 48 S.C.R. 532; and see R. v. Lai Ping, 11 B.C.R. 102, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 467.

The deponent to an affidavit is none the less liable for perjury if he himself spoke the words of obligation and consequently the official was not called upon to repeat them. Re Collins, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 73.

Being known to be false]—Where the sworn statement was voluntarily withdrawn later upon the witness realizing that he had made a mistake in denying his signature, the surrounding circumstances are to be considered in determining whether the original statement was made with knowledge of its falsity. R. v. Doyle, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 69; R. v. Wylde, 6 C. & P. 380.

The defendant charged with perjury is entitled to have put in evidence other parts of his testimony given at the same time to explain or qualify the part of the evidence on which perjury is assigned. R. v. Coote, 10 B.C.R. 285, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 199. And if the alleged perjury was in respect of evidence given on a preliminary enquiry before a magistrate, he may attack the completeness of the written depositions produced by oral testimony of other statements sworn to before the magistrate and not taken down by him. R. v. Prasiloski (No. 2), 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 139.

There would, however, be a presumption, although a rebuttable one, that the magistrate's statutory duty to take down all material testimony had been duly carried out. R. v. Prasiloski, supra.

Oath of office]—A bailiff's oath of office that he will faithfully perform his duties, will not make a false return of the mileage travelled to serve process the subject of perjury, although the return is made under his oath of office. R. v. Tremblay (1916), 26 Que. K.B. 37, 28 Can. Cr. Cas. 21.

Certain formal allegations dispensed with on indictment]-See secs. 852 and 862.

Intended to mislead]—See R. v. Skelton (1898), 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 467, 3 Terr. L.R. 58; R. v. Yaldon, 17 O.L.R. 179, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 489. Failure to specially allege the intent to mislead will not be fatal to the indictment if it charges that the accused committed perjury. R. v. Yaldon, supra.

Witness defined as regards offence of perjury.—Judicial proceeding defined.

171. Every person is a witness within the meaning of the last preceding section who actually gives his evidence, whether he was competent to be a witness or not, and whether his evidence was admissible or not.

2. Every proceeding is judicial within the meaning of the last preceding section which is held in or under the authority of any court of justice, or before a grand jury, or before either the Senate or House of Commons of Canada, or any committee of either the Senate or House of Commons, or before any legislative council, legislative assembly or house of assembly or any committee thereof, empowered by law to administer an oath, or before any justice, or any arbitrator or umpire, or any person or body of persons authorized by law or by any statute in force for the time being to make an inquiry and take evidence therein upon oath, or before any legal tribunal by which any legal right or liability can be established, or before any person acting as a court, justice or tribunal, having power to hold such judicial proceeding, whether duly constituted or not, and whether the proceeding was duly instituted or not before such court or person so as to authorize it or him to hold the proceeding, and although such proceeding was held in a wrong place or was otherwise invalid.

Origin]-Code of 1892, see. 145.

Certain formal allegations dispensed with on indictment]-See secs. 852 and 862.

Whether witness competent or not]—As to competency of witnesses in criminal matters and in civil proceedings under federal jurisdiction, see the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145. As to civil proceedings under provincial jurisdiction, see the "Evidence Act" of the particular province. Arbitrations]-See the provincial Arbitration Act as to powers of arbitrators to take evidence upon oath.

"Judicial proceedings"]—The principle on which see. 171 is based is that a person who attempts by falsehood to mislead a tribunal de facte exercising judicial functions should not escape punishment by showing some defect in the constitution of the tribunal or some error in the proceedings themselves. Drew v. The King, 35 S.C.R. 228, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 424; English draft Code 119 and the Commissioners' comments thereon; R. v. Mitchell, 27 O.L.R. 615, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 193.

Compare Giroux v. The King (1917), 56 S.C.R. 63, 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 258, dismissing appeal from 26 Que. K.B. 323.

A proceeding is judicial within sec. 171 if before a magistrate having general jurisdiction to try a complaint on a proper information although there was no information, if no objection was raised thereto or to the irregularity of the arrest. R. v. Yaldon, 17 O.L.R. 179, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 489.

An examination for discovery in an action is included. R. v Thickens (1906), 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 274; R. v. T---, 12 B.C.R. 223. R. v. Howley (1912), 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 108, affirming R. v. Howley, 20 Can. Cr. Cas. 36. Perjury may be assigned in respect of evidence taken before a de facto tribunal although it had no jurisdiction in the particular matter. Drew v. The King, 33 S.C.R. 228, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 424, affirming 11 Que. K.B. 477, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 241; and see R. v. Roberts, 14 Cox C.C. 101, as to the presumption of due appointment of an official acting as a de facto tribunal. The proceedings may be one held either in a court or other tribunal referred to in sec. 171 or under the authority of such court or tribunal and the evidence given by affidavit or otherwise (sec. 170) is included. But where a commissioner for taking affidavits himself exercises no judicial functions, it would seem to be an answer to a perjury charge that the affidavit was not of a class which his commission empowered him to take. R. v. McIntosh, 1 Hannay N.B. 372. A different class of case is that where a court registrar or examiner is deputed to take evidence and after swearing the witness leaves the room while the examination is being taken in presence of counsel and taken down by an official stenographer. It would seem that, at least where no objection was raised to proceeding with the examination in the absence of the examiner, the proceeding would be a judicial one as to which perjury would lie, but the contrary was held by Clement, J ... in R. v. Rulofson (1908), 14 B.C.R. 79, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 253.

Proof of the judicial proceeding]—Where the proceeding is a preliminary enquiry in a criminal matter based upon a sworn information, the information itself is to be produced on the perjury charge to prove that the preliminary enquiry was a judicial proceeding. R. v. Farrell, 20 O.I.R. 182, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 283; R. v. Drummond (1905), 10 O.I.R. 546, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 340; R. v. Dillon, 14 Cox C.C. 4.

PERJURY

If the information has been lost or destroyed, that fact is to be established to let in secondary evidence of it, and the oral testimony of the magistrate will be insufficient to prove the preliminary enquiry as a judicial proceeding without production of the information or proof of its loss. R. v. Farrell, 20 O.L.R. 182, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 283, and see R. v. Graves, 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 336.

If the trial in a summary conviction matter was not based upon a written information or other formal record the proceedings have then necessarily to be proved by oral testimony, e.g., the evidence of the magistrate and his clerk, each speaking with the aid of his notes of the proceedings taken at the trial. R. v. Yaldon, 17 O.L.R. 179, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 489; but if the proceeding was a summary trial of an indictable offence under Part XVI, under which a formal record was essential, the record must be produced. R. v. Legros, 17 O.L.R. 425, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 161.

Where perjury is alleged in respect of a trial upon an indictment, the indictment and the formal record, or in lieu thereof a certificate under Code see. 979, containing the substance and effect of the indictment and trial, must be produced; it is not sufficient to put in merely the evidence of the court stenographer and the evidence of the clerk of the court and his notes of the proceedings. R. v. Drummond, 10 O.L.R. 546, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 340.

In addition to the provision of Code sec. 979, permitting proof of the record upon an indictment by a statutory certificate of its substance and effect, a certified copy of any proceeding or record is admissible under secs. 23 and 28 of the Canada Evidence Act, if ten clear days' notice has been given of the intention to use it, R.S.C, 1906, ch. 145; and see sec. 34 of that Act.

Perjury by making false statement under onth within Canada.— False oath, etc., in verification of statement.—Subscribing aftirmation as aftidavit.

172. Every one is guilty of perjury who,-

(a) having taken or made any oath, affirmation, solemn declaration or affidavit where, by any Act or law in force in Canada, or in any province of Canada, it is required or permitted that facts, matters or things be verified, or otherwise assured or ascertained by or upon the oath, affirmation, declaration or affidavit of any person, wilfully and corruptly, upon such oath, affirmation, declaration or affidavit, deposes, swears to or makes any false statement as to any such fact, matter or thing; or,

(b) knowingly, wilfully and corruptly, upon oath, affirmation or solemn declaration affirms, declares or deposes to the truth of any statement for so verifying, assuring or ascertaining any such fact, matter or thing, or purporting so to do, or knowingly, wilfully and corruptly takes, makes, signs or subscribes any such affirmation, declaration or affidavit as to any such fact, matter or thing, if such statement, affidavit, affirmation or declaration is untrue in whole or in part.

Origin]—Sees. 172 and 175 possibly overlap. Sec. 172 (sec. 148 of the Code of 1892)) is taken from older statutes of Canada, R.S.C. 1886, ch. 154, while see. 175 of the Code is taken from the English draft Code, see. 122. These two sections in the Crim. Code probably mean the same thing. One has the words "wilfully and corruptly," the other by reference to sec. 170 has the words "such assertion being known to the witness to be false." R. v. Morrison (1916), 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 26 at 28.

"Wilfully and corruptly"]—The word "wilfully" has been held to mean "intentionally" under the English Perjury Act of 1911. R. v. Ryan, 10 Cr. App. R. 4. The form of indictment or charge will be validated under sees. 852 or 1152, if the offence is stated in substance in popular language sufficient to give the accused notice of the offence intended or by following the statutory form (Code form 64), which furnishes two examples of the manner of stating the offence of perjury. R. v. Morrison (1916), 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 26, in which R. v. Cohn. 36 N.S.R. 240, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 386 is explained, and R. v. George, 35 S.C.R. 376, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 401 (as to the form of a charge of theft), is specially referred to.

"Knowingly, wilfully and corruptly" (sub-sec. (b).1—Where it alleged in the indictment or charge following Code form 64 that the accused "committed perjury" by falsely swearing, etc., that statement is to be understood as if the words "wilfully and corruptly" (subsec. (al) or "knowingly, wilfully and corruptly" (sub-sec. (b), had been inserted. R. v. Morrison (1916), 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 26, per Harris, J. (N.S.), and see R. v. Skelton, 3 Terr. L.R. 58, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 467, R. v. Yee Moek (1913), 4 W.W.R. 1342 (Alta.); R. v. Yaddon, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 489, 17 O.L.R. 179; George v. The King, 35 S.C.R. 376, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 401.

Evidence on a perjury trial]—Subject to the provisions made by federal law the laws of evidence in force in the province in which such proceedings are taken, apply. Can. Evid. Act, sec. 35.

A witness present at the trial when the alleged perjury was committed may be called to state from recollection the evidence given by the accused. It will be sufficient if the witness can state with certainty that what he relates was all the evidence given by the accused on the point regarding which perjury is charged and that the accused said nothing to qualify it, although he is unable to state in effect all the evidence which the accused then gave. R. v. Rowley, 1 Mood, C.C. 111; R. v. Munton, 3 C. & P. 498; R. v. Browne, 3 C. & P. 572.

Besides proving the whole of what is set out in the indictment as having been falsely sworn to, the prosecution should prove the evidence connected with and necessary for the explanation of the alleged false evidence. R. v. Jones, Peake 51; R. v. Dowlin, Peake 227. But statements made by the judge presiding when the alleged perjury was committed are not admissible. R. v. The finding of fact by the tribunal before which the alleged perjury was committed is not proof of that fact on the perjury trial. R. v. Goodfellow, C. & M. 569.

The prosecution may in some cases be entitled to prove special facts to show that the deposition of the accused in a civil proceeding was false. Downie v. The Queen, 15 S.C.R. 358.

The accused charged with perjury on a civil trial, may put in other parts of his depositions then given, and so explain or qualify the alleged false statement. R. v. Coote (1903), 10 B.C.R. 285, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 199. He may also under some circumstances be entitled to put in the pleadings in the case to which he was a party. R. v. Ross, 1 Montreal L.R. 227.

Depositions before a magistrate holding a preliminary enquiry not being before a court of record may be explained by the defence on a charge of perjury brought thereon by showing that other statements were sworn to, but not transcribed by the magistrate. R. v. Prasiloski, 15 B.C.R. 29, 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 139; and see R. v. Yaldon, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 489, distinguishing R. v. Drummond, 10 O.L.R. 546.

And a false statement under oath before a magistrate on ordering or refusing to order a recognizance to keep the peace because of threats (Code sec. 748), sub-sec. 2), may be proved by oral testimony supplementing the notes taken by the magistrate. R. v. Doyle (1906), 12 Can Cr. Cas. 69.

Where the different allegations of perjury are contained in the one affidavit, the judge is to consider each charge with reference to the other allegations in the affidavit, and to weigh the statements as a whole in arriving at a conclusion as to the guilt or innocence of the prisoner on a trial without a jury. R. v. Cohn, 36 N.S.R. 240, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 386.

One well-established requirement in the trial of an indictment for perjury alleged to have been committed at the trial of an indictment, is the legal proof of the trial at which the alleged perjury was committed. Another, equally well established, is that such trial being matter of record, it is to be proved by the production of the record of the former trial, that is to say, the sworn or exemplified copy of the indictment and of the verdict and judgment thereon, or by some authoritative document which the law has declared to be a sufficient substitute the for. Roscoe's Crim. Evid. 11th ed. (1890), pp. 804, 812; Regina v. Coles. 16 Cox C.C. 165; Arch. Crim. Pleading and Evidence, 22nd ed. (1900), p. 1012; R. v. Drummond, 10 Cau. Cr. Cas. 340, 10 O.L.R. 546.

To simplify the proof in such cases it has long been the law, as it now stands in sec. 979 of the Crim. Code, that "A certificate containing the substance and effect only, omitting the formal part, of the indictment and trial for any offence, purporting to be signed by the clerk of the court or other officer having the custody of the records of the court whereat the indictment was tried, or among which such indictment has been filed, or by the deputy of such clerk or other officer, shall, upon the trial of an indictment for perjury or subornation of perjury, be sufficient evidence of the trial of such indictment without proof of the signature or official character of the person appearing to have signed the same."

Where the alleged perjury is assigned as having been committed before the same magistrate as is trying the charge, the formal record, if any, must be proved; the case is not to be disposed of upon the magistrate's recollection of the prior proceedings and evidence, as to which the magistrate has not been called to testify as he might be where there is no formal record. R. v. Legros, 17 O.L.R. 425, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 161. R. v. Graves, 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 336; R v. Farrell, 20 O.L.R. 182, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 287; R. v. Drummond (1905), 10 O.L.R. 546, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 340; R. v. Graf, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 200.

The magistrate holding a summary trial in respect of alleged perjury committed at a prior trial before himself is to be guided solely by the evidence and demeanor of witnesses at the perjury trial without regard to unproved demeanor of witnesses at the prior trial, although he may himself be able to recall the latter to his mind. R. v. Legros, 17 O.L.R. 425, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 161.

Corroboration]-Sec. 1002 (c) requires corroboration "in some material particular implicating the accused."

The corroboration required is as to the falsity of the prior sworn statement. Peterson v. The King, 55 S.C.R. 155, [1917] 3 W.W.R. 345, 28 Can. Cr. Cas. 332, affirming R. v. Peterson, [1917] 1 W.W.R. 600, 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 3.

It is not, however, imperative that there should be two witnesses to disprove the fact sworn to by the accused, for if any other material circumstance be proved by other witnesses in confirmation of the witness who gives the direct testimony of perjury, it may turn the scale and warrant a conviction. R. v. Lee, 3 Russell on Crimes, 5th ed. 72. Two witnesses are not essentially necessary to contradict the oath on which the perjury is assigned, but there must be something more than the oath of one to show that one party is more to be believed than the other. Reg. v. Boulter (1852), 5 Cox C.C. 543; 3 Car. & Kir. 236. And it has been held that a letter written by the accused contradicting his statement upon oath would be sufficient to make it Corroboration on a charge of perjury may be found in the testimony which the accused gives in his own defence in which he qualified his prior sworn statement on which the perjury was assigned. R. v. Nash, 6 W.W.R. 1390, 7 Alta. L.R. 449, 28 W.L.R. 960, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 38; appeal to Supreme Court of Canada dismissed. R. v. Nash, 8 W.W.R. 632.

The corroboration need only go to the truth or falsity of the fact sworn to, and not to the circumstance of knowledge of want of authority on the part of a person with whom as agent the accused claimed he contracted and which if true would absolve him from the perjury charge. R. v. Nash, supra.

When an indictment for perjury containing several assignments and a general verdict of guilty is returned, though one assignment is clearly not proved by reason of the want of corroboration, the Court will quash the conviction. R. v. Gaskell (1912), 8 Cr. App. R. 103. n

On a charge of subornation of perjury the corroboration necessary to sustain a conviction may be afforded by the facts and circumstances of the case. Rex. v. Threlfall, 10 Cr. App. R. 112, [1914] W.N. 160.

Adding fine to imprisonment]—See sec. 1035. Both imprisonment and a fine may be imposed, but a fine in lieu of imprisonment is not permissible as the maximum imprisonment is more than five years. (Sec. 1035). R. v. Legros (1908), 17 O.L.R. 425, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 161.

Perjury at common law]—It has always been an offence at common law for a witness upon oath in a judicial proceeding, before a court of competent jurisdiction, to give evidence material to the issue, which he believes to be false. The common law, however, stopped there and took no notice of false statements, whether made upon oath or not, made under other conditions. The perjury had also to be in a judicial proceeding before a competent tribunal. R. v. Townsend, 10 Cox C.C. 356; R. v. Row (1864), 14 U.C.C.P. 307. And it was therefore formerly the law that false evidence given upon an examination in the absence of the authority competent to hold such examination was not perjury. R. v. Lloyd, L.R. 19 Q.B.D. 213; R. v. Gibson, 7 Revue Legale (Que.) 573. The witness must also have been a competent one. R. v. Baker [1895] 1 Q.B. 797; R. v. Clegg, 19 L.T. 47. The statutory offence under the Code is much more extensive.

Knowledge on the part of the defendant of the falsity of the statements charged to have been made by him is not a necessary allegation in the charge. Sec. 852 of the Crim. Code provides that a count shall be sufficient if it contains, in substance, a statement that the accused has committed some indictable offence therein specified. By sub-sec. 2 such statement may be made in popular language without any technical averments—and the form (e) in form 64 in the schedule clearly shows that it is not necessary to aver such knowledge on the part of the accused. A count in an indictment for perjury is not open to objection because it charges that the accused made more than one false statement in the same affidavit, or in the course of his evidence upon a certain trial; (Rex v. Solomon, Ryan & Moody, 252; R. v. Yee Mock, 4 W.W.R. 1342, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 400, 13 D.L.R. 220. Bishop's Criminal Procedure, 2nd ed., sec. 916 et seq.).

It has been held that a charge that the defendant falsely swore that a sum of money had not been paid to him was not supported merely by proof of payment to a firm of which he was a member and not shown to have reached his hands. R. y. Cohn, 36 N.S.R. 240. If it were intended to prove that the accused knew of the payment and had, notwithstanding such knowledge, corruptly and with intent to mislead, sworn that the payment had not been made, this should have been alleged in the indictment or charge; R. v. Cohn, supra.; but it would seem that if it be a necessary inference from what is alleged in the indictment, apart from the formal conclusion that the act constituted perjury, that there were the necessary ingredients of the offence, the indictment would be valid. R. v. Bain (1877), Ramsny's Cases (Que.) 192; R. v. Bownes, Ramsay's Cases (Que.) 192; R. v. Coote (1903), 10 B.C.R. 285; R. v. Doyle (1906), 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 69; Code form 64, examples (d) and (c).

The statutory mode indicated by Code form 64 may be followed in describing the offence "in the cases thereby provided for"; Code sec. 1152; and may be varied to suit the case and still have the benefit of validation under that section. R. v. Yee Mock (1913) 4 W.W.R. 1342, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 400.

A charge based on evidence taken before a coroner and a jury will not be quashed because it referred only to the coroner, and made no mention of the coroner's jury, as the accused was furnished with such reasonable information as not to be deceived as to the offence with which he was being charged. R. v. Thompson (1895), 2 Terr. L.R. 383, 385. Code secs. 852, 853. The count might have been amended if the court was of opinion that the accused had been misled or prejudiced in his defence. Code sec. 889; R. v. Thompson, supra.

The exact words of the false statement in testimony taken riva rocc, need not be set forth in the indictment; the charge may be properly stated by summarizing what was in effect the false evidence, and specifying the tribunal and the time and place of the alleged perjury. R. v. Legros, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 161, 17 O.L.R. 425.

the statelegation in nt shall be witness or not, and whether his evidence was admissible or not (sec. 171), and whether his evidence was material or not (sec. 170), it would be unreasonable if the accused's guilt or innocence of the erime of perjury were dependent upon whether the proceedings in which the testimony was given were or were not instituted in the manner provided by the enactment. R. v. Yaldon, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 489, at 496; and see see, 171.

Perjury in a pending civil action]-In the case of The Queen v. Ingham (1849), 14 Q.B. 396, 19 L.J.M.C. 69, wherein it was sought to compel two justices of the peace to proceed with and hear an information charging one Browne with perjury, Coleridge, J., said :--"The question is, whether, having exercised a discretion in the matter, we think the justices were wrong, and should now be compelled to proceed. It is enough to say that there is abundant reason for thinking that the course they have taken is the most likely to answer the ends of justice, and is full of convenience. Here the very party against whom the witness gives evidence in a pending suit, comes and seeks to destroy that evidence by convicting the witness of perjury. Surely such a proceeding can only be for the purpose of preventing justice." Chief Justice Hagarty in Chadd v. Meagher (1874), 24 U.C.C.P. 54, at p. 58, in delivering the judgment of the Court said :- "We find in the cases a strong disapproval expressed of the practice of indicting parties or witnesses for alleged perjury in a civil suit, while proceedings are still pending." These two cases were approved and followed in R. v. Thickens, 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 274, in which the court refused to hear a criminal charge of perjury alleged to have taken place on a preliminary examination for discovery in a civil action until after the action itself had been tried; and see R. v. Cohn, 36 N.S.R. 240.

Several false statements in one trial]—A conviction on summary trial for perjury may include several false statements made in the course of the one trial and these may be treated as one offence and the one penalty applied on a conviction for perjury in respect of all the false statements. R. v. Yee Mock (1913), 4 W.W.R. 1342. Even if each false statement should constitute a distinct offence, that would not invalidate a summary trial conviction in which he is found guilty of each. R. v. Yee Mock, 4 W.W.R. 1342, 1344, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 400.

Perjury as a contempt of court]—Perjury is punishable as a contempt of court when committed before a court of record. R. v. Evans, (1915), 8 W.W.R. 444, 21 B.C.R. 322. But not only must the specific charge be distinctly stated if the witness is to be dealt with summarily for contempt, but he must be given an opportunity of giving reasons against summary measures and of answering the charge. "Which would amount to perjury," etc.]—Sees. 170-171 deal with the elements of perjury in a judicial proceeding; see. 172 declares that the making of certain false oaths in non-judicial proceedings shall be perjury, while see. 176 applies to statements or declarations which are not under oath and are not necessarily under affirmation or solemn declaration so as to come within the purview of sec. 175. There appears to be an overlapping in sees. 172, 175 and 176, and it appears to be arguable that offences under see. 172 are to be punished under see. 175 only, and so by implication to limit the penalty of see. 174, sub-sec. (1) to cases where there is a judicial proceeding as defined by see. 171, subsec. (2).

" Required or authorized by law "]-These words may be contrasted with the language of sec. 176-" permitted by law to make any statement, etc. before any officer authorized by law to permit it to be made before him," etc. Sec. 176 appears to be aimed at statutory declarations under the Canada Evidence Act when made purely voluntarily and not because of the declaration being a legal necessity for any purpose. Sec. 175 with its more onerous penalty might be applied if the statutory declaration were a legal necessity under some other statute, although pro forma a declaration under the Canada Evidence Act. There is a diversity of judicial opinion as to whether the person making a statutory declaration can be said to be "required or authorized by law" to make it merely because the furnishing of such a declaration had by contract been made a condition precedent to a right of action in the courts. Stuart, J., in R. v. Nier (1915), 9 W.W.R. 938, thought it could, while Beck, J., was of the contrary opinion. Harvey, C. J., and Scott, J., supported the conviction in that case on the ground that it was a good conviction for an offence under sec. 176, in respect of a declaration which, under sec. 36 of the Canada Evidence Act, the defendant was permitted to make before a notary. On a criminal trial before County Judge Wilson, in British Columbia, R. v. Phillips (1908), 14 B.C.R. 194, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 239, it was held in effect that the statutory permission for the notary or other official to receive the declaration necessarily means that the declarant is "authorized by law" to make a declaration. That decision is, however, open to question in view of the decision in R. v. Nier, supra.

Corroboration]—The statutory requirement of corroboration as to perjury (Code sec. 174), was held, in R. v. Phillips, 14 B.C.R. 194, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 239, not to extend to a false statutory declaration punishable under sec. 175.

False statements in extra-judicial proceedings.

176. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who, upon any occasion on which he is permitted by law to make any statement or declaration before any officer authorized by law to permit it to be made before him, or before any notary public to be certified by him as such notary, makes a statement which would amount to perjury if made on oath in a judicial proceeding.

Origin]-Sec. 150, Code of 1892.

Formalities of indictment]-See sees. 859 and 862, 852-856, 864.

[§176]

"Authorized by law to permit it to be made"]-See note to see. 175.

Corroboration]-The offence under sec. 176 is not perjury within sec. 1002 as to corroboration for the offence of "perjury, sec. 174."

False statutory declaration]-See note to sec. 175.

"If made on oath in a judicial proceeding"]—See sees. 170, 171, 174.

Fabricating evidence, structure to another other anti-televiate

177. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and highle to seven years' imprisonment who, with intent to mislead any court of justice or person holding any such judicial proceeding, fabricates evidence by any means other than perjury or subornation of perjury.

Origin]-Sec. 151, Code of 1892.

Formalities of indictment]-See sees. 859 and 862, 852-856, 864.

Inciting to give false evidence]—It is a common law misdemeanor to incite a witness to give particular evidence where the inciter does not know whether it be true or false. Ex parte Overton, 2 Rose 257. This offence differs from subornation in that it is not necessary to prove that the evidence was in fact given, or was false to the knowledge of the witness. Archoold Cr. Evid., 1019. And by Code sec. 70 every one who counsels or procures another to be a party to an offence is a party to every offence which that other commits in consequence of such counselling or procuring, and which the person counselling or procuring knew, or ought to have known, to be likely to be committed in consequence of such counselling or procuring.

The offence is complete if the evidence is fabricated with intent to mislead a judicial tribunal even if the evidence is not used. R. v. Vreones [1891], 1 Q.B. 360; 17 Cox C.C. 267; 60 L.J.M.C. 62.

Summary trial]-See R. v. Harding (1918), 13 O.W.N. 37.

Dissuading witness from giving evidence]-See sec. 180.

Conspiring to bring false accusations.

178. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence who conspires to prosecute any person for any alleged offence, knowing such person to be innocent thereof, and shall be liable,—

 (a) to imprisonment for fourteen years if such person might, upon conviction for the alleged offence, be sentenced to death or imprisonment for life;

(b) to imprisonment for ten years if such person might, upon conviction for the alleged offence, be sentenced to imprisonment for any term less than life.

Origin]-Sec. 152, Code of 1892.

Other conspiracies]—As to conspiracy to defraud, see Code sec. 444, and conspiracy to commit an indictable offence, sec. 573, and note to the latter section on the subject of conspiracies generally.

Administering oaths without authority.-Exceptions.

179. Every justice or other person who administers, or causes or allows to be administered, or receives, or causes or allows to be received, any oath or affirmation touching any matter or thing whereof such justice or other person has not jurisdiction or cognizance by some law in force at the time being, or not authorized or required by any such law, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a fine not exceeding fifty dollars, or to imprisonment for any term not exceeding three months.

2. Nothing in this section contained shall be construed to extend to any oath or affirmation before any justice in any matter or thing touching the preservation of the peace, or the prosecution, trial or punishment of any offence, or to any oath or affirmation required or authorized by any law of Canada. or by any law of the province wherein such oath or affirmation is received or administered, or is to be used, or to any oath or affirmation, which is required or authorized by the laws of any foreign country to give validity to an instrument in writing or to evidence designed or intended to be used in such foreign country.

Affirmation instead of oath]-See Canada Evidence Act, sec. 14.

Requisites of an "affidavit"]-In 1 Bacon's Abridgment 124, an "affidavit" is defined as "An oath in writing signed by the party deposing, sworn before and attested by him who hath authority to administer the same," and see Moxley & Whitely's Law Dictionary, quoting 2 Stephen's Commentaries; The Annual Practice (1915), at page 694.

In Phillips v. Prentice, 2 Hare 542, 12 L.J. Ch. p. 497 (1843), Sir James Wigram, V.-C., held that the omission in an affidavit of the word "oath" or some equivalent expression is not cured by the jurat representing it as "sworn." R. v. Marshall (1915), 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 180, 31 W.L.R. 702, is to the same effect.

Corrupting witness.—Corrupting juryman.—Accepting bribes.— Wilfully obstructing course of justice.

180. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who,—

- (a) dissuades or attempts to dissuade any person by threats, bribes, or other corrupt means from giving evidence in any cause or matter, civil or criminal; or,
- (b) influences or attempts to influence, by threats or bribes or other corrupt means, any juryman in his conduct as such, whether such person has been sworn as a juryman or not; or,
- (c) accepts any bribe or other corrupt consideration to abstain from giving evidence, or on account of his conduct as a juryman; or,
- (d) wilfully attempts in any other way to obstruct, pervert or defeat the course of justice.

Origin]-Sec. 154, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 173, sec. 30, as to clauses (b) and (c).

Wilfully attempts]—Compare as to the meaning of "wilful," see. 285 as to "wilful misconduct" and "wilful neglect" under the latter section. A conviction for "unlawfully" committing an act does not sufficiently charge that the act was "wilfully" done to constitute an offence under a statute which makes the latter an essential element of the offence. Ex parte O'Shaughnessy, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 136, 13 Que. K.B. 178. Compare sec. 205 as to wilfully doing any indecent act in a public place.

Corrupt means to dissuade a witness]—If threats, bribes, or corrupt means are used, it is no answer that the accused believed that the evidence he sought to suppress was untrue. R. v. Silverman, 17 O.L.R. 248, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 79.

Clause (a) is limited to the cases of witnesses since it is only witnesses who "give evidence," but it includes a witness who has not been served with a subpœna. R. v. Lake, (1906), 6 Terr. L.R. 345, 3 W.L.R. 244, 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 37.

Competency of tribunal]—Code sec. 180 contemplates that the person to be dissuaded from giving evidence must be required to give evidence before a tribunal having proper authority to take the evidence; it is not an offence to dissuade a person from making a statement before a person having no authority whatever to take evidence. R. v. Rosen [1917], 1 W.W.R. 582, 9 Sask. L.R. 401, 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 259.

Special statutes as to tampering with witnesses]—See Canada Temperance Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 152, sec. 150; R. v. Armstrong (1946), 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 151, 36 O.L.R. 2, 9 O.W.N. 472; R v. Lawrence, 43 U.C.Q.B. '164; R. v. Gibson, 29 N.S.R. 88; ex parte White (1890), 30 N.B.R. 12; R. v. Le Blanc (1885), 8 Montreal L.N. 114.

Attempt to defeat the course of justice]—For one person to impersonate another and to act as juryman in the place of that other is an interference with the course of justice punishable as a contempt of court. R. v. Levy, ex parte Hobbs [1916], W.N. 30, 32 Times L.R. 238.

But where contempt is charged, the offence must be distinctly stated and an opportunity given the accused to answer the charge. R. v. Evans, (re Fisher) (1915), 8 W.W.R. 444, 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 125; Chang Hang v. Piggott [1909], A.C. 312.

If the impersonation be by a man not qualified to serve, a mistrial results. R. v. Wakefield (1918), 87 L.J.K.B. 319; R. v. Mellor, 27 L.J.M.C. 121, 1 Dears. & B. 468.

It is an obstruction of the course of justice to publish newspaper articles inducing the jury to be prejudiced by imputations against the character of a person charged with crime which would not be admissible in evidence on his trial. R. v. Tibbits [1902], 1 K.B. 77.

A charge under sub-sec. (d) based on non-attendance to give evidence should indicate some reason why the attendance of the person who was induced by the accused to stay away was essential to the due administration of justice. R. v. Lake, 6 Terr. L.R. 345, 3 W.L.R. 244, 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 37.

"Any cause or matter, civil or criminal"]—These words are sufficient to cover every proceeding of whatever character in any court of whatever kind. R. v. Lake, supra; R. v. Holland, 14 C.L.T. 294; R. v Leblane, 8 Mont. L.N. 114; R. v. Cornellier, 29 L.C.J. 69; and see R. v. Gibson, 29 N.S.R. 88.

Conspiracies and attempts generally]-See secs. 72, 570-573.

Ontario]—It is made by statute in Ontario the duty of the sheriff at the sittings of the High Court Division for trials by jury and of the court of general sessions of the peace to post up in the court-room and jury-rooms, and in the general entrance hall of the court-house, printed copies in conspicuous type, of sec. 180 of the Criminal Code. R.S.O. 1914, ch. 64, sec. 112.

Contempt of court by unfair newspaper comment]-See sec. 322.

Compounding a criminal prosecution]-An agreement to stifle or compound a criminal prosecution is illegal if the offence be really one against public order and not merely a quasi-criminal offence against a private party as to which the law affords the latter a remedy of procedure under the criminal law. Bruce v. Western Canada Flour Mills Co. (Man.) [1917] 3 W.W.R. 365; Kier v. Leeman, 9 Q.B. 371, 15 L.J.Q.B. 359; Windhill v. Vint, 45 Ch. D. 351; Fisher v. Appolinaris Co., 44 L.J. Ch. 500, L.R. 10 Ch. App. 297 (a trade mark prosecution); Williams v. Bayley, L.R. 1 H.L. 200; Jones v. Merionethshire, etc., Socy. [1892] 1 Ch. 173; Morgan v. McFee (1908), 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 308; McLatchie v. Haslam, 17 Cox C.C. 402. The rule applies not only to offences which were formerly felonies but to those which, although misdemeanors only, were more particularly offences against public order rather than private injuries. Keir v. Leeman, supra; R. v. Mabee, 37 U.C.Q.B. 248; Morgan v. McFee (1908), 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 308 (Ont.). It is not always easy to determine the line of demarcation between the two classes. Obtaining money by false pretenses has been held to be essentially a public crime not to be compromised; Morgan v. McFee, supra; but common assault being one as to which the aggrieved party may, at his option, take either civil or criminal proceedings, is one which may be compromised. Keir v. Leeman, supra. So also are trade-mark offences as to which the Criminal Code adds a mode of criminal prosecution to the civil remedy previously available and gives the prosecutor a choice of remedies. Fisher v. Appolinaris Co., L.R. 10 Ch. App. 297. An offence is compounded when the agreement is made not to prosecute for it. R. v. Burgess, 16 Q.B.D. 141. It is important in many cases to ascertain whether the compounded offence was a felony or a misdemeanor before the abolition by the Criminal Code of the distinction between them as regards prosecution for the offence itself. Compounding a felony was illegal at common law and constituted in itself a misdemeanor punishable by fine and imprisonment. If reparation takes the form of a bargain whether with the accused or his friends that he will not be prosecuted, the bargain is illegal and cannot be enforced. Jones v. Merionethshire [1892] 1 Ch. 173. Whether an offence against a provincial statute is or is not a "crime" so as to make its compromise illegal will depend on the nature of the offence and it is probable that the same considerations would apply as in the case of misdemeanors under federal law. R. v. Mabey, 37 U.C.Q.B. 248; rc Fraser 1 C.L.J. 326. Furthermore, the provincial law may itself declare the illegality of a compromise and impose restrictions and penalties. Stewart v. Colonial Engineering Co. (1908), 33 Que. S.C. 420. So the compounding of a qui tam action without the consent of the Crown or of the court may be prohibited by provincial law in a matter within the scope of provincial legislation. Laprés v. Massé, 19 Que. S.C. 275.

It is open to the court in investigating the legality of an agreement by friends of the accused to make reparation to the defrauded party to find that it was an implied term of same that there should be no prosecution although there was no express promise. Jones v. Merionethshire [1892] 1 Ch. 173 affirming [1891] 2 Ch. 587; Leggatt v. Brown (1899), 30 Ont. R. 225, affirming 29 Ont. R. 530. Where the public have a higher interest than the private prosecutor because of the offence being one against public order, and a true bill has been found, the private prosecutor is not without the leave of the court to abandon the prosecution even by way of offering no evidence. R. v. Nicholson (1899) cited in Archbold's Cr. Phlg. (1900) 1035; and if he takes money to settle the prosecution he may be liable to fine under the statute 18 Eliz. cn. 5. R. v. Mason, 17 U.C.C.P. 534. The aggrieved party may receive back the money or goods of which he was deprived by criminal means so long as he does not agree not to prosecute. Morgan v. McFee (1908), 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 308.

An agreement by third parties to pay money misappropriated by a trustee in consideration of the stifling of the prosecution would be invalid as founded upon an illegal consideration. Major v. McCraney, 29 S.C.R. 183, 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 547. An agreement to drop a prosecution for malicious injury to chattels has been held to be illegal in Alberta. Johnson v. Musselman [1917], 1 W.W.R. 527, 28 Can. Cr. Cas. 165.

The justice or magistrate holding a preliminary enquiry cannot by his assent to a compromise validate an invalid agreement. Morgan v. McFee (1908), 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 308.

Corruptly taking reward without bringing offender to trial.

182. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to seven years' imprisonment who corruptly takes any money or reward, directly or indirectly, under pretense or upon account of helping any person to recover any chattel, money, valuable security or other property which, by any indictable offence, has been stolen, taken, obtained, extorted, converted or disposed of, unless he has used all due diligence to cause the offender to be brought to trial for the same.

Origin]—Sec. 156, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 164, sec. 89; 24-25 Vict. Imp. ch. 96, sec. 101.

Advertising reward and immunity for offender.—Making use of words in advertisement to like effect.—Advertising that money advanced on property stolen will be paid.

183. Every one is liable to a penalty of two hundred and fifty dollars for each offence, recoverable with costs by any person who sues for the same in any court of competent jurisdiction, who,—

- (a) publicly advertises a reward for the return of any property which has been stolen or lost, and in such advertisement uses any words purporting that no questions will be asked; or,
- (b) makes use of any words in any public advertisement purporting that a reward will be given or paid for any property which has been stolen or lost, without seizing or making any inquiry after the person producing such property; or,
- (c) promises or offers in any such public advertisement to return to any pawnbroker or other person who advanced money by way of loan on, or has bought, any property stolen or lost, the money so advanced or paid, or any other sum of money for the return of such property; or,

(d) prints or publishes any such advertisement.

Time limitation]-Prosecution to be within six months from commission of offence. Sec. 1140.

False declaration in respect to execution of judgment of death.

184. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment, who knowingly and wilfully signs a false certificate or declaration, when a certificate or declaration is required, with respect to the execution of judgment of death on any prisoner.

CRIMINAL CODE (PART IV)

Escapes and Rescues.

Being at large while under sentence of imprisonment.

185. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who, having been sentenced to imprisonment, is afterwards, and before the expiration of the term for which he was sentenced, at large within Canada without some lawful cause, the proof whereof shall lie on him.

"Having been sentenced"]—The fact of the sentence being in force when the defendant was found at large is sufficiently proved by the certificate of the conviction and sentence, if the judgment remains unreversed, and this although it appears on the face of the certificate that the sentence was one which could not legally have been inflicted on the defendant for the offence of which according to the certificate he had been convicted. R. v. Finney, 2 C. & K. 274. Where the conviction is by justices on summary trial under Part XVI the formal conviction or a certified copy must be produced. R. v. Taylor, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 245; Code sees. 793, 794.

Ticket of Leave]—It may be proved as a defence that the prisoner is at large conditionally under a license or ticket of leave or otherwise and that the conditions have been observed. The license issued under the authority of the Ticket of Leave Acts, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 150, may be revoked by the Governor-General either with or without cause assigned. R. v. Johnson, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 178 (Que.). The revocation by the Crown without cause assigned does not interrupt the running of the sentence, and the latter terminates at the same time as it would had no license been granted. Ibid.; and see as to conviction while on leave. R. v. McColl, 21 Man. R. 552, 19 W.L.R. 515, 19 Can. Cr. Cas. 59.

Pardon]—A pardon is a good defence. R. v. Miller, W.Bl. 797, 1 Leach C.C. 74; but the sentence revives if the terms of a conditional pardon are not observed. R. v. Madan, 1 Leach C.C. 223; Aickles' Case, 1 Leach C.C. 390.

Juvenile delinquents]-See the Juvenile Delinquents Act 1908 Can. ch. 40, as amended 1912 Can. ch. 30, 1914 Can. ch. 39.

"Without some lawful excuse"]—Aside from the provisions of the Code, the common law rule was that the period during which a person under sentence was improperly at liberty is not to be counted as part of his term of imprisonment. R. v. Taylor, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 245, 249 (Alta.).

But it would seem that if there has been arrest under a summary conviction, the term of the sentence will continue to run during the period for which the accused was removed to a hospital from the gaol. R. v. Peters (1918), 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 298 (N.S.).

An order made by a magistrate for bail pending an appeal when in fact there was no right of appeal, does not afford a "lawful excuse." R. v. Taylor, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 245 (Alta.); Robinson v. Morris, 19 O.L.R. 633, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 209, overruling R. v. Robinson, 14 O.L.R. 519, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 447.

A person illegally released on bail must be held to have known the law and therefore to have known that he was improperly at large, R. v. Taylor, supra, applying Bank of N.S.W. v. Piper [1897] A.C. 383. But where the granting of bail is declared illegal and a conviction is made in respect thereof for being unlawfully at large, the sentence for the offence may properly be made to run concurrently with the equivalent of the unexpired portion of the original sentence which is to be imposed under sec. 196 on every one who "escapes" from custody. R. v. Taylor, supra; and see note to sec. 196.

Territories]—The offence under see. 185 is within the N.W.T. Act, see. 66 (d) as an escape from lawful custody, and there is no right to elect a jury trial where that statute is in force. R. v. Taylor, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 245, 246.

Effect of escape on pending habeas corpus motion]—See re Bartels, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 59.

Assisting prisoner of war to escape.—Assisting while at large on parole.

186. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to five years' imprisonment who knowingly and wilfully,—

- (a) assists any alien enemy of His Majesty, being a prisoner of war in Canada, to escape from any place in which he may be detained; or,
- (b) assists any such prisoner as aforesaid, suffered to be at large on his parole in Canada or in any part thereof, to escape from the place where he is at large on his parole.

"By force and violence "1-where force and violence is not proved, the charge should be laid for an escape (secs. 189, 190, 196) or for unlawfully being at large while under sentence (sec. 185) or for an attempt to escape (sec. 571). See R. v. Haswell, Russ. & Ry. 458.

"Attempts" to break prison]—As to attempts generally, see sec. 72. Doing something with intent to commit the offence is not necessarily sufficient to constitute an "attempt." R. v. Labourdette, 13 B.C.R. 443, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 379.

Escapes after conviction .- Escaping from prison.

189. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who,—

(a) having been convicted of any offence, escapes from any lawful custody in which he may be under such conviction; or,

ESCAPES AND RESCUES

(b) whether convicted or not, escapes from any prison in which he is lawfully confined on any criminal charge.

Origin]-Sec. 163, Code of 1892.

"Offence"]—See secs. 15, 69-71. The word "offence" as here used is presumably restricted to offences under federal jurisdiction. The question whether the Prisons Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 148, sec. 3, applied to an offence against an Ontario Act was discussed in Robinson v. Morris, 19 O.L.R. 633, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 209, in which R. v. Robinson, 14 O.L.R. 519, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 447 was overruled, but the court found it unnecessary to determine that question, as, whether it applied or not, the plaintiff was not entitled to count as a part of his sentence under an Ontario law, the time during which he had been allowed out on bail after conviction and before his arrest on a warrant of commitment; and this would be so whether or not the allowance of bail under the circumstances was illegal.

"Escapes"]—" An escape is where one who is arrested gains his liberty before he is delivered by due course of law (Termes de la Ley):" Russell on Crimes and Misdemeanours, 7th ed., vol. 1, p. 555. "It is criminal in a prisoner to escape from lawful confinement on a criminal charge though no force or artifice be used on his part to effect such purpose. Thus, a prisoner is guilty of a misdemeanour if he goes out of his prison by license of the keeper (Attorney-General v. Hobert (1631), Cro. Car. 210), without any obstruction . . . or if he escapes in any other manner, without using any kind of force or violence:" Russell on Crimes and Misdemeanours, 7th ed., vol. 1, p. 555; (quoted in R. v. Rapp, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 203 at 208), and see R. v. Nugent, 11 Cox C.C. 64. Code see. 185 provides specially for the offence of a convisted person under sentence "being at large" without some lawful exense.

" Prison "]-See sec. 2, sub-sec. (30).

Baûl]—The escape of an unconvicted person held in prison to answer a charge of theft is a bailable offence along with such charge; the recognizance may be conditioned to suit the impending trials of several offences before different tribunals. R. v. Drake (1918) 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 174, per Russell, J. (N.S.).

Justification of means to prevent escape]-See sees. 41-45.

Prison breach]—See sees. 187, 188; the Prisons and Reformatories Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 148, as amended 1908, ch. 55, 1910, ch. 48, 1912, ch. 43, 1913, ch. 39, 1914, ch. 14; the Penitentiaries Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 147, as amended 1913, ch. 36.

Escape from custody.

190. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who being in lawful custody other than as aforesaid on any criminal charge, escapes from such custody.

Origin]-Sec. 164, Code of 1892.

"Other than as aforesaid "]-See secs. 185-189.

"On any criminal charge "]—If a prisoner who has applied for a writ of habeas corpus in review of an extradition warrant escapes after the issue of such a writ and pending the argument upon its return, and thus himself puts an end to the detention, he thereby waives all right which he might have had under the writ, and no order can be afterwards made for his release, even though he may have meanwhile again come into custody of the same sheriff. If, however, in such a case he is recaptured or surrenders himself again into custody, the Court is not precluded from granting him another writ of habeas corpus under proper circumstances, and where there has not already been an adjudication upon the merits. Re Bartels, 15 O.L.R. 205, 13 Can. (a) rescues any person or assists any person in escaping, or attempting to escape, from lawful custody, whether in prison or not, under sentence of death or imprisonment for life, or after conviction of, and before sentence for, or while in such custody upon a charge of any crime punishable with death or imprisonment for life; or,

Peace officer]-See sec. 2, sub-sec. (26).

Assisting an attempt to escape]—See see. 72 as to what constitutes an "attempt." If a prisoner conceals himself with the intention of escaping, that may or may not be sufficient evidence of an attempt according to the circumstances. R. v. Rescuing or assisting to escape in other cases.—Officer permitting escape in other cases.

192. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to five years' imprisonment who,—

- (a) rescues any person, or assists any person in escaping, or attempting to escape, from lawful custody, whether in prison or not, under a sentence of imprisonment for any term less than life, or after conviction of, and before sentence for, or while in such custody upon a charge of any crime punishable with imprisonment for a term less than life; or, basis (a)

Origin]-Sec. 166A, Code of 1892; 63-64 Vict. Can. ch. 46, sec. 3.

Officer permitting escape of person in custody]—The section is aimed at negligent conduct from which an escape results. R. v. Shuttleworth, 22 U.C.R. 372.

A person who has power to bail is guilty of negligent escape by bailing one whom he knows is not bailable: Russell on Crimes and Misdemeanours, 7th ed., vol. 1, p. 557; R. v. Rapp, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 203, 208, per Riddell, J.

Escape by conveying things into prison.

194. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who with intent to facilitate the escape of any prisoner lawfully imprisoned conveys, or causes to be conveyed, any thing into any prison.

Origin]-Sec. 167, Code of 1892.

"Prison"]-See sec. 2, sub-sec. (30).

Causing discharge of prisoner under pretended authority.

195. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who knowingly and unlawfully, under colour of any pretended authority, directs or procures the discharge of any prisoner not entitled to be so discharged, and the person so discharged shall be held to have escaped.

Origin]-Sec. 168, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 155, sec. 8.

Full term to be served when retaken.

196. Every one who escapes from custody, shall, on being retaken, serve, in the prison to which he was sentenced, a term equivalent to the remainder of his term unexpired at the time of his escape, in addition to the punishment which is awarded for such escape.

ESCAPES AND RESCUES

2. Any imprisonment so awarded may be to the penitentiary or prison from which the escape was made.

Origin]-Sec. 169, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 155, sec. 11.

Escapes from custody]—Where a person has been illegally released on bail he has technically "escaped from custody." R. v. Taylor, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 244 at 250; R. v. Rapp (1914), 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 202; Robinson v. Morris, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 209, 19 O.L.R. 633. A person convicted and sentenced who on the ground of appealing obtains his liberty on bail although there was in fact no right of appeal, must be taken to have known the law and the fact that the magistrate made the illegal order for bail was held in R. v. Taylor, supra, not to operate as a lawful excuse to the accused for being at large. See Code sec. 11 But quaere whether an order for bail is not within Code secs. 26 and 27 so as to justify not only the officer but the accused as a person in good faith "assisting in carrying out the same." The latter sections imply that there may be "lawful assistance" in carrying out an order made without jurisdiction.

What sec. 27 demands is "good faith" and a "belief of jurisdiction" which are matters quite apart from the legal maxim "Ignorantia legis non excusat" now embodied in the Code as sec. 22.

An escape from custody puts an end to a pending habeas corpus application made on the prisoner's behalf, but a new writ may issue on his re-capture or surrender. Re Bartels (1907), 15 O.L.R. 205; Ex parte Lamirande (1866), 10 L.C. Jur. 280.

Return to custody after escape]—The prisoner escaping from the constable's custody while being taken to jail under sentence in a summary conviction matter may be re-captured under the original commitment. R. v. Hall (1916) (N.S.), 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 1, 32 D.L.R. 236. The escape is not a voluntary one on the part of the constable where he became intoxicated on the way and in consequence allowed the prisoner his freedom. R. v. Hall, supra.

If the person summarily convicted was in fact let out on bail before being taken in charge under the sentence or under a warrant of commitment, the intermediate period until his close custody actually commenced will not count as part of his sentence. R.S.C. 1906, ch. 148; Robinson v. Morris, 19 O.L.R. 633, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 209, overruling R. v. Robinson (1907), 14 O.L.R. 519, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 447; and see R. v. Taylor (1906), 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 244.

If the statute R.S.C. 1906, ch. 148, sec. 3, is not applicable to a summary conviction under a provincial law, the term of imprisonment under such conviction awarding imprisonment for a stated number of months or days would not commence until the accused was taken into close custody under the conviction or commitment or until his lodgment

Return to custody after conditional release]—If a convict released under license from a provincial prison is sentenced for another erime to the penitentiary and so forfeits his license, the unexpired term in the provincial prison is not to be added to the penitentiary sentence, but after the expiry of the latter he is to be returned to the provincial prison to serve out the original term, or if that sentence is under a federal law and the second sentence is in another province he may be sent to a prison in that province to complete the first sentence. "Penitentiary" or "prison"]—By sec. 2 (30), unless the context otherwise requires, the word "prison," when used in the Code, includes any penitentiary, common gaol, public or reformatory prison, lock-up, guard-room or other place in which persons charged with the commission of offences are usually kept or detained in custody.

PART V.

OFFENCES AGAINST RELIGION, MORALS AND PUBLIC CONVENIENCE.

Interpretation.

Definitions.

197. In this Part, unless the context otherwise requires,-

- (a) 'theatre' includes any place open to the public, gratuitously or otherwise, where dramatic, musical, acrobatic or other entertainments or representations are presented or given;
- (b) 'guardian' includes any person who has in law or in fact the custody or control of any girl or child referred to;
- (c) 'public place' includes any open place to which the public have or are permitted to have access and any place of public resort.

Origin]-3 Edw. VII, Can., ch. 13, sec. 2; 63-64 Vict., Can., ch. 46, sec. 3; 57-58 Vict., Can., ch. 57, sec. 1.

Public place]—A licensed saloon and billiard hall is a "public place" under Code sections 197 and 238, and a person causing a disturbance therein by being drunk is liable as a vagrant under sec. 238. R. v. Kearney and Denning, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 349, (Y.T.); Langrish v. Archer, 10 Q.B.D. 44; Ex parte Freestone, 25 L.J.M.C. 121.

A public place does not mean a place devoted solely to the uses of the public, but it means a place which is in point of fact public, as distinguished from private, to a place that is visited by many persons, and usually accessible to the neighboring public. A place may be public during some hours of the day and private during other hours. The term is a relative one. What is a "public place" for one purpose is not for another. A "public place," within the meaning of a statute prescribing the time and place for posting notices of tax sales, may not be a "public place" within the common law definition of an affray, and so a place which is public in one community is not necessarily so in another. Roullier v. Town of Magog (1909), 37 Que. S.C. 246.

[§197] CRIMINAL CODE (PART V)

"Public place" is a fluctuating term, and the meaning varies with the context. Grove, J., in Regina v. Wellard (1884), 14 Q.B.D. 63, said: "A public place is one where the public go, no matter whether they have a right to go or not."

Offences Against Religion.

Blasphemous libels.-Question of fact.-Expression of opinion.

198. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to one year's imprisonment who publishes any blasphemous libel.

2. Whether any particular published matter is a blasphemous libel or not is a question of fact: Provided that no one is guilty of a blasphemous libel for expressing in good faith and in decent language, or attempting to establish by arguments used in good faith and conveyed in decent language, any opinion whatever upon any religious subject.

Origin]-Sec. 170, Code of 1892.

Formalities of indictment]-See secs. 859, 861, 852, 853.

Blasphemous libel]—Publications which in an indecent and malicious spirit assail and asperse the truth of Christianity or of the Scriptures in language calculated and intended to shock the feelings and outrage the belief of mankind are punishable as blasphemous libels. R. v. Bradlaugh, 15 Cox C.C. 217; R. v. Hetherington, 4 St. Tr. (N.S.) 563, 590; R. v. Pelletier (1900), 6 Revue Legale, N.S. 116. But if the decencies of controversy are observed even the fundamentals of religion may be attacked without the right of being guilty of blasphemous libel. R. v. Ramsay & Foote, 15 Cox C.C. 231, 238, 1 Cab. & El. 126; Odgers' Libel, 3rd ed., 466. And see re Bowman, Sceular Society v. Bowman [1915], 2 Ch. 447, 31 Times L.R. 618.

No justification of a blasphemous libel can be pleaded nor is argument as to its truth permitted. Cooke v. Hughes, Ry. & M. 112; R. v. Tunbridge, 1 St. Tr. (N.S.), 1168; R. v. Hicklin, L.R. 3 Q.B. 360. Code secs. 910 and 911 as to pleas of justification are limited to cases of defamatory libels.

Obstructing officiating clegyman.

199. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who, by threats or force, unlawfully obstructs or prevents, or endeavours to obstruct or prevent, any clergyman or other minister in or from celebrating divine service, or otherwise officiating in any church, chapel, meetinghouse, school-house or other place for divine worship, or in or from the performance of his duty in the lawful burial of the dead in any churchyard or other burial place.

OBSTRUCTING DIVINE SERVICE

Origin]-Sec. 171, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 156, sec. 1.

Unlawfully obstructs]—There is no offence if the minister had not the permission of the proper church authorities, but was in fact a trespasser in attempting to conduct the service. R. v. Wasyl Kapij, 15 Man. R. 110, 1 W.L.R. 130, 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 186.

Compare Holiness Movement v. Horner, 13 O.W.N. 29; Stein v. Hauser (1913), 5 W.W.R. 971; Free Church of Scotland v. Overtoun [1904] A.C. 515; Zacklynski v. Poluskie [1908] A.C. 65, affirming 37 Can. S.C.R. 177, and see the case below at 1 W.L.R. 32.

Violence to officiating clergyman.

200. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who strikes or offers any violence to, or arrests upon any civil process or under the pretense of executing any civil process, any clergyman or other minister who is engaged in or, to the knowledge of the offender, is about to engage in, any of the rites or duties in the last preceding section mentioned, or who, to the knowledge of the offender, is going to perform the same, or returning from the performance thereof.

Disturbing meetings for religious worship or special purposes.

201. Every one is guilty of an offence and liable, on summary conviction, to a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars and costs, and in default of payment, to one month's imprisonment, who wilfully disturbs, interrupts or disquiets any assemblage of persons met for religious worship, or for any moral, social or benevolent purpose, by profane discourse, by rude or indecent behaviour, or by making a noise, either within the place of such meeting or so near it as to disturb the order or solemnity of the meeting.

Origin]-Sec. 173, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 156, sec. 2.

Disturbing public meeting]—If a person not belonging to the association which rents the hall enters it during the meeting and calls upon his own co-religionists to leave the meeting at a time when he has no privilege of addressing the audience, he is liable to conviction. Moore v. Gauthier, 14 Que, K.B, 530, 11 Can, Cr. Cas. 203.

[§ 202]

Offences Against Morality.

Buggery.

202. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for life who commits buggery, either with a human being or with any other living creature.

Origin]-Sec. 174, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 157, sec. 1.

Buggery]—This offence, also called sodomy, is the carnal copulation against nature by human beings with each other or with a beast. 1 Bishop Cr. Law 380. There must be a penetration per anum. Archbold Cr. Plead. (1900), 879. A penetration of the mouth is not sodomy; Rex v. Jacobs, Russ. & Ry. 331; but is punishable as an act of indeceney. See sec. 206. Unlike rape, sodomy may be committed between two persons, both of whom consent, and even by husband and wife. R. v. Jellyman, 8 C. & P. 604. Whichever is the pathic, both may be indicted. R. v. Allen, 1 Den. C.C. 364; 2 C. & K. 869.

Evidence]—The common law presumption is, that a person under fourteen is incapable of having carnal knowledge, not merely that such a person is incapable of committing rape. It is because of the presumption, so understood, that a person under fourteen cannot be convicted of rape. The case of The Queen v. Allen, 1 Den. 364, shows that the same presumption applies to cases of unnatural crime. R. v. Hartlen (1898), 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 12 (N.S.), 30 N.S.R. 317. Penetration alone is now sufficient to constitute the offence. Code sec. 7.

Evidence is not admissible to prove that the defendant has a general disposition to commit the offence. R. v. Cole, 3 Russ. Cr., 6th ed., 251.

An equivocal statement of the accused will not avail as an admission of guilt. R. v. Blyth, 28 Can. Cr. Cas. 20, 11 O.W.N. 406.

Telling the jury to disregard evidence improperly admitted as to a prior offence will not be sufficient to validate the proceeding, if it must have resulted that notwithstanding such direction the jury could not clear their minds absolutely of the suspicion created by such evidence. R. v. Barron (1913), 9 Cr. App. B. 236 [1914], 2 K.B. 570; and see R. v. Bond [1906], 2 K.B. 389, 21 Cox C.C. 252.

It would seem that a prior acquittal for buggery will be an answer to a subsequent charge for any lesser offence based on the same evidence and for which he might have been convicted on the prior indictment. R. v. Barron [1914], 2 K.B. 570. But the decision in that case that a subsequent charge of gross indecency on the same facts was not barred under the English law is probably not applicable in Canada because of the special provisions of the Code authorizing conviction under the same indictment for lesser offences necessarily included therein. See sees. 907 and 951.

Exclusion of public from trial]-Code sec. 645.

[§ 202]

Assault with intent]-Code secs. 293, 294.

Acts of gross indecency with male]-Code sec. 206.

Attempt to commit buggery.

203. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to ten years' imprisonment who attempts to commit the offence mentioned in the last preceding section.

Origin]-Sec. 175, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 157, sec. 1.

Evidence]—It is desirable to give warning to the jury as to giving credence to the evidence of boys of from ten to twelve years in cases of assault with intent to commit sodomy. See R. v. Cratchley (1913), 9 Cr. App. R. 232.

Exclusion of public from trial]-Code sec. 645.

Incest.

204. Every parent and child, every brother and sister, and every grandparent and grandchild, who cohabit or have sexual intercourse with each other, shall each of them, if aware of their consanguinity, be deemed to have committed incest, and be guilty of an indictable offence and liable to fourteen years' imprisonment, and the male person shall also be liable to be whipped: Provided that, if the court or judge is of opinion that the female accused is a party to such intercourse only by reason of the restraint, fear or duress of the other party, the court or judge shall not be bound to impose any punishment on such person under this section.

Evidence]—On a trial for incest, the only evidence against the accused was that of the child, a girl of 11 years, and of a woman who had known accused and the girl living together as father and daughter for some seven or eight months. This evidence was not rebutted:— Held, on appeal, that this was not sufficient proof of relationship to justify a conviction. Rex v. Smith; 13 B.C.R. 384, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 403.

Evidence of penetration need not also include proof of emission. R. v. Lindsay, 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 163, 36 O.L.R. 171. Code sec. 7.

Medical evidence that the bodily state of a child is compatible with her story is corroboration thereof. Rex. v. Cooper, 10 Cr. App. R. 195.

Oral evidence is not admissible to prove relationship on a charge of incest in the Province of Quebec, and the relationship must be established by the production of extracts from the registers of eivil status, as required by the provincial laws of evidence made applicable to criminal proceedings by the Canada Evidence Act, see. 35, unless the absence of such registers is proved. R. v. Garneau (1899), 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 69, 8 Que. Q.B. 447. It is not too late for the accused to object that oral evidence is insufficient proof, after the case for the prosecution has been closed. Ibid.

In Griffiths v. Reed, 1 Hagg, E.C.C. 202, Sir John Nicholl, in an incest case, the parties being uncle and niece, said:—"It has been justly observed that the charge, if true, is highly criminal and scandalous; that it would subject the party to a severe punishment . . . and that therefore the proof of the charge must be clear and full."

Although in that case, the niece had given birth to a child, whose paternity was unaccounted for, the Judge dismissed the case, although the uncle and niece had slept in the same room, where however there were two beds, for thirteen years.

Even assuming that direct evidence of the offence is wanting in the case, the court hearing a case reserved on the question whether there was any evidence on which the conviction could be made, must affirm it if a fair and reasonable inference of guilt might be drawn, and it is unable to say it was improperly drawn; and where, if the case were being tried by a jury it could not properly be withdrawn from them. R. v. Ward (N.S.), 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 75.

Woman as accomplice]—The corresponding English statute is the Incest Act, 1906. Where the parties are adults, the female consenting becomes an accomplice, and the rule as to corroboration of an accomplice's testimony becomes applicable; that is, the jury should be warned against accepting her uncorroborated story. R. v. Dimes (1911), 76 J.P. 47, 7 Cr. App. R. 43; R. v. Ball [1911], A.C. 47, 80 L.J.K.B. 69; R. v. Bloodworth (1913), 9 Cr. App. R. 80.

The mere oath of the prosecutrix that she resisted to the best of her strength does not prevent her from being an accomplice. It is open to the jury, where there had been an acquittal on another charge of rape, to believe that she offered some resistance and eventually submitted, without consenting in the sense of acting of her own free will. There is a distinction between submission and permission. The amount of corroboration required depends on the degree of complicity of the woman; if the jury finds that she consented she would be an accomplice. R. v. Dimes (1911), 7 Cr. App. R. 43.

Where such corroboration exists, the evidence of such a witness of other incestuous acts between the same parties (not charged in the indictment) is, on the authority of R. v. Ball [1911], A.C. 47, admissible, but if such evidence is uncorroborated, the jury should be warned against it. R. v. Bloodworth, S Cr. App. R. 80.

Punishment by whipping]—See secs. 80, 204, 276, 292, 293, 301, 302, 446, 457, 1060.

Wife of accused a compellable witness]—This section is included amongst those specified in sub-sec. 2 of sec. 4 of the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145, and under it the wife of the accused is both a competent and compellable witness for the prosecution.

Indecent acts in public places or as an insult.

205. Every one is guilty of an offence and liable, on summary conviction before two justices, to a fine of fifty dollars or to six months' imprisonment with or without hard labour, or to both fine and imprisonment, who wilfully,—

(a) in the presence of one or more persons does any indecent act in any place to which the public have or are permitted to have access; or, 141

(b) does any indecent act in any place intending thereby to insult or offend any person.

Origin]-See. 177, Code of 1892; 58 Vict., ch. 37, sec. 6.

Evidence of single offence on summary conviction charge]—Only one offence should be included in a single information. Code sec. 710, sub-sec. (3). The same limitation applies to the evidence in support, except where the circumstances of other offences are not only admissible in proof of intent, but such proof is needed. E. v. Roach (1914), 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 28, 6 O.W.N. 632; Thompson v. Director of Public Prosecutions [1918], 87 L.J.K.B. 478, affirming R. v. Thompson, 86 L.J.K.B. 1321, [1917] 2 K.B. 630; Perkins v. Jeffery, 84 L.J.K.B. 1554, [1915] 2 K.B. 702; R. v. Fisher, 79 L.J.K.B. 187, [1910] 1 K.B. 149; R. v. Bodley, 82 L.J.K.B. 1070, [1913] 3 K.B. 468; R. v. Mackenzie (1910), 6 Cr. Evidence of the complainant of a prior indecent exposure by the defendant a few weeks previously is properly admitted to show that she was not mistaken in her identification, where the accused had said when arrested that they had the wrong man; such evidence was also relevant as showing that what was done by the accused was done wilfully and not accidentally, and that it was done to insult the complainant, Perkins v. Jeffery [1915], 2 K.B. 702, 84 L.J.K.B. 1554.

Wilful indecency]-The act must have been done wilfully. R. v. Clifford (1916), 35 O.L.R. 287, 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 5, 26 D.L.R. 754; R. v. Gerald (1916), 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 7, 9 O.W.N. 346. The information is defective if it does not so charge, but the defect may be cured by the evidence. Code sec. 1124; R. v. Clifford (1916), 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 5, 35 O.L.R. 287; R. v. Gerald (1916), 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 7; ex parte O'Shaughnessy, 13 Que. K.B. 178, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 136. R. v. Tupper, 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 199; R. v. Barre, 15 Man. R. 420, 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 1.

Indecent gestures in a public place while singing an obscene song may constitute an indecent act within sec. 205. R. v. Jourdan, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 337.

Place to which public have access]-It will be noticed that where the act is done with intent to insult or offend (sub-sec. (b)), the Bu Gee 14 phrase used is "in any place" as distinguished from the limitation made in sub-sec. (a). Berman v. Kocurka (1915), 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 44 (Que.)

> Sub-sec. (a) does not aim at the punishment of an act of indecency unless there is some third person present at the time of the occurrence.

> Under this sub-section the act is punishable only when committed in any place to which the public have or are permitted to have access. The phraseology of the English statute 14 & 15 Vict., ch. 100, sec. 29, is different in that respect. R. v. Clifford (1916), 35 O.L.R. 287, 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 5, 26 D.L.R. 754.

> A massage parlor has been held to be a public place. R. v. Clifford, 35 O.L.R. 287, 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 5; and see ex parte Walter, Ramsay's App. Cas., Que. 183; R. v. Lavasseur, 9 Montreal, L.N. 386.

Acts of gross indecency between male persons.

206. Every male person is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to five years' imprisonment and to be whipped who, in public or private, commits, or is a party to the commission of, or procures or attempts to procure the commission by any male person of, any act of gross indecency with another male person.

> Origin]-Sec. 178, Code of 1892; 53 Vict., Can., ch. 37, sec. 5; Criminal Law Amendment Act, 1885, Imp., 48-49 Vict., ch. 69, sec. 11.

Excluding public from trial]-Code sec. 645.

Corroboration of accomplice's testimony]—See note to see. 1002; R. v. Williams (1914), 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 339; 7 O.W.N. 426.

Wife of acoused a compellable witness]-Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145, sec. 4.

Gross indecency between male persons]—As said by Lord Sumner in Thompson v. Director of Public Prosecutions (1918), 87 L.J.K.B. 478, 485, "experience tends to show that these offences against nature connote an inversion of normal characteristics which, while demanding punishment as offending against social morality, also partake of the nature of an abnormal physical property." Evidence may, therefore, be admissible on a question of disputed identity, to show that articles found in the possession of the accused stamped him as a person having a propensity to commit indecent acts of the class charged. Thompson v. Director of Public Prosecutions (1918), 87 L.J.K.B. 478, H.L., affirming R. v. Thompson, 86 L.J.K.B. 1321 [1917], 2 K.B. 630, C.A. See also R. v. Williams (1914), 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 389, 7 O.W.N. 426; R. v. Jones [1896], 1 Q.B. 4.

Indecency accompanied by assault]-See Code secs. 292-294.

Obscene or immoral books or pictures.—Indecent show.—Drugs for abortion.—Advertising venereal preparations.—Questions for judge and jury.—Motives.

207. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who knowingly, without lawful justification or excuse,—

(a) makes, manufactures, or sells, or exposes for sale or to public view, or distributes or circulates, or causes to be distributed or circulated, or has in his possession for sale, distribution or circulation, or assists in such making, manufacture, sale, exposure, having in possession, distribution or circulation, any obscene book or other printed, typewritten or otherwise written matter, or any picture, photograph, model or other object tending to corrupt morals, or any plate for the reproduction of any such picture or photograph; or,

- (b) publicly exhibits any disgusting object or any indecent show; or,
- (c) offers to sell, advertises, publishes an advertisement of, or has for sale or disposal any means or instructions or any medicine, drug or article intended or represented as a means of preventing conception or of causing abortion or miscarriage; or advertises or publishes an advertisement of any means, instructions, medicine, drug or article for restoring sexual virility or curing venereal diseases or diseases of the generative organs.

2. No one shall be convicted of any offence in this section mentioned if he proves that the public good was served by the acts alleged to have been done, and that there was no excess in the acts alleged beyond what the public good required.

3. It shall be a question for the court or judge whether the occasion of the manufacture, sale, exposing for sale, publishing, or exhibition is such as might be for the public good, and whether there is evidence of excess beyond what the public good required in the manner, extent or circumstances in, to or under which the manufacture, sale, exposing for sale, publishing or exhibition is made; but it shall be a question for the jury whether there is or is not such excess.

4. The motives of the manufacturer, seller, exposer, publisher or exhibitor shall in all cases be irrelevant.

Origin]-Sec. 179, Code of 1892.

"Knowingly"]—In Brownlie v. Camphill, 5 App. Cas. 932, Lord Blackburn, quoting with approval from Bell v. Gardner, 4 M. & G. 11, (Tindal, C.J.) said: "We ean, in fact, regard the possession of the means of knowledge only as affording a strong observation to the jury to induce them to believe that the party had actual knowledge of the circumstances; but there is no conclusive rule of law because a party has the means of knowledge he has the knowledge itself." Tindal, C.J., further said: "There may be cases where the existence of the means 32, Lord & G. 11, n of the the jury ge of the a party dal, C.J., he means of knowledge might lead irresistibly to the inference that the party had actual knowledge."

The insertion of the word "knowingly" in the place where it is found makes it incumbent on the prosecution to give some evidence of knowledge. R. v. Beaver, 9 O.L.R. 418, 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 415.

A like use of the word "knowingly" in the English Licensing Act, 1872, was held by Day, J., in Sherras v. De Rutzen [1895], 1 Q.B. 918, at p. 921, to shift the burden of proof from the defence to the prosecution. 'See also Bank of New South Wales v. Piper [1897], A.C. 383, at p. 389, and Mullins v. Collins (1874), L.R. 9 Q.B. 292.

The omission of the word "knowingly" from the warrant of commitment was held to be fatal in R. v. Graf (1909), 19 O.L.R. 238, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 193, where there was a like omission from the information; but a direction was given for the further detention of the person convicted so that a new warrant conforming with a regularly amended conviction could be issued. Ibid.

Without lawful justification or excuse]—No one can be convicted under the section unless "without lawful justification or excuse" he does the act for which the prosecution is brought. The duty of showing the absence of this justification or excuse is on the Crown; R. v. Beaver (1905), 9 O.L.R. 418, 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 415; R. v. St. Clair, 28 O.L.R. 271; while the onus of proving that the public good was served is thrown on the accused. A lawful justification or excuse must exist in fact, and not in mere belief. Lyons & Sons v. Wilkins [1896], 1 Ch. 811; Read v. Friendly Society of Operative Stonemasons [1902], 2 K.B. 88, 732; Glamorgan Coal Co. v. South Wales Miners' Federation [1903], 1 K.B. 118 [1903], 2 K.B. 545. So the public good must be actually served, and an intention so to serve it is not sufficient. R. v. St. Clair (1913), 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 350, 364, 28 O.L.R. 271, 4 O.W.N. 856, 12 D.L.R. 710.

The same test, therefore, may be applied in determining whether a lawful justification or excuse existed in fact, or whether the public good was in fact served. Ibid.

Obscenity defined]—" Obscenity," in criminal law, is defined in Bouvier's Law Dictionary, as "such indecency as is calculated to violation of the law and the general corruption of morals"; that is, it must have a tendency to violate some law and to corrupt morals. There must be the two elements; abusive language violates the law of peace but does not necessarily corrupt morals; when the both are combined it becomes obscene. A publication may be technically obscene, yet, it is only when it tends to corrupt the morals by inflaming the passions and inciting to immoral conduct that it is punishable. R. v. Ballentine, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 385, 14 E.L.R. 278; R. v. Beaver (1905), 9 O.L.R. 418, 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 415, 5 Ont. W.R. 102. [§ 207]

A newspaper proprietor may be liable for publishing another's advertisement in his newspaper offering obscene prints for sale. R. v. De Marny [1907], 1 K.B. 388.

"Tending to corrupt morals"]—In R. v. St. Clair, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 350, at 369, 12 D.L.R. 710, 28 O.L.R. 271, Hodgins, J.A., said: "I should be disposed to think that the words 'tending to corrupt morals' apply to everything which precedes them in sub-sec. (a). See Rex v. Beaver, 8 Can. Crim. Cas. 415, at p. 422, 9 O.L.R. 418, at p. 424; Rex. v. Britnell (1912), 20 Can. Crim. Cas. 85, at p. 93, 26 O.L.R. 136, at p. 143. In The King v. Macdougall (1909), 39 N.B.R. 388, 15 Can. Crim. Cas. 466, at pp. 476, 480, they are so applied. In the cases of The Queen v. Hicklin, L.R. 3 Q.B. 360 (see pp. 370, 375), and Steele v. Brannan (1872), L.R. 7 C.P. 261 (see pp. 266, 270), tending to corrupt morals is made the test of obscenity."

Inspection of pictures by magistrate before trial]—It is no objection to a conviction on summary trial that the police magistrate before whom the information was laid had, before the commencement of the trial, inspected the alleged obscene prints or pictures seized by the police, as he was at liberty to inspect them on considering whether he would issue a summons or a warrant. R. v. Graf (1909), 19 O.L.R. 238, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 193.

Advertising means to cause miscarriage]—It is for the trial judge to determine whether the advertisement is capable of bearing the meaning assigned to it and for the jury to say whether, under the circumstances, it has that meaning or not. R. v. Karn, 5 O.L.R. 704, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 479.

Formalities of indictment]-See secs. 852, 855, 859, 861.

Intermixing of trials of cognate offences]—In a court of common law, such a thing is unknown as to begin a trial against the same prisoner who is already on his trial for another offence, that is to say, to interject, as it were, one into the other, thus not only harassing the mind of the accused, but also prejudicing his defence. R. v. McBerny, 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 339, 343. So in the case of Hamilton v. Walker [1892], 2 Q.B. 25, there were two informations laid before justices of the peace, charging the defendant (1), with delivering to a certain person indecent advertisements, and (2), with aiding and abetting this person in exhibiting the same. The justices heard the evidence on the first information, and without deciding on the defendant's guilt or innocence, heard the evidence on the second, and convicted him on both. The court held that, as the evidence on the second charge was substantially the same as on the first, each case ought to have been decided on the evidence given with relation to the particular charge, and, therefore, the justices were wrong in hearing the evidence on the second information, before deciding on the first, and both convictions were bad. And see R. v. Bigelow, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 134; R. v. Indecent theatrical play or vaudeville show]-See sec. 208.

Immoral theatrical performance.—Penalty for lessee or manager.— Person appearing as actor.—Person in an indecent costume.

208. Every person who, being the lessee, agent or person in charge or manager of a theatre, presents or gives or allows to be presented or given therein any immoral, indecent or obscene play, opera, concert, acrobatic, variety, or vaudeville performance, or other entertainment or representation, is guilty of an offence punishable on indictment or on summary conviction, and liable, if convicted upon indictment, to one year's imprisonment with or without hard labour, or to a fine of five hundred dollars, or to both, and, on summary conviction, to six months' imprisonment, or to a fine of fifty dollars, or to both.

2. Every person who takes part or appears as an actor, performer, or assistant in any capacity, in any such immoral, indecent or obscene play, opera, concert, performance, or other entertainment or representation, is guilty of an offence and liable, on summary conviction, to three months' imprisonment, or to a fine not exceeding twenty dollars, or to both.

3. Every person who so takes part or appears in an indecent costume is guilty of an offence and liable, on summary conviction, to six months' imprisonment, or to a fine of fifty dollars, or to both.

Origin]-Code Amendment Act, 1903, Can. 3 Edw. VII, ch. 13, sec. 2.

Onus of proof]—It is for the prosecution to prove that the performance is immoral, indecent or obscene. R. v. McAuliffe (1904), 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 21 (N.S.) Ballet dancing in the customary costume does not raise that inference. Ibid. Compare R. v. Jourdan, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 337.

CRIMINAL CODE (PART V)

Posting obscene publications.—Letters or post-cards.—Letters to deceive and defraud.

209. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who posts for transmission or delivery by or through the post,—

- (a) any obscene or immoral book, pamphlet, newspaper, picture, print, engraving, lithograph, photograph or any publication, matter or thing of an indecent, immoral, or scurrilous character; or,
- (b) any letter upon the outside or envelope of which, or any post card or post band or wrapper upon which, there are words, devices, matters or things of the character aforesaid; or,
- (c) any letter or circular concerning schemes devised or intended to deceive and defraud the public, or for the purpose of obtaining money under false pretenses.

Origin]-63-64 Vict., Can., ch. 46, sec. 3; sec. 180 Code of 1892; R.S.C., 1886, ch. 35, sec. 103 (the Post Office Act).

Sending obscene or immoral literature by post]—See. 209 deals with the offence of sending through the post obscene or immoral publications. It applies also to a statue or carving, but does not include a sealed letter inside of which something indecent is written. R. v. Goyer [1917], 1 W.W.R. 590, 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 10 (Sask.) Sec. 209 (b) expressly applies to letters upon the outside, or envelope, of which there is indecent writing or printing.

The sending of an indecent letter is punishable as a criminal libel if designed to insult the person to whom it is addressed. Code secs. 317, 318.

Where the person to whom a letter containing indecent matter is sent, is a consenting party to the sending of it, there is no libel if the letter is sealed, but if the indecent matter appears on the outside of the envelope it would be an offence notwithstanding the consent, under Code sec. 209. R. v. Goyer, supra.

Seduction.-Burden of proof of previous unchastity.

210. The burden of proof of previous unchastity on the part of the girl or woman under the three next succeeding sections shall be upon the accused.

[§ 209]

OFFENCES AGAINST MORALITY

Origin]-63-64 Vict. Can. ch. 46, sec. 3.

Seduction and similar offences]—Sees. 210-219 relate to criminal seduction and similar offences. Sec. 211 explicitly forbids the act of illicit connection with a girl of previously chaste character, of or above the age of fourteen years and under the age of sixteen years. If the girl is over the age of sixteen years, or if she is not of previously chaste character, it is not, however morally wrong, a criminal offence to have illicit connection with her. Sec. 212 deals with illicit connection under promise of marriage; sec. 213, with a similar connection between a man and his ward, or an employer and his servant; sec. 214, with a similar connection between a master or other employee on board of a vessel, and a female passenger; sees. 215 and 216, with the offence of procuring; sec. 217, householder permitting resort to premises for illicit intercourse; sec. 218, with conspiracy to induce a woman to commit adultery or fornication; sec. 219, with the case of illicit connection with imbeciles, etc.; and sec. 220, with the case of Indian women.

Seduction of girls between fourteen and sixteen.

211. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who seduces or has illicit connection with any girl of previously chaste character, of or above the age of fourteen years and under the age of sixteen years.

Origin]-Sec. 181, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 157, sec. 3; 53 Vict., ch. 37, sec. 3.

Seduction]—In R. v. Moon [1910], 1 K.B. 818, it was said that the word "seduction" in its ordinary sense meant "the inducing of a girl to part with her virtue for the first time"; see Gibson v. Rabey (1916), 10 W.W.R. 199 (Alta.).

A civil action may lie although the criminal prosecution for seduction under promise of marriage was dismissed because it was not satisfactorily proved that the promise preceded the seduction. Gibson v. Rabey, supra.

The fact that a bill for rape had been thrown out by the grand jury is no bar to a prosecution under sec. 211, although the evidence tends to show the greater offence. R. v. Doty, 25 Ont. R. 362.

"Previously chaste character"]—The onus of proving the negative is placed upon the accused by sec. 210; and see R. v. Farrell (1916), 36 O.L.R. 372, 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 273, 10 O.W.N. 64; R. v. Pieco [1917], 1 W.W.R. 892, 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 435; R. v. Wakelyn (1913), 4 W.W.R. 170, 5 Alta. L.R. 464, 23 W.L.R. 807, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 111; R. v. Rioux (1914), 28 W.L.R. 69, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 323 (Alta.); R. v. Hauberg (1915), 31 W.L.R. 779, 8 Sask. L.R. 239, 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 297; R. v. Romains, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 184, 6 Terr. L.R. 77.

ne part ections The words "previous chaste character" do not mean "previously chaste reputation," but point to those acts and that disposition of mind which constitute an unmarried woman's virtue or morals. R. v. Lougheed, S Can. Cr. Cas. 184, 6 Terr. L.R. 77; R. v. Fiola (1918), 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 125 (Que.). Under particular circumstances there may possibly be a second seduction of the same woman by the same, or another man. A woman may have been guilty of unchaste conduct, and subsequently become chaste in legal contemplation, and be the subject of seduction. But there must be, at all events, between the two acts of seduction, such conduct and behaviour as to imply reform and self-rehabilitation in chastity. R. v. Lougheed, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 184, 6 Terr. L.R. 77; R. v. Hauberg, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 297.

If it appears that the girl was of a lewd and lascivious disposition and offered herself for prostitution, such has been held to negative the existence of previously chaste character. R. v. Fiola (1918), 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 125 (Que.); The most direct proof of previous unchastity on the part of the girl would be evidence that, before the commission of the offence charged, she had illicit intercourse with another or others. R. v. Pieco [1917], 1 W.W.R. 892, 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 435 (Alta.). Cases where the charges were for indecent assault or rape are distinguishable, for, in such cases, the previous chastity of the persons upon whom the offences were committed is not an element of the offence, and evidence of unchastity would properly be refused, as a person accused of such an offence may be convicted notwithstanding the fact that the prosecutrix may be a common prostitute. R. v. Pieco, supra.

Declarations or admissions made by the prosecutrix after the alleged seduction as to her prior practices would be admissible in evidence to show her prior unchastity. R. v. Fiola, supra.

If the girl testifies in her own behalf, she may be cross-examined and compelled to answer queries concerning specific acts of fornication between her and the other man prior to the alleged seduction. R. v. Fiola, supra; and see 14 L.R.A., N.S. 753.

Corroboration]-See sec. 1002.

The corroboration may be derived from statements made by the accused to third persons. R. v. Burr (1906), 13 O.L.R. 485, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 104; R. v. Wyse (1895), 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 6; R. v. Daun (1906), 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 244, 12 O.L.R. 227.

The corroborative evidence must do more than show a probability of the guilt of the accused. R. v. Vahey, 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 258 (Ont.).

Dawson v. McKenzie, [1908] Scot. R. 648; Ridley v. Whipp (1916) 22 Com. L.R. 381 (Austr.).

Proof of girl's age]—On a charge of criminal seduction under Code sec. 211, credit may be given the evidence of the girl's mother as to the daughter's age, although the mother is unable to state the year of the girl's birth. R. v. Pieco [1917], 1 W.W.R. 892 (Alta.), citing

Reg. v. Nicholls, 10 Cox C.C. 476. As to inferring age in certain cases, see Code sec. 984, the application of which is restricted to crimes against children under sixteen years of age. R. v. Hauberg, 8 Sask. L.R. 239, 31 W.L.R. 779, 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 297.

It has been held in Saskatchewan that it would not be competent proof if the girl alone testified to her own age. R. v. Hauberg, 8 Sask. L.R. 239; and see Doe v. Ford, 3 U.C.Q.B. 352; Martin Hargreaves Co. v. Wrigley, 30 W.L.R. 92; Haines v. Guthrie, 13 Q.B.D. 818; but see contra, Wigmore on Evidence, par. 222. Where parol testimony is admissible by the provincial law to prove age, the better opinion seems to be that a child who has arrived at the age of discretion is competent to testify as to her own age. R. v. Spera (1915), 34 O.L.R. 539, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 180, citing Loose v. The State (1903), 120 Wis. 115, and Cheever v. Congdon, 34 Mich. 296.

If the evidence of a parent is not available, the opinion of persons who had known the girl from early childhood may be received. R. v. Spera (1915), 34 O.L.R. 539, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 180; following R. v. Cox [1898], 1 Q.B. 179, 67 L.J.Q.B. 293, 18 Cox C.C. 672.

Apart from the special provisions of the Code, the proof of age should be given in accordance with the requirements of the provincial law. Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145, sec. 35. Provincial statutes regarding the registration of births usually provide for a certificate or an extract from the register being evidence of the fact registered, but the fact can be proved by parol testimony, if available; R. v. Cox [1898], 1 Q.B. 179, 18 Cox C.C. 672; unless the provincial law expressly requires that the age of persons born there shall be proved only by official certificate. See the Quebec Civil Code as to acts of eivil status.

Questions of fact and of law]—Whether the woman in respect to whom the offence defined in sec. 211 was, at the time of the alleged commission of the offence, a woman of previously chaste character or not, is a question of fact for the jury to decide upon a proper direction by the Judge as to the meaning of those words. R. v. Wakelyn (1913), 4 W.W.R. 170, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 111, 23 W.L.R. 807, 5 Alta. L.R. 464.

In The King v. Wakelyn, 4 W.W.R. 170, supra, Stuart, J. suggests a possible form of a question of law involved on the trial of a charge under sec. 211, as follows: "Assuming in the complainant's favour all the facts that the jury could upon the evidence reasonably find in her favour, that is, assuming that the accused, in undertaking the burden of proving unchastity, which sec. 210 cast upon him, proved against the complainant the least that the jury upon the evidence could reasonably find against her, were those facts such as to constitute the complainant a girl of previously unchaste character?" The definition of what constitutes previously chaste character is a question of law; as it [§211] is the duty of the Judge at the trial to define the essential ingredients of the crime which is charged. Ibid.

Excluding public from trial]-Sec. 645.

Prosecution within one year]—By sec. 1140 (c) the prosecution must be commenced within one year from the commission of the offence. See as to suggested amendment of this limitation, 37 C.L.T. 226.

Wife of accused a compellable witness]—This section is included amongst those specified in sec. 4 of the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145, and under it the wife of the accused is both a competent and compellable witness for the prosecution.

Seduction of female under twenty-one under promise of marriage.

212. Every one, above the age of twenty-one years, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who, under promise of marriage, seduces and has illicit connection with any unmarried female of previously chaste character and under twenty-one years of age.

Origin]-Sec. 182, Code of 1892; 50-51 Viet., ch. 48, sec. 2.

Seduction under promise of marriage]—It is not enough that the girl was induced to resume illicit intercourse because of the promise of marriage then made by the accused who had previously seduced her. R. v. Hauberg (1915), 8 Sask. L.R. 239, 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 297, 31 W.L.R. 779.

It would seem that an equivocal statement which might or might not be a promise of marriage is not enough. R. v. Spray (1914), 20 B.C.R. 147, 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 152.

The offence is committed on the date of the first connection. R. v. Lacelle, 11 O.L.R. 74, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 229.

There is a difference of judicial opinion as to whether the renewal of promise of marriage where the parties are already engaged to be married would be sufficient. The better view seems to be that such a case is equally within the scope of sec. 212, as being "under" promise of marriage as the case of a promise of marriage first made as a means of obtaining the girl's consent to intercourse. R. v. Romains (1908), 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 68, but see contra, R. v. Walker (1893), 1 Terr. L.R. 482, 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 465. It would seem sufficient that the subsistence of the promise induced the girl's consent although there was no express renewal of the promise at the time of the seduction. R. v. Romains (1908), 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 68.

A promise of marriage conditional upon the girl becoming pregnant as a result of the intercourse has been held not to be sufficient to support a charge under a similar New York law. People v. Van Alstyne, 39 N.E. Rep. 343.

Subsequent marriage of parties]-The subsequent intermarriage of the seducer and the seduced is a good plea in defence of the charge. Sec. 214 (2). A mere offer to marry is no defence. State v. Wise, 50 Pac. 800; State v. Thompson, 45 N.W. 293; State v. Mackey, 48 N.W. 918.

Proof of age]—See note to sec. 211; R. v. Hauberg (1915), 8 Sask.
Can. Cr. Cas. 180.

Previously chaste character]-See sec. 210 and note to sec. 211.

Corroboration]—See sec. 1002 and note to sec. 211. The corroboration of the promise of marriage may consist of statements made by the accused both before and after the seduction showing his expressed intention to marry the girl. R. v. Daun, 12 O.L.R. 227, 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 244.

Prosecution within one year]—By sec. 1140 (c) the prosecution must be commenced within one year from the commission of the offence. See as to suggested amendment of this limitation, 37 C.L.T. 226. If the first occasion of the illicit intercourse was more than a year prior to the occasion of illicit intercourse when the promise of marriage was made, the prosecution under sec. 212 fails, as the girl was not of chaste character up to the date of the seduction under promise of marriage. R. v. Lougheed; 6 Terr. L.R. 77, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 184; R. v. Howard, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 188 (Ont.); unless between the two acts of seduction there was such conduct and behaviour on her part as to imply reform and rehabilitation in chastity. R. v. Hauberg (1915), 8 Sask. L.R. 239, 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 297; R. v. Lougheed, supra.

Excluding public from trial]-Sec. 645.

Seduction of ward or step-child or foster child.

213. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment,—

- (a) who, being a step-parent or foster parent or guardian, seduces or has illicit connection with his step-child or foster child, or ward; or,
- (b) who seduces or has illicit connection with any woman or girl previously chaste and under the age of twentyone years who is in his employment in a factory, mill. workshop, shop or store, or who, being in a common, but not necessarily similar, employment with him in such factory, mill, workshop, shop or store, is, in respect of her employment or work in such factory, mill, workshop, shop or store, under or in any way subject to his control or direction, or receives her wages or salary directly or indirectly from him.

Corroboration]-See sec. 1002 (c).

Seducing female rassengers on vessels.-Subsequent marriage a defence.

214. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a fine of four hundred dollars or to one year's imprisonment, who, being the master or other officer or seaman or other person employed on board of any vessel, while such vessel is in any water within the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada, under promise of marriage, or by threats, or by the exercise of his authority, or by solicitation, or the making of gifts or presents, seduces and has illicit connection with any female passenger.

2. The subsequent intermarriage of the seducer and the seduced is, if pleaded, a good defence to any indictment for any offence against this or either of the two last preceding sections, except in the case of a guardian seducing his ward.

OFFENCES AGAINST MORALITY

[§ 216]

Origin]—Can. Stat. 1913, ch. 13, sec. 9; Can. Stat. 1909, ch. 9;
 R.S.C. 1906, ch. 146, sec. 216; Code of 1892, sec. 185; 53 Vict., Can., ch. 37, sec. 9;
 R.S.C. 1886, ch. 157, sec. 7.

Procuring]—There can be no procuring, and no attempt or conspiracy, i are the woman frequents a house of ill-fame of her own free will without any fraud or persuasion on the part of any other person. R. v. Christian, 23 Cox C.C. 541. Directing and conveying men to a house of ill-fame is not "procuring." R. v. Quinn, (1918) 43 O.L.R. 385.

A conviction must not be in the alternative for "procuring or attempting to procure, etc."; in such form it would be void for uncertainty. R. v. Gibson (1898), 29 Ont. R. 660; 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 302.

The illegal act relied upon must have been committed in Canada to bring a foreigner within the scope of Canadian jurisdiction. R. v. Blythe (1895), 4 B.C.R. 276, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 263; Re Gertie Johnson (1904), 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 243.

By false pretenses or false representations]—Clause (j) makes it an offence by false pretenses or false representations to procure any woman or girl to have any unlawful carnal connection. Seduction under promise of marriage made by a married man falsely representing himself as unmarried, may, it seems, be prosecuted under sub-sec. (j) if the girl believed the false representation. See 33 Eng. Law Journal, 253; R. v. Williams (1898), Central Crim. Court (Eng.); R. v. Jones, 67 L.J.Q.B. 41, [1898], 1 Q.B. 4.

Procuring to come to Canada or to leave Canada for the purpose of prostitution]—This offence (clause g) does not cover the case of a woman becoming the mistress of the accused only. R. v. Cardell (1914), 7 Alta. L.R. 404, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 271. The word "prostitution," in sec 216, means promisenous sexual intercourse with men. R. v. Cardell, supra.

Man living on the carnings of prostitution]—Compare clause (l) and sub-sec. (2) with Code secs. 235 (b), 238 (l) and 238 (a); and see R, v. Austin [1913], 1 K.B. 551, 82 L.J.Q.B. 387, 8 Cr. App. R. 169.

An indictment under sub-sec. (1) is not bad for laying the offence as on one specified day. R. v. Hill [1914], 2 K.B. 386, 10 Cr. App. R. 56.

Solicitation]—The offence of solicitation may be complete although it did not reach the mind of the person intended to be solicited so as to attract her notice. Horton v. Mead [1913], 1 K.B. 154, 82 L.J.K.B. 200, 23 Cox C.C. 279; R. v. Wing (1913), 29 O.L.B. 553, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 426, 5 O.W.N. 295.

Attempts where not expressly mentioned]—In clauses in which an attempt is not dealt with, it may be punished as Code see. 571 provides; the language of sec. 571 is too plain to admit of the application of the rule, expressi unius, etc. R. v. Wing, 29 O.L.R. 553, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 426, 5 O.W.N. 295.

Whipping on second or subsequent conviction]—This penalty was introduced by the amendment of 1913. Under the corresponding English Act (Crim. Law Amendment, 1912, sec. 7), it was held that it was not necessary that the previous conviction should be one on indictment, or that it should have taken place since the enactment of the new English law of 1912 authorizing an indictment of a male person for an offence similar to that stated in sub-sec. (1) of Code sec. 216 instead of summary proceedings for vagrancy under a statutory provision similar to sub-sec. (1) of Code sec. 238. R. v. Austin [1913], 1 K.B. 551, 82 L.J.K.B. 387, 8 Cr. App. R. 169, 23 Cox C.C. 346.

Householder permitting defilement.

217. Every one who, being the owner or occupier of any premises, or having, or acting or assisting in, the management or control thereof, induces or knowingly suffers any girl under the age of eighteen years to resort to or be in or upon such premises for the purpose of being unlawfully and carnally known by any man, whether such carnal knowledge is intended to be with any particular man, or generally, is guilty of an indictable offence, and is liable,—

[§ 216]

(b) to two years' imprisonment if such girl is of or above the age of fourteen years.

[§ 217]

Origin]-Sec. 187, Code of 1892; 48-49 Vict., Imp., ch. 69, sec. 6; 49 Vict., Can., ch. 52, sec. 4; 53 Vict., Can., ch. 37, sec. 3; 63-64 Vict., Can., ch. 46.

Permitting defilement]-The section is not aimed at the mere act of illicit intercourse. The offence would be complete, although not easily proved, without any evidence of actual illicit intercourse, if it was established that the girl was induced or knowingly permitted to be upon the premises for the unlawful purpose. A connection with a man following is merely in the nature of evidence of the unlawful purpose. If, for instance, an owner or occupier of premises was knowingly to permit a girl to be upon his premises under an appointment made with her to there meet her paramour for the purpose of illicit connection, the offence of the owner or occupier would be complete, although the man failed to appear. The statutory offence may be committed by a woman, as was the case in The Queen v. Webster, 16 Q.B.D. 134. The language of the section is, no doubt, purposely made wide, but its object is to forbid the use, either occasionally or habitually, of premises as assignation-houses, or houses of that nature, to which young girls may or may be induced to resort. The girls need not, as in sec. 211, have been of previously chaste character. They may even, for anything that appears, be leading a life of prostitution. R. v. Sam Sing (Ont.) 20 O.L.R. 613, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 361, per Garrow, J.A.

"Knowingly suffers," etc.]—The Children Act (1908), Amendment Act, 1910 (Eng.), enacts that a person shall be deemed to have caused or encouraged the seduction or prostitution or unlawful carnal knowledge (as the case may be), if he has "knowingly" allowed the girl to consort with or to enter or continue in the employment of any prostitute or person of known immoral character. Isaacs, L.C.J. in R. v. Chainey (1913), 9 Cr. App. R. 175, at 178, said, in reference to that enactment: "If it is established that the father (the accused) knew it and stood by and allowed it, he may be convicted of 'causing or encouraging.' There is a very important difference between allowing it and knowingly allowing it within the meaning of the section . . . When cases of this kind are considered, one must take into consideration the circumstances of the home."

"Girl under the age of cighteen years"]—It is not necessary for the prosecution to prove that the accused knew the girl to be under this age. R. v. Sam Sing (1910), 22 O.L.R. 613, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 361, distinguishing R. v. Karn, 20 O.L.R. 91, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 301.

"Unlawfully and carnally known"]-The term "unlawfully" as used in Code sec. 217 means not lawful or not sanctioned by law; it does not import that to be unlawful, the carnal connection must be something of a character elsewhere declared to be unlawful and penalized by the Code or by some other definite law or by the general law of the land. R. v. Karn, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 301, 20 O.L.R. 91; and see R. v. Sam Sing, 22, O.L.R. 613, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 363.

"With any particular man or generally"]-The judicial interpretation placed upon this language excludes the owner or occupier of the premises from coming under the designation "any particular man." The offence is in allowing the girl to be upon the premises for purposes of illicit intercourse with some man other than the accused. R. v. Sam Jon (1914), 20 B.C.R. 549, 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 334; R. v. Sam Sing, 22 O.L.R. 613, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 361.

Wife of accused a compellable wtiness]-This section is included amongst those specified in sub-sec. 2 of sec. 4 of the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145, and under it the wife of the accused is both a compellable and competent witness for the prosecution.

Juvenile delinquency]-See The Juvenile Delinquents Act, 1908, 7-8 Edw, VII, Can., ch. 40, and amending Acts.

Conspiracy to defile.

218. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who conspires with any other person by false pretenses, or false representations or other fraudulent means to induce any woman to commit adultery or fornication.

Origin]-Sec. 188, Code of 1892.

Conspiracy to defile women]-This is a common law offence, see 52 C.L.J. 92-93, R. v. Mears, 2 Den. C.C. 80, R. v. Howell, 4 F. & F. 160.

Corroboration]-See sec. 1002 (c).

Wife of accused a compellable witness]-This action is included amongst those specified in sub-sec. 2 of sec. 4 of the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145, and under it the wife of the accused is both a compellable and competent witness for the prosecution.

Excluding public from trial]-Code sec. 645.

Adultery a crime in New Brunswick]-Adultery is an indictable offence in New Brunswick under a pre-Confederation statute of that province. R. v. Strong (1915), 43 N.B.R. 190, 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 430; R.S.N.B. 1854, ch. 145, sec. 3.

Conspiracy to carnally know imbecile, etc.]—Where the imbecility is of that class that it is not easy to prove knowledge of same on the part of the accused, but there has been a conspiracy by several to induce the woman to commit fornication with them, it would seem that an indictment will lay for such conspiracy as at common law without proof of false pretenses, etc., under Code sec. 218. See article in 52 C.L.J. 92, by Mr. J. E. Farewell, K.C.

Indian prostitution.

220. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a penalty not exceeding one hundred dollars and not less than ten dollars, or six months' imprisonment,—

- (a) who, being the keeper of any house, tent or wigwam, allows or suffers any unenfranchised Indian woman to be or remain in such house, tent or wigwam, knowing or having probable cause for believing that such Indian woman is in or remains in such house, tent or wigwam with the intention of prostituting herself therein; or,
- (b) who, being an Indian woman, prostitutes herself therein; or,
- (c) who, being an unenfranchised Indian woman, keeps, frequents or is found in a disorderly house, tent or wigwam used for any such purpose.

(3) It shall not be a valid defence to a prosecution under this section that the child is of too tender years to understand or appreciate the nature of the act complained of or to be immediately affected thereby.

(4) No prosecution shall be instituted under this section unless it be at the instance of some recognized society for the protection of children or an officer of a juvenile court, without the authorization of the Attorney-General of the province in which the offence is alleged to have been committed, nor shall any such prosecution be commenced after the expiration of six months from the time of the commission of the alleged offence.

Juvenile Delinquents Act]—In districts in which the Juvenile Delinquents Act is in force, see. 29 of that Act applies to make liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars or to imprisonment for a period not exceeding one year, or to both fine and imprisonment, (1) who knowingly or wilfully encourages, aids, causes, abets or connives at the commission by a child, apparently or actually under the age of sixteen, of a "delinquency," i.e., the violation of any provision of the Criminal Code or of any Dominion or provincial statute.

or of any by-law or ordinance of any municipality for which violation punishment by fine or imprisonment may be awarded, or the commission of any other act by reason of which the child is liable to be committed to an industrial school or juvenile reformatory; (2), who knowingly or wilfully does any act producing, promoting or contributing to a child's being or becoming a juvenile delinquent, whether or not such person is the parent or guardian of the child, or (3) who, being the parent or guardian of the child, and being able to do so, wilfully neglects to do that which would directly tend to prevent a child's being or becoming a juvenile delinquent, i.e., a child who commits an act of delinquency of any of the classes above set out. The Juvenile Delinquents Act, 7-8 Edw. VII, Can., ch. 40; 2 Geo. V, Can., ch. 30; 4-5 Geo. V, Can., ch. 39. Jurisdiction under the Juevnile Delinquents Act is conferred upon the Juvenile Court established or specially authorized for that purpose (7-8 Edw. VII, ch. 40, sec. 2 (f); but where the act complained of is under the provisions of the Criminal Code or otherwise, an "indictable" offence, and the accused child is apparently or actually over the age of fourteen, the Court may, in its discretion, order the child to be proceeded against by indictment in the ordinary courts in accordance with the provisions of the Criminal Code in that behalf; but such course shall in no case be followed unless the Court is of the opinion that the good of the child and the interest of the community demand it. 7-8 Edw. VII, Can., ch. 40, sec. 7. The Juvenile Court may, in its discretion, at any time before any proceeding has been initiated against the child in the ordinary criminal courts rescind an order it has made for proceeding by indictment against such child apparently or actually over the age of fourteen, and apparently or actually under the age of sixteen. 7-8 Edw. VII, Can., ch. 40, sec. 7. The public is excluded from trials under the Juvenile Delinquents Act. Ibid., sec. 10. The name of the child tried under that Act, or of its parent or guardian, is not to be published in any newspaper account of the trial. Ibid., sec. 10. Pending the hearing of a charge against a child under the Juvenile Delinquents Act it is not to be held in jail, unless an order has been made in the ordinary criminal courts under sec. 7, but the child is to be detained at a "detention home," or shelter used exclusively for children, or under other charge approved of by the judge or, in his absence, by the sheriff or, in the absence of both the judge and the sheriff, by the mayor or other chief magistrate of the city, town, county or place. 7-8 Edw. VII, Can., ch. 40, sec. 11. Pending the hearing of a charge of delinquency the juvenile court may accept bail for the appearance of the child charged at the trial as in the case of other accused persons. 7-8 Edw. VII, Can., ch. 40, sec. 13.

On proof of the delinquency, the court may, instead of inflicting a punishment, release the child on probation. 7-8 Edw. VII, Can., ch. 40, sec. 16.

CRIMINAL CODE (PART V)

Prosecution of adults for Code offences in respect of a child]-In cities or districts which have asked for and obtained the issue of a proclamation bringing the Juvenile Delinquents Act into force there, prosecutions against adults for offences against the Criminal Code in respect of a child apparently or actually under the age of sixteen, may be brought in the Juvenile Court, established or authorized under the Juvenile Delinquents Act, without the necessity of a preliminary hearing before a "justice" as defined by Code sec. 2, sub-sec. (18); such prosecutions against adults may be summarily disposed of where the offence is triable summarily. 7-8 Edw. VII, Can., ch. 40, sec. 30. Otherwise the charge may be dealt with by the Juvenile Court as in the case of a preliminary hearing before a justice under Part XIV of the Code. Juvenile Delinquents Act, 7-8 Edw. VII, Can., ch. 40, sec. 30. Power is given the Juvenile Court in the case of a child "proved" to be a juvenile delinquent to adjourn the hearing from time to time for any definite or indefinite period, and to release the child on probation. 7-8 Edw. VII, Can., ch. 40, sec. 16. If the child is committed to a foster home or to an institution for the care of neglected children, the Juvenile Court may make an order upon the parent or parents of child, or upon the municipality to which it belongs, to contribute to its support such sum as the Court may determine. 7-8 Edw. VII, Can., ch. 40, sec. 16 (2).

Fine upon parent for child's delinquency]-Where the Juvenile Delinquents Act is in force by proclamation (7-8 Edw. VII, Can., ch. 40, secs. 34 and 35), and a child under sixteen is proved to have been guilty of an offence for the commission of which a fine, damages or costs might, in the case of an adult, be imposed, the Juvenile Court has a discretion to call upon the parent or guardian to show cause (7-8 Edw. VII, ch. 40, secs. 8 and 18) why he should not be ordered to pay such fine, or damages, or costs instead of the child. Ibid., sec. 18. The Juvenile Court may so order on citation of the parent by notice under sec. 8 of the Juvenile Delinquents Act, and after giving the parent an opportunity of being heard, unless the Court is satisfied that the parent has not conduced to the commission of the child's offence "by neglecting to exercise due care of the child or otherwise," 7-8 Edw. VII, Can., ch. 40, sec. 18. The order against the parent for fine, damages or costs, in respect of the child's offence is subject to the same right of appeal as if the order had been made on the conviction of the parent. 7-8 Edw. VII, Can., ch. 40, sec. 18, sub-sec. (5); ibid., sec. 5; Code sec. 749 et seq.

Nuisances.

Common nuisance defined.

221. A common nuisance is an unlawful act or omission to discharge a legal duty, which act or omission endangers the lives, safety, health, property or comfort of the public, or by which the public are obstructed in the exercise or enjoyment of any right common to all His Majesty's subjects.

Origin]—Sec. 191, Code of 1892; English Draft Code, sec. 150. Criminal and non-criminal nuisances]—See secs. 222 and 223.

Criminal common nuisances.

222. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to one year's imprisonment or a fine who commits any common nuisance which endangers the lives, safety or health of the public, or which occasions injury to the person of any individual.

Origin]—Sec. 192, Code of 1892; English draft Code, sec. 151. "Common nuisance"]—See definition in sec. 221.

Criminal nuisances]—In Union Colliery Co. v. The Queen, 31 S.C.R. 81, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 400, the appellants were the owners of a public franchise to operate a railway between certain points. In its course the railway crossed a bridge which they were bound, but neglected, to maintain in a safe and secure condition for the traffic which they carried over it. In consequence of their neglect a train broke through the bridge and several persons in it were killed. It was held that the appellants were indictable under secs. 222 and 247; and see R. v. Michigan Central Ry. Co., 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 483.

A street railway company has been indicted for a common nuisance endangering public safety in operating some of its cars for a considerable distance reversely at night, without a headlight at the end of the car in the direction in which it was being moved. R. v. Toronto Ry. 10 O.L.R. 26, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 106.

Careless operations in making necessary road repairs may be indictable if the safety of the public is endangered. R. v. Burt, 11 Cox C.C. 339.

In an unreported case at Toronto a prosecution was instituted against building contractors for careless operations in construction work said to endanger passers-by.

Private prosecutions]—A private prosecutor seeking an indictment against a municipality for an alleged nuisance in respect of the operation of a city sewage system, should lay his information before a magistrate and initiate a preliminary enquiry for the offence rather than apply for leave to prefer an indictment without a preliminary enquiry. Re Schofield and Toronto (1913), 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 93, 5 O.W.N. 109, 25 O.W.R. 331.

Non-criminal common nuisances.

the last preceding section, shall not be deemed to have committed a criminal offence; but all such proceedings or judgments may be taken and had as heretofore to abate or remedy the mischief done by such nuisance to the public right.

Origin]-Sec. 193, Code of 1892; English draft Code, sec. 152.

Non-criminal common nuisances endangering merely the property or comfort of the public or obstructing the exercise of a common right]— In order to be a common nuisance the duty must be one to the public generally. Code sec. 221; Toronto Ry. v. The King [1917], A.C. 630, 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 29, 34.

This does not include as an indictable nuisance the continuous overcrowding of street cars operating on city streets under contract with the municipality and which the public could only enter by invitation. Toronto Ry. v. The King, supra; R. v. Toronto Ry, 34 O.L.R. 589, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 183, (C.A.), and R. v. Toronto Ry., 23 O.L.R. 186, 18 Can. Cr. Cas. 417, reversed.

Indictment is in some cases a method for trying a merely civil right, see R. v. Reynolds (1906), 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 312 (N.S.); Pillow v. City of Montreal (1885), Montreal L.R. 1 Q.B. 401. A permanent obstruction erected on a highway and placed there without lawful authority which renders the way less commodious than before to the public, is an unlawful act and a public nuisance at common law. R. v. United Kingdom Electric Telegraph Co. (1862), 31 L.J.M.C. 166; Attorney-General v. Brighton, etc. Supply Association [1900], 1 Ch. 276; R. v. Nimmons (1892), 1 Terr. L.R. 415; Re Jamieson and Lanark County, 38 U.C.Q.B. 647; R. v. Grand Trunk Ry., 17 U.C.Q.B. 165; R. v. Cooper, 40 U.C.Q.B. 294; R. v. Hart, 45 U.C.Q.B. 1; R. v. Portage la Prairie, 2 W.L.E. 141, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 125; R. v. Great North of England Ry., 9 Q.B. 315; R. v. City of London, 32 Ont. R. 326.

The effect of sec. 223 is to leave indictment as a method of procedure for trying the general question whether a common nuisance to the detriment of the property or comfort of the public, or by obstruction of any right, other than one affecting life, safety, or health, which is common to all His Majesty's subjects, has been committed. But it does deprive a conviction on indictment, in these cases, of its criminal character. The method of indictment is at times used in English law as a convenient one for trying a civil right, and sec. 223 appears to give recognition to this use of the method, and to deprive it of any result in criminal consequences. Toronto Ry. v. The King [1917], A.C. 630, 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 29, reversing R. v. Toronto Ry. 34 O.L.R. 589, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 183, 9 O.W.N. 152.

Ontario tariff]—By schedule "A" of the Administration of Justice Expenses Act, R.S.O. 1914, ch. 96, the following provision is made as to Crown Attorney's fees:

[-§ 228]

Note (b)—" In cases of indictment for the obstruction, or the nonrepair of a highway or bridge, or of indictment for nuisance (where there is a bona fide dispute as to boundary, or title, or claim of right, and where no present public inconvenience is being suffered from what is complained of) the Crown Attorney shall not be entitled to charge costs to the public without the special sanction of the Attorney-General, but will collect his fees and costs from the parties only."

Knowingly selling unfit food.

224. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to one year's imprisonment who knowingly and wilfully exposes for sale, or has in his possession with intent to sell, for human food articles which he knows to be unfit for human food.

2. Every one who is convicted of this offence after a previous conviction for the same crime shall be liable to two years' imprisonment.

Origin]-Sec. 194, Code of 1892.

At common law]—The selling of food which is dangerous or unfit for human food with knowledge of the fact is an offence at common law. R. v. Dixon (1814), 3 M. & Sel. 11; 15 R.R. 381; Shillito v. Thompson (1875), 1 Q.B.D. 12. If death ensues from eating such food, the seller knowing that it is dangerous is indictable for manslaughter. R. v. Stevenson (1861), 3 F. & F. 106; R. v. Kempson (1893), 28 L.J. (Eng.) 477.

Common bawdy-house defined.

225. A common bawdy-house is a house, room, set of rooms or place of any kind kept for purposes of prostitution, or for the practice of acts of indecency, or occupied or resorted to by one or more persons for such purposes.

Origin]-1917, Can., ch. 14; 6-7 Edw. VII, ch. 8; Sec. 194, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 157; C.S. Can. (1859), ch. 105, sec. 1.

"Kept for purposes of prostitution"]—The keeping.need not be for lucre. The offence consists in the house being a public nuisance. R. v. Fabri (1917), 28 Can. Cr. Cas. 6 (Que.).

Prostitution means promiseuous sexual intercourse. R. v. Cardell, 7 Alta. L.R. 404, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 271.

A woman who continues to have unlawful sexual relations with one man only, or who lives with him as his mistress, is not a prostitute. Bedard v. The King (1916), 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 99 (Que.); R. v. Justice nade as A conviction will be quashed on certiorari if there was no evidence to prove that the place was a bawdy-house; R. v. Cross (1918), 14 O.W.N. 7; or to prove that the accused was the keeper. R. v. Cross, supra; R. v. Weller (1917), 40 O.L.R. 296; R. v. Jackson (1917), 40 O.L.R. 173; R. v. Rehe (1897), 1 Can. Cr. Cas, 63.

"Occupied or resorted to"]—The enactment means that a house occupied by one person who receives men and prostitutes herself as a prostitute, is a hawdy-house; that one person resorting to a house for that purpose, to the knowledge of the owner of the house, constitutes an offence also. It does not alter the law as to isolated acts not constituting prostitution. One or two acts may not be considered an offence under the Act, but where repeated acts are proved, then it is certainly "resorted to" under the meaning of the section. R. v. Mercier, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 475, at 484. 7 W.L.R. 922. The resorting by one person to a house for the purposes of prostitution constitutes that house a bawdyhouse, if the owner of it or the keeper of it is aware of what the resorting is for. It is no answer that it is a case of one woman resorting with one man who is a tenant, if the woman is a prostitute. R. v. Mercier, supra.

An hotel proprietor who, with knowledge of the facts, permits a room in his hotel to be used for purposes of prostitution, may be convicted of keeping a common bawdy-house. R. v. Mereier, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 475, 7 W.L.R. 922 (Y.T.).

Proof of the bad repute of the house]—Evidence of the bad repute of the house will not alone justify a conviction. Some evidence of acts in support of the bad repute must be given: see Regina v. McNamara, 20 O.R. 489; R. v. Mereier, 7 W.L.R. 922, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 475, at 481; or proof that the people who go there are of ill-fame. R. v. Sands (No. 2), 25 Man. R. 690, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 120; R. v. Emery [1917], 1 W.W.R. 337; R. v. James, 9 W.W.R. 235; 9 Alta. L.R. 66; R. v. Cardell, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 271; R. v. Demetrio, 20 Can. Cr Cas. 306; R. v. Cardell, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 271; R. v. Demetrio, 20 Can. Cr Cas. 306; R. v. Cardell, 9 W.L.R. 119; R. v. St. Clair, 27 A.R. (Ont.), 308, 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 551; and see cases under the prior Code, R. v. Mannix, 10 O.L.R. 303, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 150; R. v. Osberg, 15 Man. R. 147, 1 W.L.R. 121, 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 180; .E. v. Shepherd, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 463; R. v. Young, 14 Man. R. 58, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 42.

The use of a place on a single and isolated occasion for the purpose of illicit intercourse between one man and one woman would not constitute the place a common bawdy-house as defined by sec. 225. R. v. Cardell, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 271, 7 Alta. L.R. 404; R. v. Newton, 11 P.R. (Ont.) 101.

If there is sufficient evidence of illicit intercourse to the knowledge of the proprietress or from which her knowledge can properly be inferred, it is unnecessary to have any evidence of reputation, while the latter alone would be useless, and in fact, dangerous, as apt to cloud the judgment. R. v. Carroll, 9 W.L.R. 119 (B.C.).

Without any evidence of the general reputation of the house, a conviction may be supported on proof of the one act of sexual intercourse, although invited by police "spotters," and the defendant's admission that she had been carrying on the business of a bawdy-house for only a few days. R. v. Marceau (1915), 7 W.W.R. 1174, 30 W.L.R. 418.

The reputation of the keeper of an alleged bawdy-house as being a prostitute is not proof that the house is "kept for purposes of prostitution" or that she occupies it for such purposes. R. v. Sands (1915), 9 W.W.R. 496, 25 Man. R. 690, 32 W.L.R. 775.

Even proof that she had made a future appointment for illicit intercourse at the house with a detective who solicited her for the purpose of getting evidence, will not be enough when the act of prostitution did not take place, and the detective had no intention of keeping the appointment. R. v. Sands, supra. His call under such circums stances to get evidence against the woman cannot be said to be a "resort" by him to that house for the purposes of prostitution. Ibid.

In Roscoe's Criminal Evidence, 11th ed., 86, it is laid down in reference to the offence of keeping a bawdy-house or house of ill-fame that "it is a cumulative offence. It is not necessary to prove who frequents the house, which in many cases it might be impossible to do, but if unknown persons are proved to have been there, conducting themselves in a disorderly manner, it will maintain the indictment." Evidence of the general reputation of the house, while perhaps not alone sufficient to convict, is held to be admissible, and in the case of The Queen v. St. Clair, 27 A.R. (Ont.) 308, 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 551, Osler, J.A., who delivered the judgment of the Ontario Court of Appeal, said:---" Such reputation is not acquired without acts or conduct capable of proof from which the character of the house may be inferred, such as the character of the women as being common prostitutes, and the facts of men visiting the house at all hours, and dissolute and disorderly behaviour there."

The charge may be general, yet at the trial evidence of particular acts and the particular time of doing them may be given. R. v. Johnson, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 136. Solicitation by the accused may be enough. R. v. Emery, [1917] 1 W.W.R. 337, 10 Alta. L.R. 139.

In R. v. Jackson (1914), 5 W.W.R. 1286, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 215, 27 W.L.R. 31, Walsh, J., said: "I understand that it is the general reputation of a place which may help to attribute to it the character of a bawdy-house. I am quite unable to bring my mind to the conclusion that complaints made by two persons, who, for this purpose, may be treated as but one, can create a general reputation for the place complained of. I do not wish to be understood as holding that no amount of complaining can avail to affect or fix the general reputation of a place, for I can quite well understand that such complaints may be so general and so widespread as to thereby definitely fix its reputation. That, however, is not this case. It seems to me to be a most dangerous thing to say, that, because some undisclosed person tells the police that such and such a thing has happened in a certain place that that place has thereby acquired a general reputation appropriate to the character of the story thus told of it; for a vindictive or unserupulous person might very easily in this way give a most undeservedly bad reputation to the premises of another with whom he or she happened to be on unfriendly terms."

"Common bawdy-house"]—It is the keeping of a "common" bawdyhouse that is an offence under sees. 225 and 228, and it is not enough to charge merely the keeping of a bawdy-house. R. v. Jousseau, 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 417 (Que.).

The offence of keeping a bawdy-house is a continuing offence, and an information or conviction does not disclose more than one offence (Code sec. 710) where the offence is charged as having occurred on several separate days. R. v. Burnby [1901], 2 K.B. 459, 70 L.J.K.B. 739, 20 Cox C.C. 25; R. v. Keeping, 34 N.S.R. 442; R. v. Johnson, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 136 (Y.T.).

Several persons may be convicted of the one offence of keeping a common bawdy-house, and that either jointly or severally. R. v. Bloom, 5 W.W.B. 897, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 205; and on a joint information, separate convictions may be made. Ibid.

House of ill-fame]—A conviction on summary trial for keeping a "house of ill-fame" will not be quashed because of the different phraseology to that of the Code, but will be amended under Code see. 1124, to conform with sees. 225 and 228, if the evidence warrants it. R. v. Darroch (1916), 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 402. Keeping a house of illfame was an indictable offence at common law, and the change of Inguage is one of form only and not of substance. R. v. Darroch, supra; R. v. McNamara (1891), 20 Ont. R. 489; see Code sec. 744.

Common gaming-house defined.—Effect of part of game only being played there or stake elsewhere.

- 226. A common gaming-house is,-
 - (a) a house, room or place kept by any person for gain, to which persons resort for the purpose of playing at any game of chance, or at any mixed game of chance and skill; or,
 - (b) a house, room or place kept or used for playing therein at any game of chance, or any mixed game of chance and skill in which
 - (i) a bank is kept by one or more of the players exclusively of the others; or,
 - (ia) the whole or any portion of the stakes or bets or other proceeds at or from such games is either directly or indirectly paid to the person keeping such house, room or place, or,
 - (ii) any game is played the chances of which are not alike favourable to all the players, including among the players the banker or other person by whom the game is managed, or against whom the game is managed, or against whom the other players stake, play or bet.

2. Any such house, room or place shall be a common gaminghouse, although part only of such game is played there and any other part thereof is played at some other place, either in Canada or elsewhere, and although the stake played for, or any money, valuables, or property depending on such game, is in some other place, either in Canada or elsewhere.

Origin]—Can. Stat. 1918, ch. 16, sec. 2; Sec. 196, Code of 1892; 58-59 Vict., ch. 40; 6-10 Edw. VII, ch. 10; Gaming Houses Act, 1854 Imp. "Kept for gain"]—The importance of the cases dealing with the question of "gain" has been minimized by the amendment of 1918 adding paragraph (ia) to sub-sec. (b). The effect seems to be that no matter how small the share of the stakes or other proceeds which the keeper receives either directly or indirectly, such receiving brings the place within the definition of sec. 226, and the keeper within the penalties of sec. 228. If any rake-off goes to the house or proprietor it would seem to make no difference under the 1918 amendment that in spite of that advantage the proprietor was actually a loser by the play. Furthermore the advantage to the proprietor may be either "at" or "from" the game under clause (ia) and the words "other proceeds" are probably intended to cover any fixed assessment or contribution collected by the proprietor quite apart from the chances of the game or the keeping of any "bank."

In order to constitute a keeping "for gain," the keeper or ostensible keeper of the house had in some way to gain by the gambling or by permitting the gambling to be carried on, and unless he did so he was not liable under sub-sec. (a). R. v. Charlie Yee [1917], 1 W.W.R. 1307; R. v. Mah Kee (1905), 6 Terr. L.R. 121, 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 47, 1 W.L.R. 37; and see R. v. Saunders, 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 495; R. v. James (1903), 6 O.L.R. 35, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 196; R. v. Russell, 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 189; R. v. Cashen, 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 183; Robinson v. McNeill, 4 E.L.R. 134 (N.S.).

Playing games to determine who shall pay for drinks, food, or cigars, etc., for the use of the players, is gaming. R. v. Bloomfield (1916), 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 45 (Que.); Rex. v. James, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 196, 6 O.L.R. 35; An hotelkeeper has been held to be a keeper "for gain" because he permitted gaming by others so as to advance his sales of drinks; R. v. Sala, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 198 (Y.T.); so a cigar store proprietor is liable if he obtains "gains" directly or indirectly by advancing his sales. R. v. James (1903), 6 O.L.R. 35, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 196; and see R. v. Bertrand, (1918) 52 N.S.R. 127.

When club-premises within the definition]—Before the introduction of clause (io) in 1918, it was held that if in playing a game of poker in a bona fide club by members coming there as of right and not by invitation, express or implied, the players might institute a voluntary rake-off as a method of paying for their refreshments supplied by the club steward and still the place not be one kept "for gain" by the club. R. v. Riley [1917], 1 W.W.R. 325, 23 B.C.R. 192, 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 402, distinguishing R. v. James (1903), 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 196, and R v. Brady (1896), 10 Que. S.C. 539. But if persons who were not members were allowed to participate and a rake-off was taken from their winnings for the purposes of the club in the playing of a mixed game of chance and skill, the club became a common gaming house. R. v. Ham (1918), 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 431 (B.C.).

It has, indeed, been said that members of a bona fide club are not to be considered persons who "resorted" to the club, in construing a penal statute in which "resorting" to a place is an element of the offence. R. v. Riley [1917], 1 W.W.R. 325, 327, 23 B.C.R. 192, 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 402, per Macdonald, C.J.A., applying Downes v. Johnson [1895], 2 Q.B. 203, 64 L.J.M.C. 238. Paragraph (a) of sec. 226 (a) is "aimed at the keeping of a house for gain to which persons come by invitation, express or implied; the members of a bona fide club come as of right." Per Macdonald, C.J.A., in R. v. Riley, supra.

In the case of an incorporated club, the steward of the club would ordinarily appear to be a person having the management or assisting in the management of the club premises so as to be amenable under Code sec. 228, sub-sec. 2, in the event of the club premises being conducted as a gaming house; R. v. Merker and Daniels, 37 O.L.R. 582, 10 O.W.N. 452; but there is not necessarily a keeping "for gain under Code sec. 226 (a) because of the club being paid for refreshments supplied to members playing poker, out of a voluntary "rake-off" set apart during the playing. R. v. Riley [1917], 1 W.W.R. 325, 23 B.C.R. 192, 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 402. It would make no difference whether the rake-off from the winnings of outsiders was applied to the expenses of the club or given as dividends to the club members. R. v. Ham (1918), 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 431 (B.C.), distinguishing R. v. Riley, supra; and see R. v. Brady, 10 Que. S.C. 539.

Under the new clause (ia) if any part of the stakes or bets or other proceeds at or from a game of chance or a mixed game of chance and skill is either "directly or indirectly" paid to the person keeping the place, such constitutes it a common gaming house. The term "person" includes a society or a body corporate, company, etc. Code sec. 2, subsec. (13).

Place to which persons "resort" for the purpose of playing, etc.]— As to clubs, see R. v. Riley, supra. Apart from the circumstances set out in clause (b), the mere resorting of persons to a store or other place of which the accused was the proprietor for the purpose of playing games of chance or mixed games of chance and skill will not make the place a common gaming house within the Code definition, unless the accused got some gain out of it. R. v. Charlie Lee [1917], 1 W.W.R. 1307; R. v. Ah Pow (1880), 1 B.C.R., pt. 1, pp. 147, 152; Reg. v. Saunders, 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 495; R. v. Jung Lee, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 64; R. v. See Woo, 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 213. This might be shown where others got a rake-off out of the game by giving proof that the proprietor in some way participated in this profit. Ibid.

That a house is "common" does not necessarily mean that it is open to everyone; it may be of limited access. R. v. Ah Pow (1880), 1 B.C.R., pt. 1, p. 147; R. v. Laird (1894), 3 Rev. de Jurisprudence (Que.) 389.

A magistrate might reasonably decide that a room was a common gaming house if it is commonly used or adopted for gaming, frequented by many people promiseuously, especially if by many various persons, by a fortuitous concourse, or without the necessity of any direct or personal invitation from the occupier or other person legally entitled to the sole enjoyment of the room or place, and if thereby a general opportunity of gaming though without any fixed intention or invitation to do so. Per Begbie, C.J., in R. v. Ah Pow (1880), 1 B.C.R., pt. 1, p. 152. Such an establishment will be a common gaming house though a large part of the general public are excluded by keys or watch-words, or in any other manner. Ibid. Game of chance or mixed game of chance and skill]—A game of chance is one in which hazard entirely predominates; and a mixed game of chance and skill is one in which the element of hazard prevails notwithstanding the skill of the gamesters. R. v. Fortier, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 423, 13 Que. K.B. 308; R. v. Jamieson, 7 Ont. R. 153. Euchre is a game of chance, and though experience and judgment may make one player more successful than another, it would be a perversion of words to say it was in any sense a game of mere skill. R. v. Laird, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 318, 319, 6 O.L.R. 180.

The game of fan-tan is a game of chance or of mixed chance and skill. R. v. Hung Gee (1913), 4 W.W.R. 1128, 6 Alta. L.R. 167, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 409; R. v. Ham (1918), 29 Can. Cr. Cas 431 (B.C.).

The game of "black jack" is a game of chance. R. v. Petrie, 7 B.C.R. 176; but see criticism of the decision on other points in R. v. Hung Gee (1913), 4 W.W.R. 1128, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 404 (Alta.).

The playing of the game of draw poker in a place not kept for the purpose is not prohibited, if there is no "rake-off". Rose v. Collison, 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 359 (Alta.); R. v. Brady (1896), 10 Que. S.C. 539.

Game of chance, etc., in which a "bank" is kept]-" Bank," as a gaming term, means the sum of money or the checks which the dealer or banker has as a fund from which to draw the stakes and pay his losses; the pile of money which the player who plays against all the others, has before him. R. v. Hing Hoy [1917], 2 W.W.R. 958, at 961, 11 Alta. L.R. 518, 28 Can. Cr. Cas. 229. In forming a conclusion as to whether a "bank" is kept by one exclusively of the others, or whether the "game" being played does not give chances "alike favourable to all the players," much will depend on what is meant by the term "game." Evidence giving a description of the game being played should be adduced to satisfy the court on this point and also to determine whether the game was, on the one hand, a game of chance, or a mixed game of chance and skill, and so within Code sec. 226 (b), or on the other hand, a game of skill only, and so not covered by the Code provision. It is not to be inferred from Code sec. 226 that judges should take judicial notice of the way in which so-called gambling games are played nor can the dictionaries be relied upon for information in regard to a foreign game such as "fan-tan." R. v. Hing Hoy [1917], 2 W.W.R. 958, 962, 11 Alta. L.R. 518. With a narrow application of the word "game" as meaning a single round or card deal, it might be said that the "bank" was kept by one of the players exclusively for that deal or game, but the word will more likely receive in this connection the wider interpretation of the series of rounds or other successive parts of the playing at one session. The wider interpretation seems to be indicated by the context in which the words " bank " and " banker " are used in Code sec. 226. In view of the various games in which there is no exclusive banker throughout the entire playing, such as there is in certain games of hazard in which all play against the proprietor of the gaming table or gaming device, it would seem that the words "exclusively of the others" were inserted in Code sec. 226 (b) to protect players of games in which all start on an equal footing, but in which one is chosen by chance to act as a banker and is displaced by another according to the chances of the game, all with an equal chance to secure the position of banker and any incidental preference which may fall to the banker for the time being. If the banker becomes banker in rotation among the players or by some method of chance at certain stages of the game or, in other words, has an equal chance of becoming banker from time to time; that is, if the method of the game is not that one or more becomes exclusively the banker. then the chances of the game are equal or alike favourable to all the players in the only sense in which it was intended they should be or could be. The constituting of a banker is one of the chances of the game. On one becoming the banker it may be assumed he has acquired an advantage. On the cards being dealt the chances of the players are at once rendered unequal according to the character of the hands dealt. R. v. Hung Gee, 4 W.W.R. 1128, 1130, per Beck, J.

Judicial opinions are at variance on the point. It has been held in Alberta that the provisions of sec. 226 (b) are not directed against a game in which though a bank is kept, the chances of being banker are equal to all the players. R. v. Hung Gee (No. 1), 4 W.W.R. 1128, 6 Alta, L.R. 167, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 409; R. v. Hing Hoy [1917], 2 W.W.R. 958, 964, per Beck, J. But the contrary view is taken in British Columbia. R. v. Petrie (1900), 7 B.C.R. 176, 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 439; and in Alberta was approved by Harvey, C.J., in his dissenting opinion in R. v. Hing Hoy [1917], 2 W.W.R. 958, 962.

Statutory presumptions from finding gaming appliances]-Before the Code amendment of 1918 to secs. 985 and 986, those sections created a statutory presumption from the finding of gaming instruments or contrivances for unlawful gaming, and it was important to ascertain for the purposes of those sections whether the particular game was or was not "unlawful."

The amendment makes sees. 985 and 986 correspond with sec. 226, by eliminating the words "unlawful," and making those sections apply on the finding of instruments of gaming used in playing any game of chance or any mixed game of chance and skill.

Automatic vending machines]-It was held in Fielding v. Turner [1903], 1 K.B. 867, 72 L.J.K.B. 542, that the operation of an automatic machine, in which no person but the player and the machine takes part, may constitute playing an unlawful game. In such a case the keeper, or owner of the machine, backs his chances against the person who uses it. And see Thompson v. Mason, 68 J.P. 270.

or of chance is a question of fact: Thompson v. Mason, 20 T.L.R. 298. In one case playing a machine was held to be a game of skill, and, therefore, lawful; Pessers v. Catt, 29 T.L.R. 381 (1913); whereas in two other cases playing an identical machine was held to be unlawful— Donaghy v. Walsh, L.R. [1914], 2 Ir. 261; Ogilvie v. Benigno (1906), 7 F. 82; Thompson v. Mason, 20 Cox C.C. 641.

So the operation of a "Mills O.K. Counter Gum Vendor" was held not to constitute gaming in R. v. Langlois, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 43 (Que.); R. v. Stubbs (1915), 8 W.W.R. 902, 31 W.L.R. 567, 9 Alta. L.R. 26, 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 303, reversing 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 60 (Alta.), and to constitute gaming in R. v. O'Meara, 34 O.L.R. 467, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 16 (Ont.); Barcham v. The King (1916), 25 Que. K.B. 354, 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 211, and R. v. Gerasse, 10 W.W.R. 1304, 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 246 (Man.). The Court of Appeal for British Columbia was divided on the question. R. v. Smith [1917], 1 W.W.R. 553, 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 398.

If a slot machine is in fact a gaming device, the licensing of it under a provincial law dealing with slot machines generally as automatic vending machines, will not remove the liability under the Code for its operation as a gaming contrivance. R. v. Bernier (1916), 22 R.L.N.S. 258.

Provincial gaming laws]—There may be special provisions dealing with gaming as a criminal offence, which were contained in pre-Confederation laws of some of the provinces and which are not inconsistent with the Code provisions, and are therefore not repealed by them. These provisions, in so far as they deal with criminal law, can only be repealed or varied by federal legislation. So in Ontario the unrepealed Lord's Day Act, C.S.U.C., ch. 104, sec. 3, makes it a criminal offence in that province to be engaged in playing cards for money even in a private place on a Sunday. R. v. Quick, 17 O.W.R. 250.

Some pre-Confederation statutes conferring powers of search on municipal authorities or enabling the latter to pass by-laws or ordinances to that end, may still be operative in some of the provinces; but in Saskatchewan, a province created since Confederation, it has been held that, having regard to the provisions of sec. 641 of the Code a police officer is not justified in forcibly entering a gaming house, without warrant or permission from proper authority, notwithstanding the provisions of a municipal by-law authorizing him so to do. Win Gat v. Johnson, 1 Sask. L.R. 81 (affirmed on this point on varying the judgment, Win Gat v. Johnson, 1 Sask. L.R. 476.).

A municipal by-law in Quebec which merely repeats or consolidates the prior existing by-laws operative since Confederation and is not inconsistent with any federal or provincial statute, may be effective, although dealing with Sunday observance. Bischinsky v. Montreal (1915), 16 Que. P.R. 343.

In any case it is not now competent for a province to enact new legislation which would conflict with the general criminal law. R. v. Shaw, 7 Man. R. 518; R. v. Spegelman (1904), 9 O.L.R. 75.

Compare Upton v. Brown (1912), 3 W.W.R. 626 to same effect as to disorderly houses generally.

227. A common betting-house is a house, office, room or place,-

(a) opened, kept or used for the purpose of betting between persons resorting thereto, and

(i) the owner, occupier or keeper thereof,

(ii) any person using the same,

- (iii) any person procured or employed by, or acting for or on behalf of any such person,
- (iv) any person having the care or management, or in any manner conducting the business thereof; or,
 - (b) opened, kept or used for the purpose of any money or valuable thing being received by or on behalf of any such person as aforesaid, as or for the consideration
- (i) for any assurance or undertaking, expressed or implied, to pay or give thereafter any money or valuable thing on any event or contingency, of, or relating to any horse-race, or other race, fight, game or sport; or,
- (ii) for securing the paying or giving by some other person of any money or valuable thing on any such event or contingency; or,

(c) opened, kept or used for the purpose of recording or registering bets upon any contingency or event, horserace, or other race, fight game or sport, or for the purpose of receiving money or other things of value to be transmitted for the purpose of being wagered upon any such contingency or event, horse-race or other race, fight, game or sport, whether any such bet is recorded or registered there, or any money or other thing of value is there received to be so transmitted or not; or.

(d) opened, kept or used for the purpose of facilitating or encouraging or assisting in the making of bets upon any contingency or event, horse-race or other race, fight, game or sport, by announcing the betting upon, or announcing or displaying the results of horseraces, or other races, fights, games or sports, or in any other manner, whether such contingency or event, horse-race or other race, fight, game or sport occurs or takes place in Canada or elsewhere.

2. The word 'place' as used in this section and in the preceding section, includes any place, whether inclosed or not, and whether it is used permanently or temporarily, and whether there is or is not exclusive right of user.

Origin]-Sec. 197, Code of 1892.

Persons assisting in management deemed keepers]-Code sec. 228 (2). Aiding and abetting the offence]-See Code sec. 69. As to the sale or lease by the club controlling a race meet of the betting privileges where the bookmaking to be carried on would be illegal; see R. v. Hendrie, 11 O.L.R. 202, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 298.

"Place"]—The declaration of sub-sec. (2) in regard to the interpretation of the word place, in the phrase "house, office, room or place," makes inapplicable a number of the decisions on its interpretation under the law prior to the Code amendment of 1910. Amongst these were R. v. Moylett (1907), 15 O.L.R. 348, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 279, 10 O.W.R. 803; Saunders v. The King, 38 S.C.R. 382, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 174; and see Powell v. 227A. An opium joint is a house, room or place to which persons resort for the purpose of smoking or inhaling opium.

Raid of opium joints]-Code secs. 642 and 642A.

Being found in]-Code sec. 229.

Offence of keeping]-Code sec. 228.

"House, room or place"]—The word "place" as used in sec. 227A has not the benefit of any extension which may have been given to it by sub-sec. (2) of sec. 227, which was added to the Code in 1910. Sec. 227A had been passed in the previous year, but this fact was probably overlooked in the drafting of the 1910 amendment. The consequence would appear to be that the word "place" as regards opium joints is to be construed as ejusdem generis with the specific words "house" and "room" which precede it in conformity with the doctrine laid down in Powell v. Kempton Park [1899], A.C. 143, and Brown v. Patch [1899], 1 Q.B. 892.

Disorderly house.-Who deemed keeper.

228. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to one year's imprisonment who keeps any disorderly house, that is to say, any common bawdy-house, common gaming-house, common betting-house or opium joint, as hereinbefore defined.

2. Any one who appears, acts or behaves as master or mistress, or as the person having the care, government or management of any disorderly house, or as assisting in such care, government or management, shall be deemed to be the keeper thereof and shall be liable to be prosecuted and punished as such although in fact he or she is not the real owner or keeper thereof.

Origin]—Sec. 198, Code of 1892; Can. Stat. 1909, ch. 9, sec. 2; Can. Stat. 1913, ch. 13, sec. 10; Disorderly Houses Act, 1751, Imp. 25 Geo. II, ch. 36.

Keeping a disorderly house]—The word keeping implies a continuous offence; the charge may therefore be laid as from one date to another without charging more than offence. R. v. Keeping, 34 N.S.R. 442.

A husband and wife may be charged jointly with keeping a house of ill-fame. Rex v. Bloom (1913), 5 W.W.R. 897, 7 Alta. L.R. 1, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 205, 26 W.L.R. 459. A conviction may be either joint or several on summary trial for the one offence of keeping, and separate convictions may be made on an information against several persons jointly. Ibid.

Withdrawal of charge]—The magistrate may, on good grounds shown, permit the withdrawal of a charge laid by a private prosecutor. R. v. Rousseau (1915), 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 390 (Que.).

"Common"]—The word "common," in describing a bawdy-house, is an essential ingredient of the offence, which is the keeping of a "common bawdy-house." The omission of the word "common" in the information is a defect of substance which is not cured by plea. R. v. Jousseau (1915), 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 417 (Que.).

Summary trial or indictment]—The offence is triable summarily before a "magistrate" as defined by sec. 771, under Part XVI; Code sec. 773 and 774; and this without the consent of the accused, Code sec. 774; R. v. Honan, 26 O.L.R. 484, 20 Can. Cr. Cas. 10, 6 D.L.R. 276; R. v. Jung Lee, 5 O.W.N. 80, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 63, 25 O.W.R. 63; R. v. James, 9 W.W.R. 235. There is also the alternative procedure of indictment available, although it is not commonly followed for this offence. R. v. Sarah Smith, 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 338 (N.S.); R. v. McKenzie, 2 Man. R. 168; R. v. Bugie (1899), 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 491.

The accused when arraigned for summary trial has no right to demand a jury trial, which he could have only by the bringing of an indictment. R. v. Jung Lee, 5 O.W.N. 80, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 63, 25 O.W.R. 63.

Prior to 1915 there was also available the process of summary conviction if the offence were the keeping of a bawdy-house, but the part of the vagrancy clause (Code see, 238 (j)) making it a vagrancy offence on summary conviction to be the keeper of a bawdy-house was repealed in that year. See under the prior law: R. v. Belmont (1914), 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 89, 18 D.L.R. 53; R. v. Spooner (1900), 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 209.

The jurisdiction of summary trial is exercisable under sees. 773, 774, without the consent of the accused, and the accused is not to be asked to elect. (Code sec. 774.) This latter provision seems to exclude the possibility of bringing the case under sec. 777, because the magistrate has extended jurisdiction under the last-mentioned section exercisable only on election of the accused. See R. v. Davidson [1917] 2 W.W.R. 160 (Alta.); R. v. Davidson [1917] 2 W.W.R. 718 (Alta.); R. v. Hayward, 5 O.L.R. 65; ex parte McDonald, 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 68; R. v. Crawford (1912), 2 W.W.R. 952, 20 Can. Cr. Cas. 49 (Alta.); R. v. Booth (1914), 31 O.L.R. 539, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 224.

Jurisdiction of commissioners of police in Alberta]—A commissioner of police appointed under R.S.C. 1906, ch. 92, has absolute jurisdiction in like manner as a city police magistrate in Alberta, subject to the provincial law governing magistrates. R. v. Bloom (1913), 5 W.W.R. 897; R. v. Alexander, 5 W.W.R. 17, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 473. Such commissioner is, by reason of the express application of the provincial law under the Federal Act, subject to a restriction by provincial statute whereby jurisdiction in any particular case shall exclusively attach in the first instance in the first justices of the peace (or magistrate exercising the powers of justices), having "possession and cognizance of the fact," as by taking an information and dismissing the charge so laid. Alta. Stat. 1906, ch. 13, sec. 9 (a); Alta. Stat. 1907, sec. 7; R. v. Bloom (1913), 5 W.W.R. 897 (Alta.) Compare R. v. Coyne [1917], 3 W.W.R. 267, 28 Can. Cr. Cas. 428; R. v. Coyne [1917], 3 W.W.R. 622, 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 216. [§ 228]

Formalities of conviction]—If the conviction on summary trial before a city magistrate shows a street address as the place of the offence, it will not be quashed because of the omission to add the name of the city to the street address. R. v. Marceau (1915), 7 W.W.R. 1174, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 456, applying R. v. C.P.R., 1 Alta. L.R. 341; and see Sorgius v. Bouchard, 26 Que, K.B. 242, and 55 S.C.R. 324 (quashing appeal); R. v. Nolan, 28 Can. Cr. Cas. 100 (N.S.).

Wrongful arrest as affecting summary trial jurisdiction in disorderly house cases]-Where there is no search order or search warrant (Code secs. 640-643), there should be an information on oath to authorize the issue of a warrant for the offence of keeping, and an arrest by a police officer on suspicion of the offence is not justifiable. Sec. 648 would, however, justify a peace officer in arresting without warrant anyone whom he "finds committing" any criminal offence. See Altman v. Majury (1916), 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 398, 37 O.L.R. 608, 11 O.W.N. 21. And Code sec. 652A authorizes a peace officer to arrest without warrant a person whom he has good cause to suspect of having committed or being about to commit the offence of procuring (Code sec. 216), or of the analogous offences set forth in sec. 216. There are authorities both for and against the proposition that the illegality of the arrest on a charge of keeping a disorderly house goes to the jurisdiction of a magistrate exercising summary trial powers under Part XVI of the Code. The weight of authority in Alberta is in favour of setting aside a conviction because of the illegal arrest. R. v. Young Kee (No. 1), [1917], 2 W.W.R. 442, 28 Can. Cr. Cas. 162; R. v. Baptiste Paul (No. 2), 20 Can. Cr. Cas. 161; R. v. Wilson (alias Wallace) (1915), 9 W.W.R. 47, 32 W.L.R. 264, 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 370; R. v Davis, 32 W.L.R. 837, 20 Can. Cr. Cas. 293; R. v. Miller (1913), 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 151, 25 W.L.R. 297; but see contra, R. v. Hurst (1914), 7 W.W.R. 994, 30 W.L.R. 176, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 389; R. v. Baptiste Paul (No. 1), 20 Can. Cr. Cas. 159 (Alta.); R. v. Pudwell (1916), 10 W.W.R. 205, 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 47 (Alta.). In R. v. Hurst, supra, the prosecution was for vagrancy offence punishable under Part XV.

Aiding or counselling an offence to procure evidence]—Men representing a so-called "morality department" of the police who engage in the disreputable practice of procuring evidence by enticing a woman to agree to their nefarious proposals and make appointments accordingly for the purpose of proving her guilty of keeeping a common bawdyhouse, can have their testimony given no higher respect than that of ordinary accomplices. R. v. Sands, 9 W.W.R. 129, 130, 25 Man. R. 690, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 116, per Galt, J. The detectives, by so doing, place themselves under the risk of prosecution as aiders and abetters under Code see. 69. See also Code sec. 873, under wihch the judge of a criminal court may give leave to prefer a bill of indictment to a private prosecutor without any preliminary committal, but after an indictment found, a nollc prosequi might be entered by the Attorney-General. Code sec. 962; R. v. Edwards, 17 Man. R. 288, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 202.

It seems clear that the statutory presumption under see. 985 arises only where a search order has been made or a search warrant issued; R. v. Jung Lee, supra; but see. 986 has been applied where there was no search order or warrant. R. v. O'Meara, supra.

Use of premises as disorderly house.-Liability of landlord.

228A. Any one who, as landlord, lessor, tenant, occupier, agent or otherwise, has charge or control of any premises and knowingly permits such premises or any part thereof to be let or used for the purposes of a disorderly house shall be liable upon summary conviction to a fine of two hundred dollars and costs, or to imprisonment not exceeding two months, or to both fine and imprisonment.

2. If the landlord, lessor or agent of premises in respect of which any person has been convicted as the keeper of a common bawdy-house fails, after such conviction has been brought to his notice, to exercise any right he may have to determine the tenancy or right of occupation of the person so convicted, and subsequently any such offence is again committed on the said premises, such landlord, lessor or agent shall be deemed to be a keeper of a common bawdy-house unless he proves that he has taken all reasonable steps to prevent the recurrence of the offence.

Person found in disorderly house.

229. Every one who, without lawful excuse, is found in any disorderly house shall be liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding one hundred dollars and costs and in default of payment to two months' imprisonment.

Origin]—Can. Stat. 1913, ch. 13, sec. 12; Sec. 199, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 158, sec. 6.

Person found in disorderly house]—Sec. 641, as amended 1913, provides for an "order for search" being granted on the written report of a constable or other peace officer. This process applies, inter alia, to the offence of keeping or using "a disorderly house as defined by sec. 228." On making the search of the suspected premises the police may take into custody "all persons who are found therein." Sec. 641. Any person "found in" may be compelled to answer under oath under sec. 642, if the charge relates to unlawful gaming and on making full disclosure, may be granted immunity in respect of such gaming. The same provision applies to the examination of persons found in opium joints. Sec. 642A.

Statutory presumptions]—Sec. 986, as amended in 1913, includes sec. 229 as well as sec. 228, in giving effect to a statutory presumption that a place is a disorderly house where the place has contrivances for gaming, or for concealment of the fact, or where there is obstruction of the officer entering. The same presumption applies where there are found contrivances for opium smoking. Sec. 986; R. v. Hung Gee, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 404.

Presence of gaming instruments]—Sec. 985 of the Code makes provision that the presence of gaming instruments, such as eards, dice, balls, counters, etc., found in a house suspected of being used as a common gaming-house and entered under a warrant, shall be prima faoic evidence on the trial of a prosecution under sec. 229 that such house was a common gaming-house, and that the persons found in the room or place where such instruments of gaming are found were playing therein, although no playing was going on in the presence of the officer entering the house under such warrant or order. 2. It is not an offence under this section if the broker of the purchaser receives delivery, on his behalf, of the article sold, notwithstanding that such broker retains or pledges the same as security for the advance of the purchase money or any part thereof.

Origin]—Sec. 201, Code of 1892; 51 Vict., Can., ch. 42, secs. 1 and 3. "Bucket shops"]—The preamble to the original Act of 1888 shows that Parliament had in view the suppression of "bucket shops." A "bucket shop" has been held to be a place where bets are made as to the rise or fall of commodities under the guise of fictitious sales and purchases. See Pearson v. Carpenter, 35 Can. S.C.R. 380, at p. 382, Beamish v. Richardson (1914), 6 W.W.R. 1258, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 394, 49 Can. S.C.R. 595, reversing Richardson v. Beamish, 23 Man. R. 306, 4 W.W.R. 815; Forget v. It does not apply where delivery of the grain, or of the shares, as the case may be, is intended to be made. Smith Grain Co. v. Pound, [1917] 3 W.W.R. 516, 10 Sask. L.R. 368; Maloof v. Bickell, 13 O.W.N. 4, 14 O.W.N. 289.

Gaming in Stocks]—The offence mentioned in paragraphs (a) and (b) requires three essential elements; (1) having an intent to make gain or profit; (2) making or signing contracts purporting to be for the sale or purchase of certain commodities; (3) absence of a bona fide intention to make or receive delivery of such commodities. These three elements must co-exist in order to constitute the offence. R. v. Dowd (1899), 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 170, 171, 17 Que. S.C. 67.

An action was maintained in Quebec on a cheque given the broker to cover a "two points" margin which the latter had paid other brokers for an option on shares, it being held that a gaming contract was not established, and stress being laid upon the fact that the broker's only interest was his fixed commission whether the price went up or down. Bernstein v. Shapiro (1916), 26 D.L.R. 406. And an agent must account to his principal for money received on the principal's account although the transaction was illegal. De Laval v. Walworth, 13 B.C.R. 295; Donald v. Edwards, 4 W.L.R. 128.

A contract, in order to be a gaming transaction, must be so in the intention of both the parties to it. The intention of one of them to gamble even though known to the other, does not alter the nature of the contract. Brosseau v. Bergevin, 27 Que. S.C. 510 (C.R.).

An agreement for a loan of money for the purpose of illegal stock gambling is also illegal. Selby v. Clark, 38 Que. S.C. 287.

Finding against the ostensible contract]—If the circumstances justify it an inference may be drawn that notwithstanding the form of the written contract, there was a secret understanding of the kind prohibited by sec. 231. R. v. Harkness (No. 2), 10 O.L.R. 555, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 199, 204 affirming R. v. Harkness (No. 1), 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 193; Universal Stock Exchange v. Money may legally be deposited with a stake-holder to abide the result of a footrace, and no action will lie against the winner of the bet, who has received the money from the stake-holder after the decision of the event. Seely v. Dalton (1904), 36 N.B.R. 442.

Race-track betting]—The exception as to race-track betting on association tracks, and the sale of bookmaking privileges for same, was suspended by Order-in-Council of June 7, 1917, operative Aug. 1, 1917, until six months after the conclusion of the great war. The exception by sub-sec. (2) applies also to secs. 227 and 228, and supersedes the decision in Saunders v. The King (1907), 38 S.C.R. 382, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 33 and 174, under the former statute. As to sale of betting privileges under the former law, see Stratford Turf Association v. Fitch (1897), 28 Ont. R. 579.

Conducting a lottery]-If the charge be for conducting a lottery scheme, sub-sec. (1c), and not for publishing a lottery or selling lottery tickets, the prosecution must prove that the accused carried on the alleged lottery and not merely that agents of the accused had been instructed to so represent to the public. R. v. Lumgair (1911), 3 O.W.N. 309, 19 Can. Cr. Cas. 123. The offence of publishing a proposal for the sale of lottery tickets is distinct from that of advertising a lottery. Bottomley v. Director of Public Prosecutions (1915), 84 L.J.K.B. 354.

Selling lottery tickets is an offence whether sold for profit or not. R. v. Parker, 9 Man. R. 203.

An absolutely free and gratuitous distribution of chances by lot, none of which have been paid for, would not be a lottery. R. v. Robinson [1918] 1 W.W.R. 258. The three essential elements of a lottery are, consideration, prize and chance. Ibid.; Bartlett v. Parker [1912] 2 K.B. 497, 81 L.J.M.C. 857, 23 Cox C.C. 16, and Willis v. Young [1907] 1 K.B. 448.

Legislative power]—A provincial legislature cannot authorize a lottery or grant any exemption from the federal law. St. Jean Baptiste Association v. Brault, 30 S.C.R. 598, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 284; Pigeon v. Mainville, 17 Montreal L.N. 68.

Search orders and police raids]-Code sec. 641 and 642.

Real estate lotteries]—Subject to the exception of sub-sec. (6), paragraph (a), it is illegal to dispose of real estate by a lottery. Bedard v. Phoenix Land and Improvement Co., 42 Que. S.C. 1. For definition of "property" see Code sec. 2 (32).

The entire transaction will be looked at where there were purchases and returns of goods along with the payment of a premium by the customer for the privilege of returning and exchanging for other goods with another chance of a prize. R. v. Freeman (1889), 18 Ont. R. 524; followed in R. v. Parker, 9 Man. R. 203.

Finding of lottery equipment]—The finding of lottery tickets under a search order does not bring as a consequence a statutory presumption of guilt under see. 985, as would a finding of gaming instruments on a disorderly house charge. R. v. Hong Guey (1907), 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 366 (B.C.).

Confiscation of lottery paraphernalia]—The legislation by which confiscation of lottery equipment may be ordered (Code sec. 641), has been held to be within the legislative power of the Federal Parliament O'Neil v. Attorney-General of Canada, 26 S.C.R. 122, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 303.

Mode of Chance]—A mode of chance involves the absence of any skill. Stoddart v. Sagar [1895]; R. v. Stoddart, 70 L.J.Q.B. 189. Hall v. Cox [1899] 1 Q.B. 198; 68 L.J.Q.B. 167; Hall v. McWilliam (1901), 20 Cox C.C. 33, 85 L.T. 239, distinguished in R. v. Robinson [1918] 1 W.W.R. 258, 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 153 (Sask.); Barclay v. Pearson [1893] 2 Ch. 154, 62 L.J. Ch. 636.

A sweepstake on a horse-race may be a lottery. Hardwick v. Lane [1904] 1 K.B. 204; Guessing the number of votes which will be cast at a public election is a matter of skill. R. v. Johnston, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 525. Guessing the number of beans or buttons in a jar fully exposed to view is a matter of skill and not of chance. R. v. Dodds (1884), 4 Ont. R. 390; R. v. Jamieson (1884), 7 Ont. R. 149. So is guessing the number of eash sales in a store on a given day; R. v. Fish, 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 201; or the correct weight of an article; Dunham v. St. Croix

A systematic distribution of prizes along with goods sold may be a lottery although not advertised in any way except by the public finding the prizes. Hunt v. Williams, 52 J.P. 821; Barratt v. Burdon (1893), 63 L.J.M.C. 33.

It makes no difference that, instead of the drawing or chance distribution being for a sum certain or for specific articles or property, the winner gets only a privilege of choosing from certain prizes; R. v. Lorrain, 28 Ont. R. 123, 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 144; or is to get a prize of an unknown kind or amount. Taylor v. Smetten, 11 Q.B.D. 207, 57 L.J.M.C. 101.

A drawing by lot under circumstances which would otherwise be a lottery is none the less such because of an added condition that the person drawing the winning number should do some act pretended to be an act of skill, but which was to be done under such easy conditions that it was found not to involve a real contest of skill, but intended merely to evade the law. R. v. Johnson, 14 Man. R. 27, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 48. Prizes given by a newspaper on a selection at the editor's sole discretion in the composition of sentences illustrative of a particular selected word might be considered as dependent on chance if the number of competitors was so large that it could not have been intended to consider the compositions on the merits. Scott v. Director of Public Prosecutions [1914] 2 K.B. 868, 83 L.J.K.B. 1025.

It would seem that the carrying on of certain unlawful games may be prosecuted either as for a lottery or for maintaining a common gaming house under secs. 226 and 228. See Barrett v. Flynn [1916] 2 Irish R. 1.

"Bons Panama" carrying the chance of obtaining prizes are lottery tickets under Canadian law. R. v. Picard, 17 Man. R. 343, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 298.

Coupon Schemes]—The lottery clauses include schemes for giving numbered coupons with purchases of goods and the disposal of the prize to a selected coupon number, although each person receives full value in goods for the money he spends and runs no risk of loss. B. v. Hudson's Bay Co. (1915), 9 W.W.R. 522, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 1 (Alta.); Willis v. Young [1907] 1 K.B. 448, 76 L.J.K.B. 390, applied.

Charge against a corporation]—In the province of Alberta which has no grand jury system, a corporation may be compelled to answer by a formal written charge in lieu of indictment, such charge being laid by the Attorney-General or by his direction or with the consent or order of a judge and notice thereof being served on the corporation under sec. 918 of the Code. R. v. Standard Soap Company, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 290. Secs. 919 and 920 provide for the event of the corporation's default.

CRIMINAL CODE (PART V)

Private prosecutor]—The informant in the preliminary enquiry proceedings has no status, after the indictment and acquittal of the accused, to take an appeal by way of reserved case without the concurrence of the Crown Counsel. R v. Fraser (1914), 30 O.L.R. 598; and see R. v. Gilmore (1903), 6 O.L.R. 286, R. v. Patteson (1875), 36 U.C.Q.B. 129.

Not burying the dead.-Indignity to dead body.

237. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to five years' imprisonment who,—

(a) without lawful excuse, neglects to perform any duty either imposed upon him by law or undertaken by him with reference to the burial of any dead human body or human remains; or,

(b) improperly or indecently interferes with or offers any indignity to any dead human body or human remains, whether buried or not.

Origin]-Sec. 206, Code of 1892.

Stranger undertaking to bury]—The neglect to decently bury a dead human body by a person who has undertaken to do so and has removed the body with that expressed intent is an indictable offence under this section, although such person was, apart from such undertaking, under mo legal obligation in respect of the burial. R. v. Newcomb (1898), 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 255.

Coroner's right]—A coroner has a legal right to direct a disinterment for the purposes of holding an inquest. R. v. Clerk (1702), Holt 167; R. v. Bond (1716), 1 Str. 22; Jervis on Coroners, 6th ed. 37. Any disposition of a corpse to obstruct or prevent a coroner's inquest when one ought to be held is a common law misdemeanour. R. v. Stephenson, 13 Q.B.D. 331; R. v. Price, 12 Q.B.D. 247.

Limited property rights to a corpse]—The proposition found in English law cases that there can be no property in a corpse (Williams v. Williams, 51 L.J. Ch. 385) does not rest upon a sound foundation, and is not sustainable at least as a general proposition. The English decisions rest to a large extent upon ecclesiastical law, which has no application or effect in Alberta. The true rule is, that, inasmuch as there is a legal right of custody, control, and disposition, the law recognizes property in a corpse, but property subject to a trust, and limited in its rights to such exercise as shall be in conformity with the duty out of which the rights arise. The property in a corpse is subject, on the one hand, to the obligations of proper care and decent burial, and the restraints upon its voluntary or involuntary disposal and use provided by law, or arising out of the fact that the thing in question is a corpse; and, on the other hand, the nature and extent of the right or Vagrant defined.

17

238. Every one is a loose, idle or disorderly person or vagrant who,-

- (a) not having any visible means of subsistence, is found wandering abroad or lodging in any barn or outhouse, or in any deserted or unoccupied building, or in any cart or wagon, or in any railway carriage or freight car, or in any railway building, and not giving a good account of himself, or who, not having any visible means of maintaining himself, lives without employment;
- (b) being able to work and thereby or by other means to maintain himself and family, wilfully refuses or neglects to do so;
- (c) openly exposes or exhibits in any street, road, highway or public place, any indecent exhibition;
- (d) without a certificate signed, within six months, by a priest, clergyman or minister of the Gospel, or two justices, residing in the municipality where the alms are being asked, that he or she is a deserving object of charity, wanders about and begs, or goes about from door to door, or places himself or herself in any street, highway, passage or public place to beg or receive alms;
- (e) loiters on any street, road, highway or public place, and obstructs passengers by standing across the footpath, or by using insulting language, or in any other way;

CRIMINAL CODE (PART V)

- (f) causes a disturbance in or near any street, road, highway or public place, by screaming, swearing or singing, or by being drunk, or by impeding or incommoding peaceable passengers;
- (g) by discharging firearms, or by riotous or disorderly conduct in any street or highway, wantonly disturbs the peace and quiet of the inmates of any dwellinghouse near such street or highway;
- (h) tears down or defaces signs, breaks windows, or doors or door plates, or the walls of houses, roads or gardens, or destroys fences;
 - (i) being a common prostitute or night walker, wanders in the fields, public streets or highways, lanes or places of public meeting or gathering of people, and does not give a satisfactory account of herself; or,

[Sub-secs. (j) and (k) were repealed in 1915.]

(1) having no peaceable profession or calling to maintain himself by, for the most part supports himself by gaming or crime, or by the avails of prostitution.

Origin]--Sec. 207, Code 1892; Code Amendment Act, 1900, Can.; Code Amendment Act, 1904, Can.; Vagrancy Act, 1824, Imp., 5 Geo. IV, eh. 83; 1-2 Vict. Imp. ch. 38, sec. 2; 32-33 Vict. Can. ch. 28; R.S.C. 1886, eh. 157, sec. 8; 49 Vict. Can. ch. 157, sec. 8.

Arrest]-Unless the officer making the arrest found the accused committing the particular act relied upon as founding the offence he should arrest only upon a warrant; Sec. 652 does not apply to this offence so as to justify an arrest on suspicion.

Describing the offences in words of statute]—See Code secs. 723 and 1124; Smith v. Moody [1903] 1 K.B. 56; R. v. Jackson (1917), 40 O.L.R. 173, 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 352; Rø Effie Brady (1913), 3 W.W.R. 914, 23 W.L.R. 333, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 123.

The exact language of the statute need not be used in the information or conviction so long as there is sufficient in it to embody the elements of the offence. R. v. Governor of Holloway Prison, 85 L.J.K.B. 689, 80 J.P. 244.

Procedure and punishments]-See sec. 239.

Provincial legislation for similar offences]—Unless the provincial statute dealing with the same state of facts as a matter of merely local concern, conflicts with the provisions of the Code, both may be operative. Ex parte Pelchat (1915), 49 Que. S.C. 195, 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 75; Mercier v. Plamandon, 20 Que. S.C. 288; Leonard v. Pelletier, 24

But it would not be competent for a provincial legislature to enact laws for the punishment of persons for the precise offence already covered by the Code. R. v. Lorette [1918] 3 W.W.R. 324 (Man.); R. v. Shaw, 7 Man. R. 518; R. v. Laughton, 22 Man. R. 520, 22 W.L.R. 199; Ouimet v. Bazin, 46 S.C.R. 502; Attorney-General v. Hamilton Street Ry. [1903] A.C. 524, 72 L.J.P.C. 105, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 326.

"Loose, idle, or disorderly person, or vagrant"]—It is not enough that the information should charge the accused in these words alone. The particular class of vagrancy should be designated by reference to the particular fact which is relied upon as constituting the offence in the particular case. B. v. McCormack (1903), 9 B.C.R. 497, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 135; B. v. Jackson (1917), 40 O.L.R. 173, 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 352.

The first principles of the administration of justice in criminal cases make it plain that the real offence with which a person is charged shall be set out; that there must be certainty as to the offence charged, certainty as to the offence tried, and certainty as to the offence of which the accused person is convicted or acquitted. R. v. Jackson (1917), 40 O.L.R. 173, 186, per Meredith, C.J.C.P.; Code secs. 853, 723, 724, 725. But while a conviction or a commitment in general terms for being a loose person or vagrant, is bad on its face, sec. 1124 enables the court on removal of same by certiorari to consider the defect cured if the accused was given full opportunity of making a defence, and the depositions returned satisfy the court that the offence actually tried was proved. R. v. Jackson, supra.

To charge a person merely with being a loose, idle or disorderly person, does not alone describe an offence "in the words of the Act" under sec. 723. R. v. Jackson, supra, per Meredith, C.J.C.P. The lettered sub-sections or paragraphs define the different conditions, the existence of any one of which would bring the person accused within the penalty of sec. 239. The designation of what constitutes the offence under any one of the sub-sections may possibly be upheld without more, as a sufficient description of the offence under Code sec. 1124, (but see R. v. Harkness, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 54 Que.). It is preferable, however, that the charge should also indicate whether the particular act or default constitutes the person a loose person, an idle person, a disorderly person, or a vagrant. The offence of wandering abroad without any visible means of subsistence (sub-sec. (a) would make the person a "vagrant"; and the same might be said about an offence under sub-sec. (i), as to prostitutes wandering in the streets and not giving a satisfactory account of themselves. R. v. Jackson (1917), 40 O.L.R. 173, 186. On the other hand, the person in default under subsec. (b) for wilful refusal to work for the support of his family, may not in strictness be called a "vagrant," but he is an "idle person" within the penalties of secs. 238 and 239, although he may not be disorderly and may not wander around as a vagrant. The general term "vagrancy" has come to be applied to all of these cognate offences, because of their being dealt with for many years in England under a statute called the Vagrancy Act, and the similar heading of Vagrancy given to sees. 238 and 239 in the Canadian Criminal Code. The offence is in "being" a loose, idle, or disorderly person, or vagrant. R. v. Jackson (1917), 40 O.L.R. 173, 191, per Rose, J., distinguishing R. v. Arscott, 9 Ont. R. 541, and Arscott v. Lillev, 11 Ont. R. 153, 180. The opinion is hazarded that there is but one offence at any one trial under secs. 238 and 239, and that the offence is that the accused at the date of the information or charge was either a loose person, an idle person. a disorderly person or a vagrant, using the appropriate term in its statutory significance: that guilt became affixed because of one or more of the conditions set forth in paragraph (a) to (1) inclusive, and that more than one of these conditions might be conjoined in the charge without contravening sec. 710 (3) as being for more than one offence. Compare R. v. Brouse, 4 O.W.N. 640, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 17; R. v. Irving, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 489; R. v. McKenzie, 2 Man. R. 168.

In this view it would not be permissible after a conviction in respect of one of the lettered paragraphs of sec. 238 to bring another charge in respect of another of them antedating the information or charge in respect of which the prior conviction had been made.

In Saskatchewan it has been held contra, that a summary conviction is multifarious if it charges infractions of both paragraphs (e) and (l). R. v. Code (1908), 1 Sask. L.R. 295, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 372. That case was followed in Quebec by Langelier, J.S.P. in R. v. St. Armand (1915), 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 103.

Amending irregular conviction]—Code secs. 754, 1124; R. v. Code (1908), 1 Sask. L.R. 295, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 372; R. v. Jackson (1917), 40 O.L.R. 173, 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 352; R. v. Kilgore (1917), 13 O.W.N. 287.

Sub-sec. (a)—Found wandering abroad without means of subsistence and not giving a good account of himself]—It is not a sufficient description of the offence to state that the accused was a loose, idle person, found wandering abroad and not giving a good account of himself, thereby being a vagrant; the charge or the conviction, as the case may be, must go further and allege that the accused had no visible means of subsistence. R. v. Kolenczuk (1914), 7 W.W.R. 382, 7 Sask. L.R. 321, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 265 (Sask.).

The English Vagrancy Act of 1898, sec. 1, also contained the phrase

VAGRANCY

The phrase has been changed to "visible means of support" in Code sec. 216 (2), introducing a similar clause in Canada. Can. Stat. 3-4 Geo. V, ch. 13, sec. 9.

To constitute the offence of being "found" lodging in any barn, etc., without means of subsistence, the accused must be discovered upon the premises doing the act or thing which constitutes the offence, but actual apprehension upon the premises is not necessary. Moran v. Jones, 27 Times L.R. 421.

Sub-sec. (a)—Not having any visible means of maintenance, lives without employment]—The words "maintaining himself" seem to be equivalent to "support" (sub-sec. (l)), and to include lawful maintenance by another as well as by the employment or other source of income of the person maintained. An exception as to aged or infirm persons of a certain class is contained in sec. 239.

Referring to the corresponding English legislation, Boyd, C., whose decision was affirmed on appeal, said: "It is inherently evident from this legislation that the man who makes a living by begging or by gambling or by trickery, is not regarded as a person who maintains himself by honest work or other lawful means. Begging is stamped as being a disreputable mode of life and an offence against the good order of society." R. v. Munroe, 25 O.L.R. 223, 19 Can. Cr. Cas. 86.

He added: "Our Code declares a man to be a vagrant who, not having any visible means of maintaining himself, lives without employment. The maintaining himself by means of begging, and the gathering of such gains to the extent of a few dollars, would not seem reasonably sufficient to exonerate him from punishment because with the dollars he might be said to have visible means of maintaining himself for a few days or weeks. He would be still living as a beggar, not having any legal means of subsistence, the same as before he had begun to save. As said by Mr. Justice Osler in R. v. Bassett (1884), 10 P.R. 386 (Ont.) it is the general trend of his life that is to be looked at, the sort of character he is exhibiting. I am persuaded that the true meaning of the section in the Code, 238 (a), that every one is a vagrant 'who . . . not having any visible means of maintaining himself, lives without employment,' is visible lawful means of support. This word 'lawful' is expressed in the criminal laws of Australia relating to idle and disorderly persons or vagrants: Appleby v. Armstrong (1901), 27 Vict. L.R. 136, and Lee Fan v. Dempsey (1907), 5 Commonwealth L.R. 310. I am willing to adopt the language of Wurtele, J., in Regina v. Riley (1898), 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 129, Q.R. 7 Q.B. 198, 200, where it is said: 'The paragraph of the article of the Code relating to vagrancy, which makes it an offence for any one not having visible means of maintaining himself to live without employment, is founded on the ground that persons who live without labour or visible means of support and idle away their time are mischievous and dangerous persons, who must either support themselves by unlawful means or become an undue charge on the public charity, and who are consequently nuisances to society in general. The mere fact of living without employment is not an offence against the law, if the person . . . is able to do so, because he has sufficient means either belonging to himself or which are provided for him in a legitimate way.' See also, Regina v. Organ (1886), 11 P.R. 497, 500. In Rex. v. Collette (1905), 10 Can. Crim. Cas. 286, 10 O.L.R. 718, there was evidence that the defendant had means of earning a livelihood." R. v. Munroe, 19 Can. Cr. Cas. 86 (Ont.), per Boyd, C. A British Columbia decision is to the effect that evidence that money found on the accused had been obtained by gambling was immaterial to a charge under sub-sec (a). R. v. Sheehan, 14 B.C.R. 13, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 119. A conviction under sub-sec. (a) may be made concurrently with a conviction for begging in contravention of a municipal by-law. R. v. Munroe (1911), 25 O.L.R. 223, 19 Can. Cr. Cas. 86. A deaf mute unable to work was, in that case, held to have been properly found to be without visible means of maintenance, although he had upon him $28 gathered by his illegal begging. R. v. Sheehan (1908), 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 119, not followed. It would, of course, be an offence under sub-sec. (1) if it were shown that the person "for the most part supported himself by gaming."

A feeble-minded person of full age is not to be considered as without visible means of support under the Mental Deficiency Act, 1913, Imp., merely because he has no means of his own and is incapable of earning his own living if he is being maintained by his parents although they are not under a legal obligation to maintain him. R. v. Radeliffe [1915] 3 K.B. 418, 84 L.J.K.B. 2196.

The words "visible means of maintaining himself" in Code sec. 238 (a), are held to be interchangeable in their interpretation so as to apply to a female; R. v. Cyr [1917] 3 W.W.R. 849, 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 77 (Alta.), affirming R. v. Cyr [1917] 2 W.W.R. 1185, (Alta.); and it has been held that a woman may be convicted as a vagrant under subsec. (a) if she maintains herself by her own prostitution. R. v. Cyr, supra.

Sub-sec. (b)---"Family"]--Stroud's Judicial Dictionary says:---"The primary legal meaning of family means children, but it may, however, without difficulty, be controlled by the context and is, in itself, a word of most loose and flexible description."

Abbott's Law Dictionary:—"The word is used in many diverse senses. The meaning intended can only be determined by considering the context and also all the extrinsic facts bearing upon the general purpose of the entire writing in which it occurs."

An illegitimate child is not to be included in the term "family," the corresponding English statute from which this enactment is derived, having been held not to extend to illegitimate children. R. v. Maude, 11 L.J.M.C. 120. But see contra, R. v. Barthos (1911), 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 459, Que., per Leet, K.C. (P.M. of Montreal).

Sub-sec. (b)—Refusal to work for maintenance of self and family] —In order to constitute a wilful refusal or neglect on the part of a husband to maintain his family, it is necessary that he should be under a legal obligation to do so, and his failure to maintain his wife, who had left him without valid cause and refused to return, is not an offnee under that section. R. v. Leelair (1898), 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 297; Flannagan v. Overseers (1857), 3 Jurist N.S. 1103; Morris v. Edmonds, 18 Cox C.C. 627; H— v H— (1902), 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 163.

The liability of the father to maintain his children will remain unaffected by a separation order under which his wife was no longer bound to cohabit with him and was awarded the custody of the children. Shaftesbury Union v. Brockway [1913] 1 K.B. 159, 82 L.J.K.B. 222, 23 Cox C.C. 318. And if the father has been ordered in the separation proceedings to make periodical payments for the family's maintenance and has failed to do so, a prosecution will lie for wilful neglect and refusal to maintain when he has means to maintain them. Shaftesbury Union v. Brockway, supra. See also Code see. 242A, making special provision for the offence of non-support of a wife and of the children under sixteen years of age, if they are in destitute or necessitous eircumstances.

Sub-sec. (c)--Indecent exhibition in public place]-For definition of a "public place" see Code sec. 197 (c).

Sub-sec. (d)—Begging]—It must be shown that the wandering about and begging is a mode of life with the accused, and the section does not apply where persons with regular occupations temporarily out of employment through a "strike" go about seeking public contributions in aid of a general fund to sustain the strikers and their families. Pointon v. Hill, 12 Q.B.D. 306.

So it was held not to be an offence against sec. 3 of the Vagraney Act, Imp., 1824, for a trade unionist to place himself in a street and solicit contributions for the funds of the union during a strike, inasmuch as the provision is not directed against persons collecting for an object of a charitable nature. Mathers v. Penfold, [1915] 1 K.B. 514, 84 L.J.K.B. 627.

A person who is found in the street making or assisting to make a bona fide collection for a charitable object is not within either the mischief or the language of the statute. Mathers v. Penfold, supra.

In order to establish that a person has committed an offence within the section it is not necessary to prove that he has before the particular occasion been in the habit of begging, nor that he intends in the future to follow the habit of begging. He may adopt the calling for one day only and may, by his conduct on the particular occasion complained of so behave himself as to afford evidence—either by the nature of his request, the persistence or importunity of his manner, the whining tone adopted, or the deceptive devices employed—upon which a magistrate may be satisfied that the act is not merely an isolated act, but is such an act of begging, within the meaning of the statute, as to prove that he placed himself in a public place, etc., to beg or gather alms. Mathers v. Penfold, supra.

Sub-sec. (e)—Loitering and obstructing passengers]—A licensed cabman who, contrary to a city ordinance, loitered on the street near the entrance of a hotel and solicited passengers to hire his cab was held not within this provision where no obstruction of passengers was shown. Smith v. The Queen, 4 Montreal L.R. 325.

Sub-sec. (f)—Causing disturbance in public place]—It is not sufficient to charge merely that the accused was drunk on a public street without alleging further that he caused a disturbance in such street by being drunk. Ex parte Despatie, 9 Legal News (Montreal), 387; R. v. Daly, 12 Ont. Prac. R. 411. The disturbance incommoding persons passing by is of the essence of the offence. R. v. Mercier (1901), 20 Que. S.C. 28. The sub-section is not intended to apply to persons of good character holding a street meeting which may lawfully be held. R. v. Kneeland, 11 Que. K.B. 85, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 81.

For definition of "public place," see sec. 197 (c). The present definition supersedes the decision in R. v. Mercier (1901), 20 Que. S.C. 28, and declares the law in accordance with R. v. Kearney (1907), 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 349, in which a licensed billiard hall was held to be a "public place."

Sub-sec. (g)—Wantonly disturbing inmates of dwelling-house by disorderly conduct in street]—" Disturbing the inhabitants" of a town was held by Wilson, C.J., to mean annoying them, as by making a noise which interferes with the thoughts or proceedings of others. R. v. Martin (1886), 12 O.R. 800. It is distinguishable from the term "creating a disturbance," which applies either to raising a clamour, commotion, quarreling or fighting, and refers to conduct of the nature of a breach of the peace. Ibid. The disturbance should be of the nature of a nuisance. Thomson v. Mayor of Croydon, 16 Q.B. 708; compare R. v. Geiger (1917), 11 O.W.N. 66.

Sub-sec. (h)-Damaging windows, etc.]-See also sec. 539, 540 and 541, as to the summary conviction offence of wilful damage to property.

Sub-sec. (i)—Being a common prostitute or night-walker, wanders in streets, etc., and does not give a satisfactory account of herself]— A conviction for vagrancy as a "common prostitute or night-walker," wandering the streets, is not void because of the alternative description, if the evidence proves either of them, the defect if any being within the curative provisions of secs. 724 and 1124. Re Effie Brady (1913), 3 W.W.R. 914, 23 W.L.R. 333, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 123; compare Smith v. Moody [1903] 1 K.B. 56. The two expressions are not synonymous. Ibid.

The term "night-walker" has received many interpretations and would apply to any one habitually walking abroad at night to commit wrongful acts. Taken alone it would not be limited to females. The context indicates that in sec. 238 it means a woman who walks up and down the streets by night to pick up men. See Lawrence v. Hedger, 3 Taunt. 15; 2 Stroud's Jud. Dict. 1281; 5 Words and Phrases, 4809.

The public may be excluded from a trial under sub-sec. (i). Code sec. 645.

In R. v. Harris (1908), 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 393, 397 (Y.T.), Craig, J., said in reference to sub-sec. (4): "It limits the rights of this class of people to walk in the streets, inasmuch as any police officer, knowing what their character is, may accost them and demand an explanation which he is not at liberty to demand of any other citizen." Prostitutes have as much right to walk in the streets as any other person, provided they are not so walking for immoral purposes, and to ascertain their purpose, the officer before he puts the person charged on her defence, is to demand of her that she state the purpose for which she is on the street; R. v. Harris, supra; Re Effie Brady (1913), 3 W.W.R. 914, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 123, 23 W.L.R. 333, 10 D.L.R. 424; R. v. Leveeque, 30 U.C.Q.B. 509; R. v. Arscott, 9 Ont. R. 541; unless indeed the woman is caught in the act of soliciting or plying her trade. Arscott v. Lilly, 11 Ont. R. 153; R. v. Harris (1908), 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 392, 396 (Y.T.); R. v. Jackson (1917), 40 O.L.R. 173, 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 352.

It is not, however, pecessary that the formal conviction should state that the accused on being arrested was asked to give an account of herself. That is to be implied if the conviction follows the wording of sub-sec. (i), and states that she did not give a satisfactory account of herself; Ro Effic Brady (1913), 3 W.W.R. 914, 917; or that the circumstances were such that the asking would be a useless formality because of the accused being caught in the act. R. v. Jackson (1917), 40 O.L.R. 173, 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 352. Furthermore, sec. 723 of the Code provides that the description of any offence in words of the Code section creating the offence shall be sufficient in a conviction or commitment. R. v. Jean Campbell (1916), 22 B.C.R. 601, 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 196; R. v. Leconte, 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 41; re Effie Brady (1913), 3 W.W.R. 914. The cases of R. v. Regan (1908), 14 B.C.R. 12, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 106, and R. v. Pepper, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 314, are distinguishable on that point.

But a conviction for the offence cannot follow on a plea of guilty to an information which omitted all reference : A giving of an account. R. v. Pepper, 16 Man. R. 209, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 314.

The offence of being a night-walker is necessarily an individual offence and two or more persons should not be joined in the one charge. R. v. Lachance (1915), 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 421, Que. The objection of misjoinder is not a mere irregularity and is not waived by plea. R. v. Lachance, supra; R. v. Clarke, 20 Ont. B. 642; R. v. Berry, 3 Cox C.C. 127.

Sub-sec. (j)-Repealed 1915.

Sub-sec. (k)-Repealed 1915.

Sub-sec. (1)—Supporting himself by gaming]—The mere taking of personal bets with individuals on horse-races is not "gaming." R. v. Ellis, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 379, 20 O.L.R. 218.

In R. v. Davidson, 8 Man. R. 325, defendant had been convicted under the legislation as it then stood, R.S.C. ch. 157, sec. 8, of an offence similer to that declared by Code sec. 238. An application for a writ of habeas corpus was heard by Killam, J.

The circumstances relied on to support the conviction were those now appearing in sub-sec. (1), and, of these means of support, it is to 'gaming' only that there was any pretence that the evidence pointed. For this purpose said Killam, J., "it was necessary that there should be evidence of four distinct propositions: (1) that the accused had no peaceable profession or calling to support himself by; (2) that he practised gaming: (3) that from this practice he derived some substantial profit; (4) that these profits constituted the larger portion of his means of support. This evidence might be direct or circumstantial. The evidence might be of the very circumstances to be proved, or such as to raise merely presumptions of the existence of these circumstances. Evidence of some character to support each of these propositions was necessary: but, if there was any reasonable evidence of any of these characters in support of each, the conviction and sentence cannot be interfered with in a proceeding such as this." This was followed and approved by Robson, J., in R. v. Kolotyla, 19 Can. Cr. Cas. 25, 21 Man. L.R. 197.

Sub-sec. (1)—Supporting himself by crime]—There must be proof that the accused supported himself by crime; the inference does not arise from his consorting with thieves and his not having any peaceable profession or calling. R. v. Organ, 11 P.R. (Ont.)., 497.

Sub-sec. (1)-Supported by avails of prostitution]-A similar provision in the English Vagrancy Act, 1898, is restricted to male persons living on women's earnings of prostitution.

In Ontario it has been held that clause (1) is not aimed at the prostitute. R. v. Weller (1917), 40 O.L.R. 296, 13 O.W.N. 19; but see contra, Bedard v. The King (1916), 22 Rev. Leg. Que. 302, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 99; R. v. Rehe (1897), 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 63 Que., in which there are dicta in support of the view that a prosecution might be brought under sub-sec. (1) against a prostitute for maintaining herself by the avails of her prostitution. Compare R. v. Knowles (1913), 4 W.W.R. 1341, 25 W.L.R. 294, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 321 (Alta.), decided under the repealed clause (k),

A woman is not necessarily the accomplice of a man convicted of living on her immoral earnings. R. v. King (1914), 10 Cr. App. B. 117.

Under the English Act, a charge against a man of living on the earnings of prostitution is not invalid because charged as of one day only; nor will the prosecution be debarred thereby from giving evidence as to his relations with the woman both before and after the day named, for the purpose of determining whether he was or was not living on the earnings of her prostitution on that particular day. R. v. Hill (1914), 10 Cr. App. R. 56.

The amendment to sec. 216, made in 1913, made it an indictable offence for a male person to live wholly or in part on the earnings of prostitution. An added sub-sec. (2) to Code sec. 216, further provides that where a male person is proved to live with or to be habitually in the company of a prostitute or prostitutes, and has no visible means of support, or to live in a house of prostitution, he shall, unless he can satisfy the court to the contrary, be deemed to be living on the earnings of prostitution.

Penalty for vagrancy.-Proviso.

239. Every loose, idle or disorderly person or vagrant is liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding fifty dollars or to imprisonment, with or without hard labour, for any term not exceeding six months, or to both: Provided that no aged or infirm person shall be convicted for any reason within paragraph (a) of the last preceding section, as a loose, idle or disorderly person or vagrant in the county of which he has for the two years immediately preceding been a resident.

"Loose, idle or disorderly person or vagrant"]-See sec. 238.

Locality of offence]—The proceedings must indicate that the offence was committed within the territorial jurisdiction of the magistrate. R. v. Picard (1913), 3 W.W.R. 1007, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 250; R. v. Oberlander, 15 B.C.R. 134, 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 244.

Wife of accused a compellable witness]—This section is included amongst those specified in sub-sec. 2 of sec. 4 of the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145, and under it the wife of the accused is both a competent and compellable witness for the prosecution.

Prosecution within six months]-The limitation period is six months under sec. 1142, and a complaint alleging a period of two years as the time of the offence is bad if no act is alleged as within the prescriptive period of six months. R. v. St. Armand (1915), 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 103.

Exclusion of public from trial of prostitute charge]-Where the offence is under sub-sec. (i) of sec. 238, the public may be excluded from the trial. Sec. 645.

Imprisonment not exceeding six months]-This limitation applies only to the imprisonment awarded as the penalty or part of the penalty for the offence, and not to the enforcement of the fine and costs, if such are awarded. See Code sec. 735, 737-739; R. v. Stafford, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 239 (N.S.); R. v. Van Tassel, 34 N.S.R. 179, 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 128, 133.

Enforcing payment of fine]-Code sec. 739.

Warrant of commitment]-No minute of the order need be served as specified under sec. 731 as to "orders" of justices, as that section does not apply to summary convictions but to summary orders only. Re Effie Brady (1913), 3 W.W.R. 914, 23 W.L.R. 333, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 123 (Alta.).

Commitments to houses of industry, etc.]-See the Prisons Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 148 and amending Acts. Sec. 30 of that Act enacts that if provision is made therefor by the laws of the province in which the conviction takes place, any person convicted of being a "loose, idle or disorderly person," may, instead of being committed to the common gaol or other public prison, be committed to any house of industry or correction, almshouse, workhouse, or reformatory prison.

Sentence of female to the Reformatory in Ontario]-Whenever any female is convicted in Ontario under sec. 239 of the Code, or is convicted under Part XVI, of an offence triable under that Part, she may be sentenced to the Reformatory for an indefinite term less than two years, and if any term exceeding six months is inflicted, no fine shall be imposed in addition. OFFENCES AGAINST THE PERSON AND REPUTATION.

Interpretation.

Definitions.

240. In this Part, unless the context otherwise requires,-

- (a) ' form of marriage ' includes any form either recognized as a valid form by the law of the place where it is gone through, or which, though not so recognized, is such that a marriage celebrated there in that form is recognized as binding by the law of the place where the offender is tried;
- (b) 'guardian' includes any person who has in law or in fact the custody or control of any child referred to;
- (c) 'abandon' or 'expose' includes a wilful omission to take charge of any child referred to on the part of a person legally bound to take charge of such child, as well as any mode of dealing with it calculated to leave it exposed to risk without protection.

Origin]-Sub-sec. (a) from Code of 1892, sec. 275; sub-sec. (b) from Can. Stat., 1900, ch. 46, sec. 3; sub-sec. (c) from Code of 1892, sec. 216.

Duties Tending to the Preservation of Life.

Duty of person in charge to provide necessaries of life,--Criminal responsibility.

241. Every one who has charge of any other person unable by reason either of detention, age, sickness, insanity or any other cause, to withdraw himself from such charge, and unable to provide himself with the necessaries of life, is, whether such charge is undertaken by him under any contract, or is imposed upon him by law, or by reason of his unlawful act, under a legal duty to supply that person with the necessaries of life, and is criminally responsible for omitting, without lawful excuse, to perform such duty if the death of such person is caused, or if his life is endangered, or his health has been or is likely to be permanently injured, by such omission.

Origin]-Sec. 209, Code of 1892.

[§ 241]

Duty of parent, guardian or head of family]-Code sees. 242, 242A, 242B.

Non-support of wife]-Code secs. 242, 242A, 242B.

Criminal responsibility of person to maintain another of whom he has charge who is unable to provide for himself]—If a person having the care and custody of another who is helpless, neglects to supply him with the necessaries of life, and thereby causes or accelerates his death, he was guilty of a criminal offence even before the statute. R. v. Nasmith (1877), 42 U.C.Q.B. 242. But if a person over the age of sixteen and having the exercise of free will, chose to stay in a service where bad food and lodging were provided, the master was not criminally responsible if the neglect was not premeditated and did not continue to a period when the servant was helpless and dependent because of disease or otherwise. R. v. Friend, Russ. & Ry. 20; R. v. Ridley, 2 Camp. 650; R. v. Brown, 1 Terr. L.R. 475. R. v. Charlotte Smith, 10 Cox 94; Code sec. 243.

If the neglect was premeditated and there has been a deliberate omission to supply food to the helpiess person in the custody or charge of the accused and death results from the omission, it is murder. R. v. Condé, 10 Cox C.C. 547; R. v. Bubb, 4 Cox C.C. 457; R. v. Self, 1 Leach 137; but if by gross neglect and without deliberate intent, the offence is only manshaughter. R. v. Dalke (1915), 33 W.L.R. 113, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 98; R. v. Instan [1893] 1 Q.B. 450; R. v. Senior [1899] 1 Q.B. 283

If a grown-up person chooses to undertake the charge of a human creature, helpless either from infancy, simplicity, lunacy or other infirmity, he is bound to execute that charge without wicked negligence; and if a person who has chosen to take charge of a helpless creature lets it die by wicked negligence that person is guilty of manslaughter. R. v. Nicholls, 13 Cox CC. 75. In such a case mere negligence will not establish the offence of manslaughter; there must be wicked negligence, that is, negligence so great as to satisfy a jury that the prisoner had a wicked mind in the sense that he was reckless and careless whether the creature died or not. Ibid., per Brett, J.

If the death of an apprentice labouring under disease is caused by want of care of and harsh treatment by the master who has charge of him the master is guilty of murder. R. v. Squire, 3 Russ. Cr. 6th ed., 13.

As to failure to supply a midwife's services, see R. v. Shepherd, 31 L.J.M.C. 102.

PRESERVATION OF LIFE

Necessaries]—Medical aid is a "necessary" within this section. R. v. Brooks (1902), 9 B.C.R. 13, 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 372, 1 Brit. R.C. 725; R. v. Lewis (1903), 6 O.L.R. 132, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 261, 1 Brit. R.C. 732. Compare R. v. Senior [1899] 1 Q.B. 283, 68 L.J.Q.B. 175.

The language of sec. 243 as to the duty of servants and apprentices when their condition is such that they are not brought within the operation of sec. 241, is more restricted, the words there used being "necessary food, clothing of lodging."

Care and attention to prevent an invalid's death from exposure are also "necessaries," R. v. Dalke (1915), 33 W.L.R. 113, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 98, and see secs. 242 and 242A.

"Without lawful excuse"]—Conscientious scruples on the part of the accused against calling in medical aid for any physical ailment, will not constitute a lawful excuse. R. v. Brooks (1902), 9 B.C.R. 13, 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 372, 1 Brit. R.C. 725; R. v. Lewis (1903), 6 O.L.R. 132, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 261, 1 Brit. R.C. 732; R v. Senior [1899] 1 Q.B. 283, 68 L.J.Q.B. 175; R. v. Morley, 8 Q.B.D. 571; R. v. Instan [1893] 1 Q.B. 450.

An inference that the accused had means wherewith to provide at the date of the offence, may be drawn from proof that he had means at a prior date so close that the jury could properly infer that the means were not exhausted at the time of the offence. R. v. Jones (1901), 19 Cox C.C. 678.

The phrase "without lawful excuse," is also used in sees. 229, 237, 242, 242A, 243, 244, 246, 247, 248, 252.

Culpable homicide]-Code secs. 252, 259-262.

Where the child's death ensued after conviction for the neglect, a subsequent conviction for mansl ughter was upheld in R. v. Tonks [1915] W.N. 387, 32 Times L.R. 137; and see R. v. Tonks [1916] 1 K.B. 443, 85 L.J.K.B. 396, 11 Cr. App. R. 284.

Punishment where not culpable homicide]-Code sec. 244.

Duty of head of family to provide necessaries.—Criminal responsibility.

242. Every one who as parent, guardian or head of a family is under a legal duty to provide necessaries for any child under the age of sixteen years is criminally responsible for omitting, without lawful excuse, to do so while such child remains a member of his or her household, whether such child is helpless or not, if the death of such child is caused, or if his life is endangered, or his health is or is likely to be permanently injured, by such omission.

CRIMINAL CODE (PART VI)

2. Every one who is under a legal duty to provide necessaries for his wife, is criminally responsible for omitting, without lawful excuse so to do, if the death of his wife is caused, or if her life is endangered, or her health is or is likely to be permanently injured, by such omission.

Origin]-Sec. 210, Code of 1892; 32-33 Vict., Can., ch. 20, sec. 25, 24-25 Vict., ch. 100, sec. 26.

"Guardian"]-Sec. 240 (c).

"Head of a family"]—The case of a master under a contract for a child's services in return for his maintenance is not within sec. 242, but comes under sec. 243. R. v. Coventry, 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 541.

"Under a legal duty to provide"]—Sees. 241 and 243 impose and declare under the sanction of federal criminal law, the legal duty incident to certain circumstances, but in the main it is left to the provincial legislatures to regulate the legal duty as a matter of civil rights.

Necessaries]—What are to be considered as "necessaries" under Code sec. 242, must be determined by the circumstances of each particular case. R. v. Sidney (1912), 2 W.W.R. 761, 20 Can. Cr. Cas. 376 (Sask.). The term "necessaries" is to be read in connection with the general heading "duties tending to the preservation of life" and is to be given an interpretation in harmony therewith. R. v. Brooks (1902), 9 B.C.R. 13, 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 372, 1 Brit. R.C. 725; R. v. Sidney, supra-

"Necessaries" have been held to include food, clothing, shelter and medical attendance. R. v Sidney (1912), 2 W.W.R. 761, (Sask.), citing R. v. Lewis, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 261, 6 O.L.R. 132, 1 Brit. R.C. 732; R. v. Wolfe (1908), 13 Can. Cr. Cas 246 (N.S.); R. v. Nasmith (1877), 42 U.C.Q.B. 242.

In deciding whether there has been criminal neglect in refusing to permit a surgical operation, the nature of the operation and the reasonableness of the refusal to have it performed are to be considered. Oakey v. Jackson, 30 T.L.R. 92 [1914] 1 K.B. 216.

At the common law, even the father was under no civil obligation to supply his infant children with necessaries not required for the preservation of life. See Bazeley v. Forder (1868), L.R. 3 Q.B. 559, at p. 565. This obligation was first imposed by 43 Eliz., ch. 2 (a poor law statute, not in force in Ontario), which imposed a similar obligation upon the widowed mother, if of sufficient means. But the common law did impose a duty, not only upon parents, but upon every one of sufficient means having the care and custody of another who was helpless, to supply necessaries required for the preservation of life, for the breach of which such person was made criminally responsible. And this is the duty which see. 242, sub-see. 1, of the Criminal Code recognizes, in the words: "Every one who as parent, guardian or head of a family is under a legal duty to provide necessaries for any child under the age of sixteen years is criminally responsible for omitting, without lawful excuse, to do so," etc. (Wilson v. Boulter, 26 A.R. 184, distinguished). Young v. Gravenhurst (1911), 24 O.L.R. 467, C.A.

A husband who omits without lawful excuse to provide necessaries for his wife is not guilty of an offence under sec. 242 (2) of the Criminal Code if her life is not endangered or her health is not, or is not likely to be, permanently injured by his neglect, nor is he guilty under sec. 242A if his wife be not in destitute or necessitous circumstances. Therefore, an information which omits reference to such ingredients is not sufficient under sec. 242 (2) or 242A. R. v. McAuley [1918] 3 W.W.R. 178 (Man.);

Omitting without lawful excuse]—The fact that the wife has obtained an order of separation under a provincial law so that she is not obliged to cohabit with her husband, will not bar a criminal prosecution for his failure to provide necessaries. Buteau v. Hamel (1915), 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 53 (Que.); and see Quebec Civil Code, sec. 213; Shaftesbury Union v. Brockway [1913] 1 K.B. 159, 82 L.J.K.B. 222, 23 Cox C.C. 318.

If a husband offers to return and live with his wife whom he had deserted and the wife can show no good cause for not living with him, her refusal of the offer unless he gives financial security not to desert her again will constitute a "lawful excesse" in answer to a charge under sec. 242. R. v. Wolfe (1908), 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 246 (N.S.).

The husband living apart from his wife is still under a duty to maintain the children who are left in the mother's care. R. v. Connor [1908] 2 K.B. 26.

The responsibility of the husband who has deserted his wife while domiciled in Canada will not eease because of his having obtained a foreign divorce if he left Canada without intending to remain away longer than the time required to obtain the foreign divorce and in consequence there was no real change of domicile. R. v. Wood (1911), -19 Can. Cr. Cas. 15, 20 O.W.R. 576.

The jury must be satisfied that the omission was without lawful excuse, and that the death, if death followed, was caused, or, if death had not happened, that the person's life was endangered or that his or her health was or was likely to be permanently injured, by reason of the neglect or omission. R. v. Wilkes (1906), 12 O.L.R. 264, 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 226; R. v. Wolfe (1908), 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 246; R. v. Yuman (1910), 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 474, 22 O.L.R. 500.

The question of lawful excuse is to be determined upon all the facts and circumstances, the onus being upon the Crown. R. v. Yuman, supra.

The inability of the accused to support his wife by his carnings or otherwise may be shown in defence. R. v. Robinson (1897), 28 Ont. R. 407, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 28; R. v. Ryland L.R., 1 C.C.R. 99.

Health permanently injured or likely to be so]—There seems no good reason why the word "health" used in this connection should not include physical well-being by having the fingers or toes complete without the necessity of amputation of any of them, but a Territories case on the subject gives a narrow interpretation to the word, the court holding that it could not assume, in the absence of expert testimony, that a child, some of whose toes were so badly frozen because of the guardian's neglect that they had to be amputated, had thereby had his "health" permanently injured or that his health was likely to be injured in consequence. R. v. Coventry (1898), 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 541 (Terr.).

That permanent injury was "likely" to result is a question of fact and inference from circumstances proved. R. v. McIntyre (1898), 31 N.S.R. 403, 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 413; R. v. Bowman (1898), 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 410.

Prima facie evidence of marriage or parentage]—Code sec. 242B, and see R. v. Holmes (1898), 29 Ont. R. 362, 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 131; Daye v. McNeill (1904), 6 Terr. L.R. 44.

Proof or inference of age of child]—See sec. 984. Culpable homicide]—Code secs. 252, 259-262.

Punishment where not culpable homicide]-Code sec. 244.

Neglect to provide for wife and children .-- For ward.

242A. Every one is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction to a fine of five hundred dollars, or to one year's imprisonment, or to both, who—

- (a) as a husband or head of a family, is under a legal duty to provide necessaries for his wife or any child under sixteen years of age; or,
- (b) as a parent or guardian, is under a legal duty to provide necessaries for any child under sixteen years of age; and who, if such wife or child is in destitute or necessitous circumstances, without lawful excuse, neglects or refuses to provide such necessaries.

Origin]-Code Amendment of 1913, ch. 13, sec. 14.

"Guardian"]—The statutory definition in sec. 240 (b) makes the word "guardian" include any person who has in law or in fact the custody or control of the child. The father of an illegitimate child living with him may thus be liable as the child's guardian under sec. 342A although the mother is, as regards the civil law, the sole legal guardian. Liverpool Society v. Jones [1914] 3 K.B. 813, 12 L.G.R. 1103.

Neglects or refuses to provide]-In the Queen v. Ryland, L.R. 1 C.C.R. 99, it was decided that the word "neglect" imported ability, in a case of neglecting to provide food and clothing for a child: see also Regina

An offence is not disclosed where the charge reads that the defendant did "neglect his wife." R. v. Chitnita, 27 W.L.R. 268, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 344 (Alta.). If a plea of guilty has been made to an information disclosing no offence before any evidence has been taken which might cure the defect, the conviction will be set aside. R. v. Chitnita, supra.

The duty of the father to provide for his young children has been held, under a somewhat similar enactment (the Childrens Act 1908 Imp.), not to be discharged by supplying his wife with the money for the children's maintenance if he finds they are neglected and the money misappropriated by her. Poole v. Stokes [1914] W.N. 123, 12 L.G.R. 629, 110 L.T. 1020.

"Destitute or necessitous circumstances"]—Under sec. 242 the gravamen of the offence was that it endangered or injured the health of the complainant. But that is not the gravamen of the offence under sec. 242A. In the latter case the offence is complete if the accused has neglected his legal obligation. To be in "necessitous circumstances" simply means to be in need. If the complainant has no legal claim upon her father and mother for the support which she is receiving from them, and if it be proved that they are little able to provide that support, it cannot be said that she is not in necessitous circumstances because she has been receiving from them her daily food and lodging. Algiers v. Tracey (1916), 26 Can, Cr. Cas. 178.

Prima facie evidence of marriage or parentage]-Code sec. 242B.

Wife a competent witness]—The wife is a competent witness against her husband, Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145, sec. 4, as amended Can. Stat. 1917, ch. 14, sec. 1. The decision in R. v. Allen (1914), 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 67 against the admissibility of the wife's evidence was superseded by that amendment. See also, under the prior law, R. v. Bissell, 1 Ont. R. 514; Mulligan v. Thompson, 23 Ont. R. 54; Reeve v. Wood, 10 Cox C.C. 58.

Adjudication]—The proceedings being under Part XV of the Code, the magistrate is to convict or dismiss, Code sec. 726. Sec. 729 gives the magistrate a discretion, if it be a first offence and the accused is convicted, to discharge the accused from the conviction upon his making such satisfaction to the person aggrieved for damages or costs or both, to be ascertained by the justice. Sec. 1081 as to suspended sentences probably does not apply to summary conviction proceedings; but see R. v. Knight (1916), 11 O.W.N. 190, 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 111.

Juvenile Delinquency]—In cities or districts in which the Juvenile Delinquents Act 1908 Can. is in force reference should also be had to the provisions of that Act. 7-8 Edw. VII, Can., ch. 40; 2 Geo. V, Can., ch. 30, 4-5 Geo. V, Can., ch. 39.

CRIMINAL CODE (PART VI)

Evidence of marriage and parentage.

[§ 242B]

242B. Upon any prosecution under sections 242 or 242A, evidence that a man has cohabited with a woman or has in any way recognized her as being his wife shall be prima facie evidence that they are lawfully married, and evidence that a man has in any way recognized children as being his children shall be prima facie evidence that they are his legitimate children.

Origin]-Code Amendment of 1913, ch. 13, sec. 14.

Prima facie evidence of legitimacy]—The presumption declared by the latter part of sec, 242 \pm which makes the man's recognition of the children as his own, the equivalent of prima facie evidence of legitimacy for the purposes of his criminal responsibility under secs. 242 and 242 \pm , is of course' rebuttable. Its practical effect seems to be that if the man declines to give evidence on his own behalf or to call other witnesses to satisfy the court that the children are illegitimate, he may be fixed with criminal responsibility for neglect to provide for them if he lives in concubinage with the children's mother. Similarly, the neglect to provide necessaries for the woman who passes as his wife may be the subject of prosecution, and on proof of cohabitation, the onus of proving that they were not married is placed upon the accused. See also, as to offences under 242 and 242 \pm , the statutory definition of the word "guardian" in sec. 240 (b).

Duty of masters.-Criminal responsibility.

243. Every one who, as master or mistress, has contracted to provide necessary food, clothing or lodging for any servant or appprentice under the age of sixteen years is under a legal duty to provide the same, and is criminally responsible for omitting, without lawful excuse, to perform such duty, if the death of such servant or apprentice is caused, or if his life is endangered, or his health has been or is likely to be permanently injured, by such omission.

Origin]—Sec. 211, Code of 1892; 32-33 Vict., Can., ch. 20, sec. 25; 24-25 Vict., Imp., ch. 100, sec. 26.

At common law]—An indictment did not lie against a master at common law for not providing sufficient food and sustenance for a servant, whereby the servant became sick and emaciated, unless it alleged that the servant was of tender years and under the dominion and control of the master. R. v. Friend, Russ. & Ry. 20; R. v. Ridley, 2 Camp. 650; R. v. Smith, 10 Cox C.C. 94. The reason of the restriction is, that if the servant be not of tender years, he may if not provided with proper nourishment remonstrate, and, if necessary, leave the service. R. v. Nasmith (1877), 42 U.C.Q.B. 242, 245; R. v. Brown (1893), 1 Terr. L.R. 475. The present section does not appear to have changed the law in that respect except in fixing the age limit at sixteen.

244. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to three years' imprisonment who, being bound to perform any duty specified in the three last preceding sections, without lawful excuse neglects or refuses to do so, unless the offence amounts to culpable homicide.

Origin]-Code of 1892, sec. 215; Code Amendment of 1893, ch. 32, sec. 1.

Three last preceding sections]—The addition of secs. 242A and 242B after the enactment of sec. 244 in its present form, does not affect this reference applying as before to secs. 241, 242 and 243. R. v. Allen (1914), 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 67.

Wife of accused a compellable witness]— This section is included amongst these specified in sub-sec. 2 of sec. 4 of the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145, and under it the wife of the accused is both a competent and compellable witness, for the prosecution.

Abandoning children under two years.

245. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to three years' imprisonment who unlawfully abandons or exposes any child under the age of two years, whereby its life is endangered or its health is permanently injured.

Origin]—Code of 1892, sec. 216; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 162, sec. 20; Offences against the Person Act, 1861, Imp., 24-25 Vict., ch. 100, sec. 27.

Abandoning child under two years]—The statutory definition of "abandon" and "expose" is framed in accordance with the two leading English cases of R, v. White, L.R. 1 C.C.R. 311, 40 L.J.M.C., 134, and R, v. Falkingham, L.R. 1 C.C.R. 222, 39 L.J.M.C. 47.

Duty of persons undertaking acts dangerous to life.

246. Every one who undertakes, except in cases of necessity, to administer surgical or medical treatment, or to do any other lawful act the doing of which is or may be dangerous to life, is under a legal duty to have and to use reasonable knowledge, skill and care in doing any such act, and is criminally responsible for omitting, without lawful excuse, to discharge that duty if death is caused by such omission.

Origin]-Sec. 212, Code of 1892.

Manslaughter through surgical or medical malfeasance]—It seems that if a person, whether he be a regular practitioner or not, honestly and bona fide performs an operation, or uses a dangerous instrument, which causes the patient's death, he is not guilty of manslaughter; R. v. Van Butchell, 3 C. & P. 629; but if he is guilty of criminal misconduct, arising from gross ignorance or criminal inattention, and not from mere error of judgment, then he will be guilty of manslaughter. R. v. Williamson, 3 C. & P. 635; R. v. Spiller, 5 C. & P. 333; E. v. Chamberlain, 10 Cox 486.

In R. v. Webb, 1 Moo. & Rob. 405; 2 Lewin 196, Lord Lyndhurst laid down the following rule:—"In these cases there is no difference between a licensed physician or surgeon and a person acting as a physician or surgeon without license. In either case if a party having a competent degree of skill and knowledge, makes an accidental mistake in his treatment of a patient, through which mistake death ensues, he is thereby not guilty of manslaughter; but if, where proper medical assistance can be had, a person totally ignorant of the science of medicine takes on himself to administer a violent and dangerous remedy to one labouring under disease, and death ensues in consequence of that dangerous remedy having been so administered, then he is guilty of manslaughter. If I entertained the least doubt of this position, I might fortify it by referring to the opinion of Lord Ellenborough in R, v. Williamson, 3 C, & P. 635. I shall leave it to the jury to say first, whether death was occasioned or accelerated by the medicine administered; and if they think it was, then I shall tell them, secondly, that the prisoner is guilty of manslaughter, if they think that in so administering the medicine he acted with a criminal intention or from very gross negligence." See also R. v. Macleod, 12 Cox 534.

It is not "surgical or medical treatment" within the meaning of see. 246 for a Christian Science practitioner to sit by the patient; R. v. Beer, 32 C.L.J. 416; but the failure to supply medical aid may render the person who is under a duty to supply necessaries to a dependant liable under sees. 241-244, and any person abetting the latter offence might be charged with the offence itself under see. 69.

Failure to provide medical or surgical aid]—See secs. 241, 242, 242A, 244.

Reasonable knowledge, skill and care]—See also sec. 65. Negligently causing bodily injury]—Code sec. 284. Homicide by neglect]—Code secs. 252, 262, 268.

Duty of persons in charge of dangerous things.

247. Every one who has in his charge or under his control anything whatever, whether animate or inanimate, or who erects, makes or maintains anything whatever which, in the absence of precaution or care, may endanger human life, is under a legal duty to take reasonable precautions against, and use reasonable care to avoid, such danger, and is criminally responsible for the consequences of omitting, without lawful excuse, to perform such duty.

Origin]-Sec. 213, Code of 1892.

"Every one"]—See the statutory definition in Code sec. 2 (13), which includes in this term bodies corporate in relation to such acts and things as they are capable of doing and owning, respectively.

Neglect of person in charge of dangerous things]—If a person fails to take proper precautions when doing anything which is in its nature dangerous, he will be responsible though he had not the least interation of bringing about the consequences of his act. "The jurors for Our Lord the King upon their oaths present that the ----- Railroad Company on the 9th day of August, in the year of our Lord 1907, at the town of Essex, in the county of Essex, and at other places in the said county, were guilty of a common nuisance. And the jurors aforesaid upon their oath aforesaid do further present that the said ----- Railroad Company, at the time and places aforesaid, were guilty of an indictable offence in that the said the ----- Railroad Company, had then and there under their charge and control certain inanimate things, to wit, a certain car loaded with an explosive substance, and the said explosive substance, the said inanimate things, being such that they might, in the absence of precaution and care, endanger human life, and thereby the said the ----- Railroad Company became and was under a legal duty to take reasonable precautions against and use reasonable care to avoid such danger, but that the said the ----- Railroad Company then and there omitted without lawful excuse to perform such duty."

Duty to avoid omissions dangerous to life.

248. Every one who undertakes to do any act, the omission to do which is or may be dangerous to life, is under a legal duty to do that act, and is criminally responsible for the consequences of omitting, without lawful excuse, to perform that duty.

Homicide.

Definition.

250. Homicide is the killing of a human being by another, directly or indirectly, by any means whatsoever.

Origin]-Sec. 218, Code of 1892.

Homicide, excusable or justifiable]—Homicide, when not amounting to murder or manslaughter, is divided by Russell into two classes:— (1) Excusable; (2) Justifiable. 3 Russell Cr., 6th. ed., 205.

Sec. 252 of the Code divides the subject of homicide into:—(1) culpable homicide, which is sub-divided into two classes: (a) murder, (b) manslaughter; (2) homicide not culpable. The same section defines what is "culpable" homicide, and declares that homicide which is not culpable is not an offence. Excusable homicide is said to be of two sorts: Either per infortunium, by misadventure; or se et sua defendendo, upon a principle of self-defence.

The term, excusable homicide, imports some fault in the party by whom it has been committed; but of a nature so trivial that the law excuses such homicide from the guilt of felony, though in strictness it deems it to be deserving of some degree of punishment. It appears to be the better opinion that the punishment inflicted for this offence was never greater than a forfeiture of the goods and chattels of the delinquent or a portion of them. 3 Russell Cr., 6th ed., 205, 4 Bl. Com. 188. Then the practice arose of granting a pardon and writ of restitution as a matter of right in such cases upon payment of the expenses of suing them out; and to prevent this expense it became usual for judges to permit or direct a general verdict of acquittal where the death had notoriously happened by misadventure or in self-defence. 4 Bl. Com. 188, 1 East P.C., ch. 5, sec. 8, Fost. 288.

By sec. 6 of the Offences against the Person Act, R.S.C. (1886), ch. 162 (repealed by the Code), it was provided that "no punishment or forfeiture shall be incurred by any person who kills another by misfortune or in his own defence, or in any other manner without felony." This was taken from 32-33 Vict. (Can.), ch. 20, sec. 7, a re-enactment of sec. 7 of the Imperial Statute, 24-25 Vict., ch. 100. It was probably thought unnecessary to repeat that enactment in the Code, as sub-sec.

Homicide by misadventure]—Homicide by misadventure is where one doing a hawful act, without any intention of bodily harm, and using proper precaution to prevent danger, unfortunately happens to kill another person. 1 East P.C. 5, p. 221, and sec. 36, pp. 260, 261, Fost. 258, 1 Hawk. P.C., ch. 29, sec. 1. The act must be lawful; for if it be unlawful, the homicide will amount to murder or manslaughter, and it must not be done with intention of great bodily harm, for then the legality of the act, considered abstractedly, would be no more than a mere cloak of pretence, and consequently would avail nothting. The act must also be done in a proper manner and with due caution to prevent danger. 1 East P.C., ch. 5, sec. 36, p. 261, 3 Russell 206.

Thus, if people following their common occupations, use due caution to prevent danger, and nevertheless happen, unfortunately, to kill anyone, such killing will be homicide by misadventure. 1 Hale 472, 475, 1 Hawk. P.C. ch. 629, sees. 2 and 4. Thus, where a person, driving a eart or other carriage, happens to drive over another and kill him, if the accident happened in such a manner that no want of due care could be imputed to the driver, it will be accidental death, and the driver will be excused. Fost. 263, 1 Hale 476. In a case where a person was riding a horse, and the horse, being whipped by some other person, sprang out of the road, and ran over a child and killed it, this was held to be misadventure only in the rider, though manslaughter in the person who whipped the horse. 1 Hawk. P.C., ch. 29, sec. 3.

Where parents, masters, and other persons having authority in foro domestico, give correction to those under their care, and such correction exceeds the bounds of due moderation, so that death ensues, the offence will be either murder or manslaughter, according to the circumstances; but if the correction be reasonable and moderate, and by the struggling of the party corrected, or by some other misfortune, death ensue, the killing will be only misadventure. 1 Hale 454, 473, 474, 4 Blac. Com. 182.

251. A child becomes a human being within the meaning of this Act when it has completely proceeded, in a living state, from the body of its mother, whether it has breathed or not, whether it has an independent circulation or not, and whether the navel string is severed or not.

Homicide when culpable.

252. Homicide may be either culpable or not culpable.

2. Homicide is culpable when it consists in the killing of any person, either by an unlawful act or by an omission, without lawful excuse, to perform or observe any legal duty, or by both combined, or by causing a person, by threats or fear of violence, or by deception, to do an act which causes that person's death, or by wilfully frightening a child or sick person.

3. Culpable homicide is either murder or manslaughter.

4. Homicide which is not culpable is not an offence.

Origin]-Sec. 220, Code of 1892.

Culpable homicide]—If the death of a human being results from any action of any person, that person is said to have committed homicide. Sec. 250.

A person is criminally responsible for homicide unless he can show some legal excuse; the consent of the person killed is no excuse. Sec. 67.

Death must result, either directly or indirectly, from the act. Whether it does so or not must depend on the circumstances of the case, but if death occurs more than a year and a day after the act, the law presumes that death did not result from the act, but from some other cause; Code sec. 254; and the accused cannot be made responsible.

Further, a person is not responsible for causing death unless death naturally results from his conduct. For instance, if a person wounds another dangerously, and the other dies, whether from neglect of proper treatment, or from improper treatment, applied in good faith, for the purpose of effecting a cure, the person causing the injury is legally responsible for the death. Code see. 258. On the other hand, if the wound is not dangerous in itself, but is rendered so by improper treatment, he is not responsible.

A person is guilty of causing death even if he merely accelerated the other's death, and it is no excuse that the person killed must have died very shortly from some other cause. Sec. 256.

The fact that the blame is shared by another will not relieve from responsibility a person contributing to the death. Code sec. 69.

257. Every one who, by any act or omission, causes the death of another, kills that person, although death from that cause might have been prevented by resorting to proper means.

Origin]-Sec. 225, Code of 1892.

"By an act or omission"]—Sec. 257 is explanatory in part of the definition of homicide in sec. 250. The fact that proper treatment after the "act or omission," which was the cause of the death which later resulted, would ordinarily have cured the effect of the act or omission, at least, in so far as the fatality was concerned, does not prevent the killing being attributed to the person whose act or omission was culpable or not, one must refer to sec. 252, sub-sec. (2), defining culpable homicide, and to secs. 241-249, dealing with duties tending to the preservation of life. If the omission which causes death was "without lawful excuse," and was of the "performance or observance of any legal duty," the homicide is culpable. Sec. 252 (2). Declarations of "legal duty," arising under certain circumstances, are contained in secs. 241, 242, 246, 247 and 248.

If a man be wounded and the wound turn to a gangrene or fever for want of proper applications, or from neglect, and the man die of the gangrene or fever: see R. v. Holland, 2 M. & Rob. 351; or if death result from an operation rendered advisable by the act of the accused; R. v. Davis, 15 Cox C.C. 174; this is a homicide, and culpable or not, according to the circumstances under which the wound was given. 1 Hale, 421, 428; Archbold Crim. Evid., 22nd ed., 478.

Causing injury the treatment of which brings death.

HOMICIDE

[§ 259]

Murder and Manslaughter.

Murder defined.

259. Culpable homicide is murder,-

- (a) if the offender means to cause the death of the person killed;
- (b) if the offender means to cause to the person killed any bodily injury which is known to the offender to be likely to cause death, and is reckless whether death ensues or not;
- (c) if the offender means to cause death, or, being so reckless as aforesaid, means to cause such bodily injury as aforesaid to one person, and by accident or mistake kills another person, though he does not mean to hurt the person killed;
- (d) if the offender, for any unlawful object, does an act which he knows or ought to have known to be likely to cause death, and thereby kills any person, though he may have desired that his object should be effected without hurting any one.

Origin]-Sec. 227, Code of 1892.

The crime of murder]—Murder, according to the old common law definition is unlawfully killing with malice aforethought, and manslaughter was defined as unlawful killing without malice aforethought. Malice aforethought was explained to mean not necessarily premeditation, but an intention which must necessarily precede the act intended. These definitions were misleading because the expression "malice aforethought" taken in its popular sense would be understood to mean that, in order that homicide might be murder, the act of killing must be premeditated, whereas murder might be committed without what is commonly called a premeditated design to kill. This element of doubt and fiction introduced into the common law by the use of the expression "malice aforethought" was removed by the Criminal Code, which became the law of Canada in 1892, and which codified, explained and simplified, and in some respects, modified the common law of homicide. R. v. Krafehenko (No. 1), 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 277, 285, per Mathers, C.J.

Homicide, which consists in the killing of one human being by another, is divided into two classes, namely, "culpable homicide" and "non-culpable homicide." That means killing which is unlawful and killing which is not unlawful, or excusable. Non-culpable homicide is again divided into two classes, justifiable and excusable. Justifiable homicide is when the act of killing is done pursuant to the orders of some higher lawful authority, as when the soldier in time of war shoots to kill the enemy by command of his officer. It is excusable homicide where a man being violently attacked is obliged to kill his assailant in order to save his own life, or where a man in doing a lawful act without negligence and with no intention to injure, unfortunately kills another. Instances of such excusable homicide by misadventure occur almost every game shooting season by the accidental discharge of firearms. Ibid.

If a person attempted to commit suicide by shooting, and in a struggle with another who attempted to prevent the shooting, the revolver went off and the other party was killed, it may still be murder. R. v. Hopwood (1913), 8 Cr. App. R. 143.

In support of a plea of self-defence on a charge of murder, previous assaults of the deceased on the prisoner and on members of the prisoner's family are admissible to show the nature of the assault he had reason to fear. R. v. Drouin, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 205.

If, in a homicide case by shooting, nothing appeared in the evidence to indicate the intention with which the accused shot the deceased, the jury would be justified in inferring an intention to kill from the fact that he fired the fatal shot, or gave the fatal blow with a lethal weapon, because, until the contrary is shown, every person is presumed to intend the natural and probable consequences of his own act. R. v. Hoo Sam (1912), 1 W.W.R. 1049, 1059, 19 Can. Cr. Cas. 259, 20 W.L.R. 571 (Sask.); R. v. Blythe (1909), 19 O.L.R. 386.

Wilfully negligent treatment by the putative father of an illegitimate child, hastening, if not causing, its death, will support a charge of murder. R. v. Hammond (1913), 5 W.W.R. 704 (Sask.).

Proof of threats]—If one threatens to kill another, and gives a reason for it, the evidence may be admissible on a murder charge on two grounds: (1) to prove malice; and (2) to prove a motive. If it be a mere threat, it is evidence of malice, an ingredient in the crime of murder, and furthermore, it may be important for the purpose of showing that the killing was not accidental, where that issue is raised. See Makin v. Attorney-General [1894] A.C. 57; Regina v. Stephens (1888), 16 Cox C.C. 387; The Queen v. Hammond (1898), 29 O.R. 211; Phillips on Evidence, 10th ed., p. 514; and Phipson on Evidence, 3rd ed., pp. 109 et seq. and 137.

Sub-sec. (d)—Unlawful act likely to cause death]—It is not enough that there were unlawful acts by the accused which caused the deceased to club his gun and strike his assailants, with the result that the gun was discharged in his hands and killed him; the unlawful acts of the accused must have been known by him to be likely to cause death or such that he ought to have known, if he did not in fact know it, that such a result was likely. Graves v. The King (No. 4), 47 S.C.E. 568, 12 E.L.R. 332, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 44, reversing R. v. Graves (No. 3), 20 Can. Cr. Cas, 438, 9 D.L.R. 175 (N.S.); R. v. Krafchenko (No. 1), 22

Accessories to the offence]—A person who aids or abets, counsels or procures the commission of the offence is punishable as a principal. Cr. Code, sec. 69; R. v. McNulty, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 26 (Ont.).

The medical testimony]—On a preliminary enquiry in a homicide charge it is the duty of the Crown to put in the whole of its medical evidence and not merely that of the medical expert who conducted the post-mortem. The Crown should place all the evidence in its possession before the magistrate, so that he may be enabled to say whether the accused should be sent up for trial or not. R. v. Howard (1913), 5 W.W.R. 838. (Man.).

The medical practitioner should examine all the important organs for marks of natural disease and note down any unusual pathological appearances or abnormal deviations although they may at the time appear to have no bearing on the cause of death

Mr. Clark Bell, in his 12th Amer. edition of Taylor's Medical Jurisprudence, 1897, p. 23, says: "In medico-legal cases involving questions of life and death, the examination of the body cannot be too thorough and exhaustive; the omission of any one organ is a radical and sometimes a fatal defect. This was well illustrated in 1872 by two leading cases in the United States—that of Mrs. E. G. Wharton, charged with poisoning General Ketchum, and that of Dr. Paul Schoeppe, charged with poisoning Miss Steinnecke. In neither case was the post-mortem sufficiently complete."

The body is inspected not merely to show that a person has died as a result of the criminal act, but to prove that he has not died from any natural cause. Medical practitioners commonly give their attention exclusively to the first point, while lawyers, defending accused parties, very properly direct a most searching examination to the last mentioned point, i.e., the healthy or unhealthy state of those organs which are essential to life. If the cause of death is obscure after the general examination of the body, there is good reason for inspecting the condition of the spinal marrow. In certain obscure cases it may become necessary to institute a microscopic examination, especially of the brain and heart. Taylor's Medical Jurisprudence, 1897, 12th Am. ed. 23.

In a trial for murder by committing an abortion resulting in the woman's death, it appeared that the post-mortem examination was insufficient, and that, so far as the medical evidence was concerned, it was possible that death might have been occasioned by some undiscovered disease which a post-mortem examination of other organs than those examined might have disclosed, and none of the medical men would swear positively to the cause of death; but there was other evidence tending to show that death was caused by a criminal operation, and

The expert witness is not to be asked his opinion on the very point which is to be determined by the jury, that is, he is not to be asked whether, in his opinion, the accused killed the deceased; but hypothetical questions may be put so that the expert's opinion is based upon testimony already given in his hearing, and he can then say whether the blows described by one witness could produce the fractures described by another witness. R. v. Jones, 28 U.C.Q.B. 416.

On a trial for homicide, an expert medical witness, who has not seen the dead body, but has heard its condition described in the witnesses' evidence in Court, may state his opinion that death was not self-inflicted. R. v. Mason (1911), 7 Cr. App. R. 67.

On principle, nothing may be given from a text-book, other than as the opinion of a witness who gives it. On cross-examination the judge should be careful to see that an improper use is not made of text-books, practically to give in evidence opinions of absent authors at variance with those of the witness. It is quite apparent that if the witness is asked about a text-book and he expresses ignorance of it, or denies its authority, no further use of it can be made by reading extracts from it, for that would be in effect making it evidence, but if he admits its authority, he then in a sense confirms it by his own testimony, and then may be quite properly asked for explanation of any apparent differences between its opinion and that stated by him. R. v. Anderson (1914), 5 W.W.R. 1052, 1053, 7 Alta. L.R. 102, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 455, per Howey, C.J.; R. v. Neigel [1918] 1 W.W.R. 477, 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 232 (Alta.).

A medical expert may be examined as to what is in standard medical text-books. Counsel may confront an expert with such books for the purpose of showing either that the witness is mistaken, or that he may explain and reconcile, if he can, the real or apparent difference between what he has said and what is found in the books. R. v. Anderson, supra; Brownell v. Black, 31 N.B.R. 594.

No more than five professional or other experts may be called upon either side without leave of the court, which leave is to be applied for before the examination of any of the experts who may be examined without such leave. Can. Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145, sec. 7.

Reasonable doubt]-The jury must be convinced of the defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. R. v. Krafchenko (No. 1), 22 Can.

The onus of proving a defence of insanity is merely to give a preponderance of evidence on that question to the satisfaction of the jury; the defence is not required to prove insanity by the greater degree of evidence which by usage has come to be known as proof "beyond a reasonable doubt." R. v. Anderson (1914), 5 W.W.R. 1052, 7 Alta. L.R. 102, 26 W.L.R. 783, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 455; and see R. v. Myshrall, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 474 (as to an alibi); R. v. Stoddard, 2 Cr. App. R. 217; Macnaghten's case, 10 Cl. & F. 200; R. v. Cavendish, Irish R., 8 C.L. 178. Contra, see R. v. Jefferson (1898), 72 J.P. 467, reversed on other grounds, 1 Cr. App. R. 95.

Dying declarations as evidence in homicide cases]—In criminal cases a dying declaration is only admissible in the case of homicide where the death of the decased is the subject of the charge and the circumstances of the death are the subject of the dying declaration. R. v. Inkster (1915), 8 W.W.R. 1098, 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 204, 8 Sask. L.R. 233; R. v. Hutchinson (1822), 2 B. & C. 605; R. v. Mead (1824), 2 B. & C. 608 (note); R. v. Lloyd (1830), 4 C. & P. 233; Reg. v. Hind (1860), 29 L.J.M.C. 147, 8 Cox C.C. 300; R. v. Woodcock, 1 Leach C.C. 500.

So if other counts are joined with that of manslaughter, then as soon as the dying declaration was made use of by the prosecution, the other counts should have been withdrawn. R. v. Inkster (1915), 8 W.W.R. 1098, 1099. Where this was not done nor was the jury directed to disregard the dying declaration upon the counts joined with manslaughter, and the jury disagreed on that charge, a new trial was ordered, as it was impossible to say that the admission of that declaration on the charge of unlawfully administering a drug, did not occasion some substantial wrong. Ibid, at 1100.

The pre-requisite to the admission of proof of a dying declaration is that the declarant was under a "settled, hopeless expectation of death"; that is a question for the judge. R. v. Woods, 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 159, 5 B.C.R. 585; R. v. Aho, 11 B.C.R. 114, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 453; but the declaration need not be in prospect of "immediate death" if all hope of surviving any longer than a short time has been abandoned. R. v. Perry [1909] 2 K.B. 697; R. v. Smith, 23 U.C.C.P. 312; R. v. Sparham (1875), 25 U.C.C.P. 143; R. v. Osborne, 15 Cox C.C. 169; R. v. Magyar, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 114, 7 Terr. L.R. 491.

The question is whether at the time the declarant made the statement, he was in hopeless expectation of death. If he were, it is immaterial that subsequently his bodily and mental condition became better and he cherished hopes of recovery. R. v. Austin (1912), 8 Cr. App. R. 27; R. v. Davidson (1898), 30 N.S.R. 349, 1 Can, Cr. Cas. 351; R. v. Smith, 23 U.C.C.P. 312.

Where an injured woman said to another Indian woman, "Fellowes hurt me and make me die," and to her father she said, "I am going to die, hurry up and get the priest"; "Sure, I am going to die, hurry up and get the priest for me." Held, that this was sufficient indication of apprehension of imminent death and hopelessness of recovery to be admitted in evidence as a dying declaration. Rex v. Walker, 15 B.C.R. 100, 13 W.L.R. 47, 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 77.

Exact words of dying declaration not essential]-In Regina v. Mitchell, 17 Cox C.C. 503, Cave, J., held that a statement to be admissible must be in the actual words of the deceased, and if questions are put, both the questions and answers must be given. The case, however, does not appear to be in accord with either the earlier or the later authorities which are mentioned in Archhold's Criminal Pleading and Evidence, 23rd ed., p. 324, nor, with sound reason. R. v. Magyar, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 114 at 119, per Harvey, J. It is clear from the authorities that a dving declaration need not be in writing, and if evidence of such a declaration were being given by a person who heard it, he could not be expected to give the exact words with any degree of accuracy, but what he would give necessarily would be in his own words, the substance of what was said to the best of his recollection. But where the statements, after being written down, were read over to the deceased and accepted and signed by him, they did in effect become his own words. Ibid.

In R. v. Louie, 10 B.C.R. 1, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 347, the Supreme Court of British Columbia declined to follow Regina v. Mitchell, and held that a statement in narrative form obtained by questions through an interpreter, and not read over to the deceased after being written down, was admissible.

Intent negatived by proof of insanity or drunkenness]—As to insanity as an excuse for crime, see Code see. 19. Where a defence of insanity is raised in a homicide case, the Crown is under no obligation to call the prison doctor or the official alienist by whom the accused has been under observation while in custody; but the Crown should place at the disposal of the prisoner's counsel any evidence in its possession on the question of insanity to be used by him if he thinks fit. R. v. Keirstead (1918), 42 D.L.R. 193, 201 (N.B.).

In an English case, the general rule was laid down that the Crown's evidence as to the condition of the prisoner's mind should be given in reply and not in chief; R. v. Smith, S Cr. App. R. 72; but when it is clear from the cross-examination on behalf of the prisoner that the defence to a murder charge will be insanity, and it is ascertained that no witnesses will be called to prove it, it is the proper practice for the judge, at the close of the case for the Crown, to allow medical evidence as to the prisoner's sanity to be then called by the prosecution. R. v. Abramovitch (1912), 7 Cr. App. R. 145.

Where the sole question raised was whether the accused was insane or whether he knew what he was doing, and so was guilty of murder, and on the facts it was impossible for any jury reasonably to return a verdict of manslaughter instead of murder, the trial judge is not bound to indicate to the jury in his charge to them, that they might find the accused guilty of manslaughter. R. v. Honeyands (1914), 10 Cr. App. R. 60; R. v. Meade [1909] 1 K.B. 895.

Murder may be reduced to manslaughter if a man is so drunk as to make him unable to form any intention. R. v. Sparkes (1917), 51 N.S.R. 482, 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 116; R. v. Kane, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 443; R. v. Wilson, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 448, 46 N.S.R. 59; R. v. Meade [1909] 1 K.B. 895; R. v. Doherty, 16 Cox C.C. 306; or if the accused was too drunk to form any definite purpose at all. R. v. Bentley (1913), 9 Cr. App. R. 109; or if the accused because of his extremely drunken state did not know the difference between right and wrong. R. v. Galbraith (1912), 8 Cr. App. R. 101.

An acquittal would not be justified on the ground of the prisoner's insanity unless his mind was so affected that he was not capable of appreciating the nature and quality of his act and of knowing that his act was forbidden by law. R. v. Jessamine, 19 Can. Cr. Cas. 214 (Ont.).

No person can be rightly tried, sentenced or executed while insane. If there be sufficient reason to doubt whether an accused person is anable, on account of insanity, to conduct his defence, the question whether by reason of such insanity he is unfit to take his trial should first be tried. R. v. Leys, 16 O.W.R. 544; Code sec. 967.

Compulsion by threats]—See Code sec. 20. Threats of death or of grievous bodily harm made by the principal offender would not form an excuse for assistance given in killing another. R. v. Farduto, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 144, 19 Rev. Leg., Que., 165, 10 D.L.R. 669.

Admissions and confessions of the accused]—As to proof of admissions or confessions alleged to have been made by the accused, see note to see, 685. When the accused becomes a witness on his own behalf he may be cross-examined as to whether he has been convicted of any indictable offence, even though the conviction is altogether irrelevant to the matter in issue; Can. Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145, sec. 12; the inquiry being relevant as affecting the credibility of the accused. R. v. D'Aoust (1902), 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 407, 3 O.L.R. 653; R. v. Mulvihill (1914), 5 W.W.R. 1229 (B.C.); and see Ward v. Sinfield, 49 L.J.C.P. 696. An unfair statement featured in a newspaper item that the accused had confessed a homicide charge was held a good ground for postponing the trial as it had indirectly deprived the accused of the benefit of Evidence of similar facts and of other criminal acts]-Evidence that the person acused of an offence committed a like offence or acted in a similar manner on another occasion, is not admissible merely for the purpose of showing that he has a general disposition to commit such offences. But where several offences are so connected with each other as to form part of an entire transaction, evidence of one is admissible as proof of another. R. v. Ellis, 6 B. & C. 145; R. v. Reardon, 4 F. & F. 76; R. v. Maclean (1906), 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 283, 1 E.L.R. 334; R. v. Brown, 21 U.C.Q.B. 338; R. v. Chasson, 3 Pugs. (N.B.) 546; So also where there is a nexus between the two acts sufficiently proximate in point of time to show a systematic course of conduct. Perkins v. Jeffery [1915] 2 K.B. 702, 84 L.J.K.B. 1554, 25 Cox C.C. 59; R. v. Bond, 75 L.J.K.B. 693 [1906] 2 KB. 389; Thompson v. Director of Public Prosecutions [1918] A.C. 221, 87 L.J.K.B. 478, affirming R. v. Thompson [1917] 2 K.B. 230, 86 L.J.K.B. 1321; R. v. Crippen, 27 Times L.R. 69. And in Brunet v. The King (1918), 30 Can. Cr. Cas. 16 on a charge of abortion the Supreme Court of Canada upheld a conviction where in answer to a defence of innocent intent in performing a surgical operation, the Crown gave evidence to show criminal operations to procure miscarriage performed two and four years previously on two other women. Where there was no probability of the defence of innocent purpose being set up until the prisoner gave his testimony, the Crown could not properly adduce evidence of that class; Bunet v. The King, supra; Perkins v. Jeffery, 25 Cox C.C. 59, 66; R. v. Christie [1914] A.C. 545; Thompson v. Director of Public Prosecutions [1918] A.C. 221, 87 L.J.K.B. 478 (H.L.). It has therefore been held proper that the accused should be offered an opportunity of meeting the evidence so given by the Crown in rebuttal by calling any further evidence in sur-rebuttal and offering an adjournment for that purpose. Brunet v. The King (1918), 57 S.C.R. 83, 30 Can. Cr. Cas. 16, 41 (Can.).

Evidence tending to show that the accused has been guilty of eriminal acts other than those covered by the charge is admissible—(1) Where the prosecution seeks to prove a system or course of conduct. (2) Where the prosecution seeks to rebut a suggestion on the part of the prisoner of accident or mistake. (3) Where the prosecution seeks to prove knowledge by the prisoner of some fact. And in all cases, such evidence is never admitted as proof that the prisoner did the act charged, but only as showing the quality of that act and the guilty intention of the prisoner. See judgment of Bray, J., in Rex v. Bord [1906] 2 K.B. 389.

It is the general rule, in justice to a person accused of an offence, that he shall not, on his trial therefore, be called upon to answer other charges not connected therewith, nor shall evidence of an unconnected offence be given merely to prove his vicious character or his readiness to commit such a crime as he is upon trial for. As put by the House of Lords in Rex v. Ball [1911] A.C. 47, 71, "You cannot convict a man of one crime by proving that he had committed some other crime." Nevertheless, evidence of facts relevant to the immediate charge against him is not the less admissible because it necessarily discloses the commission of other crimes by him (Rex v. Ball). But it must be evidence of facts relevant to that immediate charge. R. v. Gibson (1913), 29 O.L.R. 56, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 477, 484, distinguishing R. v. Rooney, 7 C. & P. 517 and R. v. Birdseye, 4 C. & P. 386.

It is a recognized principle of the criminal law that, apart from special conditions or statutory enactment, evidence is not admissible merely to prove that the person accused has a general propensity to commit a crime similar in character to that with which he is charged. Thompson v. Director of Public Prosecutions [1918] A.C. 221, 87 L.J.K.B. 478, 486, affirming R. v. Thompson [1917] 2 K.B. 230, 86 L.J.K.B. 1321; R. v. Bond, 75 L.J.K.B. 693, [1906] 2 K.B. 389; Makin v. Atty.-Gen. of N.S.W., 63 L.J.P.C. 41, [1894] A.C. 57; R. v. Oddy (1851), 20 L.J.M.C. 198. On the other hand, such evidence is admissible if there is any connecting relationship between it and the particular crime with which a prisoner is charged. Thompson v. Director of Public Prosecutions [1918], A.C. 221, 87 L.J.K.B. 478, 486, (H.L.) per Lord Parmoor. If such evidence is admissible it cannot be excluded on the ground that it may incidentally introduce considerations which may tend to prejudice the trial of the person accused. Ibid. Sometimes for one reason, sometimes for another, evidence is admissible notwithstanding that its general character is to show that the accused had in him the makings of a criminal, for example in proving guilty knowledge or intent or system, or in rebutting an appearance of innocence which, unexplained, the facts might wear. Ibid. per Lord Sumner, 87 L.J.K.B. at 484. In cases of coining, uttering, procuring abortion, demanding by menaces, false pretenses and sundry species of frauds, such evidence is admitted. But before an issue can be said to be raised which would permit the introduction of such evidence so obviously prejudicial to the accused, it must have been raised in substance, if not in so many words, and the issue so raised must be one to which the prejudicial evidence is relevant. Thompson v. Director etc. (1918), 87 L.J.K.B. 478 at 484, per Lord Sumner.

"The mere theory that a plea of not guilty puts everything material in issue, is not enough for this purpose. The prosecution cannot credit the accused with faney defences in order to rebut them at the outset with some damning piece of prejudice. No doubt it is paradoxical that a man whose act is so nakedly wicked as to admit no doubt about its character may be better off in regard to admissibility of evidence than a man whose acts are, at any rate, capable of having a decent face put upon them, and that the accused can exclude evidence that would be admissible and fatal if he ran two defences, by prudently confining himself to one. Still, so it is." Per Lord Sumner (1918), 87 L.J.K.B. 478 at 484.

In cases of robbery or embezzlement, the need of money or the greed for money may be proved in evidence to show that the accused who had that need or entertained those feelings of greed, committed the crime. As said by Lord Atkinson in Thompson v. Director of Public Prosecutions (1918), 87 L.J.K.B. 478, at 481, "these things are not the less states of mind and feeling because they are described as motives for the commission of the crime." See also R. v. Gibson, 28 O.L.R. 525; R. v. Spain [1917], 2 W.W.R. 465, 27 Man. R. 473, 28 Can. Cr. Cas. 113.

In the leading case of Makin v. Attorney-General for New South Wales, [1894] A.C. 57, 63 L.J.P.C. 41, 6 R. 373, 17 Cox C.O. 704, 69 L.T. 778, it was decided by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council that evidence of other crimes was admissible under certain circumstances. In the judgment it is stated:—

"In their Lordships' opinion the principles which must govern the decision of the case are clear, though the application of them is by no means free from difficulty. It is undoubtedly not competent for the prosecution to adduce evidence tending to show that the accused has been guilty of criminal acts other than those covered by the indictment, for the purpose of leading to the conclusion that the accused is a person likely from his criminal conduct or character to have committed the offence for which he is being tried. On the other hand the mere fact that the evidence adduced tends to show the commission of other crimes does not render it inadmissible if it be relevant to an issue before the jury, and it may be so relevant if it bears upon the question whether the acts alleged to constitute the crime charged in the indictment were designed or accidental, or to rebut a defence which would otherwise be open to the accused. The statement of these general principles is easy, but it is obvious that it may often be very difficult to draw the line and to decide whether a particular piece of evidence is on the one side or the other. The principles which their Lordships have indicated appear to be on the whole consistent with the current of authority bearing on the point, though it cannot be denied that the decisions have not always been completely in accord." (1894 A.C. 57 at 65). This decision was applied in R. v. Collyns (1898), 3 Terr. L.R. 82, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 572.

In Rex. v. Bond [1906] 2 K.B. 389, 95 L.T. 296, 21 Cox C.C. 252, the evidence in question was considered admissible, but there was in addition to the evidence of one similar act evidence of a statement of the accused of the commission of several such acts. In R. v. Pollard (1909), 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 86, 19 O.L.R. 96, the evidence was that of a single act and the Judges who gave opinions refrained from answering the question asked by the reserved case, whether the evidence was properly admitted, but said that the conviction should be set aside and a new trial ordered. In both the cases mentioned the charge was abortion, or attempted abortion, and the act itself was not in dispute. In the Pollard case all of the Judges, and in the Bond case some of the Judges, held that to establish guilt it was necessary to establish a system which could not be done by evidence of a single additional case. In the Bond case, Bray, J., points out the distinction between such cases and those in which the evidence is given for the purpose of proving intent as negativing accident or mistake. It is also considered at length in Wigmore on Evidence, vol. 1, p. 301 et seq. 320, 321, and 365.

The Makin ease supra, decides that for the purpose of proving that the necused designed or intended to commit the erime, evidence of a similar act is relevant to prove that design. One act is as admissible as more, the difference being the weight to be attached. R. v. Wilson (1911), 1 W.W.R. 272, 19 W.L.R. 657, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 105 (Alta).

So if a defence of innocent motive and want of design has been suggested by the defence in its line of cross-examination of the Crown witnesses, the Crown may anticipate the defence so indicated by adducing evidence to rebut the theory of defence without waiting for the defence to call witnesses. R. v. Howes (1914), 7 W.W.R. 683, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 358 (Sask.). The evidence will have been legally received although the defence elects to call no witnesses. R. v. Howes, supra-

And it has been said that if the theory of the defence on a charge of theft from his employer throws the crime upon a fellow-employee of the accused, evidence might properly be received of another theft *by the accused from the same employer at about the same time. Rivet v. The King (1916), 24 Que, K.B. 559, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 235.

The principle is that the prosecution are not allowed to prove that a prisoner has committed the offence with which he is charged by giving evidence that he is a person of bad character and one who is in the habit of committing crimes, for that is equivalent to asking the jury to say that because the prisoner has committed other offences he must therefore be guilty of the particular offence for which he is being tried. But if the evidence of other offences does go to prove that he did commit the offence charged, it is admissible, because it is relevant to the issue; and it is admissible, not because, but notwithstanding that, it proves that the prisoner has committed another offence. Channell, J., in R. v. Fisher, [1910] 1 K.B. 149, 79 L.J.K.B. 187, approved in R. v. Rodley (1913), 9 Cr. App. R. 69 at 74; Minchin v. The King (1914), 6 W.W.R. 800, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 414, affirming 5 W.W.R. 1028, 7 Alta. L.R. 148; R. v. Gibson (1913), 28 O.L.R. 525, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 477. So evidence of an assault and robbery of one person may be evidence on a charge of the murder of another committed in pursuance of a scheme to rob them both and to get them separated for that purpose. If the criminal intent which it is sought to affirm is manifest without it in the event of the evidence for the prosecution being believed, and the intent is practically not in issue because of the defence relying altogether on a denial of the evidence for the prosecution, it would seem that evidence of other similar acts should be rejected. R. v. McDonald, 10 Ont. R. 553; R. v. McDonnell, 5 Cox 153; R. v. Bond [1906] 2 K.B. 389, 75 L.J.K.B. 693, 70 J.P. 424, 21 Cox C.C. 252; R. v. App. R. 230; R. v. Lovitt, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 15.

Evidence which would properly be admissible of similar prior acts under the doctrine laid down in Makin v. N.S.W. [1894] A.C. 57, 17 Cox C.C. 704 and R. v. Ball [1911] A.C. 47, 22 Cox C.C. 366, does not cease to be so because a prosecution for such prior acts has become barred by lapse of time. R. v. Shellaker [1914] 1 K.B. 414, 9 Cr. App. R. 240, (R. v. Beighton, 18 Cox C.C. 535, not approved); and see R. v. Smith (1915), 84 L.J.K.B. 2153; R. v. Francis, 30 L.T. 503.

Where evidence of similar facts would otherwise be admissible, the evidence will not be barred because it is the subject of separate indictments pending. R. v. Jones, 14 Cox 3; R. v. Stephens, 16 Cox 387; 58 L.T. 776, 52 J.P. 823; R. v. McDonald, 10 Ont. R. 553.

Evidence of subsequent criminal acts of the accused showing that they were intended to cover up the disappearance of the murdered man and of his effects which the accused had appropriated are admissible to negative a plea of killing in self-defence. R. v. Letain (1918), 1 W.W.R. 505, 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 389 (Man.).

The prosecution may, in order to prove the quality of the act charged in the indictment, give evidence of subsequent criminal acts by the prisoner, and the facts and circumstances surrounding the same, other than that covered by the indictment, when a prima facie case in law has been established against the prisoner of the act charged in the indictment. R. v. Smith (1915), 84 L.J.K.B. 2153, 11 Cr. App. R. 229.

Res gestae]—On a trial for murder by shooting, evidence of statements made by the person shot immediately after the shooting and while under apprehension of further danger from the accused and requesting assistance and protection therefrom, is admissible as part of the res gestae, even though the person accused of the offence was absent at the time when such statements were made. Gilbert v. The King, 38 S.C.R. 284, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 127.

Even if a statement of the deceased is not admissible as part of the res gestae because not coincident in point of time with the main facts to be proved, the words may be admissible if uttered in the presence and hearing of the accused, and under such circumstances, in the light of what he had previously stated to another of the parties present that he might have been reasonably expected to make some answer or remark in reply thereto. Gilbert v. The King (No. 2), 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 127, at 140, 38 S.C.R. 284.

To prove the alleged motive of securing life insurance moneys, in a trial for murder, evidence is properly admissible, as a part of the res gestae of all applications for insurance made practically at the same time and forming parts of one transaction, although some of the applications were refused and no insurance effected thereupon. R. v. Hammond (1898), 29 Ont. R. 211, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 373. But evidence of an attempt made some time previously by the accused to insure for his own benefit the life of a person other than the deceased is not admissible. R. v. Hendershott (1895), 26 Ont. R. 678.

When two similar acts, separately charged in two indictments, are done at practically the same time, on the trial of the former, evidence of the latter may be admissible as part of the res gestae. Rex v. Greenley, 10 Cr. App. B. 274.

In Thompson v. Trevanion, Skinner's Reports, p. 4022 (1693), tried before Chief Justice Holt sitting at Nisi Prius, it was held that what a woman said immediately on a hurt being received by her, and before she had time to contrive anything for her own advantage, might be given in evidence. The rule is here stated to rest on the absence of time or opportunity for concoction. In Regina v. Bedingfield, 14 Cox C.C. 341 (1879), a woman rushed out of a room with her throat almost cut through, made a statement to some women she met, and expired in a very short time. Her husband was found in this room with his throat cut also. The question at issue was murder or suicide. Chief Justice Cockburn said: "The woman's statement was not admissible, for it was not part of anything done, but something said after something done. It is not as if, while being in the room and the act was being done, she said something which was overheard." In other cases, such as Rex v. Foster, 6 C. & P. 325 (1834); Rex v. Lunny, 6 Cox C.C. 477 (1854), the rule was applied with less strictness. And a statement of the complainant made after the assault complained of and after the complainant had returned with a police officer and found the accused. was rejected, although only a few moments had elapsed, for the statement was separated by time and circumstance from the actual commission of the crime. Christie's Case, Director of Public Prosecutions v. Christie (1914), 10 Cr. App. R. 141; R. v. Foster, 6 C. & P. 325; Aveson v. Kinnaird, 6 East 188; R. v. McMahon (1889), 18 Out. R. 502; R. v. Misdirection]—Misdirection as to the essential constituents of the crime will be a cause for a new trial if prejudice to the accused resulted therefrom. Graves v. The King (No. 4), 47 S.C.R. 568, 12 E.L.R. 332, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 44, reversing R. v. Graves (No. 3), 20 Can. Cr. Cas. 438, 9 D.L.R. 175; R. v. Theriault (1894), 32 N.B.R. 504, 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 444. And failure to instruct the jury as to the difference between the offence charged and any lesser offence of which it would be competent for them to find the accused guilty on the same indictment, would be ground for a new trial. R. v. Wong On, 10 B.C.R. 555, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 423.

Ordinarily on a charge of murder the judge will find occasion to instruct the jury also as to the lesser crime of manslaughter; but if there was no evidence upon which the jury could reasonably have found a verdict of manslaughter, and the verdict must be either one of guilty of murder or an acquittal, the judge's charge would not be open to exception for not dealing with the law of manslaughter. Gilbert v. The King, 38 S.C.R. 284, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 127; Eberts v. The King, 3 W.W.R. 37, 47 S.C.R. 1, 22 W.L.R. 901; R. v. Barrett (1908), 1 Sask. L.R. 373.

Where the jury in a murder case would not have been justified, on the evidence, in coming to any other conclusion than that the killing was intentional, there being no evidence which would reduce the killing to manslaughter or non-culpable homicide, and the defence being a denial that the accused did it, the trial judge is justified in telling the jury that the accused is guilty of murder if he killed the deceased. R. v. Hoo Sam (1912), 1 W.W.R. 1049, 20 W.L.R. 571, 19 Can. Cr. Cas. 259 (Sask.); and see R. v. Gorges, 85 L.J.K.B. 1049, 25 Cox C.C. 218.

If a material question was raised on the evidence and a failure to give a proper direction upon it may have induced the jury to return a verdict of murder instead of manslaughter, a new trial will be ordered. R. v. Blythe, 19 O.L.R. 386, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 224; R. v. Daley, 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 177. When evidence at a trial for murder shows that the jury may reasonably infer a case of manslaughter, the judge should instruct the jury with reference to the crime of manslaughter, and this although the defence was that the shooting was in self-defence. R. v. Jagat Singh (1915), 9 W.W.R. 514, 32 W.L.R. 637 (B.C.).

It is a paramount principle of law that the defence must be put fairly before the jury. R. v. Hill (1911), 7 Cr. App. R. 26; R. v. Dinnick (1909), 3 Cr. App. R. 77, 26 Times L.R. 74; R. v. De Marco (1906), 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 497 (Ont.); R. v. Collins, 38 N.B.R. 218; R. v. Swyrda (1909), 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 138 (Ont.).

The defence in a criminal trial, although a weak one, must be fully and fairly put to the jury in the charge, that is, the substantial defence, not every part or particular of it. R. v. Trueman (1913), 9 Cr. App. R. 20, explaining R. v. Dinnick (1909), 3 Cr. App. R. 77; and see R. v. McDougall (1912), 7 Cr. App. R. 130.

The trial judge may give his own appreciation of the evidence to the jury which may or may not be accepted by them; the essential point is, that the whole evidence be submitted to the jury, who must finally decide as to the guilt of the necused. Rex v. Carlin, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 507, 12 Que. K.B. 483.

1 R. v.

It is not error for the judge to put forward a new theory as to the mode of killing in a capital case, but it is inadvisable for him to do so. R. v. Smith (1915), 25 Cox C.C. 271, 276.

In R. v. Mowbray (1912), 8 Cr. App. R. 8, Darling, J., said, that if the judge misstated the evidence in his summing up, and counsel knew it was a misstatement, he should have interrupted him at the time to have the statement corrected.

A slight inaccuracy in the judge's charge which could not have prejudiced the accused will not be a ground for a new trial. R. v. Haynes (1914), 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 101, 48 N.S.R. 133; and see Code sec. 1019.

If the appellate court is convinced that the jury could not have returned any other verdict had the correct instruction been given, the verdict must be affirmed under see. 1019, notwithstanding its incorrectness, as the errors in that case would not be prejudicial. R. v. Letain [1918] 1 W.W.R. 505; 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 389; R. v. Duckworth (1916), 37 O.L.R. 197, 10 O.W.N. 267, 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 314; R v. Romano, 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 30; Eberts v. The King, 47 S.C.R. 1, 20 Can. Cr. Cas. 273. The appellate court is to consider the possible or probable effect upon the jury of an erroneous charge or of the admission of irrelevant testimony. Ibid. R. v. Letain [1918] 1 W.W.R. 505, 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 389; R. v. Spain, 27 Man. R. 473; Ibrahim v. The King [1914] A.C. 599, 83 L.J.P.C. 185, 24 Cox C.C. 174.

In a trial for murder, counsel for the Crown in opening the case, directed the attention of the jury to the blood-stained clothing of one of the prisoners. It developed later in the trial that the witness capable of proving the ownership of the clothing was the wife of the prisoner in question, and she was not examined. The subject was not brought to the attention of the jury in any way, nor did the trial judge refer to it in his summing-up; nor was the charge objected to by either side: Held, that the counsel for the Crown should not have in his opening indicated evidence of such gravity which he subsequently was unable to submit to the Court and jury, and that omission by the trial judge to advise the jury to ignore the remarks of counsel was non-direction, causing a substantial wrong within the meaning of sec. 1019 of the Code, so as to entitle the accused to a new trial. R. v. Walker, 15 B.C.R. 100, 13 W.L.R. 47, 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 77.

Alibi]—The identification of a suspected person must be carefully conducted; it is wrong to point out the suspected person and ask "Is that the man?" R. v. Chapman, 7 Cr. App. R. 53. For the purpose of identification the suspected person should not be presented alone. R. v. Williams, 8 Cr. App. R. 84.

The defence of an alibi must be left to the jury; it is a misdirection if the judge rules it out. R. v. Rufino (1911), 7 Cr. App. R. 47.

Where the defence to a criminal charge is an alibi, it is misdirection to tell the jury that the onus is on the prisoner to prove it to their entire satisfaction, and to show beyond all question that he could not have been present at the commission of the erime. R. v. Myshrall, 35 N.B.R. 507; 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 474.

Disqualification of murderer to take property benefits of deceased on succession]—The person found guilty of causing the death of another by a criminal and felonious act, is disqualified from taking under the will of the deceased, at least in provinces in which doctrines of the English common law prevail. Lundy v. Lundy, 24 S.C.R. 650.

It would seem that there is no distinction in this respect between benefits accruing under a will and benefits by succession upon an intestacy. See re Maude Mason [1917] 1 W.W.R. 329 (B.C.), eiting Cleaver v. Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association [1892] 1 Q.B. 147, 61 L.J.Q.B. 128, Hall v. Knight [1914] P. 1, 83 L.J.P. 1, re Cora Crippen [1911] P. 108, 80 L.J. P. 47, and Standard Life v. Trudeau, 31 S.C.R. 376, and 9 Que. Q.B. 499.

Where a woman killed her daughter and then suicided, a case was submitted to the court in which it was admitted that the mother was "temporarily insane." On this state of facts it was held that the benefit which would have accrued to the mother from the daughter's estate passed to the mother, and on her suicide to her representatives on an intestacy. If a person commits homicide when unable, because of mental disease, to distinguish right from wrong and quite unable to appreciate the nature and quality of the act, this would form an excuse under the Criminal Code and the person would not be guilty of a "crime" and could not be convicted; she could, therefore, inherit the estate of the person killed if entitled by relationship to inherit. Re Maude Mason [1917] 1 W.W.R. 329, 23 B.C.R. 329.

Certain other classes of culpable homicide constitute murder.

forcible abduction, robbery, burglary or arson, culpable homicide is also murder, whether the offender means or not death to ensue, or knows or not that death is likely to ensue,—

- (b) if he administers any stupefying or overpowering thing for either of the purposes aforesaid, and death ensues from the effects thereof; or,
- (c) if he by any means wilfully stops the breath of any person for either of the purposes aforesaid, and death ensues from such stopping of the breath.

Origin]-Sec. 228, Code of 1892.

Homicide reduced to manslaughter.-Provocation.-Question of fact.

261. Culpable homicide, which would otherwise be murder, may be reduced to manslaughter if the person who causes death does so in the heat of passion caused by sudden provocation.

2. Any wrongful act or insult, of such a nature as to be sufficient to deprive an ordinary person of the power of selfcontrol, may be provocation if the offender acts upon it on the sudden, and before there has been time for his passion to cool.

3. Whether or not any particular wrongful act or insult amounts to provocation, and whether or not the person provoked was actually deprived of the power of self-control by the provocation which he received, shall be questions of fact: Provided that no one shall be held to give provocation to another by doing that which he had a legal right to do, or by doing anything which the offender incited him to do in order to provide the offender with an excuse for killing or doing bodily harm to any person.

4. The illegality of an arrest shall not necessarily reduce an offence of culpable homicide from murder to manslaughter, but if the illegality was known to the offender it may be evidence of provocation.

that at the time when the crime was committed the offender was actually so completely under the influence of passion arising from the provocation, that he was at that moment deprived of his power of self-control; and with this view it will be necessary to consider carefully the manner in which the crime was committed, the length of the interval between the provocation and the killing, the conduct of the offender during that interval, and all other circumstances tending to show his state of mind. R. v. Eagle, 2 F. & F. 827; R. v. Sherwood, 1 C. & K. 556; R. v. Smith 3, F. & F. 1066; R. v. McDowell, 25 U.C.Q.B. 108.

The test to be applied in order to determine whether homicide which would otherwise be murder is manslaughter by reason of provocation is whether the provocation was sufficient to deprive a reasonable man of his self-control, not whether it was sufficient to deprive the particular person charged with murder (e.g., a person afflicted with defective control and want of mental balance) of his self-control. R. v. Lesbini [1914] 3 K.B. 1116, 11 Cr. App. R. 7; R. v. Alexander, 9 Cr. App. R. 139; R. v. Welsh, 11 Cox C.C. 338.

The plea of provocation is not established where many hours had elapsed since the provocative incident and where the later attack on the deceased took the form of revenge. R. v. Albis (1913), 9 Cr. App. R. 158.

. It is not the want of mens rea that reduces the crime from murder to manslaughter; it is the provocation. R. v. Birchall (1913), 9 Cr. App. R. 91, at 93. The decision in R. v. Rothwell, 12 Cox C.C. 145, was in an extreme case and is not to be extended. R. v. Birchall, 9 Cr. App. R. 91. The suggestion was made in R. v. Palmer [1913] 2 K.B. 29, 82 L.J.K.B. 531, that the sudden discovery of adultery as constituing provocation would apply equally to a case where the person killed was the mistress of the accused as to a case where she was lawfully married to him, but the question was not there decided. In the later case of R. v. Greening [1913] 3 K.B. 846, the Court of Criminal Appeal held that the law on that point does not apply to the case of two persons living together though not married.

Provocation by one person followed by the homicide of another person by the person provoked will not reduce such homicide to manslaughter. R. v. Simpson (1915), 11 Cr. App. R. 218, 84 L.J.K.B. 1893. So a verdict of murder of a dying child of the accused was sustained where the father killed the child because he could not see it suffer and leave it to the continuous neglect of the mother. R. v. Simpson, supra.

While slight provocation has frequently been held to reduce the offence from murder to manslaughter where a man in consequence does an act which proves fatal though he did not use a deadly weapon nor intend to kill, the same result will not necessarily follow where death was the direct consequence of the act complained of, ex. gr. strangulation; it is not the same as if the act had been a push which unexpectedly caused a fatal fall. R. v. Philpot (1912), 7 Cr. App. R. 140.

Words alone cannot constitute sufficient provocation except in very special circumstances. R. v. Palmer [1913] 2 K.B. 29, 82 L.J.K.B. 531; R. v. McDowell, 25 U.C.Q.B. 108; R. v. Phillis 32 Times L.R. 414.

Violent temper does not reduce homicide from murder to manslaughter though words of provocation accompanied by such an act as spitting may do so. R. v. Mason, 8 Cr. App. R. 121.

The question of provocation must be put to the jury if the question arises upon the evidence, although not raised by defendant's counsel and regardless of the line of defence. R. v. Hopper [1915] 2 K.B. 431, 84 L.J.K.B. 1371, 11 Cr. App. R. 136. See also R. Barrett, 1 Sask. L.B. 373, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 464, where it was held that the evidence did not raise a case of provocation, no such claim being set up at the trial when the defence proceeded upon the ground of accidental shooting.

It is for the jury and not for the judge to determine any question of fact, upon which the legal right referred to in sub-sec. (3) of sec. 261 depends; any question of fact on which the right of the deceased to forcibly eject the accused, including the questions whether the deceased first ordered him to leave, whether there was a refusal or unreasonable delay in leaving, and whether unnecessary force was used, are to be decided by the jury. R. v. Brennan (1896), 27 Ont. R. 659, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 41; and see Code sec. 66 as to excess of force, and secs. 60 and 61 as to defence of dwelling-house.

Manslaughter defined.

262. Culpable homicide, not amounting to murder, is manslaughter.

Origin]-Sec. 230, Code of 1892.

Manslaughter]--When culpable homicide is not murder (Code secs. 259, 260), it is manslaughter. Code secs. 252, 262,

Where a person strikes another wantonly and unlawfully, but without any intention of doing him bodily harm, and thereby caused the other to fall and dislocates his spine, and death results therefrom shortly afterwards, the assaulting party is guilty of manslaughter, although death would not ordinarily result either from the blow or the fall. R. v. Chisholm (1908), 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 15 (N.S.).

Any person, whether a manager, agent, or holding no official relation to the railway, may be guilty of manslaughter, not merely for violation of law, or disobedience to rules established by the company according to law, but even in doing what is in itself legal, if the act or acts are done with malice or gross negligence whereby a life is lost. Ex parte Brydges, 18 L.C. Ibid.

It is a question for the jury on a charge of manslaughter against a police officer for shooting a person fleeing from arrest whether the officer intended only to wound the fugitive and so stop his flight, and acted reasonably in shooting, or whether there was excess of force and no necessity for shooting in the way he did to prevent the escape. R. v. Smith, 17 Man. R 282.

The criminality of negligence leading to manslaughter may be mitigated by the negligence of the deceased. R. v. Stubbs, 8 Cr. App. R. 238, 29 Times L.R. 421.

Shooting and killing a person in the heathen belief that he was shooting an evil spirit which had assumed human form is manslaughter. R. v. Machekequonabe (1897), 28 Ont. R. 309, 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 138.

If a person feloniously fires at another in such circumstances as would make the killing of that other person manslaughter, but by accident he hits and kills a third person whom he never intended to hit at all, he is guilty of manslaughter. Rex. v. Gross, 23 Cox C.C. 455.

The principle under which a homicide may be held justifiable cannot be carried to the length of holding that, because one man has abused and threatened another, even to the point of making him reasonably apprehensive that on some future occasion he may be killed or suffer grievous bodily harm, he may take advantage of an opportunity to kill the aggressor when the latter is helpless and he is well armed. R. v. Moke [1917] 3 W.W.R. 575, 28 Can. Cr. Cas. 296 (Alta.).

Manslaughter by neglect of a duty tending to the preservation of life]-See Code secs. 241-249 for declarations of criminal responsibility in various cases. The neglects referred to in secs. 241, 242 and 243 are punishable as culpable homicide (murder or manslaughter, according to the eircumstances), in the event of death resulting. If death did not result, sec. 244 would apply to fix the punishment. Secs. 247 and 252 do not extend the criminal liability of a corporation as regards the maintenance of dangerous things beyond the liability at common law; R. v. Great West Laundry Co. (1900), 13 Man. R. 66, 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 514; and a corporation cannot be guilty of manslaughter. Ibid.; Union Colliery Co. v. The Queen, 31 S.C.R. 81, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 400. A corporation neglecting its duty of avoiding danger to human life under circumstances under which an individual doing the same would be guilty of manslaughter, will be liable on indictment under sec. 284 for causing grievous bodily injury. Union Colliery Co. v. The Queen, supra; Code sec. 920, 1029.

[§ 262]

The accidental shooting of a man in mistake for a moose while hunting will be manslaughter if due care was not exercised; but the gravity of the charge is not increased by the fact that the hunting was in the close season. R. v. Oxley (1914), 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 262.

Matters of justification or excuse]—Code sees. 16-66; R. v. Scott, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 442; Graves v. The King, 47 S.C.R. 568, 12 E.L.R. 332, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 44.

A mere error of judgment in the navigation of a ship will not make its master or pilot liable for manslaughter because a fatal collision ensues. R. v. Delisle (1896), 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 210 (Que.); R. v. Mackey (1918), 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 167 (N.S.).

No second indictment for same homicide]-Code sec. 909, as to indictment for manslaughter after indicting for murder, or vice versa.

Proof of part only of the offence charaed]-Under sec. 951, if the commission of the offence charged includes the commission of any other offence, the person accused may be convicted of any offence so included which is proved, although the whole offence charged is not proved; or the jury may convict of an attempt of the full offence or of an attempt of the lesser offence according to the evidence. Secs. 949, 951. If the charge be for murder, a count for another offence cannot be joined, sec. 856; but the jury may find the accused not guilty of murder but guilty of manslaughter. Code sec. 951. The jury may not, however, on a count for murder, find the accused guilty of any other offence than murder or manslaughter. If the indictment be for manslaughter, counts may be joined for other offences subject to the right of the court to order a separate trial; Code secs. 856, 857; and even on the manslaughter count the verdict may be for any offence included in the offence charged in that count or for an attempt to commit any such lesser offence included. Code sec. 951. It has been held, however, that the offence of inflicting grievous bodily harm could not be returned on a manslaughter count; and, consequently, an acquittal on the manslaughter charge would not be a bar to a subsequent charge of inflicting grievous bodily harm based upon the same circumstances. R. v. Shea, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 319; and see Code sec. 907.

When, on a trial for murder, the judge has recommended a verdict of manslaughter in the event of the jury finding the accused not guilty of murder, the judge may ask the jury whether they find manslaughter. R. v. Baxter, 9 Cr. App. R. 60.

Plea of summary conviction for the assault conducing to the homicide]—Sec. 734 provides that if the person pays the amount adjudged on a charge laid by the party aggrieved, he shall be released "from all further or other proceedings, civil or criminal, for the same cause." Similarly as to the criminal responsibility, sec. 792 provides that, in the event of the summary trial of an indictable offence under Part XVI, every person who obtains a certificate of dismissal or is convicted under preliminary enquiry that the accused may be able to convince the jury that his act was done in self-defence. R. v. Monvoisin, 20 Man. R. 568.

It was held by the Court for Crown Cases Reserved in R. v. Morris (1867), L.R. 1 C.C.R. 90, that a summary conviction for assault and the imprisonment consequent thereon are not either at common law or under 24-25 Vict., c. 100, s. 45 (Code sec. 734), a bar to an indictment for manslaughter of the person assaulted, should he subsequently die from the effects of the assault; (per Martin, B., and Byles and Shee, JJ.; Kelly, C.B., dissenting). In the last-mentioned case, Martin, B., considered the word "cause" in the statute corresponding to s. 866 of the Code, as used synonymously with the words " accusation " or " charge "; while Byles, J., said that the word "cause" may undoubtedly mean "act," but it is ambiguous, and it may also and, perhaps, with greater propriety, be held to mean "cause for the accusation"; and in that view the cause for the indictment for manslaughter comprehended more than the cause in the summons before the magistrates, "for it comprehends the death of the party assaulted." R. v. Morris, L.R. 1 C.C.R. 95; R. v. Friel, 17 Cox C.C. 325.

The probability of the accused voluntarily appearing to take his trial does not, in contemplation of law, exist when the crime charged is of the highest magnitude, the evidence in support of the charge strong, and the punishment is the highest known to the law. In such case the judge will not interfere to admit to bail. Baronnet's Case (1852), 1 E. & B. 1; but when either of these ingredients is wanting, the judge has a discretion which he will exercise. Ex parte Maguire (1857), 7 L.C.R. 57; R. v. Spicer (1901), 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 229. But if these elements be combined in any case bail will be refused. Ex parte Corriveau (1856), 6 L.C.R. 249; Ex parte Robinson (1854), 25 Eng. Law & Eq. R. 215; same case, re Robinson, 23 L.J.Q.B. 286; and see R. v. Rose, 68 L.J.Q.B. 289, 18 Cox C.C. 717; R. v. Chapman, 8 C. & P. 558; Re Barthelemy, 1 E. & B. & Dears. C.C. 60.

If a true bill has been found by the grand jury, that fact will have great weight in the question of admitting to bail, but it is not conclusive as to the prisoner's right to bail; and if upon reading the depositions against him, they are found to create but a very slight suspicion of the prisoner's guilt, he should be admitted to bail, notwithstanding the refusal of the Crown officers to consent. Ex parte Maguire (1857), 7 LC.R. 57.

If the depositions afford a presumption of guilt, at least so strong that a grand jury would in the opinion of the judge hearing the application for bail, find a true bill for murder against the accused, the application should be refused. R. v. Mullady and Donovan (1868), 4 Ont. Pr. 314, per Draper, C.J. R. v. Monvoisin, 20 Man. R. 568. Prisoners charged with murder will not be admitted to bail unless it be under very extreme circumstances, as where facts are brought before the court to show that the indictment cannot be sustained. R. v. Murphy (1853), 2 N.S.R. 158. But the court has undoubted power to admit to bail in cases of murder. Re Barthelemy (1852), 1 E. & B. 8, Dears. C.C. 60.

In Newfoundland some of the persons charged with murder alleged to have been committed during a riot were admitted to bail on the postponement of their trial, where the witnesses for the defence, numbering about seventy, were engaged to prosecute their employment in the sea fishery and their detention would deprive them of their means of livelibood at the only season when they could earn it for themselves, the court discriminating as to the parties to be liberated on an analysis of the testimony. R. v. Coady (1885), Morris' Newfoundland Decisions 58.

In ex parte Baker (1872), 3 Revue Critique (Que.) 46, a verdiet of wilful murder had been returned at a coroner's inquest, and a true bill subsequently found by the grand jury against the accused. He was tried and the jury differed in opinion and were discharged. It did not appear how the jury were divided, or what was the precise obstacle to their unanimity. Application was made by the prisoner's counsel for permission to give bail for his appearance to take another trial, and on the return of a writ of habeas corpus before the full Court of Queen's Bench (Duval, C.J., Caron, Drummond, Badgley and Monk, JJ.), the accused was admitted to bail.

The mere circumstances that the accused is able to give any reasonable amount of bail which may be asked of him is not per se a ground for the application. R. v. McCormick, 17 Irish Common Law Rep. 411.

It is for the court to exercise a sound discretion, and if satisfied that notwithstanding the ordering of bail, the prisoners are, in view of all the circumstances, likely to be forthcoming at the proper time to answer the charge, bail may be ordered. R. v. Keeler (1877), 7 Ont. Pr. 117, 120, per Harrison, C.J.; R. v. Wood, 9 Ir. L.R. 71; R. v. Gallagher, 7 Ir. C.L. 19; R. v. McCartie, 11 Ir. C.L. 188.

If the offence be not very serious and the depositions disclose no more than slender grounds of suspicion, bail may be allowed. R. v. Jones, 4 U.C.R. (O.S.) 18.

The court should not, on an application for bail, weigh and decide the question of credibility of witnesses. R. v. Keeler (1877), 7 Ont. Pr. 117, 123.

Joint indictment]—If two persons are indicted jointly, and one is called as a witness for the other, it is in the power of the jury to acquit the former and to convict the latter, and the judge is not bound to direct them that if they accept the evidence on behalf of the deponent they must accept it on behalf of the other defendant. R. v. Seddon (1912), 7 Cr. App. R. 207.

Leave to change a plea of guilty to a plea of not guilty may be granted after a verdict of acquittal of the person jointly indicted, if the case were such that the verdict in effect negatived the plea of guilty. R. v. Herbert (1903), 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 214. λ

While, under the criminal law, the accused person is not called upon to explain suspicious circumstances, there may yet come a time when, circumstantial evidence having enveloped him in a strong network of inculpatory facts, he is bound to make some explanation or stand condemned. R. v. Jenkins, 14 B.C.R. 61, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 221.

As to procuring the attendance of witnesses, see Code secs. 971-977. A witness asked a question the answer to which may tend to eriminate him must answer notwithstanding his objection taken upon that ground, but the fact of objecting will prevent the use of his testimony against himself in a subsequent charge except for perjury in such testimony. Can. Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145, sec. 5; re Ginsberg 40, O.L.R. 136.

The evidence of a young child may be taken without oath in certain cases. Can. Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145, sec. 16; and any witness objecting on grounds of conscientious scruples may take a solemn affirmation in place of an oath. Ibid, sec. 14.

A witness may be cross-examined as to former written statements made by him relative to the subject matter, but if it is intended to contradict the witness by the writing, his attention is to be called to the parts of the writing to be so used; and the judge may order the production of the writing for his inspection. Can. Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145. A witness may also be cross-examined as to previous oral statements made by him relative to the subject matter of the case. If the previous statement is inconsistent with his present testimony and he does not "distinctly admit" that he made it, proof may be given that he did in fact make it, but the circumstances of the alleged previous statement are to be disclosed to the witness in such cross-examination and he is to be asked whether or not he made it. Can. Evid. Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145, sec. 11; see R. v. Webb (1914), 6 W.W.R. 358, 24 Man. R. 437, 27 W.L.R. 313, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 424, sec. 10; R. v. Duckworth, 37 O.L.R. 197, 26 Can. Cr. Testimony of accomplices]—The jury should be cautioned against acting on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. R. v. Tate [1908] 2 K.B. 680, 77 L.J.K.B. 1043; R. v. Ratz (1913), 4 W.W.R. 1231, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 343, 24 W.L.R. 908.

An accessory before the fact is an accomplice within this rule. R. v. Ratz, supra; 12 Cyc. 445, 446.

If the judge charges the jury that their verdict depends on which witness they believe, and because no reference was made to the one being an accomplice, the effect of the charge was to place the accomplice on the same footing as the ordinary witness, there is a miscarriage of justice. R. v. Tate, supra.

Evidence which is consistent with two opposite views is not corroborative of either, but if the accused has denied one of these views it then becomes corroborative of the other theory of the case. R. v. Peterson [1917] 1 W.W.R. 600, 9 Sask. L.R. 432, 35 W.L.R. 600, 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 3, affirmed in Peterson v. The King [1917] 3 W.W.R. 345, 55 S.C.R. 115, 28 Can. Cr. Cas. 332. But the failure of the jury to follow the advice of the judge not to convict on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice will not alone be ground for a new trial. R. v. Betchel (1912), 2 W.W.R. 624, 21 W.L.R. 665, 19 Can. Cr. Cas. 423. And see generally as to an accomplice's testimony; R. v. Stubbs, 25 L.J.M.C. 16; R. v. Prisoner without counsel]—On a trial for murder if the prisoner has no means with which to fee counsel and his friends have not provided counsel for him, it is usual for the court to assign him counsel from the junior Bar to act gratuitously. The court copy of the depositions on the preliminary enquiry should in such cases be placed at counsel's disposal or a copy of same supplied to him by the Crown.

Addresses of counsel to the jury]-Code secs. 942, 944.

Juries in capital cases]—The jury is not to be permitted to separate; Code see. 945 (5); and directions must be given by the judge on any adjournment that the jury be kept together and provision made for preventing them from holding communication with anyone on the subject of the trial. Code sec. 945. The verdict may be taken on a Sunday or holiday. Code sec. 961. If the court is satisfied that the jury are unable to agree an order may be made discharging them and a new jury may be called. Code sec. 960.

Attempts to commit murder.

264. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for life, who, with intent to commit murder,—

- (a) administers any poison or other destructive thing to any person, or causes any poison or destructive thing to be so administered or taken, or attempts to administer it, or attempts to cause it to be so administered or taken; or,
- (b) by any means whatever wounds or causes any grievous bodily harm to any person; or,
- (c) shoots at any person, or, by drawing a trigger or in any other manner, attempts to discharge at any person any kind of loaded arms; or,
- (d) attempts to drown, suffocate, or strangle any person; or,
- (e) destroys or damages any building by the explosion of any explosive substance; or,
- (f) sets fire to any ship or vessel or any part thereof, or any part of the tackle, apparel or furniture thereof, or to any goods or chattels being therein; or.
- (g) casts away or destroys any vessel; or,
- (h) by any other means attempts to commit murder.

Jurisdiction of sessions excluded]—See sec. 583. The offence is not subject to summary trial under Part XVI, because it is not triable by the Sessions. Code sec. 777.

Attempt to murder]—If two persons are engaged in a common unlawful enterprise, and one of them, to avoid apprehension, attempts murder, both may be found guilty of the felony if the jury are satisfied from their conduct at the time that at any moment there was a determination on the part of each to aid the other in escaping arrest; but if it can be ascertained which actually made the attempt, the sentence on him should be the heavier; R. v. On an indictment for wounding with intent to murder, the jury should be directed in a proper case that they were entitled to find a verdict of unlawful wounding. R. v. Parks (1914), 10 Cr. App. R. 50.

In R. v. Connor (1913), 8 Cr. App. R. 152, four men were indicted on five counts arising out of a faction vendetta in Birmingham. Two counts were for shooting with intent to murder, one for shooting with intent to maim, one for shooting with intent to do grievous bodily harm, and one for felonious wounding with intent to do grievous bodily harm. The case was opened, and the evidence supported the view that it was one affray committed within the space of a minute, and that four people took part. In the course of this affray some one shot, and others helped in the shooting of the prosecutor and some one struck him. The court held that where, without objection, the circumstances arising out of one affray are proved before the jury, the verdict may be that the prisoners are guilty of different acts of violence arising out of that affray, where there was no question of embarrassment or that the whole matter could not be tried properly. One man could be found guilty of shooting with intent to murder, and another man with striking with intent to cause grievous bodily harm. R. v. Connor (1913), 8 Cr. App. R. 152.

Prisoner's confession induced by false statement of police]-In R. v. White, 18 O.L.R. 840, the prisoner, White, was tried for attempting to murder J.P., whose wife, M.P., was tried at the same time for aiding and abetting in the attempt. Before the trial, and while White was in custody, a police officer made an untrue statement to him, that M.P. had "done some talking" about the matter, upon which White voluntarily made statements to the officer as to the key of J.P.'s house, and as to a club which he said he had used. It was held that evidence was properly admitted as to the statements made by White with regard to the key and the club. Subsequently to the making of the untrue statement by the police officer, conversations were overheard between W. and his father and between White and M.P., in which the former admitted his guilt. That evidence was held to have been properly admitted as to these conversations. R. v. White, 18 O.L.R. 840, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 30. Though the practice is not to be approved of, it is, generally speaking, no objection to the admissibility of a prisoner's confession that it was obtained by means of a trick or artifice practised upon him by the officer or other person to whom it was made. R. v. White, supra.

Sub-sec. (a)—" Administers" any poison, ctc.]—Where a servant in preparing breakfast for her mistress put arsenic into the coffee, and afterwards told her mistress that she had prepared the coffee for her, and the mistress drank the coffee, it was held that this was an "administering" within the corresponding English statute, 7 Wm. IV, and 1 Vict., ch. 85, sec. 2, re-enacted 24-25 Vict., ch. 100, sec. 11. R. v. Harley (1830), 4 C. & P. 369. And it has been held that a poisonous herry given with intent to kill is "administered" although by reason of being given entire in the pod which will not dissolve in the stomach no injurious effects followed. R. v. Cluderay (1849), 1 Den. C.C. 514, 4 Cox C.C. 84.

Where the accused with intent to murder gave poison to A. to administer as a medicine to B., but A. neglecting to give it to B., it was by chance given to B. by a child, this was held an administering by the accused. R. v. Michael (1840), 2 Mood. C.C. 120, 9 C. & P. 356.

Sub-sec. (b)—" Wounds "]—To constitute a "wound" the continuity of the skin must be broken. R. v. Wood (1830), 1 Mood. C.C. 278. There must be a division not merely of the cuticle or upper skin but of the whole skin. R. v. McLaughlin (1838), 8 C. & P. 635; R. v. Becket (1836), 1 M. & Rob. 526; R. v. Smith (1837), 8 C. & P. 173; R. v. Warman (1846), 1 Den. 183; R. v. Briggs (1831), 1 Mood. C.C. 318; R. v. Becket (1836), 1 M. & Rob. 526.

Sub-sec. (b)—Grievous bodily harm]—If the bodily injury be such as seriously to interfere with health or comfort that is sufficient, and it is not necessary that it should be either permanent or dangerous. R. v. Cox (1818), R. & R. 362; R. v. Ashman (1858), 1 F. & F. 88.

Sub-sec. (c)—Shooting with intent]—Possession of burglar's tools at the time of the shooting may be evidence of intent. R. v. Mooney, 15 Que. K.B. 57. Where the accused was charged with wounding T. with intent to murder hin, and it appeared in evidence that the defendant intended to murder M. and that he shot at and wounded T., supposing him to be M., and the jury found that he intended to murder the man at whom he shot, supposing him to be M., the conviction was upheld. R. v. Smith (1856), Dears. 559, 25 L.J.M.C. 29; R. v. Stopford (1870), 11 Cox C.C. 643; and see Code sec. 259; R. v. Fretwell, L. & C. 443, 9 Cox C.C. 471, 33 L.J.M.C. 128.

Sub-sec. (c)—Attempts to discharge loaded arms]—If a person intending to shoot another puts his finger on the trigger of a loaded firearm, but is prevented from pulling the trigger, it is nevertheless an attempt to discharge loaded arms under this section. R. v. Duckworth [1892] 2 Q.B. 83, 17 Cox C.C. 495; R. v. Brown (1883), 10 Q.B.D. 381; (R. v. St. George (1840), 9 C. & P. 483, overruled.)

The expression "loaded arms" includes any gun, pistol or other arm loaded with gunpowder, or other explosive substance, and ball, shot, slug or other destructive material, or charged with compressed air and ball, shot, slug or other destructive material. Sec. 2 (19).

Sub-sec. (h)—By any other means attempts to commit murder]— Where a woman jumped out of a window to avoid the violence of her husband, it was held that to constitute this offence it must be proved that he intended by his conduct to make her jump out. R. v. Donovan (1850), 4 Cox C.C. 401.

Letters threatening murder.

265. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to ten years' imprisonment who sends, delivers or utters, or directly or indirectly causes to be received, knowing the contents thereof, any letter or writing threatening to kill or murder any person.

Origin]-Sec. 233, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 173, sec. 7.

Threats to kill]—The gravamen of the charge is not in meaning to carry out the threat contained in the letter, but in sending or uttering it with knowledge of the contents. Compare R. v. Johnson (1913), 9 Cr. App. R. 57, where the charge was one of maliciously sending a letter threatening to murder.

Conspiring to murder.-Counselling murder.

266. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to fourteen years' imprisonment, who,—

(a) conspires or agrees with any person to murder or to cause to be murdered any other person, whether the person intended to be murdered is a subject of His Majesty or not, or is within His Majesty's dominions or not; or,

[§ 264]

CONSPIRACY TO MURDER

[§ 266]

(b) counsels or attempts to procure any person to murder such other person anywhere, although such person is not murdered in consequence of such counselling or attempted procurement.

Origin]-Sec. 234, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 162, sec. 3.

Counselling murder]—This offence may be committed by the publication of a newspaper article exulting in the assassination of a foreign monarch and commending it as an example to revolutionists throughout the world; and the counselling need not be directed to any particular person. R. v. Most (1881), 7 Q.B.D. 244; 14 Cox C.C. 583.

Where the indictment is for soliciting another to commit murder it is unnecessary to negative the commission of the murder which, if committed, would render the accused guilty of the principal offence as an accessory before the fact (see. 69), for it cannot be intended that the principal offence has been committed where it is not charged. 1 Stark, Cr. Plead., 2nd ed., 148; R. v. Higgins (1801), 2 East 5, 6 R.R. 615.

Counselling or inciting offences generally]—See sec. 69. Jurisdiction of sessions excluded]—Code sec. 583. Jurisdiction of summary trial excluded]—Code sec. 777.

Accessory after the fact to murder.

267. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for life, who is an accessory after the fact to murder.

Origin]-Sec. 235, Code of 1892.

Assisting a murderer after the crime]—The accused must be proved to have done some act to assist the murderer personally: R. v. Chapple (1840), 9 C. & P. 355; or by employing another person to harbour or relieve him. R. v. Greenacre (1837), 8 C. & P. 35; R. v. Butterfield (1843), 1 Cox C.C. 39; R. v. Lee (1834), 6 C. & P. 536; R. v. Jarvis (1837), 2 M. & Rob. 40; or some other act within the terms of Code sec. 71 in reference to the murder.

Indictment of accessory after the fact to murder]—An accessory before the fact is a party to the principal offence and may be charged therewith, but an accessory after the fact is not a party to it so as to be so chargeable, but is to be charged with the separate offence of being such accessory. Sec. 856 precludes the joinder with a charge of murder of a count charging any offence other than murder, and it would seem that an accessory after the fact to murder should be charged by a separate indictment notwithstanding the general wording of sec. 849.

Punishment for manslaughter.

268. Every one who commits manslaughter is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for life.

Origin]—Sec. 236, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 162, sec. 5. Jurisdiction of sessions excluded]—See sec. 583.

Suicide.

Alding or counselling suicide.

269. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for life who counsels or procures any person to commit suicide, actually committed in consequence of such counselling or procurement, or who aids or abets any person in the commission of suicide.

Origin]-Sec. 237, Code of 1892.

Common intention to prosecute an unlawful purpose]—See sec. 69 as to aiders and abettors in the commission of offences.

Attempt to commit suicide.

270. Every one who attempts to commit suicide is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment.

Origin]-Sec. 238, Code of 1892.

Attempt to commit suicide]—An attempt to commit suicide is now viewed in England as an attempted "felony." R. v. Mann [1914] 2 K.B. 117, 10 Cr. App. R. 31, explaining R. v. Burgess, L. & C. 258; and see R. v. Robinson [1915] 2 K.B. 342. The Canadian Criminal Code, sec. 14, abolishes the distinction between felony and misdemeanour. Code sec. 1033 enacts that an inquest or judgment of felo de se shall not cause any attainder or forfeiture.

Drunkenness as affecting intent]-Compare sec. 259 as to murder.

CONCEALMENT OF BIRTH

Neglect in Childbirth and Concealing Dead Body.

Neglecting to obtain assistance in childbirth.

271. Every woman is guilty of an indictable offence who, with either of the intents in this section mentioned, being with child and being about to be delivered, neglects to provide reasonable assistance in her delivery, if the child is permanently injured thereby, or dies, either just before, or during, or shortly after birth, unless she proves that such death or permanent injury was not caused by such neglect, or by any wrongful act to which she was a party, and is liable,—

- (a) if the intent of such neglect be that the child shall not live, to imprisonment for life;
- (b) if the intent of such neglect be to conceal the fact of her having had a child, to imprisonment for seven years.

Origin]-Sec. 239, Code of 1892.

Duty to provide necessaries for child]—Code sees. 241, 242, 242A; and see see. 256 as to acceleration of death; sees. 252, 257 and 262, as to causing death by omission of duty.

Concealing dead body of child.

272. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment, who disposes of the dead body of any child in any manner, with intent to conceal the fact that its mother was delivered of it, whether the child died before, or during, or after birth.

Origin]-Sec. 240, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 162, sec. 49; 24-25 Vict., Imp., ch. 100, sec. 60; 32-33 Vict., Can., ch. 20, sec. 61.

Verdict on acquittal on murder charge]—On an indictment for the murder of a child recently born and acquittal of that offence, the jury is empowered, if the facts warrant it, to bring in a conviction for concealment of birth. Sec. 952.

Concealment of birth]—Although the mere denial of the birth will not support a conviction; R. v. Turner (1839), 8 C. & P. 755; it is a factor in proof of the offence. R. v. Piché (1879), 30 U.C.C.P. 409. What is a disposition with intent to conceal, must depend on the circumstances of each particular case. The most complete exposure of the body might be a concealment, ex. gr. if placed in a secluded place where the body would not be likely to be found. R. v. Brown (1870), L.R. 1

"Child "]-See Code sec. 251.

Intent to conceal]—Former statutes required that there should be a "secret disposition" of the dead body.

Under the former law it was held to be a "secret disposition" where the woman placed the dead body of the child of which she had been delivered between a trunk and the wall of a room in which she lived alone, and on being charged with having had a child she at first denied it, but being pressed she pointed out where the body was. R. v. Piché, 30 U.C.C.P. 409.

A final disposition of the body of the child is not essential, and it is an offence if it be hid in a place from which a further removal was contemplated. R. v. Goldthorpe (1841), 2 Moo. C.C. 244; R. v. Perry (1855), Dears. 471.

Where the only evidence was that the woman had been delivered of a child the body of which was taken away by two other persons, but the prisoner did not know where it was put, it was held insufficient. R. v. Bate (1871), 11 Cox C.C. 686.

There must be an identification of the body found as being that of the child of which she is alleged to have been delivered. R. v. Williams (1871), 11 Cox C.C. 684.

It must also be proved that the body concealed was that of a child dead at the time of the disposal or concealment. R. v. Bell (1874), Irish R. 8 C.L. 541; R. v. May (1867), 16 L.T. Rep. 362; 10 Cox C.C. 448.

The mere denial of the birth is not sufficient proof of intent to conceal. R. v. Turner (1839), 8 C. & P. 755. It must be shown that the accused did some act of disposal of the body after the child was dead. Ibid.

The fact that the mother had previously allowed the birth to be known to some persons is not conclusive evidence negativing intent to conceal. R. v. Douglas (1836), 1 Mood. C.C. 480; R. v. Cornwall (1817), R. & R. 336; R. v. Morris, 2 Cox C.C. 489.

Confession as evidence]—A. being questioned by a police constable about the concealment of a birth gave an answer which caused the officer to say to her, "It might be better for you to tell the truth and not a lie"; and it was held that a further statement made by her to the officer was inadmissible in evidence, as not being free and voluntary. She was taken into custody on the same day, placed with two accomplices, and charged with the concealment of birth. All three then made statements. It was held that those made by the accomplices could not be deemed to be affected by the previous inducement to A. and were therefore admissible against themselves, although that made by A. was inadmissible. When before the magistrate for the preliminary inquiry the three prisoners received the formal caution (see, 591) from the magistrate as to anything they wished to say in regard to the charge, and A. then made a statement which was taken down in writing and attached to the deposition, and this latter statement was admissible in evidence against her. R. v. Bate (1871), 11 Cox C.C. 686.

Neglect in childbirth occasioning death of or permanent injury to child]—See sec. 271.

Neglect to register birth]--This subject is dealt with by provincial haw and penalties provided for default. In Ontario, see the Vital Statistics Act, R.S.O. 1914, ch. 49.

Bodily Injuries and Acts and Omissions Causing Danger to the Person.

Wounding with intent.

273. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for life who, with intent to maim, disfigure or disable any person, or to do some other grievous bodily harm to any person, or with intent to resist or prevent the lawful apprehension or detainer of any person, unlawfully by any means wounds or causes any grievous bodily harm to any person, or shoots at any person, or by drawing a trigger, or in any other manner, attempts to discharge any kind of loaded arms at any person.

Origin]-Sec. 241, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 162, sec. 13.

Shooting with intent]—Where intent is an ingredient of a crime it must be shown by the prosecution, and it is error to direct the jury that the onus of proof to satisfy them that a gun was discharged accidentally was upon the accused; the accused ought not to be found guilty if he satisfies them that it is reasonably possible that he did not intend to do it. Per Channell, J., in R. v. Davies (1913), 8 Cr. App. R. 211. The maxim that the law presumes a man to intend the natural consequences of his acts refers only to his conscious acts, not to his mistakes. Ibid.

"With intent to maim, disfigure or disable "]—To maim is to injure any part of a man's body which may render him, in fighting, less able to defend himself or to annoy his enemy. 1 Hawk., ch. 44, sec. 1; R. v. Sullivan (1841), C. & Mar. 209. To disfigure is to do some external injury which may detract from his personal appearance. To disable is to do something which creates a permanent disability and not merely a temporary injury. Archbold Cr. Plead. (1900), 807; R. v. Boyce (1824), 1 Mood. CC. 29.

With intent "to do some other grievous bodily harm"]—The intent may be inferred from the act committed. R. v. Le Dante, 2 Geldert & Oxley (N.S.) 401.

A person who fires a loaded pistol into a group of persons, not aiming at any one in particular, but intending generally to do grievous bodily harm, and who hits one of them, may be convicted on an indictment charging him with shooting at the person he has hit with intent to do grievous bodily harm to that person. R. v. Fretwell (1864), L. & C. 443, 9 Cox C.C. 471.

An indictment charging the accused with wounding A. with intent to do him grievous bodily injury will be supported by evidence that he intended to do grievous bodily harm to the man he wounded, and who, in fact was A., although the accused did not think that he was A., but somebody else. R. v. Stopford (1870), 11 Cox C.C. 643. It will also be sufficient under this section that the defendant wounded, etc., any person with intent to inflict grievous bodily harm on a third person. R. v. Latimer (1886), 17 Q.B.D. 359, 16 Cox 707, 70

With intent to resist apprehension, etc.]—The apprehension or detainer which is the subject of the "intent to resist or prevent," must have been a lawful apprehension or detainer. See as to justification of arrest or other detention, sec. 23 et seq.

Unlawfully wounds or causes any grievous bodily harm]-Compare with sec. 242 (b).

An injury seriously interfering with health or comfort, although neither permanent nor endangering life, is sufficient. R. v. Ashman (1858), 1 F. & F. 88; R. v. Cox (1818), R. & R. 362.

As to matters of justification and excuse, see secs. 16-68.

Attempts to discharge loaded arm]—There may be such an "attempt" where a revolver was drawn but the other person seized the offender and successfully resisted his efforts to shoot. R. v. Linneker [1906], 2 K.B. 99.

BODILY INJURIES

Wounding .- Inflicting grievous bodily harm.

274. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to three years' imprisonment who unlawfully wounds or inflicts any grievous bodily harm upon any other person, either with or without any weapon or instrument.

Vict., Imp., ch. 100, sec. 20.

"Unlawfully wounds"]—One reported decision would limit the application of the word "unlawfully" to the wounding and declare that if the charge be for inflicting grievous bodily harm it need not be stated as having been done "unlawfully." R. v. Treadwell, 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 461. Such does not appear to be the correct reading of the section. The English Act from which it is taken uses the phrase "unlawfully and maliciously wound or inflict any grievous bodily harm"; and under it the bodily harm must clearly have been unlawfull and malicious.

Grievous bodily harm]—If under a well-grounded apprehension of personal injury by the defendant, anyone in escaping therefrom is physically hurt, the defendant is guilty of inflicting grievous bodily harm. R. v. Beech (1912), 7 Cr. App. R. 197; R. v. Halliday (1889), 54 J.P. 312; 38 W.R. 256; R. v. Donovan, 4 Cox C.C. 399. The intention to do grievous bodily harm may be general without being directed particularly to the person injured. R. v. Fretwell, 33 L.J.M.C. 128.

The words "grievous bodily harm" have no technical meaning. In their natural sense, injuries which resulted in death would be included as well as those which did not result fatally. R. v. Union Colliery Co., 7 B.C.R. 247, 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 523, same case in appeal, 31 S.C.R. 81; 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 400. It is injury of greater degree than that embraced in the phrase "actual bodily harm"; R. v. Hostetter, 5 Terr. L.R. 363, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 221; but not necessarily of a permanent or dangerous character. R. v. Archibald, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 159. It is an injury which seriously interferes with comfort or health. R. v. Archibald, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 159; R. v. Ashman, 1 F. & F. 88; R. v. Clarence, 22 Q.B.D. 23; R. v. Martin, 8 Q.B.D. 54, 14 Cox C.C. 633.

Wounding officer, or person assisting, in execution of duty]-Code see. 275.

Verdict for lesser offence proved]—Code see. 951. A verdict for common assault may be received. R. v. Canwell, 11 Cox C.C. 263; R. v. Oliver, 30 L.J.M.C. 12; R. v. Yeadon, 9 Cox C.C. 91, L. & C. 81; R. v. Taylor L.R. 1 C.C.R. 194. But justices holding a preliminary enquiry for the greater offence without power of trial of same cannot without a fresh information assume to try the charge as one of common assault over which they had summary jurisdiction. Miller v. Lee 25 A.R. 428, 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 282; R. v. Lee, 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 233; Goodwin v. Hoffman, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 270.

Shooting at the King's vessels,--Wounding public officer engaged in execution of duty.

275. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to fourteen years' imprisonment who wilfully,—

- (a) shoots at any vessel belonging to His Majesty or in the service of Canada; or,
- (b) maims or wounds any public officer engaged in the execution of his duty or any person acting in aid of such officer.

Origin]—Sec. 243, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 32, sec. 213, ch. 34, sec. 99.

"Maims"]—Mayhem, or the maining of persons, was probably at one time an offence at common law of the degree of felony; as the judgment was membrum pro_membro. But this judgment afterwards went out of use; partly because the law of retaliation is at best an inadequate rule of punishment; and partly because, upon a repetition of the offence, the punishment could not be repeated. The offence, therefore, appears to have been considered, in latter times, as in the nature of an aggravated trespass and a misdemennour of the highest kind. Coke Lit. 127a, Russell Crimes, vol. 1, p. 971.

A bodily hurt whereby a man is rendered less able in fighting, to defend himself or to annoy his adversary, is properly a maim at common law. Therefore, the cutting off, or disabling, or weakening a man's hand or finger, or striking out his eyes or foretooth, or depriving him of those parts, the loss of which, in all animals, abates their courage, are held to be maims; but the cutting off his ear, or nose, or the like, are not held to be maims at common law; because they do not weaken a man, but only disfigure him. In order to found an indictment of mayhem the act must be done maliciously, though it matters not how sudden the occasion. 1 East P.C., c. 7, s. 1.

It is laid down that, by the common law, if a person maim himself in order to have a more specious pretence for asking charity, or to prevent his being impressed as a sailor, or enlisted as a soldier, he may be indicted; and, on conviction, fined and imprisoned. For as the life and members of every subject are under the safeguard and protection of the King; so they are said to be in manu regis, to the end that they may serve the King and country when occasion shall require. Co. Lit. 127a.

- (a) by any means whatsoever, attempts to choke, suffocate or strangle any other person, or by any means calculated to choke, suffocate or strangle, attempts to render any other person insensible, unconscious or incapable of resistance; or,

Administering poison to endanger life.

277. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to fourteen years' imprisonment who unlawfully administers to, or causes to be administered to or taken by any other person, any poison or other destructive or noxious thing, so as thereby to endanger the life of such person, or so as thereby to inflict upon such person any grievous bodily harm.

Origin]—Sec. 245, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 162, sec. 17. "Administering"]—See note to sec. 264. Any poison or other destructive or noxious thing]—Some drugs are noxious only when taken in large quantities; and it is doubtful whether the administering of a drug in so small a quantity as to be incapable of doing harm although a larger quantity of the drug would be a poisonous dose, is administering a "poison." R. v. Hennah (1877), 13 Cox C.C. 547; R. v. Cramp (1880), 5 Q.B.D. 307, 14 Cox C.C. 401, 42 L.T. 442. In the latter case it is suggested that where the drug administered is a recognized "poison" it may be that the offence is complete although the quantity administered is too small to be noxious.

If any grievous bodily harm is in fact inflicted, the offence comes under sec. 277. Tulley v. Corrie (1867), 10 Cox C.C. 640, 17 L.T. 140. Drugging with intent]—See secs. 216, 264, 276, 277, 278, 303-306.

Administering poison with intent to injure.

278. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to three years' imprisonment who unlawfully administers to, or causes to be administered to or taken by, any other person any poison or other destructive or noxious thing, with intent to injure, aggrieve or annoy such person.

Origin]-Sec. 246, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 162, sec. 18.

Intent to injure, aggrieve or annoy]—Where the defendant administered a drug to a woman and the jury found that it was administered with the intent to excite her sexual passion and desire, in order that the defendant might have connection with her, this was held to be an administering with intent to "injure, aggrieve and annoy" her. R. v. Wilkins (1861), L. & C. 89, 9 Cox C.C. 20, 31 L.J.M.C. 72; compare cases under sees. 303-305.

Drugging with intent]-See sees. 216, 264, 276, 277, 278, 303-306.

Setting spring guns and man-traps. Permitting the same to be set.-Exception.

281. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to five years' imprisonment who sets or places, or causes to be set or placed, any spring-gun, man-trap, or other engine calculated to destroy human life or inflict grievous bodily harm, with the intent that the same or whereby the same may destroy, or inflict grievous bodily harm upon, any trespasser or other person coming in contact therewith.

2. Every one who knowingly and wilfully permits any such spring-gun, man-trap or other engine which has been set or placed by some other person, in any place which is in, or afterwards comes into, his possession or occupation, to continue so set or placed shall be deemed to have set or placed such gun, trap or engine with such intent as aforesaid.

3. This section does not extend to any gin or trap usually set or placed with the intent of destroying vermin or noxious animals.

Origin]—Sec. 249, Code of 1892, R.S.C. 1886, ch. 162, sec. 24; 32-33 Viet., Can., ch. 20, sec. 30; 24-25 Viet., Imp., ch. 100, sec. 31.

Intent to harm persons]—A similar provision in the English statute 7 and 8 Geo. IV, ch. 18, was held not to be applicable to the setting of dog-spears on a man's own land with no intention to harm human beings and without having brought about such a result. Jordin v. Crump (1841), 8 M, & W. 782, 11 L.J. Ex. 74.

If death is caused by unlawfully setting a spring-gun, the person setting it is guilty of manslaughter. R. v. Heaton (1896), 60 J.P. 508.

Endangering safety of railway traffic.

282. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for life who unlawfully,—

- (a) with intent to injure or to endanger the safety of any person travelling or being upon any railway.
 - (i) puts or throws upon or across such railway any wood, stone, or other matter or thing,
 - (ii) takes up, removes or displaces any rail, railway switch, sleeper or other matter or thing belonging to such railway, or injures or destroys any track, bridge or fence of such railway, or any portion thereof,

BODILY INJURIES

- (iii) turns, moves or diverts any point or other machinery belonging to such railway,
 - (iv) makes or shows, hides or removes any signal or light upon or near to such railway,
- (v) does or causes to be done any other matter or thing with such intent; or,
- (b) throws, or causes to fall or strike at, against, into or upon any engine, tender, carriage or truck used and in motion upon any railway, any wood, stone or other matter or thing, with intent to injure or endanger the safety of any person being in or upon such engine, tender, carriage or truck, or in or upon any other engine, tender, carriage or truck of any train of which such first mentioned engine, tender, carriage or truck forms part.

Origin]—See. 250, Code of 1892; R. S. 1886, ch. 162, sees. 25 and 26; 32-33 Vict., Can., ch. 20, sees. 31 and 32; 24-25 Vict., Imp., ch. 100, sees. 32 and 33.

Any railway]—The corresponding English Act, 24-25 Vict., ch. 97, secs. 35-57, has been held to apply to both public and private railways; O'Gorman v. Sweet (1890), 54 J.P. 663; and to railways not yet opened for regular traffic, but in use for the conveyance of workmen and materials. R. v. Bradford (1860), Bell C.C. 268, and see R. v. Bowray, 10 Jur. 211.

Endangering persons on railways]—Sec. 282 deals with the offence where the danger is intentionally chused; and sec. 283 where there is an unlawful act or a wilful omission or neglect of duty, but the intent set out in sec. 282 is not charged.

An acquittal under this section will not bar an indictment under sec. 283, for wantonly endangering the safety of persons on railways. R. v. Gilmore (1882), 15 Cox C.C. 85.

Cumulative charge]—Several acts of obstruction charged against the same accused and continuing for several weeks may be treated as one continuing offence at the option of the prosecution, and a conviction on an indictment so treated would be an answer to a fresh indictment for any of such acts of which evidence was given by the prosecution. R. v. Michaud, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 86. If not treated as one offence, the court has a discertion to order a separate trial. Ibid.; Code sec. 857.

Wantonly endangering safety of persons on railways.

283. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who, by any unlawful act, or by any wilful omission or neglect of duty, endangers or causes to be endangered the safety of any person conveyed or being in or upon a railway, or aids or assists therein.

Origin]-Sec. 251, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 162, sec. 27.

Charge laid under repealed clause of Railway Act]—In R. v. Corrigan, the defendant was prosecuted before a police magistrate for a breach of the provisions of s. 415 of the Railway-Act of Canada, R.S.C. 1906, c. 37, and on the evidence was found guilty of the offence as charged. No amendment was asked for, and a conviction was recorded on the charge as laid. Subsequently the magistrate discovered that s. 415 had been repealed, and he thereupon reserved for the opinion of the Court of Appeal the question whether the conviction should be allowed to stand as for an offence under sec. 283 of the Criminal Code:—Held, that the conviction could not be sustained under a different statute. R. v. Corrigan, 20 O.L.R. 99, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 310.

Causing bodily injury by unlawful act or omission of duty.

284. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who, by any unlawful act, or by doing negligently or omitting to do any act which it is his duty to do, causes grievous bodily injury to any other person.

Origin]-Sec. 252, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 162, sec 33.

Neglect of duty resulting in bodily harm to another]—The duty may arise from contract or be imposed by statute or common law. Certain duties are imposed by the Code itself, for example see sees. 247 and 248. The latter imposes a legal duty as regards the criminal law to do an act which he undertakes to do, if omission to do it is or may be dangerous to life, and if the omission causes bodily injury he may be prosecuted under sec. 284 subject to any defence of lawful excuse which may arise under sec. 248, and see sec. 16 as to "justification and excuse."

An acquittal on a charge of manslaughter is not a bar to a charge of inflicting grievous bodily injury based upon the same circumstances. R. v. Shea, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 319; Code sec. 274.

The expression "grievous bodily injury" includes injuries immediately resulting in death, and as a corporation is not amenable to a charge of manslaughter, the death is as to it a circumstance in aggravation of the crime, and does not enlarge the nature of the offenec. R. v. Union Colliery Co. (1900), 7 B.C.R. 247, 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 523; affirmed sub-nom., Union Colliery v. The Queen (1900), 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 400, 31 Can. S.C.R. 81.

BODILY INJURIES

Liability of corporations]—By sec. 2, sub-sec. (13) the term "every one" includes corporations in relation to such things as they are capable of doing. Sec. 284 embraces such an offence. Union Colliery v. The Queen, 31 Can. S.C.R. 81.

Punishment where corporation defendant]—It is said that sec. 284 does not extend the criminal responsibility of corporations beyond what it was at common law; R. v. Great West Laundry Co., 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 514, 13 Man. L.R. 66. The common law punishment of a fine is to be imposed on a corporation convicted under sec. 284. See Union Colliery Co. v. The Queen, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 400, 31 Can. S.C.R. 81; R. v. Toronto Railway Co., 10 O.L.R. 26, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 106; Code secs. 920 and 1029.

Injuring persons by furious driving.

285. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who, having the charge of any carriage or motor vehicle, automobile or other vehicle, by wanton or furious driving, or racing or other wilful misconduct, or by wilful neglect, does or causes to be done any bodily harm to any person.

Origin]-Sec. 253, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 162, sec. 28; Offences against the Person Act 1861, Imp., sec. 35.

Furious driving]—A bicycle is a "vehicle" under this section. R. v. Parker, 59 J.P. 793. Furious riding on horseback seems to come under sec. 284 rather than 285, where injury is done to another person.

Misconduct or neglect in motoring]—Driving at an excessive speed with knowledge of defects in the brakes or other mechanism of an automobile which would make it impossible to stop the car promptly, is in itself evidence that the act was wanton. R. v. Seager, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 483.

An acquittal on a charge of manslaughter is not a bar to a charge of inflicting bodily harm based upon the same circumstances. R. v. Shea, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 319.

Wilful misconduct means misconduct to which the will is a party; something opposed to accident or negligence; the "misconduct" not the conduct must be wilful. It occurs where the person guilty of it knows that mischief will result from it, and also where the act is done under the supposition that it might be mischievous and with an indifference to his duty to ascertain whether it was mischievous or not. Lewis v. Great Western Ry. Co., 3 Q.B.D. 195, 47 L.J.Q.B. 131, at 206; R. v. Monahan, 11 Cox C.C. 608, 23 L.T. 168; R. v. Holroyd, 2 M. & R. 339;

Ferdict for an attempt]—There may be a verdict for the lesser offence of an attempt to cause a grievous bodily injury if the evidence warrants it. Code see, 949; R. v. McCarthy (1917), 41 O.L.R. 153, 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 448. An attempt implies an intent; Code see, 72; but intending to commit an offence is not the same as attempting to commit it. R. v. McCarthy, supra; R. v. McPherson, Dears, & B. 197. It is open to the jury to believe any part of any evidence and disbelieve any other part; they may therefore find that there was an intent, and with that intent an act done looking to the commission of the offence, which act failed of effect. R. v. McCarthy, supra. So where the grievous bodily injury resulted from the second or third of three collisions closely following one another, the jury may find the attempt in respect of the first collision and at the same time conclude that the other collisions were unexpected and accidental. R. v. McCarthy, supra.

Liability of driver of car for failure to stop after accident happens.

285 A. Whenever, owing to the presence of a motor car on the highway, an accident has occurred to any person or to any horse or vehicle in charge of any person, any person driving the motor car shall be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding fifty dollars and costs or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding thirty days if he fails to stop his car and, with intent to escape liability either civil or criminal, drives on without tendering assistance and giving his name and address.

Origin]-Can. Stat. 1910, ch. 13, sec. 2.

Motor car and automobile offences]—The owner of a motor car who is sitting next to a driver who proceeds at a dangerous speed is taken to be aware of the dangerous speed and may be held to be guilty of abetting a violation of the law. DuCros v. Lambourne (1906), 22 T.L.R. 3. And under the Motor Car Act (Imp.) in Provincial Motor Cab Co. v. Dunning [1909], 2 K.B. 599, it was held that the vehicle owner could be convicted under that Act if the vehicle had been sent out by persons for whom he was responsible, in a condition which did not comply with the law.

For other offences relating to the operation of motor cars, see the various provincial statutes.

Paying damages and costs to person aggrieved]-See sec. 729.

MOTOR CARS

[§ 285B]

Using motor car without owner's consent.

285B. Every one who takes or causes to be taken from a garage, stable, stand, or other building or place, any automobile or motor car with intent to operate or drive or use or cause or permit the same to be operated or driven or used without the consent of the owner shall be liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars and costs or to imprisonment for any term not exceeding twelve months, or to both fine and imprisonment.

Origin]-1910 Can. Stat., ch. 11; 1918 Can. Stat., ch. 16.

Unlawful use of motor car]—The marginal note to the official text of this section introduced into the Code by the amendment 9-10 Edw. VII, ch. 11, and since amended by increasing the penalty (Can. Stat., 1918, ch. 16), is erroneous in referring to this offence as "theft of motor car." Hirschman v. Beal (1916), 38 O.L.R. 40, 11 O.W.N. 83, 28 Can. Cr. Cas. 319, reversing 37 O.L.R. 529, 10 O.W.N. 411. The offence is not theft but a minor offence, and the marginal note cannot change the effect of the text of the enactment. Hirschman v. Beal, supra; Attorney-General v. Great Eastern Ry., 11 Ch. D. 449, at 460, 461, 465. The Federal Parliament has made no special enactment as to the force, if any, to be given to marginal notes in the statutes, although it has made the preamble of every Act a part thereof " intended to assist in explaining the purport and object of the Act." R.S.C. 1906, eb. 1, sec. 14.

Sec. 285B is not an amendment of the larceny or theft part of the Code, but an addition to a section dealing with injury caused by negligent driving of carriages and motor vehicles; and there is nothing to indicate that Parliament intended the new offence to be "a theft." Hirschman v. Beal, supra, per Riddell, J.

Paying damages and costs to person aggrieved]-See sec. 729.

Impeding shipwrecked person.-Impeding person assisting.

286. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to seven years' imprisonment,—

- (a) who prevents or impedes, or endeavours to prevent or impede, any shipwrecked person in his endeavour to save his life; or,
- (b) who without reasonable cause prevents or impedes, or endeavours to prevent or impede, any person in his endeavour to save the life of any shipwrecked person.

[§290]

Assaults.

Definition of assault.

290. An assault is the act of intentionally applying force to the person of another, directly or indirectly, or attempting or threatening, by any act or gesture, to apply force to the person of another, if the person making the threat has, or causes the other to believe, upon reasonable grounds, that he has present ability to effect his purpose, and in either case, without the consent of the other or with such consent, if it is obtained by fraud.

Origin]-Sec. 258, Code of 1892.

What constitutes an assault]—" The first principle which runs through the whole law on this subject is that any interference whatever with the person of another, or with his personal liberty, requires special justification." Stephen's Crim. Law, 109; and see Le Clere v. Marti, 28 Can. Cr. Cas. 160 (Que.).

A party defendant to a civil action, was met in the street by the accused, who, acting on behalf of the solicitor to the plaintiff in the action, tendered to such defendant an order for discovery which had been made in the action. The defendant declined to accept the document, whereupon the accused thrust it into the inner fold of the defendant's coat, which was unbuttoned at the time, and as the defendant opened his coat the document fell on the street, where he left it. An information was preferred by the defendant against the process server for assault in so touching him, and it was held in review of the justices' conviction that the accused was entitled to serve the document on the defendant personally, and that as there was no evidence that the accused had touched the respondent further than was necessary to bring the document home to him, the justices were wrong in convicting the appellant. Rose v. Kempthorne. 27 Times L.R. 132.

Provocative words will not ordinarily justify an assault though they may mitigate the punishment. Evans v. Bradburn (1915), 9 W.W.R. 281, 32 W.L.R. 585 (Alta.); Slater v. Watts, 16 B.C.R. 36 (B.C.).

But as an assault may, under sec. 290, be based upon a threat, by "any act or gesture," to apply force, the person unlawfully assaulted may be able to justify force used to repel the assault if he is under a reasonable apprehension of grievous bodily harm, and the force he uses is not meant to cause grievous bodily harm, nor is it more than is necessary for the purpose of self-defence. Code secs. 16 and 53.

So also if the assault by threat to apply force where there is a present ability to do so (Code sec. 290) is accompanied with insult (Code sec. 55), the person assaulted, or any one under whose protection he or she is, may justify force in defence, if no more force is used than is necessary to prevent such assault, or the repetition of it. Code sec. 55. But the person repelling the insulting assault is to do no more hurt than is proportionate to the insult which the force he used was intended to prevent. Code secs. 16 and 55.

The threats which constitute an assault must be accompanied by acts positively evidencing an intent to carry them out; and be not mere expressions of an intention to do something upon the hypothesis of something happening which may never occur. Pockett v. Pool (1896), 11 Man. R. 275, 286, per Killam, J.

A blow struck in anger or which is likely or which is intended to do corporal hurt, is an assault, but a blow struck in sport and not likely, nor intended, to cause bodily harm, is not an assault. R. v. Buchanan (1898), 12 Man. R. 190, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 442, citing R. v. Coney, 8 Q.B.D. 534.

An assault being a breach of the peace and unlawful, the consent of the person struck to engage in a fight entered into in a spirit of hostility and anger, does not excuse the other. R. v. Buchanan (1898), 12 Man. R. 190, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 442.

Any person may interfere to prevent a breach of the peace, and he may proceed to any extremity which may be necessary to effect that object; commencing, of course, with a request to the offender to desist, then, if he refuses, gently laying hands on him to restrain him: and if he still resist, then with force compelling him to submit. Ex parte Kane, R. v. Shaw, 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 156 (N.B.). But in every case upon summary conviction, it is a question for the justice whether or no the degree of force netually used was necessary for the object which renders it legitimate; if there be any excess, it will be an assault. The slightest imposition of the hands, if not justified, is an assault; and the necessity for a greater or less degree of violence depends on the circumstances of the case, to be judged by the magistrate. Ex parte Kane, Kupra.

The pointing of a loaded rifle at a person within shooting distance is an assault; R. v. Cronan, 24 U.C.C.P. 106; R. v. Chartrand (1912), 2 W.W.R. 773; and a conviction for assault may be supported under a charge for the greater offence of shooting with intent. R. v. Chartrand (1912), 2 W.W.R. 773, 21 W.L.R. 850, 20 Can. Cr. Cas. 116 (Sask.).

Penalty for common assault.

291. Every one who commits a common assault is guilty of an indictable offence and liable, if convicted upon an indictment, to one year's imprisonment, or to a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, and on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding twenty dollars and costs, or to two months' imprisonment, with or without hard labour.

Origin]—Code of 1892, sec. 265; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 162, sec. 36. Assault defined]—Code sec. 290.

Fine in lieu of imprisonment]—Code see. 1035 makes a general provision for imposing a fine in lieu of imprisonment; but as to the offence of common assault it is to be construed as subject to the specific limitation in amount to $100 as the alternative of the authorized term of imprisonment. R. v. Johnson (1913), 24 W.L.R. 468, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 215.

"On summary conviction . . . to two months' imprisonment."]— If the month of February would come within the term of the sentence, care should be taken that the imprisonment imposed does not exceed the two months' limit, as might happen on a sentence for sixty days. R. v. Brindley, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 170, 173 (N.S.); R. v. Gavin, 30 N.S.R. 162, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 59; Halifax v. Clusen, 18 N.S.R. 521. If hard labour is to be included in the summary conviction it must have been regularly imposed and included in the minute of conviction, if any. Ex parte Carmichael, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 19 (N.S.).

Summary conviction proceedings excluded if title to land in question]-Code sec. 709.

"Summary conviction" and "summary trial" jurisdiction in assault]—A justice proceeding under Part XV (summary conviction), may send the case up for trial instead of himself disposing of it, if he finds the assault complained of to have been more than a common assault triable under Part XV, Code sec. 732. So if the assault was accompanied by an attempt to commit some other indictable offence, or if the justice is of opinion that from any other circumstances the case should not be disposed of under Part XV, he shall abstain from dealing with it under that Part. Code sec. 732. If the justice is a magistrate having the power to summarily try under Part XVI, he may, of course, proceed to try the special classes of assault referred to in sec. 773, in the manner applicable thereto (see Code secs. 776, 781). Other classes of assault within the jurisdiction in Ontario of the Court of General Sessions would be triable under sees. 777 and 778 by a magistrate having extended jurisdiction under sees. 777. But in any case under Part XVI, if it appears to the magistrate that the offence is one which, owing to a previous conviction of the person charged, or from any other circumstances, ought to be made the subject of prosecution by indictment rather than to be disposed of summarily, the magistrate may, before the accused person has made his defence, decide not to adjudicate summarily upon the case. Code sec. 784. A previous conviction of the accused is not, however a bar to the magistrate holding a summary trial for assault, if he sees fit to do so. Code sec. 784.

If the jurisdiction is exercised under Part XV (summary convictions), a fine may be imposed carrying with it the penalty of imprisonment for non-payment for which sec. 739 provides, although the term may be in excess of the limit of two months' imprisonment which might have been imposed as a punishment of first instance. R. v. Hawes, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 238. If the proceedings are under the extended jurisdiction of magistrates under sec. 777 (summary trials), the like punishment may be imposed as upon indictment, Code sec. 777; R. v. Hawes, supra: R. v. Coolen, 36 N.S.R. 510, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 522.

On the summary trial under sec. 777 of concurrent charges of assault and pointing a fire-arm, the magistrate, after hearing the assault case, reserved judgment to take up the second charge, but no further evidence then being adduced except the examination of the defendant, the magistrate dismissed the second charge and entered a conviction upon the charge of assault. There is no presumption under such circumstances that the intermixing of the trials has prejudiced the accused, and the conviction should be sustained unless such prejudice is clearly shown. R. v. Reid, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 352.

A justice holding a preliminary enquiry on a charge of assault with intent cannot even with the consent of the prosecutor give himself jurisdiction to try the case as for a common assault and so transfer a preliminary enquiry into a summary proceeding upon the one information. Goodwin v. Hoffman, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 270. A new information or complaint should be laid, and proceedings should be begun de novo in respect thereof and carried on in conformity with Part XV dealing with summary conviction procedure.

When disposal under Part XV is a release from further proceedings, civil or criminal]-Code sec. 734.

Similarly there is power, under secs. 1058 and 1059, to require recognizances in addition to any sentence imposed on a summary trial by a magistrate under Part XVI, or by a court of criminal jurisdiction. Indecent assault on female.—Consent procured by fraud.—Assaults on females.

292. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment, and to be whipped, who,—

- (a) indecently assaults any female; or,
- (b) does anything to any female by her consent which but for such consent would be an indecent assault, if such consent is obtained by false and fraudulent representations as to the nature and quality of the act.
- (c) assaults and beats his wife or any other female and thereby occasions her actual bodily harm.

Origin]-Sec. 259, Code of 1892; 53 Viet., Can., ch. 37, sec. 12.

"Indecently assaults"]—The circumstances may make the assault an indecent one where accompanied by an immoral proposal; it is not essential that the act constituting the assault should be in its nature indecent. R. v. Louie Chong (1914), 32 O.L.R. 66, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 250, 7 O.W.N. 84.

Complaint of prosecutrix]—The complaint of a girl of tender years may be proved in evidence although made in answer to interrogations if the latter were not of a leading or suggestive character. R. v. Pailleur, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 339, 20 O.L.R. 207.

Lapse of time in making a complaint might be very serious in the case of a person of more mature years, where the question of consent was involved, but in the case of a child of six years it must be regarded in a very different light. R. v. McGivney (1914), 5 W.W.R. 1181, 19 B.C.R. 22, 26 W.L.R. 602, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 222.

In Regina v. Guthridge, 9 C. & P. 472, in which the prosecutrix did not go into the witness box, the evidence of complaints made by her recently after the outrage was rejected by Baron Parke, as such evidence is received as confirmatory evidence only. So also the complaint of a child under five years of age who was not a witness, was rejected as direct proof. R. v. McMillan (1916), 9 W.W.R. 1181.

What is the first reasonable opportunity after the commission of a sexual offence for the prosecutrix to make a complaint so as to make the evidence of the person to whom the complaint is made admissible in proof of consistency of conduct on the part of the prosecutrix, must depend on the circumstances of each case; an early complaint is not necessarily excluded because there had been a previous complaint to another person. R. v. Lee (1911), 7 Cr. App. R. 31; Hopkinson v. Perdue, 8 O.L.R. 228, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 286; R. v. Smith, 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 21 (N.S.); R. v. Barron, 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 196 (N.S.); R. v. Lillyman [1896] 2 Q.B. 167; R. v. Christie [1914] A.C. 545, 556, 567 (H.L.).

A statement, to a third party, although not in the presence of the accused, may be given in evidence, provided it is shown to have been made at the first opportunity which reasonably offered itself after the commission of the offence, and that it has not been elicited by questions of a leading and inducing or intimidating nature. R. v. Spuzzum, 12 B.C.R. 291, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 287; R. v. McGivney (1914), 5 W.W.R. 1181, 26 W.L.R. 602, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 222, 19 B.C.R. 22. There should be no suggestion in the questions of the identity of the person to be blanned; it should be left for the complainant to say who the party was, or if the name was not known to give a description of the party. See R. v. McGivney (1914), 5 W.W.R. 1181, 19 B.C.R. 22; R. v. Iman Din, 15 B.C.R. 476, 18 Can. Cr. Cas. 82; R. v. Bowes, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 326; R. v. Osborne [1905] 1 K.B. 551.

Consent of child under fourteen no defence to indecent assault]— Code see. 294; R. v. McGavaran, 6 Cox C.C. 64. The consent may, however, negative a charge of common assault unless the consent was obtained by fraud. Code see. 290.

Corroboration of child's testimony when not under oath]—Where the charge is indecent assault under sec. 292 and the girl in respect of whom the offence is charged to have been committed is under fourteen, she or any other child of tender years who is tendered as a witness may be allowed to give testimony not under oath if she does not understand the nature of an oath, Code sec. 1003. But the testimony so given without oath, must be corroborated "by some other material evidence in support thereof implicating the accused." Code sec. 1003, sub-sec. (2); compare sec. 16 of the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145, sec. 16.

In Rex v. Burr (1906), 13 O.L.R., at p. 486, 8 O.W.R. 703, Moss, C.J.O., in dealing with the question of corroborative evidence "implicating the accused," said:—" This does not necessarily make it incumbent on the Crown to adduce testimony of another or other witnesses to the acts charged. To do so would be to virtually render a conviction impossible in the majority of cases like the present. It is enough if

The condition of the child when she came home may fix the time of the offence and so implicate the accused where there is the child's direct evidence of identity and also corroborative proof that the offence was committed at a certain time and place where the accused was proved to have been under circumstances which afforded him, to the exclusion of anyone else, the opportunity for committing the offence. R. v. Bowes (1909), 20 O.L.R. 111, 14 O.W.R. 1214; and see Reffell v. Morton (1906), 70 J.P. 347; R. v. McGivney (1914), 5 W.W.R. 1181, 19 B.C.R. 22, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 222.

Evidence or presumption of age being under fourteen]—Code sec. 984. Subject to the provisions of the Code or other federal law, the provincial laws of evidence regulate the mode by which age is to be proved. Can. Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145, sec. 35; compare R. v. Garneau, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 69 (Que)., as to registers of civil status; and see notes to sec. 211 (seduction of girls between fourteen and sixteen) and secs. 242, 242A (parental neglect of child under sixteen).

Female over fourteen; where question of consent is material]— When a sexual offence is alleged, if consent is a good defence, the Court will quash a conviction, if it is not satisfied that this defence has been rebutted. Rex v. Hart, 10 Cr. App. R. 176.

Mere submission is not always equivalent to consent. A person may submit to an act done from ignorance, or the consent may be obtained by fraud; and in neither case would it be such consent as the law contemplates. R. v. Lock (1872), L.R. 2 C.C.R. 10. Consent means an active will in the mind of the patient to permit the doing of the act complained of; and knowledge of what is to be done is essential to a consent. Ibid.

Where a school teacher was charged with indecent assault upon one of his scholars, and it appeared that he forbade the prosecutrix telling her parents what had happened, and they did not hear off it for two months, it was held that evidence of the conduct of the prisoner towards her subsequent to the assault was properly admissible as tending to show the indecent quality of the assault, and as being, in effect, a part or continuation of the same, R. v. Chute, 46 U.C.Q.B. 155.

Lord Alverstone, speaking for the Court of Criminal Appeal, said, in R. v. May (1912), 8 Cr. App. R. 63, at 68:--" The Court is of opinion that if the facts of a case proved in evidence are such that the jury might reasonably infer consent, there ought to be a direction to the jury by the judge on that question. It is easy to point out where the onus of proof lies and what is the evidence on that point in any particular case; but if the facts proved in evidence are not such that the jury might reasonably infer consent, and particularly if the case has been conducted by counsel in such a way as to make the question of consent immaterial or an entirely secondary issue to the main defence, there is no necessity for such a direction. It is impossible to lay down a rule applicable to all cases, but this indication of the principle on which the judge should act will, we think, be sufficient as a general rule."

General denial by defence]—Where the judge summed up in a way that might lead the jury to think that they must convict the prisoner even though they thought that consent to the indecency was proved, there is a misdirection amounting to a miscarriage of justice, although the case for the defence was an entire denial of indecency with or without consent. R. v. Horn (1912), 7 Cr. App. R. 200. Where there is no question of age dispensing with consent (see Code sec. 294) it seems obligatory for the prosecution to negative consent; the defence may urge that if there was consent the accused could not be convicted although a distinct defence of consent was not raised, but a general denial relied upon. Ibid.; and see R. v. Bradley (1910), 4 Cr. App. R. 225.

Punishment]—Under this section every one found guilty of an indecent assault on a female is liable to two years' imprisonment and to be whipped; but the court in many cases, acting under the discretion conferred by the special proviso contained in sec. 1028 of the Code, does not inflict the whipping, and imposes only an imprisonment. R. v. Robidoux (1898), 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 19.

Previous chastity not an element of indecent assault]—It is said that where the charge is indecent assault or rape, the previous chastity of the person upon whom the offence was committed is not an element of the offence. R. v. Pieco [1917] 1 W.W.R. 892, 896 (Alta.). But a cross-examination of the prosecutrix may develop denials by her which may let in contradictory evidence in rebuttal. As to character evidence, see the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1916, ch. 145.

But where the charge is seduction of a girl between 14 and 16, of previously chaste character, evidence is admissible in defence that before the date of the alleged offence the girl had had illicit connection with another. R. v. Pieco [1917] 1 W.W.R. 892, 896 (Alta.).

Assault with actual bodily harm to female]—Sub-sec. (c) of sec. 292 was added by the Code Amendment Act of 1909. Whipping may be imposed for this offence. For eriminal neglect to provide a wife with necessaries, see Code secs. 242 (2) and 242A. As to other assaults occasioning actual bodily harm, see Code sec. 295.

Indecent assault on males.

[§ 292]

293. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to ten years' imprisonment, and to be whipped, who assaults any person with intent to commit sodomy or who, being a male, indecently assaults any other male person.

Origin]-Sec. 260, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 157, sec. 2.

Evidence generally]-Evidence of the finding of indecent photographs at the lodgings of the accused was held admissible to prove identity under special and peculiar circumstances. Thompson v. Director of Public Prosecutions (1918), 87 L.J.K.B. 478 (H.L.), affirming R. v. Thompson, 86 L.J.K.B. 1321 [1917], 2 K.B. 630. Lord Sumner (1918), 87 L.J.K.B. 478, at 484, said: "That the boys should pick out as the guilty person some one who, unknown to them, possessed these objects, confirms their accuracy if such possession is one of the personal indicia of the guilty man, for it shows that they selected a man who, so far, corresponds to the man who is wanted." There must be something to connect the circumstance tendered in evidence not only with the accused but with his participation in the crime in order to make it evidence of identification in the particular case. Thompson v. Director of Public Prosecutions, supra. So where, as in the lastmentioned case, the actual criminal made an appointment to meet the same boys at the same time and place three days later presumably for the same purpose and the accused kept the criminal's appointment and was identified by the boys as the same man, the House of Lords held that on a defence of mistaken identity being raised, it was competent for the prosecution to prove the finding of the indecent photographs as it tended to attach to the accused an abnormal peculiarity of the specialized and extraordinary class of people who habitually commit these offences against nature. Thompson v. Director of Public Prosecutions (1918), 87 L.J.K.B. 478, at 485. If, however, there had been nothing to show a propensity in the criminal to the practice of such acts, such as the making of the appointment, the photographs would have been merely objects going to the accused's bad character and not to his identity with the criminal in the particular case. Ibid, at 486.

On a charge under sec. 293 of indecent assault on a male, evidence of an attempt by the accused of a similar offence at another time with another male was rejected in R. v. Iman Din, 18 Can. Cr. Cas. 82, 15 B.C.R. 476. ASSAULTS

Accused under fourteen]—A boy under fourteen may be convicted of indecent assault upon another boy, if shown to be competent to know the nature and consequences of his conduct and to appreciate that it was wrong. Code sec. 18; R. v. Hartlen (1898), 30 N.S.R. 217, 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 12.

Complainant over fourteen; question of consent]—A consent obtained by fraud will not prevent the act being an assault. Code sec. 290, and see note to that section.

Conduct of accused on being identified before arrest]—There is no rule of law that evidence of a statement made in the presence and hearing of the accused is not admissible as having a bearing on his conduct, unless he accepts the statement; R. v. Christie [1914], A.C. 545, 83 L.J.K.B. 1097, 10 Cr. App. R. 141; but where the accused denies the truth of the statement, the presiding judge, in the absence of special circumstances, should intimate to counsel for the prosecution that, inasmuch as the evidence, though admissible, would have little value and might unfairly prejudice the jury against the accused, it ought not to be admitted. R. v. Christie, supra. The majority opinion in that ease favoured the view that evidence of the statement ought to be confined to the mere fact of identification and ought not to be allowed to contain a repetition of the details of the offence in amplification of the act of identification or otherwise; R. v. Christie, supra.

Consent of child under fourteen no defence to indecent assault.

294. It is no defence to a charge or indictment for any indecent assault on a young person under the age of fourteen years to prove that he or she consented to the act of indecency.

Origin]—Sec. 261, Code of 1892; 53 Vict., Can., eh. 37, sec. 7; Criminal Law Amendment Act, Imp., 1880, sec. 2, which superseded R. v. Johnson (1865), 10 Cox 114, L. & C. 632, 34 L.J. 192, and R. v. Roadley (1880), 14 Cox 463, 49 L.J. 88.

Consent immaterial to indecent assault of child under fourteen]— The language of this section is manifestly framed to apply to an indecent assault on a male (Code sec. 293) as well as to an indecent assault on a female (Code sec. 292).

See, 294 is similar to see. 2 of the Criminal Law Amendment Act 1880 (Imp.) except that the age there is 13. It does not create a new offence but it deprives the defendant of what would have been a defence. R. v. Stephenson (1912), 8 Cr. App. R. 36. It does not make it essential that, on a charge to which it applies, the indictment should state the child's age or that she was under the specified age. Ibid.

Proof or inference of age]-Code sec. 984.

Assault with bodily harm.

[§ 294]

295. Every one who commits any assault which occasions actual bodily harm is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to three years' imprisonment.

Origin]—Sec. 262, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 162, sec. 35; 32-33 Vict., Can., ch. 20, sec. 47.

Assault with actual bodily harm to a female]—By the Code amendment of 1909 it is made an indictable offence punishable with two years' imprisonment with the addition of whipping for one to assault and beat "his wife or any other female," and thereby occasion to her any actual bodily harm. Code sec. 292.

"Actual bodily harm"]—This phrase embraces injuries of a less serious nature than those referred to in Code sec. 274, under the heading of "grievous bodily harm." R. v. Hostetter (1902), 5 Terr. L.R. 363, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 221. But the power of summary trial exercisable by a 'magistrate' as defined by sec. 771, apart from the extended jurisdiction of city magistrates under sec. 275, although he may, with the consent of accused, in Manitoba, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Ontario and Quebec (sec. 778) and without such consent, in Alberta, British Columbia, Saskatchewan, Prince Edward Island and the Territories (sec. 776). try a charge under sec. 274, of inflicting grievous bodily harm. Code sec. 773, sub-sec. (c). R. v. Sharpe, 18 Can. Cr. Cas. 135, 20 Man. R. 555; R. v. Law (1915), 7 W.W.R. 1101, 33 W.L.R. 569, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 251, (R. v. Hostetter (1902), 5 Terr. L.R. 363, doubted on this point).

Sub-sec. (c) of sec. 773, in effect reproduces sec. 274 of the Code. The fact that the person charged may be convicted of a lesser offence pursuant to sec. 951 cannot give jurisdiction in the first instance. The jurisdiction given to the magistrates under 773 is a statutory one, and cannot be extended by implication. Rex v. Sharpe, 20 Man. R. 555, 18 Can. Cr. Cas. 132, at 138; R. v. Law (1915), 7 W.W.R. 1101; but see contra, R. v. Prokopate (1914), 7 Sask. L.R. 95, 6 W.W.R. 405, 29 W.L.R. 88, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 189; R. v. Zyla, 17 W.L.R. 258; R. v. Hostetter, 5 Terr. L.R. 363.

Effect of conviction for offence involving assault]-On a trial before a city magistrate having the extended powers of summary trial under ASSAULTS sec. 777, the magistrate may convict of a lesser offence included in the offence charged where that part only of the charge is proved. Code sec. 951. The magistrate may convict of common assault under sec. 291 notwithstanding that the information was for an indictable offence under sec. 295 for assault with bodily harm as the latter includes common assault. R. v. Frank Coolen, 36 N.S.R. 510, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 157.

A conviction on summary trial has the same effect as a conviction upon indictment. Sec. 791.

When an indictment charges substantially the same offence as that charged in the indictment on which the accused was given in charge on a former trial, but adds a statement of intention or circumstances of aggravation tending if proved to increase the punishment, the previous acquittal or conviction shall be a bar to such subsequent indictment. Sec. 909.

And if the person summarily convicted by a justice of common assault on the complaint of the person aggrieved, taken under Part XV, pays the fine or undergoes the punishment awarded, he is released from all further or other proceedings, civil or criminal, for the same cause. Code sec. 734; Grantillo v. Caporici, 16 Que. S.C. 44. The person aggrieved has, by laying a charge of common assault and asking summary disposal of same by a justice, elected that method of disposal and the consequence which follows under sec. 734 so far as the matter of the complaint is under the control of the complainant; but a statutory duty is placed upon the justice by Code sec, 732 when he finds that a more serious offence has been brought before him under cover of a charge of common assault only, to stop the proceedings under Part XV. (see, 732), and so prevent the operation of sec. 734. Green v. Henneghan [1918] 3 W.W.R. 658 (Alta.); Larin v. Boyd, 27 Que., S.C. 472, 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 74. (Hardigan v. Graham, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 437 (Que.) explained).

If the proceedings were taken before a city magistrate having the extended powers referred to in sec. 777 to summarily try an indictable offence, and the defendant, on being put to his election under sec. 778, has chosen a summary trial for the indictable offence of assault occasioning actual bodily harm, or even for common assault, it would seem to follow that a conviction of common assault, in the one case as for the lesser offence and in the other for the offence charged, has the effect under Code sec. 792 of releasing the accused from "all further or other criminal proceedings for the same cause." Green v. Henneghan [1918] 3 W.W.R. 658 (Alta.); Nevills v. Ballard, 28 Ont. R. 588, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 434; R. v. Stanton, 5 Cox CC. 324; R. v. Miles, 59 L.J.M.C. 56, 17 Cox C.C. 9; R. v. wounding or unlawfully inflicting grievous bodily harm, whether his jurisdiction is absolute as it is in some provinces (Code sec. 776) or upon election of summary trial as it is in other provinces (Code sec. 778), sec. 792 gives the like effect to a conviction, and it operates as a release from further or other criminal proceedings for the same cause. Nevills v. Ballard, 28 Ont. R. 588; Green v. Henneghan [1918] 3 W.W.R. 658 (Alta.).

A conviction under sec. 295 for assault occasioning bodily harm does not bar the bringing of a civil action for damages. Grantillo v. Caporici (1899), 16 Que. S.C. 44; Nevills v. Ballard, 28 Ont. R. 588; Green v. Henneghan [1918] 3 W.W.R. 658.

Appcal]—There is no appeal to the Sessions in Ontario from a conviction on summary trial held under sees. 777, 778, for an assault occasioning bodily harm. R. v. Rapp, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 203 (Ont.). As to appeal by case reserved or by leave, on questions of law, see sees. 1013, 1014-1020. The limited appeal under see. 797, from certain summary trials does not apply.

Aggravated assault.

296. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who,—

- (a) assaults any person with intent to commit any indictable offence; or,
- (b) assaults any public or peace officer engaged in the execution of his duty, or any person acting in aid of such officer; or,
- (c) assaults any person with intent to resist or prevent the lawful apprehension or detainer of himself, or of any other person, for any offence; or,
- (d) assaults any person in the lawful execution of any process against any lands or goods, or in making any lawful distress or seizure, or with intent to rescue any goods taken under such process, distress or seizure; or,

As to the more onerous offence of maining or wounding any "public officer" engaged in the execution of his duty, see Code sec. 275, subsec. (b).

Sub-sec. (b)—"Peace officer"]—See definition in sec. 2, sub-sec. 26. Sub-sec (b)—Assaulting an officer engaged in the execution of his duty]—An assault on a peace officer attempting to serve a summons issued by a magistrate under the Canada Temperance Act is an assault on the officer "in the execution of his duty." McFarlane v. The Queen 16 S.C.R. 393.

It is not material to the offence, but a consideration in mitigation of the punishment, that the accused did not know that the other was a peace officer, or did not know that he was engaged in the execution of his duty. R. v. Forbes (1865), 10 Cox C.C. 362.

The officer is "engaged in the execution of his duty" in enforcing a warrant valid on its face if the conditions are such as are referred to in Code sec. 26 as justifying the officer in executing it, notwithstanding the invalidity of the conviction in the particular case. Code sec. 26; R. v. King (1889), 18 Ont. R. 566. Secs. 27-29 deal with the protection of the officer from criminal responsibility because of some irregularity, or lack of jurisdiction in the particular case. An offence under sub-sec. (b) may be the subject of a summary trial under sec. 773 (c), 776, 781, and in that case the punishment imposed must be within the limit of sec. 781; R. v. Burtress (1900), 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 536 (N.S.); R. v. Booth, 31 OLLE, 539; R. v. Crawford (1912), 2 W.W.R. 952 (Alta.); R. v. Shing (1910), 15 W.L.R. 714, 20 Man. R. 214.

Sub-sec. (d)—Assaulting a person making lawful distress]—On a charge of assaulting a person making a lawful distress it would appear necessary to prove the distress warrant and, if signed by an agent, to prove also the authority of such agent. It will not be presumed that a solicitor is authorized to sign a warrant on behalf of his client for the seizure of goods, but his authority as an agent may be proved; R. v. Pierce, 3 Terr. L.R. 347; and if the principal is a corporation quark whether the authority of the agent ought not to be under the corporate seal. R. y. Pierce, supra. Kidnapping.-Forcible confinement.-Non-resistance.

297. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to twenty-five years' imprisonment who, without lawful authority,-

- (a) kidnaps any other person with intent
 - (i) to cause such other person to be secretly confined or imprisoned in Canada against his will, or
 - (ii) to cause such other person to be unlawfully sent or transported out of Canada against his will, or
 - (iii) to cause such other person to be sold or captured as a slave, or in any way held to service against his will; or,
- (b) forcibly seizes or confines or imprisons any other person within Canada.

2. Upon the trial of any offence under this section the nonresistance of a person so unlawfully kidnapped or confined shall not be a defence unless it appears that it was not caused by threats, duress or force, or exhibition of force.

Kidnapping and false imprisonment]—It will be noted that the word "kidnap" is applied in the text to sub-sec. (a) only. The offence under sub-sec. (b) is in strictness, the criminal offence of false imprisonment, a species of aggravated assault. Bishop's Crim. Law, 2nd ed., sec. 668; Cornwall v. The Queen, 33 U.C.Q.B. 106. Under the present form of the statute, which differs from that in question in the Cornwall case, it is an offence without lawful authority to foreibly imprison any other person, and it is also an offence to kidnap another with intent to cause him to be secretly imprisoned against his will and without lawful authority.

The forcible seizure or imprisonment under sub-sec. (b) involves the idea of unlawful violence. Bird v. Jones, 7 Q.B. 744; Hunter v. Johnson, 13 Q.B.D. 225; R. v. Linsberg, 69 J.P. 107; People v, Camp, 139 N.Y. 83 (under N.Y. Penal Code, sec. 211.).

Kidnapping was an indictable offence at common law. R. v. Lesley, 29 L.J.M.C. 97.

Where it appears that a plea of guilty to a charge of kidnapping was entered by the accused without the advice of counsel and without due appreciation of the character of the charge as distinct from the offence of adduction, a conviction for kidnapping made on summary trial by a magistrate without taking any testimony may be quashed on certicrari by a Court of superior criminal jurisdiction on an admission by the Crown that the offence, if any, was not kidnapping but abduction, but with leave to institute fresh proceedings for the latter charge. R. v. Steekley (1914), 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 263, 7 O.W.N. 137.

An assault with intent to kidnap or to forcibly imprison without lawful authority is punishable under Code sec. 296 (a) as an aggravated assault. As to attempts and conspiracies, see secs. 570 and 573.

Without lawful authority]—The authority to forcibly seize, confine or imprison another person may be under civil law or criminal law. As to the latter, see Code sec. 16 et seq. as to matters of justification or excuse, and as to arrest without warrant in certain cases, sec. 646 et seq.

A conviction by a magistrate having competent jurisdiction over the subject matter of it upon which the party has been arrested is, until reversed or quashed, conclusive evidence in favour even of the magistrate in a prosecution against him for false imprisonment; 7 Term. R. 633 n; or in a civil action of trespass. Gates v. Devenish, 6 U.C.Q.B. 260; Townsend v. Beekwith, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 353, 42 N.S.R. 307. And where a justice's conviction is quashed for excess of jurisdiction in a matter to which Part XXII of the Cr. Code 1906, applies, the court may grant an order of protection to the justice by making it a condition of the order to quash that no action shall be brought against him or the officer acting under it. Cr. Code. see. 1131. Similar legislation is to be found in the provincial statutes.

Punishment]-The maximum punishment for this offence was raised by the Code Amendment of 1909 from seven years to twenty-five.

Unlawful Carnal Knowledge.

Rape defined .-- Age.

[§ 297]

298. Rape is the act of a man having carnal knowledge of a woman who is not his wife without her consent, or with consent which has been extorted by threats or fear of bodily harm, or obtained by personating the woman's husband, or by false and fraudulent representations as to the nature and quality of the act.

2. No one under the age of fourteen years can commit this offence.

Origin]-Sec. 266, Code of 1892.

"Not his wife"]—The difference of surname appearing from the acknowledgments or testimony of the accused is some evidence that the woman was not his wife. R. v. Walebek (1913), 4 W.W.R. 501, 23 W.L.R. 931, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 130; R. v. Mullen, 5 O.W.R. 451; 18 Can. Cr. Cas. 80.

Where the prosecutrix was not expressly asked whether she was the wife of the accused but was sworn as a witness and identified herself under a name different from that upon which the accused was arraigned and had pleaded, and further swore that she did not know the accused by name, this was held sufficient proof that she was not the wife of the accused. R. v. Mullen (No. 2) 18 Can. Cr. Cas. 80 (Ont.). It would seem that the difference of name would not alone be a cogent circumstance in the province of Quebec, because of local usages, as regards French-speaking people.

The refusal of the trial Judge to withdraw the case from the jury on the ground that the Crown had failed to prove that the girl was not the wife of the accused, was sustained in a case where there was evidence, if not in the Crown's case, then in that of the defence, on which the jury could find that she was not his wife; R. v. Faulkner (1911), 19 Can. Cr. Cas. 47 at 50, 16 B.C.R. 229; see Rex v. Iman Din (1910), 18 Can. Cr. Cas. 82, 15 B.C.R. 476.

Penetration to be proved]—R. v. Dunning (1908), 1 Sask. L.R. 391, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 461. Emission need not be proved. Code see. 7.

"Woman"]—When there has been no violence, and the girl is under fourteen and has consented or complied, the offence falls under sec. 301; but when there has been violence, and when the girl has not consented, then, notwithstanding the fact that the girl is under fourteen years of

The words "man" and "woman" in this section are to be taken in a general or generic sense as indicating all males and females of the human race, and not in a restricted sense as distinguished from boys and girls. R. v. Riopel (1898), 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 225 (Que.).

Proof of complaint by prosecutrix]-In R. v. Lillyman, [1896] 2 Q.B. 167, 65 L.J.M.C. 195, 60 J.P. 536, it was held by the court (Russell, C.J., Pollock, B., Hawkins, Cave and Wills, JJ.), upon a Crown case reserved, that in cases of indecent assault and rape, and similar charges, not only the fact that the prosecutrix made a complaint soon after the occurrence, but the details of the complaint itself, are admissible in evidence, not as proof of the facts complained of but to show that her conduct at the time was consistent with her story in the witness box and as negativing consent. Hawkins, J., in delivering the judgment of the court, said: "The general usage has been to limit the evidence of the complaint to proof that the woman made a complaint of something done to her, and that she mentioned in connection with it the name of a particular person. . . . After very careful consideration, we have arrived at the conclusion that we are bound by no authority to support the existing usage of limiting evidence of a complaint to the bare fact that a complaint was made, and that reason and good sense are against our doing so. . . . It has been sometimes urged that to admit the particulars of the complaint would be calculated to prejudice the interests of the accused, and that the jury would be apt to treat the complaint as evidence of the facts complained of. Of course, if it were so left to the jury, they would naturally so treat it. But it never could be legally so left, and we think it is the duty of the judge to impress upon the jury that they are not entitled to use the complaint as any evidence whatever of those facts, or for any other purpose than that we have stated. With such a direction, we think the interests of an innocent accused would be better protected than they are under the present usage; for, when the whole statement is laid before the jury, they are less likely to draw wrong inferences, and may sometimes come to the conclusion that what the woman said amounted to no real complaint against the accused." And see R. v. Christie, [1914] A.C. 545.

In R. v. Rush (1896), 60 J.P. 777, the prisoner was indicted for carnally knowing a girl under the age of thirteen years. The day after the commission of the alleged offence the girl's mother questioned her, and the girl, in the absence of the prisoner, made a statement in answer. It was proposed to give the particulars of the statement in evidence on behalf of the prosecution on the authority of R. v. Lillyman, [1896] 2 Q.B. 167, 60 J.P. 536. Mr. Justice Wright, presiding at the Central Criminal Court, said that the lapse of time between the committing of the offence and the making of the statement was important in these cases; that, when counsel proposed to open upon and put in evidence such statements, the judge's attention should first be called to the time that had elapsed between the occurrence and the making of the statement, in order that the judge might be enabled to say whether or not the lapse of time would be an objection to the admissibility of the statement. In Rush's case the statement had not been made immediately after the alleged offence was committed, and the trial judge therefore refused to allow evidence of the particulars of the statement to be given.

Upon the trial of a charge of rape the whole statement made by the woman by way of complaint shortly after the alleged offence, including the name of the party complained against and the other details of the complaint, is admissible in evidence as proof of the consistency of her conduct and as confirmatory of her testimony regarding the offence. but not as independent or substantive evidence to prove the truth of the charge. R. v. Riendeau (1900), 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 293 (Que.).

Whether or not the complaint was made within a time sufficiently short after the commission of the offence as to admit evidence of the particulars of the complaint, is a question to be decided by the court under the circumstances of the particular case; but if admitted, it is nevertheless the province of the jury to take into consideration the time which intervened, in weighing the probability of its truth. R. v. Riendeau (1901), 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 421, 10 Que. K.B. 584; R. v. Cassidy, 7 E.L.R. 216 (P.E.I.); R. v. Spuzzum (1906), 12 B.C.R. 291; R. v. Dunning (1908), 1 Sask. L.R. 391, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 461; R v. Graham (1899), 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 22, 131 Ont. R. 77; R. v. Smith (1905), 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 21 (N.S.); R. v. Barron (1905), 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 196 (N.S.); Hopkinson v. Perdue, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 286 (Ont.); R. v. Osborne, [1905] 1 K.B. 351; R. v. Merry (1900), 19 Cox C.C. 142; R. v. Ingey (1900), 64 J.P. 106; R. v. Bishop, 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 30.

It is an exception to the ordinary rules of evidence that statements made in the absence of the prisoner should be received in evidence against him, but the principle is applied to the crime of rape as to which the question whether the woman was a consenting party is essential. The judge must have a discretion to say whether the complaint made is one which, having regard to the woman and to the safety of the prisoner, should be admitted in evidence. The length of time which has elapsed before the complaint was made, the omission to complain to the first person met by the woman, and to whom she might easily have complained, and the eircumstances of the person who has been outraged, must be considered in deciding whether the complaint should be admitted. R. v. Maenamara (1897), 18 Austr. L.T. 263; R. v. Christie [1914] A.C. 545. The principle is to get the nearest picture of the mind of the woman to see whether the act of the prisoner was an outrage on her, or whether she was a consenting party. Of course the longer the time which has elapsed before the complaint, the more probable it is that a woman who had consented should make a false or exaggerated charge against the man. On the other hand it would be wrong to exclude a complaint made at the earliest reasonable opportunity. The judge must consider in each case the class of person the woman is, the opportunities she has had for complaining, and on the whole he must exercise his discretion and decide whether it appears to him that the complaint was made at such a time as to render it probable that the complaint was spontaneous, and honestly represented her attitude to the prisoner, and to exclude the conclusion, which might otherwise be more reasonable, that she was making a charge to shield herself. R. v. Macnamara, supra.

The question of consent]—The question whether the act of connection was consummated through fear, or merely through solicitation is a question of fact for the jury. R. v. Day (1841), 9 C. & P. 722; R. v. Jones (1861), 4 L.T.N.S. 154; R. v. Cardo (1889), 17 Ont. R. 11; R. v. Fick, 16 U.C.C.P. 379.

Proof on behalf of the defence that the injured party or her parents had instituted civil proceedings to recover damages arising from the commission of the alleged rape is properly excluded upon the criminal trial as irrelevant, unless other facts have been disclosed in evidence which tend to show an intent to thereby wrongfully extort money from the accused. R. v. Riendeau (1900), 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 293, 9 (Que.).

On a charge of rape, evidence is admissible on behalf of the defence to contradict a statement of the complainant, made on her cross-examination, densing that, on on occasion when she met the accused subsequent to the dipersit provision and not used to put an end to the interview, as requested by her potter, and had struck her mother for the latter's interference. Such provident is relevant to the charge not only as affecting the crystapped of the complainant's testimony generally, but as showing conduct monsistent with resistance to the alleged offence. R. v. Riendeau (No. 2), 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 421, 10 Que, K.B. 584.

The prisoner's statement' finade at a previous trial through his counsel may be given in evidence by the prosecution if it tends to anticipate a possible defence which might be offered by the prisoner. R. v. Bedere (1891), 21 O.R. 189. The practice is for the Crown not to object to questions put to the complainant tending to elicit the fact that she had previously had connection with other men; R. v. Lafiberté (1877), 1 S.C.R. 117; but the witness may object, or the judge may, in his discretion, tell the witness she is not bound to answer the question. R. v. Lafiberté (1877), 1 S.C.R. 117. If the answer given is a denial she cannot be contradicted by calling other witnesses, as the point is foreign to the issue. Ibid.; R. v. Muma (1910), 22 O.L.R. 227, 2 O.W.N. 176, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 285; R. v. Cockroft (1870), 11 Cox C.C. 410; R. v. Holmes, L.R. 1 C.C.R. 234. But evidence is admissible by the defence to show the general bad reputation of the complainant for unchastity. R. v. Bishop, 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 30.

The complainant may, however, be cross-examined as to alleged prior illicit connection had with her by the accused; R. v. Riley (1887), 16 Cox C.C. 191, 18 Q.B.D. 481, 56 L.J.M.C. 52; and so discredit her testimony. If she denies having previously had connection with the prisoner, the latter may give evidence in contradiction. R. v. Finnessey (1906), 11 O.L.R. 338, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 347. The prosecutrix is bound to answer questions put as to her general reputation for chastity, and if she refuses to answer, the fact may be shown. R. v. Finnessey (1906), 11 O.L.R. 338, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 347.

A charge may be laid for having carnal knowledge of a girl of fourteen under Code sec. 301 without involving the question of consent; but unless the girl is a witness in the case there could be no question of consistency and the evidence of her complaint would not be admissible unless her testimony was given. R. v. McMillan (1916), 9 W.W.R. 1181.

Consent of on imbecile]—Even though the woman be an imbecile, she may still be capable of giving her consent. If she consents to the intercourse there is no offence in law, unless the man knows or has good reason to believe that she is an imbecile. (Sec. 219.) Three cases regarded as authorities on this point are Reg. v. R. Fletcher, 8 Cox 131; Reg. v. Chas. Fletcher, 10 Cox 248, and Reg. v. Barratt, 12 Cox 498. The effect of these authorities is that if the evidence establishes that the girl was in such a condition of imbecility that the jury might reasonably find that she was incapable of giving her consent, then there is a case to go to the jury, and a verdict of "guilty" on their part will not be disturbed. R. v. Walebek (1913), 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 130, at 133, 23 W.L.R. 931, 4 W.W.R. 501.

In the case of Reg. v. Connelly, 26 U.C.Q.B. 317, the jury expressly found that the woman, though insane, was a consenting party; and the Court held that on such a finding a verdict of guilty could not be supported.

Evidence of child under fourteen]-Code sec. 1003; Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145, sec. 16.

Conviction for lesser offence of assault or indecent assault]—The distinction between felony and misdemeanour is abolished, and proceedings in respect of all offences, except so far as they are varied by the Code, shall be conducted in the same manner. Code sec. 14.

Sec. 951 of the Crim. Code provides that "every count shall be deemed divisible; and if the commission of the offence charged as described in the enactment creating the offence or as charged in the count, includes the commission of any other offence, the person accused may be convicted of any offence so included which is proved, although the whole offence charged is not proved."

SEXUAL CRIMES

An assault is included in every ease of rape as a necessary ingredient. R. v. Muma, 22 O.L.R. 225, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 285; R. v. West, [1898] 1 Q.B. 174; R. v. Edwards (1898), 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 96, 29 Ont. R. 451. The usual form of an indictment for rape is that "A. did assault B., a woman who was not his wife, and did then and there have carnal knowledge of her without her consent." See Regina v. Edwards, 29 O.R. 451, 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 96, and Regina v. Guthrie, L.R. 1 C.C.R. 241; Wilkinson v. Duiton (1863), 32 L.J.M.C. 152, and re Thompson (1860), 6 H. & N. 193, R. v. Fick, 16 U.C.C.P. 379 (Ont.).

Punishment for rape.

299. Every one who commits rape is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to suffer death or to imprisonment for life.

Origin]-Sec. 267, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, eh. 162, sec. 37.

Verdict for a lesser offence proved, if included in the offence charged]—If the judge allows the indictment to go generally to the jury, it is not competent for him to withdraw from their consideration a verdict for any lesser offence which may be included in the indictment. Code sec. 951; R. v. Scherf, 13 B.C.R. 407, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 382; 8 W.L.R. 219; R. v. Edwards (1898), 29 Ont. R. 451, 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 96; R. v. West, [1898] 1 Q.B. 174.

A verdict for an attempt may be returned if the evidence establishes an attempt to commit the offence and the jury negatives the complete offence. Sec. 949, and as to attempts generally, see Code sec. 72. An attempt to commit rape is punishable under sec. 300.

A new trial may be ordered on the ground that the charge of the trial judge was calculated to lead the jury to believe that if they failed to find the accused guilty of rape they would fall short of their plain duty. R. v. Scherf, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 382, 13 B.C.R. 407. In that case, Clement, J., said, "I do not think a judge is entitled to press a jury that far. The evidence points strongly to an offence under sec. 211 of the Code [seduction of girl between fourteen and sixteen]. No intimation of this was given the jury and I believe that if they had known that a verdict of not guilty on the charge of rape would not necessarily mean that the accused would go unwhipt of justice, their action on this indictment might have been different."

The verdict may be for the lesser offence of assault with intent to commit rape; John v. The Queen, 15 S.C.R. 384; or of indecent assault; R. v. Graham (1899), 31 Ont. R. 77, 3 Cau. Cr. Cas. 22.

tt]—The ind proe varied ec. 14. shall be irged as d in the accused although Jury not to separate on trial of capital charge]—The jury must be kept together on the trial of a charge of rape, as it is a capital offence; Code see. 945 (4); and if they have been allowed to separate overnight another jury may be empanelled and the trial begun de novo. There is no duty east upon the judge to exclude from the second jury the jurors who were on the first and who had already heard part of the evidence on the abortive trial. E. v. Luparello (1915), 8 W.W.R. 80, 25 Man. R. 233, 30 W.L.R. 777. On the calling of the second jury the accused has the unimpaired right of challenge. R. v. Luparello, supra.

Excluding public from trial]-Code sec. 645.

Evidence of child under fourteen]-Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145, see. 16. Code see. 1003 makes somewhat similar provisions for offences under sees. 292, 301 and 302, but probably does not apply to offences under sees. 299 or 300.

Wife of accused a compellable witness]—This section is included amongst those specified in sub-sec. 2 of sec. 4 of the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145, and under it the wife of the accused is both a competent and compellable witness, for the prosecution.

Evidence of similar acts]—In dealing with the question of the admissibility of evidence of similar acts, a great deal depends upon the nature of the crime alleged. A rule which may be applied to theft (R. v. Collins, 9 Cox C.C. 497, 33 L.J.M.C. 177), or arson will not necessarily apply to such a crime as rape. And even with respect to crimes of indecency one rule may very well apply to cases where consent is immaterial, such as Rex v. Chitson, [1909] 2 K.B. 945; and another to a case where absence of consent is essential. R. v. Paul (1912), 2 W.W.R. 605, 622. In Rex v. Chitson, [1909] 2 K.B. 945, it is apparent that the reason for the admission of the prisoner's statement to the complainant that he had done the same to another girl was as stated by Lawrence, J., that "if he has made that statement to the prosecutrix at the time alleged by her, that fact would strongly corroborate her evidence that the prisoner was the person who had had connectiont with her."

Compare as to evidence of identity, Thompson v. Director of Public Prosecutions [1918] A.C. 221, 13 Cr. App. R. 61, 87 L.J.K.B. 478; and see reference to R. v. Chitson, in Brunet v. The King, (1918), 57 S.C.R. 83, 30 Can. Cr. Cas. 16, at 40, per Anglin, J.

The case of incest which arose in Rex v. Ball, [1911] A.C. 47, 80 L.J.K.B. 691, rested upon special circumstances applicable to such a crime. The evidence of previous similar acts there admitted was considered relevant as tending to prove the existence of a guilty passion between the brother and sister, i.e., the existence of a guilty relationship between the two which would tend to prove the commission of the act of incest charged. This furnishes a ground for distinguishing incest from rape in dealing with the point under consideration. R. v. Paul (1912), 2 W.W.R. 623, per Stuart, J.

Bail]—Rape is a capital offence and the justices on committing for trial for that offence cannot grant bail. Code sec. 699; re Hopfo's bail (1913), 4 W.W.R. 1, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 116, 23 W.L.R. 751, (Alta.). Bail may, however, be granted by a provincial superior court, Code sec. 699; R. v. Pyburn, 11 O.W.N. 61.

Jurisdiction of sessions excluded]-See sec. 583.

Aiding and abetting a rape]—The aider and abettor is punishable as a principal. Code see, 69; R. v. Finnessey, 11 O.L.R. 338, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 347; R. v. Blais, 11 O.L.R. 345, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 354. He may be indicted jointly with the principal offender. R. v. Blais, supra; but may be granted an order for a separate trial. Code sec. 857. If a separate trial is ordered, the one is bound to testify against the other. Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145, sec. 4, and it would not be illegal for the prosecuting counsel or the judge to comment in their addresses to the jury upon the failure of the accused to call as his witness the person jointly charged but ordered to be separately tried. R. v. Blais, 11 O.L.R. 345, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 354.

Boy under fourteen]—A boy under fourteen years of age cannot be convicted of rape. Code sec. 298 (2). He is presumed by law to be unable to commit the offence and it would seem that he would not be liable to be convicted of carnally knowing a girl under fourteen in contravention of Code sec. 301. See Code 16 preserving excuses and defences under the common law where not inconsistent with the Code, and see R. v. Waite [1892] 2 Q.B. 600, 61 L.J.M.C. 187. But he may be found guilty of an indecent assault; R. v. Williams [1893] 1 Q.B. 320; or of a common assault. R. v. Waite, supra.

Carnally knowing girl under fourteen years.

301. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for life, and to be whipped, who carnally knows any girl under the age of fourteen years, not being his wife, whether he believes her to be of or above that age or not.

Origin]-See. 269, Code of 1892; 53 Vict., Can., ch. 37, sec. 12.

Carnal knowledge]-Code sec. 7 dispenses with proof of emission.

An indictment for rape under sees. 298 and 299 lies against one who has ravished a female under the age of fourteen years against her will, notwithstanding this section. R. v. Riopel (1898), 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 225; R. v. Bateliffe (1882), 15 Cox C.C. 127; R. v. Dicken (1877), 14 Cox C.C. 8.

Carnal knowledge alone constitutes an offence under this section when the girl is under the age of fourteen and her consent to the act is not a defence. R. v. Brice, 7 Man. R. 627; R. v. Chisholm, 7 Man. R. 613; R. v. Cameron (1901), 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 385 (Ont.).

Proof or inference of age]-Code sec. 984.

BLOKE 10

Evidence of paternity by showing child's similarity to the accused]— A child, sworn to have been born of the criminal intercourse, may be exhibited to the jury, and its likeness to the accused pointed out in proof of the charge, but it is preferable that witnesses should be called to testify to the points of likeness relied upon, R. v. Hughes, 22 O.L.R. 344, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 450; Udy v. Stewart, 10 Ont. R. 590.

Cross-examination going to credit]—In R. v. Cargill [1913] 2 K.B. 271, 82 L.J.K.B. 655, 8 Cr. App. R. 224, defendant's counsel crossexamined the girl as to alleged previous acts of connection with other men which she denied. Evidence tendered to prove such previous acts was rejected, the question of seduction not being relevant to the issue although the girl had given evidence that defendant had seduced her, which evidence had not been objected to; neither could the rejected evidence be received to show that the girl was unworthy of belief as the rule is that her answers to questions in cross-examination going merely to credit cannot be contradicted.

Matters which go to credit only and are relevant only as going to credit cannot be contradicted by further evidence; so the evidence of the girl as to her chastity admitted, though irrelevant, on a charge of carnal knowledge of a girl under the statutory age, cannot be rebutted by positive testimony where she has maintained her statement when cross-examined to credit. R. v. Cargill, supra, commenting on Attorney-General v. Hitchcock (1847) 1 Exch. R. 99, 16 L.J. Ex. 259, and Thomas v. David, 7 C. & P. 350.

Verdict for a lesser offence proved]—Sec. 951 authorizes a verdict of indecent assault (sec. 292), the consent of a girl under fourteen not being material to that offence; see. 294; R. v. Cameron (1901), 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 385 (Ont.); or if the complete commission of the offence under sec. 301 is not proved, but the evidence establishes an attempt to commit the offence, the accused may be convicted of such attempt (sec. 949) and punished acordingly. Sec. 302.

Excluding public from trial]-Code sec. 645.

Joinder of counts]—A charge of carnal knowledge of a girl under fourteen may be joined with a charge of criminal seduction of the same girl when between fourteen and sixteen. Code sec. 856; R. v. Hughes, 22 O.L.R. 344, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 450. The court may order a separate trial of each count. Code sec. 857; R. v. Hughes, supra.

Insufficiency of alleged admission or confession]—See R. v. Blyth (1917), 11 O.W.N. 406.

Wife of accused a compellable witness]—This section is included amongst those specified in sub-sec. 2 of sec. 4 of the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145, and under it the wife of the accused is both a competent and compellable witness for the prosecution.

302. Every one who attempts to have unlawful carnal knowledge of any girl under the age of fourteen years is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment, and to be whipped.

Origin]-Sec. 270, Code of 1892; 53 Viet., ch. 37, sec. 12.

Child's evidence not under outh]—In a case where the trial judge received the child's statement, without oath, under sec. 1003 of the Code, and upon that and other evidence convicted the prisoner of the offence charged, he reserved for the opinion of the Court of Appeal the questions whether the child's statement was sufficiently corroborated to comply with the requirements of sub-sec. 2 of sec. 1003, and whether he was right in holding that there was sufficient evidence to justify his finding the prisoner guilty. It was held that the evidence of the child was sufficiently corroborated by: (a) evidence of the statement

Upon the trial of a charge of attempted earnal knowledge of a girl under fourteen who is too young to understand the nature of an oath, a conviction for that offence is not warranted unless her evidence not under oath is corroborated by some other material evidence implicating the accused (Code sec. 1003), but the accused may be convicted of common assault upon the charge so laid if there be corroboration merely by some other material evidence. R. v. De Wolfe (1904), 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 38; Can. Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145, see. 16.

Abortion.

Attempt to procure abortion.

303. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for life who, with intent to procure the miscarriage of any woman, whether she is or is not with child, unlawfully administers to her or causes to be taken by her any drug or other noxious thing, or unlawfully uses on her any instrument or other means whatsoever with the like intent.

Origin]—Sec. 272, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 162, sec. 47; 32-33
Viet., Can., ch. 20, sec. 59.

With intent]—Supplying a noxious thing with intent to procure abortion is an offence by the terms of this section, although it subsequently appears that the woman was not pregnant. See R. v. Titley (1880), 14 Cox C.C. 502; R. v. Goodhall (1846), 1 Den. 187.

ABORTION

Where the instrument alleged to have been used was a quill, which might possibly have been used for an innocent purpose, evidence was allowed to be given, in order to prove the intent, that the prisoner had at other times caused miscarriages by similar means. R. v. Dale (1889), 16 Cox C.C. 703, per Charles, J.

And see Brunet v. The King (1918), 30 Can. Cr. Cas. 16, 57 S.C.R. 83, and note infra, on Evidence of previous criminal acts.

Causes to be taken]—Where the prisoner gave the prosecutrix the drug for the purpose of procuring abortion, and the prosecutrix took it for that purpose in the prisoner's absence, it was held that he had "caused it to be taken" within the meaning of a similar English statute. R. v. Wilson (1856), Dears. & B. 127; R. v. Farrow (1857), Dears. & B. 164.

Drug or other noxious thing]—The statute 32-33 Viet., c. 20, s. 59 ns well as the later Act, R.S.C. 1886, c. 162, s. 47, used the phrase, any poison or any other noxious thing. It was laid down under that statute that while poisons are not noxious things when taken as medicine in ordinary treatment, that if taken or administered in undue and immoderate quantities the excess of the article becomes noxious, and it was not essential to support a conviction that the article should be noxious in itself if it was a "poison." R. v. Stitt (1879), 30 U.C.C.P. 30, 33.

The thing administered must be either a "drug" or a "noxious thing," and it is not sufficient that the accused supposed it would have the desired effect. R. v. Hollis (1873), 12 Cox C.C. 463; R. v. Isaacs (1862), 9 Cox C.C. 228, 32 L.J.M.C. 52.

To the same effect is the decision in R. v. Pettibone [1918] 2 W.W.R. 806 (Alta.).

If the article administered is not a "drug" and the quantity administered is innoxious but would be noxious had it been taken in large quantities, there is no administration of a noxious thing within the section. R. v. Hennah (1877), 13 Cox C.C. 547.

If the drug administered produces miscarriage it is sufficient evidence that it is noxious although there is no other evidence of its nature. R. v. Hollis (1873), 12 Cox C.C. 463.

Evidence that quantities of oil of juniper considerably less than half an ounce are commonly taken medicinally without any bad results, but that half an ounce produces ill effects and is to a pregnant woman dangerous, was held sufficient from which a jury might infer that the latter quantity was a noxious thing. R. v. Cramp (1880), 5 Q.B.D. 307.

Excluding public from trial]-Code sec. 645.

Aiding and abetting in the offence]-See Code sees. 69, 305.

On a charge of abortion alleged to have been committed by a physician at the instigation of the accused, it is necessary to prove both that the physician's operation was unnecessary and unlawful, and that the accused procured or abetted such unlawful operation. [§ 303]

There is no statutory requirement of corroboration in respect of an offence under sec. 303, and a conviction may be founded on the evidence of the woman on whom the operation was performed. R. v. Sadick Bey (1914), 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 259, 20 Rev. Leg. N.S. 140 (Que.).

Where the accused was tried on a charge of procuring abortion and the only evidence was that of the woman who swore that she went to the accused and asked him to perform the operation, she herself being a consenting party thereto, the trial judge directed the jury that they should not convict upon the uncorroborated evidence of the woman who was particeps criminis. The jury, notwithstanding, brought in a verdict of guilty, and it was held that the evidence of an accomplice, even though uncorroborated, is legal evidence and sufficient to support a conviction, but the trial judge should advise the jury not to convict upon such evidence. R. v. Revnolds (1908), 1 Sask, L.R. 480.

Charging same offence in different manner]-In an indictment laid under sec. 303 of the Code, the first count charged that the accused, with the intent to procure a miscarriage, etc., did unlawfully use upon the person of the woman an instrument, etc.; the second count charged that with like intent the necused did unlawfully "operate" on the said woman. The evidence submitted by the Crown was directed solely to proof of the fact of the performance of an operation by the use of an instrument, substantially negativing the use of the hand or finger alone for the alleged purpose. The jury, however, were charged-after they had intimated that they were not satisfied that the evidence established the use of an instrument-that the use of the hand or finger might be considered in dealing with the second count. The jury found the accused not guilty on the first count, but guilty on the second count. It was held that the second count might not unnaturally be regarded as a mere repetition in another form of the gravamen of the first count, and that by the finding of not guilty on that count the whole case against the accused failed, and the finding on the second count, therefore, could not be supported. R. v. Cook (1909), 19 O.L.R. 174, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 40. And see Code sec. 892 (application to divide counts), and see, 909 (plea of autrefois).

Conspiracy to procure abortion]—In R. v. Bachrack, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 257, 28 O.L.R. 32, the Ontario Court of Appeal held that acts and declarations of those charged with conspiracy to procure abortion, occurring immediately after the commission of the operation, and made while procuring care for the person upon whom the abortion was performed, were admissible in evidence. As to conspiracies generally, see Code see, 573.

The form of the indictment in R. v. Bachrack, supra, was for that the accused did, at a named place and in a given month, conspire, combine, confederate, and agree together to commit a certain indictable offence, to wit, the erime of abortion, by then and there conspiring, combining, confederating, and agreeing together to procure the miscarriage of a certain woman (naming her), thereby committing an indictable offence, contrary to the Criminal Code. It was held that the form of the indictment was sufficient. Code sees. 303, 852; Regina v. Rowlands (1851), 17 Q.B. 671. The finding of the jury that the prisoners conspired to procure the abortion in the Province of Ontario was warranted by the evidence, but, finding it difficult to do so there, they went to a foreign country. Evidence of what took place in the foreign country in furtherance of the conspiracy was properly admitted. R. v. Bachrack, supra.

Particulars of conspiracy to procure abortion]—Particulars may be ordered whereby the prosecution is further to describe the means by which any offence was committed, etc.; Code sec. 859, sub-sec. (f); R. v. Bachrack (1913), 28 O.L.R. 32, and see form of demand for particulars and of particulars served in answer in the last-mentioned case (28 O.L.R. at 32), also form of demurrer (28 O.L.R. at 34).

Evidence of accomplice]—A conviction will stand although the only incriminating evidence was that of the woman on whom the abortion was practised with her own consent, but the trial judge may properly instruct the jury in such a case that they ought not to convict on the evidence of the woman alone when she was an accomplice. R. v. Reynolds, 9 W.L.R. 299, 1 Sask. L.R. 80, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 209. R. v. Betchel, 2 W.W.R. 624, 4 Alta. L.R. 402, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 423, 21 W.L.R. 665.

Attempt to have woman take norious drug to procure abortion]-Attempts are punishable under sec. 570. As to what constitutes an attempt of an indictable offence generally, see Code see, 72. An attempt may be complete whether under the circumstances it was possible to commit the attempted offence or not, and so a conviction may be made for an attempt where made with drugs believed by the accused to be of a kind suitable for the illegal purpose, although they were in fact not of that kind. R. v. Pettibone [1918] 2 W.W.R. 806. So also it is sufficient that he tried to cause the woman to take the drugs and believed she had done so, although she did not take any of them, but deceived him into thinking she had done so. R. v. Pettibone, supra. Where none of the drugs were actually taken or where no instrument is used, as the case may be, the charge should be for an attempt only. R. v. Pettibone, supra. If, on the other hand, the charge had been for the actual offence under sec. 303, it would have been necessary to prove that the substances referred to were in truth noxious drugs or other noxious things within the meaning of sec. 303. R. v. Pettibone [1918] 2 W.W.R. 806 (Alta.); R. v. Isaacs, L. & C. 220, 32 L.J.M.C. 52; R. v. Hollis, 12 Cox C.C. 463.

Where death results]—Where the illegal operation by which an abortion is procured causes the woman's death and a charge of murder is laid, there is no rule that the cause of death must be proved by the post-mortem examination; the case may go to the jury notwithstanding the absence of a complete post-mortem. R. v. Garrow, 5 B.C.R. 61, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 246. As to culpable homicide, see sec. 252; murder, sees. 259, 260; manslaughter, see. 262. Where the woman's death results and charges are laid in one indictment both for the unlawful administering of drugs with intent and for manslaughter, the former charge must be withdrawn if the prosecution uses the woman's dying declaration which would be admissible only upon a homicide charge. R. v. Inkster (1915), 8 W.W.R. 1098, 8 Sask. L.R. 233, 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 294, 31 W.I.R. 782.

As to constructive murder from abortion practices, see R. v. Whitmarsh (1898), 62 J.P. 680, 711, 42 Sol. J. 847; Code sec. 259; and as to manslaughter, Code secs. 252, 262.

Where the woman had died from other causes, evidence of what she had said to a witness and not in the presence of the accused, as to her bodily condition, must be confined to contemporaneous symptoms, and nothing in the nature of a narrative is admissible as to who caused them or how they were caused. R. v. Thomson (1912), 7 Cr. App. R. 276, applying R. v. Gloster (1888), 16 Cox C.C. 471.

An acquittal on a homicide charge will not bar a prosecution for procuring the abortion. R. v. Topham, 28 L.J. (Eng.), 186; compare R. v. Serné, 16 Cox C.C. 311, 107 Cent. Cr. Court Sess. papers 418.

Evidence of previous criminal acts]-In Rex v. Pollard, 19 O.L.R. 96, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 74, there was an indictment of the defendants (P., a physician and surgeon, and T., a boarding-house keeper), for procuring an abortion. The case for the Crown was that the defendants had performed an unlawful operation upon a certain woman, for the purpose of procuring a miscarriage. Of this there was evidence to go to the jury. The defence was then entered upon, and the defendant, P., swore that the operation was performed for a lawful purpose, and without any criminal intent. He was cross-examined as to whether he had not, some few weeks previously, performed an operation upon a person then in court. He denied having done so, and all knowledge of having treated her at all. This person and the man whom she had subsequently married were, against objection, caled in reply, and gave evidence that P. had been employed to operate, and had operated, upon her so as to procure a miscarriage. It was contended that this evidence was admissible, as tending to rebut the evidence of P., or, in other words, to prove the unlawful intent. It was held that the testimony of these witnesses was improperly admitted, there being no evidence of a system which would let in proof of a single prior criminal act as part of it. R. v. Pollard (1909), 19 O.L.R. 96.

ABORTION

But where the defence raised was that the instruments had been used for a lawful purpose and with no criminal intent, the prosecution was allowed to prove by another female witness that he had performed a like operation upon her to procure miscarriage, and had told her at the time that he had "put dozens of girls right." R. v. Bond [1906] 2 K.B. 389, 75 L.J.K.B. 693. That statement of the accused in Bond's case was evidence of system although in respect of a single prior act of nearly a year before. R. v. Pollard, 19 O.L.R. 96, 99; Brunet v. The King (1918), 30 Can. Cr. Cas. 16 (Can.).

That the means used was not for an innocent purpose may be shown by the use of the same means at other times, not too remote, for an illegal purpose, at least where it is not the customary means for effecting the innocent purpose. See R. v. Dale, (1889), 16 Cox C.C. 703.

Evidence will not be inadmissible on the ground only that it goes to prove only one other criminal act and not one of a number. There may be other circumstances showing the act sought to be proved to be part of a criminal practice or system of which the criminal offence charged in the indictment formed part. R. v. Bond [1906] 2 K.B. 389, 75 L.J.K.B. 693. A nexus must be shown between the act charged and the other acts given in evidence, and this must be such that the criminal intent appearing from such other acts is inferentially the same in the act charged. R. v. Ollis [1900] 2 K.B. 758, 69 L.J.Q.B. 918, 19 Cox C.C. 554; R. v. Fisher [1910] 1 K.B. 149, 79 L.J.K.B. 187, 22 Cox C.C. 270 (false pretenses); R. v. Rhodes [1899] 1 Q.B. 77; Makin v. Attorney-General of N.S.W. [1894] A.C. 57, 63 L.J.P.C. 41, 17 Cox C.C. 704; Perkins v. Jeffrey [1915] 2 K.B. 702, 84 L.J.K.B. 1554, 25 Cox C.C. 59; R. v. Boyle and Merchant [1914] 3 K.B. 339; R. v. Geering. 18 L.J.M.C. 215; R. v. Roden 12 Cox C.C. 630; R. v. Cotton 12 Cox C.C. 400; R. v. Welford (1918) 41 O.L.R. 359 (under a liquor law).

Compare R. v. Rose [1918] 3 W.W.R. 950 (Alta.), in which evidence of numerous other liquor prescriptions were admitted on a charge against a physician for illegal prescription of liquor where not medicinally required.

The evidence may be given in various classes of cases in proof of guilty knowledge, or intent, or system, or in rebutting an appearance of innocence which, unexplained, the facts might wear; Thompson v. Director of Public Prosecutions, [1918] A.C. 221, 87 L.J.K.B. 478, 484; and notwithstanding that the general character of such evidence is to show that "the accused had in him the makings of a criminal." Thompson's case, supra, 87 L.J.K.B. 478, 484, per Lord Sumner. In cases of procuring abortion such evidence is constantly and properly admitted. But, before an issue can be said to be raised which would permit the introduction of such evidence so obviously prejudicial to the accused, it must have been "raised in substance, if not in so many words, and the issue so raised must be one to which the prejudicial evidence is relevant." Thompson v. Director of Public Prosecutions [1918] A.C. 221, 87 L.J.K.B 478, 484 (H.L.); Brunet v. The King (1918), 30 Can. Cr. Cas. 16 (Can.). It has been said by high authority that such evidence may be relevant if it "tends to make more probable the criminal intent regarding which, in view of the defence set up, it was essential that the Crown should not leave room for reasonable doubt." R. v. Olis [1900] 2 K.B. 758, per Lord Russell, C.J.; Brunet v. The King (1918), 30 Can. Cr. Cas. 16 at 39, per Anglin, J.

Counselling the offence]-If the woman were with child the administration of a poison or other noxious thing with the unlawful intent would be a felony. Stephen, Crim. Law, art. 236. And to incite a felony, when no felony was committed, was generally a common law misdemeanour. Brousseau v. The King (1917), 56 S.C.R. 22, 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 207, per Fitzpatrick, C.J.; R. v. Gregory, L.R. 1 C.C.R. 77; see also R. v. Ransford, 13 Cox C.C. 9. As regards the common law offence of counselling a felony, it may not be material where the place was at which the felony itself was committed or attempted, as the offence of counselling the other within the jurisdiction to commit the crime would be complete although the crime was not attempted. In this view it would seem that R. v. Walkem (1908), 14 B.C.R. 1, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 122, may have to be reconsidered. In that case there was evidence that accused counselled the woman to submit to an operation within the jurisdiction, but she had in fact gone to the United States and submitted to an operation there in consequence of the counselling. The question reserved for the decision of the Supreme Court of British Columbia appears to have ignored the circumstance that the woman was counselled within the jurisdiction to submit to an illegal operation to be performed within the jurisdiction, and raised only the point whether counselling in Canada to submit to an abortion in the United States was an offence. That court held that it was not an offence against the criminal law of Canada. R. v. Walkem, supra. The criminal common law of England is still in force in Canada, except in so far as repealed either expressly or by implication. Union Colliery Co. v. The Queen 31 S.C.R. 81, 87; Brousseau v. The King (1917), 56 S.C.R. 22, in which the effect of sec. 69 (d) of the Code is discussed. That sub-section enacts that every one is a party to and guilty of an offence who counsels or procures any person to commit the offence. And it was pointed out in the Brousseau case that to incite the commission of a felony, although the felony was not committed, was generally a misdemeanour at common law, even if sec. 69 (d) does not apply to an incited offence not completed, many of the judges favouring the view that it does so apply.

Every woman is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to seven years' imprisonment who, whether with child or not, unlawfully administers to herself or permits to be administered to her any drug or other noxious thing, or unlawfully uses on herself or permits to be used on her any instrument or other means whatsoever with intent to procure miscarriage.

Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who unlawfully supplies or procures any drug or other noxious thing, or any instrument or thing whatsoever, knowing that the same is intended to be unlawfully used or employed with intent to procure the miscarriage of any woman, whether she is or is not with child.

Bigamy defined.—Incompetency no defence.—Excuses.—Bigamous marriages outside of Canada.—Form of marriage.

307. Bigamy is,---

[§ 306]

- (a) the act of a person who, being married, goes through a form of marriage with any other person in any part of the world; or,
- (b) the act of a person who goes through a form of marriage in any part of the world with any person whom he or she knows to be married; or,
- (c) the act of a person who goes through a form of marriage with more than one person simultaneously, or on the same day.

2. The fact that the parties would, if unmarried, have been incompetent to contract marriage shall be no defence upon a prosecution for bigamy.

3. No one commits bigamy by going through a form of marriage,---

- (a) if he or she in good faith and on reasonable grounds believes his wife or her husband to be dead; or,
- (b) if his wife or her husband has been continually absent for seven years then last past and he or she is not proved to have known that his wife or her husband was alive at any time during those seven years; or,
- (c) if he or she has been divorced from the bond of the first marriage; or,
- (d) if the former marriage has been declared void by a court of competent jurisdiction.

4. No person shall be liable to be convicted of bigamy in respect of having gone through a form of marriage in a place not in Canada, unless such person, being a British subject resident in Canada, leaves Canada with intent to go through such form of marriage.

5. Every form of marriage shall for the purpose of this section be valid, notwithstanding any act or default of the person charged with bigamy, if it is otherwise a valid form.

Origin]-Sec. 275, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 37, sec. 10.

Wife or husband of accused a compellable witness]—This section is included amongst those specified in sub-sec. 2 of sec. 4 of the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145, and under it the wife or husband of the accused is both a competent and compellable witness for the prosecution.

No presumption of validity of marriage against person charged with bigamy]—Cases of bigamy and actions of crim. con. are exceptions to the rule applicable as to property interests by which there is a strong presumption in favour of the validity of a marriage proved to have been celebrated de facto. Hedge v. Morrow, 32 O.L.R. 218, 7 O.W.N. 279; re Sheran, 4 Terr. L.R. 83.

But where as in Nova Scotia the requirement of the provincial marriage law, R.S.N.S., ch. 3, see. 3, was that, with certain exceptions, every marriage shall be solemnized by a minister or elergyman of a clurch or religious denomination, being a man and resident in Canada, "recognized as duly ordained according to the rites and ceremonies of the Church or denomination to which he belongs," it was held on a bigamy charge that it was enough to prove that the de facto officiating elergyman was recognized as duly ordained according to the rites and ceremonies of the denomination to which he belonged. R. v. Cameron (1917), 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 113 (N.S.).

And in R. v. Debard, (1918), 15 O.W.N. 250, the first wife's evidence was admitted to prove not only the form of marriage, but that the person officiating was a justice of the peace in the foreign state.

The fact that the provincial marriage law imposes penalties upon persons solemnizing marriages without certain formalities being complied with, where its provisions do not declare that a marriage performed without compliance with these requirements is null and void, will not necessarily imply nullity. Beamish v. Beamish, 9 H.L.C., at p. 331; Harris v. Meyer, 50 N.S.R. 117, 30 D.L.R. 26; R. v. Cameron (1917), 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 113, 115 (N.S.); Londonderry v. Chester, 9 Am. Dec. 61.

marriage or but for some act or default of the person charged; secs. 240 (a), 307, sub-sec. 5; or it may be a form of marriage which, although not recognized by the law of the place where it was gone through, was such that a marriage celebrated there in that form is recognized as binding by the law of the province or territory where the offender is tried. Code sec. 240 (a); R. v. Hutchins, 4 W.W.R. 1240, 25 W.L.R. 1, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 27 (Sask.); R. v. Allen, 41 L.J.M.C. 97.

British subject leaving Canada with intent]—The legislation in this regard has been held to be within the legislative power of the Canadian Parliament when the extra-territorial act contemplated by the first subsection as taking place "in any part of the world" follows upon the leaving with intent (sub-sec. 4) which is the gist of the offence although expressed in a limitative clause; Re Bigamy sections (1897), 27 S.C.R. 461, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 172; R. v. Brinkley (1907), 14 O.L.R. 434, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 454; and subject to the qualification expressed in subsec. (4) that only a British subject so leaving with intent shall be liable to prosecution. See also the Imperial statute 24-25 Vict., ch. 100, sec. 57; K. v. Earl Russell (1901) A.C. 446, 70 L.J.K.B. 998. The decision in R. v. Plowman (1894), 25 Ont. R. 656, was overruled by the decision in "re Bigamy sections," supra, which distinguished the leading case of Maeleod v. New South Wales [1891] A.C. 455, 60 L.J.P.C. 55.

The onus of proof of the unlawful intent in leaving Canada is upon the prosecution. R. v. Pierce (1887), 13 Ont. R. 226.

An absence of mens rea is not to be inferred where the man leaving Canada to re-marry relied on a foreign divorce which his first wife had obtained from a foreign court, although he had obtained legal advice that the divorce enabled him to re-marry, if, in fact, the foreign divorce was made by a court without jurisdiction over him and the decree was therefore not valid in Canada. R. v. Brinkley (1907.), 14 O.L.R. 434, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 454.

For an example of a colonial enactment making an offence of prohibited extra-territorial acts and the return into the jurisdiction within a limited period thereafter, see New Zealand Customs Act, 1913, sec. 206; Peninsular and Oriental S.N. Co. v. Kingston [1903] A.C. 471, 476.

Proving the first marriage when celebrated within the jurisdiction]— The validity of a marriage is determined by the law of the domicile at the time of the marriage. Gray v. National Trust Co. (1915), 8 W.W.R. 1061, 31 W.L.R. 684.

Proof of the first marriage when celebrated within the jurisdiction may be made by calling, where possible, the officiating minister or other functionary authorized to perform marriage ceremonies by the law of the province where it was performed, and calling witnesses as to identify of the parties, as well as putting in any official record, or extract from the record, in which the marriage is entered in conformity with the

If the prosecution is in a different province than that in which the first marriage was celebrated, the official record may be less effective as proof than it would have been in the province in which it was issued. R. v. Lafrenière, 12 Que. P.R. 83. The provincial laws of evidence are to govern. subject to the provisions of any federal law. Can. Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145, sec. 35. As to giving notice to produce official certificates or extracts as evidence, see Can. Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145, secs. 25 and 28.

Professional or expert evidence of foreign marriage laws on proving a first marriage out of Canada]—The leading authority on the subject of proof of foreign marriage law is The Sussex Peerage Case (1844), 11 Cl. & F. 85, 134. It was there laid down that, although it was not necessary that one should be a professional lawyer to prove the foreign law, it must be one who was peritus virtule officii. A bishop who had held a quasi-judicial position at Rome, was held qualified to prove the canon law as to marriage which was in force in that eity. In this case the House of Lords overruled the decision of Wightman, J., in Regina v. Dent (1843), 1 C. & K. 97, who accepted, in the case of a Seotch marriage, the testimony of a non-professional witness who had no special knowledge as to the law of Secoland.

The best evidence on such a point is that of a foreign judge, or of a barrister or solicitor practising in the Courts of his own country. R. v. Naoum, 19 Can. Cr. Cas. 102, at 108, 24 O.L.R. 306; R. v. Naguis [1916] W.N. 427; R. v. Savage, 13 Cox C.C. 178; R. v. Lindsav (1902). 66 J.P. 505. In addition, the following have been held to be competent: a colonial Attorney-General, who was not a lawyer, as to the law of the colony (The Sussex Peerage Case, supra, at p. 124); a Governor-General of Hong Kong, as to the marriage law there (Cooper-King v. Cooper-King, [1900] P. 65); an English barrister, who had been employed by the Colonial Office as to marriage questions in Malta, although he had never practised there, as to Maltese law (Wilson v. Wilson, [1903] P. 157); a Persian ambassador, as to the law of his country, which he is required officially to know (In the Goods of Dost Alv Khan (1880), 6 P.D. 6); a Chilian notary, as to the testamentary law of Chili (In the Goods of Whitelegg, [1899] P. 267); as to the marriage law of Michigan, a minister of 25 years' standing in that State, who had studied these laws and had communications with the Secretary of State regarding them, and had celebrated many marriages (R. v. Brierly, 14 O.R. 525), the officiating minister who performed the ceremony in the foreign jurisdiction under authority of the foreign law. R. v. Bleiler (1912), 2 W.W.R. 5, 21 W.L.R. 18, 4 Alta, L.R. 320, 19 Can. Cr. Cas. 249. The following have been held not to be competent: a jurisconsult, who studied the foreign law at a university in another country, and who had not practical knowledge of it (Bristow v. Sequeville Cartwright (1878), 26 W.R. 684); as to Scotch marriage law, a priest of that country who had celebrated many marriages there. (R. v. Savage, 13 Cox C.C. 178).

There must be proof of a marriage in fact as distinguished from a mere acknowledgment by the accused of the so-called first wife as his wife or cohabitation and reputation as such. Zdrahal v. Shatney (1912), 3 W.W.R. 239, 22 W.L.R. 336, 20 Can. Cr. Cas. 206; re Sheran, 4 Terr. L.R. 83; Marks v. Marks, 40 S.C.R. 210, affirming 13 B.C.R. 161.

This may appear from the first wife's testimony apart from the marriage certificate and her correspondence with her husband. R. v. Debard, (1918), 15 O.W.N. 250. And she may prove the ceremony before a de facto justice, when this evidence is supplemented by competent testimony that a justice was authorized by state law to solemnize marriages. R. v. Debard, supra.

An admission of the first marriage, voluntarily made by the accused on his being charged with bigamy and being duly warned, confirmed by the testimony of other witnesses of such marriage ceremony having been celebrated in ecclesiastical form, and followed by cohabitation, may be accepted in lieu of professional evidence. R. v. Naoum, 24 O.L.R. 306; Zdrahal v. Shatney (1912), 3 W.W.R. 239, 22 W.L.R. 336, 20 Can. Cr. Cas. 206 (Man.); R. v. Creamer (1860), 10 L.C.R. 404 (Que.); R. v. Newton, 2 Moody & R. 503; R. v. Simmonsto 1 C. & K. 164, 1 Cox C.C. 30; R. v. McQuigg m, 2 L.C.R. 340 (Que.); but see R. v. Ray, 20 Ont. R. 212; R. v. Lindsay (1902), 18 Times L.R. 761; R. v. Griffin, 14 Cox C.C. 308.

But admission of the first marriage is to be received with caution on a prosecution for bigamy, because of the motives which might induce such a representation to be made whether true or not, and because it is an admission of a mixed question of law and fact. R. v. Naoum (1911), 19 Can. Cr. Cas. 102, 24 O.L.R. 306; R. v. Duff, 29 U.C.C.P. 255 (Ont.).

See Taylor on Evidence, 10th ed., sec. 865; 1 Wharton's Crim. Evid., 10th ed., sees. 171, 172.

In R. v. Hutchins (1913), 4 W.W.R. 1240, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 27, the only evidence of the second ceremony was the statement of the accused that he "went though a form of marriage with Anna L. Seyfert." The first marriage to Irene Hutchins having been proved, it was further necessary to support the conviction, to prove that the accused after wards went through a valid form of marriage with Anna L. Seyfert. A valid form of marriage for this purpose is a form of marriage known to, and recognized by the law as capable of producing a valid marriage indepe 41 L.J A sofficer proof Lafran As independently of the bigamous character of the marriage: R. v. Allen, 41 L.J.M.C. 97, 101, 12 Cox C.C. 193; R. v. Hutchins, supra.

A statutory certificate of marriage given by a marriage registration officer of the province in which it was celebrated, may not be sufficient proof in another province of the celebration of that marriage. R. v. Lafranière, 12 Que, P.R. 83.

As to foreign certificates of marriage and of the recording of the marriage, see R. v. Debard, (1918), 15 O.W.N. 250.

Sub-sec. 3 (a)—Belief of death of consort]—Sub-sec. 3 (a) adopts the law as it had been laid down in R. v. Tolson (1889) 23 Q.B.D. 168; and see R. v. Smith, 14 U.C.Q.B. 565 (Ont.).

Sub-sec. 3 (b)—Continual absence of consort for seven years and no proof that accused knew consort was alive]—The continual absence here referred to as an excuse for bigamy is absence from the person. R. v. Penaul, alias Rafuse (1915), 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 161 affirmed, 49 N.S.R. 301.

If the prisoner and his first wife had lived apart for more than seven years before he married again, mere proof that the first wife was alive at the time of the second marriage is not enough; there must be evidence that the accused was aware that she was alive at some time within the seven years preceding the second marriage. R. v. Fontaine, 15 L.C. Jur. 141; R. v. Curgerwen (1865), L.R. 1 C.C.R. 1, 10 Cox C.C. 152; R. v. Heaton (1863), 3 F. & F. 819.

When the prosecution have proved the two marriages and that the first wife was alive at the time of the second marriage the onus is on the accused to show that his first wife had been continually absent for seven years before the second marriage. R. v. Willshire (1880), 6 Q.B.D. 366, 14 Cox C.C. 541; R. v. Lumley, L.R. 1 C.C.R. 196; R. v. Dwyer, 27 L.C. Jur. 201. And the onus after such proof is then upon the prosecution to show that he knew that the first wife was alive at some time during those seven years.

The absence need not have been in another country or even in another province of Canada. R. v. Penaul, supra.

It is not enough to prove that the accused had the means of knowledge as to whether the consort was living during some part of the seven years, if the accused satisfies the onus of proving that his first wife had been continually absent. R. v. Faulkes, (1903) 19 Times L.R. 250; and see R. v. Jones, 11 Q.B.D. 118. The accused is, of course, subject to cross-examination if he goes in the witness-box to testify on his own behalf as he may do under the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145, sec. 4.

Sub-sec. 3 (c)—"If he or she has been divorced," etc.]—As to a prior divorce the exception of sec. 307 of the Code is "if he or she has been divorced from the bond of the first marriage." To establish a defence under that part of the section it is necessary to show a valid divorce; the provisions declaring an honest belief in the consort's death as one defence and a divorce as another are inconsistent with a defence of a mere belief in a divorce, no matter how honest or reasonable. As regards the offence of bigamy the doctrine of mens rea does not apply so as to absolve the accused because of an honest and reasonable belief in the validity of a divorce he had obtained. R. v. Bleiler, 2 W.W.R. 5, 21 W.L.R. 18, 4 Alta. L.R. 320, 19 Can. Cr. Cas. 249, 1 D.L.R. 878; R. v. Sellers, 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 153 (N.S.) criticized; R. v. Brinkley, 14 O.L.R. 434, approved; and see Sherras v. De Rutzen [1895] 1 Q.B. 918, at 921, where Wright, J., said that bigamy was a remarkable exception to the theory of mens rea.

An honest and reasonable belief by the supposed wife that the man had a wife living, on obtaining information of which she left him and afterwards married another man was held a good defence as negativing any mens rea, where she failed to give strict proof of the man's former marriage. R. v. Sellars, 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 153 (N.S.).

Canadian divorces]—The Canadian Parliament exercises a divorce jurisdiction by passing special Acts in dissolution of marriages of the persons respectively named in such Acts. It has, under the B.N.A. Act, constitutional authority over the subject of "marriage and divorce, leaving, however, to the provinces the legislative power over the solemnization of marriages. Re Marriage Laws, Camadian Reports [1912] 126, 11 E.L.R. 225, [1912] A.C. 880. The Federal Parliament has not yet established a federal divorce court, nor has it interfered with such divorce jurisdiction as the courts of some of the provinces, such as British Columbia and Nova Scotia had acquired prior to confederation of the provinces in 1867.

The Divorce and Matrimonial Causes Act, 20 and 21 Viet. (1857), ch. 85 (Imp.), is in force in Manitoba. It was introduced by 51 Viet. (1888), ch. 33 (Dom.), sec. 1 (now sec. 6, ch. 99, R.S.C. 1906), which provides that "Subject to the provisions of the next following section the laws of England relating to matters within the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada, as the same existed on the fiftcenth day of July, one thousand eight hundred and seventy, were from the said day and are in force in the province of Manitoba, in so far as the same are applicable to the said province, and in so far as the same have not been or are not hereafter repealed, altered, varied, modified or affected by any Act of the Parliament of the United Kingdom applicable to the said province, or of the Parliament of Canada." Walker v. Walker [1918] 2 W.W.R. 1 (Man.), reversing [1917] 2 W.W.R. 1029.

The Court of King's Bench of Manitoba possesses the jurisdiction and the machinery requisite to carry out the powers contained in the Divorce and Matrimonial Causes Act and such jurisdiction may be exercised by a single judge. Walker v. Walker, supra.

respect of matrimonial offences committed in that province where the parties are there domiciled. Watt v. Watt [1908] A.C. 573, 77 L.J.P.C. 121, reversing 13 B.C.R. 281; S. v. S., 1 B.C.R., pt. 1, p. 25; Sheppard v. Sheppard, 12 B.C.R. 486. The courts of Ontario and Quebec exercise no divorce jurisdiction.

Domicile as affecting recognition of forcign divorce]—It is well settled law that it is the courts of the domicile of the parties that have jurisdiction on the subject of divorce: R. v. Wood, 19 Can. Cr. Cas. 15, 20 O.W.R. 576; Casavallo v. Casavallo (1911), 1 W.W.R. 213 (Alta.); Le Mesurier v. Le Mesurier [1895] A.C. 517, 540; Cox v. Cox [1918] 2 W.W.R. 422. R. v. Woods, 6 O.L.R. 41; R. v. Brinkley (1907), 14 O.L.R. 434; R. v. Hamilton, 22 O.L.R. 484; Bater v. Bater [1906] P. 209, followed in Cromarty v. Cromarty (1917), 38 O.L.R. 481.

The question of domicile is to be decided by the circumstances and evidence of intention. Irwin v. Gagnon (1916), 23 R.L.N.S. 47, 17 Que, P.R. 402.

Residence in a country is prima facie evidence of an intention to reside there permanently and is, therefore, some evidence of domicile. Re Seilo Estate [1918] 1 W.W.R. 441 (Sask.). One may acquire a domicile from choice without renouncing allegiance to his domicile or origin. Re Seilo Estate, supra.

In the absence of evidence of a contrary intention, the acquirement of a domicile of choice may be inferred from the circumstances under which a person left his domicile of origin and the length of his residence in the jurisdiction where the domicile of choice is alleged to have been acquired. Re Seilo Estate, supra.

The domicile of a person is that place in which he has voluntarily fixed his abode not for a mere special or temporary purpose, but with a present intention of making it his permanent home. Wadsworth v. McCord, 14 A.C. 631, affirming 12 S.C.R. 466; Bonbright v. Bonbright, 2 O.L.R. 249; Stevens v. Fisk (1885), 1 Cameron's S.C. Cas. 392, and 8 Legal News, 42, 53 (Que.); King v. Foxwell, L.R. 3 Ch. D. 318; Wanzer Lamp Co. v. Woods, 13 P.R. (Ont.) 511; Edwards v. Edwards 20 Gr. 392 (Ont.); Harvey v. Farnie, 8 A.C. 43; Magurn v. Magurn (1885), 11 A.R. 178 (Ont.) (leave to appeal refused by Privy Council); R. v. Woods, 6 O.L.R. 41, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 226; C. v. D., 8 O.L.R. 308; Le Mesurier v. Le Mesurier [1895] A.C. 517; Watts v. Watts [1908] A.C. 573, reversing 13 B.C.R. 281; McNamara v. Constantineau, 3 R. de J. 482 (Que.); Jones v. City of St. John, 30 S.C.R. 122.

The Privy Council in the case of Le Mesurier v. Le Mesurier, [1895] A.C. 517, decided that, according to the rules of international law, the domicile of the married pair affords the only true test of jurisdiction to dissolve their marriage, and that a divorce will be recognized only when it has been pronounced by a court within whose forum the parties have their domicil. This is declared to mean the domicil of succession or true domicil. Mere residence will not suffice; nor will what has been called by some courts a matrimonial domicil be considered sufficient. R. v. Woods (1903), 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 226, 6 O.L.B. 41; Cox v. Cox [1918] 2 W.W.B. 422.

Lord Penzance in Wilson v. Wilson (1872) L.R. 2 P. & D., 435, suid: "It is both just and reasonable that the differences of married people should be adjusted in accordance with the laws of the community to which they belong." This is quoted with approval and is in fact accepted as the basis of the judgment of the Privy Council in Le Mesurier v. Le Mesurier [1895] A.C. 517, 64 L.J.P.C. 97, where it was stated that "the domicile for the time being of the married pair affords the only true test of jurisdiction to dissolve their marriage." There may be exceptional circumstances which will create an exception to that rule. Ogden v. Ogden (1908) P. 46; Stathatos v. Stathatos [1913] P. 46, and De Montaigu v. De Montaigu [1913] P. 154; Cutler v. Cutler (1914), 6 W.W.R. 1231, explaining Adams v. Adams (1909), 14 B.C.R. 301.

An English court will grant a decree of dissolution in favour of a wife deserted by her husband or whose husband has so conducted himself towards her that she is justified in living apart from him, and who, up to the time that she was deserted, or began so to be, was domiciled with her husband in England, in which case he cannot be allowed to assert for the purposes of the suit that he has ceased to be domiciled in England. Armytage v. Armytage [1898] P. at 185.

In Armitage v. The Attorney-General, Gillig v. Gillig, [1906] P. 135, it was held that English courts would recognize the binding effect of a decree of divorce obtained in a State where the husband was not domiciled, if the courts of the country or State of his domicile would recognize it. There, an American domiciled in New York, had married an Englishwoman in England. She went to the State of South Dakota, U.S., where she took proceedings for divorce, which were served upon the husband personally and to which he put in an answer and crossclaim. A decree of divorce was pronounced on her petition, and she afterwards married in the State of Colorado an Englishman always domiciled in England. Then she petitioned the English Court for a declaration of validity of that marriage, and the Court being satisfied by the evidence that the Courts of her first husband's domicile (New York) would recognize the validity of the decree of the South Dakota Court (on the ground that that husband had submitted himself to its jurisdiction), pronounced for the validity of the second marriage. Osler, J.A., in R. v. Brinkley, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 454 at 459, said: "There is nothing in that case inconsistent with the decision in the Le Mesurier Case, but the contrary. The Court regarded the law of the State of the domicile-the State of New York-as that which affected and determined the status of the husband, and as that law recognized the validity of the South Dakota decree, the wife who obtained it was free to marry again. The defendant is thus still left to demonstrate, if he can, that the law of his Canadian domicile will recognize the validity of the Michigan decree. This, however, for the reason already given, is, according to that law, denied. And see Armytage v. Armytage, [1898] P. 178, where Barnes, J., refers to the 'American doctrine' that the wife may acquire a domicile of her own in the country of the marrimonial home. Here the wife had not acquired even such a domicile, as the State of Michigan had never become the matrimonial home of the parties. Bater v. Bater, [1906] P. 209, follows and applies Le Mesurier v. Le Mesurier, holding that the domicile for the time being of the married pair when the question of divorce arises affords the only true test of jurisdiction to dissolve the marriage, and that the Court of the bona fide existing domicile has jurisdiction over persons originally domiciled in another country to undo a marriage solumnized in that other country. See also Guest v. Guest, 3 O.R. 344; Magurn v. Magurn, 11 A.R. 178; The Trial of Earl Russell, [1901] A.C. 446. We need not consider the recent case of Haddock v. Haddock, 201 U.S. 562. It has been severely criticized both in the United States and in England, but it is not necessary to invoke it to show the invalidity of the Michigan decree. Cases like Ogden v. Ogden (1906), 23 Times L.R. 158, show that the Courts of the husband's domicile- cannot undo a marriage solemnized in England between, e.g., a domiciled Frenchman and an Englishwoman, in accordance with the requirements of English law, merely because it would be irregular in the country of the domicile by reason of the omission of some condition-such as the consent of parents in the case of a minor-required by the laws of that country."

It appears to be doubtful whether even a judicial separation would give the wife a right to acquire a separate domicile for herself. See the remarks of Lord Kingsdown in Dolphin v. Robins, 7 H.L.C. 390, at p. 420; and of Maclaren, J.A., in R. v. Brinkley, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 454, at 466. In the latter case, Maclaren, J.A., said: "Even if the husband had been served with notice and had submitted to the jurisdiction, the decree would still have been a nullity on account of his being legally domiciled in this country when the (foreign) proceedings were taken. See Armitage v. The Attorney-General, [1906] P. 135 at 140."

As to domicil in an ex-territorial community subject to the jurisdiction of a British consular court, reference may be made to Casdagli v. Casdagli, (1918), 87 L.J. P. 73, 79, and cases there eited.

Matrimonial domicile]—The doctrine of matrimonial domicile as ground for a foreign divorce when the facts on which such matrimonial domicile would not establish a domicile of 'succession, is generally rejected in Canada. R. v. Woods (1903), 6 O.L.R. 41; R. v. Brinkley (1907), 14 O.L.R. 434, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 454; R. v. Hamilton, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 410 (Ont.); Swaizie v. Swaizie, 31 Ont. R. 330. A decree of divorce a vinculo pronounced by a Court whose jurisdiction is derived solely from some rule of municipal law peculiar to its forum cannot, when it trenches upon the interests of any other country to whose tribunals the spouses were amenable, claim extra territorial authority. Le Mesurier (1895) A.C. 517.

No case appears to have arisen upon the effect, if any, of the Naturalization Act, 1914, Can., in adoption of the British Nationality Act, 1914, in certain contingencies. By that Act if a man ceases to be a British subject it is lawful for his wife to make a declaration under the Act that she desires to retain British nationality and thereupon she is deemed to remain a British subject. 4-5 Geo. V, Can., ch. 44, sec. 10, as amended, 5 Geo. V, Can., 2nd sess., ch. 7, sec. 2, and see Can. Statutes 1915, p. ceexxi.

Annulment decree where marriage void ab initio]—The act of declaring a certain form or ceremony of marriage null and void is an entirely different thing from a judgment dissolving a marriage. An application to dissolve a marriage is necessarily made on the assumption that a valid marriage had taken place which is quite different from the case of a void marriage. Cox v. Cox [1918] 2 W.W.R. 422, 42 (Alta.); Hardie v. Hardie, 7 Terr. L.R. 13.

The Supreme Court of Alberta has jurisdiction to pronounce a declaratory judgment that an alleged marriage in Alberta is null and void, where it is found that before such marriage the defendant had been married to another person, that such person was alive at the time of the second marriage and that the parties to the first marriage had not been divorced by a decree which our Courts recognize as effectual; Hardie v. Hardie, 7 Terr. L.R. 13; Cox v. Cox [1918] 2 W.W.R. 422 (Alta.).

A degree of nullity on the ground of impotence has been granted in British Columbia. P. v. P., 11 B.C.R. 369.

Ontario courts have, it seems, only the limited jurisdiction in annulment actions conferred by the Marriage Act, R.S.O. 1914, ch. 148, sec. 36; Prowd v. Spence, 24 O.W.R. 329; McIntyre v. Gental, 13 O.W.N. 309; Malot v. Malot, 4 O.W.N. 1405, 1577; Reid v. Aull, 32 O.L.R. 68, 6 O.W.N. 372; Peppiatt v. Peppiatt, 34 O.L.R. 121, 8 O.W.N. 447; T. v. B., 15 O.L.R. 224; May v. May, 22 O.L.R. 559; Menzies v. Farnon, 18 O.L.R. 174.

Jurisdiction to annul on the ground of gross fraud inducing the consent, is denied in Ontario. Hallman v. Hallman (1914), 26 O.W.R. 1, 5 O.W.N. 976.

Quebec courts exercise jurisdiction for annulment of invalid marriages. Civil Code, Que., article 127; Smith v. Cook, 24 Que. S.C. 469; Durocher v. Degré, 20 Que. S.C. 456; Delpit v. Coté, 20 Que. S.C. 338; Agnew v. Gober, 17 Que. K.B. 508; Guttman v. Goodman, 26 Que. K.B. 270; Hébert v. Clonâtre, 45 Que. S.C. 239, reversing 41 Que. S.C. 241.

Polygamous marriages and illegal conjugal unions]-

An Indian who according to the customs of his tribe takes two women at the same time as his vives, and cohabits with them, is guilty of an offence under this section. R. v. "Bear's Shin Bone" (1899), 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 329, 4 Ferr, L.B. 173.

The mere fact of cohabitation between a man and a womar, each of whom is markied to another, will not sustain a conviction under this section (formerly 53 Vict., Can., ch. 37, see. 11), to come within the terms of which there must be "some form of contract between the parties which they might suppose to be binding on them but which the law was intended to prohibit," and the term "conjugal union" in the statute has reference to a form of ceremony joining the parties, a markage of some sort before cohabiting with one another. v. Labrie (1891), Montreal Law Reports, 7 Q.B. 211, per Dorion, C.J., Cross, J., Baby, J., Bossé, J. and Doherty, J.

In the Queen v. Liston (noted 34 C.L.J. 546) tried at the Toronto Assizes in 1893, Chief Justice Armour held that the corresponding section, 278 of the 1892 Code, was intended to apply only to Mormous.

In R. v. Harris (1906), 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 254 (Que.), tried by distriet magistrate Mulvena, of Sherbrooke, the accused man pretended that a divorce had been obtained in the U.S.A. by the woman, and that he had married her there and had produced to a witness what he called the certificate of marriage in proof that he was not living in concubinage with the woman. This was for the purpose of getting employment with the witness, but the latter refused either to employ the accused or to read the document. The alleged certificate of marriage was not produced nor was any strict proof made of the alleged marriage. As it was manifest from the circumstances that there could have been no valid foreign divorce nor the acquirement by the woman of any foreign domicile to found a divorce, the magistrate held that the defendant's claim that he was living with the woman as her husband under the pretended marriage certificate, was proof of some "form of conjugal union" in the nature of a marriage in contravention of this section of the Code. He further held that the accused, by claiming the relationship of man and wife and living with the woman in open continuous adultery, was guilty under this section; and that if there had been a bigamous marriage, the prosecution could be brought for the lesser offence under sec. 310.

Special provisions as to indictment and evidence under sub-secs. (b), (c) and (d)]—Code sec. 948.

Adultery indictable in New Brunswick]—Adultery is an indictable offence in the Province of New Brunswick under the pre-confederation statute of that province, R.S.N.B. 1854, eh. 145, sec. 3, which has not yet (1918) been repealed by the Dominion Parliament. R. v. Strong (1915), 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 430, 26 D.L.R. 122, 43 N.B.R. 190; R. v. Akerley, (1918) unreported (N.B.).

The repeal in 1886 by the Dominion Parliament of parts of certain pre-confederation statutes of New Brunswick, which regulated procedure in prosecutions for adultery under R.S.N.B., 1854, ch. 145, leaves that offence punishable in New Brunswick under the procedure applicable to indictable offences generally under the Criminal Code. Unlawful Solemnization of Marriage.

Without authority solemnizing a marriage,—Aiding or abetting such ceremony.

311. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a fine, or to two years' imprisonment, or to both, who,---

- (a) without lawful authority, the proof of which shall lie on him, solemnizes or pretends to solemnize any marriage; or,
 - (b) procures any person to solemnize any marriage knowing that such person is not lawfully authorized to solemnize such marriage, or knowingly aids or abets such person in performing such ceremony.

Origin]-Sec. 279, Code of 1892, R.S.C. 1886, ch. 161, sec. 1.

"Without lawful authority"]—The authority is derived from provincial law. Re Marriage Laws, [1912] A.C. 8-80, C.R., [1912] 1 Can. Appeal Cases 126, 11 E.L.R. 255, affirming 46 S.C.R. 132; R. v. Brown (1908), 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 87 (Ont.); R. v. Dickout (1893), 24 Ont. R. 250.

Time limitation]-Code sec. 1140 (b).

Authorized person solemnizing a marriage which contravenes provincial law.

312. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a fine, or to one year's imprisonment, who, being lawfully authorized, knowingly and wilfully solemnizes any marriage in violation of the laws of the province in which the marriage is solemnized.

Origin]—Code of 1892, sec. 280; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 161, sec. 3; 26 Geo. II, Imp., ch. 33 (repealed in England by 4 Geo. IV, ch. 76).

Solemnization of marriage in contravention of law]—Sec. 312 is directed to the punishment of a clergyman or other functionary having anthority to conduct a marriage ceremony for proceeding with such ceremony in contravention of the provincial law governing in such matters, ex. gr. without a marriage license or the publication of banns. UNLAWFUL MARRIAGES

"marriage" and "divorce" are exclusively within the federal powers. Re the Marriage Law of Canada [1912] A.C. 880, 11 E.L.R. 255, 7 D.L.R. 629, affirming 46 Can. S.C.R. 132. Sec. 172 of the Code would apply to prosecutions for making a false declaration or affidavit under a provincial marriage law, and see also sees. 173-176.

Marriage illegally solemnized by authorized person, but without license, etc.]—It has been doubted whether in view of the Duchess of Kingston's case, 20 State Trials, 355, a marriage without banns and without license in Ontario might not still be valid if solemnized by a person having a general authority to solemnize marriages, as the Ontario Marriage Act, R.S.O. 1914, ch. 148, does not expressly declare to be invalid the marriages solemnized without either of those preliminaries. See also the English statute, 26 Geo. II, ch. 33, enacted several years after the Duchess of Kingston's case, and which probably became a part of the law of Ontario in 1792. Article in 53-CL.J. 406.

And see Beamish vi Beamish, 9 H.L.C. 331; Harris v. Meyer, 50 N.S.R. 117; R. v. Cameron (1917), 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 113 (N.S.).

Time limitation]—The time limitation applicable under sec. 1140 (b) to an offence under sec. 311 appears not to extend to sec. 312.

313. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to ten years' imprisonment who, against her will, takes away or detains any woman of any age and whether married or not, with intent to marry or earnally know such woman or to cause her to be married or carnally known by any other person.

Origin]—Sec. 281, Code of 1892; 8-9 Edw. VII, Can., ch. 9, sec. 2; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 162, sec. 43; 32-33 Vict., Can., ch. 20, sec. 55; 24-25 Vict., Imp., ch. 100, sec. 54.

Abduction of woman with intent]---This section as enacted 1909, applies to women generally, while sec. 314 with a heavier penalty applies only to heiresses, so-called.

If the woman be taken away in the first instance with her own consent, but afterwards refuses to continue with the offender and be forcibly detained by him, the offence is within this section. So also if, having been forcibly taken away, she be afterwards married or defiled with her own consent, for the offender is not to escape from the provisions of the statute by having prevailed over the weakness of a woman whom he originally got into his power by such base means. Fulwood's ease, Cro. Car. 482; R. v. Swendsen, 14 St. Tr. 595; R. v. Wakefield, 2 Lewin, 279; Archold's Cr. Evid., 22nd ed., 855.

Any woman of any age]—Compare sec. 266 as to the offence of rape, and see R. v. Biopel (1898), 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 225, decided under that section in which the word "woman" was construed in a general sense and as including a child under 14.

Wife of accused a compellable witness]-Sections 313-316 inclusive are included amongst those specified in sub-sec. 2 of sec. 4 of the Canada Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145, and under it the wife of the accused is both a competent and compellable witness for the prosecution.

Abduction of heiress, so called.—Alluring away against will of parent.—Effect of conviction on property.

314. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to fourteen years' imprisonment, who, with intent to marry or carnally know any woman, or with intent to cause any woman to be married or carnally known by any other person, such woman having any interest, legal or equitable, present or future, absolute, conditional or contingent, in any real or personal estate, or being a presumptive heiress or co-heiress, or presumptive next of kin, to any one having such an interest,—

- (a) from motives of lucre takes away or detains such woman against her will, whatever the age of such woman,
 - (b) fraudulently allures, takes away or detains such woman out of the possession and against the will of her father or mother or other person having the lawful care or eharge of her, such woman being under the age of twenty-one years.

2. Every one convicted of any offence defined in this section is incapable of taking any estate or interest, legal or equitable, in any real or personal property of such woman, or in which she has any interest, or which comes to her as such heiress, co-heiress or next of kin; and if any such marriage takes place such property shall, upon such conviction, be settled in such manner as any court of competent jurisdiction, upon any information at the instance of the Attorney General, appoints. 0 9; R Vict. Abduction of heiresses with intent]—The amendment made to this section in 1909 was intended to remove doubts as to the interpretation of the former section and particularly to make it clear that sec. 314 (b) is applicable only to heiresses, so-called, and not to women generally.

It is unnecessary in a prosecution under this section to prove that the accused knew that the girl was an heiress or had such an interest in real or personal estate as is specified in sec. 314. R. v. Kaylor, 1 Dorion K.B. (Que.) 364. The property interests of the girl must be proved in order to bring the case within the section, and such property interest must be alleged in the indictment. R. v. Abduction of girl under sixteen.—Consent immaterial.—Belief of offender as to age.

315. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to five years' imprisonment who unlawfully takes or causes to be taken any unmarried girl, who is under the age of sixteen years, out of the possession and against the will of her father or mother, or of any other person having the lawful care or charge of her.

2. It is immaterial whether the girl is taken with her own consent or at her own suggestion or not.

3. It is immaterial whether or not the offender believed the girl to be of or above the age of sixteen.

Origin]-Sec. 283, Code of 1892, R.S.C. 1886, ch. 162, sec. 44; 32-33 Vict., Can., sec. 56; 24-25 Vict., Imp., ch. 100, sec. 55.

only the taking but the enticing away or detaining and the subsequent harbouring. Under sec. 315 there must be a "taking" but it is immaterial whether the girl is taken at her own suggestion or not, or that she consented to being taken. Whether a persuasive inducement from the accused, such as was held to be essential under the law prior to the Code is still a requisite to the offence has been questioned. Judge Wallace, of Halifax, in R. v. Meyers (1915), 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 120, held that it was not, and distinguished R. v. Jarvis, 20 Cox C.C. 249; but R. v. Blythe, 4 B.C.R. 276, is opposed to this view. There must, however, be a taking out of the possession and against the will of the parent or other custodian. R. v. Blythe, 4 B.C.R. 276, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 263; R. v. Booth, 12 Cox C.C. 231; R. v. Mankletow, 1 Dears. C.C. 159, 22 L.J.M.C. 115; R. v. Timmins, Bell C.C. 276, 30 L.J.M.C. 455; R. v. Robins, 1 C. & K. 456; R. v. Holmes, 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 7, 14 O.W.R. 419.

The offence may be complete although the object in taking the girl away may have been a philanthropic one. R. v. Booth, 12 Cox C.C. 231; R. v. Yorkema, 21 O.L.R. 193, 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 189; R. v. Holmes, 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 7, 14 O.W.R. 419.

Out of the possession of the parent or guardian]—The girl may be in the constructive possession of the parent while visiting elsewhere with the parent's permission. R. v. Mondelet, 21 L.C. Jur. 154; but not when employed at a considerable distance from home without being under the care of anyone. R. v. Henkers, 16 Cox C.C. 257. So also where the accused had no reason to know that the girl lived at home, a conviction was quashed. R. v. Hibbert, L.R. 1 C.C.R. 184, 38 L.J.M.C. 61; R. v. Green, 3 F. & F. 274.

So where a girl had left her home without any inducement from the accused and having got fairly away went to him, his failure to restore her to the parents does not come within sec. 315, and it was held that in such case there was no "taking out of the parent's possession." R. v. Olifer, 10 Cox C.C. 402; R. v. Miller, 13 Cox C.C. 179; R. v. Kauffmann (1904), 68 J.P., 189.

The possession of the parent must be an actual or constructive possession de facto. R. v. Blythe, 4 B.C.R. 276, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 263; R. v. Mankletow, 22 L.J.M.C. 115, 6 Cox C.C. 143. If the girl had renounced her father's protection in a foreign country, his following her into Canada will not re-establish a de facto possession. R. v. Blythe, 4 B.C.R. 276, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 263; Re Gertie Johnson, 8 Can. Cr. Cas, 243. Where the parents are living apart and the girl is attending school under her father's direction, he has presumptive control as against the mother. and it is an offence to bring the child to the mother against the father's will unless there is lawful authority for so doing. R. v. Holmes, 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 7, 14 O.W.R, 419.

The taking "out of the possession" of 'the parent requires that there should be evidence of some active part taken by the accused as a re Cas.

Against the will of the parent]--The laxity of the course of dife which the girl is permitted to lead may show that the taking was not against the parent's will. R. v. Primelt, 1 F. & F. 50.

Knowledge of age]—In Reg. v. Prince, L.R. 2 C.C.R. 154, Brett, J., said, (at 170):—" Upon all the cases I think it is proved that there can be no conviction for crime in England in the absence of a criminal mind, or mens rea. . . . It seems to me to follow that the maxim as to mens rea applies whenever the facts which are present to the prisoner's mind and which he has a reasonable ground to believe and does believe to be the facts, would, if true, make his acts no criminal offence at all."

The conviction in that case was upon the charge of having unlawfully taken an unmarried girl under the age of sixteen out of the possession and against the will of her father. It was sustained upon the ground that the taking of the girl out of the possession of her father under the circumstances was a wrongful act, even if she were, as the prisoner supposed, over the age of eighteen years, and that, therefore, there was present a sufficient mens rea to make the offence a crime under the statute. Denman, J., in his judgment, says:—"He, the prisoner, had wrongfully done the very thing contemplated by the Legislature. He had wrongfully and knowingly violated the father's rights against the father's will, and he cannot set up a legal defence by merely proving that he thought he was committing a different kind of wrong from that which, in fact, he was committing."

Kidnapping]—The offence of kidnapping is a more serious one, involving the imprisonment of the person abducted. This is dealt with in sec. 297; and see R. v. Steckley, 7 O.W.N. 137, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 263.

Seduction]—This offence is distinct from the offence of seduction and a conviction under this section does not preclude a conviction for seduction. R. v. Smith (1890), 19 O.R. 714; following R. v. Handley (1833), 5 C. & P. 565, and R. v. Vandercombe and Abbott (1796), 2 Leach C.C. 708; and see Code sees. 210-220.

316. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to seven years' imprisonment who, with intent to deprive any parent or guardian of any child under the age of fourteen years, of the possession of such child, or with intent to steal any article about or on the person of such child, unlawfully,—

- (a) takes or entices away or detains any child; or,
 - (b) receives or harbours any such child, knowing it to have been unlawfully taken, enticed away or detained with intent aforesaid.

2. Nothing in this section shall extend to any one who gets possession of any child, claiming in good faith a right to the possession of the child.

Origin]—Sec. 284, Code of 1892, as amended by Can. Stat. 1900; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 162, sec. 45; 32-33 Vict., Can., ch. 20, sec. 57; 24-25 Vict., Imp., ch. 100, sec. 56; 48-49 Vict., Imp., ch. 69, sec. 56; 54 Geo. III, Imp., ch. 101.

Guardian]—The term "guardian" here includes any person who has in law or in fact the custody or control of the child. Code sec. 240 (b).

Proof or inference of age]-See sec. 984.

Child-stealing]-Sec. 316 deals with the offence commonly known as child-stealing. For the more aggravated offence of kidnapping, reference should be made to Code sec. 297.

To constitute this offence it is not necessary that the accused should intend to deprive the parent permanently of the possession of the child. Rex. v. Powell, 24 Cox C.C. 229.

The English statute, 24-25 Viet., ch. 100, sec. 56, was more limited in its terms than is sec. 316. By it, in order to constitute the offence the accused must have "either by force or fraud" led or taken away or decoyed or enticed away or detained any child under the age of fourteen years with intent, etc. R. v. Bellis (1893), 62 L.J.M.C. 155, 57 J.P. 441, 17 Cox C.C. 660, 69 L.T. 26; R. v. Barrett (1885), 15 Cox C.C. 658.

Where a woman was indicted for that she did unlawfully detain a child under the age of fourteen with intent to deprive the mother of the possession of her, it was held that she was rightly convicted upon evidence that the child had been in the service of the prisoner and was missing and could not be found, and that she gave different accounts of what had become of the child, but implying that she had given her up to some third person although there was no evidence that the child was.

was still in her actual custody, nor indeed any evidence as to where she was. R. v. Johnson (1884), 15 Cox C.C. 481, 50 L.T. 759.

Bona fide claim to possession of the child]—Prior to the enactment of the Criminal Code in 1892 the exception was: "No person who has claimed any right to the possession of such child, or is the mother, or has claimed to be the father of an illegitimate child, shall be liable to be prosecuted by virtue hereof on account of getting possession of such child or taking such child out of the possession of any person having the lawful charge thereof."

The exception now is: "Nothing in this section shall extend to any one who gets possession of any child, claiming in good faith a right to the possession of the child." So that the enactment would seem to apply to any one doing any of the things against which it is aimed, unless "claiming in good faith a right to the possession of the child"; and the amendment would seem to have enlarged the character as well as the scope of the legislation. R. v. Hamilton, 22 O.L.R. 484, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 410, at 416, per R. M. Meredith, J.A.

A foreign divorce granted in the country of the domicile of the parties whereby the wife was given the custody of the child is effective in Canada on the status of the parties so as to support a conviction of the father under Code sec. 316, for enticing the child while under the age of fourteen years from the custody of the mother. R. v. Hamilton, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 410, 22 O.L.R. 484; R. v. Watts, 3 O.L.R. Similarly the mother may be convicted for taking the child from the custody of the father when awarded to him by the divorce decree. Re Lorenz, 7 Que. P.R. 101, 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 158.

If the child's father really believed that the decree of the foreign court granting a divorce to the mother and awarding her the custody of the child was invalid, such would constitute a defence under subsection (2). R. v. Hamilton (Ont.), 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 410, 416, 22 O.L.R. 484. But belief in the regularity of a foreign divorce might not avail him in defence of a bigamy charge. R. v. Brinkley, (1907) 14 O.L.R. 434.

A person who might claim, in good faith, a right to the possession of the child, has the benefit of the exemption only when the possession is going to himself or herself, and may be convicted of conspiring with another having no such bona fide claim for unlawfully taking or enticing away the child for the purpose of that other person obtaining the possession of the child. R. v. Duguid, 21 Cox C.C. 200.

The courts of Canada will recognize a divorce decree dealing with the custody of the children granted in the state where the husband and wife and the children were then legally domiciled; and this although the divorce was granted for causes not recognized in English law. R. v. Hamilton, 22 O.L.R. 484, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 410. See also note to see. 307, dealing with the offence of bigamy.

CRIMINAL CODE (PART VI)

Where the parents had become separated and the child left in the mother's care had been placed by her in charge of a third party without any objection on the father's part, the custody of such third party does not immediately become illegal on the death of the mother so as to justify the father prosecuting the third party for failing to deliver up the child to him on demand. Cummings v. The King (1915), 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 304 (Que.). It may be that the best interests of the child require that the father should not have its custody, but if otherwise, it is for the father first to take civil proceedings, as by habeas corpus, to obtain the custody. Cummings v. The King, supra. To establish that the third party could be convicted upon the criminal charge of unlawfully detaining the child, where it appeared that the custody of it in the past had been quite lawful, the prosecutor had to prove something more than mere inaction or passivity on the part of such third party, and not only that, but something more than mere default or refusal to comply with the father's demand for delivery of the child, because criminal process is designed to secure the trial and punishment of criminal offences, but not to procuring specific performance of legal or natural obligations. Different considerations would have to be weighed, if there had been evidence to show that the third party had, acting in a positive or affirmative way, formed a plan or done some act in the way of secreting the child or removing her from the jurisdiction. Publishing defamatory libel]—If the accused knew it to be false he may be charged under sec. 333; otherwise under sec. 334.

Publishing upon invitation.

319. No one commits an offence by publishing defamatory matter on the invitation or challenge of the person defamed thereby, nor if it is necessary to publish such defamatory matter in order to refute some other defamatory statement published by that person concerning the alleged offender, if such defamatory matter is believed to be true, and is relevant to the invitation, challenge or required refutation, and the publishing does not in manner or extent exceed what is reasonably sufficient for the occasion.

Origin]-Sec. 287, Code of 1892.

Publishing proceedings of courts of justice.

320. No one commits an offence by publishing any defamatory matter, in any proceeding held before or under the authority of any court exercising judicial authority, or in any inquiry made under the authority of any statute or by order of His Majesty, or of any of the departments of government, Dominion or provincial.

Fair reports of proceedings of parliament and courts.

322. No one commits an offence by publishing in good faith, for the information of the public, a fair report of the proceedings of the Senate or House of Commons, or any committee thereof, or of any Council or Assembly aforesaid, or any committee thereof, or of the public proceedings preliminary or final heard before any court exercising judicial authority, nor by publishing, in good faith, any fair comment upon any such proceedings.

Origin]-Sec. 290, Code of 1892.

Fair report of judicial or parliamentary proceedings]—This section is in accordance with the law declared in Wason v. Walter (1869), L.R. 4 Q.B. 73, where it was held that the publication in a public newspaper of a faithful report of a debate in either House of Parliament is privileged, so that the publisher is not responsible for defamatory statements made in the course of the debate and reproduced in such faithful report. In the same case, Cockburn, C.J., said: "It is now well established that faithful and fair reports of the proceedings of courts of justice, though the character of individuals may incidentally suffer, are privileged, and that for the publication of such reports the publishers are neither eriminally nor eivilly responsible: the general advantage to the country in having these proceedings made public more than counterbalances the inconvenience to the private persons whose conduct may be the subject of the proceedings.

This section applies even if the judicial proceedings were heard ex parte. Kimber v. Press Association [1893] 1 Q.B. 65; R. v. Gray (1865), 10 Cox C.C. 184.

The true criterion of the privilege is not whether the report was or was not of an ex parte proceeding, but whether it was a fair and honest report of what had taken place, published simply with a view to the information of the public and innocent of all intention to do injury to the reputation of the party affected. Wason v. Walter (1869), L.R. 4 Q.B. 73; Usill v. Hales (1878), 3 C.P.D. 319; Maedougall v. Knight, 14 A.C. 194.

privileged publication within the rule which throws the protection of privilege about fair reports of judicial proceedings. The judgment appealed from, Shallow v. Gazette, Q.R. 17 K.B. 309, reversing the judgment of the Superior Court, Q.R. 31 S.C. 338, was affirmed. Gazette Printing Co. v. Shallow, 41 S.C.R. 339; Kimber v. Press Association [1893] 1 Q.B. 65; R. v. Wright, 8 T.R. 293.

The publicity of proceedings involving the conduct of a judicial authority serves the important purposes of impressing those concerned in the administration of justice with a sense of public responsibility, and of affording every member of the community an opportunity of observing for himself the mode in which the business of the public tribunals is carried on; but no such object would appear to be generally served by applying the privilege to the publication of preliminary statements of claim and defence relating only to private transactions; formulated by the parties themselves; in respect of which no judicial action has been taken, and upon which judicial action may never be invoked. Gazette Printing Co. v. Shallow, 41 S.C.R. 339, 360, per Duff, J. It is only when such preliminary statements or the claims or defences embodied in them form the basis or the subject of some hearing before, or some action by, a court or a judicial officer, that their contents can become the object of any real public concern as touching the public administration of justice. Gazette Printing Co. v. Shallow, supra.

A magistrate holding a preliminary inquiry on a criminal charge in open court may be said to be holding public proceedings within sec. 322; but aliter if an order has been made by him excluding the public under sec. 679 (d). See Lewis v. Levy, E. B. & E., 537, 558; Stockdale v. Hansard, 9 A. & E. 1; Furniss v. Cambridge, 23 Times L.R. 705.

Fair reports of public meetings.

"Subject of public interest"]—The complainant may himself have made the subject one of public interest by obtaining press notices commendatory of himself in reference thereto and thereby inviting public criticism. R. v. Brazeau (1899), 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 89 (Que.).

"Writers in public papers are of great utility, and do great benefit to the public interests by watching the proceedings of courts of justice, and fairly commenting on them if there is anything that calls for observation; but they should be careful, in discharging that function, that they do not wantonly assail the character of others, or impute criminality to them, and if they do so, and do not bring to the performance of the duty they discharge that due regard for the interests of others which the assumption of so important a censorship necessarily requires, they must take the consequences." Answer to inquiries.-Intent.-Condition.

327. No one commits an offence by publishing, in answer to inquiries made of him, defamatory matter relating to some subject as to which the person by whom, or on whose behalf, the inquiry is made has, or on reasonable grounds is believed by the person publishing to have, an interest in knowing the truth, if such matter is published for the purpose, in good faith, of giving information in respect thereof to that person, and if such defamatory matter is believed to be true, and is relevant to the inquiries made, and also if such publishing does not in manner or extent exceed what is reasonably sufficient for the occasion.

Origin]-Sec. 295, Code of 1892.

Giving information .- Intent .- Condition.

328. No one commits an offence by publishing to another person defamatory matter for the purpose of giving information to that person with respect to some subject as to which he has, or is, on reasonable grounds, believed to have, such an interest in knowing the truth as to make the conduct of the person giving the information reasonable under the circumstances, if such defamatory matter is relevant to such subject, and is either true, or is made without ill-will to the person defamed, and in the belief, on reasonable grounds, that it is true.

Presumption against "proprietor"]-In order to take advantage of this statutory presumption, there must be proof that the accused was the "proprietor" of the newspaper. R. v. Sellars, 6 L.N. 197 (Que.).

Selling books containing defamatory libel.—Sale by servant.—Master exempt unless authorizing.

330. No one commits an offence by selling any book, magazine, pamphlet or other thing, whether forming part of any periodical or not, although the same contains defamatory matter, if, at the time of such sale, he did not know that such defamatory matter was contained in such book, magazine, pamphlet or other thing.

CRIMINAL CODE (PART VI)

2. The sale by a servant of any book, magazine, pamphlet or other thing, whether periodical or not, shall not make his employer criminally responsible in respect of defamatory matter contained therein unless it be proved that such employer authorized such sale knowing that such book, magazine, pamphlet or other thing contained defamatory matter, or, in case of a number or part of a periodical, that defamatory matter was habitually contained in such periodical.

Origin]-Sec. 298, Code of 1892.

Defamatory libel .-- When truth a defence.

Nolle prosequi by Crown]-See sec. 962.

Punishment of defamatory libel generally.

334. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to one year's imprisonment, or to a fine not exceeding two hundred dollars, or to both, who publishes any defamatory libel.

Origin]-Sec. 302, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 163, sec. 3. Jurisdiction of sessions excluded]-See sec. 583.

Preliminary enquiry]—It has been held in England that a preliminary enquiry may be proceeded with although the complainant had taken civil action against defendant to restrain similar libels and had already obtained an interim injunction or an undertaking in lieu thereof in the civil action. Ex parte Edgar, 77 J.P. 283, 29 Times L.R. 279.

Formalities of indictment]—See secs. 859, 861 and 852, 855; Code form 64 (h).

An indictment for defamatory libel is good which purports to set out only the tenor and effect of the alleged libel, but in fact sets out the exact words. Such an indictment following the statutory form (Criminal Code, form 64 (h)) need not state that the words were likely to injure the reputations of the persons alleged to be defamed by exposing them to hatred, contempt or ridicule, or that they were designed to insult such persons. R. v. MacDougall, 39 N.B.R. 388, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 466.

If the aggravated offence under sec. 333 is charged, the Code form 64 (h) should be supplemented by including words to charge that the accused knew of the falsity, ex. gr. "he, the said A. B. then well knowing the said defamatory libel to be false."

Plea of justification and of not guilty]-The following form of a plea of justification added to a plea of not guilty is adapted from form 81 of the English Crown Office Rules, 1886:---

"And now, that is to say on the —— day of —— 190—, before our said Lord the King in the —— (court) at —— comes the said A. B. (the defendant) by —— his solicitor [or in his own proper person], and having heard the said indictment read he says that he is not guilty thereof, and hereupon he puts himself upon the country.

"And for a further plea the said A. B. pursuant to the Criminal Code says that our said Lord the King ought not further to prosecute the said indictment against him because he says that it is true that [here allege the truth of every part of the publication charged as a libel set out in the indictment].

"And the said A. B. further says that before and at the time of the publication in the said indictment mentioned [here state facts which rendered the publication of benefit to the public], by reason whereof it was for the public benefit that the said matters so charged in the said indictment should be published, and this he the said A. B. is ready to verify.

"Wherefore he prays judgment, and that by the court here he may be dismissed and discharged from the said premises in the said indictment above specified."

Demurrer to indictment]-The following form of demurrer is adapted from the English Crown Office Rules, 1886, form No. 80:---

"And the said A. B. in his own proper person cometh into court here, and having heard the said indictment read, saith that the said indictment and the matters therein contained, in manner and form as the same above are stated and set forth, are not sufficient in law, and that he the said A.B. is not bound by the law of the land to answer the same; and this he is ready to verify; wherefore, for want of a sufficient indictment, in this behalf the said A.B. prays judgment and that by the court he may be dismissed and discharged from the said premises in the said indictment specified."

Joinder in demurrer]-The following form may be used :--

"And —— —, who prosecutes for our said Lord the King in this behalf, saith that the said indictment and the matters therein contained in manner and form as the same are above stated and set forth are sufficient in law to compel the said A.B. to answer the same; and the said —— — who prosecutes as aforesaid is ready to verify and prove the same as the court here shall direct and award; wherefore, inasmuch as the said A.B. hath not answered to the said indictment nor hitherto in any manner denied the same, the said — for our said Lord the King prays judgment, and that the said A. B. may be convicted of the premises in the said indictment specified."

[NOTE: If the demurrer is overruled, leave to plead over is granted almost as of course.]

Verdict]—On the trial of any indictment or information for the making or publishing of any defamatory libel, on the plea of not guilty pleaded, the jury sworn to try the issue may give a general verdict of guilty or not guilty upon the whole matter put in issue upon such indictment or information, and shall not be required or directed by the court or judge before whom such indictment or information is tried, to find the defendant guilty merely on the proof of publication by such defendant of the paper charged to be a defamatory libel, and of the sense ascribed to the same in such indictment or information; but the court or judge before whom such trial is had shall, according to the discretion of such court or judge, give the opinion and direction of such court or

Costs in libel prosecutions]—In the case of an indictment or information by a private prosecutor for the publication of a defamatory libel if judgment is given for the defendant, he shall be entitled to recover from the prosecutor the costs incurred by him by reason of such indictment or information either by warrant of distress issued out of the court, or by action or suit as for an ordinary debt. Sec. 1045. An action for the costs and disbursements will lie though the plaintiff (defendant on the criminal charge) had not asked for a condemnation against defendant (complainant in the criminal charge) therefor at the time of the verdict. The judge who presided at the criminal trial could, even after proceedings in such action, tax such costs and disbursements. Mackay v. Hughes (1901), 19 Que. S.C. 367 (Sup. Ct.).

Change of venue]—Code secs. 884, 885, 888; R. v. Nicol (1900), 7 B.C.R. 278, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 1.

Comparison of handwriting]—A comparison of style and common forms of expression in the libellous and admitted writings should be by experts or skilled witnesses and, without such evidence, the trial judge should not invite the jury to draw any inference from similarity in style or expressions. Scott v. Crerar (1886), 14 A.R. 152; Rex v. Law, 19 Man. R. 259, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 382.

When the only evidence of the handwriting of the accused is that of experts, and where the experts called by the prosecutor are contradicted by an equal number of experts called by the defence, and the accused denied the authorship on oath without her credibility being successfully impeached, the jury should be told that the prosecutor had failed to establish that the letters had been written by her. R. v. Law, 19 Man. R. 259, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 382, per Perdue, J.A.; and see to the same effect, Desroches v. Langlois, 15 Que. K.B. 388; R. v. Ranger (1917), 30 Can. Cr. Cas. 65 (Que.).

As to comparison of handwriting by expert witnesses, see secs. 7 and 8 of the Canada Evidence Act. R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145; Re Gammell (1886), 19 N.S.R. 265; Osborn on Questioned Documents; Snowden-Bell on Expert Testimony.

Proof of animus]—At a trial for criminal libel where the matter complained of was libellous per se, the prosecution should not be allowed to give evidence of acts of hostility on the part of the accused towards the prosecutor or his relatives, unconnected with the alleged libel, or that the accused cherished feelings of ill-will towards the prosecutor and was therefore likely to have been the person who published the libel; and, if such evidence has been admitted, although without objection, the jury, if not discharged, should at least be told that they should give no weight to it. R. v. Law, 19 Man. R. 259, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 382.

Evidence under commission]—A commission to take the evidence of witnesses abroad in a libel prosecution is properly ordered at the trial where the evidence relates wholly to a plea of justification just entered of record. R. v. Nicol (1898), 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 31, 8 B.C.R. 276; Code sec. 997.

An order for a commission to take such evidence should not be made before plea. R. v. Nicol, supra.

Finding sureties for good behaviour]—The person convicted may be bound over to keep the peace and be of good behaviour (this latter ensuring that the offence will not be repeated) for any term not exceeding two years. Cr. Code sec. 1058. A direction to find sureties could be added to the substantive punishment at common law, but the time was not expressly limited as it now is by sec. 1058. At common law any "reasonable time" might be fixed for the recognizance to remain operative; R. v. Edgar (1913), 9 Cr. App. R. 13; and the time of imprisonment in default of finding sureties was limited only to the period for which the sureties were to be found. This by sec. 1058 is now fixed at one year or less. The Code will in this respect prevail over the common law. See Brousseau v. The King, 56 S.C.R. 22; R. v. Cole (1902), 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 330; compare R. v. Trueman (1913), 9 Cr. App. R. 45, 82 L.J.K.B. 916, [1913] 3 K.B. 164, 109 L.T. 413, and R. v. Edgar (1913) 9 Cr. App. R. 13.

Any alleged breach of the recognizance is to be inquired into upon oath and an opportunity given the accused to show cause against any proposed order to be made on the basis of the recognizance having been broken. See R. v. Young, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 580, 2 O.L.R. 228; R. v. Siteman, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 224.

In Ontario it has been held that the Crown, and not the private prosecutor, has the right to bring up the defendant released upon suspended sentence after conviction for criminal libel. R. v. Young, supra.

Fine on conviction of corporation]-Code sec. 1035.

Suspended sentence]-Code sec. 1081; R. v. Young, 2 O.L.R. 228, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 580.

Libel of wife by husband, or vice versa]—The principle of the common law is that husband and wife are one person. Lush on Husband and Wife, 3rd ed., p. 3. To that rule there were exceptions in cases of high treason, personal physical injuries by one to the other, and forcible abduction followed by marriage. The unity of husband and wife as regards a criminal prosecution is broken if by statute the one is made a competent and compellable witness against the other; R. v. Lord Mayor of London, 55 L.J.M.C. 118, but the libel sections are not included amongst those specified by sec. 4 of the Canada Evidence Act (sub-sec. 2) in enumerating the cases in which the one shall be competent and compellable against the other.

If there were a statute making the wife a competent but not compellable witness against her husband, it would seem that she might elect to bring a charge, but that no criminal charge could be brought by another for libelling her unless she consented to its being brought. The status of the parties as to a civil action is, of course, controlled by provincial, not federal, laws.

Abortive trial]—In a criminal libel action, defendant, in support of his plea of justification, obtained a commission and had the evidence of certain witnesses, out of the jurisdiction, taken, for use at the trial. The evidence was used at the first trial and the jury disagreed. At the second trial the jury again disagreed. At the third trial defendant was acquited, but the evidence was not used owing to the private prosecutors giving evidence and admitting substantially what was stated by the witnesses in their depositions before the commissioner. It was held, that as the commission evidence was not put in by defendant as part of his case, defendant was not entitled to the costs of the abortive trials. Rex v. Nichol, 8 B.C.B. 276, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 8.

Criminal information for libel]—A party seeking a criminal information against another must himself be free from blame, or he will not be granted leave to take that method of procedure, and will be left to his recourse by indictment or action. R. v. Whelan (1863), 1 P.E.I. Rep. 223; R. v. Lawson, 1 Q.B. 486; R. v. Biggs, 2 Man. R. 18.

A party who wants a criminal information must place himself entirely in the hands of the court. If it appear that the party has put himself into communication with the publisher of the libel, for the purpose of retorting, or with the view of obtaining redress, or has in any way himself attempted to procure redress, or take the law into his hands, the remedy by criminal information will be refused. R. v. Wilkinson (1877), 41 U.C.Q.B. 1, 25 (citing ex parte Beauclerk, 7 Jur. 373); R. v. Heustis, 1 James 101 (N.S.).

A person alive to the vindication of his character when assailed and entitled to the remedy of criminal information must apply with reasonable promptitude. The general rule is stated by Lord Mansfield in R. v. Robinson (1765), 1 W.Bl, 542, where he said: "There is no precise number of weeks, months or years; but, if delayed, the delay must be reasonably accounted for. The party complaining must come to the court either during the term next after the cause of complaint arose, or at so early a period in the second term thereafter as to enable the accused, unless prevented by the accumulation of business in the court, to show cause within the second term; and this, regardless of the fact wh 35 whether an assize intervened or not." R. v. Kelly (1877), 28 U.C.C.P. 35; R. v. Wilkinson (1877), 41 U.C.Q.B. 1, 24.

It is of the highest importance that the relator should in all cases lay before the court all the circumstances fully and candidly, in order that the court may deal with the matter. R. v. Wilkinson (1877), 41 U.C.Q.B. 1, 25 (citing R. v. Aunger, 28 L.T.N.S. 634, 12 Cox C.C. 407).

The granting of a criminal information is discretionary with the court under all circumstances; the application is not to be entertained on light or trivial grounds. In dealing with such an application, the court has always exercised a considerable extent of discretion in seeing whether the rule should be granted, and whether the circumstances are such as to justify the court in granting the rule for a criminal information. R. v. Wilkinson (1877), 41 U.C.Q.B. 1, 29.

There are two things principally to be considered in dealing with such an application: 1. To see whether the person who applies to conduct the prosecution, the relator or the informer, has been himself free from blame, even though it would not justify the defendant in making the accusation; 2. To see whether the offence is of such magnitude that it would be proper for the court to interfere and grant the criminal information. Both these things have to be considered, and the court would not make its process of any value unless they considered them and exercised a good deal of discretion, not merely in saying whether there is legal evidence of the offence having been committed, but also exercising their discretion as men of the world, in judging whether there is reason for a criminal information or not. R. v. Wilkinson (1877), 41 U.C.Q.B. 1, 29.

"The court always considers an application for a criminal information as a summary extraordinary remedy depending entirely on their discretion, and therefore not only must the evidence itself be of a serious nature, but the prosecutor must apply promptly or must satisfactorily account for any apparent delay. He must also come into court with clean hands, and be free from blame with reference to the transaction complained of; he must prove his entire innocence of everything imputed to him, and must produce to the court such legal evidence of the offence having been committed by the defendant as would warrant a grand jury in finding a true bill against the defendants." R. v. Kelly (1877), 28 U.C.C.P. 35.

The court confines the granting of criminal informations for libel to the case of persons occupying official or judicial positions, and filling some offices which gives the public an interest in the speedy vindication of their character, or to the case of a charge of a very grave or atrocious nature. Ex parte Freeman-Mitford, 30 Times L.R. 693; R. v. Wilson, 43 U.C.Q.B. 583 (Ont.).

within the description of persons referred to. Per Armour, J., "I think the practice of granting leave to file criminal informations in this country, having regard to the social conditions of its inhabitants and the liberties which they enjoy, is, to say the least of it, of very doubtful expediency, and should, in my opinion, be discontinued and, if necessary, abolished by legislative enactment. The very rule adopted in England, that it will only be granted to what I may call 'a superior person' is the strongest reason, to my mind, why in this country it should never be granted at all. Whatever may be deemed desirable in England, I do not think it desirable that in this country there should exist a remedy for the superior person which is denied to the inferior." R. v. Wilson (1878), 43 U.C.Q.B. 583. Per Cameron, J.: "There is no real necessity, so far as I am aware, for any one seeking this remedy. Any person libelled has a right to lay an information before a magistrate charging any one who may have libelled him with the offence, and may then by his oath deny the truth of the slanderous charges or imputations." Ibid. Hagarty, C.J., added that it was not to be understood that the court laid down any absolute rule as to future applications for criminal informations, or that they meant to fetter their discretion in dealing therewith. R. v. Wilson (1878), 43 U.C.Q.B. 583.

Where the libel charges the person libelled with having, by a previous writing, provoked it, the latter by his affidavit on which he moves for a criminal information is bound to answer such charge, otherwise the affidavit will be held insufficient. R. v. Whelan (1862), 1 P.E.I. Rep. 220, per Peters, J.

Delay in not applying to the court promptly will, if not satisfactorily accounted for, be ground for refusing the application. R. v. Kelly (1877), 28 U.C.C.P. 35.

In answer to an application for a criminal information for libel the defendants filed an affidavit stating that they had no personal knowledge of the matter contained in the alleged libels, but received the information from persons whom they trusted to be reliable and trustworthy; that the Globe newspaper was controlled by the applicant, who was an active politician, and had published a number of articles violently attacking one S., who was a candidate for a public office, and the libels in question were published with a view of counteracting the effect of these articles, and believing them to be true, and without malice. This was held to be no ground for the court refusing to the applicant leave to file a criminal information for the reiterated publication in a newspaper of matter not pretended either to be not libellous, or to be true in fact. R. v. Thompson (1874), 24 U.C.C.P. 252.

Where there is foundation for a libel, though it falls far short of justification, an information will not be granted. R. v. Biggs, 2 Man. R. 18.

Leave to file a criminal information for libel can only be granted by the full court in Nova Scotia, i.e., the provincial Supreme Court, sitting en bane; a single judge, although presiding over a court for the disposal of criminal business in a county, has no jurisdiction to grant the leave. R. v. Burgess, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 424, 48 N.S.R. 241, and see R. v. Beale, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 235, 11 Man. R. 448, and R. v. Labouchere, 12 Q.B.D. 320, 15 Cox C.C. 415.

Proceedings for contempt of court in libel concerning pending litigation]—Great care is to be exercised in applying the summary jurisdiction of the court in proceedings for contempt. Re Whiteside, R. v. McInroy (1915), 9 W.W.R. 846, 32 W.L.R. 764, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 49; Guest v. Knowles, 17 O.L.R. 416; re North Renfrew Election, 9 O.L.R. 79; re Lewis, 34 O.L.R. 518, 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 364; re Finance Union, 11 Times L.R. 165; R. v. Charlier, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 486 (Que.).

In cases of prosecutions for crimes against the king's subjects, the person charged has many rights and safeguards provided by the law, such as the right, in many cases, to a trial by jury, the right, in certain circumstances, to have the place of trial changed, the right to be tried where the act charged or the arrest took place, R. v. O'Gorman, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 175, 18 O.L.R. 427, and, generally speaking, the right to what is understood by "full defence," and it is the court which sees that these rights are accorded. But when the process of summary punishment for contempt, is considered, the position is different. Here the power to award punishment is inherent in the court, not in the judge and jury, but in the court itself, and, being so inherent, it has to be adequate to meet the conditions which call for its exercise. Fournier v. Attorney-General, 19 Que. K.B. 431, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 108, 113.

The person charged not only does not have the right to put forward the testimony of witnesses on his behalf, but is even exposed to have to answer interrogatories. Neither has he the right to a trial by jury. The absolute and far-reaching nature of this power has often been commented upon: Ex parte Fernandez, 10 C.B.N.S. 6; The King v. Davies [1906] 1 K.B. 32. This inherent power to summarily punish for contempt does not exist for the protection or vindication of the judge who may have been the object of the affront, but it exists to prevent interference with the due course of justice, and to prevent suitors from having their confidence in the court shaken or destroyed. Folkard, 7th ed., p. 389. Stoddart v. Prentice, 6 B.C.R. 308; Fournier v. Attorney-General, 19 Que, K.B. 431.

For a newspaper to insinuate that the Crown prosecutor at a preliminary enquiry before a justice is engaged in persecution and in seeking notoriety, and is taking action in order to earn money, is something which tends to interfere with a fair trial of the criminal charge and is punishable as a contempt of court on motion, to the Supreme Court of the province. Re Whiteside, R. v. McInroy (1916), 9 W.W.R. 846 [§ 334]

(Alta.). In that case a fine of $25 was imposed along with an order for payment of the costs of the application.

The power has been exercised in respect of a scurrilous attack upon the presiding judge, published during the assize. R. v. Gray [1900] 2 Q.B. 36; but mere abuse of a judge does not amount to a contempt of court. In τc Bahamas Islands Reference, [1893] A.C. 138.

The power to punish for contempt is a discretionary power; McDermott v. The Judges of British Guiana, 38 L.J.P.C. 1; Ramsay v. The Queen, 11 L.C.J., 164; Fournier v. Attorney-General (Que.), 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 108, 19 Que. K.B. 431; Wallace's case, L.R. 1 P.C. 283; re O'Brien (R. v. Howland), 16 S.C.R. 216.

A private litigant may apply to the Superior Court for the issue of contempt process to repress some act which, besides being an offence to the court, is an invasion of some private right. In such a case, the proceeding would be civil. Godfrey v. George [1896] 1 Q.B. 48; Fournier v. Attorney-General (Que.), 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 108, 19 Que. K.B. 431. In the Fournier case, the action of the Superior Court was asked for by the Attorney-General, on the ground that an attack had been made on the court. In such circumstances, the case is to be regarded as being a criminal matter, notwithstanding that the court resorted to is a court of civil jurisdiction. Fournier v. Attorney-General (Que.), 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 108, 19 Que. K.B. 431. O'Shea v. O'Shea, 15 P.D. 59; Lewis v. Owen [1894] 1 Q.B. 102.

In a criminal matter regard is to be had to the provisions of the criminal law, in determining whether a right of appeal exists or not, and whether, if it exists, it has been regularly exercised or not. Fournier v. Attorney-General, supra; Ellis v. The Queen, 22 S.C.R. 7; O'Shea v. O'Shea, L.R. 15 P.D. 59.

The charge should be proved with particularity where criminal proceedings are taken for contempt. Re Scaife, 5 B.C.R. 153; and see re Houston, R. v. Wilkinson, 41 U.C.Q.B. 42.

A corporation guilty of contempt in publishing comments calculated to prejudice the fair trial may be punished by fine, although the form of the application is for an attachment against the company and its directors. R. v. Hammond [1914] 2 K.B. 866.

A writ of attachment for contempt is to be moved for by counsel and not by an applicant appearing in person; ex parte Liebrand (1914), W.N. 310, applying ex parte Fenn (1833), 2 D.P.C. 527; unless provision has been made to the contrary by rule of court or otherwise. The Crown rules in the particular province will regulate the procedure in applying for a writ of attachment. R. v. Cook, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 211, 14 E.L.R. 123, 15 D.L.R. 501; N.S. OFFENCES AGAINST RIGHTS OF PROPERTY AND RIGHTS ARISING OUT OF CONTRACTS, AND OFFENCES CONNECTED WITH TRADE.

Interpretation.

Definitions.

335. In this Part, unless the context otherwise requires,-

(a) 'act,' for the purposes of the sections relating to offences connected with trade and breaches of contract, includes a default, breach or omission;

Origin]—Code of 1892, sees. 383, 392, 407, 419, 420, 421, 433, 443, 444, 519; 4 and 5 Edw. VII, ch. 9, see. 1; 7 and 8 Edw. VII, ch. 18, see. 5.

- (b) 'Admiralty' means the Lord High Admiral of the United Kingdom, or the Commissioners for executing the office of Lord High Admiral;
- (c) 'break' means to break any part, internal or external, of a building, or to open by any means whatever (including lifting, in the case of things kept in their places by their own weight), any door, window, shutter, cellar-flap or other thing intended to cover openings to a building, or to give passage from one part of it to another;

"Breaking and entering"]—As to burglary and shopbreaking, see Code sees. 460 and 461 (amendment of 1913), housebreaking, sees. 457, 458, 459, 462-464. Entrance obtained by threat, artifice or collusion may be a breaking. See. 340, sub-see. 2.

Further lifting a partly open window has been held not to be a "breaking" within sec. 335 (c). R. v. Burns, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 95, 36 N.S.R. 257. As to entrance by an aperture permanently and necessarily left open in a building, see sec. 340.

 (d) 'covering' includes any stopper, cask, bottle, vessel, box, cover, capsule, case, frame or wrapper; and 'label' includes any band or ticket;

(f) of sec. 335 is declaratory of the common law. Re Murphy, 26 Ont. R. 163, 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 562 and 578. As to the offence of forgery, see secs. 466-471.

Signing a deed of land as the wife of the grantor for the purpose of barring dower is forgery, if the woman signing knew that the grantor had a wife living although she did not assume the real wife's Christian name in so doing. The gist of the offence is the signing with the knowledge that it was false and the intent that it should be accepted as genuine. The offence is then complete and it was not necessary to show that any person had actually been prejudiced by it. United States v. Ford, 34 W.L.R. 912, (re Ford), 26 Can. Cr. Application of Part.

As to provisions relating to false trade descriptions.

341. The provisions of this Part respecting the application of a false trade description to goods extend to the application to goods of any such figures, words or marks, or arrangement or combination thereof, whether including a trade mark or not, as are reasonably calculated to lead persons to believe that the goods are the manufacture or merchandise of some person other than the person whose manufacture or merchandise they really are.

2. The provisions of this Part respecting the application of a false trade description to goods, or respecting goods to which a false trade description is applied, extend to the application to goods of any false name or initials of a person, and to goods with the false name or initials of a person applied, in like manner as if such name or initials were a trade description.

Theft defined.—Asportation.—Although no attempt to conceal taking. —Purpose of taking.

347. Theft or stealing is the act of fraudulently and without colour of right taking, or fraudulently and without colour of right converting to the use of any person, anything capable of being stolen, with intent.—

- (a) to deprive the owner, or any person having any special property or interest therein, temporarily or absolutely of such thing or of such property or interest; or,
- (b) to pledge the same or deposit it as security; or,
- (c) to part with it under a condition as to its return which the person parting with it may be unable to perform; or,
- (d) to deal with it in such a manner that it cannot be restored in the condition in which it was at the time of such taking and conversion.

[§ 347]

2. Theft is committed when the offender moves the thing or causes it to move or to be moved, or begins to cause it to become movable, with intent to steal it.

3. The taking or conversion may be fraudulent, although effected without secrecy or attempt at concealment.

4. It is immaterial whether the thing converted was taken for the purpose of conversion, or whether it was, at the time of the conversion, in the lawful possession of the person converting.

Origin]-Sec. 305, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 164, sec. 63.

Statutory theft including larceny and embezzlement]—The commissioners appointed by the English Government in 1884 to draft a Criminal Code proposed to do away with the term larceny and our definition of theft is taken from their draft. Indeed, our Criminal Code is, with some modifications, founded on the English draft Code which was not enacted by their Parliament. It will be seen that while the English idea of theft was particularly associated with the idea of ''violent dispossession of the owner's property'' the statutory enactments from time to time have been in the direction of accentuating and extending the idea of intention to fraudulently convert to one's use that which rightfully belongs to another. R. v. Thompson (1911), I W.W.R. 277, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 80, per Simmons, J.

The Code definition of "theft'' (sec. 347) provides that certain acts interfering with the rights of "owners" of property shall be punishable as crimes; but it is the provincial legislatures that have to do with fixing the relationship between individuals that constitute "ownership," at least where the federal Parliament has not assumed to define that term. R. v. Hassell [1917] 2 W.W.R. 48, at 50, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 322 (Man.). The statute 1915 Man. eh. 13 giving a statutory "right" in the crop to the landlord on a crop-sharing lease held not to give the landlord the "ownership" of any specific portion of the crop while it is still undivided. Ibid, per Cumberland, County Judge. And see R. v. Tessier, 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 73, as to the phrase "special property or interest."

For the purposes of larceny, that man is the owner of goods who, as against the taker, is entitled to the possession of the goods taken. The taker cannot set up jus tertii against such an owner, unless the taking was effected with or in the belief that he had the authority of the third person: Ency. of English Law, 2nd ed., vol. 8, p. 51. It is quite immaterial for purposes of theft whether the possessor of goods seized larcenously has or has not any real right to them. One thief ean steal stolen goods from another: ibid.; Roscoe, Criminal Evidence, 13th ed., 1908, p. 527.

So where all of the elements of theft exist, the prosecution may be for that offence, although the same facts show an offence under another Dominion statute, ex. gr., the Indian Act, R. v. Beboning, 17 O.L.R. 23, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 405; Cr. Code sec. 15.

Where hay was taken with intent to steal it, by a person acting as caretaker of an Indian on lands part of an Indian reserve, it was held that a charge of theft was sustainable whether the Indian had a right to possession without a location title under ss. 21, 22 of the Indian Act, R.S.C. 1906, c. 81, or not, or whether the superintendent of Indian Affairs might have prevented the removal of the hay or not. R. v. Beboning, 17 O.L.R. 23, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 405.

Fraudulently taking or converting with intent]—Prima facie a person is supposed to have the mental capacities usual to a person of his years and appearance. If a man found a baby with a roll of bills in its hands and he took them and applied them to his own use, there can be little doubt that he should be deemed guilty of theft. Dictum per Harvey, C.J.; in R. v. Wallace (1915), 8 W.W.R. 671, 673, 8 Alta. L.R. 472. Similarly, if he took from one whom he knew to be an imbeele and who consequently could have no will to give it to him; but if he thought the person was capable of and had the intention to let him have the money, the criminal intention, or mens rea, would be absent and there would be no theft. R. v. Wallace, supra.

On a charge of theft, when the facts are compatible with an honest mistake on the defendant's part, there must be a direction on intent to steal. R. v. Sturgess, 9 Cr. App. R. 120.

Where defendant has sold some of the goods alleged to be stolen by him, it may be necessary to direct the jury on the question whether he intended to account to the owners for the proceeds. R. v. Sturgess, 9 Cr. App. R. 120.

The circumstances may negative any intent to steal. R. v. Ford, 13 B.C.R. 109, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 555 (re taking money lost at cards under belief that the loser had been cheated); R. v. Wade, 11 Cox C.C. 549; R. v. Lyon, 29 Ont. R. 497, 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 242; R. v. Clark, 3 O.L.R. 176, 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 235.

Evidence of prior or subsequent acts of accused in proof of intent or guilty knowledge]—There is an essential difference between evidence tending to show generally that the accused has a fraudulent or dishonest mind, which evidence is not admissible, and evidence tending to show that he had a fraudulent or dishonest mind in the particular transaction, the subject-matter of the charge being then investigated, which evidence is admissible where that issue is raised. Minchin v. The King [1914] 6 W.W.R. 800, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 414 (Can.). It has been laid down that to make such evidence admissible there must be a nexus or connection between the act charged and the facts relating to provious or subsequent transactions which it is sought to give in evidence. Thompson v. Director of Public Prosecutions (1918), 87 L.J.K.B. 478. See The Queen v. Rhodes [1899] 1 Q.B. 77, per Lord Russell, C. J., and R. v. Ellis [1910] 2 K.B. 746; R. v. Boyle [1914] 3 K.B. 339, 10 Cr. App.

Where evidence of "similar acts" is admissible to show intent, the judge should direct the jury on the limits of the use which they may make of such evidence. R. v. Smith (1915), 11 Cr. App. R. 230.

Before an issue can be said to be raised which would permit the introduction of evidence by the prosecution of other criminal acts in proof of intent or guilty knowledge, it must have been raised in substance, if not in so many words, and the issue so raised must be one to which the prejudicial evidence is relevant. Thompson v. Director of Public Prosecutions (1918), 87 L.J.K.B. 478, 484 (H.L.).

"Without colour of right"]—The taking must be without colour of right. R. v. Wade, 11 Cox C.C. 549; R. v. Farnborough [1895] 2 Q.B. 484, 64 L.J.M.C. 270. Whether the goods were or were not taken bona fide under a claim of right is a question for the consideration of the jury upon a proper instruction upon the law applicable to the particular case. R. v. Farnborough, supra; and see R. v. Mallison, 20 Cox C.C. 204; R. v. Thurborn, 1 Den, C.C. 388, 18 L.J.M.C. 140; R. v. Lyon, 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 242; R. v. Johnson, 8 Can. Cr. The fraudulent nature of the dealing is to be the test of whether the wrongful conversion is or is not to be treated as theft. Kelly v. The King [1917] 1 W.W.R. 463, 468, 54 S.C.R. 220, 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 282 (Can.), per Idington, J.; and see same case below, R. v. Kelly [1917] 1 W.W.R. 46, 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 140, 27 Man. R. 105, and R. v. Kelly, 10 W.W.R. 1345, 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 94 (Man.); R. v. Schyffer, 15 B.C.R. 338, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 191.

"Anything capable of being stolen"]-Code sees. 344-346. Where authorities having custody of moneys on behalf of the Crown pay such moneys away to a government contractor with the intention of passing the property, it has been doubted whether the contractor can be held guilty of theft if he took the government cheque on the bank where the money was deposited, under cover of false items in his account connived at by the government authorities. R. v. Kelly [1917] 1 W.W.R. 463, 54 S.C.R. 220, 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 282, varying R. v. Kelly [1917] 1 W.W.R. 46, 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 140, 27 Man. R. 105. There would at least be an obtaining of money by false pretences under such circumstances. R. v. Kelly [1917] 1 W.W.R. 46. It is suggested by Idington J., in the last-mentioned case, that the government bank credit, the chose in action, would possibly not be within the phrase "anything capable of being stolen" (Code sees. 344, 347), but that if the accused by reason of his fraudulent acts was not entitled to receive any of the cheques issued to him he had no right to convert the cheques to his use, and that they remained the property of the Crown and recoverable by the Crown until passed into the hands of the bank without notice. In that view the prosecution might be for theft of the cheques. The case was disposed of on other grounds. It would seem to follow that if the taking of the cheque was theft, the like charge might be laid in respect of the money withdrawn for the benefit of the payee by means of that cheque. Compare R. v. Dessauer, 21 U.C.Q.B. 231 (Ont.); R. v. Moreton (1913), 8 Cr. App. R. 214, 217, distinguishing R. v. Gardner, 25 L.J.M.C. 100, 7 Cox C.C. 136; R. v. Abbott, 1 Den. C.C. 273; R. v. Kenrick, 12 L.J.M.C. 135, 5 Q.B. 49.

"Owner"]-A crop raised by the widow of an intestate on the land belonging to his estate before the taking out of any letters of administration, belongs to her as against a land mortgagee's right of distress; and persons taking it with her authority are not liable to conviction for theft although they and she may be civilly liable in trespass to the personal representative of the estate under the Devolution of Estates Act, R.S.S. 1909, ch. 43, R. v. Tchetter [1918] 1 W.W.R. 934. And see note to sec. 347, supra, on statutory theft.

"Person having any special property or interest"]-Referring to the phrase "special property or interest" as used in sec. 347, Judge Cumberland said in R. v. Hassell [1917] 2 W.W.R. 48, 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 322:

"I think it probably was intended to cover nothing that was not covered by such expressions as 'special ownership' and 'special property' as used in larceny cases in England. If this is so I take it possession is a necessary element of such special property or interest. All the instances of special property that I find in the English authorities were cases of bailees, pawnees, carriers, agisters and such like, where the persons said to have such special property in a chattel were in possession of it, or at least had the right to the immediate possession of it."

A person who has a right as against the world at large to do with or to any movable thing anything which the law does not specifically forbid him to do with or to it, and the right to prevent all other persons from doing therewith or thereto anything whatever which they are not specifically authorized to do, either by law or by his consent, is said to be the general owner of that thing, and that thing is said to be his property, although he may have limited the above-mentioned rights respecting it as regards particular persons by contract. Stephen's Digest of Crim. Law, art. 280; 2 Austin's Jurisprudence, 876, 965.

Every person to whom the general owner of a movable thing has given a right to the possession as against the general owner is said to be the special owner thereof, or to have a special property therein, and such special property is not divested if the special owner parts with the possession under a mistake. Every person who has obtained by any means the possession of any movable thing is deemed to be the special owner thereof, as against any person who cannot show a better title thereto. Stephen's Digest Crim. Law, art. 283.

When one person delivers, or causes to be delivered, to another any movable thing in order that it may be kept for the person making the delivery, or that it may be used, gratuitously or otherwise, by the person to whom the delivery is made, or that it may be kept as pledge by the person to whom the delivery is made, or that it may be earried, or that work may be done upon it by the person to whom delivery is made gratuitously or not, and when it is the intention of the parties that the specific thing so delivered, or the article into which it is to be made, shall be delivered either to the person making the delivery or to some other person appointed by him to receive it, the person making the delivery is said to bail the thing delivered ; the act of delivery is called a bailment; the person making the delivery is called the bailor; and the person to whom it is made is called the bailee. Stephen's Digest of Crim. Law, art. 285; Coggs v. Bernard, 1 Sm. L.C. 201; R. v. Hassall, L. & C. 58.

The words "special property or interest" are intended to cover cases in which there is a right to possession although no property right. R. v. Tessier (1900), 10 Que. Q.B. 45, 5 Can. Cr. If the property in the goods passes under a document transferring the legal title, although as security only, the fraudulent conversion as against the holder of that legal title does not require to be based on any special property or interest; the charge in that case may be for stealing from such holder as the owner of the goods. R. v. Ripplinger, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 111 (Sask.).

The validity of an alleged chattel mortgage or other document purporting to transfer title may for the purposes of a prosecution for theft or for the purposes of a defence of that prosecution, be attacked in the criminal proceedings. R. v. Ripplinger, supra.

A conditional vendee of goods holding possession under a contract reserving title therein to the conditional vendor, has a special property or interest in them. R. v. Comeau (1914), R. v. Comeau, 43 N.B.R. 177, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 165.

A crop sharing lease containing no express transfer of title in a share of the growing crop would probably be held to confer on the landlord no property in the share he was to get after the reaping or threshing of the crop until that event had happened. R. v. Hassell [1917], 2 W.W.R. 48 (Man.); and this notwithstanding a provincial statute giving the landlord in respect of the share of the crops agreed to be given him, a 'right'' in priority to the tenant or those claiming under him, which would afford the landlord protection in interpleader with excention creditors of his tenant, but would not enable him to bring replevin for any specific portion of the crop while it remained undivided. R. v. Hassell, supra; Man. Stat. 1915, ch. 13, sec. 2. If the effect of a statute of that character were that the landlord became a tenant in common of the growing crop, a charge framed on that basis might be sustained under sec. 352 (theft between co-owners). See R. v. Hassell, supra.

Sub-sec (2)—''Begins to cause it to become movable'']—To grasp a purse in another's pocket and draw it merely to the edge of the pocket with intent to steal, is theft, although the accused was not successful in getting the purse completely out of the pocket. R. v. Taylor [1911] 1 K.B. 674.

Identity of property stolen with that found in possession of accused] —When a defendant, charged with theft, disputes the identity of property found in his possession with that stolen, there must be a clear direction to the jury on the issue of identity. R. v. Wakeman (1912), 8 Cr. App. R. 18; and see R. v. Jackson, 9 Cox C.C. 505; R. v. Weekes, 10 Cox C.C. 224; R. v. Oxenham, 13 Cox C.C. 349, 46 L.J.M.C. 125. Theft by trick]—On an indictment for larceny by trick, the jury must be specifically directed on the point whether there was an intention to pass the property. R. v. Hilliard (1913), 83 L.J.K.B. 439, 23 Cox C.C. 617, 9 Cr. App. R. 171. There may be an intention to pass the property only on the happening of a certain event. Oppenheimer v. Fraser [1907] 2 K.B. 50. In R. v. Solomon (1890), 17 Cox C.C. 93, what is known as the purse trick was held not to be larceny by a trick; the determining factor is the state of mind of the person who receives the property. In R. v. Buckmaster, 20 Q.B.D. 182, 16 Cox C.C. 339, the prisoner was convicted although the prosecutor admitted that he did not expect to get the same coins back.

Retaining goods sent on the faith of a promise to pay for them on delivery may amount to larceny by a trick. Rex v. Edmundson, 8 Cr. App. R. 107.

Single theft if various takings are in substance the one transaction] —A recent American case states the rule thus: If several different articles have been stolen in substantially the same transaction; if the different asportations are prompted by one design, one purpose, one impulse, they are a single act without regard to time, and the value of the different articles may be aggregated in order to make out a charge of "grand larceny" depending on the total value, although by reason of the small values of each of the articles stolen the larcenies if separate would be petit larceny only. If the larcenies were distinct they cannot be aggregated so as to make the value of the property stolen sufficient to constitute grand larceny where the value of the property taken at any one time was not sufficient for that purpose. Re Jones 46 Mont. R. 122, 125; 126 Pac. 929.

The case may be treated as one continuous act of theft, although there were a number of distinct takings. R. v. Minehin (1914), 6 W.W.R. 800, 805; Regina v. Henwood, 22 L.T.R. 486, 11 Cox C.C. 526; Rex v. Bleasdale, 2 Car. & K. 765; Regina v. Slack, L.R. 7 Q.B. 408; Regina v. Balls, L.R. 1, C.C.R. 328, 40 L.J.M.C. 148.

an entry in his employer's books at or about the date at which he is charged with having embezzled this sum, accompanied, as it was, by evidence warranting the inference that the money stolen had reached his hands and had been misappropriated by him, suffices to sustain a enviction for theft of the entire sum (although it may have been taken in numerous small amounts at different times during the period covered by the evidence) without otherwise proving the taking of each or any of such several amounts. Minchin v. The King (1914), 6 W.W.R. 800, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 414, dismissing appeal from R. v. Minchin (1913), 5 W.W.R. 1028, 7 Alta. L.R. 148, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 254.

Presumption from recent possession]—There is no reason why the prosecution should not give direct evidence of the theft although also relying upon presumptions arising from recent possession. R. v. McClain (1915), 7 W.W.R. 1134, 30 W.L.R. 388, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 488 (Alta.).

As the trial goes on, the burden of proof may be shifted from the prosecutor to the accused by the proof of facts which raise a presumption of his guilt. Thus A. is accused of stealing a five-dollar note. The burden of proof is on the prosecution. He is shown to be in possession of the note soon after the fact. The burden of proof is shifted to A. R. v. Theriault (1904), 11 B.C.R. 117, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 460. A. shows that the note was given him in change for a ten-dollar note. The burden of proof is again shifted to the prosecution. R. v. Langmead, 9 Cox C.C. 464; R. v. Partridge, 7 C. & P. 551; R. v. Adams, 3 C. & P. 600; R. v. Schama (1915), 84 L.J.K.B. 396, 11 Cr. App. R. 45 (on an indictment for receiving).

While, under the criminal law, the accused person is not called upon to explain suspicious circumstances, there may yet come a time when, circumstantial evidence having enveloped him in a strong network of inculpatory facts, he is bound to make some explanation or stand condemned. Rex v. Jenkins, 14 B.C.R. 61, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 221.

The burden of giving a reasonable explanation of possession of stolen goods is upon the person in whose possession they are found. R. v. Langmead (1864), 9 Cox C.C. 464, L. & C. 427; R. v. Curnock (1914), 10 Cr. App. R. 207, 24 Cox C.C. 440; R. v. Crowhurst (1844), 1 C. & K. 370; R. v. Smith (1845), 2 C. & K. 207; R. v. Gordon, 2 Cr. App. R. 285; R. v. Poolman, 3 Cr. App. R. 36.

It would seem that the satisfactory account to displace the presumption arising from recent possession may be given either at the time of the finding or later at the trial. R. v. Schama (1915), 84 L.J.K.B. 396. While it may be in the interest of the accused to present the reasonable account or explanation at the time of his arrest or on the discovery of the goods by the true owner thereof, there seems no good reason why he should not, if he chooses, reserve his explanation until the trial, when he may be better able to substantiate it by the testimony of others as well as his own; but see contra, R. v. McKay (1900), 34 N.S.R. 540, 541. [§ 347]

On a charge of theft of goods from a store, evidence of the finding in prisoner's house of the goods and of keys fitting the store doors, and of the fact that the goods were in the store exposed for sale at the time of the alleged theft and had not been sold, is sufficient to put the onus upon the prisoner of accounting for his possession. Under such circumstances it is not necessary for the Crown to prove that the goods had not passed from the possession of the owners by some means other than sale. R. v. Theriault, 11 B.C.R. 117, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 460.

If the explanation of the accused in a case of recent possession of stolen goods is given on discovery of the goods and it is thought reasonable, there is no presumption and no onus on the prisoner. R. v. Hagan (1913), 9 Cr. App. R. 25.

The possession must not be at a time remote from the theft having regard to the nature of the goods; but it may be considered along with other implicating circumstances, such as false statements by the accused and the manner by which he disposed of the goods, where without such implicating circumstances it would not be considered as raising any presumption. See R. v. Starr, 40 U.C.Q.B. 268 (Ont.); R. v. Adams, 3 C. & P. 600.

Theft by appropriating lost articles]—The finder of anything lost or mislaid is not to be convicted of theft of the thing unless at the time of the taking or conversion he is shown to have taken or converted it, believing that the owner could be found. R. v. Carswell (1916), 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 288, 34 W.L.R. 1042, 10 W.W.R. 1027 at 1037, dictum per Beck, J. (Alta.); R. v. Moore, 30 L.J.M.C. 77; R. v. Shea, 7 Cox C.C. 147; R. v. Preston, 2 Den. C.C. 353. The question for the jury is whether the accused believed he could find the owner. R. v. Knight, 12 Cox C.C. 102.

Property left on the desk provided for the use of customers of a bank and not afterwards claimed is not lost within the meaning of the rule giving the finder of lost property title thereto. It is under the protection of the bank and a elerk in its employ who finds it is not entitled to it as against the bank. Heddle v. Bank of Hamilton (1912), 2 W.W.R. 560, 17 B.C.R. 306, affirming 19 W.L.R. 897; Bridges v. Hawkesworth, 15 Jur. 1079, 21 L.J.Q.B. 75, South Staffordshire Water Co. v. at least by circumstantial description. R. v. Jennings (1916), 10 W.W.R. 1049, 34 W.L.R. 1058, 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 270 (Alta.); R. v. Carswell (1916), 10 W.W.R. 1027, 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 288, 34 W.L.R. 1042 (Alta.). Property must be proved in somebody at the trial, otherwise the presumption is that the property was in the prisoner by his pleading not guilty to the indictment. R. v. Carswell, 10 W.W.R. 1027, 1038, citing Anonymous case, 8 Mod. 249. It is only by indicating the owner that it can be established that the taking or conversion was against the will of the owner. R. v. Jennings, 10 W.W.R. 1049, 1051 (Alta.); R. v. Carswell, 10 W.W.R. 1027 (Alta.).

On a charge of theft if the name of the owner is not known and he is dead or gone, but the stealing is proved, the charge may be laid as stealing from a person unknown. R. v. Carswell, 10 W.W.R. 1027 (Alta.), citing Trainer v. The King, 4 Com. L.R. 135 (Australia). But if it be not known whether the goods were stolen or not, the difficulty cannot be got over by saying the goods were stolen from a person unknown. R. v. Carswell, 10 W.W.R. 1027 (Alta.). The proof of the corpus delicti need not always be first in order of time; it may be so connected with the proof of identity of the defendant as being the culprit, that the one point cannot be separated in proof from the other. Ibid.

Bribe distinguished from misappropriated transportation charge]— If a railway conductor misuses his employer's property for his own benefit, e.g., by taking a bribe for some one's free transportation, he in fact steals the use of the property and sells that; but that is something different from stealing the money. R. v. Thompson (1911), 1 W.W.R. 277, 280, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 80 (Alta.).

And in the case of a railway conductor taking from a passenger a sum much less than the regular fare received as a bribe to allow the passenger to ride without paying his fare, and both given and received without any intention that the money should be paid to the company, it has been held that the conductor is not guilty of theft of the money from the railway company. R. v. Thompson, supra. The bribe so given and taken was held in the last-mentioned case not to be money received by the conductor ''on terms requiring him to account for or pay the same'' to the company within the meaning of Code sec. 355. There might, of course, be a prosecution under the statute dealing with secret commissions and benefits (Can. Stat. 1909, ch. 33). R. v. Thompson (1911), 1 W.W.R. 277, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 80 (Alta.), disapproving of majority opinion in R. v. McLennan, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 1, 7 Terr. L.R. 309.

If, on the other hand, the money had been paid and received as a fare, although manifestly less than the correct fare, a charge of theft might be supported in respect of his wilful failure to turn in the amount to the company. R. v. McLennan (1905), 7 Terr. L.R. 309, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 1; R. v. Sinclair, 36 O.L.R. 510, 27 Can. Cr. Cas.

CRIMINAL CODE (PART VII)

327, 10 O.W.N. 119. Failure to issue a conductor's duplex ticket to the passenger paying his fare on the train is some evidence of an intention to retain the money. R. v. Martin (1912), 2 W.W.R. 602, 21 W.L.R. 658, 19 Can. Cr. Cas. 376 (Alta.). So also the denial to the railway superintendent that he had received the fare is some evidence of intention to fraudulently convert. R. v. Martin, supra. If in answer to the failure to account with the particular returns in which the fare should have been included, the real defence raised was a denial of receiving it, this would dispense with the necessity of the prosecution putting in strict proof that the omitted fare had not been accounted for at some other time or at some other place than the time and place when and where the accounting should properly have been made. R. v. Martin, supra.

The prosecution may be either in the province in which in the usual course the money would be accounted for or in another province in which the money was received from the passenger and in which there was a failure to account when required by his superior in the railway employ. R. v. Martin, supra; R. v. Rogers, 14 Cox C.C. 22; R. v. Murdoch, 5 Cox C.C. 360; R. v. Burdett, 4 B. & Ald. 95; R. v. Taylor, 3 B. & P. 596; R. v. Sinelair, (1916) 36 O.L.R. 510, 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 327, 10 O.W.N. 119, per Clute, J. An appeal from the decision in 36 O.L.R. 510, which came up on certiorari process instead of by a reserved case or by an appeal by leave on its refusal, was quashed, although leave to appeal had been granted by a judge of the High Court Division under Ont. Crown Rule 1287, permitting an appeal by leave from an order in a certiorari matter. R. v. Sinclair, 38 O.L.R. 149, 11 O.W.N. 131, 28 Can. Cr. Cas. 350. If it were intended to hold that certiorari would not lie in respect of a police magistrate's jurisdiction under Code sec. 777 because the point might have been brought up by a reserved case, the quashing of the appeal in R. v. Sinclair, supra, is not in accordance with the practice in some of the other provinces. See R. v. Calvin [1918] 2 W.W.R. 1039; R. v. Young Kee (No. 1) [1917] 2 W.W.R. 442 (and see R. v. Young Kee (No. 2), [1917] 2 W.W.R. 654); R. v. Emery [1917] 1 W.W.R. 337, 10 Alta. L.R. 139, 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 116; Dierks v. Altermatt, [1918] 1 W.W.R. 719 (Alta.). But in New Brunswick certiorari has been refused because of the alternative remedy of appeal under Code sec. 1013. R. v. Limerick, (1917) 45 N.B.R. 269.

If the conductor has paid over to the company a part of the money received from the passenger although accompanied by a false voucher intended to show that it was received for a shorter transportation, this may be considered a recognition by the conductor that the money belonged to the company. R. v. Sinclair (1916), 36 O.L.R. 510, 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 327.

Receiving stolen property]—Code sec. 399 where the theft is indictable; Code sec. 401 where the theft is punishable on summary conviction only.

A charge of theft does not by implication include that of having received the thing stolen, and a prisoner acquitted on indictment for theft cannot, on that account, plead autrefois acquit to an indictment for receiving. B. v. Groulx, 18 Que. K.B. 118, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 20; and see Code sec. 399.

Extradition]—A charge of "grand larceny" in the United States is within the extradition arrangement in effect between Canada and the United States, as a species of larceny or theft. Re Lewis, 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 233.

"Embezzlement" and "larceny" are extraditable offences with the U.S.A. Extradition Convention of 1889.

The abandonment of the term "lareeny" in Canadian jurisprudence on the enactment of the Criminal Code of Canada subsequent to an extradition convention including such offence, does not affect the liability to extradition of a person charged with what was larceny at common law and is by the Criminal Code still an offence in Canada under the name of "theft" or "stealing." Re Gross (1898), 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 67, 25 A.R. 83 (Ont.).

Offences formerly coming under the term "embezzlement" are designated "theft" under the Code. Sees. 347, 355-357.

Agent pledging goods.—Servant feeding master's horse, etc., contrary to orders.

348. No factor or agent shall be guilty of theft by pledging or giving a lien on any goods or document of title to goods entrusted to him for the purpose of sale or otherwise, for any sum of money not greater than the amount due to him from his principal at the time of pledging or giving a lien on the same, together with the amount of any bill of exchange accepted by him for or on account of his principal.

2. Any servant, contrary to the orders of his master, taking from his possession any food for the purpose of giving the same or having the same given to any horse or other animal belonging to or in the possession of his master, shall not, by reason thereof, be guilty of theft.

Origin]-Sec. 305, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 164, sec. 63. The second sub-section of sec. 348 is similar to the Imperial statute, 26-27 Vict., ch. 103, sec. 1.

Theft by person required to account.-Entry in account.

355. Every one commits theft who, having received any money or valuable security or other thing whatsoever, on terms requiring him to account for or pay the same, or the proceeds thereof, or any part of such proceeds, to any other person, though not requiring him to deliver over in specie the identical money, valuable security or other thing received, fraudulently converts the same to his own use, or fraudulently omits to account for or pay such proceeds or any part thereof, or to account for or pay such proceeds or any part thereof, which he was required to account for or pay as aforesaid.

2. Restitution order]—Section 358, covering offences under secs. 355, 356 and 357, is excepted from the statutory powers of sec. 1050 of ordering restitution. See sec. 1050 (5).

"Money or valuable security"]—Code sec. 2, sub-sec. (40), and sec. 4, as to valuable securities.

"Other thing whatever"]—The "other thing whatever" must, because of the context, mean something of a like nature to money or valuable security. R. v. Fraser [1918] 2 W.W.R. 324, 11 Sask. L.R. 209. It is not sufficient to charge the receiving of merchandise on terms requiring the consignee to account for same. R. v. Fraser, supra; R. v. Kimbrough [1918].

"On terms requiring him to account for "]—Where money was delivered to an employer carrying on a genuine business as a guarantee of the honesty of persons employed by him, it may be found that it became a loan and that the employer was entitled to use the money; R. v. Hotine (1904), 68 J.P. 143; R. v. Lord (1905), 69 J.P. 467; and so be distinguishable from a case where the money was entrusted to the deposite for safe custody only, as in R. v. Noel (1914), 10 Cr. App. R. 255.

It is a case falling within the ordinary definition of theft, and not within sec. 355, where the accused was required to deliver a ring or other article in specie. The words "account for" are not appropriate words to describe a delivery in specie, as to which sec. 347 would apply. R. v. Shyffer or Schyffer, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 191; 15 B.C.R. 338; R. v. Kimbrough [1918] 2 W.W.R. 892 (Alta.); and see R. v. Fraser [1918] 2 W.W.R. 324, 11 Sask. L.R. 209.

Where the proprietor of a taxicab delivers it to a driver for the purpose of his plying with it for hire upon the terms that the driver will hand over to him a certain percentage of the day's takings while retaining the balance for himself, it is competent for the jury to find that, to the extent of the proprietor's share, the fares received by the driver from the public are so received by him for or on account of the coprietor, within sec. 1 of the Larceny Act, 1901, 1 Edw. VII, Imp., ch. 10. Rex v. Messer [1913] 2 K.B. 421, 82 L.J. (K.B.) 914, 23 Cox C.C. 59. That Act is, however, of a different phraseology from sec. 355 of the Code, and deals with "property" entrusted, and not merely "money or valuable security" (Code sec. 355). But under the Larceny Act. 1901, Imp., it has also been held that a person may be "entrusted" with property or may "receive" it "for or on account of any other person" although it was not delivered directly to him by the owner and although the owner did not know of his existence and had no intention of entrusting it to him, R. v. Grubb [1915] 2 K.B. 683, 84 L.J.K.B. 1744, 11 Cr. App. R. 153.

by the identical person from whom the money was received. R. v. Unger, 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 355, 14 C.L.T. 294 (Ont.).

In R. v. Sinelair (1916), 36 O.L.R. 510, 10 O.W.N. 119, 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 327, it was held that the conductor having turned in 15 cents although he had received $5.00, he had thus recognized the latter sum as belonging to the railway company while appropriating all but the 15 cents, and R. v. McLennan (1905), 7 Terr. L.R. 309, 2 W.L.R. 227, 10 Can, Cr. Cas. 1, was applied in preference to R. v. Thompson (1911). 1 W.W.R. 277, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 80. In the latter case it was held that money paid as a bribe to a railway conductor to permit a passenger to ride without paying his fare is not money received by the conductor "on terms requiring him to account" to the company, and failure to turn in the money so received would not support a charge of theft; and that it is a question of fact whether the money was paid as a bribe or as a reduced fare. If as a reduced fare, although he may have been forbidden to take a reduced fare, the money was the property of the company and he could be charged with theft on withholding it in his accounting, but if it were paid and received as a bribe, the conductor should have been prosecuted under the Secret Commissions Act, 8-9 Edw. VII, Can., ch. 13. R. v. Thompson, supra.

There are classes of employment in which the employee is under obligation to turn in to the employer the identical money received, and is given no right to make change or otherwise deal with the cash received. In that event the doctrine of R. v. Schyffer, 15 B.C.R. 338, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 191, would apply, and reliance would not have to be placed on sec. 355, for the conversion of the money fraudulently and without colour of right, with intent to deprive the employer of it, would be "theft" under sec. 347. R. v. Kimbrough [1918] 2 W.W.R. 892 (Alta.). And the circumstance that the identical money originally received by the employee had properly been exchanged for other money or securities probably would not prevent the application of sec. 347 to a fraudulent conversion and embezzlement of such other money or security quite apart from the provisions of sec. 355. There may be an overlapping of sections 347 and 355, so that under some circumstances a charge may be laid under either; but if the offence is laid in the terms of sec. 355, the penalty is to be found in sec. 358, and if under sec. 347, charged as a theft by a clerk or servant from his master or employer, the penalty is to be found in sec. 359. Differing theories were advanced in R. v. MacKay [1918] 1 W.W.R. 945, 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 194, as to the meaning of the phrase "on terms requiring him to account for or pay the same." Beck, J., said (page 954): "In my opinion this clause by its terms makes it reasonably clear that the person who receives the money, valuable security or other thing is a person who stands in the relation of agent, in the proper sense of the term, to the person to whom he is to pay or account; and not merely a person who by virtue of some contract between the two in which both are under mutual obligations, is under an obligation, arising out of that contract, to pay or account. In the latter case, my mind is clear, it is quite inappropriate to say of one of the two contractors that money or property coming to his hands in pursuance of the contract are received by him 'on terms requiring' him to account or pay and the money or property, as money or property 'which he was required' to account or pay for. The use of the word 'terms,' the expression 'terms requiring,' and the word 'required' indicate to my mind something more and something different from a mere obligation arising out of an ordinary contract-something involving a superiority in the person requiring, and a right to require, that is, to direct, arising not out of a contract respecting the particular money or property but out of an already existing legal relationship conferring that superiority. The section appears in exactly the same form as sec. 308 of the Criminal Code as originally passed in 1892, and though marginal notes are, it is said, not properly referred to to assist in interpretation, I nevertheless call attention to the fact that the marginal note to sec. 308 is 'theft by agent' and I am not at all sure that the reason for the rule applied by the courts in England is applicable to statutes passed by the Dominion or provincial legislatures as government bills."

Stuart, J., concurred with Beck, J., that the conviction should be quashed, but did not assent to the interpretation which Beck J., gave to sec. 355. Stuart, J., doubted if the word "requiring" refers to a person at all. In his view it is the terms or conditions of some bargain or contract, not a person, that are said to "require" an accounting (page 950). Harvey, C.J., said, that in the main he agreed with the opinion of Stuart, J., but not in his finding that there was no evidence from which a fraudulent intent could be inferred. Hyndman, J., concurred in quashing the conviction and held that the failure to pay the moneys in question in the case was a mere breach of contract giving rise to a civil action, but not in any sense constituting a "relationship" between the parties as contemplated by sec. 355, i.e., as principal and agent, or trustee, in any sense. In R. v. Fraser [1918] 2 W.W.R. 324, 326, 11 Sask, L.R. 209, sec. 355 was considered by Lamont, J.A., who said: "To be guilty of an offence under this section, the accused must have received money or valuable security or other thing on terms requiring him to hand over the thing received, or the proceeds thereof. if he has converted it into money, to some other person, i.e., to some person other than the person from whom he received it, and instead of turning it over he fraudulently converts it to his own use. The gist of the offence is, that he has received something which, in reality, belongs to the person to whom he has to account and to whom he would turn it over if he performed his duty." 'R. v. Fraser, supra.

tioned in this section, consists of a continuity of acts—the reception of the valuable security, the collection of the proceeds, the conversion of the proceeds, and lastly, the failure to account for the proceeds; and where the beginning of the operation is in one district and the continuation and completion are in another district, the accused may be arrested and proceeded against in either district. R. v. Hogle (1896), 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 53, 5 Que, Q.B. 59. So where the valuable security in respect of which a charge of fraudulent conversion was laid was received and the terms were agreed to in the district of Iberville, and the person to whom the accused was to account for the proceeds resided in that district. but the accused collected the money in the district of Bedford, proceedings taken in the district of Iberville were held good. Ibid.

Agency has been defined in the case of Pole v. Leask, 33 L.J., Ch. 155 (H.L.), per Lord Cranworth, thus:—"As to the constitution by a principal of another to act as his agent; no one can become the agent of any person except by the will of that other person. His will may be manifested in writing or orally, or simply by plasing another in a situation in which, according to ordinary rules of law, or perhaps it would be more correct to say according to the ordinary usages of mankind, that other is understood to represent and act for the person who has so placed him; but in every case it is only by will of the employer that an agency can be created. Another proposition to be kept constantly in view is that the burden of proof is on the person dealing with anyone as an agent through whom he seeks to charge another as principal. He must show that the agency did exist and that the agent had the authority he assumed to exercise or otherwise that the principal is estopped from disputing it."

As to failure of a broker to sell stocks as directed, see R. v. Bastien, 15 Que. K.B. 16, 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 306. An indictment is not bad for including in one count the fraudulent conversion and the fraudulent omission to account for proceeds. R. v. Cross, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 171, 43 N.S.R. 325, R. v. Weir (No. 1), 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 102; Code secs. 852-855.

Embezzlement]—The term "embezzlement" is not applied to any offence under the Code but the definition of theft is so extended as to cover the offence formerly known as embezzlement. See secs. 344, 347 348, 352, 353, 355-358. Varying degrees of punishment are provided so that the facts which formerly would have proved embezzlement will, as heretofore, justify a more onerous punishment than is usual for simple theft. See secs. 357, 358, 359, 386, 390.

Embezzlement by a servant was made a felony by 2 Henry VIII, ch. 7, and was limited to such cases as where the article was received by the defendant " for, or in the name" or " on account of the master." Thus a servant could not commit an embezzlement of such things as he received from another servant. The law was amended in 1811 as to appropriation by agents and was made more comprehensive from time to Vi y VIII, received naster." ;s as he 1 as to ym time to time and these modifications were codified in the Act of 24 and 25 Vict., (Imp.), ch. 96, secs. 75-79, and the Larceny Act of 1901, Imp.

At common law the offence of larceny or theft could not be established unless a wrongful taking in the first instance was proven. This rule did not cover the case where the person charged has innocently received into his possession the chattel alleged to have been stolen and had subsequently fraudulently converted it to his own use. The statutory offence of larceny by a bailee was created to remedy this defect in the law. Thereafter while it was no longer necessary to prove a wrongful taking it was still necessary to show that the chattel alleged to have been stolen belonged to the person named as the owner in the indictment. Still this enactment did not cover the case where the accused was not expected nor in duty bound to deliver the identical chattel, e.g., the identical coins or notes received over to the owner from whom or on whose account he had received them, but was only bound to account therefor by paying over a similar amount when properly called upon to do so. It was to meet this case, and also to remove a difficulty about possession that the statutory offence of embezzlement was created. R. v. Thompson (1911), 1 W.W.R. 277, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 80, per Stuart, J.

The English Act, 24 and 25 Vict., ch. 96, sec. 68, is confined to the case of persons coming within the narrower meaning of the words "clerk or servant," and the wider case of embezzlement by an agent generally, such as is covered by sec. 355 of our Code, is met by the Larceny Act, Imp. (1901).

Sales under consignment]-As to theft of the consigned goods by the bailee, see secs. 347, 348. If the goods themselves or the bill of lading, or other document of title, were merely pledged for advances, this would not be theft unless the pledge were for a greater sum than the consignor owed the consignee who pledged the same including as an indebtedness any outstanding acceptance by bill of exchange upon which the consignee had made himself liable for account of the consignor. Code sec. 348. See also Code sec. 390 (criminal breach of trust) making it an indictable offence for a person who is a trustee of any "property" for the use or benefit, either in whole or in part, of some other person to convert anything of which he is trustee to any use not authorized by the trust, with intent to defraud and in violation of his trust. The maximum penalty for an offence under sec. 390 is less than the maximum under secs. 355, 358 (theft by an agent receiving on terms, etc.), or under sec. 359 (theft by clerk or servant). If the consignment contract makes the consignee, either expressly or impliedly a trustee of the proceeds of sale, there seems no good reason why the prosecution should not be based on 390, if the consignee fraudulently converts the proceeds of sale to his own use.

See as to British Columbia, the provincial statute of 1916, ch. 56, sees. 3-10, and note to Code sec. 348.

An indictment should not be framed under sec. 355 for failure to account for the merchandise consigned; if sec. 355 applies at all, the charge would have to be for failure to account for the cash or other proceeds, being something ejusdem generis with money and valuable security. R. v. Fraser [1918] 2 W.W.R. 324, 11 Sask. L.R. 209.

So also an indictment does not lie under sec. 355 against a mortgagor for selling goods seized under a distress warrant by the land mortgagee and as to which the mortgagor had given an undertaking to hold the goods as agent and bailee of the mortgagee. R. v. Kimbrough [1918] 2 W.W.R. 892 (Alta.). But the offence was theft, although it should have been laid under secs. 347, 386, 387 or secs. 352, 386, 387, and not under sec. 355. Much of the difficulty in reference to sec. 355 may be due to misleading references made to it, as if it were the only section dealing with theft "by an agent," whereas sec. 347 may apply to many cases of agency.

"Though not requiring him to deliver over in specie"]--In R. v. Kimbrough [1918] 2 W.W.R. 892, 30 Can. Cr. Cas. 86 (Alta.), it was said that "though" is here used in the sense of "but"; and the entire phrase quoted above was considered as definitely excluding from, or at least showing an intention not to include within the operation of see. 355, the cases where the specific article delivered is to be re-delivered by the person receiving it. R. v. Kimbrough [1918] 2 W.W.R. 892 (Alta.), doubting R. v. Fraser [1918] 2 W.W.R. 324 (Sask.).

Conversion of proceeds by various acts in different jurisdictions]— The offence of fraudulent conversion of the proceeds of a valuable security, mentioned in this section, consists of a continuity of acts—the reception of the valuable security, the collection of the proceeds, the conversion of the proceeds, and lastly, the failure to account for the proceeds; and where the beginning of the operation is in one district and the continuation and completion are in another district. R. v. Hogle (1896), 5 Que. B. 59, 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 53. So where the valuable security in respect of which a charge of fraudulent conversion was laid was received and the terms were agreed to in the district of Iberville, and the person to whom the accused was to account for the proceeds resided in that district, but the accused collected the money in the district of Bedford, proceedings taken in the district of Iberville were held good. Ibid.

Estoppel from disputing agent's authority]—"No one can become the agent of any person except by the will of that other person. His will may be manifested in writing or orally, or simply by placing another in a situation in which, according to ordinary rules of law, or perhaps it would be more correct to say according to the ordinary usages of mankind, that other is understood to represent and act for the person who has so placed him; but in every case it is only by will of the employer that an agency can be created. to be kept constantly in view is that the burden of proof is on the person dealing with anyone as an agent through whom he seeks to charge another as principal. He must show that the agency did exist and that the agent had the authority he assumed to exercise or otherwise that the principal is estopped from disputing it." Pole v. Leask, 33 L.J. Ch. 155; Low v. Boverie [1891] 3 Ch. 82, 60 L.J. Ch. 594; Clark v. Hepworth, [1918] 1 W.W.R. 147, 55 S.C.R. 614, affirming Clark v. Hepworth, [1917] 1 W.W.R. 806 (Alta.); Alexander v. Enderton, 5 W.W.R. 1022, 26 W.L.R. 535, 25 Man. R. 82; Sutherland v. Rhinhart (1912), 1 W.W.R. 1060, 5 Sask. L.R. 343; Agnew v. Davis, 17 W.L.R. 570 (Sask.); Gowans Kent & Co. v. Assiniboia Club, 8 Sask. L.R. 344, 9 W.W.R. 936, 33 W.L.R. 266; Sayward v. Dunsmuir, 11 B.C.R. 375, 2 W.L.R. 319; Elk Lumber Co. v. Crow's Nest Pass Coal Co., 39 S.C.R. 169, affirming 12 B.C.R. 433.

A person may so act as to estop himself from disputing that an agency existed or the person acting as agent may be estopped by his conduct from denying that he is liable to account to the other. See Imperial Elevator Co. v. Hillman, 8 W.W.R. 381, 8 Sask. L.R. 91, 30 W.L.R. 951; Low v. Boverie, 60 L.J. Ch. 594, [1891] 3 Ch. 82.

An agent may by his conduct be estopped from setting up the irregularity of his appointment. Jones v. North Vancouver Land Co. [1910] A.C. 317, 79 L.J.P.C. 89 (estoppel as to irregularity in appointment of directors).

Moneys or property received by the agent on his principal's behalf must be paid over or transferred to the principal. Bruee v. James, 4 W.W.R. 1019, 23 Man. R. 339, 24 W.L.R. 752; Chambers v. Goldthorpe [1901] 1 K.B. 624, 70 L.J.K.B. 482.

If the agent is intrusted with money to buy goods, the money will be considered trust funds in his hands and the principal has the same interest in the goods when bought as he had in the money. Carter v. Long, 26 S.C.R. 430.

Financial brokers who invest money for a client are his agents in the transaction if they profess to be acting for him and in his interest, though their remuneration may come from the borrower. Lowenburg v. Wolley, 25 S.C.R. 51, varying Wolley v. Lowenburg, 3 B.C.R. 416; and see Alexander v. Enderton, 5 W.W.R. 1022, affirmed, 25 Man. R. 82.

If money is paid to the agent in respect of an illegal transaction, he is bound to pay it over, provided that the contract of agency is not itself illegal. De Laval Separator Co. v. Walworth (No. 2), 7 W.L.R 395, 13 B.C.R. 295. As soon as one party to an illegal gaming contract receives notice from the other that the former declines to abide any longer by the wagering contract, money deposited by him thereupon ceases to be money deposited in the hands of the latter "to abide the event on which any wager shall have been made," and any money still in the latter's hands upappropriated by him becomes money of the former, without any good reason for the latter detaining it; and, in such [§ 355] circumstances, an action for money had and received to the plaintiff's use will lie. Donald v. Edwards-Woods Co., 4 W.L.R. 128 (Terr.). This notice may be given before as well as after the event to abide which the money has been deposited, has come off; but in the latter case it must be given before the money has been appropriated to the purpose for which it had been deposited, for if appropriated it is no longer money of the plaintiff in the defendant's hands. If it is still unappropriated, the defendant cannot set up the gaming and wagering contract to retain it. Donald v. Edwards-Woods Co., 4 W.L.R. 128, where this doctrine was applied to a deposit made with a broker or agent for gaming transactions on margin, illegal under the Gaming Act, 8-9 Vict., (Imp.), ch. 109, which was held to be in force in the N.-W. Territories; and see Strachan v. Universal Stock Exchange [1895] 2 Q.B. 695, 65 L.J.Q.B. 178.

An agent may, upon equitable grounds, be compelled in a civil action to pay over to his principal a secret profit he had made out of the transaction in which he acted as agent. McLeod v. Higginbotham, 18 W.L.R. 296 (B.C.), distinguishing Lister v. Stubbs, 45 Ch. D. 1, 59 L.J. Ch. 570; Fry v. Yates, 6 W.W.R. 746, 28 W.L.R. 23, 19 B.C.R. 355, 17 D.L.R. 435, affirming 4 W.W.R. 1055, 12 D.L.R. 418; flutchinson v. Fleming, 40 S.C.R. 134. But such secret profit would not necessarily be subject to Code sec. 355, as money received "on terms requiring" him to account for it to his principal. But there might be a criminal charge under the Secret Commissions Act, 8-9 Edw. VII, Can., ch. 33. See R. v. Rabinovitch, 30 W.L.R. 609, 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 350, 25 Man. R. 341, 25; R. v. Howes (1914), 7 W.W.R. 683; re Buchanan 26 W.L.R. 447, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 200.

The acceptance of a secret profit in fraud of the principal will disentitle the agent to his commission. Hutchinson v. Fleming, 40 S.C.R. 134; Manitoba & N.W. Land Corpn. v. Davidson, 34 S.C.R. 255, reversing Davidson v. Manitoba, etc. Corpn., 14 Man. R. 232.

Where an agent has dishonestly committed a breach of duty, a principal is entitled not only to recover any profit received by the agent, but to deprive him of his commission; where, however, the agent has committed a breach of duty as the result of an honest but mistaken notion of his rights, while liable to his principal for any profit received, he is nevertheless entitled to commission. Complin v. Beggs, 4 W.W.R. 1081, 24 W.L.R. 871, 24 Man. R. 596; Hippisley v. Knee Bros. [1905] 1 K.B. 1, 74 L.J.K.B. 68; Manitoba & North West Land Corporation v. Davidson, 43 S.C.R. 255.

A claim for money received cannot in general be made upon a subagent who receives it only on account of the agent without any privity or relation to the principal to whose use it is paid. Ross v. Webb (1913), 3 W.W.R. 932, affirmed 4 W.W.R. 1122, 23 Man. R. 503.

Theft by persons holding power of attorney.

356. Every one commits theft who, being entrusted, either solely or jointly with any other person, with any power of attorney for the sale, mortgage, pledge or other disposition of any property, real or personal, whether capable of being stolen or not, fraudulently sells, mortgages, pledges or otherwise disposes of the same or any part thereof, or fraudulently converts the proceeds of any sale, mortgage, pledge or other disposition of such property, or any part of such proceeds, to some purpose other than that for which he was entrusted with such power of attorney.

Restitution order]—Sec. 358, covering offences under secs. 355, 356 and 357, is excepted from the statutory powers of sec. 1050 of ordering restitution. See sec. 1050 (5).

Power of attorney]—The power of attorney must be in writing, and evidence of a verbal power will not bring the accused within the scope of this section. R. v. Choinard (1874), 4 Que. Law Rep. 220.

Theft under power of attorney]—An indictment for stealing under a power of attorney which charges that the money appropriated was the proceeds of a sale made by the defendant while acting under a power of attorney will not be quashed for failure to allege that the power of attorney was one for the sale or disposition of property, but particulars will be ordered as to the date, nature or purport of the alleged power of attorney. The defect, being only a partial one, was cured by verdict, and cannot be given effect to upon a reserved case as to whether a verdict of guilty on such indictment was valid or not. R. v. Fulton (1900), 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 36; 10 Que. Q.B. 1.

A count in an indictment charging that the defendant acting under a power of attorney fraudulently sold certain bank shares and fraudulently converted the proceeds " and did thereby steal the said proceeds" is not bad as charging two offences, and the reference to the fraudulent sale and fraudulent conversion are to be taken as descriptive of the means whereby the offence of stealing under a power of attorney was committed. "For some purpose other than that for which he was intrusted with such power of attorney"]—Unless a power of attorney contains express power to exercise it in favour of the attorney, the latter cannot exercise it in favour of himself. The presumption is against the validity of a transfer made under power of attorney to the agent himself, who is the donee of the power, and in equity such a transfer could not be upheld except by evidence of full disclosure, fair consideration and good faith on the part of the donee, the burden of proving which would be upon him. Re Land Registry Act and Shaw, 8 W.W.R. 1270, 22 B.C.R. 116, 32 W.L.R. 85, per Macdonald, C.J.A., citing Dunne v. English, L.R.

Principal may not retain benefit fraudulently obtained for him by agent]-

The principal will not be allowed to retain the benefit of a transaction fraudulently obtained by his agent within the general scope of his authority although the principal knew nothing of the fraud. Woolfson v. Oldfield, 1 W.W.R. 920, 22 Man. R. 170, 20 W.L.R. 484, 2 D.L.R. 110. affirming 22 Man. R. 159; Bowles v. Chatfield, 25 W.L.R. 32; Canadian Financiers v. When one of two innocent persons must suffer, the person who renders it possible for the wrongdoer to do the wrong, by reason of the trust he reposed in the wrongdoer, must suffer rather than the person who suffers from the agent having that opportunity. The person who, by trusting the agent, makes his fraud possible, is to suffer rather than the person who has no relation to the agent. The King v. C.P.R., 14 Can. Exch. R. 150, at 210, citing Bocklesby v. Temperance Permanent, [1895] A.C. 173; and Fry v. Smellie, [1912] 3 K.B. 295. The decision in 14 Can. Exch. CRIMINAL CODE (PART VII)

Theft by clerk.—Theft by cashier.—Theft by government employee. —Theft by municipal employee.

359. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to fourteen years' imprisonment who,--

- (a) being a clerk or servant, or being employed for the purpose or in the capacity of a clerk or servant, steals anything belonging to or in the possession of his master or employer; or,
- (b) being a cashier, assistant cashier, manager, officer, clerk or servant of any bank, or savings bank, steals any bond, obligation, bill obligatory or of credit, or other bill or note, or any security for money, or any money or effects of such bank, or lodged or deposited with any such bank; or,
- (c) being employed in the service of His Majesty, or of the Government of Canada or the government of any province of Canada, or of any municipality, steals anything in his possession by virtue of his employment.

Origin]-57-58 Vict., Can., ch. 57, sec. 1; Code of 1892, sec. 319; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 164, secs. 51-54, 59.

Clerk or servant or person employed for the purpose or in the capacity of a clerk or servant]—The test as to whether a person is a "'clerk or servant'' is: was he under the control of and bound to obey his alleged master? Hill v. Beckett [1915] 1 K.B. 582; R. v. Negus (1873), L.R. 2 C.C.R. 34, 42 L.J.M.C. 62, 28 L.T. 646, 12 Cox 492; Ferris v. Irwin, 10 U.C.C.P. 117; re Western Coal Co., 4 W.W.R. 1238, 7 Alta. Back [1906] 2 K.B. 746, 75 L.J.K.B. 1014; re Ontario Forge & Bolt Co., 27 Ont. R. 230.

Where the accused was employed by the prosecutor to solicit orders and collect moneys, for which he was paid by commission, being at liberty to get orders when and where he pleased, but to be exclusively in the employ of the prosecutor and to give his whole time to the prosecutor's service, it was held that he was the "servant" of the prosecutor. And a company secretary would be a servant of the company if he personally performed the duties of that position instead of delegating the work. Cairney v. Back [1906] 2 K.B. 746, 75 L.J.K.B. 1014.

A person employed by the prosecutors as their agent for the sale of coal on commission and to collect money in connection with his orders, but who was at liberty to dispose of his time as he thought best and to get or abstain from getting orders as he might choose was held not to be a "clerk" or "servant." R. v. Bowers (1866), L.R. 1 C.C.R. 41, 10 Cox C.C. 250.

Where the accused was a collector and accountant carrying on an independent business, and was employed by the prosecutors to collect certain accounts for them on commission, and he was to pay over the net proceeds as the collections were made, but time and mode of collecting were left to the discretion of the collector, it was held that he was not a ''elerk'' or ''servant'' of the prosecutors. R. v. Hall (1875), 13 Cox C.C. 49.

The accused, not having been in the employ of the prosecutor, was sent by him to one M. with a horse, as to which M. and the prosecutor, who owned the horse, had some negotiations, with an order to M. to give the bearer a cheque if the horse suited. Owing to a difference in the price the horse was not taken, and the accused brought it back. Shortly afterwards the accused, without any authority from the prosecutor, took the horse to M. and sold it as his own property or professing to have the right to dispose of it, and received the money. It was held the money was not received by the accused as clerk or servant of the prosecutor, and a conviction for embezzlement was set aside. R. v. Topple, 3 Russell & Ches. 566 (N.S.).

The relationship of servant or clerk, etc., is essential to this offence and should be proved by the prosecution with proper evidence. If the contract of hiring was in writing, and the writing is still in existence, it should be produced. R. v. Taylor (1867), 10 Cox C.C. 544. The prisoner's answer to the charge may be that by the terms of the hiring he was entitled to retain money received by him for the firm to be spent for the firm's purposes, and in that case it is essential that the written contract should be produced if the firm have it. R. v. Dobson, 33 L.J. (Eng.) 547.

A false account or false entries of the expenditure of money will afford evidence from which a jury may say that a clerk who had money entrusted to him by his master has been guilty of embezzling it, just as much as not accounting for money received from others for the master will, if the receipt of it or the like be denied, afford evidence from which to infer embezzlement. R. v. Cummings (1858), 16 U.C.Q.B. 15, 31; R. v. Glass (1877), Ramsay's Cases (Que.) 186, 1 L.N. 141 (Que.). It has, however, been held that a company manager is not a "clerk or other person in or having been in the employ of the company" within the meaning of the Winding-Up Act so as to have a preferential claim for his salary under that Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 144, sec. 70. Girard v. Gariépy, 49 Que, S.C. 284, 17 Que, P.R. 396; re Ritchie-Hearn Co., 6 O.W.R. 474; re Shirleys Limited (1916), 10 W.W.R. 919, 921, 9 Sask. L.R. 258, 34 W.L.R. 805; re American Tire Co., 2 O.W.R. 29; re Ontario Forge Co., 27 Ont. R. 230; White Star Hotel Co. v. Turgeon, 17 Que, P.R. 299; re Newspaper Proprietary Syndicate [1900] 2 Ch. 349; 69 L.J. Ch. 578. But under a statute giving a preference for wages or salary of "all persons in the employ" of the company, the manager would be entitled to claim the preference. Hives v. Imperial Canadian Trust Co. (1916), 10 W.W.R. 596, 9 Sask. L.R. 248, 34 W.L.R. 433.

Theft by municipal employee]—If the money were received by virtue of his employment, it would make no difference to this offence that the municipality was not the owner; R. v. Tessier (1900), 10 Que. Q.B. 45, 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 73; but the ownership should be alleged and proved. If a charge were laid in respect of money collected by a city official on the pretence that it was payable to the city when such was not the case, and he was not authorized to ask for it, it should, it seems, be laid as for obtaining money on false pretenses and not under see. 359, as the money would not have been received "by virtue of his employment." See R. v. Tessier, supra.

Joinder of counts for several thefts]-Code sees. 856, 857.

Evidence of similar criminal acts where issue of intent is raised]-Proof cannot be made of another crime committed by an accused in order to show that he is really capable, from his character, of committing that of which he is charged. Such proof would be unjust and illegal for it does not follow that having committed a crime under certain circumstances he would also have committed that of which he is charged. But there are exceptions to this rule. If by his plan of defence the accused wishes to throw upon another person the crime of which he is charged, if the irregularities charged against an accused are of the same nature as the principal act imputed to him, if they have been committed very nearly at the same time in the same place and to the detriment of the same person, these irregularities are so connected to the principal charge that they become incorporated with it and may legally be proved. Rivet v. The King (1915), 24 Que. K.B. 539, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 235; Thompson v. Director of Public Prosecutions (1918), 87 L.J.K.B. 478, affirming R. v. Thompson, 86 L.J.K.B. 1321; Makin v. Attorney-General of New South Wales [1891] A. C. 57, 63 L.J.P.C. 41; But it is so difficult to establish the true line of demarcation between legal and illegal evidence in these cases that it will be excluded in a case of doubt. Rivet v. The King (1915), 24 Que. K.B. 539.

PUNISHMENT OF THEFT

See also R. v. Geering, 18 L.J.M.C. 215; R. v. Hesson, 14 Cox C.C. 40; R. v. Sternaman, 27 Ont. R. 33, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 1; R. v. Wilks (1914), 10. Cr. App. R. 16; R. v. Boyle, 10 Cr. App. R. 180; R. v. Ellis [1910] 2 K.B. 746; R. v. Rhodes [1899] 1 Q.B. 77; R. v. Mason (1914), 10 Cr. App. R. 169; R. v. Komiensky, 12 Que. K.B. 463, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 27.

There is an essential difference between evidence tending to show generally that the accused has a fraudulent or dishonest mind, which evidence is not admissible, and evidence tending to show that he had a fraudulent or dishonest mind in the particular transaction, the subject matter of the charge being then investigated, which evidence is admissible. It has been laid down that to make such evidence admissible there must be a nexus or connection between the act charged and the facts relating to previous or subsequent transactions which it is sought to give evidence. R. v. Rhodes [1899] 1 Q.B. 77, per Lord Russell, C.J., and R. v. Ellis [1910] 2 K.B. 746. In the more recent case of R. τ . Mason (1914), 10 Cr. App. R. 169, the Court of Criminal Appeal (Eng.) followed the decision in R. v. Rhodes, and came to the conclusion that the evidence of similar transactions subsequent to the charge was admissible in order to rebut the defence set up. And see R. v. Boyle, 10 '/: App. R. 180, at 193.

Cross-examination as to prior convictions for any offence]—When the necused becomes a witness on his own behalf (Can. Evidence Ac', see. 4) he may be cross-examined as to whether he has been convicted of any offence (Can. Evidence Act, see. 12) even though the conviction is altogether irrelevant to the matter in issue, the inquiry being relevant as affecting the credibility of the accused. R. v. Mulvihill, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 354, 5 W.W.R. 1229, 19 B.C.R. 197, and see Mulvihill v. The King, 6 W.W.R. 462, 49 Can. S.C.R. 587, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 194. And in case of denial or refusal to answer, the conviction may be proved by the prosecution. Can. Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145, see. 12.

The limits of relevancy must be less tightly drawn upon cross-examination than upon direct examination. The introduction upon crossexamination of the issue of the witness's credibility necessarily enlarges the field. But it does not follow that all barriers are therefore thrown down. That which is clearly irrelevant to this issue or to the issues raised in the case is no more admissible in cross-examination than in examination in chief. Brownell v. Brownell (1909), 42 Can. S.C.R. 368, 374.

If in cross-examination the accused answers a question not relating to the issue nor to his credibility, the prosecution cannot raise a question of credibility by calling evidence to contradict such answer. R. v. Lapierre, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 413.

The principles of the laws of evidence are the same, whether applied at civil or criminal trials, but they are not enforced with the same rigidity against a person accused of a criminal offence as against a Statutory onus as to cattle brands]—When a person is charged with theft of cattle (or with an offence under paragraph (a) or paragraph (b) of sec. 392) respecting cattle, possession by such person or by others in his employ or on his behalf of such cattle bearing such a brand or mark of which the person charged is not the registered owner, shall throw upon the accused the burden of proving that such cattle came lawfully into his possession or into the possession of such others in his employ or on his behalf, unless it appears that such possession by others in his employ or on his behalf was without his knowledge and without his authority, sanction or approval.

Code sec. 989, as to cattle brands, is intended specially for the protection of cattle owners in ranching districts where cattle run at large, and to prevent the appropriation and re-branding of stray cattle by other ranchers. Where the evidence shows that the accused stockman appropriated and re-branded with his own brand a stray three-year-old steer on which appeared the brand of another rancher, and turned the stray steer into his own herd on his home range, there is such proof of possession of the animal as throws upon the accused the onus under Code sec. 989 of proving on a charge of stealing the steer that the same came into his possession lawfully. R. v. Dubois, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 485, 15 W.L.R. 238 (Alta.).

Cattle brands as evidence]-Code sec. 989.

Even prior to the statute now embodied in Code sec. 989 it was held that the production of a steer's hide with the prosecutor's brand and earmarks only upon it, and the evidence of the prosecutor that he had owned and had never parted with the steer from which the hide had come, justified a finding that the steer in question was the property of the prosecutor. R. v. Forsythe, 4 Terr. L.R. 398, 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 475; approved in Zeats v. Johnston (1910), 3 Sask. L.R. 364 (Sask.).

Where the prisoner was charged with the theft of certain cattle, the brands upon which had been obliterated, it was held that evidence that the brands upon other cattle had been similarly obliterated and that the prisoner had in his possession branding irons adapted to causing an obliteration of the character found, was admissible. R. v. Collyns. 3 Terr. L.R. 82, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 572.

Progeny of animals]-See note to Code sec. 392.

Theft of dogs, birds, beasts and other animals.

370. Every one who steals any dog, or any bird, beast or other animal ordinarily kept in a state of confinement or for any domestic purpose, or for any lawful purpose of profit or advantage, is, if the value of the property stolen exceeds twenty dollars, guilty of an indictable offence and liable to a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars over and above the value of the property stolen, or to two years' imprisonment, or to both, and if the value of the property stolen does not exceed twenty dollars, is guilty of an offence and liable upon summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding twenty dollars over and above such value, or to one month's imprisonment with hard labour.

2. Every one who, having been previously convicted of an offence under this section, is summarily convicted of another offence thereunder, is liable to three months' imprisonment with hard labour.

Origin]-Sec. 332, Code of 1892; 63-64 Vict., Can., ch. 46, sec. 3; Value as affecting jurisdiction]-For the offence of stealing domestic fowl, the limit of imprisonment is two years on indictment under Code sec. 370 if the value of the fowl is over $20 and one month's imprisonment on summary conviction if the value is less than $20; consequently a conviction under the Speedy Trials clauses with a sentence exceeding two years must be set aside as unauthorized either by the Code or at common law if the record does not disclose the value. Although at common law the theft was punishable with more than two years' imprisonment on indictment without regard to the value, Code sec. 370 has the effect of limiting the punishment where the value is over $20 to two years' imprisonment, and a greater punishment on indictment could only be supported, if at all, on its appearing that the value was less than $20 and, semble, in the latter case the court in passing sentence should have regard to the limit of imprisonment which might have been imposed on summary conviction. R. v. Williams, 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 482, 21 O.L.R. 467. The punishment for receiving a stolen domestic animal is similarly affected under Code sec. 401, R. v. Frizell, 5 O.W.N. 801, 25 O.W.R. 697, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 214.

Summary conviction if value does not exceed $20]-See sec. 729, as to paying the damages to person aggrieved in first offences.

379. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to fourteen years' imprisonment who steals any chattel, money or valuable security from the person of another.

Origin]—Code of 1892, sec. 344; B.S.C. (1886), ch. 164, sec. 32; 32-33 Vict., Can., ch. 21, sec. 39.

Theft from the person]-In an English case the prisoner put his hand into the prosecutor's pocket, got hold of his purse, and pulled it up to the edge of the pocket when the corner caught on a belt worn by the prosecutor. The prosecutor at that moment grasped the purse and put it back. Held, that the prisoner was guilty of simple larceny and not of larceny from the person. R. v. Taylor, 27 Times L.R. 108. The effect of sec. 347, sub-sec. (2) may be to make the decision inapplicable in Canada as it declares that theft is committed when the offender moves the thing or causes it to move or be moved, or begins to cause it to become movable, with intent to steal it. As theft generally may be laid in respect of a beginning to move the article with intent to steal, it would seem to follow that theft from the person is complete on the like beginning to move the article from the person. See, under the prior law, R. v. Hamilton, 8 C. & P. 49; R. v. Thompson, R. & M. 78; R. v. Simpson, 24 L.J.M.C. 7. Compare re Patrick White, 31 S.C.R. 383.

The plan of the Code eliminates the separate names "embezzlement" and "poeket-picking" by including both as theft. Where the offence is poeket-picking the common form of theft from the person, it will be found preferable in practice to charge it in the words of the Code. See Code see. 852; Code form 64. But an indictment stating the material ingredients of the offence in popular language is good. Code see. 852; R. v. Morgan (1901), 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 63 and 272, 3 O.L.R. 356.

The material ingredients of the offence must be proved. R. v. Winslow, 12 Man. R. 649, 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 215; R. v. Daley, 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 168.

Theft of less than $10 from the person]—The theory has been advanced in Ontario that "theft from the person," being the offence formerly known as "aggravated larceny," is not included in the term [§ 879]

"theft" as used in sec. 773 as to "summary trial" for theft not exceeding $10. R. v. Conlin, 29 Ont. R. 28.

The offences which can be tried under sec. 773 by a magistrate as defined by sec. 771, include theft where the value of the property does not in the judgment of the magistrate exceed $10. Sec. 773, sub-sec. (a). The punishment under sec. 773 is limited to six months' imprisonment under sec. 780. If theft, although from the person under sec. 379, is within sec. 773, then sec. 780 applies; otherwise the only power of summary trial would be by a magistrate having the extended jurisdiction of sec. 777. A magistrate of the latter class trying an offence not included in sec. 773 would be restricted as to the punishment to be imposed only by the maximum which might be awarded on an indictment. Code sec. 777. The Conlin case, supra, supported a conviction by a city magistrate having these extended powers and also empowered under sec. 773, where the conviction imposed more than the six months mentioned in sec. 780. As to the meaning of the word "theft" in sec. 773, the court was divided in opinion. That of Boyd, C., that it is a generic term, is submitted as preferable to that of Robertson, J., who appears to have been of opinion that "theft from the person" was a distinct offence not included in the word "theft" as there used, any more than would robbery be included. It may be said that while robbery includes theft, it is treated in the Code under a separate definition (Code sec. 445), and there is in it the added element of violence or threats; while "theft from the person" is not given a separate definition and is found mixed in with various other classes of theft which would be within sec. 773 if the value were under $10, and which make distinctions as to the place from which the theft was made. Can a magistrate qualified under sec. 777 by taking an election of summary trial (whether required or not under sec. 773), exercise his extended jurisdiction conferred by sec. 777 by trying an offence which he might try under sec. 773? The weight of authority appears to be in the negative, and to uphold the view that sec. 777 applies only to "other" cases than those already mentioned under sec. 773. The marginal note to see. 777 upholds this view, but see contra the Conlin case above mentioned. There is, however, a special jurisdiction conferred by subsec. (5) of sec. 777 upon magistrates of cities of over 25,000 for the offences mentioned in sub-sec. (a) of sec. 773; and that jurisdiction is absolute and not dependent upon the consent of the accused. Code amendment of 1909.

Restitution orders]-Code sec. 1050.

To entitle the aggrieved party to an order for the restitution to him of the money found on the prisoner convicted of stealing money from the person proof must be adduced identifying the money so found as the money which was stolen. "In any dwelling-house"]—A theft by the owner or occupier of the house is covered by this section. R. v. Bowden, 2 Mood. C.C. 285; R. v. Taylor, R. & R. 418. But goods which are under the protection of the person of the prosecutor at the time they are stolen are not within it. So where the prosecutor was induced by the trick of ring dropping to lay down his money upon a table and the defendant took it up and enrice it away, it was held not to be the offence of "stealing in a dwelling-house." R. v. Owen, 2 Leach 572. And where money was delivered to the defendant for a particular purpose by his procurement, and he forthwith ran away with it, it is not an offence under this section. R. v. Campbell, 2 East P.C. 644. But if a person on going to bed puts his clothes and money by his bedside they are under the protection of the dwelling-house and not of the person. R. v. Thomas, Car. Supp. 295; R. v. Hamilton, 8 C. & P. 49.

It is a question for the court and not for the jury whether goods are under the protection of the dwelling-house or in the personal care of the owner. R. v. Thomas, Car. Supp. 295. The section corresponds with sec. 60 of the Imperial Act, 24 and 25 Vict., c. 96, under which it is said that it is necessary that the goods should be under the protection of the house and be deposited in it for safe custody. Archbold Cr. Pl. (1900), 612. But property left at a house for a person supposed to reside there will be under the protection of the house, and the stealing of them will be stealing in a dwelling-house. R. v. Carroll, 1 Mood. C.C. 89.

" Property " defined]-Code sec. 2, sub-sec. (32).

Theft by false keys or picklocks]-If upon a summary trial for the theft of money from a locked box on a ship in port, effected by picking the lock, it is shown that the accused, one of the ship's seamen, had access in common with the other seamen to the place where the box was kept, that shortly before the theft was committed he had borrowed a small sum of money on the plea that he had none, that shortly after the stolen money was missed he had considerably more money on him, that he had meanwhile received nothing in respect of wages, that on the money being missed he suggested that he should not be suspected as he had borrowed money from another party named, which latter statement was shown to be untrue, such constitutes legal evidence to support a conviction. R. v. MacCaffery (1900), 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 193 (N.S.). If, however, the trial judge, in making his finding, bases the same upon the theory that, as a matter of law, it would be presumed that it was possible for him to show how he had come by the money seen in his possession and that the onus was upon him to do so, such is an error in law entitling the accused to a new trial. (b) steals any goods or merchandise from any dock, wharf or quay adjacent to any such haven, port_g river. canal, creek or basin.

Origin]-Sec. 349, Code of 1892; Larceny Act, 1861, Imp., sec. 63; 24 Geo. II, Imp., ch. 45.

Stealing in boats or from docks]—While theft is committed when the offender moves the thing or causes it to move or "begins to cause it to become movable" with intent to steal it (Code sec. 347) it is doubted whether there is theft "from" a dock unless the thing stolen is removed. See re Patrick White, 31 S.C.R. 383; same case below, R. v. White, 34 N.S.R. 436, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 430.

See also note to see. 379 as to theft from the person.

"Goods or merchandise"]—The words "goods, wares and merchandise" in a similar statute, 24 Geo. II, c. 45 (Imp.), were held to extend to such goods only as are usually lodged in vessels or on wharves and quays. R. v. Grimes, Fost. 79 (a), 2 East P.C. 647; R. v. Leigh, 1 Leach C.C. 52. A passenger's luggage is included. R. v. Wright, 7 C. & P. 159.

Stealing wreck.

383. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to seven years' imprisonment who steals any wreck.

Origin]—Sec. 350, Code of 1892; R.S.C. ch. 81, sec. 36 (c); Larceny Act, 1861, Imp., sec. 64.

"Wreck" defined]—Code sec. 2, sub-sec. (41). Second offences]—See secs. 465, 851, 963, 964, 982.

Stealing on railway.

384. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to fourteen years' imprisonment who steals anything in or from any railway station or building, or from any engine, tender or vehicle of any kind on any railway.

Origin]-Sec. 351, Code of 1892.

"In or from any railway station," etc.]—In R. v. White, 34 N.S.R. 436, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 430, a case brought up on habeas corpus, the accused had been convicted by a city magistrate of stealing " in or from " a railway building. Three of the judges of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia supported the conviction and held that the use of the phrase " in or from " did not invalidate the conviction. See Code see. 854. But two of the judges dissenting were of opinion that the conviction was bad as charging two crimes in the alternative. A further application to a judge of the Supreme Court of Canada was dismissed as his habeas corpus jurisdiction is concurrent only to that of a provincial court and not one of review thereof. Re Patrick White, 31 S.C.R. 383. CRIMINAL CODE (PART VII)

Stealing things deposited in Indian graves.

385. Every one who steals, or unlawfully injures or removes, any image, bones, article or thing deposited in or near any Indian grave, is guilty of an offence and liable, on summary conviction, for the first offence, to a penalty not exceeding one hundred dollars or to three months' imprisonment, and for a subsequent offence to the same penalty and to six months' imprisonment with hard labour.

Origin]—Sec. 352, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 164, sec. 12. Summary convictions when joint offenders]—Sec sec. 728. First offenders on summary conviction]—Sec Code sec. 729. Second offence]—Sec secs. 757, 982. Receiving]—Code sec. 401.

Stealing things not otherwise provided for .- Subsequent offence.

386. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to seven years' imprisonment who steals anything for the stealing of which no punishment is otherwise provided or commits in respect thereof any offence for which he is liable to the same punishment as if he had stolen the same.

2. The offender is liable to ten years' imprisonment if he has been previously convicted of theft.

Origin]-Sec. 356, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 164, secs. 5, 6, 85. Arrest without warrant if found committing]-See sec. 646 as amended, 8-9 Edw. VII, Can., ch. 9.

Search warrants]-Code secs. 629-631.

Trial of juvenile offender for theft]—See sec. 802 (Part XVII) and the Juvenile Delinquents Act, 1908, ch. 40 and amendments.

Summary trial under N.W.T. Act]-For special provisions as to summary trial, see N.W.T. Act, R.S.C., ch. 62, sec. 38.

Yukon Territory]—Summary trial for theft not exceeding $200.00. see the Yukon Act, R.S.C., ch. 63, sec. 65.

Summary trial for theft]-There are two classes of officials entitled to hold summary trial and a difference in their jurisdiction as regards offences and punishment.

Code sec. 773 (a) enables a magistrate as defined by sec. 771, to hold a summary trial for "theft where the value of the property does not, in the judgment of the magistrate, exceed $10.00." The punishment under the jurisdiction conferred by sec. 773 (a) is not to exceed six months' imprisonment (Code sec. 780), and the jurisdiction of the magistrate is absolute in the provinces of British Columbia, Prince Edward Island, Saskatchewan and Alberta and also in the North-West Territories and the Yukon. Code sec. 776.

A conviction for theft not exceeding $10.00 made under Code sec. 773, should show the value as determined by the magistrate. R. v. Taylor (1914), 5 W.W.R. 1105, 7 Alta. L.R. 72, 26 W.L.R. 652, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 234.

If the value is over $10.00 the magistrate of the class mentioned in sec. 771 may not try the case on a plea of not guilty, but may accept a plea of guilty along with an election of summary trial and impose punishment as upon an indictment. Code secs. 782, 783. R. v. Williams, 11 B.C.R. 351, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 330.

The other class of magistrates are city police magistrates and certain others given an extended jurisdiction to try cases which in Ontario would be within the jurisdiction of the court of sessions (Code sec. 777) and which were not otherwise under their jurisdiction under sec. 773 because of their qualification under that section. R. v. Davidson (No. 2) [1917] 2 W.W.R. 718, 11 Alta. L.R. 491, 28 Can. Cr. Cas. 56; R. v. Hayward, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 399, 5 O.L.R. 65; Ex parte McDonald, 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 368 (N.B.).

The magistrate having the extended jurisdiction of sec. 777 is enabled to try inter alia, cases of theft not coming within sec. 773, but only where the accused elects summary trial in conformity with the mode of election laid down in sec. 778, except in the special cases for which sec. 777, sub-sec. (5) provides where the jurisdiction is absolute if the value is not over $10 and the magistrate is the police magistrate of a city with a population of over 25,000.

So on a trial in Alberta, British Columbia, Saskatchewan or Prince Edward Island, another magistrate although empowered under sec. 777 to try offences of the class for which an offender might be tried in Ontario at the sessions, may proceed with a trial of theft where the information declares the value under $10.00 without asking the consent of the accused, but if it developed in the evidence that the value was over $10.00, his absolute jurisdiction to try without consent under sec. 776 would be gone. To obviate this he may take the election of the accused so that, with the consent of the accused, he may dispose of the case in any event. Sec. 776 does not prohibit the asking of the consent on a charge of theft as does sec. 774 in a disorderly house case. And if the accused pleads not guilty and elects summary trial on a charge of theft, and the magistrate finds the value to be over $10.00, the same punishment may be imposed as upon an indictment. R. v. Bowers, 34 N.S.R. 550, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 264.

The reason generally assigned for the exclusion from sec. 777 of cases which are within sec. 773, is that the marginal note to sec. 777 and which was included in the original statute enacting it read as follows: "Summary trial in certain other cases," but this marginal note was eliminated in some of the amendments made by repeal of the Speedy trial before a county judge without a jury]—Code sees. 822-842 (Part XVIII); Code forms 60, 61; George v. The King, 35 S.C.R. 376, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 401, affirming 35 N.S.R. 42.

Procedure on trial of indictment]-Code sec. 940, et seq.

Court of sessions in Ontario]—It shall not be necessary for any court of general sessions in the province of Ontario to deliver the gaol of all prisoners who are confined upon charges of theft, but the court may leave any such cases to be tried at the next court of oyer and terminer and general gaol delivery, if, by reason of the difficulty or importance of the case, or for any other cause, it appears to it proper so to do. Code sec. 601.

Motion to quash indictment]—Before the defendant has pleaded he may move to quash the indictment, but not afterwards, except by leave of the court, for a defect apparent on the face of it. Code sec. 898. The court may order the defect remedied and proceed with the trial as if no such defect had appeared. Code sec. 898. If the defendant demurs to the indictment for a defect which may be remedied, the court may in like manner amend it. Code sec. 898.

A charge brought for theft on an election of speedy trial without a jury is sufficient, if it follows Code forms 60 and 61; and it need not specifically allege the taking as fraudulent and without colour of right (Code sec. 347), if it charges that the accused "unlawfully did steal," etc. George v. The King (1904), 35 S.C.R. 376, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 401, affirming 35 N.S.R. 42, 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 469.

An indictment for theft of money which discloses the date of the offence, the name of the person from whom taken and the amount, if sufficient to enable the accused to defend, is not bad for lack of stating further details of the mode in which the alleged offence was committed. R. v. Lemelin, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 109.

Plea of autrefois convict]—If the former conviction relied upon in support of this plea was made by justices having no jurisdiction to try the charge, the plea fails. R. v. Taylor, 5 W.W.R. 1105, 26 W.L.R. 652, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 234.

Several connected takings treated as one theft]—A series of defalcations by an employee entrusted with money may be treated as one theft. Minchin v. The King, 23 Cau. Cr. Cas. 414, affirming R. v. Minchin (1913), 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 254, 7 Alta. L.R. 148, 26 W.L.R. 633.

The theft is a single one on the taking of a packet containing post letters and large sums of money. Rex v. Birdseye, 4 C. & P. 386, and separate charges are not justified as to the various letters contained in the packet. R. v. Pope (1914), 5 W.W.R. 1070, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 327, 15 D.L.R. 664, 7 Alta. Trial together of separate theft charges against same person]-By sec. 857 of the Code the court may direct that the accused be tried "upon any one or more of such counts separately." Then comes the proviso in sec. 857, which is in effect that the court shall not, except there be special reasons to the contrary, prevent the trial at the same time of distinct charges of theft, not exceeding three in number, which have been committed within six months from first to last, whether against the same person or not. The effect of secs. 856 and 857 is, in so far as theft is concerned, that any number of charges of theft against an accused person may be tried together, unless the court makes an order to the contrary; but if the court does make an order for the trial of the charges separately, the order is not to prevent, unless there be special reasons, three or less than three distinct charges from being tried together where the offences have been committed within six months from the first to the last offence. By the English Act the election in such case by the prosecutor is imperative. By our Code the question whether the accused shall be tried on one or more counts separately shall be decided by the trial judge. R. v. Kelly [1917] 1 W.W.R. 46, 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 140, 27 Man. R. 105, per Perdue, J.A., and see same case in appeal, Kelly v. The King [1917] 1 W.W.R. 463, 54 S.C.R. 220.

Sub-sec. (2)—Second offence of the ft]—When a prisoner is convicted, on a summary trial before a police magistrate, of the ft, he cannot be sentenced under sub-sec. 2 of sec. 386 of the Criminal Code, to more than seven years' imprisonment, although he has been previously convicted of the ft, unless such previous conviction has been charged in the information by analogy to sec. 851 and proved in accordance with sec. 963, and, where in such a case a greater punishment is inflicted, the Court of Appeal, upon an application under sub-sec. 2 of sec. 1016 of the Code, will set aside the sentence and pass what it considers a proper sentence. R. v. Edwards, 17 Man. R. 288, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 202.

Sec. 465 also in Part VII provides that every one who, after a previous conviction for "any indictable offence, specified in this Part" for which the punishment on a first conviction is less than 14 years' imprisonment, is liable to 14 years' imprisonment. Sub-sec. (2) of sec. 386 would supersede sec. 465 as regards a previous conviction of "theft," but quaere as to its operation if the former conviction were for some other offence.

See as to prior convictions generally, secs. 757, 851, 963, 964, 982, 1053, 1081.

Instructing the jury on a theft charge]—On a charge of theft, when the facts are compatible with an honest mistake on the defendant's part, there should be a direction on intent to steal. R. v. Sturgess, 9 Cr. App. R. 120. Where defendant has sold some of the goods alleged to be stolen by him, it may be necessary to direct the jury whether he intended to account to the owners for the proceeds. R. v. Sturgess, 9 Cr. App. R. 120.

Where the trial judge, in his charge to the jury, called attention to the fact that the prisoner charged with theft was not called to testify on his own behalf, and warned the jury that they were not to take that fact to his prejudice, but stated that if the accused were innovent he could have proved that he was not in the locality at the time, this is a prohibited "comment" within the meaning of sec. 4 of the Canada Evidence Act, entitling the accused to a new trial. R. v. McGuire, 36 N.B.R. 609, 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 554.

Retaining goods sent on the faith of a promise to pay for them on delivery may amount to theft by a trick. R. v. Edmundson (1912), 8 Cr. App. R. 107; R. v. Slowly (1873), 12 Cox C.C. 269, 27 L.T. 803. When an issue at the trial is the identity of certain goods with those alleged to have been stolen, it is a grave misdirection to allow the jury to assume such identity. R. v. Hill (1912), 7 Cr. App. R. 250. Where on the trial of a charge of theft the only evidence against the defendant is that of the person who receives the stolen property, and there is a suspicion that he knew that the property was stolen, his evidence must not be left to the jury as that of an untainted witness, but they should be warned that if they think that he was an accomplice there ought to be corroboration of his story. R. v. Jennings (1912), 7 Cr. App. R. 242.

The owner of goods is entitled to resort to the criminal law for their recovery, when stolen, and his desire to recover his property does not deprive him of protection in an action for malicious prosecution if the circumstances justify the prosecution. Truesdell v. Holden (1913), 4 O.W.N. 1138.

Where the defence is that property alleged to be stolen has been abandoned, there should be a specific direction to the jury on this point. R. v. White (1912), 7 Cr. App. R. 266.

Restitution of stolen property]-See secs. 1050, 795 (on summary trial).

Compensation out of money found on convict]-See sec. 1049.

Review of conviction]—If two justices hold a summary trial for a theft under $10 (Code see. 773, sub-see. (a)), the limited right of appeal conferred by sec. 797 applies and an appeal on both law and facts with a rehearing of evidence is available to the accused, the procedure being the same as on an appeal from a summary conviction. Code sees. 797, 749-760. Possibly a stated case might be taken on a point of law only under sec. 761, as an alternative mode of appeal. But if the same charge were tried by a single individual authorized in the terms of sec. 771 to do alone such acts as are usually required to be done by two or more justices, there would be no appeal under sec. 797 on a conviction for theft under $10. R. v. Merker and Daniels, 37 O.I.R. 582, 10 O.W.N. 452, 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 113; R. v. Dubue, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 426;

If the summary trial is for theft over $10 and the trial consequently has been under sec. 777 before a magistrate with extended jurisdiction, an appeal from the judgment may be taken by the person convicted to the Court of Appeal under Code secs. 1013 and 1014 by a reserved case, upon points of law only, and if the magistrate refuses a reserved case the Court of Appeal may grant leave to appeal and direct that a case be stated by the magistrate. The disposal of the appeal is subject to secs. 1018 and 1019, and under the latter section a conviction is not to be set aside unless there was some substantial wrong or miscarriage at the trial. R. v. Menard, 2 O.W.R. 900, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 80; Allen v. The King, 44 S.C.R. 331, 18 Can. Cr. Cas. 1. R. v. Letain [1918] 1 W.W.R. 505, 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 389 (Man.); R. v Kleparczuk [1918] 1 W.W.R. 695, 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 336 (Alta.); R. v. Hyder (1917), 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 172.

The Court of Appeal will affirm the conviction if supported by sufficient legal evidence although the court may consider that the jury might better have acquitted because of the unsatisfactory nature of the testimony. R. v. Edmunds (1914), 28 W.L.R. 965, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 77 (Alta.). If the conviction is upon indictment, or upon a formal charge taking the place of an indictment in Alberta or Saskatchewan, the procedure applicable is that of by reserved case or leave to appeal on points of law. Code sees. 1013 et seq.

Where an objection that there was no evidence to go to the jury is taken by counsel unsuccessfully, and he then calls evidence, the court on appeal is not bound to disregard the effect of that evidence and may see whether any evidence of theft was elicited after the close of the case for the prosecution. R. v. Fraser (1911), 7 Cr. App. R. 101.

Extradition]—Theft, under the name of larceny, is an extraditable offence between Canada and the U.S.A. See re Deering (1915), 24 Can Cr. Cas. 133, 49 N.S.R. 41.

Value of things stolen over $200.-Penalty may be heavier.

387. If the value of any thing stolen, or in respect of which any offence is committed for which the offender is liable to the same punishment as if he had stolen it, exceeds the sum of two hundred dollars the offender is liable to two years' imprisonment, in addition to any punishment to which he is otherwise liable for such offence.

Origin]—Sec. 357, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 164, sec. 86. Indictment or charge to state the value]—See note to sec. 388.

Arrest without warrant if found committing]—See sec. 646 as amended 8-9 Edw. VII, Can., ch. 9.

Value of valuable security]-See Code sec. 4.

Theft of goods in process of manufacture.

388. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to five years' imprisonment who steals, to the value of two dollars, any woollen, linen, hempen or cotton yarn, or any goods or articles of silk, woollen, linen, cotton, alpaca or mohair, or of any one or more of such materials mixed with each other or mixed with any other material, while laid, placed or exposed, during any stage, process or progress of manufacture, in any building, field or other place.

Origin]-Sec. 347, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 146, sec. 47.

"To the value of $2"]—Where a certain value is essential to give jurisdiction or to constitute the offence, the information or indictment on which the accused is to be tried should specify the value, otherwise it is subject to be quashed. B. v. Beckwith, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 450; R. v. France, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 321 (Que.).

A formal defect or an imperfect averment in an indictment or in a count may be corrected by the court when an objection is raised, but matters of substance cannot be amended, and essential allegations which have been entirely omitted cannot be added by the court. R. v. Weir, 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 503. So, on a charge for stealing goods in process of manufacture, it seems that the information should show whether the value is above or below $2 in order to determine whether the offence comes within sec. 388 or under sec. 386, the latter applying only where no punishment is otherwise provided although the maximum term of imprisonment is greater than under sec. 388. So also if sec. 387 is to be invoked because of the value exceeding $200, this should appear in the information or indictment. R. v. Leelerc, 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 242 (Que.).

Stage, process or progress of manufacture]-Goods may be within this section though the texture is complete if they have not yet been brought into saleable condition. R. v. Woodhead, 1 M. & Rob. 549.

(c) without the consent of the owner, fraudulently, wholly or partially obliterates, or alters or defaces, or causes or procures to be obliterated, altered or defaced, any brand or mark on any cattle, or makes or causes or procures to be made any false or counterfeit brand or mark on any cattle.

Origin]-1 Edw. VII, Can., ch. 42, sec. 2.

Fraudulent retention of cattle found astray]—As to the statutory onus being shifted if the cattle found in possession have another's brand, see sec. 989, sub-sec. (2).

There can, of course, be no fraudulent taking or retention, if the act can be justified under either federal or provincial law. There may be a right of distress damage feasant which under the English system of law would justify the retention of the cattle if distrained at the time the damage was done. Carmichael v. Feltoe, 9 W.L.R. 15 (B.C.). Various provincial statutes confer a right to impound stray cattle. See Campbell v. Halvorsen [1918] 1 W.W.R. 462 (Sask.); R. (ex rel. Roberts) v. Bell (1913), 3 W.W.R. 759 (Alta.); Kennedy v. Grose, 7 W.W.R. 74, 7 Sask. L.R. 104, 29 W.L.R. 364; Fodge v. Parsenan [1918] 1 W.W.R. 25.

Fraudulently defacing a cattle brand]—See sec. 989 as to registered cattle brand being prima facie evidence that the branded cattle are the property of the registered owner of the brand.

Where cattle stealing is charged]—Special provision has been made by sec. 953 for convicting under sec. 392 where the evidence establishes an offence under 392, but does not establish a theft under sec. 369.

Second offences]—See secs. 465, 757, 851, 963, 964, 982. Stealing cattle]—Code sec. 369.

Progeny of cattle]—At common law the progeny of cattle belong to the owner of the dam; Temple v. Nicholson, Cass. S.C. Dig. 114, Cont. S.C. Dig. 240, on appeal from 4 P. & B. 246 (N.B.); at least so long as the progeny are being nurtured by the dam. Wallace v. Scott, 5 W.L.R. 341, 344 (Man.); Case Threshing Machine Co. v. Gouley (1914), 7 W.W.R. 584 (Sask.); Dillares v. Doyle, 43 U.C.Q.B. 442, 444 (Ont.). The cases on the point have arisen principally in respect of colts (which are within the statutory definition of cattle), Code see. 2, sub-sec. (5). It has been held that a mare's foal dropped after default under a chattel mortgage of the mare, belonged to the chattel mortgagee as against an execution creditor of the mortgagor, for the chattel mort Nicholson, supra; a fortiors, if the mortgage had expressly mentioned the future progeny. Case Threshing Machine Co. v. Gouley (1914), 7 W.W.B. S54 (Sask.). After the foal has left its dam it would seem that neither a chattel mortgage nor a lien note in respect of the dam given before the foal was dropped, would include the foal unless the document contained an express clause including it by anticipation; Johnson v. Cole (1914), 7 W.W.R. 593, 30 W.L.R. 290; Case Threshing Machine v. Gouley (1914), 7 W.W.R. 584, 29 W.L.R. 811.

And, in the event of the document expressly including by anticipation the future progeny of the animal, it would seem that after leaving the dam, a claim of a chattel mortgagee to progeny of which possession had not been taken by him before the progeny left the dam, might be held to be an equitable right only and subject to being displaced as in the case of a mortgage of after-acquired property by a disposal made by the mortgagor to a purchaser without notice. And in any case the civil right of ownership would be subject to the provincial laws and its requirements as to registration of documents affecting the right of property in chattels.

As to bills of sale and chattel mortgages generally, see 1 C.E.D. 397.

Unlawfully injuring pigeons.

393. Every one who unlawfully and wilfully kills, wounds or takes any house-dove or pigeon, under such circumstances as do not amount to theft, is guilty of an offence and liable, upon complaint of the owner thereof, on summary conviction, to a penalty not exceeding ten dollars over and above the value of the bird.

Origin]-Code of 1892, sec. 333; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 164, sec. 10. Theft of pigeons]-Code sec. 345, 347, 350.

Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to fourteen years' imprisonment, who receives or retains in his possession anything obtained by any offence punishable on indictment, or by any acts wheresoever committed, which, if committed in Canada would have constituted an offence punishable upon indictment, knowing such thing to have been so obtained.

When the amendment was made of the definition of receiving (see sec. 402), it was to meet the case of the receiver receiving the stolen property innocently, but afterwards retaining it guiltily. R. v. Carmichael, supra; R. v. Lum Man Bow and Hong (1910), 15 B.C.R. 22; R. v. Theriault (1904), 11 B.C.R. 117; R. v. Hodge, 12 Man. R. 319; R. v. If the property in the thing which had been unlawfully obtained has passed from the owner to someone else, the subsequent receiving is excepted from the operation of sees. 399, 400 and 401 by Code see. 403. So also if the thing unlawfully obtained has been restored to the owner, the subsequent receiving is not an offence although the receiver unay know that the thing had been "previously unlawfully obtained." Code see. 403.

Stating the offence]—An information as well as a conviction for receiving is bad if it does not contain an allegation that the goods had been stolen, or obtained by means of some indictable offence, as the case may be. R. v. Watchman (1914), 7 W.W.R. 880, 7 Sask. L.R. 350, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 362, 30 W.L.R. 534; R. v. Leschinki, infra; R. v. Lamoreaux, supra.

"Knowing such thing to have been so obtained "—Recent possession] —An information does not disclose the criminal offence of receiving unless it charges that the accused knew the goods to have been stolen (or otherwise obtained by a criminal offence); scienter is of the essence of the offence of receiving. R. v. Leschinski, 9 W.L.R. 602, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 199; R. v. Lamoreaux, 10 Que. Q.B. 15, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 101. The offence is not included as a lesser offence of the crime of housebreaking and theft, and where the latter is charged a verdict on that count for the offence of receiving is not good. R. v. Lamoreaux, supra. Purchase at a gross under-value from a non-trader in such articles puts the purchaser on inquiry as to their ownership. Klein v. Katz (1914), 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 153, 21 Rev. Leg. 275 (Que.); Desaulniers v. Hird, 15 Que. K.B. 394. The circumstances of the receiving may prove guilty knowledge. R. v. Sbarra, (1918) 87 L.J.K.B. 1003.

→ On a charge against a person of being in possession of recently stolen property, well knowing it to have been stolen, when the prosecution have proved recent possession of stolen goods, then in the absence of any explanation which may reasonably be true the jury may find the prisoner guilty but are not bound to do so.⁵ If an explanation is given and the jury think that it may reasonably be true, although they are not convinced that it is true, the prisoner is entitled to be acquitted, inasmuch as the onus is on the prosecution to establish the guilt of the prisoner beyond reasonable doubt. Rex v. Schama and Rex v. Abramovitch, 84 L.J.K.B. 396, 11 Cr. App. R. 45; R. v. Lum Man Bow, 15 B.C.R. 22, 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 274; Desaulniers v. Hird, 15 Que. K.B. 394; R. v. Evidence that one of the persons jointly in possession, although not shown to have been aware of the theft when possession was obtained, had, on becoming aware of the fact, taken steps to prevent the police [§ 399] from discovering them, will be material to show unlawful retention. R. v. Pritchard, 9 Cr. App. R. 210 [1913] W.N. 338; Code secs. 69, 402.

Two persons are together, one carrying a bag containing stolen goods. If that one were shown to be the thief, it would not be enough to convict the other as a receiver that he was afterwards with the thief on the street when the latter was carrying the stolen goods, although he was seen to put up his hand as if to take the bag, but his companion refused to let him have it. There would in such case have been no possession by the alleged receiver as opposed to possession by the thief. But where both were charged with receiving, there being no evidence as to who stole the goods, it would be proper to leave such evidence to the jury against both, as the possession of a receiver may be actual or constructive. R. v. Newton (1912), 7 Cr. App. R. 214.

An agent or servant holding possession for his principal or master is subject to the same rule as to recent possession. R. v. Gordon (1909), 2 Cr. App. R. 52.

When proceedings are taken against any person for having received goods knowing them to be stolen, or for having in his possession stolen property, evidence may be given at any stage of the proceedings, that there was found in the possession of such person other property stolen within the preceding period of twelve months, and such evidence may be taken into consideration for the purpose of proving that such person knew the property which forms the subject of the proceedings taken against him to be stolen if not less than three days' notice in writing has been given to the person accused that proof is intended to be given of such other property, stolen within the preceding period of twelve months, having been found in his possession. Code sec. 993. Such notice shall specify the nature or description of such other property, and the person from whom the same was stolen. Code sec. 993 (2).

That provision does not apply to admit proof in respect of other property stolen within the twelve months and disposed of by the prisoner; it must be found in his possession at the time when he was found in possession of the property in respect of which the charge is laid. R. v. Carter (1884), 12 Q.B.D. 522; R. v. Drage (1878), 14 Cox 85. Apart from the provisions of see. 993, other instances of receiving similar goods which had been stolen from the same party may be proved. R. v. Dunn (1826), 1 Mood. C.C. 146; R. v. Davis (1833), 6 C. & P. 177; R. v. Nicholls (1858), 1 F. & F. 51.

If evidence has been given that the stolen property has been found in his possession, then if such person has, within five years immediately preceding, been convicted of any offence involving fraud or dishonesty, evidence of such previous conviction may be given at any stage of the proceedings, and may be taken into consideration for the purpose of proving that the person accused knew the property which was proved to be in his possession to have been stolen, if not less than three days' notice in writing has been given to the person accused that proof is in Di in

It is not necessary, for the purposes of sec. 994, to charge in the indictment the previous conviction of the person so accused. Code sec. 994, sub-sec. (2).

Recklessness and carlessness are not sufficient to constitute guilty knowledge that property has been stolen. Rex v. Havard, 11 Cr. App, R. 2.

Where it is plain that the prisoner denies any guilty knowledge, but admits receiving the goods, his plea of guilty associated with such denial should not be accepted as he may have thought he would be held guilty apart from guilty knowledge. R. v. Ingleson [1915] 1 K.B. 512.

Proving the goods to have been stolen or obtained by indictable offence]—There must be proof against the receiver that the goods were stolen. R. v. Watchman (1914), 7 W.W.R. 880, 7 Sask. L.R. 350, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 362, 30 W.L.R. 534; McIntosh v. The Queen (1894), 23 SC.R. 180; R. v. Densley (1834), 6 C. & P. 399; R. v. Deer, 1 L. & C. 240. The circumstances of the receiving may prove it. R. v. Sbarra, (1918) 87 L.J.K.B. 1003.

On a trial for receiving the point that there is no proof that the goods have been stolen ought to be distinctly taken at the trial. R. v. Barker, 11 Cr. App. R. 191.

It is sufficient that the prosecution has proved that the property was in fact stolen and that the receiver knew it, it is not essential to prove by whom the theft was committed. R. v. Groulx (1908), 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 20 (Que.).

There may be a verdict of receiving money stolen "by a person unknown," although the indictment charges receiving money stolen by a person named. R. v. Groulx, 18 Que. K.B. 118, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 20 (Que.).

The record of conviction of the principal is presumptive evidence only against the receiver that the goods were stolen, and he may controvert the fact. R. v. Dunn, 4 C. & P. 377; R. v. Smith, 1 Leach 288; McIntosh v. The Queen (1894), 23 S.C.R. 180. The conviction is presumptive evidence that everything in the former proceeding was rightly and properly transacted. McIntosh v. The Queen, 23 S.C.R. 180, 189.

On a joint indictment of two persons, the one for the theft and the other for receiving, if the first pleads guilty to the theft, the court may require other evidence as against the receiver to prove the fact of the goods having been stolen; R. v. Turner, 1 Lewin C.C. 119; which may be supplied by calling as a witness the co-defendant convicted on his own plea. See Can. Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145, sees. 3 and 4, and R. v. Connors (1893), 3 Que, Q.B. 100, 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 70.

The evidence of the thief was admissible against the receiver even before the Canada Evidence Act; R. v. Haslam, 2 Leach C.C. 467, subject, however, to proper directions being given to the jury as to its weight if uncorroborated, it being the evidence of an accomplice. R. v. Robinson (1864), 4 F. & F. 43. The confession of the thief is not evidence against the receiver unless made in the presence of and concurred in by the latter. R. v. Cox (1858), 1 F. & F. 90; R. v. Turner (1832), 1 Mood. 347.

[§ 899]

Instructions to jury in cases of receiving]—Where a prisoner is charged with receiving stolen goods, the jury should be directed that, to justify a verdict of "guilty," they must be satisfied that the goods have been in the possession and under the control of the prisoner; Reg. v. Wiley (1850), 2 Den. C.C. 37; R. v. Berger, 84 L.J.K.B. 541, 11 Cr. App. R. 72, or that he aided in concealing or disposing of the goods. Code see, 402. The possession requisite may be either an exclusive or a joint possession with the thief or with another person. Code see, 402. The true test of receipt of the goods is control over them. R. v. Smith (1855), Dears. C.C. 494; Rex v. Gleed, 12 Cr. App. R. 32.

The jury should be directed clearly to the question of the identity of the goods found with those stolen. Rex v. Smith, 11 Cr. App. R. 19. The question whether defendant was in possession is for the jury and not for the judge. R. v. Leary (1913), 9 Cr. App. R. 85.

If there is evidence that it was found in defendant's possession, the jury must be carefully directed on the question whether he had any knowledge where it was. R. v. Higginbotham (1912), 8 Cr. App. R. 79.

The evidence of possession by the accused must be clear. R. v. Foreman, 9 Cr. App. R. 216.

The fact that the accused had been the tenant of the house to which the stolen property was brought and was under notice to quit but had already removed, may not be sufficient to raise any presumption against him, although one of the other parties concerned in the theft was his traveller and the other his lodger, where there was no proof that he had been in the house since the date of his removal prior to the robbery. R. v. Batty (1912), 7 Cr. App. R. 286.

When stolen goods are found in part of a house sub-let by the occupier, the alleged possession of the occupier must be strictly proved. R. v. Holmes, 11 Cr. App. R. 130.

The fact that stolen goods are bought at an undervalue is not conclusive proof of guilty knowledge; it should be left with the other facts to the jury. Rex v. Holmes, 11 Cr. App. R. 130.

Upon the trial of an indictment for receiving the onus always remains upon the prosecution. The judge, in directing the jury, should tell them that, upon the prosecution establishing that the person charged was in possession of goods recently stolen, they might, in the absence of any explanation by the accused of the way in which the goods came into his possession, which might reasonably be true, convict the prisoner. R. v. Schama, 84 L.J.K.B. 396, 11 Cr. App. R. 45; R. v. Lum Man Bow, 15 B.C.R. 22, 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 274; Desaulvièrs v. Hird, 15 Que, K.B.

394; R. v. Langmead, 9 Cox C.C. 464; R. v. Theriault (1904), 11 B.C.R. 117, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 460; but that, if an explanation were given which the jury thought might reasonably be true, although they were not convinced of its truth, the prisoner was entitled to be acquitted, inasmuch as the Crown would have failed to discharge the duty cast upon it of satisfying the jury beyond reasonable doubt of the guilt of the accused. Rex v. Schama, and Rex v. Abramovitch, 84 L.J.K.B. 396, 11 Cr. App. R. 45; R. v. Aubrey, 11 Cr. App. R. 182; R. v. Badash, (1918) 87 L.J.K.B. 732; R. v. Hamilton, (1918) 87 L.J.K.B. 734.

The jury should be expressly asked to consider whether the defendant's explanation of his possession of the goods soon after the theft of them is reasonable or not. R. v. Hampson, 11 Cr. App. R. 75.

An attempt to evade arrest should not be unduly insisted upon as evidence of guilt. R. v. Hampson, 11 Cr. App. R. 75.

The trifling value of the chattel in question may be relevant to the accused's explanation. Rex v. Millington, 11 Cr. App. R. 86.

On a joint indictment of husband and wife for receiving stolen property the evidence of the guilty knowledge of each defendant must be carefully distinguished in the summing up. R. v. Pritchard (1913), 9 Cr. App. R. 210; R. v. Dring (1857), 7 Cox C.C. 382, Dears. & B. 329.

If the court hearing an appeal thinks there was evidence from which the jury might infer guilty possession, it will not quash a conviction, though there was not (as there should have been) a direction on the point to the jury. R. v. McQueen (1912), 8 Cr. App. R. 89; Code sec. 1019.

When the accused is tried upon two indictments by the same jury, care should be taken in directing them that the latter charge is not affected by the former. Rex v. Brereton, 10 Cr. App. R. 201. Where the case was a simple one of receiving stolen goods and turned wholly on the facts which were such that the jury could not have found otherwise than a verdict of guilty, it is not error that the trial judge omitted with the jury's consent to sum up the case. R. v. Newman (1913), 9 Cr. App. R. 134.

Aiding in concealing or disposing of the goods]—Sec. 402 provides, inter alia, that the act of receiving anything unlawfully obtained is complete as soon as the offender aids in concealing or disposing of it. This enlarges the scope of sec. 399 so as to include such cases. For this reason, the case of R. v. Watson [1916] 2 K.B. 385, 12 Cr. App. R. 62, 85 L.J.K.B. 1142, does not apply.

Subsequent receiving by the thief]—There may be circumstances under which an accused may in respect of the same act properly be charged by different counts in one indictment both for theft and for receiving what in the other count he is alleged to have stolen. R. v. Kelly [1917] 1 W.W.R. 46 (Man.), but where only one offence has been committed he should be punished for one only, although found guilty on both counts. Kelly v. Can. Cr. Cas. 282, 54 S.C.R. 220, (in which the lesser offence was selected as the basis of punishment).

It is only a receiving which is an act done in the commission of the principal offence that cannot be treated as a separate offence of unlawfully receiving money or goods which have been stolen. R. v. Hodge, 12 Man. R. 319; R. v. Kelly, 10 W.W.R. 1345 at 1353. But notwithstanding convictions for both offences it would seem that if they were involved in one continuous series of transactions, the penalty to be imposed would be restricted to that applicable to one offence. R. v. Kelly [1917] 1 W.W.R. 46, 27 Man. R. 105, 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 94; Kelly v. The King [1917] 1 W.W.R. 463, 54 S.C.R. 220, 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 282, eiting R. v. Norman [1915] 1 K.B. 341, and R. v. Joint or separate trials of receivers]—Receivers at different times or of different portions of the stolen property may be tried together. See. 849. The receiver may also be indicted along with the thief; or may be charged separately whether or not the thief has been indicted or is amenable to justice. Sec. 849. But separate trials may be ordered as to separate counts. Secs. 856-858.

On a joint indictment for receiving stolen property, the evidence of the guilty knowledge of each defendant must be carefully distinguished in the summing-up. R. v. Pritchard, 9 Cr. App. R. 210, [1913] W.N. 338; R. v. Dring (1857), Dears. & B. 329.

An unlawful receiving by both may appear from a preconcerted arrangement between them which would make the one a party to the acts of the other in his absence. R. v. Pritchard, supra; Code sec. 69.

400. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to five years' imprisonment who receives or retains in his possession, any post letter or post letter bag, or any chattel, money or valuable security, parcel or other thing, the stealing whereof is hereby declared to be an indictable offence, knowing the same to have been stolen.

Origin]-Sec. 315, Code of 1892; the Post Office Act, R.S.C. 1886, ch. 35, sec. 84.

"Any chattel," etc.]—This section is taken from the "Post Office Act" and the opinion is submitted that the words "any chattel, etc., the stealing whereof is hereby declared to be an indictable offence," have reference only to the postal offences now dealt with by the Code.

The use of the word "hereby" has resulted from a transposition of an entire clause from the Post Office Act, R.S.C. 1886, ch. 35, sec. 84, a reference to which was subjoined to the corresponding section of the original Code of which the present Code is a revision only. See Code of 1892, 55-56 Vict., Can., ch. 29, sec. 315. The reference in the second Code to the original section of the first Code and in that to the section of the Post Office Act, seem to make it clear that only offences under the postal laws were in contemplation. While it remained a part of the Post Office Act its meaning was well defined notwithstanding the use of such general terms as "post letter or any chattel, etc., the stealing whereof is hereby declared to be" a felony or (since the Code) an indictable offence, The question has arisen whether the transposition of this clause into the Code enlarges the effect of the transposed word "hereby" so as to include in the penalty of sec. 400 the stealing of any article the theft of which is made indictable by the Code in terms under which specific articles are described or named. That it should at least be limited to articles of the class last-mentioned is supported by a decision in Manitoba in which it was held unnecessary to decide whether or not it should be further limited to crimes of theft so declared by sections now incorporated in the Code, but taken from the Post Office Act of 1886. Many of the penal clauses of the former Post Office Act have now been incorporated in the Code and the present sec. 400 would apply, it is submitted, to those sections of the Code so derived which deal with the stealing of postal matter.

Place of offence for prosecution of postal offences]-Code sec. 584, sub-sec. (c).

Postal offences generally]—See Code secs. 3, 209, 265, 364, 365, 366, 400, 407, 449, 451, 5100, 516, 538, 867, 869, and the Post Office Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 66.

Second offences]-See secs. 465, 757, 851, 963, 964, 982.

Receiving property obtained by offence punishable on summary conviction.

401. Every one who receives or retains in his possession anything, knowing the same to have been unlawfully obtained, the stealing of which is punishable on summary conviction, either for every offence, or for the first and second offence only, is guilty of an offence and liable on summary conviction, for every first, second or subsequent offence of receiving, to the same punishment as if he were guilty of a first, second or subsequent offence of stealing the same.

Origin]-Code sec. 316; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 164, sec. 84.

Exception when legal title acquired after theft]—See sec. 403. Receiving after restoration to owner]—See sec. 403.

When receiving is complete]-See sec. 402.

Receiving in cases of minor theft punishable on summary conviction]—This section (401) applies only to the few classes of cases in which provision is made for summary conviction for the theft itself. The offence of receiving is generally an indictable one under sec. 399, as is the offence of theft.

The punishment on a summary conviction for receiving is limited by sec. 401 in like manner as for the principal offence. B. v. Frizell, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 214, 15 D.L.R. 674, 5 O.W.N. 801, 25 O.W.R. 697.

As to summary conviction in certain minor classes of theft, see Code sees. 370, dogs and domestic animals; 374, shrubs, trees, etc.; 375, garden produce; 376, cultivated plants not in garden; 377, fences and gates; 385, images, etc. at Indian graves; 393, killing or injuring pigeons.

402. The act of receiving anything unlawfully obtained is complete as soon as the offender has, either exclusively or jointly with the thief or any other person, possession of or control over such thing, or aids in concealing or disposing of it.

403. When the thing unlawfully obtained has been restored to the owner, or when a legal title to the thing so obtained has been acquired by any person, a subsequent receiving thereof shall not be an offence although the receiver may know that the thing had been previously unlawfully obtained.

Origin]-Code of 1892, sec. 318.

Unlawful receiving]—Code secs. 399, 402, 400 (postal offences), 401 (summary conviction offences).

Receiving after legal title has passed from owner]—Secs. 399 and 401 deal with the offence of receiving with knowledge anything which was obtained by the commission of a criminal offence; and sec. 403 is a declaration in effect that if the crime were such that title passed to the culprit, then the receiving from him afterwards is excepted from the penalty although the receiver knew the goods or money had been obtained unlawfully by means of the offence. As regards the common law offence of larceny, the theory of English jurisprudence was that the property in the goods, or, in the words of sec. 403, the "legal title to the thing so obtained," either did not pass to the thief, or that on his conviction it reverted to the true owner with a possible exception that the thief might have conferred a good title by a sale in market overt. Subject to the exceptions of sec. 403, the offence of receiving or retaining applies to offences "punishable under indictment"; Code sec. 399; and to certain minor offences referred to in sec. 401 punishable on summary conviction. Many of these offences are statutory and not common law offences and the Code definition of theft extends to offences which were not larceny at common law. Indirectly the legal title may be disposed of by the order of the criminal court under the statutory power to order restitution under Code sec. 1050; but that power is restricted so as not to apply to the case of the prosecution of any factor, agent, trustee, etc. for statutory theft from the principal (Code secs. 358, 390). And in other cases if it appears before a restitution order has been made by the criminal court that the stolen property had been transferred to an innocent purchaser for value who had "acquired a lawful title thereto," the court is not to order restitution of such property. The court might also award restitution although the person indicted was not convicted, if the jury declared, or the court trying the case without a jury found, that the property which the accused was charged with stealing or with knowingly receiving, belongs to the prosecutor (or the witness for the prosecution) and that he was unlawfully deprived of it by such offence. Code sec. 1050, sub-sec. (3). There is also statutory provision for awarding compensation against the person convicted of any indictable offence "by way of satisfaction or compensation for any loss of property suffered by the applicant through or by means of the offence"; and the amount awarded is to be deemed a judgment debt. Code sec. 1048. Such an order possibly may have an effect on the passing of the legal title. Then sec. 1049 enables the court trying a case of "theft or other offence, including the stealing or unlawfully obtaining any property" to give compensation out of money taken from the prisoner on his arrest, to a purchaser without notice if he applies for same and makes restitution of the property "to its owner."

Subject to the provisions of the Code and of the dispositions which may be brought within the scope of the criminal law and so supersede provincial enactments, the question of the right of property in the goods obtained by means of a crime is to be disposed of by reference to the provincial law. See the Sales of Goods Acts of various provinces. A distinction is commonly made by provincial law between a mere change of possession by a theft which would have been larceny at common law, and a charge of possession on obtaining goods by false pretenses in which the owner voluntarily gives up the goods to the person guilty of the false pretense. The distinction was not made in England on the enactment of the Larceny Act, 1861, Imp., 24-25 Vict., ch. 96, sec. 100; Bentley v. Vilmont (1887), 57 L.J.Q.B. 18, 12 A.C. 473; R. v. Central Criminal Court, 18 Q.B.D. 314, 16 Cox C.C. 196; R. v. Villensky [1892] 2 Q.B. 597, but the omission was corrected by the later Sale of Goods Act, 1893, Imp. 56-57 Vict., ch. 71, sec. 24. See Howe v. Schroeder (1905), 1 W.L.R. 174 (Y.T.), as to owner following proceeds of stolen goods. Sec. 1050, as to restitution orders, does not extend to the offence under sec. 405, of obtaining money under false pretenses.

False Pretenses.

Definition of false pretense.-Exaggeration.-Question of fact.

404. A false pretense is a representation, either by words or otherwise, of a matter of fact either present or past, which representation is known to the person making it to be false, and which is made with a fraudulent intent to induce the person to whom it is made to act upon such representation.

2. Exaggerated commendation or depreciation of the quality of any thing is not a false pretense, unless it is carried to such an extent as to amount to a fraudulent misrepresentation of fact.

3. It is a question of fact whether such commendation or depreciation does or does not amount to a fraudulent misrepresentation of fact.

Origin]-Sec. 358, Code of 1892.

"Representation of a matter of fact either past or present"]—A mere lie, told with intent to defraud, and having reference to the future, is not treated as a crime. A lie, alleging the existence of some fact which does not exist, is regarded as a crime, if property is obtained by it. Stephen's Dig. Crim. Law, p. 161; Alderson v. Maddison, 5 Ex. D. 303; E. v. Nowe, 36 N.S.E. 531, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 441.

To render a defendant liable, his false representations must have been with regard to a past or existing matter, not to a future undertaking as that he will pay for goods on a certain day. Mott v. Milne, 31 N.S.R. 372; Regina v. Bertles, 13 U.C.C.P. 607; but there may be a representation by conduct or otherwise of a present ability to pay which would be a pretense within sec. 404. That which is in form a promise may be, in another aspect, a representation. Clydesdale Bank v. Paton [1896] A.C. 394, per Lord Herschell.

The false pretence must be a false representation, express or implied, as to the past or present existence of some fact; a mere promise as to future conduct, or representations as to future expectations are not sufficient. R. v. Woodman, 14 Cox C.C. 179. For instance, the giving a cheque in exchange for goods is ordinarily a representation that the drawer has an account at the bank on which the chequé is drawn, and that that account is in such condition that in the ordinary course of events the cheque will be met. If the drawer knows that these conditions do not exist the giving of the cheque is in law a false pretence. But representations of future expectations, unless they are representations of existing facts, do not constitute a false pretence, and obtaining goods on credit by means of such representations is not obtaining goods by false pretences. The false pretense may be made in any way, either by words, by writing, by conduct or by acts. R. v. Letang, 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 505; 29 O.L.R. 56. It is no excuse to say that a person of common prudence could easily have found out the pretense was untrue, nor to say the existence of the alleged fact was impossible, or that it was intended to make compensation for the goods in the future. R. v. Martel (1916), 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 316 (Que.).

The giving of a post-dated cheque does not alone involve a representation that there are funds presently available, but a promise to have sufficient funds on the future date specified to the credit of the drawer and is not a representation of a fact past or present within sec. 404. R. v. Richard (1906), 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 279 (Que.).

In Reg. v. Cooper, 13 Cox C.C. 617, 46 L.J.M.C. 219, the accused was charged with falsely pretending that he was a dealer in potatoes, and as such dealer, in a large way of business and in a position to do a good trade in potatoes and able to pay for large quantities of potatoes, as and when the same might be delivered to him. The only evidence thereof was a letter from the prisoner to the prosecutor, reasonably conveying to the mind the construction put upon it in the indictment. Lord Coleridge, C.J., is reported (at p. 620) as follows:---

"The question for the court, as I understand the case, is whether there was evidence upon which the false pretences alleged in the indictment could fairly be sustained."

"It was a question for the jury whether the false pretences alleged did or did not reasonably arise from the letter. The true principle applicable to this case was well enunciated by Blackburn, J., during the course of the argument in Reg. v. Giles, 10 Cox C.C. 44: 'It is not - requisite that the false pretence should be made in express words, if the idea is convered.'"

Denman, J., at p. 622, said :-

"In Reg. v. Giles, 10 Cox C.C. 44, the prisoner pretended that she had power to bring the prosecutrix's husband back, and that was held to be a statement of fact. That warrants us in holding that where a man is not in a position to do what he professes he will do at a given time, he is making a false statement of fact. The indictment charges that the prisoner falsely pretended that he then was able to pay for large quantities of potatoes as and when the same might be delivered to him, and that pretence, I think, is proved by the letter." ch

"Having heard the whole of the argument, I have come to the conclusion that the conviction should be affirmed. It is not sufficient for the prisoner to show that the letter might bear another meaning, if it is reasonably capable of bearing the meaning imputed to it in the indictment. It is the duty of the prisoner to show by special circumstances that it bore the construction he contends for. I think that the false pretenses charged may be fairly inferred from the letter, and that the conviction should be affirmed."

"There must be a misstatement of an existing fact, but the state of a man's mind is as much a fact as the state of his digestion. It is true it is very difficult to prove what the state of a man's mind at a particular time is, but if it can be ascertained it is as much a fact as anything else. A misrepresentation as to the state of a man's mind is, therefore, a misstatement of fact."

A misrepresentation that lands submitted for a mortgage loan had a building on it will found a false pretence charge if the pretense was relied upon. R. v. Huppel, 21 U.C.Q.B. 281 (Ont.).

False pretense through innocent agent]—The fraud may be committed through the instrumentality of an innocent agent, in which case the principal is liable although he was not present when the agent made the representation in accordance with his principal's orders and which was intended to perpetrate the fraud. R. v. Garten (1913), 29 O.L.R. 56; R. v. Garrett (1853), 6 Cox C.C. 260.

False pretense by conduct]—A charge of obtaining money by false pretenses may be founded upon conduct apart from any express words. The question must always be what was intended to be conveyed by the words, acts, conduct, or even silence, of the person said to have made the false pretense. R. v. Leverton [1917] 2 W.W.R. 584, 588, 11 Alta. L.R. 355, 28 Can. Cr. Cas. 61; R. v. Barnard, 7 C. & P. 784; R. v. Cooper, 46 L.J.M.C. 219.

The false pretense may be by acts, that is, by "words or otherwise": sec. 404; Regina v. Bull (1877), 13 Cox C.C. 608, and Regina v. Murphy-(1876), 13 Cox C.C. 298; R. v. Garten (1913), 29 O.L.R. 56, 60.

So, handing over cheques which the accused knew to be worthless, after his account had been closed, in exchange for bonds delivered to him on the faith of the cheques, is a misrepresentation by conduct. State of New York v. Israelowitz (1917), 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 623, 628 (B.C.). A person tendering to another a promissory note of a third party in exchange for goods, is to be taken to affirm that the note has not, to his knowledge, been paid, either wholly or to such an extent as almost to destroy its value. R. v. Davis, 18 U.C.Q.B. 180 (Ont.).

There may be a false pretense in the accused misrepresenting that he was farming in a large way, and obtaining seed grain much in [§ 404] excess of his farm requirements with the intention of selling the unused surplus. R. v. Holderman (1914), 7 W.W.E. 729, 734, 7 Sask. L.R. 279, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 369, 30 W.L.R. 82; Edgington v. Fitzmaurice, 55 L.J. Ch. 650.

In Reg. v. Cooper, 46 L.J.M.C. 219, 25 W.R. 696, 2 Q.B.D. 510, the prisoner, who was a mere huckster, wrote a letter to the prosecutor ordering from him two railway-truckloads of potatoes "as samples," and expressing a hope that the quality would be good, as then a good trade would follow for both of them. The Court for Crown Cases Reserved held that this letter might reasonably be construed as containing a representation that the writer was a dealer in potatoes in a large way of business, and that it was a question for the jury whether he intended the prosecutor to put this meaning upon the letter.

In R. v. King [1897] 1 Q.B. 214, 18 Cox C.C. 447, the prisoner was convicted of having obtained certain churns by false pretences as to his position and business. He had written a letter to the prosecutor containing these words:—" The two six-gallon milk churns in order do not require name on them, as they are only required for home use." This letter was produced in evidence by the prosecutor, and he was thereupon asked what opinion he had formed from the letter as to the position and occupation of the accused. The question was objected to by counsel for the defence, but was allowed, and the answer was to the effect that the prosecutor inferred from the letter that the writer was either a farmer or a dairyman. The prisoner was convicted, subject to the case stated as to the admissibility of this question and answer.

The objection was based on the ground that the witness was being asked to construe a written document, which was a question of law for the court, and not a question of fact. The court, however, held that the question was admissible, not as to whether the latter was capable of bearing the meaning put upon it, but for the purpose of showing whether the prosecutor believed the statement made. Hawkins, J, pointed out that in a charge for obtaining goods by false pretences it must be proved (1) that a false pretence was made, (2) that the prosecutor believed the pretence, and (3) that the goods were obtained by means of the pretence; and he held that the only way to find out whether the prosecutor believed the pretence in the letter was to ask his opinion of the letter. R. v. King, supra.

When in an indictment for obtaining by false pretences, one of the pretences alleged was that defendant was carrying on a genuine business in buying and selling pigs, the mere fact that he did not keep any pigs in his own possession nor hold an option of purchase, does not establish falsity of his advertisement offering pigs for sale where he was in the habit of having deliveries made direct by the breeders. If it were open to the jury to find that the advertisement meant that he was ready to supply pigs of the description advertised although not in his possession or control, the practical withdrawal of that view in the

On a charge of obtaining goods by false pretences by giving a bill of exchange due in seven weeks where some of the averments made were that the accused professed to be a man of financial strength and able in due time to meet the bill, it was held to be proper to admit in evidence for the prosecution the bank account of the accused and proof of the number of cheques on it being dishonored during the time of the transaction. R. v. Fryer (1912), 7 Cr. App. R. 183.

Where the prisoner was charged with having obtained goods by false pretences and the false pretence alleged in the indictment was that he had pretended that he was carrying on a genuine and bona fide business as a manufacturer's agent and merchant, it was held that receipts sworn to by the prisoner as having been given to him as acknowledgments of payments for goods purchased by him other than those the subject of the charge, and entries in his bank pass-books showing payments made by him for goods supplied to him, were admissible as evidence on his behalf that he was in fact carrying on a genuine and bona fide business. Rex v. Sagar [1914] 3 K.B. 1112, 10 Cr. App. R. 279.

In R. v. Létang (1899), 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 505, (Que.), a debtor had made a judicial abandonment for the benefit of his creditors whereby his property became vested in another, and, knowing that he was no longer entitled to receive the rent, he presented himself afterwards as the landlord to a tenant of the property and received the rent as he had formerly been accustomed to do. It was held that he was properly found guilty of a false pretence by his acts and conduct.

An ordinary trader does not by the mere fact that he keeps his doors open for business represent that he is at the moment solvent. R. v. Parker, 80 J.P. 271.

It is open to a jury to find that a trade name has been assumed with intent to defraud. R. v. Whitmore (1914), 10 Cr. App. R. 204.

If there is evidence of two persons acting together and one assents to a false representation made by the other as an inducement to a contract, such assent may amount to a false pretence by conduct. R. v. Grosvenor (1914), 10 Cr. App. R. 404; R. v. Cadden, 4 Terr.^{*}L.R. 304, 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 45.

Continuance of the pretense as an inducing cause]—How long a false pretense once made continues to operate, if goods are obtained, is a question for the jury. R. v. Moreton, 8 Cr. App. R. 214, 109 L.T. 417. **

The false pretence alleged in a Nova Scotia case was by representing himself to be the owner of a vessel, whereas at the time he had transferred ownership to another person who had again transferred to defendant's wife. The representation to the prosecutor that he was owner was made some three or four months before and was by appending the style "Owner" to his signature to a letter in relation to another matter. It was held that the pretense was too remote to warrant a conviction. R. v. Harty, 31 N.S.R. 272, 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 103; and see R. v. Brady, 26 U.C.Q.B. 13 (Ont.).

A foreman of works on roads had certified to the inspector A, that certain persons had worked under him and were entitled to pay. He also produced orders for this pay purporting to be signed by those persons, but which in fact were not genuine. The inspector A. delivered the money to D., his agent, with instructions to pay it to the defendant if satisfied of the genuineness of the orders. On an indictment for obtaining money under false pretenses from D. the defendant was found guilty, and the conviction was upheld on a case reserved. R. v. Cameron, 23 N.S.R. 150.

Where on an athletic sport competition one of the competitors personates another party for the purpose of securing a good handicap, and falsely declares that he had never won a prize for a similar contest, the object of obtaining the prize is not too remote from the false representation. R. v. Button [1900] 2 Q.B. 597, disapproving R. v. Larner, 14 Cox C.C. 497.

405. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to three years' imprisonment who, with intent to defraud, by any false pretense, either directly or through the medium of any contract obtained by such false pretense, obtains anything capable of being stolen, or procures anything capable of being stolen to be delivered to any other person than himself.

Origin]-Sec. 359, Code of 1892, R.S.C. 1886, ch. 164, sec. 77.

Obtains anything capable of being stolen]—See Code sees. 344-357. If the owner intended to part with the property and consented to the property and possession going to the defendant, the offence was not theft but obtaining the article by false pretenses. R. v. Illsley (No. 1) 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 105 (N.S.).

It must appear that the prosecutor had been induced to part with some property right and not merely the possession of the goods. R. v. Nowe, 36 N.S.R. 531, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 441; and see Code sec. 347 (definition o C.C.R. Th tained

The charge may be founded on the fact of the accused having obtained by his false pretence the difference between the prices under two tenders, where it was open to the jury to infer that it was by reason of the false representations that the additional sum was paid which the accused received, and that his intention in making the representations was to obtain the money for his own benefit, or, in other words, to defraud his employers of the money. R. v. Leverton [1917] 2 W.W.R. 584, 11 Alta. L.R. 355, 28 Can. Cr. Cas. 61.

On a charge of obtaining money by false pretences, the question whether evidence as to the value of the property, in respect of which false pretences are made, is or is not material to the charge must be decided according to the circumstances of each case; the general test to be applied is whether the prosecutor was induced by decit to act to his injury. Rex v. Newton, 9 Cr. App. R. 146; 23 Cox C.C. 609.

When any valuable thing is obtained by false pretences, prima facie there is an intent to defraud. Rex v. Hammerson, 10 Cr. App. R. 121.

Obtaining by false pretenses the return of an overdue promissory note made by the accused himself is included. Abeles v. The King (1915), 24 Que. K.B. 260, 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 308.

To obtain goods in exchange for a cheque on a cash sale falsely representing that funds are available is to obtain goods, not credit, by false pretenses. R. v. Cosnett (1901), 20 Cox C.C. 6. And the same result will follow if the funds in bank were not intended to be available but were immediately after the transaction fraudulently withdrawn so that the cheque should be dishonored while the drawer appropriated the goods and re-sold them for his own benefit. R. v. Garten (1913), 29 O.L.R. 56, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 21, 13 D.L.R. 642; R. v. Jones [1898] 1 Q.B. 119, 123; R. v. Garrett, 6 Cox C.C. 260; R. v. Hazelton L.R. 2 C.C.R. 134, 13 Cox C.C. 1. Query whether the same circumstances might not support a charge of theft of the goods as a larceny by trick. See note to see. 347; R. v. Middleton, L.R. 2 C.C.R. 38.

In a New Brunswick case the prisoner wrote to the prosecutor to induce him to buy counterfeit bank notes. The prosecutor, in order to entrap the prisoner and bring him to justice, pretended to assent to the scheme, arranging a meeting place of which he informed the police, and had them placed in position to arrest the prisoner at a signal from the prosecutor. At such meeting the prisoner produced a box which he said contained counterfeit bank notes, which he agreed to sell the prosecutor on payment of a sum agreed upon. The prisoner gave a box which he pretended to be the one containing the notes to the prosecutor who then gave the prisoner $50 and a watch as security for the balance which he agreed to pay. The prosecutor immediately gave the signal to the police and seized the prisoner and held him until they arrested him and took the money and watch from him. On examining the box

The box containing the notes was found on the prisoner's person. It was clear and undisputed that the motive of the prosecutor in parting with the possession of the money and the watch, as he had done, was to entrup the prisoner. The prisoner was found guilty of obtaining the money and watch of the prosecutor by false pretence of giving him the counterfeit notes, which he did not give. It was held by the majority of the court of six judges that the prisoner was rightly found guilty, and that the conviction should be affirmed. R. v. Corey, 22 N.B.R. 543.

Obtaining goods, etc., by false pretenses]—False pretences, before the enactment of the Criminal Code, was only a misdemeanour. By the Code the offender is made liable to imprisonment for three years. It is a serious offence against the public, and although a person who has parted with his money or property by means of a false pretence to him or other fraud practised upon him, or by reason of theft, is entitled to take his own property if offered to him, he is not permitted to screen the offender by an agreement not to prosecute or to drop a prosecution already entered upon. Morgan v. McFee, 18 O.L.R. 30, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 308.

Where the false pretense is made in one jurisdiction and the goods are obtained on the faith of it in another jurisdiction, the latter is the place of the offence. R. v. Ellis [1899] 1 Q.B. 230; R. v. Cooke 1 F. & F 64; R. v. Holmes, 15 Cox C.C. 343.

In order to establish the offence of obtaining money by false pretences it is necessary to prove what was laid down by Buckley, J., in re London and Globe Finance Corporation [1903] 1 Ch. 728. He said: "To-deceive is, I apprehend, to induce a man to believe that a thing is true which is false, and which the person practising the deceit knows or, believes to be false. To defraud is to deprive by deceit; it is 'by deceit' to induce a man to act to his injury." R. v. Bennett (1913), 9 Cr. App. R. 146, at 154.

Although it was cheques which the accused directly received and not money, yet if he obtained the money through the cheques which went through the bank, the false pretense charge may be laid in respect either of the money itself or of the cheques. Kelly v. The King [1917], 1 W.W.R. 463, 54 S.C.R. 220, 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 282; R. v. Kelly [1917] 1 W.W.R. 46, 27 Man. R. 105; R. v. Kelly, 10 W.W.R. 1345; R. v. Leverton [1917] 2 W.W.R. 584, 590, 11 Alta. L.R. 355, 28 Can. Cr. Cas. 61.

A person who does not otherwise make a false representation himself, but who is present when it is made, knows it to be false, and shares in the proceeds obtained by such false pretense, is guilty of obtaining such sum of money by false pretences. FALSE PRETENCES

Details of false pretence or fraud not essential to indictment]—See secs. 863 and 864; but see also secs. 853, 855, 859, 860, as to stating the offence and the ordering of particulars.

"Or through the medium of any contract"]—The insertion of these words was probably due to the doubts raised in the English case of R. v. Gardner, 25 L.J.M.C. 100, which has since been explained in R. v. Moreton (1913), 8 Cr. App. R. 214, as having been decided on the ground that there was no continuing false pretense. The offence may be committed by the pretense of a contract fraudulent in fact and which induced the giving of the promissory note or other subject-matter of the charge. R. v. Daigle, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 92, 18 D.L.R. 56 (Que.) (pretended stock subscription); R. v. Provost (1918), 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 247 (Que.) (pretended sale of motor-car).

The fact that the goods are obtained under a contract does not make the goods so obtained goods not obtained by a false pretence, if the false pretence is a continuing one and operates on the mind of the person supplying the goods. R. v. Moreton (1913), 8 Cr. App. R. 214; at p. 217; R. v. Martin, L.R. 1 C.C.R. 56, 36 L.J.M.C. 20; R. v. Kenrick, 5 Q.B. 49, 12 L.J.M.C. 135; R. v. Abbott, 1 Den. C.C. 273, 2 C. & K. . 630; R. v. Rymal, 17 Ont. R. 227; R. v. Hope, 17 Ont. R. 463.

If the basis of a charge is false pretence, and that false pretence is contained in a written document, the document itself must be produced unless a foundation be laid for secondary evidence to make out a prima facie case. Re Johnston, 13 B.C.R. 209, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 559.

"With intent to defraud "]—There may be an intent to defraud although the prosecutor got something which was of real value for his money. Where money is obtained by pretences that are false, there is, prima facie, an intent to defraud, although this presumption may be displaced. R. v. Hammerson (1914), 10 Cr. App. R. 121.

A postmaster transmitted to defendant several post-office orders, which defendant, in connivance with him, presented and got cashed. The orders were fraudulently issued, as no moneys had been received by the postmaster for transmission to the defendant, and frauds to a large extent had been thus committed. Defendant might properly have been convicted of having obtained the money by false pretences. R. v. Dessauer, 21 U.C.Q.B. 231; and see sec. 399 (receiving) and sec 359 (c) (theft by government employee).

In R. v. Lee, 23 U.C.Q.B. 340, the prisoner sold a mare to B, taking his notes for purchase money, one of which was for $25, and a chattel mortgage on a mare as collateral security. After this note had matured he threatened to sue, and B. got one R. to pay the money, the prisoner promising to get the notes from a lawyer's office, where he said they were, and give them up next morning. This note, however, had been sold by the prisoner some time before to another person, who afterwards sued B, upon it, and obtained judgment. It was held that the

An intent to defraud may be inferred from the wilful use of a forged instrument to support a genuine claim. Rex v. Hopley, 11 Cr. App. R. 248; R. v. Cameron, 23 N.S.R. 150. Representations as to solveney may be shown to be false by proving insolvency a short time afterwards. R. v. Boyd (1896), 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 219 (Que.).

The doctrines of commercial agency do not apply to prevent the operation of the criminal law. So where one Clark, a policy holder of a fire insurance company, conspired with Howse, their local agent, to defraud the company and handed to Howse for transmission to the company an unfounded proof of claim for pretended losses by fire, and obtained the money through Howse from the company, it was held that the knowledge of Howse of the falsity of the pretence could not be imputed as the knowledge of the company so as to affect the criminality of Clark. R. v. Clark (1892), 2 B.C.R. 191.

If the money is parted with from a desire to secure the conviction of the prisoner there is no obtaining by false pretences. R. v. Mills (1857), Dears. & B. 205, 26 L.J.M.C. 79; R. v. Gemmell, 26 U.C.Q.B. 315. The false pretense must have been the inducing cause to the defrauded party to part with his property. Ibid.

But the false pretense may have been the inducing cause although a trap had been laid for the arrest of the accused on his obtaining the money and the person parting with the money would consequently be assured of getting it back if it turned out that the pretense was false. R. v. Corey, 22 N.B.R. 543.

Similar criminal acts as proof of intent]-It does not tend to prove a man guilty of a particular crime to show that he is the kind of man who would commit a crime or that he is generally disposed to crime and even to a particular crime, but, in false pretences and sundry species of frauds, evidence is admissible in proving guilty knowledge or intent or system or in rebutting an appearance of innocence which, unexplained, the facts might wear. Thompson v. Director of Public Prosecutions [1918] A.C. 221, 13 Cr. App. R. 61, 87 L.J.K.B. 478, 484; compare Brunet v. The King (1918), 57 S.C.R. 83. The evidence is then admissible notwithstanding its general character is to show that the accused had in him the makings of a criminal. Thompson v. Director, etc., supra. And there must be a connection (nexus) between the former offences and the offence which is the subject of trial. Thompson v. Director, etc. [1918] A.C. 221, 13 Cr. App. R. 61, 87 L.J.K.B. 478, affirming R. v. Thompson [1917] 2 K.B. 630; R. v. Fisher [1910] 1 K.B. 149; Rivet v. The King, 24 Que. K.B. 559, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 235; The remoteness in time at which prior similar acts would be excluded must vary largely with the particular facts. R. v. Wilkes, 10 Cr. App. R. 16; compare Brunet v. The King (1918), 57 S.C.R. 83.

In Regina v. Hope, 17 Ont. R. 463, the defendant was indicted in the first count of the indictment for obtaining from one H. a promissory note with intent to defraud, and in the second count with inducing H. to make the said note with like intent. The evidence showed that on May 4th, 1887, the defendant's agent called on H. and obtained from him an order addressed to defendant to deliver to H. at R. station, thirty bushels of Blue Mountain Improved Seneca Fall Wheat, which H. was to put out on shares, and to pay defendant $240 when delivered, and to equally divide the produce thereof with the holder of the order, after deducting the said amount. On 23rd May defendant called, produced the order, and by false and fraudulent representations as to the quality of the wheat and his having full control of it, its growth and yielding qualities, and that a note defendant requested him to sign was not negotiable, induced H. to sign the note. Evidence was received, under objection, of similar frauds on others, showing that the defendant was at the time engaged in practicing a series of systematic frauds on the community.

The defendant was found guilty and convicted. Held, on a case reserved, that the conviction should be affirmed on the second count, as the evidence showed that the note was signed by H. not merely to secure the carrying out of the contract contained in the order, but on the faith of the representations made, and it was immaterial that a note was taken when the order called for cash; and, also, that the evidence objected to was properly receivable. R. v. Hope, 17 Ont. R. 463; and see R. v. Rymal, 17 Ont. R. 227. If the evidence merely proves, or tends to prove, that the accused is of such evil character or disposition that he is likely to have committed the offence charged against him, it is irrelevant and is inadmissible. R. v. Thompson, supra; R. v. Komiensky (No. 2), 12 Que. K.B. 463; 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 27.

If the evidence tends to prove that the accused committed the crime charged against him, it is relevant and admissible notwithstanding that incidentally it may also prove, or tend to prove, that the accused is a person of criminal or immoral character or disposition. R. v. Ollis [1900] 2 K.B. 758, 781, 782; Perkins v. Jeffery [1918] A.C. 221; R. v. Thompson [1917] 2 K.B. 630, 86 L.J.K.B. 1321, affirmed sub nom, Thompson v. ticular crime with which a prisoner is charged. Thompson v. Director, etc., supra, (87 L.J.K.B. 478, at 486, per Lord Parmoor).

Before an issue can be said to be raised which would permit the introduction of such evidence so obviously prejudicial to the accused. it must have been raised in substance, if not in so many words; and the issue so raised must be one to which the prejudicial evidence is relevant. Thompson v. Director, etc., supra (87 L.J.K.B. 478, at 484, per Lord Sumner). The mere theory that a plea of not guilty puts everything material in issue is not enough for this purpose. Ibid. As put by Lord Sumner, "the prosecution cannot credit the accused with fancy defences in order to rebut them at the outset with some damning piece of prejudice." Evidence of other similar offences to rebut the denial of criminal intent could not properly be admitted until that defence is definitely put forward. Perkins v. Jeffery [1915] 2 K.B. 702, 708; Brunet v. The King (1918), 57 S.C.R. 83. It may be admitted in reply when the denial of criminal intent is not advanced until the defence was opened. Brunet v. The King, supra; R. v. Pollard, 19 O.L.R. 96; 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 74; R. v. Higgins, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 68; R. v. Crippen, 27 Times L.R. 69.

Leave may be given the accused to call further evidence in surrebuttal where such evidence for the prosecution has necessarily been brought out in reply Brunet v. The King (1918), 57 S.C.R. 83, 109.

Where the judge entertains a doubt as to the admissibility of evidence, he may suggest to the prosecution that they should not press it, but he cannot exclude evidence which he holds to be admissible. R. v. Fletcher (1913), 9 Cr. App. R. 53, at 56.

Upon a trial for false pretenses, it is competent, in order to prove intent, to show that the accused made similar representations about the same time to other persons, and by means of such false representations obtained goods; and other acts, part of the same system of fraud, may be put in evidence. Reg. v. Francis, 12 Cox C.C. 612, 43 L.J.M.C. 97, L.R. 2 C.C.R. 128; R. v. Wyatt [1904] 1 KB. 188; Blake v. Albion Life Assee. Society, 14 Cox C.C. 249, L.R. 4 C.P.D. 94.

Evidence which would properly be admissible of similar prior acts under the doctrine laid down in Makin v. N.S.W. [1894] A.C. 57, 17 Cox C.C. 366, does not cease to be so because a prosecution for such prior acts has become barred by lapse of time. R. v. Shellaker [1914] 1 K.B. 414, 9 Cr. App. R. 240, in which R. v. Beighton, 18 Cox C.C. 535, was disapproved.

Evidence of similar crimes will not always corroborate the claim that the defendant was the identical person who obtained the goods in a false pretense charge, where he is shown to have been guilty of similar but unconnected erimes of false pretenses; but it may be evidence that in making the pretences he did, he was carrying out a similar plan to defraud as in the other cases and knew that the pretense was false.

R. v. Ollis [1900] 2 Q.B. 758, was a prosecution for obtaining money by falsely pretending that three cheques which the accused gave to the prosecutors were good and valid orders for the payment of money. The accused had been previously acquitted on a similar charge on the prosecution of another person. It was held that the facts connected with the charge on which the accused had been acquitted could be given in evidence to show that he had no reasonable ground for believing that there would be funds to meet the cheques on which he obtained the money from the prosecutors in the case then being tried. The fact that the accused had on another day passed a cheque which had been dishonoured was a circumstance to show a course of conduct on the part of the accused, and that the passing of the cheques in question was not a matter of forgetfulness, but that they were bad to his knowledge. R. v. Ollis [1900] 2 Q.B. 758.

Subsequent similar facts may be admitted to rebut a denial of fraud, if they form part of the same general fraudulent scheme as the transaction in question; R. v. Rhodes [1899] 1 Q.B. 77; R. v. Mason (1914), 10 Cr. App. R. 169; R. v. Boyle and Merchant [1914] 3 K.B. 339, 347, 10 Cr. App. R. 180.

"False pretense" defined]-Code sec. 404.

Stating the offence]—A conviction would not be good which declared the accused guilty of having stolen or obtained by false pretenses a sum of money from the same or different persons. R. v. Toy Moon (1911), 1 W.W.R. 50, 53, 19 Can. Cr. Cas. 33, 19 W.L.R. 480 (Man.), (dictum, per Perdue, J.A.); and see R. v. McDonald, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 1.

A charge of false pretenses is not bad in not setting out the false pretense or stating to whom it was made. R. v. Leverton [1917] 2 W.W.R. 584, 590, 11 Alta. L.R. 355, 28 Can. Cr. Cas. 61; Code form 64c; Code secs. 852, 1152.

The remedy of the accused is to apply for an order for particulars if he considers himself prejudiced by any want of information in the charge or indictment. Code secs. 859, 860; R. v. Leverton [1917] 2 W.W.R. 584, 590, 11 Alta. L.R. 355, 28 Can. Cr. Cas. 61.

Instructions to jury]—On an indictment for obtaining money by false pretences it is essential that the jury should understand that there should be no conviction without an intent to defraud, and, unless such intent is clear from the facts, they should be dierected on the point; they should also be directed that the obtaining must be due to the false pretence alleged. R. v. Ferguson, 8 Cr. App. R. 113; R. v. Boyd, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 219; R. v. Brady, 26 U.C.Q.B. 13; R. v. Carr (1916), 12 Cr. App. R. 140. Second offences]-See secs. 465, 757, 851, 963, 964, 982.

Attempt to obtain property by false pretenses]—A person cannot be convicted of an attempt to obtain money by false pretences, unless the false pretence has been brought home to the mind of the person from whom the money is intended to be obtained, or to the mind of his agent. Rex v. Robinson [1915] 2 K.B. 342; but where a false pretence was made with the intention of obtaining money, the prisoner may be guilty of attempting to obtain money by false pretences, notwithstanding that the prosecutor had not been misled by the false pretence and had never intended to part with his money. Reg. v. Roebuck (1855), 7 Cox, 126; Reg. v. Hensler (1870), 11 Cox, 570; Rex v. Light [1915] W.N. 97, 31 T.L.R. 257.

If the person from whom the goods are obtained is not deceived by the pretence, but knows it to be false, the goods are not "obtained" by false pretences, but in such a case the person making the false statement may be convicted of attempting to obtain the goods by false pretences. Code sec. 571.

Extradition]—" Obtaining money or property by false pretenses" is an extradition crime within the meaning of the Extraditon Act, and the extradition arrangement between Great Britain and the United States of America. Re F. H. Martin (No. 2), 2 Terr. L.R. 304; 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 326.

It is sufficient if the evidence before the committing judge affords prima facie proof that the prisoner has committed in the demanding State some offence which under the law of that State constitutes the crime charged as recognized and defined by that law, provided that such offence if committed in Canada would have constituted under Canadian law any one of the crimes specified in the treaty and in the schedule to the Extradition Act, chapter 55, R.S.C. 1906. Obtaining credit by false pretense.

405*^A*. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to one year's imprisonment who, in incurring any debt or liability obtains credit under false pretenses, or by means of any fraud.

Origin]-7-8 Edw. VII, Can., ch. 18, sec. 6; Debtors' Act, Imp., 1869, sec. 13.

"Obtains" credit]—This section was introduced to overcome the defect in our law pointed out by the Quebec Court of Appeal in Regina v. Boyd, 4 Can. Crim. Cas. 219, viz., that see. 405 applied only to the obtaining by false pretences of something capable of being stolen, and not to the obtaining of credit. The new section 405A, was copied from the Imperial Debtors' Act, 1869, 32 and 33 Vict., ch. 62, sec. 13 (1), which was considered in the case of Regina v. Bryant, 63 J.P. 376, and it was there held that the Act did not apply where credit was given to some person other than the party making the application for it. If the accused incurred a liability for himself, if not a debt, and obtained a credit for himself on his guaranty, although the money was actually paid to the company of which he was a director and shareholder, and he benefited by it, he will be liable under sec. 405A. R. v. Cohen (1915), 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 238, 33 O.L.R. 340; R. v. Campbell, 19 Can. Cr. Cas. 407.

Where an authorized clerk in the stock exchange induced stock jobbers to make bargains for sale of shares for the next account, and gave the names of members of the stock exchange not his employers as the purchasers, it was held that credit was given to them and not to the defendant, and that he was not guilty of an offence under this section. R. v. Bryant, 63 J.P. 376.

It would seem that it would be no answer to the charge to say that the credit was obtained in a transaction which was invalid in law because it was a speculation in differences. R. v. Irons (1910) Cent. Cr. Court Sess. papers 336; and see Grisewood v. Blane, 11 C.B. 526.

affords nanding ates the nat such anadian schedule omas, 28 of the Obtaining credit by means of any fraud]—As to conspiracy to defraud, see sec. 444; false pretenses, secs. 404, 405, 406, 406A, 407A, 407B; fraud and fraudulent dealing with property, secs. 415-443; fraud by personation, 408-411. On an indictment for obtaining credit by fraud, it is not enough to prove that, as the result of a fraud, money was obtained, it must be proved that credit was obtained. R. v. Green (1913), 9 Cr. App. R. 127.

In reviewing a conviction under the English Bankruptcy Act for obtaining credit without disclosing the fact that he, the accused, was an undischarged bankrupt, Phillimore, J., dealt with the objection that "credit" was not obtained if some security besides the personal obligation to pay was given. He said: "There may be cases where no credit is given at all; for instance, when an exceptionally valuable jewel is pledged for a sum which is obviously less than its value. But where a man obtains goods on the faith of a bill of exchange and on the security of a deposit of shares, not of undoubted value, it is clear that credit is given; there is a personal trust in him none the less, though it is not to the extreme extent." R. v. Fryer (1912), 7 Cr. App. R. 183, at 185.

On a charge of obtaining credit by means of fraud, where it was proved that the accused hired furnished apartments and left them without paying for them, evidence that he had also gone to other houses and left without paying was held admissible as negativing the existence of any reasonable or honest motive. R. v. Wyatt, [1904] 1 K.B. 188.

Concurrent charges]—Where an indictment contains counts for obtaining goods by false pretences and also counts for obtaining credit under false pretences, the prisoner ought not to be tried on them all at the same time; the prosecution should be called upon to proceed on one count at a time. Rex v. Norman [1915] 1 K.B. 341; 84 L.J.K.B. 440; 11 Cr. App. R. 58,

If the commission of the offence charged as described in the enactment creating the offence, or as charged in the count, includes the commission of any other offence, the person accused may be convicted of any offence so included which is proved although the whole offence charged is not proved. Code sec. 951. Obtaining credit on false pretenses is closely associated with the offence of theft, but it cannot be said that the offence of theft as described or defined in the Code includes the commission of the offence of obtaining credit by false pretenses. The latter is in fact a new statutory offence introduced into the Code. But the alternative of sec. 951 may apply so as to enable a conviction for obtaining the credit as the lesser offence where a charge of the greater offence of theft is not sustained, if the prosecution instead of limiting the theft charge to the statutory form (Code form 64 (b)), chooses to add in the count itself such details as would charge the theft to have been committed under the circumstances of a false pretense under sec. 405A. In that case it might be possible to have a conviction for the lesser offence of obtaining credit by the false pretense in a case which might be either a theft by trick or an offence under sec. 405A. But the more convenient form in practice is to frame separate counts in such a case, each free from any reference to the other offence. On a conviction upon the one count the Crown prosecutor usually would drop the other charge; see R. v. King [1897] 1 Q.B. 214, 66 L.J.Q.B. 87; and in the event of convictions on both counts, it would seem that under the "substantial wrong" clause governing appeals (Code sec. 1019), the result would be merely to affirm a single penalty appropriate to the lesser offence. Kelly v. The King [1917] 1 W.W.R. 463, 54 S.C.R. 220, 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 282, varying [1917] 1 W.W.R. 463, 54 S.C.R. 220, 27 Man. R. 105; and see R. v. Kelly (No. 1) 10 W.W.R. 1345, 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 94 (Man.); R. v. Norman [1915] 1 K.B. 341; R. v. Lockett [1914] 2 K.B. 720.

Where there are more counts than one in an indictment, or in a formal charge, each count may be treated as a separate indictment. Code sec. 857. The court may, either before or during the trial, order a separate trial of one or more counts in the same indictment. Code sec. 857, sub-sec. (2); sec. 858. And a single count which is double or multifarious, may be divided or amended by order. Code sec. 892. When an indictment on a count charges substantially the same offence as that charged in the indictment (or count treated as a separate indictment) on which the accused was given in charge on "a former trial," but adds a statement of intention or circumstances of aggravation tending if proved to increase the punishment, the previous acquittal or conviction is a bar to the subsequent indictment. Code sec. 909. And on a plea of autrefois acquit or autrefois convict, the evidence taken on the separate charges may be looked at, as well as the count itself, to prove or disprove the identity of the charges. But it is doubtful whether in strict law an acquittal for theft would bar a subsequent prosecution for obtaining either credit or goods on false pretenses. although based on the same transaction. See R. v. Henderson, C. & Mar. 328; 7-8 Geo, IV, Imp., ch. 29; 24-25 Vict., Imp., ch. 96, sec. 88. Unless the second charge is identical with the first and so within a plea of autrefois, the effect of the first as a bar will depend on statute; see Code secs. 909, 1079. And it is a rule of practice rather than a rule of law that "a series of charges shall not be preferred"; R. v. Erlington, 31 L.J.M.C. 14, 9 Cox C.C. 86; R. v. King [1897] 1 Q.B. 214, 66 L.J.Q.B. 87. divisi you and this taking a base by a sheet whet i the transfer

Evidence of similar transactions]-Where the accused was charged with obtaining credit by fraud, evidence was given of two previous occasions upon which he had obtained credit and had not paid. It was held that if those transactions could not properly have been the subject of a criminal charge, they were not transactions of a similar nature with the transaction in question, and therefore could not be given in evidence to show fraud on the latter occasion. Rex v. Baird, 84 L.J.K.B. 1785; 11 Cr. App. R. 186; and see note to sec. 405, as to the general principles applicable to evidence of similar facts in false pretense cases.

Use of evidence of accused given in civil proceedings under Assignments Act]—In Reg. v. Scott, Dearsley & B. 47, 7 Cox C.C. 164, it was held that the examination of the defendant in bankruptcy proceedings against him was admissible against him on a criminal charge, even though the answers were extracted from him under threat of committal and were criminating.

In Reg. v. Widdop (1872), L.R. 2 C.C. 3, 42 L.J.M.C. 9, the examination of the accused in bankruptey proceedings against him was tendered in evidence against him. It appears that the summons requiring him to attend for examination was issued by the trustee in bankruptey before the resolution appointing him had been registered, so that he was not therefore then authorized to act as trustee. It was held by the Court of Crown Cases Reserved that notwithstanding this defect in the proceedings and notwithstanding the fact that he was threatened with committal in case he refused to answer, his examination was projerly admitted as evidence against him. The prisoner, after voluntarily attending and submitting to examination without objection, had waived his right to raise an objection to the validity of the summons afterwards.

The same principle will apply to answers given on an examination under the Assignments Act (Alta.) to questions which were beyond the scope of such examination and might have been objected to on that ground, if in fact no objection is raised. R. v. Graham (1915), 8 W.W.R 460, 8 Alta. L.R. 182; and see R. v. Van Meter, 3 W.L.R. 416 (Terr.).

Sec. 7 of The Alberta Evidence Act (ch. 3 of 1910, 2nd session) provides inter alia, that a witness shall not be excused from answering any question upon the ground that the answer may tend to criminate him, but that with respect to any such question, if he objects to answer upon that ground and if, but for that section or any act of the Parliament of Canada, he would have been excused from answering it, then, although the witness is by reason of that section or of any such Act, compelled to answer, the answer so given shall not be used against him or receivable in evidence against him in any civil proceedings or in any proceedings under any Act or Ordinance in force in Alberta.

Sec. 5 of The Canada Evidence Act (B.S.C. 1906, ch. 145) provides that a witness shall not be excused from answering any question upon the ground referred to and also provides that, if he objects on that ground to answer any question and that, if, but for that Act or any Act of any provincial legislature, he would therefore have been excused from answering, although he is by reason of that Act or of any such

Sec. 35 of the Canada Evidence Act provides that in all proceedings, over which the parliament of Canada has legislative jurisdiction, the laws of evidence in force in the province, in which such proceedings are taken, shall, subject to the provision of any Act of the Parliament of Canada, apply to such proceedings. It has been held in Alberta that the effect of these provisions, if not the effect of the provision in The Alberta Evidence Act, alone, is that the evidence of the accused is admissible against him in a criminal trial unless he objects to answer upon the ground that the answer would tend to criminate him or upon any of the other grounds referred to in those provisions. R. v. Graham, (1915), 8 W.W.R. 460, 8 Alta. L.R. 182, 31 W.L.R. 117, 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 54.

A motion by the assignee to commit an insolvent, who had made an assignment for the benefit of creditors, for refusal to answer questions upon an examination under the Assignments and Preferences Act, R.S.O. 1914, ch. 134, sec. 38, was refused by Falconbridge, C.J.K.B., where the solicitor for the insolvent had made affidavit that, in his opinion, it was impossible that the insolvent should be examined under the Assignments Act without informing the private prosecution, and would amount to giving evidence wherewith to convict himself. Two of the creditors had launched criminal prosecutions against the insolvent on the ground that he procured credit on false representations as to his financial standing and as to the amount of his assets and liabilities Re Ginsberg, 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 447 (Ont.).

The chief justice said: "The protection extended in such cases by both Dominion and Ontario legislation, that his answers shall not be used or receivable in evidence against him, does not afford sufficient immunity in a case like this. The prosecutors might well get information from him which would enable them to get convicting evidence aliunde without using his own evidence against him at all. In fact the proceedings would take the form of an examination for discovery in a criminal case, which cannot be. The rule laid down by the Lord Chancellor (Eldon), in 1812, has always been closely followed: 'The strong inclination of my mind is to protect the party against answering any question, not only that has a direct tendency to criminate him, but that forms one step towards it:' Paxton v. Douglas (1812), 19 Ves. 225, at p. 227. See also D'Ivry v. World Newspaper Co. (1897), 17 P.R. 387; re Askwith (1899), 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 78, 31 O.R. 150; National Association of Operative Plasterers v. Smithies [1906] A.C. 434." . .

Attempt to obtain credit by false protences]—See sec. 571 as to attempts to commit certain indictable offences. The maximum penalty for an attempt is one-half of the maximum for the completed offence. Sec. 571.

Food and lodging cases]—Sec. 407B deals specifically with the offence of defrauding hotel and restaurant proprietors by obtaining accommodation by fraudulent means and provides for summary conviction and a different punishment. This would indicate an intention to exclude such cases from the purview of sec. 405A.

Extradition where the frand is by a company director or by a banker or agent]—Fraud by a bailee, banker, agent, factor, trustee, director, member or officer of any company, is extraditable between the U.S.A. and Canada, where made eriminal by the laws of both countries. Re O'Neill, 19 Can. Cr. Cas. 410: R. v. Stone, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 377.

Execution of valuable security obtained by fraud.

406. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to three years' imprisonment who, with intent to defraud or injure any person by any false pretense, causes or induces any person to execute, make, accept, endorse or destroy the whole or any part of any valuable security, or to write, impress or affix any name or seal on any paper or parchment in order that it may afterwards be made or converted into or used or dealt with as a valuable security.

Origin]-Sec. 360, Code of 1892, R.S.C. 1886, ch. 164, sec. 78; The Larceny Act, 32-33 Vict., Can., ch. 21, sec. 95 and sec. 1.

False pretense defined]-Code sec. 404.

Valuable security]—It will be noted that sub-sec. (40) of Code sec. 2 declares that "valuable security" includes any order on certain public funds. It is a supplementary declaration only and its phraseology is purposely changed from that of sub-secs. (38) and (39) in each of which certain phrases are declared to "mean" certain things. The term "valuable security" includes a customer's cheque on a bank. R. v. Prentice and Wright (1914), 7 W.W.R. 271, 7 Alta. L.R. 479, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 436, 29 W.L.R. 665, (in which case the court interprets subsec. (40) of sec. 2 as covering such a cheque although the entire fund to the drawer's credit was not absorbed by it). See also R.v. Burke, 24 Ont. R. 64; R. v. Wagner, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 113, 5 Terr. L.R. 19; R. v. Hope, 17 Ont. R. 463; R. v. Bymal, 17 Ont. R. 227; R. v. Brady, 26 U.C.Q.B. 13, distinguished in R. v. Burke (1893), 24 Ont. R. 64.

Obtaining by false pretonse through the medium of a contract]---While there is no express inclusion in sec. 406 as there is in sec. 405 of cases where the obtaining by false pretense is through the medium of a contract, the same principles have been applied; the declaration in that respect made in sec. 405 is merely declaratory of the former law.

FALSE PRETENCES

In Rymal's case, 17. Out. R. 227, the defendant, by untrue representations, made with knowledge that they were untrue, induced the prosecutor to sign a contract to pay $240 for seed wheat. The defendant also represented that he was the agent of H. whose name appeared in the contract. H. afterwards called upon the prosecutor and produced him to sign and deliver to him a promissory note in his (H's) favour, for the $240. The contract did not provide for giving of a note, and when the representations were made the giving a note was not mentioned. The prosecutor, however, swore that he gave the note because he had entered into the contract. The defendant was indicted for that he, hy false pretences fraudulently induced the prosecutor to write his he had entered into the contract. The defendant was indicted for that he, by false pretences, fraudulently induced the prosecutor to write his name upon a paper so that it might be afterwards dealt with as a valuable security. It was held, upon a case reserved that the charge of false pretences can be sustained as well where the note is procured to be given through the medium of a contract as where procured without a contract; and the fact that the prosecutor gave a note instead of the money, by agreement with H. did not relieve the prisoner from the consequences of his fraud; the giving of the note was the direct result of the fraud by which the contract had been procured; and the defendant was properly convicted on that count. R: v. Rymal, 17 Ont. R. 227; and see R. v. Hope, 17 Ont. R. 463.

Publication of false advertisements to promote sales, etc.

406*a*. Every person who knowingly publishes or causes to be published any advertisement for either directly or indirectly promoting the sale or disposal of any real or personal movable or immovable property, or any interest therein, containing any false statement or false representation which is of a character likely to or is intended to enhance the price or value of such property or any interest therein or to promote the sale or disposal thereof shall be liable upon summary conviction to a fine not exceeding two hundred dollars or to six months' imprisonment or to both fine and imprisonment.

Personation with intent fraudulently to obtain property.

408. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to fourteen years' imprisonment, who, with intent fraudulently to obtain any property, personates any person, living or dead, or the administrator, wife, widow, next of kin or relation of any person.

Origin]-Sec. 456, Code of 1892.

"Any property"]-Both real and personal property are included and certain documents of title. Sec. 2 (32).

Evidence]—Although the fund to obtain which the personation takes place has, in fact, been previously paid to the party entitled, there may be a conviction of the personator endeavouring to obtain payment. R. v. Cramp (1817), R. & R. 324. But it would appear doubtful whether a conviction could be supported for personation in respect of a supposed property or fund which had never existed. Cf. R. v. Pringle (1840), 2 Mood. C.C. 127, 9 C. & P. 408. Under the English Army Prize-money Act, 2 and 3 Wm. IV, ch. 53, sec. 49, it was declared an offence to knowingly and willingly personate or falsely assume the name of character of a soldier in order to receive prize-money, and it was held that it was no defence that the prisoner was authorized by the soldier to personate him or that the prisoner had bought from the soldier personated the prize-money to which the latter was entitled. R. v. Lake (1869), 11 Cox C.C. 333.

Attempts and conspiracy to personate]-See sees. 444, 570, 573.

Personation at certain examinations.

409. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence, and liable, on indictment or summary conviction, to one year's imprisonment, or to a fine of one hundred dollars, who falsely, with intent to gain some advantage for himself or some other person, personates a candidate at any competitive or qualifying examination, held under the authority of any law or statute, or in connection with any university or college, or who procures himself or any other person to be personated at any such PERSONATION examination, or who knowingly avails himself of the results of such personation.

Personation at a civil service examination]—There may be a prosecution either by summary proceedings under the Civil Service Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 16, sec. 14, where that Act applies, or under the Code. R. v. Lartie (1916), 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 300 (Que.).

Time limitation]—An information may be laid and proceedings taken for the prosecution by indictment of an indictable offence although the case is one which might have been summarily tried by a justice, had the information been laid within the six months provided by the Criminal Code (sec. 1142), and although that period had expired before the laying of the information. R. v. Edwards, 29 Ont. R. 451, 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 96; R. v. Lartie (1916), 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 300, 301 (Que.).

Knowingly avails himself of the results]—This is a continuing offence and summary proceedings would not necessarily be barred by the lapse of more than six months between the examination and the commencement of the prosecution. R. v. Lartie (1916), 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 200; Code sec. 1142.

Details of false pretence or fraud not essential to indictment]---See sees. 863 and 864; see also sees. 853, 855, 859, 860, as to stating the offence and the ordering of particulars.

Punishment on summary conviction]—The offence under sec. 409 is amongst those excepted by sec. 729 from the power given a justice on summary conviction for certain offences to remit the fine on compensation being made to the party aggrieved.

Summary convictions of joint offenders]-See sec. 728.

Personating owner of Government stock or company stock.— Dividends.—Grant of land or serip.—Person under power of attorney.—Transfer under personation.

410. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to fourteen years' imprisonment who falsely and deceitfully personates,—

- (a) any owner of any share or interest of or in any stock, annuity or other public fund transferable in any book of account kept by the Government of Canada or of any province thereof, or by any bank for any such Government; or,
- (b) any owner of any share or interest of or in the debt of any public body, or of or in the debt or capital stock of any body corporate, company, or society; or,

- (c) any owner of any dividend, coupon, certificate or money payable in respect of any such share or interest as aforesaid; or,
 - (d) any owner of any share or interest in any claim for a grant of land from the Crown, or for any scrip or other payment or allowance in lieu of such grant of land; or,
 - (e) any person duly authorized by any power of attorney to transfer any such share or interest, or to receive any dividend, coupon, certificate or money on behalf of the person entitled thereto; and thereby transfers or endeavours to transfer any share or interest belonging to such owner, or thereby obtains or endeavours to obtain, as if he were the true and lawful owner or were the person so authorized by such power of attorney, any money due to any such owner or payable to the person so authorized, or any certificate, coupon or share warrant, grant of land, or scrip, or allowance in lieu thereof, or other document which, by any law in force, or any usage existing at the time, is deliverable to the owner of any such stock or fund, or to the person authorized by any such power of attorney.

Origin]-Sec. 458, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 165, sec. 9; Forgery Act, 1861, 24-25 Vict., Imp., ch. 98.

Details of false pretence or fraud not essential to indictment]-See sees. 863 and 864; see also sees. 853, 855, 859, 860, as to stating the offence and the ordering of particulars.

Acknowledging instrument in false name.

411. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to seven years' imprisonment who, without lawful authority or excuse, the proof of which shall lie on him, acknowledges, in the name of any other person, before any court, judge or other person lawfully authorized in that behalf, any recognizance of bail, or any cognovit actionem, or consent for judgment, or judgment, or any deed or other instrument.

Origin]-Code of 1892, sec. 459; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 165, sec. 41. Second offences]-See secs. 465, 963 and 964. 0bta 4 to si the Criminal Code, which bear a general caption ' Fraud and Fraudulent Dealing with Property.' These sections point to the kind of thing which was intended to be made extraditable, e.g., under sec. 413, a director, manager, public officer,' etc., who destroys any record or makes a false entry in a book of account, is guilty of an offence. In sec. 415, any officer, clerk or servant, who makes or concurs in making a false entry in a material particular in a security or document, with intent to defraud, is also guilty of an offence. Under sec. 425, it is penal for a warehouseman to deliver a receipt for goods without receiving them. Under sec. 426, it is penal to dispose fraudulently of merchandise upon which money has been advanced or security given by a consignee. Under sec. 427, it is an offence to make a false statement in a receipt given under the Bank Act, or fraudulently to alienate property upon which such security is given." "In comment he said: "These serve as illustration of the kind of fraud which is thus rendered punishable under the law to which the Extradition Treaty applies. It is not everything which is criminal or reprehensible that is intended to be included; for we find separately catalogued, forgery, larceny, embezzlement, obtaining money or securities by false pretences, robbery, threatening with intent to extort, and perjury-all more or less akin to fraud; which it would be unnecessary to catalogue separately if intended to be covered by the same general words." 414. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to five years' imprisonment who, being a promoter, director, public officer or manager of any body corporate or public company, either existing or intended to be formed, makes, circulates, or publishes, or concurs in making, circulating or publishing any prospectus, statement or account which he knows to be false in any material particular, with intent to induce persons whether ascertained or not to become shareholders or partners, or with intent to deceive or defraud the members, shareholders or creditors, or any of them, whether ascertained or not, of such body corporate or public company, or with intent to induce any person to entrust or advance any property to such body corporate or public company, or to enter into any security for the benefit thereof.

FRAUD

Prospectus, statement or account]—It has been said in view of the history of see. 414, and having regard to the introduction of the word "prospectus," (in 1892) that what the section deals with is a prospectus, statement, or account made, circulated, or published by a promoter, director, public officer, or manager, in that capacity, and that it does not apply to a statement made by a guaranteeing director which related to his own financial standing, and had no relation to the company of which he was director or to its business or affairs or to its assets or liabilities. R. v. Cohen (1915), 33 O.L.R. 340, 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 238. 245.

It has been held that a newspaper article, which the director or manager of a company causes to be published as a news item and not over his own or the company's name and so done for the purpose of advancing the interests of the company, is included within the term "prospectus, statement or account" in Code see. 414. R. v. Buck, [1917] 1 W.W.R. 867, 874, 10 Alta. L.R. 437. An appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada was allowed on other grounds. Buck v. The King, 55 S.C.R. 133, [1917] 3 W.W.R. 117, 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 45, Mr. Justice Anglin adding that he was not altogether satisfied that persuading a reporter to publish in a newspaper an untrue article of the kind in question. (a laudatory write-up of an alleged new oil-well) is an offence within sec. 414 of the Code.

"Director"]—If the charge be against the company's president, the incorporation law of the province in which the company was incorporated may be looked at to establish that the president under that law must necessarily be a director, as where the directors elect a president from amongst themselves. R. v. Gillespie (1898), 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 551 (Que.).

Locality of the offence]—The general jurisdiction of courts of criminal jurisdiction in any province includes crimes committed within that province if the accused is apprehended there. Code sec. 577.

But by sec. 888 of the Code, nothing in the Code authorizes any court in one province of Canada to try any person for any offence committed entirely in another province; provided that every proprietor, publisher, editor or other person charged with the publication in a newspaper of any "defamatory libel," shall be dealt with, indicted, tried and punished in the province in which he resides, or in which such newspaper is printed. There is no similar exception as regards promoters, directors, etc., publishing false statements by mailing them in one province to persons in other provinces. Jurisdiction will attach to the courts of the province to an address in which the prospectus, financial statement, etc., has been mailed by the accused and where it was received by the person intended to be deceived thereby, if the accused is apprehended in that province. R. v. Gillespie (No. 2), 2 Can, Cr. Cas, 309 (Que.).

"Manager"]—A manager de facto is included, although not formally appointed. R. v. Lawson [1905] 1 K.B. 541, 74 L.J.K.B. 296, 69 J.P.

With in at to induce, etc., or with intent to deceive or defraud]--The intent may be inferred from the knowledge of the falsity of the statement, etc., and that it was intended that the statement was to be acted upon for any of the purposes indicated. R. v. Birt (1899), 63 J.P. 328.

Falsification of accounts by clerk, etc.-Making false entry.

415. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to seven years' imprisonment who, being or acting in the capacity of an officer, clerk, or servant, with intent to defraud,---

(a) destroys, alters, mutilates or falsifies any book, paper,

- writing, valuable security or document which belongs to or is in the possession of his employer, or has been received by him for or on behalf of his employer, or concurs in the same being done; or,
- (b) makes, or concurs in making, any false entry in, or omits or alters, or concurs in omitting or altering, any material particular from or in, any such book, paper, writing, valuable security or document.

Origin]-Sec. 366, Code of 1892; Falsification of Accounts Act, 1875, 38-39 Vict., Imp., ch. 24, sec. 1.

the employee with the correct balance which would have been on hand but for the latter's embezzlement, it is not a false entry by the embezzling employee. R. v. Williams (1899), 79 L.T. 739, 43 Sol. J. 201, 15 Times L.R. 158, 63 J.P. 103. But had a similar entry been made in a book kept for showing the balances held by the employee for his employer in respect of the third party's money it would then have been a "false entry." R. v. Williams, supra.

Falsification by omission in accounts by employee]—In charging a clerk or servant with criminally fraudulent omission to enter particulars in the books of account, care must be taken to state that the omitted particulars were "material particulars." R. v. Wilson (1913), 5 W.W.R. 620, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 162, 26 W.L.R. 148, (Sask.). The omission of the word "material" from the indictment will vitiate it, as that is an essential averment, and a ground for quashing the indictment. R. v. Wilson, supra.

Sec. 415 may be applied to a fraudulent omission to register a fare in an automatic registering machine. R. v. Solomons [1909] 2 K.B. 980 (a taxicab case); Code sec. 2, sub-sec. (42) defining the term "writing."

An unauthorized agreement made by the employee to set off his own indebtedness against the account due his employer is not included in the punishable omissions under sub-sec. (b), because the servant could not bind his employer by such an agreement in the absence of express authorization. Rex v. Wilson, supra.

Extra-territorial or partly extra-territorial offences]-It has been held that the English courts have jurisdiction in a case in which a British subject sent abroad to manage a branch of an English business omitted an entry in his returns to his employers knowing that the result would be a corresponding omission in his employers' books kept in England. He was held rightfully convicted in England, on the ground that by his mailing the false returns from abroad which were received and acted upon in England, he had completed in England an offence begun abroad. R. v. Oliphant [1905] 2 K.B. 67, 74 L.J.K.B. 591, 21 Times L.R. 416. But English courts have a general jurisdiction over extra-territorial offences committed by British subjects which is lacking in colonial courts; and it may be doubted whether Canadian courts would have had jurisdiction under similar circumstances had the head office of the business been in Canada and the branch in a foreign country. Compare re Bigamy sections of the Code, 27 S.C.R. 461, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 172; R. v. Jameson [1896] 2 Q.B. 425, 18 Cox C.C. 392, (under the Foreign Enlistment Act, Imp.); McLeod v. Attorney-General of N.S.W. [1891] A.C. 455; R. v. Russell [1901] A.C. 446, 20 Cox C.C. 51, 70 L.J.K.B. 998; Jefferys v. Boosey, 4 H.L.C. 815.

Formal charge in lieu of indictment]-In Alberta and Saskatchewan the formal charge may include this offence although the preliminary enquiry on which the committal was based was for theft only. R. v.

Wilson (1913), 5 W.W.R. 620, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 162, 26 W.L.R. 148 (Sask.); re Criminal Code, 43 S.C.R. 434.

(c) being a trader and indebted to an amount exceeding one thousand dollars, is unable to pay his creditors in full and has not kept such books of account as, according to the usual course of trade or business in which he may have been engaged, are necessary to exhibit or explain his transactions, unless he b able to account for his losses to the satisfaction of the court or judge and to show that the absence of such books was not intended to defraud his creditors, but no person shall be prosecuted under the provisions of this paragraph by reason only of his having failed to keep such books of account at a period of more than five years before the date of such inability to pay his creditors.

Origin]—1917 Can., ch. 14, sec. 4; 4 Edw. VII, ch. 7, sec. 1; sec. 368, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 173, sec. 28; 22 Vict., Can., ch. 96, sec. 21.

A conclusion of fraud depends upon the absence or presence of an honest belief. If a belief is honestly entertained, the fact that it resulted from a want of skill or incompetence, or lacks reasonable grounds, does not warrant a conclusion of fraud. Clement v. The King, (1914) 6 W.W.R. 414 (Can.), per Anglin, J., citing Glasier v. Rolls, 42 Ch. D. 436.

Transfer with intent to defraud]—It is not essential that the debt of the creditor should, at the time of the sale, etc., be actually due. R. v. Henry, 21 O.R. 113; Macdonald v. McCall, 12 A.R. (Ont.) 393.

An assignment to a trustee for creditors even with preferences, where the property has been handed over to the trustee in accordance therewith, is not a violation of criminal law even-if made by the debtor in breach of prior agreements to prefer other creditors. R. v. Shaw, 31, N.S.R. 534.

The preferences may be subject to attack in civil proceedings because of their infringing a provincial law dealing with the distribution of insolvent's effects in the absence of any federal bankruptey law applicable thereto.

It is properly left to the jury to say whether the defendant put the property out of his hands, transferred or disposed of it for the purpose of defrauding his creditors, although in the course of that transaction he satisfied a debt due to the creditor to whom the property was assigned. R. v. Potter (1860), 10 U.C.C.P. 39.

for the purpose of getting S. to Montreal to enable his creditors there to put pressure on him, in order to get their claims paid or secured, a transfer made by S's father of all his property for the benefit of the Montreal creditors was set aside as founded on an abuse of the criminal process of the court. Shorey v. Jones (1888), 15 Can. S.C.R. 398, affirming 20 N.S.R. 378.

As to the sufficiency of the evidence to support the charge, see R. v. Ayoup, 39 N.B.R. 598, 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 375, R. v. Shaw, 31 N.S.E. 534; R. v. Van Meter, 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 207; R. v. Porter, 35 O.L.R. 339, 9 O.W.N. 378, 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 39.

Concealing property with fraudulent intent]—See Bryce v. Wilks, 11 Que. Q.B. 464, 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 445 (under a Quebee statute); Baxter v. Gordon, 13 O.L.R. 598.

Evidence of two other concealments a few days prior to that being tried would be admissible, not in proof of the charge, but as evidence of intent to defraud and of guilty knowledge. Re Goodman, 10 W.W.R. 781, 786; R. v. Shellaker, [1914] 1 K.B. 414, 83 L.J.K.B. 413; R. v. Ball, [1911] A.C. 47 and Reg. v. Ollis, [1900] 2 K.B. 758, 781, 69 L.J.Q.B. 918.

Failure of trader to keep books]—In R. v. Porter, 35 O.L.R. 339, 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 39, an indictment under sub-sec. (c) was held bad for failure to allege any time for which the failure to keep books had continued.

Since the decision in R. v. Porter, 35 O.L.R. 339, sub-sec. (c) has been amended (1917) by deleting the words " for five years next before such in ability" which formerly preceded the words "kept such books of account" in sub-sec. (c), and the words commencing as follows: "but no person shall be prosecuted, etc." (to the end of sub-sec. (c)) in its present form were then added. This alteration is evidently intended to make it clear that a person who has been a "trader" for less than five years is amenable to sub-sec. (c) as well as the person who has been in business for a longer time.

It would seem to be necessary to prove that the accused was "a trader," a term which is left undefined by the Code, but is commonly used in bankruptcy laws. See the repealed Insolvent Act of 1875, Can.; Creighton v. Chittick, 7 S.C.R. 348.

Second offences]-See secs. 465, 963 and 964.

Criminal off-ence against bankruptcy law]—Sec. 417 is in effect a bankruptcy law for the purposes of the Extradition Convention of 1907 with the U.S.A. R. v. Stone (1911), 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 377, and see R. v. Stone, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 249; re Goodman, 10 W.W.R. 781 and 1178, 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 84 and 254, 26 Mau. R. 537; re Webber, 20 Can. Cr. Cas. 1 and 6.

Sales in fraud of unregistered title]—Where the owner of land conveyed to the accused by a deed absolute in form, but intended by both parties to be held only as a security for a loan, and after default in payment of the loan, the accused made and registered a conveyance also absolute in form to a brother who already had notice of the terms of the original conveyance, for the same expressed consideration as was stated in the original conveyance, but the brother did not accept the deed or pay the money, a conviction of the accused under see. 421 for fraudulently selling with the intention of defeating the unregistered equity of redemption of the original owner was set aside on the ground that the acts stated did not constitute an offence under that section. R. v. McDevitt (1910), 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 331, 22 O.L.R. 490.

Referring to see. 421, Magee, J.A., said, in R. v. McDevitt, 22 O.L.R. 490, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 331, at 341:--"It was argued that to be unregistered within the meaning of the section there must be something in writing, something which could be registered, and also that an equity of redemption did not come within its wording. I am not at present prepared to assent to either of these propositions, though much may be said in support of the latter at least. But it is not, I think, necessary to consider them. The case can and should be disposed of on the short ground that, at the time this prosecution was instituted, there had not in fact been any sale."

- (a) being the holder of any lease or license issued under the provisions of any Act relating to gold or silver mining, or by any persons owning land supposed to contain any gold or silver, by fraudulent device or contrivance defrauds, or attempts to defraud. His Majesty, or any person, of any gold, silver or money payable or reserved by such lease, or, with such intent as aforesaid, conceals or makes a false statement as to the amount of gold or silver procured by him; or,
- (b) not being the owner or agent of the owner of mining claims then being worked, and not being thereun to authorized in writing by the proper officer in that behalf named in any Act relating to mines in force in the province in which the offence is alleged to have been committed, sells or purchases, except to or from such owner or authorized person, any rock, ore, mineral, stone, quartz or other substance containing gold or silver or any unsmelted, or untreated. or unmanufactured or partly smelted, partly treated or partly manufactured gold or silver; or,
- (c) purchases any rock, ore, mineral, stone, quartz or other substance containing gold or silver, or any unsmelted, or untreated, or unmanufactured, or partly smelted, partly treated, or partly manufactured gold or silver, except from such owner or authorized person, and does not, at the same time, execute in triplicate an instrument in writing, stating the place and time of purchase, and the quantity, quality and value of gold or silver so purchased, and the name or names of the person or persons from whom the same was purchased, and within ten days

(d) The two next preceding subsections (b) and (c) shall not extend or apply to the Yukon Territory.

Origin]-Sec. 375, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 164, secs. 27, 28, 29; Canada Statutes, 1909, 8-9 Edw. VII, ch. 9.

Sale of crude gold or silver ore by unauthorized person]—In order to constitute a sale it is not necessary that the price should be fixed by the contract; it is sufficient that it be left to be fixed in the manner thereby agreed. The maxim "id certum cat quod certum reddi potest" applies. R. v. Barber (Ont.), 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 236.

Where unsmelted ore is turned over to a smelter proprietor by a person having no mine owner's authority under sec. 424, upon an agreement to pay for the silver realized on smelting, the transaction is not a sale merely of the refined silver but of the crude ore, and is an offence under sec. 424. R. v. Barber (Ont.), 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 236.

Laying property in His Majesty or in mining licensee]—See sees. 866, 893.

Details of false pretence or fraud not essential to indictment]-Sec secs. 863 and 864; and see secs. 853, 855, 859, 860, as to stating the offence and the ordering of particulars.

Second offences]-See secs. 465, 963 and 964.

Search warrant for mined gold or silver unlawfully possessed]-See sec. 637, 750 (d).

Unlawful possession of crude gold or silver ore]—See sec. 424s, 637, 750 (d).

Theft from mines]—See secs. 353, 378, 424, 424A, 637, 750 (d), 866, 893.

Unlawful possession of rock, ore, or quartz containing gold or silver.—Determination of value.—Limitation of proceedings.

424A. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who, having in his possession, or upon his premises, with his knowledge, any rock, ore, mineral. stone, or quartz of a value of not less than twenty-five cents per pound, or in the case of mica of a value of not less than seven cents per pound, or any partly melted, partly treated or partly manufactured gold or silver which there is reasonable ground to suspect has been stolen or has been dealt with contrary to the provisions of paragraph (b) or (c) of section 424, is unable or refuses to account satisfactorily for or prove his right to the possession of the same.

2. If in any proceeding under this section any question arises as to the value of any rock, ore, mineral, stone or quartz, the judge, magistrate, justice or other officer before whom the proceeding is pending may order such assay or assays, test or tests, to be made as may be deemed requisite for determining such value.

3. No action or prosecution for a violation of this section shall be commenced or undertaken in any part of Canada unless or until an order has been passed by the Governor in Counci! declaring this section to be in force in such part of Canada. Any such order may be amended, revoked or renewed from time to time in whole or in part by any subsequent order in council.

4. No prosecution shall be had under this section unless it had been initiated on the information or complaint of a manager or director of a mining company or on the information or complaint of some one thereunto authorized by a mining company or a manager or director thereof, or by or with the authority of the attorney general of the province in which the offence is alleged to have been committed, or by the owner or part owner of a mine who deposes under oath that he believes that rock, ore, or other substance similar to some of those mentioned in this section has been stolen or wrongfully taken from the mine.

Origin]-Can. Statutes, 1910, 9-10 Edw. VII, ch. 12.

Order bringing into force]-See Proclamation bringing into force in Ontario and Quebec, 17 May, 1910, 43 Can. Gazette, 3592.

This section is operative only in such districts as may be named in the Order-in-Council under sub-sec. (3), and the proclamation for any district may be revoked in like manner.

Search warrant for mined gold or silver unlawfully possessed] See sec 637, 750 (d).

How property in ores may be laid]—Sees. 866 and 893, which deal specifically with offences under sees. 378 and 424, probably do not apply to see. 424A, which was added as a distinct section of the Code.

Being unable or refusing to account]—A person who is unable or refuses to account satisfactorily for, or to prove his right to the possession of, the ore specified, before a conviction is liable under sec. 424A. 427. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to three years' imprisonment who,—

(a) wilfully makes any false statement in any receipt, certificate or acknowledgment for grain, timber or other goods or property which can be used for any of the purposes mentioned in the Bank Act; or,

(b) having given, or after any clerk or person in his employ has, to his knowledge, given, as having been received by him in any mill, warehouse, vessel, cove or other place, any such receipt, certificate or acknowledgment for any such grain, timber or other goods or property, or having obtained any such receipt, certificate or acknowledgment, and after having endorsed or assigned it to any bank or person, afterwards, and without the consent of the holder or endorsee in writing, or the production and delivery of the receipt, certificate or acknowledgment, wilfully alienates or parts with, or does not deliver to such holder or owner of such receipt, certificate or acknowledgment, the grain, timber, goods or other property therein mentioned.

Transfers in fraud of Bank on security under the Bank Act]-See the Bank Act, Can., 1913, ch. 9 and amendments, 1915, ch. 1, and 1916, ch. 10.

Under the Bank Act it is an offence for a Bank to acquire, except in accordance with that Act, any warehouse receipt, bill of lading or other security provided for by secs. 86-90 of the Bank Act, 1913. 3-4 Geo. V, Can., eh. 9, sec. 141. Any person having knowledge of the holding by a bank of a warehouse receipt, bill of lading, or security by receipt specially provided for under the Bank Act is liable to imprisonment for a term not exceeding three years if he transfers or withholds the goods covered thereby in fraud of the Bank. Bank Act, 1913. Can.

ch. 9, sec. 144. As to frauds by consignees, see Code sec. 146. Banking corporations in Canada must be authorized by the Treasury Board, a branch of the Government, before commencing a banking business. And any person is guilty of an offence against the Bank Act if he uses the word "bank" or the words "savings bank," "banking company," "banking house," "banking association," or "banking institution" (or any word or words of import equivalent thereto in any foreign language) in any sign or in an advertisement or in a title to represent or describe his business or any part of his business without being authorized so to do by the Bank Act or by some other statute. Bank Act, 1913, Can., ch. 9, sec. 156. But it is to be noted that the selection of inhibited terms does not include the word banker. A private banking business may, it seems, be conducted under an individual name with the word "banker" added, but not the word "bank" or any of the other inhibited words. Exceptional facilities for taking security from their wholesale and manufacturing customers are provided by the Bank Act for the benefit of banks having Canadian incorporation or charter or British or other banks who have obtained the necessary license from the Canadian Treasury Board to operate a banking business in Canada. This security is evidenced by a statutory form of receipt provided by the Bank Act, which does not require registration as a chattel mortgage would, except as to security given by a farmer on his live stock under the amendment made to the Bank Act in 1916, by 6-7 Geo. V, Can., ch. 10. Its operation as a security is limited to the cases for which the Bank Act provides.

A bank may also lend money to the owner, tenant or occupier of land for the purchase of seed grain upon the security of any crop to be grown from such seed grain. The security may be taken in the form set forth in schedule G. to the Bank Act, or in a form to the like effect. The bank by virtue of such security acquires a first and preferential lien and claim for the sum secured and interest thereon upon the seed grain purchased and the crop covered by the security, as well before as after the severance of the crop from the soil, and upon the grain threshed therefrom, and acquires the same rights and powers in respect of such seed grain and of the grain so threshed as if it had acquired such rights and powers by virtue of a warehouse receipt. The bank has the right, through its servants or agents in case of neglect to care for and harvest the crop, or in case of any attempt to dispose of the crop without the consent of the bank or in case of the seizure of the crop under process of law, to enter upon the land upon which the crop is grown, to take possession of, care for and harvest the crop and thresh the grain. 5 Geo. V, 1915, Can., ch. 1.

A bank may lend money to any wholesale purchaser or shipper of or dealer in products of agriculture, the forest, quarry and mine, or the sea, lakes and rivers, or any wholesale purchaser or shipper of or dealer in live stock or dead stock or the products thereof, upon the

If, with the consent of the bank, the products, goods, wares and merchandise, live stock or dead stock or the products thereof, upon the security of which money has been so loaned are removed and other products, goods, wares and merchandise, live stock and dead stock, or the products thereof of substantially the same character, are respectively substituted therefor, then to the extent of the value of the products, goods, wares and merchandise or live stock or dead stock or the products thereof so removed, the products, goods, wares and merchandise, live stock or dead stock or the products thereof so substituted are covered by such security as if originally covered thereby; but failure to obtain the consent of the bank to any such substitution does not affect the validity of the security either as respects any products. goods, wares and merchandise, or live stock or dead stock or the products thereof actually substituted as aforesaid or in any other particular. Any such security may be given by the owner of the said products, goods, wares and merchandise, stock or products thereof, or grain. The security may be taken in the form set forth in schedule C. to the Act, or to the like effect. The Bank Act, 3-4 Geo. V, (1913), ch. 9, sec. 88.

The bank acquires the same rights and powers in respect of the products, goods, wares and merchandise, stock or products thereof, or grain covered thereby as if it had acquired the same by virtue of a warehouse receipt; provided, however, that the wages, salaries or other remuneration of persons employed by any wholesale purchaser, shipper or dealer, by any wholesale manufacturer, or by any farmer in connection with any of the several wholesale businesses referred to, or in connection with the farm, owing in respect of a period not exceeding three months, shall be a charge upon the property covered by the said security in priority to the claim of the bank thereunder, and such wages, salaries or other remuneration shall be paid by the bank if the bank takes possession or in any way disposes of the said security or of the products, goods, wares and merchandise, stock or products thereof, or grain covered thereby. The Bank Act, 3-4 Geo. V, (1913), eh. 9, sec. 88.

Goods purchased from the wholesale manufacturer thereof in the ordinary course of business without notice that he has given security thereon to a bank under secs. 86 to 88 of the Act, will become the property of the purchaser free from any claim of the bank under the security. "Public stores"]-For definition, see sec. 2, sub-secs (28) and (34).

"Knowing them to bear such mark"]-These words give statutory confirmation to the interpretation laid down in Reg. v. Sleep, 8 Cox C.C. 472. The prisoner had possession of government stores some of which were marked with the broad arrow. He was indicted under a statute which made it a criminal offence for any person to have stores or goods so marked in his "custody, possession or keeping." The jury in answer to a question whether the prisoner knew that the copper or any part of it was marked, answered, "We have not sufficient evidence before us to show that he knew it." Held, that it was necessary for the prosecution to show affirmatively a possession by defendant with knowledge that the stores were marked with the broad arrow. Cockburn, C.J., said :-- " The ordinary principle that there must be a guilty mind to constitute a guilty act applies to this case and must be imported into this statute. It is true that the statute says nothing about knowledge, but this must be imported into the statute." But see sec. 991, sub-sec. 2, as to presumption of this knowledge in certain cases where junk dealers are concerned.

Being in possession without being able to justify.—Summoning former possessors.—Every unlawful possessor liable.

436. Every one, not being in His Majesty's service, or a dealer in marine stores or a dealer in old metals, in whose possession any public stores bearing any such mark are found who, when taken or summoned before two justices, does not satisfy such justices that he came lawfully by such stores, is guilty of an offence and liable, on summary conviction, to a fine of twenty-five dollars.

2. If any such person satisfies such justices that he came lawfully by the stores so found, the justices, in their discretion, as the evidence given or the circumstances of the case require, may summon before them every person through whose hands such stores appear to have passed.

Fraud, etc., in connection with sale, etc., of military stores.

436A. Every person is guilty of an indictable offenee and liable to imprisonment for two years, or to a fine not exceeding five thousand dollars, or to both imprisonment and fine, who knowingly sells or delivers, or causes to be sold or delivered, to His Majesty or to any officer or servant of His Majesty, any defective military, militia or naval stores of any kind or description, whether such stores are for His Majesty in the right of His Government of Canada, or in the right of any other of His Majesty's dominions, or who in any way commits any act of dishonesty, fraud, or deception upon His Majesty or any of His Majesty's officers or servants in connection with the sale or lease or purchase or delivery or manufacture of such military, militia or naval stores.

2. If any offence referred to in this section is committed by a body corporate, every director, officer, agent and employee of such body corporate who has knowingly taken any part or share in such fraud, dishonesty or deception, or who knows or had reason to suspect that such fraud, dishonesty or deception would be or was being committed, or knows or had reason to suspect that such fraud, dishonesty or deception has been committed, and does not at once inform His Majesty thereof, shall be liable as well as the body corporate to the penalties imposed by this section in all respects as if such offence was committed by said director or other person, and every such body corporate, director or other person convicted of such offence shall be thereafter incapable of contracting with His Majesty or with any of His

Pretending to practise witchcraft, etc.

443. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to one year's imprisonment who pretends to exercise or use any kind of witchcraft, sorcery, enchantment or conjuration, or undertakes to tell fortunes, or pretends from his skill or knowledge in any occult or crafty science, to discover where or in what manner any goods or chattels supposed to have been stolen or lost may be found.

Origin]-Sec. 396, Code of 1892; the Vagrancy Act, 1824, 5 Geo. IV, Imp., ch. 83, sec. 4; 9 Geo. II. Imp., ch. 5.

Intent to deceive]—The first part of see. 443 is derived from the English Vagrancy Act of 1824, but with some variance in language. The English Act was directed to the punishment of "every person pretending or professing to tell fortunes or using any subtle craft, means or device by palmistry or otherwise to deceive or impose upon any of His Majesty's subjects." So, under the English Act, it was clear that there must be (1) a pretending or professing of the character indicated, and (2) an intent to deceive.

Under the Code, the clause as to intent to deceive does not appear; and the words "or professing" as an alternative to "pretending" are also omitted. The variance in language has not simplified the interpretation. The English Act indicates as essentials of the offence under it, the two elements of (1) fraud by the intent to deceive or impose upon some one; and (2) the acts designated as fortune-telling, palmistry, etc. As to fortune-telling, the legislative authority, by the form of the law itself, implies that no one really could tell fortunes, so that ingredient of the offence is referred to as " pretending or professing to tell fortunes." Moreover, the description of the offence as " pretending to tell fortunes" imports that deception is practised by doing so. Monck v. Hilton (1877), 46 L.J.M.C. 63, 2 Ex. Div. 268; Penny v. Hanson (1887), 56 L.J.M.C. 41, 18 Q.B.D. 478; R. v. Entwistle [1899] 1 Q.B. 846, 68 L.J.Q.B. 580; Davis v. Curry (1918), 87 L.J.K.B. 292. These cases in effect hold that while there must be in the offence an intention to deceive, that a general intent to deceive is implied by the language of the English Act apart from the words " with intent to deceive or impose on any of His Majesty's subjects." The dropping of the words quoted, in the framing of the Code would thus make little difference in its interpretation. It might be necessary at a trial under the English Act to prove that there was an intent to deceive a particular person or persons (any of His Majesty's subjects); but under the Code it seems a charge might be supported on proof of an intent to deceive the public generally or such of them as might be induced to consult the pre-There must have been the intent to deceive, but no more tender. specific allegation of the intention is required than that contained in the words "did pretend and profess to tell fortunes." R. v. Entwistle [1899] 1 Q.B. 846, 68 L.J.Q.B. 580; Davis v. Curry (1918) 87 L.J.K.B. 292. There may even be an innocent pretense of pretending to tell fortunes, as was illustrated by Avory, J., in his dissenting judgment in Davis v. Curry, supra, where he said (87 L.J.K.B. 292, at 295):-"If a person should say, 'I am not a professional fortune-teller, but I will, to amuse you, pretend to tell your fortune', that would not be such a professing as is intended by the statute; and it would be a sufficient defence to plead that there was no intention to deceive, as the intention was to amuse. In that case the magistrate would be justified in saying that the person was not pretending to tell fortunes, but was practising a joke." The magistrate trying the case must not, however, reject the evidence of defendant's witnesses in support of the defence theory that the defendant believed that she believed in her professed supernormal powers as a spiritualistic medium and clairvoyante, for such evidence is relevant though not conclusive on the question of intent to deceive. Davis v. Curry, supra. Before making a conviction the magistrate is to decide whether there was that intent and it is not correct to say that the telling of fortunes, even for gain, is prohibited irrespective of the intent; Davis v. Curry, supra; nor is a magistrate justified in refusing to accept evidence of the bona fides of accused in stating her belief in her supernormal powers although the magistrate has concluded that such proof would not alter his view of the case. The dissent of Mr. Justice Avory in the Davis case was on this question of relevancy. His view of the case brought against a professed spiritualistic medium and clairvoyante was that it would be unfortunate if the time of a magistrate should be wasted in enquiring whether any human being "believes in such nonsense as the appellant talked in this case." Sankey and Darling, J.J., remitted the case to the magistrate on the ground that the magistrate was wrong in not hearing the evidence of defence witnesses tendered to substantiate that the accused was a bona fide believer in her professions. Sankey, J., said it was quite open to the magistrate to find that the defendant professed or pretended to tell fortunes with intent to deceive. Darling, J., (87 L.J.K.B. 292, at 295, 296) explained the judgment in the prior case of R. v. Entwistle [1899] 1 Q.B. 846, as limited merely to the point that where there was undoubtedly evidence of intention to deceive or impose upon by pretending or professing to tell fortunes, it was unnecessary to state it in the charge. As to the Davis case then in hand, he added that it would be open to the magistrate, after hearing the evidence offered to convict if he were of opinion that the accused cannot have believed in the fortunes she was pretending to tell the three women who interviewed her (as to fictitious relatives) because all the statements were false, since she (the accused) gave a history of people who did not exist. or (

An intent to deceive has been held to be essential to the offence of fortune-telling under Code sec. 443, but it is not necessary that the attempted deception should have been successful; a conviction may be supported, although the accused had taken from the persons whose for tunes were told a writing to the effect that they understood that what was being done was merely an examination of the lines of their hands and giving information in respect thereof in accordance with books on the subject of palmistry, if it be found that the taking of such writing was a mere sham and intended to evade the law. R. v. Monsell (1916), 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 1, 35 O.L.R. 336, distinguishing R. v. Chilcott, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 27.

The word "undertakes," as used in this section of the Code, implies an assertion of the power to perform, and a person undertaking to tell fortunes impliedly asserts his power to tell fortunes and in doing so is asserting the possession of a power which he does not possess and is thereby practising deception, and when this assertion of power is used by him with the intent of deluding and defrauding others, the offence aimed at by the enactment is complete. R. v. Marcott (1901), 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 437, 2 O.L.R. 105, per Armour, C.J.O.

A conviction obtained upon the evidence of a person who was a decoy, but not a dupe or a victim, was affirmed. R. v. Milford (1890), 20 Ont. R. 306.

Offering by advertisement in newspapers to cast nativities and answer astrological questions, and pretending by circular letter, in return for certain remuneration, to give a description of the person, liability to disease, occupation most suitable, marriage, etc., by the position of the planets at the nativity, was ample evidence that appellant had pretended to tell fortunes, without proof that he had actually told anybody anything. Penny v. Hanson, 18 Q.B.D. 478, 56 L.J.M.C. 41, 56 L.T. 235, 16 Cox C.C. 173.

Second offences]-See sec. 465, 757, 963, 964, 982.

Conspiracy to defraud.

444. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to seven years' imprisonment who conspires with any other person, by deceit or falsehood or other fraudulent means, to defraud the public or any person, ascertained or unascertained, or to affect the public market price of stocks, shares, merchandise, or anything else publicly sold, whether such deceit or falsehood

Offence committed in pursuance of the common design]—If several persons form a common intention to prosecute any unlawful purpose, and to assist each other therein, each of them is a party to every offence committed by a y one of them in the prosecution of such common purpose, the commission of which offence was, or ought to have been known to be a probable consequence of the prosecution of such common purpose. Sec. 69 (2). It is not essential to the offence of conspiracy to defraud that the fraud should have actually been carried out; but some overt act towards that end must be shown. Horsman v. The Queen, 16 U.C.Q.B. 543.

Conspiracy to commit indictable offence]—Sec. 573 makes it an indictable offence to conspire to commit any indictable offence where the Code does not make other provision for such conspiracy. Treasonable conspiracies are dealt with by secs. 74 and 75; conspiracy to intimidate a legislature by sec. 79; conspiracy to murder by sec. 266; conspiracy to defile by sec. 218; conspiracy to bring a false accusation by sec. 178; conspiracies in restraint of trade by secs. 496-504, 581, 590 and 1012. Sec. 444 deals with conspiracies to defraud. These various sections appear not to exhaust all the classes of conspiracies, and a conspiracy may, it seems, still be laid at common law in cases to which the common law extends which are not covered by the Code. See notes to sees, 15 and 16.

Conspiracy to defraud by deceit, etc.]—In R. v. Sinclair, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 20 at 27, Wetmore, J., said:—" The question was raised whether the several counts of the charge are valid in form, in so far as the first two counts are concerned, because it is not alleged that the conspiracy was made by deceit, falschood, 'or other fraudulent means'; I do not feel called upon to express a decided opinion upon this question. In Regina v. Skelton, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 467, 3 Terr. L.R. 58, a charge was laid under sec. 147 of the Code (now sec. 175) for making a false solemn declaration; the charge omitted to allege that the false declaration was made 'with intent to mislead': it was held that the omission of that allegation did not vitiate the charge. I have always had doubts whether that case was correctly decided in the respect mentioned, and if I am not bound by that decision, I think I would be inclined to hold the charges in this case bad in form."

An agreement made with a fraudulent mind to do that which, if done, would give to the prosecutor a right of action founded on fraud is a criminal conspiracy. R. v. Aspinall, 2 Q.B.D. 48, at 59, per Brett, J.A.

Where one of two partners combines, during the continuance of the partnership, with a third party to assist the one partner to cheat the other with regard to the division of the partnership property on a contemplated dissolution of the partnership, this combination is a eriminal conspiracy. R. v. Warburton, L.R. 1 C.C.R. 274, 40 L.J.M.C. 22, 11 Cox C.C. 684, 23 L.T. 473.

On a charge of conspiracy to defraud by setting fire to defendant's own store building and contents so as to obtain the proceeds of an excessive insurance, where it appears that the insurance has been largely increased during the month preceding the fire, the defendant's signed statements of assets and liabilities submitted from time to time for the purpose of obtaining advances from a bank within a period of three months before the fire are properly admissible for the purpose of showing intent by the acts of the accused with respect to his financial affairs at a time not too remote to be connected with the offence. R. v. Wilson (1911), 1 W.W.R. 272, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 105 (Alta.); R. v. Clark, 2 B.C.R. 191. See as to fraudulent use of street car transfers. R. v. Bythell (1915), 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 276 (Ont.).

The words, "other fraudulent means," are to be restricted in their meaning by the particular words which precede them, to other fraudulent means in the nature of deceit and falsehood; R. v. Sinclair, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 20 at 28, per Newlands, J.; and a conspiracy to use unlawful devices at an election has been held not to be included. Ibid. But a conspiracy to obtain a passport by false representations has been held indictable in England as tending to bring about a public mischief. R. v. Brailsford [1905] 2 K.B. 730, 75 L.J.K.B. 64, 69 J.P. 370, 93 L.T. 401.

Both the Sinclair case and that of Brailsford et al., supra, appear to fall within the class of cases in which an act involving public mischief agreed to be done between more persons than one, is held to be the subject of conspiracy at common law. In this view, the decision in R. v. Sinclair, supra, is to be strictly limited to an interpretation of sec. 444 under which the indictment was laid, without regard to what might have been held upon the same facts had there been an indictment framed for the common law offence indicated in the following extract from Stephen's Digest of Criminal Law, article 160:---

"Acts deemed to be injurious to the public have, in some instances, been held to be misdemeanors, because it appeared to the court before which they were tried that there was an analogy between such acts and other acts which had been held to be misdemeanors, although such first-mentioned acts were not forbidden by any express law, and although no precedent exactly applied to them. This has been done especially in the case of agreements between more persons than one to carry out purposes which the judge regarded as injurious to the public, in which case such acts have been held to amount to the offence of conspiracy; or when they have been done by a public officer in relation to his official duty; or when they tended in any way to pervert the adminis tration of justice, or to disturb the public peace; or when the proceeding has been by parliamentary impeachment." Compare R. v. Fellowes, 19 U.C.Q.B. 48; R. v. Bunting, 7 Ont. R. 524; R. v. Defries, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 207. See also, as to the introduction of English criminal law in the Canadian provinces, Code secs. 10-12.

An agreement to fraudulently represent a corporation to be in a sound financial condition when the conspirators know it to be insolvent has been held a conspirator to defraud. R. v. Esdaile, 1 F. & F. 213; so also an agreement to induce a false belief among investors that there is a bona fide market for certain shares or to fraudulently procure shares to be given a quotation not justified in fact upon a stock exchange and thereby give them a fictitious value in fraud of the public. R. v. Aspinall (1876), 13 Cox C.C. 573, 2 Q.B.D. 48; Scott v. Brown [1892] 2 Q.B. 724.

It is a conspiracy to defraud to form an agreement to falsely antedate a conveyance of property for the purpose of defrauding an execution creditor; R. v. Cox, 14 Q.B.D. 153; or to agree to make false representations so as to collect by legal process money not owing; R. v. Taylor, 15 Cox C.C. 265; or to agree to falsely represent a proposed purchaser of goods to be solvent so as to enable him to get the goods on credit without any intention of paying for them. R. v. Orman, 14 Cox C.C. 381. The holding of sham auctions with sham bidders, so as to sell goods at grossly excessive prices, by inducing the public to consider the false bids as genuine offers by persons conversant with values, may sustain an indictment; R. v. Lewis, 11 Cox C.C. 404, distinguishing R. v. Levine (1867), 10 Cox C.C. 374; cnd as to fraudulent sales of other person's goods at undervalue, see Levi v. Levi, 6 C. & P. 239.

As to conspiracy to defraud a railway by collusion with its employees, see R. v. Carlin, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 507, 12 Que. K.B. 483, R v. Defries, 25 Ont. R. 645, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 207.

It will be assumed that a conspiracy alleged in an indictment (or charge) to have taken place within two counties some distance apart is not identical with a conspiracy proved to have been wholly carried on in only one of the counties named, where the local jurisdiction of the county tribunal to entertain the case is displaced because the conspiracy was entirely in the other county. R. v. O'Gorman, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 173, 18 O.L.R. 427; Fournier v. Attorney-General, 19 Que. K.B. 436, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 113.

Particulars]—An information laid in general terms, charging that the accused did in specified years "conspire with others whose names are unknown, by deceit, falsehood and other fraudulent means to defraud the public" sufficiently states the offence under sec. 444 to give jurisdiction to hold the preliminary enquiry. R. v. Phillips, 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 89, 11 O.L.B. 478, 7 O.W.B. 418. The magistrate has, by sec. 679 (e), the power to regulate the course of the enquiry, and this presumably

Every count in an indictment is to contain so much detail of the circumstances of the offence as is sufficient to give the accused reasonable information as to the act or omission to be proved against him and to identify the transaction referred to; Code sec. 853; but the lack of such details will not be a ground for quashing but only for a motion for particulars under secs. 859 and 860, unless an essential ingredient of the offence is omitted or is not stated with sufficient certainty so that the indictment does not show an indictable offence. R. v. Weir, 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 102, 8 Que. Q.B. 521; R. v. Goodfellow, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 424, 11 O.L.R. 359; Code sec. 853 (1). Sec. 863 declares that a count for conspiracy by fraudulent means is not to be deemed insufficient because it does not set out "in detail" in what the fraudulent means consisted, but this is to be read along with sec. 852, which requires that it should state "in substance" some indictable offence, that is to say, some specific crime.

A conspiracy to commit a crime can readily be described and can be stated sufficiently without detail; but in a case of conspiracy to do that which is not a crime, or to do a wrong which is not well known as being the subject of a criminal conspiracy, the facts should be set out with such particularity that it may appear whether or not the conspiracy charged is really an indictable offence. R. v. Goodfellow, 11 O.L.R. 359, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 424, at 428, per R. M. Meredith, J.A.

It is not necessary to set out in the indictment overt acts done in pursuance of the illegal agreement or conspiracy to defraud. R. v. Hutchinson (1904), 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 486, 11 B.C.R. 24. But see Code sec. 859, empowering the court to order particulars. The particulars served under order are entered in the record and the trial proceeds as if the indictment had been amended in conformity therewith. Code sec. 860.

The inclusion of a separate and distinct offence as a particular furnished under sec. 859 upon a charge of conspiracy will not authorize a conviction which would otherwise not be within the scope of the indictment. R. v. Sinclair (1909), 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 20.

An indictment charging that two parties named did conspire by false pretenses and subtle means and devices to obtain from F. divers large sums of money of the moneys of F., and to cheat and defraud him thereof was held good although the means of the alleged conspiracy were not stated in detail. R. v. Kenrick (1843), 5 Q.B. 49. Lord Denman, C.J., in that case, said: "There have not been wanting occasions when learned judges have expressed regret that a charge so little calculated to inform a defendant of the facts intended to be proved upon him should be considered by the law as well laid. All who have watched the proceedings of courts are aware that there is danger of injustice from calling for a defence against so vague an accusation, and judges of high authority have been desirous of restraining its generality within some reasonable bounds. The ancient form, however, has kept its place and the expedient now employed in practice of furnishing defendants with a particular of the acts charged upon them is probably effectual for preventing surprise and unfair advantages."

Venue]—The venue may be laid either where the agreement was entered into or where any overt act was done in pursuance of the common design. R. v. Connolly (1894), 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 468, 25 Ont. R. 151.

And see R. v. O'Gorman, 18 O.L.R. 427, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 173; Fournier v. Attorney-General, 19 Que. K.B. 436, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 113.

Identity of person]—If there is any evidence to submit to a jury on a question of disputed identity of one of the persons accused, the verdict will be affirmed although the complainant who had given positive evidence of identity at the preliminary enquiry had, at the trial, been shaken in his opinion by the production of another person having a strong personal resemblance to the prisoner whose identity is in question, particularly where such other person is shown to have been elsewhere when the overt acts were committed with which the persons accused are connected by the evidence. R. v. Harvey (1918), 42 O.L.R. 187, 13 O.W.N. 455.

Explanation of act or declaration of accused]—As, in trials for conspiracy, whatever the accused may have done or said at any meeting alleged to have been held in pursuance of the conspiracy may be given in evidence against him on the part of the prosecution, so, on the other hand, any other part of his conduct at the same meeting will be allowed to be proved in his behalf: for his intention and design at a particular time are best explained by a complete view of every part of his conduct at that time, and not merely from the proof of a single isolated act or declaration. Archbold's Crim. Evid., 1905, ed., 338; Queen Carolino's case, 2 B. & B. 284, 1 St. Trials, N.S. 1348; R. v. Clewes, 4 C. & P. 221; R. v. Whitehead, 1 C. & P. 67.

Representations made by a defendant after the commission of the fraud are admissible in evidence to connect him with the conspiracy. R. v. Stenson, 36 J.P. 532, 12 Cox 111, 25 L.T. 666.

Acts and statements of co-conspirators as evidence against the others)—Boyd, C., in Regina v. Co.~olly (1894), 25 O.R. 151, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 468, at p. 480, said: "There is no unvarying rule that the agreement to conspire must first be established before particular acts of the individuals implicated are admissible. The charge of Coleridge, J., in Regina v. Murphy, S C. & P. 310, conveniently summarizes the usual method of proving a charge of conspiracy: 'although the common design is the root of the charge, it is not necessary to prove that the parties came together and actually agreed in terms to have this common design and to pursue it by common means and to carry it into execution. This is not necessary because in many cases of the most clearly [§ 444] established conspiracies there are no means of proving any such thing, and neither law nor common sense requires that it should be proved.""

This statement was quoted with approval in R. v. Wilson (1911), 21 Can, Cr. Cas. 105, 1 W.W.R. 272 (Alta.).

But there should be some preliminary proof to show an acting together in the matter before the evidence of a co-conspirator's act is given, although falling short of proving the accused to be a conspirator as charged. R. v. Hutchinson (1904), 11 B.C.R. 24, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 486; R. v. Murphy, 17 Que. L.R. 305.

A letter mentioning a third party may be evidence against the latter on his trial in the sense that the onus is on him of explaining it, if other evidence has raised a presumption connecting him with the contents of the document. R. v. Whitaker (1914), 10 Cr. App. R. 245; Phipson on Evidence, 5th ed., 78-79 and 86-88.

On a charge under Code sec. 444 of conspiracy to defraud the public, if there is no direct proof of the existence of the unlawful agreement between the defendants and the acts proved are not such as to show from their very nature that they are parts of a common scheme, the jury must separately consider the case of each defendant and determine from his conduct whether there is evidence of the conspiracy alleged; it is only after the conspiracy has been proved that the acts of the one become evidence against the other. Rex v. McCutcheon (1916), 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 310 (Ont.).

A statement by one conspirator when in conference with a third person, or when he does that himself which is not necessary for carrying out the object of the conspiracy, is not admissible for the purpose of affecting any of the other parties charged. R. v. Blake, 6 Q.B. 126; 8 J.P. 372, 8 Jur. 666.

The statement of an alleged co-conspirator is evidence against another accused person, only where it is made in furtherance of the common design. R. v. Desmond, 11 Cox 146. It will not cover a mere confession of guilt by one of them on his arrest. R. v. Shakespeare (1899), 34 L.J.N. 116; R. v. Wark (1898), 33 L.J.N. 615.

The charge to the jury should not entirely omit the question of conspiracy and only deal with the case of each defendant separately, where conspiracy to defraud is charged. R. v. Bailey (1913), 9 Cr. App. R. 94.

It is a rule of practice and not one of strict law to charge the jury that they should not convict upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. See note to Code sec. 1002; R. v. Ah Jim (1905), 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 126; re Meunier [1894] 2 Q.B. 415, 18 Cox C.C. 15.

On a charge of conspiracy to defraud, the evidence of the accomplice may be sufficiently corroborated by entries found in a memorandum book found upon the prisoner. R. v. St. Pierre (1911) 19 Can. Cr. Cas. 82 (Que.).

Indictment of one or more conspirators]-One conspirator may be indicted and convicted without joining the others although they are living and within the jurisdiction. R. v. Frawley (1894), 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 1227, 25 Ont. R. 431.

Where two persons are indicted for conspiring together, and they are tried together, both must be acquitted or both convicted. Regina v. Manning (1883), 12 Q.B.D. 241; Rex v. Plummer [1902] 2 K.B. 339; unless they are also charged with conspiring with persons unknown, in which case the conspiracy must be alleged to be with a certain person (or persons) to the jurors unknown; 3 Chitty's Criminal Law, p. 1141; R. v. Nerlieh (1915), 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 256, 34 O.L.R. 298.

A conspiracy should only be laid as being with persons unknown, when neither the Crown officers nor the private prosecutor had definite information of the identity of the alleged co-conspirators; and when the name of one of the alleged co-conspirators is for the first time disclosed in the testimony of a Crown witness at the trial that information may then be added to the indictment or the particulars. R. v. Johnston (1902), 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 232.

Conspiracy at common law]—A conspiracy, at common law, is an agreement of two or more parties to do an unlawful act, or to do a lawful act by unlawful means. See per Tindal, C.J., in O'Connell v. The Queen, 11 Cl. & F. 213; Mulcahy v. The Queen, L.R. 3 H.L. 306.

It is more fully defined by Mr. Justice Fitzgerald in his charge to the jury in the case of The Queen v. Parnell, 14 Cox C.C. 505, 513, where he says:—" Conspiracy has been aptly defined as divisible under three heads—where the end to be attained is in itself a crime; where the object is lawful but the means to be resorted to are unlawful; and where the object is to do an injury to a third party or to a class, though if the wrong were effected by a single individual it would be a wrong but not a crime."

The last head of the definition is well illustrated by a quotation from the part of the same charge which immediately precedes the above quoted definition: "If, for instance, a tenant withholds his rent, that is a violation of the right of his landlord to receive it, but it would not be a criminal act in the tenant, though it would be the violation of a right; but if two or more incite him to do that act, their agreement so to incite him is by the law of the land an offence."

Another illustration is given by Quinn v. Leathem [1901] A.C. 495. where the defendants were held liable in damages for conspiring to violate a legal right by interfering with contractual relations between the plaintiff and his employees, for the direct purpose of doing the plaintiff an injury in his business. R. v. Gage (No. 2), 18 Man. L.R. 175, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 428, at 438; R. v. Defries, 25 Ont. R. 645, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 207; and see Williams v. Local Union, [1919] 1 W.W.R. 217; Pratt v. British Medical Association, 35 Times L.R. 14; Allen v. Flood, [1898] A.C. 1; Perrault v. Gauthier, 28 S.C.R. 241; Krug Furniture Co. v. Berlin Union, 5 O.L.R. 463; Taff Vale Ry. Co. v. Amalgamated Socy., [1901] A.C. 426, 70 L.J.K.B. 905.

[§444] CRIMINAL CODE (PART VII)

Wherever the tort is a fraudulent or corrupt act on the part of the persons agreeing, then it becomes a misdemeanour at common law. R. v. Warburton, L.R. 1 C.C. 274; 40 L.J.M.C. 22; 23 L.T. 473; 19 W.R. 165; 11 Cox C.C. 584, cited in Reg. v. Aspinall, 2 Q.B.D. 48; 46 L.J.M.C. 145; 36 L.T. 297; 25 W.R. 285; 13 Cox C.C. 563; R. v. Whitaker (1914), 10 App. R. 245, 254; R. v. Roy, 11 L.C.J. 93.

Second offences]-See sees. 465, 963 and 964.

Extradition laws]—The offence or erime of conspiracy to defraud is not an extraditable erime under the Extradition Treaty between Canada and the United States.

United States v. Browne; Ex parte Browne, 16 Que. K.B. 10, 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 161; United States v. Gaynor, re Gaynor & Greene (No. 3), 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 205 [1905] A.C. 128. But if in addition to the conspiracy charge, there is a charge of participation in some indictable offence, ex. gr. larceny, extradition will lie for the latter although laid as in pursuance of the common design. Ibid.; R. v. Kelly [1917] 1 W.W.R. 46 and 463, 54 Can. S.C.R. 220.

Frauds by trustees and agents (inter alia) are extraditable if made eriminal by the laws of both countries; and "participation" in such fraud is likewise extraditable if such participation is punishable by the laws of both countries.

Robbery and Extortion.

Robbery defined.

445. Robbery is theft accompanied with violence or threats of violence to any person or property used to extort the property stolen or to prevent or overcome resistance to its being stolen.

Origin]-Sec. 397, Code of 1892.

Possession in robbery cases]—Where the thing taken was not on the body or in the immediate possession of a person, and violence or threats were used for the purpose of extorting it from him, the offence was not robbery at common law. The offence of robbery was the theft of something on the body or in the immediate possession of the person from whom it was taken by violence or threats of injury. Re Burley, 1 C.L.J. 20. The question so frequently raised in respect of the common law crime as to whether the possession of goods not on the person was sufficiently connected to constitute "immediate" possession, seems to be no longer important in view of the omission from this statutory definition of any limitation of that kind such as prevailed at common law.

Ingredients of "theft"]-Robbery is defined to be "theft" accompanied with violence, etc., used to extort the property. "Theft" has a special statutory meaning under the Code, see definition in sec. 347. the R. v. 165; M.C. 914),

Violence or threats of violence]—The violence may be to either person or property, and so also with threats of violence. In either case there must be a completed "theft" and the violence or threats of violence must have been used to "extort" the property stolen or to prevent or overcome resistance to its being stolen. A mere demand of goods with menaces and with intent to steal them is indictable under sec. 452, although the goods may not have been obtained. As to written demands with menaces, see secs. 451, 453, 454, and as to extortion by accusation of crime, secs. 453, 454.

Assault with intent to rob]-See sees. 446 (c) and 448.

Other attempts to rob]-See secs. 570, 949.

Punishment for robbery]—See sees. 446 and 447, the former section providing a more onerous punishment where two or more persons have joined in the robbery, or where the robber is armed, or where the offence is accompanied by wounding or other personal violence.

Burglary and housebreaking with intent to rob]—See secs. 455-464. Acousing of crime with intent to extort]—See secs. 453 and 454.

Robbery with violence.-Joint robbery.-Robbery while armed.

446. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for life and to be whipped who,—

- (a) robs any person and at the time of, or immediately before or immediately after, such robbery, wounds, beats, strikes, or uses any personal violence to, such person; or,
- (b) being together with any other person or persons robs, or assaults with intent to rob, any person; or,
- (c) being armed with an offensive weapon or instrument robs, or assaults with intent to rob, any person.

Origin]-Sec. 398, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 164, sec. 32.

Directing jury as to lesser offence which might be found on the indictment]—On the trial of an indictment charging robbery with violence and stealing from the person, if there is evidence on which the jury might find simple theft, a new trial must be ordered if the trial judge in effect directed the jury that the accused must be acquitted unless they found not only that the accused stole the money, but that he stole it from the person of the prosecutor. Where a crime of less degree than that charged in the indictment and for which lesser crime a verdiet might be given under Code sec. 951, is presented on the evidence, the jury must be instructed regarding such lesser crime as well as the greater crime stated in the indictment. While the accused by reason of such misdirection derived a chance of acquittal to which the law did not entitle him, the jury may have been led to convict of "theft from the person" through unwillingness to wholly acquit the prisoner, while they might, if properly instructed, have convicted of simple theft only. Where there is a prejudicial misdirection by the trial judge, the accused is not deprived of his right to a new trial because of his failure to complain of the misdirection at the time. R. v. Daley, 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 168, 39 N.B.R. 411; R. v. Edmonstone, 15 O.L.R. 325, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 125.

Restitution order for stolen property]-Code sec. 1050.

Compensation from money found on prisoner]-Code sec. 1048.

Robbery by two or more together]—On a joint indictment for robbery with two sets of evidentiary facts presented at the same time and easily liable to confusion, it is the duty of the presiding judge to see, in case the trials have not been separated in fact, that at least they are clearly separated in the minds of the jury whom it is his duty to instruct fully upon all points of law involved in the case. Compelling execution of document by force with intent to defraud.

450. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for life who, with intent to defraud or injure, by unlawful violence to, or restraint of the person of another, or by the threat that either the offender or any other person will employ such violence or restraint, unlawfully compels any person to execute, make, accept, endorse, alter or destroy the whole or any part of any valuable security, or to write, impress or affix any name or seal upon any paper or parchment, in order that it may be afterwards made or converted into or used or dealt with as a valuable security.

Origin]-Sec. 402, Code of 1892; Larceny Act, Can. 32-33 Vict., eh. 21, sec. 47; 24-25 Vict., Imp., ch. 96, sec. 48.

Collins, 33 N.B.R. 429, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 48.

"Knowing the contents thereof "]—A person other than the writer of the letter may be charged, in which case knowledge of the contents of the letter is an essential ingredient of the offence. R. v. Girdwood, 1 Leach C.C. 142; R. v. Carruthers, 1 Cox C.C. 138; R. v. Grimwade, 1 Den. C.C. 30, 1 Cox C.C. 85.

Demanding with intent to steal.

452. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who, with menaces, demands from any person, either for himself or for any other person, anything capable of being stolen with intent to steal it.

Origin]—Sec. 404, Code of 1892; Larceny Act, 1861, Imp., 24-25 Vict., ch. 96, sec. 45. For the previous English statutes, see 4 Geo. IV, ch. 54, sec. 5; 7 and 8 Geo. IV, ch. 29, sec. 6; 7 Will. IV and I Vict. (1837), ch. 87, sec. 7.

Demand with menaces]—The degree of fear or alarm which a threat may be calculated to produce upon the mind of the person on whom it is intended to operate may vary in different cases and in different circumstances. A threat to injure a man's property may be more serious to him and have a greater effect upon his mind than a threat of physical violence. When there is evidence of such a threat as is calculated to a threat whom it erent cirre serious physical ulated to operate upon the mind of a person of ordinary firm mind, and the jury have been properly directed, it is for them to determine whether in fact the conduct of the accused has brought him within the section, and whether in the particular case the "menace" is established. If the threat was of such a character that it is not calculated to deprive any person of reasonably sound or ordinarily firm mind of the free and voluntary action of his mind, it would not be a "menace" within the meaning of the section. R. v. Boyle [1914] 3 K.B. 339, 10 Cr. App. R. 180, at 191, 83 L.J.K.B. 1801; R. v. Gibbons, 12 Man. R. 154, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 340; R. v. Smith, 19 L.J.M.C. 80; R. v. Tomlinson [1895] 1 Q.B. 706.

When a man with intent to steal, threatens either to do violence to the person of another or to commit acts calculated to injure the property or character of another, it may constitute a "menace" within the meaning of this section. R. v. Boyle [1914] 3 K.B. 339, 10 Cr. App. R. 180, at 191, 83 L.J.K.B. 1801. R. v. Gibbons, 12 Man. R. 154, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 340, doubting R. v. McDonald, 8 Man. R. 493 (as to a threat of prosecution under a liquor law). It was held in R. v. Walton (1863), 1 L. & C. C.C. 288, that a threat to execute a distress warrant made by a party with no authority to do so is not per se a menace, but the tendency of the later cases is to include as a "menace" threats of acts calculated to injure the property of another, as well as threats of personal violence or to injure the character of another. R. v. Boyle [1914] 3 K.B. 339, 10 Cr. App. R. 180; R. v. Gibbons, 12 Man. R. 154, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 340.

To constitute the offence of demanding money with menaces with intent to steal, the language used may be only a request; it need not necessarily be an explicit demand. A request imposing conditions may be evidence of a demand. Rex v. Studer, 85 L.J.K.B. 1017; 11 Cr. App. R. 307, 114 L.T. 424.

Intent to steal]-The question of intent is one entirely for the jury. It may be deduced from the acts and conduct of the accused proved in evidence. R. v. Gibbons, 12 Man. R. 154, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 340. A demand of money as a consideration for not prosecuting under a liquor law may come within sec. 452 as being made with intent to steal the money demanded. R. v. Gibbons, supra. But an unjustified demand to have goods delivered up to be held as security for a debt actually due has been held insufficient evidence of an intent to steal although accompanied by a threat of the debtor's arrest made without any honest belief that the debtor was liable to arrest. R. v. Lyon, 29 Ont. R. 497, 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 242, and see R. v. Johnson, 14 U.C.Q.B. 569. But if the threat were not merely of arrest, which might under certain circumstances be made in a civil proceeding, but of arrest for a criminal offence the case might be brought under secs. 453 or 454. And if the demand had been in writing, the charge might have been brought under sec. 451.

Extortion by threats]-Code sees. 453 and 454.

Extortion by accusation or threats to accuse of certain class of crime.

453. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to fourten years' imprisonment who, with intent to extort or gain anything from any person,—

- (a) accuses or threatens to accuse either that person or any other person, whether the person accused or threatened with accusation is guilty or not, of
 - (i) any offence punishable by law with death or imprisonment for seven years or more,
 - (ii) any assault with intent to commit a rape, or any attempt or endeavour to commit a rape, or any indecent assault,
 - (iii) carnally knowing or attempting to know any child so as to be punishable under this Act,
 - (iv) any infamous offence, that is to say, buggery, an attempt or assault with intent to commit buggery, or any unnatural practice, or incest,
 - (v) counselling or procuring any person to commit any such infamous offence; or,
- (b) threatens that any person shall be so accused by any other person; or,
- (c) causes any person to receive a document containing such accusation or threat, knowing the contents, thereof;

or who by any of the means aforesaid compels or attempts to compel any person to execute, make, accept, endorse, alter or destroy the whole or any part of any valuable security, or to write, impress or affix any name or seal upon or to any paper or parchment, in order that it may be afterwards made or converted into or used or dealt with as a valuable security.

Origin]-Sec. 405, Code of 1892; 24-25 Vict., Imp., ch. 96, secs. 46 and 47; 32-33 Vict., Can., ch. 21, sec. 45; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 173, sec. 3.

EXTORTION

Written threats to accuse]—Declarations made by the accused when spoken to about the letter and as to what he meant by it, are admissible to prove what the crime was of which he hinted in ambiguous or equivocal language in the letter. R. v. Tucker, 1 Moore C.C. 134, and the accused may give evidence in explanation of ambiguous terms he had used. R. v. Odell, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 39 (Que.); R. v. Hendy, 4 Cox C.C. 244.

"Accuses"]—The accusation here referred to may be one made to a judicial tribunal or to a private individual. R. v. Robinson, 2 Moore & R. 14; R. v. Kempel, 31 Ont. R. 631, 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 481.

"Whether the person accused or threatened with accusation is guilty or not"]—Notwithstanding this provision the prosecutor if called as a witness may be cross-examined as to his guilt of the imputed offence for the purpose of shaking his credit. R. v. Odell, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 39, applying R. v. Cracknell, 10 Cox C.C. 408; and guilt or innocence of such imputed crime may also be material on the question of intent to extort. R. v. Richards, 11 Cox C.C 43; R. v. Gardner, 1 C. & P. 479; R. v. Johnson, 14 U.C.Q.B. 569. The person charged with an offence under sec. 453 or 454 is not entitled to adduce evidence for the sole purpose of proving that the complainant was guilty of the offence which he had imputed to him. R. v. Wilson, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 131; R. v. Odell, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 39 (Que.), distinguishing R. v. Johnson, 14 U.C.Q.B. 569. No evidence can be given even in cross-examination of another witness to prove that the prosecutor was guilty. R. v. Odell, supra.

Imprisonment "for seven years or more"]—Whether this phrase in the first paragraph of sub-sec. (a) refers to the maximum or the minimum penalty is a matter of doubt. The language of the section differs from that of the Larceny Act, R.S.C. 1886, ch. 173, sec. 3, where the corresponding section read "for a term not less than seven years" and so excluded cases for which the law prescribed no minimum term. R. v. Popplewell, 20 Ont. R. 303. Compare sec. 1081 (2) as to suspended sentence "where the offence is punishable with more than two years' imprisonment," which seems to imply a reference to the maximum and not to the minimum penalty.

"Valuable security"]-See sec. 2, sub-sec. (40).

Extortion by libel]-See sec. 332.

Intimidation]-See sec. 501.

Blackmail, threats and intimidation]—See secs. 216 (h), 265, 332, 450, 451, 452, 453, 454, 501, 516, 538, 578, 748.

Extortion by accusation or threats to accuse of other offence.

454. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for seven years who,—

(a) with intent to extort or gain anything from any person accuses or threatens to accuse either that person or any other person of any offence other than those specified in the last section, whether the person accused or threatened with accusation is guilty or not of that offence; or,

- (b) with such intent as aforesaid, threatens that any person shall be so accused by any person; or,
- (c) causes any person to receive a document containing such accusation or threat, knowing the contents thereof;

or who by any of the means aforesaid, compels or attempts to compel any person to execute, make, accept, indorse, alter or destroy the whole or any part of any value security, or to write, impress or affix any name or seal upon or to any paper or parchment, in order that it may be afterwards made or converted into, or used or dealt with as a valuable security.

Origin]-Sec. 406, Code of 1892.

Of any offence other than those specified in sec. 453]—Sec. 454 is an extension to lesser offences, of the provisions of sec. 453, and it would therefore seem that the word "offence" in sub-sec. (a) should be limited to offence sunder federal jurisdiction. But the contrary has been held in R. v. Dixon, 28 N.S.R. 82, 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 589, where an accusation of an offence under a provincial liquor law was held to come within this section. Demands of money with a menace of prosecution under a provincial law may fall within sec. 451 or 452, under certain circumstances; see notes to those sections and R. v. Gibbons, 12 Man. R. 154; R. v. McDonald, 8 Man. R. 491. It is a well-recognized rule of interpretation that statutes are to be construed as relating to matters over which the legislature passing them has legislative authority. Plested v. McLeod, 3 Sask. L.R. 374, 384; R. v. Wason, 17 A.R. (Ont.), 221, 233; Ex parte Duncan, 2 Cartwright 297; and compare with sec. 35 as to arrest without warrant of persons found committing "any offence."

Extortion by peace officer in making pretended settlement of charge] —It was held in R. v. Lapham, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 79, 24 O.W.R. 111, that a constable entrusted with a warrant of arrest on a criminal charge may so intervene by making himself the agent of the private prosecutor to settle the case as to make himself liable under sec. 454 of accusing the person against whom the warrant issued of the offence therein stated, with "intent to extort." A peace officer should not use his office and his duty to arrest under process as a means of extortion. R. v. Lapham, supra; and it may be extortion under sec. 454 for the constable to collect under stress of the warrant in a dog-stealing case brought under Code sec. 370, a sum which the complainant is willing to accept as the value of the dog and the expenses added. feasance of office by any officer of justice is a common law misdemeanour; Roscoe's Cr. Evidence, 11th ed., 783; and a constable who corruptly accepts money to protect from punishment any person who has committed any crime is subject to the penalties of sec. 157.

"Document containing such accusation or threat "]—This phrase in sub-sec. (c) refers to an accusation or threat to accuse of any offence other than those specified in the preceding section (Code sec. 453). Presumably it is limited to accusations made with intent to extort or gain (sub-secs. (a) and (b)) and guilty knowledge as to the purpose of the accusation would be material. Compare sec. 453, and the Larceny Act, 22-33 Vict., Can., sec. 45. A summons issued by a justice to answer a criminal charge is one form of "document containing an accusation" (sub-sec. (c),) and although the informant did not have it issued with intent to extort, it is an offence for a third person to use it for purposes of extortion. R. v. Cornell, 6 Terr. L.R. 101, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 416.

Place of public worship]-Generally where an official act has been done which can only be lawful and valid by the doing of certain preliminary acts, it will be presumed that those preliminary acts have also been done. Reg. v. Cresswell, 13 Cox C.C. 178. There, the charge was bigamy, and the proof of the marriage was that it had taken place in a building some distance from a church. The law prohibited marriages except in a licensed church. But there was proof of the clergyman acting as such, and there was proof that in the hall the service had been several times performed. Lord Coleridge, C.J., said :- "We are of opinion that the marriage service having been performed in a place where divine service was several times performed, the rule 'omnia pracsumuntur rite esse acta' applies, and that we must assume that the place was properly licensed, and that the clergyman performing the service was not guilty of the grave offence of marrying persons in an unlicensed place. The facts of the marriage and other church services being performed there by a clergyman are abundant evidence from which the Court and a jury might assume that the place was properly licensed."

In R. v. Brown, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 133, at 157, Graham, E. J., said:--"This law is not peculiar to the proof of marriage. Rugg v. Kingsmill, L.R. 1 Ad. & Ec. 343. In looking over the Criminal Code, it will be seen that there are crimes in respect to churches, highways, railway stations, public works, and so on, and in most cases there is a writing, a deed of dedication, expropriation proceedings, order in council, or some other thing in writing which indicates their character; but I think it will make it very burdensome to the administration of justice if it is held that in such cases the writing only will suffice to prove that character."

(b) breaks out of any dwelling-house by night, either after committing an indictable offence therein, or after having entered such dwelling-house, either by day or by night, with intent to commit an indictable offence therein.

2. Every one convicted of an offence under this section who when arrested, or when he committed such offence, had upon his person any offensive weapon, shall, in addition to the imprisonment above prescribed, be liable to be whipped.

Origin]-Code Amendment 1900, ch. 46, sec. 3; Sec. 410, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 164, sec. 37; 7-8 Geo. IV, Imp., ch. 29.

"Breaks and enters"]—To break into a dwelling-house means to break any part, internal or external, of a building, or to open by any means whatever any door, window, shutter, cellar-flap or other thing intended to cover openings to a building, or to give passage from one part of it to another. Code sec. 335 (o). The means of opening, here referred to, includes lifting in the case of things kept in their places by their own weight. Code sec. 335 (c).

A person "enters" a dwelling-house, as regards the offence of burglary, by breaking and entering at night with intent, as soon as any part of the body of the person making the entrance is within the building, or as soon as any part of any instrument used by him (to break into or to assist him in entering the building) is within the building. Code sec. 340. A person who enters any chimney or other aperture of the building permanently left open for any necessary purpose is to be deemed to have broken and entered that building. Code sec. 340. A temporary aperture would not be included if entrance could be obtained without further opening. Sub-sec. (c) appears to include the further lifting of a partially opened window as a breaking, and in that respect to extend the common law which did not make it a breaking unless the door or window by which entrance was effected happened to be closed. But it has been held in a Nova Scotia case that where a window had been opened a few inches for purposes of ventilation, and the person entering had lifted it in order to get in, it is not burglary. R. v. Burns (1903), 36 N.S.R. 257, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 95. A person who obtains entrance into a dwelling-house by any threats or artifice used for that purpose is to be deemed to have broken and entered that building; R. v. Swallow, 1 Russell, 793; and so is the person who obtains entrance by collusion with any person in the building. Code sec. 340; Le Mott's case, Kelyng 42; Cassy's case, Kelyng 62; Hawkins' case, 2 East P.C. 485; Cornwall's case, 2 Strange R. 881.

Entry by collusion with an inmate]

The entry by collusion with a person in the building must be the result of real and not pretended collusion, it being held that where a servant pretended to agree with a robber and opened the door and let him in for the real purpose of apprehending him, there was no breaking and entering for the door was lawfully open. R. v. Johnson (1841), Car. & M. 218. But going into a house with intent to steal and getting access by means of duplicate keys fraudulently obtained by the accused through a servant of the owner, constitutes a breaking and entering, because the key was knowingly used without lawful authority; and such is the result although the servant had only pretended to become an accomplice with the accused and had arranged with the police to be in the house to arrest the accused which was done before he had time to steal anything. R. v. Chandler, 8 Cr. App. R. 82 L.J.K.B. 106, [1913] 1 K.B. 125.

Dwelling-house]—See definition in sec. 335 (e) and as to outbuildings, sec. 339.

"By night"]—' By night' as regards burglary means between 9 p.m. and 6 a.m. Code sec. 2, sub-sec. 23.

Sub-sec. (2)-Possession of "offensive weapon"]-See definition of "offensive weapon" in sec. 2, sub-sec. (24).

Term of imprisonment may be shortened]-Code sec. 1054.

Recent possession as evidence on charge of burglary and theft]— The burglary was committed on the 18th or 19th December, 1903, and the prisoner was arrested on the 16th February, 1904, with one of the articles stolen upon his person; it was held that the judge could not properly have ruled, in all the circumstances of the case, that the lapse of time was so great as absolutely to repel any presumption that the prisoner was concerned in the burglary: and that the possession of the article and other circumstances warranted the jury in drawing an inference of guilt. R. v. Burdell, 11 O.L.R. 440, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 365.

Punishment of whipping]—See sees. 80, 204, 216, 276, 292, 293, 301. 302, 446, 457, 1060.

Housebreaking with intent to ravish]—See R. v. Rodley [1913] 3 K.B. 468, 82 L.J.K.B. 1070; R. v. Burns (1903), 36 N.S.R. 257, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 95.

On the trial of an indictment for burglary with intent to rape, evidence of his immoral conduct on the same night but subsequent to the attempt alleged, is not admissible against the accused. R. v. Rodley [1913] 3 K.B. 468, 9 Cr. App. R. 69, 82 L.J.K.B. 1070; R. v. Fisher [1910] 1 K.B. 149, 26 Times L.R. 122, 79 L.J.K.B. 187; and see Thompson v. BURGLARY AND HOUSE-BREAKING

[§ 458]

Breaking dwelling by day.-Breaking out of dwelling by day.

458. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to fourteen years' imprisonment who,--

- (a) breaks and enters any dwelling-house by day and commits any indictable offence therein; or,
- (b) breaks out of any dwelling-house by day after having committed any indictable offence therein.

Origin]-Sec. 411, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 164, sec. 40.

"Breaks and enters"; "breaks out"]-Code sees. 335 (c); 340.

Housebreaking and theft]—If the indictable offence committed be theft, and the charge laid is consequently housebreaking and theft, there cannot be a conviction for receiving on that count; R. v. Lamoreaux, 10 Que. Q.B. 15, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 101. The essential elements of the offence of receiving are not included in the charge of housebreaking and theft; and secs. 949 and 951 do not authorize a conviction for another offence unless it is included in the offence charged as described in the enactment creating it or as charged in the count, or unless for an attempt of the offence charged or an attempt of the lesser offence so included.

459. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to seven years' imprisonment who, by day, breaks and enters any dwelling-house with intent to commit any indictable offence therein.

Origin]-See, 412, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 164, see, 42.

"Dwelling house"]-Code see. 335, sub-see. (e).

Housebreaking with intent]—As to this offence there is no specification that the offence shall be by night as in sec. 457 (burglary) or by day in the offence of housebreaking combined with theft or some other indictable offence by day for which sec. 458 provides a more onerous penalty than does sec. 459. There may be a conviction on a charge laid under sec. 459, although the evidence proves the offence of burglary; R. v. Robinson, Russ. & R. 321; or proves an offence under sec. 458.

Second offences]-See sees. 465, 757, 851, 963, 964, 982.

Breaking shop, etc., and committing indictable offence.

460. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to fourteen years' imprisonment who, either by day or night, breaks and enters and commits any indictable offence in a schoolhouse, shop, warehouse or counting-house, or any building with-

"Or in any pen, cage," etc.]—These words were added to the section by the amendment of 1913. As to theft of wild animals kept in cages, etc., see Code secs. 345, 347, 350, 370, 381 (by false keys).

Second offences]-See secs. 465, 757, 851, 963, 964, 982.

Breaking shop, etc., with intent.

461. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to seven years' imprisonment who, either by day or night, breaks and enters any of the buildings, or any pen, cage, den or enclosure mentioned in the last preceding section with intent to commit any indictable offence therein.

Origin]-Sec. 414, Code of 1892; 1913 Can. Stat., eh. 13; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 164, sec. 42.

"Breaks and enters"]—See sees. 335 (c), 340, and note to see. 457. A clandestine opening of a door even during business hours may be a breaking and entering under see. 461, if done with intent to steal or to commit some other indictable offence. R. v. Smith, 17 Man. R. 282, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 326.

"Pen, cage, den or enclosure"]-These words were inserted by the Code amendment of 1913.

Second offences]-See secs. 465, 757, 851, 963, 964, 982.

Being found in dwelling-house at night.

462. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to seven years' imprisonment who unlawfully enters, or is in. any dwelling-house by night with intent to commit any indictable offence therein.

The onus of proof as to lawful excuse is discharged by an accused person, if he prove that the alleged implement of house-breaking, though capable of being used for that purpose, is a tool used by him in his trade or calling. Rex v. Ward [1915] 3 K.B. 696, 11 Cr. App. R. 245. If a bricklayer is found with the tools of his trade, which are his own property, upon him, that is prima facie a sufficient excuse in answer to a charge of being in possession of housebreaking implements by night founded on the possibility of their being so used. But the case may go to the jury on a direction that they must consider the other circumstances. R. v. Seckree (1915), 11 Cr. App. R. 245; R. v. Oldham (1852), 2 Den. C.C. 472.

Second offences]-See secs. 465, 757, 851, 963, 964, 982.

Punishment after previous conviction in certain cases.

465. Every one who, after a previous conviction for any indictable offence, is convicted of an indictable offence specified in this Part for which the punishment on a first conviction is less than fourteen years' imprisonment is liable to fourteen years' imprisonment.

Origin]-Sec. 418, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 164, sec. 44.

Offences after previous conviction]—See secs. 370, 375-377, 386 (2), 465, 530, 533-535, 851, 963, 982, 1053, 1081.

Forgery and Preparation Therefor.

Definition of forgery.--Making false document.--When forgery complete.--False document may be incomplete.

466. Forgery is the making of a false document, knowing it to be false, with the intention that it shall in any way be used or acted upon as genuine, to the prejudice of any one whether within Canada or not, or that some person should be induced by the belief that it is genuine, to do or refrain from doing anything, whether within Canada or not.

2. Making a false document includes altering a genuine document in any material part, or making any material addition to it or adding to it any false date, attestation, seal or other thing which is material, or making any material alteration in it, either by erasure, obliteration, removal or otherwise.

3. Forgery is complete as soon as the document is made with such knowledge and intent as aforesaid, though the offender may not have intended that any particular person should use or act upon it as genuine, or be induced, by the belief that it is genuine, to do or refrain from doing anything. 4. Forgery is complete although the false document may be incomplete, or may not purport to be such a document as would be binding in law, if it be so made and is such as to indicate that it was intended to be acted on as genuine.

Origin]—Sec. 422, Code of 1892. Punishment for forgery]—Code secs. 468, 469, 470. Punishment for uttering forged instrument]—Code sec. 467. Possession or use of instruments of forgery]—Code sec. 471. Forgery of trade-marks]—Code secs. 486-495. Offences resembling forgery]—Code secs. 472-485.

False document defined]—' False document ' means (i) a document, the whole or some material part of which purports to be made by or on behalf of any person who did not make or authorize the making thereof, or which, though made by, or by the authority of, the person who purports to make it, is falsely dated as to time or place of making, where either is material, or (ii) a document, the whole or some material part of which purports to be made by or on behalf of some person who did not in fact exist, or (iii) a document which is made in the name of an existing person, either by that person or by his authority, with the fraudulent intention that the document should pass as being made by some person, real or fictitious, other than the person who makes or authorizes it. Code sec. 335, sub-sec. (j).

The definition of a false document given in the Code makes no change in the law but merely defines in statutory form what had by judicial construction in the courts been held to constitute a false document, the making of which with the knowledge and intent mentioned in the statute is declared to be forgery, and the uttering of which with like knowledge by one who uses, deals with, or acts upon it as if it were genuine, is made an indictable offence punishable in like manner as forgery. Per Burton, J.A., in re Murphy (1895), 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 562, 578, 583, 26 Ont. R. 163, 22 A.R. 386 (Ont.).

An instrument may be the subject of forgery although in fact it should appear impossible for such an instrument as the instrument forged to exist, provided the instrument purports on the face of it to be good and valid as to the purposes for which it was intended to be made. R. v. Sterling (1773), 1 Leach 996; R. v. Portis (1876), 40 U.C.Q.B. 214 (Ont.); R. v. McDonald, 12 U.C.Q.B. 543 (Ont.); R. v. Brown, 3 Allen 13 (N.B.). And where the date of a deed is so material that the document could only be effective for the purposes which it indicates, if signed before a certain date, the antedating for the fraudulent purpose of making it so appear will be forgery if the result is to make the deed purport to be something quite different from what it really is. R. v. Ritson (1869), L.R. 1 C.C.R. 200; Ex parte Windsor, 34 L.J.M.C. 163.

Forgery of incomplete document]—Under the Code forgery is complete although the false document may be incomplete, and this must be borne in mind in considering the English eases on forgery of promissory notes. Ead v. The King (1908), 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 360 (N.S.), per Drysdale, J. It has been doubted whether the false duplication of tickets is forgery if the signature appearing in the originals is left out. R. v. Magnolo, 22 B.C.R. 359, 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 419.

False document not purporting to be such a document as would be binding in law]—If the other elements of forgery exist, the forgery is complete, although the document does not purport to be such a document as would be valid. So the making of a forged paper purporting on the face of it to be a bank note is forgery, although there is no bank of the name given. R. v. McDonald, 12 U.C.Q.B. 543 (Ont.); R. v. Brown, 3 Allen, 13 (N.B.).

Filling in cheque signed in blank]—If a cheque is given to a person with a certain authority, the agent is confined strictly within the limits of that authority, and if he choose to alter it, the crime of forgery is committed. If a blank cheque be delivered to him with a limited authority to complete it, and he fill it up with an amount different from the one he was directed to insert, and if, after the authority was at end, he fill it up with any amount whatever, that too would be clearly forgery. R. v. Bateman (1845), 1 Cox C.C. 186; R. v. Hart (1836), 7 C. & P. 652, 1 Moody C.C. 486; R. v. Wilson (1847), 1 Den. C.C. 284.

Filling in the body of a blank cheque to which a signature is attached, without any authority, is a forgery. The prisoners were indicted for uttering a forged cheque, and it appeared that one Townsend was in the habit of signing blank cheques and leaving them with his clerk when business called him away from home; one of these cheques fell into the hands of the prisoners, who filled up the blank with the words " one hundred pounds," and dated it; it was objected that the signature being genuine, it could not be said that the prisoner had uttered a forged instrument; but Bailey, J., held that it was a forgery of the cheque. By filling in the body and dating it, it was made a perfect instrument, which it previously was not, and although it was not in point of fact made entirely by the prisoners, yet it had been held that the doing that which is necessary to make an imperfect instrument a perfect one, is a forgery of the whole. The learned judge was also of opinion that if the bankers had paid the cheque they might have recovered the amount from the prosecutor, as he was in the habit of leaving blank cheques out, with his name written at the bottom. Wright's case, 1 Lewin, C.C. 135.

Fictitious name]—The result of the cases is, that where a fictitious name is assumed for the purposes of a fraud, the offence of forgery may be proved, but not where the credit is given solely to the person without any regard to the name, as in R. v. Martin (1880), 5 Q.B.D. 34; per Hagarty, C.J.O. in re Murphy (1895), 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 578, 582; R. v. Whyte (1851), 5 Cox C.C. 290; R. v. Wardell (1862), 3 F. & F. 82.

Where a person passing under an assumed name falsely represents that he is in the employment of a certain firm, and that he is authorized to make a draft upon such firm, his signature in such assumed name to a draft upon the firm, and his fraudulent negotiation of it, constitute forgery, if the credit obtained in negotiating the bill was not personal to himself alone, without relation to his supposed employers, and if the false name, although that of a non-existent person, was assumed for the very purpose of perpetrating the fraud. Re M. B. Lazier (1899), 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 167 (Ont. C.A.).

In R. v. Dunn (1765), 1 Leach C.C. 68, the accused had represented herself to be the widow of John Wallace, a deceased seaman, and in that character applied to a prize agent for prize money due to him by the Government. She exhibited what purported to be the probated will of the deceased, and thereby induced the agent to advance money to her on a promissory note, signed by her in the name of the supposed widow, for which advances the agent was to reimburse himself out of the prize money, when obtained. A conviction on a charge of forgery was confirmed on a case reserved. Nine of the ten judges in that case agreed to the following (Leach C.C. 68), as the rules governing the case:

(1) In all forgeries, the instrument supposed to be forged must be a false instrument in itself;

(2) If a person gives a note entirely as his own, his subscribing it by a fictitious name will not make it forgery, the credit being there wholly given to himself, without any regard to the name, or without any relation to a third person;

(3) An instrument which is uttered as the act and instrument of another, and in that light obtains a superior credit, when in truth it is not the act of the person represented, is strictly and properly a false instrument, for in that case the party deceived does not advance his money or accept the instrument upon the personal credit of the party producing it, but upon the name and character of the third person, whose situation and circumstances import a superior security for the debt; and therefore, if in truth it is not the instrument of that third person, whose name and situation induced the credit, it is certainly a false instrument, and the intention fraudulent to the party imposed upon by it, for he believed, when he accepted the security, that he had a remedy upon it against the third person in whose name it was given and on whom he relied when he advanced the money, but, this being false, he has no such remedy, and therefore is materially deceived;

(4) If an instrument be false in itself, and by its purporting to be the act of another a credit is obtained which would not otherwise have been given, it is forgery, though the name it is given in be really a nonentity;

(5) The case is very different if the person borrowing money upon his own note and assuming a fictitions name does so without any relation to a different person. In that case the whole credit is given to the party himself; the lender accepts the security as the security of that person only; he has no other remedy in view, but merely against the man he is dealing with, and the security is really and truly the instrument of the party whose act it purports to be, however subscribed by a fictitious name; he has, therefore, a remedy upon it against the person on whose credit he took it, and consequently is not substantially defrauded.

In R. v. Whyte (1851), 5 Cox C.C. 290, the prisoner had purchased goods of a warehouseman and represented that he was in business with one Whiffen, under the firm name of Whiffen & Co. Several bills for goods so purchased were met, but finally Whyte desired the warehouseman to draw on the firm for a certain bill of goods. This was done, and the bill was accepted by him in the name of the pretended firm. Talfourd, J., there said: "I think it will scarcely be sufficient to show that the name of Whiffen was assumed for the purpose of fraud generally; it must have been taken for the specific object of passing off this bill; the carrying on business in the false name might be for the purpose of creating a false impression with a view to obtain credit. That might support a charge of obtaining money or goods by false pretences, but not a charge of forgery."

To sustain a conviction, it should appear either that the prisoner had not gone by the fictitious name before the signing, or that he had assumed the name for the purpose of committing the fraud. R. v. Bontien (1813), Rus. & Ry. 260; R. v. Peacock (1814), ibid. 278; R. v. Lockett (1772), 1 Leach C.C. 94; R. v. Sheppard (1781), 1 Leach C.C. 226; R. v. Francis (1811), Russ. & Ry. 209; Lascelles v. The State, 90 Ga. 347.

If the assumption of a fietitious name in a petition to the legislature for an Act of incorporation were done with the intent that the legislature should be induced by the belief that it was genuine to grant the charter, there seems little reason to doubt that the signature in the fictitious name would be a forgery. The point was referred to, but not decided in Marsil v. Lanetot, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 223, 20 Rev. Leg. 237 (Que).

Where a fraudulent conspiracy was entered into between two persons in pursuance of which one of them opened an account in a bank in a fictitious name and gave to the other a cheque, for which the latter knew there were no funds, drawn in the fictitious name, and the same was negotiated by the payee in furtherance of such conspiracy, by obtaining another bank to cash the same on the faith of its being a genuine cheque, the cheque is a "false document" both by the Criminal Code and at common law. Re Murphy (1894), 26 Ont. R. 163, 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 562; in appeal (1895), 22 A.R. 386 (Ont.), 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 578.

Altering genuine document]—Where the forgery consists of the alteration of the time of maturity of an endorsed note, the intent to prejudice some one or to defraud may be inferred if the facts warrant the conclusion that either the maker or the endorser might be defrauded, although it appears that the prisoner fully intended to retire the note. R. v. Craig (1858), 7 U.C.C.P. 241 (Ont.); R. v. Hodgson, 2 Jurist N.S. 453, as to the duty of the customer to his bank to guard against facilitating the raising of his cheques, see London Joint Stock Bank v. Macmillan (1919) 88 L.J.K.B. 55.

It would be forgery for the maker of a promissory note to add "with interest" after the amount of the note without the consent of his accommodation endorser who had already signed as such. Hébert v. La Banque Nationale, 40 S.C.R. 458, reversing 16 Que. K.B. 191.

The oriminal intent in forgery]—The gist of the offence of forgery is the signing with the knowledge that the document was false and with the intent that it should be accepted as genuine to some one's prejudice. As soon as that was done, the offence was complete. United States v. Ford (1916), 10 W.W.R. 1042, 1048, 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 430, 34 W.L.R. 912 (Man.), per Mathers, C.J.K.B.; R. v. Dunlop (1857), 15 U.C.Q.B. 118 (Ont.); ex parte Cadby (1886), 26 N.B.R. 452, 492; R. v. Stewart (1875), 25 U.C.C.P. 440 (Ont); R. v. Gould (1869), 20 U.C.C.P. 154 (Ont.).

It is not necessary to show that any person has actually been prejudiced. United States v. Ford, supra; re Lazier, 26 A.R. 260 (Ont.); R. v. Ward, Str. R. 747, 2 Ld. Raym. 1461.

A woman who signs a deed or mortgage as if she were the wife of her co-grantor, the owner of the lands, but knows at the same time that he has a lawful wife living and that her marriage contract with him is void, is guilty, along with him, of making a false document knowing it to be false, and may therefore be charged with forgery, if it is evident that the only interest she claimed in the lands was a dower interest as the pretended wife of her co-defendant. United States v. Ford, 10 W.W.R. 1042, 1047, supra. As she was not the real wife she had no dower interest, although she may have thought at the time of the foreign marriage contract that she then became her co-defendant's lawful wife. Ibid. The male defendant was under Code sec. 69 a principal in the offence committed by the female defendant who posed as his wife in the offence committed by the female defendant was proved the states v. Ford, supra.

Onus of proof]-There is a distinction between a civil and a criminal case when a question of forgery arises. In a civil case the onus of proving the genuineness of a deed is cast upon the party who produces it and asserts its validity. If there be conflicting evidence as to the genuineness, either by reason of alleged forgery or otherwise, the party asserting the deed must satisfy the jury that it is genuine. The jury must weigh the conflicting evidence, consider all the probabilities of the case, not excluding the ordinary presumption of innocence, and must determine the question according to the balance of those probabilities. In a criminal case the onus of proving the forgery is cast upon the prosecutor to assert this, and unless he can satisfy the jury that the instrument is forged to the exclusion of reasonable doubt, the prisoner must be acquitted. Doe [d.] Devine v. Wilson (1855), 10 Moore P.C. 502, quoted with approval, in R. v. Anderson (1914), 5 W.W.R. 1052, at 1059, 7 Alta. L.R. 102, 26 W.L.R. 783, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 455. If the facts in a civil case render it extremely probable that the writing denied is genuine and that the denial is a mere obstruction to proof, it is convenient that the judge may dispose of such a contest by applying the rule enabling him to compare the disputed writing with one admittedly genuine, and on being satisfied that the writing is the same to receive the document as sufficiently proved where there is no sworn denial. Dominion Permanent Loan Co. v. Morgan (1914), 7 W.W.R. 844, 863 (Can.), per Idington, J.

Corroboration]—Forgery punishable under sees. 468-470, inclusive, requires corroboration under see. 1002; R. v. Ranger (1917), 30 Can. Cr. Cas. 65 (Que.); R. v. McBride, 26 Ont. R. 639, 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 544; R. v. Giles, 6 U.C.C.P. 84 (Ont.); but sec. 1002 does not apply to the offence under sec. 467 of uttering or attempting to utter a forged document knowing it to be forged.

On a charge of forging promissory notes, the fact that at the time the accused sold the alleged forged notes, the original and true notes were in a bank and pledged by the accused is most material evidence implicating him. R. v. Scheller (1914), 6 W.W.R 261, 7 Sask. L.R. 239, 27 W.L.R. 621, 23 Can. Cr. Cas. 1 (Sask.). There the accused endorsed and disposed of as genuine originals the copies of the notes which he obtained on request from the bank to which he had pledged the originals as collateral; and see R. v. Daun, 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 244, as to corroboration generally.

Comparison of handwriting]—Comparison of a disputed writing with any writing proved to the satisfaction of the court to be genuine may be made by writnesses; and such writings, and the evidence of writnesses respecting the same, may be submitted to the court and jury as evidence of the genuineness or otherwise of the writing in dispute. Can. Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145, sec. 8. That enactment originated with the English statute, 28-29 Vict., Imp., ch. 18, sec. 8, which has been generally adopted in provincial statutes as well by federal law. The Canada

Evidence Act applies to all criminal proceedings and to certain civil proceedings which come under the federal and not the provincial legislative powers. Can. Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 145, sec. 2.

Prior to the enactment now embodied in sec. 8 of the Canada Evidence Act, other writings had to be relevant in other respects or they were excluded; but now other writings may be produced and proved for the purposes of comparison, although not otherwise connected with the case. Arbon v. Fussell, 3 F. & F. 152. Prior to that enactment the rule had been laid down in England that the test of genuineness ought to be the resemblances, not to the formation of letters in some other specimen, but to the general character of the writing which is impressed on it as the involuntary and unconscious result of constitution, habit or other permanent causes, and is therefore in itself permanent; and that a knowledge of this character is best acquired by seeing the individual write at times when his manner of writing is not in question, or by engaging with him in correspondence. Doe v. Tuckermore (1836), 5 A. & E. 705; Tracy Peerage Case, 10 Cl. & F. 161, 176. And many courts express a preference for the testimony of persons who have seen the accused write or have engaged in correspondence with him, rather than the expert opinions of persons who had not done so, but who base their opinions merely upon a study and critical examination made by them of the various writings produced. Desroches v. Langlois, 15 Que. K.B. 388; R. v. Ranger (1917), 30 Can. Cr. Cas. 65 (Que.); Dominion Permanent Loan Co. v. Morgan (1914), 7 W.W.R. 844.

But while the opinion alone of the expert who has never seen the person write, is frequently given little weight, his testimony may be of importance in pointing out the marks, indications and characters in the writings themselves upon which the opinion is based. Re Gammell Estate (1886), 19 N.S.R. 265, 279.

If the witness is in fact skilled in the comparison of handwriting, it is immaterial that he is not a professional expert and immaterial how he acquired his skill. R. v. Silverlock, [1894] 2 Q.B. 766.

While ordinarily a witness may be required to read or to write in the presence of the court, it has been held that a prisoner called as a witness on his own behalf cannot be compelled to furnish a specimen of his handwriting. Rex v. Grinder, 11 B.C.R. 370, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 333.

The signature of a prisoner to the "statement of accused" where he makes a statement at the preliminary hearing, may be tendered as evidence against him at his trial on a charge of forgery, and be considered on a comparison of handwriting. R. v. Golden, 11 B.C.R. 349, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 278; and see note to sec. 684.

The jury may without expert testimony compare the genuine writin with the disputed writing, but such a course is said to be hazardous; and such comparison alone should not be invoked to brand as a forgery [§ 466]

a document the genuineness of which is supported by the sworn testimony of those accused. Dominion Permanent Loan Co. v. Morgan (1914), 7 W.W.R. 844, 863, per Idington, J. (Can.). ge

Method of comparison by handwriting experts]---

In vol. 3 Journal of Criminal Law and Criminology, 940, Dr. Davenport, of Boston, says: "A valid judgment of the authorship of any questioned writing may be well grounded upon the following axioms: Every one who has practised writing long enough to do it automatically. having the mind intent upon the subject matter and not at all upon the writing itself, has inevitably acquired certain writing habits. Some of these habits are common with many other writers. Some few are uncommon and, perchance, some particular habit may even be peculiar to the single individual. Many of the habits are voluntary and conscious ones. These are subject to more or less control at will. But there are some other habits which are wholly involuntary and quite unconscious; these, therefore, are not subject to any modification at will. They can only be gradually changed through the formation of other new habits which displace the former habits. Careful analysis of a sufficiently large number of samples of unquestionably genuine automatic writing of any person will disclose the several classes of habits manifested by that writer. Likewise what may appear to be the habits in any piece of questionable writing, upon a comparison of the two sets of habits, those which are alike as well as those that are different, may readily be seen. If there is found to be a persistent agreement on the one hand in the absence of such habits particularly as are common to many other writers, and, on the other hand, in the presence of like habits especially of such as are involuntary and unconscious, and these, too, in such numbers and sequence of combination as could by no reasonable chance be due to merely accidental coincidence, then there is from such cumulative evidence no other conclusion to be drawn by an expert except the opinion that, beyond any reasonable doubt, the two sets of writing must be due to one and the same cause, that is, by the very same writer. . . . In forming an opinion it should not be overlooked that single points of likeness and unlikeness may be of vastly different relative value. Any writing to be at all readable must have very many points of similarity to the conventional model type. No sample of genuine open handwriting of any person is ever an exact facsimile in all respects of any other sample; a careful examination can always differentiate between them, however much alike they may appear upon casual observation. One who seeks to assume the disguise of another, as in forging a writing, naturally attempts to affect, so far as may be, the general appearance characteristic of the other. He hopes to pass muster without exciting suspicion, well knowing that, if an inquiry is once instituted, the falsity is likely to be revealed. To be able to do his best with his writing instrument he must hold it in his own customary way which may be quite different from that of the genuine writer whose writing he attempts to imitate. To get the correct forms of letters the forger may copy them in some mechanical way, make a freehand drawing of them or practise a running-hand copying until he has more or less acquired the new habit of similar formation of the letter. But his old unconscious habits of pen movements in the production of the new forms of letters still persist for he has not attempted to change these; his own unconscious habits of pen movements are unknown as well as those of the person imitated are unknown to the common forger. His aim is at general pictorial effect." 3 Journal of Criminal Law and Criminology, 940.

Expert testimony; limitation of number of witnesses on opinion evidence]—Where, in any criminal trial or other proceeding, it is intended by the prosecution or the defence, to examine as witnesses professional or other experts entitled according to the law or practice to give opinion evidence, not more than five of such witnesses may be called upon either side without the leave of the court or judge or person presiding. Can. Evidence Act, R.S.C. 1905, ch. 145, sec. 7.

Such leave shall be applied for before the examination of any of the experts who may be examined without such leave. Ibid., sec. 7 (2).

Misspellings as indicia of forgery]—A habit in the supposed forger of misspelling as in the codicils in question was admitted in a will case as bearing on the genuineness of the codicils. Cresswell v. Jackson (1864), 4 F. & F. 1.

In the Parnell Commission proceedings (1888), Piggott's fabrication of the criminal letters alleged to have been written by Mr. Parnell was detected in part by his misspelling of a word, 3 Wigmore on Evidence, sec. 2024; and see Brooks v. Tichborne, 5 Exch. 929; Hale's trial, 17 How. St. Tr. 173; Norman v. Morrell, 4 Ves. 770.

Aiding and abetting a forgery]—To make a person liable as an accessory before the fact (Code sec. 69), to an alleged forgery, there must be criminal intention, that it shall be used as genuine and to the prejudice of some one. R. v. Pariseault (1917), 28 Can. Cr. Cas. 112 (Que.). In that case it was pointed out that where there was no criminal intention and no one was prejudiced, the irregular signing of a.government pay cheque issued to one person, but signed by another who had replaced him in the service and to whom presumably the money rightfully belonged, was not forgery. R. v. Pariseault, supra.

Question of ratification or estoppel as to forged document]—A forgery as such, cannot be ratified, but if there be circumstances creating an estoppel against the person whose name was forged, he may be liable to the innocent holder because of his conduct. Merchants Bank v. Lucas, Cameron's S.C. Cases 275, 18 S.C.R. 704; Ewing v. Dominion Bank, 35 S.C.R. 133 (leave to appeal refused [1904] A.C. 806, 74 L.J.P.C. 21); Brook v. Hook, L.R. 6 Ex. 89; Hébert v. La Banque Nationale, 40 S.C.R. 458; La Banque Jacques Cartier v. La Banque d'Epargne, 13 A.C. 111; London Joint Stock Bank v. Macmillan, (1919)

A bank which has accepted a cheque cannot refuse payment of it although the drawer's credit had been obtained by forgery, if consideration was given by the holder and at the time the cheque was given to the pavee neither he nor the subsequent holder was aware of the fraud. Baker v. Merchants Bank, 19 W.L.R. 641 (Alta.). A bank is bound to know the signature of its own customer; the bank upon which the cheque purports to be drawn cannot recover back the moneys paid by it to another bank and paid out by the latter bank to the forger before it, the receiving bank, had any notice or knowledge of the forgery of the signature to the cheque. See Dominion Bank v. Union Bank, 40 S.C.R. 366, referring to Bank of Montreal v. The King, 38 S.C.R. 258, in which leave to appeal to the Judicial Committee was refused. But a different rule applies to forgery in the writing in the body of a cheque, because the bank is not bound to know the handwriting in which the document is written. Dominion Bank v. Union Bank, supra, distinguishing Bank of Montreal v. The King, supra, affirming 17 Man. R. 68, 6 W.L.R. 417, which reversed 4 W.L.R. 407. Where the amount of a cheque is fraudulently raised after acceptance and the receiving bank pays the money to the forger and receives payment from the paying bank the latter can recover the amount from the receiving bank as having been paid to it under a mistake of fact. Imperial Bank v. Bank of Hamilton [1903] A.C. 49, 72 L.J.P.C. 1.

When a business concern receives from a bank a notice from which it becomes aware that a forgery and fraud is being practised upon the bank, in the unauthorized use of the name of the person, or persons notified, the latter are bound by every principle of justice and right dealing between man and man, and in accordance with the usage of trade, within reasonable time to give the bank notice of the fraud. Ewing v. Dominion Bank, 36 S.C.R. 133.

In considering the question of how far a person incurs a liability by refraining from answering letters written to him in relation to a business matter, attention must, of course, be given to the surrounding circumstances, to the relationship existing between the writer and the receiver of the letters, and also to the receiver's intelligence and experience, and his knowledge, actual or to be presumed, of the customs of business men in like situations. Winearls v. Hoey, [1917] 2 W.W.R. 287.

Throughout the judgments in Ewing v. Dominion Bank, much stress is laid on the fact that Ewing & Co. were an experienced business firm, accustomed to banking and familiar with the customs of banks in discounting negotiable paper, and upon the further fact that, though they at once became aware that the signature to the note in question was a forgery and were told by their legal adviser that it was their duty to immediately notify the bank to that effect, they deliberately refrained from doing so, because they wished to screen the forger. Winearls v. Hoey, [1917] 2 W.W.R. 287, (Man.), per Judge Cumberland.

Extradition]-Forgery is an extraditable offence between Canada and the U.S.A. Re McCartney, 8 Man. R. 367; re Lazier, 30 Ont. R. 419, 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 167, 26 A.R. 260 (Ont.), 3 Can. Cr. ls v.

467. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence who, knowing a document to be forged, uses, deals with, or acts upon it, or attempts to use, deal with, or act upon it, or causes or attempts to cause any person to use, deal with, or act upon it, as if it were genuine, and is liable to the same punishment as if he had forged the document.

2. It is immaterial where the document was forged.

Origin]-Sec. 424, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 165, sec. 46; Forgery Act, 1861, Imp., sec. 26.

"Document" defined]-Code sec. 335, sub-sec. (f).

A false letter of introduction uttered with knowledge of its falsity and with intent that it should be acted upon as genuine to the prejudice of another, is within sec. 467. Re Abeel, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 189, 7 O.L.R. 327.

document]-Code secs. 335 (j) (false document), 466 Forged (forgery).

Uttering forged document]-The showing of a forged receipt to a person with whom the defendant is claiming credit on account of that receipt is an uttering, although the defendant never voluntarily parts with the possession of it. R. v. Radford (1844), 1 Den. C.C. 59, 1 Cos C.C. 168.

Describing the forged document]-The forged document which is the subject of the uttering should be accurately described. R. v. Cunningham (1885), Cass. S.C. Dig. 2nd ed., 194; Coutlee's S.C. Dig. 402; varying R. v. Cunningham, 6 R. & G. 31 (N.S.).

Objections to apparent defects are to be made before pleading, and are then subject to amendment. Code sec. 898. The substance of the offence may be stated in popular language. Code sec. 852, and any lack of details is to be remedied by an order for particulars. Code secs. 853-859. Ead v. The King, 40 S.C.R. 272, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 348. See note to sec. 468.

"Knowing a document to be forged"]—The guilty knowledge is of the essence of the offence and should be specifically alleged in the indictment or charge. R. v. Weir (No. 5) (1900), 9 Que. Q.B. 253, 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 499.

Evidence of similar criminal acts]—On a charge of feloniously uttering a forged deed, evidence of other forged deeds of a similar character, although of subsequent date, being found in the defendant's possession on his arrest is admissible to rebut a defence denying guilty knowledge. Rex v. Mason, 10 Cr. App. R. 169; 111 L.T. 336; 78 J.P. 389; and see R. v. Fisher [1910] 1 K.B. 149; R. v. Doyle, 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 197 (N.S.). But the jury should be instructed as to the limited purpose for which such evidence is given. R. v. Lovitt, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 15. Compare Thompson v. Director of Public Prosecutions (1918), 87 L.J.K.B. 478 (H.L.), affirming R. v. Thompson, 86 L.J.K.B. 1321 [1917] 2 K.B. 630.

Proof of admissions made by accused]—If a prosecutor uses the declaration of a prisoner, he must take the whole of it together, and cannot select one part and leave another; if there be either no other evidence in the case, or no other evidence incompatible with it, the declaration so adduced in evidence must be taken as true. But if, after the whole of the statement of the prisoner is given in evidence, the prosecutor is in a situation to contradict any part of it, he is at liberty to do so; and then the statement of the prisoner, and the whole of the other evidence, must be left to the jury, for their consideration, precisely as in any other case, where one part of the evidence is contradictory of the others. R. v. Jones, 2 C. & P. 628; and see generally Taylor on Evidence, 10th ed., pars. 725 et seq. 870-1; Wills on Cir. Ev., 6th ed., pp. 116 et seq., Phipson on Ev., 5th ed., pp. 218, 253; Wigmore on Ev., pars. 2099 et seq. and 2113 et seq.

The accused is entitled as of right to have such a statement considered in its entirety so that the true meaning of his statement may be made manifest for it is but in accordance with the plain dictates of justice and common sense that his statement, if used against him, shall be used only in the true sense in which he made it. And not only is he so entitled, but, in order that the true sense of his statement may be ascertained, he is entitled to show the facts and circumstances surrounding the making of it to the like extent that in the case of a contract he is entitled to show them in order to assist in its interpretation. R. v. Girvin [1917] 1 W.W.R. 907, 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 265, 272, 10 Alta. L.R. 324.

Search warrants]-Code secs. 629-632.

. 324.

- (k) any will, codicil or other testamentary document, either of a dead or living person, or any probate or letters of administration, whether with or without the will annexed; or.
- (1) any transfer or assignment of any share or interest in any stock, annuity or public fund of the United Kingdom or any part thereof, or of Canada or any part thereof, or of any dominion, possession or colony of His Majesty, or of any foreign state or country, or receipt or certificate for interest accruing thereon; or,
- (m) any transfer or assignment of any share or interest in the debt of any public body, company or society, British, Canadian or foreign, or of any share or interest in the capital stock of any such company or society, or receipt or certificate for interest accruing thereon; or,
- (n) any transfer or assignment of any share or interest in any claim to a grant of land from the Crown, or to any scrip or other payment or allowance in lieu of any such grant of land; or,
- (o) any power of attorney or other authority to transfer any interest or share hereinbefore mentioned, or to receive any dividend or money payable in respect of any such share or interest; or,
- (p) any entry in any book or register, or any certificate, coupon, share, warrant or other document which by any law or any recognized practice is evidence of the title of any person to any such stock, interest or share, or to any dividend or interest payable in respect thereof; or,
- (q) any exchequer bill or endorsement thereof or receipt or certificate for interest accruing thereon; or,
- (r) any bank note or bill of exchange, promissory note or cheque, or any acceptance, endorsement or assignment thereof; or.
- (s) any scrip in lieu of land; or,

[§ 468]

- (t) any document which is evidence of title to any portion of the debt of any dominion, colony or possession of His Majesty, or of any foreign state, or any transfer or assignment thereof; or,
- (u) any deed, bond, debenture, or writing obligatory, or any warrant, order, or other security for money or payment of money, whether negotiable or not, or endorsement or assignment thereof; or,
- (v) any accountable receipt or acknowledgment of the deposit, receipt, or delivery of money or goods, or endorsement or assignment thereof; or,
- (w) any bill of lading, charter-party, policy of insurance, or any shipping document accompanying a bill of lading, or any endorsement or assignment thereof; or,
- (x) any warehouse receipt, dock warrant, dock-keeper's certificate, delivery order, or warrant for the delivery of goods, or of any valuable thing, or any endorsement or assignment thereof; or,
- (y) any other document used in the ordinary course of business as proof of the possession or control of goods, or as authorizing, either on endorsement or delivery, the possessor of such document to transfer or receive any goods; is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for life if the document forged purports to be, or was intended by the offender to be understood to be or to be used as genuine.

"Share-warrant"]—The punctuation of the statute is retained in sub-sec. (p) in the form in which it was enacted, but the comma after "share" seems to be an error. The context indicates that a "share warrant" was intended to be referred to, a term better known in English company law than in Canadian law.

A count may be laid in popular language and a statement that A had forged B's cheque would amount to a popular description of the offence of forging a document purporting to be B's cheque. R. v. Illsley (No. 2), 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 107, distinguishing R. v. Carter, 2 East P.C. 985; and see U.S. v. Howell, 11 Wallace, 436 (U.S.).

If a person is convicted on an indictment for forging a promissory note and the fact in evidence was an incomplete note form which, nevertheless, under Code see, 466 might be the subject of forgery, strict accuracy would require that the indictment be amended by calling the document an "incomplete promissory note" and setting forth in it a detailed description of the document. But if no question is raised on the trial when an amendment could have been ordered (Code sec. 898). the conviction will stand where the defendant made no application for particulars under sec. 859 and was not misled by the discrepancy in calling the forged document a "promissory note." Ead v. The King (1908), 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 348, 360. Moreover, the accused might plead autrefois convict if again indicted for forging an "incomplete promissory note" if it were in fact the same document, as the subject-matter on which the accused was given in charge on the former trial would have been the same had " all proper amendments been made which might then have been made" (Code sec. 907). Ead v. The King, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 348.

Where the contradictory or repugnant expressions do not enter into the substance of the offence and the indictment will be good without them, they may be rejected as surplusage; and where the repugnant matter is inconsistent with any preceding averment it may be rejected as superfluous. R. v. Stevens, 5 East 254, at 255; 1 Chitty Cr. Law 231; 1 Bishop Cr. Law, sec. 491; R. v. Illsley (No. 2), 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 107 (N.S.).

Identity of person]—The signature of the accused to a bail bond or other document in the criminal proceedings may be used for the purpose of identification of the person on a charge of forgery. Jurisdiction of courts]—While a provincial legislature may establish a provincial court of the name and class which under federal law would have jurisdiction to try cases of forgery, it cannot extend the jurisdiction beyond that by pretending to confer such authority to a tribunal other than a superior court of criminal jurisdiction or a court which when established by the province becomes qualified, under the Criminal Code or other federal law dealing with the practice and procedure in criminal matters. R. v. Toland, 22 Ont. R. 505; R. v. Levinger, 22 Ont. R. 690. And independently of provincial legislation the federal parliament may impose upon existing criminal courts or tribunals constituted by the province the duty of administering any designated branch of the criminal law. Extradition with the U.S.A.]—On the question of the necessity for actual proof that the crime is an extradition crime as well by the laws of the demanding State as of our own, the cases of In re Murphy, 26 O.R. 163, 22 A.R. 386, 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 578, and Rex v. Governor of Holloway Prison, ex parte Siletti (1902), 87 L.T.R. 332, may be referred to. In the present state of the authorities in Canada, an extradition judge will act with prudence who requires it and does not rest upon presumptions. Osler, J.A., in re Harsha (No. 1), 10 Can. Cr. 475. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence who, with intent to defraud, causes or procures any telegram to be sent or delivered as being sent by the authority of any person knowing that it is not sent by such authority, with intent that such telegram should be acted on as being sent by that person's authority, and is liable, upon conviction thereof, to the same punishment as if he had forged a document to the same effect as that of the telegram.

Origin]-Sec. 428, Code of 1892.

[§ 475]

"Telegram"]—The word "telegram" as a derivative of the word "telegraph" is not to be deemed to include the word "telephone" or its derivatives. R.S.C. 1906, ch. 1, sec. 36.

In a civil action it has been held that before the received copy of a telegram can be put in evidence it must be proved that the original dispatched copy was lost or destroyed. Adamson v. Vachon, 3 W.W.R. 227, 22 W.L.R. 494. The production of the received copy alone is not legal proof that the person in whose name it purports to have been sent did sign or send the telegram, where the telegraph agent is called and deposes that he had no "recollection of the original, but if it ever existed it would have been destroyed in the customary way after a short period. Adamson v. Vachon, supra.

Locality of the offence]—The courts of the province from which the telegram is dispatched have jurisdiction; R. v. Galloway, 2 Alta. L.R. 258, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 317. And it seems that the courts of the province in which the telegram was caused to be delivered by the defendant's act elsewhere would likewise have jurisdiction in case the defendant were afterwards found and apprehended there. See Code sec. 888, and R. v. Galloway, 2 Alta. L.R. 258, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 317.

With intent to defraud]—The word "defraud" as used in sec. 475, Code, implies something to the prejudice of the financial or proprietary rights of the party defrauded. R. v. Galloway, 2 Alta. L.R. 258, 15 Can Cr. Cas. 317.

In that case the prisoner sent from Banff, Alberta, to Maizie Mc-Gregor (not the informant), at Prince Albert, Sask., the following telegram: "Get letter at Clayton Hotel, Regina. Come immediately. Ernest thrown from horse this morning. Not serious. Have to stay here a week. (Signed), A. H. Matheson." It was shown that this telegram was signed without Matheson's authority. The statements in the telegram were true. Its purpose was to have the person to whom the telegram was sent meet the accused at Banff instead of at Regina. It was held that it would be impossible to establish an intent to defraud from the sending of the telegram, and as the intent to defraud is an essential element of offence alleged, the prisoner was discharged, R. v. Galloway, 2 Alta. L.R. 258, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 317.

Obtaining something by forged instrument with knowledge of the forgery]—In an English case the prisoner was indicted under sec. 7 of the Forgery Act, Imp., 1913, for obtaining certain money by means of "a certain forged instrument, to wit, a forged request for the payment of one pound." The document in question was a letter purporting to come from, and to be signed by a man employed by, the prosecutor to whom it was addressed. The letter requested the prosecutor to hand to the bearer the sum of 1*l*, which the letter stated was required for the purpose of hiring a machine with which to clear out a drain on premises belonging to the prosecutor. It was held that the letter was an "instrument" within the meaning of sec. 7 of that statute. Rex v. Cade [1914] 2 K.B. 209; 83 L.J.K.B. 796; 10 Cr. App. B. 23; R. v. Stamp forgeries]—Forged cancelled stamps were held to be included in the penal clauses of the Stamp Duties Management Act, 1891 (Imp.), in a case where supposed cancelled one-pound postage stamps were sold for stamp collections, and both the stamps and the obliteration were forged. R. v. Lowden (1913), 9 Cr. App. R. 195.

On a prosecution under the Post Office Protection Act (Imp.), 1884, see. 7 (c), for having in possession "without lawful excuse" a die for making a fictitious stamp, it appeared by the evidence that the defendant was the proprietor of a newspaper circulating among stamp collectors, and had caused a die to be made for him abroad, from which imitations of a current colonial postage stamp could be made. The only purpose for which he had actually used it was for making on an illustrated catalogue illustrations in black and white, and not in colors of the stamp in question. This catalogue was sold as part of his newspaper. On a case stated by a magistrate as to whether this evidence showed "a lawful excuse," Grantham and Collins, JJ., were unanimous that it did not, and that the defendant was liable under the Act. Dickins v. Gill [1896] 2 Q.B. 310, 18 Cox 384.

Defacing or injuring registers of births, marriages or deaths]—A register is none the less defaced or injured because when produced in court the torn part has been pasted in and is as legible as before the offence. R. v. Bowen (1844), 1 Cox C.C. 88, 1 Den. 22.

A person who knowing his name to be A. signs another name as a witness to a marriage in an authorized register, is guilty of the offence of inserting a false entry in the register although he so signs as a third witness and two only were required by law. R. v. Asplin (1873), 12 Cox C.C. 391.

Where the false entry is actually made on the information of and at the instance of the accused, he is guilty of the offence of inserting the entry in the register and not merely of making a false statement for that purpose. R. v. Mason (1848), 2 C. & K. 622; R. v. Dewitt (1849), 2 C. & K. 905.

The offence of making false statements as to births, marriages and deaths in the particulars required for registration is controlled by provincial law.

False certificate of copy.—Fraudulently concealing register.—Permitting concealment.

481. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to ten years' imprisonment who,— Forgery of Trade Marks and Fraudulent Marking of Merchandise.

Forgery of trade mark defined.

486. Every one is deemed to forge a trade mark who either,--

(a) without the assent of the proprietor of the trade mark makes that trade mark or a mark so nearly resembling it as to be calculated to deceive; or,

[§ 486]

(b) falsifies any genuine trade mark, whether by alteration, addition, effacement or otherwise.

2. Any trade mark or mark so made or falsified is, in this Part, referred to as a forged trade mark.

Origin]—Sec. 445, Code of 1892; 51 Vict., Can., eh. 41, sec. 3; 50-51 Vict., ch. 28.

"Trade-mark" defined]—Code see. 335, sub-see. (s), declares that "trade mark' means a trade mark or industrial design registered in accordance with the Trade Mark and Design Act, and the registration whereof is in force under the provisions of the said Act, and includes any trade mark which, either with or without registration, is protected by law in any British possession or foreign state to which the provisions of sec. 103 of the Act of the United Kingdom, known as The Patents, Designs and Trade Marks Act, 1883, are, in accordance with the provisions of the said Act, for the time being applicable."

A very similar definition contained in the Newfoundland statutes (Newfoundland Trade-Marks Act, C.S. 2nd series, ch. 112, sec. 2) came up for review by the Privy Council in Imperial Tobacco Co. v. Duffy (1918), 87 L.J.P.C. 50, and it was there held that the words 'to which the provisions of sec. 103, etc.' referred back to the words ''British possession or foreign state'' (the last antecedent), and not to the word ''trade-mark.'' Imperial Tobacco Co. v. Duffy (1918), 87 L.J.P.C. 50 at 51.

A British Order-in-Council, passed in 1887 under the Imperial Act of 1883 (46-47, Vict. Imp. eb. 47, sec. 4), declared that the provisions of sec. 103 should be applicable to the United States. Imperial Tobacco Co. v. Duffy, supra.

Punishment for forging a trade-mark]-Code sec. 488.

Offence of falsely applying a trade-mark]-Code sees. 487, 488.

Contesting validity of trade-mark]—It is well settled that in an action for infringement of a trade-mark it is open to the defendant to show by way of defence that the plaintiff has no legal title to the exclusive use of the trade-mark that he has registered. The defendant is not driven to an application to remove the trade-mark from or to rectify the register. This was decided by the Supreme Court of Canada in Partlo v. Todd, 17 S.C.R. 196, with reference to the Trade-Marks Act as it then stood, and by the Ontario Court in Provident Chemical Works v. Canada Chemical Manufacturing Co., 4 O.L.R. 545, after subsequent amendments made to the statute. R. v. Cruttenden, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 223 at 227; and see Spilling v. O'Kelly, 8 Can. Exch. R. 426.

The certificate of registration of a trade-mark under the Canadian Act is only prima facie evidence, and it was open to the defendant in anadian idant in an infringement suit to show that the plaintiff was not the proprietor of a trade-mark when he registered, and that what he had registered was not capable of registration as a trade-mark for the exclusive use of the party registering. In other words, that mere registration did not create a trade-mark, but that before registration the party seeking to register must have acquired the proprietorship of the mark, name, brand, label, package or other business device which he procured to be registered for his exclusive use; and that the register or certificate of registration was not conclusive, and did not preclude a defendant from impeaching a plaintiff's right or title. Partlo v. Todd, 17 S.C.R. 196: Partlo v. Todd, 17 S.C.R. 196, 14 A.R. 444 (Ont.); Provident Chemical Works v. Canada Chemical Co., 4 O.L.R. 545; McCall v. Theal, 28 Gr. 48 (Ont.).

The term "proprietor of a trade-mark" means a person who has appropriated and acquired a right to the exclusive use of the mark, and where a party has a trade-mark he can institute no proceedings to prevent its infringement until and unless such trade-mark is registered in pursuance of the Act; but this by no means implies that one man can copy and register a trade-mark belonging to another or a trademark in common use. Partlo v. Todd, 17 S.C.R. 196. Chief Justice Ritchie there cited with approval the following dictum of Lord Westbury in McAndrew v. Bassett (1864), 33 L.J. Ch. 567; 4 DeG. J. & S. 384: "The essential qualities for constituting that property (property in a trade-mark) probably would be found to be no other than these: First, that the mark has been applied by the plaintiffs properly (that is to say), that they have not copied any other person's mark, and that the mark does not involve any false representation; secondly, that the article so marked is actually a vendible article in the market; and thirdly, that the defendants, knowing that to be so, have imitated the mark for the purpose of passing in the market other articles of a similar description."

It would be a valid defence to prove that the label constituting the trade-mark in question had been used by the defendant and others prior to the registration of the trade-mark by plaintiff. Fafard v. Ferland, 6 Que, P.R. 119.

The Canadian Trade-Mark Act provides that a mark adopted for use by any person in his trade for the purpose of distinguishing his goods may be registered for his exclusive use, and it is clear that one may adopt a mark without first using it. Spilling Bros. v. Ryall, 8 Can. Exch. R. 195. The registration must, of course, in such a case be followed by use, if the proprietor wishes to retain his right to the trademark. In that respect there is no difference between the law of Canada and the law of England. Ibid. Nor is it an objection to the validity of the registration of the plaintiffs' trade-mark that the application or declaration on which it was obtained was not signed by the plaintiffs personally, but by their attorneys or agents. Spilling Bros. v. Ryall, supra.

Prior use outside of Canada]—A person may have a valid trade-mark in one country and yet be prohibited from extending its use into another country in which another person had obtained and used in good faith a valid registered trade-mark of a similar kind in ignorance of the use of the mark elsewhere. Imperial Tobacco Co. v. Duffy (1918), 87 L.J.P.C. 50; Smith v. Fair, 14 Ont. R. 729; and see Spilling Bros. v. Ryall, 8 Can. Exch. R. 195; Berliner v. Knight, 1883, W.N. 70 (Eng.).

If by laws of any country the makers of certain goods are required to put thereon certain prescribed marks to denote the standard or character of such goods, and goods bearing the prescribed marks are exported to Canada and put upon the market here, it is not possible thereafter, and while such goods are to be found in the Canadian market, for anyone to acquire in Canada a right to the exclusive use of such prescribed marks to be applied to the same class of goods, or to the exclusive use of any mark so closely resembling the prescribed marks as to be calculated to deceive or mislead the public. Gorham Manufacturing Company v. Ellis, 8 Can. Exch. R, 401.

Prior user by others outside of Canada and not extending to Canada will not disentitle the first person applying the mark in Canada as a trade-mark and registering same there, to the exclusive use of same in Canada. Templeton v. Wallace, 4 Terr. L.R. 340.

It has been held that acquiescence by the owner of a "fancy word" trade-mark in the United States in the use of a similar word there as applied to a different class of goods may be set up in answer to an infringement action brought in Canada for the similar use of same. Lambert Pharmacal Co. v. Palmer, 39 Que. S.C. 64, 21 Que. K.B. 451.

That was a case where the different class of goods belonged to the same line of trade. If the goods were in another line of trade, it seems clear that the use of a trade mark in one line of trade will not prevent its adoption by another person in another and entirely distinct trade. Lambert Pharmacal Co. v. Palmer, supra.

Trade-mark so nearly resembling as to be "calculated to deceive']— Where the plaintiffs show an actual copying of their registered trademark they are not required to go further. The Act gives them the exelusive right to use the trade-mark to designate the article manufactured or sold by them; and the defendants cannot, either knowingly or innocently, infringe upon that right. Provident Chemical Works v. Canada Chemical Co., 4 O.L.R. 545; Slater v. Ryan, 17 Man. R. 89. Under the English Act the same rule prevails: Edwards v. Dennis (1885), 30 Ch. D. 454, at p. 471; Lambert v. Goodbody (1902), 18 Times L.R. 394.

The object of the legislation is to protect the owners of trade-marks so as to secure to them the benefit of the money and time which they have expended in building up a market for their own goods, and to do this the Legislature must protect them with respect not to the intelligent and wary purchaser, but to the unwary one. R. v. Authier, 6 Que. Q.B. 146; Leather Cloth Co. v. American Leather Cloth Co. (1865), 11 H.L.C.

p. 539; Wotherspoon & Currie (1872), L.R. 5 E. & I. App. 519. The magistrate trying a charge of selling goods falsely marked is entitled to examine the alleged infringement and form a conclusion as to whether the resemblance was sufficient between the two labels used in the way they were to justify a finding that the defendant's label is calculated to deceive. R. v. Authier, 6 Que, Q.B. 146.

In deciding whether a trade-mark so resembles another as to be calculated to deceive, visual resemblance is not necessarily the only thing to be considered; the possibility of confusion to the ear may also be an element. Doran v. Hogadore, 11 O.L.R. 321.

It may appear that there was a likelihood of deception from the general design and appearance although the prominent words of a label were different. Anheuser Busch Brewery Association v. Edmonton B. & M. Co., 15 W.L.R. 421 (Alta.); Re Gutta Percha Co. [1909] 2 Ch. 10.

Corruptions of words merely descriptive of the goods are not the subject of exclusive use as trade-marks. Kirstein v. Cohen, 39 S.C.R. 286, affirming 13 O.L.R. 144, 11 O.L.R. 50.

There may be an infringement in the use by a company of an abbreviation of its own corporate name applied to their goods when such abbreviation is so like the registered trade-mark of a competitor as to be calculated to deceive. Boston Rubber Shoe Co. v. Boston Rubber Co. of Montreal, 32 S.C.R. 315.

If the trade-mark proposed to be registered under the Canadian Trade-Mark Act so resembles one already on the register that the owner of the latter is liable to be injured by the former being passed off as his, then a case is presented in which the proposed trade-mark is calculated to deceive or mislead the public. Re Gutta Percha Co. [1909] 2 Ch. 10. Whenever the resemblance between two trade-marks is such that one person's goods are sold as those of another, the result is that the latter is injured and some one of the public is misled. To prevent these things from happening, Parliament has given the Minister of Agriculture a discretion to refuse to register a trade-mark proposed for registration where it is identical with or resembles a trade-mark already registered. He may refer the question to the Exchequer Court of Canada, in which event that Court will exercise its discretion and determine the matter upon the same principles as should guide the Minister in the exercise of his discretion. Re Melchers and De Kuyper (1898), 6 Can. Exch. R. 82.

It does not follow that because the person objecting to the registration of a trade-mark could not get an injunction against the applicant the latter is entitled to put his trade-mark on the register. ReSpeer (1887), 55 L.T. 880; in re The Australian Wine Importers, Lt., L.R. (1889), 41 Ch. Div. 278. With reference to the exercise by the Comptroller of the discretion given him by The Patents, Designs and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, Imp., to register or to refuse to register a trade-mark, the House of Lords has held that he ought to refuse registration where it is not clear that deception may not result. Eno v. Dunn (1890), 15 App. Cas. 252; see also In re Trade-mark of John Dewhurst & Sons, Lt. [1896] 2 Ch. D. 137. And that should be followed in disposing of applications made under the Canadian Act. Re Melehers and De Kuyper, 6 Can. Exch. R. 82.

A trade word used as descriptive of goods may become so well known as to found a civil action for an injunction to restrain the passing off of goods so similarly marked as to be calculated to deceive, although the trade word may not constitute a valid trade-mark. Vineberg v. Vineberg, 23 Que. K.B. 256; and see Standard Sanitary Mfg. Co. v. Standard Ideal Co. [1911] A.C. 78; Gramm v. Fisher Motor Co., 30 O.L.B. 1, 5 O.W.N. 449; Anheuser Busch Brewery Assocn. v. Edmonton B. & M. Co., 15 W.L.R. 421 (Alta.).

A trade word, although afterwards registered as a trade-mark, does not lose the protection which it had previously acquired; so if the mark had already acquired a meaning referable only to the manufacturer's goods of a particular class, he may be entitled to restrain the use of that word in the advertising of competitive goods although not applied by the competitor to the goods themselves or to any package containing it (Trade-Mark Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 71, sec. 5). United States Playing Card Co. v. Hurst (1917), 39 O.L.R. 249.

For civil cases dealing with the words "calculated to deceive" see Cording v. Cording (1916), 85 L.J. Ch. 742, affirming re Cording [1916] 1 Ch. 422; re Waide, 33 R.P.C. 320; Boord v. Banham [1896] A.C. 199; Saxlehner v. Apollinaris Co. [1897] 1 Ch. 893.

General or specific trade-mark]—A trade-mark under the Canadian Trade-Mark and Design Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 71, is either general or specific. A general trade-mark is one applicable to all the articles of trade in which a person deals; a specific trade-mark is one limited to a particular class of goods. Re Noelle, 13 E.L.R. 366.

What may be registered as a trade-mark]—In Cellular Clothing Company v. Maxden (1899), 68 L.J.P.C. 74, it was held that ''a trader who selects an invented name for the purposes of distinguishing his goods from those of other traders is entitled to be protected in the use of the sign which he has chosen. In such a case the mere fact of the use of the arbitrary sign by a rival trader raises presumption of a design to pass off his goods under false colours, which it is not easy to displace.'' This was quoted with approval in Vive Camera Co. v. Hogg, 18 Que, S.C. 1.

[§ 486]

It has been held that the name of a comic section of a newspaper is not registrable as a trade-mark. N.Y. Herald Co. v. Ottawa Citizen Co., 41 S.C.R. 229 (the "Buster Brown" case).

Corruptions of words descriptive of the goods are no more registrable than descriptive words. Kirstein v. Cohen, 39 S.C.R. 286.

An unregistered trade-mark is only entitled to protection where there is unfair or fraudulent competition, and damage is shown to have been caused to the proprietor of such mark. Pabst Brewing Co. v. Ekers, and Canadian Breweries, Ltd., 21 Que. S.C. 545.

The Trade-Mark and Design Act, Can., has not the effect of giving to a person who has caused to be registered as a trade-mark under the said first-mentioned Act a word which, as a matter of fact, is not a name adopted by him for the purpose of distinguishing any manufactured product or article manufactured, produced, compounded, packed or offered for sale by him, but is a descriptive adjective applicable to and descriptive of all goods of a certain quality or character, an exclusive right to the use of said word in such manner as to prevent other manufacturers of, or dealers in, goods of a like quality or character from truthfully describing the goods so manufactured or dealt in by them as having the said quality or character, or of preventing such other manufacturers or vendors when sued for infringement of the trade-mark so registered from pleading in answer to and as a defence to said action that such word is such descriptive adjective and correctly described the goods manufactured or dealt in by them, and their right to use it as so describing said goods. Partlo v. Todd (1888), 17 S.C.R. 197; Asbestos Co. v. Sclater, 18 Que. S.C. 324, affirmed 10 Que. K.B. 165.

Individual names as trade-marks]

The name of an individual may be registered as a specific trademark in Canada if it be established that there had been such long user, in all the principal countries of the world, of the name as applied to the manufacture of certain goods as to give it a distinctive or secondary meaning. Re Elkington's Trade-mark, 11 Can. Exch. R. 293; re Wedgwood & Sons Trade-mark, 12 Can. Exch. R. 417; re Horlick, 35 D.L.R. 516; Palmer v. Palmer-McLellan Shoe Pack Co., 45 N.B.R. 8; Russia Cement Co. v. LePage, 14 B.C.R. 317; R.S.C. 1906, ch. 71, sec. 5.

Where a secondary meaning has been acquired by long user of a surname as a trade-mark, others of the same surname must distinguish their goods in marking competitive products. Palmer v. Palmer-McLellan Co., supra; Russia Cement Co. v. LePage, 14 B.C.R. 317.

Label as a trade-mark of combined features]

The Canadian Trade-Mark Act authorizes the registration of a label as a trade-mark. In such case it would appear requisite that the label should, in analogy with the general law of trade-marks, have a distinctive character. It would be only thus that the person could be said to be proprietor of it. De Kuyper v. Van Dulken, 24 S.C.R. 114. In the case of a label registered as a trade-mark the trade-mark does not lie in each particular part of the label; per Lord Esher in Pinto v. Badman (1891), 8 Cutler Pat. Cas. 181; but in the combination of them all. De Kuyper v. Van Dulken, supra.

Limitation of privilege to same general class to which mark is applied by owner]

The protection of a trade-mark, if not limited to the particular class of goods to which it is applied by the holder, is limited to goods of the same general class; the holder would have no right to restrain the use of the same mark by another in an entirely distinct and noncompetitive line of trade. Lambert Pharmacal Co. v. Palmer, 21 Que. K.B. 451.

In a Territories case it was said that it would be unreasonable to hold that because a certain person had acquired the right to use a certain name in connection with pills for the cure of a certain complaint, no other person could acquire the exclusive right to use that name in connection with pills for the cure of any other ailment. Templeton v. Wallace (1900), 4 Terr. L.R. 340, per Scott, J.

Conflicting trade names]

Persons who have properly used a surname as a trade name and have established it in their business may be entitled to an injunction restraining the competitive use of the name by others who cannot claim to justify on the ground of its being their personal name. Gramm Motor Truck Co. v. Fisher Motor Co. (1913), 30 O.L.R. 1; Kingston v. Kingston (1912), 29 R.P.C. 289; Lloyd's v. Lloyd's (1912), 29 R.P.C. 433; Faceimile Letter Printing Co. v. Facsimile Typewriting Co. (1912), 29 R.P.C. 557; Mickelson v. Kill-Em-Quick Co. [1918] 1 W.W.R. 781 (Man.); Singer Mfg. Co. v. Charlebois, 16 Que. S.C. 167; Singer v. Loog, 8 A.C. 15.

Descriptive words have never been recognized as appropriate for use as trade-marks. Registrar v. Du Cros [1913] A.C. 624, 83 L.J. Ch. 1; Imperial Tobacco Co. v. De Pasquali (1918), 87 L.J. Ch. 293, 300. In England names became registrable for the first time under the Trade-Marks Act, 1905, Imp., 5 Edw. VII, ch. 15, but only if distinctive, and they could not be deemed distinctive under that Act without an order of the Board of Trade or the Court. Imperial Tobacco Co. v. De Pasquali, supra. This restriction does not apply to marks consisting of a letter or combination of letters, but before such a mark can be accepted in England the Registrar of Trade-Marks or the Court has to be satisfied that it is adapted to distinguish the goods of the applicant from those of others. It need not necessarily be so adapted, and whether it is or is not so adapted appears to depend largely on whether other traders are or are not likely to desire in the ordinary course of their business, to make use in connection with their goods of the particular letter or letters constituting the mark. Registrar v. Du Cros, 83 LJ. Ch. 1 [1913] A.C. 624, per Lord Parker; Imperial Tobacco Co. v. De Pasquali (1918), 87 L.J. Ch. 293, 300.

Ordinary words descriptive of quality only, and which therefore could not acquire a secondary meaning, do not constitute a valid trademark. Bowker Fertilizer Co. v. Gunns, Limited, 16 Can. Exch. R. 520; Kops v. Dominion Corset Co., 15 Can. Exch. R. 18; Gillett v. Lumsden, 4 O.L.R. 300; Gillett v. Lumsden [1905] A.C. 601; Partlo v. Todd, 14 A.R. 444 (Ont.); Partlo v. Todd, 17 S.C.R. 196 (Can.); Provident Chemical Works v. Canada Chemical Co., 2 O.L.R. 182; Dominion Flour Mills Co. v. Morris, 25 O.L.R. 561, 21 O.W.R. 540; Cellular Clothing Co. v. Maxton [1899] A.C. 326.

It would seem that it would not be an offence to name an actual ingredient as part of the mark on an article although long-continued user by another may have made the descriptive term distinctive, so long as there is no colourable imitation of the whole thing and the character and form of the label is completely distinguished. Gillett v. Lumsden, 4 O.L.R. 300; Gillett v. Lumsden [1905] A.C. 601; re Smokeless Powder Co. [1892] 1 Ch. 194; Raggett v. Findlater, L.R. 17 Eq. 29; Turton v. Turton, 42 Ch. D. 147.

Geographical names with secondary meaning]

A geographical description as applied to an article made or sold in a particular district, which may be applied truthfully by other makers or dealers, cannot usually be regarded as entitled to protection as a trade-mark. The reason of this rule is this, that a generic name is not to be used in reference to such an article, where every person residing within the particular place or district is equally entitled to its use, the design of the law being not to foster monopolies. Rose v. McLean Publishing Co., 24 A.R. 240 (Ont.). In such cases it would be necessary as in the Glenfield Starch Case (Wotherspoon v. Currie (1872), L.R. 5 H.L. 508), to show that it had acquired a secondary meaning; that in connection with the particular manufacture, in other words, it had become the trade denomination of the article made; but where a name, though generic and geographical, does not indicate the composition or quality of the specific article to which it is applied, or the particular country or district where produced or manufactured, the rule does not apply. Rose v. McLean Pub. Co., supra, per Burton, J. A.

A geographical name may by long user acquire a secondary meaning and so constitute a good trade-mark, and may in such event be registered under the Canadian Trade-Marks Act, R.S.C. 1906, eb. 71. Canada Foundry Co. v. Bueyrus Co., 47 S.C.R. 484, affirming Bueyrus v. Canada Foundry Co., 14 Can. Exch. R. 35; and see re National Starch application [1908] 2 Ch. 698; Grand Hotel Co. v. Wilson [1904] A.C. 103; Montgomery v. Thompson [1891] A. C. 217; Wotherspoon v. Currie, L.R. 5

H.L. 508. Where the mineral waters of the appellant derived from various Caledonia springs, so called from being in a township of that name, acquired in the market the name of "Caledonia Water;" and the respondents having discovered other springs in the same township, sold their goods as "from new springs at Caledonia;" it was held, in an action for an injunction, that the appellants had not, in those circumstances, a right to the exclusive use of the word "Caledonia." The respondents were entitled to indicate the local source of their waters, and had sufficiently distinguished their goods from those of the appellants. Grand Hotel Co. v. Wilson [1904] A.C. 103, affirming 5 O.L.R. 145.

Assignability of trade-marks]—A trade-mark is assignable only in connection with the good-will of the business, general or specific, in which the trade-mark has been used. Gegg v. Bassett, 3 O.L.R. 405. It is not assignable in gross. Ibid.; and see Robin v. Hart (1891), 23 N.S.R. 316; Rickart v. Britton Mfg. Co., 3 O.W.N. 1272, 22 O.W.R. 81. Ordinarily the sale of a business and the good-will will pass the right to use the trade-marks of that business. Re Roger, 12 R.P.C. 149; Currie v. Currie, 15 R.P.C. 339; Robin v. There may be circumstances under which a transfer by persons using in the United States a trade-mark in connection with their business there of the right to use the mark in Canada in which they had not established any trade may be viewed as a transfer of the good-will in the prospective Canadian trade, but apart from that the assignee would establish his right to use the mark if he could prove that it was not used by any person in Canada when he adopted it. Smith v. Fair, 14 Ont. R. 729.

Onus of proof of license by proprietor]—By Code sec. 488, sub-sec. (2), on a prosecution for forging a trade-mark the burden of proof of the assent of the proprietor shall lie on the defendant.

Selling goods which have a forged trade-mark]-Code sec. 489.

What is applying a trade mark or trade description.

487. Every one is deemed to apply a trade mark, or mark, or trade description to goods who,—

- (a) applies it to the goods themselves; or,
- (b) applies it to any covering, label, reel, or other thing in or with which the goods are sold or exposed or had in possession for any purpose of sale, trade or manufacture; or,

(c) places, incloses or annexes any goods which are sold or exposed or had in possession for any purpose of sale, trade or manufacture in, with or to any covering, label, reel, or other thing to which a trade mark or mark or trade description has been applied; or,

[§ 487]

(d) uses a trade mark or mark or trade description in any manner calculated to lead to the belief that the goods in connection with which it is used are designated or described by that trade mark or mark or trade description.

2. A trade mark or mark or trade description is deemed to be applied whether it is woven, impressed or otherwise worked into, or annexed or affixed to, the goods, or to any covering, label, reel, or other thing.

3. Every one is deemed to falsely apply to goods a trade mark or mark who, without the assent of the proprietor of the trade mark, applies such trade mark, or a mark so nearly resembling it as to be calculated to deceive.

Innocent application of false mark]-Code secs. 489, 494, 495.

Limitation]—Offences relating to the fraudulent marking of merchandise under Part VII, are to be prosecuted within three years. Code 1140 (a).

Forgery of trade mark.—Applying a false trade description.—Burden of proof.

488. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence who, with intent to defraud,—.

(a) forges any trade mark; or,

- (b) falsely applies to any goods any trade mark, or any mark so nearly resembling a trade mark as to be calculated to deceive; or,
- (c) makes any die, block, machine or other instrument, for the purpose of forging, or being used for forging, a trade mark; or,
- (d) applies any false trade description to goods; or,
- (e) disposes of, or has in his possession, any die, block, machine or other instrument, for the purpose of forging a trade mark; or,

(f) causes any of such things to be done.

2. On any prosecution for forging a trade mark the burden of proof of the assent of the proprietor shall lie on the defendant.

Origin]—Sees. 447 and 710, Code of 1892; 51 Vict., Can., ch. 41, sec. 6; Patents, Designs and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, Imp.; Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, Imp. Sub-sec. (2) of sec. 447 was sec. 710 of the 1892 Code.

Marks lawfully and generally applied prior to 1888]—An exception is stated in sec. 342 which provides, with some special qualifications as to wrongly naming the country of origin of the goods, that where a trade description was "lawfully and generally applied" to goods of a particular class or manufactured by a particular method, at the time the enactment first became law (1888), the provisions as to false trade descriptions shall not apply to such trade description. A similar exception is contained in the Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, Imp., 50-51 Vict., eb. 28, sec. 18.

At the time of the passing of the Act of 1887 there was a trade in England in the sale of small fish, prepared in oil and packed in tins, under the description of "Norwegian sardines." The persons engaged in the trade knew, but the purchasing public did not know, that the fish sold under the above description were not sardines, but were brisling, a Norwegian fish similar to the sprat. The respondents having sold brisling prepared in the above manner under the description of "Norwegian sardines" were charged with an offence under the Act, and by way of defence relied on the exception. It was held that a trade description was not "lawfully" applied to goods, if its use, although not then involving the commission of a criminal offence, tended to mislead the public; a trade description was not "generally" applied, unless it was a conventional term in general use, not only by the persons engaged in the particular trade, but by the public at large; that the description "Norwegian sardines" was neither "lawfully" nor "generally" applied at the time of the passing of the Act of 1887 to brisling prepared in oil and sold in tins; and that the respondents were properly convicted. Lemy v. Watson [1915] 3 K.B. 731; 84 L.J.K.B. 1999; 32 R.P.C. 508.

Innocent application of false mark]-Code secs. 489, 494, 495.

Sub-sec. (2)—Onus of proof]—The onus of proving the assent of the proprietor is shifted to the defendant only upon a charge of "forging" a trade-mark, the offence referred to in sub-see. (a) of sec. 488, and not to the offence of falsely applying under sub-sec. (b). R. v. Howarth (1898), 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 243 (Ont.).

Contesting validity of trade-mark]—The defendant charged with falsely applying a trade-mark may contest the validity of the registered mark. R. v. Cruttenden (1905), 10 O.L.R. 80, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 223; Lambert Pharmacal Co. v. Palmer, 21 Que. K.B. 451.

Mark "calculated to deceive"]-See note to sec. 486.

False trade description]—The use of the words "quadruple plate" in an advertisement of sale of silver-plated ware may constitute a false trade description, the application of which is an offence under this section. R. v. T. Eaton Co. (1899), 31 Ont. R. 276; 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 421.

It is not necessary that the false trade description should be physically connected with the goods or that it should accompany the same, and oral evidence is admissible to connect the description of the goods in the advertisement with the goods afterwards sold. R. v. Eaton, supra. Describing wine by the name of a particular quality of wine of which there was only a small percentage, and that of a blending and not a consumable kind, has been held an offence. Holmes v. Pipers, Limited [1914] 1 K.B. 57, 83 L.J.K.B. 285, 23 Cox C.C. 689.

The description in an invoice of the goods is sufficient, but an oral statement made on the sale is not within this section. Coppen v. Moore [1898] 2 Q.B. 300, 306, 67 L.J.Q.B. 689; Langley v. Bombay Tea Co. [1900] 2 Q.B 460, 69 L.J.Q.B. 752.

Gunpowder manufacturers contracted to supply gunpowder under the trade-mark of "R.L.G., No. 4." Owing to an explosion they were unable to manufacture the powder, but they obtained gunpowder equal in quality from a German manufacturer, and packed it in barrels supplied by the government, and inserted their own trade name on the labels as contractors. gunpowder, and no complaint was made by the government, but no communication was made on delivery that the gunpowder was of German manufacture. The Q.B. Division held justices were wrong in refusing to convict, as the description attached implied they were delivering gunpowder of their own manufacture, when, in fact, it was not such. Starey v. Chilworth Gunpowder Co., 24 Q.B.D. 90: 59 L.J.M.C. 13. Selling machine-made cigarettes with a label describing them as hand-made is a false trade description. Kirshenboim v. Salmon and Gluckstein, Limited, [1898] 2 Q.B. 19, 67 L.J.Q.B. 601. A. bought six barrels of beer from L., a brewer, and received with the casks an invoice describing the casks as barrels. One was six gallons short :- Held, that the delivery of the invoice might be an application of a false trade description, although such invoice was not physically attached to the goods, and that evidence of L. having in previous transactions sent casks of short measure was admissible evidence of L. having authorized a false trade description to be used. Budd v. Lucas [1891] 1 Q.B. 408, 60 L.J.M.C. 95, 17 Cox C.C. 248.

The foundation of a margarine mixture made in France and imported as "Oleo margarine" was mixed at Southampton with a small percentage of imported Danish butter and English milk. The finished product was called "Le Dansk" and sold in England in card boxes under the description of "Le Dansk French Factory, Le Dansk, Paris." The conviction was affirmed on the ground that the words were a false trade description and the article was obviously represented as being of foreign make when it was not. Bischop v. Toler, 44 W.R. 189; 65 L.J.M.C. 1. At his establishment in Ireland, Lipton sold under the descriptions (1) "Lipton's prime, mild cured," and (2) "First quality smoked ham, own cure at Lipton's market," hams which had been manufactured and cured by him in America. The Queen's Bench (Ireland) held that neither of the descriptions was a false trade description within this section. R. v. Lipton, 32 L.R. (Ir.) 115. Appellant asked at respondent's shop for two half-pounds of tea, and was supplied with two packets, on each of which was stamped on the outside in ink a notice that the weight, including the wrapper, was half a pound. The weight of the tea in each case was slightly less than half a pound, but the weight of the tea and wrapper was more than half a pound. The Q.B. Division upheld the refusal of the magistrates to convict, and held there had been no false trade description applied within the meaning of the Act. Langley v. Bombay Tea Co. [1900] 2 Q.B. 460; 69 L.J.Q.B. 752; 19 Cox C.C. 551.

An article was sold in packets as "S.'s patent refined isinglass." On analysis the contents were found to be gelatine. An information for unlawfully applying to gelatine a false description, and thereby stating it to be isinglass, was dismissed on the ground that isinglass was often used for gelatinous matters, and that the words "patent refined isinglass" were not an untrue description. Gridley v. Swinborne, 52 J.P. 791; 5 T.L.R. 71.

A piece of china was sold at Christie's, marked in the catalogue "Dresden," but on the lot being reached the auctioneer said to the assembled buyers, "Our attention has been drawn to this lot, and we sell it for what it is worth," and put his pen through the word "Dresden." No attempt was made to show the article was Dresden china. The Q.B. Division set aside a conviction of the auctioneers, and held that defendant might show in his defence he acted innocently, although at the time of sale he had reason to suspect the genuineness of the trade-mark or trade description, and so he exonerated under this sub-section. Christie v. Cooper [1900] 2 Q.B. 522, 69 L.J.Q.B. 708.

W. was convicted for applying to a watch a false trade desceription as an "English lever," the facts being that several of its parts were of foreign manufacture, though they were finished and all put together and adjusted at appellant's factory in England. It was contended that the proper description of the watch was an "Anglo-Swiss" watch. The Q.B. Division eventually sent the case back to the magistrate to be restated on one point. Williamson v. Tierney, 17 Times L.R. 174, 83 L.T. 592; 65 J.P. 70. In the re-stated case, the magistrate held that he found, as a fact, upon the evidence before him that the watch would not be regarded as an "English" watch in the trade by reason of certain material parts being of foreign manufacture. The Q.B. Division held that the question was one of fact, and that no appeal lay. Williamson v. Tierney, 17 T.L.R. 424.

The prosecutor must make out beyond all question that the goods are so got up as to be calculated to deceive. Payton v. Snelling [1901] A.C. 308, 17 R.P.C. 628, 70 L.J. Ch. 644.

Imported goods]—In any prosecution hereunder for applying a false trade description in that the place or country in which any goods are made or produced is misrepresented (sec. 325 (t)), evidence of the port of shipment is prima facie evidence of the place or country in which such goods were made or produced. Sec. 992.

Time limitation]—No prosecution for this offence shall be commenced after the expiration of three years from its commission. Sec. 1140.

Costs in prosecutions for trade-mark and false trade description offences]—Code sec. 1040.

Special provisions as to labels on bottles, casks and containers of beverages]—Code secs. 490, 491 (a), 491 (2).

Selling goods falsely marked or falsely represented]—If the seller is aware of the false marking, and uses it to induce the buyer to buy, a charge may be laid as for obtaining money on false pretenses. Code sec. 404, 405; and there may be an attempt to obtain money by false pretenses where the transaction did not become the full offence because the effort to deceive the buyer was ineffectual and he bought in order to complete a case for prosecution. R. v. Lyons (No. 1), 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 152 (Que.). The Code sections dealing with the false application of trade-marks, and of false trade descriptions, and with the sale of goods after the false application, do not extend beyond the circumstances under which the trade-mark or trade description has been applied to the goods themselves or is deemed to have been so applied. Code sec. 487.

If a false trade description or false trade-mark, as the case may be, has not been "applied" within the meaning of sec. 487, but there has been a false representation in some other way as to the class of goods or their origin, the prosecution will then have to rely upon a charge of false pretenses or of an attempt of that offence.

It is deemed to be so applied if used in a manner calculated to lead to the belief that the goods are designated or described by that trademark or trade description, for example, by so describing them in an invoice accompanying the goods. Code see. 487 (d); Coppen v. Moore [1898] 2 Q.B. 300 and 306; 67 L.J.Q.B. 689.

Reasonable precaution]-In Coppen v. Moore [1898] 2 Q.B. 300 and 306, 67 L.J.Q.B. 689, decided under the English Merchandise Act, 1887 (50 and 51 Vict., Imp., c. 38), the prosecution was for selling goods to which a false description was applied, and in the case stated by the justices it appeared that the prosecutor asked a salesman in the accused's shop for an English ham; the salesman pointed to some American hams, and said: "These are Scotch hams." The prosecutor chose one, and asked for an invoice containing a description of the ham bought, and was given one, stating the purchase of a "Scotch" ham. It was held by Wright and Darling, J.J., that the oral statement that the ham was Scotch did not amount to a breach of the Act, but the statement in the invoice was an application of a false description to the goods sold, within the meaning of the statute; but they reserved the question of whether the employer was liable for the act of his servant, for the consideration of the court for Crown Cases Reserved. On this point it appeared that the employer was not present at the time of the sale; that he had issued a printed circular to his employees, forbidding the sale of the hams under any specific name or place of origin, but there was evidence that the American hams were dressed so as to deceive the public; on the strength of which it was found that the employer had not taken all reasonable precautions against committing an offence against the Act, and the court therefore held that, under the circumstances, the employer was criminally responsible for the act of his servant, as he had not discharged the onus of showing that he had acted innocently. On this point Lord Russell said: "We conceive the effect of the Act to be to make the master a principal liable criminally (as he is already, by law, civilly) for the acts of his agents and servants, in all cases within the section with which we are dealing, when the conduct constituting the offence was pursued by such servants and agents within the scope or in the course of their employment, subject to this: that the master or principal may be relieved from criminal responsibility when he can prove that he had acted in good faith and done all that it was reasonably possible to do to prevent the commission by his agents and servants of offences against the Act."

[§489]

False statement that article patented or copyrighted]—A false trade description includes a false statement, where false in a material respect (Code sec. 335 (l)), that the goods are the subject of an existing patent, privilege or copyright. Code sec. 335, sub-sec. (t).

Defacing trade mark.—Using trade marks of others by trafficking in bottles.—Using bottles.—Prima facie evidence.

490. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence who,-

- (a) wilfully defaces, conceals or removes the trade mark duly registered, or name of another person upon any cask, keg, bottle, siphon, vessel, can, case, or other package, unless such cask, keg, bottle, siphon, vessel, can, case or other package has been purchased from such other person, if the same shall have been so defaced, concealed or removed without the consent of, and with intention to defraud such other person:
- (b) being a manufacturer, dealer or trader, or bottler. trades or traffics in any bottle or siphon which has upon it the trade mark duly registered or name of another person, without the written consent of such other person, or without such consent fills such bottle or siphon with any beverage for the purpose of sale or traffic.

2. The using by any manufacturer, dealer or trader or bottler, other than such other person, of any bottle or siphon for the sale therein of any beverage, or the having by any such manufacturer, dealer, trader or bottler upon any bottle or siphon such trade mark or name of such other person, or the buying. selling or trafficking in any such bottle or siphon without such written consent of such other person, or the fact that any junkdealer has in his possession any bottle or siphon having upon it such a trade mark or name without such written consent, shal! be prima facie evidence of trading or trafficking within the meaning of paragraph (b) of this section.

Origin]-Sec. 449, Code of 1892; 63-64 Vict., Can., ch. 46.

"Trade-mark" defined]-Code sec. 335, sub-sec. (s).

"Name" of another person]-" Name" includes any abbreviation of a name. Code sec. 335, sub-sec. (n).

Sub-sec. (a)—Wilfully concealing or removing name or trade-mark from bottles, etc.]—Sub-sec. (a) is unlimited as to the persons to whom it shall apply, but the offence must have been done "wilfully." Sub-sec. (b), on the other hand, does not contain the word "wilfully," but its operation is restricted to manufacturers, dealers, traders or bottlers.

Sub-sec. (b)—Liability of manufacturers, dealers, etc., trading in re-filled bottles]—Mens rea, or guilty knowledge, is not an essential ingredient of the offence under sub-sec. (b). R. v. Newcombe (1918), 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 249; R. v. Coulombe, G.O.L.R. 99, 20 Can. Cr. Cas. 31. A verdict of "guilty without his knowledge" may therefore be supported as a verdict of guilty. R. v. Newcombe, supra. The master will be criminally responsible under sub-sec. (b) for the acts of his servant within the general scope of the servant's authority, although the master had no personal knowledge of the filling of the other dealer's bottles or even that they were in his possession as a milk dealer. R. v. Newcombe, supra; and see Cundy v. Le Cocq, 13 Q.B.D. 207, 53 L.J.M.C. 125. It is not necessary that there should have been an intent to defraud the person to whom the bottles were illegally supplied by the accused. Wood v. Burgess, 59 L.J.M.C. 11, 24 Q.B.D. 162.

Where the bottles bearing the label of one dealer are used by another dealer without removing or concealing the name label (Code sec. 490 (a)), the addition of the label of the second dealer will not prevent a conviction for selling goods with a false trade description under Code sec. 489 if the appearance on the bottle of the original name was calculated to deceive. Stone v. Burn, 27 Times L.R. 6.

Sub-sec. (b)—Bottle or siphon which has "upon it," etc.]—The words "upon it" have a wider significance than the words of sec. 449 of the 1892 Code which applied only where the name, etc., was "blown or stamped or otherwise permanently affixed." The present form of sec. 490 is wide enough to protect paper labels affixed to a bottle. R. v. Wittman [1917] 3 W.W.R. 438 (B.C.); R. v. Irvine, 9 O.L.R. 389, 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 407, 409.

Offence under Part VIL-When servant not liable.

495. No servant of a master, resident in Canada, who bona fide acts in obedience to the instructions of such master, and, on demand made by or on behalf of the prosecutor, gives full information as to his master, is liable to any prosecution or punishment for any offence defined in this Part.

Origin]-Sec. 454, Code of 1892; 51 Vict., Can., ch. 41, sec. 20; Merchandise Marks Act, 1887, Imp., sec. 19.

"For any offence defined "in this Part"]--This section is a re-enactment in Canada of sec. 19 of the Merchandise Marks Act, Imp. The provisions taken from that Act made up Part XXXIII of the 1892 Code and that "part" was consequently given the heading "Forgery of ti le-marks; fraudulent marking of merchandise."

The words "in this Part" in sec. 454 of the 1892 Code were then clearly restricted to offences of the class indicated by that heading; but on the revision of the Code in 1906 there was a re-arrangement and consolidation of the various parts and the trade-mark clauses were placed as they stand at present in Part VII under the general title of "Offenced as they stand at present in Part VII under the general title of "Offences and offences connected with trade." The question does not appear to have been raised in any reported case whether or not this statutory defence given to a servant will apply to offences under Part VII other than those relating to trade-marks and merchandise marks. The better interpretation would appear to limit it in like manner as it was limited in the 1892 Code. It was probably an oversight on the part of the revisers in 1906 that the words "in this part" were not preceded by the word mark now 443 words "in the sections relating to forgery of trade-marks and fraudulent marking of merchandise" in like manner as the definition of "goods" now appearing in sec. 335 (m) was amended on its transfer from sec. 443 (d) of the 1892 Code.

496. A conspiracy in restraint of trade is an agreement between two or more persons to do or procure to be done any unlawful act in restraint of trade.

Origin]-Code of 1892, sec. 516.

" Any unlawful act in restraint of trade"]-The mere fact that the purposes of a trade union are in restraint of trade is not to be considered as making its acts unlawful within the meaning of sec. 496; and the members of a trade union are not guilty of a conspiracy in restraint of trade because of their being associated together for a common purpose of operating in restraint of trade if nothing more than restraint of trade is involved in the common purpose. Sec. 497. As to collateral offences of intimidation and violence, see secs. 501-503. An important limitation or exception is enacted by Code sec. 590 upon the operation of sec. 498. Sec. 590 declares that no prosecution shall be maintainable against any person for conspiracy in refusing to work with or for any employer or workman, or for doing any act or causing any act to be done "for the purpose of a trade combination" unless such act is an offence punishable by statute. This presumably limits prosecutions for trade combines in the strict sense of the term to the cases mentioned in sec. 498. If an act comes within the wording of sec. 590, a prosecution cannot be brought for conspiracy at common law. thus modifying the criminal law of England, which is the foundation of Canadian criminal law. See Code secs. 10, 11, 12, 16. There are, however, the offences of criminal breach of certain contracts under sec. 499, intimidation of workmen, sec. 501, violence and threats of violence to workmen, sec. 502, intimidation in regard to dealing in grain or other edible stores, sec. 503, and combines to prevent bidding on sales of public lands, sec. 504. In particular, sec. 502 refers to violence and threats of violence "in pursuance of any unlawful combination or conspiracy to raise the rate of wages, or of any unlawful combination or conspiracy respecting any trade, business or manufacture." The reference to an unlawful combination to raise the rate of wages does not imply that all of such combinations are unlawful, but is intended to limit the operation of that part of sec. 502 to cases of violence, or threats of violence, which are done or made in pursuance of such combinations when they are for some reason unlawful, ex. gr., in cases in which strikes are prohibited under the Industrial Disputes Investigation [§ 496]

Act or similar labour laws pending an official investigation. To determine what acts are within the phrase " act done for the purpose of a trade combination," reference must be made to the definition of " trade combination " contained in sec. 2, sub-sec. (38), which is as follows: " any combination between masters or workmen or other persons for regulating or altering the relations between any persons being masters or workmen or the conduct of any master or workman in or in respect of his business or employment or confract of employment or service." Code sec. 2, sub-sec. (38) taken from sec. 519 of the Code of 1892 and R.S.C. 1886, ch. 173, sec. 13.

It being proved that a member of a trades union had conspired to injure a non-union workman by depriving him of his employment, this was held not to be excepted as an "act for the purpose of trade combination," and a conviction for a conspiracy was sustained. R. v. Gibson (1889), 16 O.R. 704; and see Patterson v. C.P.R. [1917] 1 W.W.R. 1154, 10 Alta. L.R. 408; Williams v. United Mine Workers [1919] 1 W.W.R. 217 (Alta.); R. v. Day, (1905) 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 403 (Ont.); and see note to sec. 498.

By sec. 335, sub-sec. (a) an "act," for the purposes of the sections in Part VII relating to offences connected with trade and breaches of contract includes a default, breach or omission. As this latter definition is likewise taken from sec. 519 of the 1892 Code derived from R.S.C. 1886, ch. 173, sec. 13, the definition will probably be held to apply to the exception contained in sec. 590, although contained in Part XII and not in Part VII, as well as to the word "act" contained in sec. 496. The definitions, the exception and the offences were all contained in the one "Part" of the former Code, but a different method of classification placed them in separate "Parts" of the present Code. In this, as well as in other portions of the Code, these separated parts of what was once a single statute have to be assembled again in their original juxtaposition for the purposes of interpretation. Sec. 498 also contains a qualification by which it is not to apply to combinations of workmen or employees for their own reasonable protection as such. Sec. 498 (2); Lefebore v. Knott, 32 Que. S.C. 441, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 223; Graham v. Knott, 14 B.C.R. 97; same case sub nom. Graham v. Bricklayers and Masons' Union, 9 W.L.R. 475.

Sec. 496 seems to be a mere preliminary to the enactments contained in secs. 497 and 590, which latter followed what is now sec. 497 in the former Code (Code of 1892, sec. 518), and seems not to be a qualifying clause to sec. 498, except in so far as concerns secs. 497 and 590. These and sub-sec. (2) of sec. 498 indicate that certain things are lawful notwithstanding sec. 498. Sec. 498, by making indictable every conspiracy or agreement within secs. (a), (b), (c) and (d), necessarily makes such agreements "unlawful" within the meaning of sec. 496.

2. Nothing in this section shall be construed to apply to combinations of workmen or employees for their own reasonable protection as such workmen or employees.

Origin]-Code of 1892, sec. 520, as amended by 62-63 Vict., ch. 46 and 63-64 Vict., ch. 46; 52 Vict., Can., ch. 41.

Trade combines generally]—The original statute, 52 Vict., Can., ch. 41, recited that "it is expedient to declare the law relating to conspiracies and combinations formed in restraint of trade and to provide penalties for the violation of the same."

Parliament set out as the recital shows, to declare what was to be held unlawful and evidently intended to declare that the unduly doing that which was referred to in sub-sec. (d) amongst others, were unlawful things and must be prohibited. Shragge v. Weidman (1912), 2 W.W.R. 330, 336, 46 S.C.R. 1, per Idington, J.

The section, however, is not a purely declaratory enactment, but covers ground not covered by the existing law at the time it was passed. Weidman v. Shragge (1912), 2 W.W.R. 330, 336, 46 S.C.R. 1, reversing Shragge v. Weidman, 15 W.L.R. 616, and restoring Shragge v. Weidman, 14 W.L.R. 561; Dominon Supply Co. v. Bobertson (1917), 39 O.L.R. 495, 12 O.W.N. 187.

This Act not only destroys a former right of combination, but also renders illegal every direct or indirect device contrived by the art of men to serve those agreeing in the purpose of acquiring the market for themselves and adopted by them to execute such purpose, and thus also destroys the devices they may have incidentally adopted to promote the main purpose. All that is, directly or indirectly, knowingly used to promote any criminal purpose must be held void. A difference exists between the consequence flowing from the application of the public policy principle and that of this statute. Weidman v. Shragge (1912), 2 W.W.R. 330, 344, per Idington, J.; Mogul S.S. Co. v. McGregor [1892] A.C. 25, and the English law distinguished. For subsequent English cases, see Allen v. Flood [1898] A.C. 1; Quinn v. Leathem [1901] A.C. 539; Stott v. Gamble [1916] 2 K.B. 504, re Bowman [1915] 2 Ch. 471.

Sec. 498 does not abolish the doctrine of restraint of trade violating public policy. Shragge v. Weidman (1912), 2 W.W.R. 330, 345. Where the illegality of a contract is to be the defence of a civil action and the question of undue restraint of trade depends on the surrounding circumstances, the illegality should be specially pleaded. Northwestern Salt Co. v. Electrolytic Alkali Co. [1914] A.C. 461. But the failure to plead illegality in the formal pleadings will not prevent the court from refusing relief on the ground of public policy where the restraint of trade is quite unreasonable and void on the face of the contract. Ibid.; MacEwan v. Toronto General Trusts Corporation (1917), 28 Can. Cr. Cas. 387 (Can.), reversing MacEwan v. Toronto General Trusts Corporation, 36 O.L.R. 244.

Option for non-jury trial]-Code sec. 581.

Special appeal from non-jury trial in trade combine cases]—An appeal upon all issues of law and fact shall lie from any conviction by the judge without the intervention of a jury for any offence mentioned in sec. 498 to the court of appeal (sec. 2, sub-sec. 7), in the province where such conviction is made; and the evidence taken upon the trial shall form part of the record in appeal, and, for that purpose, the court before which the case is tried shall take note of the evidence, and of all legal objections thereto. Code sec. 1012.

Sub-sec. (a)—Unduly limiting facilities for production, transportation or dealing in commodities]—The limitation of facilities for transportation, manufacturing, etc., must be an "undue" limitation. Compare sub-secs. (c) and (d) where the word "unduly" appears in a similar connection.

The mere fact standing alone and without other evidence that for a consideration which it is not contended was unreasonable the owner of a salt mine or works and plant should agree to give the sole and exclusive control for a limited period to another person of those works and plant, retaining only a right to manufacture for the local trade and sell to that trade at prices to be fixed by the purchaser of the control of the salt works, would not justify the court in holding such an agreement illegal. MacEwan v. Toronto General Trusts Corp'n. (1917), 28 Can. Cr. Cas. 387, 391, (Can.), reversing.

The question of illegality is one which, as a general rule, depends upon the surrounding circumstances and where no evidence of these surrounding circumstances was given, and the contract on the face of it is not so unreasonable as between the parties, or so detrimental to the public, that the court would refuse to enforce it, it will not be declared invalid in a civil action. MacEwan v. Toronto General Trusts Corp'n., supra; Attorney-General of the Commonwealth of Australia v. Adelaide Steamship Co. [1913] A.C. 781; North Western Salt Co. v. Electrolytic Alkali Co. [1914] A.C. 461.

Sub-sec. (b)—Conspiracy to do unlawful act in restraint of trade in some commodity]—Sub-sec. (b) is nimed at agreements the object of which is to restrain or injure trade or commerce in commercial commodities. R. v. Gage, 18 Man. R. 175, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 415 and 428; Weidman v. Shragge (1912), 2 W.W.R. 330, 46 S.C.R. 1, reversing Shragge v. Weidman, 15 W.L.R. 616; and see Shragge v. Weidman, 14 W.L.R. 561, trial judgment restored by the decision in (1912) 2 W.W.R. 330. But dicta in R. v. Gage, supra and in Gibbins v. Metcalfe (1905), 15 Man. R. 588, which would so restrict the interpretation of sub-sec. (b) as to make it apply only to contracts which would have been held unlawful under the doctrine laid down in Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor [1892] A.C. 25, are no longer to be followed, because of the dicta to the Sub-sec. (b)—Form of indictment]—The following counts taken from the indictment in R. v. Gage (No. 2), 18 Man. R. 175, show the manner of framing an indictment under sub-sec. (b):

1. J. C. G., J. G. McH., and J. L. and other persons, to the jurors unknown, at the city of Winnipeg, in the province of Manitoba, on or about 1st September, 19—, did conspire, combine, agree and arrange with each other to restrain trade or commerce in relation to an article which may be a subject of trade or commerce, to wit, grain.

2. And the jurors aforesaid do further present that the said J. C. G., J. G. MeH., J. L. and other persons, to the jurors unknown, at the city of Winnipeg, in the province of Manitoba, on or about 1st September, 19—, did conspire, combine, agree or arrange with each other to injure trade or commerce in relation to an article or commodity which may be a subject of trade or commerce, to wit, grain.

Sub-sec. (c)—Conspiracy to unreasonably enhance the price of commodifies]—A trade association may legally be formed between wholesale dealers with the bona fide desire of protecting the interests of the trade generally and without any malicious intent to injure others, with the object of arranging with manufacturers to allow regular trade discounts to jobbers not doing a retail trade whether members of the association or not, and to disallow such discounts to retailers or retailing jobbers, if the objects of the association do not contemplate the raising of the manufacturer's prices nor the prices to be paid by the consumer. R. v. Beckett, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 498, 20 O.L.R. 401.

But it is illegal for the wholesaler to stipulate with the retailer that the latter should sell to the public only at the prices fixed by the wholesaler, if such fixed prices are such as to unreasonably enhance the price to the public. Stearns v. Avery (1915), 33 O.L.R. 251, 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 339; Wampole v. Karn, 11 O.L.R. 619; R. v. Elliott, 9 O.L.R. 648; Dominion Supply Co. v. Robertson (1917), 39 O.L.R. 495, 12 O.W.N. 187; Miles Medical Co. v. Park & Sons (1911), 220 U.S. 373, 413; Elliman v. Carrington [1901] 2 Ch. 275, not followed in Stearns v. Avery, supra; and see Standard Oil Co. v. United States (1910), 221 U.S. 1.

Sub-sec. (d)—Conspiracy to unduly lessen competition]—In effect clause (d) of sec. 498 of the Code declares in very plain language that an agreement which might in itself be perfectly lawful as made by the parties in the exercise of the freedom to contract or to abstain from contracting, which the English law has for many years recognized in every individual, is unlawful if the object of the parties is to unduly prevent or lessen competition in an article or commodity which is a subject of trade or commerce. In other words, if the object of the parties to the agreement is to interfere with the free course of trade by unduly preventing or lessening competition the agreement is declared to be unlawful. It is not necessary that the agreement should be in itself fraudulent or otherwise illegal; and all agreements which prevent or lessen competition do not come within the operation of the statute: the mischief aimed at is the undue and abusive lessening of competition which operates to the oppression of individuals or is injurious to the public generally. And it is for the courts to say whether in the circumstances of each particular case the mischief aimed at exists. Weidman v. Shragge (1912), 2 W.W.R. 330, 332, 46 S.C.R. 1, per Fitzpatrick, C.J. So, persons remaining in a particular trade are not to fix prices or otherwise limit competition by agreement among themselves. Weidmann v. Shragge (1912), 2 W.W.R. 330, 46 S.C.R. 1, 21 W.L.R. 717, 20 Can. Cr. Cas. 1117; R. v. Clarke, 1 Alta. L.R. 358, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 46, 9 W.L.R. 243; R. v. Gage, 18 Man. R. 175, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 428. But it has been held that Code sec. 498 (d) does not apply to the purchase out and out of a competitor's property, at least where there was no restriction on the seller's subsequent business activities or his re-engaging in business as a competitor. Stewart v. Thorpe [1917] 2 W.W.R. 700, 11 Alta. L.R. 473, 28 Can. Cr. Cas. 218, varying [1917] 1 W.W.R. 896. It may, however, be that two persons engaged in a certain business must not arrange to form a company to buy out a third who is a competitor, for the confessed purpose of avoiding his competition if the result can be shown to be an "undue" lessening of competition in the trade; but it has been doubted whether, in that supposititious case, Code sec. 498 is wide enough or was ever intended to cover it. Stewart v. Thorpe [1917] 2 W.W.R. 700 at 707, per Stuart, J. Where fifteen companies belonging to an association, each of which sold goods under a condition that the buyer would maintain the association prices in re-selling to the public, and the association was found to control the Canadian trade in the product, such was held in a civil action to constitute an offence both under sub-sec. (b) and sub-sec. (d). Dominion Supply Co. v. Robertson (1917), 39 O.L.R. 495, 12 O.W.N. 187; and see R. v. Master Plumbers, 14 O.L.R. 295, an appeal from R. v. Master Plumbers, 7 O.W.R. 213; same case sub nom. R. v. Central Supply, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 371 (Ont.); Hately v. Elliott, 9 O.L.R. 185; R. v. Elliott, 9 O.L.R. 648, 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 505.

It would seem that it is a question of fact whether an agreement by a manufacturer to sell to certain dealers only in certain localities is an undue lessening of competition in the sale or supply of the product. See Weidman v. Shragge (1912), 2 W.W.R. 330, at 341; R. v. American Tobacco Co. (1897), 3 Rev. de Jur. 453 (Que.). Any agreement of which the alleged purpose is to "unduly" prevent or lessen competition in the purchase or sale of some article or commodity which may be a subject of trade or commerce will constitute an offence as a trade combination inhibited by sub-see. (d). Weidman v. Shragge (1912), 2 W.W.R. 330, 46 S.C.R. 1, 20 Can. Cr. Cas. 117, reversing Shragge v. Weidman, 20 Man. R. 178, 15 W.L.R. 616, and restoring trial judgment, Shragge v. Weidman, 14 W.L.R. 561. For history of Code sec. 498, see that ease in vol. 2 W.W.R. 330, at 350 et seq.

For the purpose of showing the wrongful intent the prosecutor may tender proof that the evils against which the legislation is directed were the natural and necessary consequence of the contract or combination, monopoly or attempt to monopolize, and that those evils have in fact ensued. Attorney-General of the Commonwealth of Australia v. Adelaide Steamship Co., Ltd. [1913] A.C. 781, 82 L.J.P.C. 139.

Sub-sec. (2)—Reasonable protection of employers]—An agreement by employers, made in anticipation of a strike to be ordered by the union to which their workmen belong, to lock out any of the latter who are members of it, if the strike takes place, is valid and does not constitute a combination in restraint of trade or of the freedom of contracting. Lefebvre v. Knott, 32 Que. S.C. 441, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 223.

Sub-sec (2)-Reasonable protection of workmen]-As regards the crime of trade conspiracy the purposes of any trade union are not unlawful by reason merely that they are in restraint of trade. Code sec. 497; Trade Union Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 125; and see José v. Metallic Roofing Co. [1908] A.C. 514, reversing Metallic Roofing Co. v. José, 12 O.L.R. 200 and 14 O.L.R. 156. Where a painting contractor had agreed to employ only union men, the refusal of the trade union to admit to membership an applicant already in the contractor's employ will not alone constitute a conspiracy in restraint of trade, although the result of the refusal would necessarily be his discharge if the employer lived up to his agreement with the union; R. v. Day (1905), 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 403 (Ont.); but if it could have been shown that the rejection was for the express purpose of depriving the man of his employment, the case would not be within the exception of sub-sec. (2) as an act done for the reasonable protection of the workmen, nor under sec. 497 as an act done for the purposes (legal purposes) of a trade union. Compare Larkin v. Long [1915] A.C. 814, 84 L.J.P.C. 201, affirming Long v. Larkin [1914] 2 Irish R. 285; Dallimore v. Williams, 30 Times L.R. 432 and 470.

Jurisdiction of sessions excluded]-See sec. 685.

Conspiracy with persons some of whom are unknown]—A charge may be framed so as to charge one person with conspiracy with others named and with others unknown "or with some or one of them." R. v. Clarke, 1 Alta, L.R. 358, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 46.

Trade conspiracies and combinations]—See Code secs. 2 (38), 496-503, 581, 590, 1012; Conciliation and Labour Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 96; Combines Investigation Act, Can., 1910, ch. 9; Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, 1907, Can., ch. 20, as amended, 1910, Can., ch. 29, the Department of Labour Act, 1909, Can., ch. 22.

499. Every one is guilty of an offence punishable on indictment or on summary conviction before two justices and liable on conviction to a penalty not exceeding one hundred dollars or to three months' imprisonment, with or without hard labour, who,—

- (a) wilfully breaks any contract made by him knowing, or having reasonable cause to believe, that the probable consequences of his so doing, either alone or in combination with others, will be to endanger human life, or to cause serious bodily injury, or to expose valuable property, whether real or personal, to destruction or serious injury; or,
- (b) being bound, agreeing or assuming, under any contract made by him with any municipal corporation or authority, or with any company, to supply any city or any other place, or any part thereof, with electric light or power, gas or water, wilfully breaks such contract knowing, or having reasonable cause to believe, that the probable consequences of his so doing, either alone or in combination with others, will be to deprive the inhabitants of that city or place, or part thereof, wholly or to a great extent, of their supply of power, light, gas or water; or,

(c) being bound, agreeing or assuming, under any contract made by him with a railway company, or with His Majesty, or any one on behalf of His Majesty, in connection with a government railway on which His Majesty's mails, or passengers or freight are carried, to carry His Majesty's mails, or to carry passengers or freight, wilfully breaks such contract knowing, or having reason to believe that the probable consequences of his so doing, either alone or in combination with others, will be to delay or prevent the running of any locomotive engine, or tender, or freight or passenger train or car, on the railway.

2. Every municipal corporation or authority or company, bound, agreeing or assuming to supply any city, or any other place, or any part thereof, with electric light or power, gas or water, which wilfully breaks any contract made by such municipal corporation, authority, or company, knowing or having reason to believe that the probable consequences of its so doing will be to deprive the inhabitants of that city or place or part thereof wholly, or to a great extent, of their supply of electric light or power, gas or water, is liable to a penalty not exceeding one thousand dollars.

3. Every railway company, bound, agreeing or assuming to carry His Majesty's mails, or to carry passengers or freight, which wilfully breaks any contract made by such railway company, knowing or having reason to believe that the probable consequences of so doing will be to delay or prevent the running of any locomotive engine or tender, or freight or passenger train or car on the railway, is liable to a penalty not exceeding one hundred dollars.

4. It is not material whether any offence defined in this section is committed from malice conceived against the person, corporation, authority or company with which the contract is made or otherwise.

Origin]-Code of 1892, sec. 521; Can. Stat. 1908, ch. 18, sec. 7 (correcting a elerical error); R.S.C. 1886, ch. 173, secs. 15 and 17.

Sub-sec (4)-Committed from malice]-" Malice is a term which is truly a legal enigma"; Harris Cr. Law, p. 13.

The terms "malice" and "malicious" are practically eliminated from the Code owing to the confusion of ideas connected with them. "Malice" appears only in two places; here and in sec. 963 (2), where the expression "mute of malice" is retained. Mr. Hoyles' article on The Criminal Law, 38 C.L.J. 231.

Summary conviction for first offence]-Offences under this section are excluded from those for which under sec. 729 a first offender may be discharged on making satisfaction to the party aggrieved, at the discretion of the magistrate making the summary conviction.

Second offences]-See secs. 465, 963 and 964.

Trade conspiracies and combinations]—See Code sees. 2 (38), 496-503, 581, 590, 1012; Conciliation and Labour Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 96; Combin vestiga Depart

500. Every such municipal corporation, authority, or company, shall cause to be posted up at the electrical works, gas works, or water-works, or railway stations, as the case may be, belonging to such corporation, authority or company, a printed copy of this and the preceding section in some conspicuous place, where the same may be conveniently read by the public; and as often as such copy becomes defaced, obliterated or destroyed shall cause it to be renewed with all reasonable despatch.

2. Every such municipal corporation, authority or company which makes default in complying with such duty is liable to a penalty not exceeding twenty dollars for every day during which such default continues.

3. Every person unlawfully injuring, defacing or covering up any such copy so posted up is liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding ten dollars.

Origin]-Code of 1892, sec. 522; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 173, sec. 19.

Summary conviction for first offence]—Offences under this section are excluded from those for which under sec. 729 a first offender may be discharged on making satisfaction to the party aggrieved, at the discretion of the magistrate making the summary conviction.

Intimidation.—By violence.—By threats.—By following.—By hiding property.—By following in disorderly way.—By watching and besetting.

501. Every one is guilty of an offence punishable, at the option of the accused, on indictment or on summary conviction before two justices and liable on conviction to a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or to three months' imprisonment with or without hard labour, who, wrongfully and without lawful authority, with a view to compel any other person to abstain from doing anything which he has a lawful right to do, or to do anything from which he has a lawful right to abstain,—

CRIMINAL CODE (PART VII)

- (b) intimidates such other person, or his wife or children, by threats of using violence to him, her or any of them, or of injuring his property; or,
- (c) persistently follows such other person about from place to place; or,
 - (d) hides any tools, clothes or other property owned or used by such other person, or deprives him of, or hinders him in, the use thereof; or,
 - (e) with one or more other persons, follows such other person, in a disorderly manner, in or through any street or road; or,
 - (f) besets or watches the house or other place where such other person resides or works, or carries on business or happens to be.

Origin]-4-5 Edw. VII, Can., ch. 9; Code of 1892, sec. 523; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 173, sec. 12; Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875, Imp. (38-39 Vict., ch. 82).

Who may not try strike charges]—No person who is a master, or the father, son or brother of a master in the particular manufacture, trade or business, in or in connection with which any offence under sec. 501 is charged to have been committed, shall act as a magistrate or justice, in any case of complaint or information under that section, or as a member of any court for hearing any appeal in any such case. Sec. 578.

"To abstain from doing anything which he has a lawful right to do"]—In R. v. McKenzie [1892] 2 Q.B. 519, 61 L.J.M.C. 181, 17 Cox C.C. 542, the defendant was convicted under the corresponding see. 7 of the English Act. Objection was taken that the conviction stated that he wrongfully and without legal authority followed the informant in a disorderly manner with two or more other persons in certain streets with a view to compel him to abstain from doing acts which he had a legal right to do, but did not state what the acts were. The court held that the conviction was bad, as it ought to have stated what the acts were which he had a legal right to do. But where the indictment as in R. v. Hulme (1913), 9 Cr. App. R. 79 has stated what the informant was doing, but has omitted the formal statement that he had a legal right to do it, the conviction thereon will be upheld; the point raised in R. v. McKenzie not then being applicable.

Sub-sec (a)—"Injures his property"]—In Smith v. Moody [1903] 1 K.B. 56, the conviction followed the words of the Act (compare Code sec. 723, sub-sec. 3), and in holding the conviction bad Lord Alverstone, C.J., at p. 60, said: "The second objection to the conviction is that it does not sufficiently specify the property of the respondent which the appellant is alleged to have injured, the only words used being 'did injure the property of ' the respondent. I have come to the conclusion that this objection is good and must prevail. I was at first inclined to think that the defect was cured by sec. 39 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, which provides that 'the description of any offence in the words of the Act . . . creating the offence, or in similar words, shall be sufficient in law'; but on further considering the question, which is undoubtedly one of importance, it seems to me that it could not have been intended by that section to do away with the old rule of criminal practice which requires that fair information and reasonable particularity as to the nature of the offence must be given in indictments and convictions. All that is meant by sec. 39 is that the offence itself need only be described in the words of the statute creating it. As was pointed out in the argument for the appellant, it clearly would not be sufficient to say, in a conviction for larceny, 'did steal the property of ' the prosecutor without any further particulars; and, in my opinion, sec. 39 does not cure the omission from a conviction of such particularity in the description and details of the offence as has always been required."

Sub-sec. (b)—"Intimidates by threats"]—It is for the jury to find whether the words used amounted to intimidation. R. v. Baker (1911), 7 Cr. App. R. 89; R. v. Walton (1863), L. & C. 288, 9 Cox C.C. 268, R. v. Tomlinson [1895] 1 Q.B. 706, 18 Cox C.C. 75; Curran v. Treleavan [1891] 2 Q.B. 545, 61 L.J.M.C. 9; Wood v. Bowron, L.R. 2 Q.B. 21, 36 L.J.M.C. 5.

Sub-sec. (c)—Persistently follows about from place to place]—See Smith v. Thomasson, 16 Cox C.C. 740, 54 J.P. 596.

Sub-sec. (e)---With another person, following in a disorderly manner]--See ex parte Wilkins, 64 L.J.M.C. 221.

Sub-sec. (f)—Picketing in furtherance of strike]—A combination not to work is one thing, and is lawful. A combination to prevent others from working by annoying them if they do is a very different thing, and is prima facie unlawful. Quinn v. Leathem [1901] A.C. 495, at 583; Krug Furniture v. Berlin Union, 5 O.L.E. 563.

In Lyons v. Wilkins [1899] 1 Ch. 255, the plaintiffs sought by a civil action to restrain the defendants, members of a trades union, from watching and besetting the works of the plaintiffs, and also the works of a third person who worked for the plaintiffs, for the purpose of persuading work people, and such third person, to abstain from working for the plaintiffs; and a perpetual injunction was granted restraining the defendants from watching and besetting the plaintiff's premises for the purpose of persuading, or otherwise preventing, persons working for them, or for any purpose except merely to obtain or communicate information; and also from watching or besetting the premises of the third person for the purpose of persuading or preventing him from working for the plaintiff's, or for any purpose except merely to obtain Cotter v. Osborne, 16 Man. R. 395, 18 Man. R. 471. The form of injunction order commonly applied is that of Taff Vale Railway Co. v. Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants [1901] A.C. 426. Le Roi Mining Co. v. Rossland Miners' Union, 8 B.C.R. 370.

Whilst workmen, members of a trade union, have a right to strike and to combine for that purpose in order to improve their own position, provided the means resorted to be not in themselves unlawful, yet they have no right to induce other workmen, who are not members of the union and who desire to continue working to leave their employment. or to endeavour to prevent the employers from getting other men to work for them and for that purpose to watch and beset the places where the men happen to be, or to induce the employers' workmen to break their contracts, as these are actionable wrongs and picketing and besetting are expressly made unlawful by sec. 501 of the Code. Cotter v. Osborne, 18 Man. R. 471. The destruction during the progress of this suit of a book kept by an officer of the union at its headquarters in which were recorded minutes relating to the strike and the non-production of a strike register kept and of the reports handed in from day to day by members of the union actively engaged in picketing and officially appointed for that purpose were held, in a civil action, to be circumstances that justified the court in presuming that they contained entries unfavourable or damaging to the defence and in being satisfied with less convincing evidence, than might otherwise be required, that the wrongful acts of certain members were the authorized acts of the union. Cotter v. Osborne, 18 Man. R. 471.

A violation of legal right committed knowingly is a cause of action: Quinn v. Leathem [1901] A.C. 495, at p. 510, 70 L.J.P.C. 76. Every person has a right under the law as between himself and his fellow subjects to full freedom in disposing of his own labour or his own capital according to his will. Idem. It follows that every person is subject to the correlative duty arising therefrom, and is prohibited from any obstruction to the fullest exercise of this right which can be made compatible with the exercise of similar rights by others. Idem, at p. 525. Therefore a combination of two or more persons without justification to injure any workman by inciting employers not to employ him is, if it results in damage to him, actionable. Idem. This prima facie wrong ful interference may be negatived by showing that the exercise of the defend interf in a n ference 451, a defendants' own rights involved the interference complained of, which interference is merely the exercise of the right of a man to interfere in a matter in which he is jointly interested with others, and such interference gives no cause of action. Sleuter v. Scott (1914), 6 W.W.R 451, affirmed, 8 W.W.R. 714, 21 B.C.R. 155.

In such a case there will be intentional procurement of a violation of individual rights, contractual or other, but just cause for it as being done for the maintenance of the equal civil rights of the defendants. Glamorgan Coal Co. v. South Wales Miners' Federation [1903] 2 K.B. 545, at p. 571.

What is "just cause" or "sufficient justification" that will negative the prima facie right of action is, in many cases, a difficult question to determine, as to which no general rule can be laid down. The good sense of the tribunal which had to decide would have to analyze the evidence and discover on which side the line fell. Glamorgan Coal Co. v. South Wales Miners' Federation, supra, at p. 574; Giblan v. National Amalgamated Labourers Union [1903] 2 K.B. 600, at p. 618, 72 L.J.K.B. 907; Sleuter v. Seott (1914), 6 W.W.R. 451, 452.

Prima facie a combination to interfere with the civil rights of another, whether it be a right to full freedom in disposal of his own labour or his own capital, or any other right of citizenship, is an unlawful combination, because such interference if carried into effect is an actionable wrong, and it is this fact and not any mere malicious motive which constitutes the combination a conspiracy. Glamorgan Coal Co. v. South Wales Miners' Federation [1903] 2 K.B. 545, 570; Sleuter v. Scott, supra.

A body of men may refuse to work with another if it is not shown that their purpose was to molest him in pursuing his calling and prevent him except on conditions of their own making from earning his living thereby. Graham v. Knott, 14 B.C.R. 97. But if they not only exercised their undoubted right to work or refuse to work, but successfully and intentionally endeavoured to dictate conditions on which another should work, they can only escape liability if they had "just cause." The direction given to the jury by Fitzgibbon, L.J. in Quinn v. Leathem, approved in the Giblan case, supra [1903] 2 K.B. 600, at p. 619, and in Quinn v. Leathem, supra [1901] A.C. 495, at p. 508, is that the jury were to consider whether the intent and actions of the defendants went beyond the limits which would not be actionable, namely, securing or advancing their own interests or those of their trade by reasonable means, including lawful combination, or whether their acts as proved were intended and calculated to injure the plaintiff in his trade through a combination and with a common purpose to prevent the free action of his customers and servants (in that case of his employers), and with the effect of actually injuring him, as distinguished from acts legitimately done to secure or advance their own interests. In the Giblan case, supra, it was held that the right of action was not defeated when the object was to compel payment of a debt to the union. In Conway v. Wade [1909] A.C. 506, at p. 515, 78 L.J.K.B. 1025, the right was not defeated even as against a single individual, and a fortiori, not against a combination of individuals, when the object was to compel payment of a fine imposed by the union. Joint indictment for crimes committed in concert]-See Code sec. 858 and notes.

Summary conviction for first offence]-Offences under this section are excluded from those for which under sec. 729 a first offender may be discharged on making satisfaction to the party aggrieved, at the discretion of the magistrate making the summary conviction.

Second offence on indictment]-See Code secs. 465, 851, 963, 964 and 982.

Industrial Disputes Investigation Act. Can.]-The Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, 1907, 6-7 Edw. VII, Can., c. 20, provides for a reference, in certain cases, of disputes between employers and employees to boards of conciliation and investigation; by s. 56 prohibits strikes or lockouts "prior to or during" such a reference; and by s. 60 declares that "any person who incites . . . any employee to go or continue on strike contrary to the provisions" of the Act shall be guilty of an offence and liable to a fine. In R. v. McGuire, 16 O.L.R. 522, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 312, the defendant was convicted under the above s. 60 of unlawfully inciting the employees of a mining company to go on strike. At the time when the alleged offence was committed, neither the mine-owners nor their employees had made application for the appointment of a board under the Act. It was held that the prohibition by the statute of strikes or lockouts "prior to or during a reference" of the dispute to a board does not apply solely to cases in which one of the parties to the dispute has made application for the appointment of such a board, but makes all strikes and lockouts illegal until there has been such a reference, and the board has made its report thereon. A strike is therefore "contrary to the provisions of the Act," before as well as after it has been invoked by either the employers or employees, and, as there was evidence to support the conviction, it must be affirmed. Rex v. McGuire, 16 O.L.R. 522, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 312. See also amending Act, 1910, Can., ch. 29; Williams v. United Mine Workers, [1917] 1 W.W.R. 217 (Alta.).

Blackmail, threats and intimidation]—See sees. 216 (h), 265, 332, 450, 451, 452, 453, 454, 501, 516, 538, 578, 748.

Trade conspiracies and combinations]—See Code secs. 2 (38), 495-503, 581, 590, 1012; Conciliation and Labour Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 96; Combines Investigation Act, Can., .d1 ch. 9; Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, 1907, Can., ch. 20 as amended 1910, Can., ch. 29; the Department of Labour Act, 1909, Can., ch. 22.

INTIMIDATION

Intimidation to prevent working at any trade.

502. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who, in pursuance of any unlawful combination or conspiracy to raise the rate of wages, or of any unlawful combination or conspiracy respecting any trade, business or manufacture, or respecting any person concerned or employed therein, unlawfully assaults any person, or, in pursuance of any such combination or conspiracy, uses any violence or threat of violence to any person, with intent to hinder him from working or being employed at such trade, business or manufacture.

Origin]-Code of 1892, sec. 524; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 163, sec. 9.

Violence and threats of violence in unlawful trade conspiracy]—A trade conspiracy is an agreement to do, or procure to be done, any unlawful act in restraint of trade. Code sec. 496. The purposes of a trade union are not, by reason merely that they are in restraint of trade, unlawful as regards the criminal law. Code sec. 497.

No prosecution shall be maintainable against any person for conspiracy in refusing to work with or for any employer or workman, or for doing any act or causing any act to be done for the purpose of a trade combination, unless such act is an offence punishable by statute. Sec. 590.

"Trade combination" means any combination between masters or workmen or other persons for regulating or altering the relations between any persons being masters or workmen, or the conduct of any master or workman in or in respect of his business or employment, or contract of employment or service. Code sec. 2, sub-sec. (38).

And an "act," for the purposes of the sections relating to offences connected with trade and breaches of contract, includes a default, breach or omission. Code sec. 335 (a).

See notes to secs. 498, 501.

Second offences]-See secs. 465, 963 and 964.

Trade conspiracies and combinations]—See Code secs. 2 (38), 495-503, 581, 590, 1012; Conciliation and Labour Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 96; Combines Investigation Act, Can., 1910, ch. 9; Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, 1907, Can., ch. 20 as amended 1910, Can., ch. 29; the Department of Labour Act, 1900, Can., ch. 22.

505. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to one year's imprisonment, and to a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, who, by himself or his employee or agent, directly or indirectly, issues, gives, sells or otherwise disposes of, or offers to issue, give, sell or otherwise dispose of trading stamps to a merchant or dealer in goods for use in his business.

Origin]—Can. Stat., 4-5 Edw. VII, ch. 9, sec. 1, 7-8 Edw. VII, ch. 18, sec. 5.

"Trading stamps" defined]—See sees. 335 (u) and 335 (2), as amended 1908. By the latter an offer, printed or marked by the manufacturer upon any wrapper, box or receptacle, in which goods are sold, of a premium or reward for the return of such wrapper, box or receptacle, to the manufacturer, is not a trading stamp within the meaning of this Part. Can. Stat., 1908, ch. 18, sec. 5.

A voting ticket given by a trader to each purchaser of goods to enable the latter to become a contestant for prizes to be distributed in a voting contest or to aid another contestant by voting for him or by transferring the ticket to him, is a "trading stamp" within sees. 335 (u) and 505. R. v. Pollock (1916), 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 24, 36 O.L.R. 7.

"Every one"]—A partnership or corporation is included. Code sec. 335 (g).

"Merchant"]—This includes any partnership, company or body corporate doing a mercantile business. Code sec. 335 (g).

Musical and Dramatic Copyrights.

Performing dramatic or musical copyright works without consent of author.

508A. Any person who, without the written consent of the owner of the copyright or of his legal representative, knowingly performs or causes to be performed in public and for private profit the whole or any part, constituting an infringement, of any dramatic or operatic work or musical composition in which copyright subsists in Canada, shall be guilty of an offence, and shall be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding two hundred and fifty dollars, or, in the case of a second or subsequent offence, either to such fine or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding two months, or to both.

Origin]-Can. Stat. 1915, ch. 12. Summary conviction for first offence]-See sec. 729.

Unauthorized changing of title, etc., of copyrighted drama or music.

508B. Any person who makes or causes to be made any change in or suppression of the title, or the name of the author, of any dramatic or operatic work or musical composition in which copyright subsists in Canada, or who makes or causes to be made any change in such work or composition itself without the written consent of the author or of his legal representative, in order that the same may be performed in whole or in part in public for private profit, shall be guilty of an offence, and shall be liable on summary conviction to a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, or, in the case of a second or subsequent offence, either to such fine or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding four months, or to both.

Origin]-Can. Stat., 1915, ch. 12.

A person who suppresses the name of the author of a theatrical play written by a foreigner but protected by the Imperial Statute (1886).

CRIMINAL CODE (PART VII)

49-50 Vict., ch. 33 (Berne Convention), without the consent of the author, and who has it represented in a theatre in Canada, renders himself guilty of a criminal offence under see. 5088. Rex v. Daoust (Helbronner v. Daoust) (1915), 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 69, 49 Que. S.C. 65.

Summary conviction for first offence]-See sec. 729.

Respecting Insurance.

Soliciting or carrying on business of insurance.-Unlicensed companies.-Penalty.-Limitation of time for prosecution.

508c. (1) Every one shall be guilty of an indictable offence who, within Canada, except on behalf of or as agent for a company, thereunto duly licensed by the Minister of Finance, or on behalf of or as agent for or as a member of an association of individuals formed upon the plan known as Lloyd's or of an association of persons formed for the purpose of inter-insurance and so licensed, solicits or accepts any insurance risk, or issues or delivers any interim receipt or policy of insurance, or grants in consideration of any premium or payment any annuity on a life or lives, or collects or receives any premium for insurance, or carries on any business of insurance, or inspects any risk, or adjusts any loss, or prosecutes or maintains any suit, action or proceeding, or files any claim in insolvency relating to such business, or receives directly or indirectly any remuneration for doing any of the aforesaid acts.

(2) Any one convicted of any such offence shall for a first offence be liable to a penalty of not more than fifty dollars or less than twenty dollars, and, in default of payment, to imprisonment with or without hard labour for a term of not more than three months or less than one month, and for a second or any subsequent offence to a penalty of not more than one hundred dollars or less than fifty dollars, and in addition thereto to imprisonment with hard labour for a period of not more than six months or less than three months.

(3) All information or complaints for any of the aforesaid offences shall be laid or made within one year after the commission of the offence.

[$ 508D] CRIMINAL CODE (PART VII)

Offences .- Discrimination .- Unlawful rebates, etc.

508n. (1) Any insurance company, or any officer, agent or representative thereof, who,-

- (a) makes or permits any distinction or discrimination in favour of individuals between the insured of the same class and equal expectation of life in the amount of premiums charged or in the dividends payable upon any policy of life insurance issued by or on behalf of the company; or,
- (b) makes or assumes to make any stipulation or agreement which is intended to operate as a part of any insurance contract to which the company is or is to become a party, whether in respect of the amount, terms or conditions of the insurance, the premium to be paid or otherwise, except such as is plainly expressed in the policy issued in the case; or,
- (c) pays, allows or gives, or offers to pay, allow or give, directly or indirectly, as inducement to insure, any rebate of the premium stipulated by the policy to be payable, or any special favour or advantage in the dividends or other benefits to accrue thereon, or any advantage by way of local or advisory directorship unless for actual service bona fide performed, or any paid employment or contract for service of any kind or any inducement whatever intended to be in the nature of a rebate of premium; or,
- (d) gives, sells or purchases as such inducement or in connection with such insurance any stock, bonds or other securities of any insurance company, or other corporation, association or partnership;

And any person who knowingly receives as an inducement to insure, any rebate of premium or any such special favour, advantage or inducement as aforesaid; shall for a first offence be liable to a penalty of double the amount of the annual premium chargeable upon the application or policy in respect of which the offence is committed, such penalty not to be less than one hundred dollars, and for a second or subsequent offence to a penalty of double the amount of such annual premium, the latter penalty not to be less than two hu. dred and fifty dollars.

(2) Moreover every director, manager or other officer of any insurance company who knowingly consents to or permits the violation of any of the provisions of this section by any agent officer, employee or servant of the company shall be liable to a penalty of five hundred dollars.

(3) The penalties provided for in this section may be recovered either upon summary conviction under Part XV of the Criminal Code, or in any court of competent civil jurisdiction at the suit of any person suing therefor as well for His Majesty as for himself; one-half of any such penalty when recovered to be paid into the Consolidated Revenue Fund and the other half to belong to the informer or person at whose suit the same is recovered.

(4) No director, manager, agent, officer or servant of any insurance company shall be indemnified, either in whole or in part, from the funds of the company for any penalty or costs which he may be adjudged to pay on account of any offence committed against this section.

WILFUL AND FORBIDDEN ACTS IN RESPECT OF CERTAIN PROPERTY.

Interpretation.

"Wilfully" defined for purposes of Part VIII.

509. Every one who causes any event by an act which he knew would probably cause it, being reckless whether such event happens or not, is deemed for the purposes of this Part to have caused it wilfully.

Origin]-Sec. 481, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 168, sec. 60.

Legal justification or colour of right]—See sec. 541, and as to summary conviction offences under sec. 539, the further limitations of sec. 540 as to fair and reasonable supposition of right.

"Wilful" offences]—Where the Code declares an offence in respect of an act "wilfully" done, the indictment or charge will be insufficient if it omits the word "wilfully" or words to the like import, although the charge alleges the act to have been done "unlawfully." Ex parte O'Shaughnessy, 13 Que. K.B. 178, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 136; R. v. Barre, 2 W.L.R. 376, 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 1; and see R. v. Johnson, 7 O.L.R. 525, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 123; R. v. Tupper, 11 Can. Cr. Cas. 199; R. v. Bridges, 13 B.C.R. 67, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 548; R. v. Graf, 19 O.L.R. 238. Under an election law a "wilful" refusal by an official to permit a voter to vote was held to imply that the refusal was perverse or malicious. Johnson v. Allen, 26 Ont. R. 550. And in a prosecution for wilful refusal or neglect of a husband to maintain his wife it was held that there must be an absence of any reasonable ground for believing the refusal or neglect to be lawful. H---, H---, 6 Can. Cr. Cas. 165; and see McGillivray v. Muir, 7 Can. Cr. Cas. 360, 6 O.L.R. 154.

It is to be noted that the definition as to reckless acts given by sec. 509 applies only to Part VIII (secs. 509-545). Compare secs. 259 (b), 283, 285.

"Wilful" ordinarily means voluntary or deliberate; Century Dictionary, vol. 8; but is often used in penal statutes so as to include the idea of an act intentionally done with a bad motive or purpose, an evil intent, 40 Cyc. 944; R. v. Child, L.R. 1 C.C.R. 307, 12 Cox 64, 24 L.T. 556; R. v. Faulkner, 13 Cox C.C. 550; R. v. Cooper, 5 C. & P. 535; R. v. Cronin, 36 U.C.Q.B. 342.

[$ 509] CRIMINAL CODE (PART VIII)

The general principle is that where a person commits an unlawful act unaccompanied by any circumstances justifying its commission, it is a presumption of law that he acted advisedly and with intent to produce the consequences which have ensued. A person cannot shelter himself from punishment on the ground that the mischief he committed was wider in its consequences than he originally intended. R. v. Pembliton, L.R. 2 C.C.R 119, 12 Cox 607, 30 L.T. 405; Roper v. Knott [1898] 1 Q.B. 868, 67 L.J.Q.B. 574, 78 L.T. 595; R. v. Latimer, 17 Q.B.D. 359, 51 J.P. 184, 16 Cox 70; R. v. Welch, 40 J.P. 183, 1 Q.B.D. 23, 13 Cox 121; R. v. Ward, 1 C.C.R. 356, 12 Cox 123.

In the Welch case, supra, Coleridge, C.J., expressed the view that where the act was reckless and cruel there was malice enough to sustain a conviction.

Mischief.

Mischief .-- Wilful destruction or damage to property.

510. Every one is guilty of the indictable offence of mischief who wilfully destroys or damages any of the property in this section mentioned, and is liable to the punishment in this section specified, that is to say:—

(A) To imprisonment for life if the object damaged is,-

- (a) a dwelling-house, ship or boat, and the damage is caused by an explosion, and any person is in such dwelling-house, ship or boat; and the damage causes actual danger to life; or,
- (b) a bank, dyke or wall of the sea, or of any inland water, natural or artificial, or any work in, on, or belonging to any port, harbour, dock or inland water, natural or artificial and the damage causes actual danger of inundation; or,
- (c) any bridge, whether over any stream of water or not, or any viaduct, or aqueduct, over or under which bridge, viaduct or aqueduct any highway, railway or canal passes, and the damage is done with intent to render and does render such bridge, viaduct or aqueduct, or the highway, railway or canal passing over or under the same, or any part thereof, dangerous or impassable; or,
- (d) a railway damaged with the intent of rendering and so as to render such railway dangerous or impassable:

Origin]-1913 Can. Stat., eh. 13, sec. 19 (amendment); Code of 1892, sec. 499; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 168; 32-33 Viet., Can., ch. 22; Malicious Damage Act, 1861, Imp.

"Wilfully destroys or damages"]—The wilfully setting fire by one person to the goods and chattels of another is a criminal offence. Mortimer v. Fisher (1913), 4 W.W.R. 454, 457 (Sask.).

Sub-sec. B (b)—Killing or wounding cattle, horses, etc.]—See definition of "cattle" in Code sec. 2, sub-sec. (5); see other provisions dealing with injury to animals in secs. 536-538.

The castration of a stallion running at large contrary to the provisions of the Entire Animals Ordinance (N.W.T.) was held to be a damage of the stallion within the meaning of s. 510 (B. b.) of the Criminal Code. The fact that the owner of the stallion had expressed an intention to castrate it was held to be no justification of the unauthorized act of the defendant. The interference by the stallion with the defendant's mares also running at large was also held to be no justification, the defendant being in such case at best a mere licensee of the land over which the mares grazed: McLean v. Rudd, Alta. L.R. 505, followed. R. v. Kroesing, 2 Alta. L.R. 275, 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 312. The proper test in such a case is the question, Did the defendant do what he did honestly believing the act to be necessary for the protection of his property? Proof of actual malice is not necessary under this section, but although the word "maliceiously" is not used, legal malice such as would establish that mens rea, without which there can be no eriminal intent, must be proven. The fact that the defendant committed the act without any attempt to avail himself of the provisions of the Ordinance relating to impounding stallions, and the evidence adduced not showing that he honestly believed the act necessary to protect his property, it was held that legal malice was sufficiently proven. Rex v. Kroesing, 2 Alta. L.R. 275, 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 312.

But on a charge of unlawfuly and maliciously killing eattle where it appeared that an animal was killed by the prisoners, when it was in a helpless and dying condition, and that the prisoners thought it was an act of mercy to kill it, it was held that the killing was not malicious; that the implication of malice was rebuttable, and had been in fact rebutted, a mens rea on the part of the prisoners being disproved. R. v. Mennel, 1 Terr. L.R. 487; R. v. Clemens [1898] 1 Q.B. 556, 67 L.J.Q.B. 482.

Cattle brands as prima facie evidence of ownership]

In any criminal prosecution, proceeding or trial, the presence upon any cattle of a brand or mark, which is duly recorded or registered under the provisions of any Act, ordinance or law, shall be prima facie evidence that such cattle are the property of the registered owner of such brand or mark. Code sec. 989. *

Sub-sec. (E)—Amount of damage]—It has been held that the pecuniary "amount" to which "damage" is done by window-breaking within s. 51, of 24 and 25 Viet., c. 97, the Malieious Damage Act, 1861 (Imp.) is to be reckoned without deducting any salvage value; R. v. Hewitt (1912), 7 Cr. App. R. 219.

The value of a plate-glass window which had been maliciously damaged need not necessarily be proved by an expert. An opinion of a non-expert as to its substantial value is admissible. R. v. Beckett (1913), 8 Cr. App. R. 204. If the amount of damage is less than $20and the offence is not within the various classes of offences set forth in sub-secs. (A) to (D) of sec. 510, nor within secs. 511-538 inclusive, reference must be had to sees. 539 and 540, dealing with cases not specially provided for. If the property damaged is of a class as to which no special punishment is by law prescribed, and the damage amounts to less than $20, the proceedings are by summary conviction under sec. 539. If the damage amounts to $20 or more and was done "by night," i.e., between 9 p.m. and 6 a.m. (sec. 2, sub-sec. 23), the offence is indictable under sec. 510 (D), clause (e), with a maximum penalty of five years' imprisonment, but if not done by night so as to come within that clause of sub-sec. (D), the offence is still indictable under sub-sec. (E), but with the lesser penalty up to two years' imprisonment. The maximum term of imprisonment may be shortened (sec. 1054); and see sec. 1081 as to suspended sentences.

Inland water]—It would seem that a drainage ditch filled with surface water but incapable of being used commercially as a river and not constituting a canal, is not within the term " inland water, natural or artificial." Sub-see. A (b). B. v. Braun, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 397. See as to mill-ponds and reservoirs, sub-see. (c).

Postal offences generally]—See Code secs. 3, 209, 265, 364, 365, 366, 400, 407, 449, 451, 510D, 516, 538, 867, 869, and the Post Office Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 66.

Legal justification or colour of right as a defence]—See sec. 541 (1). Offender having interest in property]—See sec. 541 (2).

Reckless acts with knowledge of probable mischief]—See sec. 509. Compensation for damage]—See sec. 1048.

Arson.

Arson.-Wilfully setting fire to building.

511. Every one is guilty of the indictable offence of arson and liable to imprisonment for life who wilfully sets fire to any building or structure, whether such building or structure is completed or not, or to any stack of vegetable produce or of mineral or vegetable fuel, or to any mine or well of oil or other combustible substance, or to any ship or vessel, whether completed or not, or to any timber or materials placed in any shipyard for building or repairing or fitting out any ship, or to any of His Majesty's stores or munitions of war.

Origin]—Sec. 482, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 168, secs. 2 to 5, 7, 8, 19, 28, 46 and 47; 24-25 Vict., Imp., ch. 97, sec. 6.

" Wilfully "]-See sec. 509.

Whether building is completed or not]—The inclusion of unfinished structures by the express terms of the Code in accordance with the interpretation given in R. v. Manning, 1 C.C.R. 338, 25 L.T. 573, 12 Cox 106, to the word "building" used in the English Act, 24-25 Viet., ch. 97, see. 6.

"Ship or vessel"]--Under the Canada Shipping Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 113 and amendments 1907-1916, a "ship" includes every description of vessel used in navigation not propelled by oars. R.S.C. 1906, ch. 113, sec. 2; and see the Merchant Shipping Act, Imp., 1894.

"Structure"]-A "threshing separator" is not a "structure" within the meaning of sec. 511, but is covered by the term "agricultural or manuf Fisher Coi Wh vent th (2); 1 R. v. 1 Can. C setting and th show t had be they h Grav's

Colour of right]-See sec. 541.

Where accused owns the building burned]—Ownership will not prevent the act being an offence if done with intent to defraud. Sec. 541 (2); R. v. Bryans, 12 U.C.C.P. 166; R. v. Greenwood, 23 U.C.Q.B. 250; R. v. Beardsley, 18 Can. Cr. Cas. 389; R. v. Wilson, 1 W.W.R. 272, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 105, 19 W.L.R. 657. Where the accused was charged with setting free to his house with intent to defraud an insurance company and the defence raised was that of accident, ovidence was admitted to show that two other houses in which the accused had previously lived had been burned down and that he had obtained the money for which they had been insured. R. v. Gray, 4 F. & F. 1102. The decision in Gray's case was approved in Makin v. A. G., of New South Wales [1894] A.C. 57.

Evidence of arson]—Where a person under conviction for arson is called by the Crown on the trial of another person on the charge of wilfully setting the same fire, to prove that the latter had instigated him to commit the offence, the testimony of the convict that he had caused the fire at the instance and direction of accused may be rebutted by the testimony of other prisoners that the convict had admitted to them that the accused had had nothing to do with the fire; but the convict must first be asked whether he had made such admission, and have denied doing so. R. v. Webb, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 424, 6 W.W.R. 358, 24 Man. R. 437; Canada Evidence Act, sec. 11.

Where two persons are charged with the same arson on separate informations laid on the same day, by the same informant and both preliminary enquiries are being heard separately before the same justice, the Crown may after the committal for trial of the first prisoner call him as a witness against the second prisoner, and he will be bound to give evidence. Ex parte Ferguson (1911), 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 437 (N.S.).

The prisoner already committed was both a competent and compellable witness against another prisoner charged in another proceeding with the identical offence and may be committed for contempt, if he refuses to answer. Ex parte Ferguson, supra.

A conviction of two persons jointly charged with arson will be set aside where the evidence warrants a finding that the act was committed either by one or the other of them but does not enable the court to determine which one committed the offence nor justify a finding implienting them both. R. v. Upton (1915), 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 28, 9 O.W.N. 74.

Where A. was charged with setting fire to B.'s hay rick and evidence had been given that later, on the same night, fires had also occurred at the ricks of C. and D. within a mile distant, eivdence of threats, statements and particular acts by A. pointing alone to C.'s or D.'s fires but not implicating A. as to B.'s fire was held inadmissible. R. v. Taylor, 5 Cox C.C. 138.

[§ 511] CRIMINAL CODE (PART VIII)

Where A. was charged wiht setting fire to hay in B.'s barn, and had confessed that he entered the barn, lit his pipe and fell asleep on the hay, a previous confession by him that he had caused a fire three months' previously in C.'s barn several miles distant, in a similar manner, was inadmissible, there being no suggestion of any grudge against B. or C. R. v. Peel, 50 Solicitor's Journal (Eng.), 137.

Interest of accused in the burned building]—See sec. 541. Accessory chargeable as a principal]—See sec. 69.

Conspiracy to commit offence]-See sec. 573.

Attempts and threats]-See sees. 512, 516.

Insanity as defence]—See sec. 19. A lunatic is civilly liable in damages to persons injured by his acts, unless utterly blameless. Where a lunatic defendant had set fire to a barn, and the evidence showed that, while not responsible to the extent of an ordinary man, he was not utterly unconscious that he was doing wrong, it was held that he was liable for the damage done. Stanley v. Hayes, 8 O.L.R. S1.

Firing ship with intent to murder]-See sec. 264.

Extradition]—Arson is an extraditable offence under the treaty of 1842 with the U.S.A.

Attempt to commit arson.

512. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to fourteen years' imprisonment who wilfully attempts to set fire to anything mentioned in the last preceding section, or who wilfully sets fire to any substance so situated that he knows that any thing mentioned in the last preceding section is likely to catch fire therefrom.

Origin]—Sec. 483, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 168, secs. 9, 10, 20, 29, and 48; 32-33 Vict., Can., ch. 22, sec. 12; Malicious Damage Act, 1861, Imp., secs. 7 and 8.

"Wilfully attempts"]-See sec. 509.

Attempt to fire a building]—If B, under A.'s direction, arranges a blanket saturated with oil so that if it is set on fire the flame will be communicated to a building and then lights a match and holds it until it is burning well and then puts it down within an inch or two of the blanket, when the match goes out; A. is guilty of an attempt to set fire to the building. R. v. Goodman, 22 U.C.C.P. 338.

Setting fire to goods in a building]—If the goods are so situated that the person wilfully setting fire to them knows the building is likely to eatch fire therefrom, he is guilty under the second clause of sec. 512 in like manner as for an attempt, although he did not intend that the building should burn. A somewhat similar provision was contained in sec. 7 of the English Act of 1861, its effect being to supersede the decision in R. v. Lyons, 1 Bell C.C. 38, 8 Cox 84, 28 L.J.M.C. 33.

Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to seven years' imprisonment who wilfully attempts to set fire to anything mentioned in the last preceding section, or who wilfully sets fire to any substance so situated that he knows that any thing mentioned in the last preceding section is likely to eatch fire therefrom.

Origin]—Sec. 485, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 168, sec. 20; 32-33 Vict., Can., ch. 22, sec. 22.

" Wilfully attempts "]-See sec. 509.

"Or who wilfully sets fire," etc.]—This section includes the wilful setting fire where the fire is not directly applied to the crops, timber, etc., referred to in sec. 513, but to something else as to which the intent to burn was more particularly directed. In such case the penalty of sec. 513 is incurred if the person knew that the crops, timber, etc., were likely to eatch fire from the setting fire to that which he had determined to burn and had wilfully set fire to. Compare sec. 512. It is also to be noted that by Code sec. 509, if any one causes any event by an act "which he knew would probably cause it, being reckless whether such event happened or not, he is deemed for the purpose of the mischief clauses and other sections embodied in Part VIII to have caused it 'wilfully.'" Where the defendant set fire to a summer-house in a wood and the fire was thence communicated to the wood, he was held to be properly convicted on an indictment charging him with setting fire to the wood. R. v. Price, 9 C. & P. 729.

Colour of right]-See sec. 541.

[$515] CRIMINAL CODE (PART VIII)

Recklessly setting fire to forests.—To logs, booms, etc.—To square timber.—To manufactured lumber.—Discretion to try summarily.

515. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment, who, by such negligence as shows him to be reckless or wantonly regardless of consequences, or in violation of a provincial or municipal law of the locality, sets fire to any forest, tree, manufactured lumber, square timber, logs or floats, boom, dam or slide, on the Crown domain, or on land leased or lawfully held for the purpose of cutting timber, or on private property on any creek or rive, or rollway, beach or wharf, so that the same is injured or destroyed.

2. The magistrate investigating any such charge may, in his discretion, if the consequences have not been serious, dispose of the matter summarily, without sending the offender for trial, by imposing a fine not exceeding fifty dollars, and in default of payment by the committal of the offender to prison for any term not exceeding six months, with or without hard labour.

Origin]—Sec. 486, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 168, sec. 11; 32-33 Vict., Can., ch. 22, sec. 11.

Power to summarily convict]-The power here conferred on the magistrate to dispose of the matter summarily may be exercised if the magistrate holding a preliminary enquiry so decides, having regard to the consequences of the crime not having been serious. This impliedly leaves it to the magistrate to decide whether the consequences have been serious or not. If he holds them to be serious, he thereby ousts himself of the special jurisdiction to dispose of the case as a justice of the peace acting under the Summary Convictions clauses, Code secs. 705, et. seq. in Part XV of the Code. The Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 1, defines "magistrate" as "a justice of the peace" unless the context otherwise requires. The word "magistrate" has a different and special significance in Part XVI of the Code as to summary trial of indictable offences because of the definition applicable only to Part XVI, given in Code sec. 771. The special jurisdiction of Code sec. 515 is quite distinct from Part XVI and indicates an intention that the justice of the peace holding a preliminary inquiry under Part XIV (Code secs. 668 et seq.) shall have power to exercise the limited jurisdiction of trial which it confers, although such justice may not be a police magistrate or other functionary entitled to hold a "summary trial" under Part XVI. It will be noted also that sec. 515 imposes no condition as to the consent of the accused.

516. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to ten years' imprisonment who sends, delivers or utters, or directly or indirectly causes to be received, knowing the contents thereof, any letter or writing threatening to burn or destroy any building, or any rick or stack of grain, hay or straw or other agricultural produce, or any grain, hay or straw or other agricultural produce in or under any building, or any ship or vessel.

Origin]—Sec. 487, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 173, sec. 8; 32-33 Viet., Can., ch. 52, sec. 58; Malicious Damage Act, 1861, Imp., sec. 50.

Written threats to burn]-Sec. 516 deals with written threats to burn. If the threat be made as part of a written demand of money or property with menaces, the offence may come under sec. 451. R. v. Smith, 2 C. & K. 882. A merely oral threat to burn buildings will, however, found proceedings for binding over to keep the peace. Cr. Code sec. 748; Ex parte Welsh, 2 Can. Cr. Cas. 35. The threatening letter need not have been addressed directly to the person threatened; the jury may find that a letter addressed to A., making threats against the property of B., was sent with the intention that B. should obtain knowledge of it from A. R. v. Paddle, 4 R. & R. 484; It seems unnecessary to state in the indictment the name of the person to whom the writing was uttered. Code sec. 855; Elsworth's case, 2 East P.C. 986. It is for the jury to consider in the case of a letter in general terms not properly addressed whether it was meant for the party who got it so as to constitute a threat in respect of the particular building referred to in the indictment. CRIMINAL CODE (PART VIII)

[§ 517]

Railways, Mines and Electric Plant.

Injuries affecting railways, likely to endanger property.-With intent.

517. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to five years' imprisonment who, in manner likely to cause danger to valuable property, without endangering life or person,—

- (a) places any obstruction upon any railway, or takes up, removes, displaces, breaks or injures any rail, sleeper or other matter or thing belonging to any railway; or,
- (b) shoots or throws anything at an engine or other railway vehicle; or,
- (c) interferes without authority with the points, signals or other appliances upon any railway; or,
- (d) makes any false signal on or near any railway; or,
- (e) wilfully omits to do any act which it is his duty to do; or,

(f) does any other unlawful act.

2. Every one who does any of the acts in this section mentioned with intent to cause such danger is liable to imprisonment for life.

Origin]—Sec. 489, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 168, secs. 37 and 38; 23 Viet., Can., ch. 29, sec. 6; 32-33 Viet., Can., ch. 22; 24-25 Viet., Imp., ch. 97, sec. 35.

Sub-sec (c)—Wilful omission of duty]—See sec. 509 as to the interpretation of the word "wilful."

Sub-sec. (f)—" Any other unlawful act"]—A conviction made by a magistrate under Code see. 517 (f) for doing an unlawful act on a railway in a manner likely to cause danger is bad if it does not disclose the nature of the unlawful act. R. v. Porte, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 238, 18 Man. R. 222; Smith v. Moody [1903] 1 K.B. 56; re Effie Brady (1913), 3 W.W.R. 914, 23 W.L.R. 333, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 123; R. v. MISCHIEF [§ 518]

Obstructing railways.

518. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who, by any act or wilful omission, obstructs or interrupts, or causes to be obstructed or interrupted. the construction, maintenance or free use of any railway or any part thereof, or any matter or thing appertaining thereto or connected therewith.

Origin]-Sec. 490, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 168, secs. 38, 39; 32-33 Viet., Can., ch. 22, sec. 40; 24-25 Viet., Imp., ch. 97, sec. 36,

Obstructing use of railway]-A drunken man got upon the railway and altered the signals and thereby caused a luggage train to pull up and proceed at a very slow pace. It was held upon a case reserved, that this was the causing of an engine and carriage using a railway to be obstructed. R. v. Hadfield, 11 Cox C.C. 574, 39 L.J.M.C. 131, L.R. 1 C.C.R. 253. A person improperly went upon a line of railway and purposely attempted to stop a train approaching, by placing himself on the space between two lines of rails, and holding up his arms in the mode adopted by inspectors of the line when desirous of stopping a train; it was held also to be the offence of unlawfully obstructing an engine or carriage using a railway. R. v. Hardy, 11 Cox C.C. 656, L.R. 1 C.C.R. 278, 40 L.J.M.C. 62.

The obstruction may consist in the unauthorized operation of a hand-car. R. v. Brownell, 26 N.B.R. 579.

Cumulative acts]-On an indictment for various acts of obstruction of a railway by placing pieces of iron on the rails in a manner likely to wreck a train, the prosecution may elect to treat the several acts of obstruction continuing for several weeks as cumulative acts forming one offence in law, and the refusal of the trial judge to order that the prosecution elect as to which act of obstruction it would proced upon, is not error in law. R. v. Michaud (1909), 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 89, 39 N.B.R. 418. A conviction on such indictment would be an answer to a fresh indictment for any of the offences as to which evidence was given for the prosecution. Where the trial judge considers it necessary for a fair trial of an indictment charging various acts, any of which would be an offence, he may order the prosecutor to furnish particulars or direct separate trial. R. v. Michaud, supra.

Colour of right]-See sec. 541.

Wilful omission]-See sec. 509.

Obstructing railway officer or agent in execution of his duty]-Any person who obstructs or impedes an officer of a railway company in the execution of his duty upon any of the premises of the company, was made liable to fine or imprisonment under sec. 291 of the Railway Act, 1903 (Can.). It was held under it that it is an obstruction of the railway officer for a cabman having no right upon the railway cab-

Wilful damage to goods on railway, etc.

519. Every one is guilty of an offence and liable, on summary conviction, to a penalty not exceeding twenty dollars over and above the value of the goods or liquors so destroyed or damaged or to one month's imprisonment with or without hard labour, or to both, who,—

- (a) wilfully destroys or damages anything containing any goods or liquors in or about any railway station or building or any vehicle of any kind on any railway, or in any warehouse, ship or vessel, with intent to steal or otherwise unlawfully to obtain or to injure the contents, or any part thereof; or,
- (b) unlawfully drinks or wilfully spills or allows to run to waste any such liquors, or any part thereof.

Origin]—Sec. 491, Code of 1892; 51 Viet., Can., ch. 29, sec. 297; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 38, sec. 62.

Damage to mine or oil well.

520. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to seven years' imprisonment who, with intent to injure a mine or oil well, or obstruct the working thereof,—

- (a) causes any water, earth, rubbish or other substance to be conveyed into the mine or oil well or any subterranean channel communicating with such mine or well; or,
- (b) damages any shaft or any passage of the mine or well; or,
- (c) damages, with intent to render useless, any apparatus, building, erection, bridge or road belonging to the mine or well, whether the object damaged be complete or not; or,

(d) hinders the working of any such apparatus; or,

(e) damages or unfastens, with intent to render useless, any rope, chain or tackle used in any mine or well or upon any way or work connected therewith.

Origin]—Code of 1892, sec. 498; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 168, secs. 30 and 31; 32-33 Vict., Can., ch. 22, secs. 32 and 33; 24-25 Vict., Imp., ch. 97, sec. 28.-

Sub-sec. (c)—Damage to mining apparatus, building or crection]— A trunk of wood used to convey water to wash the earth from the ore is an "erection" belonging to the mine within this section. Barwell v. Winterstoke, 14 Q.B. 704; and so is a scaffold erected at some distance above the bottom of a mine for the purpose of working a vein of coal on a level with the scaffold. R. v. Whittingham, 9 C. & P. 234.

Setting fire to mine or oil-well]-See sec. 511.

Colour of right]—See sec. 541; R. v. Matthews, 14 Cox C.C. 5. An honest belief on the part of the accused that he had a moral right to do the act charged as mischief will not alone constitute "colour of right" so as to exempt him from criminal liability; there must be a fair and reasonable supposition of right in view of what the accused actually knew and of what he ought to have known. R. v. Watier (1910), 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 9 (Y.T.).

Damaging telegraph, telephone or fire alarm.—Obstructing communication.—Attempts.

521. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment who wilfully,—

- (a) destroys, removes or damages anything which forms part of, or is used or employed in or about any electric or magnetic telegraph, electric light, telephone or fire-alarm, or in the working thereof, or for the transmission of electricity for other lawful purposes; or,
- (b) prevents or obstructs the sending, conveyance or delivery of any communication by any such telegraph, telephone or fire-alarm, or the transmission of electricity for any such electric light, or for any such purpose as aforesaid.

Origin]—Sec. 492, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 168, secs. 40, 41; 32-33 Viet., Can., ch. 22, secs. 41 and 42; 24-25 Viet., Imp., ch. 97, sec. 37.

Breaking insulators]-An information laid under sec. 521 of the Code charged that the accused, on, etc., did unlawfully and wilfully commit damage by breaking four insulators on telegraph poles, the property of the Canadian Pacific Ry. Co., contrary to the provisions of the said section, without stating, as required by the section, that the insulators formed part of and were used and employed in and on the electric telegraph line of the railway, or that the damage was done without legal excuse and without colour of right. The magistrate, however, did not try the accused on the information, but on his electing to be tried summarily, and on the magistrate deciding to try the case, he, as required by sec. 778 (3) in cases of indictable offences, formulated the charge in writing, containing all the requirements of sec. 521, which he read over to the accused, who pleaded guilty thereto, and on such charge, so formulated and pleaded to, the accused was tried and convicted: Held, that the charge being for an indictable offence, it was not essential that the whole subject matter, including matters requiring to be negatived, should be set out in the information, its object being merely to inform the magistrate of the nature of the charge, the accused not being tried and convicted thereon, but on the charge as formulated and read over to him. R. v. Gill, 18 O.L.R. 234, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 294.

524. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to seven years' imprisonment who wilfully prevents or impedes, or endeavours to prevent or impede,--

- (a) the saving of any vessel that is wrecked, stranded, abandoned or in distress; or,
- (b) any person in his endeavour to save such vessel.

2. Every one who wilfully prevents or impedes, or endeavours to prevent or impede, the saving of any wreck is guilty of an offence punishable on indictment or on summary conviction and liable, on conviction on indictment, to two years' imprisonment, and, on summary conviction before two justices, to a fine of four hundred dollars or six months' imprisonment with or without hard labour.

528. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to seven years' imprisonment who wilfully,—

- (a) destroys, injures or obliterates, or causes to be destroyed, injured or obliterated; or,
 - (b) makes or causes to be made any erasure, addition of names or interlineation of names in or upon;

any writ of election, or any return to a writ of election, or any indenture, poll-book, voters' list, certificate, affidavit or report, or any document, ballot or paper made, prepared or drawn out according to any law in regard to Dominion, provincial, municipal or civic elections.

Origin]-Sec. 503, Code of 1892; B.S.C. 1886, ch. 168, sec. 55.

Wilfully]—The word "wilfully" means more than "voluntarily" or "knowingly." The true meaning of the word in such a case seems to be that given it by Mr. Justice Wurtele in Ex parte O'Shaughnessy. in 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 136, at 139, 13 Que. K.B. 178. The learned judge says there: "Wilfully means not merely to commit an act voluntarily, but to commit it purposely with an evil intention, or in other words it means to do so deliberately, intentionally and corruptly and without any justifiable excuse." With that meaning attached to "wilfully" the section of the Code would not make it a crime to cut up lists furnished for the legitimate uses of an election organization. R. v. Duggan, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 147, 16 Man. L.R. 441, per Richards, J.A. See also Code sec. 509.

Colour of right]-See sec. 549.

"Voters' List"]—What is a voters' list within the meaning of the Code[†] What parliament has defined as a voters' list in another Act may be of some assistance in reaching a conclusion, but when it is observed that the Code makes it equally an offence to alter any voters' list, whether prepared for the purpose of a provincial election, municipal election, or civic election, as well as for a Dominion election, and that the provincial, municipal and civic legislation of any province may contain many different definitions of a voters' list and may be amended and altered from time to time, and that the Code is equally applicable to all, it does not seem that a definition in any particular election Act can finally determine the interpretation to be placed on sec. 503 of the Criminal Code. R. v. Duggan, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 147, at 164, 16 Man. L.R. 441.

What the court must endeavour to do is to place a fair construction on the language of the Act, having regard to the mischief it was intended to remedy. The court must not create an offence because in its opinion it comes within the scope of the mischief: Re The Gauntlet,

[§ 528] CRIMINAL CODE (PART VIII)

L.R. 4 P.C. at p. 191; but it must not lose sight of the mischief in endeavouring to place a reasonable interpretation upon the statute. R. v. Duggan, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 147, at 165, per Phippen, J.A.

There is no doubt that sec. 503 of the Code was framed to avoid alterations or erasures in lists which might prevent those legally entitled from exercising their franchise, or allow unqualified persons a voice in the election of a member. Ibid.

Offences under election laws]—See the Dominion Elections Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 6, and the Elections Acts of the various provinces.

Theft or unlawful taking of election documents]-See sec. 367.

Buildings, Fences and Land Marks.

Demolition of building to the prejudice of owner, etc., of building occupied by offender.—Severance of fixtures.

529. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to five years' imprisonment who, being possessed of any dwelling-house or other building, or part of any dwelling-house or other building, which is built on lands subject to a mortgage or which is held for any term of years or other less term, or at will, or held over after the termination of any tenancy, wilfully and to the prejudice of the mortgage or owner,—

- (a) pulls down or demolishes, or begins to pull down or demolish the same or any part thereof, or removes or begins to remove the same or any part thereof from the premises on which it is erected; or,
- (b) pulls down or severs from the freehold any fixture fixed in or to such dwelling-house or building, or part of such dwelling-house or building.

Origin]—Sec. 504, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 168, sec. 15; 32-33Viet., Can., ch. 22, sec. 17; 24-25 Viet., Imp., ch. 97, sec. 13.

Fixtures]—The severance of the fixtures must have been made wilfully and to the prejudice of the mortgagee of the land or of the owner as the case may be. The original Canadian statute of 1869 (ch. 22), made no reference to mortgagees, but referred only to tenants. A tenant who steals a fixture belonging to his landlord, or any chattel let along with the building, is punishable under Code sec. 360.

In Reynolds v. Ashby & Son [1904] A.C. 466, 73 L.J.K.B. 946, Lord Lindley said he did not profess to be able to reconcile all the cases on fixtures, still less all that has been said about them. In dealing with them attention must be paid not only to the nature of the thing and to the mode of attachment, but to the circumstances under which it was Injuries to fences, wall or gate .- Subsequent offence.

530. Every one is guilty of an offence and liable, on summary conviction, to a penalty not exceeding twenty dollars over and above the amount of the injury done, who wilfully destroys or damages any fence, or any wall, stile or gate, or any part thereof respectively, or any post or stake planted or set up on any land, marsh, swamp or land covered by water, on or as the boundary or part of the boundary line thereof, or in lieu of a fence thereto.

Wilfully destroys or damages any fence or wall]—By see, 509 every one who causes any event by an act which he knew would probably cause it, being reckless whether such event happens or not, is deemed for the purposes of Part VIII to have caused it "wilfully."

Colour of right]-The offence is not complete unless done without legal justification or excuse and without colour of right. Code sec. 541.

"Colour of right" means an honest belief in the existence of a state of facts which, if it actually existed, would at law justify or excuse the act done. R. v. Johnson, 7 O.L.R. 525, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 123. Where the law absolutely prohibits a particular act, ignorance of that law does not constitute "colour of right" in respect of the doing of the prohibited act. Where it appears in a criminal presecution under Code sec. 530 for damage to fences that the defendants had "colour of right" as to part only of the fences destroyed and that they could not reasonably have supposed that the destruction of the remainder of the fence was necessary for the assertion of their supposed right of way, the defendants may be summarily convicted of such excess and ordered to pay compensation in respect thereof. The defendant charged under sec. 530, with breaking down a fence erected across a road which had been a public highway, may set up in answer that the proceedings by which the Municipal Council purported to order the diversion of the highway and the closing of that portion thereof were irregular and invalid, and on its so appearing is entitled to have the charge dismissed by reason of his lawful right to remove the obstruction. a surveyor who under government authority re-surveys government "Indian lands" and in so doing removes some of the monuments erected on former survey made under the same authority. An owner may mark out and re-mark his property as he pleases, and where he does so in the exercise of the right of ownership and the survey is not made pursuant to any agreement with an adjoining owner nor in the exercise of some statutory power, there can be no conviction under sec. 531, although the first survey had been adopted by a municipality as showing the boundaries and extent of Indian lands inside the corporate limits. R. v. Austin (1885), 11 Que. L.R. 76.

When the boundary between a highway and contiguous land had been settled by a judgment and the boundary marks duly placed, a municipal council in the province of Quebec has no power or authority to appoint, by resolution, a surveyor, to draw another boundary line. Any proceedings by the surveyor without notice to the parties, under the resolution, are illegal, and marks placed by him are not "lawfully" placed, within the meaning of Crim. Code sec. 532, and their removal does not amount to the offence therein described. A prosecution of the owner of the property, by the corporation, for the offence in question, is, under the circumstances, without probable cause and is inferentially brought through malice, and makes the corporation liable for the damages caused thereby. Injuring or removing other boundary marks.--Exception.--Land surveyor.

532. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to five years' imprisonment, who wilfully defaces, alters or removes any mound, land mark, post or monument lawfully placed by any land surveyor to mark any limit, boundary or angle of any concession, range, lot or parcel of land.

2. It is not an offence for any land surveyor in his operations to take up such posts or other boundary marks when necessary, if he carefully replaces them as they were before.

CRIMINAL CODE (PART VIII)

Trees, Vegetables, Roots and Plants.

Injuries to trees, etc.-Second offence.-Subsequent offence.

533. Every one is guilty of an offence and liable, on summary conviction, to a penalty not exceeding twenty-five dollars over and above the amount of the injury done, or to two months' imprisonment with or without hard labour, who wilfully destroys or damages the whole or any part of any tree, sapling or shrub, or any underwood, wheresoever the same is growing, the injury done being to the amount of twenty-five cents, at the least.

2. Every one who, having been convicted of any such offence, afterwards commits any such offence is liable, on summary conviction, to a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars over and above the amount of the injury done, or to four months' imprisonment with hard labour.

3. Every one who, having been twice convicted of any such offence, afterwards commits any such offence, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to two years' imprisonment.

Origin]—Sec. 508, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 168, sec. 24; 32-33 Vict., Can., ch. 22, sec. 26; 24-25 Vict., Imp., ch. 97, sec. 22.

Describing the offence in information and proceedings]—See secs. 723-725. By sec. 725 an offence under sec. 533 may be alleged in the following form: "The defendant did cut, break, root up and otherwise destroy or damage a tree, sapling or shrub," and the information or conviction is not to be held void as being multifarious or uncertain, because of that form.

Penalty on summary conviction]—There is but one penalty with a maximum of the sum found to be the amount of the injury added to such further sum not exceeding $25 as the justice imposes on a first conviction, or $50 on a second conviction. Sec. 533 does not, as does sec. 539, direct that the amount of the injury shall be paid to the person aggrieved; but it seems a reasonable inference from sec. 728 that the magistrate is to direct that the part of the fine representing the amount of injury done should when realized from a single defendant be paid over to the owner of the property damaged, although in strictness the entire penalty belongs to the Crown. Wilfully killing dog, etc.]—The corresponding provision of the English Act, 24 and 25 Vict., ch. 97, sec. 41, makes it an offence "unlawfully and maliciously" to kill, maim or wound any dog, etc., while the Code makes it an offence "wilfully" to kill (sec. 537) without legal justification or excuse and without colour of right (sec. 541). It has been held, however, that the word "wilfully" as applied to the offence under Code sec. 205 of wilfully committing an indecent act, implies that the act was done with evil intent, and without any justifiable excuse. Ex parte O'Shaughnessy, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 136; compare R. v. Graf, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 200, 19 O.L.R. 238. This would indicate that there is very little distinction between the two enactments.

Under the English Act it was held a defence in a prosecution against a gamekeeper, who shot a dog straying near some pheasants confined for breeding purposes in an aviary, to show that the act was done in the bona fide belief that it was necessary for the protection of his master's property. Miles v. Hutchings [1903] 2 K.B. 714; Armstrong v. Mitchell, 20 Cox 497. But the mere trespassing would seem not to be sufficient. Ibid.; Daniel v. Janes, 2 C.P.D. 351, and Smith v. Williams (1892), 9 Times L.R. 9, 37 Sol. J. 11, doubted.

On a charge under sec. 537 for wilfully killing a dog, reference may be had to the rules of the common law under Code sec. 16 for ascertaining whether the dog was killed under circumstances amounting to a legal justification or excuse, and by Code sec. 541 a conviction is not to be made unless the killing of the dog was done not only without legal justification or excuse but without colour of right. O'Leary v. Therrien (1915), 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 110 (Que.).

A defence to a criminal charge of wilfully killing a dog which was trespassing on the property of the accused is made out if it be shown that the dog was killed under necessity for the purpose of protecting the defendant's hens in the stable where the dog had gone; and where it is shown that the hens were in peril from the dog at the moment when the shot was fired because of the probability that the dog would attack them; it was not obligatory on the defendant to await the actual attack before shooting the trespassing animal. Ibid.

a penalty not exceeding $100, etc., or (2) to three months' imprisonment absolute, with or without hard labour. But he is not, under that seetion, liable to both, or to the latter in default of payment of the former. That section does not specify, as many sections do, what imprisonment the justice may impose, in default of the pecuniary penalty, in order to enforce payment. When the justice comes to make the conviction, and provide for the enforcement of the money penalty, he must look elsewhere. Sec. 739, sub-sec. (b) deals with this matter, namely, the limits and manner of imprisonment which may be imposed "in default of payment of the penalty." There are two branches: First, if the provision, for the breach of which the defendant is summoned, specifies the manner and limit of imprisonment which may be imposed, then the justice is guided by that; and second, if he does not, then this subsection itself supplies the guide, namely, it provides that the imprisonment is not to exceed three months. Sec. 537 does not specify "imprisonment or the term of imprisonment," i.e., which is to follow in default of payment of the penalty. R. v. Horton, 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 84; 31 N.S.R. 217; Reg. v. Turnbull, 16 Cox C.C. 110; R. v. Tynemouth Justices, 16 Q.B.D. 747; 82 L.T. 84.

"Over and above the amount of the injury "]—Sec. 728 contained in Part XV, as to summary convictions, provides that "when several persons join in the commission of the same offence, and upon conviction thereof each is adjudged to pay a penalty which includes the value of the property or the amount of the injury done, no further sum shall be paid to the person aggrieved than such amount or value and costs, if any, and the residue of the penalties imposed shall be applied in the same manner as other penalties imposed by a justice are directed to be applied."

That provision is of importance as indicating that the person aggrieved may be awarded the amount of the injury included in the fine imposed. Where several persons are convicted of the one offence each may have to pay the full amount of the injury, but the excess after making compensation to the party aggrieved goes for public purposes in like manner as the part of each fine which is over and above the amount of the injury. Sec. 728 seems to imply that where a statute authorizes a justice to impose a fine which includes the amount of the injury he may further direct that the latter amount when realized shall be paid to the person injured, whether several persons join in the commission of the offence or not. The contrary view was taken, however, in R. v. Cook, 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 234 (P.E.I.), where it was held that on a summary conviction under sec. 537, for wilfully killing a dog, the whole penalty, which is not to exceed $100 "over and above the amount of injury done," belongs to the Crown, and there is no jurisdiction except under sec. 729 to award damages to be paid to the owner of the dog. Where the adjudication was that the defendant pay a fine of $1 and costs and further pay the owner $20 damages for the loss of the dog, the summary conviction will be amended by striking out the award of damages. And an amended conviction imposing a fine of $21 is bad as not conforming with the adjudication. In the same case it was held that Code sec. 539, which empowers the magistrate in certain cases to award compensation up to $20 to the person aggrieved does not apply to the offence of killing a dog for which Code sec. 537 provides a punishment. R. v. Cook, 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 234 (P.E.I.). suel

Wilfully commits any damage]—By Code sec. 509 it is enacted that for the purposes of Part VIII every one who causes any event by an act which he knew would probably cause it, being reckless whether such event happens or not, is deemed to have caused it "wilfully." If the driver of a milk waggon adds water to the milk so as to increase the quantity and appropriate to his own use the excess proceeds of sale without the knowledge of his employer, he is guilty of maliciously damaging the milk. Roper v. Knott [1898] 1 Q.B. 868, 67 L.J.Q.B. 574, 62 J.P. 375.

Sec. 539 does not apply to a mere act of trespass where the damage is so small as to be inappreciable. Eley v. Lytle (1885), 50 J.P. 308. There must be a finding by the justice of actual damage, however small; fictitious or implied damages assumed because of the act being a trespass will not support a conviction under this section. Ibid.; Gayford v. Chouler [1808] 1 Q.B. 316, 67 L.J.Q.B. 404, 62 J.P. 165; Gardner v. Mansbridge, 19 Q.B.D. 217; R. v. Hexham Justices, 3 Times L.R. 465; Hamilton v. Bone, 52 J.P. 726, 16 Cox 437.

Partial or total interest of offender in damaged property]—Where the offence consists in an injury to anything in which the offender has an interest, the existence of such interest, if partial, shall not prevent his act being an offence, and if total, shall not prevent his act being an offence, if done with intent to defraud. Code sec. 541 (2).

Legal justification or excuse]-See Code secs. 16, 540, and 541.

Colour of right]—See sees. 540, 541. A charge of wilful damage under Code sec. 539 may be answered by showing that the accused acted under a fair and reasonable supposition of right to do the act complained of. Code sec. 540; R. v. Adamson (1916), 9 W.W.R. 1130; re Adamson, 33 W.L.R. 566 (Sask.).

Parliament must be taken to have invested Justices of the Peace with jurisdiction to summarily try all informations for wilful damage to property for which no punishment is provided in the preceding sections, and in order to try such informations they must of necessity in each case, if it is raised, determine the question as to whether or not the person charged "acted under a fair and reasonable supposition that he had a right to do the act complained of." If the justice determines that the defendant did act under such a supposition he is not liable on summary conviction to the penalty prescribed. If the justice determines that he did not act under such a supposition, he is liable. It cannot, therefore, reasonably be argued that the raising of the question of the fair and reasonable right to do the act of itself ousts the magistrate's jurisdiction. So far from that being the case, the magistrate's jurisdiction under the secs. 539 and 540 exists and continues unless and until it is found by him that the person acted under a fair and reasonable supposition that he had a right to do the act complained of. Ex parte Murphy (1917), 29 Can. The doctrine that the jurisdiction of inferior courts is ousted when the title to land comes into question does not apply to eases where the question of title is necessarily involved in the matter which such courts are required by statute to determine. Ex parte Murphy, supra; Ex parte Vaughan, L.R. 2 Q.B. 115. If the accused claimed upon the trial that he did the act complained of under a claim of ownership of the property, it would have been the duty of the magistrate to consider such claim as the only evidence adduced which bore upon the question as to whether the act was done under such a supposition of right as is provided by sec. 540, and the magistrate's jurisdiction would not have been ousted by the title to land thus coming into question. Ex parte Murphy, supra. Manfiest error of the magistrate in the determination of the question of the fairness and reasonableness of the claim of right would be a matter for remedy by way of appeal to the County Court, and possibly in some cases by way of certiorari for want of jurisdiction. Where an appeal to the District or County Court is the more appropriate remedy a certiorari may be refused for that reason. Ex parte Murphy, supra. The magistrate's jurisdiction could only be ousted by proof that the applicant did the act complained of under a fair and reasonable supposition that he had a right to do it and it is for him to make that proof. R. v. Adamson, (1916) 9 W.W.R. 1130, 33 W.L.R. 566; ex parte Murphy (1917), 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 1 (N.B.); R. v. Davy, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 28, 27 A.R. 508 (Ont.); R. v. Daigle, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 58; R. v. Watier, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 9; R. v. Johnson, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 123. A summary conviction made notwithstanding evidence which should have convinced the justices of this fair claim of right will be quashed on certiorari if there was no evidence before the magistrate to disprove or discredit such fair claim of right. R. v. Adamson (1916), 9 W.W.R. 1130, (a case of statutory right to pass over a temporary road directed by municipal ordinance to be laid out over private property).

Awarding compensation on summary conviction of joint offenders]--See sec. 728.

Where damage exceeds $20]-See sec. 510.

Conviction to specify the wilful act, etc.]—A conviction should specify the particular act done and that it was done wilfully and should state also what real or personal property was damaged and the amount of damage. R. v. Leary, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 141; R. v. Spain, 18 Ont. R. 385; R. v. Coulson, 24 Ont, R. 246, R. v. Caswell, 20 U.C.C.P. 275; Re Donelly, 20 U.C.C.P. 165; Smith v. Moody [1903] 1 K.B. 56. But the lack of certain details in the manner of charging the offence either in the information or conviction is cured by sees, 723-725 in summary conviction matters,

Sabotage]—" Sabotage " is a word imported from France and refers to the heavy wooden boot of the French workman which is especially designed to break up machinery and destroy property. Wilful injury secretly done by factory workmen to the machinery and plant upon which they are employed and intended as a method of retaliation for failure to grant increased wages is commonly designated an "act of substage," but the phrase is not used in the Code. Where none of the preceding sections of Part VIII apply to the particular facts, sec. 539 seems applicable to such offences, where the damage is less than $20and sub-sec. (E) of sec. 510 where the damage is $20 or more.

Petty trespasses punishable under provincial law]—See R.S.O. 1914, ch. 111.

Limitation.

Exception to sec. 539 .- Fair claim of right.-Sporting trespasses.

- 540. Nothing in the last preceding section extends to,-
 - (a) any case where the person acted under a fair and reasonable supposition that he had a right to do the act complained of; or,
 - (b) any trespass, not being wilful and malicious, committed in hunting or fishing, or in the pursuit of game.

Origin]--Sec. 511, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, eh. 168, sec. 59; 53 Vict., ch. 37, sec. 18; 32-33 Vict., Can., ch. 22, sec. 60; 24-25 Vict., Imp., ch. 97, sec. 52.

Fair and reasonable supposition of right]—Whether or not the supposition of right relied upon was a "fair and reasonable one" is a question primarily left to the justice to decide, subject, of course, to any right of appeal. See Code sees. 749 et seq., 761-769. It is not enough that the accused believed he had a right to do the act complained of, if such belief was quite unreasonable. Ex parte Murphy (1917), 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 1 (N.B.); R. v. Davy, 27 A.R. 508, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 28 (Ont.); Brooks v. Hamlyn, 63 J.P. 215, 79 L.T. 734; White v. Feast, L.R. 7 Q.B. 353, 36 J.P. 436. And there may be a conviction notwithstanding a claim of right reasonably made, if the defendant does more damage than could reasonably be supposed to be necessary for its assertion or protection. R. v. Clemens [1898] 1 Q.B. 556, 67 L.J.Q.B. 482, 78 L.T. 205.

Where rural municipalities had a statutory right to open temporary roads across private property and the municipal council had passed a resolution purporting to give the defendant and her agents the right to cross the informant's land, in pursuance of which defendant instructed her agent to cross the land with a load of hay, believing that she had the right to do so, an inference is raised that the defendant acted under a fair and reasonable supposition of right, displacing the liability to summary proceedings under sec. 539 for wilful injury to property; and where there was no evidence to the contrary, the justices were without jurisdiction and their summary conviction of defendant was quashed on certiorari. R. v. Adamson (1916), 9 W.W.R. 1130, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 440, 9 S.L.R. 91.

The language of sec. 540 qualifies the restriction on the jurisdiction of the magistrate in a way which does not appear in sec. 705, which latter section is a positive ouster of jurisdiction in assault cases in which "any question arises" as to the title to lands, etc. In either case a mere pretence of a right would not oust jurisdiction. Arnold v. Morgan [1911] 2 Q.B. 314.

But it seems that under sec. 709 in a case of assault when there is a bona fide claim of right material to the decision, the justice has no jurisdiction to determine either the existence of the right or to determine whether, in the case before him, there has been an excessive user of the alleged right. Rex v. Cork JJ. (Ir.) [1913] 2 I.R. 391.

Under sec. 540 the justice may find an excess of force quite unnecessary for the maintenance of the alleged right, and convict in respect of the excess. Ex parte Smith (1890), 7 Times L.R. 42; R. v. Clemens [1898] 1 Q.B. 556, L.J.Q.B. 482.

The justice is to decide whether the evidence supporting a claim of right under sec. 540, is true. Reeve v. Stonham, 43 J.P. 732. So if the justice disbelieves an alleged oral agreement set up to justify breaking padlocks to a shop, the conviction will be sustained on certiorari if there is no evidence other than the discredited testimony to show a bona fide claim of right. Reeve v. Stonham, 43 J.P. 732. The court on certiorari may find that the justice had no evidence before him on which he could reasonably find that the claim of right made by the accused was absurd in law, and may in that event quash a conviction made by a justice who found in favour of the bona fides of the accused, but against him on the question of the reasonableness of the claim of right. Travis v. West (1894), cited Stone's Justice, 39th ed., 900; Scott v. Baring (1895), 64 L.J.M.C. 200, 72 L.T. 495.

If the evidence should have convinced the justices that the applicant "acted under a fair and reasonable supposition" of a right to do the act complained of, and there was no evidence to the contrary, the justices were not justified in convicting; Paley on Convictions, 8th ed., p. 157; and the conviction will be quashed on certiorari, and any moneys which have been paid under the conviction will be ordered returned to the applicant. R. v. Adamson (1916), 9 W.W.R. 1130, 9 Sask. L.R. 91, 33 W.L.R. 566, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 440. The mere raising of the question of fair and reasonable right does not out the magistrate's jurisdiction; the jurisdiction exists and continues unless and until he finds (or on the evidence was bound to find) that the person acted under a fair and reasonable supposition that he had a right to do the act complained of. Ex parte Murphy (1917), 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 1 (N.B.); same case, R. v. Mullins, 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 1 (N.B.); White v. Feast, L.R. 7 Q.B. 353, 36 J.P. 436; R. v. Davy, 27 A.R. 508, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 28 (Ont.); Ex parte Vaughan, L.R. 2 Q.B. 115.

Onus of proof]—It is for the defendant to make the proof of fair and reasonable supposition of right if he claims to oust the jurisdiction of the magistrate on that ground. Ex parte Murphy (1917), 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 1 (N.B.); same case, R. v. Mullins, 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 1 (N.B.).

Certiorari and prohibition on question of ouster of magistrate's jurisdiction]-In dealing with the "extraordinary remedies" (Code sec. 1120 et seq.) of certiorari, habeas corpus and prohibition, the question in each case is whether the finding of the facts on which the magistrate's decision is based is submitted to the magistrate or not. The question whether the magistrate's jurisdiction begins when a certain state of facts actually exists or when that state of facts is alleged, may depend on the form of the statute conferring the jurisdiction. If he is the person appointed with jurisdiction to try, inter alia, that question of fact, he does not act without jurisdiction by coming to a wrong decision. So where a tax official had jurisdiction to report for taxation if he "discovers" that a person chargeable had not made a return, a writ of prohibition will not be granted to restrain proceedings upon the assessment unless it can be shown that there were no grounds upon which the official in question could honestly have believed that the person assessed was chargeable. R. v. Adamson (1916), 9 W.W.R. 1130, 9 Sask. L.R. 91, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 440, 33 W.L.R. 566. The jurisdiction based upon a certain official "discovering" a certain state of facts meant that he must have honestly come to that conclusion upon the information in his possession. R. v. Bloomsbury Income Tax Commissioners [1915] 3 K.B. 768, 131 Times L.R. 565. Sometimes jurisdiction is conferred only when a state of things actually exists; but as a general rule jurisdiction is conferred not conditionally upon the actual existence of a state of things but upon information of the existence of a state of things. In such cases the decision of the question whether the state of things exists or not is part of the jurisdiction conferred upon the tribunal, and then, provided the tribunal applies the proper test for the decision of the question, the superior court does not interfere either by prohibition, certiorari or habeas corpus. Brittain v. Kinnaird (1819), 1 Brod. & B. 432; R. v. Bolton (1841), 1 Q.B. 66; Allen v. Sharp (1848), 2 Ex. 352; Brown v. Cocking (1868), L.R. 3 Q.B. 672; Elston v. Rose (1868), L.R. 4 Q.B. 4; R. v. Clerkenwell Commissioners [1891] 2 Q.B. 879; Cave v. Mountain (1840), 1 Man. & G. 257; Liverpool Gas Co. v. Everton (1871), L.R. 6 C.P. 414; R. v. Bradford [1908] 1 K.B. 365; R. v. Morn Hill Camp Commanding Officer [1917] 1 K.B. 176, 86 L.J.K.B. 410. Where the remedy by appeal or stated case is available, the magistrate or inferior court should be asked to certify the facts in such detail along with his findings thereon that the question of law sought to be raised thereon can be brought before a superior court in that way. As to eases stated by justices in summary conviction matters (Code Part XV), see Cr. Code sees. 761-769.

Assault and battery cases where title to lands involved]-See sec. 709.

Mischief.-Colour of right.-Partial Interest.-Fraud.

541. Nothing shall be an offence under any of the foregoing provisions of this Part unless it is done without legal justification or excuse, and without colour of right.

2. Where the offence consists in an injury to anything in which the offender has an interest, the existence of such interest. if partial, shall not prevent his act being an offence, and if total. shall not prevent his act being an offence, if done with intent to defraud.

Origin]-Code of 1892, sec. 481; B.S.C. 1886, ch. 168, sec. 61.

Justification or crcuse]—See Code sec. 16, under which all rules and principles of the common law which render any circumstances a justification or excuse for any act, or a defence to any charge, shall remain in force and be applicable to any defence to a charge under the Code except in so far as they are thereby altered or are inconsistent therewith.

With the exception of the rule of sec. 56, which justifies the owner or lawful possessor of moveable property in resisting the taking of it by a trespasser, the Code contains no provision to the effect that a person may use force in defence of his moveable property. Nevertheless sec. 16 makes it clear that "all rules and principles of the common law which under any circumstances render a justification or excuse for any act or a defence to any charge " remain in force.

In Miles v. Hutchings [1903] 2 K.B. 714, 72 L.J.K.B. 775, the facts were that an information had been laid against a gamekeeper for unlawfully and maliciously killing a dog, that the dog was at the time near an aviary, in which pheasants, the property of the gamekeeper's master, were at the time confined for breeding purposes; and the court held that the test of the gamekeeper's liability was whether he acted under the bona fide belief that what he was doing was necessary for the protection of his master's property and that it was the only way in which the property could be protected. And see Code see. 537, 539, and notes to same. Injury done to property in reckless disregard of consequences is to be considered a wilful act. Sec. 509.

Ignorance of the law (see Code sec. 22) or ignorance of his legal rights by the party charged will not be an excuse. He must have an 2 honest belief in the state of facts which if true would give him a legal right. R. v. Watier, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 9, at 15. (Y.T.).

E

Sec. 541 (1) of the Cr. Code which declares that as to certain offences (inter alia, wilful damage to property) the act must have been done "without legal justification or excuse and without colour of right," is to be construed as a proviso or exception which forms a matter of defence or excuse but need not be formally alleged in an information or conviction. R. v. Gill, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 294, 18 O.L.R. 234.

Colour of right]—In the case of Regina v. Davey, 27 A.R. (Ont.) 508, 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 28, the rule laid down by Lister, J.A., who delivered the judgment of the court, was: "It is, I think, settled that an honest belief on the part of the person charged that he has the right to do the act does not oust the magistrate's jurisdiction. What the section of the Code requires in order to oust the jurisdiction of the magistrate is that the act shall be done under a fair and reasonable supposition of right. Whether such supposition is warranted is for the magistrate to determine on the evidence."

"The context of the words shows the sense in which they are used in this section. Legal justification or excuse is an answer to a criminal charge under this part of the Act as it would be in a civil action. Then follow the words, 'and without colour of right.' This means an honest belief in a state of facts which, if it existed, would be a legal justification or excuse. This would not be an answer to a civil action, but it is properly made an answer to a criminal charge, because it takes away from the act its criminal character." R. v. Johnson, 7 O.L.R. 525, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 123.

"To do an act in ignorance that it is prohibited by law is not to do it with colour of right. There must be at least an honest belief in the existence of a state of facts which, if it actually existed, would at law justify or excuse the act done." Regina v. Fetzer (1900), 19 N. Zeal, L.R. 438; R. v. Daigle, 15 Can. Cr. Cas, 55.

It is a claim of right or title, honestly raised and really believed in, whether, in fact, such right or title really exists or not. There may be a good colour of right if the title set up be only colourable if made sincerely. R. v. Daigle, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 55; Watkins v. Major, L.R. 10 C.P. 661; Cornwall v. Saunders, 3 B. & S. 206; Scott v. Baring, 18 Cox 128, 72 L.T. 495.

Intent to defraud where accused is entire owner of property destroyed]—Notwithstanding the fact that the accused may wholly own the property destroyed or attempted to be destroyed, the offence will be complete under sec. 541 (2) if done with intent to defraud. R. v. Bryans, 12 U.C.C.P. 161; R. v. Wilson, 1 W.W.R. 272, 19 W.L.R. 657, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 105. So it is an offence even to conspire to burn down one's own building with intent to defraud the insurance company. Ibid. And evidence of a prior unsuccessful attempt to induce a person to burn another building for the insurance may, if not too remote in Cruelty to Animals.

Ill-treating animal.-Injuries by ill-usage in driving.-Fighting of animal.

542. Every one is guilty of an offence and liable, on summary conviction before two justices, to a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars, or to three months' imprisonment with or without hard labour, or to both, who,—

- (a) wantonly, cruelly or unnecessarily beats, binds, illtreats, abuses, overdrives or tortures any cattle, poultry, dog, demestic animal or bird, or any wild animal or bird in captivity; or,
- .5: while driving any cattle or other animal is, by negligence or ill-usage in the driving thereof, the means whereby any mischief, damage or injury is done by any such cattle or other animal; or,
- (c) in any manner encourages, aids or assists at the fighting or baiting of any bull, bear, badger, dog, cock, or other kind of animal, whether of domestic or wild nature.

Origin]—Sec. 512, Code of 1892; 58-59 Vict., Can., ch. 40, sec. 1; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 172, sec. 2; Cruelty to Animals Act, 1849, Imp.; 32-33 Vict., Can., ch. 27, sec. 1; 33 Vict., Can., ch. 29, sec. 1.

"Before two justices"]—There is no jurisdiction in one justice to summarily try a charge under Code sec. 285 for injury by furious driving. R. v. Nelson (1916) 28 Can. Cr. Cas. 276 (Ont.). A summary conviction could be made under sec. 542 of the Code only by two justices or a police magistrate having the jurisdiction of two justices, and not by a single justice. R. v. Nelson, supra.

Time limit for prosecution]-See sec. 1140 (e).

Information]—An information and summons thereon both describing the offence as "unlawfully abusing a mare contrary to sec. 542 of the Criminal Code," sufficiently describe an offence under this section without specific mention of any of the words "wantonly," "cruelly," or "unnecessarily," which are used in that section. R. v. Cornell, 8 Can. Cr. Cas. 416, 6 Terr. L.B. 101.

Several offences]-The Cruelty to Animals Act, 1849, Imp., sec. 2, enacts that "If any person shall . . . cruelly . . . ill-treat, abuse or torture . . . any animal " he shall be liable to a penalty. The defendant was charged before justices that he "did cruelly ill-treat, abuse and torture a certain animal, to wit, a grey gelding." On the hearing of the summons the justices being of the opinion that several offences were charged called on the prosecutor to elect on which he would proceed, which he, declining to do, they dismissed the summons. On appeal, the Divisional Court held that the justices were right, and dismissed the appeal holding that the words "ill-treat," "abuse" and "torture" in the Act created three separate offences, and therefore a conviction for "ill-treating, abusing and torturing" would be bad. Johnson v. Needham [1909] 1 K.B. 626.

The objection upheld in Johnson v. Needham, supra, is probably cured under sec. 725 of the Code by analogy to the example there given of an offence under sec. 533.

In R. v. Cable, ex parte O'Shea [1906] 1 K.B. 719, a conviction for eruelly ill-treating, abusing and torturing five cows was supported as being for a single offence and not, as contended by the defence, for five separate offences. And see Rodgers v. Richards [1892] 1 Q.B. 555. In R. v. Rawson [1909] 2 K.B. 748, the information was held to charge only one offence, although for cruelty to four ponies between certain dates by neglecting to supply them with proper food; and where four convictions were recorded three of them were quashed.

An information against both master and servant for ill-treating a horse by "working and causing it to be worked" while in an unfit state, is not bad for duplicity. Bartholomew v, Wiseman, 56 J.P. 455.

Cruelty to animals]—An owner of premises tieing up an estray is bound to properly feed and water the estray. Bolton v. MacDonald, 3 Terr. L.R. 269.

Branding animals (ex. gr. sheep) where reasonably necessary for the purpose of identification is not cruelty, although it may be painful, if it cannot be done effectually without inflicting the pain. Bowyer v. Morgan, 22 Times L.R. 426, 95 L.T. 27.

The question under this section is whether there was cruelty in fact, not whether the accused intended to commit cruelty. Duncan v. Pope, 80 L.T. 120, 15 Times L.R. 195.

Where unnecessary suffering is caused to an animal by the owner, it has been held in England that an offence is committed against sub-sec. 1 of the Protection of Animals Act, Imp., 1911, even if the act is done in pursuance of a custom and for commercial reasons. So the owner was held liable for allowing a cow to be overstocked with milk before offering her for sale. Waters v. Braithwaite, 30 T.L.R. 107.

As to rabbit coursing in a fenced enclosure, see Waters v. Meakin [1916] 2 K.B. 111, decided under the Protection of Animals Act, 1911, Imp.

"Unnecessarily" in sec. 542, means "without good reason." Ford v. Riley, 23 Q.B.D. 203; Murphy v. Manning, L.R. 2 Ex. D. 307; R. v. McDonagh, 28 L.R. Ir. 204.

The use of an overdraw check rein on a horse is ordinarily not an offence under this section although it causes discomfort to the animal. Society v. Lowry (1894), 17 Montreal Legal News 118.

The cutting of the combs of cocks to fit them for fighting or winning prizes at exhibition has been held to be cruelty. Murphy v. Manning, L.R. 2 Ex. D. 307; but as to dishorning cattle the better opinion appears to be that it is not an offence; Callaghan v. Society, 11 Cox C.C. 101; R. v. McDonagh, 28 L.R. Irish 204; Todrick v. Wilson, 1891, L.J. (Eng.) 191; although it was held to be in Ford v. Wiley, L.R. 23, Q.B.D. 203.

The spaying of sows is not cruelty. Lewis v. Fermor, L.R. 18 Q.B.D. 532.

Causing a horse to be worked when it was apparent that it was not in a fit state for working is ill-treatment and abuse within sec. 542. and the abetter is liable as a principal under sec. 69. Benford (or Benfield) v. Sims [1898] 2 Q.B. 641, 67 L.J.Q.B. 655, 78 L.T. 718. But a mine manager will not be liable for cruelty inflicted by his subordinates without proof of guilty knowledge on his part. Small v. Warr, 47 J.P. 20; Elliott v. Osborne, 17 Cox 346, 65 L.T. 378, 56 J.P. 38. Sec. 542 does not make it an offence to leave an animal to die a natural death instead of killing it when it is known to be incurable and suffering pain; but turning it out to pasture may be an act of torture if the animal is given increased pain by moving about to get feed. Everitt v. Davies, 42 J.P. 248, 38 L.T. 360. But leaving a cab-horse an inordinate length of time without food or protection, and hitched to the cab on the street until it suffers from hunger and exposure is an abuse and torture within sec. 542. Anderson v. Wood, 47 J.P. 84, 9 Court of Sessions cases (4th series Just.) 6.

Appeal]—Where an information is laid in the name of an individual describing himself as the agent of a society named, the society does not thereby become a party to the proceedings and it has no locis standi to appeal from the justices' order dismissing the charge; the notice of appeal must in such case be taken in the name of the agent personally. otherwise it may be quashed. Canadian Society, etc. v. Lauzon, (1899) 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 354 (Que.).

The Injured Animals' Act, Ont.]-An Act respecting the destruction. by constables and others, of injured animals, was introduced and enacted in Ontario in 1911 at the request of the Toronto Humane Society. This statute, R.S.O. 1914, ch. 248, is known as The Injured Animals' Act, and makes the following provisions: -(2) Where a police constable, or the inspector of an incorporated humane society or society for the prevention of cruelty to animals, finds any horse so severely injured that it would, in his opinion, be cruel to allow the horse to live, he shall, if the owner refuses to consent to the destruction of the animal, or is absent, at once summon a veterinary surgeon, if any such surgeon resides or can be found within a reasonable distance, or, if no such surgeon can be obtained, then two reputable citizens, and if it appears by the certificate of such surgeon or by a statement signed by such two citizens that the animal is, or appears to be, incapable of being so cured or healed as to live thereafter without suffering, it shall be lawful for such police constable or inspector, without the consent of the owner, to kill or cause to be killed the said animal with such instrument or instruments or appliances, and with such precautions and in such a manner as to inflict as little pain and suffering as possible.

(3) If any horse is abandoned, or left to die in any street, road, commons or public place, it shall be the duty of any police constable or inspector, as mentioned in sec. 2, to make a reasonable attempt to ascertain the owner of such animal, and if such owner cannot be found, or, if found, refuses to give his consent to the killing of such horse, then the said constable or inspector shall proceed in the manner set forth in sec. 2.

(4) Where any large animal, such as a horse, cow, sheep or hog, is severely injured by any railway engine or train, the conductor of the train shall report the occurrence to the nearest station agent of the railway, who shall forthwith notify the owner, if possible, and the nearest constable, who shall proceed as provided by sec. 2.

CRIMINAL CODE (PART VIII)

Keeping cock-pit.-Confiscation.

[§ 548]

543. Every one is guilty of an offence and liable, on summary conviction before two justices, to a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars, of to three months' imprisonment, with or without hard labour, or to both, who builds, makes, maintains or keeps a cockpit on premises belonging to or occupied by him, or allows a cock-pit to be built, made, maintained or kept on premises belonging to or occupied by him.

2. All cocks found in any such cock-pit, or on the premises wherein such cock-pit is, shall be confiscated and sold for the benefit of the municipality in which such cock-pit is situated.

Origin]—Sec. 513, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 172, sec. 3. Prosecution within three months]—See sec. 1140 (c). Application of fines]—See sec. 1043.

Summary conviction for first offence]-Offences under this section are excluded from those for which under sec. 729 a first offender may be discharged on making satisfaction to the party aggrieved, at the discretion of the magistrate making the summary conviction.

Arrest by peace officer without warrant]-See sees. 647, 648, 649, 652.

Conveyance of cattle without proper rest and nourishment by railways, etc.

544. No railway company within Canada whose railway forms any part of a line of road over which cattle are conveyed from one province to another province, or from the United States to or through any province, or from any part of a province to another part of the same, and no owner or master of any vessel carrying or transporting cattle from one province to another province, or within any province, or from the United States to or through any province, shall confine the same in any car, or vessel of any description, for a longer period than twenty-eight hours without unlading the same for rest, water and feeding for a period of at least five consecutive hours. unless prevented from so unlading and furnishing water and food by storm or other unavoidable cause, or by necessary delay or detention in the crossing of trains.

2. In reckoning the period of confinement, the time during which the cattle have been confined without such rest, and without the furnishing of food and water, on any connecting

3. The foregoing provisions as to cattle being unladen shall not apply when cattle are carried in any car or vessel in which they have proper space and opportunity for rest, and proper food and water.

4. Cattle so unloaded shall be properly fed and watered during such rest by the owner or person having the custody thereof or, in case of his default in so doing, by the railway company, or owner or master of the vessel transporting the same, at the expense of the owner or person in custody thereof; and such company, owner or master shall in such case have a lien upon such cattle for food, care and custody furnished and shall not be liable for any detention of such cattle.

5. Where cattle are unladen from cars for the purpose of receiving food, water and rest, the railway company then having charge of the cars in which they have been transported shall, except during a period of frost, clear the floors of such cars, and litter the same properly with clean sawdust or sand before reloading them with live stock.

6. Every railway company, or owner or master of a vessel, having cattle in transit, or the owner or person having the enstody of such cattle, as aforesaid, who knowingly and wilfully fails to comply with the foregoing provisions of this section, is liable for every such failure on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding one hundred dollars.

Origin]-Sec. 514, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 172, secs. 8, 9, 10, 11.

Transportation of "cattle"]-See definition of "cattle" in sec. 2, sub-sec. (5).

Sub-sec. (6)--" Or the owner or person having the custody," etc.]-As to registered ownership of cattle brands, see sec. 989.

Extension from 28 to 36 hours]-See sec. 544A.

other railroad or shipping form, the time of confinement of such cattle may be extended to thirty-six hours where such cattle are carried on cars fitted with the necessary appliances and are, during such time, fed and watered without being unloaded.

Origin]-Adapted from a similar provision in the U.S. Interstate Commerce law; Can. Stat. 1909, 8-9 Edw., ch. 9, sec. 2.

Or other bill of lading or other railroad or shipping form]—The official text reading "of other railroad or shipping form" which is followed in printing sec. 544A in this edition, was probably a typographical error for the word "or"; but the correction can be made only by statute.

Search of premises .- Obstructing officer.

545. Any peace officer or constable may, at all times, enter any premises where he has reasonable grounds for supposing that any car, truck or vehicle as to which any company or person has failed to comply with the provisions of the last preceding section, is to be found, or enter on board any vessel in respect whereof he has reasonable grounds for supposing that any company or person has, on any occasion, so failed.

2. Every one who refuses admission to such peace officer or constable is guilty of an offence and liable, on summary conviction, to a penalty not exceeding twenty dollars and not less than five dollars, and costs, and in default of payment, to thirty days' imprisonment.

Origin]-Sec. 515, Code of 1892; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 171, sec. 12.

Refusing admission to peace officer]—This sub-section applies only to refusal of admittance on search made under sees. 544 and 545, as to infraction of the cattle feeding regulations on cattle transportation by rail or boat. Other obstructions of peace officers in the execution of their duty are dealt with in Code sec. 169.

Summary conviction for first offence]-Offences under this section are excluded from those for which under sec. 729 a first offender may be discharged on making satisfaction to the party aggrieved, at the discretion of the magistrate making the summary conviction.

Prosecution within three months]-See 1140 (e).

CRIMINAL CODE (PART IX)

[§ 546]

Sub-sec. (b)—Current copper coin]—'Copper coin' includes any coin of bronze or mixed metal and every other kind of coin other than gold or silver. Code sec. 2 (8).

Sub-sec. (c)—"Counterfeit"]—For statutory presumptions in counterfeiting cases, see Code secs. 955, 980. The court is to order that counterfeit coin produced on a trial under Part IX shall be cut in pieces in open court or in the presence of a justice, and then to be delivered to or for the owner thereof if claimed. Code sec. 957.

Counterfeit raising of denomination,---Counterfeit reducing of size.

547. Any genuine coin prepared or altered so as to resemble or pass for any current coin of a higher denomination is a counterfeit coin.

2. A coin fraudulently filed or cut at the edges so as to remove the milling, and on which a new milling has been added to restore the appearance of the coin, is a counterfeit coin.

Origin]-Code of 1892, sec. 460; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 167, sec. 1; 24-25 Viet., Imp., ch. 29, sec. 9.

"Counterfeit coin"]—'Counterfeit' means false, not genuine. Code sec. 546 (c). The offence of counterfeiting may be complete, although the intended counterfeiting was not perfected. Sec. 548. The counterfeit raising of the denomination of a coin makes it a 'counterfeit coin ' and so does the additon of a new milling to restore the appearance of a genuine coin fraudulently filed or cut. Sec. 547.

Coin with new milling]—Sub-sec. (2) of sec. 547 is an affirmance of what had been decided under the Imperial statute, 24-25 Vict., ch. 29, sec. 9, in R. v. Hermann, 4 Q.B.D. 284, 48 L.J.M.C. 106.

Genuine but valueless coin] - See Code sec. 549, as to knowledge and fraudulent intent. .

Making double-headed coin from two genuine coins]—A coin made by splitting two genuine coins, and joining the heads together so as to make a double-headed coin, has been held counterfeit in Australia. R. v. McMahon [1894] 15 N.S.W. Law Rep. 131, 136.

Proof of counterfeiting]-Code, 955, 957, 980.

Certain offences-When complete.

Counterfeiting complete although intended counterfeiting not perfected.

548. Every offence of making any counterfeit coin, or of buying, selling, receiving, paying, tendering, uttering or putting off, or of offering to buy, sell, receive, pay, utter or put off, any counterfeit coin is deemed to be complete, although the coin

Bank Notes.

Purchasing, receiving or possessing forged bank notes.

550. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to fourteen years' imprisonment who, without lawful authority or excuse, the proof whereof shall lie on him, purchases or receives from any person, or has in his custody or possession, any forged bank note, or forged blank bank note, whether complete or not. knowing it to be forged.

Origin]—Code of 1892, sec. 430; R.S.C. 1886, ch. 165, sec. 19. Using counterfeit taken of value]—Code sec. 546 includes spurious paper money within the statutory definition of this phrase, and sec. 569 (d) makes it an indictable offence to purchase, exchange, accept, take possession of or use such. If the counterfeit be of a bank note, the prosecution may be under sec. 550 for the offence of having a forged bank note in possession knowing it to be forged. R. v. Tutty, 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 544, 38 N.S.R. 136.

Destruction of forged bank notes]-Code sec. 632.

Stamping as counterfeit]—Every officer charged with the receipt or disbursement of public moneys, and every officer of any bank, and every person acting as or employed by any banker, shall stamp or write in plain letters, upon every counterfeit or fraudulent note issued in the form of a Dominion or bank note, and intended to circulate as money, which is presented to him at his place of business, the word "Counterfeit," "Altered," or "Worthless." If such officer or person wrongfully stamps any genuine note he shall, upon presentation, redeem it at the face value thereof. Bank Act, R.S.C. ch. 29, sec. 75.

"Bank note"]-See definition in sec. 2 (4).

Second offence]-See sec. 568.

Joint custody or possession]-See Code sec. 5.

Defacing bank bills or Dominion notes]—Every person who in any way defaces any Dominion or provincial note, or bank note, whether by writing, printing, drawing or stamping thereon, or by attaching or affising thereto, anything in the nature or form of an advertisement, shall be fiable to a penalty not exceeding twenty dollars. Bank Act, R.S.C. ch. 29, see, 137.

Printing circulars, etc., in likeness of notes.

551. Every one is guilty of an offence and liable, on summary conviction before two justices, to a fine of one hundred dollars or three months' imprisonment, or both, who designs, engraves, prints or in any manner makes, executes, utters, issues. distributes, circulates or uses any business or professional card. notice, placard, circular, hand-bill or advertisement in the likeness or similitude of any bank note, or any obligation or security of any government or any bank.

Origin]-Code of 1892, sec. 442; 53 Viet., Can., ch. 31, sec. 3; 50-51 Viet., Can., ch. 47, sec. 2.

R. v. Bannon (1844), 2 Mood. C.C. 309, 1 C. & K. 295.

Possessing a mould for coining]—In R. v. Baker (1912), 7 Cr. App. R. 217, in charging the appellant, the Clerk of the Court left out the words "without lawful authority or excuse," and the appellant, who was not represented by counsel, answered "Yes; I am guilty of having them in my possession." A plea of guilty was entered, and on being asked whether he had anything to say why judgment should not be passed upon him, he said for the first time that he only used the moulds for making medals. The Court of Criminal Appeal annulled the conviction and judgment, and remanded the defendant to appear and plead at the trial court, on the ground that what the prisoner said either amounted to a plea of not guilty or else it was an unfinished informal plea. On his new trial the accused was convicted. It appeared that evidence was then admitted that he had passed a gilded shilling as a sovereign. It was not suggested that that coin was made in the

R. v. Baker (1912), 7 Cr. App. R. 252. It did not, however, become necessary to decide the point, as there was evidence on which the jury could convict and no miscarriage of justice from the admission of the disputed evidence.

Proof of guilty knowledge]—In the case of persons who have passed counterfeit money or bills, when it is necessary to establish a guilty knowledge on the part of the prisoner, the prosecutor is allowed to give evidence of the prisoner having passed other counterfeit money or bills at about the same time, or that he had many such in his possession, which circumstances tend strongly to show that he was not acting innocently and had not taken the money casually, but that he was employed in fraudulently putting it off. R. v. Brown (1861), 21 U.C.Q.B. 330.

On a charge of having counterfeit coins in possession, proof that the accused also had in his possession "trade dollars," which, although genuine, were not worth their stamped value, and that he had attempted to put them off as worth their stamped value, is not admissible as showing intent to put off the counterfeit coin. R. v. Benham (1899), 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 63, 8 Que. Q.B. 448.

And on a charge of uttering, evidence of the accused having passed other counterfeit money at about the same time, either before or after the offence charged, or of his having possession of other counterfeit money, is admissible in proof of guilty knowledge. R. v. Forster, Dears. C.C. 456; R. v. Whiley, 2 Leach C.C. 983.

Before an issue can be said to be raised which would admit evidence of other similar criminal acts in proof of guilty knowledge or intent or system, or in rebutting an appearance of innocence which, unexplained, the facts might wear, the issue must have been raised in substance, if not in so many words, and the issue so raised must be one to which the evidence is relevant. Thompson v. Director of Public Prosecutions (1918), 87 L.J.K.B. 478, 484 (H.L.), affirming R. v. Thompson [1917] 2 K.B. 630, 86 L.J.K.B. 1321. The mere theory that a plea of not guilty puts everything in issue is not enough for this purpose. Thompson v. Director of Public Prosecutions, supra. Compare R. v. Rodley [1913] 3 K.B. 468, 82 L.J.K.B. 1070; Perkins v. Jeffery [1915] 2 K.B. 702; R. v. Mackenzie (1910), 6 Cr. App. R. 64, 27 Times L.R. 152; Dal Singh v. Evidence of subsequent acts forming a part of the same conspiracy may be relevant as showing means attempted to escape detection and punishment. R. v. Bachrack (1913), 28 O.L.R. 32, 4 O.W.N. 615, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 257, 266; R. v. Letain [1918] 1 W.W.R. 505, 29 Can. Cr. Cas. Q.B. E Se

Counterfeit token of value]—See definition in sees. 546 (f), 549. Paper money genuine but valueless]—In the case of coin or paper money which, although genuine, has no value as money, it is necessary in order to constitute an offence under this Part that there should be knowledge on the part of the person charged that such coin or paper money was of no value as money, and a fraudulent intent on his part in his dealings with or with respect to the same. Code see, 549.

Before the Code it had been held that a person indicted for offering to purchase counterfeit tokens of value could not be convicted on evidence showing that the notes which he offered to purchase were not counterfeit, but genuine bank notes unsigned, though he believed them to be counterfeit, and offered to purchase them under such belief. R. v. Attwood (1891), 20 Ont. R. 574. The present definition includes such paper where there is knowledge by the accused that it was of no value and a fraudulent intent in dealing with it.

Sub-sec. (a)—What purports to be a counterfeit token of value]— Section 569 of the Code covers not only the case of counterfeit money, i.e., false tokens purporting to be bank notes, etc., but false tokens purporting to be counterfeit tokens. The words "what purports to be" in this section import what appears on the face of the instrument; and therefore what was said to the prisoner, or what he thought or believed, would not be of any moment. R. v. Attwood (1891), 20 Ont. R. 574, 578. But see sec. 549 as to genuine but valueless paper money.

A paper which is a spurious imitation of a government treasury note is a counterfeit, or what purports to be a counterfeit, token of value, although there is no original of its description. R. v. Corey (1895), 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 161, 33 N.B.R. 81.

Fraudulent scheme as to counterfeit money]—On the trial of any person charged with any of the offences mentioned in sec. 569, any letter, circular, writing or paper, offering or purporting to offer for sale, loan, gift or distribution, or giving or purporting to give information, directly or indirectly, where, how, of whom, or by what means, any counterfeit token of value may be obtained or had, or concerning any similar scheme or device to defraud the public, shall be prima facie evidence of the fraudulent character of such scheme or device. Sec. 981.

Unlawful possession of forged bank note]—Code sees. 550, 629-631. 632; R. v. Tutty, 38 N.S.R. 136, 9 Can. Cr. Cas. 544.

Attempt]—By sec. 72, every one who, having an intent to commit an offence, does or omits an act for the purpose of accomplishing his object is guilty of an attempt to commit the offence intended, whether under the circumstances it was possible to commit such offence or not. It is a question of law whether an act done with intent to commit an offence is too remote to constitute an attempt. Sec. 72 (2); R. v. Laitwood (1910), 4 Cr. App. R. 248.

"Not hereinbefore provided for"]-Offences as to which special provision has been made for the punishment of attempts are included in the following sections of the Code; sec. 188, attempt to break prison, two years; sec. 203, attempt to commit buggery, ten years; sec. 216 (amendment of 1909), procuring, five years; see. 264, attempt to commit murder, life imprisonment; sec. 270, attempt to commit suicide, two years; sec. 280 (b), attempt to cause bodily injuries by explosives thrown against vessel, fourteen years; see. 300, attempt to commit rape, seven years; sec. 302, attempt to defile child, two years and whipping; sees. 303, 304 and 305, attempt to procure miscarriage, life imprisonment (303); seven years (304), two years (305); sec. 478, attempt to obtain money or property by forged document, fourteen years; sec. 512, attempt to commit arson, fourteen years; sec. 514, attempt to set fire, seven years; sec. 521, attempt to damage telegraph, etc., fifty dollars fine on summary conviction or three months; sec. 523, attempt to wreck, fourteen years; see. 536, attempt to injure cattle, two years.

Attempt to commit other indictable offences.

571. Every one who attempts to commit any indictable offence for committing which the longest term to which the offender can be sentenced is less than fourteen years, and no express provision is made by law for the punishment of such attempt, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term equal to one-half of the longest term to which a person committing the indictable offence attempted to be committed may be sentenced.

Origin]-Sec. 529, Code of 1892.

Attempt proved where full offence charged]—Code sec. 949. Full offence proved where attempt charged]—Code sec. 950.

Attempts by fraudulent means]—An indictment charging any attempted offence by fraudulent means need not set out in detail in what the fraudulent means consisted; sec. 863; but there should be sufficient particularity to give the accused notice of the offence with which he is charged; secs. 852 and 853; and particulars may be ordered under sec. 859.

A conviction for attempting to obtain money by false pretenses is good, although the person to whom the false pretense is made knows it to be false. R. v. Light (1915) 24 Cox C.C. 718, following R. v. Hensler, 11 Cox C.C. 570, 22 L.T.R. 691; and see R. v. Lyons (No. 1) 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 152 (Que.); R. v. Lyons (No. 2) 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 352 (Que.).

Distinguishing attempt from intent or threat]—On an indictment charging an attempt to commit a crime it may be a misdirection not to distinguish an attempt in law from an intention or a threat; R. v. Landow, (1913) 8 Cr. App. R. 218; so where there was evidence on which the jury might have found an attempt but not evidence on which it was necessary that they should take that view, it is particularly necessary that the judge should explain the difference between an attempt, a mere intention and an idle threat. Ibid.

An attempt implies an intent. Code sec. 72; but intending to commit a crime is not the same as attempting to commit it. R. v. McCarthy, (1917) 41 O.L.R. 153, 13 O.W.N. 210, 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 448; R. v. Eagleton, (1885) Dears. C.C. 515; R. v. McPherson, (1857) Dears. & B. 197. It is open to the jury to believe any part of any evidence and disbelieve any other part, and they may therefore, on a charge in respect of the principal offence credit the testimony only in so far as it shows the lesser offence of an attempt; R. v. McCarthy, supra; R. v. Hamilton, (1897) 4 Can. Cr. Cas. 251 (Ont.); but there may be particular circumstances under which there must have been either the complete offence or no offence at all. R. v. Menary (1911) 23 O.L.R. 323, 18-Can. Cr. Cas. 237.

Pretending to the police that one's store has been burglarized will not establish an attempt to procure money by false pretenses from the burglary insurance company carrying the risk where no notice of loss or claim on the policy had been given or served on the company, although the complaint to the police may have been the initial step in a fraudulent scheme to defraud the company. R. v. Robinson [1915] 2 K.B. 342. If, however, there were more than one person concerned in the fraudulent scheme, the false complaint might constitute an overt act in a conspiracy to defraud. See Code see. 444.

Plea of autrefois]—Code secs. 905-909; R. v. Elvington, 31 L.J.M.C. 14, 9 Cox C.C. 86; R. v. Weiss and Williams (No 1), (1913) 4 W.W.R. 1358, 25 W.L.R. 286, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 438; R. v. Weiss and Williams (No. 2), (1913) 5 W.W.R. 48, 6 Alta. L.R. 264, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 42, 25 W.L.R. 351; R. v. Young Kee, [1917] 2 WW.R. 654, 28 Can. Cr. Cas 236, (Alta.).

When prosecution for attempt is barred by quashing of conviction for completed offence]—Where all the proceedings in the trial court were brought into the Supreme Court by certiorari and the judge of that court assumed charge and jurisdiction over the whole matter and quashed the conviction on the merits of the evidence, this must be treated as equivalent to an acquittal. R. v. Weiss and Williams (No. 2), (1913) 5 W.W.R. 48, 6 Alta. L.R. 264, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 42, 25 W.L.R. 351.

On the principle of Rex v. Drury, 18 L.J.M.C. 189, 3 Car. & K. 190, where the conviction has been quashed by certiorari, for some mere technical defect, the accused is still liable to be brought before the magistrate again, but he is not so liable where the conviction has been quashed for lack of evidence to support it. R. v. Weiss and Williams, supra, per Stuart; but see contra, R. v. Weiss and Williams (No. 1), (1913) 4 W.W.R. 1358, per Beek, J.

A distinction is to be drawn between a case where the conviction has been quashed on the merits and where it has been quashed on a pure technicality. R. v. Young Kee (No. 2), [1917] 2 W.W.R. 654, 28 Can. Cr. Cas. 236 (Alta.). Where the objection to the first conviction was that the defendant was not properly before the magistrate and consequently the magistrate was entirely without jurisdiction to try him, the quashing of the conviction on that ground is not a bar. It would be otherwise if the magistrate being clothed with jurisdiction to try a case proceeds to do so in an illegal or improper manner or finds the accused guilty on no legal evidence. R. v. Young Kee, supra. The conviction after consideration of the evidence ought to be looked upon as a bar to any further prosecution, but where a conviction has been set aside on the sole ground of want of jurisdiction on the part of the justice who tried the case, it should be looked upon as a mere nullity, as though some one not a magistrate at all had assumed the right to try it. R. v. Young Kee, supra; Hawkins Pleas of the Crown, vol. 2, p. 521, sec. 8; Paley on Convictions, 8th ed., p. 167.

The special inclusion of attempts in some of the sub-sections and not in others in an enactment dealing with various coguate offences will not prevent the operation of Code sec. 571, dealing generally with attempts to commit indictable offences, for the offence of attempting the commission of any of the crimes as to which there is no enactment specially dealing with attempts; the doctrine of "expressio unius," etc., does not apply to exclude the attempt of the principal offence as against the express language of sec. 571. Attempt to commit statutory offences.

572. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to one year's imprisonment who attempts to commit any offence under any statute for the time being in force and not inconsistent with this Act, or incites or attempts to incite any person to commit any such offence, and for the punishment of which no express provision is made by such statute.

Origin]-Sec. 530, Code of 1892.

Attempts generally]-Code sec. 70.

"No express provision made"]—When a statute creates a new offence by prohibiting and making unlawful anything which was lawful before, and appoints a specific remedy against such new offence (not antecedently unlawful) by a particular sanction and particular method of proceeding, that particular method of proceeding must be pursued and no other. R. v. Robinson, 2 Burr. 799; R. v. Sinelair, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 20, at 31 (Terr.).

Conspiring to commit indictable offence.

573. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to seven years' imprisonment who, in any case not hereinbefore provided for, conspires with any person to commit any indictable offence.

1.1

[§ 571]

Origin]-Code of 1892, sec. 527.

"In any case not hereinbefore provided for "1-Specific enactments are contained in the Code as to certain conspiracies to commit indictable offences; treason, sees. 74 and 75; false accusations, sec. 178; defilement, sec. 218; murder, sec. 266; fraud, sec. 444. See also as to conspiracy in restraint of trade, secs. 496-504, 581, 590, 1012.

Order for particulars]-See sees. 859, 860, 853, 855, 864.

Charging conspiracy where offence completed]—A conspiracy to commit an indictable offence is quite distinct from the offence alleged to have been the subject of the conspiracy, and a former acquittal for the offence itself is not a bar to a subsequent prosecution for a conspiracy to commit it, although founded upon the same evidence. R. v. Weiss (No. 2), 5 W.W.R. 48 and 460, 6 Alta, L.R. 264, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 42.

Where a crime has been committed, whether in pursuance of the conspiracy, or in carrying out some purpose of the conspiracy, the guilty person may, according to strict law, be indiced for the crime so committed, and also for the conspiracy; Reg. v. Button, 11 Q.B. 929, at pp. 946-947, 18 L.J.M.C 19; R. v. Jessop, 16 Cox C.C. 204; R. v. Desmond, 11 Cox C.C. 146.

If a prosecution for the offence committed in pursuance of a conspiracy should occur after a conviction for conspiracy, it would be the duty of the court to apportion the sentence with reference to the former conviction. R. v. Button, 11 Q.B. 929; R. v. Kelly [1917] 1 W.W.R. 46, 27 Can. Cr. Cas. 140, 186, 27 Man. R. 105. But to prosecute a man for conspiring to commit an offence, when the charge should be for committing the actual offence itself, is strongly condemned by such eminent judges as Lord Cranworth, in In re Rowlands, 5 Cox C.C. 497; Lord Chief Justice Cockburn, in Regina v. Boulton, 12 Cox C.C. 87; and by Meredith, J.A., in Rex v. Goodfellow, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 424, 11 O.L.R. 359, 365. R. v. Sinelair, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 20, at 32, (Terr.).

Cockburn, C.J., in Regina v. Boulton, said: "I am clearly of opinion that where the proof intended to be submitted to a jury is proof of the actual commission of the crime, it is not the proper course to charge the parties with conspiring to commit it; for that course operates, it is manifest, unfairly and unjustly against the parties accused; the prosecutors are thus enabled to combine in one indictment a variety of offences, which, if treated individually as they ought to be, would exclude the possibility of giving evidence against one defendant to the prejudice of others, and deprive defendants of the advantage of calling their co-defendants as witnesses. I do not say this merely on my own authority; I have the authority of the late Lord Cranworth—one of the ablest of our judges—for the view I have expressed. In a case before him, in which the parties had been indicted, not for the offence they had committed, but for conspiracy to commit it, that eminent judge said that such a course was no doubt legal, but that it would have been more satisfactory if they had been indicted for that which they had done, and not for conspiring to do i." R. v. Boulton, 12 Cox C.C. 87, quoted in R. v. Sinclair, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 20.

Proof of conspiracy]—The intent of the offence of arson is similar to the intent of the offence of a conspiracy to commit arson, so that evidence of an attempt to commit the former offence at a prior date not too remote may be shown as a similar act to that charged in proof of the design with which the later was committed. R. v. Wilson (1911) 1 W.W.R. 272, 21 Can. Cr. Cas, 105, 19 W.L.R. 657.

The acts, conduct and statements of a co-conspirator are properly admissible in evidence upon a charge if they relate to the common design; they are in such case a part of the res gesta in the execution of the purpose of the conspiracy; R. v. Connolly, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 468, 25 Ont. R. 151; R. v. Wilson (1911) 1 W.W.R. 272, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 105, 19 W.L.R. 657. But it is only after the conspiracy has been proved that the acts of the one become evidence against the other. R. v. Mc-Cutcheon, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 310 (Ont.).

A statement by one conspirator, not in execution of the common purpose, but in narration of some event forming part of the conspiracy, falls within the rule of hearsay, and is not admissible as evidence against another conspirator, unless made in his presence. See R. v. Blake, 6 Q.B. 126; Stephen Dig., p. 6 and 7; Wills on Evidence, pp. 116 et seq. In consequence of this distinction, the admissibility of writings often depends on the time when they are proved to be in the possession of fellow conspirators, whether it was before or after the apprehension of the accused.

If the acts proved are not such as to show from their very nature that they are parts of a common scheme, the jury must separately consider the case of each defendant and determine from his conduct whether there is evidence of the conspiracy. R. v. McCutcheon, 25 Can. Cr. Cas. 310 (Ont.).

-Where the conspiracy was formed in Canada and in pursuance of same certain acts were done in the U.S.A., evidence of these is admissible on the prosecution in Canada. R. v. Bachrack, (1913) 28 O.L.R. 32, 21 Can. Cr. Cas. 257.

A conspiracy consists not merely in the intention of two or more, but in the agreement of two or more to do an unlawful act by unlawful means. So long as such a design rests in intention only, it is not indictable. But where two agree to carry it into effect, the very plot is an act in itself and is the act of each of the parties, promise against promise, actus contra actum, capable of being enforced if lawful, punishable if for a criminal object or for the use of criminal means. Muleahy v. R., L.R. 3 H.L. 306, 317.

The conspiracy itself is the offence, and whether anything has been done in pursuance of it or not is immaterial. R. v. Gill (1818), 2 B. & Ald. 204; R. v. Seward (1834), 1 A. & E. 706; R. v. Richardson (1834), 1] [18 get]

1 M. & Rob. 402; R. v. Kenrick, (1843) 5 Q.B. 49; Allen v. Flood [1898] A.C. 1.

It is not necessary to prove that the defendants actually met together and concerted the proceeding; it is sufficient if the jury are satisfied from the defendants' conduct either together or severally, that they were acting in concert. R. v. Fellowes (1859), 19 U.C.Q.B. 48, 58.

It must be left to the jury to estimate the weight of the evidence of an accomplice according to their opinion of the motives, character and credibility of the witness, and of the probable nature of his statement. And if it has had the effect of convincing them without doubt of the guilt of the accused they are at liberty to act upon their conviction. Per Robinson, C.J. R. v. Fellowes and others (1859), 19 U.C.Q.B. 48.

If A. and B. conspire together, each is guilty of an offence, and each may be indicted separately, tried alone and convicted, although both be living and within the country and county at the time of the indictment, trial and conviction. R. v. Frawley, (1894) 25 Ont. R. 431, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 253.

In a charge of conspiracy when the existence of the common design on the part of the defendants has been proved, evidence is then properly receivable as against both of what was said or done by either in furtherance of the common dseign. R. v. Connolly, (1894) 25 Ont. R. 151, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 468.

And evidence is admissible of what was said or done in furtherance of the common design by a conspirator not charged, as against those who are charged, after proof of the existence of the common design on the part of the defendants with such conspirator. Ibid.

The charge of Coleridge, J., in R. v. Murphy (1837), 8 C. & P., at p. 310, conveniently summarizes the usual method of proving a charge of conspiracy: "Although the common design is the root of the charge, it is not necessary to prove that the parties came together and actually agreed in terms to have this common design, and to pursue it by common means, and so carry it into execution. This is not necessary, because in many cases of the most clearly established conspiracies there are no means of proving any such thing, and neither law nor common sense requires that it should be proved. If you find that these two persons pursued by their acts the same object, often by the same means, one performing one part of an act, and the other another part of the same act so as to complete it with a view to the attainment of the object which they were pursuing, you will be at liberty to draw the conclusion that they have been engaged in a conspiracy to effect that object. The question you have to ask yourselves is, 'Had they this common design, and did they pursue it by these common means-the design being unlawful?" R. v. Connolly, (1894) 25 Ont. R. 151, 1 Can. Cr. Cas. 468; R. v. Fellowes, 19 U.C.Q.B. 48.

Venue]-Where a conspiracy is shown to have been carried on in two counties there is jurisdiction to commit for trial and to hold the trial itself in either of the counties or in another county within the same province 'if the accused persons are apprehended in such other county. Where persons are brought by process from one county to another upon a conspiracy charge and committed for trial therein but the Crown fails to prove against them any overt act committed within the county in which the proceedings are taken, although charged as committed in both counties, the court of that county has no jurisdiction to convict for a conspiracy committed wholly within the county from which the accused were brought. The defendants brought by process into the county of trial are to be considered as in custody solely in respect of the charge laid, and jurisdiction is not conferred on the courts of the county to which they are taken to try them because of their presence in custody on any other charge preferred by the Crown as to which such court would otherwise have no jurisdiction. R. v. O'Gorman, 15 Cau. Cr. Cas. 173, 18 O.L.R. 427; Fournier v. Attorney-General, 19 Que. K.B. 436, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 113.

Speedy trial jurisdiction]-An election of speedy trial without a jury in the County Court Judge's Criminal Court does not confer jurisdiction in a case in which there would be no jurisdiction over the accused if the trial were upon indictment before a jury. Semble. had the charge in the preliminary enquiry not included both counties as the locality of the conspiracy and had no evidence been proven before the committing magistrate of overt acts in his county by some of the persons charged, the committal for trial and the indictment or charge which followed, might have been quashed; but if the evidence of an overt act within the county upon which the committal order was founded is discredited at the subsequent trial, the fact of the committal having been made does not aid the jurisdiction as regards a person brought from another county or district to answer the charge. The King v. O'Gorman, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 173, 18 O.L.R. 427; Fournier v. Attorney-General, 19 Que. K.B. 436, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 113.

An allegation of the place of the offence is a material one and necessary to be proved to confer jurisdiction upon a county tribunal where the accused were not found or apprehended in the same county in which the trial is to take place. R. v. O'Gorman, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 173, 18 O.L.R. 427.

Conspiracy to defraud]-See sec. 444.

Conspiracy to affect market prices]-See see. 444.

Trade combinations or conspiracies]—See Code sees. 496-504, 581. 590, 1012; the Industrial Disputes Investigation Act, 6-7 Edw. VII, Can., ch. 20, 8-9 Edw. VII, Can., ch. 22, 9-10 Edw. VII, Can., ch. 29; the Trade Unions Act, R.S.C. 1906, ch. 125.

Evidence generally in conspiracy cases]-See note to sec. 444.

Accessories after the fact in certain cases.

574. Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to seven years' imprisonment who, in any case where no express' provision is made by this Act for the punishment of an accessory, is accessory after the fact to any indictable offence for which the punishment is, on a first conviction, imprisonment for life, or for fourteen years, or for any term longer than fourteen years.

Origin]-Sec. 531, Code of 1892.

Accessories after the fact]—Code sees. 71 (defined); 76 (to trenson), 267 (to murder), 849 (indictment of accessories after the fact).

Acts intended to destroy or conceal things which may be produced in evidence against a prisoner on his trial, make the doer an accessory after the fact, of whom the correct technical description in an indictment is expressed by the words "receive, harbour and maintain." R. v. Evey, 7 Cr. App. R. 61, and see R. v. Butterfield (1843) 1 Cox C.C. 39.

Accessories before the fact]—See sec. 69 as to aiding and abetting or counselling and procuring an offence. Persons who do so are declared guilty parties to the offence itself and may be so charged.

Accessories after the fact in other cases.

575. Every one who is accessory after the fact to any indictable offence for committing which the longest term to which the offender can be sentenced is less than fourteen years, if no express provision is made for the punishment of such accessory, is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term equal to one-half of the longest term to which a person committing the indictable offence to which he is accessory may be sentenced.

JURISDICTION.

Rules of Court.

Court's power to make rules.—Regulating sittings.—Regulating practice.—Generally for regulating.—Rules to be laid before Parliament.—Authority in Ontario for making.

576. Every superior court of criminal jurisdiction may at any time, with the concurrence of a majority of the judges thereof present at any meeting held for the purpose, make rules of court, not inconsistent with any statute of Canada, which shall apply to all proceedings relating to any prosecution, proceeding or action instituted in relation to any matter of a criminal nature, or resulting from or incidental to any such matter, and in particular,—

- (a) for regulating the sittings of the court or of any division thereof, or of any judge of the court sitting in chambers, except in so far as the same are already regulated by law;
- (b) for regulating in criminal matters the pleading, practice and procedure in the court, including the subjects of mandamus, certiorari, habeas corpus, prohibition, quo warranto, bail and costs, and the proceedings on application to a justice to state and sign a case for the opinion of the courts as to a conviction, order, determination or other proceeding before him; and,
- (c) generally for regulating the duties of the officers of the court and every other matter deemed expedient for better attaining the ends of justice and carrying the provisions of the law into effect.

3. In the Province of Ontario the authority for the making of rules of court applicable to superior courts of criminal juris diction in the province is vested in the supreme court of judica ture, and such rules may be made by the said court at any time with the concurrence of a majority of the judges thereof present at a meeting held for the purpose.

Origin]-Sec. 533, Code of 1892.

Criminal Practice Court Rules generally]—In addition to the general authority conferred by sec. 576, there is a further authorization by sec. 1126 by which the court having authority to quash a conviction or order made by a justice may prescribe by general order for the giving of security by the applicant.

In a Quebec case it was held that security for costs cannot be ordered against the petitioner for a writ of certiorari in a criminal case in the absence of a general rule of court passed under Code sec. 1126. Tierney v. Choquet (1908) 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 238.

There is also in Part XV, relating to summary convictions, a special reference to the regulation by rule or order made under sec. 576 of the practice on stated cases by justices for review by a superior court (sec. 705, sub-sec. (b)).

Code see. 914, sub-sec. 2, provides that the statement of the arraignment and the proceedings subsequent thereto shall be entered of record in the same manner as heretofore, subject to any such alterations in the forms of such entry as are, from time to time, prescribed by any rule or rules of the superior courts of criminal jurisdiction respectively.

Any Crown rules altering the mode of entering records of arraignment and proceedings at trial as provided for in sec. 914 will also apply to such inferior courts of criminal jurisdiction as are designated in the Rules. Sec. 914 (3).

Interpretation of Rules of Court]—Court Rules made by virtue of the power conferred by the Code are to be construed as though embodied in the Code itself. R. v. Dean, [1917] 2 W.W.R. 943 (Alta.).

"Superior court of criminal jurisdiction"]-The courts included in this phrase are mentioned in the defining clause, Code see. 2 (35).

"All proceedings relating to any prosecution," etc.]—"In a criminal proceeding the question is not alone whether substantial justice has been done, but whether justice has been done according to law. A party accused has the right to insist on them as a matter of right of which he cannot be deprived against his will; and the judge must see that they are followed. He cannot set himself above the law which he has to administer, or make, or mould it to suit the exigencies of a particular occasion. The procedure by which an offender is to be tried, though but ancillary to the application of the substantive law and to the ends of justice, is as much a part of the law as the substantive law itself." Sub-sec. (b)-" Pleading, practice and procedure in the court"]-

Sub-sec. (b)—Mandamus]—A superior court will not interfere by mandamus when the inferior court has exercised a discretion in the matter within the jurisdiction of the inferior court: In re Dyson (1860), 29 L.J.Q.B. 68. This rule holds good even though the inferior court is wrong, not only as to facts, but also as to law. Reg. v. Adamson, L.R. 1 Q.B.D. 205, approved in Reg. v. Exans (1890), 62 L.T.N.S. 576.

The court does not by mandamus direct either justices or any public body or anybody else upon whom a duty is east how and in what manner they are to perform their duty. They simply direct them to perform their duty, R. v. Kingston Justices, (1902) 86 L.T.N.S. 591; R. v. Wong Tun (1916) 10 W.W.R. 15, 26 Can. Cr. Cas. 8 (Alta.).

The court will not interfere with the discretion of the justices in adjourning a hearing. R. v. Southampton Justices, 96 L.T.N.S. 697. Conversely, where a county court judge erroneously declines to hear the case on the grounds of want of jurisdiction, an order of mandamus will lie to compel him to hear it. R. v. The Judge of the Southampton County Court, 62 L.T.N.S. 321.

A mandamus goes where persons having a jurisdiction to exercise decline to exercise it, upon some matter preliminary to the hearing of the merits of the appeal as regards facts or law. Mellor, J., in R. v. Justices of Middlesex, 2 Q.B.D. 519.

A court stenographer is a public official against whom a mandamus may issue for non-performance of his official duty to furnish an applicant with a copy of evidence taken at a criminal trial. Where upon an application for a mandamus it appears that the court stenographer has furnished a complete copy of his record of the evidence, the application must be dismissed although the transcript furnished be shown to be inaccurate by reason of the omission of rulings made by the trial judge or of counsel's admissions taken in lieu of evidence. R. v. Campbell, 10 Can. Cr. Cas. 326 (Y.T.).

Where an official with limited statutory powers rules that his jurisdiction does not extend to certain matters, the process of mandamus is frequently used to review such ruling, so where the jurisdiction in the particular matter was denied by a statutory commissioner, and he adjourned the enquiry sine die to enable the affirming parties to correct the ruling by an application to the court, a rule for a mandamus was taken out and on the court deciding that the commissioner was wrong, the mandamus was granted directing the commissioner to "hear and determine the matter of the inquiry according to law." R. v. Hudson [1915] 1 K.B. 133; compare re Lee Him, 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 383. Where however the statutory authority is bound to inquire whether the material placed before it on the particular application makes out a prima facic case, the court ought not on mandamus to interfere with the conclusion arrived at by the statutory authority upon matters of fact unless some mistake in law is involved or, semble, a misunderstanding or misjudging the evidence on material points. R. v. Islington [1914] 3 K.B. 481, 83 L.J.K.B. 1455, 30 Times L.R. 478.

[§ 576]

CRIMINAL CODE (PART XI)

The court should exercise its discretion by refusing a writ of mandamus where there is an alternative remedy, which is equally convenient, beneficial and effective. Charleson v. Byrne (1915) 31 W.L.R. 319, 22 D.L.R. 240 (B.C.); Sisters of Charity v. Vancouver, 44 S.C.R. 29; Rex v. Master of Crown Office, 29 Times L.R. 427; Frankel v. Winnipeg (1912), 3 W.W.R. 405, 22 W.L.R. 597 (Man.).

It may in some cases be necessary to apply both for a mandamus to hear and determine and for a prohibition from acting upon the erroneous decision of the statutory authority. Attorney-General v. Thompson [1913] 3 K.B. 198, 29 Times L.R. 510.

Mandamus lies to require an inferior court to enter continuances and to hear an appeal from a summary conviction which it had improperly refused to hear on the merits upon an erroneous ruling against the sufficiency of the notice of appeal. Rex v. Trottier, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 102, 25 W.L.R. 663.

The principles upon which the courts interfere by mandamus with justices of the peace are not essentially different from those regulating the interference with courts of record. The writ will lie to set courts in motion, when they have refused to act, and to compel them to exercise their rightful jurisdiction. The same rule applies to justices of the peace, and they may be compelled by mandamus to hear and determine matters properly within their jurisdiction, and properly brought before them. High on Extraordinary Remedies, sec. 239; R. v. Meehan (No. 2), 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 312, 3 O.L.R. 567. The general rule denying relief by mandamus to correct the errors of inferior courts in matters properly within their jurisdiction applies with equal force to proceedings before a justice of the peace, and the writ will not go to correct the erroneous action of a justice in a matter which has been judicially determined by him. And when jurisdiction over the matter in question is vested in a board of magistrates, and they have acted in the premises and have reached a decision, their action will not be corrected by mandamus. High, sec. 243a; Re Denison, R. v. Case, 6 O.L.R. 104; R. v. Connolly, 22 Ont. R. 220; R. v. Carden, 5 Q.B.D. 1; re McLeod, 25 Can. Cr. Cas.

The writ may, however, be granted if the magistrates have not really exercised a discretion vested in them, but have acted upon a consideration of something extraneous or extra-judicial, which ought not to have affected their decision, and which was the same as declining jurisdiction. Thompson v. Desnoyers, 16 Que. S.C. 253, 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 68, at 70.

That a magistrate did not properly appreciate the evidence submitted upon an application for the issue of a warrant of arrest for an indictable offence is not ground for a mandamus to compel him to grant a warrant against his opinion formed in good faith. Thompson v. Desnoyers, 3 Can. Cr. Cas. 68, 16 Que. S.C. 253. Only under extraordinary circumstances will the court grant a mandamus to a justice holding a preliminary enquiry, to review the justice's ruling as to the admissibility of evidence. R. v. Martin, 18 Can. Cr. Cas. 107; Re Broom, 18 Can. Cr. Cas. 254; Re Ryers & Plows, 46 U.C.Q.B. 206.

It seems probable that justices would be compelled by mandamus to bring a preliminary enquiry being held by them to a conclusion either by a dismissal of the charge or a committal for trial where there was an equal division and the matter was not disposed of by them as it might have been by adjourning the enquiry to be heard de novo before other justices. Durrand v. Forrester, 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 125.

In Ontario it is held that an application for a mandamus against a magistrate may be treated as a civil and not a criminal proceeding, although the act which it is proposed the justice shall be ordered to do is the taking of an information for an offence against the criminal law, as part of the duties of his office under a provincial statute governing his appointment. R. v. Meehan (No. 1) (1902), 5 Can. Cr. Cas. 307, 3 O.L.R. 361.

A mandamus will not go which would in effect be a direction as to the manner or particular method in which a district court should conduct the hearing of an appeal from a summary conviction. R. v. Wong Tun (1916) 10 W.W.R. 15 (Alta.).

Where a rule for mandamus had been discharged with costs on the ground that the affidavits in support were imperfect, and a subsequent rule was obtained by the same parties on the same ground on amended affidavits, the court refused to hear the second application upon the merits, and discharged the second rule, also with costs. Reg. v. Pickles, 12 L.J.Q.B. 40. The same rule seems applicable to certiorari proceedings. In any case a fresh application should be made to the same judge who had dismissed it on the technical ground. Except in cases of habeas corpus, one judge is cautious about dealing with matters previously disposed of by another. R. v. McKay, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 1 (N.S.).

Prohibition]—Prohibition is a remedy that should be sparingly applied, and only in a plain case. Re Cummings and Carleton, 25 O.R. 607; 26 A.R. 1; In re Brass v. Allan, 26 U.C.Q.B. 123; R. v. Hamlink, 17 Can. Cr. Cas. 162 (Ont.). of

The question to be decided on a prohibition motion is whether the inferior court had jurisdiction to enter upon the inquiry and not whether there has been any miscarriage in the course of the inquiry. Long Point Co. v. Anderson, 18 A.R. (Ont.) 401 at 405.

If the judge of the inferior court had given himself jurisdiction by coming to an erroncous conclusion upon a point of law upon which the limit of his jurisdiction depended, then, in point of fact, he would have had no jurisdiction, and a writ of prohibition in such a case would have been properly awarded. He cannot give himself jurisdiction by placing a wrong construction upon a statute or document or other wise coming to a wrong conclusion of law upon admitted facts. Ibid.

No misinterpretation, actual or intended, of a statute is of the slightest relevancy in determining the question of prohibition unless such misinterpretation itself goes to the jurisdiction. Re Royston Park & Steelton (Town of), 28 O.L.R. 629, at 633.

Where the only question the magistrate had to decide was whether the defendant properly before him had committed the offence charged, and there was no preliminary question for him to decide, prohibition will not be granted because of an alleged error in finding the fact of guilt. R. v. Burns, (1918) 29 Can. Cr. Cas. 293 (N.S.); Hawes v. Hart, 18 N.S.R. 42. If there is a total absence of jurisdiction because the matter is one with which the inferior court could not deal, prohibition will be ordered although the applicant had in fact consented to the proceedings. Farquharson v. Morgan, 63 L.J.Q.B. 474, [1894] 1 Q.B. 552. But where the inferior court has complete jurisdiction so far as the nature of the offence is concerned, it would seem that a mere defect as to the locality of the proceedings raises a question of procedure rather than one of jurisdiction and that it may effectually be waived. Clarke Brothers v. Knowles (1918) 87 L.J.K.B. 189, 192.

5. (828) The certificate shall have the same effect as a return to a writ of certiorari. (0.1293).

6. (829) The motion shall not be entertained unless the return day thereof be within six months after the conviction, order, warrant, or requisition, and unless the applicant, if not the Attorney-General, is shown to have deposited with the clerk of the court to whom the certificate is required to be returned as security for costs of the application, the sum of $25 or such other sum as a judge may direct.

(2) The requirements of this rule as to security for costs shall also apply to motions for prohibition, mandamus or quo warranto.

QUO WARRANTO.

7. (830) No application in the nature of quo warranto, except an ex-officio application shall be made without leave of a court or a judge, and unless at the time of application for such leave an affidavit be produced by which some person shall depose on oath that such application is made at his instance as relator; and such person shall be deemed to be the relator in case an order shall be made, and shall be named as such relator on such application. (N.S. 48).

8. (831) Every objection intended to be made to the title of a defendant on an application in the nature of a quo warranto shall be specified in the notice of motion, and no objection not so specified shall be raised by the relator without the special leave of the court or a judge. (N.S. 49).

9. (832) The court or judge may refuse the application in the nature of a quo warranto, with or without costs, and in its or his discretion may, upon such notice as may be just, direct the costs to be paid by the solicitor or other parties joining in the affidavits in support of the application, although not the relator. (N.S. 50).

10. (833) A new relator may by leave of the court or a judge be substituted for the one first named on special circumstances being shown. (N.S. 51).

11. (834) Where several applications in the nature of a quo warranto have been made against several persons for the usurpation of the same office and all upon the same or like grounds of objection, the court or a judge may order such applications to be consolidated, or may order all proceedings to be stayed upon all but one, until judgment be given in

[§ 576]

RULES OF COURT (ALBERTA)

12. (835) If the defendant in an application in the nature of a gue warranto does not intend to defend, he may, to prevent judgment by default, file a disclaimer in the office of the clerk or deputy clerk of the court, as the case may be, and deliver a copy to the relator or his solicitor. Upon the disclaimer being filed judgment of ouster may be entered and the costs taxed as in judgment by default. (N.S. 53).

MANDAMUS.

13. (836) The notice in the case of an application for mandamus shall be served upon every person who shall appear to be interested or likely to be affected by the proceedings. The court or a judge may direct notice to be given to any other person or persons and adjourn the hearing for that purpose.

14. (837) Any person whether he has been so served or not who can make it appear to the court or a judge that he is affected by the proceedings for mandamus may show cause against the application and shall be liable to costs in the discretion of the court or judge if the order should be made or the prosecutor obtain judgment. (N.S. 56).

15. (838) No action or proceeding shall be commenced or prosecuted against any person in respect of anything done in obedience to a mandamus issued by the court or any judge thereof. (N.S. 65).

16. (839) No order for mandamus shall be granted unless at the time of application an affidavit be produced by which some person shall depose upon oath that such application is made at his instance as prosecutor and the name of such person shall appear as the person at whose instance it is made. (N.S. 69).

HABFAS CORPUS.

17. (840) No writ of habeas corpus shall be necessary, but an order may be made to the like effect, which order shall have the like consequences that the writ would have.

18. (841) On the argument of a motion for habeas corpus the court or a judge may in its or his discretion direct an order to be drawn up forthwith for the prisoner's discharge, which order shall be a sufficient warrant for any gaoler or constable, or other person for his discharge.

GENERAL.

19. (842) The notice of motion for prohibition, *certiorari, quo war*ranto, mandamus or habeas corpus shall be returnable before a judge of the Supreme Court or the Appellate Division. (O. 1294).

20. (843) When the motion is made to a judge an appeal shall lie from his order to the Appellate Division of the Court by leave of the Judge or of the Appellate Division, but subject to such right of appeal his decision shall be final. (O. 1297).

20a. In the event of an appeal from an order of discharge, the judge from whose order the appeal is taken may, if he sees fit, stay the execution of the order pending the appeal, or may direct that before the discharge the prisoner enter into a proper recognizance to appear before the Appellate Division and submit to any order which may be made upon appeal. "(Canada Gasette, January 15, 1916.)

20B. Any order or warrant required to give effect to any order of the Appellate Division may be made or directed by a single judge. (Conada Gazette, January 15, 1916.)

21. (844) In all proceedings under these Crown Practice Rules the costs shall be in the discretion of the court or judge who shall have full power to order either the applicant or the party against whom the application is made, or any other party to the proceedings, to pay such costs or any part thereof according to the result.

22. (845) When costs are allowed the fees for all services shall be in the discretion of the taxing officer, not exceeding $25, provided that the judge may, in his discretion, allow an increased fee in a proper case.

23. (846) Proceedings for attachment for contempt, for disobedience to any writ, judgment or order issued or made under these rules shall lie and shall be the same as for disobedience to any writ, judgment or order in a civil action.

24. (847) When no other provision is made by these rules the procedure and practice shall, as far as may be, be regulated by the Crown Office Rules for the time being in force in England, and subject thereto and to these rules the practice shall be the same as in civil proceedings in the Supreme Court.

FORMS.

25. (848) The forms for the time being in use in England under the said Crown Office Rules, where applicable, and where not applicable, forms of the like character as near as may be, shall be used in all the proceedings, except where otherwise ordered by these rules.

RULES AS TO CONVEYANCE OF PRISONERS UNDER SENTENCE TO GAOL.

26. (849) Whenever a person is sentenced to imprisonment in a common gaol in the Province of Alberta, by any court in such province, the sheriff or deputy sheriff of any judicial district in such province, or any bailiff, constable or other officer, or other officer or other person by his direction, or by the direction of the court may, if no form of warrant is provided by the Criminal Code therefor, convey to the gaol named in

27. (850) The foregoing shall also apply where, according to the sentence imposed upon the convict, he is made liable to the punishment of death or whipping, or any other punishment.

28. (851) The keeper of the common gaol mentioned in such certified copy of sentence is authorized, and hereby required, to receive the convict mentioned in such certified copy of sentence into his custody in the said gaol, and he and the sheriff of the judicial district in which such gaol is situated, and all other persons and authorities whose duty it is to do so, are hereby authorized and required to carry out and execute the sentence mentioned in such certified copy of sentence, according to its tenor and effect.

Alberta Rules as to cases stated under sec. 761 of the Criminal Code]-

1. Application to J.P. to state and sign a case.—An application to a justice of the peace to state and sign a case under said sec. 761 shall be in writing and be delivered to such justice or left with some person for him at his place of abode within seven days after the making of the conviction, order, determination or other proceeding questioned. Such application shall state the grounds upon which the proceeding is questioned, and whether the appeal is to be to the Appellate Division or to a judge.

2. J.P. to state and sign a case.—Within fourteen days after such application has been so delivered or left for him the justice shall state and sign and deliver to the appellant, a case setting forth the facts of the case and the grounds on which the proceeding is questioned, stating:

- (a) The substance of the information or complaint.
- (b) The names of the prosecutor (or complainant) and defendant.
- (c) The date of the proceeding questioned.
- (d) A copy of the evidence (if any) in full as taken before the J.P.
- (e) The substance of the conviction, order, determination or other proceeding questioned.
- (f) The grounds on which the same is questioned.
- (g) The grounds upon which the justice supports the proceeding questioned if the justice sees fit to state any.
- (2) But the justice shall not deliver said case until after the appellant shall have entered into a recognizance and paid the fees as provided by sec. 762.

3. Appeal in case of refusal.—In the event of the justice declining or refusing to state a case, the appellant may apply to the court or judge for a rule as provided by see. 764.

(b) If he desires the matter to be heard and determined by a Judge in Chambers with the Clerk of the Court at the place where the appeal is intended to be heard, provided that upon sufficient cause for the delay being shown the court or judge, as the case may be, may hear and determine the matter although the case was not delivered within said twenty days.

5. Appeal when heard by Appellate Division.—When the case stated has been delivered to the Registrar the same shall, unless the court or a judge otherwise orders, he heard at the next sittings of the Appellate Division, which shall be not sooner than fourteen days after the delivery of the case stated to the Registrar, and the appellant shall give to the respondent ten days' notice in writing of the time and place of hearing the appeal.

6. Appeal, when heard by Judge in Chambers.—When the case has been delivered to the Clerk of the Court, the appellant shall within five days after such delivery apply to the Judge in Chambers to fix a time and place for the hearing of the appeal, and the judge shall thereupon appoint a time and place for such hearing, and a copy of such appoint ment shall be served upon the respondent, or as the judge may direct, provided that if such application be not made within said period of five days, the judge may, upon sufficient cause for the delay being shown, fix such time and place notwithstanding that said period may have elapsed.

7. Recognizance.—The justice before or immediately after delivering a case stated to the appellant shall transmit the recognizance to the proper Clerk of the Court if the appeal is to a Judge, or to the Registrar if the appeal is to the Appellate Division.

8. Deviation from Rules not to invalidate proceedings.—Slight deviation from strict compliance with these Rules shall not invalidate any proceeding or thing if the court or judge sees fit to allow the same, either with or without requiring the same to be corrected.

2. Applications for bail where the party is in custody shall be, in the first instance, by summons before a Judge at Chambers for a writ of habeas corpus, or to show cause why the defendant should not be admitted to bail either before a Judge at Chambers or before a Justice of the Peace, in such an amount as the Judge may direct.

INFORMATIONS.

3. With the exception of ex-officio information filed by the Attorney-General on behalf of the Crown, no criminal information or informations in the nature of a quo warranto, shall be exhibited or received in the Supreme Court without an express order of a Judge of the Supreme Court, nor shall any process be issued upon any information until the person procuring such information to be exhibited, shall have filed in the Registry of the Supreme Court a recognizance in the penalty of $100, effectually to prosecute such information, and to abide by and observe such orders as the Court shall direct; such recognizance to be entered into before some Justice of the Peace or Registrar of the Supreme Court.

4. No application shall be made for a criminal information against a Justice of the Peace for misconduct in his magisterial capacity unless a notice containing a distinct statement of the grievances or acts of misconduct complained of be served personally on him or left at his residence with some member of his household six days before the time named in it for making the application.

5. The application for a criminal information shall be made to the court by a motion for an order sisi within a reasonable time after the offence complained of, and if the application be made against a Justice of the Peace for misconduct in his magisterial caapeity, the applicant must depose an affidavit to his belief that the defendant was actuated by corrupt motives, and further, if for an unjust conviction, that the defendant is innocent of the charge.

RECOGNIZANCES.

6. No recognizance shall henceforth be forfeited or estreated without the order of the court or a judge.

7. Every recognizance to appear and answer to any indictment found in the Supreme Court or in the County Court Judges' Criminal Court, or to any ex-officio or criminal information shall, unless the court or a judge shall by order dispense therewith, contain, besides any other condition which may be imposed, a condition that the defendant shall personally appear from day to day on the trial of such indictment or information and not depart until he shall be discharged by the court before whom such trial shall be had.

CRIMINAL CODE (PART XI)

8. Whenever it has been made to appear to the court or a judge, that a party has made default in performing the conditions of the recognizance into which he has entered, the court or a judge, upon notice to the defendant and his sureties, if any, to be given in such manner as the court or judge may direct, may order such recognizance to be extracted without issuing any writ of seize facias.

9. In proceedings under sec. 589 of the Criminal Code [Sec. 1097, Code of 1906] for breach of recognizance on remand, the certificate of the Justice of the Peace of non-appearance of the accused, indorsed on the back of the recognizance, shall be transmitted by the Justice of the Peace to the Registrar of the Court where if committed the accused would be bound to appear, and be proceeded upon by order of the judge presiding at the assizes, if he thinks proper, in like manner as other recognizances.

10. In summary convictions under sec. 878 of the Criminal Code, [sees, 1097, 1098, Code of 1906] the certificate of default of appearance, as in the preceding rule, shall be transmitted by the Justice of the Peace to the Clerk of the County Court having jurisdiction at the place wherein such recognizance is taken, and be proceeded upon by order of the County Court Judge, if he thinks proper, in like manner as other recognizances.

APPEALS.

11. All appeals from the verdict, judgment, or ruling of any court or judge having jurisdiction in criminal cases, or from the conviction, order, or determination of a justice under Part LVIII of the Criminal Code [Part XV, Code of 1906] shall be by case stated, except where otherwise provided by statute.

12. If any justice of the peace declines for the space of one week after being requested, in writing, to state a case, the person aggrieved may apply to the court for an order requiring the case to be stated.

13. Every application by a party aggrieved to a justice to state a case shall be made within four days after the order, determination, or other proceeding has been made or rendered, or within such further time as may be allowed by the court or a judge.

14. The appellant at the time of making such application and before a case is stated by the justice, shall enter into recognizance before some justice of the peace, with or without sureties, in the sum of $100, conditioned to prosecute his appeal without delay and to submit to judgment and pay such costs as shall be awarded by the court, and in default thereof the justices may proceed and make any such order as if no application for a special case had been made.

COSTS.

15. In all proceedings under these Rules the party entitled to costs shall tax the same according to the scale in force in the Supreme Court. and r taxin; scale,

GENERAL RULES.

16. These Rules may be cited as the "Criminal Rules, 1906," and shall be in force from and after the first day of May, 1906.

17. No Order or Rule annulled by any former Order shall be revived by any of these Rules, unless expressly so declared.

18. Where no other provision is made in these Rules, the present procedure and practice remain in force, and as to matters not provided for, the procedure shall be such as may be directed or confirmed by the court or a judge.

19. The interpretation clauses of the Supreme Court Rules shall apply to these Rules.

[B.C. rule 1041 makes the word "person" include a body corporate or politic unless repugnant to the context.]

20. The "Supreme Court Rules, 1896 (Crown side)" are hereby annulled.

British Columbia Certiorari Forms]—The B.C. Criminal Rules, 1906, Rule 1, provide that certiorari practice and procedure shall be the same as that followed in civil proceedings, so far as applicable, and where not applicable shall be analogous thereto. The Crown Office Rules, 1906 (Civil) to which reference must be had are transcripts from the English Crown Office Rules of 1886 and retain the same numbering. Those as to certiorari are as follows:

28. Every application for a writ of certiorari shall, except in vacation, be made by motion for an order nisi to show cause, and in vacation to a Judge at Chambers for a summons to show cause. Provided that where, from special circumstances, the court or judge may be of opinion that the writ should issue forthwith, the order may be made absolute, or an order be made in the first instance, either ex parte or otherwise, as the court or judge may direct.

23. No writ of certiorari shall be granted, issued, or allowed to remove any judgment, order, conviction, or other proceeding had or made by or before any justice or justices of the peace, unless such writ of certiorari be applied for within six calendar months next after such judgment, order, conviction, or other proceeding shall be so had or made, and unless it be proved by affidavit that the party suing forth the same has given six days' notice thereof in writing to the justice or justices, or to two of them, if more than one, by and before whom such judgment, order, conviction, or other proceedings shall be so had or made, in order that such justice or justices, or the parties therein

35. No order for the issuing of a writ of certiorari to remove any order, conviction, or inquisition, or record, or writ of habeas corpus ad subjiciendum shall be granted where the validity of any warrant, commitment, order, conviction, inquisition or record shall be questioned, unless at the time of moving, a copy of any such warrant, commitment, order, conviction, inquisition or record, verified by affidavit, be produced and handed to the officer of the court before the motion be made or the absence thereof accounted for to the satisfaction of the court.

36. No writ of certiorari shall be allowed to remove any judgment, order or conviction given or made by justices, unless the party (other than the Attorney-General acting on behalf of the Crown) prosecuting such certiorari, before the allowance thereof, shall enter into a recognizance with sufficient sureties before one or more justices, or before any judge of the Supreme Court, in the sum of $100, with condition to prosecute the same at his own costs and charges with effect, without any wilful or affected delay, and to pay the party in whose favour or for whose benefit such judgment, order or conviction shall have been given or made, within one month after the said judgment, order or conviction shall be confirmed, his full costs and charges, to be taxed according to the course of the court where such judgment, order or conviction shall be confirmed, and in case the party prosecuting such certiorari shall not enter into such recognizance, or shall not perform the conditions aforesaid, it shall be lawful for the said justices to proceed and make such further order for the benefit of the party for whom such judgment shall be given, in such manner as if no certiorari had been granted.

37. When cause is shown against an order nisi for a certiorari to remove any judgment, order or conviction upon which no special case has been stated, given or made by justices of the peace for the purpose of quashing such judgment, order or conviction, the court, if it shall think fit, may make it a part of the order absolute for the certiorari that the judgment, order or conviction shall be quashed on return without further order, and in such case no such recognizance as is required by Rule 36 shall be necessary, and a memorandum to that effect shall be indorsed by the proper officer upon the issuing of the writ of certiorari.

38. No special case shall be filed, unless the party proceeding upon such special case shall enter into a recognizance as provided by Rule 36, and in default thereof the justices may proceed as in that rule provided.

[See Rule 36 and Form No. 18 therewith].

39. In all civil causes or matters, which shall have been removed by certiorari or in respect of which a special case shall have been stated, the recognizance shall be conditioned as regards costs, to pay such costs, if any, as the court shall order. jud juri allo the

[§ 576]

A copy of this rule shall be annexed to the notice of motion served upon the magistrate, justice or justices, coroner, or elerk of the peace. from whom the return is required.

1283.—The certificate shall have the same effect as a return to a writ of certiorari.

1284.—The notice shall be returnable before a judge of the High Court of Justice for Ontario sitting in chambers.

1285 .--- The motion shall not be entertained unless the return day thereof be within six months after the conviction, order, warrant or inquisition, nor unless the applicant is shown to have entered into a recognizance with one or more sufficient sureties in the sum of $100 before a justice or justices of the county within which the conviction, order or inquisition was made, or the warrant issued, or before a judge of the county court of said county, or before a judge of the High court, and which recognizance with an affidavit of the due execution thereof shall be filed with the registrar of the court in which such motion is made or is pending, or unless the applicant is shown to have made the deposit of a like sum of $100 with the registrar of the court in which such motion is made with or upon the condition that he will prosecute such application at his own costs and charges without any wilful or affected delay, and that he will pay the person in whose favour the conviction, order, or other proceedings is affirmed his full costs and charges to be taxed according to the course of the court, in case the conviction. order or other proceeding is affirmed.

1286.—The judge shall have all the powers of the court in the like matters and may order the production of papers and documents as he may deem necessary.

1287.—An appeal shall lie from the order of the judge to a Divisional Court if leave be granted by a judge of the High Court.

1288.—The rule passed by the High Court of Justice on November 17th, 1886, under the authority of 49 Vict., ch. 49, sec. 6 (D.), and all rules and parts of rules inconsistent with the next preceding nine rules are hereby repealed

These rules shall come into force on the 1st day of September next [1908].

Ontario Certiorari practice]—It has been held in Ontario that the Criminal Rules of 1908 remain operative as to the Supreme Court of Ontario so far as they can be applied to that court in a re-organized form as the successor of the Supreme Court of Judicature for Ontario. R. v. Titchmarsh (No. 2), (1914) 32 O.L.R. 569, 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 38. Notwithstanding doubts which have been raised (R. v. Titchmarsh (No. 1), (1914) 26 O.W.R. 314, 22 Can. Cr. Cas. 419), it seems now to be settled law that the provision of the rules for a motion to quash instead of the issue of a writ of certiorari is within the court's powers under Code sec. 576. R. v. Titchmarsh (No. 2), (1914) 32 O.L.R. 569, 24 Can. Cr. Cas. 38; R. v. Jackson, (1917) 40 O.L.R. 173, 182, 188.

RULES OF COURT (ONT.)

And a conviction removed by the substituted procedure is still a removal " by certiorari," within Code sec. 1124. R. v. Jackson, (1917) 40 O.L.R. 173, 188. See Ontario Rules 1279-1288 passed May 2, 1908, superseding provisional rules similarly numbered passed on 27th March, 1908.

Provision is made for an appeal, by leave, against an order dismissing a motion to quash. Ont. Rule 1287. This would enable a judge of the High Court Division to give leave to appeal to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court of Ontario. R. v. Jackson, (1917) 40 O.L.R. 173, 182. If the accused elects to proceed first with a motion to quash a summary conviction under which he is in close custody under the award of imprisonment, and the motion to quash fails, on a hearing of the merits, the doctrine of res judicata will apply to prevent a renewal of the same points of objection on a subsequent habeas corpus application. R. v. Jackson, (1917) 40 O.L.R. 173.

Ontario Habeas Corpus practice]-Habeas corpus jurisdiction is founded both upon the common law and the statute of Charles II (31 Car. II, ch. 2). In order to come within the benefit of the statute of Charles, it is customary to have the writ marked in the margin " per 31 Car. II," and such marking is held not to be restrictive, and the writ may also be regarded as a common law writ and also as issued under the Habeas Corpus Act specially applicable to the province in extension of the Act of Charles. R. v. Arscott (1885) 9 Ont. R. 541. As regards criminal matters there is the Habeas Corpus Act of 1866, 29-30 Vict., Can., ch. 45, which is supplementary to the common law and the statute of Charles. This pre-confederation statute has been carried down through the Ontario statute revisions and is known as the Ontario Habeas Corpus Act (R.S.O. 1914, ch. 84, sec. 8). While extending the scope of habeas corpus procedure to certain civil matters in like manner as did the English Habeas Corpus Act of 1816, 56 Geo. III, ch. 100, it also provided for an appeal from the refusal to discharge, and this right of appeal is held to apply to habeas corpus in criminal matters. R. v. Jackson, (1917) 40 O.L.R. 173, 193. And while formerly it was permissible to go from court to court with successive applications, and possibly from one judge to another judge of the same court, (Ex parte Partington, 13 M. & W. 679, ex parte Baker, (1857) 7 E. & B. 697, re Baker (1857) 2 H. & N. 219; Cox v. Hakes, (1890) 15 A.C. 506), this right was abrogated in Ontario by the introduction of the right of appeal following a remand to custody. Taylor v. Scott (1899) 30 Ont. R. 475; R. v. Jackson (1917) 40 O.L.R. 173, 193; Re Harper, 23 Ont. R. 63; Re Hall, 8 A.R. 135 (Ont.); R. v. Graves, 21 O.L.R. 329; same case, R. v. Graves (No. 1) 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 150, R. v. Graves (No. 2), 16 Can. Cr. Cas. 318 (Ont.); R. v. Miller (No. 1), 19 O.L.R. 125; R. v. Miller (No. 2), 15 Can. Cr. Cas. 156.

The right to discharge on habeas corpus does not depend on the legality or illegality of the prisoner's caption, but on the legality or

The Ontario Habeas Corpus Act makes it necessary where a certiorari in aid has been granted to consider the depositions and proceedings returned to the certiorari, for the purpose of ascertaining whether there is any evidence to sustain the conviction, even where the conviction is regular in form. R. v. Farrell, 15 O.L.R. 100, 12 Can. Cr. Cas. 524; R. v. St. Clair, 27 A.R. 308 (Ont.); R. v. Mosier, 4 P.R. 64 (Ont.); R. v. Simmons, 17 O.L.R. 239, 14 Can. Cr. Cas. 5; R. v. Brisbois, (1907) 15 O.L.R. 264, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 96.

An order discharging the accused in a criminal matter on a writ of habeas corpus is not subject to appeal, apart from any provision for appeal specially authorized by statute. Cox v. Hakes, 15 A.C. 506.

If the first writ of habeas corpus lapsed because of the prisoner's escape, he may be granted another writ on his being recaptured. Re Bartels, 15 O.L.R. 205, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 59.

Habeas corpus does not lie in respect of a commitment in execution from a court of record, and therefore is not available for the review of the validity of a conviction made by a county court judge's criminal court. R. v. Harrison, 15 O.L.R. 231, 13 Can. Cr. Cas. 108.

A writ of habeas corpus to bring up the prisoner for the hearing of a motion for his discharge is not issued as of course, but must be grounded on an affidavit giving some reasonable ground for the application and made by or on behalf of the prisoner. If made by another than the prisoner it should show that the prisoner is under coercion which prevents the affidavit being obtained from him. Re Ross, 3 P.R 301 (Ont.). The application for the writ is ordinarily based on an affidavit of the prisoner himself sworn before a commissioner for taking affidavits, or a notary, attending at the gaol for that purpose. It sets forth that the prisoner is detained under a commitment, a copy of which should be procured and identified by being made an exhibit to the affidavit or attached thereto; that he is detained in custody for no other cause (or if there is more than one commitment the others should also be exhibited); that he believes such detention is unlawful. See Re Ross, 3 P.R. 301 (Ont.).

When the order for the writ to issue has been carried into the Crown office and the writ prepared, it is usual for the prisoner's solicitor to sign a consent on the writ itself dispensing with the production of the body of the prisoner. If this were not done, the gaoler would have to be prepaid his expenses in producing the prisoner as required by the writ; and the gaoler would not be bound to produce the prisoner without such pre-payment of expenses. The consent to dispense with the prisoner's attendance does not affect the gaoler's obligation to make return of the cause of detention. This is done by a formal return or answer.

The original writ, not a mere copy, is to be served on the gaoler or other eistodian; Re Carmichael, 10 C.L.J. 325; and the original writ so served is to be returned into court with the return or answer of the gaoler which will exhibit the original warrant if the commitment was by a justice, and the answer or return will state that the prisoner is held in custody on such warrant of commitment (if more than one, all should be exhibited) and for no other cause. The return may show a valid cause of detention by a new commitment in proper form substituted for a defective one and so defeat the motion for discharge unless the new commitment although seemingly valid can be shown to be invalid and made without jurisdiction in the particular case. R. v. Walton, 12 O.L.R. 1.

Unless the applicant is satisfied to rest his motion on the grounds of invalidity which may appear not merely in the commitment as it stood when the writ was applied for, but in any substituted or other commitment which may be produced in making the return to the writ, he will move for a writ of certiorari in aid of the habeas corpus proceedings. This ancillary method of certiorari is carried out by means of a writ and is not affected by the new procedure of a motion to quash which the Rules substitute for a writ of certiorari when the process below is sought to be quashed and set aside. In Ontario, the bringing up of the proceedings below by a certiorari "in aid," merely assists in determining whether or no the custody is illegal and no order is made quashing the conviction itself on a habeas corpus motion. But con current proceedings might be taken to quash the conviction and to dis charge the prisoner on habeas corpus. The double procedure is rarely followed, as the Crown authorities would direct the prisoner's release forthwith on his conviction being quashed.

SASKATCHEWAN RULES.

Saskatchewan Crown Rules]—The Consolidated Crown Practice Rules of Saskatchewan, 1911, took effect from January 1, 1912, and are as follows:

Custody of Papers.

1. The registrar of the Supreme Court en bane shall have the care and custody of the records and proceedings in respect to proceedings arising by way of certiorari, quo warranto, injunction in the nature of a quo warranto, mandamus, prohibition, or habeas corpus. (C.P.R.)

Certiorari.

2. Subject to the provisions of this rule being dispensed with, as hereinafter provided, no motion to quash any conviction, order or other proceeding by, or before, a justice or justices of the peace, and brought before the Supreme Court of Saskatchewan, or any judge thereof, by certiorari, shall be entertained by such court or judge, unless the defendant is shown to have entered into recognizance in $200, with one or

3. Every application for a writ of certiorari, at the instance of any other person than the Attorney-General on behalf of the Crown, shall be made to a judge by notice of motion or to the court en bane for an order nisi, to show cause why the writ should not issue. (C.P.R. Am. 1.)

4. Such notice or order nisi shall be made upon the justice or one of the justices who made the conviction or order, and upon such other person or persons as the court or a judge shall, upon such application, direct. (C.P.R. Am. 2.)

5. Where, from any cause, the court or a judge is on such application of opinion that the validity of the conviction, or order, can be dealt with on the return of the notice of motion or order nisi, the notice or order nisi shall also be to show cause why the conviction or order should not be quashed, but in this case the private prosecutor shall be one of the persons to be served, and the judge or court may, in such case, dispense with the giving of security required by rule 2. (C.P.R. Am. 3.)

6. No application for a certiorari shall be made after the expiration of six months from the date of the conviction or order. (C.P.R. 5.)

7. On an application for a certiorari to remove a judgment, conviction or order, the court or a judge may order such judgment, conviction or order to be quashed, without the actual issue of the writ of certiorari; and, if such person is in the custody under any warrant or other process issued on such judgment, conviction or order, the court or judge may, in granting such order for a writ of certiorari or to quash such judgment, conviction or order, at any time after said order is granted. order him to be discharged from custody absolutely, or on his giving such security as the court or judge shall direct that if the said judgment, conviction or order is confirmed, or the application for a writ of certiorari is dismissed, or the writ of certiorari is quashed, he will comply with the provisions of the judgment, conviction or order and pay the fine or penalty imposed, and in case of imprisonment without fine, that he will forthwith surrender himself into the same custody and undergo the remainder of his imprisonment, notwithstanding the term limited for his imprisonment shall have expired. If the recognizance shall be forfeited, a warrant for the apprehension of the defendant may be granted by a judge, which shall authorize his arrest and imprisonment for the unexpired term. Quo Warranto.

S. No information in the nature of a quo warranto except an ex-officio information shall be granted without leave of the court or a judge, and unless at the time of application for such leave an affidavit be produced by which some person shall depose on oath that such application is made at his instance as relator; and such person shall be deemed to be the relator in case an order shall be made, and shall be named as such relator in the information, unless the court shall otherwise order. (N.S. 48.)

9. Every objection intended to be made to the title of a defendant on an information in the nature of a quo warranto, shall be specified in the notice of motion, and no objection not so specified shall be raised by the relator on the pleadings without the special leave of the court or a judge. (N.S. 49.)

10. The court or a judge may refuse the application for an information in the nature of a quo warranto, with or without costs, and in its discretion may, upon such notice as may be just, direct the costs to be paid by the solicitor or other parties joining in the affidavits in support of the application, although he is not the proposed relator. (N.S. 50.)

11. A new relator may, by leave of the court or a judge, be substituted for the one who first entered into the recognizance on special eircumstances being shown. (N.S. 51.)

12. Where several applications for informations, in the nature of a quo warranto, have been made against several persons for the usurpation of the same office, and all upon the same or like grounds of objection, the court or a judge may order such applications to be consolidated, and only one information to be filed in respect of all of them, or may order proceedings to be stayed upon all but one, until judgment be given in that one:

Provided always that no order be made to consolidate or stay any proceedings against any defendant, unless he give an undertaking to disclaim, if judgment be given for the Crown upon the information which proceeds. (N.S. 52.)

13. If the defendant, in an information in the nature of a quo warranto, does not intend to defend he may, to prevent judgment by default, file a disclaimer in the office of the registrar, and deliver a copy to the relator or his solicitor. Upon the disclaimer being filed judgment of ouster may be entered, and the costs taxed as in judgment by default. (N.S. 53.)

Mandamus.

14. The notice of motion, in the case of an application for a prerogative writ of mandamus, shall be served upon every person who shall appear to be interested or likely to be affected by the proceedings. The court or a judge may direct notice to be given to any other person or persons, and adjourn the hearing for that purpose. (N.S. 55.)

CRIMINAL CODE (PART XI)

[§ 576]

15. Any person, whether he has been so served or not, who can make it appear to the court or judge that he is affected by the proceeding for a writ of mandamus, may show cause against the application and shall be liable to costs in the discretion of the court or judge, if the order should be made or the prosecutor obtain judgment. (N.S. 56.)

16. The order for a mandamus need not be served, but where served the cost of service of the order may be allowed in the discretion of the taxing officer, where the writ is not issued. (N.S. 57.)

17. The court or a judge may, if deemed proper, order that any writ of mandamus shall be peremptory in the first instance. (N.S. 60.)

18. Every writ of mandamus shall bear date on the day when it is issued. The writ may be made returnable forthwith, or time may be allowed to return it, either with or without terms, as to the court or a judge shall think fit. (No. 61.)

19. Any person, by law compellable to make return to a writ of mandamus, shall make his return to the first writ. (N.S. 62.)

20. Where a point of law is raised in answer to a return, or any other pleading in mandamus, and there is no issue of fact to be decided, the court or a judge shall, on the argument of the point of law, give judgment for the successful party, without any motion for judgment being made or required. (N.S. 63.)

21. Where the applicant obtains judgment, he shall be entitled forthwith to a peremptory writ of mandamus to enforce the command contained in the original writ, and the judgment shall direct that a peremptory writ do issue. (N.S. 64.)
