Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I would like to have some evidence besides the bald assertion of the Minister as to the work he has performed. The Minister may have been told by parties who have been there that he was performing excellent service, but we have no report from Mr. Metcalfe. Has he reported officially to the Minister? Has he given the Minister any evidence that he has been performing this service? I had no doubt that the Minister would say he was a very excellent officer, and a very, very respectable man. All the representatives in the Conservative ranks, according to their own estimation, are such, but I want a little more than that. I see that the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Larivière) made a statement as to rats. Perhaps he may have a just appreciation of something of that kind. Perhaps he may have had an opportunity of illustrating the benefit of ratting. Perhaps he may remember some of his former actions in relation to ratting.

Mr. RYKERT. I rise to a point of order. There is nothing of that kind in the Estimates.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Rats.

Mr. CASEY.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I am pleased to see the sudden change which pervades the face of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) when a reference is made to ratting. I see that his hair is standing on end. That might represent that he is frightened, and that he is going to rat too. Perhaps, if he goes to his own constituency, he may find some people there ratting, and that is not very agreeable to that hon. gentleman. What I was desirous to know, when I was interrupted, was what are the duties of this man Metcalfe, and whether he has made any report to the Minister, and how much he has received from the Government up to the present time for his services during the last year. I really think that we are entitled to have the information.

Mr. DAVIN. I happen to know something about Mr. Metcalfe. If my hon. friend were to go to Winnipeg while immigrants were coming in there, he would see that Mr. Metcalfe is probably one of the most active officers in the employ of the Government. He is indefatigable in directing immigrants where they should go, all over Manitoba and the North-West Territories, according to the best of his judgment. If Mr. Metcalfe were not employed, somebody else would have to be employed in that position.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). In my simplicity I supposed the Minister who had charge of the department would be able to give us the information, otherwise I would have asked the hon. member for East Assiniboia, whom we all know is ready to give information to every one who desires it in this House. I hope the hon. member will not feel in any way hurt because I neglected to ask him before asking the Minister.

Mr. CARLING. Mr. Metcalfe, as I have already explained, had charge of the intelligence office during the summer season. His duty was to advise immigrants and to send them to proper sections for settlement, in a word, to give all the information possible. He is only employed from spring until autumn.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Has he made a report?

Mr. CARLING. I do not know that it is necessary. He is not an agent.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Has he made a report? The hon. gentleman can say, yes or no.

Mr. CARLING. He has written a number of letters to the department, which were not published in the reports, explaining what he has done.

Mr. LARIVIÈRE. I owe a word of explanation to the hon. member for East Elgin. I did not think, when I referred to this advertisement as a joke, that there would be an applicant so soon for the position. I am sorry that in referring to that advertisement I have offended the hon. member. I did not expect to raise his ambition so soon.

Mr. WATSON. There is one item mentioned here that I highly approve of, Mr. A. McMillan, lecturer, $400. I believe, knowing that gentleman, that the money was well expended. Mr. McMillan is employed by the Local Government, and has been a very efficient immigration agent, and has delivered lectures in the old country. As long as money is judiciously spent on immigration to Manitoba and the North-West, I will support any vote in this House for that purpose. At the same time I believe that large sums of money are practically thrown away under our present system of assisting immigration. I have no better proof of this fact than the report of Mr. Grahame, the immigration agent in the city of Winnipeg. I have always contended that a great number of people that were reported to have gone to Manitoba and the North-West by the Minister of Agriculture in his annual report, did not go there, or if they did go, they did not remain there. On this point I may remark that in looking over the Hansard I find that while I was absent from my seat a few moments the other night, the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) made a statement that we had a most iniquitous——

Mr. DAVIN. I rise to a point of order. The hon. member cannot refer to a previous debate.

Mr. WATSON. It has been stated in this House that the Government of Manitoba had not the confidence of the people. It is not necessary for me to take up the time of the House to prove that they have the confidence of the people. I will just say that the administration of the Local Government that preceded them was objectionable to the people, from the fact that, whether from the fault of that Government or of the Ottawa Government, the immigrants who went into that Province did not remain there, and the people, when the local elections occurred, almost unanimously recorded their votes against the administration preceding the present one. Only four Conservatives were left in the Local Legislature in Manitoba; in two of the constituencies, two Liberals were running against one Conservative. There could not be better evidence furnished to show the unpopularity of the administration of this Government and the administration of the previous Conservative Government of the Province of Manitoba The report of Mr. Grahame contains statements which I have always held to be correct in this House, and probably the Minister will believe them now that they are to be found in a report of his own officer, and a very good officer Mr. Grahame is. He says:

"SIR,—I have the honor to submit to you my immigration report on Manitoba and the Canadian North-West Territories, during the present year

"Many will be surprised to learn, that the number of actual settlers in our Province and Territories, has not been as large as expected, neither has the amount of wealth brought in by those who have come, been as considerable as that of former years. This may appear strange when we consider the many efforts that were put forth by the different organisations to induce immigration to the Province and neighboring Territories, but it is nevertheless a fact, that, out of the many thousands who left the Mother Country, ostensibly for the North-West, a large number of them found occupation and homes on the Pacific coast, and, I regret to say, a large majority of these are on the American side.

"Strenuous efforts have been made both by myself and staff as well as others who are interested in immigraton, to cause these people to remain but they preferred to follow out their own plans.

"I merely mention this as an illustration of the fast increasing difficulties attending the efforts of your agents to aid in the successful settlement of the large area of vacant lands in this Province and adjoining Territories."

Efforts no doubt should be made to keep immigrants in Manitoba and the North-West, for on the Pacific coast there is no great field for them, as there are not there the same advantages offered by the North-West and Manitoba for settlement in the shape of vast tracts of arable land, and these advantages should be pointed out to immigrants. No doubt the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will induce immigrants to go as far west as possible for the purpose of collecting fares from them. The Local Government of Manitoba are doing much to encourage immigration there at present, not from foreign countries but from other Provinces of the Dominion. Some may object to this, but I, as a Manitoban, want to see the people come and fill up the country. I believe people in Manitoba are worth more than in any other Province because their lands will produce better results. The Local Government has an agent Mr. McMillan, and Mr. Clarke who, although not an immigration agent proper, has charge of the exhibits, both good officers, and when the Minister of Immigration learns that the Local Government of Manitoba are prepared to furnish men of the stamp of Mr. McMillan to go to the old country and deliver lectures there, I hope they will aid the Province more liberally than in the past. This year they propose to expend $10,000 for immigration purposes, and if they were assisted by the Dominion Government much could be done to encourage immigration to Manitoba and the North-West. They have adopted a system which is preferable to sending out immigration pamphlets and that is sending samples of the products of the Province, and good results have followed this system. Immigration pamphlets are distributed by the thousands throughout this country, especially to the constituents of hon. gentlemen which are intended for distribution in foreign countries, and a display of the exhibits illustrating the products of the country has more effect in inducing immigration than any other system.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant.) Is there any report from Mr. Smith?

Mr. CARLING. There is no report except that which appeared last year; he has not been employed this year.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think all his letters and reports should be laid on the Table of the House.

Mr. CARLING. He was required to attend with all his correspondence before the Public Accounts Committee, and he did so.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Has Mr. Metcalfe reported?

Mr. CARLING. I have already stated that Mr. Metcalfe had correspondence with the department, but made no official report. He was employed as an intelligence officer. We had an immigration agent in Winnipeg. He was temporarily employed during the summer months.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). We are entitled to more information than we have recived. Mr. Metcalfe has received $1,400 or $1,500 and the whole office has cost between $4,000 or $5,000.

Mr. CARLING. Does the hon. gentleman mean that the Intelligence Office, of which Mr. Metcalfe is chief, cost $4,000 or $5,000 a year?

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). The expenses of the office as shown by the Auditor General's Report were $4,519. I am not complaining of the lack of knowledge of items which the Minister should have at his fingers' end so much as that we have no means of knowing what services are performed by officers such as Mr. Metcalfe. We are called upon to vote large sums of money for Mr. Smythe, but we have no reports of the duties performed by him further than the evidence he gives before the Public Accounts Committee, and a more pitiable and a more unfortunate examination in the interest of the Government, never took place before any committee. It is an outrage that this man should draw money from the Government and yet that he does not comply in any respect with the instructions which the Minister sent him. He makes no report, he gives no dates or no information further than that he knew that he had been employed a certain number of days and that he had expended a certain sum of money. I was surprised this afternoon to hear my friend the Minister state that he had ordered Mr. Webster to go to places where there were gatherings of people. I have no doubt that this was true and that the chief part of his duty was to go to places where there were gatherings and especially where those gatherings took place about election times. I say that from the evidence of Mr. Webster himself, his principal duty is to go from one county to another during an election campaign to do the dirty work of the Government of the day.

An hon. MEMBER. Oh no, not dirty work.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I say it advisedly. I hold, Sir, that the money paid to Mr. Metcalfe, Mr. Webster and Mr. Smythe instead of being used for immigration purposes is systematically used for election purposes in the interest of the Tory party.

Mr. HESSON. It is not true and you know it.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). That assertion of the hon. member for Perth has no weight with me. I am perfectly well aware that I could assert the strongest truth that possibly could be and he would say it was an untruth if it did not suit the Conservative party. Can we expect impartiality from that source? No, Sir, we have known the man too long. We know the reason why he dare not raise his voice against that which the Government does. This appropriation for immigration purposes as has been correctly stated to-night is an appropriation to a very great extent to debauch the country at election times, and the sooner that the system is done away with the better it will be. While I am in favor of a proper system of immigration, I hold that we should not advise men to immigrate from one Province to another Province. I am in favor of a proper system of immigration that will bring the proper kind of men to this country but this money voted by us for immigration purposes has been squandered and we have no beneficial results from it. The evidence of Mr. Smythe and Mr. Webster proved that they were not employed for immigration purposes but that during election times they go into localities where the election is being held, not for the purpose of inducing people to change from Ontario into the North-West, but for the purpose of inducing them to leave the Reform ranks and join the Conservative fold.

An hon. MEMBER. Time.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). My hon. friend cries "time." He has a son that I will not refer to. I feel that this money voted for immigration purposes is being improperly used and I think when the proper time comes we should move a resolution asking to do away with this appropriation altogether on account of the manner in which it is has been applied in the past.

Mr. CARLING. If the hon. gentleman will look at page 25 of my report, he will find that 255 arrived at Quebec, and 1,014 at Halifax.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The point I allude to is this: A letter of instructions given to Mr. Smythe by the Minister said among other things that he was to go to Manitoba and the North-Western States, and institute a comparison as to settlement, the conditions that prevailed, the soil, the climate, the railways and the land regulations, and he was instructed that the facts ascertained should be reported to the department for the information of the Minister, and that it was the desire of the Minister that he should make monthly reports of his operations or more frequently. I thought we ought before concurrence to have these monthly reports laid on the Table of the House. I think under the peculiar circumstances of this case they ought to be produced, and my simple question was whether the Minister would bring them down.

Mr. CARLING. I can only say that any reports made by Mr. Smythe will be brought down as requested.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think my hon. friend was right in saying that there were no reports. I would like to ask the hon. Minister what he means to do with regard to repatriation. I see that last year he expended nearly $6,000 for that purpose. That appears to be too little or too large. My impression is that spasmodic efforts in that direction are of no use at all. If the Minister has a scheme to submit to the House, it will deserve serious consideration, but the sending of a few hundred or thousand dollars for such a purpose is of no service.

Mr. FISHER. There are some points on which I wish information, and a few remarks which I have to make before this item passes. In the first place, in the Estimates we have before us, the Minister is only asking $48,000 for the coming year. In the Estimates for the current year he asked $50,000, so that this is about the same vote that was taken last year for this service; but I find that in the Supplementary Estimates, the hon. Minister, having, I suppose, spent that $50,000, asks us to endorse payments under Governor General's warrants, amounting to $48,000, almost as much more. I think we must have some explanation of this extraordinary state of affairs. The hon. Minister comes down to this House, and in seriousness, with due deliberation and careful preparation, announces to the House and the country that he is prepared to carry on the immigration of this country for $50,000, and then we find that he has been obliged practically to expend $100,000. This does not give us any encouragement to look on this $48,000, which he now asks for next year as being a final or well considered estimate, and I would like to ask the Minister on what he has based his expectation that instead of spending $100,000, as he did last year, he will get off with less than half the amount. I find that there are a number of items under this expenditure in years past connected with bonuses or commissions on immigration. Two dollars a head is allowed for bringing out and placing immigrant children, and I want to know from the Minister whether he intends to continue those commissions. I know something about this immigration of children. I am thinking of a home located in my own county when I say in a general way that these children are fairly healthy and succeed fairly well in the country, and I do not wish to be understood as casting any slur upon them. The work, I believe, is done in a practical way and is as successful as any work of that kind could be expected to be; but that does not lead me to believe that it is wise or right for the Government of Canada to pay for bringing these children out. I know that in the country from which they come one of the greatest problems is what to do with them and the people there are prepared to spend anything necessary to send these children out. They do that for their own benefit, and I do not think the people of Canada ought to be called upon to pay one cent for that work. I find that a certain Mr. Watelet received a commission of $5 a head on 80 children, and I would like to know why he gets $5 a head while others only get $2 a head. I also find a bonus on European immigrants put under the expenditure in the London office, and I would like the Minister to explain how it is that this money is spent in the London office, and in what way this bonus is given? I find that this expenditure for immigration has not decreased as the Government promised last year that it should. I was surprised to hear the Minister talk about a gentleman who, I believe was employed to prevent the people of Ontario going to the United States. It seems to me an extraordinary position for the Minister to be forced to prevent immigration from our own country. If ever I heard a condemnation of the policy of the Government opposite, I heard it to-night from the Minister of Agriculture, in the admission that it was necessary to have one of our employees go about the richest and finest Province in the Dominion to prevent the people going out of the country, which can only be because the hon. gentleman's policy failed, and because he has proved this country not to be a good country for our people to live in. I am surprised to find that a Minister has spent the money of the people in such work. I do not believe the people in Ontario want to go to the United States, and if they go it is because hon. gentlemen opposite have laid such grievous burdens on the people that they are driven to seek for a living in another country. If the hon. gentleman finds it is necessary in Ontario, I would like to find what he finds necessary in the Province of Quebec. He has here an item for repatriation; I grant you it is necessary to keep the people in the Province of Quebec, as the hon. gentleman thinks it is necessary to keep the people in Ontario. A large number of people leave the Province of Quebec to find employment in the factories of the United States which they cannot find at home, and I find, on examining the municipal statistics of the Province of Quebec, that as in Ontario, the rural population is not increasing. Since 1881, the rural constituencies have not increased in population, and that in face of the well known fact that the people of the Province of Quebec are the most prolific people in the world. This is a striking commentary on a policy of the Government. These people have not gone to the Western Provinces, for, if we examine the statistics of the Province of Manitoba, we do not find any great number of French-Canadians there. I must say that this vote upon immigration does not appear to accomplish the object we had in view, and the hon. gentleman had better curtail the vote still more. If he wishes to economise, here is a vote in which he can do so largely without any deteriment to the service of the country, for we will have just as many suitable immigrants as we had in years past, without spending any of this money.

Mr. CARLING. The hon. gentleman has repeated things that has been said over and over again. He has spoken about the $48,000 voted by for Governor General's warrant. I may state to the hon. gentleman that that amount closed up the assisted passage arrangement in the steamers; last April, when we got in all the accounts, we found that we required some $48,000 more to pay them off. We will have nothing more to do with steamboat companies for assisted passages.

Mr. FISHER. Does the hon. gentleman intend still to give any bonus for children immigration?

Mr. CARLING. Yes.

Mr. FISHER. Will the hon. gentleman explain with regard to what bonus is given to European immigrants?

Mr. CARLING. That system was adopted years ago of giving a bonus to immigrants, on arriving at Winnipeg, of $5 each. This was paid to the steamboat agents. Instructions have been given to discontinue that system.

Mr. FISHER. How is it that M. Paul Watelet received $5 a head for children?

Mr. CARLING. It is this $5 bonus we have just spoken of.

Mr. FISHER. The item is "commission on 80 children at $5."

Mr. CARLING. That is not correct. We have not paid $5 a head for children, but only for continental immigrants who are brought to Winnipeg.

Mr. MITCHELL. I move that the item pass and the Committee rise and report, seconded by Mr. Davin.

Mr. FISHER. I find in the Report of the Auditor General that Mr. Watelet is paid $5 a head for children.

Mr. CARLING. I have explained that.

Mr. FISHER. It seems extraordinary that the Minister should allow a statement which he says is incorrect to appear in a report from his department.

Mr. CARLING. That is not from my department, but from the Auditor General's Department. I have explained it to the hon. gentleman, and I think he ought to be satisfied.

Mr. FISHER. The Auditor General is the check on the different departments, and I do not believe this would be put in his report without a reason for it.

Committee rose and reported the resolutions.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would suggest to the acting leader of the Government that it would facilitate the business of the House if he would insert in the Supplementary Estimates some trifling matters which I have called attention to before.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 2:30 a.m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 17th April, 1889.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PAYMENTS FOR NORTH-WEST SURVEYS.

Mr. SMITH (Ontario) (for Mr. MADILL) asked, What amount was paid to Ludger Miville Deschenes, of St. Roch des Aulnaies, Province of Quebec, for surveys in the North-West and Manitoba, from 1878 to 1887?

Mr. DEWDNEY. The amount paid to Mr. Deschenes for surveys from 1878 to 1887 was $12,895.28.

9TH BATTALION.

Mr. VANASSE (translation) asked, Whether the Government have been informed that several officers and men of the 9th Battalion are at the present moment in the woods around Lake Megantic, with their arms and other stores belonging to the said battalion? Whether these officers and men have been granted permission by the military authorities to proceed on this expedition?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In answer to my hon. friend, I must say that the Government have not been informed that several officers and men of the 9th Battalion are now in the forests around Lake Megantic; but I must say that ten carbines have been served out to the constables sent by the Local Government on the authority of Major Roy and without the authority of the Militia Department. I have drawn the attention of the Major General who is responsible for the discipline of the force to the fact that arms have been loaned without the sanction of the department.

CAPE BRETON RAILWAY.

Mr. FLYNN asked, Has a contract been entered into by the Minister of Railways and Canals for the erection of stations and other buildings on the line of the Cape Breton Railroad from Sydney and North Sydney to the Grand Narrows? If so, to whom was the contract given? What was the amount of the contract? Were tenders invited for the work? How many tenders were received? Was the lowest tender accepted?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The answer to the first question is, yes; to the second, to Sims & Slater; to the third, it was a schedule price contract; to the fourth, yes; to the fifth, 18; to the sixth, yes. The work from Sydney and North Sydney to the Grand Narrows is being carried on by the Government at the contractors' expense.

JESUITS' ESTATES ACT.

Mr. BARRON asked, Is it the intention of the Government to cause legal proceedings to be instituted, in order to test the legality in a court of law of the Act of the Province of Quebec, 51-52 Victoria, chapter 13, intituled, "An Act respecting the settlement of the Jesuits' Estates." If not, then does the Government propose to bear the cost, or any proportion of the costs, which may be incurred by properly testing, in a court of law, the constitutionality of the said Act? Did the Government not bear and pay a proportion of the costs incurred in the suit of The Queen vs. The St. Catharines Milling and Lumbering Company, and if so, how much has thus far been paid by the Government in this suit?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As to the first part of the question, I would say that, as the Government is still of opinion that the Act referred to was within the competence of the Provincial Legislature, and as this House has unmistakeably concurred in that opinion, it rests with persons who, like the hon. gentleman, believe the Act is ultra vires, to take the responsibility of initiating any legal proceedings to test its validity. As to the latter part of the question, the hon. gentleman must move.

JOSEPH CARBONNEAU.

Mr. DESAULNIERS asked, Whether the Government are aware that Joseph Carbonneau, of Three Rivers, performed work in the apartments of the Post Office Inspector at that place, and that he has never been paid either by the Government or by Inspector Bourgeois, notwithstanding that the latter passed the account of the said Carbonneau? Is it the intention of the Government to settle the said account, or to compel the inspector to pay the said Carbonneau?

Mr. HAGGART. The question has not yet come up before the department, but I have ordered enquiry to be made of the inspector.

THREE PER CENT. LOAN.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT asked, Have Government demended from the High Commissioner, and from the Financial Agents, explanations of the reasons why they inserted in the prospectus of the last 3 per cent. loan a clause appropriating the entire sinking fund to the purchase of stock of the said loan, without any words of limitation? If not, do Government intend to demand explanations from said parties?

Mr. FOSTER. The Government is in communication with the High Commissioner, who is now on his way to Ottawa, and I will see him personally in a few days.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT asked, Have Government demanded from the Financial Agents of Canada a list showing the names of the various applicants for the late 3 per cent. loan, together with the amounts for which they respectively applied? Also, the names of the parties to whom the stock of the said loan was finally allotted, and of the amounts held by each of such parties respectively? If not, do the Government intend to make such demand?

Mr. FOSTER. According to the usual custom, which I think was carried out by my hon. friend when in office, I am obliged to answer these three questions in the negative.

DEPARTMENT OF INTERIOR—CLERKS.

Mr. WELDON (St. John) asked, How many regular clerks are at present employed by the Department of the Interior, both inside and outside service? How many extra clerks are at present in the employ of the department in the same service?

Mr. DEWDNEY. If the hon. gentleman will move for that return without notice, I will bring it down to-morrow, or the day after.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I move for a return embodying the information asked for in my question.

Motion agreed to.

S. L. BEDSON.

Mr. WATSON asked, Whether the S. L. Bedson who was appointed to the command of the 91st Battalion some months ago, and more recently appointed an extra A.D.C. to His Excellency the Governor General, is the same S. L. Bedson who is Warden of the Manitoba Provincial Penitentiary? If so, upon whose recommendation was he chosen as A.D.C. to His Excellency, and why selected instead of senior officers of long standing and faithful service in the Province of Manitoba? Was the Minister of Justice aware of those appointments, and was his sanction obtained?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Lieutenant-Colonel S. L. Bedson of the 91st Battalion, extra A.D.C. to His Excellency, is the Warden of the Manitoba Penitentiary. The regulations for the promotion of officers do not apply to the appointments of A.D.C.'s, who are appointed by His Excellency without any recommendation on the part of the department.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I was aware of the appointment, and stated that I saw no objections.

Mr. WATSON. On whose recommendation was he appointed?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. There was no recommendation.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Not of any Minister.

COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved that Bill (No. 11) for the prevention and suppression of combinations in restraint of trade, be removed from Public Bills and Orders and transferred to Government Orders.

Motion agreed to.

STEAMSHIP SERVICE—AUSTRALIA AND B. C.

Mr. FOSTER moved that, to-morrow, the House go into Committee to consider the following resolution:—

Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that the Governor in Council may give to any individual or company a subsidy not exceeding the sum of twenty-five thousand pounds sterling per annum, to assist in establishing an effective fortnightly steamship service between British Columbia and the Australian Colonies and New Zealand, such subsidy to be given for such term of years and on such conditions as the Governor in Council may consider expedient.

Mr. LAURIER. I rise to renew the demand I made yesterday to the hon. gentleman, to lay before the House all the correspondence and papers in relation to these different subsidies. Although I have but faint hopes, after the answer given yesterday, that my demand will be complied with, still, I do not altogether despair, trusting that better counsels may come to prevail with the hon. gentleman. Be this as it may, if the hon. gentleman does not see fit to bring down the papers, when he moves the House to consider this resolution, I shall deem it my duty to take the sense of the House as to whether the House will be in a position to discuss this question without these papers.

Mr. FOSTER. I have to repeat what I said yesterday, that the negotiations are in such a state that it will be impossible to bring down the papers.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If negotiations are in such a state, the Government should not ask us for these huge sums of money. Before we are asked for huge sums of money involving a charge of many millions on the public service, we ought at least to know what state the negotiations with the several parties are in.

Mr. FOSTER. As I said yesterday, as full explanations as can be given, and I think they will be satisfactory to the House, will be given when I move the resolution to-morrow.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The Minister says that negotiations are pending in relation to this important service. I suppose we might draw the inference that no final arrangement has yet been arrived at.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There has been a good deal of unofficial correspondence and verbal communication between the Agents General of the various colonies and the High Commissioner in England. There are no specific propositions made by the different Australian colonies, but there has been a general expression of a desire to join in forming this communication, and there is a statement that they will be quite willing to pay liberally, according to their various means, in establishing this line, and they desire Canada to take the initiative. We ask for the sum of £25,000 sterling to be appropriated as an offer on the part of Canada to establish this communication. There has been a good many letters written, as anyone can understand—written unofficially by persons holding office in the different colonies. Canada being the larger, and, as they say, the wealthier and the more important of all the colonies, she should take the first step. That is exactly the position in which the matter stands. We ask Parliament to vote this sum as an offer to the Australian colonies. They will answer, I believe, in the affirmative.

Motion agreed to.

STEAMSHIP SERVICE—CHINA, JAPAN AND B. C.

Mr. FOSTER moved that, to-morrow, the House resolve itself into Committee to consider the following resolution:—

Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that the Governor in Council may give to any individual or company, to whom may be given by the Government of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland the aid hereinafter mentioned, a subsidy not exceeding the sum of fifteen thousand pounds sterling per annum, for a monthly steamship service, or a subsidy not exceeding the sum of twenty-five thousand pounds sterling per annum, for a fortnightly steamship service between British Columbia and China and Japan, such subsidy to be given for such term of years as may be considered expedient by the Governor in Council: Provided always, that during such term the Government of the United Kingdon of Great Britain and Ireland gives to such individual or company a subsidy of not less than forty-five thousand pounds sterling per annum for the monthly service, or of not less than seventy-five thousand pounds sterling per annum for the fortnightly service above mentioned.

Motion agreed to.

STEAMSHIP SERVICE—CANADA AND UNITED KINGDOM.

Mr. FOSTER moved that, to-morrow, the House resolve itself into Committee to consider the following resolution:—

Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that the Governor in Council may enter into a contract, for a term not exceeding ten years, with any individual or company, for the performance of a fast weekly steamship service between Canada and the United Kingdom, making connection with a French port, on such terms and conditions as to the carriage of mails and otherwise as the Governor in Council deems expedient, for a subsidy not exceeding the sum of five hundred thousand dollars a year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As Australia is not to be consulted in this case, may we expect that the papers will be brought down?

Mr. FOSTER. Such papers as we can bring will be brought down.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I think the Minister of Finance should, at a subsequent stage, inform the House as to the position of the appropriation and whether he has arrived at an arrangement, or whether correspondence is still going on.

Mr. FOSTER. I will do so.

Motion agreed to.

BOUNDARIES OF ONTARIO.

On the Order that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider the following resolution:—

Resolved, That a humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying that she may be graciously pleased to cause a measure to be submitted to the Parliament of the United Kingdom, declaring and providing the following to be the westerly, northerly and easterly boundaries of the Province of Ontario, that is to say,—

So much of a line drawn to the Lake of the Woods through the waters eastward of that lake and west of Long Lake which divide British North America from the territory of the United States, and thence through the Lake of the Woods to the most north-western point of that lake as runs northward from the United States boundary and from the most north-western point of the Lake of the Woods, a line drawn due north until it strikes the middle line of the course of the river discharging the waters of the lake called Lake Seul or the Lonely Lake, whether above or below its confluence with the stream flowing from the Lake of the Woods towards Lake Winnipeg, and thence proceeding eastward from the point at which the before-mentioned line strikes the middle line of the course of the river last aforesaid, along the middle line of the course of the same river (whether called by the name of the English River or as to the part below the confluence by the name of the River Winnipeg) up to Lake Seul or the Lonely Lake, and thence along the middle line of Lake Seul or Lonely Lake to the head of that lake, and thence by a straight line to the nearest point of the middle line of the waters of Lake St. Joseph, and thence along that middle line until it reaches the foot or outlet of that lake, and thence along the middle line of the river by which the waters of Lake St. Joseph discharge themselves to the shore of the part of Hudson's Bay commonly known as James' Bay, and thence south-easterly, following upon the said shore to the point where a line drawn due north from the head of Lake Temiscamingue would strike it, and thence due south along the said line to the head of the said lake, and thence into the said lake to descend the Ottawa River until the latter is struck by the north-western boundary of the Seigneurie of Vaudreuil, and thence along the said north-western boundary running south twenty-five degrees west, to the westernmost angle of the Seigneurie of New Longueuil, and thence running along the limit between the Township of Lancaster and the said Seigneurie of New Longueuil in the direction of south thirty-four degrees east, to a stone boundary on the north bank of the Lake St. Francis, at the cove west of the Pointe-au-Baudet, in the said limit between the Township of Lancaster and the Seigneurie of New Longueuil.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This resolution is in accordance with an understanding arrived at with the Premier of Ontario. I sent him a copy of the resolution as it appeared in print, lest any verbal inaccuracies should occur, and I expect to receive it to-morrow, when I will move it, instead of moving it to day.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This matter, I suppose, to a certain extent affects the Province of Quebec. Are all the parties concerned agreed to this—the Province of Quebec, as well as the Dominion and Ontario? I think this touches the Province of Quebec.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It defines the eastern boundary of Ontario. There is no difficulty in regard to that, because it is a statutory provision.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I thought the decision touched the northern boundary as well.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not in the least.

Mr. LAURIER. The Province of Quebec is also interested, as the eastern limit of Ontario will be the western limit of Quebec. I suppose the Quebec Government have been consulted with respect to the matter?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We had a conversation with the present Premier of the Province of Quebec, and the hope was entertained that we would have an Act defining the boundaries of both Provinces, but we could not quite come to a conclusion as to the northern boundary of the Province of Quebec. There is no question as to the western boundary.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The only point I notice in the description which the hon. gentleman proposes is with respect to the southern boundary of Ontario, west of Lake Superior, a question which was never brought before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which had to deal with the western and a portion of the northern boundary. At the beginning of the sentence of the hon. gentleman's description there is a clause which is somewhat ambiguous, and it appears to me that it is more important to be perfectly clear than to follow the particular words found in the decision of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. If the hon. gentleman were to say that the international boundary west of Lake Superior, that is, the boundary between British North America and the United States, was the southern boundary of Ontario west as far as of the North West angle, the matter would be clear.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As the hon. gentleman is aware, the first portion of the resolution is framed in the exact words of the judgment of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. If Mr. Mowat, after reading the copy I sent him the day before yesterday, sees any indistinctness in the description no doubt he will suggest a change. I may say further that in consequence of the delays which were caused by the attempt to bring in the Province of Quebec as well, the matter was postponed a little later, and therefore the opinion of the Legislature of Ontario could not be taken on the matter, but the Government of Ontario will take the responsibility, knowing what the Ontario Legislature has always claimed, of recommending, by a despatch through the Governor General, the adoption of the line mentioned in the Address of the Dominion Parliament.

ADJOURNMENT—GOOD FRIDAY.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I said I would bring up the subject of the Easter recess on Thursday, but as so many hon. gentlemen desire to know what the arrangement is to be, whether the House will sit on Saturday or not, I desire to ask the opinion of hon. members as to whether we should meet on Saturday or whether we should adjourn from Thursday to Monday.

Mr. MITCHELL. Does the right hon. gentleman propose to get through the business of the House by next Saturday week? If he does, it will be a very material reason to the leader of the Independent party to adopt the course generally pursued by the right hon. gentleman, in courteously giving way to the strong pressure brought upon him by his supporters. My supporters are rather the other way, but, notwithstanding that, I am inclined to yield to what appears to be the very decided opinion among the members, to sit on Saturday. Although I would prefer not to sit on Saturday, yet, like the right hon. gentleman, I courteously yield to what is the public sentiment on this side of the House.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I am glad that the leader of the Government has announced his intention to sit on Saturday, because, if we did not sit on Saturday, it would be rather inconvenient and unfair to those members who come a long distance.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In order to settle the matter I move:

That when the House adjourns on Thursday night, it shall stand adjourned until Saturday at three o'clock, and that Government Orders shall have precedence on Saturday.

Motion agreed to.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY—SUMMER FREIGHT RATES.

Mr. LAURIER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to call the attention of the Prime Minister, who is acting as Minister of Railways, to a matter connected with the Intercolonial Railway. I understand that the Prime Minister has received a communication from the Board of Trade of Quebec, representing that the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway are now carrying flour to the Maritime Provinces at summer rates, and asking that the same rates should now be applied on the Intercolonial Railway from Quebec.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell).

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I received a telegraphic communication in that direction and I have sent it to the Department of Railways for a report, which report I have no doubt I shall get during the day.

DIVISION LIST—CORRECTION.

Mr. MARA. I wish to call the attention of the House to two mistakes which appear in the division lists of Hansard on Monday evening last. On the third reading of the Franchise Bill and on the amendment of the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), the names of Mr. Prior and myself appear among the "nays," whereas we voted with the "yeas." Then, on the amendment of the member for Marquette (Mr. Watson), Mr. Prior and I voted "nay," whereas we are recorded as having voted "yea." I wish particularly to set myself right in the latter division, as I do not wish to appear as having voted for an amendment which, if carried, would cut off at least 30 per cent. of the voters on the Dominion list.

CUSTOMS ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. BOWELL moved:

That the order for the third reading of Bill (No. 117) to further amend the Customs Act, chapter 32 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, be discharged, and that the Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of amending the same by striking out that portion of section 4, amending clause 61, on the 25th line to the 38th line, both inclusive.

Mr. MITCHELL. What is the meaning of this?

Mr. BOWELL. It is to strike out the clause relating more particularly to the inland transportation and leaving the second section of the clause intact which provides for the levying of the duty upon parts of machinery brought into the country. That part of the clause referring to duties upon parts of any manufactured articles shall remain as a substantive clause.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I congratulate the hon. gentleman that he has reconsidered this matter, and I think his decision will be very satisfactory to the trade generally.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think so, too. I am very glad the Minister has come to the conclusion he has. It is one instance in which he has yielded to the mercantile interests, and I think they will appreciate it.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. SCRIVER. I regret very much that while the Minister was considering the question of amending the Bill in this very important particular, he did not reconsider his decision as to the regulation referring to frontier ports, requiring entries to be made at certain hours during the day. I can assure him, from my personal experience, that such a regulation will be impossible of enforcement, and you, Sir (Mr. Colby) know just as well as I do, because you live on the frontier, that it will be an exceedingly vexatious regulation, and, so far as I can see, will not result in any practical protection to the revenue or any good whatever.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 126) to amend "The Summary Convictions Act," chapter 178 of the Revised Statutes, and the Act amending the same.—(Sir John Thompson.)

INTEREST IN THE NORTH-WEST.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 132) to amend the Revised Statutes respecting Interest.

(In the Committee.)

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The Bill applies only to the North-West Territories, and its object is to provide that judgment shall bear 6 per cent. interest to the day it is recovered, unless the court otherwise orders.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

EXPROPRIATION OF LANDS.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 131) respecting Expropriation of Lands.

(In the Committee.)

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I propose that section 16, in regard to which some question was raised as to its effect on civil rights, shall be dropped.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—INTOXICANTS IN THE N.W.T.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. FISHER. Before that motion is put, I desire to call the attention of the House to a matter which, I think, is of great importance not only to the people of the North-West Territories but to all the people of Canada. I do not think I can do better, by way of explaining this matter, than to read to the House the motion which I intend to place in your hands:

That all the words after the word "That" be left out, and the following inserted instead thereof:—Mr. Speaker do not now leave the Chair, but that it be resolved, That this House regrets that the Government has allowed, through its officer, the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories, the issue of permits for the sale of intoxicants within those Territories, thereby endorsing and assisting the violation of the spirit of the sections 92 and following, under the heading "Prohibition of Intoxicants" in the North-West Territories Act: And, also, that the Minister of the Interior has allowed, in the Rocky Mountains Park, the sale of intoxicants without any authorisation from him, and has taken no steps to punish this violation of the Rocky Mountains Park Act, by the provisions of which all trade and commerce in the Park is under his control and management.

This motion, as you will see, is divided into two parts, and I propose to take up the second part first, as being more particular, and not of such general application. No doubt it will be in the memory of most members of this House, that, a short time ago, the Minister of the Interior laid upon the Table of the House, a return, in response to an order of the House, for all papers and correspondence in connection with the issue of licenses in the North-West Territories. We had hoped that we would find in that return some explanation of the facts which have occurred, to the knowledge of everybody in this House and the country, in regard to the issuing of permits for the sale of intoxicants in the North-West Territories. But, after examination of the return, which I now have under my hand, I find that the correspondence is almost altogether in connection with the issuing of licenses to sell wine and beer within the limits covered by the Rocky Mountains Park Act. At the time that return was ordered, the Minister of the Interior informed us that when the return came before us we would know where the responsibility lay for the allowance of the sale of intoxicants in the Rocky Mountains Park. But, Sir, I do not find in that return any explanation of where that responsibility rests. On the contrary, after examining carefully the correspondence between those who have licenses to sell liquor there, and the Minister of the Interior on the one hand, and the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories on the other, I find that there is really no definite conclusion come to as to where this responsibility rests. I will take up one or two of the letters, just to explain to the House the position of affairs. I find a letter addressed by the Secretary of the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories to the Secretary of the Department of the Interior, in regard to a demand made on the part of the Canadian Pacific Railway for permission to import wines and beer into the North-West Territories for the purposes of their hotel at Banff. The letter reads as follows:—

"LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR'S OFFICE,
"REGINA, July 20th, 1888.

"SIR,—I am directed to acquaint you, for the information of a Minister, that His Honor the Lieutenant Governor, on the 12th inst, granted permission to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to import wines and beers into the North-West Territories for the use of their hotel at Banff and to keep and sell the same therein until said permission is withdrawn. As the Canadian Pacific Railway hotel at Banff is situated in the Rocky Mountain Park which has been placed by statute under the control and management of the Minister of Interior, His Honor has informed the company that this permission is only provisional until concurrent authority to a similar effect has been obtained from the Department.

"His Honor has had a conversation with the Deputy Minister of the Interior and of the Department of Justice upon the subject of federal jurisdiction over the Park, which has largely influenced him in the course he has adopted."

We see here what was the opinion of the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories in respect to the issuing of permits or licenses to sell wines and beer within the boundaries of the Rocky Mountain Park. The reply of the Minister of Interior to this letter, which sets forth the views of the Minister on this question, is as follows:—

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
"OTTAWA, 14th September, 1888.

"SIR,—I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of your letter of 20th July last, stating for the information of the Minister of Interior, that His Honor the Lieutenant Governor had granted permission to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, to import wines and beer into the North-West Territories for the use of their hotel at Banff and to keep and sell the same therein, until such permission is withdrawn, and further that His Honor had informed the company that this permission was only provisional until concurrent authority to a similar effect should be obtained from this Department.

"I must apologise for not having more promptly acknowledged receipt of this communication, but at the same time I may say that, at the time of its receipt, I did not think its contents called for any comment from me.

"I am, however, now in receipt of instructions from the Minister of Interior to transfer to His Honor the Lieutenant Governor all applications for permission to sell liquors in the National Park, as he does not think this matter comes within his province. I have, therefore, transferred to the Lieutenant Governor, under separate enclosures, all pending applications for liquor permits from residents of the National Park.

"(Signed) JOHN R. HALL,
"Acting Deputy Minister of Interior."

I find also that the Lieutenant Governor wrote to the Minister of the Interior, acknowledging the receipt of this letter, in the following words:—

"LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR'S OFFICE,
"REGINA, Oct. 2nd, 1888.

"SIR,—I am directed to acknowledge receipt of your letter of 14th September last, in reference to permission granted by His Honor the Lieutenant Governor to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the sale of wines and beer in their hotel at Banff, and also regarding applications for a similar permission from various other persons resident in the National Park, and which have been transmitted by the Department to His Honor. His Honor desires me to state that, in view of the conclusion which he arrived at upon this question after consultation with the Deputy Ministers of Justice and of the Interior, he will still be obliged if the Minister would kindly cause the opinion of the Minister of Justice to be taken as to the respective jurisdiction of the Department of the Interior and of the Lieutenant Governor within the National Park under the Rocky Mountains Park Act, so that His Honor may have for his future guidance the views of the highest legal authority upon the subject.

"(Signed) R. B. GORDON,
"Secretary to the Lieutenant Governor."

One would suppose that this was a very natural request on the part of the Lieutenant Governor, and that it would be complied with. Up to the date of this return, the Minister of the Interior did not deem it necessary to obtain the opinion of the Minister of Justice; at all events, no such opinion seems to have been given, and so far as I can find out from this return, the Lieutenant Governor had not, so far, obtained any such opinion from the Minister of Justice. There were several other applications, which were granted in very much the same way. Two of these were made by Mr. Wright and Mr. Moulton, and their applications, in both cases, were referred by the Minister of the Interior to the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories. I shall not detain the House by reading them, but the reply of the Lieutenant Governor to Mr. Moulton is worth reading. The Lieutenant Governor said:

"REGINA, July 24th, 1888.

"SIR,—I am directed to acknowledge receipt of your letter applying for His Honor the Lieutenant Governor's permission to sell wines and beer in your hotel at Banff In reply, I am to state that, as the Rocky Mountain Park, within which the hotel is situated, has been placed under the control and management of the Minister of the Interior, His Honor will be pleased, as soon as you have obtained the necessary authority from the department, to grant his own permission to the same effect.

"(Signed) R. B. GORDON,
"Sec. of the Lieut.-Governor."

The Lieutenant Governor here clearly indicates that, in his opinion, the Rocky Mountain Park was entirely under the control and management of the Minister of the Interior. Mr. Moulton enclosed this letter to the Minister of the Interior, and asked the hon. gentleman, practically, what he was to do. The Minister, in his reply to Mr. Moulton, said that Mr. Royal had had a discussion with the Government upon this matter, on 20th September, and probably he would deal with the application accordingly. I do not think it is necessary to read that letter, but it shows how the difficulties surrounding this matter have been caused by the action, or rather the inaction, of the Minister of the Interior. Dr. Brett also applied for a permit similar to the one granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for their hotel at Banff. His letter is as follows:—

"BANFF, September 14th, 1888.

"DEAR SIR,—I am this day in receipt of a communication from Lieutenant Governor Royal granting permission to the Sanitarium Company to sell wine and beer, subject to your concurrent authority to the same effect, and I would most respectfully ask that you grant that permission. I need scarcely again refer to the necessity for the Sanitarium to be allowed that privilege, as the majority of the guests are invalids, and consequently require both wine and beer. Will you kindly give this your immediate attention, as this matter has been delayed for some time past to the great detriment to the patients of this place.

"H. G. BRETT."

The Minister replied:

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
"OTTAWA, 28th September, 1888.

"DEAR DR. BRETT,—In reply to your letter of 15th inst., addressed to the Minister of the Interior, asking him to concur in the permission granted to the Sanitarium Company by the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories to sell wine and beer, I have to say that Mr. Dewdney has decided not to take any action with reference to the granting of such permits, and that, therefore, it will be for you to decide whether or not to avail yourself of the permission given to you by His Honor the Lieutenant Governor.

"(Signed) JOHN R. HALL,
"Acting Deputy of the Minister of the Interior."

In other words, when a gentleman applies to the Minister, to the authority which he has been told by the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories is the proper authority, he is told that he must judge for himself, and, practically, take his risk as to what he should do in regard to this matter, when he had already been told by the Lieutenant Governor that a permit given by him was only half a permit. Now, Sir, this is a most extraordinary state of affairs. We find that in this park the Minister of Interior chooses to assert that a certain kind of trade and commerce must be carried on under the permit of the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories; we find the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories distinctly and clearly saying that he has not authority to give that permission, but that concurrent authority must be obtained from the Minister of Interior. These gentlemen are in a very difficult position apparently in making this publication, and personally I do not sympathise with their difficulties, because I do not wish to see the sale of wine and beer intoxicants within the limits of the Rocky Mountain Park; but what I want to point out to the House and to the country is this: That there is this conflict of opinion between two of the officers of the Government and that they have not taken upon themselves to obtain the opinion of the Minister of Justice, which certainly ought to be competent authority to guide the Government on a question of this kind; that in consequence of this conflict there is a difference of opinion as to what they should do, and those individuals, in consequence of this difficulty, may be, and I believe have been, tempted to violate the law of the land affecting this Rocky Mountain Park, and are liable to prosecution and punishment in consequence of this state of affairs. The Minister of Interior, I think, if he chose to read the Act constituting the Rocky Mountain Park, cannot have any difficulty as to what the law is. Under statutes 50-51 Vic. we find that Act, and we find it laid down distinctly and clearly that the land within the boundaries of that park is withdrawn from the provisions of any other Act except this one. Section 2 says:

"The said tract of land is hereby reserved and set apart as a public park and pleasure ground for the benefit and advantage and enjoyment of the people of Canada, subject to the provisions of this Act and to the regulations hereinafter mentioned, and shall be known as The Rocky Mountains Park Act of Canada."

This clearly shows that the park is to be dealt with under this Act, and this Act alone. The Act says further:

"The park shall be under the control and management of the Minister of the Interior, and the Governor in Council shall make regulations for the following purposes."

It goes on to state what shall come under that provision, and amongst other things in sub-section e we find:

"Trade and traffic of every description."

I do not think that the Minister of Justice or the Minister of Interior will pretend to say that liquor selling or keeping an hotel is not "trade or traffic" or that it would not come under this definition of "trade and traffic of every description." There is no question whatever in my mind but that this Act applies to the sale of liquor and to the keeping of hotels within that park. I venture to say that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and the other gentlemen who have hotels in that park, have had to obtain the authorisation of the Minister of Interior to keep those hotels, to obtain the ground which they occupy in that park, and also that they had to obtain his authorisation for the sale of liquor within its limits. Under section 4 we find that sub-section 2 regulates the penalty for any violation of the regulations. It says:

"The Governor in Council may by the said regulations impose penalties for any violations thereof, not exceeding in each case the sum of $50, or in default of payment and costs, imprisonment for not more than three months."

I think it is very clear, therefore, that this Act, and this Act alone, applies to the sale of liquor within the Rocky Mountain Park. I think it would be very greatly to the detriment of that park and to the uses for which that park is intended that the sale of liquor should be allowed within its bounds. I believe, Sir, that the principle which actuated the passage of the North-West Territories Act, viz.: that there should be prohibition of intoxicating in these territories, should be maintained inviolate, and that in this portion of these territories the same principle should be applied. Especially is this necessary in a park which is to be kept for the enjoyment and pleasure and advantage of the people of Canada. As I understand the present condition of affairs it is this: the hon. the Minister of Interior not daring to take upon himself, or the Government of which he is a member not daring to take the responsibility of issuing permits to sell liquor in a territory which is wholly and entirely under their control, is shirking that responsibility and is leaving that responsibility to an officer in the North-

West Territories who seems to be bold enough to take that responsibility upon himself. I will not say that he takes the responsibility upon himself; because the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories, in taking responsibility upon himself in connection with the territories under his control, will not and does not, in the face of this law which I have read, undertake to give that authority to sell liquors within the Rocky Mountain Park, without the sanction of the Minister of the Interior. I am glad to say the Minister of the Interior has not exercised the power to grant permission to sell liquors within the park, for I do not wish him to do so, but when I find that, in consequence of his dereliction of duty, liquor is sold within the bounds of the Rocky Mountain Park without his authority, I believe it to be the duty of the Government of which he is a member to see that that violation of the terms of the Rocky Mountain Park Act is punished and is put an end to. I believe that these gentlemen who without the authorisation of the Minister of Interior (by whose authorisation alone they have a right to sell liquor) should be punished for the sale of liquor which they are now carrying on in the Rocky Mountains Park. It is the duty of the Minister of the Interior under whose control the management of this park is to see that that punishment is inflicted and to cause the discontinuance of that state of affairs. It seems to me that the Minister of Interior is prepared either to put his own legal judgment against the judgment of the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories, backed up as it is shown to be from the letter which I read a few minutes ago, by the opinion of the Deputy Minister of Justice and the Deputy Minister of Interior, and to say that he is right and they are wrong, or, that he has not the courage to take up this question and deal with it on his own responsibility as it is his duty to do. I believe, were he to undertake the responsibility, he would not dare, in the face of the temperance opinion of this country, to issue a permit to sell liquor in that park. I will now come to the other portion of my resolution as to the issuing of the new style of permits for the sale of liquor in the North-West Territories. The hon. the Minister knows perfectly well that so long that he was the incumbent of the office of Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories, permits to sell liquor there were not given as they are now given. He knows perfectly well that according to the interpretation, which his actions show that he has given to the North-West Territories Act, that he did not consider that it was wise or right—I cannot say that he did not consider that it was legal—but, at all events, that he did not consider that it was wise or right to issue permits for the sale of liquor within the territories under his control. Within the past year another gentleman has been appointed to this office, and this gentleman has inaugurated an entirely new state of affairs. I consider, Sir, that this is a much more important point than the one to which I have just alluded to in reference to the sale of liquor in the Rocky Mountain Park I consider that it is a much more important fact in the government of those territories that an officer of the Government here should, so far as we know, without any consultation with anybody, have inaugurated a system which seems to have been conceived in his own mind, and to have been put into force by him on his own authority and responsibility, without any authorisation from anybody responsible either to the people of those territories, or the people of Canada. This, Sir, I believe not only to be an offence against the temperance sentiment of this country; I believe it also to be an offence against the principles of our constitutional government. It is true, under certain acts, the Government, by Order in Council, have power and authority given to them to make certain innovations, within certain limits, upon the regulations regarding certain things; but so far as I can see, in reading the Acts relating to the North-West Territories, such an innovation as this which has been made by Lieutenant Governor Royal is not within his competence, or within the competence of the Government, without a direct change in the law which guides them in the rule of the North-West Territories. In my motion I aim at the Government here, because Mr. Royal is simply an officer of hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches. He does not occupy the position which Lieutenant Governors of the Provinces of Canada do; he does not, so to speak, hold the position of the Queen; he is simply there as the representative of this Government, the officer and servant of this Government, and as such, the officer and servant of this Parliament and the people of Canada; under section 4 of the North West Territories Act, I find:

"There shall be for the Territories an officer called the Lieutenant Governor, appointed by the Governor in Council by instrument under the Great Seal of Canada, who shall hold office during pleasure. The Lieutenant Governor shall administer the Government, under instructions from time to time given by the Governor in Council, or by the Secretary of State of Canada."

Now, Sir, this shows very clearly that while the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories is the official directly in charge of the Government of those territories, he is to carry out that Government under instructions given him by the Governor in Council, or the Secretary of State of Canada. Have any instructions been given to Lieutenant Governor Royal by the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches regarding the issue of these permits? If there have been, how is it that the return which has been laid on the Table of this House, in response to an order for all papers, documents, and correspondence in connection with this matter, contains no such instructions? There are no such instructions; but, unfortunately for the gentlemen on the Treasury benches, we find, from what appears in the newspapers, and in the letters in this return, that the Lieutenant Governor did consult the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches, and the gentlemen in the departments, before he issued this new style of permit for the North-West Territories. Therefore, I believe it is the hon. gentlemen opposite who are responsible for this new interpretation of the North-West Territories Act; they must bear the responsibility before the people, and it is through them, against their officer, that I propose to aim in this motion. Now, Sir, in the North-West Territories Act there are certain sections under the heading of "Prohibition of Intoxicants." What has always been the interpretation of those sections? I do not think it is necessary to dwell on them, because every one knows perfectly well that on numerous occasions the prohibitory sections of that Act have been dealt with, and spoken of as prohibitory. We only need to know what the interpretation of that word in the English language is, to know that the word prohibition is used all over this continent, and amongst the English speaking people, as the absolute forbidding of the sale, and dealing in, and trading in everything of an intoxicating nature. We know perfectly well that prohibition is often held up in direct opposition to the system of licensing, and that it is incompatible with any system of licensing. I do not think I need to dwell upon this; and when I find, as I do, in the North-West Territories Act, a number of sections under the head of "Prohibition of Intoxicants," it seems to me absurd to try to interpret these sections so that their heading may become nothing but mockery, and in effect absolutely untrue. We know that up to the time of the appointment of the present Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories, such was the constant interpretation of those sections. But we find to-day that this gentleman has chosen to take upon himself to inaugurate a new system, and what is that system? I say, without fear of contradiction, that it is practically a complete licensing system—I will not say law, because a law is constituted by the proper authority. But this is a license system, such as might have been inaugurated by a change in the law, and is almost as complete as the licensing systems of the various older Provinces of this Dominion. I have only to show you what are the terms under which this gentleman chose to issue these permits, to prove this fact. And I may say here, that I am surprised to find that in this return which the hon. Minister laid before Parliament, there is no description of the kind of permits the Lieutenant Governor has chosen to issue. I do not find here the rules and regulations under which that hon. gentleman published that he would issue those permits, and I have the authority of a gentleman from the North-West to say that there were such regulations and proclamations issued by the Lieutenant Governor of those territories. An hon. senator who was appointed a short time ago by the Government, told me, at a meeting held in this building, that in the North-West Territories he had seen a printed copy, issued by the Lieutenant Governor, of the conditions under which he would issue the permits for the sale of certain kinds of liquors in those territories, and the return laid on the Table in response to the order for copies of any such conditions, contains no copies of those conditions or regulations. I was, therefore, obliged to have reference to the newspapers published in the North-West Territories to find under what conditions those permits were issued. On consulting the file of the Regina Leader, I find that these are the principal conditions:

"Licenses to sell beer containing not more than 4 per cent. of alcohol shall be issued under the payment of a fee of 10 cents per gallon. These licenses are only to be given to hotels with accommodation for twelve persons and five horses. They are only to be given on the recommendation of the Board of Assembly for the district in which the hotels are situated. The hours of sale are regulated. Liquor is not to be sold on Sundays, and it is not to be sold to anybody under 14 years of age, nor to any drunken or dissolute person. The total quantity of liquor is to be brought in under one permit, and to be inspected by the police."

Will anybody tell me that such regulations do not practically amount to a license system? So much is this a license system that I find, on consulting the records of the Assembly at Regina last year, that in the budget brought down and adopted by that Assembly, amongst the items of revenue is an item of $3,500 expected to be obtained in consequence of the fees exacted for these licenses. In other words, it is evident that the Lieutenant Governor issued these licenses in the full expectation that liquor to the extent of 35,000 gallons would be sold under these permits in the North-West Territories during the coming year. Evidently the intention was to make a complete license system and to exact from the individuals who obtained these licenses a fee sufficient to amount in the whole to the sum of $3,500. As far as we know, the Lieutenant Governor conceived in his own mind and carried into execution this license system, but is it possible that it may have been conceived in the Council Chamber at Ottawa? Is it possible that instructions were given from Ottawa to the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories to frame this system and put it in force? If so, we want to know, the people of this Dominion, above all the temperance people want to know, where we are to place the responsibility for this violation of the prohibitory sections of the North-West Territories Act, and with this object I am moving this resolution. If hon. gentlemen opposite do not consider they are responsible for this, I would ask them to consult the North-West Territories Act, and explain how they are going to escape responsibility. If they wish to escape responsibility, let the Government at once issue instructions to the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories to put an end to this system of licenses, to cease issuing these permits, and withdraw the permits he has already issued. It may be said that this system is a harmless one. I do not consider it is. I believe that under the cover of 4 per cent. beer, a great deal of much stronger liquor will be sold. I believe that there, as elsewhere, where men get permission to sell mildly intoxicating drinks, they will, under cover of that permission, sell the most intoxicating liquors. If the principle which underlies this introduction of the system of licensing is to be accepted as correct, there is nothing whatever to hinder the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories changing the regulations and issuing permits to sell whiskey; there is nothing to hinder him giving unlimited licenses to sell intoxicating liquors to anybody, even minors and dissolute persons, and on every day in the week, including Sundays. There is nothing to hinder the Lieutenant Governor making such a system as he chooses. From our experience in times past, we have no very great confidence that the hon. gentleman will have much regard for the temperance sentiment of the people. The Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories, encouraged by the supineness of the Government and this House, should his present action not be checked, may next year issue permits for the sale of whiskey and other drinks more injurious than 4 per cent. beer. I will say further, that the system which the Lieutenant Governor has inaugurated is not in accordance with the desire of the people of the North-West Territories. It may be asked why I, a representative of eastern Canada, should interfere in this matter. Well, I interfere, first of all, because I represent a temperance county, and speak here more or less on behalf of the temperance people of this country, who, I know, view with alarm and indignation the action of the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories, and who are astonished at the non-interference of the Government of the day. What do the people of the North-West Territories want? They did not ask for any such license as this. True, some of them demanded that the manufacture of beer might be allowed in the North-West Territories; but such a hybrid system as this, such an unlawful system as this, no man in the North-West Territories ever asked for. What do we find that they did ask for? We find that a petition was sent from Calgary asking for a license system; we find that a petition was sent from Alberta, stating that the present law was distasteful, because the people had not given their sanction to it, and asking for permission to manufacture and sell beer; we find a resolution in 1887 asking that the provisions of the Canada Temperance Act should be extended to the North-West Territories—in other words asking for local option. As a temperance man, I thoroughly endorse that petition, and would be glad to see the people of the North-West Territories allowed to decide for themselves as to whether liquor should be sold in their midst or not. I find there is also a petition of the Temperance Convention of a totally different character to the one I have just referred to. This petition reads as follows:—

"To His Excellency the Most Honorable the Marquis of Lansdowne, G.C.M.G., in Council.

"The memorial of your petitioners humbly sheweth, that:

"Whereas the North-West Territories Act prohibits the manufacture, importation and sale of intoxicating liquor, except by the special permission of the Lieutenant Governor; and

"Whereas such prohibition was widely advertised both in the older Provinces of Canada, and in Europe, and many settlers have located here because of such prohibition; and

"Whereas it has been found that such provisions have greatly limited the use, and therefore the injurious effects of liquor; and

"Whereas the North-West Council at its last Session adopted a certain memorial to be laid before Your Honorable Council, praying that the said clauses be repealed, and that the power of licensing the manufacture and sale of liquors be placed in the hands of the future legislative body for the Territories; and

"Whereas it was the unanimous opinion of a Temperance Convention held at Regina on November 22 last, and composed of representative men from Broadview to Calgary, that such memorial did not express the sentiments of the majority of the people of the territories, especially as such projected action would expunge the prohibitory clauses of the North-West Territories Act, without first taking the votes of the settlers who came here well knowing that such clauses were in force, and

"Whereas, at such Temperance Convention, resolutions were passed recognising the difficult position in which His Honor the Lieutenant Governor was placed, in having the responsibility of issuing permits, and holding that the time had now come when the Lieutenant Governor of the Territories should be relieved of such onerous and trying duties and that a Commissioner should be appointed whose duty it would be to license responsible parties at central points to sell liquor and spirits and in small quantities, for medicinal and sacramental purposes only, to parties on production of such certificate as you may see fit to specify, the parties so licensed to have authority to sell only in sealed packages bearing a Government stamp, and to be required to keep for public inspection a register of all sales, the liquors and spirits so sold to be furnished and the price fixed by the Government through the aforesaid commissioner, and none of the parties named to be allowed a profit from the sales, but to be paid by salary; and

"Whereas, at such Convention, resolutions were also passed praying that Your Excellency in Council may see fit to appoint a special detective force to co-operate with the North-West Mounted Police in regulating and restricting the sale and use of liquor, and appointing a committee to embody all such resolutions in a memorial for the consideration of Your Excellency in Council: now,

"Therefore, we, the said committee, would humbly pray that no action whatever be taken with a view to relaxing the prohibitory nature of the North-West Territories Act, and that the suggestions, as set forth in the resolutions of the Regina Temperance Convention of November 22nd last, should have your careful attention."

Here is an important memorial sent to the Government by the temperance people of the North-West Territories, the wording of which is such as to show that they, at all events, did not wish to see the prohibitory clauses of the North-West Territories Act relaxed. It has been somewhat a subject of astonishment to me, and I have seen references to the same effect in the public press, that an hon. gentleman sitting on the Treasury benches, who has been known in times past as the representative of the temperance sentiment of the Conservative party, who is supposed to represent the temperance element in the Government and whom we believe to have been placed in the Government largely because he was supposed to represent the temperance element in the Conservative party, should have remained without protest on the Government benches, apparently concurring in this violation of the law to which reference has been made. It may be that the hon. gentleman has of late seen fit to change his views on these matters. It may be that he has desired to cease to represent the temperance people of the Conservative party, or the temperance people of this country, in the Government. I confess that, after a vote which I saw him give a short time ago, I was inclined to think that that was the course which the hon. gentleman had chosen to pursue, but I was hardly prepared to find in this return a confirmation of that view. I find that this memorial, which was sent to this Minister, was handed over by him to the tender mercies of the Secretary of State for Canada to be dealt with; and apparently the hon. Minister himself had no voice of encouragement, no word of assistance or of congratulation to give to the temperance people who presented this memorial to the Government, and he not shown that he does not represent their sentiments and opinions in the Government. I find in this return a letter headed "Minister of Marine and Fisheries, Canada," but dated "The Arlington, Washington, D. C., 2nd February, 1888," at which time the hon. gentleman was in Washington assisting his colleagues in the negotiation of the Fishery Treaty. The letter is as follows:—

"My Dear Chapleau,—I have the honor to transmit to you, to be laid before His Excellency the Governor General in Council, a petition from G. H. V. Bulyea and others, praying that no action be taken with a view to relaxing the prohibitory nature of the North-West Territories Act.

"Yours truly,
"G. E. FOSTER.

"Hon. J. A Chapleau,
"Secretary of State,
"Ottawa."

Of course I can understand and appreciate the fact that a petition of this kind must be referred to the Secretary of State, but at the same time I had hoped, when I found that this had passed through the hands of the gentleman who is supposed to represent the temperance element in the Government, that amongst the correspondence here we might have found some little encouragement to the temperance people of the North-West Territories from the hon. gentleman, that we might have found some little recognition amongst these letters of this memorial from the temperance people, that we might have found some recommendation as to what should be done with this memorial, instead of a note simply transferring it to the tender mercies of the Secretary of State, whose views and whose votes on temperance questions are too well known to the House and to the Minister of Finance, to permit him to believe that a temperance memorial would receive anything but very scant courtesy from the Secretary of State. What is the result of this innovation? The license system has been introduced, but it is not such a system as the people of the North-West Territories who are in favor of a license system want. It does not allow anything but the sale of 4 per cent. beer. The Calgary Herald and its clientèle demand a much wider system. The hon. member for Assiniboia also demands that power should be given to manufacture and sell all sorts of liquor there. We know that the temperance people do not wish to have liquor sold there at all. There is one point which we find from this return and which we know to be the fact, and that is that the people of the North-West Territories desire to be put in a position to be able to express their own opinions on this question. They believe that they are as competent to decide upon the question of prohibition as any other people in Canada, and they desire to have the power of voting upon the question of a license system vs. prohibition. The Minister of Interior has stated that he was going to give that permission to the people of the North-West Territories in the Bill which he has introduced to amend the law. I think it comes a little late from the Ministry who have made this innovation. I think the Minister should have waited until the people had expressed their opinion before authorising the issue of these licenses. What is the law to-day? Some people say that these permits are perfectly legal. I am not a lawyer, but I cannot understand the words of this Act to show the legality of the permit issued by Lieutenant Governor Royal. The first section says:

"No intoxicating liquor or intoxicant shall be manufactured, compounded or made in the Territories, except by special permission of the Governor in Council; nor shall any intoxicating liquor or intoxicant be imported or brought into the Territories from any Province of Canada or elsewhere, or be sold, exchanged, traded or bartered, or had in possession therein, except by special permission, in writing, of the Lieutenant Governor."

Now, it is a very well known interpretation of parts of that law that, wherever any liquor is held in the North-West Territories or brought in there, special permission has been required, prescribing the amount of liquor and giving special permission for such an amount of liquor and for such an importation or such a possession. The permits issued by the present Minister of Interior covered that ground, and that only. Every different kind of permit that may be issued under this clause comes under the same terms and conditions, and, if a special permit is required for special importation, I contend that the law applies equally in regard to every special sale. In other words, the former permission for importation or possession of liquor in the North-West Territories never gave anyone permission to import as much liquor as he liked. If he got a permit to import liquor, you might say that he was to have permission to sell liquor, but, up to the present time, every permit to import liquor has been a special permit in respect to the particular importation, giving all the details as to the importation and as to the time and place. I contend, that just the same reason should be applied pari passu to the sale of liquor, and if the permit is to be for the sale of liquor, it should be given for a special transaction, for a special amount, and at a special time and place; but you have no right to give a man unrestricted permission to sell liquor whenever and wherever he chooses, and in whatever quantity he chooses. You might just as well give a man permission to import liquor whenever, wherever, and in whatever quantities he chooses, a power which was never taken, which was never thought of, and which it will never be contended belongs to the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories. I say that is the common sense view of this paragraph, and I am upheld in this view by others who are better qualified to speak from a legal position, and I believe there is no question that such an interpretation alone is in accordance with the spirit of this law. I could quote over and over again, from Sir Charles Tupper and Sir Leonard Tilley, gentlemen whose word is generally accepted as law upon the Treasury benches, that such is the spirit of the Act in question. I find this was the intention of the law when it was first placed upon our Statute-book, and it is only within the last year, it is only in consequence of the appointment of a new Lieutenant Governor, that a new view is taken of the meaning of that law.

An hon. MEMBER. Give us the quotations.

Mr. FISHER. I am asked to quote the utterances of Sir Leonard Tilley and Sir Charles Tupper. Speaking from memory, in consequence of a former quotation which I made on the floor of this House, I would refer to a great meeting which was held in London at a time when Sir Leonard Tilley was Finance Minister of this country, and at which both of those distinguished gentlemen were present. Sir Leonard Tilley, in speaking about prohibition in this country, quoted our prohibitory enactment in regard to the North-West Territories, and Sir Charles Tupper, in endorsing that view, went so far as to say that if they wished to drink to the health of the Governor General of Canada in the North-West Territories, they would be obliged to get Pain Killer or some other patent medicine to do it with, because they could by no possibility obtain the drink ordinarily used for such purposes. Sir, I believe that the Act of the Lieutenant Governor in this respect is a dangerous innovation upon our system of constitutional government. I believe he has made such a change in what has commonly been regarded as the intention and scope of the law, as no private individual irresponsible to the people, should be allowed to make. If a Lieutenant Governor is allowed to arrogate this power, it would be a direct encouragement to other officers of the country throughout the land, to think that their private opinion was sufficient to override the law of the land. I regret to say that that opinion seems already to prevail in many instances, where the officials of this country think they are autocrats, that their word is law, that the people are here to Minister unto their wills and needs, to pay their salaries and to listen to their behests. Sir, it is time that a protest should be made against that assumption of authority, and I think this occasion is a fitting one to do so. I desire to record my protest, not simply because I am a temperance man, but because I hold that those who govern should obey the laws of the land as well as those who are governed. If this system which I am denouncing is allowed to prevail in our land, there is a poor future for us, a poor future for constitutional government in this country. We have always understood that Canada is governed by the will of the people, that we are a democratic country, that we are a people who desire to see our will obeyed. The people have expressed their will in these prohibition clauses of the North-West Territories Act, that will has never been changed, those sections still stand on our Statute-book, and those who are above all bound to carry out that will and to obey that law, are the officials tn whom the enforcement of that law is entrusted. It is, therefore, not only as a temperance man, but as an upholder of the constitutional rights of the people, that I move this motion which I have placed in your hands.

Mr. FISHER.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman who has made the motion has referred to me and to my department as either having been consulted upon this question, or as being the authority who should have been consulted; and he has inferred from that fact that the proceedings which have been taken in relation to the sale of liquor in the North-West Territories and the Rocky Mountain Park, have been taken with the connivance of the members of the Government and of myself. Now, the hon. gentleman has presented, in the first place, in the remarks which he has just made to the House, the case which he desires to make against the Minister of the Interior, and the hon. gentleman has stated that case to be this: That the Rocky Mountain Park is for all purposes under the control of the Minister of the Interior, that it is withdrawn from the North-West Territories Acts, and is wholly under the Government's control. All the complaint which he makes against the Minister of the Interior is based upon that proposition, not one word of which, I contend, has any foundation in fact or in law. Now, the position of the Rocky Mountain Park is simply this: It is a part of the North-West Territories for all purposes whatever, except in so far as the use of the lands there is concerned, and subject to certain powers of the Governor General in Council, which I shall presently mention. The House will remember that when the Rocky Mountain Park Act was passed, all the lands in the North-West Territories were open for sale or pre-emption, except in so far as they had been withdrawn from sale or pre-emption under the authority of this Parliament, and the Rocky Mountain Park Act simply established by the second section that the tract of land described in the first section should be reserved and set apart as a public park and pleasure ground for the benefit, and advantage, and enjoyment of the people of Canada. The hon. gentleman, I think, is completely mistaken in supposing that the language exempts the Rocky Mountain Park from the laws in force in the North-West Territories. It no more exempts the Rocky Mountain Park from the laws in force, for the time being, in the North-West Territories than a provincial statute, preserving a piece of land as a pleasure ground for the inhabitants of any city, would by those words, which simply set it apart for these uses, exempt it from the operation of the laws of the country in force for the time being. Every portion of the Rocky Mountain Park, and every person in it, is subject, to-day, to all the laws in force in the North-West Territories. The hon. gentleman will see how obvious that is when he considers the question as to what laws would be in force for the punishment of any other offences than the violation of the prohibitory sections of the North-West Territories Act. Let him suppose that any offence is committed. If the view he takes of this section be correct, that the park is exempt from the operation of the North-West Territories laws, there is no law of Canada in force there by which crime can be punished, or anybody's rights secured. The operation of the second section then is simply to say that this land shall be set apart as a pleasure ground, but the laws of the Territories apply to the Rocky Mountain Park just as much as they do to Regina. The only qualification to that is the liberty which is given in the next section to the Governor in Council to make regulations for trade and traffic of every description in the park. I so far concede the hon. gentleman's argument on that point as to admit that under the provisions of that section, we have power to say there shall be no liquor sold, even under permit, in the Rocky Mountain Park, or at any of the hotels in the park; but that does not withdraw the statement I have already made, namely, that the park is subject to all the laws in force in the North West Territories, and to-day, and until regulations are made by the Governor in Council for the prevention of the sale of intoxicating liquors absolutely in the park, the Governor at Regina has as much power to give a permit for the introduction of liquor into the Rocky Mountain Park as into Regina. When, therefore, the hon. gentleman asserts, and when in his resolution he asks this House to affirm that the Minister of the Interior has been culpable, because the Act places the matter entirely under his control, and that he is personally conniving at the sale of liquors there, because he has power to prevent it under the Act, the hon. gentleman will see that his personal attack on the Minister and the personal censure which he asks this House to pass on the Minister, are altogether unfounded, because the Minister has not the power to interfere with a single permit which the Governor of the North-West Territories may grant in regard to the park until, in the exercise of his power under the statute, the Governor in Council pass some regulations exempting that portion of the North-West Territories from the operations of those permits. So, if I am right in this contention, and I think the hon. gentleman will hardly, on reflection, dispute it, he will see that that portion of his resolution and argument in which he censured and proposed to censure the Minister, as if the Minister were at fault, and that portion of his speech in which he spoke of direct dereliction of duty on the part of the Minister as proved by liquor being permitted to be sold there, is altogether based on a mistaken theory as to the position of the Rocky Mountain Park. In so far as these permits are in force in the North-West Territories, and in so far as they are in force in the Rocky Mountain Park, the responsibility rests with the Governor of the North-West Territories, and it only rests upon the Governor in Council in so far as the Government may, if the House took that view, be censured for not having made regulations of a more stringent character than those which at present prevail respecting the sale of liquor in the Territories. As to that the hon. gentleman's resolution is silent, because he censures the Government, if I recollect the resolution rightly, first, for allowing the Governor of the North-West Territories to grant licenses outside of the park and to give general permits, and, secondly, he censured the Minister of the Interior for what has taken place inside the park. I repeat, then, that every one of the colleagues of the Minister of the Interior is as much responsible as he, in so far as they may be responsible for not having adopted regulations more stringent than those which now exist in relation to the Rocky Mountain Park, and until some such regulations were adopted the Minister was powerless to interfere. In so far as the permit system is concerned in the park, the Governor of the North-West Territories and he alone, is responsible. The hon. gentleman read a portion of the return for the purpose of showing the House that the Department of Justice had been consulted by the officers of the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories. I gather from that correspondence and from the information which I have from my department, that some of the staff or officers of the Lieutenant Governor did consult the Deputy Minister of Justice as to the powers of the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories to issue permits which would have force within the park. It is true the correspondence states, as the hon. gentleman has read it, that the persons who consulted the deputy were advised to apply to the Department of the Interior. The reason for that was, not that the Department of the Interior had control over the subject, but because my department, the Department of Justice, gives no advice to persons outside the departments of the Government in respect to these questions. The position taken with respect to that application for advice was, that if the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories chose to act or not to act, he must act upon his own responsibility and upon advice he might obtain elsewhere, and that if he desired advice and the opinion of my department, he must go to the Minister of the Interior and ask him to obtain it. The Lieutenant Governor of the North-West has never personally, or by letter, or by any of his officers, asked my opinion upon this question, and I express my opinion on this question, in so far as the public are concerned, or anybody outside of the Government is concerned, for the first time this evening. So much for the observations of the hon. gentleman with respect to the operation of the Act as to the Rocky Mountain Park. I come now to say a few words as to what my view is in reference to permits to sell alcoholic liquors in the North-West Territories, or parts of it, the Rocky Mountain Park and elsewhere. I contend, and I contend it in spite of the argument which was addressed to the House when this question was under discussion a few evenings ago, that the right and the responsibility as well, rest with the Governor of the North-West Territories, and with him alone. The resolution affirms the singular statement that the Government are in fault, they having permitted, by one of their officers, namely, the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories, to license the sale of intoxicating liquors in the North-West Territories. In a certain qualified and most restricted sense the Lieutenant Governor of the North West Territories is an officer of the Government, but only in this sense, that he receives his appointment from the Government of Canada. In no other respect is he an officer of the Government of Canada, and certainly not in the sense covered by the resolution, which certainly implies that he is acting under our instructions and subject to our opinion, and that we are responsible from day to day for his acts. The strongest argument made on a previous occasion, when the matter was under discussion in this House, was that the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories stands in relation to the Government of Canada like the Governor of a colony did in days before representative institutions were granted to the colony to the Imperial Government, when instructions from the Government were received by him from day to day, and action was taken by him as enunciated from the Colonial Office. The Governor of the North-West Territories holds no such position in regard to this Government or in relation to this Parliament. We have the power to appoint him; we have the power to dismiss him for misconduct; but he is vested by the law (which binds us as well as him) with certain statutory powers, one of which is to grant permits for the introduction of intoxicating liquors into the Territories which he governs. I may differ from the Lieutenant Governor as to the extent of authority which that enactment confers. If it be true, as has been asserted more than once in this House, that the Lieutenant Governor conceives that he is thereby authorised to set up a license system in the North-West Territories; that all comers, recommended in a certain way, are to receive permits which will authorise them to sell liquor, and that that system is to be universally established throughout the North-West Territories irrespective of the exercise of the discretion which the law expects him to exercise; I do differ from him as to the extent of the authority conferred upon him by the Act. I do think that if he has set up a license system of that description—and I know the facts only from what has been stated here—that he must have departed from the spirit of the Act. But the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories is not under my control; he is not in any sense under the control of the Government in the exercise of these statutory powers which are conferred upon him. We have, as I have said, the power to appoint the Lieutenant Governor, we have the power to recommend to His Excellency his removal from office; but certainly it is not a power which would be exercised because he chooses, in the exercise of his authority, to differ from us as to the construction of the law under which he acts, and under which he is bound to act, in the administration of his duties in the North-West Territories. If the Lieutenant Governor issues these permits, and if he believes he has the right to issue them, he has the right to say that he will do so—notwithstanding that I differ from him as to the extent of his authority or as to the way in which it should be exercised—just as fully as he has the right to differ from the Minister of Finance as to the propriety of giving any permits in the North-West Territories at all. It is true that the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories receives instruction from the Government of Canada just as every Lieutenant Governor receives instruction at his appointment, but can it be supposed that these instructions are to follow him from day to day and control his action in relation to the discharge of his statutory powers? If so, then the office of Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories is a mere sham, and the North-West Territories are under the administrative control of the Government of Canada;—a theory which will be somewhat new to the people of those territories, and which, I venture to say, is utterly inconsistent with the constitutional theory of having a Lieutenant Governor and a Legislative Assembly in these Territories. As proof of the alleged fact that a regular and systematic regulation with regard to licenses had been established in the North-West Territories, the hon. gentleman states that in the estimates of the income of the North-West Legislative Assembly, a certain income had been estimated as derivable from the permits. That has been done ever since the North-West Territories Act has been adopted.

Mr. FISHER. Will the hon. Minister excuse me a moment. In the estimates of the last Session of the North-West Territories Legislature there are two items—one such as has always been the case, and another special item for four per cent. beer permits which is estimated at $3,500.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I was answering the hon. gentleman as to a statement he made in the first part of his case, but, now, as I understand his present explanation, it is that, instead of estimating a certain number of thousands of dollars as has always been done, as likely to be received for the price of permits, they have divided the estimate into two classes and estimated so much for beer permits and so much for spirit permits. I conceive that this makes no difference in principle, and I humbly think that it does not establish the hon. gentleman's charge with regard to there being an organised system of licensing in the Territories. With reference to the hon. gentleman's contention that there was evidence in this file of papers that the Lieutenant Governor in Council did consult the Government of Canada, or did advise with them, and that the Government of Canada was responsible for the practice which he set on foot as regards permits; I have only to add that the hon. gentleman is mistaken in supposing that the papers furnished contain any evidence that any such state of facts exist. Right or wrong, the Lieutenant Governor has acted on his own responsibility and on his own view of the law, or upon the view of the law which was given him by the counsel who advised him, and, certainly, not upon any suggestion, or with any connivance, or by any advice from the Government of Canada. With regard to the contention which the hon. gentleman made that the Government in Council ought to be censured for not having adopted more restrictive provisions with regard to intoxicating liquors under the powers given them in the Park Act, I have only to say that the hon. gentleman's resolution does not point to that result. The hon. gentleman's resolution holds the Minister of the Interior indirectly responsible for all that has been done in the park itself on the mistaken theory that the park is absolutely under his control, and when the hon. gentleman goes a step further and asserts that it must be so because the very hotel in which those permits for liquor are used could not be erected without the assent or approval of the Minister of the Interior, he is surely forgetting the fact that when the Park Act was passed both the hotels there had actually been erected. I am very much mistaken, if I am not right in the statement that no hotel has been established or erected in the park since the Park Act was passed. At any rate I am well aware then when the Park Act was passed the two hotels to which he refers—the Canadian Pacific Hotel and Dr. Brett's Hotel—were established and erected, although the Canadian Pacific Railway hotel was not entirely completed. When he would expect the House to come to the conclusion that the Government is worthy of censure for not having prevented the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories from having given a permit for the introduction of liquors at all into the Rocky Mountain Park—when he demands that the law should be stricter in that reserve than it is anywhere else in the North-West Territories, I think the hon. gentleman should have put forward some statement for the purpose of showing that the permit system had been abused within the limits of the park; or that the use of intoxicating liquors is wholly unnecessary and more attendant with evil there than it would be elsewhere. He ought at least have put forward some case of abuse of this system in connection with the park itself before he should ask the House to come to this conclusion.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. MACDOWALL. I should like to say a few words on the question raised by the hon. member for Brome (Mr. Fisher). The first question that occurs to me is, what was the object of the hon. gentleman in moving the amendment? and after hearing what he said I came to the conclusion that his object was not in the least in the interest of the people of the North-West, but it was to make a point against the Minister of the Interior, or the Minister of Justice, or the Government, with respect to this liquor question, because he did not seem to take in the least the point of view of the people of the North-West. The people of the North-West are always very glad when hon. members from the eastern Provinces take an interest in their country, and I think the more those hon. members turn their attention to that country the better it will be for the Dominion at large. We find it often said by the members on your left, Sir, that the North-West has been made by the Conservative party a dumping ground for political hacks, but I think that we in the North-West may with much greater reason, say that the North-West has been made by the Liberal party a dumping ground for unfortunate resolutions and amendments. I must say that resolutions such as this, introduced strictly from a party point of view, are very injurious to the best interests of the North-West. Everyone who regards that great country, from a statesmanlike point of view, must know that in the North-West the great future of Canada lies as a nation, and the sooner hon. members cease making the North-West a football for political exigencies, the better it will be for that country and the whole Dominion. I am naturally interested in the question raised by the hon. member for Brome, and since some six weeks ago, when the Minister of the Interior laid the papers asked for in reference to this question, before the House I have been endeavoring frequently to get them. I only got them to-day, very shortly before the House opened, and the hon. member for Brome then came to me and said he would give them to me, but expected me to deliver them up to him again immediately. Well, I thought these papers were brought down for the benefit of the whole House, but the hon. member for Brome kept them five or six weeks himself, and prevented those who are very deeply interested in the question from having an opportunity of seeing them. We cannot always be in the House at the same time as the hon. member for Brome, and if we had known that he was going to adopt this plan, of course we should have watched him as the cat does a mouse, so that we might be able to obtain the papers from him. As it was I had only a short time to look over them. I notice that all the petitions seem to take a very different point of view from that which the hon. gentleman would lead this House to believe they did take. The first petition was from the mayor and corporation of Calgary in favor of the license system. The second is from Dr. Kennedy and residents of Alberta, asking that the manufacture of liquor should be allowed in the North-West. The corporation urged that the use of permits was really very immoral, because these permits, although issued with the best intentions, were often used to cover the illegal sale of liquor, and it was impossible, consequently, to put down the traffic. The extensive area of the country also added to the difficulty. The citizens of Alberta in their petition represent that the present system was distasteful to the majority of the inhabitants of the North-West. It is very curious that in this petition from the citizens of Alberta there are 15 pages of signatures, which is a marked contrast with another petition that I find in this return. It appears that there were two petitions sent from temperance associations—one from the temperance body of Regina, and these people did not ask that the license system should be put down, but asked for the appointment of commissioners who would give licenses to responsible parties for the sale of liquor. They also asked that there should be proper restrictions to the sale of liquor, and that men of the detective force in connection with the Mounted Police should be appointed to ensure the carrying out of the law. The other petition in favor of prohibition in the North-West was from Mr. Vidal, of Sarnia, Ontario, on behalf of Mr. McLaren and Mr. Spence, officers of the council of the Dominion Alliance. I would simply contrast the petitions of the inhabitants of Alberta with the petitions of these temperance people. The Regina people asked that the license system should be introduced in the North-West, and the Dominion Alliance asked that prohibition should be enforced throughout the North-West. In the Alberta petition there are no less than fifteen pages of foolscap of signatures of people actually in the North-West, and to the Ontario petition there are only three such signatures. I mention this to show that the people of the North-West should be consulted in some measure concerning their own affairs. I do not believe that in any matters of legislation which come before this House and directly affect the people of the North-West, there should be any attention given to the prejudices of a small section of the community in the older parts of Canada. I, myself, am averse to liquor circulating freely all over the land. I believe we ought to have strong, self-reliant, temperate people in the North-West, but I do not believe that by restricting the liberties of the people you will make them moral. You must first educate them up to a state of morality, and then you will have a strong, self-reliant and moral people. The next memorial was from the North-West Council in 1887, when the present Minister of the Interior was Lieutenant Governor. In this memorial the representatives of the people of the North-West showed that the present system was immoral and detrimental to the best interests of the North-West, and they urged that powers similar to those enjoyed by the older Provinces under the British North America Act should be granted to the North-West Territories, and that the provisional districts of the North-West should be districts under the said Act. When I first spoke on this subject in this House I believed at that time that the system I refer to was the best system. I believe nothing could be better than to place the people of the North-West in exactly the same position as the people in the rest of Canada. They know what is good for themselves. The people go out there to improve their condition and not to drink, for if they wanted to drink they could drink a great deal cheaper down here; but they do not want their liberties restricted. The next petition is from the North-West Assembly, presented during the time of the present Lieutenant Governor. This petition asked either for a plebiscite, or that the powers granted to other Provinces should be granted to the North-West. I think it would be better that this should be done rather than that a plebiscite, should be taken. At the time of my election the liquor question was a live one in the North-West, and I explained to my constituents the stand that I would take. I said I did not believe in local option; I did not believe in a small minority, through sentimental motives, being allowed to dictate to the majority, but that, as there appeared to be throughout Canada, a certain wave in favor of local option, I did not think that anyone who desired to represent the feelings of the people should go against that wave, which plainly indicated the public opinion of the country. Since then another wave has passed over the country, and swept away the Canada Temperance Act; so that now I feel rather at variance with the opinion I expressed before. I believe I can return to my first love, and again hold the opinion that it is not right to allow a minority, through sentimental motives, to dictate to the majority; but as I believe myself to a certain extent committed to the local option principle, I feel that I must stick to it and, therefore, I am in favor of giving to the North-West the powers that are given to the other Provinces. There is another petition from the Regina Board of Trade, signed by Rev. J. Steele. Mr. Steele says that the law now in force causes a waste of public money in the supplying of liquor. He pointed out the immense amount of money which has been spent in liquor imported into the North-West under the present law. The Regina Board of Trade suggests that, until the law is altered, such liquors should be made some use of—should be used for hospitals, and other such institutions, for the benefit of the sick. In referring to these questions, I shall quote from some local papers in the North-West to show what the feeling is there, and throughout the country. Commissioner Herchmer, I know, is not in favor of liquor being sold everywhere throughout the North-West; he is rather inclined to temperance than otherwise—I shall quote from the Prince Albert Times the suggestion of Commissioner Herchmer that the manufacture and sale of beer be allowed in the Territories under very stringent regulations The Prince Albert Times, commenting on this suggestion, says:

"We long since advocated the course suggested by the commissioner, and still believe it is the proper course to be adopted. We hope that the Government will at once act on the advice of the commissioner in this matter."

I think the commissioner might have gone a little further than he did go. I will quote from the Calgary Herald, which says editorially:

"A large majority of the representatives of the people announced themselves fairly and squarely in favor of high license, while a fair portion of the small minority, while not supporting high license, did not actually oppose it."

The Edmonton Bulletin, which is edited by a gentleman whose inclinations are decidedly towards temperance, says of the question:

"The second resolution passed, re-affirmed the desire of the assembly to have a vote taken, and asked that the Federal Government, as having the right to do so, take the vote; and afterwards asked, if it were not the pleasure of the Federal authorities to grant that request, that provincial powers be granted to the assembly in the matter. This resolution was carried by a vote of 13 to 7."

That shows that the liquor question is in a very unsatisfactory state in the North-West, and the people there feel that they ought to be treated in this matter in the same way as the people throughout the rest of Canada. One of the great privileges of being a British subject is that a man can do just as he likes in any part of the British realms, so long as he does not transgress the law of those realms. We in the North-West are not in this position. We have a different measure of freedom just now from the majority of the people of the older Provinces and Manitoba, and we simply desire, now that we have representation in this House, to be placed in this matter, as in others, in the same free position as the people of the rest of the Dominion. I believe myself that this law, as it at present stands, is most unconstitutional in every way, because, as I have stated in this House in almost every Session that I have been here, and I will repeat it for the benefit of the hon. member for Brome (Mr. Fisher) and others, if we are living under constitutional government, we should have some say in regard to the law that governs us. But this law which prevails in the North-West was passed by a Parliament in which that part of the country was not represented. It was a most arbitrary law, and now that we have representation here, I maintain that it is unconstitutional in spirit, if it is not in law. There is just one other point which I wish to refer to. I am sure there are a great many hon. members in this House who believe in strict prohibition, but at the same time if they believe in the constitution under which we live, they must allow that the opinions of the representatives of the North-West, when they are all in accord on one subject, should be respected by this House. We know that the representatives of the North-West are very few in number. I myself am one who represents a district larger than the Province of Ontario, with a population of some 20,000 people scattered through it; the hon. member for Alberta (Mr. Davis) represents an enormous district too; Assiniboia is represented by two members; but these four districts cover an area nearly, if not quite as large as the rest of Canada put together. Although we are only four in number, and on that account it may be said that we do not represent the opinions of the people in this matter in a House of 215 members, still this House has another very sure guide to follow, that is, the petitions of the people; and in saying this, I will simply refer to what is a matter of English history, which has been laid down by some of our greatest parliamentarians, that although the opinions of the representatives of the people may be a sure guide as to the inclinations of the people as to what is public opinion, there still is another way which must not be disregarded, and that other way is by petitions. I have already referred to some of the petitions which have been sent down, but I will go a little further and will say that there has never been a year, since the people of the North-West were given representation in their Local Parliament, when petitions have not been passed and sent down to the Government of this country, asking that the law be altered with regard to this question. I would urge most strongly that the Government should alter the law, and put the people of the North-West in the same position as the other people of Canada, that they should acknowledge that they are a temperate and intelligent people by so doing, and that they should give them the same freedom in regard to this matter which is accorded to others. They know that they are backed up in doing that, not only by the whole force of the representatives of the North-West in this House, but they can go back to the time when the North-West was first given representation in the Local Assembly, and they will find that every year petitions have come down in favor of this course. On these two grounds, I think I am entitled to say that the people of the North-West are very strongly in favor of this freedom being accorded to them, and that, if it is accorded to them, they will not abuse it.

Mr. LAURIER. This is not a question of temperance in the sense which is usually attached to that word. It is not only those who are devoted to prohibition as a principle, who are interested in this matter, but no one, whether a prohibitionist at heart or not, can view with indifference, the motion which has been proposed by my hon. friend from Brome (Mr. Fisher). It has always been the unanimous consensus of opinion in this country, shared in by all parties alike, that the use of liquor in the North-West Territories should not be treated in the same manner as it is in the other Provinces, that it has to be treated in a very different way. It has been the unanimous consensus of opinion, that the traffic could not be as free in the North-West Territories as in the other Provinces, but that it had to be checked. This has been held, not only by prohibitionists, but by all parties, even by those parties in this House, whether on the other side or on this side, who are not prepared to enact at the present moment a prohibitory law for this Dominion. Still, they upheld the view that a prohibitory law had to be enforced in the North-West Territory for some years at all events. What is the reason that a different treatment has been adopted in that territory from that which is adopted in other parts of the country? What is the reason that, as soon as we acquired those territories and commenced to legislate for them, one of the first provisions inserted in the law was that the liquor traffic should be checked and regulated and prohibited until the matter was otherwise disposed of? The reason is obvious and is well known. It is the same reason which has prevailed in the United States, where they have practically the same law in the North-West. The reason is that those territories are partly inhabited by a race upon whom the use of alcoholic liquors—dangereous as it is to most men—has a most injurious effect beyond expression. It has been admitted by all parties that, if liquor were allowed to circulate freely in that country, where we have such a large Indian population, the consequence might be to injure—perhaps not permanently but for a long time to come—the possibilities of the development of the country, to produce possibly destruction of life and property, to produce perhaps horrors from which the imagination itself recoils. This was the motive which induced Parliament at that time unanimously, without a word of dissent from any party, to put that law on the Statute-book. It is only some few days ago when the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Jamieson), who is a prohibitionist but also a Conservative, claimed for his party the glory of having first put this provision in the law. The hon. gentleman took credit for the party to which he belongs that they were entitled to the honor of having first introduced prohibition into the North-West Territories. Be that as it may—and I am not here to grudge to the Conservative party whatever glory they may have on that score—if to them belongs the glory of putting the law on the Statute-book, to them also belongs the glory of at this moment pandering to the liquor passion in the North-West Territories. The hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall) said just now that it was time that the North-West Territories should be put on the same footing as the rest of the Dominion. That may be. I will not discuss that question. That is not the question at issue. It may be that the exceptional laws which have prevailed in the North-West Territories should be done away with and that the Territories should be put on the same footing as the rest of the Dominion. I have no opinion to express upon this question now. If the question were before the House, I would state my views upon it; but, as long as the law is upon the Statute-book, it has to be respected; and, when the hon. gentleman says that to-day the law has become obsolete, the course which he should take is not to oppose this motion of my hon. friend, but to make an amendment to the law. It is so well understood that this is the law which rules in the Territories, and that prohibition is still the law of the country there, that the defence of the Government is not that the law is not in existence, but that the Government simply wash their hands in regard to what is being done in the North-West Territories. They say, it is not we who are the guilty ones, it is not we who have permitted the sale of liquor throughout the Territories, it is not we who have given a license to the Banff Hotel and others, but it is the Lieutenant Governor; he is responsible, and he alone is responsible to the country. The Government cannot escape with such a plea as this. The Government are responsible for this, and, whether they have the manliness to stand up in defence of their act or not, they are responsible to the country for what is being done in the North-West Territories. The Lieutenant Governor has assumed a right to issue the power to the Banff Hotel to sell liquor in the same manner as it might be sold in any other part of the Dominion. He has also assumed the power of organising a license system whereby a certain kind of beer can be sold as freely as it can in any other part of the country. The Government says this is the act of the Lieutenant Governor, and the Government is not responsible for it. My hon. friend behind me (Mr. Fisher) laid the responsibility on the Minister of Interior, and, as far as I read the law, the charge is well founded. The law says:

"That the Rocky Mountains Park shall be under the control and management of the Minister of Interior, but the Governor in Council may make regulations for the following purposes."

Amongst others, for trade and traffic of every description. If the Governor in Council made any regulations as to trade and traffic of this description, the responsibility of the Minister of Interior, individually, might perhaps be set aside, but his responsibility will exist as an adviser of His Excellency, and I do not see much difference in that. This is not the plea which was put forward by the Minister of Justice this afternoon. His plea is that the Minister of Interior has no power over the Rocky Mountain Park, but that the power of administration rests altogether in the Lieutenant Governor. Let it be so, let us take the proposition of the Minister of Justice, and let us say that the responsibility of the administration of the Rocky Mountain Park belongs altogether to the Lieutenant Governor. As to the other system of license which has been carried out by the Lieutenant Governor, certainly this is an act for which he is responsible. But the Minister of Justice says: Oh, we are not responsible for that, that is the act of the Lieutenant Governor himself. Well, Mr. Speaker, if we have no statute on that question, viewing it simply upon general principles, would it not be extraordinary to see the Government claiming that they were not responsible for the officer whom they have appointed, and whose salary they pay? Here is the language of the statute itself:

"The Lieutenant Governor shall administer the Government under instructions from time to time given him by the Governor in Council, or by the Secretary of State of Canada."

"He shall administer under instructions." So that the hon. gentleman, speaking for the Government, cannot shield himself behind the Lieutenant Governor and say they are not responsible. The law says that the Lieutenant Governor shall administer under instructions from the Government, and if the Lieutenant Governor does anything outside of this very act which he has power to perform, certainly it must be presumed that he has acted under instructions from the Government, and if he has no instructions from the Government, the moment the Government allow his action to take effect, certainly they connive at it, they adopt it, and they give it the sanction of their authority. But there is more. The hon. gentleman says: We are not responsible because the Lieutenant Governor has acted under the authority which is vested in him by the Act, and under the Act he has power to issue permits for the sale of liquor. Sir, there is a vast difference between a permit given to an individual to buy a certain quantity of liquor, be it great or small, and the vast system of licenses which has been authorised here whereby anybody who applies—and this comes within the rules fixed by the Governor himself —may purchase liquor. But, take the very case put by the Minister of Justice himself: let us suppose that the Lieutenant Governor had done nothing more than to use the power which is given him by the Act, to issue permits for the sale of liquor. Is the Lieutenant Governor responsible to nobody for his act?—because we know he is not responsible to the people whom he has to administer. A year or two ago, when he had under the consideration of this House a Bill to give electoral representation to the people of the North-West Territories in this House and in the North-West Council, the right hon. gentleman who presides over the Government was asked whether he would make the Lieutenant Governor responsible to the people, whether he would introduce responsible government. The hon. gentleman said he would not; he thought that the time had not yet come when the Lieutenant Governor should be responsible to the people to whom he had to administer. He, therefore, kept the responsibility in his own hands, and yet, we are told to-day, on the floor of this House, that the Lieutenant Governor, who is not responsible to the people to whom he has to administer, is neither responsible to the Government who appointed him. This is in effect what we were told to-day by the Minister of Justice, that the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories is as potent in the Territories as the Emperor of all the Russias, and that he is no more responsible to the people nor to anybody else, than is that potentate. The Lieutenant Governor is not responsible to the people, and the Government says: Well, he is not responsible to us. The language of the Minister of Justice is simply this: We cannot help it. He did not say, he did not dare to say, whether Mr. Royal had acted wisely or unwisely, whether he had acted judiciously or injudiciously, he simply said: Well, he acted within the sphere of his authority; whether it was wise or not, we cannot help it. Sir, is such language as this to be tolerated in this House? Are we to be told that the Lieutenant Governor can do anything that he pleases, and that the Government who appoints him has nothing to say, but must tamely submit to his actions? They will not even take the consequence of those actions, but allow them to fall upon the people to whom the Lieutenant Governor is not responsible. Mr. Speaker, the truth of the matter is simply this, and I arraign the Government upon this proposition: the Lieutenant Governor has acted with the sanction of the Government, but the Government have not the courage to say so. If the Lieutenant Governor has not acted with the sanction of the Government, why do not the Government do as they did formely, and tell him that his usefulness is gone? Not many years ago when the Lieutenant Governor of Quebec took upon himself to do an act, constitutional or not, wise or unwise—I do not say—but it was an act for which he was responsible to the people of the Province, and which the people of the Province sanctioned. But that act did not meet the views of the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches and they told His Excellency the Governor General that the usefulness of the Lieutenant Governor was gone, and he was removed. If the Governor did not sanction the action of the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West, they would say to Mr. Royal: Sir, your usefulness has gone, you have performed an act which is contrary to the policy of the Government, either recall that act, to-morrow, or the day after to-morrow you are dismissed. But that is not the language which is held by the Government. The Government simply was in their hands like Pilate, and say: We cannot help it. Sir, I denounce the action of the Government. The law is on the Statute-book. If the time has come to alter that law, if the Territories are no longer in the condition that they were 14 years ago, let it be amended or repealed. But as long as the law is there, I hold that the Government are responsible for what is going on in the North-West Territories.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have listened with a good deal of regret to the remarks of an hon. gentleman with whom I am generally in accord in any action he may take against the Government of the day. This House knows that I have no great sympathy for the Administration, and I regret when it becomes my duty, from convictions which I entertain upon public questions which come before the House, to differ with the hon. gentleman who has just sat down, whose opinions I so much respect, and with whom I generally act in concert, as an independent supporter of what I believe to be the rights of the people. I do not agree with the hon. member for Brome (Mr. Fisher) in the motion he has submitted to the House condemning the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West for pursuing the course which he believed himself authorised to pursue under the statute. Sir, everybody in this House knows that on every question connected with the advance in this country, I have always been a consistent supporter, not a fanatical one. The county that I represent has for 10 years been a Scott Act county. I have never taken the first step to influence or to control, or to affect any action to prevent a thorough execution of the law in that county. It has had my moral support and my material support in every step. But, Sir, I am not one of those who believe that because a few men choose to dictate to us what we shall eat or what we shall drink, I shall necessarily follow every fad they may introduce, every attempt they may make to limit the rights of the people of this country. In regard to the particular point which has been raised in this case, in respect to the issue of authority to the Banff Hotel to sell wines and liquors, I may say this: I appeal to the leader of the Government as to whether I was not the first man who called attention to the importance of that great institution at Banff Springs remaining a national institution to this country, urging that it should not be allowed to pass into private hands, but be turned into a Government trust as the great sanitary institution of this country. I am proud to say that the right hon. gentleman, I will not say through my representations, did retain that great institution, and when a grant of $40,000 towards it came before this House, I rose and defended the expenditure against the accusations of my hon. friends on this side of the House, with whom I generally act, and I did so because I thought that the Government, in so acting, deserved the commendation instead of the condemnation of this House. I think the matter stands now very much as it did then. I believe that the men who have gone on and improved this country as the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have done, who have spent their thousands and millions of dollars, risked their estates and their property, their independence and their all, to carry out works that are a credit to the Dominion, when these men found it was necessary to build hotels along the line, to create homes in the wilderness that should be frequented by people from all lands, it is the duty of the House and of every independent member in it, who frees himself from the fanaticism of "fadism" whether temperance, religious or anything else, to stand by the men who have invested their money in building attractive hotels and sanitariums, and presenting attractions to foreigners to come to this country and make it their home. In regard to the Banff Hotel, anyone who has visited it and heard of the cures that are effected there, knows how desirable it is that it should be made attractive to people who visit it. And we must admit that if, with the narrow fanaticism which pervades many of those who insist on the carrying out of strictly temperance principles, we do not allow the German to have his beer, or the Englishman his ale, or the Canadian, like myself, his champagne and sherry—we injure the country. It is an outrage that we should attempt to restrict the conveniences and comforts provided at a great sanitary institution, as is suggested by the mover of the resolution. My hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, for whom I have the greatest respect and esteem, whose ability no man can doubt, whose eloquence in this House and throughout the country stamps him as a man amongst the first in the land, has chosen to assail the Government for the course they have pursued on this matter. God forgive me, if I am going to be a defender of the Government—I do not like to do it, but a sense of justice, notwithstanding the fact that the right hon. gentleman does not always look upon me with smiling approbation, compels me to say that in this case they are perfectly right in the course they have adopted. If the hon. gentleman will read the 92nd section of the Act, he will be satisfied that the position assumed by the Minister of Justice is perfectly in accordance with the law. The section reads as follows:—

"No intoxicating liquor or intoxicant shall be manufactured, compounded or made in the Territories, except by special permission of the Governor in Council; nor shall any intoxicating liquor or intoxicant be imported or brought into the Territories from any Province of Canada or elsewhere, or be sold, exchanged, traded or bartered, or had in possession therein, except by special permission, in writing of the Lieutenant Governor; intoxicating liquors or intoxicants, imported or brought from any place out of Canada, into the Territories, by special permission, in writing of the Lieutenant Governor, shall be subject to the Customs and Excise laws of Canada."

Does not that give the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories absolute power to grant permits for the manufacture, sale and use of alcoholic liquors in the country? Moreover, is there any reason why the people in the North-West should not have the same right and control at to what they will eat, drink and wherewithal they shall be clothed, as those in any other portion of the Dominion? I am a temperance man, and I believe in temperance.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am glad that that meets with the approbation of both sides of the House. The Government of the day have commended themselves to my judgment, by the stand they have taken, that the Lieutenant Governor has acted rightly in permitting the Banff Hotel to provide what is necessary for the comfort of their customers. It is possible, with regard to an institution such as that, which is under the control of one of the greatest corporations of the country, and under strict regulations, and conducted in a manner which reflects credit on all connected with it, that we should wish to place them in a position that they cannot provide for customers, who are staying there one week or three months for their health, convenience or comfort, all those comforts and luxuries which are necessary to such an institution, to which these visitors come to seek rest and the advantage of a health-giving climate. I say it would be an outrage on public sentiment if we attempted to restrain them.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). But they go there to drink the water.

Mr. MITCHELL. Some may do so, some who are too mean, probably, to spend a couple of dollars. But I want it understood when I go there, that if I desire it and can afford it, I shall be able to obtain a bottle of champagne, call for it and drink it. It tends to prevent people coming into the country when narrow laws exist which prevent men calling for such comforts and indulgences as they desire and are prepared to pay for. I repeat that I am a temperance man, and that I believe in temperance. I believe in the enactment of such laws as are necessary and are likely to promote temperance throughout the land, and I believe when they are enacted they should be enforced. The Scott Act has been in force in my county ten years; but during the several elections I have had the misfortune to run during that period, I have never been asked what my views were on temperance. The people all know them. I deprecate the idea of forcing temperance upon people who do not believe in it. I believe in moral suasion, in setting an example and thus promoting temperance throughout the land. When men endeavor to coerce public sentiment or individual opinion by legislation for the limitation of these enjoyments which men are able to pay for and have a right to ask for, it detracts from the moral effect of promoting temperance throughout the country, and, therefore, I am opposed to it. On these principles I am opposed to the motion of the hon. member for Brome (Mr. Fisher). In the report of the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories, as embodied in the report of the Interior Department for the year ended 30th June, 1888, I find the following paragraph:—

"The result of this action on my part was alluded to by the Auditor of the North-West Government in his report for the past year, wherein he stated that there was a marked decrease in the demand for liquor permits since the issue of 'sale permits for beer,' and, at the same time, an increase in the revenue."

It is very well known that no German will emigrate to a country where he cannot get his beer, and there are very few Englishmen who would like to emigrate to a country where that beverage is denied them. I say that it is a narrow course, and it is a mistaken view for the advocates of temperance to attempt to prevent men from enjoying their glass of beer, if they are able to pay for it and wish to have it. I do think that men, who in the cause of temperance and in the name of temperance, attempt to enforce these strict regulations and those strict opinions upon persons who differ with them, are entirely mistaken, and I believe it is a mistake for them to bring before this Parliament any resolution the effect of which will be to limit the enjoyment of travellers who come to this country from abroad. What is the object of the millions of money we have expended in the North-West? It is to open up and develop that country; one of the fairest countries of the globe. It is to promote the welfare of that country, with its teeming prairies, its boundless wealth, and which only needs the people to go in there; that country with a railway connection from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and communication thence to the rich eastern countries of the world. Does anyone believe that if we limit the enjoyment which people have been in the custom of enjoying in their own countries, that they will come to this country or avail themselves of our great system of communication with all parts of the world to travel through this country? No, Sir; the effect of such a law would be to keep them away from Canada. Does any man believe that the granting of a license to the Banff Hotel—second on this continent, only to the great Windsor Hotel in Montreal, which in its turn is second to perhaps no hotel in the world—does any man believe that the granting of a permit to an institution such as that, or such as the Summit Hotel or the Vancouver Hotel, would demoralise the people of this country? Every one knows that the object of their restriction of the sale of liquor in the North-West was to prevent the Indians from feeling the effects of the liquor traffic in that country. Does the granting of a license to the Banff Hotel affect the Indians? No; there is no whiskey sold at the Banff Hotel. I am informed that the sale of whiskey is discountenanced there, and it, therefore, cannot affect the Indians. The object of the prohibition law in the North-West Territories, as I said before, was to protect the Indians, and it is a law that I am not going to impugn the principle of. If the sale of liquor generally througout the Territories would tend to the demoralisation of the tribes which occupied that country before white men came in there, I say that prohibition is in the cause of morality. I had a conversation with a gentleman who represents a North-West constituency, and he told me that 18 years ago when he went to that country there were some 22,000 souls in the Blood and Blackfeet tribes, but only 2,000 remain to day. He enumerated a number of the other tribes in that section where the reduction of the members was comparatively the same as among the Blackfeet. That decrease has not been caused by liquor, because there has been no liquor introduced into those Territories since the law was passed. This prohibition law in the North-West Territories was specially intended to protect the Indians before white men went in there; but is this Parliament to say now that the white men living in that North-West are to be limited in their rights and their privileges, and that they will be put on a different footing from the people of the older Provinces? If we adopt any such principle as that, we will adopt a principle which will be unjust to the people of the North-West Territories and a principle which we should not countenance in this Parliament. I believe in temperance, I believe in the maintenance of law and, where temperance laws are enacted, I believe in the enforcement of these laws; but, Sir, the result of recent elections has shown us that the neglect of the enforcement of these temperance laws has demoralised public sentiment, and has led to the repeal of that temperance law in some fifteen counties where it was forced upon the people and forced upon them prematurely. I do not believe in this forcing of personal opinions upon the public unless you have a large majority of the public in support of it, and this question of enforced temperance I believe the public is not prepared to adopt. If I want to travel in the North-West, or if a gentleman from England wants to come to that country, or if 1,000 immigrants from Germany want to come to that country, why should they be deprived of that enjoyment which they obtain at home, and which they think it is lawful for them to indulge in? I am prepared to justify and defend the Lieutenant Governor of that Territory for the course he has pursued in granting licenses where it was judicious to do so and we have had no case placed before this Parliament in which abuses have arisen because Governor Royal granted those licenses. Will any man say that the granting of a license to the Banff Hotel has been an abuse? On the contrary, every person who has visited that hotel speaks of it in the highest terms, as an institution conducted in the best possible manner and worthy of being associated with one of the greatest corporations in the world—the Canadian Pacific Railway. I say it would be an outrage if we should attempt in any way to retard the progress of the great corporation who have an uphill task to perform, who have all they can do to make the institution pay, and who are doing everything they can to develop the resources of the country. It would be an outrage for us to prevent the growth of that great sanitary institution on which the Government have expended such a large amount of money, and it would be an outrage for us to condemn the Government for countenancing an act of the Lieutenant Governor, who is within the limits of the jurisdiction granted him by this Parliament. I believe the Minister of Justice was quite right in saying, no matter what might be the opinions of the administration of the day on that point, that as the Parliament of Canada has vested the Lieutenant Governor with power to grant these licenses, that the Lieutenant Governor alone is responsible and not the Government of the day. In conclusion let me say that I entirely approve of the granting of these licenses.

Mr. DAVIN. The question before the House is whether the Government should be condemned for the action of Governor Royal in issuing permits for the sale of 4 per cent. beer and whether the Minister of the Interior should be condemned because permits have been issued to the Banff Hotel. The latter question has been sufficiently discussed, and the Minister of Justice has in a conclusive and forcible manner put the matter before the House. But, in regard to the first question, there is a word to be said, I think, in justice to Lieutenant Governor Royal. When Mr. Royal became Lieutenant Governor, what did he find in the Territories? He found, by the report of the officers of the Mounted Police, by the report of everybody who visited the western towns, that a large amount of strong liquor was being sold surreptitiously; and it occurred to him that under the 92nd section of the Act he had power to issue permits for the sale of 4 per cent. beer. Mr. Bliss, who is the G. W. Patriarch of the Sons of Temperance in Manitoba, towards the close of last year, visited the various towns of the North-West Territories, and he wrote a letter to the papers in which he declared that the only hope for temperance in the Territories was a good license system, so rampant was the surreptitious sale of strong drinks in all the towns along the line. That being so, may it not have occurred to Mr. Royal to issue permits for the sale of 4 per cent. beer—the smallest percentage of alcohol with which beer can be made—with the view of promoting temperance? The Minister of Justice, who speaks as a high authority on the subject, has declared in Parliament, not, probably, in so many words, that the Governor acted within his power. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition gets up, and he takes the clause providing for the appointment of the Governor, and quotes the latter part of it, which declares that he shall govern the Territories under instruction. Of course he must do that; but when you have that stated in an Act of Parliament, and have certain rules laid down in the same Act for the guidance of the Governor, it is perfectly clear that this clause, in which it is stated that he shall govern the Territories under instruction, cannot mean that, in regard to anything provided for in the Act, he is to perpetually to refer to Ottawa to know what he is to do. The two things are perfectly distinct, and I was greatly surprised to hear a man who is usually so logical as my hon. friend who leads the Opposition, try to make out from that clause in the Act, that Mr. Royal, in order to ascertain the scope of his conduct under the 92nd clause, should refer to Ottawa. The hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition has also declared—and he endorsed what the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) stated in that respect—that the great object of these prohibitory clauses was to prevent the liquor getting to the Indians. Why, Sir, the 4 per cent. beer cannot get to the Indians. In the towns along the line where it is sold there are very few Indians; the Indians are on their reserves. Any Indians who are to be seen in those towns stray into them from the reserves; but if any of these men went to a hotel where the 4 per cent. beer is sold, they would not get it. I may say that, if I had anything to say in the matter, I should not have issued the permits for the sale of the 4 per cent beer. I have always contended that if you have a probibitory law at all, it should be entirely prohibitory; and I have said that there was a weakness in the Act as it existed under the administration of both parties, in having the qualification in the prohibitory clauses that the Lieutenant-Governor could issue permits. By the Public Accounts I find that the amount received last year for permits for strong drinks was $3,704, whereas the permits for the sale of 4 per cent. beer only returned $1,171; so that it does not look as if Mr. Royal's policy had been disastrous to temperance in the North-West. As a fact, it has not. As a fact, it has, I believe, diminished the consumption of strong drinks in the Territories; and if it has done that, it has fulfilled the object in view, and has done good work. I can also say, with some authority, that the statement indicated by the Minister of Justice is literally correct. When Mr. Royal issued those permits for the sale of 4 per cent. beer, I made a point of enquiring closely as to who was responsible for that course, and I have it on the highest authority that the Governor himself was responsible for the issue of those permits; and, Sir, as I contended before, when this matter was before the House, I contend now, that Mr. Royal acted within the four corners of the 92nd section. The wording of that section leaves no doubt on my mind that he has the power to issue permits for the sale of beer, and although I differ from the policy, although so long as you have prohibition at all I am in favor of entire prohibition, although I hold that as people went in there, knowing the country to be a prohibitory country, no change should take place until the people themselves express their views on the subject, nevertheless it would be most unjust to sit here and hear the argument that has been made, without saying something of the circumstances under which Governor Royal issued those permits. Now, Sir, the course of this discussion shows how necessary is the legislation which my hon. friend the Minister of the Interior introduced a few evenings ago, and which, I have no doubt, will become law. I have no doubt that after the next election in the Territories, the Legislative Assembly will have the power of dealing with this question. During the election it will be before the public, and they can decide it for themselves, and you will then have the question of liquor or no liquor, license or no license, prohibition or no prohibition, placed on a satisfactory footing.

Sir DONALD A. SMITH. As one who had something to do with the initiation of the Act prohibiting the introduction of intoxicating drinks into the North-West, I wish to say a few words, and only a few, on this subject. It was at the last Council of the Hudson Bay Company, held in 1870, at which I presided, that the first resolution was passed prohibiting such drinks in the North-West. It was at the first meeting of the North-West Council, under the Dominion, in October of the same year, that that resolution was confirmed, and it was confirmed by a resolution proposed by myself, when my respected friend, Sir Adams Archibald, was the Governor of that country. The circumstances of the country were then entirely different from what they are at present. Then there were thousands and tens of thousands of Indians in the North-West; there were not 1,000 white people in the whole of that great Territory, outside of Manitoba. It was with the express purpose of preventing intoxicating drinks being supplied to the Indians that that resolution was introduced on both of those occasions. It was felt that it was a great evil that those drinks should be furnished to them, as it had been before that time, and most of what was given was brought across the border from the United States. There was no middle way of dealing with the subject; it would have been of no use then to impose a high duty upon liquors. There were at that time just one Custom house and two Customs officers in the North-West, including Manitoba; those were at Winnipeg; and you had a frontier of some 1,200 miles stretching to the Rocky Mountains, every portion of which could be passed just as easily as any high road in this country. Any quantity of liquor could have been brought across the border, and it would have been impossible, no matter what duty you could have imposed, to prevent it. The only thing that could be done was not to allow it to be introduced into the country at all; and when it was found on any occasion, it was to be spilled on the ground, which I think was the letter of the Act. Now the circumstances are very different. I do not wish to discuss the propriety or impropriety of giving a license to the Banff Hotel or any other particular hotel; but I do think that now there should be some more licenses than formerly, with regard to the introduction of spirituous liquors into this country. You have now a large population there; they are drawn from all parts of Europe and this country; they have been accustomed to have their wine and their beer, and it is a very very difficult thing indeed to change the habits of the people; and perhaps the very fact of forbidding them having any such drinks would have in itself a very great effect in deterring others from coming to the country. That, I think, is one very good reason why we should now allow the sale of liquor. At the same time, while unfortunately the number of Indians in the North-West is very small compared with what it was some years ago, I think, without preventing the white population having wine and beer, as they may desire, or at any rate in moderation, the conditions permitting it to be given to the Indians should be made as strict as possible. I merely wished to show the circumstances under which the Act of prohibition was introduced, and how very different the circumstances of the country were then than now. I do consider that we ought to act in this measure, and that we ought to act with regard to it as we find the country to be at present, and not to continue it as it was when this Act was passed some eighteen or nineteen years ago.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) A stranger listening to the debate which has taken place the last hour or two would come to the conclusion that we are discussing the nature of a prohibitory law, which should be applicable to the North-West Territories; and the remarks made by the hon. gentleman who has just sat down were entirely in that direction. The remarks of the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) were directed against the imposition of any sumptuary law in the North-West prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquor within certain limits; but the House will understand that we are not discussing any question of that kind. My hon. friend, in his resolution, did not propose to change the law. He did not discuss the condition of affairs in the North-West, he did not discuss whether it was desirable that this Parliament should prohibit the sale of liquors, or whether we should concede to the North-West Council the power to legislate in the matter. This debate may do very well as an educative process, but it is entirely foreign to the subject before the House. Parliament has, in its wisdom, passed a law and declared that this law shall exist in the North-West Territories. We find to-day that that law, in the opinion of the hon. member for Brome, has been distinctly violated. The debate has gained certain importance through some constitutional principles which the Minister of Justice laid down, and from which I venture most respectfully to differ. If the hon. gentleman's law is correct, we have a curious official in this country, known as the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West, holding important powers and being responsible for the exercise of those powers to no one. There is no such individual in the country. The Lieutenant Governor must either be responsible for the exercise of his powers to his Council, or this Parliament. The law of the land is that the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West shall administer the Government of that country subject to and under instructions from the Governor in Council of Canada. It may be right and proper that we should grant responsible government to the North-West, but that question we are not discussing now, and it will come up in its proper place. We must discuss this resolution, and the law as it stands, and we find that the law declares that the Lieutenant Governor shall administer, under instructions to be given him from time to time by the Governor in Council. The meaning of that is that the laws of Canada, as passed by this Parliament, shall be administered by the Lieutenant Governor under instructions from the Government here. There must, therefore, be somebody responsible to the people for the administration of these laws. This Government being responsible to Parliament, and we being responsible to the people, in that way responsibility is thrown on the proper shoulders. What is the law? The hon. gentleman attempted to argue that it was perfectly proper for Mr. Royal of his own authority and motion to grant licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors. The hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) argued this was all right, because the liquor was only of a certain strength.

Mr. DAVIN. No.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He argued it was desirable that 4 per cent. beer should be allowed, and, therefore, Lieutenant Governor Royal might grant the license for the sale of this beer, and that he ought to be supported by us in so doing. Does the hon. Minister of Finance assent to that argument advanced by the hon. members for West Montreal, Northumberland and East Assiniboia? The action of Lieutenant Governor Royal can be defended only on the ground that it is in the interests of the North-West Territories that he should grant licenses to sell any quantities the licensees please and when and to whom they please, throughout those Territories. What says the Statute? That Statute may be good or it may be bad. If it is good, the Minister is responsible for its being executed. The Minister of Finance, who specially sits in the Cabinet as the representative of the temperance people of this country, should see to that, or, if he has come to the conclusion that the Statute is bad, the responsibility rests upon him and upon his colleagues of proposing a change. The 92nd section of the Act says that: No intoxicating liquors shall be sold in the Territories except by special permission in writing of the Lieutenant Governor. Special permission—it is not a general license or a general permission—it is not a license given to John Smith to import as much liquor as he likes, or to sell as much as he likes during the year.

Mr. DAVIN. No such thing is done.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) General licenses are given. Special licenses are not given in every case.

Mr. DAVIN. In every case.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The returns show the contrary. The hon. gentleman could not have listened to the argument of the Minister of Justice this afternoon. He laid it down, and I entirely assent to that view, that, as far as the Banff Park is concerned, the Governor in Council not having acted upon the powers vested in them, it remains in the same position as any other part of the North-West Territories. Therefore, the sale of liquor at Banff must be under the same rules as these which govern any other part of the North-West Territories until the Governor in Council choose to exercise the power vested in them by the Act. Does the hon. gentleman say that special licenses or general licenses are granted to the Banff Park Hotel? We know that general license has been granted, and that is the complaint to-night. To prove that only special licenses are to be granted, the 93rd section of the Act declares that a return shall be made to this Parliament, the ultimate court of appeal, the body which is ultimately responsible, annually up to the 31st December in each year, of the number of such permissions so given by the Lieutenant Governor, and the quantity and the nature of the intoxicating liquors in each case. Sir, that law is being distinctly violated to-day, and by whom? By the appointee of the Minister of Finance. The law says that the Lieutenant Governor, the appointee of the Minister of Finance, is to administer that law under instructions which the Minister of Finance and his colleagues send him, and I presume that to-day, if Lieutenant Governor Royal is acting in this way in defiance of the law, and is authorising the sale of liquor in the Banff Park Hotel, he is doing it under instructions sanctioned, if not expressly given, by hon. gentlemen opposite. The Government cannot escape the responsibility of the action of the Lieutenant Governor. He is administering his Government under instructions which are to be given to him by the Governor in Council. If he violates the law it is their duty to instruct him to conform to the law, and the Ministers here are responsible, and the Minister of Finance is specially responsible to the House and to the country for the fact that the law regulating the sale of intoxicating liquors in the North-West Territories is being distinctly violated. That hon. gentleman takes credit throughout the country for the fact that the Administration with which he is connected have passed a law regulating, if not altogether prohibiting, the sale of liquors in that territory. He says to the temperance people: See what we have done; and yet he allows his appointee to violate that law. The returns have been read here to-day, and I say that this Parliament will be derelict in its duty if it does not do one of two things: either call to account the Government which sanctions the violation of the law, or repeal the law itself. There can be nothing more immoral than the retention of a sumptuary law of this kind on the Statute-book which the authorities wink at the breach of. The public are led to believe that the laws are made not to be obeyed, but in order to deceive the people, leading them to believe that we have a temperance law on the Statute-book when we have not, and that liquor cannot be sold when it is being sold. I charge upon the Government to-day, as my hon. friend did before, that they are responsible for what I conceive to be flagrant violations of the law by their appointee, with their knowledge, by an officer appointed by them and carrying on the Government of that country under instructions from them. What conclusion can be drawn from that? The Lieutenant Governor authorises this traffic; it is illegal; he does it under his instructions. Can anyone doubt that the responsibility lies upon the Government here? There cannot be a doubt of it, and I say that this motion should be supported by hon. members on both sides of the House irrespective of their views on the temperance question. It is not a question whether there should be a prohibitory law or not. That question has been determined by Parliament. If it should be repealed, let the Government, who are responsible, bring in a Bill with that purpose, and then that question can be discussed; but, if the law is there, we have to see that it is enforced, and we have to condemn these breaches of it, particularly when they are the result, as we are bound to believe, of instructions to the Lieutenant Governor from this Government.

Mr. KIRK. The hon. the Minister of Justice, in speaking to-night, laid the whole responsibility of granting these permits upon Lieutenant Governor Royal, and said that his department was not consulted at all in the matter. In looking over the correspondence which was laid on the Table of the House the other day, I made this note in reference to the matter. I find, in reference to the application of the Canadian Pacific Railway to import and sell wines and beers in the hotel at Banff, a letter appears from Mr. A. E. Forget, the secretary to the Lieutenant Governor, to the secretary of the Department of the Interior, informing him that the Lieutenant Governor has granted the permission sought in the letter of the 12th July, 1888, and stating that His Honor had informed the company that the permission was only provisional until concurrent authority was obtained from the department at Ottawa. The Lieutenant Governor is influenced to act in this way, it appears, after a consultation with the Deputy Minister of the Interior and with the Department of Justice. After reading that, I thought it rather strange that the Minister of Justice should state that his department was not consulted in the matter.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. My department was not consulted.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for Brome (Mr. Fisher) says he represents a temperance county and speaks generally on the floor of this House for the temperance people of this country. I ask him, then, why he brings t his double barrelled resolution before the House, as a vote of want of confidence if his intention is to promote the cause of temperance. I call it a double barrelled resolution because he not only moves a vote of censure on the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West, but also on the Minister of the Interior, and, if we take, as we should take, the opinion of the Minister of Justice on that point, the Minister of the Interior has nothing at all to do with the question. I take it that the member for Brome (Mr. Fisher) has brought this question before the House so that he and the press supporting him may say, here is a temperance resolution moved in the House, and the hon. member for Brome spoke on the question. They will never state that it was brought up as a vote of want of confidence, but simply in order to promote temperance. That is the only object, in my opinion, why this motion is brought before the House, so that its supporters may go to the country and make political capital out of it. On a former occasion I stated that when temperance resolutions were brought up in this House mixed with politics, I generally stood by my politics. This motion I consider is mixed with politics, and, therefore, I feel it my duty on this occasion to stand by my politics. The hon. gentleman knows that if this motion is carried the Government would simply have to resign; the passage of this motion would have the effect of turning the Government out, and turning the hon. member for Brome and his friends into the Treasury benches. I may say that a meeting of the Dominion Alliance was held in the earlier part of this Session at which it was decided to have a motion brought up in this House declaring in favor of prohibition. The advisability was discussed of bringing forward a motion of this kind, although the name of the Minister of the Interior was not then associated with it. Before a decision was arrived the temperance men on both sides of the House were invited to meet and discuss the question. I was also present, and after we had discussed the question some time we saw that the drift of the resolution was not so much to pass a vote of censure upon the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories, as upon this Government generally, and I made the statement then that if we wanted to censure any one, we had better commence nearer home and pass a vote of censure upon the Ontario Government for having violated a statute of this Dominion, the Scott Act, which was passed by this Government, and every person knew that it was violated in its enforcement. After we had discussed the question fully and had read the statute referring to the duties of the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West, it was finally decided that this motion should not be put upon the notice paper, but simply a motion calling for returns. It was decided, as I understood at that meeting by the temperance men, that no such motion should be brought up at this Session, but simply a motion calling for the return of papers, as it was fully decided there that the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West had acted within his powers. I do not think the hon. member for Brome consulted the temperance men on either side of the House in reference to bringing up this motion at the close of the Session. But as I said before, I believe he has brought it up for political effect in order that he may go to the country and say: Here is a resolution that I brought before the House and spoke on it, but the Minister of Finance who poses as a temperance man, and other temperance men who sit on the Government side, opposed it. Sir, we were elected to stand by the Government, we are pledged to our constituents to support the present Government, and we are not going to allow ourselves to be deceived by a motion of this kind, for I believe that the hon. member for Brome has brought this question forward, not in the interest of temperance, but in the interest of his party.

Mr. FREEMAN. I would like to say a word or two on this question before I vote on it. I must confess that I have very little sympathy with those hon. gentlemen who are so very earnest in their temperance sentiments to-night. I was at the meeting which the last speaker referred to, and we had this Statute before us, and while we were very earnest in our denunciation of the conduct of the authorities of the North-West when we began the discussion, we eased off considerably before we closed. After reading the law, and getting our minds disabused of the opinion we had before entertained, that the use of liquor, the importation of liquor, or the sale of liquor, was prohibited in the North-West Territories, when we read this law we found that that was not the case. We found this language:

"Nor shall any intoxicating liquor or intoxicant be imported or brought into the Territories from any Province of Canada or elsewhere, or be sold, exchanged, traded, bartered, or be had in possession therein, except by special permission in writing of the Lieutenant Governor."

We found then that liquor could be imported, sold, exchanged, and bartered if the Lieutenant Governor thought proper to give a permission to that effect, and when the Lieutenant Governor thought it advisable to do so, we concluded that it was not within our province to condemn him for doing so. This statute was passed in a former Parliament, and I presume that some of those gentlemen who are so aggressive this afternoon, had a voice in passing it. If they were prohibitionists, as I am, why did they allow such a law to pass at all? Why did they not, in clear and unmistakable language, prohibit the importation, and the sale of liquor in the North-West Territories? Why did they tamper with the thing as they have done here? Simply to get rid of prohibition, no other reason in the world. They were like the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell). He wants the people to have an opportunity to enjoy themselves in that country—not get drunk, not to make fools of themselves, but just to enjoy themselves. So these hon. gentlemen supposed that by giving the Lieutenant Governor power to grant permission to certain people, they could have their wine and their brandy on special occasions, but the poor man who wants to drink beer, could get no permission, and could get no drink. Now, Sir, I do not believe in that kind of temperance. I may say here that I would care very little who sits on this side of the House if we could get a prohibitory law in this country; and if these hon. gentlemen opposite will move a prohibitory measure for the whole Dominion, I will not stop to consider what my politics are, I will support such a measure. But I feel that even my strong feelings in favor of prohibition, what some people call my extreme temperance views, do not warrant me in supporting a measure of the kind that is before the House to-night. If the hon. gentleman opposite will propose a measure denouncing the manufacture, importation and sale of liquor throughout the Dominion, I will support it, but I will not support a measure censuring the Lieutenant Governor for doing just exactly what they gave him permission to do. We may criticise these words "special permission." I do not care to draw the line very closely between special and general permission. It is certainly permission to sell, permission to import into the North-West Territories, permission to barter, and consequently permission to drink. I care not whether this is called special or general, but power is certainly given to the Lieutenant Governor to act in the manner he has done, and in so acting I believe he did not exceed the letter of the law, whatever may have been the spirit of it. In regard to the statement made by the Minister of Justice, I find it was contradicted by the member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies). I have to choose between the interpretation of the law as given by these two hon. gentlemen. I choose to take the interpretation of the former, and if I am wrong in doing that I am conscientious in doing so, for I believe the Minister of Justice gave the House what he believes to be the law without any political prejudice connected with it. I thought I saw in the countenance and in the speech of the hon. member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies) that he had some other motive in giving his construction of the law; he had some sinister motive, and I think it was a very natural one. No doubt when hon. gentlemen have sat in Opposition for a long time, and they thought that a certain construction of the law would place them on this side of the House, they would all take that view of the law, and while I am willing to make allowance for his failings, I cannot accuse him for doing that which perhaps I would be quite willing to do myself if similarly situated. Under all the circumstances I take the law as given by the Minister of Justice, and acting in accordance with my own feelings and convictions with respect to temperance and prohibition, I will vote against the amendment.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The argument of the hon. member for Queen's, Nova Scotia (Mr. Freeman) is certainly amusing. He and the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) are temperance men, but they are politicians first. The hon. member for Queen's, Nova Scotia, has just told us that his views underwent considerable change at the time he was attending the Dominion Alliance meeting. He at first favored censuring that scapegoat the Lieutenant Governor, but after a time, when he had looked into the matter, he found that the Lieutenant Governor had to govern the country in accordance with instructions from the Governor in Council at Ottawa. That fact led him to change his mind. It was all right to make a scapegoat of the Lieutenant Governor, but when you came through him to censure the Governor in Council at Ottawa, it was carrying the joke just a little too far. He had not the honesty which the member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) possessed, to state that he was for party first and temperance afterwards, that when he came to consider a question as between temperance and party, temperance had to go to the wall and party come to the front. The hon. gentleman's position reminded me of a story of a Dutchman and his cow. The cow had strayed away, and he sent his boy to look after it and told him to follow up the tracks on this side of the river. He said: "You follow up and find her, and I will go to the other side and look across." But the Dutchman found tracks there also, and he therefore called to the boy to come back, for he said it was no use to look for a cow that made tracks on both sides of the river. There has been a great deal said to-night that is utterly beside the question. Much has been said to show the expediency and utility of allowing the sale of liquors in the North-West Territories. That is a question, I submit, which is not brought up in the resolution. The question is simply whether the law, as we find it, should be carried out? I do not say that it is inexpedient that liquor should be sold in the North-West Territories. That is a matter we are not now considering. I do not say it is inexpedient that licenses should be granted. That question is not before us. The question is simply this: We have a certain law, and shall that law be carried out or not? There is nothing more damaging to the community than to allow any law to be systematically and constantly violated, and violated with the sanction of the body which pretends to carry it out, namely, the Governor in Council. That is the only question to be decided to-night. I do not mean to say that a prohibitory law shall always prevail in the North-West Territories. I believe entirely in self-government. When the people of the North-West Territories say to us that they want a license law, we shall be ready to repeal this law and allow them to pass it; but until they do so intimate their wish, it is the duty of the Government to see that the law as it stands on the Statute-book is carried out; and this resolution before the House affirms that the law is there and that it should be observed.

Mr. DEWDNEY. Before a vote is taken on this motion, I desire to say a word or two, and my words will be very few in regard to this matter. I quite agree with the hon.

member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor), who spoke in regard to the manner in which this resolution has been introduced by the hon. member for Brome (Mr. Fisher). I also think that he took a very cowardly way of bringing this matter before the House. It would have been much fairer if he had taken another opportunity of obtaining a vote, yea or nay, with respect to the temperance question pure and simple, because I believe the hon. gentleman has adopted this course for the purpose of placing certain hon. members who are as good temperance men as he is in a false position. That is one of the principal objects of the hon. gentleman in bringing this motion forward in the way he has done. I am quite sure, when the hon. gentleman read the papers which I laid on the Table a few days ago in regard to this matter, he was very much disappointed. He expected to find that the Government had instructed Lieutenant Governor Royal, or given instructions themselves to issue licenses to those hotels. The hon. gentleman did not find that in the papers, and consequently he had to find some other excuse on which to frame a motion to bring before the House at this unfortunate time. He prepared his motion, censuring the Lieutenant Governor for granting permission to sell liquor in the Territory, when I think the Lieutenant Governor had a perfect right to do it. The hon. gentleman, in his resolution, also censures me for not courageously coming forward and granting the applications myself, or, on the other hand, refusing. With respect to my own position, I think the Minister of Justice has placed it very clearly before the House. The hon. member for Brome (Mr. Fisher) says he is not a lawyer, and he was not prepared to express an opinion as to the legal aspect of the case, and I think that after hearing the Minister of Justice he must have come to the conclusion that he certainly has been quite wrong, at least so far as I am concerned. Looking back over the short period of time during which these licenses have been granted I am quite sure that if I were in the same position again I should act as I have hitherto done because my impression was that I had no right and no power to interfere. When these permits were first granted for the sale of beer in the Territories I was not confirmed in my position of Minister of the Interior, but when I came down here, as several applications had been made to me and as the Lieutenant Governor held the view that we had concurrent jurisdiction in the matter, I looked into the question myself and I came to the conclusion that I had not concurrent jurisdiction nor did I care to take the responsibility. I had issued permits for seven or eight years in the North-West, and I was glad to get rid of the responsibility. After consultation with gentlemen who ought to be able to give an opinion on the matter, I came to the conclusion that the Act did not sufficiently specify what the jurisdiction of the Lieutenant Governor was over that Park. That is the reason why, within the last few days, I have introduced a Bill which will make clear what the jurisdiction of the Lieutenant Governor is there, and after that I propose to prepare such regulations as I think are necessary for the conduct of the park, and they will then be submitted to my colleagues. When the time arrives that I consider I am in a position to take action in the matter, I shall be prepared to make a recommendation in that regard, and if the question arises whether I shall recommend that permission be given to the Banff Park hotel to sell beer and wine, under restrictions, I shall feel justified in giving that permission. The hon. gentleman also stated during his remarks that this was the first time that any permission had been given to sell whiskey in the North-West Territories. Probably the hon. gentleman will be astonished to find that when I took over the administration of the affairs of the North-West, some seven or eight years ago, among the papers and books handed over to me was a printed book with some three or four hundred blanks, a number of which had been used, and these blanks were specially printed for the purpose of giving authority for the sale of whiskey in the North-West Territories. I found that out of that book some forty or fifty of these license forms had been issued by my predecessor, the Hon. Mr. Laird, and the quantities permitted ran from 2 up to 15 gallons. My secretary informed me that it had been customary to issue those permits and I myself issued one or two of these sale permits. I found that Governor Laird had insisted, when the quantity of the liquor in the permit had been exhausted, that the party applying for the second permit should send a statement of how the first quantity had been disposed of. A gentleman who had rather a large permit applied to me for another, and I wrote to him to send the return of how he had disposed of the liquor previously allowed him. To my astonishment and amusement I found that everything a man could think of had been given as an excuse for obtaining the whiskey. Among other excuses I recollect that one man got a pint of brandy for sore eyes, another got a pint of brandy for cracked heels on his horse, and a child of two years old with some ailment was set down for another pint of brandy. It would appear that every man who lived in the district had a colic or some kind of ailment and got a pint of brandy to cure it. I came to the conclusion that that privilege had been abused and consequently from that time out I refused to grant those permits, and I was able to confine myself to my resolution, except in one or two cases. I mention this to show the hon. gentleman that this system had been in vogue during my predecessor's term as Lieutenant Governor, and that Mr. Laird believed he had authority under the Act to grant a permit to sell. I thought so myself and Governor Royal has thought so. In reference to the issue of permits generally I may say that it was a very disagreeable duty for anyone to have the administering, if each man in the country thought he was just as much entitled to a permit as another, and every possible excuse that could be given for the issue of the permit was given. I exercised the best discretion I could in the matter, and I believe Governor Royal is doing the same. The Act which hon. gentlemen here seem anxious to take the credit of putting on the Statute-book has done its work well in its day, and as the hon. member for Montreal (Sir Donald A. Smith) has stated it was passed at a time when the country was crowded with Indians. I myself consider that now the time for its greatest necessity has passed, and I do not consider that there would be the least danger of whiskey getting into the hands of these Indians now if a properly supervised license system was adopted in the Territories. My experience of the Indians shows me that they are adverse to liquor, and the chiefs and the headmen of the reserve do everything they possibly can to keep their Indians from getting liquor. I do not believe that any bad result would follow if a system similar to other parts of the country were extended to the North-West. During the time that I had the administering of the affairs of the North-West I was accused of having issued too many permits. It was stated and believed by a great number that the system had been abused, but there were no means taken to make the Act more stringent. It left the whole matter in the hands of the Lieutenant Governor and he was able to do as he pleased. I think that it is a pity that when this Act was passed gentleman who took some interest in prohibition did not make it stricter than it was and prevent the granting of permits to any one at all except for medicinal purposes and that alone. I shall not trouble the House any longer except to say that I feel quite sure that the members of this House, by their vote, will decide that if they stood in my shoes they would act just as I have done.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). In dealing with this question this evening, I do not propose to take up the time of the House at any great length. I agree with the hon. gentleman who has just sat down, in saying that the exercise of the power which was given to him as Lieutenant Governor of the North-West by the statute which originally constituted a Government there, to issue permits for the introduction of liquor, was one of the most unpleasant duties which he found imposed upon him. We can easily understand that, because when you put a power of that kind into the hands of one individual, all sorts of pressure is brought to bear upon him to secure the end in view. But I must say, in respect to the original constitution of the North-West Territories, that if the law meant anything at all when it was first enacted, it meant that some attempt should be made to see how prohibition, pure and simple, from the beginning, would work. Perhaps I had better turn for one moment to the statement of the Minister at that time leading the House, who introduced that Act, as to the object he had in view. The Hon. Mr. Mackenzie, on the 12th of March, 1875, in explaining the provisions of this constitution, spoke thus:

"Section 71 and the sub-sections 1 to 6 inclusive contain provisions for excluding all intoxicating liquors, prohibiting their introduction and their sale in the Territories. This would give the Dominion a fair opportunity to commence with a clean slate in this enormous Territory, and test practically the operation of a prohibitory liquor law where there had been no law of that or any other subject before."

I would like to ask any man in the House whether any more unequivocal language could be used. And yet, Sir, to-night we find gentlemen rising up one after another in this House, and telling us that it was not the intention of the original promoters of the constitution of the Territories that prohibition should exist there, but that this law was intended to give power to the Lieutenant Governor not to issue permits as the hon. Minister of the Interior did, who, I believe, considering the pressure brought to bear upon him, discharged his duty fairly well; but we find gentlemen who profess to be advocates of temperance in this House, getting up and justifying not the issue of permits, but the issue of actual licenses to retail 4 per cent. beer and wine in any quantities which parties may wish to purchase. It simply goes to prove what one of them said openly to-night, that they are supporters of the Government first and temperance men afterwards. I tell them that is what has led to the ruin of the temperance cause in this country, and to the ignominious defeat of the Scott Act in various counties where it was submitted; and just so long as that kind of principle animates these temperance men, just so long will temperance legislation be kept in the background, and just so long will there be a Government which is covertly hostile to anything like temperance legislation. My hon. friend said he found a book with three or four hundred blanks in it for permits. Perhaps, somebody had a printing contract, who thought he would get a big book printed and obtain good rates for it in order to supply the Governor of the Territories with ample means of granting permits, so that there would not be any occasion for a Governor to get these permits printed in future. But we will all agree that when this Act was passed, it was intended to prohibit the introduction of liquor into that country. A few years ago, when the boundaries of Manitoba were extended, the people in the added territory asked that the law prohibiting the issue of licenses should continue to prevail in that portion of Manitoba; showing that so far as the people were concerned they were not anxious that licenses or permits should be issued or that the sale of liquor should be introduced into their midst, but that they wanted that at least a fair trial should be given to the operation of prohibition pure and simple. What I complain of to day is this: that the Government stands on one side and throws the responsibility on the Lieutenant Governor of issuing the license for the Banff Hotel, while their own return shows that he only issued it subject to the confirmation of the authorities at Ottawa; and yet the Minister of Justice stands up to-night and states that the Lieutenant Governor is an autocrat in the Territories as much as the Czar of all the Russias, and that we are unable to do anything to prevent his action. This argument is too thin to satisfy honest supporters of temperance in this country. If the law is wrong, why not have the courage to come down to this House and amend it or at least give the people the opportunity of saying whether they will have it or not? But the Government will not do that; they will not allow the people of the North West the right of free British citizens; but they say to them: we hold that you are nominally under a law that forbids you to bring liquor into this country, but we will give licenses to certain parties to sell liquor in defiance of the intention of the statute. And where do we find the men who profess to be friends of temperance to-day? My hon. friend from Leeds (Mr. Taylor) says that if this motion had been intended to accomplish anything, it would not have been introduced as a want of confidence motion. What did my hon. friend think when the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) introduced a resolution as to which he at any rate felt that the opinion of this House should be put upon record? Did he introduce an independent motion for fear of showing hostility to the Government? I venture to say that there is not a more honest supporter of the Government in this House than that hon. gentleman; and yet he felt himself constrained to place himself in apparent hostility to the Government, and why? Just because he knew, as the hon. member for Leeds knows, that if he had not put his resolution in a way which would render it impossible for some understrapper of the Government to introduce an amendment, which any man who did not want to vote for the resolution would vote for, his resolution would be left in the background. When I first came into political life, we had a burning question here, and I remember that time and again that question was shunted off by amendments until at last my hon. friend who is now the Minister of Inland Revenue, felt that although a friend of the Government he had no alternative but to put his resolution where no man could go behind him and move an amendment, for the simple reason that an amendment would have left him stranded and helpless and he found himself in such a position that he had to place it there. I say that the action of representatives on this side of the House, who cannot be accused of any special friendly feeling for the Government, on the motion of my hon. friend for Muskoka, ought to be a standing rebuke to temperance men such as the hon. member for Leeds. What did we do on that occasion? We said we believed the Government were right and supported the Government. My hon. friend has not the courage of his temperance convictions, but he says: if you will put it some other way, so that it will not reflect on the Government, I will vote differently. I am a good solid temperance man, but, oh, my, I do not like to vote against the Government. Out upon that kind of temperance sentiment. That kind of temperance sentiment will never make headway. The only kind of sentiment that will make headway is that of the man who says: I believe these sentiments are right, and I will stand by them, be the consequences what they may. That is not the kind of sentiment that animates the hon. gentleman for Leeds. I listened to the hon. member for Queen's County, Nova Scotia, as he told us: Oh, if you will only introduce an abstract resolution respecting temperance, how glad I will be to support you, but I really cannot support this motion because I do not think you are in earnest. Now, that kind of temperance will never bring any friends to the cause in this country. If temperance principles are to prevail, you must have men who will stand up on behalf of temperance, in season and out of season, and in spite of all consequences. But my hon. friends are not built that way, and to-night we have the beautiful spectacle of a series of temperance men, from the Minister of Finance, who has posed time and again as the champion of temperance, all the way down to the hon. member for Leeds, saying, in fact, that temperance is a good thing, but when it interferes with political association it is very bad. What I complain of is that the whole matter shows that the action of the Government has been hostile to an attempt to work this Act fairly in the North-West Territories. If the Government had been disposed to put that Act in operation fairly, as it was originally enacted, they would never have been found issuing licenses to sell either 4 per cent. beer, or wine, or other liquor in that country unless they first changed the Act. What I complain of in connection with the temperance movement is that the Government have been tacitly opposed to efficiently executing that scheme, which was to give temperance principles a fair trial. Until such time as something different is found in high places, it is utterly in vain for the temperance people to expect satisfactory results from temperance legislation. The people of the North-West either should have this Act amended, or be given an opportunity to say whether they should have licenses issued in their midst, and liquor sold; or whether its sale should be prohibited. I say that the treatment the Government have meted out to the people of the North-West Territories to-day is not the treatment they had a right to expect at the hands of the Government as British subjects. They are being treated as this Government attempted to treat Manitoba in former years, with the result that when the people of Manitoba would not endure that treatment any longer, but were driven first to rebellion, and then to the verge of rebellion, the Government withdrew their hand and meted out to them the first principles of British justice. This mode of doing business is very unsatisfactory. It is evident that the Government is hostile to this kind of legislation, or there would not be such systematic tampering with the enforcement of the law. I think either that the law should be amended or those licenses withdrawn. It is useless for the temperance sentiment of this country to expect to make any progress while thus treated by its representative men. If men have not the courage of their convictions it shows they are only temperance men for political advancement, and the sooner people realise that and change these men for men who have deeper, stronger and firmer convictions, the better it will be for the country. In this connection I feel there has been a systematic attempt to ignore the popular sentiment and feeling of the North-West Territories. It is deeply to be regretted if the law is now through the circumstances obsolete. Either let the people of the Territories say, whether they shall retain it or not, or assume the responsibility of amending it. But the best evidence that the Government feel that they are not in accord with the temperance sentiment of the country is, that they endeavor as the Minister of Justice did just now, to lead the House to believe that the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories is vested with absolute power to do as he pleased without let or hindrance. On another occasion, referred to by the leader of the Opposition, the Government did not hold that doctrine. They soon brought the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Quebec to book, and told him his usefulness was gone, and I venture to say that if the Government here had intimated to Mr. Royal that if he did not stop this thing his usefulness would be gone very soon, he would have ceased to issue licenses, and the people would have had an opportunity of testing honestly the working of prohibition.

Mr. JAMIESON. I have but a very few sentences to utter upon this question. Those who have been in the House any length of time will recollect that I have, as a rule, so far as my connection with temperance is concerned, endeavored to support it free of party politics, as far as possible. Did I believe that the present resolution or motion could have been made at an earlier period of the Session, I should feel disposed, under such circumstances, to have treated it differently, from the way in which I purpose to treat the amendment of the hon. member for Brome. So far as the remarks of the hon. member for Wentworth are concerned, I would simply say, as a temperance man, that the temperance people of this Dominion are under no special obligation, so far as I am aware, to either political party of this country for any great encouragement in reference to prohibitory legislation or the advancement of temperance sentiment in the country. When I made a motion a few weeks ago for the papers which have been brought down, and which have since been in the hands of the hon. member for Brome, I expressed, as a professional man, my opinion in reference to the question now under discussion. I do not, consequently, deem it advisable at this stage of the discussion, and at this late hour, to enter upon a discussion of that question again. Reference has been made to what took place at the meeting of the Dominion Alliance. And I must say, with all due respect to my hon. friend from South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) and hon. friend from Queen's, N.S. (Mr. Freeman), that they have fallen into an error with reference to what took place there. I am not aware that any conclusion was come to as to allowing this question to drop. At the time it was brought up in the Dominion Alliance, I was responsible for an amendment to the report of the committee to whom the question was referred, relegating that question to what is known as the legislative committee of the Dominion Alliance. It was contended at the meeting of the Alliance that it would be advisable to introduce a resolution condemning the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories for the state of things which existed there in reference to the prohibitory provisions of the North-West Territories Act. In my judgment, and I think in the judgment of the hon. member for Huntingdon (Mr. Scriver) and some others, it was deemed advisable, in the first instance, to ask for a return of the papers or the regulations in reference to the issue of licenses, or of these general permits, before any action was taken in the House upon the question. At the request of the legislative committee, I moved in this House for that return, and the Minister of the Interior stated that the papers, would be brought down as speedily as possible. Owing to the delay which has thus occurred, I am satisfied that it was not possible to reach this question and dispose of it in a different manner from that in which it has now been brought before the House. If I could possibly come to the conclusion that it could have been reached in any other way, I would take every reasonable means in my power to discourage any effort in the direction of putting these questions in the form of votes of want of confidence. On two or three former occasions, I deemed it my duty as a temperance man to vote against resolutions which took that form, and which ostensibly had in view the advancement of temperance principles. I do not feel disposed to discuss this question much further, but, as a professional man, having carefully examined the Statute, and endeavored to place the most reasonable construction upon it in the light of all the surrounding circumstances and the light of what was said at the time the Statute was enacted, in the light of the action of previous Lieutenant Governors of the North-West Territories, and taking into account all the circumstances in connection with the enactment and the administration of the law, I could not arrive at any other conclusion than this: that there had been a serious violation of the prohibitory clauses of the North-West Territories Act under the administration of the present Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories. I am quite prepared to admit that other lawyers—perhaps better lawyers than I am—may take a different view of the law, and perhaps would be justified in taking a different view of the law; but, as far as I am individually concerned, holding the view I do of that Statute, and knowing what has been stated in this House and what I have seen in the public press of the country in reference to the administration of the law in the North-West, I cannot pursue any other course under the present circumstances than to vote for the amendment of the hon. member for Brome (Mr. Fisher). I am quite prepared, however, to concede that hon. gentlemen reading the law may possibly take an opposite view, but I cannot hold any view other than the one I have expressed on the present occasion, and I believe that it is the duty of Parliament, which is called the Great Inquest of the country, to express its opinion on a question of this kind.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Bain), as one of the Puritans of this House, thought it his duty to read to hon. gentlemen on this side a lecture upon their consistency and their conduct in reference to this question. He impugns the sincerity of hon. gentlemen because they will not agree with him in condemning the Lieutenant Governor for his interpretation of the law. As I understand the Statute which gives that authority to the Lieutenant Governor, there appears to be even amongst eminent legal gentleman a difference of opinion. In a meeting which we held in the Tower Room in the early part of the Session, to consider how far the Lieutenant Governor had or had not honestly discharged the important duty devolving upon him, we were unable to decide, and we did not come to the conclusion that he had not fairly interpreted that law. Not only lawyers, but laymen, in considering the Statute under which Lieutenant Governor Royal acted, came to the conclusion that the law did give him the right not only to grant these permits, but also to give a species of license to sell liquor in that country. We have very high legal authority in favor of the opinion thus expressed, and why should we condemn a man who is sincere to his interpretation of the law, quite as sincere, I am sure, as the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Bain) when he condemns hon. gentlemen who do not agree with him. He says that hon. gentlemen on this side put their political principles first, and their temperance principles afterwards, and that, therefore, temperance always suffers at their hands. He would ask the country to infer from that, that it is different on his side of the House, that there they put their temperance principles first, and their political principles afterwards. I should like to ask if that was the case with Mr. Manning of Toronto, the Chief License inspector, and the chief official under Mr. Mowat, who, when a request was made that the Scott Act should be better enforced, replied that he did not like to do it, because it would hurt Mr. Mowat and that party. That is the party of the hon. gentleman who reads us a lecture as to consistency or inconsistency in connection with temperance legislation. From a knowledge of the working of the License Act, and from a knowledge of the license inspectors, who are simply in Ontario a brigade of political agents of Mr. Mowat and his right hand supporters, I say that it was never intended honestly to enforce the Scott Act in the counties were it was found to conflict with Mr. Mowat's interests. We find that men who were hauled up not once or twice, but for the third, fourth and even the fifth time, were let off with a fine, though the law permitted the magistrate to imprison them. Why was that? It was because the Government wanted to get money to replenish their treasury, but did not wish to impose too large a fine, because it might interfere with a business which was very important to them. When it was proposed to repeal the Scott Act in the counties where it had been adopted, the Ontario Government desired the repeal, because in that case they could appoint their board of license commissioners, who are the right hand men of Mr. Mowat, and who could work their nefarious plans in Mr. Mowat's interests. The reason for their course was not consistency, but only the expediency of the party. Now, we are asked to condemn the Lieutenant Governor because he honestly and conscientiously interprets the law in this way. Is it fair that we should do so? Must we condemn a man because he is conscientiously doing what the law allows him to do? Because we happen to differ from him in our interpretation of the law, should we be so unfair as to impute to him improper motives because he does not see eye to eye with us in the interpretation of that law? The hon. gentleman goes further and he says: If the law is a bad one why not amend it? Now, we hear from hon. gentlemen who live in that part of the country the most conflicting evidence as to the working of the law, not only from gentlemen who are in favor of temperance, but from those who hold the opposite view. Men of the most sterling integrity, men who would go any length to promote temperance principles, say that they believe, from their experience of several years in that country, that the people of the North-West Territories would be better with a license law than they are to-day with this law on the statutes. When we find this conflict of opinion, it is not unreasonable that we should scarcely be prepared to go as far as hon. gentlemen are asking us to go, and not only to condemn the Lieutenant Governor because he does not interpret the law with them, because he does not carry out that law according to their wishes, but to pass a vote of censure upon the Government here because they will not condemn him for interpreting the law differently from what he conscientiously believes it to mean. I understand that we intend before long to give the power into the hands of that quasi-legislature there to deal with this question. Why? Because they are living in that country, because they see the operations of the law under their eyes every day, and, therefore, are better judges of what that country needs than we can possibly be. If we allow them to legislate upon it, to make a law to suit themselves, I think we are doing no great injustice to the people who inhabit those great North-West Territories. Therefore, I say, it is not for us to condemn the Lieutenant Governor, nor to condemn the Government here for what has been done, but we should allow that gentleman, who is a man of high legal attainments, who is a man, I believe, of integrity, who is a man of good intentions, to put his own conscientious interpretation on the law, and to carry it out according to his own convictions in the way that he believes best.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Fisher:

Amendment negatived.

M. GRANDBOIS. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) has not voted.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have paired with the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Trow).

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I notice that the hon. gentleman who moved the main motion is not in the House and it does seem most disrespectful to him on the part of the House, that the motion should be put in his absence. I suppose the hon. gentleman would certainly not have left the House while an amendment to his motion was being voted upon, if he had not been taken ill. It does seem disrespectful to the Minister of Finance that this motion should be put in his absence, and I submit, that under the circumstances, that the House should adjourn.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is very facetious, but he will not be so facetious when I tell him that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance was really very unwell and, therefore, paired with Mr. Charlton.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Ammunition, including artillery ammunition, and manufacture of small arm ammunition at the cartridge factory at Quebec, $50,000; clothing and great coats, $90,000; military stores, $60,000.....$200,000

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The return presented by the Minister of Militia yesterday shows that the cost of manufacturing cartridges in our factory at Quebec, is about $3 per thousand in excess of the price of the article when imported from England. I admit there may be some advantage in a country having a manufacture of this kind within its borders in the event of its ever being necessary for it to depend upon its own resources. But under the present circumstances there does not seem to be any immediate prospect of our being deprived of the opportunity of obtaining our ammunition as heretofore from the old country. I have been informed that the manufacture of the ammunition at Quebec is carried on in a very expensive manner. I am led to believe by those who seem to possess sources of information, that the expense is very much in excess of what is actually required, that is to say, that there are a great many more people employed about the cartridge factory at Quebec than is actually required under the circumstance, and the excessive cost which the country is called upon to pay would indicate that there is something in that view. Of course, we have not before us the details of the number of persons employed at that cartridge factory on which to base a sound conclusion, but I think we have evidence enough to show, in the cost of the article itself, that there must be some mismanagement and some leaks in that regard which add so much to the cost of the ammunition. I hope the Minister will be prepared to show the House another Session full details respecting this matter. With respect to clothing and great-coats, as the House is aware, there has already been an inquiry before the Public Accounts Committee on this subject. I do not propose to go into that branch of the subject now, because there is an hon. gentleman who has taken very great interest in investigating the dissatisfaction which was proved before the Committee to exist, and when it is shown, as it was shown in the Committee, that some five or six companies of the Queen's Own of Toronto had sent to England for their own uniforms and clothing, in preference to taking the Government uniforms free, I think it is pretty strong evidence that there is something very unsatisfactory in the present arrangement. Independent of that, the increased cost of the article manufactured in our own country is, I think, such that it will be shown that we are paying an unnecessary price for those articles, when the quality and length of time they will wear are considered. That, however, will be discussed at a later stage, and on that point I will not further dwell as I do not wish to anticipate the observations which will, no doubt, be made by the hon. gentleman to whom I have referred. With respect to ammunition. I think the hon. gentleman must see that the item requires some explanation, and while I admit that there are certain advantages in having a factory in this country, we should be able to manufacture the cartridges as cheaply as we could import them, which does not appear to be the case under present circumstances.

Mr. SUTHERLAND In granting this large sum of money for clothing, me must regret that the volunteers are not provided with helmets. The officers and men of the volunteer force feel very sorely on this point, and, while I have brought it to the attention of the department very frequently, I have not been able to convince the Minister that they should supply what is really necessary for the equipment of the volunteers. It is only by the generosity of the officers or by the men buying these articles out of the small amount received as pay, that they are provided. The Government should see that out of this appropriation of money full equipment should be provided. I am satisfied, after looking into the detailed accounts, that if anything like fair business management prevailed, the men could be better provided than they are at the present time. The Minister says that the country does not vote a sufficient amount to provide the clothing required. I do not agree with that view, and I feel that it is owing to negligence on the part of the management of the department that helmets are not supplied. Where the men have to purchase them themselves they cost much more than if the department furnished them to the force. I have given attention to this subject for several years, and I may state something more regarding it at another stage, because I feel there is a grievance, that it is one which should not exist and one which the Government could relieve.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The hon. gentleman has just stated what was in my mind before he rose. It is very unsatisfactory, to say the least, that members of a regiment should be called on to provide a very essential portion of their own uniform. In my own regiment we were able to do this simply because we had the assistance of the county council. Why the county council of my county, or of any other county, should be called upon to contribute towards providing an essential portion of the uniform of the men, it will be difficult for the Minister to explain. There is one other point with respect to the uniform which I desire to mention, and it is the very great extravagance of the Government in furnishing the men with one set of uniform only. It would be very much more economical if the men were supplied with a fatigue suit which they could use in camp. As it is now, each man is furnished with a full dress uniform, which appears excellent on parade, but it is not useful if he is obliged to use it for ordinary purposes If the Minister would supply some of those uniforms which are in the stores, and the uniforms would not cost more than about $3 each, he would find that the scarlet clothing would last almost a lifetime, for it is not worn out, but when used in camp it becomes so discolored that the men will not wear it. If the Minister will take that into consideration and obtain an annual grant for supplying a fatigue dress, he would find that a very great economy had been effected. Another point is that we are going on from year to year without any proper equipment for the force. Not a single company in the whole country is in a position to turn out for actual service, because they have no proper equipment. It would be a serious matter to supply equipment for the whole force, but if the Minister could set apart about $5,000 each year, in the course of a few years the whole force would be properly and easily equipped. It seems ridiculous to keep up an active force, and yet, for the sake of a few thousand dollars, keep it out of the most necessary articles of equipment, if called upon to perform active service.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I should like to say a few words in support of the suggestion of the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Sutherland), with respect to helmets. I do not see why volunteers should not be supplied with headgear; helmets are as much a part of the uniform as are trousers, and perhaps it would be as well to supply them with helmets and let the trousers go. If the Department undertake to supply the men with uniforms, they should supply them with helmets as well as with trousers and the usual clothing. I think that with regard to the uniforms a good deal of money might be saved if there was a little more inspection exercised and greater care taken in the issuing of them. It is absurd to say that this fine good cloth which we hear so much about, when made into tunics will last for only twenty four days, and yet that is all that is given as the life of a tunic. These tunics are issued for five years, and rural battalions are only called out twice in five years, so that the tunic is only used for twenty-four days in camp, and a new issue of clothing is then made.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Not always.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Yes, always. As soon as the five years have elapsed the commanding officer makes a demand on the Militia Department for a complete set of uniform, and he gets a suit for every man in the regiment, no matter whether the uniform is worn out or not. I believe that a tunic wears as long as two pairs of trousers and I hold that if a proper inspection were made by an officer who would go around the armories, half the tunics now discarded would be found serviceable and in this way a great deal of money would be saved to the department.

Mr. CASEY. I quite agree with the remarks of my hon. friends from Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) and Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) with regard to the issue of helmets. I remember when I was a volunteer in the old Queen's Own we had to go out in a Glengarry cap in all kinds of weather and the result was that I and many others had our faces sunburnt and our eyes closed up and that we were rendered practically unfit for duty. It is not fair to ask a man who has been accustomed to indoor work, as most of the members of the city battalions are, to go out in the fierce sun wearing only a forage cap or a Glengarry. Even the farmer although out in the open air is accustomed to wear a big hat which protects his face. Neither is it fair to ask men to buy helmets when they are out in the public service. I have been asked to call the attention of the Minister to the report of the Executive Commitee of the Ontario Artillery Association, which says:

"This committee again recommends as necessary for the proper maintenance and efficiency of the Artillery:

"(1.) An increase in the annual grant to the Dominion Artillery Association (2.) As Provincial and other Rifle Associations receive grants from the Dominion Government, that this Association should be placed upon a similar footing. (3.) An issue of extra clothing to drivers and gunners; this has been asked for time and again."

I find on referring to the Hansard of 1888 that the Minister promised in the early part of last year to make an issue of this clothing, but I do not think it has been done. The report continues:—

"(4.) Payment for 6 days' preliminary drill before proceeding to camp (5) Payment to non-commissioned officers and men of the pay of their rank with allowances and transport, during time allowed for target practice."

This seems a reasonable request because when the men are out for target practice they are practically on active service. The other recommendations in the report are:

"(6.) The establishment of a School for Field Artillery at Kingston; there being only one Garrison Battery in the Province a semi-Field and Garrison School is not necessary. (7) That pay for four spare horses be allowed during annual drill in order to provide for casualties as the experience of the past 14 years show that this is really requisite for any pretence to any true efficiency (8) That the Militia Department be requested to have an inspection made by the Inspector and Assistant Inspector of Artillery of all stores at Battery headquarters at some time other than during annual drill, when only a partial inspection of such harness, stores, &c, as exist, is possible, it being a well known fact that very few of the Ontario Batteries have more than eight sets of harness, and that most of the waggons are useless for any service."

These were recommended at a representative meeting of officers from all parts of Ontario at the Artillery Association meeting held in Toronto in January last. I wish to call the attention of the Minister to those recommendations and although I have no personal knowledge of them all, as I never was connected with the artillery branch, yet they seem to be based on common sense and I hope the Minister will give due attention to the matter. Perhaps he will give his opinion now as to how many of these recommendations he can see his way to adopt.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) has spoken of the extra expense incurred by manufacturing the cartridges in Canada instead of importing them from England. I cannot exactly understand how the hon. gentleman arrives at the conclusion that the Canadian cartridges cost $3 per thousand more than the cartridges which are manufactured in England. The reports which have been handed to me by the officers of my department show that the cartridges manufactured in Canada cost $18.84 a thousand. The Snider ball cartridges manufactured in England cost $14.92 a thousand, and the Martini-Henry's $18.75. Let me draw the attention of the Committee to the fact that the cartridges for the Snider-Enfield rifle are no longer manufactured in England, and hence it would be impossible to get any supply from England, and unless we change the arm used by our forces in Canada it is necessary for us to manufacture our own ammunition here instead of importing it from England. I can tell the hon. gentleman that the cartridge factory is conducted under the superintendence of a gentleman who is known to all those who take an interest in militia matters to be a great authority on this matter, and that not only in Canada alone, but also in England, because of the great success which has attended his efforts in manufacturing the cartridge.

Mr. CASEY. Who is that?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Major Prévost. The manufacture of cartridges was like many other things which were introduced into a country like this. The beginnings were rather difficult, and we felt at one time that we were not obtaining that great success which those who are administering the department as well as the members of the force desired to obtain. However, I am proud to tell you, not only from the opinion expressed by Canadians, but also by men abroad who have been following the different steps we have taken in the development of the manufacture of cartridges, that Canada is to-day manufacturing cartridges which are superior to any cartridges which we have ever been able to obtain from England or any other country. Now, I wish to lay before the House the statements which have been sent to me from different parts of the Dominion with regard to the ammunition manufactured in Canada. These letters, I may say, have been sent to me without my asking for them. I read a letter signed by Lieutenant Colonel Bedson, the President of the Rifle Association of Manitoba:

"I have the honor to state that the Snider ball ammunition manufactured in the Cartridge Factory of Quebec, of 1888 issue, was used by the Manitoba Rifle Association during their recent matches, and was universally commended by the marksmen. It is undoubtedly the best ammunition of this kind ever used by this association."

I read also a letter which was sent to me by Captain Walter Macdonald, in which speaking of the Canadian ammunition of 1888 issue, he says:

"I think its present standard, if kept up, will stand the test of the Provincial and Dominion matches, and prove to be as good as No 9 English, if not better."

I also read a letter from Lieutenant Colonel Bond, of the Provincial Rifle Association of Montreal, stating:

"I did not find a single complaint regarding the shooting qualities of the ammunition. They are looked on as quite equal to the best English ever made or ever sent out here."

Major Weston, of the 66th Princess Louise Fusiliers, Halifax, in a letter, says:

"The make of this year, so far as used here, has given the utmost satisfaction, and the scores made with it are equal to those made when the English make was used. I have not had an opportunity to test it personally, but our shooting men have given me their opinion strongly upon this point. I take this opportunity of giving you the opinion here, and after our Provincial matches I will give you the opinion of the competitors also of that match."

Here is a letter also from Lieutenant-Colonel Holmes, who is the commandant of "C" Battery, B.C., and who is known among riflemen as one who has always taken a deep interest in rifle practice, and as one of the best shots:

"I must say that what we have just used is really as good and reliable as any I have ever seen anywhere, and I should be a judge, as I stood fifth in the Wimbledon team of 1873, and have always been a fair average shot. Peters also concurs with me as to its good quality, and speaks highly of it, and says that all the tests have shown that it is superior to any which we have had so far."

Remembering what hon. members of this House who are also members of the force, and who have taken a great deal of interest in our rifle practice, have said on a former occasion, I think these letters dispose at once and forever of the question of the success of the cartridge factory at Quebec. Like everything else, the manufacture of cartridges there at first was possibly not as cheaply carried on as it might have been, but the factory is conducted as economically as it is possible to have it conducted. During the troubles in the North-West we had to put on extra hands, and these could not be disposed of at a moment's notice; but the staff is being reduced every day, and is being reduced so rapidly that with the exception of very few hands who could not be dispensed with just at present, I think it will be found that the factory cannot be carried on more economically than it is. We must remember that we have within the boundaries of the Dominion a factory which makes us practically independent of any other market, and we can at a moment's notice, by putting on extra hands—we have the machinery ready—manufacture in case of emergency so as to meet the requirements of the situation. In reading those letters, I have not read some articles of the Militia Gazette, which refer also to the question, and which contain expressions of opinion coming from England; but if I may be permitted I shall hand over the short passages of those different articles to Hansard, so that it may complete the statement which I thought it my duty to lay before the House in reference to this matter:

SIR ADOLPHE CARON.

"The wonderful improvement in our shooting at 600 yards this season warrants the statement that the 1888 issue of Snider ammunition is fully equal to the best English, the mark IX. Bull's eye after bull's eye is now 'plugged' in at 600 yards with our old Sniders, and the hideous drop shot is a thing of the past.

"It is at 600 yards especially that this year's ammunition shows its superiority over the Canadian make of all former years. There now appears to be absolutely no ground of complaint; and in the opinion of many the Dominion product is even superior to the English ammunition formerly used. Examination of several packages made by an expert at Ottawa, has shown that there is not more than one grain variation in the powder charge, whilst four grains were allowed in the English. And the riflemen's expostulations and advice having at last been heeded, the desired alteration has now been made in the shape of the bullet, enabling it to travel in conformity with the rule for riflemen: 'head to the target.'

"Our present good fortune in the matter of the excellence of our Snider ammunition, has attracted some attention in the mother country, as witness the following from the Volunteer Record: 'The Canadians seem to be greatly in advance of us in the art of manufacturing small-arm ammunition; the riflemen of that dependency being particularly fortunate in the 1888 issue, a 'make' with which most satisfactory results are being obtained. It quite makes an old country shootist's mouth water to hear that an examination of several packages made at Ottawa has shown that there is not more than one grain variation in the powder charge, whilst four or five grains were allowed in the English cartridges, as demonstrated by the experiments made by an expert two or three years ago."

With regard to clothing, I fully concur with what has been said by the hon. gentleman. I believe it would be a very great economy if we could serve out fatigue uniforms to the force. The expensive uniforms which are served out, as hon. gentlemen who are intimately connected with the force know, it is almost impossible to wear out; but after a certain number of years they get disfigured, not so much from their usage on parade or drill, but from the usage to which they are put in camp. Very often the men sleep in their uniforms, and very often they go through their heavy drill in them. We have uniforms in the stores, tweed uniforms, of excellent material, the cost of which amounts to $3.25. These would save our other uniforms to a great extent. I am not making any promise, but I believe I can see my way clear to issue a certain number of these uniforms. The force cannot all be served, because, even with the liberality of Parliament in Militia expenditure, I have not the money necessary to meet the expenditure involved, though in the long run it would be a real economy to serve those tweed uniforms out. The manufacture of uniforms has had this year an opportunity of being more thoroughly discussed than ever before. The matter was brought before the Public Accounts Committee, where every possible latitude was given for a thorough examination, and it was proved beyond a possibility of discussion that the policy followed by the Government was the best policy in the interests of Canada and her Militia Force. I shall not discuss this matter at this late hour, I will simply say that hon. gentlemen who have taken the trouble to follow the meetings of the Committee cannot fail to arrive at the conclusion that the uniforms served out to the Militia Force are as good as they can possibly be made.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I do not find fault with the quality of the cartridges now manufactured in Quebec. I am glad to hear that in the last two years the quality has improved. Nor do I find fault with the establishment of the cartridge factory at Quebec. But what I do call the attention of the House to is the fact that these cartridges are costing much more than they would if imported. The hon. gentleman said that the Snider cartridges were no longer manufactured in England. That is a good reason for their being manufactured here; but, apart from that, it is a good policy to have a manufactory of this kind within our own border. The figures given by the hon. gentleman prove that I rather understated my case. I gave the cost of the Snider-Enfield cartridges at $14.50. The hon. gentleman says they cost $18.50. If they can be manufactured in England at that price, I cannot see why they should not be manufactured in Canada for nearly the same price. This corroborates the impression I have that the Minister employs too many people about the factory. With reference to the clothing, the hon. gentleman will not be able to sustain the position he has taken to-night, He will find that his clothing has been condemned by the military boards in the various Provinces as unsatisfactory and far below the Imperial in every respect—in quality, fit and duration. The hon. gentleman must have been drawing on his imagination for he certainly did not draw on the result of the investigation which took place before the Public Accounts Committee. The reports will be submitted to the members of the House, who will be able to judge whether they bear out the statements of the Minister of Militia or not.

Mr. DENISON. As to the cartridges I believe there is little doubt about that, although they were bad at one time, they are good now. The consensus of opinion at the meeting of the Ontario Rifle Association was that the cartridges now used are excellent. The hon. the Minister referred to the Militia Gazette as having endorsed the cartridges. I might also refer to the Militia Gazette as having endorsed the suggestion I made with reference to the management of the schools. The Gazette declared that it will be quite possible to have a cadet corps organised in connection with the schools. Since then I have received a long letter from a prominent officer in the west, giving me some facts in connection with the idea I brought forward, and endorsing it. He represents to me that out of some 79 officers and 526 non-commissioned officers and men, who went through the school, only 64 officers qualified, and 184 non-commissioned officers and men. I take it, the object of the school is to have a number of non-commissioned officers and men who will be able to instruct our militia in their drill. We find that some 342 have been in the schools two or three months, and, possibly, longer, and left without having obtained certificates, having failed to qualify. It seems to me that is a great waste. The Government have clothed, paid and fed these men for two or three months at the schools, though, on leaving them, they may not get a certificate. Whether that is the fault of the officers commanding corps, who send men there who are unsuitable, or the fault of the manner in which the schools are conducted, I will not say. Probably it is as much the fault of the officers who send the men there as it is of the schools, because, if an officer does not select carefully the men who are to go to the schools, the chances are that they will not make such a good showing when they come to be examined. Under the old system, only those who passed or qualified got their certificates and received their money. The result was that they had to be industrious and attentive, and the discipline was good because they knew that, if they did not get their certificate, they did not get any pay. Under the present regulation, it does not matter whether they do much or little work. In either case they get their pay. I, therefore, think it would be well for the Minister of Militia to consider this question before next Session, and see if a cadet corps could not be formed in connection with these schools. I believe that would meet the approbation not only of the House but of all the militia in the country.

Gen. LAURIE. I was one of those who brought before the notice of the Government a few years ago the inferiority of the cartridges which were then made at the Quebec factory. I feel now that it is my duty to speak as to their excellence. I was the umpire at the matches at Bedford last year, and during all those matches not only was there no complaint about the cartridges, but the competitors all agreed in saying that this was the best ammunition they had ever been supplied with.

Mr. CASEY. I am glad to hear, and to believe, that the ammunition made at Quebec is now up to the standard for Snider ammunition, but, as the Minister of Militia has pointed out, they are working with only a few hands, only sufficient to supply the volunteers with that ammunition. I am afraid, if we were to have another such trouble as we had in 1885, and new and inexperienced workmen had to be taken on, the character of the ammunition might revert to what it was then. When the Minister was questioned as to the character of the ammunition used during the trouble in the North-West, he stated that it was not good enough for practice at the target, but it was good enough for use in the field. The hon. gentleman might have to make a similar statement if another case arose. I hope such an emergency will not arise. The Minister made one statement which startled me a good deal, that Snider ammunition was not now made in England. To the best of my knowledge the Snider rifle is still the arm of the British volunteers.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No; the Martini.

Mr. CASEY. Then we are making, at much greater expense then it used to cost to get them from England, the cartridges for an arm which is practically out of date. That brings me back to a point I have often urged upon the Minister, and that is the propriety of gradually introducing an improved arm amongst our volunteers There is no use in having volunteers at all unless we expect them to fight somebody at sometime; and, if they were to meet anyone on the field of battle, as they did four years ago in the North-West, they should be provided with an arm as good as that possessed by their opponents. The hon. gentleman knows that the Snider is not a modern arm, that it is not equal to the arms possessed by the Indians in the North-West, whom I have met in numbers carrying their Winchesters and with cartridge belts around their waists. I think our volunteers should have as good an arm as any enemy whom they might be called upon to meet. There might be a gradual introduction of some new arm—either the Martini Henry or some more modern arm than that. The hon. gentleman is in a position to find out what is the best military arm of the present day, and I do not think the country would grumble if a reasonable amount were put in the Estimates to gradually supply this new arm. It might be made a matter of competition among the different corps, and those who came out best in their annual drill or in shooting might first be supplied. Of course, it would be too large a contract to re-arm the whole force at once.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It would cost a great deal of money.

Mr. CASEY. Yes; but it might be done gradually. Most of the rifles we now have were muzzle-loading Enfields, and they were converted into Sniders by cutting off a part of the breech and putting on the breech-loading attachment. Many of them must be 30 years old, and I would not say that it is unsafe to fire the ordinary rifle which is found in a country regiment, but at all events the experiment is somewhat unpleasant Our volunteers would be at a great disadvantage in meeting an equal force well armed, and I do not think it is treating them well, when they sacrifice so much time and money for the benefit of the country, to send them into the field with a weapon which puts them at a disadvantage. The Snider was not a bad weapon 15 or 20 years ago, but it is not equal to the more modern arms. Either the force should be kept in a state of efficiency or it should be done away with. I believe that, if the Minister would reduce the number of volunteers, and would properly arm and equip them, it would be better. We have now a force of which we may well be proud, but they are not equipped in such a way as to enable them to take the field against any enemy at all on short notice, and certainly not against a civilised and well armed enemy. We should either drop them altogether or equip them properly, and I again call upon the Minister to consider the question of a new arm, and to see if he cannot introduce it gradually.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I cannot allow this item to pass without protesting against the manner in which the hon. Minister treats matters of this kind when they are brought to his attention. I do think that when a matter of importance to the volunteers of this country is brought in a proper manner before the notice of the Minister, it is his duty at least to refer to the matter so that the volunteers may know whether there is any good reason why their interests should not be attended to. It is a very poor excuse for the Minister to say that because the House is in a hurry to adjourn, he cannot take a minute or two to give some explanations. This is not a new question. I have personally brought it to his attention and I think other officers have done so for several years. I have been willing to hear any reasonable explanation that he had to give, I certainly do not wish to press the matter unduly upon him. I know the difficulties Ministers have in meeting the demands from various quarters. The Minister will see by the remarks made this afternoon that this is not a party question; other hon. members, supporters of the Government, also think that this matter might receive more attention from the department than it has had. I think the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick) pointed out to the Minister in a practical way, he having had some experience himself how this complaint could be remedied; he suggested a better system of inspection by which a saving with regard to the militia clothing might be effected. I can endorse what he said, and I believe that enough money could be saved, without increasing the amount asked for in the Estimates, to supply helmets two or three times over. I quite endorse the statement of the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) in regard to the issue of another suit of clothing. The Minister himself acknowledged there would be a saving. I am satisfied from my experience that if the matter was conducted on a business like basis, the volunteer force would have a great deal more comfort, and that the money now appropriated to supply clothing would supply all the equipments necessary, and in a manner a great deal more satisfactory to the force. It is not only the helmets that have to be supplied by the officers or friends of the volunteers, but many other articles besides, and it becomes a heavy expense for the majority of the officers of the battalion who desire to maintain the force. At present the force is maintained through the patriotism of the men and the officers and their willingness to put their hands in their pockets and subscribe liberally to put the men in a position to appear at all as they ought to appear in the field. It is all very well for the Minister and his General, who no doubt is a very gallant officer, and a very able soldier, and all that sort of thing, to sit down in the office and make new orders. The battalion to which I belong have a special grievance in this regard. Formerly the black helmet was required for a full dress, but recently the department has seen fit—I dare say it is quite right—to change the order, and to say that another kind of helmet shall be required. Now, how are these to be supplied? Some of these men may not have the practical experience of the officers of the force in Canada, but when they pass orders like that, I think the least they can do is to look to the efficiency of the force, and see how these regulations are to be carried out. In this case I see that they have issued an order that the white helmet shall be the full dress for rifle brigade, and the only way we can keep up our battalion is to put our hands into our pockets and supply these helmets. The Minister may say that straw hats or anything else is good enough, but that does not meet the feelings or the patriotism of the young men, who lose their time and sacrifice their wages in order to maintain the force. I want the members of the force themselves and the officers to know whether there is any good reason why the Minister of Militia should not take the matters into consideration and deal with them in a practical and business like way, so that they may know whether these things can be provided or whether there is any desire on the part of the department to keep up the efficiency of the force. I hope the Minister will consider the suggestions that have been made, by which helmets could be supplied for the force at one-third the amount that is now paid. I hope that when matters of this kind are brought to his notice he will think it worth while to deal with them, or to instruct the officers of his department to deal with them, and if common sense and business principles are applied to the management of these matters, I think it would be very much to the satisfaction of the force in this country.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. There is no hon. gentleman in the House that I would be more sorry to treat with discourtesy than my hon. friend who has just taken his seat. I must apologise to him for having overlooked his suggestion in reference to cartridges and to clothing. I must admit that I overlooked a very excellent suggestion which my hon. friend made in reference to helmets. The hon. gentleman spoke as if I believed that straw hats or any other kind of headgear would be good enough for the volunteers. Sir, I am glad to know that a feeling of pride and patriotism exists among the volunteers, and that they desire to turn out as perfectly equipped as possible. As far as the means placed at my disposal will permit, I am prepared in every possible way to meet the wishes and the interest of the force, to help the officers who are put to the greatest expense to keep their battalions in the state of efficiency in which they are to-day. The hon. gentleman knows that we allow a forage cap, and the practice has been to pay the value of the forage caps to the battalions who choose to import helmets. I fully agree with the hon. gentleman that the helmets, the head gear, should be collected and paid by the department, but on the other hand military critics and those who take an interest in the force, state that they could not well get along without the forage cap. Well, I am not disposed to pay for both; I do not believe that it would be in the interest of the force, upon the present vote of Parliament, to go into that expenditure. I should like to do so, but in this case as in every other, we have to cut our coat according to our cloth. However, I can tell my hon. friend that the matter is going to be considered. The suggestion made by the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Kirkpatrick), who is a well known friend of the militia force and who has taken a prominent position in that force, is certainly one which should call for the attention of the department. I believe that if we could furnish a fatigue uniform the scarlet tunic and other tunics which are used could be used without any reference to the period of five years, and then it would be quite proper for the department to leave the question of replacing those uniforms to the inspecting officer, who would declare that the uniforms were worn out, or were not in a condition to be worn any longer, and then a further issue might be made. I believe that would be an economical method to adopt. But at present—I am going to make the attempt this year—we can use only a very small number of fatigue uniforms, cheap as they may be, for the force as at present constituted. If the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) will permit me to refer to the question of ammunition in England, I desire to say that the ammunition for the Snider-Enfield costs $14.50; if to that you add the amount of freight the cost is $16.00, and in Canada that ammunition was issued at $16 00, that being considered the cost price.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. From the remark made by the Minister, members of the Committee might be led to suppose that in allowing the cost of the forage cap a small amount was allowed towards purchasing helmets. The men want something in place of the forage cap, and in allowing that amount it was only that the men might replace them with the Glengarry. The point I wish to make to the Committee is this: that in the allowance made for the forage cap, it is simply done that the officers might provide the Glengarry, which has been allowed under the regulations, in preference to the forage cap, which is altogether unsuitable to men in camp in hot weather. I do not agree with the Minister that the department is not able to furnish helmets. With a little effort, it could be easily done, and, as the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) has pointed out, $5,000 a year would in a short time make full provision. If the Minister would carry out this plan it would assist the volunteer force and would at the same time make them more efficient.

Royal Military College..... $77,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I desire to know why the hon. gentleman has retired or dispensed with the services of the officer who was in charge last year, General Oliver?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. General Oliver's time in Canada had expired. The commandant who is sent out from England is loaned to us, so to speak, for 5 years, and we consider it not to be in the interests of the institution to extend that period. We know how rapidly military science is advancing and how important it is that the military college should keep as efficient as it is acknowledged to be outside of Canada and especially in England, and that we should procure the best man that can be obtained. It is in the interests of the college that this change should take place every 5 years. Major General Oliver, I believe, has now been here from 18 months to 2 years over the time which he could expect to remain in Canada. He has been replaced by a gentleman who is known as quite a scientist in his profession, and is doing remarkably well at the head of the college and who will, I have no doubt, retain that college in the high position it has occupied up to the present time.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman state whether he applied as heretofore to the British authorities to recommend an officer in this case?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I should not like to mislead the hon. gentleman, but I am not quite certain whether the application is made first or whether the name was suggested by the department to the Home authorities, but the Home authorities fully concurred in it. If the recommendation did not come first from the Home authorities, when the suggestion was made they fully concurred and declared that no man could be sent out to Canada, who could, with more efficiency, take charge of the Royal Military College than could Major General Cameron who is now at the head of it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is it within the knowledge of the hon. gentleman that the British authorities did not recommend him, but someone else in the first instance?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I do not think so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman had better, I think, look at his records. If I am not greatly misinformed, the British authorities did recommend someone else in the first instance, and this recommendation was at the suggestion of the hon. gentleman.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. My officers confirm me in expressing the opinion I have stated. I am not aware that such is the case, but as the hon. gentleman has brought the matter up and as it is very easily verified, I will make it my duty to ascertain the fact. So far as I can recollect no name now presents itself to my memory which would lead me to suppose that any name was suggested.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Heretofore our practice, as the hon. gentleman knows, has been made to apply to the Imperial authorities, and it seems to me there has been good reason for that. All the officers actually engaged in the education of the cadets of the Royal Military College, Kingston, are actually in the Imperial service and General Oliver up to the time that he was retired was in the British service. That is correct is it not?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes, sir.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. He left the service before he retired.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. He practically continued in the British service up to the date that the Minister retired him.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. He was retired from the English service when he got the appointment of Major General.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The statement made to me by the General himself, and he ought to know, was that he was in the British service practically up to the time he was retired, but Major General Cameron who is now appointed is a retired officer, is he not?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When was he retired?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I cannot say; but I think it is about 18 months.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The point is this: We have the right most undoubtedly to appoint our own commandant, but the principle in the time of my hon. friend (Mr. Jones) was that the officer placed at the head of the college should be in the active service, and it appears to me there were good reasons for that. In the first place the gentlemen who are under his command are in the Imperial service, and I think none of them are on the retired list. The Minister knows that an officer who is on the retired list is to all intents and purposes out of the Imperial service. Technically he may be brought back again, but as a matter of fact he never is. It appears to me that this appointment is a departure from the custom, and for the reason which the hon. Minister gave just now I think the officer in command ought to be an officer in active service as Col. Hewett was, and as General Oliver was up to the time he was retired. I believe that we should have gentlemen in the active service at the head of this college so long as we continue to import Imperial officers as we now do for the purpose of instructing our cadets.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. As a rule I think the hon. gentleman is quite right that we should get Imperial officers from England to take charge of our college, but I should not like to lay it down as an iron rule which could never be put aside under circumstances which I can foresee would allow the setting aside of such a rule to the advantage of Canada. I can tell the hon. gentleman that there was no recommendation made from England, but if there is any official recommendation which has escaped my memory it can easily be ascertained.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No recommendation could be made in the face of the hon. gentleman's own determination not to accept it.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am merely treating the point from my recollection of the fact, but I shall verify it when I can refer to the official record. In the case of Major General Cameron I can state that his appointment was endorsed, and that I received letters from officers of the Imperial service who take an interest in the Royal Military College stating that we could not have made a better selection than we did make. I can tell the hon. gentleman that since the present commandant has been in charge he has given the most ample satisfaction. He has proved himself to be economical, and it is a well known fact to most people that while he was in the Imperial service he was engaged upon matters which required a great deal of knowledge, a great deal of study, and a great deal of tact. I may say, Sir, that Major General Cameron has displayed all the qualities that we believe are indispensable in the commandant of the Royal Military College and so far he has been doing very well indeed. I believe, as I have already stated, that we should employ gentlemen who are in the active military service, but the fact of his being retired does not exclude him from the Imperial service at all. The hon. gentleman knows well that Major General Cameron can be called out at any moment.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. But, practically, they are never called out.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Some are, and especially in the scientific branches of the service. The hon. gentleman will find that there are several instances where retired officers were recalled into active service at a time when their experience was considered to be of some value to the country.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We know that the half pay was given originally as a sort of retaining fee, but that was long, long ago, and the Minister knows that a man who retires is completely out of the service. The objection here is that a man who is put in command should be a man who has something to look to; should be a man who is in the hands of the Imperial authorities, and who expects to receive, it may be promotion from them as has been the case in one or two of the commandants of the college. I doubt if it is a prudent thing to introduce the principle that we will take men from the retired list, whether they prove competent or not. I have heard from English officers of high standing very strong expressions of opinion on that point, and particularly so, as the men who are employed in the Royal Military College are in the active service, that they should be commanded by a man who is in the active service himself. The Minister of Militia knows very well that there is not the remotest chance, humanly speaking, that Major General Cameron will return to the service again.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). There is not enough of him to go back again.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have nothing to say against the Major General himself, but I think the principle of putting a retired officer in the position is decidedly objectionable. I believe that it is of the utmost importance that the commandant of a college like that should be fully acquainted with all the improvements of modern war, and with all the changes that may take place and which would be known to a man on the active list. I have been informed —of course I will not put my statement against the hon. gentleman's—that that was the opinion expressed by the highest British military authorities, and that it was only under considerable pressure that they were induced to alter their opinion. Of course they would accept the recommendation of the Government of Canada in a matter that belongs to them; but bearing in mind that we have borrowed all the other officers who have any important posts in the college from the British military service, and that they were actively engaged in it, I think the departure from our previous custom is a very doubtful one.

Mr. LISTER. Has there been any addition to the annual fees payable by cadets in the college, and if so, how much?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am very glad to be given the opportunity of explaining to the House the changes which have taken place in regard to increasing the annual fee for board and instruction from $100 to $200. As it was considered that the instructions for the increase were issued at a time when 24 new cadets, who joined the college this year, might suppose they would be charged only $100, the increase will not apply to those cadets who joined this year. But I not only think that the increase is a fair one, but that by proper handling the Royal Military College can be made self-supporting, as it should be. If hon. gentlemen will refer to the military schools similar to this in France, Germany and England, they will find that a military education given in them, except in the case of those colleges which are maintained by the Government for the express purpose of training their own men, costs four or five times the amount that it costs in the Royal Military College of Canada. The cadets have very great advantages from being trained in that school. If they carry the highest points in their examination they are immediately entitled to a commission in the Imperial service, and if they do not choose to join it they can immediately find employment in the different great railway corporations and industrial establishments of Canada. Considering these advantages I think the charges are really smaller than they should be. But the increase will only be applied after the 1st of September next.

Mr. LISTER. Is the fee of $100 to be for this year only, or will it continue for the whole time of their study?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It will not apply to the twenty-four cadets.

Mr. LISTER. So that they will go through the whole course without being charged the extra fee?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I think the hon. the Minister of Militia was not very consistent in his explanations with regard to the appointment of the commandant. At the commencement of his observations the hon. gentleman stated very properly that it was desirable, if not necessary, that the commandant of the college should be in the active service of the Imperial Government—that owing to the constant changes which were going on from year to year, any person who had been out of the service or had been placed on half pay for any length of time, would not be up to the improvements of the day. That is a view which I think will be very generally entertained in this House. The hon. gentleman is no doubt aware that there are constant changes going on in the technical branch of the Imperial Service, which require a person taking charge of a large institution like the Royal Military College, to be au fait of all the last discoveries or improvements that have been made. I think the hon. gentleman will admit that if a man were to be appointed as commandant of the Military College at Woolwich, the Imperial authorities would not take a retired officer, but one in the active service. Instead of doing that, the hon. gentleman took an officer, a very valuable one I have no doubt, but one who had retired from the service eighteen months or two years previous to his appointment. The hon. gentleman departed from the principle laid down when the military college was established. It was desired by the Government of which I was a member—and for a time I was the head of that department myself—to keep that college free from political interests or considerations of all kinds, and the only way that could be done was by applying direct to the British Government to send out to us as commandants and professors men who were specially qualified for that work, and who had been assigned similar duties in the Imperial service. Under application from our Government Colonel Hewitt was sent out, and subsequently the other professors, and they were all eminently satisfactory. But it remained for the Government, under the direction of the hon. Minister of Militia, to introduce the political question into this matter, and to throw into the Royal Military College an element which I fear may impair its efficiency and the confidence of the public in it. I do not say that Major General Cameron is unsuited for his position; it would not be right for me to make such a statement. I have no doubt he took his position from the highest rank to which he was entitled as a valuable officer of his corps, and when he arrived at a certain time he was retired. There, according to my judgment, he should have been allowed to remain, and not have been imported into this country to have been placed at the head of an institution such as the Military College. There is another reason why he should not have been placed there, and that is because he did not belong to the scientific branch of the service. As a rule, engineer officers are generally placed in that position, and on that ground alone he would have been in a measure disqualified. It is quite true that Gen. Oliver belonged to the artillery, but he had been in the college a long time under Col. Hewitt, who belonged to the engineers, and from the experience he gained under him he became competent to manage the college most satisfactorily. It is most unfortunate that the Government should have imported a man into the college whose appointment may go very far to impair the general confidence which has heretofore been felt in that very valuable institution. When that college was established, it was established for two objects: One was to educate our young men for the military service at as cheap a rate as possible, and the other was to endeavor to retain those cadets in the service of the country. I myself, during the time I was Minister of Militia, recommended the application to the Imperial Government for the grant of one commission in each branch of the services to our cadets who passed with the highest honors. It was thought that if the British Government would grant that, it would place our college on a par with Imperial institutions; but I do not think it was ever contemplated that we should educate our young men to look forward to Imperial service. A great many of these young men who went into the Imperial service in the earlier stages of the college have reflected great credit on the institution, but, from what I have heard, a good many commissions have of late years been granted to cadets who did not pass their full term of four years, some have only passed a two years' term, and in one case a cadet having passed only a one year term. If that be the case, I am afraid the reputation of our college will be seriously impaired. Again it must be observed that our object was to retain the men in the country, and we had proposed, had we remained in power, to endeavor to place them in the Civil Service, in the Department of Railways and Canals or telegraph lines or in the Inside Service here. By that means we should have had the benefit of their services here, and the advantage of being able to call on them in the event of their services ever being required. I regret the Government did not follow that course. If these cadets after passing their full term in college, take service in England it is all very well so far as they are concerned, but it is not realising the object which we had in view when that college was established. The result of the college has been satisfactory, and the college has been gaining confidence in the public from year to year; but if the Government propose to depart from the well regulated and understood system, and place there, for political considerations, their friends, they must not be surprised if they find public criticism awakened and public confidence in the usefulness of the institution impaired. It is much to be deprecated that a retired officer, who could not have taken a similar position in England, should have been appointed to the Royal Military College. It is very much to be regretted that a very serious mistake was made in that appointment. The point made by the Minister of Militia with reference to the annual increase is, I think, fair enough; but if, at the same time, the college can be made to about meet its expenses, it is what the country has a right to expect, and the country has no right to expect any more. What I am most anxious to see is that the college shall retain the position that it had eight or ten years ago, and I am afraid that it has lost this in some respects with regard to cadets who have passed out in late years. I am afraid also with respect to recent appointments its usefulness will not be increased.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken stated that I had not been quite consistent in the views I expressed. I may reciprocate that statement. The hon. gentleman tells us that he is simply objecting to the appointment of the Major General because he is a retired officer; but a moment before he stated that the appointment was altogether a political one. The hon. gentleman is such a bitter partisan himself that he sees politics everywhere, even where there is not the slightest ground for them. There were no politics in the appointment of Major General Cameron that I can understand. Major General Cameron was selected because of his reputation as an officer, and he belonged, not as the hon. gentleman stated, to an ordinary corps, but to one of the scientific corps of the Imperial Service; and when his name was suggested, it was declared by all those who knew what was required in the commandant of the Royal Military College, that we could not have possibly selected a better man. Where the politics came in, I cannot understand. Major General Cameron was in England. He did not exercise any political influence in Canada, that I am aware of, and I think the hon. gentleman will admit that my department, being a non-political one, I would not allow any consideration of that kind to have any weight in determining the selection of an officer to be put in charge of the Royal Military College. I can say that the selection has been approved by all those who are competent authorities in the matter. And Major General Cameron has been a great success ever since he has been in charge of the Royal Millitary College. I can say so from the fact that, in consequence of his having been here only for a very short time, it was necessary that his methods should be looked into as closely as possible. They have been looked into, and he fully comes up to all our expectations. The hon. gentleman tries to cast opprobrium upon the college and states that the last cadets have not been a success. With that modesty which we know characterises him, he says that the college is not so successful now as it was at the commencement. Of course, at that time the hon. gentleman was the Minister of Militia, and it is a great misfortune for Canada that he is not so still. However, we have tried to survive his loss, and we hope to keep up the college even though we are deprived of the hon. gentleman's services as Minister of Militia. He says the cadets who have left the college lately have not been a success.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I did not state that.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I think the hon. gentleman has so stated.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I said that some of the cadets who had taken commissions in the Imperial service had not passed through their full terms at the college; that some had been only two years, and some only one year, and that I had information which led me to believe that they were not qualified to the same extent as those who had passed through the college before.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. If the hon. gentleman had looked into the matter, he would have found why those cadets were given commissions. It was not on any application made by Canada, but, when England expected certain complications in the East, England applied to Canada for a certain number of young men to accept commissions in the Imperial service, outside of the four commissions which are annually granted to the successful cadets of the Royal Military College. England, when she expected possible complications in regard to India, applied to us for the names of, I think, ten, whom we could recommend for these commissions, and we did what was asked. Some of these have been through the Royal Military College and others had not. It is clear that a man who had been in the college only one year could not be as efficient as one who was there for four years and had graduated from the college. It was not on the application of Canada and it was not with reference to the Military College that these commissions were given, but England applied for the names of those who would accept service, as at the time of the Crimean war when she drew upon the colonies for officers and men. Some of these have been very successful, and, when I was in England, I heard of some who had proved as successful as we could expect and had done honor to Canada and are doing very good work in the Imperial service. I think, so far as the commandant is concerned, from my experience and I speak from no other standpoint—he has been a great success, and I hope his successor will be as competent as we have found him to be.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The Minister dwelt very little on the point of a retired officer being placed at the head of the Military College. I had nothing to say against General Cameron, and it was not from any feeling of that kind that I spoke, but I referred to the fact that he was a retired officer, and that the Minister had stated that of course it was desirable to have a person there who was in the service at the time of his appointment. Well, General Cameron was not, and in that respect the Minister was not consistent with the position he took at the commencement. Then again, he says that this name was suggested by the department and was not suggested by the Imperial Government. That was an entire departure from the system which was adopted when the college was established and which made it such a success. Of course the Imperial Government was not aware that this distinguished officer had such influential friends here, but when the suggestion was made, no doubt they readily agreed to it, it being a Canadian appointment. The Government here departed from the proper manner of appointing the head of that college, and notably in taking a person from the retired list, and that is what I object to more than anything else.

Gen. LAURIE. I wish to refer to a subject which has been touched upon, though not pursued, by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) and the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), and that is the employment of cadets after they leave the college. The returns show that 190 have gone through the college. Of that number 69 have gone into the Imperial Service, 10 into the Canadian Permanent Corps, 20 into the Civil Service or the North-West Mounted Police Force, 79 have entered civil life in Canada or out of it, besides 12 who have died. Now, it seems to me that as the college has cost the country a great deal of money, it is very desirable that the young men should be where we can lay our hands upon them, that they should not be lost in civil life, or out of the country altogether. I have taken considerable pains to find out what is done under similar circumstances in the United States. I hold in my hand a list of the engineers of the United States Army, and I have analysed that list. I have also a letter from General Deane, Chief of Engineers, United States Army, Washington, stating how the graduates are employed. He says:

"The officers are selected from the highest men each year graduated from the United States Military Academy. Upon the recommendation of the Academic Board these officers are commissioned as second lieutenants in the Corps of Engineers, and sent to the Engineers' School of Application at Willet's Point, near New York city, where they remain for two years on duty as officers of the engineers troops (sappers and miners), and under instruction as to their general duties as engineer officers. The engineering curriculum at both West Point and Willet's Point, includes a full course in civil engineering. Upon completion of the course at the Engineers' School of Application, the young officer is subject to detail as assistant on any of the works under the supervision of the Engineer Corps, and in the routine of his services as a lieutenant, he may have practical experience in all branches of civil and military engineering. By the time he reaches the grade of captain and often before, he is fitted for the charge of a district, and as the exigencies of the service permit, he is assigned to the command of a district consisting of such military and civil works as it may be advisable to group together under one officer. In the discharge of his duties as said district officer, he is entirely independent of the general officer of the line of the army, such as department and division commanders, and reports directly to the Chief Engineer; in making his disbursement whether civil or military, he is accountable to the Treasury Department through the War Department, and is not required to give bonds, no matter how large his disbursements. The officers of the Corps of Engineers have charge of (1) permanent and field defences and fortifications, torpedo defences, military maps, pontoon trains, military bridges, mining, &c., and the command of the engineer troops. (2) Improvement of rivers and harbors, for which appropriations are made annually by Congress. (3) Construction and repairs of lighthouses, light keepers' dwelling, beacons, fog signals, &c. (4) Instructors and assistant professors at the United States Military Academy. The first, second and fourth functions are exercised under the direction of the Secretary of War, and the third under that of the Secretary of the Treasury. The same officer may, and often does, exercise several of those functions at once."

By examining the list, out of 106 officers of the Engineer Corps, I find that 20 only are employed solely in military duties, 21 partially in military and partially in civil duties, 8 as instructors in Military Colleges, and no less than 57 in purely civil duties. I think it would be quite possible that these young men, after leaving college, when they can only be considered as half trained soldiers, might be attached to our permanent corps, and when they have had further training as officers they might then be passed on into the public service, I do not mean in civil branches of the service, but they might be employed under the Railway Department and under the Public Works Department. I am not finding fault with the Minister of Militia that he does not propose this, because it would cost money, and I know how difficult it is for him to obtain money; nor do I find fault with the Government, but perhaps I might find fault with the members of the House as a whole, because this would divest them of some patronage. I cannot help that. Although the members of this House may be deprived of some patronage, the public would benefit by getting a superior class of engineers for any work in which engineering is required, and at the same time these men would be under the control of the Government and would be available for active service, and be from time to time employed with our militia, giving strength to it, and making themselves useful as staff officers. I would throw out this suggestion to the House. I do think that some steps might be taken by which these young men might be retained permanently in the public service, so that the expense we have made on them should not be thrown away.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With respect to the remarks made by the Minister of Militia as to this appointment, I do not think it is wise in him to have declared that this was not a political appointment, when every man here knows perfectly well that it was. However, that is in a Parliamentary sense, and we well understand that it was in a Parliamentary sense that the hon. gentleman is obliged to say that it was not a political appointment. My own conviction is, and has been from the time this college was established, that the only way in which we could prevent it from being used for political purposes, at any rate as regards the chief official, was to have requested the English Government to send us an officer of their own selection and in the active service, and unless this is done I have no hesitation in declaring my conviction, from a pretty ample experience of both sides of politics, that it will be made a political appointment. However, although this was a political appointment, I hope that the gentleman will discharge his duties in a satisfactory manner. I think it is a serious mistake, although I hope no evil consequence will follow. I know the British Government have, up to the present time, had a very high opinion of many of the young men who have gone from this college. I know in the particular case to which reference was made, that the British Government applied for a larger number than we could supply, of engineer officers. I think in the future interest of the college, it is rather unfortunate that so large a number were taken, some of whom, I believe, had barely had two years service; they would have done us more credit if they had been four year men or three year men. It was a great compliment to the education that these men had received in the college, that the British Government should be willing to take them out after so short a term as two or three years. I may remark to my hon. friend beside me, that not once or twice, but at least half a score of times, I have called on the Government to do what the founders of the college intended that they should do, to put a few appointments such as he described at the disposal of the most promising of the young cadets, and I am very glad indeed to find that some other gentlemen are desirous of seeing that carried out. Now, I want to know what the hon. gentleman is going to do with this $18,000 more which he is asking for.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. That is merely a different way of keeping accounts. There is an increase of $18,000. The vote for 1889-90 represents a portion of the annual subscriptions and payments by cadets to the credit of the Receiver General for entrance fees, education and board, which hitherto have been credited against expenses for the Royal Military College, but which it is intended to credit in the future to the revenue of the Dominion.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman state how much he receives from graduates?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The amount is $18,000, when the $200 fee applies, it will be $36,000. In coming in under the recent regulations they pay an entrance fee of $200. That is deposited in the hands of the college to meet the expense incurred by the cadets for clothing and boots.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Surely the hon. gentleman is in error about that.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I spoke of the increased fee which is going to be charged after this year. The additional or increased fee is $100. The present charge is $250, making the total charge $350 for the future.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No doubt there is a great deal of force in what the hon. gentleman has said, that it is desirable we should make the college as nearly self-supporting as possible. But he will remember that in the early stages of the college, admission was fairly open to competition, and a considerable number of the best pupils were the sons of men in comparatively poor circumstances. There is this circumstance which must be remembered, namely, that by raising the fee you practically put it out of the power of any man who is not in tolerably good circumstances to send his sons there. I do not know whether, on a balance of the advantages, that may not be wise, but some of the very best graduates of the college and some of the very best officers now in the Imperial service were sons of men who certainly could not have paid $350 a year for each of them, the sum which the hon. gentleman proposes to charge.

Mr. WATSON. Is it the intention of the Minister to allow the 95th Battalion, Manitoba, to go into camp this season?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The matter of camping and training has not yet been considered, and I am not in a position to give an answer to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. WATSON. It is very important that this battalion should go into camp as it has not been in camp since 1885, and permission has been given for the formation of another battalion in Manitoba. I do not know for what purpose that is being done. I am afraid it is for political purposes, and in order to give Major Bedson a commission. He has only got four companies yet, I believe. It would be much more in the interest of the militia force that those now enrolled should be annually drilled. It is much better to have an efficient body of 20,000 men than the present force of 37,000. This battalion was supposed to drill last summer, but unfortunately the order was countermanded and the battalion has not drilled since the year I have stated.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. In regard to the subscription to the college, I would like to give the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) the exact figures as taken from the reports of the department. Annually paid for each cadet for board, clothing, books, &c., first year, $300; namely, $100 board and instruction, and $200 for clothing, &c. Each subsequent year $250, namely, $100 board and instruction, and $150 clothing, &c.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Which it is now proposed to raise to $350.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes.

Lighthouses..... $30,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Can the Minister give any rough statement as to the amount required for the erection of lighthouses deemed necessary for the purpose of properly lighting our Atlantic coast, including the St. Lawrence? As regards the British Columbia coast, we cannot expect this information at present.

Mr. TUPPER. I am not in a position to make a detailed statement on that point, although, of late years, the department has not been making very heavy expenses on lights on the Atlantic coast, which coast is at present very fairly lighted. The expense in past years has been tolerably large there. With the development of commerce and changes made in the style of navigation new questions arise, such, for example, as the lighting of Halifax Harbor. That harbor has been lighted on the old style, and if a proposition, which is being actually discussed, to light the harbor so that vessels may enter any time of day or night or during a fog, were carried out a very large expense would be involved. This could be done by the introduction of electric lights, gas buoys, a series of fog alarms and so on. The hon. gentleman will see that the largest expenditure are in connection with the comparatively new districts in Algoma and British Columbia. There is an expenditures for perfecting the channel at Vancouver so as to enable the larger steamers which are expected in a short time to come there in greater numbers. The former practice was to take a vote of $48,000 a year, but last year $30,000 was taken and I propose to ask $30,000 this year. It is to be hoped that in a few years this item will not be so large.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are these several expenditures to complete in all cases, or are they renewals?

Mr. TUPPER. Some of these are revotes.

Mr. CAMPBELL (Kent). Can the hon. the Minister give me some information as to the amount and nature of the work on Rondeau lighthouse, in the County of Kent?

Mr. TUPPER. No extensive work is being done there, such as which necessitate calling for tenders or anything of that kind. There are only some small repairs which are suggested by Mr. Noble, the inspector.

Superintendent of Insurance..... $6,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have no objection to the item itself, but I trust the Minister of Customs will inform the First Minister, whom I do not see in his place, that very possibly on Concurrence I may raise a question as to the expediency of any Minister of State being connected with insurance companies which are under the supervision of Government officers. As the First Minister is not here, I shall not say anything further about the matter now.

Mr. BOWELL. I will inform the First Minister.

Salary of Mr. Fabre and contingencies of office..... $3,500

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We were to have some reports on this matter?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have enquired about the reports and I am afraid we cannot lay our hands on them now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Do they exist?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. They exist. The Secretary of State had them, but we cannot find them now. Probably they were put under lock and key.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should think that is so.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot get them now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is there any chance of enjoying the pleasure of seeing the Secretary of State in time to get the valuable documents?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think we may have the Secretary of State and the documents in the last days of the Session.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It will give us considerable pleasure to see him, and still more so to find that this money has been expended in the best interests of the country, and of Monsieur Fabre.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am sure there will be a reciprocity of pleasure.

Mr. BOWELL moved, That item No. 196 be struck from the Estimates, and the following substituted:—

For salaries, fees, gratuities and contingencies to cullers, at Montreal, Quebec and Three Rivers, $20,000.

He said: This is in view of the reconstruction of the whole service. Last year we took a vote of $55,000, and this year we propose to ask for $54,000, but it is proposed to remodel and reconstruct the whole service, and it is anticipated that a sum of $20,000 will be sufficient.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is highly desirable it should be so. Shall we be called upon to settle any superannuation in connection with this matter?

Mr. BOWELL. I am not positive, but I think it is very likely that there will be some, particularly as this affects the older officers. I see, however, that the item says for "gratuities," which would imply that the intention was to give them certain allowances without putting them on the superannuation list.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman is not in a position to state whether or not this $20,000 would cover all expenses?

Mr. BOWELL. That is the amount suggested by the Minister of Inland Revenue, who has this branch of the service in charge. He has a scheme to submit to the House and he has come to the conclusion that he will be able to cover the whole expenditure for $20,000.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When will you lay that scheme on the Table?

Mr. BOWELL. On Saturday or Monday next.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It should be laid on the Table before Concurrence.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman is quite correct in that.

Refund of moneys paid in error on account of Judges' pensions—Judge Boswell, $688.60; Judge Gowan, $579.74 ..... $1,268.34

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How do they come to have been paid in error?

Mr. BOWELL. In the superannuation there was a miscalculation. They had been paid this amount too much, and it was deemed advisable, on representations made, that they should not be asked to refund it, and we ask the House to concur in the decision we came to.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. They were pretty good judges, but this is really a queer precedent you are establishing.

Mr. DENISON. Judge Boswell is a very old man, and after the judges commenced to collect this money, I suppose the Government thought it rather hard to ask them to repay it.

Mr. BOWELL. That is the fact.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Is that the gentleman who was a county judge, but was too infirm for his work, and was superannuated and then placed in the Senate?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; that was Judge Gowan.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are we to understand that when a man becomes unfit for anything else, it is the policy of the Government to put him in the Senate? I must say for Mr. Gowan, however, that since he has been in the Senate, he has done some good work and made some very sensible remarks.

Elections—to pay Major J. Wilson, Collector of Customs at Sault Ste. Marie, for services as returning officer..... $50

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When you turn collectors into returning officers, I think some explanation is required.

Mr. BOWELL. Major Wilson has been a returning officer in a number of elections there in the past. I understand that he acted as such previously to our coming into office, and there never has been any objection to his conduct.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). It certainly is contrary to the rules of the Minister's department that a man should occupy that position.

Mr. BOWELL If the work were that of a political or municipal office. This is neither one nor the other, as he ought to be strictly impartial.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). The hon. Minister does not allow any of his collectors to do any other work, and this man is charging for other work done. I think it is certainly an imprudent act on the part of the department.

Public Buildings, Quebec..... $57,288.50

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. With respect to this item, which includes a considerable amount of items—although I do not object to its passage just now—if any hon. gentleman who is not here desires to discuss this on Concurrence it must be fully understood that all liberties are reserved.

Mr. BOWELL. That is perfectly understood, and I will take a note of it.

Resolutions reported.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 2:05 a.m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 18th April, 1889.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 141) to amend the Act respecting the Rocky Mountains Park of Canada.—(Mr. Dewdney.)

Bill (No. 140) to amend the Revised Statute respecting Escapes and Rescues.—(Sir John Thompson.)

WHARF AT ST. ALPHONSE.

Mr. COUTURE (translation) asked, Whether the Government intend to use, in the next coming repairs to be done to the wharf at St. Alphonse, the timber prepared by Benjamin Simard, in accordance with the request of the Government agent in 1886? If not, why not?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) In answer to the hon. member, I must tell him that there is no proof that the timber was ordered from Benjamin Simard. Consequently, the Government think that they are free to secure what timber they may require from the quarter where they can get it most cheaply.

ST. LAWRENCE TELEGRAPH SERVICE.

Mr. COUTURE (translation) asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to extend the line of telegraph on the North Shore of the River St. Lawrence? What sum will be voted this Session for that purpose?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) If the hon. member will refer to the Estimates which are before the House, he will discover the intention of the Government. As to acquainting him with the designs of the Government beyond that I cannot do so at present.

IMPORTS AND EXPORTS.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT asked, What is the total amount of goods entered for consumption in the nine months ending the 1st April, 1889, and 1888, respectively?

Mr. BOWELL. The total amount of goods entered for consumption for the nine months ending 31st March, 1888, was $73,054,443; do. for the nine months ending the 31st March, 1889, $78,246,111, which does not include, however, the importations in British Columbia or the North-West Territories, the full statement of which we have not yet received.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT asked, What is the total amount of exports, being the produce of Canada, up to the 1st day of April, 1889; also for the nine months ending 1st April, 1888?

Mr. BOWELL. The total amount of exports, the produce of Canada, for the nine months ending 31st March, 1888, was $59,790,398; for the nine months ending 31st March, 1889, $59,308,785.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Any allowance to be made for British Columbia in that?

Mr. BOWELL. No. I made that enquiry, and they said these were full.

INTEREST AND SINKING FUND—EXPENDITURE.

Mr. CHARLTON asked, In the published statement of expenditure in the Canada Gazette to date of 1st April, how much is charged for interest paid to said date, and how much for sinking fund account, respectively?

Mr. FOSTER. $4,676,283.40 for interest on public debt, $768,199.46 for sinking fund.

MANUSCRIPTS RESPECTING CANADA.

Mr. VANASSE asked, Whether the Government intend to order the continuance, this year, of the copying of the manuscripts respecting Canada, now lodged among the public archives of England and France?

Mr. CARLING. The matter is engaging the attention of the Government.

PRINTING BUREAU—COST.

Mr. McMULLEN asked, The entire cost of the new Printing Bureau, as follows:—1. The cost of building, including excavation, and everything connected therewith? 2. The cost of printing plant, including all machinery, printing material, fitting up, and material of every kind, freight, cartage, and every item of expenditure connected therewith, up to the 1st of April inst.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. 1. $138,586.77, down to date. 2. $165,863.95.

C. P. R CO.—SALE OF MORTGAGE BONDS.

Mr. STE. MARIE asked, When will the Government produce the report ordered on the 4th March last, by this honorable House, on the motion of Mr. Ste. Marie, concerning the sale of fifteen million dollars of mortgage bonds by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company?

Mr. FOSTER. The Government will produce the report so soon as it has been forwarded to them by the company, who now have it in course of preparation.

BOUNDARIES OF ONTARIO.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not propose to move to-day the resolution of which I have given notice with respect to the boundaries of Ontario. I received last night a telegram from Mr. Mowat saying that the resolution is all right. My hon. friend (Mr. Mills) suggested some verbal alterations the other day, and perhaps some verbal changes may be necessary.

Mr. LAURIER. I have received a telegram from Mr. Mercier saying that he has some objections to the boundaries as proposed. Would the hon. gentleman have any objection to lay on the Table the memorial of Mr. Mercier on the subject?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have the memorial of the Committee.

CULLERS' ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider the following resolution:—

Resolved, That it is expedient to amend the Cullers' Act and to provide that the rates and dues payable thereunder and the classification therein set forth may be changed by Order of the Governor in Council, and to make better provision respecting the reduction of the number of cullers and the annuities payable in consequence; and further, to provide that culling and measuring under the said Act shall be compulsory only in respect of square and waney timber.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would ask the Minister whether the trade has been consulted as to the proposed changes indicated in this resolution?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I think I have, and the House has a pretty good idea of the feeling of the trade generally upon this question. I have been induced to move in the direction indicated by the Bill just introduced for the inspection of timber by what I supposed to be the unanimous opinion of both sides of the House on this question, expressed very strongly during the last two Sessions, from which expression I deemed it to be my duty to consider the matter with a view to wiping out, as far as possible, the large deficiency now accruing against this branch of the service. From the petitions received and from the expressions of hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House interested in the lumber trade, when the subject was before the House for discussion, I came to the conclusion that it was desirable to retain the machinery for the inspection and measurement of all classes of lumber, but to relieve the country from the charge by providing that these services may be performed and paid by fees. Hon. gentlemen will remember that when the discussion took place there was an unanimous expression of opinion on the part of hon. gentlemen, supplemented by petitions from gentlemen representing the same branch of trade in the country—I speak now of manufacturers of lumber, and those interested in saw mills—directly opposed to the proposition I made. That expression of opinion was to the effect, that the trade did not want such culling and measurement performed, and did not want to be taxed for maintaining such machinery, and did not desire to pay fees in order that the work might be done without charge to the public revenue. The delegation from the Province of Quebec were in favor of maintaining the culling of square and waney timber alone. The expression of opinion in this House by hon. gentlemen, who may be accepted as representing the lumber manufacturing interests, was in favor of culling square timber, but against the necessity of culling or measuring deals, and that class of lumber, and was strongly against any taxation on their industry for that service. The House will remember, that last night the Minister of Customs, in dealing with the question of the Estimates for this service, took a reduced vote, from $54,000 to $28,000. The intention is, to provide for the culling of square timber at Quebec, which will be very nearly self-sustaining. We provide for the retaining of the deal culler at Three Rivers, and the culler there will remain in his present condition, because the receipts of the office fully cover the expenses, and will involve no expense to the country. At Montreal and Sorel, there are two cullers, and we do not propose to remove them, because the revenue covers the expenses. The reduction will be made up in this way: At the present time, the total expense, including the cullers who have been retired under both Governments years ago, was $55,000. The charge proposed, including contingencies, salaries and retiring allowances or gratuities to those cullers for whom we must provide, will not exceed $27,000 or $28,000, and $28,000 is all I ask to pay salaries, gratuities and contingencies under the present system. There are thirty cullers on the present staff. I propose to reduce that number by eighteen, retiring that number. There is a large staff of officers in the culler's office at Quebec; where the total salaries reached $13,700. In the reorganization, I propose to cut that amount down to $6,050. I further propose to make a reduction on the contingent account, also in what are known as cullers' expenses, because the number of cullers being so largely reduced, that item will be largely reduced this year, and I think next year it will entirely disappear. So far as regards the reduction of the total expenditure, hon. members, I hope, will be satisfied that I have done my best to meet the wishes of the House, when it is remembered that the running expenses, being contingencies, salaries and rent, amounted to $48,500 out of the $54,000 asked in the estimate, and the running expenses under the readjustment will amount to only $18,000, or a reduction of $30,000, which very large reduction will, I trust, be satisfactory to hon. members.

Mr. COSTIGAN.

Mr. MITCHELL. Has this resolution any connection with the Bill which the hon. gentleman has introduced into this House in connection with the survey and measurement of timber?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I think I omitted to state that that Bill would be dropped. The resolution, when adopted, will be followed by a short Bill amending the Cullers' Act, so as to give the necessary power to carry out the proposed reorganization.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is very satisfactory, because the Bill introduced was deemed in the Province from which I come, to be very objectionable, and our people were entirely against it. I am glad the hon. gentleman is about to drop it, and adopt the system of reducing the number of cullers in Quebec with a view to effecting economy.

Mr. LAURIER. I have no comment whatever to offer at this moment on the proposition of the hon. gentleman. The motive is one which will commend itself, I am sure, to the House, as it is an attempt to economise. I have only to regret that the hon. gentleman has introduced such a measure, which will surely incite a good deal of discussion at such a late period of the Session. I do not object that we should now proceed with this resolution and place the details of it before the public, but when the hon. gentleman has introduced his Bill perhaps he would consider that it would be fitting that the cullers who are interested should have an opportunity of being heard in this matter. The trade has to be considered no doubt, but persons who have been for some thirty or forty years in an office which afforded them their daily bread are sure to have some remonstrances to make if their calling is to be taken away from them.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I hope the hon. gentleman will consider that Parliament has now placed at my disposal only $28,000 to meet the expenses of this department. The hon. gentleman knows very well that if we were to consult the cullers, and the parties interested, we could never make a reduction. This is the third time that an effort has been made in this direction; once when the Government of which he was a member was in power, and since by the present Government.

Mr. LAURIER. Does not the hon. gentleman think that this would be a good reason why this measure should have been brought down earlier in the Session?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The measure was brought down, and it is now brought in response to a call that a reduction of the deficit, which existed, should be made. The cullers do not come under the Superannuation Act, but the Government thinks that these men have some claim on the country in being retired. They can earn their bread in any way they please when they have retired; and in addition to that they have $200 a year as long as they live. I think that for that class of men the allowance is as liberal as could be made by the country.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). What plan is to be followed in regard to the superannuation of the deal cullers, whom I understand are to be largely reduced in number? Are some to be selected for superannuation, and others to be left to discharge the duties of their office as at present? What is the basis of the superannuation to the deal cullers? As the leader of the Opposition has stated, these are very vital questions to the men who are to be superannuated. They have been living on the salaries which they earned, and they are not prepared for such a step as has been taken just now, at the commencement of the working season. Is it proposed to adopt a general system which will work impartially towards all the cullers? I will object most strenuously to the measure if it is intended to adopt such a system as will leave the cullers at the mercy, not of the Government only, but of the understrappers of the Government in Quebec. I know that if this were done some would be made victims of at once, and it is of the greatest interest to know what system is to be followed as to the selection of those who are to be superannuated.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The understrappers of the Government will have nothing to do with the manner in which those cullers will be retired, as the principle has been fixed once before by his own political friends, as well as by the present Government. These men are to retire, getting for the remainder of their lives $200 a year. I will ask the hon. gentleman to consult his friends upon that side of the House as to how the selection was made when a reduction was put in force some years ago.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). That is not an answer.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I think it is the best answer I can give.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I want to know what system is to be followed? Are the cullers who are to be retired to be selected at random by the Government, or is a system to be adopted which will work impartially and without unfairness to anybody?

Mr. COSTIGAN. $200 a year will be given to those who are retired.

Mr. LAURIER. Who will be retired?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Every deal culler in Quebec who is not wanted by the trade. Therefore, there will be no choice or selection, and there cannot be any favoritism.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). Will there be any deal cullers kept?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Not in Quebec. There will be one stave culler and eight timber cullers in Quebec, and the reduction will be made by the Government without doing injustice to any culler on account of his religion, nationality or politics. I think the hon. gentleman will say that when I made a reduction before there was no injustice done to anyone in that respect.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. LAURIER. I would call the attention of the Minister to the fact that he has not given an answer to my hon. friend from Quebec Centre (Mr. Langelier). As I understand, all the deal cullers are to be superannuated in Quebec, as well as five of the timber cullers. What my hon. friend wanted to know was, and I think it is a very fair question, according to what system are these five cullers to be superannuated? Are they to be selected by the Minister himself or by some system, such as their seniority, for instance. The hon. gentleman stated a moment ago, in answer to this question, that they would be dealt with fairly and that he would not take into consideration their nationality, religion, or politics.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I said they would not suffer on that account.

Mr. LAURIER. I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman is well meaning, but he will not be offended if I say that with all the confidence I have in him, I would still have greater confidence in a fixed and general rule which could be applied. Notwithstanding all the confidence which I may have in him, after all, I know very well that he will be subjected to a good deal of influence and a good deal of lobbying. Some parties will come and whisper in his ear that this one should be allowed to retire and that one to remain. If some rule were adopted on the basis of seniority, or some other basis, whereby they would all be treated impartially, the hon. gentleman would relieve himself of a good deal of difficulty.

Mr. COSTIGAN. There can be no system of selection with regard to the deal cullers at Quebec, because they all go. There will be five timber cullers retired, and we propose to make the selection of those who will remain on representation of the dealers in square timber. The men who are most competent to do the work on a small staff are the men who will be retained.

Mr. LAURIER. Who are those men?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman has a pretty good idea. I have letters from a good many of them, and shall have no difficulty in making the selection.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). Who will do the culling at Quebec after this Bill passes? Is there to be no culling of deals?

Mr. COSTIGAN. There will be no culling of deals this year, as an experiment, and if after that the trade think they ought to have deal culling, then it is provided that any one of these cullers who have been retired may go and do the work for fees from the trade.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). When I was in Quebec a week ago, I met some of the cullers, and they seemed to know all about the measure now before the House, and the black sheep were already marked for superannuation. One of the cullers, who is known to be one of the best square timber cullers in Quebec, told me that his name was on the black list.

Mr. COSTIGAN. If the cullers in the office at Quebec had this information, they must have extraordinary means of obtaining it, because that information was not given out of the department. There has been no action taken as to those who are to be selected for superannuation, and those to be retained. I do not think it is possible that those men could have any information at all, and I can assure the hon. gentleman that I would regret very much if I could be seriously charged with dismissing a good officer on account of his politics.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). The man I am speaking of told me that this Bill was to be introduced, and he said that there were rumors of another measure of a more sweeping character. One of the cullers gave me all the details, some of which are not in the Bill, and he told me that his name was in the black list of those to be superannuated—why, I do not know, because he is a first-rate culler.

Mr. LAURIER. By this measure I see the hon. gentleman takes preliminary steps to cut off the heads of five cullers. What does he intend to do with the rest of the staff?

Mr. COSTIGAN. When a man's office is abolished his case comes under the Superannuation Act. If the hon. gentleman followed the discussions of the last two or three Sessions, he will remember that many complaints were made of the expenditure of this branch being about $50,000 and the revenue only $15,000; and when I propose to reduce the expenses from $48,000 to $18,000, I should hope the hon. gentleman would give me his assistance in perfecting the measure.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman knows that I said I expressed no opinion on the measure. I recognise the principle of economy, but I desired to know on what principle the superannuation of the cullers would take place. At this moment I make no comment on that subject; I will wait to see the Bill.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Of the eighteen cullers whom I propose to retire, fifteen are Conservatives, and, I am informed there are only three possible Liberals, so that there can surely be no injustice done to the Liberal element.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I see that the Minister of Inland Revenue proposes by this resolution to make the culling and measuring of square and waney timber compulsory. I do not see any objection to making the measuring of timber at Quebec compulsory; but when the timber is sold, the custom is to measure it in the raft without culling it, and then it is sold to the shippers. The shippers take it into their own booms, prepare it, classify it, and ship it under their classification to the old country. I hope the Minister does not intend by this measure to interfere in any way with the mode in which the shippers of Quebec have done their business for the last thirty or forty years. By that mode the timber, which was measured under the authority of this Act, was not required to be culled, under the same authority, for the purposes of shipping.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not think the hon. gentleman need have any fear on that score. I do not understand that the culling is compulsory under the law, because the law provides that the timber shall either be measured or culled by a Government culler. It does not provide that it shall be both measured and culled.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I hope the hon. gentleman will make it perfectly clear that the timber, having been measured under the authority of this Act, for the purposes of selling, it will not be compulsory to have it assorted and classified by the Government cullers. The custom is to have the timber sorted and classified by the shippers' cullers, and each shipper has a certain classification which is known in the old country, and upon which the timber is sold. It will, therefore, be detrimental to the interests of the trade to require that the timber should be classified for shipment by the Government cullers.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I agree perfectly with the hon. gentleman, and if the Bill should bear the construction the hon. gentleman fears, it can be altered in Committee.

Mr. GILLMOR. How many cullers will be superannuated?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Eighteen, at $200 a year each.

Mr. GILLMOR. I believe the motive of the hon. the Minister to be correct, but I do not quite understand why the public should be taxed $3,600 a year to pay an indemnity to those men, for whom there is no longer any use. My own impression is that there has not been use for many of them for a good while back. I know that the cullers of timber and surveyors of lumber in the Lower Provinces consider, many of them, $200 as a good year's salary, and these men, having had a good fat berth for a long time, should not now be pensioned for life, unless the Minister can give some good reason for it. We are getting to have an army of superannuated officers in this country, and now it seems we are to recruit that army from the outside service. These men should be allowed to go as others have gone, since they have been getting a good living out of the public long enough, and their services are no longer required.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The charge on the country now for these men is $12,600, and I propose to make it $3,600, which will be reduced every year, according as these men die. The principle is not a new one. It was adopted by Parliament on three former occasions in dealing with the same class of public servants.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Have these men contributed to the superannuation fund?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No, there is no such fund in their case.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Well, the superannuation fund is based on the principle of contribution. Whether a good one or not, that is an intelligent principle, but in this case it is proposed to give these men so much a year simply to get rid of them.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The principle I am continuing was adopted by this Parliament on three former occasions. It was found that the staff was more than sufficient for the work, and the Government of hon. gentlemen opposite retired quite a number of cullers on a retiring allowance of $200. That principle has been recognised by both sides of the House. The whole charge to-day for the service is $54,000. Under the proposed change, the whole charge, including the running expenses of office and all other expenses, including gratuities, will be under $28,000, making a saving of $26,000, which is a very considerable economy with regard to one branch of the service.

Mr. LAURIER. No doubt the hon. gentleman is not introducing a new principle. The principle, whether right or wrong, was admitted for the first or second time in 1876, under the Mackenzie Administration.

Mr. COSTIGAN. For the second time.

Mr. LAURIER. At all events, the principle has been recognised that the timber cullers of Quebec were entitled to special treatment. In former times the lumber trade of Quebec was the principal export trade of the country. That trade gradually fell off, and it was felt that these men, some of whom were old and had no other occupation during their lifetime—it was felt that it would not be fair to them to take away their sole means of livelihood without giving them some compensation. It was decided to give them the small annuity of $200. This trade growing smaller every year, so far as I can see, the reduction now proposed is judicious, but if we are to make a reduction we should make it in the same way as we did on previous occasions.

Resolution reported.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 142) to amend the Cullers Act, chapter 103 of the Revised Statutes.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE—PRINTING OF EVIDENCE.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think it was understood the other day across the House, that the evidence taken before the Public Accounts Committee was to have been printed in our Journals. I am now informed, that there is some doubt about it. My understanding was, that it was arranged across the House with the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches, that that evidence should be printed in the Journals. My hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Somerville) tells me that there is some dispute in regard to that, and I think it is desirable that we should know what is to be done.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. It was stated in the Printing Committee to-day, that the House would have to pass an order to have the printing done, if the House desires it. The Committee decided to print the report, but not to print the evidence until the order was given by the House to that effect.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I remember that, a few years ago, the hon. member for Leeds brought some charge against myself and an hon. member for one of the Simcoes with reference to the remission of some timber dues. The matter was referred to the Public Accounts Committee and an enquiry was made, and the charge broke down. No report was actually made by the Committee, but nevertheless the chairman sent a report to the House, and that report with all the evidence taken, was published in the Journals, and no such rule was laid down as that which the hon. member refers to.

Mr. BOWELL. Whether the rule has ever been laid down as the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) indicates or not, if he had taken the trouble to read the report of the Committee in this case, he would see that the evidence will be published in the Journals in the same manner as in the case to which he refers. If he will turn to the Votes and Proceedings of the 16th April, 1889, he will find this:

"Mr. Rykert, from the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts, presented the Third Report of the said Committee, which is as follows:—

"The Committee have had under consideration the items 'Expenditure for clothing, Militia and Defence,' as set forth on Page C-190 of the Auditor General's Report for the fiscal year ended 30th June, 1888; and for the information of The House submit herewith the evidence taken, and the papers referred to therein, in connection with the said items.

"(For the evidence, etc., accompanying this Report see Appendix to the Journals, No. 2.)"

That is pursuing precisely the same course as that which was pursued in the case to which the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) has referred. The remarks made by the hon. member for North Brant (Mr. Somerville) show that exactly the same course has been adopted which has been pursued in the past in similar cases. When a report is presented to the House, a motion is made that it be referred to the Printing Committee, and the Printing Committee have as a rule accepted the reference to them by the House as an instruction to have it printed. The reason for that has been that motions have been made in the House that certain returns be printed, and, as that implied an expenditure of public money, it has been ruled out of order by the Speaker, To avoid that difficulty, a motion of reference to the Committee has been made, and in most cases the Printing Committee has ordered the printing of the document.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The Printing Committee decided otherwise to-day. This was referred to the Committee in the same way as the Minister of Customs has stated, and the Committee referred back to the House the question of having the evidence printed.

Mr. BOWELL. Of course the Committee can reject the reference if they please, but as a rule that is not done. As a rule they accept the reference as an instruction.

Mr. LISTER. The Minister of Customs states that the evidence is to be printed, and he reads the report to sustain that position. A member of the Committee states that the Committee have declared that the evidence shall not be printed unless the House orders it.

Mr. BOWELL. There is a difference between ordering the printing in the Journals and the printing for general distribution.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The Committee decided to-day not to print it at all, either in the Journals or for distribution, and declared that, if it was to be printed, the House must decide it. I move that the evidence taken before the Public Accounts Committee be printed in the Journals.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. There is no necessity for that motion. When a report is presented, it appears in the Journals as a matter of course.

Mr. LAURIER. It will then appear after the Session is over, but we want it for immediate circulation.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. That is a different thing. Of course it will be after the Session is over when it appears in the Journals.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The Committee has decided that the evidence shall not be printed at all.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. What Committee?

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The Printing Committee. It was referred to them.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. No, they have nothing to do with it.

Mr. TAYLOR. The position the Committee took to-day was simply to say, "not printed," which is the usual course in regard to all such documents. It was not thought desirable to have it printed for distribution, but that does not prevent its going into the Journals, as the evidence in the case to which my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) referred did, but that was not printed for distribution.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I made a motion in the Committee that this should be printed in the Journals of the House, and that motion was rejected.

Mr. LISTER. The evidence is required, and we must have it. Why should it not be printed?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. That ought to have been done in the Public Accounts' Committee. That Committee should have ordered that the evidence should be printed from day to day and distributed amongst the members of the Committee. That has not been done, and I think it is very improbable that we shall get the evidence this Session. But I do not think that this report, or any other report presented to this House, goes to the Printing Committee.

An hon. MEMBER They all go there.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. No; they are not referred there at all. It is only reports from evidence brought down by the Government and laid upon the Table. But this is a matter under our own concern. It is evidence taken by one of our own Committees, and they report to the House. Another Committee has no right to take cognisance of what is going on in the Public Accounts Committee, and that evidence was never properly before the Printing Committee.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. If it is understood that the evidence is to be printed in the Journals, that is all that I want.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. It will be printed, but not in time for discussion this Session.

Mr. BOWELL. I must say that this whole matter is quite different from what I anticipated. When I was on the Committee I enquired as to whether the evidence was printed, for I certainly understood that it was to be printed from time to time and laid before the members of the Committee to consider before it rose; and I was much surprised when I found that it had not been printed. I do not know why, as my time has been so much occupied otherwise that I could not give the matter attention. I simply asked the question and found that it was not printed, but supposed it would be reported to the House. I see no objection that it should be printed. I am quite sure it would be in the interest of the Department of Militia that it should be printed. For my part I would rather it were printed, for then the members would be able to form a correct conclusion upon the evidence.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think we have had this question several times before, and the practice has been that when the House wants a document specially printed, a motion was made that that document should be printed, and the Speaker would not put the question, but would send the motion to the Clerk, who would see that it went to the Printing Committee, and the Printing Committee would take up the matter and report to the House whether they thought the document should be printed. It appears that the Printing Committee has taken up this matter—perhaps it was not referred to them—and they have decided not to print it. When the report is made here, if we do not agree with it, we will either not adopt the report, or send it back for the purpose of having that document printed. I do not know whether it is the desire of the House that that document should be printed. I do not think we should have an absolute rule that we cannot lay aside when necessary. We might move that this document be printed for the use of members, and that the rule be suspended, which can be done with the consent of the House. I will move to that effect.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I withdraw my motion in favor of the motion of the Minister of Public Works.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I submit this rule is hardly in the way at all. This rule relates to a motion being offered for the printing of papers. The Committee on Printing have to report before the question is put thereon.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved:

That the evidence taken by the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts with regard to the items of expenditure for clothing, Militia and Defence, and reported by said Committee to this House, be printed forthwith and distributed among the members.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. That does not take in all the evidence before the Public Accounts Committee. More evidence is reported than that.

Mr. MULOCK. I presume the documents and the public records that were laid before the Committee, are deemed to be evidence.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think it is quite clear that a motion ought to be drawn to satisfy the hon. member; then it could be put by the Chair.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I understand that we had, I think, two reports, if not three, from the Committee on Public Accounts, and the evidence that was taken before them was included in those reports. I thought the House wanted to have all that printed, and that is the motion I have made.

Mr. MULOCK. I desire whoever has charge of the carrying out of that motion, to understand that there are a number of documents before the Public Accounts Committee that are not referred to in the evidence of any particular witness, but yet they are very important, in my opinion, in regard to this enquiry. Therefore, if there is to be a public printing of the evidence, it should embrace the departmental reports which have been presented to the Committee on Public Accounts.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Were they reported?

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). The motion was that the evidence and the papers connected with it in regard to the enquiry concerning militia clothing, should be reported.

Mr. MULOCK. If the hon. gentleman will examine the proceedings before the Public Accounts Committee he will see that the Committee ordered the production of certain reports, letters and papers from the Department of Militia and Defence. They were produced before the Committee and have become a matter of record.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. They reported to the House that evidence had been taken and the papers referred to forwarded.

Mr. MULOCK. I have seen the papers brought down, and the document to which I have reference is not among them. The Public Accounts Committee directed that the evidence and papers before the Committee should be laid before this House. I have seen a certain number of the papers laid before the House, but I do not think that the Committee has referred to this House all the papers laid before it, and it is with respect to these missing papers that I now call the attention of the officer who has charge of the printing of the evidence.

SIR HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not know the practice of lawyers or the rules of court in regard to evidence. A large number of documents were sent by the Militia Department to the Public Accounts Committee, and they certainly were not all put in as evidence. Those specially referred to were marked and filed, and these, I take it, have been brought down. Whether, when large numbers of documents are laid on the table of the Committee and not referred to, except by members of the Committee merely for examination purposes, they should form part of the evidence, I am not prepared to say; but it does seem to me that they should not.

Mr. MULOCK. We were not a Committee to arrive at any conclusion, but we were simply gathering evidence to lay before this House, and as such we secured certain documents which were submitted to the Committee, and when the Committee ordered that all the evidence, papers and documents in connection with the proceedings should be referred to the House, I consider that those particular documents to which I referred, should be sent down.

Mr. BOWELL. Were they put in and marked by the secretary?

Mr. MULOCK. It was not necessary to prove them by any witness. They came from the Department of Militia, and whether they are produced or not, I shall refer to them if I have occasion to deal with this matter at another time. I mention this fact merely for the information of other hon. members.

Mr. BOWELL. Of course, I am not trying to keep anything back, but I may say that when the hon. gentleman had the document in his hand, and thought it bore on the question before the Committee, it was marked and filed and became part of the evidence.

Mr. MULOCK. That was when I examined a witness.

Mr. BOWELL. There were a number of other documents placed on the table of the Committee which I do not think were intended to be brought down, nor do I think they should be.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Perhaps this motion will cover the ground:

That the second and third reports, with the documents laid before this House during the present Session, be printed for the use of members.

Mr. HICKEY. There are other documents which should go in if these are published. It will be a very large document to be printed.

Motion agreed to.

COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No 11) for the prevention and suppression of combinations in restraint of trade.—(Sir John Thompson.)

(In the Committee).

Mr. TISDALE. The Bill has not been distributed since it was amended, and it cannot, therefore, be proceeded with.

Mr. WALLACE (York). If the hon. gentleman will go to the post office he will find that it has been distributed.

Mr. TISDALE. I have been there, and I find it has not been distributed. I move that the Committee rise and report progress.

Committee rose and reported progress.

OCEAN STEAMSHIP SERVICE—B. C. AND AUSTRALIA.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on resolution (p. 1328) to provide for a subsidy for a fortnightly steamship service between British Columbia and the Australian colonies and New Zealand: He said: Mr. Speaker, as there are three of these resolutions, I think it would be well for me to make a general statement before you leave the Chair, and any information outside of that may be given when the House is again in committee. My hon. friend the leader of the Opposition asked yesterday that papers should be brought down as to what has been done in this matter, and I explained that negotiations were in such a state that there were very few papers that could be brought down, but that when we went into committee on the resolutions I would give as full an explanation as I could. After some consideration of the subject the Government determined, some time ago, to ask for tenders for an improved Atlantic service, and tenders were accordingly asked on the 20th July, and again on the 20th November in the year 1886. Afterwards the time for receiving these tenders was extended until 4th July, 1887, and in response to this invitation three tenders were received. I may say that the general conditions on which these tenders were invited were that the vessels should be of about the same power, the same size and the same capacity as the Parisian of the present mail service line, and a minimum speed was asked of 15 knots per hour. At the close of the advertisements, parties were asked to give alternative tenders for 16 knots, 17 knots and 18 knots per hour speed. One of the three tenders was from a proposed company which was not organised, and which has never since become organised, and which tendered upon the basis of a 15 knot rate of speed. The amount of their tender was, I think, $416,000. The second tender was from the Allans, who hold the present mail service between this country and Great Britain. They did not, however, put in a tender upon the specifications as called for in the advertisements, but their proposal was for a continuation of the present service with some slight modifications looking towards improvement, until the 31st March, 1889, and after the 1st April, 1889, an improved steamship service making a speed of about 17 knots an hour, for which they asked the sum of £2,000 sterling per trip, which would come to about £104,000 a year. The last tender was from the Andersons, of London, and it was on the basis of providing vessels which should have a power sufficient to drive them at a speed of 20 knots an hour; they stipulated to make the time between Rimouski and Great Britain in 140 hours vid Belle-Isle straits, 154 hours vid Cape Race, and 153 hours from Great Britain to Halifax. These tenders were not altogether satisfactory, and in the meantime the Government had altered its idea somewhat of the nature of the service and the equipment and speed which ought to be demanded in a new service, if the country were going to expend any very considerable amount of money upon it. The Government entered into still further negotiations with the two bonâ fide companies, the Allans and the Andersons, and a series of communications have been taking place for the last three or four months and are still proceeding. Although the negotiations are not completed the Government thinks that a probable conclusion is within sight, and therefore it asks Parliament to place it in a position to enter into a contract and requests a maximum sum of money to be placed at its disposal. This is done for the purpose of not causing any delay to the Government in entering into the contract, and for avoiding the delay which would occur if Parliament were to rise and if the matter had to be deferred until a succeeding Session. This is a plain statement of the case with reference to the Atlantic mail service.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. gentleman did not state the amount of the tender of Anderson and Company.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it is £104,000, the same as the Allan's. The House will see that there is no disposition on the part of the Government to keep from it any information that is available, and it will also see that it would not be for the best interests of the conclusion that we hope to arrive at that the correspondence and negotiations, not yet completed, between the Government and those two companies, should be brought before the House at present. With reference to the service which is proposed between British Columbia and China and Japan, there is nothing to be said that has not already been stated in the House, as far as the negotiations are concerned. I think the then Minister of Finance stated last year that upon the British Government concluding to give a vote of £75,000 out of £100,000 for a fortnightly service, the Government of Canada agreed, subject to the sanction of Parliament, to give £25,000, and that if a sum of £60,000 was to be given by the Imperial Government for a monthly service to China and Japan, the Government of Canada was prepared, subject to the sanction of the House, to give a quarter of that amount. That is just the state in which negotiations with regard to this matter are. Communications have taken place between the company and the British Government, and I believe all the preliminaries have been arranged. I think we may practically say that the arrangements are made for signing the contract, and that it will very soon be done.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). What company?

Mr. FOSTER. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company, I think I am speaking of the China and Japan service. With reference to the proposed service between this country and the Australian colonies, hon. gentlemen who have been following this question, are probably aware that the Australian colonies have been very liberal in ocean mail steamship subsidies and that they have for a number of years past paid over $1,000,000 per year for this purpose. They have been paying for services direct by the Canal route, and they have also been carrying on a monthly service by way of San Francisco. The question of the rearrangement of these different services has come up, and negotiations are on foot at the present time with the view of obtaining, if possible, a monthly or fortnightly service with Great Britain via Canada, and a fortnightly or weekly service via the Canal; and the Government of Canada proposes to take power, in the event of these negotiations coming to a successful conclusion, to give a maximum sum of £25,000 a year for a fortnightly service or a lesser amount for a monthly service; and when the House goes into committee on that resolution, I shall ask to have it amended in that sense, empowering the Government to give for a monthly service a portion of the sum asked for, provided the fortnightly service does not materialise. So much with reference to the state of negotiations about the steamship services. I might, perhaps, say a word as to the causes which have induced the Government to endeavor to establish a more effective service on the Atlantic ocean, between Canada and Great Britain, and to assist in establishing the two services, of which I have spoken, on the Pacific coast. The present position of the Atlantic mail service is not satisfactory. Every year, as hon. gentlemen know, the number of people who go from one continent to another for the purposes of pleasure and sight-seeing is constantly increasing, and demands are constantly made for speed, and for what you may call the luxuries of travel; and that line will be the most patronised, other things being equal, which is the fastest and best equipped, and which gives the best accommodation to the travelling public. In those respects we find ourselves at a disadvantage, compared with the service of the ports to the south of us. For instance, there are magnificent lines of steamers constantly plying between New York and Europe, and making a maximum rate of about 20 knots, and the large lines making an average rate of from 16 to 18 knots; while our own service, which is very good in some respects, is not able to make a maximum rate of more than 15 knots, I think, and an average rate of somewhere between 9 and 15 knots. The contrast is very great, and we find the results of that in two particulars—first, in the fact that the cabin passenger travel by the Canadian route is not increasing in proportion to the increase of the country, and in proportion to the general increase of travel. I have here, under my hand, a statement of the number of cabin passengers who have arrived at Quebec and Montreal from 1868 up to the present time; I will give the total number for a few years past, beginning, for instance, at 1880:

	Passengers.
1881	3,538
1883	3,937
1884	3,974
1885	2,744

If we contrast these numbers with the stream of travel which goes by New York, we will find to be true the statement I made, that passengers having a choice of route do choose that route which is the fastest and which gives the greatest accommodation for the money they pay. If we look at the list of passengers coming into New York, we will find that there are two lines which take the great mass of passenger travel. Out of a total of 86,302 cabin passengers who during the last calendar year arrived at New York, the North German Lloyd line carried 14,840 and the Cunard line 16,723. The North German Lloyd made a number of trips equal to 100, and the Cunard line a number of trips equal to 69; and an analysis of those trips will show that the Cunard line carried 242 passengers per trip, and the North German Lloyd 148 per trip. I think it will be considered that these are two of the most available lines in speed, in equipment, and in the luxuries which they afford, out of all the lines which ply to New York. We find, as I said, that our route does not offer sufficient inducements, to secure its proper proportion of the increasing number of travellers who are continually going and coming between this side and the other. When we come to mail matter, another significant fact strikes us. When I tell this House that of the letters sent from Canada to the United Kingdom, and from the United Kingdom to Canada, in 1887-88, 1,710,824 went by Canadian routes, while 3,008,206 went by United States routes, or 1,297,582 more than by the Canadian routes, hon. members will see the immense diversion of mail matter which takes place from our lines to these fast steamship lines. When you come to consider this same fact with reference to papers, there is a still greater disparity, 2,870,495 going by Canadian routes, and 6,544,021 by United States routes, an excess of 3,673,526 by United States routes. So that it seems certain that the Canadian mail steamship line is not, by equipment, by speed, and by its general condition, holding its rightful place, considering the geographical and other natural advantages which Canada possesses for the inter-oceanic travel. Those advantages are so apparent to the minds of all hon. gentlemen that it is not necessary for me to take up any time in pointing them out. But, besides the demand on that account for a better service, I think the present condition of Canada, her own best interests, her own self-respect, and her own growing importance, demands that she shall have, on that much-travelled route, which will be still more travelled year by year, a line more in consonance with the position of Canada and with the demands of modern travel. And so the Government, after carefully considering the matter, has come to the conclusion that if it is within the reasonable reach of Canada, without overburdening the financial power of the country, we shall have a service on the Atlantic equal to the best Atlantic service running to the ports to the south of us, that we also will have speedy and direct connection with the continent by way of an eligible French port, and so tap that great country and the tributary travel which would come from French ports; and it is within the bounds of all probability that such a steamship line would have the best and quickest connection with the other continental ports. Another thing that has been determined by the Government is that this new steamship service shall be distinctly a Canadian service. Heretofore we have granted subsidies to the Allan Line, and we are now paying a yearly subsidy of $126,000 to that line, their vessels having the privilege of going to an American port. That may have been necessary in the past; no doubt at first it was necessary. But I think it will strike the minds of hon. gentlemen that the time has come when, if we pay Canadian money to establish a route of this kind, the whole advantages of that route should inure to Canadian ports and to our own country, and so the Government have laid it down as a policy that whatever line be established, it shall have that characteristic and shall be a completely Canadian line in that respect. I may say, just as a slightly further development of this idea, that the steam services here proposed and outlined are, in fact, a sequence of the policy of Canada and the development of Canada during the series of past years. The completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the development of our railway system in general has had in it a larger idea, and has looked out to a wider reach than simply the benefit which would inure internally to Canada itself. When the Canadian Pacific Railway was projected and the idea was brought into practical form that we should have an uninterrupted line of communication from ocean to ocean, there was a larger idea than simply to unite the different Provinces by this channel of communication, and the development of the internal resources of the country consequent always upon the establishment of such a line of communication. It was not meant and never supposed that this line should simply begin at Halifax or St. John and end at Vancouver or New Westminster, but that it should be a highway for travel and for commerce between the old countries, the United Kingdom, and other countries contiguous to that on the other side of the water, and the old countries of the far east, between two which sections of the old world a very great development of commerce and of travel has been going on for the last fifty years and is constantly increasing. In fact, it would surprise any one who had not looked into this to take up the statistics of passenger travel between the old country and the far east by the different routes which are at present available, and to see the immense development of that travel, and the very large number of passengers that yearly come and go between these distant points. On business, touring, pleasure, or for various causes, the stream of travel is constantly increasing and is very large and important, and the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway had in it the idea of providing also a highway for this great stream of traffic and travel between the great European countries and the countries to the far east. This country occupies a unique position with reference to that trans-continental trade. If you take our ports, which, upon both sides of our country, the Atlantic and the Pacific, are of a kind which remain open the whole year round, and which are most eligible ports; if you take our coaling facilities which are unsurpassed by any country in the world for ocean service, at the termini upon the east and upon the western side of our country; if you take our temperate climate through a large portion of the travelling part of the year, and the variety which a break in the long line of communication between Europe and Asia gives, and the great variety which this break causes in passing through a new and young and growing country—all these things put together point out this route as holding a very advantageous position for gaining its proportion of that immense stream of travel which passes between Europe and Asia and the traffic which follows in its wake. Of course there are two competing routes with the Canadian route. The one would be the Suez Canal, and the other the route via San Francisco. If we take the tables of distance, we will find that the nearest competitor is the route from San Francisco; and comparing the two, we will find that the route viâ Canada and across our part of the continent, and on to China and Japan, or to Australia, or to points in this country, has a decided advantage over the more southern route as regards distance and time. To all points north of the parallel of Boston and of Buffalo, in the United States, and in Canada, the distance by sea and by land is shorter by the Canadian route—if I may be allowed to so call it—than by the United States route which is further to the south of us. The same is true with reference to points in China and Japan. With reference to available ports in China and Japan, the distance is very largely in favor of the Canadian route over the San Francisco route, and with reference to Australasia—that great continent of islands lying in the South Pacific Ocean—taking the whole distance into account, the advantage is on the side of the Canadian route as compared with its competitor on this continent; and it is not too much to believe that with the service on the ocean equal to the more southern services, and with the service across the continent such as Canada now affords and as she will be able to afford for all years to come, and with the advantages of the route upon the Pacific Ocean, there is a very strong combination of favoring circumstances which go to point out the ultimate success of this route, established upon fair and equal conditions as to travel by ocean, over the more southern routes. I may state that, by a comparison of distances, I find that viâ the United States from Liverpool to New Zealand, the distance is 11,993 miles; viâ the Canadian Pacific Railway, the distance is 11,928 miles; and viâ Halifax the distance is 12,252 miles. The distance in mileage is greater viâ Halifax; but that is offset by the fact that a larger proportion of that mileage is by land, where, of course, the speed can be doubled, which, taken into consideration, still gives the advantage to the route viâ Halifax. From Liverpool to Australia is 12,780 miles by the United States route. From England to the same country by Quebec, it is 12,236 miles—a large difference, as you will see, in favor of the Quebec route—and by way of Halifax the distance is 12,560 miles, which is also considerably in favor of the Canadian route. Of course, when we come to consider China and Japan, we have the shortest Atlantic passage, we have the shortest passage across this continent, and we have the shortest Pacific Ocean route by from 200 to 400 miles, consequent upon whether the more northern or more southern route is adopted. As to the communication between British Columbia and China and Japan, for about two years past the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has had its steamers making monthly trips upon that route, and they have developed a very fair trade. They have shown the advantages of that communication to such an extent that they have practically concluded a contract with the British Government for carrying the mails through this country by that route to China and Japan. We need, however, a faster service than that which is supplied by the temporary vessels they have put on, and, with the amount which the British Government will pay and which we hope to supplement, a better and faster service will without doubt be obtained. With reference to the trade advantages which will arise from a steady, regular, and rapid mode of communication between this country and China and Japan, it is not necessary for me to occupy the time of the House. That is being practically demonstrated, and has been practically demonstrated for two years past. Our own manufacturers and merchants and business men are alive to the advantages which will accrue from that direct communication, and are taking advantage of it. What is practically demonstrated is better than any theory which might be advanced. With reference to the trade with Australia, that is something which is more in the future, having had no practical demonstration by this route so far as a direct steamship line of communication is concerned. However, by an examination of the trade which is carried on between San Francisco and other United States ports and Australia and New Zealand, we may gather a general idea of the drift of that trade. I find that, in the last fiscal year, 1887-88, the exports of the United States to Australia amounted to $9,543,474. That was a very respectable trade, and it might be of interest to the House to learn the chief items of that trade, as showing the kind of articles in which the bulk of this trade consists, and giving an indication as to whether or not they are of such a kind as could be supplied by Canada, and that in that way the commerce of Canada would be developed by our having regular means of communication. In that year, there were exported from the United States to Australia, agricultural implements, $299,490; books, $107,795; breadstuffs, other than wheat and flour, $50,500; a certain quantity of wheat and flour, about $120,000; carriages and cars, horse and railway, $358,692; chemicals and patent medicines, $334,837; clocks and watches, $127,296; cotton goods, $44,612; canned salmon, $327,180; other dried and pickled fish, a smaller amount; hardware, locks, keys, &c., $231,626; machinery not elsewhere specified, $391,004; carpenters' tools, $317,964; sewing machines, $124,626; other iron goods, $268,366; leather and leather goods, $256,006; oils of different kinds, $650,128; paper and stationery, $137,003; canned and salted meats, $22,594; tobacco, cigars and cigarettes, $1,428,762; wood, sawed, manufactured and so on, $1,440,696. These are nearly all articles which I think the Canadian trade could well take up, and, by means of direct communication with those countries, we might have a large and profitable trade carried on with Australia. Australia is situated naturally and geographically in such a position that it probably will be for all time a constant and increasing customer for certain classes of goods. It is probable that for manufactured goods of nearly all kinds Australia will have to depend largely on other countries where manufactures have been established, and will have to trade with them in exchange for raw products and the precious metals, and things of that kind. So much for the indications of probable trade between this country and Australia, as shown by the items I have read as to the trade which now takes place between the United States and Australia. I do not know that it is necessary for me to take up the time of the House to any greater extent with reference to these resolutions. As regards the amount of money which is asked, suppose the subsidies are granted and the steamship lines are established, and run to their maximum capacity, that is, fortnightly instead of monthly on the Pacific ocean, the total amount for which we would be liable would be £150,000 per annum, or we will say $750,000 in round numbers; but we must recollect that there is, to a certain extent, a set-off to this. We already pay for a service which we do not think so efficient as that which we shall have, $126,533 per year. We have been trying, somewhat spasmodically it is true, to establish a communication between this country and France, and we have been paying and are paying now $50,000 a year to a steamship company for making that communication. By an agreement between the company and the Government, that contract, which was to have run for a number of years, will be voided on the 1st July coming, and it is proposed to save that amount of $50,000 a year and to provide in this general fast line that they should make connection with a French port, and thus accomplish the object we have in view. We have also, until this year, been paying $30,000 per annum for a service to continental ports, such as Antwerp and Hamburg. That has been discontinued, and the continental traffic will be able to make quick and close connections with the fast line, and thereby we will have a speedier means of communication with the continental ports outside of France, as well as with France, as I have stated, than we could by the slower lines of steamships which we have been subsidising to these ports.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It is not contemplated, then, that the fast line shall go to a French port, but only make connections?

Mr. FOSTER. It makes a connection with a French port, and that communication it is proposed to make direct. I spoke a short time ago of the diversion of mail matter by the United States route. For that, of course, we have to pay, and the United Kingdom has to pay, and the amount that is paid does not go into our coffers, but goes into the Treasury of the United States. Now, that diversion of mail matter, of which I speak, costs to Canada and the United Kingdom $22,077 and $46,602 respectively, or the amount of $68,679. I think it is a moderate calculation to say that if we put on a service equal in every respect to the service of New York, we may count at least upon a diversion of 50 per cent. of that matter, so we will gain $34,338 by that diversion. An increased rateage is also paid by the British Government to the fast steamers plying to the port of New York. If the service here has the same speed and equipment, that increased rateage will, I think, without doubt, be paid to our fast steamers, and a calculation of what it would bring in comes to about $10,000 a year. So that the saving in the service, that we would otherwise carry on, or that we are now carrying on, the diversion of mail matter and the increased rateage for letters and newspapers, would amount to the round sum of about $250,000, which we may put as an offset to the $750,000 which the new and improved service will cost us if they are run at their maximum. That will be a charge, over and above what we lately have had, of a half million dollars per year; and to get these lines of communication at a cost not exceeding that, seems to be within the reasonable power of Canada, and to be a course which it is incumbent upon the Government to take in the best interests and the best development of this country. I am sure that when Canada has these three services established, and these lines of steamships running, we may all of us point with pride to our equipment in the way of trade facilities. With a railroad extension of over 12,000 miles spanning the continent, and running into all sections of our country, with a fast and popular line of communication on the Atlantic, with lines of communication of a superior kind stretching away from British Columbia to China, and Japan, and Australia, and with lines of communication which we hope to establish and for the establishment of which we have put an amount in the Estimates, stretching down to the tropical countries to the south of us, to the West Indies and South America,—I think when these things are accomplished and these great lines of communication are in active operation, we will have a commercial outfit and channels of trade and of travel which will be surpassed by very few countries in the world, and which will be a most essential factor in the development of this country, and of which this country may well be proud. I move that you now leave the Chair.

Mr. LAURIER. Everybody who has listened to the hon. gentleman and who has read the motion before the House, can agree with him that the subject brought to our attention is one of extreme importance. When the Government asks the House to vote such a large amount of money for mail subsidies alone, no one will deny the importance of the question involved. Therefore it is all the more necessary that the House should be in possession of the information which twice already I have asked the hon. gentleman to lay on the Table, along with all the information which the Government has in its possession regarding the negotiations which have been entered into with the different countries, some of which have already been completed, as I understand, and which were of material importance to the House in order to enable us to come to a proper decision. The hon. gentleman has not denied the importance of the demand which I made already upon two occasions, because this very day, in the preface of his remarks, in which he was very profuse as to his anticipations from the carrying out of the policy which he has presented to the House—in that preface he stated that he would give to the House all the information which the Government had in their possession upon this subject. Well, Sir, I must say to the hon. gentleman that I think he has not at all redeemed the promise which he made. He has been very chary, indeed, as I shall show presently, in imparting to the House all the information which, in my estimation, is indispensable for a proper discussion of this question. There are three propositions before the House. As to this service between this continent and Australia, I have no further remarks to make concerning the correspondence, because the Prime Minister stated yesterday that there was no correspondence, that the measure was a tentative one, and would be supplemented by further correspondence with the colonies which are asked to respond to the offer which is now made. If there is no correspondence on that subject, I have nothing more to say. But in regard to the Pacific steamship service between this continent and Japan, the hon. gentleman has told us to-day that the arrangements are completed, that the contracts are made, and that they only await the signatures of the different parties with whom the Government are negotiating. Well, Mr. Speaker, if all the papers are ready and only lack the signatures, if the contract is complete by itself, and if the Government is now in such a position that they cannot go back from their word, and that the country is engaged with these parties, what reason can they invoke why these papers should not be laid before the House? Certainly no one will deny the principle that whenever the Government ask for public money from the taxpayers of this country, the taxpayers have a right to be placed in possession of the fullest information as to the reason why they should grant these sums. I can see no reason, therefore, after the admission which has been made by the hon. gentleman, that the arrangements are all completed, why these completed arrangements should not be revealed to the House. Referring to the other subsidy, for the Atlantic service, which is by far the most important service, the hon. gentleman has told us that the Government has asked for tenders. They have asked for alternative tenders for a service of 15, 16, 17 and 18 knots. They say they have received, practically, three tenders, although one has been discarded because it has not been prosecuted, the company which made the offer not organising. The other two tenders have been made, one by the Messrs. Allan and the other by the Messrs. Anderson. The first was for a service which the hon. gentleman stated to be at about 18 knots, and the amount was £104,000 a year.

Mr. FOSTER. 17 knots.

Mr. LAURIER. Then the other tender of that Messrs. Anderson, was for a service, if I understood rightly, at something like 20 knots, for the same price, £104,000 a year. The hon. gentleman stated also that those tenders had not been found satisfactory; but he did not tell the House the reason why they were not satisfactory. The hon. gentleman made the bare statement that the tenders were not found to be satisfactory, and he said that new negotiations were entered upon. And because the hon. gentleman did not find the tenders in answer to the demand he made to be satisfactory, new negotiations have been entered upon, and he now asks power from the House to complete those negotiations, without giving to the House the tenders which he thought should be rejected. Well, the Government are in the hands of the House and in the judgment of the House, so far as that matter goes. I have not at this moment to pronounce whether they were wise or unwise, whether they were right or wrong in rejecting those tenders which, they say, they did not find to be satisfactory, or whether it was wise or unwise to enter into new negotiations, because the House is not in possession of all the information which it should receive on that head. But the hon. gentleman will agree with me, and I hope the House at all events will agree with me, that when the Government are entering upon a new departure in the policy we have hitherto followed upon this subject, when they have asked for tenders abroad and have received tenders in answer to their demand, the House at least should be placed in possession, so far as possible, of those facts and should ascertain how far the action of the Government is judicious and ought to be supported in that behalf. New negotiations, as the hon. gentleman has said, have been entered upon, but for reasons of his own the hon. gentleman said they were not bound in the public interest to make these particulars public. Why? What reason can be given why it was in the public interest that these negotiations should not be given to the public. The hon. gentleman simply says: We asked for tenders, we did not find them satisfactory, and that is all the information the House shall have. The hon. gentleman further says that after having found these tenders not satisfactory, he set them aside and entered into negotiations, I presume, with the same parties, and if we are to believe the public press, one of those tenderers, Messrs. Anderson, have been invited to enter into these negotiations. Having said that much without giving any reasons, the hon. gentleman says: This is all the information to which the House is entitled. I must protest against the introduction of such a principle, the introduction—no, it is not the introduction—but the systematic carrying out of such a principle, because this is not the first, or the second, or the third time the Government have resorted to the same policy of refusing information to the House while asking the House to vote money, simply alleging that it is not in the public interest that they should afford it. Now, I must protest against this system; it is not in accordance with the spirit of our institutions; it is not in accordance with the proper administration of public affairs; and, as I said a few moments ago, as to the first resolution I have no further comment to offer, but when we come to the second resolution and the third resolution, I shall move that it is not expedient to enter into their consideration until the House has received that information to which it is entitled.

Motion agreed to.

House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to make an amendment to the first resolution in the line of my remarks when introducing these resolutions. I desire to propose that it be altered in this way: The resolution as it reads gives power to the Government to make a grant of £25,000 for assisting the establishment of a fortnightly steamship service between British Columbia and Australia and New Zealand. It may not be possible to get a fortnightly service. The present service by San Francisco is monthly, and I wish to have inserted a clause which will give the Government power to pay a certain proportion of that subsidy, whatever may be decided by the Government in Council, for the establishment of a monthly service, provided the fortnightly service is not established. I, therefore, move that the following words be inserted after "New Zealand":—

Or such proportion thereof as may be decided on by the Governor in Council to assist in establishing a monthly service between the same countries.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When the First Minister was discussing this matter he mentioned incidentally that a great deal of interest was felt in the undertaking by the various colonies. The Minister of Finance has not given us, I think, that information to which we are entitled and which my hon. friend asked on other points, but I suppose he can give us some idea as to what the Australian colonies are likely to contribute. He cannot, of course, state a precise sum, but I should doubt whether, over such an extended voyage as this, the sum we propose to give would be sufficient, unaided, to keep up even a monthly service. It might or it might not be sufficient. The distance is very great; and, by-the-bye, does the hon. gentleman propose to stop at any of the Pacific Islands en route? Is that part of the scheme?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the hon. gentleman rather misunderstood my remarks. I said I had not personally had communication with gentlemen of standing in the different colonies; but I mentioned that the Canadian High Commissioner, in his daily communication with the Agents General of the different colonies, had had official communication with some of them on this subject, and I daresay, unofficial and private correspondence about the importance of encouraging the undertaking.

Mr. LAURIER. Unofficial, you say.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Unofficial. We are all anxious to draw the colonies together. There were conversations, and no doubt correspondence took place. I have myself had private letters from gentlemen, not to any great extent, all expressing the same desire and all being in the same direction, that of drawing all the colonies nearer together and developing trade between them. The impression conveyed to us by the High Commissioner was this: That it had been expressed in various ways, that Canada, being the largest colony as regards population, and the most important, as they said, the movement in favor of developing trade between the colonies should commence with us. As the hon. gentleman is probably aware, there has been a great desire expressed to have a cable from Canada to Australia, and with respect to that also they spoke of Canada taking the first step. This is tentative. The moment the representatives of the Australian colonies are informed that Canada has appropriated the sum mentioned in this resolution, they will at once address themselves to their different colonies in order to see whether they can make an arrangement for a fortnightly or monthly mail; and I expect and hope, although I have no positive information, but it is merely expectation, that Her Majesty's Government will also contribute towards the carriage of any mail matter which may be carried this way to or from Australia. That is precisely the position of affairs and negotiations between Australia and Canada. The hon. gentlemen asks whether there was any proposition as to stopping on the way. We have not got so far as that; it is one of the details to be worked out between the different colonies. I presume the steamers will stop somewhere on the way, perhaps for coaling purposes. Whether this line will stop at Honolulu or not has to be worked out in practice. I presume that if those San Francisco lines find it to their advantage to stop at the Sandwich Islands, a colonial line would have the same reason for making it a port of call.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman will see that he is asking the House for an almost unprecedented thing when he does not mention the term of years this contract is to run. Under such a resolution as we are now asked to pass, the First Minister might bind us for five, or ten, or fifteen or twenty years. For aught we know he may intend to give a fifty year subsidy to the steamship company which it is now proposed to establish. After our recent experience some words of limitation had better be inserted or we do not know where we may end up in these matters. I should think that, as this is a purely tentative matter, that a limited number of years should be fixed by the resolution.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I should think so, too. I think it would be well to put in, for "a period not exceeding ten years." I think the first contract with the Allans was for seven or ten years."

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think it was for five years. There is a good deal to be said for the desirability of promoting intercourse with Australasia, and with a great deal of what the Finance Minister has said I daresay we would agree. After all, this is an experiment and we are very much in the dark indeed as to whether trade and commerce can profitably be carried on with those countries. I do not think myself that our own policy, which tends largely to increase the cost of manufactured articles, is at all calculated to enable us to deal with distant countries; however, I shall not enter into that discussion at the present moment. I think that under the circumstances we ought to limit it to five years in the first instance, unless it were found absolutely impossible to get any company to undertake it for that period. I take it for granted that it is not proposed to go on with this scheme unless the Australian colonies, collectively or individually will do something on their part. I gather that from the hon. gentleman's remarks, and still more do I gather it from the smallness of the sum named, because I do not believe that an effective service will be given without some assistance on the part of the Australian colonies. I would like to see some words of limitation inserted in this resolution.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think it would do to limit it to five years. The vessels will have to be very expensive, and it is a large and extended service. I do not think we could get any trustworthy company building ships to enter into a contract for less than ten years. If the hon. gentleman would consent to the proposition "not exceeding ten years," I think that is a reasonable time.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It seems to me that the Government ought assume all the responsibility of entering into any negociation in this matter and that the hands of the House ought not to be tied. We ought not to be asked to take a leap in the dark. We do not know what the proposition is to be; we do not know whether it would be one that the House could accept in the public interest or not, and I do not think we should be called in advance to say that we will approve of any proposition which the Government may see proper to accept and of any negotiation which they may think proper to enter into. The practice has been heretofore for the Government to enter into a contract with the steamship companies and then to submit that contract to Parliament at its next Session, and that is the English practice also. I must confess that, so far as I am concerned, I fear that the Government are asking the Parliament to take a leap in the dark. It seems to me that in any other deliberative body in the world when the Executive come down to Parliament to submit a proposition of this sort, they would give some account of the commercial interests involved, and in what way the commerce of this country would be benefitted by entering into negotiations for a plan of that sort. I listened to the Minister of Finance, and he did not state what the products of these countries were with reference to which an exchange was likely to take place with Canada. Our view at the beginning of this Session, and I have not changed my mind since, was that it was in the interest of two countries lying contiguous to trade with each other, rather than that we should take means to secure a trade at great expense between the uttermost ends of the earth. The hon. gentleman's proposition is that we are going to build up an extensive trade between this country and Australia, countries which are as far apart as they well can be, and the hon. gentleman says that the best thing to do is to incur a very great expense for the purpose of entering into this trade. Well, Sir, if there was a possibility of building up a very large trade, I would like to know how far we must contribute out of the profits that are likely to accrue from that trade, for the purpose of establishing this steam communication. It would require a very large trade indeed to pay out of its profits the expenditure that is being incurred in this way. I look upon this as a proposition to aid the Canadian Pacific Railway, which was built in advance of the public interest. It is one of the necessary outcomes of the statesmanship of the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches. I do not say that this may not be in the public interest, that it may not be the choice between two evils, and that it way be the lesser evil that is likely to befall this country in consequence of the statesmanship of the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches. The fact, however, remains that here is a proposition to pledge this country to the extent of three quarters of a million per year, for an enterprise which no hon. gentleman on the Government side of the House has yet indicated can be in any way commercially profitable. I suppose that it is for commercial purposes that such a grant is needed, and not for the purposes of the security of the Empire with a view to future federation. Is it a measure of defence or of commerce?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I hope it is not a measure of offence to my hon. friend.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not know what it may be to the people. I do not know whether the hon. gentlemen opposite, if they were putting their hands in their own pockets, would be as lavish as they have been, when the opportunity offers, of putting their hands in the pockets of the people. Certainly they have shown a great deal of magnanimity and liberality in dealing with the public funds. I would like to hear from hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches some account of the trade that is likely to be developed as a result of these subsidies. I remember that, not many years ago, the Prime Minister, in justifying the large pecuniary advantages which were being given to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, assured us that by the year 1891, I think it was, we should receive back, over and above all expenses, something like $69,000,000. That prediction has not been realised, and is not likely to be. Of course the time is not up yet, and with the sort of premillenial view which the hon. gentleman takes on the subject of politics, the good time may be all just at the end of the period; but I do not know whether the hon. gentleman and his colleague the Minister of Finance have abstained from giving us any commercial predictions or any indication of the enormous advantages that the people of this country are to reap from this new enterprise, because of the failure in the other case or not; but, Sir, I do think this House would be greatly wanting in its duty to the public if it were to say—as it practically would say if it accepted this proposition without question: We are incapable of forming an opinion on the subject; it is true, the electors of this country have sent us here for the purpose of legislation, but we are not capable of legislating, and we have abdicated our functions and resigned our authority to the hon. gentlemen who sit on the Treasury benches. Well, Sir, I confess that this is paying a very great compliment to a sick man—to the hon. Minister of Finance, who was obliged to retire from the House so suddenly last evening because of his extreme illness. We are pleased to see the hon. gentleman in his place to-day.

Mr. FOSTER. Better to-day.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Yes, the hon. gentleman is better to-day; the circumstances have changed; this is a wholly different question from that which was brought up last night. This is a question which is not so offensive to the feelings of the hon. gentleman; there is much in it that is agreeable to him, because it enables him to tell us about his hopes of the future; there is a great deal in this question that is prospective, while the subject before the House last night was rather a retrospective one. I hope the hon. gentlemen, before they take any further step in this matter, will be prepared to give to the House some account of the trade which is likely to be developed by this measure, and afford to the hon. gentlemen who support the proposition an opportunity of justifying before the country the vote they are called upon to give; and time will show whether the grounds on which they proceeded were such as good sense and a careful consideration of the question would warrant.

The Committee rose, and it being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into Committee.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have listened with a good deal of interest to what the hon. Finance Minister had to say with regard to the subsidies to be granted, both to the fast line of steamers from Quebec to Liverpool, and to that from Vancouver to Australia. In giving a list of the articles which might compose the shipments from this continent to Australia, he mentioned a number that had been shipped from the United States to the Australian colonies within the last two years. Among those commodities I find that of farm products there were only $50,500 worth altogether. At the present time, when we are trying to extend our trade relations, I think it is highly desirable that the products of the soil should not be lost sight of. I admit the desirability of bringing closer together the colonies of Great Britain; but when we are contributing a very largely increased sum for that purpose, which is admitted by the Finance Minister to amount to $500,000 a year, I think some consideration should be given to that class of our people who are struggling with financial embarrassments, and whose annual resources have been seriously impaired by the policy inaugurated in 1879. By the proposition which he has made to the House, the Finance Minister evidently desires to secure extended markets for the surplus manufactures of this country. We do not wish for a moment, to deny the desirability of giving every encouragement to our manufacturing interests, when that can be done without increasing the burdens of the people We know very well that in some lines there has been over-production, and I daresay that is the reason why the Government have been driven to the action they are now taking. But, at the same time, we say, it is unjust and unfair to increase the burdens of the consumers and the laboring classes of this country, to the extent of $500,000 a year, for the benefit of one class. The opening up of trade with the Australian colonies is not going to be of any advantage to the farming community. The people of Australia produce about the same things as we do, and consequently our trade is not going to be of any great advantage to them, and the distance that intervenes here between the point of production and the point of shipment will add largely to the cost of transportation. So that, as far as the farming interest is concerned, there is nothing in the communication between Vancouver and Australia that will tend to improve that interest. In other respects this line may be a necessity, but I would suggest as a desirable change and one that would tend to benefit the condition of the farmers, that hon. gentlemen opposite should try to secure a permanent and fixed contract with one or two lines of steamers which would carry live cattle to the other side at a fair rate. In that case shippers will have a decided advantage which they do not enjoy at present, for it is well known that this year the freights ranged from 35s. to 55s. There being no fixed rate, whenever the markets in England improve, the steamship companies immediately raise the freights and in that way they pocket all the advantage. If an arrangement could be made by which a fixed maximum rate could be charged, that would be a step in the right direction. But here we are seeking outlets to the west and seeking closer and faster connection with the east, while we have south of us a market which if opened would be a decided advantage to the struggling classes of this country. But not one effort is made to obtain the admission of our products to that market free of toll, and we are now paying an enormous toll annually in order to obtain admission into it. Nearly a million dollars a year is paid by our farmers in the way of toll to get their barley into the United States, and a very large sum is paid on other products which cannot find a market elsewhere. Yet, while this condition of things exists, our Government are endeavoring to open up a market, not for the farmer, but for the manufacturers where their over-production can be disposed of. The Government are trying to open up connections with Australia and elsewhere in the interests of the manufacturers, while the Canadian farmers are driven to their wits' end to make both ends meet, and are moving to other portions of the continent in the hope of bettering their condition. The Government, while seeking to extend the markets of the manufacturers of this country, should make some effort to open up a better and more convenient market for the farming community than they enjoy at present, and relieve them, if possible, from this heavy toll to which they are subjected in order to obtain a market for their products right at their own door. I could not allow this resolution to pass without offering these few remarks. While I have no word of opposition to offer against the manufacturers and like to see them prosper, at the same time, when we consider the fact that the consumers of this country are now loaded down heavily in order to consume manufactured goods, the Government are forcing them to bear this additional burden in order to find for our manufacturers markets in distant lands where they may place their goods at increased prices, and add to the burdens which the National Policy already inflicts upon us. It is deplorable to think that while the people are heavily taxed not one move is made to relieve them, but everything is done to increase their burdens.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The proposal now before the Committee is one of rather novel character, and rather startling in its nature, when you come to look at the amount involved, extending over ten years, as contemplated by the Government. In view of such an important departure from the ordinary policy of the country, the Finance Minister should give to the House more definite and positive reasons than he has yet been able to assign for calling on us to pass this resolution. He should have informed us as to the nature of the trade it was intended to open up, as to the nature of the exports he expected to send to Australia as to the ports these steamers were intended to touch at, and what he expects they will bring back from Australia, as suitable to the commerce and wants of Canada. These are important points that the Committee should be placed in possession of before being called on to adopt the resolution now before it. Passing such a resolution as this merely on the general idea announced by the Minister of Finance, that there was something big looming up in the future, without his able to give any definite idea of what that big thing being was, is rather an unbusinesslike way to enter upon an important business undertaking. Taking this vote for Australian communication on its merits, I have not yet been able to gather from the observations of the leader of the Government, or of the Minister of Finance, any raison d'être for this vote. The leader of the Government told us there had been certain confidential unofficial communications between the Agents General and the High Commissioner, and that he had some unofficial letters from official gentlemen, all bearing upon the future relation of the colonies and the Empire generally. Well, if this is a move in the direction of Imperial federation, or any jingo sentiment of that kind, we may as well know it at the outset, and then we can estimate it at its true merits. If, on the other hand, it is a business proposition, based on reasonable grounds, the Minister of Finance is bound to lay them fairly before the House. He has not dealt even in probabilities, so far as I have been able to follow him. He could only talk of the great possibilities of this great trade that might, under certain circumstances and eventualities, spring up. We want to know what he expects to derive from this trade. We want to know what he expects to be able to export to Australia; we want to know what he expects to bring back from Australia—what business there is, and every particular of that kind. We want to know on what he bases his views as to the possibilities or probabilities of an export trade in Canadian manufactured goods. The hon. gentleman and his Government voted down a proposition looking to closer trade relations with the United States, on the ground that the American manufacturers could come in and kill our own manufacturers at their own doors. They contended that we required our present high tariff of 30 per cent., and in some cases 50 per cent., to keep English and American manufacturers out of our own market. In the name of common sense, I would ask the hon. gentleman how he expects we are going to compete with the American and English manufacturers in another market which they will enter on the same terms as ourselves.

Mr. MILLS. Make it a slaughter market.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I am afraid it would be a slaughter and not a market. I think the Finance Minister should have told us on what grounds he estimated that we were going to get any part of that trade, in a market where we shall have to compete, not only with England and the United States, but with other European countries as well. These are the real businesslike points which the House should, I think, be put in possession of before we are asked to vote this money. If it is merely on a sentimental basis, as indicated by the leader of the Government, in relation to the possibilities of uniting the colonies and the Empire, let us understand it, but if the Minister of Finance is expecting to derive any benefit to our manufactures or any trade in return, let us know that. I have not been able to understand anything of that kind from the hon. gentleman's speech, and I should be glad if he would give us all the information he can in regard to it, because otherwise the House will not be able to justify itself for passing its resolution.

Mr. McMILLAN. As a farmer representing the farming interest, I must say that if one-half the money which it is proposed to spend in subsidising steamers on certain lines, was spent with a view to obtain cheaper freights from Canada to the English market for cattle and sheep, it would prove, I believe, a greater benefit to the country than this expenditure. I shipped a lot of cattle to the English market last June at 30 shillings a head, or 35 shillings for space and insurance; but, on my last shipment in October, I had to pay 55 shillings per head or 60 shillings for space and insurance. If the Government is going to subsidise lines of steamers, I hold that the agricultural interest has the first claim upon the Government to do something on their behalf, and if something could be done of this kind, it would place us in a much better position, particularly when the people of the United States can send to the British markets and can get from 25 cents to 50 cents more per 100 lbs. live weight for cattle than we can. If the agricultural interest is going to succeed in this country, it could be very much assisted provided that only 5 shillings per head could be saved to the farmers on the amount they pay for space in these subsidised lines. I think the Government should consider this question. The farmers are the greatest taxpayers and producers in the country, and I do not see why our interests should not be taken into consideration. Instead of that, I find, on almost every occasion, instead of giving any encouragement to the farming community, the Government place impediments in our way. I have here a newspaper containing a statement which I am astonished to see, and I am sorry the Minister of Customs is not in his place to hear it. Charles James Fox states:

> "But now the farmers have a worse grievance. On April 1st I got notice of two bags of American fertiliser being at the London freight-house of the G. T. R. I sent up for it the next day, gave the man the bill showing I had paid $8 for it ($40 per ton). He is sent to the Custom House, but is sent back twelve miles with this message: 'A sample must be sent to Ottawa to be analysed before they can get at the amount of duty to be paid.' Wanting to use this fertiliser at once, I call myself at the Custom house, on April 8th, and all the satisfaction I got was that I must wait the pleasure of the Government's analyst."

I say that the large amount of $40 a ton placed on a fertiliser bore evidence on the face of it that no fraud was being attempted, and yet the Government has placed such conditions upon the importation of that article that we cannot get it in such a way as to assist us on our farms. This was evidently desired for a particular experiment, and no doubt the opportunity may have been lost. I hope the Government will see if something cannot be done to relieve the agricultural community of the large amounts we have to pay for freight in crossing the ocean, and also on the different lines of railway. Since I commenced to ship cattle, I have had freights from Seaforth to Montreal at 30s. per car, but last year I had to pay 50s. There is a combination amongst the cattle dealers, and, when they ship ten carloads, they get a rebate from the railway company, but the farmer who ships seven or eight carloads can not get any rebate. If the dealers shipped the ten carloads in one shipment, they might be entitled to a rebate, but they do not; they only ship in one or two carloads at a time as a farmer does, and I do not see why we should not have the opportunity of shipping at the same rates as they do. If we are to be successful in competing with the American farmers in the English market as far as beef cattle is concerned, we must not be put at a disadvantage by having to pay such very high rates on the railways and for freight across the ocean. I hope, therefore, that the Government, in granting subsidies to ocean steamship lines, will take that matter into consideration.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think my hon. friend (Mr. McMillan) will find later on, that the Government, in their wisdom, are going to take that into consideration. Under the third resolution, they are proposing to vote $500,000 a year for a fast line service, and to take away the $126,000 which now goes to the Allan and Dominion lines. My hon. friend will find that the subsidy given to these lines, which now operates in reducing rates of freight on my hon. friend's cattle, will disappear, and that he and other farmers will have to pay more, so that he will discover that his case is being considered by the Government in that way.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If, a few years ago, a proposition had been made to add nearly a million to the annual charges on this country, it would have received more attention than these propositions are receiving to-night, but we have been so accustomed of late years to deal with millions, that a matter of $125,000 a year appears to be nothing. I cannot assent to this proposition simply on the information which the Finance Minister has given to the House to-night. I think he should give us some information as to what he bases his opinion upon, and how he justifies this enormous outlay. He said that it was well known to everybody that there were special conditions which made Australia dependent on other countries for its supplies, and I had hoped that, when we got into Committee, he would show us what conditions there are which make Australia dependent on other countries, and especially on Canada. I do not intend to discuss this resolution now, but I hope that we may have some information given to us in Committee to enable us to discuss it on the second reading. From the silence of the hon gentleman, I fear that he intends to force this proposal through without any proper discussion. I do not think we have any right to sit here and vote half a million, or a quarter of a million, or an eighth of a million away at the mere demand of the Government. I do not think that, if hon. gentlemen were to go back to their constituents now and were asked to justify this vote of one eighth of a million, ten men in this House would be able to do it. For one, I insist that we shall have more information before we finally vote this money.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman tries to make this sum appear very large by bringing the word "million." He speaks of an eighth of a million. He might have said $125,000, but that does not sound so big. The hon. gentleman asks for more information to justify the statement that we will have an additional trade with Australia. I understand, though I was not present, that the Minister of Finance went into this matter at considerable length in order to show the different articles which Canada was calculated to supply to Australia, and we have the best means of judging whether his statement is true or not by looking at the trade which exists between San Francisco and Australasia. I take it that my hon. friend's statements were based upon the trade that has been successfully conducted by the United States, although a highly protected country; and the hon. gentleman, by the way, said that we, being a protected country, of course could not compete successfully in the Australian market with the United States. I think my hon, friend has shown that in our position, as well as, perhaps, from the fact that, from a free trade point of view, our tariff is not quite so large as that of the United States, the duties are not quite so high.

Som hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am looking at it from your point of view. My hon. friend has shown other reasons—the shortness of the distance between Liverpool and Australia, which will enable us to compete, at all events, on fair terms.

Mr. GILLMOR. Are the steamers subsidised that carry those articles from the United States to Australia?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Australian Government subsidises a line from San Francisco. The United States may do so, for all I know, but I am aware that generally they have hitherto opposed subsidising those lines since the unfortunate experiment of the Collins Line. My hon. friend has quoted the various articles that are shipped from San Francisco. We all know that Canada can produce those articles just as well as the United States and supply them just as cheaply. I may say that last year I got a very valuable paper, I do not know whether it was a tariff paper or not, from Mr. Van Horne, showing that fully 90 per cent of the articles shipped from San Francisco could be supplied on equal terms by and from Canada, and I think that information is reliable. I gathered from the remarks of the leader of the Opposition that he did not object, he could not object, the country would not allow him to object, the country would not allow us to object to any arrangement of this kind by which, at the moderate sum of one-eighth of a million, if the other colonies will join us and be as liberal in their aid, we will have a first-rate steamship line, greatly to the development of the steam industry, greatly to the development of Canadian manufactures, and showing that notwithstanding our protective tariff, Canada can compete with the United States, or with Germany, also a protective country, or with France, also a protective country, in and for the trade of our sister colonies.

Mr. LAURIER. The hon. gentleman has not comprehended the position I took. There are three propositions before the House. With regard to two of these, at least, as to the line between the continent and China and Japan, the Government are in possession of information, contracts, specifications, and so on; as to the other, they are also in possession of information, and I ask that this should be laid upon the Table of the House. In respect to the proposition now before the House, the hon. gentleman stated that there was no information, therefore I did not ask for any. I want to have from the Government, in respect to the other lines, all the information they can supply to us. What I complain of at this stage, is that the Government are not laying before the House all the information which we have a right to possess, or in order to a better understanding of the terms made with these lines.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The right hon. gentleman says he has come to a conclusion largely from a memorandum of Mr. Van Horne.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not say that.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman urged it as one of his strong arguments why the House should assent to the proposition, that he has a memorandum from the President of the Canadian Pacific Railway pointing out that we can supply 90 per cent. of the goods that are shipped from San Francisco to Australia. That memorandum may be correct or not. It may be a statement upon which we can arrive at a conclusion, or it may not. I want to test it, I want to see it, I think the House should be put in possession of it before they are called upon to vote. We are to vote in the dark. Let us see Mr. Van Horne's statemant that we may analyse it. What percentage of the exports of Canada do we send at present to Australia? Not one half of one per cent. of our total exports. How does the hon. gentleman propose to increase it? With respect to what articles has he information that leads him to believe that we can increase our trade with Australian colonies? I understand there is a line of steamships between British Columbia and San Francisco, connecting with a line running to Australia; therefore, it is very easy, if the market will pay and the price will justify manufacturers in sending the goods now, to make some calculation as to the future. The fact that you subsidise a steamship will not put any more money into the pockets of the manufacturers who send their goods there. They have facilities almost equal now, and if they do not send now, why will they send after we pay out this eighth of a million? I want to see Mr. Van Horne's statement, and all other statements of which the Government are in possession, which justify them in asking this House to vote $125,000 a year. I do not know where this new expenditure is going to end. We were told a short time ago that we were going to enter upon an era of retrenchment and economy; it appears to me that we are going about it in a curious way.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I would like to ask the Minister where he expects these articles to come from that we are going to send to Australia? Does he expect them to come from Ontario and Quebec, or does he expect them to come exclusively from British Columbia?

Mr. FOSTER. It is wonderful what an amount of information my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies) finds the lack of just now, what a vast amount he wants to know all at once. I suppose I could not insult my hon. friend's intelligence more than to tell him that he knew nothing about the trade of this country, that he knew nothing about the trade of the United States, that he knew nothing about the trade, or the products, or the requirements of the Australian colonies. My hon. friend knows about these, and he knows that he knows, and it would not be any information to him for me to specify the articles entering into the trade of the Australian colonies with Great Britian, with Germany, with the United States, or with other countries. My hon. friend has the trade returns of all these countries at his hand, he has also general information of what are the products and the requirements of these different countries. I do not propose to take up the time of the House by going into these markets at this late period of the Session. I took what was practically the best guide that could be taken—I took the trade of the United States, with a higher protective tariff than our own, and, therefore, from my hon. friend's point of view, laboring under greater disadvantages than Canada in conducting trade. Taking up that trade, I analysed it, and read a list of the larger items of exports from the United States to Australia. I did not read all the articles but the larger items. My hon. friend has intelligence enough to know whether these are articles that are manufactured in Canada, and in which Canada can compete with the United States in the Australian colonies. There is an Australian trade already. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) asks as to where we suppose these products will come from, whether from the older parts of Canada or from British Columbia entirely. That will entirely depend, I suppose, upon the nature of the articles and the different manufactures which are exported. To-day, I believe, some of our manufacturers have a field which they have exploited in the Australian colonies for their products, and where within two or three years they have built up a trade, under very disadvantageous circumstances, to the extent of about one third of a million dollars worth of goods in some lines of goods alone. One of these is the Massey Co, of Toronto, who have exported agricultural implements.

Mr. DAVIES (P E I.) The total exports are not half-a-million.

Mr. FOSTER. You will find exactly what they are by the Blue-books.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). $446,000 in value.

Mr. FOSTER. I have Mr. Massey's statement that he has worked up a trade in agricultural implements in that colony amounting to about $300,000, and he has done that under very disadvantageous circumstances.

Mr. LAURIER. The answer of the hon. gentleman is quite characteristic. The Government have introduced these important resolutions on the very last day of the Session, and when asked to give explanations, they say they cannot be expected, at this late period of the Session, to give explanations.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is the reason why I asked the hon. gentleman with respect to the portions of the Dominion from which he expected goods to be exported. The trade from Great Britain to Australia is conducted entirely by sea. The trade between San Francisco and Australia likewise is conducted by sea. There is next to no transhipment in either case. Any trade from the interior of Canada must be shipped over 2,500 miles of railway, which is an exceedingly serious consideration in the first place, and then there is the sea voyage. It may be that trade might be conducted in a great many articles profitably where you are close to the point of transhipment and there is no long railway journey to provide for; while, on the other hand, it might be very difficult to export goods from such points as Montreal, Ottawa and Toronto, where the goods have to pass over 2,500 or 2,700 miles of railway and then be transhipped and carried by sea. That was the reason I desired to know whether, in proposing this resolution to the Committee, the Finance Minister based his expectation on a British Columbia trade pure and simple, or to a considerable extent on a trade from old Canada. The point is one which requires more consideration than the hon. gentleman has given to it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. One would suppose from what the hon. gentleman stated that all the goods shipped from San Francisco were manufactured there, and that, therefore, there was only the water-borne carriage from San Francisco to that point. They, however, send a large supply of agricultural implements, for instance, from San Francisco; but they are not made there. They also send manufactures, cottons, woollens and mixed goods, which certainly are not manufactured there. All these goods have to pay as long a railway carriage as our people at Montreal, Almonte or Hamilton are obliged to pay, or is paid by the Massey Company of Toronto who are already doing an enormous trade, and are competing successfully with American agricultural implement manufacturers. These have all to pay the railway carriage, but American goods sent vid San Francisco have to do the same thing.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I utterly protest against the statement of the Finance Minister that, because he chooses to bring down an important proposition, involving the expenditure of a very large sum of public money, at a very late period of the Session, this House is bound perforce to carry it without receiving proper information. It is our duty to dissect, and discuss, and ascertain the basis of the Government's propositions, no matter how late they may be brought down. I have noticed during a good many years, that the rule is, the worse the proposition the later it is brought down; and hon. gentlemen opposite have been enabled, from a desire of members to return home after being here two or three months, to shuffle through propositions that would not bear examination if they had come down earlier. Let me examine the statement of the Minister of Finance. He told the House that he had come to the conclusion to recommend this vote on one fact, that one of the largest manufacturers exports of his manufactures alone to Australia some $300,000 or $400,000 worth. That is an important fact; but there is an important question connected with it, namely, Is it true? Do we export $300,000 or $400,000 of agricultural implements to Australia? If I take the hon. gentleman's own Blue-book, I find the total exports of manufactures of all kinds, from Canada to Australia, is of the value, not of $300,000 or $400,000, but of a paltry $132,000, including every kind and description. If we turn to agricultural implements, of which the Finance Minister says the Massey Co. export $300,000 or $400,000 in value to Australia, what do we find? We find a paltry $39,000 is exported altogether. If the Massey Co. export between $300,000 or $400,000 worth, the hon. gentleman's Blue-book is not worth the paper on which it is written and is misleading. One of two things must be true, either that the hon. gentleman came to the conclusion on false data, or that his Blue-book is entirely wrong. If he came to the conclusion that the vote was justifiable because such a trade had been established, and that it was capable of large development by placing on the route, a line of steamers, and having found that he was all wrong in his data, he should withdraw the vote. I should like to have a similar opportunity to test Mr. Van Horne's statement. Hon. gentlemen opposite should not vote blindly enormous sums of money simply because the Government ask them to do so. Hon. gentlemen have no information, and they cannot justify their vote, and I say it will be a shame and a disgrace if this vote were allowed to pass through the Committee without more information being given with regard to it.

Mr. McDONALD (Huron). I desire to place certain figures before the House with respect to our trade with Australia, especially when we are asked to vote a large sum of money for opening up a large trade relation with the Australian Colonies. The Finance Minister made a statement which shows that he is not well posted in the figures he has been using. He stated that the export trade of one manufacturing firm in Toronto, the Massey Manufacturing Company, was over $300,000 a year to Australia; but I find that the whole trade from Canada to Australia last year, 1888, was only $446,019. The whole of Ontario exported to Australia in 1888 only $132,932. If one manufacturer exported from Toronto agricultural implements to the value of $300,000, it does not appear as if the figures have been correctly given. If we look at the Trade and Navigation Returns, we find that, during the last ten years, our trade with Australia has increased very little, showing that it is almost impossible to establish trade with a country so far distant. It is impossible for the people of this country to compete on equal terms in a neutral market, such as Australia is, with other countries which have closer connections with it. We are told by hon. gentlemen opposite that we cannot compete with the American manufacturers. How can we then after sending our goods several thousands of miles by land and then on a sea voyage, compete in a neutral market with American goods if we cannot compete with them on Canadian soil? In 1878 our exports to Australia were of the value of $370,723, and after ten years of Australian trade we find it has only increased by $75,296. Again, we find that nearly all the seaports represents manufactured goods sent from Canada. Out of the value of $132,932 exported from Ontario, there was a value of $131,723 represented by manufactured articles. So that if this $125,000 a year was expended, the farmers of the country have to contribute largely in that expenditure and it is an impossibility to open up in Australia a market for anything that they produce. So far as I can learn from the Trade and Navigation Returns not a single product of the Canadian farmers goes to Australia, and it is an unjustice to them to place upon their shoulders an additional burthen for the purpose of assisting and protecting the manufacturers of this country. Everyone knows that the farmers are already highly taxed for the purpose of protecting the manufacturing industries of this country, and they should not be taxed any further. The Province of Quebec has very little interest in the Australia trade, because that Province only exported goods to the value of $11,304 to Australia, and New Brunswick only exported $1,090 worth. British Columbia is the only Province interested in this trade. She exported to Australia, in 1888, $300,690, of fish $130,687, and of the products of the forest $169,836. However, of the agricultural products of British Columbia, only $220 worth were sent to Australia. We are also asked to grant a subsidy to a line of steamers between China and Japan and we were told by the Minister of Finance in his Budget Speech that, through the efforts of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the steamships which they put on this route, a large trade had been opened up with those countries. When we look at the returns of this trade we are astonished that the Minister of Finance made such a statement. The hon. gentleman was very thankful on that occasion and expressed his thanks to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the great railway they have built, and for the steamers they have placed on that line and he also thanked the energy and enterprise of the Canadian people for assisting these enterprises. We find that not a single article goes to China from the Province of Ontario, and that from that Province only $8,571 worth went to Japan. That is our whole trade in Ontario with those two countries to which it is proposed to subsidise a line of steamers at a very great expense. Quebec does not send a single dollar's worth to China and Japan, and neither does New Brunswick, nor Nova Scotia. Manitoba sends $100 worth only, and British Columbia sends $75,911 worth to China, and only $47,481 to Japan. I think it is too much to ask this country to subsidise a line of steamers to these countries at an expense nearly as large as the entire trade to these countries amounts to. In 1878 we had very few facilities for trade between China and Japan but at the present time we have the Canadian Pacific Railway across the continent and the line of steamers from Vancouver, and notwithstanding these facilities there has only been an increase of about $30,000 in our trade with these countries during the last ten years. I believe that these far distant countries do not require many articles which we produce, and we know that it is very difficult to establish a trade with a foreign country where we have to compete with the products and manufactures of other countries in neutral markets. It is my firm conviction that instead of trying to find markets in foreign countries, at the other end of the world, it would be much better, in the interests of Canada, to seek to open up trade with the markets to the south of us, which is just at our own doors. We can reach that market in a few hours, and we should avail ourselves of it, instead of opening up markets in countries thousands of miles away, and at an enormous expense. I think if the Government made a right-about-face in their policy, and tried to find a market in the United States, instead of seeking for one in Australia, it would be more in the interests of Canada, and easier and cheaper to accomplish. I believe that it is not right to impose such a burthen as this on the people of this country, when better and more lucrative markets can be found at our own doors.

Mr. PLATT. It is but natural that the members of this House should ask for all the information they can obtain when they are called on to give a vote for the very large expenditure of money which is now proposed. Thus far in the debate we have heard from the Government no reasons to sustain their proposition and nothing has been offered in support of it except their conjecture as to the results which may follow. The Minister of Finance says that he has a statement in favor of this policy from the Massey manufacturing firm. If he has that statement in his possession it would be of some interest to the House, but the statement he has made regarding that firm has been contradicted by those who ought to know. In seeking for information on this point I came across the remarks made by a prominent public man in this country, a man of high commercial standing in Canada and a leading spirit of the Toronto Board of Trade. Speaking on this subject not long ago, that gentleman made use of the following remarks in regard to the firm which the Minister of Finance has mentioned:

"The other case is that of the Massey Manufacturing Company, a company which has rare facilities for furnishing agricultural implements, of which they are such large producers.

"What has been their experience? The first venture of this large firm was the consignment of a shipment to a Government agent. The Government agent put the shipment, with all the knowledge of the facts and of the parties, into the hands of local dealers, and the expenses and charges were so excessive as literally to eat the shipment up.

"They then determined to send their own agent, who certainly found a market for their goods, but found also some twelve or fourteen American concerns competing for the trade, and this firm states in its application to the Government that they find themselves so handicapped in the excessive duty which many of the articles used in the manufacture of their goods have to pay that, in view of the great distance, the cost of postage, freight and other matters, unless these duties can be removed, or a rebate equivalent to such allowance made upon their exports, they will be compelled to withdraw from the trade."

That is a statement from a gentleman who has every opportunity of knowing what the Massey firm are doing in this direction. Then in regard to another article of manufacture regarding which an experiment has been made, this gentleman goes on to say:

"In the case of furniture—the large and respectable concern, the Bowmanville Manufacturing Co.—at the invitation of the Government, sent out a shipment to the Melbourne Exhibition. The freight was paid by the Government, the local charges defrayed by the Commissioners so excellent was the work that first prizes were obtained. Under these circumstances the goods were sold and the sales realised cost price invited to send out regular consignments of goods to their market, the company expressed their readiness to do so on being advised as to the class of goods most suitable and being most likely to secure speedy sales.

"On the information being furnished, the goods were sent. The prices realised were ruinous, and on receiving returns at the end of two years or thereabout, the company withdrew from the market."

With regard to the supposed advantages that would accrue to us from having more extensive communication with Australia and the likelihood of a large trade with that country, the same gentleman says:

"In fact, the cause which led to the tardiness of the discovery of Australia that is its remoteness from the other portions of the globe must necessarily act as a bar between extended commercial relations with the Australias and Canada.

"Nature has been most profuse in the bestowment of her gifts to that country; and, as though it were in view of her being so far removed from the family of nations, has endowed her so richly that she has within herself everything that a nation requires to make it great, prosperous and independent.

"The superabundance of her gold has helped to change the value of commodities throughout the civilised world.

"Her coal and iron make her independent, so far as manufacturing is concerned, of any nation on earth. Her climate is so suited for wool-growing that if but the tenth part of her three million of square miles were but peopled, and a reasonable proportion devoted to sheep-raising, she could grow wool enough to supply the wants of the world; while the wheat fields of Southern Australia are sufficient to give food to the continent.

"Indeed, it may be affirmed that she wants nothing. Her manufactures, in some departments, have reached a perfection far, far in advance of anything we have attained in Canada. I refer especially to the manufacture of fine woollens broad and narrow, and also to the finest rugs, wraps and blankets. In these goods by far the finest exhibit at the Collindsries, equalling in perfection of coloring and excellence of finish anything which could be produced in any part of the world, were those from the woollen mills of Dunedin, in New Zealand. Almost everything which we have to offer she possesses, so that she looks upon us as lier rival in nearly all which constitutes her wealth."

I think this information neutralises all the information of a contrary character which we have had from the other side of the House; and until something more is given to support the conjecture of the hon. Minister of Finance, I do not think we will be justified in making the expenditure.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant.) The point which I wish to allude to is touched upon in the report which has just been read. This endeavor to cultivate a foreign trade for manufactures by a direct gift to a line of steamships, amounting to one-fourth of our total exports, to the Australasian colonies is neutralised by the action of the Government in another direction. I have protested against that action time and again, until, becoming tired of the effort, I have ceased in the last few years to say anything about it. It was pointed out to the Government when they introduced their tariff in 1879 that they were taking steps to destroy the foreign trade which we were cultivating, and which was prospering wonderfully. At the Philadelphia Exhibition of 1876, the Canadian manufactures made a very creditable exhibit. That exhibit drew the attention of the world to what we were producing, and as a result, a very large trade, comparatively, for a new trade, sprang up. But two years afterwards the Government introduced their high tariff and duties were placed on the raw material of the manufacturer, enhancing the cost of the article they produced. If the Minister of the Finance looks at the trade returns, he will find that there has been a diminution in our exports to those countries. We were told at that time by the Finance Minister that our fears were groundless, because, he said, we have devised a system of giving our manufacturers a drawback for the duties paid by them on their raw material. That would have succeeded very well if it had been carried out; but what has been the fact? From that day to this, the Government have so administered the affairs of this country that it has been impossible for our manufacturers to get the drawback. Many of the most enterprising manufacturers in the country, at great trouble and expense to themselves, had established markets in foreign countries. A firm in my own town, I dare say, has, more than any other firm in the country, made the name of Canada better known as a manufacturing country, but if you question that firm to-day, you will find that they are utterly discouraged, and are about to cease their efforts in establishing foreign markets, after spending thousands, nay tens of thousands, of dollars for that purpose. They have placed their goods in South America, in Australia, and in Europe; but they found when they went there that they had to compete against the manufactures of both the United States and Great Britain, against whom they would have been able to hold their own if they were in as favorable a position as those manufacturers in regard to their raw material. But when you tax their raw material 15, 20, 25 or 30 per cent., and then ask them to go into a foreign market and sell their goods in competition with those of other manufacturers who are not compelled to pay these duties on their raw materials, you can see what a disadvantage they labor under. If the Minister of Finance, instead of proposing to take the public funds of the country to subsidise a line of steamers to the amount of one-fourth of the entire value of our exports at the present time, would give the manufacturers fair play, not hamper them, not load them with restrictions, but enable them to get their raw material on as favorable terms as the manufacturers of other countries, they are able and ready and willing to hold their own in the markets of the world. But I charge upon the Government that from the introduction of their policy down to the present time, instead of their benefitting the manufacturers, they have hampered them, and they intend to continue their restrictions. I have heard no proposition to so administer their drawback that the manufacturers can take advantage of it; but they propose an expenditure for the aid of steamship lines which I believe will be futile as long as they administer their tariff system as they are doing. Our manufacturers ask no favors in the establishment of foreign trade; there is enterprise enough among them to open up markets for themselves; but if you persist in a system which makes their raw material cost them from 20 to 25 per cent. more than the raw material of manufacturers in other countries, notwithstanding all the subsidies you give, they will not be able to compete. I have brought these things before the House time and again, but I have ceased to do so in the last few years, because my efforts have been futile. These are facts which I know of my own knowledge; I know them also from the experience of the firm in my own town which has done so much to establish a foreign trade which has been gradually taken from them by this Government; for, from the first inception of the National Policy down to the present time, the course of the Government has been not to ease the duties, but to augment them, until finally they have become so great that this firm has not been able to compete. I submit, as an alternative proposition, save your money for your subsidised line, but carry out in good faith what you promised, that you would grant a drawback on the raw material entering into the manufactures for export. Then, no one is injured, because the goods are exported out of the country, and though you get no duty on the raw material, you encourage the export trade. With reference to the freight rates, I do not know how you are going to improve them. The Canadian shipper can to-day avail himself of the lines of communication which are open as well as the American shipper; he can send his goods in bond; that is the way his trade has been carried on, and the only effect of this subsidy would be to compel the San Francisco line to give a lower rate of freight if, through your subsidy the British Columbia line were able, which I do not admit, to offer a lower rate. Hon. gentlemen may say that the Canadian manufacturer would derive that advantage. Certainly he would, but he would not have any advantage over his American competitor. But where you can benefit the Canadian manufacturer is to take your duty off the raw material that enters into his finished product. Then he would be on level with the foreign manufacturer; then he could hope to do a foreign trade, but until then he cannot hope to do a foreign trade of any dimension at all.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is not consistent with some of the hon. gentlemen who sit behind him. Three or four of them made the burden of their remarks that this Government was doing nothing for the farmers, but was doing everything for the manufacturers. My hon. friend from Brant makes the chief burden of his remarks a complaint against the Government, that we are not doing sufficient for the manufacturer, that, forsooth, the manufacturers ought to have their raw materials free in greater proportion, and ought to be given a better chance than they have at present. That is a little quarrel which my hon. friends opposite may fight out among themselves.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). No quarrel at all.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friend will look at the tariff of the United States and contrast it with ours, he will find that Canada has a very generous free list; he will find that nearly one-third of the imports of Canada are on the free list, and that our free list is far greater than the list of free articles in the United States. The argument of another hon. gentleman that we cannot trade with countries profitably that are far distant, I do not think, as a proposition, will hold good at all. I think it will be found that the most profitable trade is, in a great many cases, not the trade which is done with the nearest country but that which is done with countries lying very far distant. Take for instance Great Britain. Owing to the strong competition which she meets in European countries, her trade in manufactured articles with these countries falls off relatively each year, while her most profitable trade to day is with the far distant countries of the world—countries far more distant from her than these markets are from us. Another hon. gentleman has stated that the greatest competitor we would meet in Australia would be the United States manufacturers. It is no doubt true that our people who have attempted so far to place their goods in Australia find that the competition of American manufacturers is the strongest they have to meet. But the manufacturers of the United States are no nearer to Australia than we are, in fact they are not so near, and they have not so large a free list of goods which enter into manufacturing processes as Canada has, and they have a higher protective tariff; and yet they go, according to my hon. friend, into the markets of Australia, and are our chief competitors there. I think there is an inconsistency in the arguments of hon. gentlemen opposite in that respect. The hon. member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies) made the best of the trade returns which he holds in his hand, but I still believe the statement I made will be found correct. I think I have that statement, and I will look it up to see if it is right or not, but I feel sure it will be found true. I remember a conversation with Mr. Massey himself, going into the question thoroughly, and he detailed the expense and trouble he had been put to in the last year or two in establishing agencies for the sale of his goods. Hon. gentlemen must always recollect that the attempt to establish trade in a foreign country is a costly proceeding. It takes time to make your constituency of customers to trade with and to establish a name for your goods, and the first years of an opening trade are always the most costly; but the statement I made is this, and it will be found true, that within the last year a trade has been opened up in agricultural implements with Australia to the extent of about $300,000. My hon. friend must recollect that the Trade Returns only come up to the 1st of July of last year, and that a manufacturer, speaking to me about the matter, would have the trade year and not the fiscal year in view. My hon. friend said the people of Canada had steam communication already with Australasia; he said that there was steam communication from Victoria to San Francisco, and from San Francisco to Australasia. That is very true. There is an intermittent steam communication; but my hon. friend knows well there is a great difference between communication of that kind, which has to break bulk and transfer cargo, and communication direct from the port of shipment to the port of embarkation? It is everything in commercial transactions to have a line of communication which is not subject to the breakings of bulk and transfers of cargo with all their attendant expenses. I think my hon. friends have probably given the very best reasons why this country should endeavor to establish a direct line of communication by steamer with those countries, for the opening up of our trade, and the encouragement of our trade, for nearly all the difficulties in securing a good trade with these countries were owing mostly to the roundabout way in which our goods have to get there, and the lack of facility for regular and easy communication. With this regular and easy communication the manufacturers will be induced to open up their lines of trade, for a regular line of communication is, of course, a great thing with men who wish to open up trade with foreign countries. There is Australasia, a large and growing colony, with a population of 4,000,000 or 5,000,000, which does an enormous foreign trade in imports and exports, and that trade is carried on with European countries and the United States—with protectionist countries, as well as Free Trade Great Britain. If Canada produces large quantities of these very things that are required in Australasia, and if Canada requires those very things that are raised there, there is an opening for trade, and all it requires are facilities and enterprise, and the direction of the abilities of our mercantile world towards that market. Some of my hon. friends have shown quite strongly that they are afraid the opening up of trade with Australasia, China and Japan, would set far back the ultimate triumph of the fad to which they are particularly devoted. It may be that this will have a tendency to draw off the trade in other lines, by opening up profitable branches of commerce with these far distant countries—and profitable trade can just as well be carried on with countries far distant as with those near by. It depends upon demand and supply. It depends upon the articles that the people of a foreign country need, and that the country which is to trade with them is in a position to supply. Of course, if they are far distant from us they are very far from other manufacturers as well. And the cost of freight holds in the one case as in the other.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Does not my hon. friend see where his argument lands him in talking about a fad, as he is pleased to term trade with our neighbors? If the Canadian manufacturers has to go into the Australian market and compete with the American manufacturers there, he must be able to produce as cheaply as the latter; and if he can outsell him in the Australasian market, why can he not compete with him in the American market? And when the fact stares us in the face that there are 60,000,000 of people in the States to trade with, is it not evident that that is a better and a larger market, and is it anything like a fad to advocate access to it in preference to a market with which we have only $400,000 worth of trade? Not only has the Canadian manufacturer to hold his own with the American—and if he can do that in Australia he could do it in the United States if free trade existed between this country and the United States—but he has to hold his own in the Australian and other foreign markets at a disadvantage with the American. The Finance Minister says our free list is as large as the Americans, and their duties as large as ours, but that does not touch the question. You cannot hope in all lines of goods to do a foreign trade. Great Britain has some specialties in which she can beat the world; the United States may have some, and we may have some, but as you burden your manufactures here with duties higher than are imposed upon American manufactures, you place them at that disadvantage. What my friend must consider, is the fact that a large part of the raw material required for the manufactured goods of this country which are exported to foreign countries is imported from the United States, and, therefore, there must be the amount of duty less in the United States on that raw material than there is to the Canadian manufacturers. Take boiler tubes take coal if you will, take malleable iron, take copper goods — I cannot remember all the articles, but all these things which are imported from the United States must be imported from that country because the manufacturer finds it is to his advantage to import them and pay the duty rather than to have them made at home, but the American manufacturer has that advantage over the Canadian manufacturer, and what I pointed out to the hon. gentleman was that the proposition of the Government was, at the time they introduced their policy, to give the Canadian manufacturer a drawback equal to the amount of duty which he paid on the raw material imported from the United States or any other country, but that, instead of that, they require declarations from our manufacturers which they cannot comply with. There are firms that have thousands of dollars of just claims, as I believe, against the Government in this matter, which they cannot get from the Government. Athough they have gone to the expense of tens of thousands of dollars in opening up markets in various parts of the world, they are paralysed by this system which is augmenting, and more augmenting, and still more augmenting the duties which they have to pay. That is what I pointed out to the hon. gentleman, and it is no answer to say that our free list is as large as or larger than the free list of the United States, or that their average of duties is as high or higher than ours. The point is that the large amount of raw material in this country is purchased from the United States, and, therefore, it must be that much lower in the market of the United States than it is in Canada. In order, therefore, to put our manufacturers on an equal footing with theirs, the hon. gentleman must arrange his system of drawbacks so as to allow the Canadian manufacturer to obtain that rebate which was promised. By doing that, you are doing no injustice to anyone, but you are encouraging a trade which you cannot have without that system. You are injuring no one, but are benefitting those manufacturers, and those whom they employ.

Mr. HESSON. The hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) has had his usual fling against the National Policy. He has travelled away from the question before the House, but he has relieved himself of the usual frenzy in which he indulges on every possible occasion against the National Policy. He is not content with that, but he refers to the injustice which is done to the manufacturers, and especially to those in his own city. I do not live so far away from him but that I can understand something of what is going on in the city of Brantford as well as in my own town, and I do not believe there is a place in Canada where more solid prosperity exists to-day than in the city of Brantford. If that is so, it is owing to the manufacturing industry there, and in regard to that very firm to which he referred, Harris, Son & Co., who are known throughout the country and throughout the world, it was not so very long ago that they were unknown; it was not so long ago that they went into Brantford, employing a score of men, and now I think I am within the mark when I say that they are giving employment to from 200 to 300 men or even beyond that. I have had the pleasure myself within the last two or three years of seeing a hundred farmers' teams loaded up to receive the deliveries from the agents of that firm in my own county, with a brass band at their head, in order to show off the excellence of the goods which that firm was manufacturing. That was pleasing to me, and must be pleasing to my hon. friend who resides in the city of Brantford. Now, he asks that a drawback should be granted to that firm. Apparently they are very prosperous. After having captured their own local markets, they are very wisely reaching out for foreign markets, and I think this Bill will enable them to do something to extend their trade. The hon. gentleman instead of attacking the policy of the Government in that regard, should give them credit for affording facilities for communication with foreign markets, which will enable that firm and others who are engaged in the manufacture of similar goods, and who, after securing their home market, seek to have a wider range for their products, to have an opportunity to reach those other markets. The hon. gentleman refers to the fact that many of the manufacturers of Canada are to-day compelled to go into the American markets and buy certain lines of goods, such as tubings, for use in their manufactures in this country. How is it that manufactures of tubings and other things which are needed in the manufacture of engines and boilers were finally made successful in the United States. I would ask my hon. friend whether it was not by the adoption of the policy which this Government are, in an humble way, endeavoring to follow. I admit that we are very much behind them, because the American tariff is very much higher than ours. But, when the hon. gentleman makes such a bold attack upon the National Policy, he should remember that it has been a great success in his own city, and I am rather surprised that he should make one of his great attacks upon the policy of the Government, when he remembers that. I believe that the manufacturers in the city of Brantford are prosperous to a very large degree, I believe they are prosperous very much beyond their own expectations, I believe that they are satisfied with what they have accomplished, and that they have greater hopes for the future. That is shown by the fact that they are now attempting to establish agencies not only all over this country, but also over other countries. If they have not their own market for themselves, they should have further protection, because we cannot desire better goods than those which they supply to the trade, and we cannot do better than to give employment to our own people. I do not know what the hon. gentleman wants unless it is to send our people to the American side to make these goods which we now import. If we have not sufficient protection for the manufacture of these goods here, it is time we had, and, if the hon. gentleman has any respect for the people of his own city, for the people who sent him here, instead of attacking the policy of the Government which has made the firm of Harris, Son & Co., and others who are manufacturing in that city and elsewhere, he should support the policy of the Government. As to these steamship subsidies, which is the question to be considered here to-day, I think that policy is one of the wisest which the Government has adopted this Session, and I am prepared to justify every word I say in regard to it before my constituents. The more facilities you give to transact business not only at home but abroad, the more is the country protected and advertised, and the more probability there is for prosperity, the more opportunity there is for those enterprising men who now perhaps are confined within certain limits which they cannot go beyond. If the Government can give to these men good facilities for the development of their trade in China, in Japan, in Australia and in the West Indies, or wherever they can effect a trade and an exchange of products, I think the Government are taking a wise step and that my hon. friend should support the Government in the interest of the manufacturers he represents, instead of attacking the policy of the Administration.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It certainly is a great comfort to find that the hon. gentleman, in his speech of some length, has uttered some sane remarks. When he speaks of Brantford being a prosperous town and having enterprising manufacturers, he really has uttered sentiments that I can heartily concur in. His statements are much more nearly correct than they are sometimes. But I must remind my hon. friend that his bid for the position of Finance Minister, by showing himself more conversant with the subject than the Minister, will utterly fail, for while I have to regret that the Finance Minister had not fully grasped the situation, I think he was quite as near it as the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Hesson) who is unable to see any connection between the remarks I made and the subject under discussion. I, in my humble way, had thought that they were very pertinent, and I still think so, for the season that there was even a glimmering of the connection in the mind, even, of the hon. member for Perth, usually darkened on any subject of practical utility, when he seemed dimly to grasp the idea that there was something connected with helping our manufacturers in their export trade. I was only pointing out a way by which that desirable object could be obtained better than by granting this subsidy to those steamship lines. I think the Minister of Finance saw the point, but the hon. gentleman failed to see it. I made no attack on the National Policy, I did not desire to draw in questions that are not there. I did incidentally allude to the fact that under that policy the duties upon raw material place the manufacturer at a disadvantage. I did not advocate that the National Policy should be abandoned; I simply advocated that the Government should do what they promised to do when they introduced that policy, and that in order not to destroy the foreign trade, they should give a drawback equivalent to the amount of duty on the raw material that the manufacturers used. I may also say that my hon. friend, while he mentioned a prominent firm in that town, did not mention the firm to which I alluded. The firm to which he alludes is another firm doing an export trade, but the firm to which I allude does a very much larger trade, and has done for many years. But he is quite right in saying that there is more than one firm that does a large business. Therefore I am glad to be able to give him credit for alluding to the fact that there are men of enterprise in the city of Brantford. These men never asked for the imposition of a National Policy, they are willing to stand upon their own feet the same as others, but they do say, as manufacturers, that the Government ought to give them a drawback on the goods that they manufacture for export.

Mr. HESSON. The hon. gentleman will recollect that it is not so long since the city of Brantford began to prosper. I think if he were asked the question why, he would say at once that it is largely owing to the fact that they have had their own markets during the last two years, and that they have been able to sell to home customers. I am satisfied that if they are able to export goods, it is by reason of the facilities by which they are able to manufacture cheaply, which facilities come from the advantages of a home market.

Mr. GILLMOR. The real question before the House is whether it will be in the interest of Canada to grant a subsidy of $25,000 sterling to a steamship line running between British Columbia and Australia. I have listened to the reasons given by the ministerial advocates of this scheme, but I am not quite convinced that it is in the interest of the country to do so. I think myself that we have been doing a great deal for the great railway schemes that are now completed across the continent, we have done a great deal for the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I think this scheme will increase the traffic over that line. If there is to be any increase of trade it is the Canadian Pacific Railway who will get the advantage of it. It appears to me this is a sort of completion of the great railway scheme. I so understood the First Minister in his remarks. I do not know where it has originated, I think it is a sort of speculation. I understood from the remarks, neither of the Prime Minister or the Finance Minister, that this originated with the High Commissioner, in consultation with delegates from those colonies in London, that they thought it advisable, and the Government seemed to have adopted their view. Now, the speculations of the High Commissioner in the past have not been realised; his predictions in regard to financial matters have been always very extravagant. I cannot see myself that we should be benefited by granting this subsidy to that line. I cannot see that we can increase our trade, that we can supply Australasia with the products of Canada to any extent. For those who have articles to export to that country, there is every opportunity to do so now, same as they are exported from the United States. I do not think Canada is called upon to grant any further facilities in that line. We have completed our great transcontinental railway at an expense of hundreds of millions. Our debt is large, I think it is time for us to call for a halt. I think it is manifest from the estimates that the Government had intended to begin to curtail and to economise, and I saw that with satisfaction. But it seems to me that they have been cutting off our expenditure in places where the people might be benefited, and that they are now putting it on in favor of an enterprise which cannot be of any material advantage to the large body of our people. After having completed this great railway of which we boast so much, I think the proprietors of that railway, if this scheme is going to give them a carrying trade, and there is going to be an income to them, ought embark in it themselves. Otherwise this speculation, I am afraid, will be like many other enterprises that have been started and that are not paying the people of this country. What does my hon. friend mean by giving facilities? Does he mean to charter vessels to carry cattle or manufactured articles? Those are facilities that offer themselves very readily to whoever believe that this business will pay; and can the people of this country afford to give subsidies and pay freight to enterprises that will not pay of themselves? Is that doing justice to the taxpayers of this country? I think not. The arguments urged in favor of this scheme have not convinced me that it is desirable.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would ask the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) if this National Policy which he abuses so much, has not had some material benefit upon his town of Brantford, and if it was not owing to the National Policy that a large manufacturing concern was lately located there, to which that town gave a subsidy of $30,000? I fancy the hon. gentleman supported that subsidy. I refer to the Cortland Carriage Co. No doubt it was the National Policy that induced that American concern to locate there, and also the bonus of $30,000, which the hon. no doubt assisted the town in giving. It would be inconsistent if this Government would not, taking the cue from the course the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) pursued in his own town of subidising an American concern, subsidise a line of steamships to open up trade for our manufacturers who are starting from one end of the country to the other.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think nothing can be more clear than that the Finance Minister has brought down this proposition with the utmost possible inconsideration. It does not appear that the Minister of Finance troubled himself to become acquainted with the most ordinary details. We have had his statement, which I venture to say will prove to be utterly and wholly incorrect, that with respect to agricultural implements, a single firm has exported in the last trade year $300,000 worth to Australia. He gave the name of the firm, so there can be no possible difficulty as to ascertaining the facts. My hon. friend has called attention to the circumstance that, up to 1st July, 1888, our total exports of manufactured implements had been barely $39,000 all told. It is utterly impossible that during the remaining six months—at least I think so—any such figure as the hon. gentleman formally in his place stated to the House could have been obtained. I think it will be found that the hon. gentleman has not taken the smallest pains to acquaint himself with the possibilities, I will not say the probabilities, of this trade. I heard him just now make the statement in Australia, or Australasia, I give him the benefit of the doubt, there are 4,000,000 or 5,000,000 of people. The population is little in excess of 3,000,000, and I can give the hon. gentleman the details for every Province if he likes. I heard him state just now that the tariff we have adopted admits a number of articles free, and his intimation was that this was in favor of the farmer. Our tariff does not admit a single article which the farmers use free, except tea. I do not think there is one single article consumed by our farmers to any extent, except tea, which is allowed to be imported duty free; all the rest of the free importations are for the benefit of the manufacturers, or are settlers' goods, which no one would propose to tax. But I call the attention of the Committee strongly to the fact that the Minister of Finance has made the assertion that there was an exportation of $300,000 worth of manufactured implements to Australia in the trade year. If it is proved, as I think it will be proved, that the hon. gentleman was totally misinformed as to that fact, it is very clear indeed how much attention has been paid to this very important subject before the Government brought this resolution down to the House.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I desire not to discuss the general question of the National Policy, but to discuss our position with regard to Australia, the extent of the trade now existing, and what the commodities are. The total exports to Australia from Canada, as I take the figures from the blue book, are $455,839. Of that amount $300,473 went from British Columbia and consisted as follows: $130,637 of fish, which I presume was canned salmon, and $169,837 planks, boards and joists. The Minister of Finance will not propose to subsidise a line of steamers to carry planks, boards and joists 7,000 or 8,000 miles to Australia, and so the exports of fish and lumber may be put out of the question. What does that leave? A total value of $155,166 exported from the whole of Canada to Australia. It is now proposed to give a subsidy almost equal in amount to the total value of the goods which all Canada, outside of British Columbia, sends to those colonies. I was in the Public Accounts Committee the other day, and I heard some merchants from Toronto examined as to the amount of profit they reckon, and they put the profits at 5 per cent. Suppose we double that rate and allow 10 per cent., the conclusion is that we will be paying in subsidy about eight times the entire profits made on the total exportation to Australia. Upon this matter the hon. gentleman would not give much weight to any opinion coming from me, because I am not supposed to know much about it, I do not propose, however, to ask the Committee to give weight to my opinion as to the probablities of increasing this trade. My opinion as to the facts in the blue-books is just as good as that of anyone, but I propose on this question of trade with the Australian Colonies to call attention to the opinion of a gentleman who is probably as cabable of forming an opinion on this subject as anyone in Canada. The Senator from Toronto is the head of one of the largest mercantile houses in Canada, and he made a very able and exhaustive speech three or four weeks ago in another place, which I read with a great deal of pleasure. Among other matters he took up trade with Australia and discussed the possibility of its development. The hon. gentleman said:

"Nature has been most profuse in the bestowment of her gifts to that country; and, as though it were in view of her being so far removed from the family of nations, has endowed her so richly that she has within herself everything that a nation requires to make it great, prosperous and independent. The superabundance of her gold has helped to change the value of commodities throughout the civilised world. Her coal and iron make her independent, so far as manufacturing is concerned, of any nation on earth. Her climate is so suited for wool-growing that if but the tenth part of her three million of square miles were but peopled, and a reasonable proportion devoted to sheep-raising, she could grow wool enough to supply the wants of the world; while the wheat fields of Southern Australia are sufficient to give food to the continent."

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That has been read already.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If so, I did not hear it; but I have some new matter I desire to read. The Senator continued, and I call special attention to the portion of the hon. gentleman's speech:

"Indeed, it may be affirmed that she wants nothing. Her manufactures, in some departments, have reached a perfection far, far in advance of anything we have attained in Canada. I refer especially to the manufacture of fine woollens, broad and narrow, and also to the finest rugs, wraps and blankets. In these goods by far the finest exhibit at the Collindaries, equalling in perfection of coloring and excellence of finish anything which could be produced in any part of the world, were those from the woollen mills of Dunedin, in New Zealand. Almost everything which we have to offer she possesses, so that she looks upon us as her rival in nearly all which constitutes her wealth. Coarse and cheap goods sent by steamer would be entirely out of the question; they could not by any possibility stand the heavy freight rates by sea and land. Fine goods of their own manufacture they can supply us with, and as for British goods the Australian merchants stand deservedly high in the markets of the world as men of great wealth, great ability, great uprightness, every house of note having its English house in London, in the Australian quarter of that great city. With British Columbia something might possibly be done to a limited extent in fish and lumber, but for either Ontario, Quebec or the Maritime Provinces I see but little prospect of a trade which would be at all likely to grow at any time into large proportions."

That is the opinion of the head of one of the largest mercantile houses in Canada. We have the blue-books which show the existing trade with Australia, we have this opinion which shows the prospects with regard to future trade, and we have this resolution proposing $125,000 a year as a subsidy to a steamship line to run out there in view of the possibility of developing that trade, and it is about as fatuous a policy as could be proposed to the House.

Mr. McNEILL. Notwithstanding what the Senator has said, the fact remains and has not been moved by any statement made by hon. gentlemen opposite, that our neighbors to the south of the boundary line do a trade with the Australian Colonies to the extent of something like $15,000,000 a year. That being the case, I do not see why we should not also endeavor to trade with those colonies. The hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) says that we cannot expect to compete with the United States in the Australian markets. That was a reasonable argument and one of the few arguments that really have been fairly addressed on the subject. He said we could not expect to compete with the United States manufacturers, because we were obliged to protect ourselves against them. But if my hon. friend will just apply the same argument to the United States he will see that they should have never attempted to compete with British manufacturers in the Australian markets because they were obliged to protect themselves against the British manufacturers in their own markets. Notwithstanding this we find that American goods have displaced British goods to a very large extent in many lines in the Australian markets. I must say that I was much struck with the fact that the leader of the Opposition did not take this line of argument. He opened up the debate in a most moderate speech and he did not say one word, that I could gather, against our endeavoring to develop a trade with our friends in Australia. That was reserved for the gentlemen who sit beside him.

Mr. LAURIER. I merely said we had no information.

Mr. McNEILL. Quite so, but I understood that had reference to the terms of the contract rather than to matters of trade. The statement that we had no information as to the trade that could be developed in Australia seems to me most extraordinary in view of the fact that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance occupied from 10 to 15 minutes in reading a statement of the line of goods in which we might hope to develop a trade with Australia. It would seem that whenever we propose to go outside of this continent to look for trade one gentleman after another on the other side of the House is prepared to get up and object to the proposal. Last year the proposal was made that we should endeavor to develop a trade with our friends in the West Indies, and immediately one gentleman after another on the other side objected to our endeavoring to develop any such trade. To-night when a proposal of a similar kind is made, that we should endeavor to develop a trade with Australia we find exactly the same state of things occurring and we are told that what we ought to do is to look to our friends on the other side of the line and not beyond them. It seems to me that it is rather a more reasonable proposal that we should endeavor to develop trade with these who are prepared and willing to trade with us, for this proposal is that the Australian colonies should supplement this subsidy and assist in the development of that trade. It is rather a more reasonable proposal that we should endeavor to develop trade with those of our own kindred who tell us they are willing to assist us to develop that trade than that we should endeavor to force our trade upon a people who tell us that they will not trade with us unless we are prepared to trade with them on terms which would be a humiliation to this country and which the people of Canada will, I am sure, never agree to.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister of Finance has repeated the argument that he placed before the House last Session. He appears to have convinced himself of the very curious doctrine that there should be no trade between the nearest markets, but that the best market in the world is the one that is the most difficult to obtain access to. Last year he announced that proposition in very poetical language, as hon. gentlemen will remember, and in order to support it he pointed out how the energy of man had enabled him to overcome natural difficulties in order to force his wares into remote parts of the world. This evening he repeats that opinion. For his information I will tell him what the statistics show, having regard to some of the leading commercial countries of the world and from those statistics he will find that his theory is not sustained by the facts. Take, for instance, the nations of Europe: Germany, Norway, Italy, France, Portugal, Belgium, the Netherlands and Austria, which I think hon. gentlemen will admit, are the leading commercial countries of Europe, Great Britian excepted, Germany did 48 per cent. of her entire export trade with the countries contiguous to her borders; Norway did 48 per cent.; Italy, 56 per cent.; France, 56 per cent.; Portugal, 58 per cent.; Belgium, 56 per cent.; the Netherlands, 72 per cent. and Austria 80 per cent.; or these eight countries did, on an average, 60 per cent. of their whole foreign trade with their actual neighbors.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Many of them have no other foreign trade at all.

Mr. MULOCK. These are the principal nations of Europe, outside of England and Spain, that engage in foreign trade at all, and Spain, as appears by the returns up to the fiscal year of June, 1887, did one-third of her whole trade with France, the nation adjoining her, although, as is well known, both France and Spain are engaged in very much the same class of industries. I might point to the same state of facts on the northern portion of the American continent. Canada last year did 40 per cent. of the whole volume of her foreign trade with her nearest neighbor, in spite of the barriers that man has erected against this trade. Mexico did 60 per cent. of her whole foreign trade with the United States, and in the face of this we have the Minister still adhering to the view that it is wise to avoid the nearest market and to seek a remote foreign market. The best market in the world is the home market in any country, and when the producer can sell right around him he is getting a better market than if he goes to a distance. The home market is the best of all, and when that market has absorbed all it can absorb then, adhering to that doctrine the next nearest customer is the best customer that we can get. However, by this proposition now before the House, the Government propose to skip over our nearest neighbor and to subsidise steamships to establish trade in far distant parts of the world. I should rejoice to see trade established in any part of the world, provided that it is a profitable trade. I learned from remarks which have fallen from hon. gentlemen that Australasia last year imported from the United States $9,666,000 worth of goods, and from Canada $446,000 worth. It is apparently admitted that the gross imports of Australasia from Canada and the United States last year were $10,114,435 worth of goods. Now, assuming that we did get our per capita portion of that trade, Canada would be entitled to $722,500. I cannot see any reason for assuming that Canada will get any larger proportion of the trade with Australasia than her population bears to the population of the United States. If that be the case, we shall only get $722,450 worth of trade with Australasia. We export at present to Australasia $446,000 worth, so that by the increased facilities which are sought for we shall simply increase our trade by the sum of $276,450. In other words, the House is asked to vote $125,000 a year in order to gain an increased trade of $276,000, or to pay about 50 cents for every dollar's worth of increased trade with Australasia; and you take that $125,000 out of the pockets of the people of Canada; you tax the farming community whom you do not benefit, and tax them in order to benefit the manufacturers. The Minister of Finance cites two witnesses; but the examination of them is not very thorough. He tells us that he is basing his argument upon the evidence of Mr. Van Horne and Mr. Massey. So far as Mr. Van Horne's statement is concerned, we can hardly accept it as conclusive, because we have not yet been favored with any particulars regarding it. The Minister of Finance is the responsible person, and I am surprised that he should tell us that the real Minance of Finance is the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway. He has told us in plain language now, that this is a grant for the benefit of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I thought we had done the last for that company; I thought, when we dealt with them last year, we had given the last public money towards the Canadian Pacific Railway that we would be asked to give. I am aware that this year there was an attempt made to extract some more money for the company. Perhaps this is part of the arrangement by which they are to complete the link between Harvey and Moncton; perhaps this has something to do with that.

Mr. FOSTER. That is it.

Mr. MULOCK. Then I think the proper thing would be for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to take their seats on the Treasury benches, and then they could be held responsible. But I cannot accept the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company as the responsible party; I have a high respect for his business ability, but I think we must hold the Government of the day responsible. The hon. Minister of Finance also cites Mr. Massey. I remember a letter from Mr. Massey which was published last year, in which—I speak from memory—referring to the increased duty on iron, he said it was going to cost him in the course of manufacture, $30,000 a year, and he demanded larger markets for his wares, and if I remember rightly the market he demanded was the United States.

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. MULOCK. I think that was the tenor of his letter to the press, and I think he put himself side by side with a number of prominent Conservatives, Mr. A. H. Campbell and others, in demanding reciprocity with the United States; and they said that with the advanced policy of the Administration of taxing iron, the raw material of the manufacturers, they would crush them out of trade altogether, and they demanded increased markets. We have it that this movement is a consequence of the unwise action of the Administration a couple of years ago in increasing the burdens of the manufacturers by taxing their raw material to an enormous extent by their iron duties; I think I would not be over the mark in saying that it amounted to $14 a ton. You are again asking the consumers of Canada to put their hands into their pockets and pay $125,000 a year, in order to provide markets for the people whom you have already helped by your tariff. The burden of this additional expenditure is going to fall on the farmers and on the non-producing classes, and it may as well be understood that it is another intensification of the policy of the present Administration.

Mr. FOSTER. A good word.

Mr. MULOCK. It is applicable, I think. It is further increasing the burdens of the people; and although hon. gentlemen opposite deem it a remedy, it is only an aggravation of the existing evil. Under those circumstances, I think the House would not be justified in adding $125,000 a year to the burdens of the people of Canada merely to obtain $276,000 of additional export trade. If there is to be anything done in that way, let us have, as the hon. member for South Brant says, a bounty system, and thus relieve the manufacturers of the tax on their raw material.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Mine is not a bounty, but a drawback.

Mr. MULOCK. Very well, a drawback, and this $125,000 would provide a drawback on a million dollars worth of goods, or half a million dollars worth at any rate.

Resolution reported.

STEAMSHIP SERVICE—B. C. AND CHINA AND JAPAN.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider resolution (p. 1329) to provide for a subsidy for a fortnightly steamship service between British Columbia and China and Japan.

Mr. LAURIER. As I intimated this afternoon, this resolution stands on a little different footing from the one we have just considered. On the other resolution, the Government informed us beforehand that no information was in their possession, and that no correspondence had taken place on the subject. On this resolution, however, the Government have informed us that not only are they in possession of information, but that a contract has actually been entered into between the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway to carry on this service. The contract is complete, but it only lacks the signatures of the parties. Under such circumstances, I deem that the Government cannot properly refuse to lay this information before the House, and, therefore, I move:

That the Speaker do not now leave the Chair, but that the question of granting a subsidy for a steamship service between France and Japan be postponed until the Government has laid before the House all correspondence exchanged with the Government of Great Britain and Ireland on the subject, and also all correspondence with the Canadian Pacific Railway or other companies, and the agreements entered into with any such companies, if any there are, in relation to the said service.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend misunderstands me if he understood me to say there was a contract completed between this Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway for that service. I did not say so. What I said was, that the British Government had entered into negotiations with the company for the carriage of mails over their railway from the terminus on this side to Yokohama and Shanghai, in China and Japan, and that the negotiations had gone so far that they were practically concluded, although the contract was not signed. So far as the Canadian Government is concerned my hon. friend knows all that is publicly known about that. I mentioned that the British Government intimated they would give £75,000 out of £100,000, if the Canadian Government would contribute the other quarter, or if £60,000 for a monthly service were agreed upon, they would give £45,000 if the Canadian Government would give £15,000. All the papers to be brought down would simply give the hon. gentleman that information. With reference to the negotiations carried on between the British Postal authorities and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, that is a matter with which we are not directly concerned, and which we cannot bring down to the House at present.

Mr. LAURIER. I may have misunderstood the hon. gentleman; but the hon. gentleman says there has been correspondence upon this subject between the Imperial and Canadian Governments, and yet though the hon. gentleman is acting upon that correspondence, and asking the House to implement their agreement by this vote of money, he refuses to bring to the House the correspondence.

Mr. FOSTER. The information is simply this, that the British Government will give so much if the Canadian Government will implement that by so much more.

Mr. LAURIER. Put the correspondence on the Table.

Mr. FOSTER. There is no complete correspondence. The High Commissioner, when in London, carried on the negotiations, and all the direct correspondence that was had with this Government was in the shape of a telegram, and surely my hon. friend, having the information, is not going to stand on a technicality and endeavor to stop this vote simply because I have not formally laid on the Table of the House the information I have given him over and over again.

Mr. LAURIER. Are we to understand that this important negotiation was carried on verbally and that there is nothing to show for it?

Mr. FOSTER. What I said was simply that negotiations were carried on by the High Commissioner, and that as the result of these negotiations an agreement was come to between the two Governments.

Mr. LAURIER. I would be sorry to believe that this important negotiation was carried on verbally, and that there is nothing official between the Canadian Government and the Imperial Government. There must have been some correspondence, whether by telegram or otherwise, and this correspondence the House is entitled to have.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. the Minister was generally understood to have said that the agreement respecting this service was nearly completed between the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway. When he referred to the company, I asked what company, and he said the Canadian Pacific Railway. The Leader of the Opposition immediately took exception to that statement, and asked him to produce the correspondence. He was followed by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) who reiterated that demand for the agreement between the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the Minister of Finance never made the statement up to now that he had been misunderstood. It would have been easy for him then to have said that he was misunderstood. But he left the House to believe the contrary.

Mr. FOSTER. I distinctly said that negotiations were being carried on between the British Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway for the carriage of the mails—not our mails but the British mails; and when I spoke of the Government after that, any person who followed the thread of my discourse would have seen that it was the British Government I referred to. With reference to what the hon. gentleman said about correspondence, the correspondence passed between the High Commissioner and the British Government; but it is impossible to bring that down until the whole matter is settled.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are we to understand that the British Government have formally pledged themselves to pay this sum of either £75,000 or £15,000; because they have taken no action, and I observe that in the British Parliament a gentleman put them a question recently on the subject, and, if my memory serves me right, they did not return a reply in any way committing themselves.

Mr. FOSTER. They have committed themselves to that extent. They have promised to give a certain amount provided we give a quarter of it.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is that definitely and distinctly?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). How did the Finance Minister ascertain that they had done that? How is he aware of it? Had Sir Charles Tupper anything to do with it, or did he make any report to the Government? How did it come to the knowledge of the Government that the British Government entertained the proposition?

Mr. FOSTER. I have already pointed out to the House that the negotiations were carried on by the High Commissioner.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant) How did the information come to the hon. gentleman?

Mr. FOSTER. The negotiations are not completed, and that correspondence cannot be brought down until they are.

Amendment negatived on a division, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understand there is an existing line there now which has been running for some time. Has the Minister any results which he can give to the House as to the freight and the passenger traffic which has been carried?

Mr. FOSTER. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company have had steamers running for a year and a-half or two years. I have no statement at hand as to the exact quantities of freight that have been carried other than that which I gave to the House on the occasion of the Budget speech. If my hon. friend will turn to page 452 of Hansard, he will see a pretty full statement of the Asiatic trade, giving the number of tons carried and itemising it in the way of tea, and silk, and general merchandise and so on.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What conditions do the British Government intend to impose as to speed and so forth in the event of their granting this subsidy?

Mr. FOSTER. The British post office authorities, as my hon. friend knows, are very strict with reference to the carriage of their mails, and in tying down those who contract with them to schedule time and all the necessary provisions for security and despatch. All these terms are contained in the agreement which has been, as I said, practically concluded, and which will take the form of a contract. That, however, is a document I am not able to bring down to the House, because it is a matter between the British Government and the company, and has not yet been formally signed.

Mr. JONES (Halifax.) If these steamers have been running successfully for eighteen months, as we have been told, I would like the Minister to inform the House why it is now considered necessary to come with a Government subsidy to implement their earnings. Those steamships were placed on that route by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and we are told that they have been very successful in their cargoes each way. If that is the case, there would seem to be less reason for the Government asking the House to give them a subsidy. If the Minister of Finance will allow his mind to go back a year or two and remember the result of subsidies which have been given to other companies, he will find that the result has not been very satisfactory. There was a subsidy given to a Brazil line, and after one or two voyages, that fell through. There were subsidies given to a French line and a Hamburg line, and all these subsidies have proved to be inexpedient. Now, the Government are to subsidise a line which is already in operation, and I can hardly see under what circumstances that would be justifiable unless it was to give so much more money to the Canadian Pacific Railway. The First Minister stated that he was indebted to the President of the Canadian Pacific Railway for a statement showing the traffic to Australia, and doubtless he was also for one with regard to this route. It would really appear stripped of all other explanations, that both these grants are in effect grants to the Canadian Pacific Railway. That is what we may as well admit at once, and then, if the Government are determined to make that additional grant to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and we cannot prevent it, they must take the responsibility, but we can protest, and the event may prove that our judgment is correct.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I). The Minister Finance has referred me to page 452 of Hansard. His statement there shows the comparative amount of freight carried in 1887 and 1888. In some of the articles, there is a large increase, and in others there is a decided decrease. What I would like to know is if the outward freight is of Canadian produce or not, because, if an appreciable proportion of it is of American produce, and that proportion is likely to increase, it would be rather hard to ask us to subside a steamer to carry American produce. Before we come to the second reading of this resolution, I, for one, shall require to have some definite and reliable information on that point.

Mr. MULOCK. I would ask the Minister if we have to pay for carrying the mails in addition to this subsidy? Are we to get any consideration at all, or are we to pay for all the services?

Mr. FOSTER. Three gentlemen have asked questions, and I hardly know who asked which. I think the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) asked what necessity there was for giving a subsidy now to a line which has been engaged for a year and a-half or two years in carrying the trade between British Columbia and China and Japan, and which had been fairly successful. I do not know what may be considered fairly successful. They have kept on their vessels, and have done a trade which has been an increasing trade, and I suppose that, for the two first years, that has been fairly successful. Whether it has been a paying trade or not, I cannot tell. However, my hon. friend knows that, when this contract is entered into and the new line of vessels is put on, they will be of a very different class from the vessels which are employed there now. They will have to be completed according to specification; they will have to run upon schedule time; they will have to have a speed which is required in the contract, and that will be a very good rate of speed, and that requires, of course, a very different class of vessel, and a different outlay, than what is required in the vessels running now.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). What speed?

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot tell exactly, but it will be a very respectable speed. With reference to my hon. friend's statement he will find reference to cotton goods, that they are as stated as taken from Canadian mills. With reference to other articles of merchandise I have no returns which will show what proportion of them are Canadian, although I imagine a large proportion of them are Canadian.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The sum total of exports is very small.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) May I ask what port in British Columbia this steamer is to leave? From Vancouver?

Mr. FOSTER. Certainly, from the terminus of the railway.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the steamer call at Victoria?

Mr. FOSTER. We will find that out by the contract.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I) I want to find it out now. I have received a letter from a gentleman in British Columbia to-day asking me to ascertain this very point. The inhabitants out there are very anxious to know whether this line of steamboat is going to call at Victoria. I do not know whether the British Columbia representatives in the House can say anything about it, but I can assure them that one of their constituents seems to be greatly interested in the subject. He would like to know before we vote.

Mr. PRIOR. What is the name?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I have no objection giving the name privately to the hon. gentleman. Whether the steamer is to call at Victoria or not, ought to be decided before the contract is entered into, and the information should be given to the House before we consent to vote the money.

Mr. PRIOR. I am much obliged to the hon. gentleman from Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) for bringing up the question of the steamers calling at Victoria. I may state that ever since I have been in Ottawa I have been badgering the Government about the same matter. I have had numerous letters myself on the subject, and before I started for Ottawa I had several interviews with gentlemen belonging to the Board of Trade who urged upon me the imperative necessity of pressing that subject upon the Government. I would like the hon. member from Queen's (P.E.I.) to hand me that letter that I may see who it is from.

Mr. DAVIES (P.EI.) It is from a gentleman who went out there from Prince Edward Island and who has been a resident in British Columbia for some years.

Mr. PRIOR. I am glad to hear it. I believe the whole population of Victoria desire the steamers to call there. I have done my best that they should do so, but I cannot say that I have had any very satisfactory assurances from the Government. I believe it is of the utmost importance that these steamers should be subsidised, and if we grant this subsidy I believe it will be the means of opening up a very large trade between Canada and China and Japan, and particularly between British Columbia and those countries. I have not the statistics to show the amount of business done at the present time, but I do not think that we ought to look at what is done now, but we ought to look at the possibilities and the probabilities of a future trade. The first steamers that ran on this route, I have it on good authority, lost £14,000. They will not run unless they are subsidised. and I think that the sooner our merchants and manufacturers come to the conclusion that there is a large trade to be done, and begin to bestir themselves, the sooner they send their agents to China and Japan, the better it will be for them, and the Dominion. I wish to repeat that it is imperative that these steamers should call at Victoria A few days ago I stated fully the importance of the city I have the honor to represent. The Victoria merchants do at least 75 per cent. of the trade of the whole Province of British Columbia, and I cannot see why these steamers, which are passing our very doors, should not call there. They come at the present time, and have done so for the last eighteen months, within one mile of our wharf, and there they take on a pilot and go straight ahead, and never pay the slightest attention to us. The Victorians are willing to put their hands in their pockets and make additions to the wharf, so that the steamer can come direct to the wharf and land the mails and passengers, instead of carrying them to Vancouver and letting them come back home by small steamer thereby delaying them 24 hours. We are willing to give her good wharfage accommodations if she will stop there on her way in and out, and I cannot see why the Government should not insist upon that being done. I believe it is contended by the Government that this is an Imperial matter, and that they have no right to say a word about stopping anywhere. I must confess that I cannot see the justice of that plea. The Imperial Government certainly subsidise the steamers, but so does the Dominion Government, and I consider that as British Columbia, and especially Victoria, contributes a large amount to the revenue of the Dominion, they have a right to ask the Government to consider them in this matter. If calling there would seriously delay these mail steamers, I would not ask them to do so, but I do not believe it would make a delay of more than an hour and a half or two hours, in a 13 or 14 days trip. I once more take this opportunity of urging the Government to consider the complaints of Victoria in respect to any subsidy that is granted to a line of steamers running from British Columbia to Japan, and that they will do their utmost to persuade the Imperial Government to insert a clause in the charter granted to any company, that it shall be imperative upon that company to call at Victoria, both outward and inward.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It seems to me the hon. gentleman is perfectly in his right, and that moreover, it is our duty to see whether this can be done. Now, this bringing down these schemes and asking us to vote them blindfold, is utterly objectionable. There is no great difficulty in sending a cablegram to the British authorities, asking definitely whether they are willing to consent to a reasonable proposition such as the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior) has presented. It seems to me, if the case is as he states, it would be an extreme hardship that the mails and passengers for Victoria should be taken 75 miles out of their way and sent back again.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It does not seem to me that this is a matter wholly within the power of the British Government. Surely if the Government of Canada is called upon to pay £15,000 annually for subsidising this line of steamers we have a right to say for what purpose we are subsidising them, and we should make it a condition that the line of steamers should call at Victoria. If the English Government want us to assist them by giving a subsidy, surely we should say upon what conditions it should be given, and if the Government choose to assert, what they ought to assert in order to promote the interests of the people residing on the Island of Vancouver, I have no doubt whatever that the Government can secure what the people of Victoria desire.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. Minister of Finance did not answer my question with regard to the carrying of the mails. I asked whether, under the subvention given to this line, our mails would be carried free?

Mr. FOSTER. By mails, I suppose the hon. gentleman means the mails from Canada to China and Japan. The mails from Canada to China and Japan are carried in consideration of the amount we give towards the subsidy, the same as the British mails are carried from Canada to Japan for the lump sum which the British Government give for that purpose.

Mr. MULOCK. We shall have nothing whatever to pay for mails between Canada and Japan during the continuance of the contract?

Mr. FOSTER. That is what I understand.

Mr. MULOCK. What does it cost at present to carry the mails?

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot tell.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Perhaps the Postmaster General can tell the Committee.

Mr. HAGGART. I cannot tell the exact amount, but a certain sum is now paid, although it does not amount to a great deal.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. You will ascertain it and bring it down.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I). This Committee is asked to vote a subsidy not exceeding £15,000 per annum for a monthly steamship service or £25,000 for a fortnightly service. We are asked to vote this amount because it will promote Canadian interests. In such a proposition we ought to have a voice as to the conditions under which the company will run the line, and the ports at which the vessel will call. If it is not in the opinion of the Government desirable that the vessels should touch at Victoria, the statements of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior), should be answered. He submitted arguments to this Committee, and I am satisfied that the majority of the House are of opinion that the vessels should call at Victoria. If those arguments are incorrect they should be controverted, and at all events we should vote intelligently and not in the dark. We have a right to insert these conditions in the contract, and it is our duty to do so, until the facts submitted by the hon. member for Victoria are contradicted, and the vessels should call at Victoria, especially as it could be done with such little inconvenience to the company.

Resolution reported.

MAIL SERVICE—CANADA AND ENGLAND.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider resolution (p. 1329) respecting a contract for the performance of a fast weekly steamship service for the carrying of mails between Canada and United Kingdom, making connection with a French port.

Mr. LAURIER moved in amendment:

That the Speaker do not now leave the Chair, but that the consideration of the granting of a subsidy for a fast weekly steamship service between Canada and the United Kingdom be postponed until the Government has laid before this House all the information in its possession on the subject, including the demands for tenders, tenders received and the precise nature of the service to be performed.

Motion negatived on a division, and House resolved itself in Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. LAURIER. Will the hon. gentleman explain the precise meaning of the words "making connection with a French port?" Does the hon. gentleman intend that the steamer leaving Great Britain is to call at a French port?

Mr. FOSTER. The intention is that the mail steamers which carry the mails from the United Kingdom to Canada and from Canada to the United Kingdom should call at a French port.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Going and coming?

Mr. FOSTER. Each trip.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is the French port to be the terminal point?

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are they to call at a French port before they proceed to the English ports?

Mr. FOSTER. No; they will call at the English port first.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then the French port will be the terminal point?

Mr. FOSTER. No.

Mr. WELSH. I should like to know where the terminus on this side will be before I vote this large expenditure. Where will the winter port be, and what port in England will be the terminal port and what port in France? I do not see that any benefit is going to be derived to Canada from this vote. It is an increase of $370,000 a year over what we have been paying to the Allan line, and as regards the very fast line in the St. Lawrence, I do not think it will be an improvement. I have made twenty or thirty passages on the Allan line, and I think it is a very fine line of steamers, with a body of officers and men well disciplined, and so far as trade is concerned there is no necessity for placing the taxpayers at any further expense by granting subsidies, because if there is anything to ship at Quebec or Montreal there are a dozen steamers ready to take any freight offered. As to mails and passengers, if you want your mails carried faster than the Allan line carries them, a person can address his letter "vid New York" or vid any line he likes and a passenger who wants to make a more rapid passage than the Allan line makes can go to New York. I want to know what benefit this country will get by this increased expenditure of $370,000 a year. If any hon gentleman can show where this country will derive any advantage from this expenditure I will listen to it. We have boats now running from Montreal to England carrying mails and passengers at a speed of 14 knots an hour, and I think that is quite sufficient for the St. Lawrence, because we must remember that the navigation is more dangerous than that from New York to England. The Cunard and other lines have greyhound steamers which go 18 or 20 knots an hour, but they can run out of New York into the open sea, clear of icebergs and the other dangers that the St. Lawrence is liable to. If you put those 20-knot steamers on the St. Lawrence with its fogs and thick weather, and especially when going through the Straits of Belle-Isle, you will have probably many accidents and loss of life.

The Government may convince me that this money may be well expended, and I am open to conviction, but my opinion is that you might as well throw this $370,000 belonging to the ratepayers into the river.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The resolution involves a very large expenditure and the Government should satisfy the House that the country demands such an expenditure for this service. I am ready to admit that there is a certain advantage in having a fast mail service if we can afford it, but the question is can we afford to have a 20 knot service for Canada? My opinion is that we cannot. A country like the United States with 65,000,000 people and its vast resources can afford a great many luxuries which a poorer country with four and a half or five millions cannot, and poor people have to put up with less expensive articles than their more wealthy neighbors. If we can get a line of 16 or 17-knot steamers, which would be ample for our wants, I think it would be quite as much as the people of Canada desire. We ought to be able to obtain a service of 16 or 17-knot steamers at a very large reduction from this $500,000 because the hon. Minister is no doubt aware that it is the extra two or three knots an hour which costs money far out of proportion of what steamers running at a moderate rate would cost. I think the Government would have been wise had they limited their aspirations to an 18-knot trial speed, and a speed of 16 or 17 knots at sea. There was a great deal of force in the remarks of the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Welsh) with regard to the difference between the St Lawrence and New York routes. A steamer leaving England for New York takes the southern route where she is free from icebergs and fogs which result from them, but if she comes by the northern route, and especially if she comes through the Straits of Belle Isle, for a large portion of the year she is in danger of icebergs and cannot use her speed; therefore you are paying for speed which a vessel is not able to use. Then again, if she comes to Halifax or St. John in winter time the same remarks apply after a certain time of the year. The point raised by the hon. member for Huron (M. McMillan) shows that the cattle trade is very much involved in this question of a fast line. If the Government had limited their demands to a 16 or 17-knot service they would obtain steamers which would be freight steamers as well, and I think the commerce of this country is as much interested, and I venture to say more interested, in obtaining low freight facilities than it is in having the mails delivered one or two days sooner. A steamer with a 16 or 17-knot speed will be able to carry 3,000 tons of freight, and that freight coming to a winter port—Halifax or St. John, I presume Halifax—would come over our Intercolonial Railway. If you have a 20-knot service these steamers will not carry over 700 or 1,000 tons at the outside. The fast steamers which run into New York are essentially passenger steamers, and they take only a small quantity of first class freight. Under these circumstances it will be observed that our national highway, as we call it, would lose the advantage of the transportation of all that freight, and that, I think, is a very important item, looking at the unsatisfactory results of the working of the Intercolonial Railway for the past few years. Then again if those steamers were of the speed I have indicated they would probably belong to a line like the Allan line who has a large number of steamers in the freight and cattle business, and the company would be able to offer facilities for a cheap transport of cattle and freight to a larger extent than they will if this subsidy is taken away from them. A fast line of steamers has to run on its merits as a mail and passenger line and nothing else, and in it we lose all the advantages which we should have for the carriage of freight. These lines are very expensive in their way, and cannot be run unless at a very considerable expense. The hon.

gentleman referred to the number of letters which are carried by the steamers by way of New York. That, I think the hon. gentleman will understand, must always exist. No matter how fast a line you may have from Montreal or the Maritime Provinces, the ships only sail once a week, so that from the sailing of one ship to the sailing of the next the letters dropped into the mail bag go by New York, whence a steamer sails almost every day. As a matter of fact, you will have six or seven mail steamers sailing from New York for every one that goes from Montreal or Halifax. Therefore, the expectations of the Minister, with regard to the mail matter which will go by this fast line, will hardly be realised. The hon. gentleman has referred to the desirability of having a fast line for passengers. Of course, with a certain part of the travelling public, that goes a considerable distance. But I know from experience, having been connected with one of the lines, that other lines, though not quite equal in reputation to the first-class lines, take a large proportion of the travelling public because they will take them for $15 or $20 less; and while these fast steamers get what you may call the cream of the travel, they do not by any means get the bulk of it, which goes by steamers which may be two or three days longer on a trip, but which if less elegant are equally safe and comfortable. Then, again, though I do not for a moment wish to undervalue the position of my own city or the Maritime Provinces generally, I have realised from my own observation this great fact, that it is almost impossible for a line sailing from Halifax to get passengers west of Montreal. No matter what steamers were going—when the Vancouver and the Parisian were leaving Halifax—and they are as fine and comfortable steamers as cross the Atlantic to-day—they would leave Halifax six months in the year with 20 or 30 passengers, not one-half of whom came from the west, while at the same time the great bulk of the western travel went by way of New York. My attention was drawn to a notice in a Canadian paper about the time these steamers were leaving Halifax, in which it was stated that the Etruria had arrived on the other side with 72 or 75 Toronto people on board. These facts show that the expectations of the hon. gentleman are not likely to be realised; I am sorry it is to be so, because if the steamers go by way of Halifax, I would like the passengers to go that way. But what I particularly desire to impress on the hon. Minister as my own view is that he is aiming at a service which is not actually necessary, and at an expense which this country cannot afford. I repeat, if we had a 16 or 17-knot service combining commercial facilities with passenger accommodation, it would be more in the interest of this country than a mail line, even if it ran 25 miles an hour. Such a line, considering the large commercial interests involved in a cheap route, would be of more permanent advantage to the country. The hon. gentleman stated that his proposal was to obtain this 20-knot service in order to obtain more rapid communication with the east. I asked him how fast he proposed having the steamers between British Columbia and China and Japan. The hon. gentleman replied that they were to be faster than the present ones, but he did not by any means intimate that he expected them to be up to the twenty-knot standard, and I presume such a line would cost more money than he asks the House to vote to-night. Well, according to the old maxim that the strength of a chain is in its weakest link, I would ask him what value is the 30-knot service on the Atlantic if he is to have only a 12 or 14-knot service on the Pacific? He must have a 20 knot service on the Pacific to correspond with that on the Atlantic, or he will fail in the object he has in view, of establishing a fast mail communication between England and the east. He says travel will always choose its own routes. We know that is the case, but the question is largely a geographical one. People will seek the point of departure which is nearest to them, or which they can reach in the shortest time and with the least difficulty. The hon. gentleman knows that if he were leaving for England to-morrow, he would not think of going to Halifax, even if there were a fast steamer there. He would go on board the train this afternoon, and to-morrow in the middle of the day he would be in New York, and would go on board the steamer there, and so avoid the long journey by railway.

Mr. FOSTER. It would be longer by sea.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I admit that, particularly at the time of the year when the hon. gentleman would have to go to Halifax to take the steamer; but I am sorry to say that I think he would prefer going by way of New York to coming down to Halifax by the Intercolonial Railway, and that circumstance would prevent the line obtaining as many passengers as would be desirable. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman also what point in the Maritimes Provinces he proposes to make the terminal point. Does he propose to make it Halifax or St. John?

Mr. FOSTER. Finish your speech.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Of course these points are interesting to know. I fancy there is no doubt where it will be. With all its advantages, St. John is a little out of the way; geography is against it. Another point on which I think the Minister should inform us is what port in England is to be reached and what port in France is to be reached. The hon. gentleman will find, I think, in making a contract, that the steamer, will be obliged to keep on board her English cargo, take it to the French port, and then bring it back and land it on her way to Canada again. If he has passengers on board for a French port, he can hardly expect that they will remain there pending the discharge of the cargo. He will also find another difficulty, that when they take this cargo in with their coals, which they are consuming all the way over, when they reach an English port and put out their cargo, they could not put it out and go on without taking other ballast and other coal, all of which involves delay. If the Minister has contemplated an arrangement of that kind, he will never find it to work. He may make connection with a French port, but to arrive at an English port and land the mails and passengers and go on to a French port with a cargo on board, and then come back again, she could bring no cargo from the French port, because she would be filled with a cargo from Canada. I would invite the hon. gentleman's attention to those points. He will find when he comes to make a trade and put in black and white the way in which the contract is to be carried out, those objections will all be raised, and he may have at the last moment to make an arrangement to connect with the French port, but not with the steamer that leaves for an English port. I am sorry the Government have gone so far as to undertake such a large expense which is entirely unnecessary. It is only of very late years that the Americans have built those very fast steamers, and during the winter time many of them are laid up. During the winter time their passenger rates are largely reduced. They will give you a ticket by the Etruria or any of those first class lines from Halifax all the way to New York at the same rate that the Allan and Dominion Lines charge from Halifax, about $60 or $70, while in the summer you have to pay nearly double the amount. I mention that to show that during the time the fast line comes to the Maritime Provinces those steamers will have very few passengers indeed. It is regretable that the Government are asking such a very large subsidy, because I am sure that in the summer, if the capacity and speed I have indicated were asked for, they could have been obtained at a moderate rate far below what the Committee has been asked to sanction. That would have been satisfactory to the country, and contributed more to its permanent advantage than this line the hon. gentleman proposes to obtain.

Mr. TROW. If it is the policy of the Government to grant large subsidies for mail and passenger service from Canada to a French and English port, it strikes me forcibly that the remarks of the hon. member for Halifax are to the point and that it would be carrying passengers out of their way thousands of miles if they were first taken to Liverpool or London. There are fast lines of steamers that leave New York twice a week, which would be given preference over the Canadian route. If it is the policy of the Government to have that connection, why not go direct to a French port, and land their passengers there without delaying them in an English port? There is much force in the remark made by the hon. member for South Huron that if there is to be any encouragement given at all to the carrying of freight, the same encouragement should be given to the shipment of stock, which in this country has quite recently been developed to such magnitude that it has become a source of great profit. It is well known that our Canadian route is much preferable to the New York route, from the simple fact that the cattle shipped at Montreal or Quebec become, before they reach the Atlantic, inured to hardship, and escape sickness, and arrive in much better condition than they would had they left New York. The moment the ship leaves New York at Sandy Hook she is on the Atlantic. The cattle become easily sick, and many of them die on the way. If encouragement were given to the shippers on our Canadian route, the Americans in the Western States, in Minnesota and even Dakota, and from the prairies generally, where they feed cattle very extensively, would no doubt prefer our Canadian route for the shipment of their stock.

Mr. KENNY. It must have surprised you, Sir, to hear the senior member for Halifax attempting to convey the impression to this House that Halifax as a port is not as suitable and fit as the port of New York for the terminus of a line of ocean steamers. Let me tell that gentleman that for 20 years after steam navigation was first established on the ocean, the Cunard Line so arranged their departure from the city of Boston that they almost invariably arrived at the port of Halifax during the night. During those 20 years only on one occasion in my recollection did those vessels get ashore. The hon. gentleman ought to know that the port of Halifax can be entered at any stage of the tide at any hour of the day or night, and at any season of the year, and in that respect offers facilities which the port of New York does not possess. I must say that I believe the hon. gentleman is the only merchant in Halifax, on either side of politics, who would speak so disparagingly of his own port. Let me say, that I believe the people of this country will almost unanimously approve the action of the Government in respect of these ocean mail steamship subsidies. I believe that it is the earnest desire of the people of Canada that we should possess on both oceans as efficient a service as that which is enjoyed by any other nation. I believe that one of the great objects which we had, when we spent so large a sum of money on the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, was to make Canada the highway from Europe to Eastern Asia, to Australasia and to the Islands of the Pacific. Every hon. gentleman who has considered this question must recognise that we cannot accomplish that object unless we have a first-class ocean service. To-day, unfortunately, we have not that. We have what is very little better than a first-class freight service. Every man should speak well of the bridge which has carried him over safely, and I have made pleasant and enjoyable passages across the ocean in the steamers of the Allan line, and I must bear testimony particularly to the admirable manner in which those ships are officered and the careful way in which they are navigated. I quite agree with my hon. friend from Queen's, P.E.I., that the navigation of the St. Lawrence River is a precarious and an anxious one, and that, if we desire to establish, as I think we showed ambition, an ocean service which should sail with the regularity of a ferry, then to attain that you should make Halifax your terminus all the year round. As to the port of departure on the eastern side of the ocean, I have given some consideration to that matter, and I think it should be some port in the Bristol Channel. I understand from what has fallen from the Finance Minister that that is now an impossibility, and that, as a French port has to be reached, it must be some port on the southern coast of England. I say, if we are ambitious to make our ocean mail service as efficient or more efficient than any other service, we should sail from some port in Europe which is not a tidal port, and I believe, if we ran all the year round to Halifax, we could make the voyage in five days. When I make such a statement, I know that I shall not meet with much sympathy in this Legislature. I know that the public mind of Canada is not educated up on that particular question, to entertain any such idea, and that, therefore, we must concede that, during the summer months, these vessels will go up the St. Lawrence; but I do still say that, if our sole ambition was to have a service which should navigate the ocean with the regularity of a ferry, it would be better if Halifax was made the terminus all the year round, and I know that that idea is entertained by gentlemen on the other side of the Atlantic who have given this matter very serious consideration. I referred to the fact of the large sum of money which Canada has spent for the construction of a transcontinental railway system. We know, we have heard, and we believe, that that system will be extended by the shortest and best practicable route in a short space of time to the Atlantic seaboard. That, of course, we fully accept. I ventured the opinion that the present service was unsatisfactory, and as regards the expenditure to which the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) has referred, he has laid great stress on the fact that we are now called upon to spend $500,000 for as efficient a service as any on the ocean. That hon gentleman might have told the House that, in 1860, the two Provinces of Old Canada, Ontario and Quebec, incurred as great a responsibility in order to secure for themselves the best service of that day as this Dominion is now asked to assume. That was a wise expenditure of public money, I believe, on the part of those two Provinces. They were, in point of population, of trade, of exports and imports, and business generally, relatively small in comparison to this great Dominion, and yet, if I am correctly informed, those two Provinces, in 1860, incurred a responsibility of £104,000 sterling per annum to secure the best serivce of that day. Unfortunately, we have not kept up that standard. That was the best of the day. That was what Canada then ambitioned, and what Canada did in 1860 I believe we should attempt to do to-day. The senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) has referred to the passages made by the present ocean mail steamers, and I took the trouble to compare the passages made by the Allan and Dominion lines from Liverpool to Halifax this year, after the close of the St. Lawrence up to the date of my departure from Halifax for Ottawa, with those made by the Cunard boats from Liverpool to New York. Everyone knows that the subsidised Allan Line sails on Thursday and the Cunard Line on the following Saturday for New York, but almost invariably the Cunard boats, which have sailed 2 days after the Allan boats, arrive in New York before the Allan boats reach Halifax, although they have steamed 500 miles further. The Polynesian sailed from Liverpool for Halifax on 8th November, 1888. The Etruria sailed 2 days afterwards. The Polynesian took 10 days to come to Halifax. Taking the passage of the Etruria to New York, if she had come to Halifax, she would have made the passage in 6½ days. The next steamer was the Vancouver, which I compare with the Gallia, which sailed 2 days after, and that would have made a difference of 5½ days. I compare the Sarmatian with the Umbria, and there was a difference of 3 days. The next was the Sarnia, which I compare with the Umbria, and here was a difference of 4 days. Then there was the Parisian, which is the best of our boats, and I compare her voyage with the Etruria, showing a difference of 3½ days. Then, the Oregon was 3½ days behind, and the Polynesian 4 days. Then I find that the Vancouver sailed from Liverpool on the 27th December for Halifax, and it so happened that the Cunard boat which sailed 2 days later was the Bothnia, which made a very long passage, and, if she had come to Halifax, she would have been as long on the voyage as the Vancouver was. On 3rd January the Sarmatian sailed, and I compare her with the Gallia, showing a difference of 6 days. I compare the Sarnia with the Servia, a difference of 2 days; the Circassian with the Etruria, a difference of 3 days. In other words, if the Cunard boats had been coming to Halifax instead of the boats we have, there would have been a difference of very nearly 3½ days on the average passage. Take, for instance, a passenger whose objective point is Toronto. He would arrive in Halifax a day and a-half before he could reach New York, with steamers of the same speed; and when we get the Short Line, when we have the Hong Kong fast express mail train which Mr. Van Horne has promised us, Montreal can be reached, he tells us, in 15 to 18 hours. It takes 12 hours longer to go to Toronto, and, therefore, you could reach Toronto before the steamer would arrive in New York. It is absurd to tell us that with such facilities it is impossible to establish a Canadian passenger traffic through Canadian ports. Nobody who has studied the question impartially, who is not prejudiced against our own country, and who has not lost all faith in Canada, could so express himself. Why, Sir, I do not wonder that gentlemen from Montreal, Toronto and those points do not come down to Halifax to-day to take those steamers. Halifax people themselves, in returning, at least, from Liverpool in the winter months, go all the way to New York and come down by land to Halifax rather than be 12½ days or 14 days on these steamers going to Halifax. I have given you several passages; they are the average, and since that I find that some of those steamers have been 12 days and 12½ days, and if they had been going to New York they would be just twice the time that the Cunard boats take to go to New York. Now, who, in the present day, when time is money, is going to be twice as long on the Atlantic than is necessary? As regards the mail matter which is carried by those subsidised Canadian boats, I am informed that the amount of Christmas mail matter for Montreal which came by way of New York was very much larger than that shipped by the regular Canadian mail steamer—I have that statement on the most undoubted authority. Now, hon. gentlemen have made a reference to the cattle service, and they have endeavored to frighten those who are interested in it, and that means the whole country, particularly the great Province of Ontario. Every hon. gentleman knows that no cattle are shipped to-day by mail steamers, there is no mail steamer that carries them. That service is at present conducted by the Beaver Line, by the Donaldson Line, by the second class Allan and Dominion Line boats, and a large number are shipped by Mr. Reeford of Montreal. I think we need not have the slightest misgivings as regards the cattle trade. As to the quantity of freight which these fast steamers carry, it is true that the Etruria, and some of those faster boats, do not carry more than 700 or a 1,000 tons; but it has been reported that the Andersons contemplate that the ship they are to build specially for this service, will carry from 1,000 to 2,000 tons. So I do not think there will be the slightest difficulty in handling that amount of cargo over the Intercolonial Railway or at the port of Halifax. That is really a matter not for us to consider, it is a matter for the contractors to consider, and for the owners of the line of steamers who may enter into a contract with the Government of Canada; but it need not, I think, cause us any anxiety in considering this vote. I believe, Mr. Chairman, this is one of the most important matters that the present Parliament has had to deal with. I remember being in England when the Canadian Pacific Railway was completed, and I have stated here and elsewhere, that there was no one act since Confederation which raised Canada so much in the estimation of foreign countries, and even in her own esteem, as the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I believe, also, that when it is announced that Canada, having established a land service which is unsurpassed, is also determined to establish an ocean service which cannot be surpassed, it will tend to raise Canada in the esteem of other nations, and will also be a policy which will prove generally acceptable to the people of this country.

Mr. JONES (Halifax) I do not expect my hon. colleague to agree with me, he seldom does, except on the Short Line, and even in that case, his point of departure and his arguments were utterly at variance with the true facts of the case, because in his party allegiance, he saw fit to abuse the Canadian Pacific Railway, which he is now lauding instead of blaming the Government who are the real parties at fault in that matter. I do not intend, however, to allow my hon colleague to place me in a false position in regard to what I said. He made a statement with apparent indignation, that I was abusing the port of Halifax. Well, I was stating what I always state, my honest opinion. My hon. friend sometimes, for party allegiance, conceals his opinion, as he had the frankness to tell us the other night that if he were on the Opposition side of the House, he would be much more comfortable in criticising an Act under consideration.

Mr. KENNY. Because it is so much more easy to find fault.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. gentleman gave us a list of the sailings and arrivals of the various steamers. He might have spared himself and the House that infliction. No one stated that the present line of steamers were equal to the lines running to New York. Everyone knows that the Allan and Dominion Lines of steamers are far behind the New York lines in point of speed. I never led this House to believe for a moment that our lines compared with them. But my contention was that when we get a line of steamers of 16 or 17 knots, which would be three knots faster than the present line, at a moderate rate they would be ample for our wants for freight and passengers. That was my contention, and the hon. gentleman should not have represented it otherwise. He mentioned the long passage of one steamer of the Allan Line called the Polynesian, that was 10 days. Well, if I were to reply in the same style as my hon. colleague, and say that to be frank I should have informed the House, and should have taken them into my confidence, and have told them all about it. I should say that he ought to have told the House that on that occasion the Allan steamer left Liverpool at a time when there was a strike among the stokers, and they could not get any stokers to handle the coal, and had to take men that were not accustomed to sea going vessels, and consequently she was at sea three days longer than she would have been under other circumstances. Therefore my hon. friend, who knows everything, should have informed this House, if he desired to be perfectly frank, of the true facts. As a piece of information which the House will, no doubt, be very grateful for, he says that no cattle are carried by mail steamers. I think the House will remember I made no such statement. I made no statement that the mail steamers carried cattle. In fact, everybody knows that they do not; the cattle go by different boats belonging to the same line, but the line being partly freight, partly mail and partly passenger, these different parts can all work together, and in that way they are able to perform the service at cheaper rates. My sole object is to warn the country against an unnecessary expenditure. My object is to have steamers come to Halifax that carry large cargoes, so that the people would have the benefit of handling them. My object is to get steamers that would carry 2,000 or 3,000 tons and have that freight pass over the Intercolonial Railway. The object of my colleague is to get steamers that will land 700 or 1,000 tons of freight. If he acuses me of running down the advantages of Halifax, I might say that he is surely undervaluing the advantages which would accrue to the laborers and people of Halifax from handling freight coming by such a class of steamers as I propose, in preference to the smaller quantity of freight which would come by the class of steamers proposed by my hon. colleague. I certainly say that if a steamer brought this increased quantity of freight and occupied one day longer on the voyage, it would be better than a steamer carrying so much less freight and occupying one day less. It would be more in the interest of the people of Halifax and the Intercolonial Railway, and more in the general interest of the business community as well as the public at large, and it would save the Dominion a large sum of money, and yet we would obtain steamers that would answer every purpose.

Mr. WELSH. I have listened to the remarks of the hon. members for Halifax. I am interested in that port and always consider it one of the best on the Atlantic seaboard. While I admit the truth of what has been said by the junior member (Mr. Kenny), I must remind him that steamers have many times been delayed from 24 to 48 hours outside the harbor by fog. I have been detained on board of these steamers by fogs, and if you were to go to St. John you might be detained there a week by fog. I have landed in the port of Halifax from ocean steamers about 100 times, and I therefore know about what I am talking. I challenge contradiction when I say that Halifax has as good a harbor as New York, and if we are to have a greyhound line, Halifax should be the terminal port in Canada. Passengers could be landed there in 24 or 30 hours shorter time than in New York; but in the winter season New York is the best port, as the route is a more southerly one, the vessels thus escaping the ice. We do not, however, know to what point the line is going to run, and if we had this information we could make a more satisfactory argument. In voting this sum of money, we must not take freight into consideration, for on principle I object to one shilling of the public money going to subsidise a line of steamers which would handicap our shipping interests. If a fast line has to be subsidised, let it be done, but put freight and cargo out of the question. If there is any freight to be carried there are 20 steamers at our ports ready to do it. As regards England, it is clear that if the line has to touch at a French port, the terminal port has to be Plymouth or Southampton or some port on the south; but we do not know whether the Government have made up their minds on that point, and therefore we are talking and voting in the dark. I see in the Estimates that we are voting large sums for railways, and I am afraid a great deal of the money will be even worse than thrown away because the lines will compete against existing lines. There is also the Marine Railway on which some millions are going to be thrown away. However, that is outside the question. I repeat that I have crossed the Atlantic a great many times, and I prefer sailing from Halifax to any other port on the Atlantic coast, and I shall be very glad to see that port made the starting point for steamers of the Dominion, and if a fast line runs from Halifax to Plymouth or Southampton, passengers could be carried in a shorter time than from New York to England.

Mr. KENNY. Laboring under the great disadvantage of being a comparatively young politician I have often felt that Halifax should be better represented on this side of the House; that it should be represented by someone who would occasionally say a kind word on its behalf more forcibly and more eloquently than I can do. Therefore, I thank my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Welsh), who came to the rescue of Halifax, when I might have expected rather the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) to have done so. As regards the want of candor of which I was guilty in not stating that the Sarmatian, which made this very long passage of 14 days, to which the senior member has referred, that hon. gentleman is quite correct in saying that was largely owing to the fact that there had been a strike among the stokers at Liverpool and that it was almost impossible for ocean steam lines to get men who were adapted and accustomed to the work. The long passage of the Sarmatian was undoubtedly due to that cause. So also was the long passage made by the Gallia of the Cunard Line, which sailed immediately afterwards. Some hon. members may remember that the Cunard Line, during December and January, made comparatively long passages, which was due to the fact that the stokers they had on board were not equal to their work. So, as regards the comparison, it was equally good, because both steamers suffered from the same cause.

Mr. FOSTER. We have to adjourn at 12 o'clock, Friday being a holy day. I would suggest that we should pass this now and leave further discussion until Concurrence on Saturday.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman should certainly give us the information that has been demanded as to where he proposes to go from on the other side and where he proposes to make the terminal point on this side. To ask us to pass even the first stage of a vote of $500,000 without knowing these important matters seems to me an insult to the intelligence of the House and a thing we should resist.

Mr. FOSTER. We will discuss that on Saturday.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No; we cannot discuss it in the same way as we can discuss it in Committee. It is of very great importance and we ought to have this information before us.

Mr. LAURIER. This question is not exhausted and several of our friends want to speak on this side.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). This is of very serious importance with regard to the Maritime Provinces, and my colleague and myself want to be heard upon it.

Committee rose and reported progress.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE.

Mr. MULOCK. With regard to the evidence taken before the Public Accounts Committee and ordered to be printed to-day, I find that it cannot be printed in time to be of any service. It is my intention at the earliest possible moment to make a motion on this subject, and I think it would be better if the evidence were kept within the control of the House so as it would be available when the discussion takes place. I make this announcement as I do not wish to have to postpone my motion merely because the evidence has not been printed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 12 o'clock (midnight).

Mr. WELSH.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SATURDAY, 20th April, 1889.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

NEW FORM OF BALLOT.

Mr. McDONALD (Victoria). I beg to move, with the unanimous consent of the House, the following motion:—

That a Select Committee be appointed, composed of Messrs. Amyot, Bryson, Godbout, Perley, Mills (Annapolis), Thérien, Weldon (Albert), Langelier (Montmorency), McCarthy, Edwards, and the mover, to enquire into and report upon a new form of ballot for Dominion elections, patented on January 17th, 1889, by Messrs. Durocher and Chabot, of Ottawa.

Mr. LAURIER. At this period of the Session I do not think the hon. gentleman should be allowed to make this motion.

Mr. CHARLTON. If the hon. gentleman is allowed to do so, I have a motion for a Committee on the paper and I might possibly call the attention of the Government to it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am afraid we cannot consent to have motions taken out of order, but we must follow the rule. The hon. gentleman spoke to me in regard to the matter, and I told him I objected to it, but he thought that he could obtain the unanimous consent of the House, in which case I said I would have no objection. The leader of the Opposition is perfectly correct in the position he has taken, and motions must be taken in order if we want to see the end of the Session before the dog days.

Mr. LAURIER. I am satisfied that hon. members have every disposition to assist the hon. gentleman (Mr. McDonald), but if we consented in this case, the same course must be pursued with other members.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If the leader of the Government had announced that there would be a general election during the coming year, the case would be different.

Motion withdrawn.

ORDNANCE LANDS IN THE CITY OF QUEBEC.

Mr. DEWDNEY moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 143) to authorise the conveyance to the Quebec Skating Club of certain Ordnance lands in the city of Quebec. He said: This Bill is to authorise the Government to convey certain Ordnance lands to the Skating Club of Quebec. We are unable to dispose of Ordnance lands except by public auction. In this case we ask special power to convey these lands, as the old skating rink is situated close to the fortifications of Quebec and is found to occupy an inconvenient position there, not only as regards the fortifications, but also as regards the new Parliament buildings. This building has been used, and the new building is proposed to be used, as an exhibition hall. The local Government have granted a large sum towards the new rink, provided the company obtain the site proposed, and this Bill is to authorise this Government to grant that site.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Is any arbitration to take place respecting the value, or is it to be transferred as a gratuity.

Mr. DEWDNEY. It is to be transferred as a gratuity.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I might state that one of the reasons that has induced the Government to take this action is that the present skating rink is very close to the fortification walls, and it has been deemed by the military advisers of the Department injurious to those walls, and it is considered that it would be an advantage if it were moved to the location suggested.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

EXTRADITION.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved :

That Bill (No. 84), "To extend the provisions of the Extradition Act," be removed from Public Bills and Orders and transferred to Government Orders.

He said : The object of the Bill has already been explained to the House so fully by the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), that I was not aware the House would expect any further explanation with regard to this motion. The Bill is one of general interest and of very considerable importance.

Mr. LAURIER. This Bill has not yet been read a second time. The principle of the Bill is not likely to meet with very serious objection, but it is a very important Bill and it requires a very large amount of careful discussion. I may suggest to the hon. gentleman that at this period of the Session, if the Government are to continue to crowd the paper with new matter every day, we will have to sit here until a period which it is not possible to anticipate now. I hope the Government will see the propriety of not crowding the paper any more, but of disposing of what we have on now and allowing other matters to stand over for another year. This is a very important Bill, and it would be well that it should be digested by the public before it is taken into consideration by this House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I may pay a tribute to the quickness of perception of my hon. friend, and those who sit behind him, in making the discovery that the Bill was not brought down earlier in the Session. There is very great impatience on the part of the people of Canada at our being subjected to this overflow of rascality from the United States. The cynics may say that we have enough of the article ourselves without importing it, but I think it is of some importance that it should be known everywhere that Canada does not at all desire to have this particular accession to its population, notwithstanding our great desire to have our population increased. We have no desire to have those people coming over here with their ill-gotten gains, and spending them in Canada. I think the hon. gentleman ought not to object to this Bill being put on the paper, because it will merely call the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite, as well as the attention of the public generally, to the measure. I think they will find that the Bill is so unobjectionable that there will be very little opposition. Of course, if it meets with serious opposition, it will be then for the House to say whether it ought not to stand over until next year.

Mr. LAURIER. The First Minister will see that the only fault I find is, that he has been so slow to get rid of this very undesirable population which comes from the United States. He only moves now, at the eleventh hour of this Session, and since the people of Canada are impatient in the matter, he should have submitted some legislation of this kind two Sessions ago. As to the compliment he pays us with regard to our quickness of perception, I may answer him in the words of the Latin poet: Timeo Danaos et dona ferentes.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The provisions of this Bill will meet with a large measure of acceptance on both sides of this House, but there is no use denying the fact that it is an extremely important Bill, and that it will require a good deal of examination and discussion. I understand that a similar Bill was introduced some years ago in this House, and it is my impression that that Bill received some opposition from the Imperial Government, and that they were not disposed to have any legislation of this kind. If there were any reasonable probability of this Bill being passed within the measurable time left at our disposal this Session, I, for one, would not offer the slightest opposition to its being introduced. It seems to me, that if we are going to introduce this Bill for the mere purpose of discussing it, that it is rather late in the Session. Anyone who looks at the Order paper, will see that even with the utmost disposition on the part of the Opposition to expedite business we cannot get through less than another fortnight, and if more Bills are brought down it means that we are to remain here for three or four weeks longer. This is rather hard on members who come from a distance. If this Bill is one that has in the past met with opposition from the Imperial Government, or at all events some expression of opinion that we should not legislate on the subject, I would suggest to the House that it is undesirable to waste one or two days in the discussion of it. I really think that we have got as much business before us as we can dispose of within the time that we should be asked to remain here. Hon. gentlemen know that we have so managed business in Committee of Supply that there must be a large amount of work on concurrence, and that we cannot, under any circumstances, allow concurrence to go through without a good deal of discussion. That being the case, if we desire to get home within any reasonable time, we should not consent to the admission of new subjects unless they are of such importance as to entitle the Government to say that they must ask the House to go on with them. The hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) had his Bill on the Order paper and he had an opportunity of going on with it.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I beg your pardon, I had not even one opportunity of proceeding with it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Well, perhaps that is so ; but, strong as I am in favor of the principle of the Bill, I know that, so far as it is retroactive, it is going to receive opposition from a certain portion of the House.

Mr. CHARLTON. It strikes me that this Bill might be transferred to the Government Orders, and we can then ascertain whether it is likely to consume much time or not.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is my proposition.

Mr. CHARLTON. It is a very important Bill, and I have often felt, when in the United States, that there was a sort of stigma and opprobrium thrown on this country as being a refuge for all their scoundrels, and that the idea prevails there that Canada is an asylum for all the defaulters and thieves of the United States. I feel a little anxious that this Bill should receive attention this Session on account of the good name of my country abroad, and I do not think we would lose very much by giving that amount of attention to this matter which will be required.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I introduced a Bill on this subject in the Session of 1871 or 1872, but I failed to get it further than the first reading, and the following Session I introduced it, and the Bill was read the second time. The First Minister then informed me that there were Imperial objections to the measure and that it could not go further than the second reading. I think there was a despatch from Earl Granville on the subject objecting to the matter being dealt with by reciprocal legislation. This measure would restore the old condition of things that existed between the Province of Upper Canada and the State of New York. There are decisions on this subject which my right hon. friend will find referred to in Story's work on the "Conflict of Law." From that time to this no further action has been taken on this matter, on account of the decision of the Imperial Government that this important matter of extraditing persons must be a matter regulated by treaty, and that the liberty of a person seeking asylum in any portion of the Empire is too important to be dealt with as a mere question of policy. The hon. gentleman, of course, knows whether this is still the view of the Imperial Government. I do not think that, at this late period of the Session, we should be asked to remain a week longer for the sake of discussing this subject.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We cannot claim any credit at all for the introduction of this Bill, for it was introduced by my hon. friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon), who is of the same opinion as my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), that there was a sort of feeling in the neighboring republic that we were making Canada an asylum for all their rogues.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Not any more than they are making the United States an asylum for our rogues.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Our answer is plain, but it does not reach the general mind of the United States, that England and Canada have both been anxious largely to increase the number of offences for which extradition could be granted. If there has been any delay, it has been caused by the United States Government and Congress. It is quite true also, as the hon. member for Bothwell states, that there was an objection, which still exists, to this question being settled between the colony and the United States, if it were left there. There must be a treaty of some kind, and that treaty, as my hon. friend knows, looking back to the Statute-book, has been supplemented by Dominion legislation, carrying out practically the treaty, because the terms of the treaty, as between England and the United States, do not suit the circumstances of Canada and the United States. Under the treaty alone no man could be caught; such an opportunity to escape was allowed to him that the treaty was nugatory; and therefore, on two occasions at least, the Legislature of Canada provided by an Act of Parliament on the lines of the treaty, a means of carrying it into effect. My hon. friend proposes that this Bill shall take effect only on proclamation. That proclamation will, of course, not be issued until after communication with Her Majesty's Government. Her Majesty's Government will see what we are desirous of doing, and will press, I have no doubt, as she has hitherto pressed, the subject of an extended extradition treaty. The main object of having this Bill passed now is to inform the United States and England that Canada does not desire any such unworthy addition to her population, and that she is quite ready and anxious that a treaty should be made with the United States. I think the passage of this Bill will have a very beneficial effect in the United States. I think it will have a still more beneficial effect in preventing these men making this country an asylum when they know what the law of Canada as expressed by this Legislature, is, and when they know that it only remains for Her Majesty's Government to say whether the Act shall be in force or not. For these reasons it seems to me, unless there is very great objection to its terms, that it would be well to pass this Bill. My hon. friend proposes that we should put it among Government orders; then, the attention of the whole House being drawn to its terms, it can easily be decided whether there are any other crimes which should be included. In this way, if we pass the Act and send it home to England, I think it will be of great benefit in disabusing the minds of the people of the United States of the cry that has been raised, and in preventing these people coming into this country.

Mr. LAURIER. There is a great deal in what the hon. gentleman says, and I have no fault to find with the tenor of his remarks. The only objection we, on this side of the House, had to the Bill was that at this late period of the Session it was a very heavy Bill to undertake.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We will let it go with the understanding that if it is going to cause unnecessary delay it will be postponed.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the House resolve itself into Committee, on Monday next, to consider the following resolutions:—

1. Resolved, That it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to grant the subsidies hereinafter mentioned to the railway companies and towards the construction of the railways also hereinafter mentioned, that is to say

To the Ontario and Pacific Railway Company, for a line of railway from Cornwall to Perth, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $262,400.

To the Ottawa and Gatineau Valley Railway Company, for a line of railway from Hull Station towards Le Desert a distance of sixty-two miles, a subsidy not exceeding in the whole, $320,000.

To the Cap Rouge and St. Lawrence Railway Company, for twelve miles of their railway, from Lorette via Cap Rouge to Quebec, in the Province of Quebec, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $38,400.

To the Parry Sound Colonisation Railway Company, for forty miles of their railway, from the village of Parry Sound to the village of Sandridge on the line of the Northern Pacific Junction Railway, in the Province of Ontario, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $128,000.

For a railway from St. Andrew's to the Canadian Pacific Railway, at, or at any point east of the town of Lachute, in the County of Argenteuil, in the Province of Quebec, seven miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $22,400.

For a railway from Truro to Newport, in the Province of Nova Scotia, forty-nine miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $156,800.

For a line of the Central Railway, from the head of Grand Lake to the Intercolonial Railway, in the Province of New Brunswick, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $128,000.

To the Albert Southern Railway Company, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by the Act 47th Victoria, chapter 8, not exceeding in the whole, $31,771.43.

To the Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy mentioned in the Act 49th Victoria, chapter 17, not exceeding in the whole, $244,500.

To the Irondale, Bancroft and Ottawa Railway Company, for a line of railway from the Victoria branch of the Midland Railway to the village of Bancroft, in the County of Hastings, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by the Act 47th Victoria, chapter 8, not exceeding in the whole, $145,000.

To the Northern and Pacific Junction Railway Company, for a railway from Gravenhurst to Callander, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidies granted by the Acts 45th Victoria, chapter 14, and 46th Victoria, chapter 25, not exceeding in the whole, $35,000.

2. Resolved, That all the lines for the construction of which subsidies are granted shall, unless already commenced, be commenced within two years from the first day of August next, and completed within a reasonable time, not to exceed four years, to be fixed by Order in Council, and shall also be constructed according to descriptions and specifications, and upon conditions to be approved by the Governor in Council, on the report of the Minister of Railways and Canals, and specified in an agreement to be made in each case by the company with the Government, and which the Government is hereby empowered to make; the location also of every such line of railway shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council; and all the said subsidies respectively payable in cash shall be payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada by instalments, on the completion of each section of the railway of not less than ten miles, proportionate to the value of the portion so completed in comparison with that of the whole work undertaken, to be established by the report of the said Minister, or upon completion of the work subsidised.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) May I ask the hon. gentleman if the rumor in the papers is correct that other resolutions, providing for further subsidies, are to be brought down.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That rumor is correct. The hon. gentleman will see that the subsidies mentioned in this vote are mainly those which have lapsed, and the roads have not been completed within the statutory time. I do not think there will be a very extensive demand on the Treasury for railway subsidies, but there will be some.

Motion agreed to.

DAIRY FRAUDS.

Mr. BOWELL moved:

That the Order on Public Bills and Orders for consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 16) to provide against frauds in the supplying of Milk to Cheese and Butter Manufactories, be transferred to Governments Orders.

Motion agreed to.

ENQUIRIES.

Mr. LAURIER. In the absence of my hon. friend from South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), I would like to ask the Minister of Finance when he proposes to bring down the Supplementary Estimates which he has yet to bring?

Mr. FOSTER. My present intention is to bring them down on Monday.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether the semi-official report in the Montreal Gazette, that the Government have extended the mail contract with the Allan line for another year, is correct?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is.

INLAND REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved second reading of Bill (No. 139) further to amend the Inland Revenue Act, chapter 34 of the Revised Statutes.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. MILLS. It would be a great advantage if the hon. gentleman would make himself slightly acquainted with the political geography of that country. Outside of the North-West Territories there is a large territory extending eastward to the Hudson Bay, that part of which, formerly called the District of Keewatin, is now a myth. The whole southern portion of the district—the only portion in which there are any white settlers at all, or half-breeds—is now included either in the Province of Ontario or Manitoba. The boundary of Manitoba was extended eastward from where it was formerly until it reaches the western part of Ontario. Now, there was formerly between the eastern boundary of Manitoba and what was admitted to be the western boundary of Ontario a considerable extent of territory which was declared to be in the district of Keewatin. That district was extended between these lines northward, and all the territory south of the Albany River, and in so far as Manitoba is concerned, the 54th parallel, is now included in either the one Province or the other, so that, except in the extreme north, there is really no district of Keewatin at all. If the hon. gentleman proposes to give jurisdiction not included in the North-West Territories, he had better say so, and leave out Keewatin.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. At all events leave the word Keewatin in; it will do no harm, and we will have no boundary dispute.

On section 2,

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) This Bill was evidently prepared before the Bill amending the Summary Convictions Act was introduced by the Minister of Justice. The limitation of time for bringing an action in that Act was fixed at three months formerly, and the Minister of Justice introduced a Bill extending the time to twelve months. On discussion that was altered to six months. That legislation would render this section unnecessary, and the Minister ought to accept that limitation.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It was found necessary to amend the Customs Act by making the limit twelve months, and the same limit would apply to the Inland Revenue Department.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Perhaps it would be better to make this the same as the Customs Act at present, and next Session, if it be in accordance with the general opinion of members of Parliament, we might amend both statutes.

On section 9,

Mr. MULOCK. I would ask the Minister of Inland Revenue, if he has endeavored to meet the requests of some of the scientific institutions in regard to the sales of methylated spirits free of duty?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I have received several applications from scientific and other institutions to have spirits furnished to them free of duty for the purposes of those institutions. In the change we made last year, we did away with the supply of methylated spirits manufactured outside, as that was much abused, and we have been obliged to refuse the application of many institutions in the country for the use of alcohol. The matter, however, is under consideration. We desire to meet the demand of those institutions which are erected for charitable purposes, but I cannot say that we have arrived at a decision. There is one way, perhaps, in which we might meet their demand. We furnish the trade with these classes of spirits of a higher and a lower grade. The objection made by the scientific institutions is that we introduce the wood naphtha mixed with spirits, which is objectionable for the uses to which they apply it. If they were furnished a higher grade of these methylated spirits, I think it would answer most of the uses for which they want it.

Mr. MULOCK. I am glad the Minister is endeavoring to give a favorable decision to the application, but it is hardly meeting the case to say that it is under consideration. I believe there has been communications laid before the Department from a great many of the educational and charitable institutions of Ontario—hospitals, for example, museums, and various educational institutions which are all deeply interested in this matter. I understand from communications that I have received upon the subject, that the proportion of methyl in wood naphtha is so great in the spirits now issued by the department, that the methylated spirits are practically useless for the purposes of science and education, and it therefore involves them in the payment of this heavy duty on that grade of spirits. In the United States I understand they have got over the difficulty. I am not familiar with their scheme, but one of the gentlemen who have spoken to me on the subject, informed me that in the States a bond was taken from the curators of museums and from hospitals and medical schools. These authorities were entrusted with so much spirit, and this bond was given that the spirits would be used for the particular purpose for which they were handed out. Now, why might not that system be adopted in this country? The duty is very heavy—it is an enormous taxation; and I am sure if the Minister appreciated the difficulties of these institutions, which are, in fact, philanthropic in their object, he would not allow the Session to pass without meeting their wishes.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not think there will be any great difficulty outside the question of duty; it is just a matter of giving up a certain amount of duty to the country. As concerns the spirits in the hands of these scientific institutions, that matter could be very easily arranged. These institutions, of course, are respectable bodies, and no doubt they would put the liquor so furnished them to the proper use. I am now in communication with an institution to which we have made a proposition, which they may accept as satisfactory. We desire to meet their views, if possible. The hon. gentleman mentions the class of methylated spirits that we have now, which has 50 per cent. of wood alcohol. If we cannot give them the free spirits, we could give them a higher rate of methylated spirits, and we have enquired what grade would suit them.

Mr. MULOCK. Then I understand the Minister to say that there is no practical difficulty in meeting the requests of these public bodies; the whole question is one of revenue; that is the point that causes the Government to hesitate. If that is the only cause of hesitation, I do not think there should be any hesitation in regard to many of these institutions. Take some of the petitioners to the Government—hospitals, museums, and charitable institutions, depending upon charity for their maintenance—not business institutions, but existing simply for philanthropic purposes. Can we for one moment say that they should be taxed in their efforts? I do not think that the question of duty should cause any hesitation at all. I understand from the museums that the proportion of wood alcohol that you have been putting into the spirits up to the present time, renders the mixture wholly unfit for their purpose.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They drink methylated spirits in the North-West.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister says he can get over the difficulty.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Leave it to him.

Mr. MULOCK. Why can you not take power in this Bill?

Mr. COSTIGAN. We do not want it, we have the power.

Mr. MULOCK. Is there power now to issue the methylated spirits free from all duty of excise? Suppose that during the vacation the Government and the applicants are able to come to an understanding; is there statutory power whereby you can issue spirits of the character in question, to these institutions, free of all taxation?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What is meant in this section:

"There shall be imposed, levied and collected on goods manufactured in bond within Canada, the following duty of excise, which shall be paid to the collector of Inland Revenue."

What do these words "in bond" mean?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I said the other day that last year when we amended that clause for the purpose of doing away with the manufacture of methylated spirits, we repealed too much. There is a manufacture going on now of what is called fulminate, of which cartridges are made, and we repealed so much of the Act that we have no authority to collect the duty upon that article. We simply re-enact the old clause, leaving out what we intended to leave out, so that it covers everything. It is the old clause except that we leave out the manufacture of methylated spirits.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What is comprised in these words of section 9, "all goods manufactured in bond"?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Such articles are manufactured in bond under the control of the Inland Revenue Department. This Act has been on the Statute-book for many years.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Does it cover the manufacture of flour in bond?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No.

Mr. COSTIGAN.

On section 10,

Mr. DAVIN moved: That section 238 of the Inland Revenue Act be further amended by adding the following sub-section thereto:—

"The Minister of Inland Revenue may give permission to brewers in the North-West Territories to import or manufacture and use malt in the manufacture of beer, provided they shall not manufacture beer of a strength of more than 4 per cent. alcohol."

He said: I have been asked what is the reason why I fix 4 per cent. The reason I do it is this: At present, beer is permitted, on special permit, to come into the Territories and be sold there, and the grossest injustice is done to our brewers. Before this permission was given, we had brewers in Regina, Moose Jaw, Medicine Hat and Calgary who manufactured what is called hop beer. The moment 4 per cent. beer was permitted to enter, it entirely destroyed these men's industries, and all the capital they had invested. My friend, Mr. Allan, must have had no less than $10,000 invested at Moose Jaw. And the other day we had an instance as to the effect of granting this permission. Mr. Tracey, who manufactured 4 per cent. beer at Medicine Hat, was taken by the heels and carried before a justice of the peace, fined $300, his plant was confiscated, and he was thrust into prison for eight months for manufacturing that which is sold freely, on a special permit, at an hotel within a stone's throw of his own establishment.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Illegally sold.

Mr. DAVIN. Not illegally sold. I can assure this Committee there is not a temperance man or a prohibitionist in all the North-West who is not in favor of allowing us to manufacture our own beer, if once this 4 per cent. beer is allowed to be sold. We can grow the best barley in the world, and it is an anomalous state of things that 4 per cent. beer can he imported from Portage la Prairie and Winnipeg, where it is manufactured, and sent into the Territories, and yet our own brewers are taken by the heels and brought before a justice of peace and fined for making beer that is sold freely in the neighboring hotels. It is, of course, an anomalous state of things, which this Parliament should terminate at once. Any injustice like this, small though it may be, creates an amount of irritation which is very hard for those not familiar with the North-West Territories to understand. In regard to the enquiry as to why I put the strength at 4 per cent., I reply that I do so because I have no argument for putting it at any higher strength. I am not sure that is strong enough for the palates of the North-West people, but I have no argument to put it any higher. I hope the Committee will pass this clause. I am very unwilling, at this period of the Session, to occupy the time of this Committee, but hon. gentlemen must remember that if they take the responsibility of governing those territories, and there are two Bills before the House which show that the real responsibility for governing those territories rests with this House, they must not begrudge some time to discuss the interests of the territory, the responsibility for the government of which lies in them.

Motion negatived, Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

GENERAL INSPECTION ACT.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved second reading of Bill (No. 137) further to amend the General Inspection Act, chap. 99 of the Revised Statutes.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. COSTIGAN. I propose to add after section 5:

That section 33 of the said Act is hereby amended by adding the words "and Winnipeg" after the words "St. John, N.B.," in the fourth line thereof.

He said: This is with the intention that the Board of Trade of Winnipeg shall have a representative with the cities named in the Act in making such standards. I also move, in consequence of a representation made to me by the hon. members for Ottawa, Frontenac and Northumberland, as well as by others:

That section 99 be repealed and the following section inserted in lieu thereof: "That every person, except the inspector and deputy inspector, who stamps or numbers raw hides or leather above-mentioned and exposes them for sale so stamped or numbered, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding $20. But any person shall be allowed to mark in chalk on the said leather and hides the weight thereof."

Bill reported.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. DAVIN. I move that the Bill be referred back to Committee in order that the word "eleven" shall be inserted instead of the word "nine" in the second line of sub-section 3. As the section stands at present the whole North-West Territories will have only one representative on that board, and he will come from Regina. Now, Moose Jaw is the centre of as fine a grain growing country as there is in the world, and there is a Board of Trade at Moose Jaw. I believe we should have three representatives from the North-West Territories—one from Moose Jaw, one from Regina and one from Medicine Hat.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. What about Calgary?

Mr. DAVIN. We will add Calgary, if the right hon. gentleman wishes.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. And Edmonton?

Mr. DAVIN. Well, I hope we shall have a railway very soon at Edmonton and that we shall have a representative from there too. It is perfectly clear that only one representative on this board is not just to the North-West Territories, for certainly within two years it will produce more grain than Manitoba.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I am sorry the hon. gentleman found it necessary to raise that question. I will not question the propriety of his having done so, nor his motive; but there is one fact which I think he has overlooked, that this amendment is proposed at the earnest request of the people in the western country. It is not a question as between Manitoba and the North-West at all; it is to deal with the grading of the wheat of the western country, and the fixing of the samples in accordance with the standard established by law. I have no objection to changing the clause and making it read, "not exceeding 11."

Mr. WATSON. Then you would have to increase the quorum to six.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not necessarily.

Motion agreed to, Bill amended in Committee, and read the third time and passed.

LOAN TO MENNONITE IMMIGRANTS.

Mr. CARLING moved second reading of Bill (No. 138) respecting a loan therein mentioned to certain Mennonite immigrants.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee on the Bill.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. CARLING moved to strike out the words commencing with "and" in the 36th line of the preamble, to the word "and" in the 41st line, and that the words "by a reduction of the rate of interest on the said loan," be substituted. He said: The amount of money loaned to the Mennonites was $96,400, and it has been agreed that they shall pay 4 per cent. interest from the time this loan was made to them up to the 1st of July, 1888, amounting to $33,986.54. This Bill is to confirm that arrangement.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The preamble, as it is, carries out the resolution as it passed the Committee, but now you propose to strike out the provision providing for 4 per cent. interest, and enable the Government to reduce it down to 1 per cent.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman will see, in perusing the recital still further, that it mentions the exact amount which the Government has taken in full, and it then proceeds to enact in confirmation of the proceedings of the Government in so doing. The objection to giving the exact rate of interest is that a good deal depends, in ascertaining the amount, on the law of the appropriation of payments, as to which there may be some difficulty. The sums mentioned are the sums according to which the accounts have been kept in the Finance Department. The preamble therefore adopts those figures, which are really 4 per cent. on the loan, although perhaps the interest might not have been allowable sometimes on the payments which were made by the Mennonites, as it might not be strictly for principal. Therefore we propose in the recital simply to say that the loan bore 6 per cent. compound interest, that the Government agreed to reduce it to 4 per cent. and that they agreed to take the sum mentioned in full.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

COPYRIGHT ACT AMENDMENT.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved second reading of Bill (No. 101) to amend the Copyright Act. He said: This Bill is intended to remove certain grievances which exist in connection with the copyright law of Canada. The House is no doubt aware that copyright in Canada is governed in part by Imperial statute and in part by the statute of this country. Under the Act of this Parliament, an author can obtain copyright in Canada only on condition of his printing and publishing or reprinting and republishing in this country. No such condition, however, is attached to the copyright in the United Kingdom, which is applicable also to Canada. The result is that while we have a copyright law requiring publication here as a condition of copyright, in the interest of our own people, our publishing houses are unable to republish the works which have received a copyright in the United Kingdom without a transfer of the rights of the author, or the person having obtained a copyright there. This grievance has been magnified by the treaties of Great Britain, by which she has extended the facilities given by her copyright system to the citizens of a great many countries, both in Europe and on this continent. Under these circumstances a citizen of any one of these countries having treaty arrangements with the United Kingdom, secures a prohibition in Canada of the republication of his work. That prohibition does not extend to citizens of the United States. While, therefore, a Canadian publishing house is not at liberty to republish such a copyrighted work, a publishing house in the United States, having obtained a transfer of the rights to Canada possessed by the author can republish in the United States and have complete command of the Canadian market, while, on the other hand, it is impossible for a citizen of Canada, under any circumstances, to obtain copyright privileges in the United States. This is not a matter of theory. As a matter of fact, and of actual practice, it has recently transpired that English authors and publishers prefer to sell their copyright privileges as to Canada, and the right to republish in Canada, to American publishing houses, who, perhaps, give them a larger consideration for the right to republish in Canada than the Canadian publishing houses would; and in consequence the American publishing houses issue their enormous editions first, by the facilities which the free pirating system of the United States gives them, and secondly, under the rights of the British copyright author, which have been refused to be transferred to Canadians, and which give the American publisher rights all over Canada It is felt that this is a condition under which our own publishing houses ought no longer to continue. We ought no longer to continue a prohibition against our own publishing houses which does not extend to those of the neighboring country in relation to our own market. There is a further anomaly as regards the American author. It is necessary, it is true, that there be a residence by the authors to obtain copyright, in the United Kingdom, but the residence has been decided to be of a merely nominal character, and therefore the American author has a right, by the mere fact of residence in the United Kingdom or one of its dependencies for a very short time, to obtain copyright in the United Kingdom and thereby foreclose the publishing in Canada of his works. The American author, can also secure, by simultaneous publication in the United Kingdom and the United States, and by obtaining copyright in the United Kingdom and the United States—secure without any consideration whatever, so far as this country is concerned—the absolute control of the Canadian market. It may be supposed that that observation is subject to some qualification, because we have the right, of course, to import the English editions; but it is well known that until a long time has elapsed the English editions are high-priced editions—so high-priced that they cannot be imported successfully in this country or circulated generally in the face of the keen competition of the American cheap editions; so that it is quite feasible for the American author to obtain his copyright in both countries, issue his cheap edition in the United States, and his more expensive edition in the English market, and, under his copyright in the United Kingdom, still keep control of Canada, and, under his copyright with the United States, obtain the right to publish a cheap edition which will completely monopolise our market. We propose to prevent that; we propose to say that the conditions for copyright shall be—and this is the first part of the Bill—as heretofore, the publishing or republishing of the book in Canada; and we say that unless the author who has obtained copyright in the United Kingdom, shall simultaneously obtain a copyright in Canada, and republish his book here within a month after, the Minister of Agriculture shall be at liberty to give a license to any Canadian to publish the work. This is a strong step in the interests of all those connected with the publishing industry in Canada, it is true, and it may be supposed to be a strong step against the British author. But, on the other hand, we propose by this Bill—and that is its second feature—that there small be collected an excise duty on all the books published under that license. And those who have made a study of the subject assure me that the proceeds to be derived from that excise duty, will give the British author far more compensation for the sale of his works in Canada than he could possibly derive by other means. We propose that that excise duty of royalty shall be collected by the Department of Inland Revenue, under regulations to be made by the Governor in Council. We also propose, by an amendment which I will suggest in Committee, that the provisions of the Act shall not be retrospective in regard to any copyrights obtained before the passing of this Act. I may explain to those who are not acquainted with the publishing business, and to whom it may appear exacting to require that the copyright shall be obtained simultaneously in both countries, and that the work shall be issued within a month, that it would be impossible to provide for a greater interval. We must necessarily take care that, during the interval allowed between the obtaining of the copyright and the republication of the work in Canada, American reprints should not be allowed, because, but for that provision, the prohibition would be futile, as the market would be taken possession of by the American editions. It is therefore important that the interval should not be more, otherwise the reading public would be at a disadvantage in Canada compared with those in other countries. A month is not too long a time. It is the period allowed for interim copyright under the present law, so that principle has been established, and publishers inform me that it is not an uncommon practice for authors who desire to have copyrights in two countries to make provision for the work of the printing being proceeded with in the two countries simultaneously in such a way that a work could be issued in America within two or three hours of its issue in the United Kingdom. That, of course, would be necessary in any work of magnitude which required more than a month for its entire production in Canada; but, for the class of works to which this Act will generally apply, the month will not be found too short, and we could hardly make the time longer without doing an injury to the Canadian reader.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does not this Bill attack the rights given by the Imperial Act?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is in conflict with the Imperial Act.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) How do you propose to repeal the Imperial Act by an Act of this Parliament?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not propose to repeal the Imperial Act, but, under the British North America Act, I think we have the right to legislate in respect to this subject irrespective of any statute of the Imperial Parliament passed before the British North America Act was passed. The Imperial Copyright Act was passed in 1842. The Act which declared that colonial statutes were invalid if they were repugnant to Imperial statutes was passed in 1865. Two years after that, we received the ample gift of powers which the British North America Act contains. In the exercise of those powers, we have repealed, sometimes by implication, and sometimes directly, scores of Imperial enactments, in addition to volumes of the Common Law of the United Kingdom; and, if the objection were sustained in regard to the exercise of our powers on the question of copyright, it would strike off at least one half of the Revised Statutes. That I may be candid with the House, I may say that the other view was taken by the Colonial Office, and in 1875, the despatch of Lord Carnarvon had this bearing, that a certain Canadian statute on this subject having been passed, Her Majesty could not be advised not to disallow that Act, because it was repugnant to the law of the United Kingdom in regard to copyright, which extended through Her Majesty's colonies. He stated that he had been advised to that effect by the Crown officers, and that, in addition to that, two lawyers of eminence had given an opinion to the same effect, and he referred to a parliamentary Blue-book to support that statement. I have looked at the Blue-book very carefully, and I think everyone who examines it will agree with me that it does not justify the statement by Lord Carnarvon in that despatch. I would feel some hesitation in asking Parliament to take a course contrary to Lord Carnarvon's opinion if we did not necessarily act from day to day on the principle that we can legislate on subjects of this character, which are given into our control by the British North America Act irrespective of anterior legislation of the Imperial Parliament, and if my views were not supported by three cases which have been decided since that date. The Privy Council has declared, in the most emphatic terms, that the Dominion Legislature has power to repeal an Imperial statute.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). This question is reserved by the British North America Act.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Under the British North America Act it is stated that Acts existing prior to the union of the Provinces shall remain in force until they are repealed either by the Imperial Parliament or the Local Legislature, as the case may be, excepting as to Imperial statutes. So that would cut out Imperial statutes, and leave them as they were, irrespective of that section. We have repealed Imperial statutes since then, and the Privy Council has decided that we had the right to do so. The fundamental principle is that we are not restrained from legislating on any matter in regard to which power is given to us by the Act of 1867.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the hon. gentleman state what decision of the Privy Council there is stating that this Parliament has the right to repeal an Imperial statute passed before 1867?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The three cases to which I referred are all contained in the tenth volume of Appeal Cases. The most direct decision is contained in Regina vs. Riel.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Those were Australian cases.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. One was an Australian case. The Act constituting the Legislature there, simply gave them legislative powers, as the B. N. A. Act does.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). This is a very important constitutional question that has been raised by the Minister. The question has been raised whether, under the British North America Act, bankruptcy and insolvency are placed under the control of the Dominion Parliament in the same way as copyright. A similar case occurred in Ontario, some years ago, in regard to registration.

Mr. MULOCK. In that case the Act was passed after Confederation, but, by an Imperial Act, was declared to apply to the Provinces.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not pretend that the matter is so plain that it is not open to argument. The hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) gave notice of a motion for an address, asking that an Imperial statute should be passed. On explaining to him my views I think he agreed with me that the most dignified course would be to pass a statute of our own. I feel confident, especially in view of the decisions which I have referred to, that we have these powers; if we have not, the sooner we get them the better. It is impossible that we can have still applicable to this country, as, for instance, the North-West Territories, the English statutes that were in force in relation to those Territories when we purchased the country. Every enactment we have made with regard to that territory would be null if we had not the power to deal with Imperial statutes. It is so with regard to the great volume of our law. If we have power to legislate in this direction, this is probably the most dignified way in which to exercise it; if we have not the power, this is the most respectful and dignified way of seeking the enlarged powers which we need.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). In the two Bankruptcy Acts we passed, we made express provision limiting the effect of a discharge in any other country except Canada, and the Acts were both sent to England for consideration.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

Mr. ELLIS. How does this affect the larger works which no Canadian publisher would undertake to publish? Take many English works of travel, or large maps, how will it affect them?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I asked that question of persons who are in the publishing business, and I was informed that this was provided for in two ways. If the English author desires to have his work copyrighted in Canada, he will make provision for publishing here while his work is going through the press in England. But you will find that there is no prohibition against the introduction of American reprints after the time has expired, and when no license is taken out.

Mr. ELLIS. That would seem to be all right, except that the terms of the Act seem to require that the book shall be printed.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. If the English author wants his copyright here, he must print it here simultaneously with its being printed in England; but if he abandons a copyright and nobody takes out a license to reprint here, then the American edition is allowed to come in.

The CHAIRMAN. It is proposed to add the following as the third sub-section of the first section:—

"If any such copyright work has been reprinted previously to the passing of this Act, any person who has previously, to such date, imported any foreign reprint, may dispose of such reprint by sale or otherwise, but the burden of proof to establish the extent or regularity of the transaction, shall in such case be upon such person."

Amendment agreed to.

On section 4,

Mr. MULOCK. Suppose the security should turn out to be defective and the Government did not succeed in collecting all the royalty, the Crown might be held responsible. This should be provided against by the insertion of the following words: "But the Government shall not be liable to account for any such royalty not actually collected."

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I have no objection to inserting the words. The security was merely against fraud on the part of the publishers. There must be some system by which excise duty will be paid before the books are issued.

On section 5,

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) This will prohibit the whole importation from the United States.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not see any other way in which to protect our publishers than by prohibiting the importation from the United States of a book which is copyrighted here. The same principle prevails in our copyright law at present.

Mr. ELLIS. An obligatiun ought to be put on the man to publish the book immediately.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think the limit is well defined in the Act.

Mr. MULOCK. It appears to me that any person ought to be entitled to a license under section 3. As it stands at present, it is optional with the Government to issue more than one license. What would be the objection to any person being entitled to a license on coming here and complying with the conditions laid down, namely, giving security?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is what is intended by the Bill now.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Suppose a party applied for a license and shows that he is prepared to publish and print, and just as he is ready to publish another party makes the same demand; if you grant it you destroy all the labor and expense the first party was put to. Further, there is no provision as to the time the license expires.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think that the only alternative between granting rival applications for licenses is to give a monopoly and issue only one license, but I think this is a most objectionable alternative. We run the risk, it is true, of competition destroying the profit to the person who takes the license, but it is better to run the risk of that competition than to say that one licensee shall have the right to monopolize the market, even though he breaks down in making the publication.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I think that the license should expire in twenty-eight years, the same as the copyright, and that provisions should be made for that.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I would ask the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) to consider whether, after all, it is necessary to limit the license, because he will see that it does not give any exclusive right to publish. At the end of twenty years a copyright expires, and then there is no necessity for a license at all, as anybody can publish.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The prohibition remains against importation.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The amendment should be there, and not in the provision relating to the license.

The CHAIRMAN. The following is proposed as a sub-section of section 5:—

"The prohibition may also be withdrawn on its being made to appear that the copyright of the author has expired."

Amendment agreed to.

On section 6,

The CHAIRMAN. It is proposed to add the following to section 6:—

"Nor shall anything in this Act be deemed to apply to any work of which any copyright has been obtained in the United Kingdom, or such country as aforesaid, before the passage of this Act, but the law in force at the time of the passing hereof shall be deemed to be still in force as affects such work."

Amendment agreed to.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I propose that the Act shall go into force by proclamation on a day to be named by the Governor in Council. Owing to the view taken of this subject in England, it will be necessary that it be discussed by the Imperial authorities, and that the views of Her Majesty's Government be ascertained before it comes into force, because it might be subject to Imperial disallowance. I propose as section 7, therefore, the following:—

"This Act shall come into force on a day to be named by proclamation of the Governor in Council."

Amendment agreed to, and Bill reported.

SECOND READING—IN COMMITTEE.

Bill (140) to amend the Revised Statutes respecting Escapes and Rescues.—(Sir John Thompson.)

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

MAIL SERVICE—CANADA AND EUROPE.

House again resolved itself into Committee on resolution (p. 1329) respecting a contract for the performance of a fast weekly steamship service for the carrying of mails between Canada and the United Kingdom, making connection with a French port.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. WELDON (St. John). This is a matter which interests the whole Dominion of Canada, but more especially the Maritime Provinces, and to a still greater degree the principal seaports of the Maritime Provinces. In 1886, advertisements were published asking for tenders for a line of steamships from the United Kingdom to Quebec in the summer and Halifax in the winter, and it was provided that the terminal point might be Portland or any other place in the United States, as the Postmaster General might direct. That proposition created considerable agitation in St. John, and a large deputation waited on the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Public Works and the Minister of Marine in regard to it. The result was that the proposition was changed and the tenders were altered so as to make the terminal point in Canada. Nothing appears to have been done at that time in regard to it, but I understand that at present the Minister of Finance proposes to make the terminal point of the steamship line which may be subsidised a Canadian port. That, of course, interests the people of the Maritime Provinces, in regard to the winter, because it is clear that the steamers, during the summer months, will proceed to Rimouski and Quebec, as the present steamers do. As I understood from the Minister of Finance the other day, the Government had received tenders from certain steamship lines which were not satisfactory. I think, before we discussed this matter, these tenders and the correspondence in connection with then should have been submitted to the House. We are working in the dark in this matter. We neither know upon what terms those tenders were made, nor what was deemed unsatisfactory, nor what correspondence took place, nor what were the propositions of the Government as to the port from which the vessels should sail in the United Kingdom, and where they should touch, or where they will terminate in the Provinces. When we are casting such a large yearly burden upon the finances, I think we should be taken into the confidence of the Government, and should know what the Government propose, and what they have refused. First of all, we ought to know what size these vessels are to be, and what are to be the rates of speed. We should know if they are to be 20 knot vessels, or what speed they are to have, because the advance has been very rapid in the building of steam vessels and of the machinery which they require. The vessels of twenty years ago, and even those of ten years ago, are now obsolete, and every day we find a new class of steamers introduced with improvements in the hull and in the structure of the vessel as well as in the machinery; and we find that latterly a large class of vessels have been introduced by the Cunard line which have eclipsed those which were considered large steamers a short time ago, such large vessels as the Umbria and the Etruria; and those in their turn, large as they are, are eclipsed by such large ships as the City of Paris and the City of New York, of the Inman line. It is very important that we should know the size of the vessels which can be obtained for this service, and the number of knots they are to run. Then comes a very important question, which is the connection with a French port. That must be a very serious factor in the decision of the port from which these vessels are to sail in the United Kingdom, and it is also important to know with what port in France it is contemplated that the connection shall be made. If we are to have a class of steamers such as those which are now denominated the "greyhounds of the seas," it is certain that they would not make a connection with French ports themselves, because they would not think of crossing the English channel for that purpose. They would rather run the risks of half-a-dozen Atlantic voyages than cross the channel once. Therefore, the connection with France may be a matter very difficult to carry out. My hon. friend, the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) put forward very strongly the claims of Halifax, and gave a table showing that the distance from England to Halifax is less than the distance from England to New York, and he contended that the same class of passenger traffic which now goes to New York would be attracted to Halifax by fast ocean service. While I would be very glad to see all our Canadian traffic come to our own ports, and also to see a great traffic diverted from the American ports to a Canadian port, we cannot help feeling that nature is to a certain extent against us in regard to that matter, that geographically we can never be in exactly the same position as New York. In the first place, without derogating from the capabilities of Halifax as a harbor, we know that the approach to Halifax is much more difficult than the approach to New York.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). No.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). We know that they have this advantage in New York, that immediately they leave the port, they are at sea. I will not quarrel with my hon. friend beside me (Mr. Jones), but that is the general opinion. Besides, the New York vessels are able to take what is called the southern route in winter, and so are able to avoid the dangers attaching to the northern route. We cannot help that. It is caused by the physical and geographical positions in which we are placed. That is not decrying the Canadian port, but it is simply looking at things as they are. Then, as to the mails, an hon. gentleman has already pointed out that, in regard to the carriage of mails and passengers from the west, our geographical position puts us at a great disadvantage and that, while only one steamer would leave Halifax per week, the steamers are running daily from New York. I recollect, many years ago, when we advocated the formation of a line to connect with the American system on the border of New Brunswick and then have a line built through New Brunswick to Halifax, the general belief was that as soon as these railway lines were completed we should have the ocean traffic, and I, myself, firmly believed that would be the case. At that time we had, comparatively speaking, the best mail service between the United Kingdom and America, with the Cunard line heavily subsidised, and, at that time, almost without a competitor upon the ocean, because the American lines had failed. But a short time afterwards we saw, that instead of the traffic following the course we expected, it went by the New York line, and our expectations ended in disappointment. All these matters have got to be considered in deciding what course we should pursue under the present circumstances. My hon. friend alongside of me has pointed out what he believes would be a better service than these vessels, one that could carry a larger quantity of freight, with steamers, perhaps, not so swift, but sailing 16 or 17 knots. Then with regard to the terminal ports in the Dominion of Canada. As I said before, the Finance Minister has adopted the doctrine that the terminal point in North America shall be a Canadian port, and not an American one. If so, it seems to me that both Halifax and St. John should be considered in that respect. The people of St. John do not object to Halifax. The junior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) stated the other night that Halifax was far superior in every respect to St. John. My hon. friend from Prince Edward Island said he was detained by fogs one day in Halifax, and my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island said that he would be detained a week off St. John for one day that he would be detained off Halifax. Other charges have been been made against the Bay of Fundy, and it is well known that if you give a dog a bad name it sticks to him. But I repudiate entirely the charge that the Bay of Fundy is unfavorable to navigation. It may be true that in the summer months we have fogs; my hon. friend alongside of me says, occasionally, and I believe statistics would show that it is only occasionally; but during the winter months there is no such a thing as a fog. I find that during the six months from November to April inclusive, the average fog per month is not over 19 hours, and that during the winter months there is practically no fog at all. The harbor itself is of easy access. My hon. friend from Halifax has stated that no accidents happen to steamers going into that port; but I think, compared with St. John, there have been more casualties to steamers at Halifax than at St. John. I find that during the last ten years there have been 3,627 steamers seaward and 3,898 arrivals, or a total of 7,525 during the last ten years, visiting the port of St John. Out of that number there were only four steamers who received any casualties, namely, the State of Maine, York City, Humascoa and Dominion. I see by a St. John paper received to-day that the following steamships are on their way to that port:—Cervin, from Mediterranean; Cheniston, from New York; Damara, from London; Elstow, from Cardiff; Federico, from Boston; Merchant Prince, from Cardiff; North Angler, from Palermo; North Erin, from Palermo; and Washington City, from Barrow.

An hon. MEMBER. These are tramps.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Perhaps some of them are but they are large ocean steamers, and just as liable to run on the rocks as smaller ones. Some persons cry down St. John, but I would remark that the harbor of St. John is, I think, the only harbor north of Baltimore, or north of Cape Hatteras that has never been blocked by ice. I believe at times steamers have been cut out of the ice at Halifax and at Boston, but so far, never at St. John. We find that vessels can enter St. John at any season of the year, which cannot be said of any other port north of Hatteras. I think if my hon. friend should go up the Bay of Fundy, he would find it remarkably free of fog. I doubt if any part of the coast has been better surveyed. It is admirably well lighted, and has automatic buoys and fog whistles. I venture to say that if you ask the masters who have been in the habit of going there, men who have experience, they will tell you that there is no safer navigation than the port of St. John. In times past I can recollect when the Allen Line steamers were first subsidised to Portland, they were unable to obtain any cargo there, and I remember seeing steamer after steamer come to St. John to take in cargoes, and then go down to Portland to take the Canadian mails. In 1862, we saw all the large steamers of England lying there with the troops brought out at the Trent affair: we saw those splendid troop ships, at that time the largest ships afloat, like the Himalaya and the East Indian troop ships, the liners of the Peninsula and Oriental Company, the Allan Line, the Cunard Line, all the large vessels of those lines, from day to day coming into St. John and landing their troops, and not a single casualty occurred. Since 1862 some of the largest sailing vessels that every floated on the waters, including that well-known ship, the Great Republic, have come into the port at St. John, loaded and went away with perfect safety. So much has been said in depreciation of the Bay of Fundy and the harbor of St. John, that I think it is necessary to give these facts and statistics to show how unfounded those statements are. I do not wish to decry Halifax. We admit that Halifax, geographically, is situated better than we are; but I do submit that in the selection of the terminal point for steamers, St. John should be considered. We have this advantage, we are the nearest Dominion port to the west, of course not so near as the American ports, but it is the nearest port in Canada to Montreal and the west. We also have a large amount of trade and can provide cargoes for any vessel that comes there. We find that during the years between 1877 and 1886 there were 16,719 vessels inwards, of 5,261,658 tons; and 16,794 vessels outwards, with over 5,500,000 tons; making 33,512 out and in of that harbor, with a tonnage of 10,792,846, and you will find that the casualties, so far, inside the Bay of Fundy, have been very small, and are decreasing from year to year. As I said before, the bay soundings have been thoroughly completed, and there is good anchorage.

With respect to the manner in which the coast is lighted, I may say that both the American and the British coast are well lighted and buoyed, so that there is no difficulty in vessels coming there. The International Line, which has run for years between Boston and St. John, makes the trip as regularly as a railroad train, and this fact shows that, so far as approaching St. John is concerned, difficulties do not occur. I claim that our port should be considered as having claims with respect to the subsidised line of Atlantic steamers. If the Government are so anxious on the other side that the vessels should run from England to France, it is not too much that we in New Brunswick should ask, at all events, that the vessels should come from Halifax to St. John, where they would receive freight from the west and also that freight with which we would be able regularly to supply them. If we can show that the vessels could enter our harbors with safety, that its navigation was such that vessels properly and carefully managed could enter with comparative impunity from danger, I hold that our port should be considered, and if it is provided that this subsidised line should call at a French port on the other side, we have a right to claim what is fairly our due. This is a very large amount to grant. and it will form a very heavy charge upon the country, and yet, in regard to the scheme itself, we are left to a certain extent in the dark. We do not know what position we occupy, we do not know what port the vessel will start from, to what port they will go, at what port in France they will call. Surely, before this House is called upon to vote this large sum, and add a heavy burden to the country, we should have some further information as to what the Government propose to do. If, after full consideration and due argument, it is found that we cannot obtain large and fast steamers, such as go to New York, let us adopt the next best course, and obtain a line which, although not such a fast line, would probably be equally beneficial to Halifax, St. John, and the whole country. Let us, after obtaining information, fully consider the whole question, for we have each to bear equally the burden, and decide what is best in the interest of the whole country. I consider that such a line as I have indicated would probably confer greater benefits than a fast line that would simply carry mails and passengers, and not be able to carry our freight. Perhaps it would be better to have the fast mail steamers to compete with New York lines, but before we adopt such a policy we should ascertain the whole facts and not run blindfold into this expenditure. The Government surely have some scheme or proposition, and have formed some definite idea of what they propose to do; if not, they are running as much in the dark as the members of this House. It is only fair to members of this House, and to the people of the country, that full information with respect to the expenditure should be presented, that the whole matter should be fairly laid before the House, so that it can be fully discussed in the light of what has taken place and what the Government propose, and we should then endeavor to carry out that scheme which will most benefit the country.

Mr. SKINNER. I wish to address a few remarks to the House before it passes on this question, speaking from a similar standpoint to that occupied by my hon. colleague from St. John (Mr. Weldon). I do not quite understand whether my hon. colleague approves of the general proposition to grant subsidies to steamers for the purpose of developing trade with the mother country and the colonies in the Pacific and China and Japan, or not. I gather that it is rather doubtful whether he is in favor of it, yet I cannot say from what he stated that he is so or not, but it does not make any difference in regard to the general question. I am of the opinion that the large majority of the constituents we represent are in favor of a supreme effort being made by the country for developing this, what we might call a foreign trade, as the complement of the efforts made in regard to our internal trade, and they will cheerfully join in any reasonable way for the furtherance of the great object in view. I also know that our constituents are very much worked up indeed with respect to what they think are their rights and their reasonable expectations with regard to what has been their anticipation for many years in the past, and which to them and to us is a very grave matter indeed. The expectations of St. John, with respect to these matters, dates far back to the time when we came into union, twenty odd years ago. Then the question in agitation was the Intercolonial Railway. It was supposed that the railway would go through the centre of our Province into Quebec, and touch the cities of Quebec and Montreal by the shortest possible route through which a railway could be built, but in that we were disappointed. For reasons other than commercial ones, the railway was carried around the north shore, and accordingly our people have been agitating for a shorter line ever since, in order that the primary and fundamental ideas of Confederation might be carried out, and a railway built so as to give an outlet to the seaboard by the shortest practicable route. But the influences of Nova Scotia, the influences of the northern portions of New Brunswick, the influences of the Province of Quebec were brought to bear in favor of the object to run the Intercolonial Railway by the north shore, and St. John was not able to realise her expectations. But we have continued along, working as well as we could and anticipating that things would be set right from time to time, at all events with regard to these matters. That has led our people to think a great deal about what we call the Short Line Railway; and now that the Short Line is about completed and will be opened, I understand, in a few days, the merchants and business men of St John have naturally been looking forward to this position: that if steamers were engaged by subsidy or otherwise to go to Europe, after the opening of the Short Line, St. John should be the Atlantic terminus of the line. Halifax, of course, has put forward her claim with respect to this matter, and it is said here, and was said the other night, that geography is against us in New Brunswick. I take issue with that remark as to New Brunswick. I say that geography is not against us as the matter now stands. My colleague, the member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) referred to the agitation that was aroused in our country twenty or thirty years ago with respect to the sending of the passenger traffic from the United States and elsewhere, along the shortest route to Europe. I well remember that during that period it was thought and expressed that if the railway system were perfected so that passengers from the United States and western Canada could go to Halifax or the most extreme point of Nova Scotia, I think Louisburg, they would take that route, not from necessity but from desire, and passengers would go from the nearest point of connection between the continent of America and Great Britain. At that time it took about twelve or fourteen days to make the Atlantic voyage, and you well understand that two days made a difference in the shortening of the voyage then, but since that time the development of science in regard to steamships has reduced the passage to six, seven or eight days and people have not the same idea about crossing the Atlantic as they had then. It is a fact, however, that people do not care to make a railroad trip any longer than they can help to the port of departure, and that they prefer to go on the ship at the most convenient point, without reference as to whether that point is nearer to their objective port on the other side or not. Therefore, during the past few years steamships sailing from Halifax to Great Britain in the winter time have not been a success. My hon. friend the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) in speaking of this matter the other night said that this was on account of the slowness of the steamers. I do not think that he was correct in that, for even although they were rapid steamers people would not travel over a long journey on the Intercolonial Railway to Halifax in the winter time. Does the hon. gentleman suppose that passengers would go to Halifax in preference to St. John, the latter being a much shorter railway route from Western Canada. Even when they get the Short Line it will be 250 miles shorter to St. John than it will be to Halifax. I have not the slightest hesitation in saying that the passenger traffic can only be properly developed in Canada if St. John be made the winter port. We have now three lines of railway running out of St. John to the United States and to the western portion of Canada, and in a very short time we will have another line from that city through Maine to a number of towns and cities not now touched by railway communication. With these facilities for travel, the moment a passenger would land in St. John to go to the United States, or to Montreal, or Toronto, he would have a shorter journey to travel than if he landed at Halifax. On the other hand, those who oppose St. John say that it is not the easiest port of access from Liverpool. If a steamer from Liverpool sails for Halifax she has to deviate considerably in her voyage to come to the north and west, whereas if she came to St. John she would not have to deviate at all, and the fact remains that a fast mail and passenger steamer would arrive in St. John and have her passengers and mails discharged there as soon as or sooner than if she disembarked her mails at Halifax, and they had to come around by St. John by railway. Again they say: "Your port is not so safe as Halifax," and I have in my hand a statement put forth by the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Halifax only a few days ago, in which it is said: "Whereas the port of Halifax is the only safe and most desirable harbor on the Atlantic coast," and so forth. They have actually sent those circulars to the Government of this country and to the Parliament and people of Canada containing this false statement. What are the facts about the port of St. John? Here is the state of the marine business of St. John for the year ending 30th June, 1888: Tonnage arrived in vessels during the year, 514,858 tons. Tonnage departed from the port of St. John, 522,498 tons, or a total of 1,307,356 tons. That is a large business, and that business could not be conducted by any port that was not a safe port. We must remember also that some of the vessels trading with St. John were of the largest class and that among them were steamers of a much larger tonnage than will be those ocean greyhounds which may be constructed under the contract which it is now proposed to enter into. We find that the tonnage of the great port of Montreal, last year, was as follows: Tonnage arrived, 554,649 tons; tonnage departed, 594,858, total 1,149,507 only a little over the tonnage of the port of St. John. When you consider that Montreal has about four or five times the population of St. John and that we are conducting a business in St. John nearly equal to the tonnage required for the city of Montreal, you can see how important the port of St. John is. I think that it is not necessary to make any further remarks in reference to the safety of the port of St. John. The extent of the business that is done there confirms the statement repeatedly made that our port is one of the safest on the Atlantic coast, and I certainly was sorry to hear the hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island the other night, in his flippant and unthinking way, make the statement that steamers would be detained off the port of St. John, on account of fogs. It is known to merchants and shipowners that in winter time there is no fog off St. John, and it is one of the freest port from fogs on the Atlantic coast. We have summer fogs which are driven from the coast of Massachusetts by south-west winds, but they do not affect us in the winter time at all. In winter time we are practically free from fog and our port is as a safe one and is easy of access as is proved by the large number of steamers which enter and leave it all the year around. Again, if passengers desiring to go to Europe will consider what is the shortest way they can go, they will find that from Montreal to St. John is only 94 miles farther than New York, and that difference would scarcely count for anything if the steamship service were all that is required. If the proposed steamship line is going to be equal to the best that sails from United States ports, then people will know that it is as perfect as can be had; and if they went by St. John and saved 200 miles of railway journey to Halifax, surely the line would be a success. When we consider that hitherto lines of steamships sailing from Halifax have not been a success, it is reasonable to suppose that if we had a line sailing from St. John, inasmuch as it is nearer to western Canada and nearer to the United States for business purposes, it would be most successful. Again, if Halifax is selected on the principle that the sailing point must be the nearest to Europe, Halifax would only enjoy the advantage for a few years, because the point nearest to Europe having railway communication would soon be White Haven, in Cape Breton. Therefore, that argument for selecting Halifax, because it is the nearest point to Europe, will not be available for probably more than two years longer. I, therefore, put forward here the claims of St. John, not from the standpoint of antagonism to Halifax at all. Halifax in the past has had nearly everything her own way in these matters. Freight going from western Canada to the seaboard can go to Halifax at the same rates as to St. John, although it is nearly 200 miles farther away, it has had the winter port business during all these years; and St. John has worked away, doing the best she could, improving her position constantly, while feeling that she has not been quite properly treated in comparison with Halifax. I have figures here with regard to the arrival and departure of ships at St. John for ten years, showing that there has been a gradual increase in her business. It must be remembered that during that period our city was nearly destroyed by fire; and yet these figures show that we have a marine business scarcely second to that of Montreal, although proportionately to population it is four times as great. Therefore, I am in favor of making this effort, for the purpose of bringing Canada to the front, and of maintaining the position of Canada, and I would go so far as to favor even what the hon. senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) referred to the other night as a jingo policy, by which I understand him to mean that by developing this foreign trade, we may bring the colonies closer together, and closer to the mother land. Whether that be a jingo policy or not, I believe it is going to be the policy of the future, and it is going to be sustained by this country. Therefore, while I support this proposition, I hope the Government, casting its eye over the whole commerce of Canada, and seeing how St. John is situated, and the facilities she possesses for sending and receiving freight for Western Canada, will not pass us over, but for the reasons I have given, and the reasons which will suggest themselves to any person who thinks the matter out, our port is so situated that it can accommodate both freight and passengers better than any other port on the Atlantic coast. I, therefore, hope when this matter comes to be settled that the Government will see that the reasonable anticipations of our people will be fully realised.

Mr. O'BRIEN. This question has so far been treated apparently as though it were one entirely affecting the interests of the Maritime Provinces, and as if the cities of Halifax and St. John were the only ports of the Dominion specially interested. I take it that this country is not going to pay half a million dollars a year for the maintenance of a line of steamships to gratify the Maritime Provinces or any special interest in this country. I think we have to consider in this matter very materially the class of business for which we are going to pay this money. Not professing to have very much knowledge of the subject, I think we have to consider whether the class of steamships we propose to subsidise is the class best adapted for the general trade of the country. It appears to me that we have to take into consideration several matters altogether apart from local interests. We have to consider, in the first place, the class of business these steamships are to do. If they are simply to carry passengers to be transported across the continent by Canadian Pacific Railway, and then to be transhipped across to Asia or China, of course you cannot have ships by means of which the transport can be made too quickly; but if you are to consider the great bulk of the produce which we have to export, then you must consider not only what class of vessels are best fitted to carry it, but whether that produce can be carried most cheaply by rail or by water; and having decided these points, you can come to a conclusion where the terminus can best be. It is for the business men who deal in cheese, butter, flour, and other products to be shipped to Europe, to say, first, whether they can be carried most cheaply and advantageously by the class of steamships proposed to be subsidised, or by another class of steamships; and, secondly, whether that produce can be most readily and cheaply carried the greatest distance by water or the greatest distance by rail and the shortest by water. These are all important considerations to be taken into account in subsidising this class of steamships. It does appear to me that we ought to subsidise that class of steamships that would give to the farmer and the great producing classes of this country the best and cheapest mode of transportation. If you can accomplish that by the class of vessels you propose to subsidise, so much the better, because you will gain two objects: you will bring this country into the closest communication with England, with which, in the sense alluded to by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Skinner), I am most heartily in accord, and you will also have a fast line for freight. But I think we have to take first into account the general trade and business of the country. If it can be shown that the class of steamers proposed to be subsidised will best serve that consideration, by all means give them the subsidy. If, on the other hand, another class will best satisfy the producers, I think they ought to have the first consideration. On these points I do not profess to give an opinion, but the Government ought to carefully consider them before they decide the terminus or the class of steamers to be subsidised. I wish to ask the Government one question. We have been led to make large grants for railways in Nova Scotia, notably for one which we were led to understand was to give us an ocean terminus at Louisburg. Now, the only reason that I can understand why we should support the grant for a railway in that particular direction, is that it will accomplish the great national object of giving us the best seaport at the furthest eastern extremity of the Dominion. If that be the object the Government have in view, I consider the building of that railway is a most reasonable thing; but if that object is to be abandoned, I think the country is not being fairly dealt with. The Government should let us understand whether Louisburg or some other point in that part of Cape Breton is ultimately to become the terminus of our great transcontinental railway. If it is, this expenditure which we are called on to make is, I believe, justifiable; if it is not, it cannot be justified. These are questions which I think this House should fairly consider before taking any action in this matter. I am heartily in favor of subsidising the best line of steamers which will best answer the general interests and trade of this country. I do not profess to be cognisant of the subject, but I want to have that question decided before giving a vote on this resolution. I look upon a steamer that will cross the ocean in six days in the light of a Pullman car; I look upon it as a luxury. If the people can afford to pay for it, well and good; but if the bulk of the people have to travel in ordinary first class carriages, and can only afford to pay the rate for a steamer which is not considered first-class, their interests ought to be taken into consideration. These are matters which ought to be decided before we pass n the resolution now before us.

Mr. PLATT. The hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) has certainly put this question in a clearer light than it has appeared in heretofore; but he seems, to a certain extent, to look on this matter as if we had a half a million dollars jingling loosely in our pockets, and had no other purpose to devote it to except to subsidise a line of steamers across the ocean. In my opinion the first question to be considered is whether we should report the resolution at all or not. I question very much, leaving out the constituencies immediately interested in the expenditure, whether the Dominion at large is in favor of such an outlay. The hon. member for Halifax and the hon. member for St. John have taken up considerable time discussing the respective merits of those rival ports. It seems to me we had better first decide whether we ought to make the expenditure at all before we quarrel over the question as to which of those ports is the better. The hon. member for St. John says he has no doubt that a large majority of his constituents are in favor of this expenditure being made, provided, I suppose, that St. John be made the terminal port. The hon. members for Halifax could, no doubt, equally well say that a large majority of their constituents are in favor of our incurring this expenditure, provided Halifax be made the terminal port. Well, it has been truly said, that there are other constituencies between the two oceans besides Halifax and St. John; and I think the people of the central part of the Dominion at any rate, who will be called on to pay a large proportion of the money, should have something to say as to the advisability of spending this money at all. We have heard from the Government benches very little of argument in favor of the proposition now before the House. It has been said, and the opinion seemed to meet with general approval, that we would not be justified in making any expenditure of money for the purpose of competing with freight carrying vessels. We were told, and I suppose it is true, that there are vessels ready on every coast to receive every pound of freight we have to ship across the ocean, and that statement has received the general commendation of the House. Now, if we are to do nothing towards the expedition of freight across the ocean, I do not see how a very large majority of the people of this country are going to be at all benefited by this expenditure. If it is to be simply an expenditure in order that we may have rapid passages and rapid transport of mails, what proportion of the community are to be benefited by it? Very few of our people comparatively cross and recross the ocean, and those few are composed of the wealthiest men of the country. Very few comparatively are interested in having a rapid transit of mails, and they are also composed of the wealthiest men of the country. Upon the whole, it may be said that this entire expenditure—if we leave out of consideration the question of freight—is to be made for the benefit of the richer few, while it is the poorer many who will have to foot the bill. Another argument that has been hinted at by many, and hinted at broadly by the Minister of Finance is, that this fast line of steamers, rivalling the line from New York, would be something this Dominion might be proud of. I agree in the opinion that we might well be proud of it, if we could afford it; but there are times in the lives of a people, as there are times in the lives of individuals, when they are not able to afford all the luxuries, and all the delicacies, and all the ornaments which they might desire and of which, if they had them, they might well be proud. It is a common incident in every day life, to see the wealthy farmer, who is able to make the outlay, obtain for himself and family a very fine turn out, and to see, on the other hand, his poorer neighbor, who is unable to pay for the enjoyment of such luxury, become jealous and envious, and, impelled by the desire to rival his richer neighbor, mortgage his farm to purchase an equally elaborate turn out, until finally, through that spirit of pride and envy, his whole farm becomes dissipated. It seems to me in attempting to rival our rich neighbor to the south of us, for the sake of having a line of steamers which will serve as an ornament to this country, as the American lines adorn their country, we are imitating the example I have just given. We had better wait until we get a little wealthier, and better able to pay our bills, before we incur this outlay; we had better wait until the general mass of the people are going to benefit by it rather than the select few. If any hon. gentleman from any part of this Dominion, not immediately interested, will go through his constituency, and discover how many individuals in it are interested, either in the rapid transit of passengers or mails across the ocean, they will find very few indeed. He will find that by far the larger number of the people do not feel any interest whatever in the proposition now before the House, and will be ready to favor a curtailment, rather than an increase, of our expenditure.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I agree in the remarks that fell from the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) that this is a question which not only interests the Maritime Provinces but also the whole Dominion, and I think that, while we in Ontario will have probably to pay the larger portion of the bill, we should have something to say in the matter. Now, the only argument that the hon. the Minister advanced in favor of this resolution was that our passenger traffic was going via New York, and that our mails were going via New York as well, and that it was necessary to put a fast line of steamers upon the Canadian route, calling at a French port in order to retain the passenger trade and the carrying of the mails by that route from this Dominion. I do not think it makes very much difference to Canadians whether their letters go via New York or Halifax, as long as they go at the same rate of postage, and I do not think it is desirable that we should spend a half million dollars a year simply to have a fast line of steamers in order to carry our mails from Halifax or St. John, instead of New York. Another thing people seem to forget is that it makes very little difference now to the business of this country whether their mails take seven days or eight or ten days to go over. Nearly all the business now is done by the Atlantic cable. There are very few business men who do their business by the mail. Hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of business is transacted between Canada and the old country, and scarcely a letter passes in regard to it, because it is all done by the aid of the Atlantic cable. Cabling has got down to a very reasonable rate, so that all commercial business can be done in that way. Then again, we do not require our mails so quickly, because, if anything important takes place in the old country, we have it all in our papers here the next morning, having been transmitted by the cable. Thus the great need of a rapid transmission of the mails which existed before the Atlantic cable came into general use does not exist at present, and, therefore, I do not think it is necessary to spend half a million of dollars a year for that purpose. The argument that the passenger traffic is going vid New York has been used as a reason why we should put on this fast passenger boat. What does it signify whether the people who cross the Atlantic ocean take the steamer at New York or at Halifax? All those New York vessels are English vessels, and we are patronising our own relatives when we patronise the boats that sail from New York. But I contend that, even if you are able to put on this fast passenger steamer, and, it would be able to make the trip from Liverpool to Halifax in the same proportionate length of time as the boats make the passage to New York, the great mass of the traffic, from Ontario at least, would still go vid New York. In that port they can get a steamer on any day in the week which they choose. They have the choice of five or six first class steamship lines, and they avoid a long and tedious railway journey to St. John or Halifax; so that, even if this steamer were put on, the great mass of travel from Ontario at least would still go vid New York. As my hon. friend from Prince Edward (Mr. Platt) said, there are comparatively few of the people of this Dominion who have occasion to use this fast steamship service, and those who have go across the Atlantic in a great measure for health or for pleasure. They do not seek so much a fast steamer as they do the pleasure and the comforts of the voyage, and those who are seeking health find that three or four days longer on the Atlantic is the best medicine they can take. I do not think it is fair to those lines of steamers that have built themselves up in this country during the last few years to adopt such a measure as this. We have the Allan Line, the Beaver Line, the Dominion Line and the Temperley Line—four first-class lines of steamers sailing from Montreal to Liverpool and Glasgow—and all of them except the first have built themselves up without any Government assistance. They have proved serviceable to this Dominion, without obtaining a dollar from the Dominion treasury; they have overcome great difficulties; they have paved the way, and now it is proposed to subsidise another line to compete with those which have already built themselves up out of their own pockets. I do not think this is fair. The service which we have obtained during the last few years by the Allan Line has been a good service. It has met the necessities of this Dominion. I am not aware that there have been any complaints, or that any requests have been made to this Parliament to put on another line, and I do not think it would be fair to these lines to subsidise so heavily a new line to compete with them in their traffic. If we have $500,000 a year to expend in this service, I would suggest to the Minister of Finance that there are many ways in which he can spend it, which would be very much more in the interests of the people of this Dominion than by spending it in aiding this new steamship line. What the people of the country want, what the farmers want is a cheaper transport service. They want a steamship which will carry their produce at a cheaper rate. Reference has been made to the export of live cattle to England. The rates from Montreal to Liverpool are much higher than they are from New York, because of the greater number of steamships that go to New York. If we have $500,000 a year to spend, I believe we can spend it in many ways which would be more beneficial to the people than this fast line of steamers, which is only intended to carry mails and passengers, it has been proved that a steamship that makes 20 knots an hour is not suitable for the carriage of freight. In fact, it has been admitted that it would not be wise to subsidise a steamer to carry freight. In that case, you are simply going to subsidise these steamers to carry mails and passengers, and, as I said, it makes no difference to the people of Canada whether your mails go by New York or Montreal or Halifax as long as they go for the same rate. I can see no necessity for this grant, and I do not think the people of Canada will sanction this large expenditure of money, when the finances of the Dominion are so cramped as they are at present, and when all our expenses are running up at such a rapid rate. Under these circumstances, I do not believe it is judicious or wise to invest this amount of $500,000 a year for ten years, which will add $5,000,000 more to the debt of the country. I hope the resolution will be withdrawn, and that no further effort will be made in this direction.

Mr. GILLMOR. I was much pleased indeed with the speech of my hon. friend from Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien). Every word of it was good common sense. But my hon. friends from the Maritime Provinces seem to have forgotten what you, Mr. Chairman, will remember, when you visited the Maritime Provinces and were advocating the International Ocean Line. You then went to St. Andrews, the nighest ocean port. The most sanguine people there never at that time supposed that in a short time that International line would be opened up and ready for traffic. My hon. friends from St. John appear to have forgotten that there is such a port as St. Andrews, where there is much less fog than there is at St. John. It is 70 miles further west than St. John, and therefore the traffic would reach the ocean nigher than St. John. It is 320 miles nigher than Halifax, and I do not know how much nigher it is than Louisburg. This International line is now carrying out the great scheme which was started before St. John or Halifax thought of having a railway at all. Forty years ago, a short line from the seaboard to Canada was projected in the town of St. Andrews, which is the nighest ocean port in the west. That has now become complete, and I think the Government ought not to forget that there is such a place as St. Andrews, and that, although it is not as great a city as St. John—that it is not a city at all—it is fast growing to be a city. I entirely concur with the opinion of the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) that the Government ought to give the subsidy where the greatest good can be done to the greatest number. My own impression is that this idea of subsidising steamers that will travel 20 miles an hour, is visionary, it cannot be accomplished. I think it is a piece of extravagance under the circumstance; and I cannot believe that it will serve the interests of the people so well as a line of steamers such as we have now, those that can make 15 knots an hour; that is quite fast enough. It might be something to boast of, it might be something to be proud of, it might be something to point to, but I think it is an extravagance which we cannot afford—that is my impression—and I think the Government will consult the best interests of the country not to expend this large subsidy of half a million dollars a year for a purpose that will not, after all, afford us such facility for freight as a line of steamers would afford that we could subsidise for very much less money. We have been in the habit of giving $126,000 for this service, and I think that is quite enough, and I think the accommodation to all concerned will be best served by continuing that amount of subsidy. Now, with regard to speed by which mail and passengers can be conveyed, I think it is a matter of very little importance. We are not confined to one line of steamers. We can send our letters by the way of New York, or they can come by the way of New York; we can send letters almost every day in the week by one line or another without inconvenience. With regard to travel, it is a mistaken notion for us to try to rival the great nation to the south of us. Because they are able to have something better, something more costly, something more extravagant, it is a mistaken policy for us to try to imitate them. I do not wish to repeat what has been said with regard to the port of Halifax, but I really think the port of St. Andrews is quite as accessible as the port of St. John. I rise because some of my friends seem to have forgotten altogether that St. Andrews is mentioned as one of the ocean ports, whereas it is on record as one of the ports recognised.

Mr. ELLIS. Notwithstanding what the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) has pointed out with regard to the rivalry between Halifax and St. John, the common sense of the people of both cities and the common sense of the people of the Maritime Provinces, is against the proposition of the Government to make such a very large expenditure of money on very uncertain information. In the first place we are not directly told where the winter port is to be, although I think it is a fair inference from what the Prime Minister told a delegation from St John the other day, that the winter port on this side would be Halifax. With regard to the proposition as respects the French port, it is impossible from the words of the resolution to gather any correct idea as to what is meant by that. We have no statement of how the service is to be performed as respects a French port, nor has there been any opportunity of discussing whether it is advisable to spend any money to make connection with a French port, inasmuch as nobody knows how that connection is to be made. I do not propose to go over the ground that has been gone over by my hon. friend and colleague for St. John (Mr. Skinner). He has argued from the point of view that this proposition was to complete the scheme of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and was intended to get the trade which might come across the continent by that railway. Now, this is not for a trade line of steamers at all, it makes no provision for the through carrying of freight. As to the general carriage I think it would be impossible to do service in the way the hon. gentleman suggested, because the greater portion of the bulk of the steamers will be occupied by the machinery and the coal. My own idea is that it is not necessary to provide a fancy service of this kind for the benefit of people who are able to pay for the best service, but that, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies) it would be better, if large sum of money is to be used for subsidising ocean steamers, to devote it for subsidising freight steamers. I believe we had better go into that policy rather than to merely carry mails and passengers. With regard to travel I have never been able to make myself believe that the people west of Montreal will ever go to Halifax, or even to St. John, to cross the ocean. I could wish it were otherwise, but I am satisfied that if a man can leave Toronto or any part of Canada west of Montreal, and reach the ocean seaboard in New York in a night, he will not, as a mere matter of prejudice in favor of a Canadian line, go to more distant seaports. I think we might as well face that fact first as last. We see it is a fact every day. If you talk with gentlemen from Toronto and the west, as I have talked with them, with regard to the sea, the Maritime Provinces ports are not in their minds at all; they are thinking of reaching the sea by the shortest route across the continent. With that fact in view, I think it is not wise to expend such a large amount of money in this service. I would end my remarks here, but I feel bound to ask the House to give me an hour or so while I put upon record a number of statements to answer the hon. member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Welsh) with reference to fog in the harbor of St. John. Last year he made remarks of the same kind, very improper remarks, and this year he has repeated them, and I think it is time that an effort should be made to set the matter right, and by statistics to correct the misinformation and the lack of knowledge which that hon. gentleman has in regard to the port of St. John. I do not know how many hundred years it has been since he was in the port of St. John. When he states that vessels have been kept out of the port of St. John six or eight days, I must say that that has not occurred within the memory of any living man, so it must have been at some time in the far distant past. Probably in some other stage of his evidence when he was a "Mother Cary Chicken." I would like the House to allow me just to hand these statements in as read.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. ELLIS. Well, then, if I must go on I will read you some statements and statistics which I have prepared. The St. John Board of Trade says:

"At the close of the last century the bay was but little frequented by vessels from abroad, and had but a limited coasting trade. Its summer fogs, its low temperature in winter, its want of lighthouses, fog horns, whistles, and automatic whistling and bell buoys unknown; its tides flowing to uncertain heights and setting in uncertain directions; its rugged shores and steep cliffs; its charts, more general than special no doubt caused the then current ideas of its dangers. Still, the navigators of that day, with their greater watchfulness, caution, and judgment, kept safely on their voyages, with not as pleasant a duty to perform as if sailing the Carribean Seas, yet meeting with as few accidents and losses as on other and better known waters in proportion to its trade.

"To-day most of the risks of danger are averted. All the modern guards necessary for safe navigation are introduced and applied. Better charts, shores studded with lighthouses, fog horns and whistles, almost within calling distances, automatic and bell buoys placed at all points of danger, its tides and their courses well known, the formation of its bottom so well described that the lead tells its locality; all these advantages dispel the fears of the olden time, and render its navigation as safe as the approaches to any other coast.

"Steam is largely superseding sails in the greater trade of the ocean and coast, when drifting in calms and with tides, losing reckoning, and its attendants, will be of the past, and steamers and sailing ships can enter and navigate the Bay of Fundy guided with all the confidence and equal safety as if entering the British Channel."

A constant practice of chart makers is to say that the "atmosphere is constantly enveloped in dense fog." Here is the statement of keeper of Partridge Island Light:

"For the winter months for 17 years from 1870 to 1886, both inclusive (See No. 1 of Appendix.) the fog average was:

Months.	H.	M.
November	11	55
December	8	09
January	21	21
February	16	46
March	17	56
April	40	04
A total of	116	11

or an average per month of 19 hours and 22 minutes, or 38 minutes per day.

"And from a comprehensive return by the same party (No 2 of Appendix), made up for the whole year during a period of 21 years from 1865 to 1885, your committee gather the information that the whistle was sounded from all causes on an average each month during the months of:

January,	3½ days.	May,	3¼ days.	September,	4 days.
February,	3 do	June,	6 do	October,	2½ do
March,	3 do	July,	7½ do	November,	1½ do
April,	2½ do	August,	7½ do	December,	3 do or an average of 3 hours and 22 minutes per day during the 21 years.

"Your committee would remark that much of the time put down in this return as requiring the whistle to be sounded in the summer months is not from fog alone, but from smoke from the burning of the forests in proximity to the shore of the Bay of Fundy, and in winter from vapor arising from the water of the Bay caused by the extreme cold prevalent in the months of January and February.

Capt. W. A. Robinson says:

"I, as a seaman and mate employed in the coasting and foreign trade of the Bay of Fundy, from 1819 to 1824, and from that time until 1862, as master of St. John and other ships, in foreign trade, beg leave to make some statements concerning the navigation of the Bay of Fundy.

"My many years' experience warrants me in affirming that the Bay of Fundy can be navigated with as much ease and safety in summer fogs and winter snows as any other port in North America, notwithstanding all the unfavorable reports of ignorant or prejudiced persons.

"In respect to the great rise and fall of tides, they are a great convenience and no obstruction to navigation. I have never met those various and uncertain currents so much spoken of, and, consequently, dreaded by strangers. As to charts, I prefer to use the British Admiralty publication.

"The rocks and shoals in the Bay of Fundy are all within the line of soundings, and, with proper attention with the lead, may be avoided, there being a clear channel of 182 miles on a direct course from Cape Sable brulé to St John harbor."

Captain David Boddie says:

"St. John, N. B., 4th December, 1886.

"The St. John Board of Trade:

"Gentlemen,—In reply to your note of yesterday, asking me to give my opinion as to the safety of the Bay of Fundy for navigation, both in summer and winter, as to the regularity of the tides, and the inconvenience experienced from fog in the summer time, I beg to say that with respect to the fogs, by paying strict attention to the ship's course and the state of the tide at the same time, I never lost an hour's time in making a passage on account of fog in the Bay of Fundy. With respect to the tides, I have always found them very regular, only in the spring of the year, when the freshet from the river is running, I have found the ebb tide much stronger on the western side of the Bay than the flood, which in thick weather must be guarded against

"With respect to rocks and dangers in the Bay, I know of none but what are clearly laid down in the Admiralty charts, and can be easily avoided by using proper precaution and care, which is necessary for the safe navigation of shipping approaching, entering, or leaving any coast, bay or harbor. With respect to my experience in navigating the Bay of Fundy, as a master, I commenced 15th June, 1840, in command of the bark Abeona belonging to the firm of Milby & Thomas; the said vessel drew twenty feet of water when loaded, and was run between St. John and London for four years. I never met with an accident in the Bay of Fundy, except one slight collision in the summer of 1846, while in command of the brigantine Mary bound down the bay in the fog. From 1847 to 1854 I had charge of a brigantine called the P. I. Nevius during seven years in the coasting trade between St. John and Alexandria, Va. During the seven years I navigated the Bay of Fundy, both summer and winter, I never felt any more inconvenience in navigating the bay than upon any other coast. In the winter of 1851 the river Potomac was frozen over in the month of February, and I had a good deal of difficulty and loss of time in getting out, and had to get the assistance of an ice-breaking tug boat. When I arrived at St. John, N. B, I was glad to find a splendid harbor all clear of ice or any other impediment to enter it, and with the assistance of a pilot any vessel could beat or sail into the harbor and up to the wharf, as the wind suited, and during the seven years the said vessel run between this port and Alexandra, Va, I never required the assistance of a tug boat in the harbor. Since that date I have commanded several vessels, running out of this port, and have never had an accident in the Bay of Fundy or felt any inconvenience in navigating it. In 1877 I retired from the business."

"St. John, 9th December, 1886.

"The St. John Board of Trade:

"Gentlemen,—Having followed the sea for over half a century, and during that time having sailed out of St. John regularly from four to five times a year for ten years, and often afterwards, I can give an opinion of the Bay of Fundy from long experience. During the period from 1835 to 1845 I sailed between here and the West Indies as master of a vessel, and never met with the slightest accident in the Bay of Fundy. With our numerous lighthouses, fog horns and buoys now in use, it is an easy matter to make our port. I would far rather take my chances in the Bay of Fundy, making for St. John in fog, snow or storm, than to enter the ports of Boston or Portland under the same conditions. The Bay of Fundy is a safe bay, for one can always have plenty of drift and can readily tell where he is by the soundings. I consider St. John to be easier of access than any port on the Atlantic coast.

"CAPT. B. B. BUSTIN."

"St. John, N.B., 4th December, 1886.

"The St. John Board of Trade:

"Gentlemen,—During the past forty-six years I have been engaged as master of vessels trading between the western part of Nova Scotia and the port of St. John (ten years of which we carried the mails between those places during the winter months), and have had ample opportunity to judge of the safety of the navigation of the Bay of Fundy. I have had no difficulty during all that time, even in foggy weather, and long before there were any fog whistles, in making our trips regularly, sometimes five in a month, never once having touched bottom.

"I consider the harbor of St. John exceptionally easy of access, and safe to enter at any time of tide.

"Yours truly,
"DANIEL SMALLEY."

"Chatham, N. B., 16th January, 1887.

"The St. John Board of Trade:

"As an old shipmaster who sailed between St. John and the British ports for ten years in the Lisbon and John Owens—and in the days when the St. John fleet in the London and Liverpool trade embraced such fine ships as the Peter Maxwell, Imperial, John Barbour, John Duncan, Lampedo, Harmonides, (which latter I commanded for a time) and others, I am at a loss to understand how it has come about that the Bay of Fundy is looked upon as presenting any especial difficulties to competent navigators. The tides are simple—up and down—the soundings even, and safe to get hold of, and the approach to St. John harbor free, open, and unobstructed. I may say that I always felt as safe and sure of my position, making for and sailing up the Bay of Fundy, as I did in either the English or St. George's Channel, while St. John harbor, being more contiguous to the open bay than most of the principal ports of either side of the Atlantic are to their deep water approaches, it seems to me—from a sailing-master's standpoint—it is one of the most desirable and safe known. In all my navigation of the Bay of Fundy I never found any difficulties and never had any mishap. Of course, strict attention to the lead is required in thick weather. In winter there is no more fog in the Bay of Fundy than elsewhere.

"J. J. BROWN, Shipmaster."

Letter from Captain Hill, of the Ulunda of the Furness Line:

"HALIFAX, 29th December, 1886.

"The St. John Board of Trade:

"GENTLEMEN,—Having been asked by you to express my views for the benefit of the Board of Trade, respecting the waters we navigate between this port and St. John, I beg to report as follows: Since the 1st of May last (1886), I have made five round trips to St. John. Twice out of the five I encountered fog from time of leaving Halifax until I was in the Bay of Fundy so far as Briar Island. From that place to St. John I had clear weather.

"Three times I had clear weather the entire passage. On my return I experienced clear weather the whole five trips from time of leaving St. John until I arrived at Halifax

"The coast from here (Halifax) to Cape Sable is well lit, also the approach to Bay of Fundy; and good fog signals are provided for thick weather. Soundings I consider reliable; currents rapid, causing the navigator great anxiety in thick weather, but through sound judgment and careful study on the part of the navigator, Partridge Island should be reached with safety through the thickest weather.

"Referring to my personal experience during the five trips I have made to St. John and return, I cannot but report most favorable so far as the navigation part is concerned.

"Yours faithfully,

"R. S. HILL,
"Master SS. Ulunda."

Letter from Captain S. H. Pike, late of the I.S.S. Line:

"The St. John Board of Trade:

"GENTLEMEN,—I have been engaged with the International Steamship Company, as pilot and as master, running their steamers between Boston and St John, touching at Portland and Eastport, for the last thirty years, prior to which time I was engaged in the coasting and West India trade. I consider the Bay of Fundy as easy of approach and as safe for navigation as any portion of the North Atlantic coast at any season of the year and in all weather I know of no bay on the North Atlantic coast so clear of obstructions to navigation as the Bay of Fundy from Moos-a-Peck, or Moss Peck, so called, on the coast of Maine, to Partridge Island (mouth of St. John harbor)

"During the whole thirty years of my experience, making one or two trips per week in all seasons of the year, and in all kinds of weather, I met with but one accident in the Bay of Fundy, viz., while master of the State of Maine, at Point Lepreaux. This accident I regard as exceptional, and I attribute it to the Point Lepreaux whistle not being in its proper place. It has since been placed in the right position. The fog whistle is a grand invention if well attended.

"The shores of the bay are generally high, and even in foggy weather we can frequently get sight of land, either from deck or from masthead, but we are never delayed by this, having run our course on usual time and speed, we make our points carefully, and take our departure. Our passages have been made with remarkable regularity, as all know who are acquainted with the line.

"In my opinion, steamers or vessels of any kind can approach or leave St. John any time of the year, and in all weathers, with as much safety as any port on the North Atlantic coast.

"The harbor of St. John is never frozen, and field ice in the bay is much less frequent than on the coast.

"S. H. PIKE."

"STEAMER Damara.

"HALIFAX, 31st January, 1887.

"The Board of Trade, St. John:

"GENTLEMEN,—I call St. John a good port, and the soundings are splendid for navigating a vessel up the bay and right into the harbor. They are so reliable that any competent person can easily find the way into the bay and up to St. John in the thickest and darkest night there can be.

"I remain, yours truly,
"EDWARD SMITH, Master."

Statement from Capt. Chas. S. Taylor, Harbor Master of St. John:

"The St. John Board of Trade:

"GENTLEMEN,—I was about 20 years a pilot in the Bay of Fundy. I have brought many steamships up the Bay of Fundy in the summer time; not many in the winter, as during the time I was pilot steamships did not come regularly from seaward in the winter, with the exception of the Allan Line. I would have no hesitation, as a pilot, in bringing any of the largest mail steamers to the port of St. John all through the year, summer or winter, but would prefer the winter, the atmosphere, as a rule, being more clearer then. With a steamer drawing 27 feet of water, the harbor of St. John can be entered about half flood. * * * The steamer Kansas loaded at the railway pier, about three years ago, and she drew 27 feet. At this time there were nine steamers in the harbor at one time, two of them respectively of 5,276 tons and 5,146 tons, and the other seven from 1,500 to 3,000 tons each. I consider the navigation of the Bay of Fundy as easy and safe as any place I know of; the running courses are few and simple, and the very few obstructions are hardly worth mentioning.

"CHARLES S. TAYLOR, Harbor Master."

Statement from Richard Cline, one of the St. John Branch pilots:

"ST. JOHN, 7th January, 1887.

"The St. John Board of Trade:

"Gentlemen,—I have been about thirty-nine years a St. John pilot, and have been in the habit of taking charge of steam and sailing vessels outside of Briar Island, at the mouth of the Bay of Fundy. I have brought many steamers of the Anchor Line and others from Halifax, and some from New York, and I have brought many ships of war, both British and United States, into the harbor of St. John. I was pilot on board H.M.S. Northampton, drawing 26 feet, from Halifax here in August, 1878. At the time of the Trent affair I brought several troop ships in here, boarding them in Halifax. I had the Jura, the Calcutta, the Australasian, the Adriatic, 5,555 tons, and many others were here that winter, brought in by other pilots. Thirty years ago last summer I piloted the United States' steamer Mississippi from Eastport here; she drew 22 feet; the weather was thick; there was no fog alarms in the bay then, and we got along well enough, although the weather was thick. I also piloted the American ship Great Republic, the largest merchant sailing ship ever built. We sailed up the bay and into this port, and came to anchor in the harbor without a tug. About three hours flood would be the time to enter the harbor with a ship drawing 27 feet, and the same applies to Boston and Portland, Me. The navigation of the Bay of Fundy compares most favorably with other ports and places where I have been. If a ship of deep draught of water arrives off the harbor and has to wait for the tide, she can either anchor outside Partridge Island with safety (the anchorage being excellent) or she can lay off and on, there being plenty of sea room. I would rather approach St. John in bad weather than any other port along the coast. During the time I have been pilot, I have myself brought in two hundred steamships and have never had an accident with one of them. The aid of a tug is not necessary either in entering or leaving the port with steamships. The land of the bay shore is high, and one can always see it over the vapor occasioned by extreme cold weather. It can generally be seen also in foggy weather by going aloft. The soundings are good from Cape Sable into St. John, and one could come in during the densest fog by using the lead The whistles are good and numerous, but when they cannot be heard, a pilot or captain can come up by soundings, which are very regular. I do not consider the tides dangerous by any means, but one must, of course, have some knowledge of them when entering the bay. From Briar Island up the tides are very regular. There is never any ice in the harbor to interfere with or injure ships There is never any field ice to contend with in the bay, even in the severest weather.

"RICHARD CLINE."

"The St. John Board of Trade:

"GENTLEMEN,—In reply to your enquiry, we beg to advise that the Anchor Line of steamships commenced the service to this port in April, 1864, and continued to land their cargoes here until 1879, and during that period they did not meet with any disaster or experience any difficulty in navigating the Bay of Fundy, or in entering or leaving our harbor, at all seasons of the year. * * * *

"SCAMMELL BROTHERS."
"Agents of the Anchor Line.

My colleague for St. John (Mr. Weldon) has already briefly touched upon the tonnage of St. John. The total of seagoing, steam and sailing vessels, and coastwise steamers which arrived at St. John in the ten years, 1877 to 1886 inclusive, is:

—	Number.	Tons.
Steam vessels	1,882	1,733,983
Sailing vessels	13,014	2,687,195
Coasting steamers	1,823	840,480
Total Arrivals	16,719	5,261,658

Departed in same period:

Steam vessels	1,745	1,694,650
Sailing vessels	12,974	2,935,253
Coasting steamers	2,075	902,285
Total Departures	16,794	5,532,188
Total Arrivals	16,719	5,261,658
Grand Total	33,513	10,793,846

The percentage of loss of tonnage as compared with the total entered and cleared is only ·26 of one per cent. And in concluding I quote as follows from the report of the Board of Trade on this subject:—

"As an evidence of the opinion entertained by underwriters of the safety of the navigation of the Bay of Fundy, we are authorised in saying that the agents in St. John for marine insurance companies are taking risks from St. John direct to Europe at the same rate of premium as from Halifax, Nova Scotia, and from Boston and Portland.

"The coast all along from the entrance of the Bay of Fundy to the Harbor of St. John is so thoroughly protected by fog whistles, automatic whistling buoys and lighthouses that it must proceed from the greatest carelessness or unseaworthiness (unless in very exceptional cases) that a vessel should go ashore or even touch bottom. From the entrance to the Bay of Fundy at Machias Seal Island by way of the north or west channel, and at Briar Island, on the south channel, to the Harbor of St. John, vessels do not lose the sound of one fog whistle or automatic buoy until they catch the sound of another, and the soundings by the lead are so regular and the anchorage so good, especially at the entrance of St. John Harbor, that danger is reduced to a minimum, even in the thickest weather. Pilots state that they dread more to enter Boston or Portland or Halifax Harbors during a fog than they do St. John, and vessels bound to New York, Boston and Portland have sometimes to lie longer outside those harbors for tide than at St. John, and when foggy weather prevails, it is generally as dense (if not more so) at Portland and along the coast of the State of Maine as it is in the Bay of Fundy. In winter fogs are very rare. They are more frequent in the months of June, July and August, but seldom continue so thick for days in succession as to preclude seeing land in the bay, and neither fog nor snow prove a bar or delay to steam vessels, the navigation of the bay being so simple, there being no treacherous shoals or rocks in the way from the mouth of the bay to the Port of St. John. We may instance the steamers of the International Steamship Company, which have plied between St. John and the Port of Boston for a period extending over a quarter of a century, making three and four trips per week, each way, for part of the year, and two trips, each way, per week in winter, carrying an immense number of passengers and very large quantities of freight, and never lost a single life in all that time on that route. During the past thirty years passenger steamers have been running between St. John and the western part of Nova Scotia, and during all that time not one was lost, thus proving that neither fog nor snow interfere with steam vessels in their passage to or from the Harbor of St. John, where proper care is taken.

"In the matter of ice in winter, your committee may confidently assert that there is not a port north of Cape Hatteras so entirely free from ice as St. John is.

"This can hardly be said of any other port on the coast north of Baltimore; in fact, there is no port north of Baltimore, including Philadelphia, New York, Boston, Portland and Halifax, that have not been frozen over, and had vessels cut out of the ice in them, except St. John. Shipmasters and owners of vessels, therefore, may be fully assured that no damage can be sustained from river, harbor or bay ice, in navigating the Bay of Fundy, or in the harbor of St. John. Under the accumulation of evidence which your committee have been enabled to place before the Board, they feel that they may safely assume:

"1st.—That the navigation of the Bay of Fundy, from its month to St. John, is remarkably simple and free, whether by the south or west channels; so much so, that pilots prefer making the port of St. John in bad weather to any other port on the coast

"2nd.—That the fog or cold vapor never occasions delay of steam vessels in summer or winter, and that there is never the slightest obstruction from ice.

"3nd.—That Atlantic steamships need make but one straight course from their regular track to Portland and Boston up the Bay of Fundy to St. John.

"4th.—That the south channel, opening into the bay, is 18 miles in width at the narrowest part, expanding rapidly to 35 or 40 miles of unobstructed deep water navigation, which holds good all the way up the bay to the mouth of St. John harbor, where superior holding ground can be found, or giving clear sea room, of say 35 by 50 miles, to a stranger who might not feel confidence to enter our port in a storm.

"5th.—That both the largest war and merchant ships have visited our harbor, excepting the "Great Eastern," and that she could easily be accommodated.

"6th.—That the port of St. John, in so far as navigation is concerned, is not only 'one of the safest,' but actually the safest port, summer and winter, all the year round, north of Cape Hatteras."

"Respectfully submitted,
"R. CRUIKSHANK,
"ANDRE CUSHING,
"W. E. VROOM."

"ST. JOHN, January 26th, 1887."

I feel much obliged to the hon. members for the attention they have given me, and I think myself, in view of the facts that we have only one or two ports on the Atlantic, not counting either Louisburg or St. Andrews, which I think will not be formidable rivals to St. John and Halifax——

Mr. KIRK. You must not leave out Whitehaven.

Mr. ELLIS. Or even Whitehaven. My own opinion is that each of the ports of Halifax and St. John has its own special advantages and that there is no need for rivalry between them. Whatever may be the future as regards this ocean line of steamers I believe that a trade can be built up which can be based on sound conditions and need not be a forced trade. I believe there is no need for this large expenditure of money in this service and that it would be far better if we are to have freight coming over our great lines of railway from the west, to aid in developing that trade and in regarding the steamers as part of our railway system, instead of wasting money in aiding the carrying of passengers who can well afford to pay for themselves.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). The hon. gentleman who has just sat down, has occupied the attention of the House for some time dwelling on the merits of the port of St John. I quite agree with him in everything he has said in that regard, but I hardly see the bearing of the argument which he has used upon the position which he took at the outset of his remarks, when I understood him to say that it was impossible for St. John under any circumstances, considering its geographical position, to ever have any large portion of either the passenger travel or the freight traffic between this country and Europe.

Mr. ELLIS. I did not say that.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). I understood the hon. gentleman to say something to that effect.

Mr. ELLIS. No. I confined my remarks entirely to the passenger traffic.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). I certainly understood the hon. gentleman to say that neither Halifax nor even St. John could expect to compete for this trade.

Mr. ELLIS. If the hon. gentleman will allow me I will state what I said. I referred entirely to the passenger trade and particularly to the passenger trade west of Montreal.

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). I am quite willing to accept that explanation. In view of that statement I repeat what I said before that I for one at all events cannot see what bearing the argument which he has used regarding the advantages of the port of St. John can have on the question we are now considering, if it is a fact that the port of St. John can never have a large portion of the passenger traffic between this country and Europe. I did not intend to occupy the time of the House in discussing this question; were it not but for that remark to which I have just referred and to some remarks which fell from the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor) with regard to this question. They endeavored to convey the impression to the House that this proposition would not receive the support of the majority of the people of the Maritime Provinces, and I must say that I heard these statements with surprise. I have watched the press of the Maritime Provinces, and I have yet to discover a single paper there which has opposed the policy propounded in this resolution now before the House. I do not think that the hon. gentleman will find a single business man in the Lower Provinces, belonging to either political party, who will be opposed to this policy or to the subsidy which is now proposed for a fast line of Atlantic steamers. I think that the remarks of the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) and the hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. Platt) were equally opposed to the general sentiment of the people of the Province of Ontario. I believe that they will find that the business people at all events of the great Province of Ontario are equally anxious to have this mail service secured as are the people of the Maritime Provinces. One of these gentlemen said that the members for St. John only supported this resolution because they hoped St. John would be made the terminal port and that the members for Halifax supported it for the same reason as regards their city. Now the last gentleman who addressed the House from St. John expressly said that he would not support this resolution under any circumstances and he only pointed out, as it was a duty to point out to the House, the advantages which the port of St. John possesses. The hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) used some statements which to my mind are very extraordinary in their character. He told us that since the Atlantic cables had been laid the people of Canada were indifferent as to how their mail service was conducted and that it made very little difference whether letters were six, or eight or ten days crossing the Atlantic. I think that argument is sufficiently answered by the experience of the past. Why, the very fact that our mail matter largely goes by New York is due to the fact that the fast Atlantic steamers all sail from the port of New York. The hon. member for Kent used the same argument with regard to the Atlantic passenger traffic and stated that the majority of people were indifferent as to whether they were six or eight or ten days crossing the Atlantic. Every one knows that it is the fast steamers which take the large bulk of the passengers from America to Europe, and that the travel by the slower steamers which carry freight and occupy eight or ten days on the voyage is very limited indeed. It is a fact known to the people of the Maritime Provinces, and I think my hon. friends from St. John and Halifax will support me in this statement, that while the steamers are subsidised by this Government and sail from the port of Halifax in winter time, yet a large portion of the passenger traffic from even St. John and Halifax goes by the way of New York. That is due to the fact that those fast steamers cross from New York to Liverpool in two or three days less time than even the fastest steamers we have now on the service between Great Britain and Halifax. While I have listened with very great pleasure to what the representatives of the city of St. John have said with regard to their port and also to what my friends from Halifax have said with regard to Halifax, I consider that this is an element which should not be considered in this question and that the House at the present time is not called upon to decide which of these ports possesses the greater advantages. The primary object which we are seeking is to obtain a fast Atlantic mail service. It has been stated, by I think a majority of the gentlemen who have addressed the House, on the other side, that it would be a wiser policy if a smaller subsidy was given and a different class of boats secured, which would not be so speedy, and which would at the same time accommodate a greater amount of freight traffic. I for one entirely dissent from that idea. I believe the object we wish to secure is the conveyance of the mails and the passengers between this country and Europe. We have, in my opinion, advantages which will enable our line to compete successfully with any line for this class of traffic. It is well known that the mail service will always go by the quickest route, and the passenger travel largely follows in the same direction. If we shorten the voyage by getting a class of steamers equal in every respect to the best that sail between New York and Great Britain, we must secure a large portion of the mail and passenger travel between this country and Europe; and in my opinion there is nothing that will develop the traffic between the two continents to so great an extent as to secure this quick mail route. The freight traffic generally follows the line of the mail and passenger travel. Now, I do not wish to detain the House; I did not intend to speak at all on this subject; but I think the Government should be left entirely free to choose whatever will be most advantageous to secure the primary object we have in view, that is, the rapid mail and passenger service between this country and Europe.

Gen. LAURIE. I venture to trespass on the time of the House for a few minutes, because some remarks have fallen from several hon. members which I did not feel justified in allowing to pass unchallenged. My hon. friend from Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) has stated that this is a question concerning not simply Halifax and St. John, and I will add—as my hon. friend from Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor) brought it in—St. Andrews also. The hon. gentleman says that it is a question which concerns the whole of Canada. I agree with him in his premises, but I differ from him in the conclusion he draws. I say it concerns the whole of Canada, because the prosperity of the Maritime Provinces concerns the whole of Canada. I was sorry to hear expressed in the House such a sectional remark similar to that made three years ago by the Monetary Times of Toronto, to the effect that we could do very well when matters were smooth with the country to the south of us, but that the Maritime Provinces were convenient in case of trouble. Now, Sir, we do not come to this House in forma pauperis; we do not come asking for what we do not consider our just rights. We were ready and willing enough to contribute our fair share to build your lines of railway in the west to develop the trade of Ontario and build up her large towns; and now we demand that we shall have consideration. Never mind whether Halifax, or St. John or St. Andrews will be the selected port; let it be the survival of the fittest. Let it be Shelburne, and that is the best harbor on the Atlantic coast—I say it advisedly; but it has not been favored with railway facilities, and we do not present its claims at present, whatever it may be in the future. But the point I am speaking to now is, are we justified in asking that these subsidies should be given with certain limitations? How was Liverpool built up? Not by the export of its own manufactures, but the merchants of Birmingham and Manchester selected what was the cheapest and most accessible port in their own country; and we demand the opportunity to do the same. If a protective or National Policy amounts to anything, let us use our own ports, and do not let us be at the mercy, as we were threatened the other day, of an unfriendly executive of the nation to the south. It is in the memory of hon. gentlemen that within the last few months we were threatened with a Non-Intercourse Act, and it is therefore right that we should develop our own commercial intercourse. It was in 1860 that the old Province of Canada gave an annual subsidy of $500,000 to the Allan Line to build up Montreal; and look to-day at that magnificent city on the St. Lawrence as the result of that expenditure. While we recognise that for a considerable time to come the St. Lawrence will be the outlet of our trade in the summer, whatever may be the fu we ture, ask that the Maritime Provinces shall be recognised as our winter line of trade; and I understood the Minister of Finance to say that the subsidy should be given with the understanding that these steamers will land at our own ports. The hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) states we now obtain our mail accommodation for nothing, and he proposes that should continue. I would remind him we now pay $126,000 a year to steamers that they may carry their freight past our doors to an American port. We are building up Portland, and is there any reason why our own ports should not be considered? I certainly shall support the proposition of the Government, and I think every hon member who is a Canadian at heart should support a proposal that will divert the whole trade of Canada in the winter months, as far as it can possibly be done, to a Canadian port and not to a foreign port. While the Government ask power to grant as much as $500,000 they do not say they intend to expend that amount. It has been said that certain proposals have been made to them. These are as yet inchoate, and I think the conditions they prescribe will be such as to commend themselves to every patriotic Canadian, that our mails, and our passenger and freight traffic will come to build up Canadian ports in the Maritime Provinces. The hon. member for Kent (Mr. Campbell) says that no Canadian cares whether his mails go by way of New York or not. I say, we in the Maritime Provinces, are Canadians also, and we care a great deal, although hon. members sometimes forget that.

Mr. KIRK. They forget that we are Canadians only by Act of Parliament.

Gen. LAURIE. I am a Canadian by Act of Parliament, and in spirit and in sympathy, and so are the most of us; but that is beside the question at present. I think even those who are only Canadians by Act of Parliament in the Maritime Provinces will support such a proposal as this, which is only just to the Maritime Provinces, that in developing our trade, we should develop it through Canadian ports as much as possible.

Mr. WELSH. As I spoke on this resolution the other night, I merely rise to reply to the strictures passed upon me by my hon. friend from St. John and another hon. gentleman who took umbrage at my remarks. I said that the fog might be in St. John for a week, more by way of a joke than anything else; but since I have had a rubbing up, I am going to tell them something. I take up Sessional Paper No. 62, of 1872, and I see a report sent to the Government at Ottawa, on the Bay of Fundy, which says:

"According to the sailing directions published in 1866, ships navigating the Bay of Fundy have to encounter an atmosphere almost constantly enveloped in dense fogs, the tide setting with great rapidity over the rocks and shoals with which it abounds, and a difficulty of obtaining anchorage on account of the depth; so that, under these circumstances, the most unremitting attention is requisite to prevent the disastrous consequences which must necessarily attend a want of knowledge and caution."

In 1872 or 1874, I forget which, there was a commission sent down by the Government of Canada to take evidence as to the feasibility of building a canal from the Bay of Fundy to the Baie Verte, and I was subpœnaed to attend that commission. While listening to the evidence, an old man, who had served a considerable time in the English navy and had sailed in the Bay of Fundy for several years, was examined. He described the dangers and the fogs, and the chairman of the committee asked him what the fog was like. He said: I have sailed over most of the world and have never seen fog so dense as in the Bay of Fundy. He said: I have seen the fog that dense that I could make a looking glass of my hand, and by looking at my hand I could see my face. The hon. gentleman threw a slur on my opinion, as if I had never been in St. John. Well, I have sailed in and out of the harbor of St. John frequently, and I know what it is like, and at all events, I have proved what I have said by the Government blue book. If I could get the report which I returned to the Library, and on which I cannot lay my hand just now, I could prove by the evidence therein contained, and given under oath, that every statement I made was true, and I will not take back one word of what I said. I will read you an extract from a publication that the people of St. John have issued to prove their case. In a letter from Captain S. H. Pike, late of the Inman Steamship Line, to the St. John Board of Trade, that gentleman said:

"I consider the Bay of Fundy as easy of approach and as safe for navigation as any portion of the North Atlantic coast at any season of the year and in all weathers. The snow storms, in my opinion, are not more severe in the Bay of Fundy than they are in the vicinity of Portland and Boston, while these cities also have a pretty large share of fog; still it always seemed to me that fog had a great love for St. John, and made its visits too long.

Mr. WELDON. The hon. gentleman should have continued to read. Captain Pyke goes on to say:

"But notwithstanding this, I know of no place I would rather approach on the coast, in fog or bad weather. The courses of the west channel—I am not so familiar with the south—are few and simple, and can be run without any great risk by a good pilot. I know of no bay on the North Atlantic coast so clear of obstructions to navigation as the Bay of Fundy from Mosspeck, on the coast of Maine, to Partridge Island, mouth of St John harbor. During the whole thirty years of my experience, making one or two trips per week in all seasons of the year, and in all kinds of weather, I met with but one accident in the Bay of Fundy, viz., while master of the State of Maine at Point Lepreaux. This accident I regard as exceptional, and attribute it to the Point Lepreaux whistle not being in its proper place. It has since been placed in the right position. The fog whistle is a grand institution if well attended."

My hon. friend might have saved himself his trouble of hunting up some old sailing directions of 1860. The report he hunted up was one of the Baie Verte Canal, surveyed in 1870-71, and it speaks of the sailing instructions published in 1866. If my hon. friend had gone to the report published in London, 1877, he would have found exactly the same language, which is a foul slander and utterly untrue. True it is that in summer there are fogs on that coast, but in the winter, and we have statistics to show it—the reports of the men who keep the fog whistles than which none can be more reliable—that the statements spread broadcast throughout the United Kingdom with regard to the condition of the Bay of Fundy are utterly unfounded. As regards anchorage that is exceptionally good, and since 1866 there are no coasts better lighted than both the coast of Maine and the coast of United States, which form the two sides of the Bay of Fundy, and besides that the automatic whistle buoys and the fog whistles enable vessels to make their way up that harbor through the thickest weather. There is not a rock or shallow to be found in the harbor.

Mr. KENNY. I did not intend to address the Committee again on this question if the hon. junior member for the City and County of St. John had not referred to me. When I addressed the Committee on Thurday evening, I made no reference to the city of St. John. I do not think I even mentioned the city of St. John, but I mentioned the part of Halifax because the senior member for Halifax had attempted to convey the idea that Halifax was not a suitable and good winter port for this Dominion.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I did nothing of the kind.

Mr. KENNY. The hon. gentleman instituted a comparison between the port of Halifax and the port of New York, which reflected disparagingly on the port of Halifax.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). That is what you say.

Mr. KENNY. That is what the hon. gentleman said, and that is the impression he may have left on the minds of the Committee and it was in order to dispel that impression from the minds of the Committee that I made special reference to Halifax and to the undeniable advantages with which Providence has blessed that port. This is not a local or sectional matter, but a matter of national concern. This is a matter, not for St. John or Halifax or St. Andrews or Louisburg, but one which calls on the Government to select that port which will best suit the trade of Canada. I contend it is desirable in the national interest that we should endeavor to secure to our country as efficient an ocean steam service as that enjoyed by any other country, and I say that such a service is a necessary adjunct to our great transcontinental system. This service is not exclusively for Canada. We ambition to secure for Canada and to make Canada the highway of the traffic from Europe to Eastern Asia and to Australasia. And, as my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Wood) has stated, as the mail traffic goes, so will the passenger traffic go, and so will the freight traffic go. My hon. friend from St. John has referred to the trade of that community and to the trade of the port of Montreal. Far be it from me to say one disparaging word in reference to St. John. I have the greatest regard and respect for the citizens of that community, and for its representatives in this House, and I have spent some of the happiest days of my life in St. John. I say to you gentlemen of Ontario who have not had the opportunity of visiting St. John, that the oftener you go there the more frequently you will desire to go. I tell you that it is one of the pleasantest places to visit, and now that we are to have a short line from Montreal to Halifax, which Mr. Van Horne says will take us from one point to the other in fifteen hours, though I give you twenty or twenty-two hours, I hope we shall see and know more of each other than we have in the past. Then also, you will find that, with a fast line of steamers, the trade will be diverted to a Canadian port. When you can reach Liverpool a day and a half sooner from Halifax than from New York, I am satisfied that a large amount of our passenger travel from Ontario will go by our own port. Other things being equal, Canadians will travel by their own line, and we are not here to say that we are Canadians only by Act of Parliament. Here, and at my home, and everywhere, I contend I am as good a Canadian as any man who lives in the Province of Ontario, and I am proud to say so. My hon. friend from St. John has referred to the arrivals and departures and the tonnage of ships at various ports, but the trade returns show that these were larger in the port of Halifax last year than in any other port in the Dominion of Canada, Montreal included. While I recognise that this is not a local matter or a sectional matter, it is a matter of national concern, and it is in the interest of Canada that we should sustain the reputation of our ocean service and surely this Dominion is able to afford as much for that purpose as the two old Provinces of Canada were able to pay twenty-eight years ago.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The Committee must agree with me that this is a very large sum of money, and that we should look at the probable results to be attained from this expenditure. A good deal has been said about the two ports which we have, and we are glad to believe that they are two good ocean ports; but this is merely a matter of trade and commeree, and we have to look at the probabilities. The gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Kenny) says that we desire to benefit our own routes and to secure as much traffic as possible for them. I believe that desire will be felt by everyone in the Committee, but there may be two classes of those who travel by ocean lines. Those who are in a hurry to cross the ocean and to reach the other side, and in haste to return from the other side to their homes, will be influenced to take the fastest line on the ocean in order to accomplish that end. Those who are not in such great haste, those who are travelling for health or who have leasure, will be influenced perhaps by the price which is asked for their trip. I think the hon. member (Mr. Kenny) figured that there would be an advantage to the people of Ontario in the establishment of this fast line of steamers. I would like to ask if the advantage is in point of time or in regard to business requirements. Has the hon. gentleman gone into a close calculation in regard to that? I have not, but, discussing the matter the other day with a member from his own Province, I was told that the distance from Liverpool to New York is not over 500 miles more than it is from Liverpool to Halifax. If that be the case, the fast ocean steamers sailing from New York would not take twenty-four hours longer to reach New York than they would to reach Halifax. But, taking the Ontario passenger—and that is one of the large Provinces from which a great many travel, and we may therefore take Toronto as a central point—taking the passenger to Toronto, he finds himself in New York twenty-four hours later than he would find himself in Halifax; but he has to reach Toronto from New York in the one case or from Halifax in the other. He sits down to figure out how long it will take him to come from New York to Toronto. I think the time is sixteen hours. From Halifax, how long would my hon. friend say it would take to go to Toronto?

Mr. KENNY. Mr. Van Horne is my authority for saying——

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Never mind Mr. Van Horne. What does my hon. friend say?

Mr. KENNY. I think at present it takes 12 hours from Montreal, does it not?

Mr. LAURIER. 14 hours.

Mr. BOWELL. 10 hours.

Mr. KENNY. Then it would take about 32 hours when the Short Line is completed.

Mr. KIRK. It takes 48 hours now to get from Halifax to Ottawa.

Mr. KENNY. The journey has been made over the Intercolonial Railway with the English mail from Halifax to Montreal in 28½ hours by that circuitous route.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). That was under the Reform Government.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It takes 48 hours now. By some Short Line my hon. friend thinks he can reach Toronto in 32 hours. I rather doubt that, but if he does he will see that the argument is still against him for several hours. Therefore, admitting that you have your best line of steamers the man travelling on business, guided by business principles—and the hon. gentleman knows that patriotism, as it is called, does not come much into calculation there—admitting that it is as pleasant a journey by one route as the other, would still go by New York in preference to taking the other route. Then there is the other point which I have alluded to, that with the other class of people a cheaper rate might be an object. If my hon. friend will make a calculation in regard to that and will see how much better that $500,000 could be used, he will see that we could pay the passage of 10,000 people at $50 each to travel over our present line every year. Certainly that would secure a passenger traffic. My hon. friend talks about traffic, and I presume he is talking about freight and business. Well, I think my hon. friend had an elevator built in the city of Halifax. Will he tell us what business that elevator does, and how much grain has passed through that elevator in the last two years? There has been a large expenditure of money there and the grain was to flow down in one of those fanciful visions the hon. gentleman opposite had. Has it done so? Where is the traffic? Where is the trade he has diverted to this city? But if he will take this $500,000 that he proposes to spend on this line of steamers and use it for some useful purpose, what can he do with it? It will give a bonus of 10 cents a bushel on the 5,000,000 bushels of wheat that passes through that elevator and takes its way to Europe. Would not that be a little more sensible proposition than you propose at the present time? This whole proposition is one that cannot commend itself to the good sense of this Committee, and I am surprised that hon. members, not only from Ontario but from the other Provinces, can give it in any favor.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I desire to correct the figures of the hon. gentleman for Brant (Mr. Paterson). I am not going to say a word in respect to the relative merits of St. John and Halifax—I am not going to eulogise St. John, that much slandered city, so ably represented in this House by its three representatives, a city of which the truth has not been told in former years, a city of undoubted merits. Let me inform the hon. member for Brant that one-half of the entire population of Canada lies east of Montreal, including Montreal as a part, I am not sure, but I think rather more than one-half of the entire population of the Dominion of Canada—who, certainly during the winter time, will use Halifax as their port of departure. With reference to Toronto, which the hon. member for Brant has taken as a centre of gravity, so to speak, for Ontario, I desire to call attention to the fact that when the Short Line is working in good order, if Mr. Van Horne's figures are correct—and they are not extreme, they only imply a rate of only 32 or 33 miles per hour—if his figures are realised, you will go from Toronto to Halifax in 32 hours, and from Halifax to the British Isles in six days and you save a clear day on the ocean. Going from Toronto to New York in 16 hours, the land journey is 16 hours shorter than by the way of Halifax, but there will be a loss on the ocean of some 25 hours. Therefore I claim that there is a net saving as between Toronto and the port of Liverpool of 9 hours by way of Halifax or St. John in the winter season. I desire strongly to express what I believe to be the sense of an overwhelming majority of the people of the Lower Provinces in favor of this proposition. There was a feeling of delight and of pride when the people of the Lower Provinces learned that the Government contemplated this scheme of putting greyhounds on the sea and making the terminal port in Canadian territory.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I do not know what Mr. Van Horne's figures are. Will the hon. gentleman say what is the present time between Halifax and Toronto?

Mr. WELDON (Albert). That has really nothing to do with it.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I want to know whether it is probable that we can save this length of time.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). The hon. gentleman knows as well as I that we lie three or fours hours in Quebec, and if we take the Grand Trunk Railway we lie in Richmond for some time during the night and are delayed in Montreal.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). If we grant the hon. gentleman's whole figures, and that when this line is built we can accomplish the journey in 32 hours, which I very much doubt, on this long journey he has gained 9 hours, and that is all he gains, that is all the advantage he will have for his fast travelling.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I took the hon. gentleman's own figures. It may be a good deal more.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). You took the figures, putting in these 32 hours on the road that is to be built. That is something in the future. It may turn out something like the millions of bushels of grain that were to pass through this elevator that we built. It may turn out like sums of money that we have been voting to build a railway and of which we find the cost double or triple the amount that it was promised would be sufficient. The hon. gentleman's figuring is conjecture.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). No. As the road is completed at this hour, if the 20 miles of imperfect grading were in proper shape on the Short Line, I claim, within an hour of those figures, that we can realise the 32 hours.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I do not propose to discuss the relative merits of St. John and Halifax. When I spoke on a previous occasion I thought that it was more becoming not to make any invidious comparisons between those two cities; and I still think it is better to leave to others to speak of our surroundings than to boast of them ourselves. My hon. colleague seemed to think he was particularly charged with vindicating the interest of Halifax. Sir, Halifax requires no vindication here. She is so situated geographically that she always must command a certain advantage over St John. But be that as it may, the peerless port of Halifax stands there inviting the commerce of the world, and it will go there provided all things are equal, and it can be distributed there on as good terms as from any other place on the continent. I merely say this in passing, not standing in fear of the indignation of my hon. colleague who, doubtless, thought that he could make a point against me, which he always appears too ready to do, and which I must say worries me very little indeed. The resolution before the House invites us to the expenditure of a large sum of money. We asked the Government to give us information as to the mode in which they propose to carry out this steamship service. We have a right to expect from them a positive and deliberate statement where they are going to touch on the English side. We do not require them to tell us where they are going to touch on this side, because it is admitted that Halifax, at all events, is to be the port. But I claim that they are bound to inform this Committee, before we go out of Committee, where they propose touching on the English side, and as concerns the ship which leaves this side of the Atlantic, whether they propose terminating the voyage there or sending that vessel on to a French port. The Minister of Finance was not very clear in reply to my enquiry the other night. I cannot imagine a more unwise and unbusinesslike proposition than to subsidise a line of steamers to go to France by the way of England. Why, Sir, the hon. gentleman must know, if he knows anything about it at all, that it would utterly destroy all chances of success for a line of steamers going in that way. He must have a terminal point in England, and he may have to go to a French port so far as his passengers are concerned. I say, so far as passengers are concerned, but the hon. gentleman knows that the small freight they would carry never could bear the expenditure of transhipment from one ship to another. It would go in direct lines from this side to French ports. Therefore, I invite him to consider this matter on the lines he has laid down here as his base of operations. I invite the hon. gentleman to consider seriously this question, because I cannot imagine he was in earnest when he stated that the Government would entertain such an insane proposition as to propose a subsidised line to go to a French port after touching at an English port. If the vessels took nothing but passengers and mails it might be done, but even in that case it would be most difficult, because those seas are very difficult to navigate in a stormy season and those large and valuable vessels are not handled without a great deal of apprehension, and it will add very much to the insurance on those steamers to compel them to make different ports. If the Government anticipate that the line will carry any freight at all, and the hon. member for Shelburne (General Laurie) justified his action in supporting this resolution on this ground, it will be death to the scheme at the very commencement. I was amused with the proposal of the hon. member for Shelburne. He said that the ground on which he was supporting this resolution was that it would enable those steamers to take large quantities of freight.

Gen. LAURIE. I never said anything of the sort.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. gentleman said he would vote for this subsidy to divert trade from Portland to Canadian ports.

Gen. LAURIE. I never said these steamers would do it.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). We shall see what the report says. I took the words down. He said he would justify his vote on the ground that it was going to divert the trade from American to Canadian ports. In reality it is going to be the reverse. My proposal or my suggestion to the Minister of Finance was that a line of steamers less expensive, and which would not involve such a large annual subsidy and a large line which would make from 16 to 17 knots, being 3 or 4 knots in advance of the present subsidised line, would carry on each vessel 2,000 or 3,000 tons of freight each way, from Liverpool to Montreal and from Montreal to Liverpool, and from Liverpool to Halifax in winter time, this quantity of freight being carried over the Intercolonial Railway. In this way the Government might be able, if they obtained any profit out of the freight carried over the Intercolonial Railway, it would justify the expenditure, because if 6,000 tons of freight per week were to pass over that road, 3,000 tons each way, that revenue would go far towards paying the subsidy which the Government were asking this House to grant. If they propose a 20-knot service with vessels carrying only 700 tons or at the most 1,000 tons, vessels like the Etruria, there would only be 700 tons or 1,000 tons to handle at Halifax, instead of 3,000 tons each way. I say that it would be very much better for the people of Halifax who are employed in loading and unloading those vessels that my plan should be adopted, and I do not care what my worthy colleague may say in this respect, because I have had a good deal of experience in that line of business, and I say it would be ten times more advantageous to Halifax that steamers such as I suggested should come there with their large cargoes to discharge and prepare to take large cargoes away, employing our people to unload them and reload them for their voyages, than if the steamers carried only 700 tons of cargo on board. That is the position I have taken with respect to this matter from the very commencement Statements have been made with respect to the United States. It must be remembered that the United States pays no subsidies, that England pays no subsidies, they merely pay for the carriage of the mail. They will give the business to any line of fast steamers put on by any individual company or speculators, and if they carry the mails at a certain rate of speed they will get the work. I repeat that they give no regular subsidy, but they give a certain sum by weight for the carriage of the mail. On that ground, therefore, we have taken a different basis entirely. But take the whole of these resolutions, and what do they mean? We are asked under these various resolutions to vote $750,000 minus $125,000 or $625,000, which means interest on $15,000,000 of debt at 4 per cent., it means an addition of $15,000,000 to our national indebtedness simply for an unnecessary object. If there were anything to be accomplished by it, I would join with the Government in supporting their proposal, for I have no desire as a business man except to see our trade developed to its utmost capacity, and I should like that the steamers going across the Atlantic should be adapted to our trade under the circumstances. But what reasonable man would add $15,000,000 to our indebtedness in order to obtain steamers that would make 2 knots per hour more than those which I propose. I believe you can get such steamers as I have mentioned for nearly one-half the proposed subsidy. I believe if the Government were now to insert an advertisement asking for tenders at the lowest rate at which the service would be performed at the rate of 16 or 17 knots, they would find that a very material reduction could be effected. The Minister of Finance has stated that the Allan Company last year tendered at £2,000 a trip for an 18-knot service, or pretty much the same amount as it is now proposed to grant to this new and faster line. I have no doubt that when the Allan Company tendered they thought they would have no competitors and might obtain their own price. It is possible that such is the case, as they have had the contract so long, but with all the discussion that is going on and all the information of which we are in possession and with the various companies looking for the contract on one side of the water as well as the other, if the Government inserted an advertisement asking for tenders for the fastest service that could be obtained for $250,000 or $300,000 at the outside, I should be very much surprised if they did not get the offer of a 17-knot service, which I believe would be all that is required and all that necessity dictates at the present moment, and this course would be in the interest of our trade generally. It must not be forgotten that these large companies at Montreal have a certain claim on this country. They have invested their money in these large enterprises and have helped to build up the commerce of this country, and if arrangements could have been made with an old company like the Allan Company, which had done so much to make Montreal what it is to-day, there would have been a general feeling of satisfaction in this country. But the Government have taken a different view, one which in my judgment would not be advantageous to this country. The hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) said the people of the Maritime Provinces were unanimous in their demands for this service.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I said an overwhelming majority.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). That is pretty nearly the same thing.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). No.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. gentleman has obtained his information doubtless by some underground means.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I watch the newspapers.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). We do not always take the newspapers as reflecting public opinion. If the hon. gentleman sometimes read what the newspapers say about him, he would not take the view that they always reflected public opinion. Be that as it may, I admit there is a desire among the people generally to improve the mail service. That is what I ask. I am asking that three or four knots more per hour be secured from the vessels than under the present contract, but hon. gentlemen who knows anything about steamships are aware that when you seek to obtain a speed of six knots more, the cost of obtaining the two or three last knots is out of all proportion to that of obtaining moderate speed, and if the Government are aiming to obtain a high rate of speed, they will have to pay a sum which will astonish them in the end and which is altogether unnecessary. I go back to the position which I started with, I think that perhaps this is a matter which we need not discuss so much as the point which we want to arrive at: what are the Government going to do? Where are they going to send the vessels to and do they still adhere to what I call the insane proposal of going to France with this same vessel—a proposal which will wreck every possibility of success for their undertaking. I think that these are points which we ought to have positively before the Committee before we grant this vote. It is a business-like way for the Government to give us this information and it is the constitutional way. Why, Sir, even if the Minister of Marine only brings down an estimate for $30,000 to build new lighthouses, it would not be allowed to pass unless we have information about it. I remember 20 years ago when I was a member of this House that they would not grant an estimate like this unless the Minister stated before the vote where and how the money was to be spent. If this Parliament has been so careful and watchful of its rights and dignity in the past, are we to-day to throw that principle aside and place this large amount at the disposal of the Government simply on their statement that "we are going to do this or that, we are going to have a line of steamers here, or we are going to have a line of steamers there." We have all heard the remark made by the late Sir George E. Cartier that the Governor in Council was a great institution. That may be true, and some people may have great confidence in the Governor in Council, but I do not pretend to have all that confidence in them myself. I would have more confidence in them as business men, if they would come down with a business-like proposal and if they would act as business men and also as statesmen who respect the rights of Parliament and lay before Parliament what Parliament is entitled to, a plain and explicit statement of how this money is to be spent.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). As the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) was kind enough to check me in my figures I know he will esteem it a kindness on my part if I will check him, as we both desire to arrive at correct results. I have now a paper before me which gives the distances from Halifax to Montreal at 760 miles, and if I remember aright I think it is 333 miles from Montreal to Toronto.

Mr. KENNY. Are you speaking of the Intercolonial or what road?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I am speaking of the Short Line. The figures were read by Mr. Scholfield in a paper before the St. John Board of Trade, and I presume they can be taken as authentic; if not the hon. gentleman can correct me now. 333 miles and 760 make 1,093 miles, and I take it that you will travel at 25 miles an hour.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). Thirty-five miles an hour is the mail train rate.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I prefer to take the 25 miles an hour, because people will not travel over the road unless they get three meals a day and they will want several meals in the course of a 43 hours journey. I think you will find that if you make 25 miles an hour between Halifax and Toronto allowing for stoppages and meals you will have nothing to complain of the rate of travel. Twenty-five miles an hour is a pretty good rate of travel and on that calculation it would take 44 hours to Toronto. If we take 25 hours off the extra distance to New York it leaves 19 hours from New York to Toronto, but I think it does not take that length of time. The hon. gentleman speaks about a proposition that the Government contemplate, and which will have to be considered when it comes down,—an expenditure of some millions more of the money of the people of the country to shorten this route to Halifax by only fourteen miles according to Mr. Van Horne's statement.

Mr. TEMPLE. It will shorten it more than that.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I have my authority beside me; the gentleman to whom Mr. Van Horne made the statement.

Mr. TEMPLE. I do not care what Mr. Van Horne or anyone else stated.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I know the hon. gentleman claims that it will shorten the distance by 30 miles but the hon. gentleman from Albert is precluded from going behind Mr. Van Horne's authority because he quoted him himself. I have the proof of Mr. Van Horne's statement here. We will suppose that after the expenditure of these millions of dollars the route of from Halifax to Montreal is shortened by 14 miles. Then you have a distance of 746 miles remaining and that with the 333 miles to Toronto makes a distance of 1,079 miles at the speed of 25 miles an hour, including stoppages, the journey would occupy 43 hours and if you are 25 hours longer on the ship to New York it leaves 18 hours from which to get to from New York to Toronto, but I think it will be accomplished in less time than that. I give these figures to my friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon) in order to correct him, because I do not wish to be behind him in the kindness he manifested to me by correcting me when he thought I was wrong.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I am sorry that I cannot accept the correction of my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Paterson) much as I would wish to take information from a wiser and older member of Parliament. The figures the hon. gentleman has given are not quite correct, although nearly so. The estimate of Mr. Schreiber is that when the new link is built connecting the New Brunswick Railway with Moncton over 40 miles will be saved, but I will take the hon. member's own figures. He says that there is a total of 1,093 miles from Halifax to Montreal, and we need stop to argue his contention that a train runs 25 miles an hour. At the present time on the Intercolonial Railway, with its multitudinous stations erected to accommodate the villages along the line, the train makes 25 miles an hour and stops inordinately. It is only reasonable to suppose that a fast mail will go quicker. If they attach a dining car to this mail train so that the engine will only have to stop for coal and water, there is no reason why a train cannot make 35 miles an hour over that railroad to-day. Assuming that a train makes as good time over this very excellent road as she will make between Toronto and New York, it will be exactly 31 hours from Toronto to Halifax over the existing road and if you take the Short Line it will only be a little over 29 hours. The figures I gave a few moments ago with reference to the ocean distance were from imperfect information, but I have since obtained the correct figures from a map, and I find that whereas I stated there would be a saving on the ocean journey as between coming from the British Islands to Halifax and to New York, of 510 miles in favor of Halifax, the saving is actually 650 miles as appears from an extract from the railway guide which an hon. friend has handed to me. There is an advantage of 140 miles over and above what I had previously stated, and I did not lay enough emphasis on the great saving of time due to the fact that when anyone goes from Toronto to Great Britain via Halifax he has not a single Customs officer to deal with. As fast as they can get the luggage off the steamer to the train, it is done, while a great many hon. members know that when you go via New York you stand a chance of losing from five to ten hours at the Custom house. Then, putting the argument that the route via New York is about fourteen hours shorter, the advantage I have shown to the Halifax route instead of being measured by twenty-five hours is measured by twenty-nine or thirty hours.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is the route that much shorter, running at the same rate of speed as at present?

Mr. WELDON (Albert). Yes; the same rate of speed.

Mr. LISTER. There is no railway in Canada that runs 32 or 35 miles an hour.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I want to say in conclusion that whereas on this close calculation I have made out that the advantage in time in favor of Halifax was only 9 hours, it seems reasonably clear that it is 29 hours.

Mr. LOVITT. Where did the hon. gentleman get the distance of 650 miles of saving on the Atlantic?

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I got it from a railway guide which was handed to me by an hon. member.

Mr. LOVITT. He is mistaken. It is 3,100 from Southampton to New York and about 2,600 miles to Halifax. I do not take anybody's information on that; I can measure it for myself.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). You are speaking of Southampton, I am speaking of Liverpool.

Mr. LOVITT. Liverpool is shorter yet.

Mr. SHANLY. I may say for the information of the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) that the mail trains from Halifax to Montreal have done the distance in 28 hours, and the exact distance is 842 miles. Of course, it is not to be supposed that the general running of trains will be equal to 30 miles an hour; but when a fast steamer lands at Halifax, and the passengers are put on board the mail train, there is no reason why it should not be run at the rate of 30 miles an hour, and on the Short Line that rate would bring them from Halifax to Toronto in 32 hours. It is not the regular thing to do, but when they chose to make an effort, they have had no difficulty in doing it.

Mr. WATSON. I cannot claim, like some hon. gentlemen who have addressed the House, any practical connection with the running of ships, but I have known from experienced men that when you speed a locomotive or a steamship several miles over its regular speed, the expense for the last two or three miles in wear and tear is much greater than any other part of the cost. I do not know of any railway train, for carrying mails or for any other purpose, that runs regularly at the rate of 32 miles an hour. I suppose we may take as a fair sample the trains running between Toronto and Montreal, a distance of 333 miles. The Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk are competitors for the traffic, and no doubt they run their trains between those cities as fast as they will be run on the Short Line from Montreal to Halifax, and we find that the time made by those trains is only 27½ miles an hour, and it is not fair to suppose that a company which is going to have the whole carrying trade—because we are not to consider the Short Line a competitive line with the Intercolonial—is going to run its trains any faster than it is obliged to. The hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Shanly) has told us that at one time the Intercolonial Railway did carry the mails at the rate of 30 miles an hour. I wonder why the Government did not keep up that rate of speed. I suppose they found that it did not pay, as the wear and tear on the rolling stock was too great. Coming from the west I feel that I would not be doing my duty if I did not raise my voice against paying $500,000 a year to assist a fast line across the Atlantic. As has been already stated, very few people in Canada will benefit by this fast mail service. I do not believe it will be possible for this fast line of steamers to carry any great quantity of freight, and the shippers of freight will gain very little from it; and it has been explained that most important transactions requiring immediate dispatch are now done by the Atlantic cable, so that there is little or no reason for a fast mail service. I also oppose it because there is great difficulty in getting even small sums of money to develop the North-West and to give a small mail service there. When a couple of days ago I tried to induce the Postmaster General to provide three mails a week on the Glenboro' branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway, he informed me that he could not do so, although it would only cost $800 additional a year; and the other day he found it necessary to increase the postage and registration rates on letters in order to realise $75,000 a year; and yet the Government find it necessary to vote $500,000 a year in order to have these greyhounds on the Atlantic. Under these circumstances, I feel that I would not be doing my duty unless I raised my voice against this grant, which will be of little or no benefit to the western portion of Canada. It appears to me that the Government are looking for some hole to throw money into when they make this large grant to such an enterprise. I question whether any company will be able to operate a line of steamships at the rate of 20 knots an hour with this bonus. If it is necessary to maintain that speed, the chances are that in another year or two these people will be coming and asking us for an increase on the ground that it is not sufficient. When you tax machinery to its utmost it is very expensive to keep it in repair, and to my mind if all the travel from Canada to Great Britain were to patronise this route of steamers it would not pay.

Mr. McNEILL. It seems to me that the question we have to decide is whether or not Canada, which is one of the greatest maritime nations of the world, has made up her mind to retire from that position by refusing to give for a first class mail ocean service a sum that she gave years ago willingly. Is Canada prepared to give up passenger traffic, altogether and be content simply to carry freight? We know perfectly well that we are losing our passenger traffic simply because we have not got vessels fast enough to compete with the other ocean services, and the question is whether or not we will make an effort to regain the position we formerly held. We have expended an immense deal of money in providing for ourselves the most perfect railway communication in the world, and are we prepared to-day to say that we will dwarf that enterprise and destroy its advantages by rendering it impossible for us to obtain from it what we expected to gain from the expenditure of our money and energy upon that work. If we do not provide the sea service necessary to complete the service we have provided on land, the Canadian Pacific Railway must of necessity be a failure. I do not say that hon. gentlemen opposite would wish to see that, but everyone must feel that it must be a failure unless we supply a first-class service by water. It has been said that we ought to subsidise freight traffic. I do not see where the necessity to do so arises, as we have already any amount of competition in that line. We have the Allan Line, the Dominion and Beaver Lines, all competing and ready now to carry our freight, and to carry it as cheaply as we can reasonably expect it to be carried. Then we are told this subsidy will provide only a passenger traffic. On the contrary, the Minister of Finance told us that these vessels would be prepared to carry from one to two thousand tons of freight, and it is of the greatest importance that we should have fast vessels to carry a great deal of freight across the Atlantic. We have heard a great deal about the farmer, but there are many farm products which it is of the greatest importance we should have carried by the fastest possible lines of ocean communication. There is, for example, the butter trade, for which it is of the greatest possible importance to have a fast line. Then we have the cheese trade, for which, perhaps, a fast line is not so important a requisite; but the butter trade, which is one of the great future trades we are about to enter upon with the mother country, on the one side, and China on the other, is a trade which it is absolutely necessary should be provided with fast means of communication. There is a market in England to-day for something like $40,000,000 worth of our butter. Our cheese trade with England is one of the largest we have, amounting to something like $7,000,000; but the other trade lying waiting for us to-day we will never be able to take advantage of, unless we can provide vessels fast enough to carry the butter over in a reasonable time. Again we know that our neighbors to the south may make up their minds at any time to carry out their threats and close their ports to us, and, if they do, are we to be left with a second or third rate line of mail service, as well as freight and passenger service? It does seem to me, in so far as the arguments advanced on the other side are concerned, that it is almost impossible to imagine anything weaker, unless hon. gentlemen opposite have made up their minds that the development of the resources of Canada is of secondary importance, and that, what we ought to do is to build up the resources of the nation to the south of us.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron). With reference to what has been said concerning passengers being delayed at the Customs houses in going from Toronto to Liverpool and returning, let me state that I have gone from Toronto to New York, and crossed the ocean and recrossed, and I know that when you come to Blackrock all you have to do is to present your through ticket from Ontario to Liverpool and your luggage is never opened. You take your passage on the steamer and you go right along, and when you return on a through ticket from Liverpool to Toronto your luggage is never opened at New York, so that the statement is incorrect regarding delay at the Customs there. With respect to the fast line of steamers, and such a long overland route, that is not fit either for butter or cheese. The sooner we can reach the ocean and get these commodities on board the steamer the better. The longer the land journey, the more danger there is to that class of articles such as butter and cheese, especially in hot weather. If the Government wish to do something for the trade of Canada, let them take this $500,000 and give it as a bonus for carrying wheat, say 10 cents on an export of 5,000,000 bushels. And in that way they would do us more benefit then by the way they propose. In giving such a large sum of money, we should obtain something more than the mere carrying of the mails; we ought to have a line of steamers that would carry freight much cheaper than at present; for it is impossible for us to compete with our neighbors—and we are brought into competition with them every day—unless we can get cheaper rates across the ocean.

Mr. DAWSON. I am sure that the establishment of the Allan Line in the first instance was of immense advantage to Canada; but now matters have come to such a pass that unless we can have a fast line of steamers that will surpass any other line, passengers will not come by the Canadian route. People now go by the fastest line, where ever they can find it. It is certainly a matter of great importance to us to have people travel by our Canadian line. Again, there is another point to be considered. We have always held out to the Imperial Government that we would provide a fast line across the continent whereby troops might be conveyed with the greatest possible dispatch, in the interests of the Empire at large, from England to India, if the necessity arose, and no doubt the day will come when we shall have British armies crossing this continent on the way to the Pacific. Should we not then provide means of transit for them, for they certainly could not go viâ New York. That is at least one reason why we should make our line across the continent available for all purposes. A great deal of valuable information has been given to the House during this discussion, but that information has confirmed me in the opinion that we ought to provide the fastest line possible to the other side, and I shall have great satisfaction in supporting the resolution of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have listened with a great deal of interest to this debate and have come to the conclusion that, in the present financial condition of the country, it is extremely foolish for the Government to vote $500,000 a year in order to obtain a fast line of steamers. We have very fair accommodation at present. We have only a population of five millions, and I do not think that, when the United States had a population of thirty millions, it had anything like the accommodation in this respect which we have to-day. I quite agree as to the desirability of getting a cheap and a more efficient transport of freight from this country to the place of consumption. I have been amused, however, to listen to the discussion which has taken place as to short lines. I remember, a few years ago, when Sir Charles Tupper was a member of this House, that he promised that the Oxford, New Glasgow and Louisburg Short Line was to be the line of this country to take the whole carrying trade. What has become of that line? We are now talking of another short line. How many short lines are we to have? We understand that in a day or two a proposition will be brought down to vote $500,000 to complete a line—

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Not to complete, to start.

Mr. McMULLEN. Yes, to start a line to implement a promise made by Sir Charles Tupper a few years ago in regard to another short line. We have any amount of short lines in the East, and I have been amused to notice how many competing cities there are which are struggling each to get the start of the other in connection with this supposed fast line. It is time for us to consider where we are. Some people have been talking about trains travelling at the rate of 35 miles an hour. I think the country is running into debt at the rate of 35 miles an hour, and that the Government should reduce the speed. I have been amused at the discussion which has taken place between some hon. gentlemen who represent those eastern cities. There appears to be a constant difference between those hon. gentlemen, and I have been amused to listen to the two hon. members from Halifax, who remind me of the quarrels which we are informed took place between the Kilkenny cats. When one hon. gentleman gets up on the one side and makes a proposition, the other hon. gentleman gets up on the other side and makes a statement which is the exact opposite. I believe the hon. gentleman opposite (Mr. Kenny) is Irish, as I am myself. I do not know whether he is from Kilkenny or not, but, at all events, he shows the disposition of the Kilkenny cat in being always ready to assail anything which is said by my hon. friend here (Mr. Jones). Then, from St. John we have the same unfortunate exhibition of one man supporting the Government and one supporting the Opposition. I think, however, the City of St. John did itself the justice of electing two Rouges, but one has become Bleu since he came here. We must submit to that, however. One objectionable proposition is to take this fast line to France as well as to Great Britain. Looking at the public returns, I find that our total export to France last year amounted to $397,000, and our imports to $2,642,000. That virtually means 50 cents a head of the population of this country; and, in order to have a closer and more direct communication with that country, we are asked to expend $200,000 a year, which I think it will cost in excess of what it would to obtain a fast connection with the British Isles alone I think it is really insane to propose to add to the debt of this country to such an extent for the purpose of obtaining a shorter line to a foreign country with which we only do a trade of 50 cents a head. I have no objection to our obtaining close and rapid connection with the British Isles, but, in the present condition of our finances, it is very imprudent to expend such a large amount of money to subsidise a line for the sake of the gentry who want to travel at lightning speed. I believe that, in increasing our annual expenditure to $40,000,000 a year, which it soon will reach, or $8 a head, we shall be guilty of an insane and imprudent action by agreeing to this vote for a fast line of steamers. I think this proposition caps the climax of all the ridiculous propositions that have been brought before the House this Session, except the one in regard to our connection with Australia and Vancouver. I think we should turn our attention to the internal condition of the country, and should assist those men who are struggling without relief and waiting for more prosperous times, instead of assisting the aspirations and desires of the nobs of the country by subsidising fast lines of steamers for their convenience. In that case we would receive the thanks of the people to a greater extent than we will now.

Mr. MULOCK. Last Thursday, the Minister of Finance was asked certain questions in regard to this matter, and I understood it was his intention to give the information before we went out of Committee. I think we ought to know something in regard to the leading features of this scheme. I thought it my duty at that time to ask for the information, and I therefore now ask if the Minister of Finance has any further reason than he gave originally for proposing that this line shall go to a port in France, and I would also ask what extra cost is occasioned by extending the line to France? It might be very desirable to have this service in connection with Great Britain, but if we are to have it with the continent as well, we should have some information as to the extra cost and should know what the service is to perform. I think it is specially becoming of the Minister of Finance and the gentlemen at his back, to consider whether in connecting this service with the continent, they are not to a certain extent discriminating against the mother country. Are they not, by this movement, going to divert trade from England? Are they not, by selecting a continental port, going to give up some advantages to be obtained by stopping at the best port in Great Britain—Liverpool? If they are going to touch at a port in France, I don't see how they can use the port of Liverpool. It must be a port in the south of England—The First Minister intimated that much, the other evening; if so, they are not adopting the best port in Great Britain, but a secondary port for the sake of connecting with France. Now, I am not unwilling that we should have business relations with France, or with any other part of the world, but I think we should know the cost of the service at present. Would it be better to expend $500,000 a year and take a secondary port in England to connect with the continent in the way proposed, or would it be better to have our service connect simply with one port in Great Britain? Then we should look at it from the Imperial standpoint. Certainly these are considerations that are most material, and that it ought to be thoroughly deliberated by Parliament unless it is to become a mere register of the opinions of others, in which case we might as well give a general power of attorney to the Government and go about our business. But so long as it remains a deliberative and representative body, it is due to us, members of that body, that we should have that information which is necessary in order to enable us to come to an intelligent conclusion. In making these remarks I do not wish to be understood as opposed to any system of developing our trade and bringing us abreast of the times. When these resolutions were presented to us the other evening, I understood that we were to have other information before we were called upon to vote. I now ask the Finance Minister if he is prepared to give the information in the direction required?

Mr. LANDERKIN. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if he has any report on the subject from the High Commissioner? Will the Minister inform me if that gentleman has made a report upon the subject? The silence of the Minister of Finance, I fancy, would indicate that such a report has been made, and I would like to ascertain the basis upon which such a report is founded. What are the conclusions to be drawn from the High Commissioner on the subject? I think it is the member for Halifax—I do not know whether he is the junior or the senior,—I fancy they both look a little in the senior division—he speaks about being a Canadian. I presume he would not ship on a steamer for the old country from the port of New York. If I mistake not the High Commissioner has made similar statements in this House. I think the last time he came out from the old country he landed at New York.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). And on a German line.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I believe others have done so, but I do not know that they have been accused of disloyalty or treason. But probably the High Commissioner is not as truly a Canadian as the senior or the junior member for Halifax is. But if he has made a report on this subject it is proper that we should see it, and if half a million dollars is to be spent merely to get the best line of steamers across the Atlantic, it is desirable in the interests of this country that every information should be furnished to the House so that we may know, before the money is voted, whether it is going to be returned in profit to the consumers of this country. The people in this country do not find money on every gooseberry bush. Will the members of the Government tell the people of this country that in order to get a quick passage for the mails they have to be delayed in Canada for a week, whereas by taking other routes they start every day in the week? The High Commissioner, I think, when he came out, came in a sealed packet, and he has never been called treasonable by this side of the House.

An hon. MEMBER. The Secretary of State is coming that way.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Why, he should be indicted for disloyalty.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis). Give him an opportunity of coming another way.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I presume when you get the State of Maine all right, you will bring him that way. Now, Sir, this new charge will be equal to an annual tax of $25,000 on every riding in Canada.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). How does the hon. gentleman make that out? Multiply the ridings by $25,000 and you will have $5,000,000.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I fancy the hon. gentleman must be a professor.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). He can multiply the ridings in this country by $25,000 and make $5,000,000.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I am glad to be corrected.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). You have 10 times too much.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I am amazed at my moderation. However, it is half a million divided among the constituencies of this country, and in ten years imposes on each riding the sum I have named, viz, $25,000. You do not take away from the fact that $500,000 are to be expended for the purpose of giving a mail once a week. I do not think this is a business like transaction, and the real excuse given by the Finance Minister is that we shall obtain a line of which we shall be proud. How many more objects of adoration are we going to have in this country? We have a Finance Minister, we are proud of him minus his prospectus. We have a High Commissioner, we are proud of him,—he is a pretty extensive luxury, however. We have a Government, and I presume some hon. gentlemen opposite are proud of it, and they are willing to expend a considerable amount of money for the purpose of keeping that Government in power. So far as regards the personnel of the Government, I have no objection to any of them, and I think they are about as good a lot as can be found on the other side of the House. I presume some hon. gentlemen are willing to immolate themselves on the altar of their country and enter into the Cabinet should such become necessary. I do not think it will be necessary for the Premier to go to the North-West again to bring in outsiders; probably he will be able to find members in the House for Cabinet positions, even though they may not have the experience which some of the outsiders have had. There is an outside service from which he requires certain people, and it is well that hon. members sitting on the back benches and voting for the Government should know that fact, because if they do not anticipate much they will not be disappointed. If these changes are to be made and positions are to be filled by outsiders, I do not see how members of the Government party in the House have a chance. I think this is granting too large a sum for mail subsidies in view of the present stringency of the times and the depression that prevails throughout the country, and I would not like to make members of the Government or hon. members opposite uncomfortable by saying it is due to their policy. They know that fact themselves, and I would not like to say anything irritating when it is so near the Sabbath, as it might interfere with their devotions to-morrow, and I think they require all the benefit they can obtain from their devotions because they may be held responsible for bringing about the depression and the hard times which exist at the present time. This is altogether too large a sum when we are not going to increase either the material or any other welfare of this country. The fact is that owing to the price of farm products having diminished since last year, the price of farms has also diminished, and when farmers and every other class have all they can possibly do to make ends meet, it appears to be an outrage upon the feelings of the people that they should be taxed unnecessarily for postal or any other interests. A great deal might be said in regard to the ports, outports, French ports that have to be selected. Much has been said about Halifax and St. John. They are both, no doubt, splendid ports and such as the Dominion should be proud of, and we are proud to know that they send here such wonderfully able and discreet statesmen. I should like both ports to be selected, and it would be a good way of getting out of the difficulty, and I even think the Government may fall back on this suggestion before they are through with the matter. But we should at least know the ports from which these vessels are going to sail, and we should have all the information on the subject before we vote this allowance.

Mr. MULOCK. Now that the Premier has returned, I should like to ask him for some information. I may mention that his Finance Minister is so exhausted by his parliamentary labors that he is unable now to reply to inquiries directed to him and has not sufficient strength to address the Committee. When the House was considering this resolution on Thursday last, I understood the Premier to intimate that at some stage, before we as a deliberate body were to be called upon to vote on the question, he would impart some information to the House. The Minister of Finance made an extraordinary statement. He stated that there were no documents, there were no papers of any kind touching these negotiations, with the exception of a telegram, I presume he meant a cable, from the High Commissioner to this Government, but that negotiations had been conducted by the High Commissioner. It strikes me that there must have been instructions to the High Commissioner; there must have been communications between the High Commissioner and the Government. I do not understand that the High Commissioner has by virtue of his office the power to enter into negotiations of this kind with Great Britain and European countries without obtaining express instructions from the Government of Canada. If such is the case, it is high time the House and the country knew to what extent the High Commissioner has been clothed with authority. Certainly authority to that extent should not have been entrusted to any person, and I do not think such authority is given to any ambassador of any nation. On that point I ask, whether there are any communications between the High Commissioner and the Government of Canada in existence, and if so, whether there is any objection to their being laid before the House? I would ask the First Minister or some one else to answer this, and also to state why we are going to a French port, and what the extra cost will be of going to a French port? It may be advisable to connect with an English port alone. If we have to go to a French port it may deprive us of the best choice. If we do not attempt to make that connection, we can choose the best port in England untrammelled by other considerations, but if it is determined behind the possibility of change to connect with a French port, it limits our choice of ports in Great Britain. I ask the First Minister if he is prepared to give any information on this question, if the facts have been considered. Are these matters finally decided, is there any policy determined upon, or is the whole thing in nubibus at the present time?

Mr. FOSTER. Hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House ask so many questions, and one question succeeds another so rapidly that scarcely time is given to reply, and when information is once given the same has been asked for over and over again. I thought that when I introduced the three resolutions, I gave a plain and candid statement to the House, and I certainly gave a great deal of information specifically for which I have been asked over and over again by gentlemen who have spoken since. The senior member for the county of St. John (Mr. Weldon) asked to-night in the course of his address for various kinds of information. He thought the Government should take the House into its confidence and state whether any tenders had been refused, and why they had been refused, and how many tenders had been received. The hon. gentleman will find that information recorded in Hansard. I stated in introducing the resolutions that there were three tenders received, one proposing to give 15 knots an hour, another 17 knots an hour and the third a maximum of 20 knots an hour. I said that this did not prove satisfactory

Mr. LAURIER. Why?

Mr. FOSTER. I think I gave a very good reason at the same time. I said they did not prove satisfactory to the Government and that the Government had changed their mind somewhat in reference to the speed that was required and the equipment and style of vessel that should be put on if we went to the expense of getting a fast line service at all. Then I stated that we entered into negotiations with the two bonâ fide companies and that we proposed to give a service which would terminate in Canadian ports and which should be as good as any service that crosses the Atlantic, having vessels equal to such vessels as the Umbria and the Etruria, which ply to the port of New York. I think that gives definite information as to the kind of service we propose to have. Questions have been asked in reference to the ports to which we propose to sail, and the hon. gentleman who has taken his seat wants to know what the cost is for going from a port in England to a port in France. I cannot tell him. It is quite open to any gentleman in this House to say we had better not go to a French port, and the hon. gentleman may get support from his side of the House for that proposition; but the proposition of the Government is a plain and proper one: It is to make a French connection and it is asking the House to vote a certain amount of money to enable them to have an Atlantic service with a connection with a French port. If hon. gentlemen oppose that, let them give their reason for opposing it, but that is the proposition of the Government, and that is the proposition which we support by our arguments, and which after careful consideration we think would be the best. It is open to any hon. gentleman who may think it would not be the best to support by his voice and vote his feelings in that respect. Two hon. gentlemen said that to make a connection with a French port is insanity run madder than insanity. It does not seem to me an insuperable objection. Take, for instance, the ports of Plymouth and Southampton, and from the latter port you will find there runs one of the best lines that cross the Atlantic. Suppose we take Southampton or Plymouth is it impossible to make a French connection? About four hours would take a vessel from Plymouth to Cherbourg and four hours going across that channel is not a very long time out of the life of a man or out of the time in a week which a vessel can make this return trip. I think it will be found that calling at a French port is not insuperable, and that it can be very easily done. As I have said, the negotiations are not completed, and it cannot be stated with certainty from what port these vessels will go. With reference to the extra amount which it will cost between an English and a French port, I think that my hon. friend from York (Mr. Mulock) had better not take the financial calculations made by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) who gravely ventured the opinion that it would cost $200,000 to make a French connection from a British port. I do not think it would cost that. I do not know that there are any other questions outside of those that have been asked, and we can answer. There is certainly no disposition on my part or the part of the Government to withhold any information that can fairly be given, and it seems to me that after this long discussion, and as it is now a few minutes before midnight, the House ought to be prepared to adopt the resolution.

Mr. LAURIER. I will admit, with the hon. gentleman, that there have been a great many questions asked on this side of the House, but what is the reason? It has not been in any spirit of obstruction, but it was simply to obtain the information to which the House was entitled and which had not been given by the hon. gentleman. If the hon. gentleman had given us all the information which would have enabled the House to vote intelligently upon this matter he would have been spared all the questions which have been put to him and which he has not yet fully answered. For instance it is proposed in this resolution that we should have a connection with France. A very natural question which arises the moment this proposition is made that we should go out of the way to a French port when we want a fast line of steamers, is the question which was asked by the hon. member for York (Mr. Mulock): What will be the cost of it? What answer to such a natural question do we obtain from the hon. gentleman? The only answer we have is simply this: "You can vote against it." Of course we can vote against it, but what we want is the information which will enable us to vote intelligently upon the question. It is not a fair answer to give to a question that "we can vote against it." If that is the way the House is to be treated, and that is the way it has been treated all along on this question, can hon. gentlemen be surprised that we insist on having information before we vote "yea" or "nay" to such a proposition as this? There is another important question that has been asked by the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien): "What kind of service will you place on the ocean?" Will it be simply a service for the passenger traffic to rival the service between England and New York to-day, or a service for both passenger and freight traffic? And what answer have we had up to this moment? We have not had an iota which will enable the House to know whether that is the intention of the Government, or whether it is their intention to continue the passenger and freight service we have had in the last twenty years.

Mr. FOSTER. I have stated that over and over again.

Mr. LAURIER. If the hon. gentleman has stated it over and over again, I would ask him to repeat it once more. He said that we were to have a service something like the Umbria. Are we to understand, then, that this is to be a purely passenger service, or a service of combined passenger and freight such as we have to-day? If the hon. gentleman would say so in so many words, we would have something to go upon.

Mr. FOSTER. I supposed that question was fully answered when I stated on several occasions that we proposed to have a service equal to the best on the Atlantic. My hon. friend knows that while the class of vessels making the fast service to New York are passenger and mail vessels, they carry a certain amount of freight, though not a very large amount of freight; and in the discussion my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Jones), who understands the subject, has stated over and over again that they carry about 800 or 1,000 tons of freight.

Mr. LAURIER. Well, we have had so much after two days' discussion. I will ask the hon. gentleman one more question, and if he will answer without any equivocation, I suppose we can adjourn. I understand from what he said that the contract for the service between France and Canada has been cancelled, to take effect on the 1st July.

Mr. FOSTER. It has been cancelled, and the service ceases on the 1st July.

Mr. LAURIER. Can he state the reasons—reasons of state?

Mr. FOSTER. The reasons are these, and my hon. friend can judge whether they were reasons of state or not: The service was from the first unsatisfactory; it was not performed according to contract, it was not doing as well as had been anticipated, and the contract was voided, and on the 1st July the service ceases with the consent of both the Government and the line.

Mr. MULOCK. Are we to understand that each vessel of this new line will be of the character of the Umbria and Etruria?

Mr. FOSTER. The vessels will be uniform.

Mr. MULOCK. I call the Minister's attention to the difference between that statement and the one he has just made. A moment ago he stated that the service would be equal to the best on the Atlantic. I suppose he had reference to the Umbria and the Etruria of the Cunard Line. Most of the vessels of that line are far inferior to the Umbria and Etruria. If he meant that we are to have a service equal to the Umbria and Etruria, that is one thing, but if he meant that it was to be equal to the Cunard Line, that is another thing. I understand that it is to be something better than the best line, and equal to the Umbria and the Etruria. Is that correct?

Mr. FOSTER. The vessels are to be of that high class, and to be uniform.

Resolution reported.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 11:55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 22nd April, 1889.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

SAGUENAY RIVER—BUOYS.

Mr. COUTURE asked, 1st. Whether the Government included in the call for tenders for buoys and lights on the Saguenay River, in 1887, the number of new buoys delivered to C. A. Sturton after he secured the contract? 2nd. Did the parties tendering know of the existence of the said buoys? 3rd. Did the Government take steps to make the same known to them? 4th. By whom and by whose orders were they made? 5th. Who paid for them, and what was the price of each buoy? 6th. On what conditions were they delivered to C. A. Sturton?

Mr. TUPPER. 1st. No tenders were invited for this service in 1887, and no contract entered into with C. A. Sturton. 2nd. Full particulars of the service were stated in a handbill dated 16th April, 1888, inviting tenders, in which intending tenderers were requested to apply to the harbor master for full information? 3rd. Only by advertisement by handbill, and in Chicoutimi paper. 4th. By agent of department at Quebec. 5th. Paid by cheque from the department price. 6th. There were no buoys delivered to C. A. Sturton that the department is aware of, but buoys were delivered to Mr. Ainsworth Sturton, the contractor.

ROYAL LABOR COMMISSION—LEGISLATION.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin) asked, Is it the intention of the Government to introduce, this Session, legislation to carry into effect the recommendations and suggestions contained in the report of the Dominion Labor Commission, lately laid before Parliament?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The intention of the Government is to read the evidence and the report during the recess, and to give a chance to hon. members to do the same; so that we may know, during the recess, what legislation will be required next Session.

CHIGNECTO SHIP RAILWAY.

Mr. MITCHELL asked, Whether the Government have a copy of the prospectus of the Chignecto Ship Railway, as issued in London, on which their money was borrowed? And whether the Government, if they have it, will lay the same before the House; and if they have not, will they take the necessary steps to obtain the same and lay it before Parliament?

Mr. FOSTER. The Government has not in its possession a copy of the prospectus of the Chignecto Ship Railway, as issued in London, and, therefore, cannot lay it before the House. I do not know whether it is a matter with which the Government have very much concern or not. I will be very glad to get a copy of it as soon as possible. We have applied to London for it.

Mr. MITCHELL. I should think the credit of the country has much concern in it, and I think it is desirable we should have it.

NATIONAL DEFENCE COMMITTEE.

Mr. HOLTON asked, Has any arrangement been concluded between the Imperial authorities and the Canadian Government respecting the defence of the coast of British Columbia? If so, what is its nature?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Negotiations have been going on since 1885, and are still in progress between the Imperial authorities and the Canadian Government respecting the defence of the coast of British Columbia. So far, their nature is strictly confidential.

Mr. HOLTON asked, How is the "National Defence Committee" constituted? What are the powers of this Committee, and when will it meet again?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The Committee is composed of the Major-General commanding the Militia, the Adjutant General, the Commandant of the Royal Military College, and the Inspector of Artillery. The Committee is to report confidentially to the Government on any improvements that can be suggested, or any plan that can be carried out in the present system of defence, so as to meet the country's wants and needs. The Committee will meet from time to time when it is deemed advisable.

SEIZURE OF THE BRIDGEWATER.

Mr. HOLTON asked, Have representations been received from the Imperial authorities or the Government of the United States, respecting the seizure of the vessel Bridgewater? Has any demand been made for compensation to the owners of said vessel for damages arising from such seizure? If so, what is the amount claimed?

Mr. BOWELL. Representations have been made through the Imperial Government by the United States authorities in reference to the seizure of the Bridgewater. Compensation has been claimed by Mr. Allan, on behalf of the owners, to the amount of $20,303.26.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Will you pay it?

Mr. BOWELL. That is not part of the question. I can tell the hon. gentleman that it is not paid.

MANUFACTURES EXPORTED TO AUSTRALIA.

Mr. TROW (for Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT) asked, What is the total amount of manufactured goods exported from Canada to Australia from 1st July, 1888, to 1st January, 1889, and from 1st January, 1889, to 1st April, 1889?

Mr. BOWELL. The manufactures exported to Australia for the six months ended the 31st of December, 1888, amounted to $41,530. Returns are not completed to enable me to answer the last part of the question.

POST OFFICE AT BALTIC, P.E.I.

Mr. PERRY asked, Is it the intention of the Postmaster General to establish a post office at Baltic, in Prince County, P.E.I., as promised last year by the late Postmaster General? If so, when?

Mr. HAGGART. I am unable at present to state what action shall be taken by the department in reference to the establishment of a post office at Baltic, as the matter is still under the consideration of the department.

PUBLIC WORKS IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. PERRY asked, Is the Department of Public Works aware of the amount of damages done to the breakwater at Miminegash, P.E.I., last fall? If so, is it the intention of the department to repair said breakwater immediately?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The attention of the department was called to the damage done to this breakwater, and the matter is now receiving the attention of my department.

Mr. PERRY asked, Is it the intention of the Minister of Public Works to cause, during the present season, a survey to be made of the shore at Fifteen Point, P.E.I., with a view of reporting on the practicability of building a breakwater at that place? Also, to report on the probable cost of the same?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is not the intention.

Mr. PERRY asked, Is it the intention of the Minister of Public Works to cause a survey to be made at the harbor of Summerside, P.E.I., during the present year, with the view of building a breakwater at that harbor? Also, an estimate of the cost of the same?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. An examination was made for a breakwater at the entrance of Summerside harbor. Sometime since it was brought to the notice of the department, through a petition presented by Sir Adams Archibald, that further examination was desirable, and an order has been issued to that effect.

MONTREAL HARBOR POLICE.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) (for Mr. CURRAN) asked, Is it the intention of the Government to disband the Montreal Harbor Police, prior to the fall of this year?

Mr. TUPPER. It is not the intention of the Government to re-engage the harbor police of Montreal this season.

BOUNDARIES OF ONTARIO.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the House resolve itself into Committee, to-morrow, to consider the following resolution:—

Resolved, That a humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying that she may be graciously pleased to cause a measure to be submitted to the Parliament of the United Kingdom, declaring and providing the following to be the westerly, northerly and easterly boundaries of the Province of Ontario, that is to say:

"So much of a line drawn to the Lake of the Woods through the waters eastward of that lake and west of Long Lake which divide British North America from the territory of the United States, and thence through the Lake of the Woods to the most north-western point of that lake as runs northward from the United States boundary and from the most north-western point of the Lake of the Woods, a line drawn due north until it strikes the middle line of the course of the river discharging the waters of the lake called Lake Seul or the Lonely Lake, whether above or, below its confluence, with the stream flowing from the Lake of the Woods towards Lake Winnipeg, and thence proceeding eastward from the point at which the before mentioned line strikes the middle line of the course of the river last aforesaid, along the middle line of the course of the same river (whether called by the name of the English River or, as to the part below the confluence, by the name of the River Winnipeg) up to Lake Seul or the Lonely Lake, and thence along the middle line of Lake Seul or Lonely Lake to the head of that lake, and thence by a straight line to the nearest point of the middle line of the waters of Lake St. Joseph, and thence along that middle line until it reaches the foot or outlet of that lake, and thence along the middle line of the river by which the waters of Lake St. Joseph discharge themselves to the shore of the part of Hudson's Bay commonly known as James' Bay, and thence south-easterly, following upon the said shore to the point where a line drawn due north from the head of Lake Temiscamingue would strike it, and thence due south along the said line to the head of the said lake, and thence into the said lake to descend the Ottawa River until the latter is struck by the north-western boundary of the Seigneurie of Vaudreuil, and thence along the said north-western boundary running south twenty-five degrees west, to the westernmost angle of the Seigneurie of New Longueuil, and thence running along the limit between the Township of Lancaster and the said Seigneurie of New Longueuil in the direction of south thirty-four degrees east, to a stone boundary on the north bank of the Lake St. Francis, at the cove west of the Pointe-au-Baudet, in the said limit between the Township of Lancaster and the Seigneurie of New Longueuil."

Motion agreed to.

SHORT LINE RAILWAY.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the House resolve itself into Committee, to-morrow, to consider the following resolution:—

That it is expedient that a railway should be constructed, as a Government work, between a point of junction on the New Brunswick Railway, at or near Harvey, in the Province of New Brunswick, and a point of junction with the Intercolonial Railway, at or near Salisbury, in the said Province, or somewhere between Salisbury and Moncton, and that the sum of five hundred thousand dollars be granted towards the construction of the said railway.

Motion agreed to.

STEAMSHIP SERVICE—AUSTRALIA AND B. C.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the report of the Committee of the Whole on resolution to provide for a subsidy for a fortnightly steamship service between British Columbia and the Australian Colonies and New Zealand, be read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. LAURIER. I can scarcely hope, yet I would fain hope, that the majority of this House, before assenting to this resolution, will ask for further information on the subject. Not that I would at all condemn the idea of extending our trade relations. On the contrary, any proposition from the other side with a view to extending beyond the limits of our own country, be it far or near, our trade relations, is always sure to meet the favorable consideration of this side; but after all, however laudable the object may be, there are certain rules of government and safe administration which ought to be kept in view and which can never be departed from with impunity. We are to-day asked to vote something like $750,000 a year for the purpose of creating a steamship service between Canada and Europe, on the one hand, and between Canada, Asia and the far East on the other hand. That may be advantageous to the country or it may not; it depends altogether upon the results which are to be achieved in comparison with the expenditure required. Now, we have been debating this question for two days, and I submit to the House that we have not before us a single item of information which can justify us in coming to the conclusion that the advantages which are to be derived from this expenditure—if, indeed, any are to be derived—will be at all commensurate with the expenditure itself. I put it to the hon. gentlemen on that side, whether, in anything which has fallen from the lips of the gentlemen on the Treasury benches, on Wednesday or Saturday last, there has been a single iota of information which can enable anyone amongst them to come to the conclusion that the country will really be benefitted by this expenditure to the full amount. I submit that we have not any information on this point, and I do not believe that any legislative body would consent to such a proposition if submitted with so little information. As to some of these subsidies, the Government have information and have invited tenders. This information is refused to us. The tenders they have received, they refuse to lay before us. The negotiations they have opened up they have refused to make known to us. As to some of the other subsidies, the Government are no better informed than we. As to them, the Government are groping in the dark, and do not know what results will accrue from them, because they do not know on what basis they are proceeding. Take the Australian subsidy. We are asked to spend annually $125,000 for the object of opening up steamship service between Canada and Australia. I do not condemn the idea itself, neither do I approve it, because I am not in a position to do either. The Government themselves say that, in asking the subsidy, they rely altogether on hopes. They expect that the Australian Governments will meet their views and do as much as they do. But they have never opened up any negotiations with the Australian Governments in order to ascertain whether or not they are willing to respond. The Government have not taken the trouble to inform themselves what is to be the cost of such service. They have not taken the trouble, as far as I know, to inform themselves as to whether there is a possibility of opening up a trade at all commensurate with the expenditure. Yet they ask $125,000 a year. I ask them why $125,000 a year? Why not $50,000, or $200,000, a year? What are the facts upon which they base their demand for this sum, or upon which they base their demand for it rather any other? Can they give us information as to that point? I defy the Government to give information upon which they rely in asking us to vote this sum or any other sum. They cannot give a substantial reason to this House why they have selected that or any other sum. It might have been, as far as we know, or as far as they themselves know, just as well to give $50,000, or $200,000, or any other amount they please to ask. The amount they have selected is purely arbitrary. Now we are asked to vote another sum to subsidise another line of steamers, which is already in existence, between British Columbia and Japan. What is the reason for asking that subsidy? The service is already in operation. It is true that service is subsidised by the Imperial Government, and we have been told by the Finance Minister that there is an agreement between the Imperial Government and the Canadian Government whereby the Canadian Government have bound themselves, subject to the approval of Parliament, to contribute one-third of the amount contributed by the Imperial Parliament. I submit that, in all fairness to the House, we should have that agreement. But things have come to this point that the Government will not grant by courtesy what formerly they would have yielded to us as a right. There was a time when no Government would have dared to ask the disbursement of any sum based upon an agreement without first laying that agreement upon the Table. We have not that agreement. Nay more, the Government have undertaken to expend a large sum of money while, over such expenditure, Parliament will not have, so far as we can see, the slightest control. We have in the west two rising and lively cities, Vancouver and Victoria. They stand almost opposite to one another, and, as is natural under the circumstances, there is a rivalry between them. The one sees that the other shall not excel it, and there is a rivalry also in reference to this subsidy between the two cities. This subsidy is to be granted, as we have heard, for a line of steamships to Vancouver, but Victoria wants the steamers to call there either going out or coming in. The hon. gentleman who represents Victoria (Mr. Prior) told us the other night that he had begged and prayed the Government to agree that the steamers should call at Victoria, but the Government would not give any answer to satisfy him, the only answer given being that this was a matter in the hands of the Imperial Government. I ask the majority in this House if the Canadian Parliament is ready to vote a sum of money over the expenditure of which they are not to have the slightest control? Under such circumstances, I think it would be the duty of the majority in this House to see that the Canadian Government have some control over that expenditure, as the people of this country will have to contribute towards that service. Then, we are asked to vote $500,000 a year for a mail subsidy for a service between Canada and Europe. As to this we know at least to some extent what we are going to have, though we do not know it completely. We are told that we are going to have a line of steamers of the class of the Etruria. That is, we are to have a line devoted to passenger traffic, but not to passenger traffic and freight traffic as well. Whether this would be better in the interests of the country or not, I do not know, but I do not believe it would, but others who are more competent than I am can be heard upon that question. However, there is some further explanation which we should have. We ought to know from what port these steamers are to start on the other side of the Atlantic, and to what port they are to come on this side, whether it be St. John, or Halifax, or any other port. As to this we are now completely in the dark. The conclusion I come to is that the whole of this expenditure is premature, and that we should revert to the old practice, which was a wholesome practice, and should say to the Government, Get information first, and after having obtained that information, if you choose to come to an agreement, you can come with it to Parliament, and then you will be able to enter into an agreement upon which Parliament has pronounced; but I submit that it is intolerable that we should recognise a system of placing money in the hands of the Government to expend at their own pleasure without Parliament being previously consulted upon it. The Government ask us, in fact, for a blind power of attorney to do as they please in this matter. This system has prevailed already too long and to too great an extent. Five years ago, we were asked to vote $500,000 a year for twenty years to build a short line railway which would include a line from Harvey to Moncton, and now we see that, though we trusted to the Government then, Parliament has been deceived, the instructions given by Parliament to the Government have not been carried out, and, in consequence of that deception, we are asked this year to vote $500,000 more, and I do not know how much we may be asked for next year. That was one deception which has been practised upon Parliament. Upon another occasion—nay, on several occasions, Session after Session—we were told that the terminus of the Short Line would be at Louisburg, and that would be the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway, that it would be the ocean port. Time after time the Parliament of Canada was induced to vote money with that object in view and with that statement made on the floor of Parliament; and yet, to-day, what do we hear of Louisburg, who has a word to say about Louisburg? I do not say whether it is right or wrong that we do not hear of it, but I say again that this Parliament was deceived in regard to that matter, and, after so many deceptions as have been practised—I use the word deception, though it may be a hard word, because such conduct cannot be otherwise characterised—it is not fitting that Parliament should give another blank power of attorney to the Government to do as they please in reference to this matter, and, after perhaps the intentions of Parliament may not have been carried out, to come next year with another demand for money. Under these circumstances, I beg to move in amendment:

That the said resolution be not now concurred in, but that it be resolved, That, whilst this House will ever be ready to favor any reasonable scheme to promote and extend the trade of this country, the Government, in asking an annual expenditure of £25,000 sterling for the establishment of a steamship service between Canada and the Australian Colonies and New Zealand, has failed to show that such a service would result in advantages in any way commensurate with the large amount of the expenditure required.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Before this motion is voted upon, I wish to make only one observation. When we discussed this question in Committee the other day the Finance Minister stated to the House, as one reason why we should assent to this large expenditure of money, that a large trade in manufactures had been developed, and was still more being developed, between Canada and Australia. He then said it was within his knowledge that he had the information from the manufacturers themselves, that the firm of Massey & Co. had, in one year, exported goods of their own manufacture to Australia to the extent of between $300,000 and $400,000. I turned up the Blue-books of the last financial year, and I found that the total manufactures of Canada, of all descriptions and all kinds, exported to Australia during that year, amounted to $39,000, so that it was altogether impossible that Messrs. Massey & Co. could have exported goods to the value of between $300,000 and $400,000. The hon. gentlemen persisted in his statement. He did not insist that the Blue-books told a false story, but he suggested that, as the Blue-books referred to the year which ended on the 30th June, possibly his statement might be consistent with the facts, and the increased exports might be for the remainder of the calendar year. Well, Sir, we had that matter settled to-day by the answer the Minister of Customs gave to the question put by Sir Richard Cartwright. We find that up to the 31st December, from the 1st of July, the total exports of manufactures from Canada to Australia was only $41,000. The hon. gentleman, it is true, stated that he was not able to give the figures with absolute accuracy, but he gave them with approximate accuracy, so that between $40,000 and $45,000 was the amount. Now, it is clear that the hon. gentleman has asked this House to vote this money on an assumption of facts which are clearly proved to be false. We do not export, we could not have exported, any such quantities of goods—not one tenth, not one-fifteenth, of the goods—that the hon. gentleman gave the House to understand we did. The fact is we are proceeding here on false data, on a false basis, we are going it blind. Ministerial statements are made which, when they are tested, turn out to be entirely inaccurate. The hon. gentleman, if he formed his conclusion upon such facts as he gave to the House the other day, that it was desirable to vote such a large amount of money as he asked the House to vote, now that he sees these facts are not correct, should reconsider his proposition, for I venture to say that the statement made by the Minister of Customs to-day does absolutely refute the possibility of the truth of the statement made by the hon. gentleman, and he should withdraw the proposition based largely upon the truth of that statement.

Gen. LAURIE. I listened to the statement made by the Finance Minister the other day, and I certainly did not gather from him that he stated that this firm of Massey & Co. had exported during last year $400,000 worth of implements.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Yes.

Gen. LAURIE. I am open to correction, but I understood him to say that they had opened up a trade to that amount. Now, Sir, I have it from Mr. Massey himself, with whom I had a long interview since this Session opened, that he had sent his son to Australia and New Zealand in order that he might open up this trade, and that he took orders for a very large amount of goods, to the amount stated by the Minister of Finance. However, as I did not like to speak solely from memory, I desired to verify the statement, and I at once communicated with the firm in order to ascertain if the facts were as I understood them to be. Mr. Massey repeats the statement that he had opened up trade to this extent. This is what he says:

"You are correct in the inference made in your letter in regard to my sons having been in Australia. They also were in New Zealand, and we have opened up a trade in these countries which has bright promises for the future, and in fact it has exceeded our expectations in the past year. Our trade in South America is also well established."

This, perhaps, is not a matter that I should advert to now, but I do so as showing the prospects of trade and the way they are working it up.

"Our trade in South America is also well established, and there are large orders for the coming season for that territory. We anticipate a better trade in the countries referred to than we shall possibly get in Europe, though it is attended with very large expense; and therefore, for the present, we cannot expect the results to be as favorable as they will be in Europe. Thus far, our machines in foreign countries have received the highest commendations, having successfully competed with the best machines of foreign make, and we have been awarded more prizes than any American manufacturers, who are our principal competitors, so that our position for commanding the trade of these countries is good, or even better than any of the leading foreign manufacturers. We have every reason to expect a prosperous future for our foreign business."

I think that, with the fact that they had to draw upon their supplies in Europe in order to supply the Australian trade, so Mr. Massey informs me, shows that the position taken by the Minister of Finance in desiring to open up more speedy and more regular communication with the Australian colonies, is justified by the promises that this gentleman, at any rate, one of the leading manufacturers of our country, has obtained, and which afford him substantial prospects of increased trade in the future.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.). As to the question of veracity to which the hon. gentleman called the attention of the House, I may remark that there was no misunderstanding at all of what the Finance Minister said, because, after referring to three or four hundred thousand dollars' worth of agricultural implements which Massey & Co exported, and after the discrepancy between that amount and the amount shown by the Blue-book to have been exported, had been pointed out, the Finance Minister stated:

"My hon. friend must recollect that the Trade Returns only come up to the 1st of July of last year, and that a manufacturer, speaking to me about the matter, would have the trade year and not the fiscal year in view."

Now, we have the fiscal year from the 1st of July to the 1st of January, showing only $41,000 worth of all kinds; so that the gallant General, in coming to the rescue of the Finance Minister, has rendered him no service.

Gen LAURIE. I stand to the point I made, which was distinctly that Mr. Massey stated he had opened up a trade to that amount.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). You did not read it.

Gen. LAURIE. Mr. Massey stated to me verbally, about $400,000 was the extent of the trade he had opened up. I asked him again, and he answered that the prospects were even more favorable than those he anticipated. This trade is in the future, so are the prospects of the Australian steamer service; and in canvassing for trade, Mr. Massey sent his son out to obtain a trade that he had not then obtained, but that he hoped to obtain, and that he has obtained.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Laurier:

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. White), and the hon. member for East Middlesex (Mr. Marshall), have not voted.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I am paired with the hon. member for Halton (Mr. Waldie). Had I been at liberty to vote, I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. MARSHALL. I am paired with the hon. member for West Elgin.

Mr. TROW. The hon. member for Lunenburg has not voted.

Mr. EISENHAUER. I would have voted for the amendment, but I am paired.

Resolution concurred in.

STEAMSHIP SUBSIDY—CHINA AND JAPAN AND B. C.

Mr FOSTER moved that the report of the Committee of the Whole on resolution to provide for a subsidy between British Columbia and China and Japan be read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If we had reason to complain of want of information respecting the subsidy just voted, we have equal reason to complain, and, perhaps, greater reason in regard to the proposition that is now before us. When in Committee, the other day, on this resolution, efforts were made by many hon. gentlemen to ascertain from the Finance Minister whether he was in possession of any data or facts to give to the House to justify him in making this proposition. The hon. gentleman spoke several times, evidently under some restraint, and the result was he produced nothing. He stated to the House that he had no information to give. It did transpire, on the cross-examination to which the hon. gentleman was subjected, that negotiations had been carried on for some time between the British Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company with respect to a subsidy for this very line, and there had been correspondence, and these negotiations and that correspondence had resulted in an agreement between the British Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, which was not yet signed, but was practically concluded. We also learned that the High Commissioner, acting on behalf of Canada, had carried on negotiations with the British Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company with reference to a supplementary subsidy to be voted by this country, conditional on the British Government voting a subsidy. The House very naturally asked that the correspondence and agreement should be laid on the Table before hon. members were asked to vote the money. The hon. gentleman could not do it; he said he had not the documents at hand. To me it is absolutely incredible that negotiations should have been carried on by our agent in London, the result of which would be to commit this country to a subsidy of £15,000 or £25,000, dependent upon whether the service is fortnightly or monthly, and that the High Commissioner should not have made a report to his Government on the negotiations. It is incredible that such a thing could have happened. The Minister of Finance said there was a telegram from the High Commissioner to the Government. But so little respect has the Government for the House of Commons, which votes the money, that they positively asked us to vote the amount without even producing the telegram of the High Commissioner. I, for one, do not believe that the High Commissioner carried on these negotiations for months without having a large amount of correspondence both with the British Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. There were many terms which had to be arranged. There must have been a great deal of discussion as to the size of the steamboats, the speed required, the ports at which they should leave and call, the terms required, and a thousand and one other things which are necessary to settle before an agreement could be arrived at. As my leader said in the debate on the previous resolution, parliamentary government now has reached that stage when members vote like dumb dogs large amounts of public money, without obtaining any information, and the Government treat them with contempt. I do not believe that even the Government called a caucus to give private information to supporters of the Government. It is not very creditable to our system of Government, and it is discreditable to the House, that we should vote these subsidies in the absence of information. I do not mean to say that this project is one to which we are opposed. We have not the means given us to form an opinion as to whether we could support it with due regard to our duty to our constituents. The information on which we could come to such a conclusion is withheld, and if the hon. gentleman has these documents in his possession he keeps them under lock and key in his desk and refuses to allow hon. gentlemen to obtain possession of them. He stated, again, that negotiations had been carried on between the British Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, under which a subsidy was to be paid by the British Government. That agreement has not been produced. It is very important we should have it, because all the information as to the size of the ships, the time of the passage, and the ports at which the vessels would call, and the mails they would carry, and everything else must be contained in the agreement. It is necessary, in the interests of Canada, that this agreement should be submitted before we are asked to vote this money. That, also, was withheld, and the hon. gentleman told us even that he had not got it, that he did not know what it was. He said:

"All these terms are contained in the agreement, which has been, as I said, practically concluded, and which will take the form of a contract. That, however, is a document I am not able to bring down to the House——"

Mr. FOSTER. Will the hon. gentleman be fair and honest in dealing with the House and with me, and take back what he stated a moment or two ago, that I stated to the House that I had not those documents in my possession?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the hon. gentleman say he has the documents?

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman stated to the House, and I appeal to you, Mr. Speaker, that I stated to the House that I had not those documents in my possession. He went on to frame an argument on that. He now appeals to Hansard to prove his assertion, and Hansard proves nothing of the kind. Then let the hon. gentleman be manly enough——

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken. I referred in the first part of my argument to the negotiations and correspondence carried on between the High Commissioner of Canada and the British Government with respect to the subsidy, and I said then, and I repeat now, and I will dare the Minister of Finance, holding as I do the Hansard in my hand, to deny that he said he had not one iota of that correspondence in his possession. I challenge the hon. gentleman to rise in his place and do so.

Mr. FOSTER. You cannot find it. You cannot substantiate it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I say the hon. gentleman stated, with truth or not I know not, but he stated on his honor in this House that he had not a scintilla of a letter from the High Commissioner, nothing but a telegram.

Mr. FOSTER. Prove it. I ask the hon. gentleman to prove his statement.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the hon. gentleman deny it?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I want to know if the hon. gentleman denies it.

Mr. FOSTER. You have misrepresented me.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the Minister of Finance deny that he was not in possession——

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman has misrepresented me half a dozen times to-day, and I do not propose now to deny or to affirm until I find he has Hansard at the back of his statement.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I read:

"Mr. FOSTER The information is simply this, that the British Government will give so much if the Canadian Government will implement that by so much more.

"Mr. LAURIER. Put the correspondence on the Table.

"Mr. FOSTER. There is no correspondence."

Mr. FOSTER. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I have not finished my sentence.

Mr. SPEAKER. You must give the hon. gentleman a chance to state his point of order.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman must state, before he proves his contention, to what correspondence I referred. He says that referred to correspondence.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, chair.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If the hon. gentleman had waited until I had finished my statement, instead of violating the Rules of the House, he would have heard me read a further statement made by him on that occasion:

"There is no correspondence. The High Commissioner, when in London, carried on the negotiations, and all the correspondence that was had with this Government was in the shape of a telegram."

I appeal to the House if that is not the exact language I used a few minutes ago, when I said that the hon. gentleman stated a fact which to me appeared incredible, that the only correspondence in his possession was a telegram they had received from the High Commissioner.

Mr. FOSTER. I did not state it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is in Hansard.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not in Hansard.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I say it is.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not in Hansard. Now let the hon. gentleman give me a chance to explain.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman will have an opportunity directly, and he has got a good deal to explain. After referring to the suspicious absence of these negotiations and correspondence, and to the refusal of the hon. gentleman to bring them down and put the House in possession of them, I then went on to refer to another document and that was the agreement which the hon. gentleman stated was made been the British Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. That agreement, he said, contained all the terms which were practically concluded and largely took the form of a contract. He goes on to say:

"That document, however, I am not able to bring down to the House. In any case, it is a matter between the British Government and the company, and has not yet been forwarded."

That was the statement made in reference to the agreement, and I then stated to the House that the correspondence and negotiations which took place between the High Commissionner and the British Government must have been reduced to writing by the High Commissioner; must have been made a memorandum of, and that he must have furnished this Government with a copy of the correspondence he carried on with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company on the one hand and with the British Government on the other, and also with the recommendation he made and on which they are acting to-day. I say it is incredible that the Government should ask this House to vote this resolution without bringing down the documents on which they came to a conclusion themselves. Then, Sir, the hon. gentleman, when he was justifying this vote, referred to the exports which go from Canada to China and Japan. He was asked whether those exports were the productions of Canada, and the hon. gentlemen was unable even to tell us that. I hold that in the absence of this information, it is not fair, it is not right to ask hon. members to pledge their votes for an expenditure of this annual sum of money for a long number of years without giving them some information. More than that, this House is going to vote a large sum of money, Canada has some interest in this business and Canada has a right to see that these interests are subserved. The other night it was argued, with irresistible force, to my mind, that with the information at present before the House, we should not give these large subsidies unless the steamboats called at Victoria. The hon. gentleman who represents Victoria (Mr. Prior) says it is indispensable that the steamer should call there. He pointed out to the House that the steamer has been running for a year and a half within a mile of the port of Victoria; that she stopped there to take on a pilot, and that the Victoria people were ready to build a wharf to enable these steamers to stop there. That stoppage would cause very little delay; and although no answer was vouchsafed to this, and no reason given, it is suggested to us to vote without any provision being made for that steamer to call at Victoria. We have not got the proper information before us to justify us in voting this money, and if we do vote the money I hold it is indispensable that the steamer should call at the port of Victoria. I, therefore, beg to move in amendment:

That all the words after the word "That" be struck out, and the following substituted therefor: "This House should not be asked to agree to a resolution providing for the granting of an annual subsidy for a fortnightly or monthly steamship service between British Columbia and China and Japan, supplementary to one to be granted by the British Government, until the correspondence and negotiations relative to the granting of such a subsidy and the agreements between the British Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company under which the subsidy of the British Government is payable, and all other necessary information relative to the character of the service, have been laid before it; and the House is further of opinion, from the information at present before it, that, if any subsidy is voted for such service, it should be conditional on the steamships calling at either Victoria or Esquimalt."

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose that now I can properly take up a little of the time of the House, and that the House will not regret giving me a moment or two in order to clear up one or two of those matters about which a great deal of fault has been found. It is pretty hard to sit in this House and to hear what you have stated put in a light which was not warranted either by the intention you had in your mind or by the expression that you gave to that intention. I am not going to make any charge backwards or forwards at the present moment, but I am simply going to make myself right from the Hansard on both of these points, and I think I can do it to the satisfaction of any candid-minded man who listens to me. In the first place, with reference to the disagreement between the hon. gentleman from Queen's (Mr. Davies) and myself about the Australian exports, so far as has reference to agricultural implements, the hon. gentleman stated to the House that I had based my demands for the passage of the first resolution upon the statement I made, that Mr. Massey had exported to Australia last year three or four hundred thousand dollars' worth of agricultural implements. Now, Sir, even although I had made that statement, that was not the statement upon which I based the claim that this resolution should pass the House. I gave, in my opening statement, the reasons why I thought the resolution ought to pass. In the course of the debate I happened to remember a conversation that I had with Mr. Massey, and when the question was asked as to the kind of manufactures we sent there, I stated that several manufacturers had had dealings, notwithstanding the difficulties, with Australian countries, and among them Mr. Massey. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman from Queen's (Mr. Davies) said that I stated that Mr. Massey in the last fiscal year had exported three, or four, or five hundred thousand dollars of agricultural implements. I will read exactly what I said:

"To-day, I believe, some of our manufacturers have a field which they have exploited in the Australian colonies for their products, and where within two or three years they have built up a trade, under very disadvantageous circumstances, to the extent of between one-third and half a million dollars worth of goods in some lines of goods alone. One of these is the Massey Co., of Toronto, who have exported agricultural implements.

"Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The total exports are not half a million.

"Mr. FOSTER. You will find exactly what they are by the blue-books.

"Mr. JONES (Halifax) $146,000 in value.

"Mr. FOSTER I have Mr. Massey's statement that he has worked up a trade in agricultural implements in that colony amounting to between $300,000 and $400,000, and he has done that under very disadvantageous circumstances."

That is the statement I made, that is the statement that is in the Hansard, and that statement bears out what my hon. friend from Shelburne stated. What I had in my mind was the conversation I had with Mr. Massey, who went very fully into his prospects of trade in that country, detailing the steps that had been taken by his son, who had been sent out there, and his expectations. I did not state definitely that a trade to that amount had been carried out in the last fiscal year; I simply stated that they had worked up a trade in agricultural implements to that amount.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E I.) I wish to call the hon. gentleman's attention to page 1427, where he made the direct statement.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman will wait, he will get everything. I am not disposed, like the hon. gentleman, to pick out a line here and a line there, but I propose to give the whole statement. On page 1427 I stated:

"The hon. member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies) made the best of the Trade Returns which he holds in his hand, but I still believe the statement I made will be found correct."

The statement I made was that I believed Mr. Massey had worked up a trade to that amount.

"I think I have that statement, and I will look it up to see if it is right or not, but I feel sure it will be found true. I remember a conversation with Mr. Massey himself, going into the question thoroughly, and he detailed the expense and trouble he had been put to in the last year or two in establishing agencies for the sale of his goods."

These are all the remarks I made on that subject.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I) No, you have stopped just short of the statement. In the very next sentence the hon. gentleman stated:

"The statement I made is this, and it will be found true, that within the last year a trade has been opened up in agricultural implements with Australia to the extent of $300,000 or $400,000. My hon. friend must recollect that the Trade Returns only come up to the 1st of July of last year, and that a manufacturer, speaking to me about the matter, would have the trade year and not the fiscal year in view."

Mr. FOSTER. I have marked here in pencil the whole passage that has been read by my hon. friend, and I thought I had read it all. I will also read that again:

"I remember a conversation with Mr. Massey himself, going into the question thoroughly, and he detailed the expense and trouble he had been put to in the last year or two in establishing agencies for the sale of his goods. Hon. gentlemen must always recollect that the attempt to establish trade in a foreign country is a costly proceeding. It takes time to make your constituency of men to trade with and to establish a name for your goods, and the first years of an opening trade are always the most costly; but the statement I made is this, and it will be found true, that within the last year a trade has been opened up in agricultural implements with Australia to the extent or $300,000 of $400,000. My hon. friend must recollect that the Trade Returns only come up to the 1st of July of last year, and that a manufacturer, speaking to me about the matter, would have the trade year and not the fiscal year in view."

That, then, is exactly what I stated, that during the last year, when Mr. Massey had his agent in Australia and New Zealand, he had worked up a trade to that amount; and when the hon. gentleman thinks that he has made a point against me in connection with my stating that he had the Trade Returns only up to the 1st of July, 1888, the hon. gentleman will easily find an explanation of that, if he wishes, in the fact that he read the fiscal year returns, which did not show the amount of trade that had taken place in the calendar year, large or small, as we might find afterwards, but they had reference to the actual amount exported in the fiscal year. Since then, I have received a telegram from Mr. Massey, referring to what was stated by the hon. member for Shelburne, in which he says:—

"Have just wired J. W. Laurie as follows:—Foster had reference to our prospective trade. Customs records misleading, owing to very large shipments to Australia from our European house. Prospects warrant our large anticipations. South America orders already exceed them."

My hon. friend sees now that he cannot rely on the accuracy of the Trade Returns which he held in his hand at the time, as Mr. Massey had to draw from his European warehouse last year in order to supply the demands made by Australia, and consequently that would not be shown in our Trade Returns as a direct export during that year to Australia. So much with reference to that. Now, Sir, I wish to say a word with reference to what I stated about the correspondence. With reference to the correspondence taking place in regard to the China and Japan mail service, I stated on page 1433:

"With reference to the negotiations carried on between the British Postal authorities and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, that is a matter with which we are not directly concerned, and which we cannot bring down to the House."

The correspondence which I had reference to there, as I stated, was the correspondence between the British Postal authorities and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The hon. leader of the Opposition said:

"I may have misunderstood the hon. gentleman; but the hon. gentleman says there has been correspondence upon this subject between the Imperial and Canadian Governments, and yet, though the hon. gentleman is acting upon that correspondence, and asking the House to implement their agreement by this vote of money, he refuses to bring to the House the correspondence."

That was the correspondence between the Imperial Government and the Canadian Government, of which the hon. gentleman, the leader of the Opposition, spoke. In reply to that I stated:

"Mr. FOSTER. The information is simply this, that the British Government will give so much if the Canadian Government will implement that by so much more."

"Mr. LAURIER. Put the correspondence on the Table."

What correspondence? The correspondence of which he spoke, between the Canadian Government and the Imperial Government, to which I answered:

"There is no correspondence. The High Commissioner, when in London, carried on the negotiations, and all the correspondence that was had with this Government was in the shape of a telegram, and surely my hon. friend, having the information, is not going to stand on a technicality and endeavor to stop this vote simply because I have not formally laid on the Table of the House the information I have given him over and over again.

"Mr. LAURIER. Are we to understand that this important negotiation was carried on verbally and that there is nothing to show for it?

"Mr. FOSTER. What I said was simply that negotiations were carried on by the High Commissioner, and that as the result of these negotiations an agreement was come to between the two Governments.

"Mr. LAURIER. I would be sorry to believe that this important negotiation was carried on verbally, and that there is nothing official between the Canadian Government and the Imperial Government. There must have been some correspondence, whether by telegram or otherwise, and this correspondence the House is entitled to have."

A little time afterwards I stated:

"With reference to what the hon. gentleman said about correspondence, the correspondence passed between the High Commissioner and the British Government; but it is impossible to bring that down until the whole matter is settled."

The House will see that three different correspondences were spoken of. There was the correspondence between the British Postal authorities and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company; the correspondence which the High Commissioner had with the British Postal authorities and the British Government; and there was the correspondence had between the British Government and this Government; and if hon. gentlemen will hold in mind these three facts, and read carefully my statement in the Hansard, they will find that I have not stated with reference to these what the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) has asserted. I stated, first, that the correspondence between the British Postal authorities and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was their business, that it was not yet concluded, and that it could not be brought down. I stated distinctly that the High Commissioner was carrying on negotiations, and that they could not be brought down, as the results had not yet been finally reached; and the question being put to me as to the direct correspondence between the Canadian Government and the Imperial Government, I stated that it consisted in a telegram to the Government, and I gave to my hon. friend the purport of that telegram. That is a plain statement of the case, and I do not propose to carry it any further. I propose, however to place the statement before the House, so that hon. members my see that I had no wish to mislead it, and that I answered each question fairly and according to the truth of the matter. Now, with reference to the hon. gentlemen's motion, his complaint is that, with regard to the China and Japan mail service there has not been sufficient information. The hon. gentleman says that he cannot decide whether he would approve or not of the measure, whether he would vote or not for the appropriation; and the reason why he cannot make up his mind is because he has not sufficient information. Will my hon. friend just look at what information he has? In the first place, there have been negotiations carried on between the British Postal authorities and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to carry the mails from the Atlantic seaboard to China and Japan.

Mr. LAURIER. Where is it?

Mr. FOSTER. If hon. gentlemen opposite will let me make my speech, I will get through much more easily, and then they will have an opportunity to make theirs. There have been negotiations between the British Postal authorities and the Canadian Pacific Railway to carry the mails from the Atlantic seaboard to China and Japan. These negotiations have culminated practically in an agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the carriage of those mails. Now, everybody knows that the British Government, when it proposes to put on a mail service, proposes to put on a regular and efficient service; proposes, under the most stringent rules and regulations, to have the service carried on; proposes to have the vessels built according to regulation; and I think my hon. friend may take it for granted that if the British Government were negotiating with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and if the British Government enter into an agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to carry the mails from the Atlantic seaboard to China and Japan, they have taken care to provide that the vessels in which the mails are to be carried, the schedule of time, the regulations under which the mails are to be looked after, the departure and the arrival of the vessels, and their time limits will be such as will be in consonance with such an important service, on so important a route. Why? Because the British Government propose to abandon the old route between China and Japan, and to open up an entirely different route, because they propose to take a new route across the continent of America and within that portion which lies within the Dominion, and because, in abandoning the old route by the Suez Canal, it must be taken for granted that the British Government in so doing will have made sure that the new service will be superior to the old and equal to the magnitude and importance of the task to be undertaken. And yet my hon. friend, having that satisfactory explanation given to him, knowing that the British Government, having canvassed the whole matter, are satisfied, and have practically concluded an arrangement for carrying the mails, says he does not know whether or not we ought to make up our minds to contribute £15,000 towards that service, because he has not information enough. Now, the British Government say to us: If we send our mails across your country by your railways, with all the advantages that are to accrue to you from making your country the highway for the transmission of mails and of the passenger traffic which will follow in its wake, and if we give £45,000 for that service, will you give £15,000? And the Government of Canada concluded to give the £15,000 on condition that it be a monthly service, and if it be made a fortnightly service, they concluded, with the sanction of Parliament, to give £25,000 a year for that service. I do not think, under the circumstances, that the House is called on to vote anything in the dark, or that it is a proposition we ought not to accede to.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. LAURIER. Where is the correspondence between the Canadian Government and the Imperial Parliament?

Mr. FOSTER. I have already stated to my hon. friend several times, with reference to this correspondence, and I state it again, that the British Government made to us the proposition that they would give so much, provided that we gave so much.

Mr. LAURIER. That is what we would like to see.

Mr. FOSTER. That proposition is contained in a telegram, as I stated to my hon. friend.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Bring it down.

Mr. FOSTER. They say, with reference to this contract, that it ought to be laid on the Table. I have stated, that this is not a contract which has been signed, but an agreement which is the result of certain negotiations—an agreement which has been practically concluded, but not finally concluded. The contract has not been signed, and therefore the terms of that contract, and the negotiations which led up to it—the whole being incomplete—are not in a position to be laid on the Table. But is there not sufficient for hon. gentlemen to make up their minds, as to whether or not the proposition of the Government is entitled to support? My hon. friend spoke a good deal with reference to the ports at which the steamers are to call, and from which they are to start. This question will probably come up on the third resolution, and when that resolution comes up, I will have something to say on it.

Mr. LAURIER. I commend the answer of the hon. gentleman to those who sit behind him. I want the House to understand that the amendment before it is not one condemning the resolution of the Government. The hon. member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies) did not say that he condemned the proposition of the Government, but he simply complained that, with the want of information on this question, the House could not come to an intelligent decision. What is the answer of my hon. friend? He says that we ought to be satisfied, that we have as much information as we ought to get, in order to come to a decision. In the first place, he says that there has been correspondence between the Imperial Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that the Imperial Government have agreed to subsidise that steamship service. I ask, Where is that correspondence, and the hon. gentleman says he has got it. Are we to be told that the Canadian Government agreed to intervene in a bargain between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the British Government, without knowing what that contract is? Are we to be told that they have not even seen it, and cannot say what are its terms? And yet, although they do not know what are the terms of the contract entered into between the Imperial Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway, they ask this Parliament to vote £25,000 a year, in order that that contract, which they have not seen, may be carried out. I put it to the fair sense of every supporter of the Government, whether it is right that they should be thus called on to vote in the dark, blindly, anything that is asked of them? Is it fair that we should be asked to vote away the people's money without knowing what we are about? Whatever may be the intention of hon. gentlemen on that side of the House, on this side at least we will insist that before a cent of the people's money be disposed of we shall always know for what and on what conditions it is to be expended. The hon. gentleman tell us, moreover, that we ought to be satisfied because, forsooth, the Imperial Government have no doubt made the best arrangement possible, because the Imperial Government have their eyes open and have looked after their own interests. No doubt the Imperial Government have been careful to look after their own interests, but does it follow that the Canadian interests have been looked after? If the interests of Canada had been looked after, surely the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior) would not have complained, as he did the other day, that he had been begging, without success, the Canadian Government to make Victoria a port of call? This is the best evidence, that the Imperial Government have been careful to look after their own interests, but the Canadian Government have laid themselves open to the charge of not having taken a similar precaution in our behalf. And yet, they ask this House to vote this large sum of money. Now we are told also that the correspondence entered into between the Canadian Government and the Imperial Government by the intermission of the High Commissioner, is incomplete. Well, if it is incomplete, is that not the very reason why this subsidy should not be voted to day? Let them complete it, if it be incomplete, and, when it is completed, let it be placed on the Table, so that every member may come to an intelligent opinion on the subject. This is the very object which my hon. friend's motion has in view.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I understood the Finance Minister, when he was giving the figures in regard to the export trade which we had, or which we were likely to open up with Australia, to give us certain definite figures as to one house. We would all be very glad to know that our trade was greater than it is, but the public records do not bear out the statements made by the Finance Minister on that occasion. To-day he strengthens himself by a statement of Mr. Massey that you cannot get the full amount of their exports from our returns, because some of them went from their English house. Well, I find that the total export of agricultural implements from Ontario to Great Britain in the year ending the 30th June, 1888, amounted to $44,642. If that statement were to be amended by Mr. Massey, and if he had a depot in every country under the sun, I find on page 771 of the return, that the total exports of agricultural implements from Canada to all countries was $155,219. One reason why I rose was to remind the Finance Minister as well as others, that, while I do not object to the Massey Company being boomed in this way on the floor of Parliament, though the statement made does not bear the light of investigation, you must not think that all the agricultural implements which have been exported, have been exported by that firm. As the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson) stated the other night, there is in my own town of Brantford one of the largest firms engaged in this line of manufacture, and their exports are included in this statement, as well as those of all the other implement manufacturers of Canada.

Mr. MARA. With regard to the portion of the amendment which states that the subsidy should be conditional on a steamship calling at Victoria or Esquimalt, I may say that this is not a new question. It has been threshed out in the British Columbia press for some time past, it has been discussed in the Boards of Trade, and it has had the attention of the members from British Columbia in the earlier days of the Session. It has been stated by one hon. gentleman that there are two rival cities in that Province, and that jealousy exists between them. As far as the members from British Columbia are concerned, there is no jealousy whatever. We are all proud of Victoria, and of the position which Victoria has attained; but this is not a question relating either to Victoria or Vancouver; it is not a provincial question; it is not simply a Dominion question, but it is an Imperial and Dominion question. We are asking the Imperial Government to give us $3 to our $1 to assist in diverting the eastern trade from the Isthmus of Suez and from American channels, so that it will be carried through British territory and over Canadian soil. We are asking the Imperial Government to assist us in bringing the passenger traffic and the trade of the East over our transcontinental railway, and in making, as has been previously said, the termini of the Canadian Pacific Railway, not at Halifax or Vancouver, but at Hong Kong and Liverpool. For these reasons, I must vote against the whole of the amendment, but I wish to state the position in which the majority of the members from British Columbia are placed as to the latter part of it. Of course, my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Prior) differs slightly from us in this respect, that, as a representative of Victoria, and as the Board of Trade and the press of Victoria have demanded that the steamers should call there, he may feel bound in honor to vote for that part of the amendment; but as the other members from the Province take a Dominion view——

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That is hard on the member for Victoria.

Mr. MARA. I do not think so, and further, I think that the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) has inserted that portion of the amendment in order to place my hon. friend (Mr. Prior) in a false position. I think, in fact, that he has introduced the amendment in order to place, if possible, the whole of the members from British Columbia in a bad position. But my constituents do not wish me, nor do I believe that any constituency outside of Victoria would wish its representatives to vote for the amendment with that clause attached to it. Further, although the hon. gentleman may think that the residents of Victoria will thank him for the amendment he has offered, I believe they will look upon him rather as a false than a true friend. Though I am prepared to admit that the hon. gentleman has introduced his amendment from fair and honorable motives, still, from the great distance, not knowing how party feelings actuate members here, I believe the people of Victoria will not be quite as charitable to him as I am, and they may think that he has done this not only to embarrass the Government and to embarrass the members from British Columbia, but that he has acted the part of a false friend, and has given them a stab in the back.

Mr. PRIOR. I stated to the House, two or three evenings ago, the importance of these steamships calling at Victoria, and I gave the reasons, that Victoria is the capital of the Province, that it does at least 75 per cent. of the trade of the Province, and that it is not out of the way of those steamers to call there. As the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) has said, it would not take more than an hour and a half or two hours for these steamers to call there and leave the mails and the passengers, and that is all we ask. My hon. friend who has just sat down (Mr. Mara) says there is a jealousy between the two cities. I say there is no jealousy except the proper rivalry between two cities which are endeavoring to get ahead of one another in an honorable way.

Mr. MARA. I referred to a remark made by an hon. gentleman opposite that there was jealousy. I said there was none.

Mr. PRIOR. Well, if my hon. friend did not say so, I apologise. In regard to the question of the steamships calling at Victoria, although the Imperial Government give $3 to $1 which is proposed to be given by us, I do not see why the Dominion should not have some say in the matter. I think it will be a gross injustice to Victoria, unless the Dominion Government does its best with the Imperial Government, to get those steamers to call there. As to the amendment of the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), I agree with my hon. friend from Yale (Mr. Mara) that it does put me in an awkward position. If he had brought the matter down in two different amendments, I should have known what to do, because, though I am bound to ask that the Dominion Government should make it imperative for the steamers to call at Victoria, still, if they will not or cannot do that, I could not go so far as to vote for no subsidy being given, because I do not think any member should stand in the way of the advancement of the Province or of the whole Dominion. I think I have a right to ask something of the House. Dr. Bourinot, in his "Parliamentary Procedure," says:

"As respects what are known, in parliamentary language, as 'complicated questions,' they may always be divided into distinct parts with the consent of the House. No individual member, however, can ask as a matter of right, that such a question be divided, since the House alone can properly decide whether it is complicated or not, and into how many propositions it may be divided. The fact is, the necessity of dividing a complicated question may be obviated in a great measure by moving amendments to it. But, in any case, it is always open to a member to move formally that a question be divided."

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. member for Queen's if he would not divide his question.

Mr. DAVIES. My question is so very simple that it cannot be divided.

Mr. PRIOR. I think it is very complicated.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. If the resolution which is moved by the hon. member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), embarrasses the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior), I think the hon. member for Victoria, in justice to the hon. gentleman who has moved it, must acquit him of any such intention. If he will cast his eye over the resolution he will see that the hon. member for Queen's has been too candid altogether in the proposition he has put before the House. So far from its being as my hon. friend from Victoria supposes, a resolution indicating the opinion of this House that the steamers ought to call at Victoria, the hon. member for Queen's has been so candid as to couple that with a distinct affirmation that in the present state of negotiations there shall not be a dollar of money given for a Pacific subsidy at all. Under these circumstances, I think the hon. member for Victoria will see that the expression of sympathy which the hon. member for Queen's and his friends are going to vote for to-day, is carefuly coupled with a scheme by which there shall not be one dollar given for steam communication between Asia and British America. This being so, I fail to see that the sympathy of the hon. gentleman is at all embarrassing or misleading. But I would call the attention of the House to the impossibility of the House, in the present state of the negotiations, undertaking to lay down and prescribe that this or that condition shall be made essential to the termination of a contract. In the first place, as the Minister of Finance has stated, it is a case in respect of which the negotiations are not altogether ripe, and when the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Laurier) reproaches the Government with inviting the House to accede to a contract which they have not even seen, he had surely forgotten for the moment that which had been told to him twenty times, that there was no contract in existence upon this subject, but that the basis of a contract, with negotiations for a contract, had been submitted and partially agreed to between the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and Her Majesty's Government. Under these circumstances it does not lie in the mouth of the hon. gentleman to reproach us for being willing to become parties to a contract which we had not seen. If, as I have said, and as he has been told no contract has been made, and this is a question in which three parties must be consulted, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Canada, are we, in defiance of all that, and with the two other parties to be consulted, and with the negotiations still unripe, to invite this House, either by this amendment or by the other that is to be offered, to lay down as a preliminary condition before we go to Her Majesty's Government, and before this House is willing to give any money, that this or that condition shall be indispensable, and that unless the steamers call at Victoria there shall be no subsidy for a Pacific service at all? I think the House will hardly put us in the position to go to Her Majesty's Government, after all the negotiations that have taken place, and all the efforts that have been made to reduce this to a practical undertaking, saying: "We regard this or that item of the contract, however small it may be in comparison with the great magnitude of the whole service as indispensible—we are unable to agree, we are unable to carry forward an enterprise which promises a great deal for the Empire, and which promises for Canada more than for any other portion of the Empire, simply because some sectional interest, however important it may be, is to be served before the interest of the rest of the Empire is to be considered at all." I am satisfied that is not a position in which the House would be willing to place the Government. The position in which the hon. member for Quebec East seeks to place us is still more humiliating. After being told that these negotiations have been on foot for a long time, and are waiting the action of this Parliament, what he proposes as the only other alternative is that we shall do nothing this Session at all, that we shall say to Her Majesty's Government that this Government are not in a position to come down to Parliament and ask for a vote, but can only say: "Show us your contract, show us your terms, and we will sign it, subject, of course, as every contract of that kind must be, to the final ratification of Parliament next year." Then for one year more, although we have reason to believe that matters are nearly in a position to close, for one year until the ratification of Parliament can be got, we shall not be able to conclude any satisfactory contract or any contract upon which any steamship company would put their boats on the service. We all know, Sir, what the answer would be next Session after we had concluded a contract like that. The answer would be that, in the absence of parliamentary authority, and without consulting Parliament, we had no right to make such a contract and bind the hands of Parliament; and that, after sitting here for three months in 1889, we ought to to have taken the House into our confidence and got a vote authorising us to enter into some contract of the kind. Sir, we have done all that possibly could be done under the circumstances, and it is not our fault, nor is it the fault of anybody else, if we are not in a position to give hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House all the documentary information which they desire, and naturally desire on a question of such magnitiude. But we are forced to the conclusion of asking the House to entrust its confidence to the Government to enter into a contract simultaneously with Her Majesty Government because we have only the other alternative of having this matter put off indefinitely, and perhaps losing a service which we have come to the conclusion is one that we ought to recommend to this House.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I must confess that I am rather surprised at the speech made by the Minister of Justice, not only in criticism of the resolution, but in justification of the course which the Government has taken upon this question. The hon. gentleman says that the information in regard to this matter cannot be brought before the House; he says that negotiations are going on, that the Imperial Government are making arrangements and are about to contribute a larger amount than the Parliament of Canada are called upon to contribute, for the establishment of a steamship line. Well, Mr. Speaker, if the Imperial Government are entering into correspondence with any parties for the purpose of establishing this line and granting the subsidy, I suppose they are stating upon what conditions they will make this grant; I have no doubt the Executive of the Imperial Parliament have in their minds the terms and conditions upon which they are willing to grant aid to that steamship company. I think the Minister of Finance has told us what is to be the number of calls to be made by these steamship companies, how frequently they are to cross the Pacific Ocean; he has also told us something about the rate of speed of some of these steamship lines. Now, all these matters are terms and conditions, and I suppose that the Imperial Government have made for the United Kingdom the necessary stipulations in these negotiations. Well, Sir, if the Government of Canada propose to Parliament to subsidise this line, they are proposing to subsidise it for some purpose or other that they have in their minds. The hon. gentleman has, perhaps, in his mind what he expects to accomplish by subsidising this line; he has in his mind some notion of the way in which the people of Canada are to be benefited by this steamship line across the Pacific Ocean. The hon. gentleman certainly would not grant the money without some terms or conditions; he would not grant money to a steamship company simply because it is a company proposing to establish a line of communication between British territory on the west and the continent of Asia on the east. We know that these hon. gentlemen must have in their minds some condition upon which this company is to be aided. We want to know what that condition is. The Minister of Justice says there is no contract; but the Minister of Finance said the contrary. He said that it was not signed; but there was a contract, the terms of which were set out, and, according to the hon. gentleman's own statement, the contract has been reduced to writing. We require to know what are the terms and conditions of the contract in so far as the Canadian Government is concerned. The simple fact that the Imperial Government has entered into this contract is no reason why we should be called upon to subsidise the same line, unless we affirm to our advantage, some terms and conditions. We are not supposed to grant this aid simply from Imperial considerations and for Imperial benefits; it must be because in some way it will be beneficial to Canada. The Minister of Finance has asked, and the Minister of Justice has repeated that request, that we should manifest confidence in the members on the Treasury benches; but his request involved that we should express confidence in the Imperial Government, because the hon. gentleman has practically said that we have no voice in the matter, that we have nothing to say beyond contributing our money, that we have no right to demand such a condition as that the vessels should call at the city of Victoria. I do not agree with that view. If we are going to subsidise this line, we should know for what reason we are subsidising it, what benefits we are going to obtain, what advantages will accrue from our granting this aid. The hon. gentleman has not yet given us this information. Do hon. gentlemen suppose for one moment, that the Imperial Government would go down to the Imperial Parliament and ask for a subsidy without giving hon. members the slightest idea as to the terms and conditions on which it was to be granted? If the contract is not completed, we do not expect the Finance Minister to state the conditions, which, of course, are known; but we do expect him to state the advantages which the Government expect to derive from the service, and some of the conditions imposed in connection with the subsidy which is proposed to be granted. The hon. gentleman has not done so. That is the very least the Government should have done, and until they are prepared to do that, they are not in a position to ask Parliament to place a sum at their disposal for this or any like purpose. The Minister of Finance has simply stated that the Government have had negotiations with certain parties, but they were not prepared to state what they were; they have stated that certain terms and conditions were imposed in connection with the subsidy, but they said they were not prepared to state what they were. That is their position, and it is a wholly untenable position. We say further that whenever this aid is granted, and the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior) should bear this in mind, one of the necessary conditions of granting the subsidy will be that the steamer should call, on its outward and inward passage, at the city of Victoria; and if the hon. gentleman is prepared to vote against this resolution, he must be understood as being prepared to vote against having steamships call at the city of Victoria, unless they choose to do so. That is the position which the hon. gentleman occupies. It is as clear as noonday that that portion of the resolution provides that whenever this money is granted the steam vessels shall call at Victoria. That is, however, what the hon. gentleman proposes to vote down, and his constituents will see whether he can explain away this proposition in the way the Minister of Justice has undertaken to explain it away in this House.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am not going to take up much of the time of the House in discussing this matter, but I feel it to be a question so important and involving so important a principle that I should not give a silent vote in regard to it. I may tell hon. gentlemen opposite that, notwithstanding that I have very little confidence in the Administration which is asking the vote, and although they are pursuing a course of treatment towards Parliament in refusing to give information to which Parliament is entitled and which it is the duty of the Government to submit before they asked for a vote of this kind, I must support the proposition. The explanation given by the Government for their course is that their contract is not completed. We, however, understand that the contract is written out, and therefore its terms are complete. I believe it to be the duty of the Government, who are the servants of this House and are nothing else, and we are here supposed to carry out the will of the people, to give their masters that information which they have a right to give and for obtaining which we will be held responsible to the people. That is the position in which hon. gentlemen opposite have placed themselves, and in that regard I must condemn them. There is, however, a point beyond the simple question as to whether the Government have performed their duty in this matter, and it is, as to how the interests of the country will be affected in this matter. I am not prepared to allow my lack of confidence in the Administration to prevent my vote being given for this measure, although I am voting under protest, because we have been refused information that we are entitled to receive, and in the absence of which we can scarcely justify before the people the granting of this money; but the interests involved in this question are great, and if we fail to grant this aid and to carry out the negotiations that have been entered into with the British Government, we may find ourselves, next year, in the position of being compelled to impose heavier burdens on our people in order to obtain this service. I believe it to be of great importance to this country that the scheme of obtaining communication between Europe on the one side and Asia on the other, by a line of steamers across the Atlantic, by a railway line across the continent and by an ocean service across the Pacific, is one which should have been adopted long ago. It has been too long delayed already, and I feel that, while I cannot have implicit confidence in the Government, it is my duty to my country not to stand in the way of having this service established; but I shall hold the Government to a strict account hereafter with respect to the terms of the contract, and the conditions upon which they have caused this country to be taxed for a very considerable sum of money. I regret that I am placed in the position of having to vote against my convictions in this respect, for I hold it to be the duty of the Government to lay all this information before this House, but I believe that the interests of the country will be subserved by the adoption of this scheme. I shall, therefore, have to support the motion, but I do so with reluctance, because the House has not had the papers laid before it.

Amendment negatived on a division, and resolution concurred in.

MAIL SERVICE—CANADA AND UNITED KINGDOM.

Mr. FOSTER moved second reading of resolution respecting a fast weekly mail steamship service between Canada and the United Kingdom.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). During the discussion that has taken place on these resolutions it has been made evident that we require information which the Finance Minister has not been able to impart to the House. The hon. gentleman, in introducing his resolution the other night, laid it down as a proposition that he intended to ask for a contract with a company owning steamships similar to the Etruria and Umbria, sailing from New York. The hon. gentleman stated that those steamers made a maximum rate of 20 knots per hour, and that:

"The Government, after carefully considering the matter, has come to the conclusion that if it is within the reasonable reach of Canada, without overburdening the financial power of the country, we shall have a service on the Atlantic equal to the best Atlantic service running to the ports to the south of us."

The hon. gentleman then went on to show that taking those steamers at a 20 knot an hour rate of speed that they were going to make the voyage between Rimouski and Great Britain in 144 hours viâ Belle Isle, 150 hours viâ Cape Race, and 153 from Great Britain to Halifax. The hon. gentleman also stated in the same observations, to which I desire to draw the attention of the House, "that the last tender was from the Anderson Co. and that the steamers should have sufficient power to drive them at a speed of 20 knots an hour." That statement of the hon. gentleman might be very misleading. He said that they should have a power sufficient to drive them at 20 knots an hour, but it is evident that he entered into the calculation without any knowledge of the distance, or that he never expected those steamers would be driven at the rate of 20 knots per hour, because, had the hon. gentleman anticipated such a result, so far from the steamer making the voyage to Rimouski viâ Belle Isle in 140 hours, she would, as a matter of fact, make it in 115 hours. The distance between Rimouski and Moville is 2,303 miles, and at 20 knots an hour a steamer would go that journey in 115 hours, so that the hon. gentleman was either in error in regard to the distance, or he is evidently not contemplating that those steamers shall run at 20 knots an hour. Then, with regard to the voyage viâ Cape Race. The hon. gentleman stated that it would be accomplished in 154 hours. The distance viâ Cape Race is 2,447 miles, and a steamer running at 20 knots an hour, would make the voyage in 122 hours. From Moville to Halifax the distance is 2,280 miles, which would be made by a steamer of 20 knots an hour in 114 hours, whereas the hon. Minister sets it down at 153 hours. There is such a marked discrepancy in the distance and time given by the hon. gentleman, that I am led to the conclusion, and I think that the House will arrive at the same conclusion, that the hon. gentleman has not informed himself sufficiently on this point, before he made the statement to the House. Why, Sir, a steamer of 17 knots an hour would make the distance to Rimouski viâ Belle Isle in 135 hours, whereas the hon. gentleman with his 20 knot boat put it down at 140 hours; and a 17 knot boat would make the distance viâ Cape Race is 144 hours, as compared with 154 hours calculated by the Finance Minister for his 20 knot steamer; a 17 knot steamer would make the voyage from Moville to Halifax in 114 hours, whereas the hon. gentleman put it down at 153 hours. If these figure are correct, and I challenge contradiction, the hon. gentleman must see the result of his proposal, viz.: that while he is asking the House to subsidise a line of steamers at the possible speed of 20 knots an hour under pressure, that neither he nor his Government can have any expectation of their making that speed. It is, therefore, evident to me that the hon. gentleman has been dealing with this subject without due information with regard to the various distances that ought to be run. In passing, I may correct a misapprehension which arose the other night during a discussion with regard to the comparative distances between Halifax and Liverpool and New York and Liverpool. I cannot do better than to quote from an authority which will, I am sure, be accepted by hon. gentlemen on that side of the House—that is, the Government map of the Intercolonial Railway, which I have no doubt has been prepared with great care and which, at all events, cannot be disputed by hon. gentlemen opposite. I find by this authority that the distance from Halifax to Liverpool is 2,480 miles, and from New York to Liverpool 2,986 miles, making a difference of about 500 miles, which was stated by hon. gentlemen on this side of the House the other night. This question has been, no doubt, discussed at considerable length, but there are some points which require to be referred to again. I have taken the ground from the commencement, that the amount asked by this resolution, for a 20 knot steamship service, was in excess of the present postal traffic requirements of our country. I have taken the ground that a 16 or 17 knot service and an 18 knot trial speed, (being about 3 or 4 knots in advance of the present mail service, which I admit requires improvement), would be all that the public require and would be more to the general interest of the country than a very fast line of steamers, and for this reason. A 20 knot service of ships like the Etruria would be capable of carrying only a small proportion of freight, say from 700 to 1000 tons, because they require so much coal and so much boiler space. Therefore, if they come either to Montreal or to a winter port in the Maritime Provinces there would only be a small portion of freight to come over our Intercolonial Railway, and the same applies to the return freight for England. If the Government were satisfied with a service of 17 knot capacity, which would make the time in fewer hours than what the hon. the Minister of Finance has laid down as required of this new expensive service, you would obtain a service for very much less money, while at the same time these steamers would be able to carry a very much larger cargo. Take, for instance, steamers of the capacity of the Vancouver and Parisian, which are about 5,000 tons burden, and are supposed to carry 2,500 or 2,000 tons of cargo each way; made somewhat larger they, no doubt, would carry 3,000 tons. My object throughout this discussion has been to show the House that it is much more in the interest of the country to have steamers capable of carrying large cargoes, whether of freight or passengers, than to obtain a line of steamers which would run one or two knots faster, with a very small carrying capacity. If the Government are going to vote a sum of money for a fast service, they will naturally look around to see by what means they are going to be recouped. Therefore, if the steamers were such as would carry 3,000 tons of freight inward and 3,000 tons outward each week, they would afford such employment to our public works as would compensate us to some extent for the subsidy which the Government propose. The great object should be to build up a line of fast steamers having such accommodations as would meet the business wants of the country. The hon. gentleman may say that we have no assurance that such a service could be obtained for less money, and that the Messrs Allan had offered an 18 knot service for about $10,000 per round trip. I am aware, as I said the other night, that there was some difficulty in that matter, because at that moment there were very important discussions going on in England with regard to improved machinery and improved methods in connection with the steamship service, and they were unwilling to undertake any heavy obligations until they were satisfied that all the improvements the engineers had in view could either be proved or disproved by actual test. Since that time these difficulties, I understand, have been solved, and I believe if the Government were to advertise to-morrow for a 17 knot service, combined with a larger carrying capacity, they would receive tenders very shortly for a satisfactory service for not much more than half the amount which they are asking the House to vote under this resolution; and I have some grounds for stating that opinion. Therefore I think the House should hesitate to pledge this large sum under such conditions. I believe that if the Government would subsidise a fast line of 17 knots, making the voyage across in less time than the Finance Minister contemplates by his proposition, and terminating at a British port, it would probably be a permanent success; but if the Government seek only to have a mail line, and the steamers have to go to a French port, its usefulness will be so impaired that there will not be sufficient travel from either side to support it. It may run for a short time, but the steamers will be taken off and put somewhere else. I quite admit that we want a considerable improvement in our present mail service, and I am willing to go to the extent proposed by the hon. Minister of Finance the other day, that we should have a service across the ocean in the time he mentions; but that can be obtained, as I have already shown, by a 17 knot service. A 17 knot service will accomplish the voyage in 135 hours, whereas the hon. gentleman stated the other night that he was aiming at accomplishing it in 140 hours. We have to look at the permanency of this service, because this is a new departure, and the steamers that are to be built for such a line will, of course, be very expensive. They will be peculiarly adapted for a northern service; in fact, they will only be fit for a northern service; a company entering into a contract with the Government for the service, must naturally look upon it as a permanency, at any rate for a considerable number of years; and we are not likely to have so many people competing for a 20 knot service as for the more medium service of 17 knots. If you confine yourself to 20 knot boats, probably only one concern will tender, and according to the explanations given by the hon. Minister of Finance the other night, while they are to have that power, it does not at all appear that they are to make that speed. I invite the attention of the hon. gentleman to that very important point, on which it appears to me he has hardly bestowed sufficient attention. Entertaining these views, and feeling that a 17 knot service would meet the requirements of the Government as indicated by the Minister of Finance the other evening, and that would also serve the interests of the country generally, I beg to move:

That the said resolution be not now agreed to, but that it be referred back to a Committee of the Whole to amend the same, so as to reduce the amount named therein to a sum sufficient to provide for a 17 knot fast, mail service, which, in the opinion of this House, is all that is required to promote the postal and passenger service of the Dominion, and is at the same time better calculated to serve the general business and commercial interests of the country; and that it be expressly provided in any contract entered into, that the terminal point on this side shall be at a port within the Dominion of Canada.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. AMYOT. I do not intend to go into the merits of the question now before this House, but only wish to say a few words with regard to the amendment now submitted to us. The motion made by the hon. the Minister of Finance calls for a subsidy to the steamer service between Canada and England, and the amendment of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) is to the effect that the sum asked for is too large, that we should provide but for a service of 17 knots an hour, which, he thinks, is all that is required to promote the postal and passenger service of the Dominion, and that there be inserted a condition that the maritime port on this side of the ocean will be in the Dominion. I really do not understand why the Government should be asked to reduce the amount of the subsidy. The press of the country, and the whole country, have, since many years, been clamoring for a faster service, and, certainly, we will not be able to attain that object by diminishing the amount of a subsidy already declared to be insufficient. For my part I am opposed to any reduction in the amount. We want a fast service, and we require also that our winter port be in Canada. We are glad to see that the Maritime Provinces are able to furnish that winter port. We are glad to see that the acquisition we have made of those Provinces by Confederation gives us the advantage of such a winter port in the Dominion. We are happy to have those Provinces with us. We are proud of their population and resources, and we look upon it as a great benefit to Canada that we shall be able at last to have our winter ports within the limits of our territory. If we were not able to have those ports in Canada, if we remained obliged to send all our goods through the United States, we might as well be annexed at once; but if we want to build up Canada for the Canadians, let us encourage what will give us a fast and good ocean service during winter and summer, and which will be entirely under our control. But it is not on that special point that I wish to speak just now. The hon. gentleman who moved the amendment, and some other hon. gentlemen, have objected to the resolution of the Government, because it is provided that the new line will make connection with a French port. I would like those hon. gentlemen to give us their reasons. Why do they object to connection being made with a French port? Is it on account of commerce, or on account of nationality. They must have some motive for their objection. We are seeking new markets everywhere across the globe. We are ready to expend millions of dollars for that object, and here is a country with a population of over 40,000,000 people, to which markets the hon. gentlemen object to sending our subsidised steamers. Why, if we look at the question from a commercial point of view, we will find any number of articles which we may sell there with profit. I have had no time to prepare a complete list of those articles, but in the few minutes at my disposal, after having heard the motion, a number of articles occurred to my mind in which a profitable trade might be engaged by us with France. To-day we export our cheese to England, and when it reaches the English market, the mark is taken off, and our cheese is sent to France and sold there by English merchants at a profit. Well, if we could send that article direct to France, and sell it there ourselves, it would be so much more profit to us. Our woods, our minerals of all kinds, our live stock, our furnitures, our boots and shoes, our maple sugar and all products of the farm generally, our iron and copper ore, our cement, all these articles and hundreds of others, of which I have not had time to prepare a list, could be profitably sold in France. And in return we might buy from France their light wines, silks, gloves, umbrellas, clocks, watches, fancy articles, linen, and a number of other articles which are in great demand here. Will anybody deny that Canada as a whole is not largely interested in having commercial dealings with France? And if it is in the interest of our commerce generally that we should trade with France, why object to this resolution? No one will deny that if we had a commercial treaty with France, our commerce would be much larger than it is. This resolution is the first serious step made towards obtaining a treaty with France. Would these hon. gentlemen object to the resolution on that score? When the Government is assuming the responsibility of opening up a trade and paving the way for a treaty with France, are my hon. friends on this side those to object to the action of the Government? I am surprised and sorry that any such objection should have been raised. I believe that by making this steam connection with a French port, we will eventually be able to make a treaty which that old country desires to see effected—not only with the people of the Province of Quebec, but all the Provinces of the Dominion. Those who are at the head of this new line must understand something of what they are doing, and no doubt they see the immense interests we all have in opening up commercial relations with France. Do those hon. gentlemen object to our trading with France on the ground that we will be trading with the French people? We have passed legislation to prevent Chinamen from coming to this country, but that does not prevent our subsidising a line of steamers to go to China and trade there. Are the French people more objectionable to trade with than the Chinese? I would be inclined to believe that there are in this country certain people of that opinion. Are they in this honorable House? No; I do not believe there is one hon. member here who would be guided by such sentiments, and recent events have proved that beyond a doubt. But there is a class in this country who are animated by this sentiment. If I take up one of the leading papers of the Dominion—a paper which receives large subsidies from the Government and which has wide circulation—I find in its columns the following lines, which go to show how a certain class of people understand how to cement union among Canadians and build up a Canadian nationality:

"I trust that some united action on the part of our people will result in an immediate protest against a project, the purpose of which is to fill up this British Canadian Dominion with the ezuvia of France and Belgium a worse than good-for-nothing addition to the population of a country such as this. We want no more French or Belgians in this country. God knows we have more than enough of them now. We want English, Scotch and Irish emigrants, natural-born subjects of the Empire. We want neither the infidelity, socialism, nor ignorance of the continent—the cankers of a long reign of Popery and its accumulated vices—to be foisted upon the Dominion at our own cost."

An hon. MEMBER. What paper is that?

Mr. AMYOT. The Mail.

An hon. MEMBER. That is your organ.

Mr. AMYOT. No, it is not our organ. The Mail has been paid over $20,000 in a few months by the Government, but I do not hold the Government responsible for those writings. I speak of the Mail as representing a large class in this Dominion, and pretending to form a great nationality in British North America. The hon. gentleman knows that another paper had to change its course because it was being financially led by the Mail, who exceeded him in hatred. Someone must protest against that nonsense, and against those brutal attacks. When do we Catholics attack the Queen as the head of the Protestant religion? When do we attack our fellow countrymen, Protestants of any denomination? When do we insult anybody? We want to be respected as Catholics. The Pope is the head of our church, and we want him to be respected. If Catholics are to be treated as they are because we are in the minority in this Confederation, I declare that the basis of the Confederation is shaky and cannot stand. I am glad to state that in this House such ideas were rejected, but I must remind the fools who hold the pen and have the responsibility for these writings that they do not understand what it is to attack two millions of Catholics by two millions of Protestants. They are destroying the peace and the prosperity of this country, and the mutual respect which has existed. They are not worthy of the great British Crown, they are not worthy of being citizens of Canada; and yet we see that, not one paper but ten or fifteen papers have adopted this course, and we know that those papers would not live unless they were supported by a great number of readers who believe in them. It is time to remind them that we have our rights here. We respect every nationality and will give all their rights to others, but we are entitled to be respected ourselves and to have justice, and we mean to have it, and this course must come to an end. I know the great trouble which the members of the Government have in regard to that. They should be supported in their efforts to bring back calm and harmony. When I see these articles in the press, and when I see them echoed, in one particular, in another form here—a milder form, it is true—I feel bound to protest, and to speak on behalf of those who respect others but who want to be respected themselves. The paper in question goes on further:

"We have got to put our foot down and stop this accursed work as well in the Dominion as in the Provincial Chambers; and Liberals and Conservatives must join hands in the work, by the formation of a new Liberal-Union party similar to that adopted in the mother country, for the protection of the integrity of the United Kingdom against the assaults of Romish sacerdotalism, and the masked atrocities of the Catholic party, under the guise of Fenianism and Home Rule."

Perhaps, without the Romish sacerdotalism the British Crown would not be here to-day. Our clergy has always been faithful to Great Britain; our clergy is loyal; our clergy has nothing to do with Fenianism. As to Home Rule, it is not our affair, and we try to mind our own business. Our clergy is loyal, and has instructed the people to be loyal, and these brutal attacks only prove an equal amount of ingratitude and injustice in the heart of those who prefer the same. The integrity of the Empire, and the integrity of the Confederation, we French Catholics desire. We work for it. Those who attack us in that manner do not desire it. They want to destroy it. There is the distinction. We are loyal; we are truly Canadians; we are in favor of all that benefits Canada. When British Columbia desires commerce with Japan and other countries, we are ready to say they are right. When other parts of the Dominion want to trade with England, Scotland, Ireland, or any other country, whether it be Switzerland or Spain, do not we say: You are right? Then, when this Government wants to give us an opportunity of communicating easily with France, why should hon. gentlemen say they are wrong? We are about 1,500,000 French people in this country, and we have an equal right with the other portion of the population to a speedy means of communication for our letters, our books and our papers with France, as others have with England, or Scotland, or Ireland. After all, is it because we are of French descent that we should have to pass through other countries before reaching France, no matter what may be the name, or religion, or language of those countries? I contend that the Government are taking a step in the right direction in including that clause in reference to a connection with a French port. I will give to my vote the meaning of a protest against the brutal attacks, not only of one paper, but of many papers, backed by thousands and thousands of readers, and as a warning to them that we exist, and that we are able to read those articles, which is an advantage which they do not possess in regard to ours. We are attached to Confederation. We teach English to our children as well as French. We want them to be educated in both languages. But we are not to be looked upon as slaves. We are not here by endurance, but we are here as a right; we are here by virtue of the constitution, and we want equal rights. I know that the intelligent part of the population, represented by those I see before me now, understand that, and are willing to deal with us in that way. I know that they regret these stupid attacks, and that they will allow me to say to the brutal writers of that press, that they are fools to attempt to burn the temple of Ephèze. I am sorry to see that one of the objections which have been made to the proposition of the Government is that these vessels are to stop at a port in France. I think that is one of the best reasons why I should give my vote to support that proposition. I owe nothing to the Government. I was elected in spite of them. They fought me bitterly. I received the support of the leader of the Opposition on that occasion, and I thank him for it. I was elected by both parties. I intend giving an independent vote as a solemn protest, as I said. When the resolution will have passed, I hope we will soon have another country added to those with which we have communication, and that is France; and, later on, I hope that Belgium and other countries will be added to that list.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not think my hon. friend could have been in the House this afternoon when the motion of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) was placed in your hands. My hon. friend must see that, according to the terms of that motion, the question of a French port is not in issue.

Mr. AMYOT. I spoke of the terms of the speech. He said it distinctly, that was one of his objections.

Mr. LAURIER. I take the motion first, but I will refer to the speech. In the motion there is not a word in reference to making connection with a French port. Now, coming to the policy of the speech of my hon. friend, and coming to the speech of my hon. friend who followed him, the hon. gentleman must admit that the policy which he and I advocate, that is to say the extension of trade, not only with France but with all nations—but let us speak of France—is certainly more favored by the policy which is advocated by my hon. friend from Halifax, than by the policy of the Government. How do we stand to-day? My hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) and myself have more than once, upon the floor of this House, advocated a commercial treaty with France. I am still of the opinion that we should have a commercial treaty with France, and my hon. friend is still of that opinion; and he believes that, having to-day a connection by a line of steamships with France, the proposed scheme will develop that connection. But if that is the object in view, would it not have been far better for the Government to continue the service which exists to-day between France and the port of Quebec, than to have a sub-service between France and England, with connection with a French port? My hon. friend has to choose between these two policies. The Government have to-day a line of steamers plying between the port of Quebec and the harbor of Havre. The contract under which these steamers are so plying is now cancelled, and the cancellation is to take effect on the 1st of July. They substitute a line of steamers which is to ply between Canada and England, making connection with France. Does my hon. friend imagine that the trade of France will be better served under the new arrangements?

Mr. AMYOT. Yes; because the other line took two months to go and come.

Mr. LAURIER. I cannot see that. If the subsidy at present is insufficient to connect with a French port, that is a reason to increase it, but not to cancel it. The object my hon. friend had in view was to create trade with France. The line now subsidised is too slow, he says; then let the subsidy be increased, let the time be made faster; but certainly it is not by an indirect communication with France that we shall advance the interests of the trade we have in view. Moreover, my hon. friend has not reflected that the character of the line which we are asked to subsidise is one not adapted for fast freight, but is intended for mail and passenger traffic alone. Therefore the very object he has in view—he has enumerated all the different articles which we might export to France—his object will be defeated by the present arrangement rather than promoted. The hon. gentleman forgets that the Minister of Finance, the other day, stated that the standard of the vessels which are to ply under the new arrangement, was to be that of the Etruria, that is to say, to carry only live freight and passengers; certainly under this arrangement the very object which my hon. friend has in view, the promotion of trade between France and Canada, will be injured. It is by reason of this very fact that the motion of my hon. friend from Halifax should commend itself to the sympathy of my hon. friend from Bellechasse. Of course, I know my hon. friend has acted in good faith, but if he will consider the whole matter he will see, according to his own reasoning, that he will advance his object by supporting the motion of my hon. friend.

Mr. McMULLEN. I think that the present accommodation we have got is amply sufficient for the requirements of this Dominion. My impression is, that the electors of this Dominion are now sufficiently taxed for that purpose, and that it is not necessary to increase our annual subsidies in order to have a faster service. When our population becomes considerably larger than it is now, and when travel is increased to a volume that might support faster lines, and when the finances of the Dominion get into a position that will enable us to support an increased service, then, I think, it will be ample time for us to consider increased subsidies for steamships. On Saturday night, I opposed a subsidy to Australia, and I am opposed to the increased subsidy that we are now asked to grant to a line across the Atlantic. Without detaining the House, I beg to move the following in amendment to the amendment:—

That all the words in the said amendment after the word "That" be left out, and the following substituted therefor: "This House is of opinion that the mail and passenger service now rendered by the Allan, Beaver and Dominion lines of steamers is amply sufficient for the requirements of this Dominion, and that it is inexpedient to increase the burdens of the people by granting increased subsidies to foster Atlantic steamship lines."

Amendment to amendment negatived on a division.

Amendment of Mr. Jones negatived on a division.

Resolution concurred in.

Mr. FOSTER moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 144) relating to Ocean Steamship Subsidies.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 11) for the prevention and suppression of Combinations in restraint of Trade.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The Minister of Justice, I believe, is taking charge of this Bill, which, so far as I notice, does not make any alteration whatever in the common law. It provides for the punishment of what is now unlawful, and for which punishment is already provided. I do not understand that to be what the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) first proposed in the Bill. I understand that he asked for something more. He proposed to make that a crime which is not a crime now, he proposed to declare some acts unlawful which are not unlawful by common law; and if we are simply going to engage in declaratory legislation, upon which there has hitherto been no doubt, we are entering upon a new policy altogether. We have sometimes, by legislative enactment, in this country, and they have also done so in England, declared that to be the law in regard to which there was a difference of opinion, where one division of the court had taken a certain view, and another had taken a different view; but I do not understand there is any difference of opinion that is to be removed. We are simply engaged in declaring that to be unlawful which the law says, as it now stands, is unlawful;

we are proposing that certain unlawful things shall be punished, when the law already says those unlawful things shall be punished. I suppose the Minister of Justice has looked into the matter, and come to some conclusion as to why he thinks legislation is necessary.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. In response to what the hon. gentleman has said, I may state briefly what is my general view of the Bill. I think it is, as the hon. gentleman has said, mainly declaratory of the common law. I think the hon. gentleman who has had the Bill in charge, and those who are interested in passing it, have come to the conclusion that it is desirable to declare the common law with respect to this subject. It has seemed to me from the first, with respect to legislation of this kind, that the propriety of adopting it is not at all based upon any view of the law, because, I presume that as regards the general principles of law bearing on the subject, they are almost beyond a doubt. But it does seem frequently to be the case, that it is desirable to declare the common law, with respect to matters which are offences. I need hardly remind the hon. gentleman of the multitude of cases on our own Statute-book in which the common law is declared. The law respecting murder is common law, but it forms the subject of enactment also, and so on through almost every grade of the criminal law; but, as I have said, I think the question as to the propriety of adopting legislation of this kind depends upon a view of the business outlook of the country. I have said candidly to the hon. gentleman who has had charge of the Bill from the first, that I think his Bill as now framed will add no new penalty, no penalty which could not already be enforced, and will not create any new offence; but in his opinion and in the opinion of a number of other hon. gentlemen, who have studied the business outlook of the country and the business prospects of the country, it is desirable in connection with these subjects covered by a portion of the criminal law, which is not generally understood, to have the law proclaimed and declared, as a statute of this kind would do. On the other hand, we have gentlemen connected with large business interests who think that legislation is not called for and that it is unadvisable to bring to public notice the fact that any such law exists. The question is simply between the classes holding those two opinions, and my own opinion, I must say, inclines me to the view that wherever public sentiment calls, as I think it does in this country, for a public declaration of what the law is, it ought not to be objected to have Parliament declare that law, as a warning to those who may be inclined to transgress it.

Mr. EDGAR. I cannot see that this Bill declares what the law is. As I read the Bill which was introduced by the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), first, it certainly did seem to attempt to grapple with the evils which he thought he had discovered by the investigations of the Committee over which he presided last Session, and I think there was a great deal to be said in favor of a straightforward attempt to deal with the evils of combinations and trusts, and so forth. The Bill which was originally introduced this Session attempted, perhaps unwisely and certainly ignorantly, to deal with that question, but at all events it honestly did so. Now, what is this piece of legislation we have before us? I entirely decline to admit that it is what the Minister of Justice has said, a declaration of the criminal law. It does not declare anything at all, it simply says that every person who conspires, and so on, unlawfully, is guilty of a misdemeanor. The other Bill attempted to declare what the law was, because it said every person who conspires to do so and so does it unlawfully. Now we only say if he does it unlawfully he is guilty of a misdemeanor. The Minister of Justice must admit there is no enactment of a declaratory character in that; there is nothing laid down in that proposition except that those unlawful conspiracies shall be misdemeanors and shall be punished in a certain way. If we look at the Statute-book to day, without going to the common law, we find that anyone who is guilty of conspiracy is to be punished by the law as it stands, and in cases where the punishment for conspiracy is not otherwise provided for, the Revised Statutes say that the punishment shall be imprisonment not exceeding seven years. There is, I admit, something in this Bill when it says that the punishment shall not exceed two years. That is, so far as I can make out, absolutely the whole of the new features in this Bill. It does not make any new crime, it only declares that the penalty for a conspiracy of this kind shall not exceed two years' imprisonment instead of seven years. So that the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), if he succeeded in carrying this Bill through, would have succeeded in reducing the punishment for the offences at which he is particularly aiming. The Revised Statutes of Canada are very clear on that point. Chapter 173, section 26, reads in this way:

"Any one who is convicted of fraud, or of cheating or conspiracy, shall, in any case in which no special punishment is provided by any statute, be liable to seven years' imprisonment."

My hon. friend now proposes to provide a special punishment by this Bill, and therefore such an offender would not be liable to imprisonment for seven years but for two years only. I, therefore, congratulate the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace), on the result which he will achieve if this Bill is passed. If the Government really desire to take some reasonable and proper measures to prevent the evils of combinations, I would ask them to take up my Bill introduced this Session, but which, from the pressure of business, has not been reached, in order to strike at combines, not by altering the criminal law, but by dealing with them in a business way and providing for the great class of combines which do exist, and which may exist to a greater extent in the manufacture and sale of articles which are subject to a high tariff duty. Now, the combinations in all articles which the hon. gentleman from West York (Mr. Wallace) has referred to exist by reason of monopolies, and the monopolies are either natural monopolies or artificial ones, such as tariffs. I admit that there are a certain class of cases which cannot be reached by throwing the duty off articles when combines exist; for instance, take the case of anthracite coal. I am perfectly willing to admit that it is not the high tariff which renders a combination in anthracite coal possible, either in Canada or in the United States. It is the monopoly that has been acquired by the aggregation of capital which has controlled the output of the mines so that they can regulate the prices in Canada as well as in the United States, until we have anthracite mines of our own. But in the case of sugar, cotton goods, and almost any of the articles manufactured in Canada which come under our high tariff, if the Government will make provisions that when a combine has been proved to exist in that particular article they shall by proclamation be entitled to declare that the duties shall be taken off, and that these goods shall be put upon the free list while the combines continue; they would find that this remedy would meet the case, and that very little revenue would be lost, because as soon as the investigation has taken place and the proclamation issued, the combinations would cease. Now, that would be a businesslike way for the Government to meet the evil, and it would not involve a new criminal law being created, as is proposed by the original Bill, but as is certainly not proposed by this. That at all events would be the sensible way of meeting the evil. In case of combinations in other cases than these, I dare say that some clearer definition of the law, as it ought to be at any rate, should be made by this Bill, and if the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) will undertake in another year to introduce a straightforward measure I shall help him to put it on the Statute-book. I do not see that there is anything to either support or oppose in this Bill, except that one single feature which reduces the punishment of conspiracy from seven years to two years.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am surprised to hear the hon. gentleman say that this Bill does not declare the law—he does so because the Bill does not define the law in every man's case, and prescribe exactly the evidence that shall be necessary to convict a man of an offence under the Bill. When the hon. gentleman has read, as he has done, from the face of the Bill, that a person who unlawfully conspires to do these things is guilty of a misdemeanor and is punishable, it is impossible for him to state that the Bill does not declare what the law is. It is true that offences of this kind are at present unlawful as conspiracies, and that very severe penalties are attached to conspiracies by the Revised Statutes, but I will venture to say that there are not two persons in Canada outside the legal profession, who knew before this Bill was introduced that unlawful conspiring in respect to trade was conspiracy punishable under the Act wtth five years' imprisonment. They will know the law hereafter, and, therefore, the Bill is a declaration of the common law; and those who support the Bill say, a useful declaration of the common law. When the hon. gentleman tells us that the Bill does not do anything more than reduce the penalties for those offences, the hon. gentleman, I submit, does not state half the case. It not only declares that these combinations in restraint of trade are conspiracies, but it establishes the minimum penalty, contrary to the principle now established by the Revised Statutes, for under the Revised Statutes the punishment for a conspiracy of this kind may be almost nominal. But if this Bill reduces the maximum the hon. gentleman will not forget that it establishes a minimum far above that which the present statute provides, for it fixes a penalty of $200 which is to be the minimum in regard to an individual, and $1,000 in regard to a corporation.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E I.) This Bill ostensibly is a Bill to punish those engaged in fraudulent combinations, but it seems to me that the Bill itself is one of the greatest frauds I ever read. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Wallace) moved a year ago for a Committee to investigate these alleged frauds, and at a very great expense to the country he, and his Committee, sat and took a great deal of evidence. They submitted to Parliament a book containing that evidence with their report, and I just ask the attention of the House for a moment while I read to them what that Committee reported to Parliament should be legislated against. Then I will call their attention to the Bill and ask them whether this Bill pretends to legislate in the direction that the hon. gentleman said we should legislate. The hon. gentleman referred to the different trades of the country in his report and I will read you the concluding paragraph of that report, which refers to sugar and groceries, so that you will see what the evils are that they wish to remedy. The report says:

"Thus facts prove this Grocers' Guild, with its several conbinations, to be obnoxious to the public interest, in limiting competition, in enhancing prices, and by the familiar use of its growing and facile powers tending to produce and propagate all the evils of monopoly. Certain dealers are refused admission into its ranks, others are admitted and afterwards expelled, others again are placed under its ban, who, from conscientious scruples or in a spirit of independence, refuse to join them. Merchants who have been buyers on equal terms and with equal facilities as other merchants, suddenly find themselves under the power of this combination.

"Thus establishments, which in some cases are the growth of half a century of toil and honorable dealing, and rich in valuable experience and public confidence, are threatened with extinction No reasonable excuse, much less justification, exists for many of these arbitrary acts and agreements. The wholesale grocery trade had been for many years in a flourishing condition; failures were almost unknown. The alleged demoralisation of the sugar trade was but the same condition of this trade that had existed for many years owing to the custom of selling sugar at a low rate of profits. The reason given for fixing prices on many other articles was that they were being sold at too small a rate of profit. Fixed profits were agreed upon and afterwards increased, and in no instance lowered, though values generally had fallen.

"It was seen that an association formed at first to arrange uniform terms of credits and discounts, and to prevent the dating ahead of invoices, &c., soon and rapidly extended its operations to more ambitious schemes. The power used, cautiously at first, soon grasped with a firmer hand, and at length. 'the simple plan that they may take, who have the power,' governed the operations of these associations."

In reference to the coal combinations the report says:

"Thus the public is presented with the extraordinary spectacle of a mercantile association arrogating to itself powers conferred upon law courts alone, with, in this instance, the judges in the case virtually condoning perjury by the acceptance of fines to be divided amongst the importers. This phenomenon is not the less painful or less objectionable in character, from the association which perpetrates it being distinguished by the respectable title of 'The Coal Branch of the Toronto Board of Trade.'

"Their management of public tenders is worthy of attention as an illustrative of how popular confidence is betrayed. When tenders are asked for supplying coal in Toronto for Dominion Government buildings, Ontario Government institutions, Toronto water-works, public schools, charitable institutions, the General Hospital, &c., a meeting of the 'Coal Branch' is called and the price is fixed which the party inviting tenders is to pay, and the privilege of filling the contract is awarded to the member who offers the highest premium or bonus. For instance, in 1886 for the privilege of filling the Ontario Government contract of about 2,500 tons, a premium of $1,500 was paid. The same contract, including some wood, was sold in 1887 for $1,399. The premiums thus paid are divided among the importing members in the same way as the fines. But in order to lull public suspicion of combination, and that the parties to be supplied were not obtaining the coal at its fair market value, other members of the branch put in tenders at higher prices.

"Citizen consumers in like manner pay, not competitive prices, but such fixed prices as the combination chooses to extort."

On the coffin-makers and undertakers' trade they remark:

"The inevitable result of this exclusive control is exorbitant charges to bereaved families; and wherever the hand of affliction most frequently falls the more oppressive the burden of this combination becomes."

On the biscuit and confectionery trade they report:

"From the evidence, it seems clear that the result of the combination is to keep prices at higher figures than are justified by the price paid for the raw material, and altered condition of trade, brought about by the introduction of new and improved machinery.

"It was found by comparison with United States price lists, that Canadian goods are in some finer and fancy varieties 20 to 30 per cent. higher than goods of equal quality on the other side of the line.

And they wind up by reporting:

"The Committee find that the evils produced by combinations such as have been enquired into, have not by any means been fully developed as yet in this country, but sufficient evidence of their injurious tendencies and effects is given to justify legislative action for suppressing the evils arising from these and similar combinations and monopolies."

Now, Sir, that was the report the Committee made on the large amount of testimony they took; and the hon. gentleman, having made that report, introduced into this House early in the Session a Bill purporting to strike at these evils and remove them if possible; and that Bill, as my hon. friend beside me has remarked, if defective in construction, inartistically drawn, and going perhaps too far—drawn perhaps by some person who did not understand the law on the subject—seemed at any rate to be honestly framed to strike at the evils reported upon. In that Bill it was provided that any person who combined to grant to any other person who was a party to the combination any facility for the purchase, sale, transportation or supply of any article, which facility was denied to any other person, should be guilty of a misdemeanor, and further that any person, who denied to a person who was not a party to the combination, any facility which was granted to those who were parties to the combination, should be guilty of a misdemeanor. Then the Bill went on to declare that any person who unreasonably enhanced the market price of an article, or unduly restrained the traffic in any such article, or limited or prevented the production, manufacture, sale or transportation, or prevented or restricted competition in the production, manufacture, sale or transportation of such article, should be guilty of a misdemeanor. That was at any rate an intelligible Bill; you might either support it or oppose it; but what did the hon. gentleman do? He got it referred to the Banking and Commerce Committee; and, without discussing it or offering one word in support of it, he introduced a new Bill similar to the old one only in the title, had it reprinted, and brought it before the Committee; and not one of the offences which he reported against, which he said there should be legislation to prevent, and which he proposed to deal with in his first Bill, is referred to in this new Bill at all. Therefore I say that the Bill is a fraud, in ostensibly holding up to the public the proposition that it is dealing with the evils which the first Bill was designed to prevent. No one can deny that it does not deal with or punish any one of these offences. It has been argued by the Minister of Justice that this Bill declares or defines the common law. To some extent it may do so; but it does not declare that the doing of any act, or the leaving undone of any act, shall of itself constitute a misdemeanor; it does not punish anyone for doing or omitting to do anything; it does not strike at the evils which the report pointed out; it merely says that those who do unlawfully certain things shall be guilty of misdemeanors. They are guilty of misdemeanors now. The difficulty before was in defining what was lawful or unlawful. Any conspiracy made between two persons to do any unlawful act, or to prevent any lawful act being done, in restraint of trade, was a misdemeanor. The Bill does not say that any man may or may not do such and such a thing; it merely says, if he does anything unlawfully, he will be punished. That is merely relegating the matter back to the indefiniteness of the common law, and leaving the judge to find out what is lawful or unlawful. In a book recently published on the criminal law, the author says:

"The definition shows a conspiracy to be an agreement to do an unlawful act. It is the indefinite meaning of this word 'unlawful' that gives to the crime of conspiracy its wide extent. The widest discretion is entrusted to the judges in whose power it seems to be thus to declare criminal, combinations to do almost anything which they regard as morally wrong, politically or socialy dangerous or otherwise objectionable."

The indefiniteness which existed before exists now; it is not touched or attempted to be touched by the Bill. The evils which existed before exist now; they are not legislated against, and no attempt is made to legislate against them by the Bill; it leaves the law exactly where it is now. The Bill, therefore, is a fraud; it deceives the people in making them believe that you are legislating on the subject when you are not, but you are evading the subject. With this report before them on the existence of these evils, it became the duty of the Government to take up this subject, and bring in a proper Bill to punish and suppress these evils, which not only exist, but which the Committee say are growing evils, and will, in the near future, become intensified. Now, Sir, why does the hon. gentleman propose the Bill? What good does he expect to accrue from it? Are the public going to be protected by it? No; they will be just where they were before. They will have to bring a prosecution and prove exactly what they did before, to the satisfaction of the judge, that the offence which they are prosecuting any person for, is an unlawful act against the common law. The Bill does not alter or facilitate the proceedings in any way; all it does is to minimise the punishment which the common law imposes on those guilty of an unlawful combination. I I submit to the House that the hon. gentleman has gone back on his report; he has been either afraid or ashamed of it. I submit also that it was the duty of the Government to take this matter up, and even now I think they ought to deal with it. It is too important a matter to be dealt with hurriedly by a private member, and the Government ought on their responsibility to introduce a Bill next Session dealing honestly and fairly with the evils pointed out by the report of the Committee.

Mr. WALLACE. I am not much surprised at the course of hon. gentlemen opposite. I find the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) first promising his support to a measure of this kind and afterwards working side by side with the opponents of the Bill—those men who have formed those illegal combinations and who came down in great force to defeat the Bill. They did not come down to defeat the old Bill, which the hon. member for P.E.I. (Mr. Davies) says had some merit, but they came down before the Banking and Commerce Committee at its last meeting, with a great array of lawyers from Montreal and Toronto, and with amendments carefully considered, to legislate this Bill out of existence. If this Bill is so innocent and harmless why should those people have gone to so much trouble and expense to defeat it. We find the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) taking a position to-night. Before this we did not know exactly were to find him. He spoke in Committee against the Bill, and then when it came to a vote he had not the courage of his convictions, and turned round and voted in favor of it, and I would not be at all surprised to find him repeating the operation this evening. So far as the harmless character of the Bill is concerned, if you compare the two Bills, you will see that they both seek exactly the same end, and the advantage of the present Bill over the other is this: The first Bill created another criminal Act, and it has been said by those who opposed it, and it may be said with some truth, that its provisions were too severe. We contended they were not, and that the courts would decide on that point. The courts would have to give their decision, and it might happen that their decision would make the Act a good deal more severe than we had intended it to be; but by the amended Bill, we have exactly the same remedy and nothing is left uncertain. It is in accord with the common law. As the Minister of Justice has said, the common law is not very much known outside of the legal profession, and many of these merchants who were acting in this way, not knowing the common law, and many who found out they were acting in contravention of the law of the land, went out of these unlawful and illegal combinations when they found the common law was against them. This new Act does exactly and more effectively what was aimed at in the original, and, therefore, I hope that this House will pass the Bill. The report of the Combination Committee of last Session has never been contradicted, the facts stated in it have never been even attempted to be controverted by any of those gentlemen who belong to illegal combinations, and the report shows conclusively that the evils complained of do exist, and that those illegal combinations are becoming a great power. It proves conclusively that they are robbing the people and following the line of the immense trusts and combinations in the United States, and I do not agree with those gentlemen who propose that we should leave the matter over for a year; but I say that legislation is imperatively demanded now. We should act now while we have the power and not wait another year, when those combinations will have increased in strength and the Canadian Parliament will find it a much more difficult matter to legislate with regard to them. I trust this Bill will pass, and any slight amendments can be made in Committee.

Mr. MULOCK. I think that the Bill in question, whilst it may not meet all the requirements of the case, may very fairly be passed, if only as an experiment or warning. Certainly, whatever may be the case, there is necessity in my judgment for intervention to protect the consumers of the country. We have seen in the last few years gigantic institutions and corporations forming combinations to enhance the cost of the necessaries of life, and I see very little distinction between what is called in the criminal law, larceny, and the result of an arrangement which obliges the unfortunate consumer to transfer from his pocket to that of the wealthy producer an unnecessary amount of money in order that he may maintain life.

Mr. ELLIS. That is the result of protection.

Mr. MULOCK. It may be the result of protection, as the hon. member for St. John suggests. I am not now seeking for the cause of it. We have the disease and it is our duty to seek for a remedy.

An hon. MEMBER. Free trade.

Mr. MULOCK. My hon. friend behind me says free trade; but the Government of the day control our trade policy, and we are obliged to seek a remedy elsewhere. We are told by the hon. the Minister of Justice that we are in no way interfering with the common law, except by reducing the punishment and providing a different mode of punishment. To that extent I think the Bill is an improvement. A measure which is too severe defeats itself, and even if we were making no new law, the fact that we are by legislation emphasising the existence of the law may meet the case, and it may never be necessary to put the law in force. If it should turn out that this law is a mere echo of the existing law, except so far as punishment is concerned, that does not take away the existing law; that does not make lawful what was unlawful before. I am not aware what the law is on the subject, and I doubt if many people are. Certainly the law of conspiracy is a most abstruse one, and a conviction under it will be no easy matter. Even if a conviction should take place under this particular Act, the punishment would not operate very hardly on those unlawfully engaged, if, by a mere accident, they are engaged in unlawful combinations. I regard it as a most delicate matter to interfere with legitimate trade. What is a combination? Where is the line to be drawn between what is a lawful and what is an unlawful association? These are, I think, very delicate questions, and will be found to be shrouded in mystery whenever we have a case in the courts. Nevertheless I think that the passage of a measure such as this, even if it does but leave the law where it stood, and reduces the punishment, will have a beneficial effect. The judge has it in his discretion to say what the punishment shall be. It is not necessarily imprisonment, for I can conceive many cases in which a judge would hesitate to find guilty a person charged with the offence because of the severity of the punishment which he will be compelled to enforce. In this case if it should happen that a combination is technically illegal, but that there has been no mala fides on the part of the defendant, the judge can exercise that discretion with which he is clothed by the Act, and his sentence will be a nominal one. If, on the other hand, he is convinced there was an attempt on the part of the defendant to violate the Act, he will be sentenced proportionately to the offence. Therefore, to the extent of making the punishment discretionary, there is a better chance of enforcing the existing law than there would be of leaving the law as it stands at present. For these reasons, I am prepared to support the passage of this Bill, even if it is open to the objections which have been raised, and which I think have been well taken to a certain extent, namely, in regard to its not declaring what is the existing law. After we have had some cases decided under it, such as have been decided under the Bucket Shop Act, and have found out the weak points of the measure, we may be able to amend it. Therefore, I am in favor of the action of the Government in preventing an existing evil so long as they do not deal with the matter in a more radical way.

Mr. McMULLEN. I am sorry that I was not in the House when the second reading of this Bill was proposed. The Bill has my full sympathy, and I am very glad that it has been introduced for the purpose of preventing a system which is taking root in this country. When we look at the history of the United States, and see the evils which have arisen there in connection with these combines, I think we will decide that it is high time that something should be done here to prevent the implanting of these evil and pernicious systems in Canada, which result in giving to those who are producers the advantage which should be obtained by the consuming public. In the State of New York, a commission was appointed to find out the results of these combines. After the commission had sat for six or seven weeks, the chairman reported to the House that the commission would require to take up a permanent residence in the capital of the State, as it would take years to ferret out the extent to which combines existed in that State; that Alps upon Alps of combines existed which were fleecing the people of that State from day to day and from year to year. We know that in other States, combines have existed. When we take into consideration several of these combines, we will see at a glance the necessity of taking action in the interest of our consuming public. Take the Standard Oil Co. The capital stock of that company is about $90,000,000. That stock is worth to-day $164 to the $100 in the market. Last year that Company distributed $20,000,000 amongst the stockholders after paying a dividend of 10 per cent. quarterly. Take also the Cotton Seed Oil Company, which had a capital stock of about $48,000,000. That also make enormous profits. It was formed for the purpose of keeping down the price of cotton seed. Before the combine was formed, the cotton seed from the south was worth about $7 a ton, and about 700,000 tons were crushed each year. Ever since the formation of that combine, the price has been going down, until now it is worth about $4 a ton instead of $7. That company has made enormous profits in consequence of that combine. There are many other combines which have taken root in the United States, and the fact is that combines in that country have succeeded to such an extent that it seems as if everyone was interested in a combine. When those companies approach the legislatures, almost every man sitting in the House is either directly or indirectly interested in a combine, and consequently they cannot be reached. In Orange County, in the State of New York, the farmers formed an association for the purpose of trying to break up a combine for the sale of milk in the city of New York. They subscribed $20,000 in order to fight the milk combine. After they had fought that combine for thirteen months and had spent $20,000, they found they had to break up their association, and the combine exists to-day. It takes the milk from the farmers at its own price, and sells it to the consumers for double the price which is paid to the farmers. All those people in this country who are disposed to take advantage of such organisations will undoubtedly transplant that system to this country, and ultimately our people will be subject to a system of fleecing by these combines which will impoverish them more than they are impoverished under the present system. It is not too soon to adopt some measure to counteract this evil. I sympathise with the hon. member who introduced this Bill, and I am only sorry that it is not all that was expected. I hope it may meet the views of the country, and may put a stop to the combines which exist in Canada. There is not, for example, one undertaker in the Dominion who is not a member of a combine. The remains of our departed friends cannot be carried to their last resting place except under the auspices of a combine I know men who have tried to enter the business of undertaking, but they found that before they could do that they would have to get the signatures of the three nearest undertakers in the section of country in which they lived, consenting to their becoming members of the Undertakers' Association, before they could get the materials to enable them to carry on their business. It is preposterous that the laws of this country should allow the people to be fleeced by such organisations. If this Bill does not fully reach the evils which exist, I hope that next year amendments will be moved to secure to the people a free and independent exercise of their rights, without being trammelled and fleeced by associations which are no better than disgused robbers. I stated, when the hon. gentleman was pressing his Bill before the Committee, that I was sorry to see such an array of lawyers appearing to prevent the passage of the measure. No doubt they have tasted the advantage of the organisation of combines, because if that were not the case they would not have taken the trouble to be there to prevent the passage of the Bill. No doubt they have begun to realise the advantage of these organisations, judging from the attention which they gave to this measure, and from the fact that they brought an eminent lawyer from Toronto for the purpose of throwing dust in the eyes of the Committee in order to prevent their adopting the Bill. I was very glad to see, however, that the Committee adopted the principle of the Bill. I am not a lawyer, and I am not capable of seeing the defects in the Bill to which reference has been made, but I hope it will meet the case, and if it does not, I hope the Minister of Justice, or someone in his place, will follow it up and make amendments next Session so as to release the people from the extortion of paying a fixed price for all these articles which they consume. Take the case of the sugar combine in the United States. The United States consume 2,800,000,000 pounds of sugar a year. There was a combine formed a few years ago to raise the price of sugar, and almost every manufacturer in the United States joined that combine. At that time sugar was sold for $5.93 per hundred pounds. It rose immediately afterwards to 6½ cents a pound and to-day it is selling at about 7 cents. The result of that organisation has been that sugar has been raised in the United States about $10 a barrel. When we consider the enormous consumption of sugar in that country, we must see the enormous amount which is made by that combine, and we are all pretty well acquainted with the evils which result from such a system. This Bill is only intended to give effect to the sentiments of the country in this regard, and to the report which has been submitted to Parliament. By adopting that, we will render the country a great service by preventing the introduction, the existence and the growth of institutions which are established only to rob the public out of their just rights and liberties.

Mr. SPROULE. There is no subject which has engaged the attention of this House during the present Parliament so important as the one now under consideration, and the evils the outcome of which this Bill is introduced to remedy. The rapidity with which combinations, trusts, monopolies and other institutions of man's invention, have been organised and have grown during the last few years, not only on the continent of America but also in Europe, is most alarming. Capital is piled together, men are associated in society who delegate their rights to others so as to evade the law, until to-day, in almost every line of life, magnificent institutions are controlled by, and great interests are centred in a few hands, and the important interests of the producer on the one hand, and the consumer on the other, are sacrificed by these combines. A very able American writer who has looked over the subject carefully, asks, what is the object of combines? We have heard a good many gentlemen, who are themselves interested in combines, who came before the Committee of Banking and Commerce and asserted that the object of these combines in Canada is not for evil, but only good, that they are harmless in their nature, that they allowed men not only to associate their capital together, but to bring their united intelligence to bear upon some object for the purpose of carrying on the same lines of commerce more economically than they otherwise could, and thereby give the best result of their labor to the country. Is that the object of those gentlemen who have formed combines on the other side? I have in my hand an ably written little pamphlet by Mr. William W. Cook, an eminent lawyer in New York, who has gone very carefully over the subject, and he says:

"There can be no denial of the fact that a 'trust' is organised to do away with competition. Without that result it is a failure; with it it is a success."

Now, competition is the only guarantee we have that the article produced will be given to the people at the least possible price. We only need look at the success that has attended these organisations throughout Canada and the United States, and European countries; we need only look to their success to know that the aim they have had in view has been accomplished, and the result has been, as the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) very rightly stated, to bring back millions of capital to the pockets of those parties who are engaged in these combines:

"The modern 'trust' is a monoply in its purposes, its plans and its culmination. It is a combination that strikes down all competitors. The parties combine to control the market and to control it without competition."

He goes on to say:

"To all these the public at each end of the industry, the producer and consumer, is, and is intended to be, in a certain sense at the mercy of the syndicate or combination. The main purpose, management and effect of all upon the public is the same, to wit—the aggregation of capital, the power of controlling the manufacture and output of various necessary commodities. The acquisition or destruction of competitive properties all leading to the final and conclusive purposes of annihilating competition and enabling the industries represented in the combination to fix the prices at which they would purchase the raw material from the producer, and at which they would sell the product, refined or useful, to the consumer."

Now, if this is the object of these combines, and their success, I think, is the best proof that it has been their object, we might ask: Do they injuriously affect competition? This same author, who has given a great deal of attention to this subject, says most unmistakably that they do affect competition. Speaking of the sugar trust he says:

"85 per cent of the sugar refining business, formed a combination or trust. The remaining refineries, being two in San Francisco, two in Philadelphia, one in Boston and one in St. Louis, representing altogether 15 per cent. of the business, did not take part."

What was the result?

"By order of the 'trust' two refineries in Boston have been closed, two in New York, two others have been temporarily shut down, and still others have had their production decreased one-fourth. Refined sugar has advanced in price from ¾ to 1 cent a pound since the 'trust' was formed. Refined sugar was worth in February, 1887, 5·93, but in February, 1888, was worth 6·88.

"The average price of granulated sugar in 1887 was 6 cents, but the average price during January, 1888 was 7 1/16 cents. Competition has practically disappeared. The San Francisco sugar rarely gets further east than the Missouri River, and never competes east of Chicago The object of the 'trust' is frankly stated to be to 'limit the production.' Mr. Havemeyer, the great refiner and leader of the 'trust' stated that refined sugar in America costs the consumer about 2⅜ cents a pound more than in England, or about $10 per barrel."

Now, that is unmistakeable evidence that the object of the trust has been attained by the combination of these capitalists. In various other lines we find the same condition of things exist. I said that trusts and combines to-day are growing with startling rapidity in this country. Why do I say so? Because I find that last year no less than three different committees were appointed, two in the United States and one in Canada, to look into this question and see how far the law could control them. What is the result of that? I take the commission that was appointed in New York, and I find that although they only sat for a short time, they examined into the Standard Oil Trust, represented by no less than 39 companies, representing over $50,000,000 of capital. Then we have the Sugar Trust, representing nearly $50,000,000 of capital also. They examined also into the Milk Trust, Labor Trust, the Rubber Trust, the Cotton Seed Oil Trust, controlling 85 companies, the Envelope Trust, the Elevator Trust, the Butchers' Trust or Combination, the Glass Trust and the Furniture Trust. All these are only a few that were examined into by the commission that sat last year in New York. It is surprising to see with what rapidity and in what great numbers trusts have sprung up during the last few years in almost every line of manufacture. I have before me the same author, who goes on to speak of the Standard Oil Trust, and I find that in the State of New York there are 14 companies practically amalgamated into one, controlled by a few individuals; in the State of New Jersey, 3; Pennsylvania, 9; Ohio, 4; Kentucky, 1; Maryland, 1; West Virginia, 11; Illinois, 1; Minnesota, 1; Missouri, 1; and Massachusetts, 2; Maine, 1; Iowa, 2; in all 41 companies, controlling a capital of over $50,000,000. In not a single State is there that live competition that is the best guarantee that the consumer gets what he buys at the lowest price at which it can by manufactured. These great institutions, some of them having a backing of $50,000,000 behind them, have devised means to evade the laws of the country, and they have been succesful in almost every instance in evading the law; and it is to-day one of the important requirements, not only of the State but of the Federal Government, to devise a law that will reach these combinations. They have been taken up under the common law, under the Companies' Act, and under various laws, but up to the present time they have not been successfully combatted. I take the next important trust, the American cotton seed oil trust. I find that 85 companies are amalgamated into one, and instead of the manufacturers paying $24 a ton as formerly for the raw material, $4 a ton is paid, and still the producer on the one hand is obliged to receive a pittance for the raw material he sells, and the manufacturer is able to sell his article at a higher figure than when the producer of the raw material received double the value he does now for his product. Some say we have a gigantic issue on hand, and the question is asked as to how we can combat it. Some hon. gentlemen opposite say that this may be done by free trade. We have the experience of the Americans who are endeavoring to combat these trusts. What do they propose? Do they propose free trade? If free trade were a remedy, we would expect to find combinations only in protected countries. If so, we would expect to find them existing to a large extent in the United States. It is true they are to be found there; but it is equally true that they date back as far in history as 1674, that they have existed in Portugal, Spain and England, and on taking up a paper to-day I observed that a gigantic salt trust has been framed on this continent in connection with the English salt trust, by which it is hoped to control the output of the two countries in that product. This goes to show that these trusts are not only to be found in countries where protective tariffs exist, but also in countries which have a free trade policy. I find the following paragraph in a New York evening paper:—

"New York, 19th.—An afternoon paper says F. B. Thurber and Erastus Wiman are the chief promoters in this country of the projected salt trust. Associated with them are a number of prominent English capitalists controlling $25,000,000."

This Mr. Wiman is the celebrated and patriotic gentleman who is so much interested in Canada to-day. This combination has gone so far as to endeavor to control the salt product of the United States as well as England, and there is danger that Canada may fall under a similar combination, and I venture to say that salt will be advanced from 75 cents a barrel to $1 or $1.25. Not only, then, do we find these combinations in countries enjoying a protective tariff, but they are equally prosperous in free trade countries such as England. We find them also engaged in lines of business that are not affected by any tariff. We have the gigantic combination controlling elevators in America, also the milk trust, but in neither of these lines can a tariff affect the situation, seeing there is no duty on either. I have here a summary of the means proposed by the various States to remedy this evil. There are some gentlemen on the other side of the line who hold that these combinations can only successfully be worked where a high protective tariff prevails, and accordingly they propose to do away with protective duties; but there are comparatively few who assail the combinations on that ground. Several remedies are suggested for the punishment of those engaged in combines, trusts and monopolies, as follows: First, making them illegal and possibly those who violate the provisions of the law, reporting them. Second, for admitting free of duty all articles or goods of manufacture or produce which are controlled or affected directly by such trusts, combines or monopolies. Third, a third party introduces a Bill to appoint a commission to enquire into these trusts, combines, &c., whose duty would be to report to the president from time to time, the results of their enquiries, and that when 60 per cent. of the article or product was affected in price, or limited in output by it, to provide punishment for the offence. Fourth, a fourth Bill is to impose a tax on merchandise, manufactures, commodities or products, manufactured, produced, purchased or held by said parties, equal in amount to 40 per cent. of the value of such commodity. And that no allowance of drawback shall be given on any goods so held or produced under these provisions. Fifth, to provide for placing on the free list,—3 Bills. To define trusts and provide for punishment,—16 Bills. To tax the products of trusts, &c.,—1 Bill. A large number of Bills have been introduced into the different State Legislatures with a view to suppress trusts, and many members of those legislatures and members of Congress entertain views in harmony with the view laid down by the Minister of Justice and the member for West York (Mr. Wallace), who has endeavored to frame a Bill for the punishment of these parties. In the United States 14 or 15 Bills have been introduced to meet the evil of trusts. None, however, have successfully met the case, and these trusts are steadily spreading, and we have the highest legal opinion in the country that the only successful way of combating them is by making known to the consuming population the nature of the monopoly and the extent of the evil, to build up a public sentiment showing the necessity of the law, as a public opinion was built up behind the Railway Commission so strong that it would not tolerate the evils another hour. When we do that in this case, Parliament must place an Act on the Statute-book to punish those offenders. It is by giving the people information on this subject that we shall build up public sentiment. I have shown that efforts have constantly been made to evade the laws by combinations and trusts in every country. In Canada the same thing prevails to-day. On the other hand, it is said that this is a monstrous proposal. There is one argument in connection with the matter which has not been pointed out by hon. gentlemen opposite who have said that this Bill is harmless. If it were harmless, it is strange that its passage through Committee should have been fought every stage by interested parties. But whether it is harmless or not, we desire to hang it up as a warning to the public that these iniquitous arrangements will not be tolerated in this country, and we are prepared to fight these combinations by legislation. Again, we ask from what quarter does the opposition come? Does it come from the producers or the agricultural class? No; they are largely in favor of the Bill, because they are injured by combinations. Does it come from the consumers? No; but it comes from parties interested directly or indirectly in the combines or trusts. One of its strongest opponents has been the Toronto Board of Trade, and yet between 50 and 60 of those gentlemen are interested in combinations, and some of the members who came down to tell Parliament why we should not interfere with harmless combinations were the very men who are receiving large profits from those combinations. They said that the sugar trust did not not effect any interest; but a retailer of sugar in my village said he was satisfied that if the combine did not exist he would be able to sell it to his customers one cent or one cent and a half less than at present. The trade is controlled by the sugar guild and the grocers' guild, and the retailers must pay their prices. Then there is the oatmeal combine. At one meeting they raised the price 35 cents a barrel, at the next meeting 25 cents a barrel. The next meeting they raised it 30 cents a barrel and it is said that each man was bound to sell only a certain quantity from his mill. If he sold less than that quantity the combine gave him 30 cents for every barrel less than the quantity allotted to him, and if he sold more he paid the combine 30 cents for each barrel over the amount, which went to keep mills in some other parts of the country idle. The result was that seven or eight of our important oatmeal mills were kept idle, even in some localities which I am informed paid a large bonus for the erection of those mills, so that the price of oats might be enhanced to the farmers of the locality. The machinery of those mills was left idle and rusting because of those combinations, and, as a practical benefit which has already resulted from the introduction of this Bill, I see that only a few days ago the oatmeal millers combine was dissolved by mutual consent. They knew this law was being put on the statutes, they were afraid it would reach them and so they dissolved. We find also that many men who a few years ago were interested in combines are now in a hurry to tell the people that they are not connected with them at all, and that they want fair competition in their line of trade. We have this feeling shown by the manufacturers of binding twine, by the oatenmeal millers, and by those engaged in several branches of manufactures. I do not care how little this law reaches the combines, if it reaches them at all; if it punishes one man in a thousand I hold that it is time that it should be put on the statutes I say that the feeling against combines is growing so strong in the country today, that whatever hon. gentlemen may be inclined to oppose this Bill now, in a year hence he will not dare go back to his constituents and say: I was one of the men who opposed putting a law on the Statute-books to punish those men engaged in combines and trusts. At this late period of the Session I do not wish to take up the time of the House further then to express the hope that this Bill will become law. If after experience we no not find it is effectual in reaching the combines, it will be our duty from time to time to amend its provisions so as so reach them, until we have not only a law against combines that will reach all, but also a public sentiment which will sustain that law and cause men who contemplate joining such associations to see the impossibility, in the face of that public opinion, of carrying out their nefarious designs. We must deal with the matter until we have a public sentiment which will enforce that healthy competition which is the only fair guarantee to the consumer on the one hand and to the producer on the other.

Mr. McCULLA. I believe it my duty to raise my voice in support of the measure now before the House. I have the honor to represent a farming constituency and I can thoroughly agree with the gentleman who has last spoken that there is a growing feeling on the part of the people whom we represent that we should legislate against, and suppress those combines. I know that this feeling is becoming very prevalent in the country because I have had many communications from our farmers enquiring as to the likelihood of this measure becoming law, and expressing anxiety that it should be placed on the Statute-book. The people are thoroughly aroused against those combines; they know what they have suffered from the coal combine, the undertakers combine, the salt combine lately, and the other combinations and conspiracies which were to a certain extent filching the money from the pockets of the honest farmers and artisans of this country. I would also express my belief that the insurance combine is as bad as the rest, if not the most iniquitous. I can give you an instance of the injustice of the insurance combine in my own town. Up to the year 1885 we had no fire protection there whatever and in certain seasons of the year when there was most danger from fire the river flowing through the town would dry up. The town of Brampton set to work and at a large large expenditure they secured one of the best fire protection services in the country. We have water works there now which cost something like $90,000 and we have 50 hydrants in the town with 60 pounds pressure on each hydrant. In fact within the last ten years not $2,000 have been lost by fires in the town; yet notwithstanding all this our insurance rate to-day is just as high as when we had no fire protection service at all. That is unfair and unjust to the business community of our town, and I hope that the Bill so far as it affects insurance companies will remain a part of the law. I have always been a supporter of the National Policy. I believe it is a policy which is in the interests of the country, because by it we foster and support our own industries and manufactures, give employment to our own artisans and as a result create a home consuming market for our farmers. While I am a strong supporter of the National Policy and while we have promised our farmers and our consumers that they would have the benefit of home competition—that competition which would reduce prices; and that the protection put on would not increase the price of any commodities that we require—I believe, Sir, at the same time that while we should protect our people from outside interference in trade we must protect our consumers and give them the benefit of the greatest amount of free trade in the home market that we can. I believe we must have free trade in our own markets on all the articles people wish to consume, and I hope the measure now before the House will become law. I know that the people in the section of the country I have the honor to represent are strongly in favor of this measure and of its becoming the law of the land.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not think that there are any hon. members of this House who will not admit that combinations are a bad thing and should be repressed. Whether the Bill that is now before the House is sufficient for that purpose or not I do not know, but I think it is a step in the right direction and ought to receive the support of the House. It must have amused the House, however, to hear the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) denounce in such eloquent terms the oatmeal millers, the elevator combines and the cotton seed men while he had not one single word to say about the combine that he himself is a member of. One of the greatest combines in this country to-day is the medical combine. That hon. gentleman in eloquent terms denounced every other business man and every other manufacturer in this country because they were forming combines, and with almost tears running down his cheeks he denounced the enormous crimes that were being committed, while he forgot all the time that he was a member of one of the greatest and most arbitrary combinations that exist in Canada to-day.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to tell the hon. gentleman that there is no combine good, bad or indifferent among medical men.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is a trades union.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not think that the House will agree with the member for East Grey there. I regret that the member for West York (Mr. Wallace) when he introduced this Bill did not include the medical profession and I can assure him that if he had introduced a provision to make them regulate their profession a little better than they do, that he would have received strong support and that it would have been the most popular measure that had ever been introduced in this House. With all due aspect to many hon. friends around me I think the legal profession ought also be prevented from combining and I think the member for West York (Mr. Wallace) made a mistake in not including them with the doctors. I believe that a little wholesome legislation in restraining the lawyers would not be amiss at all.

Mr. LAURIER. You may have law suits then.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The hon. gentleman says I may have law suits then and if I have I am prepared to defend myself, but I do think that a mistake was made that this Bill did not include those two professions which I believe are very close corporations. It did amuse me, if it did not amuse the House also, to see the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) with tears running down his cheeks dilating on the enormous crimes that the poor oatmeal millers and some few other manufacturers were perpetrating on the people of the country. I may tell the hon. gentleman that taking all the oatmeal millers in the country into consideration, I do not believe there is a single one of them who has made any profit during the last few years. I am not interested in the business at all, but I do know that with the thousands of dollars they have invested in property, with all the employment they give, and the ready market they furnish to the farmers, I do not think there is a single branch of manufacturing industry to-day which is in such a depressed condition as that of the oatmeal millers; and I think that, instead of spending all his wrath and indignation on them, the hon. gentleman ought to have reserved a little for the corporation which he is a member of.

Mr. COLTER. This question is a very important question, and I am very much pleased to see it taken hold of so generally on both sides of the House. It is important for this reason: It is well known that the great mass of the people are suffering from some cause, and that cause is the fact that they are overcharged for the various commodities which they are obliged to buy. It is true, this evil is due in the main to these combinations and trusts, which the hon. member for East Grey alleges are growing to the detriment of the people. Now, it is well known that the facility for forming these combinations increases as the scope is narrowed; when we have the production of certain commodities limited to a few individuals, it is easy to bring about a combination; and I feel satisfied that the only way in which these combinations can be effectively met is by having the duties very much lowered on many of these articles which are the subjects of these combinations. Now, the people who have voted in the past in favor of a high protective policy are now complaining, and they have no just reason to complain. They are simply reaping what they have sown, and they demand that they shall be protected to a large extent from the consequences of that which they have brought upon themselves. They have asked for something tangible from this House. I am not at all satisfied with a great many remarks which have been made by hon. members. Some say, let us pass this measure, and if it is not found effective, like the Bucket Shop Bill, let us then amend it and put it into better shape. I submit that that is not proper or just. We should not send forth from this House crude and unworkable legislation, and I feel satisfied that this Bill will not meet the just demands and requirements of the people. They are asking for bread, and some hon. gentlemen propose to give them a stone. Some hon. gentlemen have argued as though a conspiracy to limit facilities for transportation, to lessen production, or to increase prices, is unlawful; but that is not what this Bill says. It goes further, and says there must be an unlawful combination to do this. By introducing this word "unlawful," you simply revert to the common law, as has been alleged on this side of the House and has not been denied on the other side. The hon. member for East Grey presses for the adoption of this Bill, and he says that in the United States they have resorted to the common law, and that they found that effective.

Mr. SPROULE. No, they passed a Bill only last week in Illinois to change the common law.

Mr. COLTER. It was alleged that they had resorted to the common law and to other legislation as well, and that those attempts had proven unsuccessful, although the parties making them had spent large sums of money and had exposed themselves to risk in prosecuting these cases. We have to consider that if we put a defective Bill on the Statute-book, and anyone tries to bring these combinesters to book and fails, he may be sued for malicious prosecution and mulcted in heavy damages, and we have a right to see that defective legislation does not pass this House, but that the people will have something to protect them effectively from the abuses of which they complain. This Bill simply continues that which exists at present. It does not make it an offence to conspire to restrain production, transportation or manufacture, and to enhance prices in that way; but these things, to constitute offences, must be done unlawfully. The whole effective power of this Bill is the common law, and it has been said by many that the common law is obselete, and to some extent uncertain; therefore we are only giving to the people something uncertain, and only likely to end in disastrous failure. I am heartily in accord with the principle of such a measure as the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) and other hon. gentlemen opposite seem to desire; but I do not wish any apology for such a measure, as this Bill is. Therefore it is highly desirable that this House should see that the measure which is passed this Session shall be such as will meet the requirements of the people. This House will be made ridiculous if this measure should be tested and proved abortive; it would be simply trifling with the people; and they might become discouraged and say: It is of no use to resist these combinations in the hope of preventing the attacks they are making on our rights and liberties. We do not wish to discourage the people, and therefore I submit that this Bill should receive much more careful consideration than it has received. It has been said that certain combinesters were very much interested in thwarting this Bill. That is true; they were interested in thwarting it in its original shape; they were afraid it might be made effective; but now we find them perfectly at their ease; they do not fear this Bill, and they have no particular reason to fear it; and if this measure is passed these gentlemen will go on and do in the future as they have been doing in the past. Now, the remarks of the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) were very pertinent indeed. There must be something to make this Bill definite if we wish to make it effective. It is not definite. By the Bill these combinations are unlawful only by reason of the common law, and as the common law has proved unavailing to meet those evils in the past, it must necessarily prove unavailing under this Bill also. I have no faith whatever in the moral effect such a Bill is likely to produce. If these people are making money by oppressing the mass of the people, moral considerations will not influence them in the slightest; we require something stronger. They are not going to be frightened by any brave words we may use; we must have something to punish their offences definitely and thoroughly. I am not disposed to keep the House any longer in discussing this Bill. I simply wish to put my views on record, in order that if the Bill should not realise the anticipations which hon. gentlemen on the other side expect from it, they will feel that they themselves are to blame, and the country will hold them responsible for such legislation.

Mr. GUILLET. I am a little surprised at the remarks of the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Colter). That hon. gentleman attended the Banking and Commerce Committee on the occasion when large deputations, representing the combines appeared before it to oppose this Bill. They came to oppose, not the old Bill, but the present Bill, and they opposed it because they know it will deal effectively with the combines and punish such associations severely. These deputations went away very much disappointed, and loudly declaring their indignation. A great deal of ridicule has been endeavored to be thrown upon the Bill because it provides that unlawful acts should be punished. It was well explained in the Banking and Commerce Committee by the highest legal authority in this country that the word "unlawful" was necessary in order to prevent the law being applied to proper and innocent restraints of trade. The Minister of Justice explained that under this Bill unless the word "unlawful" were inserted, if a railway company withdrew one train service a day, while still giving ample accommodation by running two trains a day, it would be liable to the penalty simply because it withdrew that unnecessary train. In the same way, under this section with regard to limiting or lessening the manufacture or production, if the word unlawful were not inserted, any individual producer or importer or vessel owner or grain dealer would be liable to the penalty if he chose to close down his industry or refrained from selling his grain, or laid up his vessel. The manufacturer or the individual has a right to do what he likes with his own industry and capital. It is only when combinations exist that they become unlawful in the common law, and, therefore, that word must be inserted in order to prevent individuals, in the exercise of their right, from being punished.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. ELLIS. It is objectionable to make a difference between a corporation and an individual. It it true a fine is imposed on a corporation much larger than on the individual, but I think the Act ought to be so drawn that if a private member of a corporation conspires, he should be treated in the same way as any other individual. The result of this section will be that a rich corporation can carry on its business without being subject to imprisonment like the individual. It would be easy to alter the Bill so as to make the individual responsible, and not make our legislation so much in favor of corporations at the expense of the individuals.

Mr. WALLACE. The penalty of the individual is not more than $1,000 and not less than $200, while that of a corporation is not exceeding $10,000, and not less than $1,000. The penalty for a corporation is much higher, but there could not be imprisonment in its case as in the case of an individual.

Mr. EDGAR. In order that the mover of this Bill may have an opportunity of showing whether he really desires to lessen the punishment for the crime of conspiracy, I will move an amendment to increase the term of imprisonment to a term not exceeding seven years, and it is not now exceeding two years in the Act. That would leave still the minimum of $200, which the Minister of Justice seems to think a restrictive provision. I move to insert the word "seven" in place of "two," in line 26. That will bring the penalty back to what it is in the Revised Statutes.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There is no desire on the part of those who are in favor of the Bill to reduce the penalties of the law; but, as I said before, the enactment which prescribes an imprisonment of seven years for conspiracy would never, by any judge, be applied to conspiracy merely in restraint of trade. If an hon. gentleman can put a case in which a person who has offended against the provisions of this Bill would be sentenced to seven years in the penitentiary, I would very much like to hear it. In an offence of this kind the offender would be liable to a heavy pecuniary penalty, with the alternative of imprisonment for a period not exceeding two years.

On section 4,

Mr. COLTER. I would suggest that it might be advisable to have these actions brought before the Superior Court Judges in Ontario instead of before the County Court Judges, in order to have the law uniform.

Mr. WALLACE. I beg to move that the following be added as section 5:—

The foregoing provisions of this Act shall not apply to the exercise of any handicraft or the performance of labor, but, subject to such exception, it shall be construed as if section 22 of the Trades Unions Act had not been enacted.

Mr. TISDALE. This Bill has been before the Banking and Commerce Committee, and I think we ought not now to amend it. This amendment may create a good deal of discussion, and the promoter should know his own mind. Many amendments were suggested in the Committee, and several members of that Committee are not here now when we have an important clause proposed, which may involve a great deal of discussion.

Mr. WALLACE. I think every member of the Banking and Commerce Committee is a member of this House and should be here if required. I believe this is a clause which will meet with no objection from any member of the House.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not see any necessity for this clause. The Bill refers to any combination unlawfully formed to do certain things. As I understand, the Trades Unions may lawfully do certain things, and this only deals with what is unlawful.

Mr. EDGAR. It is impossible, when a complicated section like this is read from the Chair, to understand it at once, without looking into the law.

Mr. TISDALE. If this amendment is pressed, I shall move that the Committee rise and report, unless we are able to see the application of it. It is true, as the mover says, that the other members of the Committee might have been here, but this is a new proposal by the promoter of the Bill, and I cannot judge sufficiently of the effect of it with out having an opportunity of looking into the law. It may be quite a proper provision, but I am unable to say whether it is or not.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not agree with my hon. friend that there is any obligation to pass the Bill simply as it comes from a Committee. The Committee on Banking and Commerce is a very important one, but there is nothing to prevent any member from making suggestions to improve the Bill in Committee of the Whole, nor should any member absent himself under the impression that the Bill may not be amended. This is not a new provision, because the last clause of the hon. gentleman's Bill, as it was first introduced, was as follows:—

"Nothing in this Act contained shall be construed to modify or affect in any manner chapter 131 of the Revised Statutes respecting Trades Unions."

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It was necessary in that Bill.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Quite so, but the hon. member for York (Mr. Wallace) is here making it perfectly plain that the provisions we are enacting shall not interfere with the right of workingmen to agree among themselves as to the wages for their labor and handicraft, and that the Bill shall otherwise be simply declaratory of the common law, and shall not be interfered with by that particular statute.

Bill reported.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Harbors and Rivers, Nova Scotia..... $7,650

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Digby, $1,650. What is this vote for?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is a revote of the last amount, and is to pay contractors. This was a pier or a block that was built at the end, and the pier itself was improved.

Harbors and Rivers, New Brunswick..... $2,692 60

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Here is an item of $355.60 for the River St. John, River Des Chutes to Woodstock and above Grand Falls; also River Tobique; what is this for?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is to pay the balance of the expense incurred during the year for the improvement of the channel on the River St. John, by removing boulders, snags and other obstructions between the River Des Chutes and Fredericton, and above Grand Falls. The first half is for navigation, and the remainder for removing obstructions. Wing dams have also been built and tow paths repaired.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). There is no navigation on that part of the river now. A few years ago tow boats and steamers ran to Grand Falls, but now the river is bridged at that point. Three miles above Grand Falls is the American boundary. Has the American Government contributed anything?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No.

Mr. SKINNER. I think the money has been expended for the purpose of improving the river for driving logs. I am not very familiar with it, but by reason of some professional engagements I have been enabled to learn that improvements were required to be made for the purpose of handling lumber, and such improvements have been made.

Mr. GILLMOR. Does my hon. friend suppose that every one that has to drive logs down a stream comes to the Dominion Parliament to get aid for clearing up the stream? Do we vote money here to enable a man who cuts and hauls logs on the upper St. John, to clear the boulders out of the way so that he can drive his logs down the river? No such thing as that was ever heard of anywhere. No money has been voted to clear the boulders out of the St. Croix River, nor any other river in New Brunswick. The hon. gentleman certainly cannot advocate such a use of public money as that.

Mr. SKINNER. The hon. gentleman need not turn to me about advocating it. I am not advocating the expenditure of this money that has been made upon the river. So far as that matter is concerned, the River St. John drains the whole range of country for several hundred miles, and it is to the interest of the general public, and of the lumbermen, that they should be enabled to send their logs down the river.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If this money was expended for the purpose of improving the river for the convenience of lumbermen, I most decidedly object.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have no doubt that one object was to improve the river for the convenience of those having logs to drive down the river.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). About 20 years ago steamers went up as far as Woodstock, but since the railway has been built, these boats have all left the river. Occasionally a boat comes as far as Woodstock, but above Woodstock they do not go, because there is a bridge at that place and there is another bridge at Andover. There is no such thing as a navigation of the river. There used to be tow boats on the river, but they also are practically out of use. I do not see myself what navigation there can be. I believe that between 20 and 40 years ago a small steamer ran up above Grand Falls. I do not know what works at Edmundston could be used for except for driving logs. On the Tobique River there is no navigation. I cannot understand for what purpose these sums are to be expended.

Mr. HALE. The money is intended for the improvement of the tow path on the Tobique River. Tow boats are still used there and also above Edmundston, and they have been used up to last fall on the Little Madawaska. This expenditure is not for the purpose of driving logs, but for the improvement of the tow path and clearing the channel at these two points.

Mr. MITCHELL. I desire to bring before the Minister a matter in connection with my own county. I approve of the vote now under consideration for the improvement of rivers, and the experience of the member for Carleton (Mr. Hale) is quite in accordance with my own experience in regard to towpaths on my own river. I made a modest request three years ago, when I was in better favor with the Government than I am to-day, and when I overlooked a great many of their enormous iniquities and voted for them fairly well, that they should appropriate an amount for an improvement of a wharf at Neguac. I have asked the Minister of Public Works for this improvement, which is among his own compatriots, and it is for improving the facilities for landing from a little freight and passenger steamer that runs from Chatham to that place. I have asked for $1,200 for this work. I have been told by the Minister that he would place the matter before Council and endeavor to have it passed. I am afraid hon. gentlemen opposite wish members to vote for them whether they are right or wrong, and especially when they are wrong. I have been very moderate in my demands and have been four years pressing this little honest claim for an improvement to be carried out among a colony of Acadians, who were among the first settlers in the country. I notice that all these items are for expenditures to be made in constituencies represented either by members of the Government or their supporters. The first vote, River St. John, is in the constituency of the Minister of Inland Revenue; that for Point du Chesne, Shediac, is in the county of Westmoreland, whose representative supports the Government; that at Grand Anse is in the county of the hon. member for Gloucester, and that at Belliveau village is also in the county of the hon. member for Westmoreland. I am satisfied that if this matter rested with the Minister of Public Works himself, the amount would be granted. I am told, however, there is an obstacle in the Cabinet, who is put there to stop grants, the Minister of Finance. I may remind him, however, that the Session is not yet closed, and that I want this little vote. It does not amount to much and it would be a just act, and I can get certificates from numbers of members on both sides of the House that the condition of the landing in that locality should be improved. The aid should be given if only to show that the Government approve of the few votes I have given them. If members are only to get money when they vote for the Government, I can say that I have in former times, as well as recently, voted with them, and some pretty tough votes they have been. I trust the amount I have asked will be placed in the Supplementary Estimates. It is not an amount of millions for a Chignecto Ship Canal, or for a Short Line Railway, or for steamship subsidies, but it has what those proposals have not, the element of justice, and I hope the sum will be placed in the Estimates.

General repairs and improvements in the Maritime Provinces..... $3,350

Mr. FLYNN. I call to the notice of the Minister of Public Works the condition of the breakwater at L'Ardoise, in the county of Richmond. The upper part of the breakwater has been carried away, and the work is now in a dangerous condition for the fishermen. I trust the remaining portion of the work will be either removed or the whole structure will be rebuilt.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The note here says that the damage caused by the storm can be repaired for five or perhaps eight thousand dollars.

Mr. FLYNN. Has the hon. gentleman any idea of repairing the pier?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot say now. I will take a note of what the hon. gentleman said, and I will consult the chief engineer and lay the matter before my colleagues.

Mr. LAURIER. Does this vote complete the work on the Rivière Ste Anne?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; that completes the work. I may explain that we have not been in the habit of putting these small items in the Supplementary Estimates, because the custom was that when there was a vote amongst a large number of items, provided the whole amount was not exceeded, the Auditor General allowed the special vote to be supplemented out of the others; but now he objects to that, and I do not say he is wrong. He says that each vote for each work should not be exceeded, and if we have to exceed it, then we must ask for a special vote.

Mr. LAURIER. Are these works constructed by contract or days' labor?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. As a rule, they are by contract.

Harbors and Rivers, Ontario..... $10,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Where is Tolsma Bay, and what is this revote of $2,700 required for?

Mr. DAWSON. If I may be allowed to explain. It is a little bay between the Lesser Manitoulin and the Greater Manitoulin, and it is the route by which vessels come in from the Great Lake to the north channel of Lake Huron. A little wharf has been put there at which vessels can lie over during night in stormy weather, and that is what this money is for.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I spoke to the hon. Minister this Session, and I also wrote to him, with reference to the winding ground on the River Sydenham at Dresden, and the hon. gentleman said that it was under consideration and that he would submit an estimate to his colleagues; I do not see any in these Estimates.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. These are for the current year, I will not forget to lay this matter before my colleagues.

Mr. LISTER. The hon. gentleman had some work done at Point Edward last year. Will he say whether it was completed or not?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not think it is completed. If it is not completed, we will complete it.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not see anything in this vote for the improvement of the navigation of the Trent waters. I would like to know from the Minister of Public Works if we may expect anything in that direction this year.

Mr. MITCHELL.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I must ask the hon. gentleman to wait until the Supplementary Estimates come down for the year commencing the 1st of July.

Mr. MULOCK. But these Estimates will not apply to this year. If we have to wait to the 1st of July it means that nothing will be done this year.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It does not mean that. Sometimes, if the work is a pressing one, we may undertake it before the 1st of July, taking care that the contractors will wait for their pay until we have the amount of money at our disposal.

Mr. MULOCK. Does not the Government consider the Trent Canal works very pressing?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have no doubt they may be; but when the Minister of Railways is in his place he will tell you.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who is the Minister of Railways?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The First Minister.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Am I to understand that the hon. gentleman intends to rebuild the pier at Portsmouth Harbor?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

New dredging plant..... $5,000

Mr. MITCHELL. I would call the Minister's attention to the fact that for a number of years—it occurred chiefly while I was a supporter of the Government—the hon. Minister sent down a dredge annually to the Miramichi River to deepen the channel from 18 to 22 feet at the opening of the bar. I am informed by gentlemen interested in the port that the whole trade of the port has changed in the last few years. Instead of the business being done in wooden vessels drawing 16 or 17 feet of water, they have largely disappeared and it is done by steamers drawing from 20 to 22 feet. The channel has been cleared, largely by the offorts of the Minister of Public Works, for which I thank him very much, but there is inside the river what is known as Gordon's Flats, a point which these large vessels find a great difficulty in passing. A dredge, such as we had there before, would remove the difficulty in a fortnight or a month, and give these steamers the deep water necessary. Gentlemen connected with the trade have informed me that in making the charters for their vessels, they have to load them free on board. The effect of that is this, that the steamers coming there are so large that they have partially to load at Chatham and send down a portion of their cargo in barges. Our people in the spruce trade, in order to compete in Europe with the supplies from the Baltic, have to work very close to avoid all possible expense, and a very small outlay of the time of a dredge would save them a great deal. I understand that the hon. Minister is sending a dredge down to the Restigouche River, and if the hon. gentleman would allow her to give a fortnight or four weeks of her time to complete the work I call his attention to, it would be a great boon to the people.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. What depth?

Mr. MITCHELL. The same depth as the bar, an addition of two or three feet to the present depth. The deepening of the bar of the Miramichi has been maintained, it remains as it had been left by the dredge, and it has been a great boon to that part of the country, and a great saving to producers of lumber. I trust that the hon. gentleman will send a dredge there as early as possible during the summer to spend two or three weeks or as long as it is necessary to do that very small work.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will make a note of it, and attend to it.

Bridges, Ottawa City, over the river Ottawa, the slides, the Rideau Canal and approaches thereto.. $3,600

Mr. LISTER. Why is this charge made for building bridges in the city of Ottawa ?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. These bridges were taken over by the Government, under an arrangement with the city of Ottawa some years ago, which was laid before the House, and they have to be kept in repair.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not see why we should do this work any more than we should build bridges in London over the River Thames. The people there have their own bridges to keep up, and I do not see why the Government should do any more for the city of Ottawa than for any other city in the Dominion. It seems to me monstrous that a large portion of the municipal expenses of Ottawa should be charged to the country.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). The slides are artificial channels made by the Government for the purpose of facilitating the descent of timber, and the Government derives very large tolls from those slides.

Mr. MITCHELL. There is this to be said, that the River Ottawa is the dividing line between the two Provinces, and we have always had to sustain the bridge over that river, and I presume, as regards it, that the Government are quite right in doing what they are doing.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I take it that this vote has nothing to do with the Suspension Bridge between the two provinces, but that the bridges over the Ottawa referred to are those which span the small streamlets in the neighborhood of the slides.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; this includes expenditure on the Suspension Bridge between Ottawa and Hull. We had a special vote, as the hon. gentleman will remember, of $35,000 I think, for the rebuilding of that bridge, and we have asked for a revote of that amount, because the contract could not be executed at the time we took the vote; but in the meantime we have to keep up the present structure, perhaps even more carefully than before, as we do not like to have any accident whilst we are rebuilding the bridge.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this for that bridge ?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is, and also for the bridge over the slides, and the bridges over the canal.

Mr. ELLIS. It seems specially objectionable that we should maintain what are practically streets in the city of Ottawa. We cannot get a bridge for a harbor like St. John without contributing an equal amount, and yet the Government here pay the expense of keeping up what are practically highways in the city of Ottawa, and the other day the mayor of the city and members of the Council called on the hon. gentleman, and asked him to build a street to the Experimental Farm. Unless one raises his voice in protest against such things, they will go on increasing with complex power.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I have not heard any reason why we should give this. In no other part of the Dominion is Dominion money expended for local improvements.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There was an agreement made some years ago between the Government and the municipal authorities by which these works were to be taken under the charge of the Government, and the bridges, as well as Wellington Street, were to be kept up by the Government. The reason was that we have very large property here which does not contribute a single cent to the city, and the city could not make up the deficiency in the revenue and keep up these streets and bridges at their own expense. They and the Government thought, and Parliament assented to it, that there should be compensation of some kind in order to do our share in that respect. Instead of paying taxes, which the Government do not pay, we undertook to keep up those bridges and the street opposite our buildings, from the bridges down to Bank Street.

Mr. MITCHELL. There is another reason. This being the capital of the country, we should certainly do a little extra for it; but the capital generally sends two good supporters of the Ministry, and I really think this vote ought to pass.

Mr. McMULLEN. I must enter my protest against the extravagant expenditure in the city of Ottawa. On the street in front of these buildings we spent last summer over $7,000. We keep up all the roads around Parliament at the expense of the Dominion. The hon. gentleman says the grounds are exempt from taxes. I would like to know if Parliament Hill and Major's Hill do not virtually form a park for the citizens of Ottawa. The city has no park except this which we supply them. Major's Hill Park costs $10,000 a year, and in addition to that we pay rent for the water used in and around the Parliament buildings. We also pay an enormous amount for gas to the city, and in one way or the other we contribute an enormous amount which goes to the benefit of the city. I have no doubt that the deputation which waited on the Minister of Public Works and pressed very strongly on him the necessity of the Government building a road to the Experimental Farm, will, backed by the Minister of Agriculture, have their request gratified, and next year a vote will be submitted to Parliament to build a macadamised highway to the Experimental Farm for the benefit of the citizens of Ottawa. As the hon. member for St. John has said they cannot get a small grant for public improvements down there, unless they grant a corresponding amount themselves, and in some cases they cannot get a grant at all, while any amount of money is spent by this Govesnment in local improvements in the city of Ottawa. No doubt, however, this is done as a mark of gratitude on the part of the Government for the kindness and consideration of the people of Ottawa in returning two supporters of the administration to this House.

Mr. PERLEY. I am quite surprised to hear hon. gentlemen complain of the advantages the people of Ottawa derive from these improvements. If those hon. gentlemen were here all the time, I assure you, Sir, they would hear complaints from the taxpayers of Ottawa that the Government did not contribute their share to the city expenses. It must be remembered, that these Estimates do not cover anything new, but are similar to those which have been granted for years, and that the amount put down in the Estimates is simply the contribution of the Government as its proportion of the expenses, which was arranged for years ago. The bridge over the Ottawa River is Government property and not municipal. The bridge over the slides is Government property. The bridges over the canal are Government property, and so is Major's Hill Park; and there is no reason why the citizens of Ottawa should pay for all these improvements, while no taxes are paid by the Government for what they own in the city. It is ungenerous in hon. members to complain of this expense. So far as the public park is concerned, it is visited more by visitors than by citizens; still the citizens, I hope, appreciate the advantages they get from it. With regard to the Experimental Farm, the city of Ottawa should not be required to make a very expensive highway out to that Government property. It is only just that the Government should contribute towards making a good road out to the Government farm. The Government owns the farm, and certainly it is incumbent upon the Government to do that. The officials of the Government do not contribute to the taxes of the city of Ottawa. They are exempt from taxation, but they get all the benefit of the municipal taxation.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Do they not pay water rates?

Mr. PERLEY. They pay taxes on real estate, but they pay no income tax.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is the Experimental Farm within the city limits of Ottawa? Why should the Government build a road to the Experimental Farm? The city of Ottawa is not losing any taxes by that farm, because it is not within its limits. The Government has been doing a great deal for the city of Ottawa, and still they have the brass to ask the country to build a road out to the farm. I suppose that, next, the county of Carleton will say that we should construct certain country roads through that county, and, no doubt, in view of the agitated condition of that county at the present moment, if the First Minister should have to run there again at the next election, they will have all the roads they want.

Mr. PERLEY. I do not think the question of the Model Farm is included in this vote at all.

Mr. LISTER. I think the Minister of Agriculture should have stated the intention of the Government in this matter.

Mr. CARLING. I have not seen any item in the Estimates for this purpose, though I have seen something written about it in the newspapers.

The CHAIRMAN. It is all out of order.

Mr. LISTER. In reference to the public park, I do not know that members of Parliament avail themselves of it very much; and in reference to the bridges, I doubt whether, being under the jurisdiction of the municipality of Ottawa, they belong to the Government. However, if there is an agreement between the Government and the city that they are to be kept up, I suppose they have to be kept up. I think this city of Ottawa is pretty greedy. If it were not for the Parliament buildings being here, if it were not that Ottawa is the Capital of the Dominion, I think it would still be the village of Bytown. It is the fact of its being the Capital of the Dominion which brings people here, and causes large expenditures to be made here, and I think the city of Ottawa is a little exacting as far as the Government is concerned. The corporation are constantly asking for the construction of buildings and streets, and the expenditures for keeping them in repair, and now it is said that they are going to ask for the building of this road to the Model Farm.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It is quite natural that the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Perley) should be gratified at any expenditure made in this city. We have discussed similar items in regard to expenditures in or near this city every year, but no change whatever has been made. The only way to test public opinion on the matter, I think, is to do what I propose to do on Concurrence, which is to move an amendment to these votes. The expenditure for the sidewalk in front of the new building was, I think, a proper one, because it was in front of our own building, but that is a very different matter from the expenditure on the Major's Hill Park and on other localities which have been criticised. I shall take the opinion of the House on Concurrence.

Surveys and Inspections $5,000

Mr. JONES (Halifax). What is this for?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is to cover the balance of the year, and to have enough to go on with to the end of the current year.

Gratuity to the widow of the late William Turner, seaman on steamer Newfield, drowned while landing coal at Cape Race..... ..... $264

Mr. FOSTER. I move that this item be dropped.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has this been paid to the widow?

Mr. PERLEY. Yes; it was paid out of unforeseen expenses.

Construction of lighthouses, &c $8,000

Mr. TUPPER. This is in consequence of the vote for lighthouses being short by this amount.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There are no new lighthouses?

Mr. TUPPER. No.

Mr. LISTER. I suppose, in the new Estimates, the hon. gentleman will have some provision for the new range lights in the County of Lambton?

Mr. TUPPER. I submitted the list of those the other day.

Steam communication with the Magdalen Islands. $3,158 34

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How is that expense incurred?

Mr. FOSTER. That is done under contract, and the amount last year was not sufficient to cover it.

Mr. KENNY. I desire to say that the service as it is presently performed is exceedingly unsatisfactory to the residents of the Magdalen Islands. The boat, the Beaver, is a very inefficient one and too small. The equipment on board is very limited and inferior. It happened last fall that in order to get a late mail to the Magdalen Islands, it was necessary to send a steamer from Halifax. I believe the contract will expire during the year, and I hope that, when it is renewed, care will be taken to supply a better steamer.

Mr. FOSTER. The contract ends at the close of navigation of this year. Fraser & Haliday have the contract. I have heard a good many complaints about it, and will take steps to see that a better service is provided.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. An additional vote of $3,158 is a very large excess of the original vote of $7,800.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) How is the subsidy payable?

Mr. FOSTER. So much a trip, I think. The subsidy paid here is $11,000. She makes weekly trips. The service is between Georgetown, Souris, the Magdalen Islands and Gaspé.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. A definite vote was taken in the Estimates in the current year of $7,800 for steam communication, and he has not clearly explained how $3,158 more can be needed.

Mr. FOSTER. She has already been paid more, and that part has been paid, I think, by the Post Office Department.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I agree with the remarks of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) with regard to the boat. She is actually unsafe. This large subsidy is really more than the boat is worth.

Mr. FOSTER. The contract is running and must be carried out.

Mr. ROBERTSON. If the hon. gentleman will take a portion of his subsidy and give it to the service that I pointed out to him the other night, between King's County and Pictou, it would be very much more useful.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) According to statements made in the press, she is not kept in as efficient a condition as she ought to be.

Mr. FOSTER. She has passed inspection and must be safe.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I fancy she is not kept as the contract requires she should be. I think some inspection should be made by some officer in reference to the complaints that are made.

Mr. FOSTER. I will make a note of it.

To provide for the payment to Mr. James King..... $2,960

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This is an item to which, I think, the attention of the Committee ought to be called. Here we find a claim of 14 years standing, adjudicated on by a Special Committee of our House, and recommended. It does appear that this kind of thing is extremely inexpedient. Of all bodies, with all respect to my hon. friends who may have sat upon that Committee, I believe Special Committees of this House are the very worst to whom to refer claims against the Government. Whatever the merits of this case may be, I doubt extremely the expediency of settling any of those claims through the medium of Special Committees of our House. The matter ought to be opposed in the interest of the Government itself. If these things are entertained at all, they should be settled by reference to the Judge of the Exchequer Court, or some judge of the Supreme Court.

Mr. FOSTER. I quite agree with my hon. friend. However, this Committee did sit on this claim, examined it and reported in favor of it, and it was thought best to pay it.

Indian Affairs, Ontario and Quebec, to cover expenses incurred by Inspector Dingman while acting as one of the three Commissioners appointed to investigate the Township of Dundee land matter $100

Mr. McMULLEN. I see this man Dingman got $1,877.50 last year. He is down as Inspector of Licenses in the Indian Department with a salary of $1,739. Why is it thought necessary to grant this increase ?

Mr. DEWDNEY. It is not an increase, but it is to reimburse money paid out by Mr. Dingman during the time the commission sat. I have the details of the account here, which was submitted by Mr. Dingman, and which have been paid.

Mr. McMULLEN. He is Inspector of Indian Agencies, is he not ?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. When men are employed by the country and paid respectable salaries, I cannot understand why they are allowed to charge extra when they are called upon to do any other little work. Here we have an individual from the Indian Department an engineer, who was asked to survey the location of the Printing Bureau, and he has charged extra for locating that building, simply because it is out of his department.

Mr. DEWDNEY. This is no increase in salary, but it is to cover amounts paid out by Mr. Dingman. I can give the hon. gentleman the items if necessary.

Mr. SCRIVER. That is not necessary. I was present when the Commission sat, and I know that Mr. Dingman has made no charge. I have seen his account and I can testify to its correctness. While not saying anything about the principle, with respect to this particular matter I may say that Mr. Dingman while engaged on the Commission sat for long hours, late in the evening and early in the morning, and was entitled to some extra compensation.

Mr. McMULLEN. He got $240 in addition to his salary of $1,600.

North-West Mounted Police..... $80,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the cause of this very large demand ?

Mr. FOSTER. This is necessary to meet an accumulation of arrearages which have been gathering up year after year, the expenditure sometimes not covering the amount for th year. Having looked over the matter this year and found that these arrearages existed, I thought it would be better to bring down a vote for the whole amount and wipe them off.

Mr. McMULLEN. The accounts of the North-West Mounted Police were brought down by resolution before the Public Accounts Committee. There has not been an opportunity for investigating those accounts, but I have gone through them. I find that in 1887, from 14th March to the 7th September, James O'Brien, of Montreal, supplied 5,163 pairs of riding breeches at $5.56 per pair, being a total of $28,428. It is strange that with a force of only a thousand men they should require in one year that number of breeches, a quantity equivalent to 5 pairs per man. Altogether Mr. O'Brien drew $32,313. Messrs. Dowall & Miller, of Halifax, supplied 2,164 serge coats, at a cost of $7,436. R. J. Devlin, of Ottawa, supplied 87 fur coats, at $21.50 each, total $1,870. Were tenders asked for these articles ? James Hall & Co., of Brockville, supplied 1,783 pairs of gauntlets, at $2,151. T. Code, of Perth, supplied 7,024 pairs of socks, at 30 cents per pair. F. Cole, of Berlin, supplied 9,074 pairs, costing $2,945. I also notice we have paid for moccasins and boots $12,640. An inspection of the accounts leads to the conclusion that the most gross extravagance has prevailed in the management of the force. In almost every item we see charges of a ridiculous character. For instance, 70 cents is charged per gallon for coal oil in several places. Robert Watson, of Ottawa, who inspected 5,160 riding breeches, spent 80½ days in doing so, and charged $10 a day, or $815. The department also purchased a large quantity of duck pants, for I find an item, M. Shorey, 1,500 duck pants, at 90 cents per pair. Singular to say, the first delivery was made on 21st September, which was after the hot weather. Then, 2,000 blacking brushes were bought from the Napanee Brush Co. Millyard & Harris, of London, furnished gold braid and regimental trimmings, &c., for the sergeants' clothes, at a cost of $1,429. There was a person employed in Regina by Mr. McCulla, on 23rd November to inspect 162 pairs of boots. He charged $10 a dozen for inspecting them, or $135; and for three sample shoes he charged $5 a pair; and altogether he drew $150 for inspecting 162 pairs of boots. Any hon. gentleman who will go to the Public Accounts Committee room can examine the accounts, and he will find the statements I have made to be absolutely accurate. There are quite a number of other items which I could give to the House. I find that the hon. gentleman bought 75 fur coats at $22 each, and that he also bought a large quantity of fur coats in New York at $25 each. It appears very strange to me that he should have sent an agent to New York to buy fur coats when I fancy they could have bought them as cheap if not cheaper in the North-West. I have examined these accounts carefully and they show that the grossest extravagance exists in the management of the North-West Mounted Police. It appears to me that from the price paid for everything that it is a perfect godsend to the people in the North-West that there is a Mounted Police for they get enormous prices for everything they supply. I find that in some places 8 cents a pound is paid for flour. 12½ cents per pound for salt, 14 cents per pound for sugar and in one case $8.90 was paid for 100 feet of lumber. All these items show that the grossest extravagance is connected with the North-West Mounted Police. It is quite clear that every man in Ontario who has got a factory and who calls on the First Minister or some one else and makes a demand, gets his contract. For those thousand policemen in the North-West last year they bought 7,000 pairs of socks and over 5,000 pairs of riding breeches. I would like to have some explanation from the Minister as to how it came that he gave such an enormous order at this enormous price of $5.67 a pair, to James O'Brien, of Montreal. He also paid $10 a day amounting to something like $815 to a man for the inspection of those articles when they were bought.

Mr. MACDOWALL. With regard to the item the hon. gentleman mentioned——

Mr. McMULLEN. We want an explanation from the Minister.

Mr. MACDOWALL. I have not been in the House, but I heard part of what the hon. gentleman said. I may tell the hon. gentleman that flour is naturally very expensive in the North-West, there are a great many posts that are very far removed from the line of railway, and whatever the flour costs at the place where it is bought the freight has to be added on to it. Let us take the Mounted Police station at Victoria for instance. Flour has to be brought from Winnipeg across the country to Edmonton, and then to Victoria and Saddle Lake at a very great expense. I believe that $8 per bag of 100 lbs. is not too dear for flour in the remote districts of the North-West, and I think that the farmers in that section of the country would think it is too cheap because everything they require in order to produce this flour is so very dear that they cannot produce it at the same price as you can down here. I think that it will be admitted that seven pair of socks a year is not too much for a man to wear out, if we expect the men to keep themselves clean and decent. This question of flour is a live one in the North-West. I do not think the price paid is too high.

Mr. MITCHELL. If I understand the matter rightly the hon. gentleman who has just sat down is very anxious to get a railway built to Prince Albert and one of the strongest arguments which I have heard him use and which has enlisted my sympathies in favor of his scheme is that the farmers after raising their wheat have no market for it and cannot utilise it because of the absence of means of transport. If flour is so expensive and difficult to obtain in that section of the country it appears to me that a railway to Prince Albert, the residence of my hon. friend, will depress the market as the farmers will not be able to get such high prices as they do now, and that in consequence it will be an injury to the North-West. I regret that my hon. friend has brought forward that argument about the expense of the flour and the difficulty of getting it. I understood that the county my hon. friend represents is the most fertile in the North-West and that all you have to do is to tickle the ground and the wheat grows in such abundance that the farmers have to stop growing it as they cannot get a market for it. If the statement the hon. gentleman now makes is true I cannot see any necessity for that railroad which he interested me so much in. I cannot understand the incongruity of the hon. gentleman's position.

Mr. MACDOWALL. I feel that it is necessary to give a few words of reply to my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) who has so justly appreciated the difficulties that the farmers labor under for want of a railway. I suppose that he knows the North-West, and that he is aware that Victoria and the points I have mentioned are at least 500 miles away from Prince Albert. This being the case I presume it will be a sufficient answer to my hon. friend that my remarks do not alter the question of a railway to Prince Albert?

Mr. DAVIN. I may give one fact to my hon. friend from Wellington (Mr. McMullen) about flour. Flour and other provisions are called for by tender, and I happen to know that a prominent firm in Regina is supplying the Mounted Police at the present time at a loss of about $1 a barrel. The head of that firm took the contract when the flour was high, and flour has fallen and the consequence is he has lost.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear! Explain?

Mr. DAVIN. Well, that is my first bull. I should have explained that he took the contract when flour was low and flour has risen, and the consequence is he is losing on every bag of flour he supplies to the police.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Flour is intended to rise.

Mr. DAVIN. I know it is when you put yeast in it.

Mr. McMULLEN. Will the hon. Minister explain how he came to buy such an enormous lot of riding pants?

Mr. DAVIN. If I may be allowed. This merchant took the contract when flour was at a certain rate. Now he has to pay higher for it; he has to pay a larger price for the flour he supplies the police now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think that now the difficult question of flour may be said to be solved by the joint labors of the members of Assiniboia and we should have this interesting question of these riding inexpressibles disposed of. It does appear to me, if my hon. friend has stated the account correctly, that very considerable extravagance has been committed, and that some explanation should be given.

Mr. FOSTER. This is an item which I think my hon. friend will agree with me did not warrant the bringing up of the questions referred to by the hon. member for North Wellington. The only explanation which would have been thought necessary was to show the reason for this extra sum being voted. I should have thought these explanations would have been in order when the main vote was under consideration; consequently, I have not got them here; but I will find out about the breeches, and will bring down all the information that can be got.

Mr. HAGGART. In reference to the items the hon. gentleman has brought before the House, he has hardly been fair. If he had quoted the price of flour delivered to the Mounted Police at Qu'Appelle, he would find that it can be got much cheaper there than at any other part of the Dominion; but he takes a few barrels of flour delivered at a distant point, 500 miles from the railway, and speaks as if the flour delivered to the Mounted Police cost $16 a barrel. He knows perfectly well that the flour delivered along the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway is cheaper than in any other part of the Dominion. As to the socks, they are supplied by tender. With regard to the breeches, it does seem to me an extraordinary quantity to be used by the Mounted Police, and I think he is probably in error in that case as he was in the others.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) In the account rendered by James Brown we find charged 3,046 pairs of riding breeches at $16,935.

Mr. HAGGART. They may go into stock and be used the next year?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) On the 20th of June, 987 pairs of riding breeches are charged; again 407 pairs, and on the 26th of August 673 pairs, making 2,067, at a cost of $11,492. If you add these figures together you will find that my hon. friend has stated them pretty accurately. There is no use of turning the discussion off on flour; that is an insignificant item, we are not troubled about that; but on the face of these accounts there appears to be a great deal of indefensible extravagance, and the item should not be passed without some explanation of it.

Mr. DEWDNEY. This gives me an opportunity of making an explanation which I promised to the hon. member for Kent in reference to flour. He asked a question in regard to 19,000 sacks of flour which he found charged in the Public Accounts at a rate which would bring the average price up to a high figure. For this flour there were 21 places of delivery. At Duck Lake, which is pretty far north, there were 678 sacks at an average of $2.82 per sack; at Battleford, 937 sacks at $3.03; at the Blood Reservation, near Fort McLeod, $2.49; at Victoria, $3 50; at Edmonton, $3; at Birtle, near the railway, $1.85; at Moose Mountain, $2.30; at the Assiniboine Reserve, about twenty miles from the railway, $1.90; at the File Hills, $2.05; at the Touchwood Hills, $2.25; at Onion Lake, one of the most inaccessible points, $4.10; at Peace Hills, 150 miles north of Calgary, $3.70, and so on.

Mr. McMULLEN. Tell us about the breeches.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think the Minister who has charge of the Mounted Police will be able to explain that matter. There are two different kinds of breeches, cloth breeches and cord breeches, and every man gets his two or three pairs every year; and this charge may be for two seasons' issue.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). This item of James McCullough for inspecting boots requires explanation—inspecting 162 pairs, $135, and inspecting three samples, $15. This is copied from the original account to the Committee on Public Accounts.

Mr. MACDOWALL. I think there cannot be very much discussion over the breeches, because the Mounted Police force, although by courtesy called a thousand, are something more than a thousand. You must remember that this force is composed of mounted, not dismounted police, and anyone who is very much in the saddle must know that breeches do not last forever. If you take the number of pairs of breeches charged for and divide them amongst the number of men, you will find that there would be only one pair of breeches per man for three months; and if you consider that the men are frequently in the saddle, I do not think there can be very much complaint, if the breeches are cheap.

Mr. BOWELL. You will find the explanation of this item is simply this, that they lay in stock clothing as they do in the Militia Department.

Mr. MULOCK. A bad precedent.

Mr. BOWELL. It is absolutely necessary, as we have a large number of men constantly on duty, that you should have a supply on which to be able to draw when necessary. When the Minister under whose charge the Mounted Police are is here he will explain all about this item.

Mr. FOSTER. We will allow this item to stand.

500 copies of Parliamentary Companion at $2 each.. $1,000

Mr. FOSTER. It has been customary for the publisher to receive a vote, and this year he went upon that assumption and incurred the cost of putting the work in type, as he had not been notified that another practice from the usual one would be followed. We considered it only fair to give him the usual vote.

100 copies Vol. 4 of Jugements du Conseil Souverain, $3 each $800 00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is a work published by the Quebec Government. It is very presentable as an exchange for works of foreign governments and libraries.

Mr. LAURIER. It is a most valuable work from a historical point of view.

To aid in the publication of 6th Vol. of Le Dictionnaire généalogique des Familles Françaises.

Mr. FOSTER. I will drop this vote. It will be found in the Supplementary Estimates for next year, and the volume will not be published until the year commences.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think this is a most valuable work, prepared by the late deputy of the Department of Agriculture and Statistics.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. By one of the officers.

Mr. MITCHELL. I got an amount of information many years ago in relation to that work which astonished me, and as a matter of caution to English-speaking residents of the Dominion, it ought to make us pause and think what the end of this country is going to be. That work contains the statistics of the completed French families, which is a matter of the deepest interest to the future of the country. One of the most learned men I have met who was a visitor here during the time of the Trent affair, as he was interested very largely in statistical matters, I introduced to Mr. Taché, then of the Department of Agriculture, and he got a lot of information from him as to the statistics of French families. He came to dine with me afterwards—it was between Christmas and New Year's—and he gave me a lot of information which he had derived from the book published by the officer of Mr. Taché, which made me consider that it was a most valuable publication. He said that I would be surprised to learn what the proportion was of the French Canadian completed families as compared with other nations, and that the conversation he had had with Mr. Taché had tended to elevate the French Canadians above anything he had thought of before. He said, I have been a war reporter during the Franco-German war, and I have visited almost every country in Europe, but the information I have received to-day shows me that there is no race like the French Canadians as a reproductive race. The average family in France is two, in Ireland five.

Mr. DAVIN. We sometimes go thirteen.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am speaking of the average. England and Scotland average 4½, the United States not over 4, Russia about 4, Norway and Sweden about 5, and so on. He enumerated every race on the continent of Europe, but, in regard to the French Canadian race, he said the average was 10.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Only 10? There must be some mistake.

Mr. MITCHELL. I say it is to the credit of that race that this is the fact, whatever the cause of it is.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MITCHELL. It may be a subject of laughter for some hon. gentlemen, but it is a very serious matter for us, the English-speaking people of this country, when we only produce an average of four, and the average of the French families is ten. What is the natural result? Where will we be in fifty years? They will have driven us out, unless we marry French women; I, therefore, think that there is not enough put in the Estimates for a sufficient number of copies of this book. I recommend that the Minister should put a sufficient sum in the Estimates to supply at least one copy to all the English-speaking members of this House.

Gratuity to W. H. Griffin, late Deputy Postmaster General $5,000

Mr. McDONALD (Victoria). It appears that Mr. Griffin has retired from the service with the very good pension of $2,240. It is true that he has been in the service for a long time, but for a considerable portion of that time he received a salary of $3,800—$3,200 as Deputy Minister, and $600 extra. I think this requires some explanation as to how it is that Mr. Griffin is to receive this extra amount of $5,000. I have been a member of this House for two years, and I have had occasion to visit that department, but I never saw Mr. Griffin to my knowledge, or, if I did, I had very little business with him. It was the secretary of the department, who is the present deputy, who was doing all the work, though Mr. Griffin was drawing the salary. I think this is one of the votes in regard to which the House should be very careful before committing itself to such an expenditure. When some other gentleman is retiring, he will expect $5,000 or some other sum as a gratuity, and I think, in the interest of the House as well as in the interest of the Government, it would be well to strike out this vote. I think it is a very bad precedent to set.

Mr. HAGGART. Mr. Griffin was superannuated on the 1st of July, 1888. He was then 76 years of age, and he entered the service in 1831, so that he had served over 57 years. I have been very often in that department when Mr. Griffin was deputy, and I never knew him to be absent from his post. Latterly he was very old, and perhaps was not as capable of performing his duties as he had been, and consequently they were performed by the secretary of the department. Mr. Griffin was appointed secretary of the department in April, 1851, when it was handed over by the Imperial authorities to the Canadian authorities.

Mr. McMULLEN. At what salary?

Mr. HAGGART. He then received $2,000 a year. That increased in 1855 to $2,400, as long as he occupied that position. In June, 1857, under the Civil Service Act, he was appointed Deputy Postmaster General. At Confederation, he was appointed Deputy Postmaster General of the Dominion at the same salary. For some years before Confederation, he was receiving $600 a year, in addition to his salary, as a member of the Board of Audit. That ceased at Confederation. In 1878, he was appointed chairman of the Civil Service Board, at a salary of $400. This ceased in 1882, when the present Civil Service Act came into force. The Civil Service Act provides that the minimum salary of a Deputy Minister shall be $3,200 and the maximum $4,000. Mr. Griffin's salary never exceeded $3,200, notwithstanding his long service. When Mr. Meredith was superannuated, his allowance was calculated on the average of $3,200 with the addition of $400 as chairman of the Civil Service Board, and he received $2,520 a year as a retiring allowance, while Mr. Griffin, notwithstanding his long service, has only $2,240. In most of the other departments, the deputy receives the maximum salary of $4,000 a year, notably in the Inland Revenue and the Customs Department. Under these circumstances, considering the small comparative amount which Mr. Griffin had received, the Government thought it proper to recommend the House to make a gift to him of $5,000.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I agree with the hon. member who brought this question up (Mr. McDonald). I admit that Mr. Griffin was a valuable officer, that for many years and on many occasions, I always found him at his post, but he was fairly remunerated for his services during the time he was there, and I think this proposition to give him $5,000 on his retirement, is the introduction of a principle which may be found to be very dangerous in the future. If under some especial circumstances the Government were called upon to deal with a public officer, we might not have taken exception to it. But if, as in this case, without any recommendation than his further services, for which he was fairly remunerated, the Government took the responsibility of paying this $5,000, I do not see how they can avoid having applications from other deputy heads when the time comes for them to retire. They have laid down the principle that an officer who has been there a long time, when he retires, has a certain claim upon the Government beyond his superannuation allowance. We saw the other day that a public servant in Prince Edward Island who had been in the service for 30 years, and had contributed to the superannuation fund, was dismissed by the Minister of Customs without any retiring allowance or superannuation. I think you are dealing with another civil servant in a different manner, and under circumstances which do not justify it. The greatest objection I take, is the precedent that is going to be established. I protest against this new departure; it is a dangerous one for future Governments, no matter of whom they may be composed.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the granting of this money is establishing a bad precedent. We sometimes distinguish between men. A few years ago, when Mr. Patrick left this House, after being in the service for 51 years, this House refused to vote him anything, although a great many thought he was well entitled to it. The man for whom we are now asked to vote $5,000 has been in the service 57 years, and during that time he must have drawn close upon $125,000 from the Treasury of Canada. He has been paid, I think, a fairly good salary during that whole time. Men in other lines of life have to take the risks and losses of business, and many of them, on arriving at the same age, have very little to fall back upon. There also seems to be a disposition at the present time to add to the number of years, for the purpose of making a larger superannuation allowance. This is a growing evil, and it is high time we put a stop to it.

Mr. MULOCK. I quite agree with the remarks of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). The Postmaster General gives the long service of Mr. Griffin as a reason for granting him a bonus in addition to his retiring allowance. Now, if you are to retire a man 20 or 30 years earlier than you have done in this case, when he has a good many years of his life left, then there might be some reason for giving him a bonus. But in this particular case you have paid him his full salary as deputy head until the date of his retirement; now, you are paying him the full superannuation allowance, and in addition to that you are granting him a bonus which, according to the table of annuities, must exceed anything that he could be allowed were you to retire him on the basis of the highest salary he was ever receiving. The Postmaster General appears to justify this vote on the ground that at some period during his servi e, this officer has been in receipt of some special salary. Am I right?

Mr. HAGGART. Partly.

Mr. MULOCK. Is there any other reason why he should be treated exceptionally? He is retired on the basis of the salary attached to that office. You are now taking the case out of the general rule and giving him the bonus in addition to his regular superannuation. I understood the Postmaster General to base it on the fact that at a certain period of his life, once before Confederation, he had for a short time enjoyed some special positions. Are these the only reasons the Postmaster General can give?

Mr. HAGGART. He was not superannuated, he did not get his superannuation allowance on $400 and $600. There is another reason. There was an arrangement made with him, and a special re-arrangement of the offices, by which two salaries were saved to the country on his retirement, one of $2,800, and one at $2,400.

Mr. MULOCK. This officer before Confederation enjoyed some special advantage worth to him $600; that lapsed. Subsequently for three of four years, he was on the Board of Civil Examiners at $400; but at no period of his life did he ever draw these two special sums of $600 and $400 in addition to his regular salary.

Mr. HAGGART. The whole three were current at the same time.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister did not say so before? I think he is mistaken on that point, one lapsed before the other took place.

Mr. HAGGART. In 1867, and for some years prior, he had $600 a year, and in 1878 he had $400.

Mr. MULOCK. When did this $600 lapse?

Mr. HAGGART. In 1867, and the $400 began in 1878, and ended in 1882.

Mr. MULOCK. So what I judged to be the case is correct, that at no period in his life did he enjoy these two extra sums and the regular salary attached to his office at the same time. Now, are we to understand that whenever during the lifetime of an officer of the Government, we choose to give him some special sum of money, that that, at a remote period of time, is to form a basis for a bonus?—because that is the principle involved. If you look through the Public Accounts you will find that we are constantly taking advantage of the services of an officer and giving him some special fee for some special service. But that is presented to us as a temporary affair, and in due time the special service drops and the fee attached to the special service drops. Are we to understand that at the expiration of his services we are to look back to some period of his life when he had a special fee, and to make that the basis of superannuation? It has been laid down in this House as a fixed principle that we shall not recognise obligations of this character existing prior to Confederation. He was not an officer of many of the confederating Provinces which will be taxed to pay this amount. He was at best an officer of Upper and Lower Canada. I cannot assent to the doctrine of the Postmaster General that special services, however valuable, entitle him to a bonus. For 12 years he did not enjoy the amount referred to. For the short period of 4 years he was entitled to $400 a year, and for that sum it is now proposed to pay $5,000. Mr. Griffin is 78 years old at least now, and according to the tables of annuities his expectation of life cannot be more than 3, 4 or 5 years. I am sorry the Postmaster General should have inaugurated his régime in this manner. No doubt he had done it from his tender heart, but I am bound to warn him that if he yields to such demands many similar demands will be made on the public treasury.

Mr. HAGGART. The arrangement was made before I became Postmaster General. I am informed that it was made on account of this officer's long and valuable services during fifty-seven years, and although he might have demanded a higher salary than he received, he never asked for a larger salary. I suppose if he had pressed his claim he might have received $4,000 a year, and although he was one of the best servants of the Government he received only the minimum of his class.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. gentleman is not quite speaking by the book when he says a deputy head receives $4,000.

Mr. HAGGART. The deputy heads of Inland Revenue and Customs each receive $4,000 a year.

Mr. LAURIER. I would be the last man in the world to treat ungenerously an old and faithful servant, but there are also some principles of justice which cannot be lost sight of. Mr. Griffin was a most valuable servant, but everyone must admit that for his services he received ample compensation. We all desire that the officers of the Government shall be paid liberally, and they are paid liberally. No doubt Mr. Griffin gave faithful service, for which he was well paid, and he now has a pension for the rest of his life of $2,240 a year. Surely that should be sufficient, and there can be no reason to justify this House in being more generous in this instance than in other instances, and if that door is left open, claims will come in, and if that precedent is adopted no end of demands will be made.

Mr. HAGGART. Under these circumstances I ask that this item be allowed to stand.

To indemnify the St. Catharines Milling and Lumber Company for costs in the suit of The Queen vs. The Company $10,000

Mr. McMULLEN. Full information with details of the account should be furnished in connection with this item. It has also been stated that the St. Catharines Milling and Lumber Company have made a demand on the Government for damages. This was an important case between the Ontario Government and the Dominion. The Dominion Government, in the interest of some of its friends, defended the case on behalf of the St. Catharines Milling Company. After being heard in our Canadian courts the case was taken over to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council and the decision was given. The result is that we are called upon to pay a large sum for law costs.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This amount is to pay the balance of the costs incurred in the suit. A claim for damages has been presented, but I am not prepared to ask a vote at this Session. The matter is forming the subject of enquiry, but it has not advanced sufficiently far to enable me to say whether any part of the claim can be properly entertained or not.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). What were the total costs?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. About $16,000, which include $5,000 paid to counsel in England.

Mr. COLTER. Has the Minister any detailed statement of the costs?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. They have been taxed as between solicitor and client in the Supreme Court here and in the High Court of Justice in Ontario.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Who were the counsel engaged?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Several counsel were engaged, and the hon. gentleman knows some of them. Mr. McCarthy's firm acted for the St. Catharines Milling and Lumber Company, with other eminent counsel in England; and Mr. Blake's firm acted on behalf of Ontario, and Mr. Mowat as well.

Mr. LAURIER. Mr. Blake was not paid by Canada.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No; nor was Mr. McCarthy. If the hon. gentleman will refer to the Public Accounts of Ontario, he will find information in detail as to some of the counsel employed. I have given him information as to our own counsel. I may refer him to the accounts here as to the other counsel engaged in the case. When the item was under discussion last year, I remember the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) calling my attention to a striking discrepancy in the payments which were made in this suit by the Ontario Government as compared with those which were paid by the Dominion Government, and I stated to the hon. gentleman that I was convinced he was mistaken if he supposed that the amounts that had been charged in the Public Accounts up to that time were payment in full on the side of Ontario. If the hon. gentleman will look at the Ontario Public Accounts for 1888, he will find a list of 15 or 16 gentlemen, several of them professional gentlemen, and the services for which they charged in that year alone amounted to upwards of $20,000.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would ask the Minister who was the counsel in this case?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I have already stated who were the counsel.

Mr. MITCHELL. I did not catch what you said.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I stated the case, as far as the St Catharines Milling Company is concerned, was in the hands of Mr. McCarthy's firm.

Mr. MITCHELL. Is it Mr. McCarthy, the member?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The member for Simcoe. Mr. Ferguson was also employed, together with the counsel in England usually employed by the Government.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not know whether the amount is too much or not, but I do think it is an infringement of the Independence of Parliament Act to have a gentleman occupying so prominent a position as Mr. McCarthy occupies with the Government of the day, and a representative in this House, receiving fees out of the public funds of this country for services performed, I presume in the public interest, for there is no other justification for the money being voted by this Parliament. I saw at a very early period of the Session a very extraordinary motion placed on the notice paper in relation to Dr. Robertson, a gentleman on this side of the House, for having performed a service in the cause of humanity, and for which he received the very trifling sum of $13 or $14 from the Mariner's Fund. That motion asked that Dr. Robertson should be disqualified from sitting in this House because of this, and if that was a good ground for making that motion I do think that the sum of $16,000 taxed for Mr. McCarthy and his firm is a good ground for having a charge of disqualification against him. I do not propose to make any motion in the matter, but I propose to call public attention to the impropriety of a gentleman occupying a seat in this House receiving fees from the Administration for services performed.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Without discussing the policy of that course at present, I may ask the hon. gentleman to correct himself as to one or two of the details of it. The sum paid to Mr. McCarthy's firm was by no means $16,000. The hon. gentleman probably did not hear me when I said that of that sum $5,000 was paid in England alone, besides disbursements to other counsel and necessary disbursements connected with printing which were very heavy. Mr. McCarthy was not employed nor was his firm employed by the Government. A lease, of what was claimed to be Indian lands, was given to the St. Catharines Milling and Lumber Company and the Ontario Government claiming that the lease was void sought to restrain them. It became a question of the ownership not only of the tract of land which was under lease, but of an enormous tract otherwise in the Province of Ontario. The question was simply whether the Government would indemnify their lessees for the expenses of that suit or let the lessees retire and then contest a similar suit with the Ontario Government. The former course was preferred. The conduct of the litigation has been from first to last entirely in the hands of the St. Catharines Milling and Lumber Company. They chose their own counsel; the Government had nothing to do with the employment or choice of counsel or with the instruction given to counsel, and so far as I know they never gave any intimation to the St. Catharines Milling and Lumber Company, even, that they would be responsible to make good any loss otherwise than for the mere cost of litigation. That is all I know of the history of the case. It was well under way and under appeal before I took office, and the Government had assumed the costs.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would just say that I think in future it would be much better for the Government if they would conduct their own lawsuits and conduct them in their own name under their own direction and their own responsibility for the course they might pursue. In the case of Mr. McCarthy I do not think it was right for the Government to go on with that suit when a member of Parliament was engaged in the case and likely to derive fees from it, which this are to come out of the public treasury if the case was if successful. I do think it was wrong for them to go on with that suit, and I hope that we shall not see the like occurrence again. Whether the receiving of this money is sufficient to disqualify Mr. McCarthy I do not know and I do not care, for I would be sorry to see Mr. McCarthy lose his seat in this House, but I do think that it is an improper thing for the Government, to practically subsidise—for that is what it means—any gentlemen who support them in this House and who receive from the public treasury money which the policy of the Legislature says is an improper proceeding.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Why, if these costs were incurred by and in the name of the St. Catharines Milling Company and they alone, should there be any understanding from the Government that they were to be reimbursed?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I did not say that there was not any understanding that they were to be reimbursed as to costs; I said that there was no understanding that they would be recompensed as to damages. They were to carry on the suit, and if they had withdrawn from the suit and given up their lease the Government certainly would not have agreed to indemnify them—I mean as to damages; but the Government at an early stage of the case, considering that their title was involved in a great tract of land otherwise than under lease, did agree to indemnify them as to costs.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Then the remarks of the hon. member for Northumberland are more than borne out. Although not technically; practically there has been a violation of the Independence of Parliament Act.

Mr. CAMPBELL Are we to understand that the St. Catharines Milling and Lumber Company did not pay any of the costs at all. Did they pay any portion of the costs?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I presume not.

Mr. McMULLEN. Did I understand the Minister to say that the Ontario Government payed $21,000 costs. Was that over and above the amount taxed against the Dominion?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It was not over and above the costs taxed against the Dominion. They were for various disbursements as the case went forward. Some part will be included in the costs payable by the Dominion—if any are—and some part not.

Mr. McMULLEN. They taxed all their costs against the Dominion; at least a very large proportion of them.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. They are not all taxable.

Mr. McMULLEN. How much is it that are not taxed against the Dominion?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not know.

Mr. McMULLEN. I stated the amount, and I think that if the hon. gentleman will turn up the facts he will find my statements about correct.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The amount which the hon. gentleman stated last year was something like two or three thousand dollars. The details to which I referred just now are sums paid since the hon. gentleman discussed the question; for instance, $1,800 for Mr. Mowat's expenses to England to argue the case, and he went over to argue it after our discussion last year.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Does $5,000 include all the counsel's fees paid in England?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No; the $5,000 was paid to the English counsel and solicitors.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like to know what position the St. Catharines Milling Company have assumed towards the Dominion? Besides this vote of $10,000, I am credibly informed that a very large claim is being preferred by that company for damages.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I explained that a large claim had been preferred. No part of it so far has been recognised; it is under investigation still; there will be no vote asked for it this Session, and so far as I know there will be no vote asked at all.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman thinks, then, that we are not legally liable.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We are clearly not.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In that case I suppose we may accept the assurance of the hon. gentleman that nothing at any rate will be done without the authority of Parliament. It would be excessively objectionable if any sum were handed over to this company without full discussion in this House.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I may have been hasty in saying that there is no legal liability. My impression is at present, from the investigation I have given to the matter, that we are not legally bound to pay any sum; but whether legally bound or not, there will be no payment made without the authority of Parliament being taken.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is time the litigation between the Province of Ontario and this Dominion should cease. We have had it going on now for ten years. Every little incident by which the Dominion Government could annoy and badger the Ontario Government has been taken advantage of to hamper that Government in its local affairs. They commenced with the Mercer Escheats case, which the Ontario Government fought successfully; then we had the license case, which this Government had to pay the expenses of. We had one contest after another until this case came up, in which the Government shielded themselves behind the St. Catharines Milling Company, and the country has to pay all the costs. Last year in going over the items, we found that we spent over $80,000 in law costs in one way or other. It is earnestly to be hoped, since we have reached a conclusion in this case, that this interference in the local affairs of the Province of Ontario will be stopped. A large amount of money has been thrown away, just because of the spleen of this Government; there was nothing to be gained by the course they took, but because they gave some of their friends timber leases in that section of the country, they felt bound to keep them in possession of them. I think the past history of these contests with the Province of Ontario, has at least taught the Government of this Dominion that they have met a person in the Premier of Ontario who is able to hold his own; in every one of these cases he has fought and received the endorsation of the courts. I am quite satisfied that if hon. gentlemen opposite had to pay the costs out of their own pockets, they would not be so ready to rush into litigation of this kind. I am glad, however, to see that the case has ended in a manner which has left Ontario in possession of her rights and has added one more laurel to the many of that belong to the Premier of the Province.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the hon. gentleman will not be thanked by his friends for mentioning some of the cases he did. In regard to the Mercer Escheats case, I think he forgets that it was undertaken by Mr. Fournier under the Mackenzie Government, and the present Government had to follow it up until the case was ended.

Mr. MACDOWALL. I take a different view from the hon. member for North Wellington on these questions. I think the course the Government has taken has been one which is likely to preserve the independence of the Local Legislatures, by referring all disputed cases to an independent court. It has always been the boast of Canada that our judges are independent men, appointed for their attainments. In the same way the Privy Council is thoroughly independent of the Dominion and Local Legislatures; and when any question is in dispute between a Province and the Dominion, the fairest way for both is to have it decided by these independent judges. Besides, if the hon. member looks into the facts, he will find that the Dominion has gained about half a million dollars, and the Province of Ontario has undertaken to support the Indians in that country. Both in justice and in experience the Dominion has gained.

Mr. MULOCK. I am not aware the Government consider that they achieved a triumph in this case. In fact, the vote under consideration shows that they did not, because the costs do not generally fall on the successful party.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There were no costs imposed.

Mr. MULOCK. I understand a portion of this money is to indemnify the Milling Company for its costs. The Minister of Justice says that the Dominion Government, as a sort of surety, became liable to pay these costs. It is clear to my mind that had the plaintiffs, the Government of Ontario, not made good their claim, and obtained a perpetual injunction restraining this company from cutting timber, the property of the Province, we would not have had this claim in the Public Accounts. The decision was adverse to the contention of the St. Catharines Milling Company, and therefore to the contention of the Government who were their sureties in this case. I conclude from that, the decision has been against the Dominion. Every reasonably minded mind would so conclude, although the hon. member for Saskatchewan says otherwise, and I am afraid this country will find it unfortunate that in this, as in many other cases, the Dominion has had the worst of it. To come back to the remarks of the Minister of Justice who says the Government agreed to become liable for these costs —I presume to save the company harmless—it is upon the construction of that agreement that we become liable for the money. It that is the case, before we vote this money, the papers rendering us liable should be laid on the Table.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There are no papers so far as I know. I have never seen any. At an early stage in the litigation, I understand the St. Catharines Milling and Lumber Company, being served with process, came to the Minister of the Interior and asked him to defend the suit. He declined to do so, but told the representative of the company that the company would be obliged to go on and defend the suit as private suitors, but that, inasmuch as the Government was interested in the result, he would bear the cost of litigation. I am sure there is no bond. I do not know of any agreement in writing, or of any writing on the subject. The St. Catharines Milling and Lumber Company went on with the suit and incurred the costs. I do not think hon. gentlemen need feel at all uneasy about the result of the case as indicated by the mere circumstance that we have expenses to pay, because if they will look into the Public Accounts of Ontario they will find, not only thousands of dollars voted year by year, but the amount in the last year, ending 31st December, 1888, was upwards of $40,000 paid in costs, and that does not close the account. There is no use discussing as to what the decision in that case was, nor do I want, on the discussion of an item like this which has been incurred at the instance of one public department, to go into a controversy with the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. McMullen) or any other member, as to the merits of the litigation between the Province of Ontario and the Dominion. If we thought proper to do so, perhaps we could review with some satisfaction the result in the case before us, but I presume everybody knows what the effect of the judgment was. It was that while the property, which was the immediate subject of that suit, was decided not to belong to the Dominion of Canada, but to the Province of Ontario, the expenditure which the Dominion Government had been obliged to incur, as holders of that property, was held to be payable to the Dominion of Canada, by the Provincial Government, and the appeal to the Privy Council was besides amply justified by the fact that on an important question like that, involving thousands of miles of territory in the Dominion of Canada, valuable in the extreme, the Supreme Court of this country was al most equally divided as to where the right was.

Mr. WATSON. I was very much surprised to hear the argument used by the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. McDowall), who said it was a good thing for this Government to force a Province into a law suit, and a law suit which has cost the Province of Ontario over $30,000. I come from a Province that has had some trouble from the Dominion Government and am decidedly opposed to the Government forcing any Provincial case into the courts. It is a matter we should be thankful for in the Province of Manitoba that we had the courts to appeal to, and fortunately the courts were in our favor. But it is not simply the costs that are to be considered in these matters, but the feeling that is engendered between the Province and the Dominion Government, and any disturbance of that kind is injurious to the whole country.

Mr. MACDOWALL. As the hon. gentleman has alluded to me I would say that the Dominion Government is justified in putting its confidence in the judges, who, both sides of the House will agree, are men of honor and capacity, and I think any case brought before them will be properly decided.

Mr. WATSON. It is the Government I find fault with and not the judges.

Mr. MACDOWALL. You have to consider that the Government stands in the same light as an individual, and have to defend their rights in the same manner; and if two legislatures find they cannot agree, they cannot do better than refer their difficulties to the judges, who, everybody must admit, are independent and able men.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I wish to make a remark or two arising from the statements of the Minister of Justice in comparing the cost which Ontario had to pay with ours. In the first place this Government takes the property of Ontario.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Sold the property of Ontario, and then compels the people of Ontario to tax themselves $21,000 to maintain their rights in the court, and then takes the money contributed principally by the people of Ontario to fight against the rights of that Province.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman puts this as if it were a perfectly plain case, but he must remember that, out of five judges on the bench of Supreme Court, two —and those not the least in eminence—decided that the Dominion was right and the Province was wrong. When the case went to the Privy Council, the Province was sustained as to its proprietory rights, but not as to one of the results which is supposed to flow from that. Besides, this was a case in which, as trustees for the Indians, the Dominion Government were bound to stand up for their rights against any claimants, either the Province of Ontario or anyone else.

Mr. MULOCK. This particular question was known as a lismota long before the Government created the particular interest which they did; and, in this case, the Government, deliberately and of malice aforethought, leased this property to the St. Catharines Milling and Lumbering Company, after full warning that the Ontario Government claimed that they were entitled to the land. It the Dominion Government had desired to have the point of law settled, they had a very simple means of doing so. They could have had a special case submitted to the courts.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It would have cost just as much.

Mr. MULOCK. No; it would not have cost as much, and we would not have had the consequential claim with which we will have to deal before long. If the Dominion Government had wanted to have that matter settled, they could have had a special case submitted to the proper courts, but, not only did they lease this particular property, but they issued leases all over the disputed territory. In fact, it was made a matter of triumph on the part of the Premier. He announced that he was right on all constitutional questions, that he had spent a lifetime in learning constitutional law; and he awarded this disputed territory to his various camp followers without any valuable consideration. I think the amount charged was $5 a square mile, when the Ontario Government, if I remember rightly, was receiving $400 a square mile. This Government proceeded to waste that property, and now the Minister of Justice says that they were the trustees of the Indians, and that, to protect the helpless wards of the Government, they had to follow this property into the courts in order to discharge their duties as trustees. When did they wake up to their duties as trustees? How much did they get from this St. Catharines Milling Company for the lands of their wards? $5 an acre, I suppose?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No, there were dues and other things besides.

Mr. MULOCK. The amount they got was not one per cent. of the value.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman will not find anyone who knows the locality to agree with him.

Mr. MULOCK. The Ontario Government used to get 75 cents, which I think was afterwards raised to $1 a thousand feet for that timber.

Mr. MADILL. The Dominion Government got that, and these people had to build a mill besides.

Mr. MULOCK. Those are not the terms expressed. The Dominion Government leased that at $5 a square mile rental, but there is no comparison between the lease made by the Dominion Government and the ordinary leases of the Ontario Government.

Mr. MADILL. I disagree with the hon. gentleman.

Mr. MULOCK. We will meet again on this subject, and I advise the hon. gentleman to look at the terms of the lease and to see what the advertised terms are under which the Ontario Government sell their timber limits. I think he will find that there is no comparison between the two. The terms of these leases show that the Dominion Government have been guilty of the grossest extravagance, that these limits were not sold in an honest open way by public tender, but they are sold in a secret way to the favorites of the Government, to their camp followers, who are thus rewarded for political services, and unfortunately they get these leases of limits which are much more valuable than the amounts they pay for them. The Minister of Justice has to seek for something to justify the action of the Government by referring to the wards of the Government. It would have been better it the Government had conceived a correct idea of their duties in that regard many years before, but they had to find some excuse, they hunted around for an excuse for the unfortunate attitude they had assumed, and now they are trying to obtain this money to pay to the St. Catharines Milling Company on the ground that they had to defend the wards of the Government. The Minister of Justice told us that he did not know whether there was any bond or deed or anything in writing to bind the Government to pay these moneys. He said the St. Catherines Milling Company came to the Minister of the Interior. Well, the corporation did not come. Some individual must have come; and does the hon. gentleman mean to say that transactions of this magnitude, involving the rights of the Crown to a vast property, rights not only to this territory but to other territories throughout the Province, are to be determined by a desultory conversation between some member of a corporation and the Minister of the Interior, and that there is nothing of record to show us what action the Government proposed to take? Were the Government bound by these proceedings? When did the Government agree to be bound by the judgment in that case? When did the Government intervene? The Government intervened at some time, but when was it? I think it was when the case was before the Privy Council. It was not in the interlocutory motion before the Chancellor of Ontario. The Dominion Government did not appear when the case was argued at the trial. When did they agree to have the country bound by the result, because until they intervened, everything was between the private suitor and the Province of Ontario? Surely it will not be pretended by the trustees of the Indians that they bound this country by some verbal communication, which no one in this House knows anything about, to pay the costs in a suit which turned out unsuccessfully for them, that they bound the country to abide by the decision in regard to miles of territory which were not involved in the suit, and yet not a minute of any kind was made to show the people that they did so agree. There was nothing to show the terms on which that suit was being conducted, nothing to show that we were to profit or lose by it, to be bound by it or not, and yet, when the decision is over, we are told that notwithstanding all that has happened, we are to pay some $10,000 more. Before this item is passed there ought to be laid upon the Table of this House every communication that has passed between the Government and the St. Catharines Milling Company, showing what position they took, and what obligations were entered into, and whether this suit was conducted as a test case as well as to protect the interests of the defendant. From the time it became a test case, then I admit that the Government were bound to pay the cost. But until it intervened and assumed the part of a suitor, the country is not responsible.

Mr. SPROULE. Both the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) and the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) endeavored to make a case against the Dominion Government because they contended for the rights of the Dominion, and they said that the Dominion Government was annoying the Provincial Government, that they were fighting everything. Now, I think these hon. gentlemen forget that the very system of which they complain, was carried out by their own friends from 1873 to 1878, that of giving leases in the disputed territory, which system was afterwards carried out by the succeeding Government. It was recognised by the Mackenzie Administration that the Dominion had a right to that timber, and to give leases; and if they gave leases, they were obliged to protect the rights of the leaseholders. Afterwards, the St. Catharines Milling Company becoming leaseholders from the Dominion, they were entitled to look to the Dominion for the protection of their rights, when these rights were disputed by the Province, the Dominion had to look after their rights. The contention is to-night that the present Government is responsible for the questions that have arisen in dispute between the two Governments, when in reality the present Government were only carrying out the system of leases adopted by their predecessors.

Mr. MULOCK. When were these leases made?

Mr. SPROULE. That is a matter of indifference; I know that leases were running in 1874, in 1875, and in 1876, and that some of them are in operation to-day.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I do not think the hon. gentleman is conversant with the facts to which he refers. If he will look at those leases he will see that the Dominion Government, and the Government of the Province, agreed that a certain line should be regarded as a conventional line, and the western boundary for the time being, until the real boundary was properly ascertained; and that all titles of leases and everything else west of that line should be granted by the Government of Canada, and all east of that line should be granted by the Province of Ontario. That principle was recognised by their predecessors in office, and the correspondence shows that both parties were of opinion that if the boundary proved to be further west, it would be the duty of Ontario to confirm any title that the Government of the Dominion might have issued prior to that period; and if the boundary was found to be located further east, it would be the duty of the Dominion to confirm any title that the Province of Ontario might have issued east of that conventional line. That understanding was entered into on the ground that the right to issue the titles of the property would be in the Government, within whose limits the property was situated. So that the doctrine of the purchase of an Indian title would give to the Government of the Dominion a title to the property, was an after thought, it is one that had possession of no one's mind prior to that period. That was well known by what happened in British Columbia. When the Government of which the present Premier was the head entered into negotiations with British Columbia to admit that Province into the Union, the Government assumed that the paramount interest of the Crown vested the title of that property in the Government of British Columbia, and not in the Indians, although the relation between the Indians and the Indian title in British Columbia was precisely the same as it was in Ontario and in every other Province in the Dominion; and yet the Government assumed at that time that the titles of the property of British Columbia that had not yet been surrendered by the Indians, was in the Crown and not in the Indians, and that the Government here, in obtaining surrender from the Indians, did not acquire any control over the property surrendered.

Mr. SPROULE. If they did not, why did they give leases for 20 years?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What leases does the hon. gentleman speak of?

Mr. SPROULE. The lease given by the Dominion Government.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The first leases were issued in 1871, for it devolved upon my predecessor, Mr. Laird, to carry out some of those leases. The hon. gentleman can get the necessary information that he asks for from his Prime Minister. The parties who obtained the leases required a certain time to cut timber, and the man who builds a mill expects to get timber limits sufficiently extensive to enable him to run his mill until it is worn out, or for a period of 20 years. The hon. gentleman would have no difficulty in finding out that fact from the Minister of the Interior, who is now sufficiently informed, no doubt, to give him the necessary information. I may say that the Government of Ontario are content with the settlement, so far as I understand. I hold in my hand the decision of the Privy Council. The question before the Privy Council was an appeal from the decision of the Supreme Court. The majority of that court held that the property belonged to the people of Ontario. The hon. gentleman, through the St. Catharines Milling Company, appealed, and that appeal was not granted, and all the Privy Council could do was to dismiss the appeal.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not propose to enter into the details of this case. The hon. member for North York

(Mr. Mulock) has intimated that we are to have another day upon this question, and therefore, as it is nearly 2 o'clock, I refrain from repelling his statement that deliberately regardless of the rights of the Province of Ontario and of the rights of the Indians, whom we are bound to protect, the Government, of malice aforethought, as he says, granted this lease to the St. Catharines Milling and Lumber Company. When the day which the hon. gentleman shall select arrives for the trial of this matter, I will bring the evidence and read it to him, and satisfy him that his statement is refuted. I have, however, to say that in the assertion he made, that this great territory was parcelled out among the camp followers of the Government, he is entirely mistaken. I think only two leases or licenses were given in this territory by the present Government, and the hon. gentleman will find when the statement is brought down that his observations as to the improper management of the territory are entirely baseless. As regards the content with which the Ontario Government regards the decision, I may say that I believe the Government of Canada is also equally content, and it is well that both should be so, as they cannot go further.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If my memory serves me, we had a list of about 50 licenses granted by the Government laid on the Table of the House.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Not in the disputed territory, I think.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. 50 or more in the disputed territory. Are we going to understand from the Minister of Justice that there are no papers, correspondence or documents or demands made by the collector or by any agent or legal firm in their behalf for indemnification?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Claims have been made from time to time.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. No correspondence with respect to these costs under discussion?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The costs were sent to the department for taxation, and they have been paid from time to time. I believe there is no correspondence with respect to the Government assuming these costs. The hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) who pressed that point was reminded that from the time this litigation commenced down to the present, the Government have distinctly assumed the cost, and amounts have been annually voted.

Mr. MULOCK. When a vote was taken my impression is that the First Minister stated that the department had entered into a certain agreement with the St. Catharines Milling and Lumber Company. Unless the Minister of his personal knowledge is prepared to state differently, I place my recollection against his uncertainty, and I say there is correspondence in which the Government said they had incurred some responsibility.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. From 1886 we have taken votes for this purpose, and it was on the definite ground that we incurred liability for costs.

Mr. MULOCK. When we are asked to pay $10,000 the documents which fix our liability should be placed on the Table.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I have no document whatever.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. gentleman has said there is a liability.

Mr. TAYLOR. The correspondence in this matter was before the Printing Committee—there was nothing but cheques.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I have no papers to produce. I have stated what has taken place. As regards my department, there is no agreement and no instructions from the Minister of Justice. In 1886, when asked to insert a vote in the Estimates, I inquired of the late Minister of Interior what had taken place with respect to this matter. I have already told the Committee just what he told me: that when a protest was served on the St. Catharines Milling Company they came and requested that he would undertake the defence of the suit. He declined to do so, but he told them that if they would go on and defend the suit, the Government would indemnify them as to the expenses.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister only speaks for his own department, he knows nothing of the Department of the Interior. Are we to understand that costs involving $20,000 or $30,000 are to be incurred on an unrecorded conversation between a stranger in the department and a member of the Government. This is surely an exceedingly careless way of doing business, and the Department of the Interior will not admit that such has occurred. I can hardly think that this was the case, loose as the Department of the Interior is. As I am satisfied there is sometimes some correspondence, I move that the Committee do now rise and report progress.

Motion negatived.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. My hon. friend is reasonable in his suggestion than an examination should be made for papers. It is more than probable that some remarks were made, as he has indicated, and my hon. friend's recollection is pretty good, and the Minister of Justice may not have been in the House at the time when this matter was brought up.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am stating the matter as it was stated to me by the Minister of the Interior who incurred the liability. It is impossible to say now that no correspondence exists, but I am morally certain that such does not exist. This matter does not, however, depend on the construction of any agreemeent, because for four years we have paid amounts and Parliament has voted the money. To say that we should now refrain from voting this sum (on any construction of writings), more than one-half of which has been directly incurred by the Dominion Government for counsel and solicitors in England, would be to ask us to put a refinement upon written papers with a dishonest result. If any such papers are found they shall be produced, and I shall ask my hon. colleague to make an inquiry into the matter.

To meet cost of litigated matters $4,114 26

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How do you come to ask for that vote?

Mr. TUPPER. It is to meet the taxed costs and disbursements in suits that have been instituted in connection with the seizures of vessels for the infraction of the fishery laws both in Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia. For instance, for the seizure of the D. J. Adams, $479.87; the I. M. Doughty, $1,367.41; the Warren M. Doughty, $45.67; the Behring's Sea seizures, $1,400; the Argonaut seizure, $184.08; court fees of judge in the case of schooner Argonaut, $19.47; and some other similar expenses.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think this ought to have been put in a different form, as nobody could see from this item what it referred to. There are several of my hon. friends who are specially conversant with these matters, and who would have made a point of being here if they knew exactly what this referred to. If it passes now it may involve a somewhat protracted discussion on Concurrence.

Mr. FOSTER. Let it pass now and it can be discussed on Concurrence.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Let it be understood that it will be discussed in Concurrence.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The Minister will bring down the bills I suppose?

Mr. TUPPER. I have no objection to bring down the taxed bills.

To pay moiety of expenses incurred in connection with the Survey of the River St. Lawrence $13,571.83

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this vote for the survey of the St. Lawrence to be a fixed vote?

Mr. FOSTER. No; it will take about two and a half years yet. It was done at the suggestion of the Boards of Trade and the British Government who pay half the expense.

Mr. WATSON. What is the nature of the supplies furnished to the half-breeds for which $6,000 is asked to recoup the Mounted Police?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Last spring representations were made in reference to the destitution among the half-breeds in Saskatchewan, Battleford and Prince Albert. The appeal was made at a time of the year when we could not send supplies ourselves, and the police were asked to give what assistance they could out of their own supplies. The supplies were mostly of flour and bacon.

Mr. WATSON. This is to be paid to the police stores and not to policemen outside of the regular stores?

Mr. DEWDNEY. This was issued from the police stores and it is to repay them for those supplies.

Mr. WATSON. The Government stores?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Mr. WATSON. I would say while on this vote that I see by the press that Gabriel Dumont is up in that district again calling meetings and urging the people to claim a compensation. I would like to ask the Minister if he has any information as regards that?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I have no official information. I know nothing as to what has occurred since Gabriel Dumont arrived there. I know nothing except what appeared in the papers, and I fancy that what we have seen in the papers is exaggerated.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I hope so.

Customs—Miscellaneous $9,443 82

Mr. BOWELL. Of this amount $6,500 is required to pay the costs incurred in the suits which were taken to the Supreme and other courts. The sum of $2,781.82 is to cover half the expense of maintaining the yacht Cruiser on the upper lakes during the last season, the other half being paid by the Fisheries Department; the yacht coasts principally along the shores of Lake Huron and Georgian Bay. Then, there is a sum of $162 to be paid as a gratuity to a young man named Ambrose, who while working in the bonded warehouse in Montreal met with a severe accident by which he was laid up some 90 days, and by which his foot was so badly injured that he had to have part of his heel taken off.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Have the Government been informed at all whether a duty will be charged on Canadian cars going into the United States, as reported?

Mr. BOWELL. No; the Government have no information of that kind. I judge from the reading of the report, that the regulation applies exclusively to cars taken into the United States for local use. It may possibly have arisen from the practice, which has prevailed for a number of years, of cars which have gone into the United States remaining there for a long time, and being used in local work. In this country the same thing happens, and some years ago I issued an order to stop it, but finding that it was mutual on both sides, the order was withdrawn. Whenever cars are imported into Canada by a company for exclusive use in the country, they have to pay the duty, and it is the same with cars passing into the United States.

Post Office expenses $63,600

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is a large item here of $63,000.

Mr. HAGGART. It was found that the car accommodation on the Canadian Pacific Railway was not sufficient, and by an arrangement between the late Postmaster General and the company the accommodation was increased one-half. That makes the sum nearly $85,000 a year to be paid to the company in addition to about $170,000 paid now.

Mr. WATSON. Under this item for postal service I wish to call the attention of the Minister to the unsufficiency of mail service by the Canadian Pacific Railway on what is known as the Glenborough Branch, a road running some 110 miles from Winnipeg. I am not objecting to the amount for Manitoba, but I am finding fault with the Government for not having seen fit to give another mail to the Glenborough Branch. I submit that when there is a railway service passing several towns, through a well settled country, to an important town like Glenborough, the hon. the Minister should be able to furnish a mail service three times a week, and give the people of that town an opportunity of answering correspondence within a reasonable time. As it is a person corresponding from Winnipeg with another in Glenborough cannot obtain a reply within eight days. There is not an hon. member who would criticise the Government for giving that efficient service.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Last Session we had a discussion with reference to a claim pending some time against the Canadian Pacific Railway for the use of some cars. There was a claim made by the Canadian Pacific Railway for hauling cars down to the Intercolonial Railway—the Onderdonk stock—which was paid. At that time, it was stated that there was a claim of $10,000 or $15,000 against the Canadian Pacific Railway which was not paid. Has that account been settled?

Mr. FOSTER. I will make a note of it and obtain the information.

For Militia expenses in connection with the Suppression of the Rebellion in the North West—Governor General's Warrant $50,000

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Amount required to meet expenses in connection with the rebellion in 1885, revote of part of lapsed balance of 30th September, 1888, $50,000; balance of vote on 30th June, 1888, $83,121.29; expended to 30th September, 1888, $1,757.94; leaving a balance on 30th September, 1888, lapsed on that date, of $81,363.35; expended 1st October, 1888, to 1st March, 1889, on authority of Governor General's Warrant, by Order in Council of 17th October, 1888, $26,566; probable amount required to pay claims up to 30th June, 1889, $23,500; estimate of amount required, $50,000. There may be further claims presented which are supplementary, amounting to about $15,000, but they are not included in the above statement.

Mr. MULOCK. Does that include the allowance for the York and Simcoe Battalion?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. This amount is to be taken out of this $50,000. We will have sufficient out of this amount for claims that we know of.

Mr. MULOCK. How much is to be paid those men?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I could not say now. I can give the hon. gentleman a copy of the claim sent in.

Mr. MULOCK. Has it been passed?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman knows that the First Minister said that the amount would be paid. There is no question at all about it.

Mr. MULOCK. What amount?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I have already said I have not got the claim, and, from memory, I could not tell the hon. gentleman; but it is very easily ascertained.

Mr. MULOCK. Has the amount of the claim been assented to by the Government?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The hon. gentleman was told by the First Minister that the claim which has been sent in by the battalion to the Government would be paid. It is impossible for me from memory to speak as to the figures, but I can bring down the amounts. I can only repeat what the Prime Minister has stated, that that amount shall be paid.

Mr. MULOCK. Of course that does not specify any amount at which the claim may be fixed, but simply means that the Government will pay what they deem right. I want to know what the amount will be. Perhaps the Minister will give me that statement to-morrow.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Yes; I said I would.

Mr. MULOCK. There is quite a difference between paying these men on the basis of 1885, and paying them four years after. It must be borne in mind that the First Minister was speaking of an uncertain amount. He did not say how much he was going to pay each man, and, as some of the men in Battleford were paid $15 apiece, some in Winnipeg $25 apiece and some in Toronto $8.15 apiece, there does not appear to be any fixed standard of pay.

Resolutions reported.

RAILWAY CONTRACTORS AND EMPLOYÉS.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Purcell) has asked me if I would bring to the attention of the Government the fact that he has a Bill on the Order Paper No. 53, which stands for a second reading, and that there is no chance of its being reached in the ordinary way during this Session. The Government have permitted two gentlemen to get their Bills placed on the Government Orders, and I would ask if they would allow the Bill of the hon. member for Glengarry to be placed on the Government Orders for consideration in the same way.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am sorry that the member for Glengarry (Mr. Purcell) has not had an opportunity of taking the sense of the House on the second reading of this Bill, but I hardly feel free to make the promise to place it on the Government Orders. I explained personally to the introducer of the Bill that, according to my humble opinion, it would not be one which we would have a right to pass. I admit the commendable motives which the hon. gentleman has to give every protection to the laborers on railways, but, as the Bill imposes civil liabilities on railway companies, it appears to me that this measure is beyond our competence, and for this reason, though it is a matter of public interest, I do not feel free to promise to put it on the Government Orders.

SEIZURE OF THE ADAMS.

Mr. MITCHELL. I will ask the hon. gentleman to give me an answer on that subject to-morrow. May I ask the Minister of Marine if he will bring down to-morrow the papers in connection with the Adams case? They are very short, and I should like them to be down to-morrow, as I have something to say on that subject.

Mr. TUPPER. I will bring them down when they are ready.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is a very unsatisfactory answer, and a very flippant one, and considering the importance of the subject——

Mr. TUPPER. I shall not bring them down before they are ready.

Mr. MITCHELL. I want to have them when they are ready.

Mr. TUPPER. They will not be brought down before.

Mr. MITCHELL. If that is the way the Minister conducts his business, he may find that he will not conduct it as readily as he thinks.

Mr. TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. MITCHELL. "Hear, hear"—Yes, the Session is not through yet.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 2:30 a.m. (Tuesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 23rd April, 1889.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 147) further to amend the Dominion Lands Act (from the Senate).—(Mr. Dewdney.)

FRENCH VERSION OF THE DEBATES.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee to the delay in printing the French version of the Debates. Instead of improving, matters are growing worse and worse. The English version has now reached the 1469th page, and the French version has not reached the 400th page yet, that is, it is more than 1000 pages behind the English version. Matters are much worse than they were four weeks ago, when we first complained. I would like to know what is the cause of this delay?

Mr. DESJARDINS. (Translation.) I will explain to my hon. friend that after representations had been made to the House respecting the delays which had been incurred in the printing of the French edition of the Debates, the Committee met and instructed the Chairman to write to the printer and require from him the reasons of the delay. After giving certain excuses, he concluded by saying that the temporary nature of the printing establishment did not admit of his proceeding faster than he was at present doing, because he had not sufficient type, but he hoped that in the next Session, the staff being complete in the new building, he would possess all that was necessary, and would be in a position to print off in accordance with the rules laid down by the Committee, that is to say, within the three days following the publication of the corrected English edition. My hon. friend knows that the translation is not made on the daily issue, but upon the corrected copy, which necessitates at least three or four days further delay before the translators can have the Debates; and the following three or four days are spent in the translating and printing off. This year the printer has declared it to be impossible, in the present state of the printing office, to fulfil the required conditions. At the present moment the printing is done with the type leased from the old office of McLean, Roger & Co. I am informed that next year the printer will have all the type necessary, and that the printing office will be so ordered as to meet all the demands upon it. But I must say that all possible diligence has been used by the Committee in order to obtain a more satisfactory state of affairs than the present one.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). The chairman's explanation exposes a most extraordinary state of things. We have expended some $300,000 on that Printing Bureau, and it appears that it is in such an inefficient state that it cannot do the printing of this House as it used to be done up to last year; and now we are told that, in order to have the French version of the Debates printed in time to be of some use to the members of the House and the public, it would be necessary to purchase some more printing material. There is one point to which I would call the attention of the chairman of the Committee. If the Printing Bureau has type in sufficient quantity to print the English version, I do not see why it cannot print the French version also. I can tell the House that the French version this year will be of no use whatever. It comes so late that the expenditure is a pure waste of money, and we shall not find a single individual who will refer to those French Debates. Newspapers cannot have them in time to make them of any use to their readers, and the general public do not read those debates; so that if they are of no use to the French newspapers, and of no use to anybody else, I do not see for what purpose they are to be printed. I like very much to have the French Debates, but I do not like to see a waste of money, and it is nothing more nor less. If we cannot have these Debates earlier, we had better dispense altogether with the French version.

Mr. DESJARDINS. (Translation). I think that the hon. member is laboring under a false impression. He is probably ignorant of the rule laid down in the matter of the publication of the Debates. The daily edition ought to contain all the speeches which have been delivered, and exactly as they have been delivered, whether in English or French; such has been the settled rule since the commencement. The corrected pages of the English version and of the French version should be bound up into a volume and preserved as a record. So that the reason why there are not more French speeches published in the daily editions is that that language is not so much used; in all other respects the two languages are subject to the same treatment, in accordance with the rules made by the committee and adopted by the House.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). That is not what I complain of. I take the last copy we have. We have now reached the 23rd of April, and the French version has only reached the 27th of February. I ask any member of this House, who will take the trouble to read the Debates when they are two months old? Nobody will take the trouble to consult them.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE—ENQUIRIES.

Mr. MITCHELL. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to call the attention of the acting leader of the Government to the request I made last evening for information from the Minister of Marine, to bring down papers in relation to the claim of the Messrs. Adams for the loss of their vessel. I received a reply from the Minister of Marine which to me seemed rather impertinent. It may be wrong to use a term of that kind in the House, and therefore I do not use it with regard to him, but were it outside, I would consider it an impertinent answer to a proper question for information which I have a right to get.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman cannot raise a debate on that point.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am not raising a debate. I am speaking now to a question of privilege. It is my privilege in this House, as representing my constituents, to ask for information to which they are entitled where their interests are involved. I asked for it in a civil manner and did not get a civil reply, and I now ask the acting leader of the House if he will bring down those papers, because I want them before we go into Supply.

Mr. TUPPER. I attempted to rise, when the hon. member for Northumberland interrupted me, and made the remarks he has made. To those remarks personally, I have nothing to say, but I desire to lay on the Table of the House, a return to an Order of the House of Commons, dated the 1st April, 1889, for copies of all papers in connection with the claim of the Messrs. Adams, for the loss of their vessel.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am very glad the young man has come to his senses.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I asked some time ago, for surveys or reports of the short line from Harvey to Moncton. When will those be brought down?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The leader of the Government is absent, but as soon as he comes in, I will enquire from him whether he has those papers, if any exist, and he will be able to answer my hon. friend.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Also any correspondence between the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway, with regard to that short line.

COPYRIGHT ACT AMENDMENT.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved third reading of Bill (No. 101) to amend the Copyright Act.

Mr. EDGAR. Before this Bill is read the third time, I have a few observations to make. I was, unfortunately, absent when it was read the second time and went through Committee, but I have read the Hansard report of the debate, and I am very glad to see the position the Minister of Justice took with reference to our constitutional right to enact legislation of this kind. I had, as the House is aware, given notice of a motion for an Address to the Imperial Parliament, with a view of having Imperial legislation enacted, making it perfectly clear that Canada had a right to legislate on the subject of Copyright law, even if it should affect the rights of English holders of copyright under the Imperial Act of 1842. I gave that notice because I was aware that, in 1872, when the Parliament of Canada had passed, I think unanimously, an Act dealing with this subject in the direction of the present Bill, the Act was reserved and was not allowed in England on the ground that it was held to be beyond the constitutional powers of the Canadian Parliament. I am very glad, indeed, to hear that the Minister of Justice holds the opinion that we are entitled to legislate in the direction, if necessary, of repealing the Imperial statutes which were enacted before 1867, so long as the subjects relate to matters within the jurisdiction of Canada. Well, I hope the Minister of Justice is right. I was only too glad, after having heard his views, to let my motion for an Address drop, in order that we might bring squarely before the Home Government, the question as to Canadian rights in the matter. I am sure on this side he will be heartily supported in his contention, because I think it is part of our political creed that we must seek to obtain for the Dominion full Dominion rights, and that we must give to the Provinces full provincial rights. In fact we want Home Rule in Canada as regards England and Home Rule in the Provinces as regards the Dominion. I am very glad that the Minister of Justice, on two notable occasions this Session, has adopted the views which the Opposition have always held on this point. Now, with reference to the Act which the hon. the Minister of Justice proposes to amend, I must say that I would much rather have seen the Act of 1872 brought in again. That Act gave to Canadian publishers and printers the right to reprint and republish British copyrighted works in Canada, although the English Copyright law was held to cover Canada, and did not interfere with the existing right of the Americans or any foreigners, to introduce in this country foreign reprints of any English copyrighted works. It has been an inestimable boon to Canada that we have had the right, in spite of the English copyright, to introduce and sell in Canada foreign reprints of English copyrighted works. That right was only, I fancy, practically used by the publishers in the United States, who have been willing to pay, or go through the form, at any rate, of paying 12½ per cent. author's tax, as well as the Customs duty of 15 per cent. upon books, and thus enabled our reading public to have works published at a reasonable price in Canada which their fellow-citizens in England are paying enormously high prices for. Now, the proposed Act of 1872, as I recollect it, did not prevent those American reprints coming in, but it gave what certainly was right and proper; it gave to Canadian publishers and printers the right also to reprint those English copyright works upon paying to the British author or owner of the copyrights, the author's tax. That enabled us in Canada to have more competition in cheap books. It gave us the right to have the American reprint, and to have the local Canadian competition, as well, superadded to that, and, as they had the protection of the duty of 15 per cent. upon books, I think it was a very fair thing to expect that they would be satisfied with that, and I know that the publishers always, until lately, said they were satisfied with that measure of protection. This Bill, as first introduced, made much the same provisions, except that the Government were authorised to shut out the American reprints altogether. That was the only portion of the Bill that I did not quite like. I think it could be fairly contended that, with a protection of 15 per cent. at the frontier, Canadian publishers ought to be able to hold their own against American publishers. I know that the results of the high protective tariff we have here make it somewhat difficult for Canadians to do that, because the Canadian publishers point out, with some show of reason, that they would only be protected by the duty at the frontier of 15 per cent. on the manufactured book, while they have to pay 25 per cent. on the paper they import from the United States, so that 15 per cent. on the manufactured article is not enough to protect them when they have to pay 25 per cent. on the raw material. In that respect they are in very much the same position as the millers of Canada say they are placed in by the National Policy, that they are injured rather than benefitted by it. Still, that is scarcely a reason why American reprints should not be allowed to come in. I think that the duty on the raw material for the publishers should be reduced to such a figure as will allow them to compete with the American publishers. That, as I have explained, was the way in which the Bill was introduced, and, like the Act of 1872, it undertook to provide against existing English copyrights, as well as English copyrights in the future. I have a copy of the Act of 1872 here, and it is quite clear what the effect of that was. It referred to works "of which the copyright has been granted and is subsisting in the United Kingdom," and it legislated against them and permitted their republication here under certain conditions. I find that an amendment has been introduced into this Bill since it was first printed, providing that it shall not apply at all to existing copyrights. That really brings the Bill down to almost nothing, because English copyrights last for 42 years, or for seven years after the writer's death, if he lives longer than 42 years after copyright is granted, so that nearly all the important modern works which are copyrighted in England are not affected by this Bill at all, and no Canadians can republish them. Of course, gradually, in time, as new publications come out in England, the provisions of this Act as to licensing Canadian publishers to reprint them will come into force, but we will not have that great stimulus which I think we would have had to the publishing trade of Canada, if we were allowed to compete with the Americans in reprinting the English works, and I do not see that the English author could complain either. I think it would be to his advantage, because it is provided by the Bill that the English author shall receive 10 per cent. upon the retail price of the work as published in Canada, as an author's tax. Surely, he would suffer no harm if the Canadians did not publish his work, and if they do publish and pay him 10 per cent. on the retail price, he will get a very handsome return indeed; and I believe that all the English authors, unless they have made some arrangement with American publishers about reprints, would be glad to receive this subsidy from Canada. I cannot see any reason why the Government have shut the Canadian publishing and printing trade out of the great benefit they would derive from publishing these existing works. In 1872, this Parliament passed, I think unanimously, the Act which applied to a certain extent a retroactive effect, but offered to the English authors a full and ample compensation for the interference—as it undoubtedly was—with their vested rights. By making this amendment, the Government has very much reduced the advantage to the Canadian publisher. I think it would have been more reasonable, instead of leaving out the provision as to the Bill being retroactive, to have allowed American reprints still to come in and to compete with Canadian publishers, in respect, at least, of such works as have been copyrighted in England. That would give the authors the double chance of the Canadian author's tax and the American author's tax which is collected at the frontier. I would draw the attention of the Minister of Justice to these points, and also to this further point. In the first section of this amending Bill, provision is made—simply, I think, re-enacting the old provisions—as to what persons may take out copyright in Canada. It is provided that any persons domiciled in Canada or any part of the British possessions, or any citizen of any country which has an international copyright treaty with the United Kingdom, may take out a copyright. When that Act was originally passed in 1875, that provision was probably right enough, because at that time the Berne Treaty had not been entered into. That was entered into 1887, and eight countries were parties to that treaty—seven besides Great Britain—France, Spain, Germany and so on. That is an international copyright treaty with Great Britain, and, under the terms of this Act, any citizen of any of those countries—France, Spain, Germany and so on—can come into Canada and take out a copyright or a translation of a copyrighted work, and the treaty, the Minister of Justice will recollect, does not apply to Canada in any other respect, because the proclamation has not been issued by England, or at least I hope it has not, including us in that treaty. Therefore, we have no benefit from that treaty. No Canadian can go to France—I think it is a great pity that the poet Frechette cannot go to France and take out a copyright there, but he cannot do it under the treaty. But any French or any German author can come into Canada to-day, under the Bill as it stands, and take out a copyright, because there is an international treaty between the United Kingdom and those countries. So, I think, that in order to avoid that difficulty, which is a real and not imaginary one, a word or two should be inserted in that part of the Act after the words "United Kingdom," in the third line, so as to make it read thus: "a citizen of any country which has an international copyright treaty with the United Kingdom in which Canada is included." That would make it fair, and I dare say that is what the Minister of Justice had in his mind when he drew the clause.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am sorry the hon. gentleman was not in the House when the Bill was in Committee; in fact, had I known that he was out of the city, I would have deferred to move the Bill a little later. I was aware he had taken an interest in this subject, and was desirous of hearing his views upon it. I think the hon. gentleman is not strictly accurate in his reference to the Act of 1872. I have what purports to be a copy of the Act that was passed, and while it is true that it provides for the republication in Canada, under license, of works of which the copyright is existing, still it provides for the prohibition of foreign reprints. The Bill as finally passed, I think, contained this clause:

"From and after the passing of this Act the importation into Canada of foreign reprints of works of which the copyright is existing in Great Britain, and which have been registered here for republication in Canada, shall be and is hereby prohibited."

Now, it is true that it would be desirable, in the interests of the book manufacturers in Canada, that their rights should be extended, so as to enable them to reprint works which are under existing copyright, but I think that would be legislation of a very questionable character. I think we are going to have, in connection with this Bill, an important constitutional question to settle with the Colonial Office, and that we shall have, in settling that question, to meet the disadvantage of having against us what has been a very powerful influence in Great Britain heretofore, the influence of the Copyright Association of that country, which is in the interest of the authors of the United Kingdom, and that we would be at a great disadvantage in settling that question if we had upon the face of the Bill that which would be regarded in the United Kingdom as an interference with vested rights. Under the existing laws of the United Kingdom, the authors who have secured copyrights have acquired what they conceive to be a valuable property, a property valuable even as regards Canada. I think it does not militate against that argument to say that we would provide for the payment of an excise duty for them, as for future copyrights, under this Bill; because, although we would be allowing them compensation by that excise duty, we would be taking away from them, against their will, what they conceive to be their property, lawfully acquired under the laws of the United Kingdom. If they consider the compensation which an excise duty would give them an adequate compensation for their rights, there can be no difficulty in their making a voluntary arrangement with the Canadian publishers by which the publishers will receive from them the right to reprint in Canada, and allow them a payment equivalent to that which is provided for in the Bill. If they do not regard it as an equivalent for their rights in Canada, secured under the statute of the United Kingdom, they surely ought not to be deprived by forcible legislation of that which they do not desire to part with. As to what the hon. gentleman says in reference to the limitation in the first clause, I quite agree with him that it would be desirable to make that change; and with your permission, and that of the House, I will move that the House go into Committee again for the purpose of amending the first section in that sense, so as to add the words "in which Canada is included."

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Before we go into committee on the Bill I would like to call the hon. gentleman's attention to some other objections which appear to me to be worth some consideration. The constitutional question has so overshadowed the other questions that the details of the Bill did not receive the consideration of the House at large which I think they deserve, in view of their importance to the general community. The practical effect of the Bill will be that any person can obtain a copyright for his works in Canada hereafter, but subject to a condition that he shall reprint and publish the work in Canada within one month after it is published elsewhere. Now, the practical effect of that will be to deprive them of the right altogether. One month seems to be too short; they will hardly have time to make up their minds whether they ought to publish in Canada or not. But the effect of it is more observable when we turn to the other section of the Act which makes provision for licensing publication in Canada in case a copyright in it is not taken out. It seems to me that the effect of the fifth section will be this, that, after the license is granted, the Governor General in Council, being satisfied that the work is in course of being printed, may prohibit the importation. Now, what will be the effect on the reading public? We know, as a matter of fact, that a large portion of the people of Canada are a reading people, and that for years back they have had the privilege of reading the reprints of the best English works published in the United States at a very low figure. Now, if this prohibition is agreed to, and a publisher in Canada satisfies the Government that he is about to bring out a work in Canada which is not copyrighted here, out at once goes a proclamation prohibiting the importation of reprints from the United States. There is no doubt that the result of that will be very largely to enhance, to the reading public, the cost of the works — it is alleged by some 40 or 50 per cent. If that is so, it is going to be a very serious tax upon the public. I must confess that the argument of my hon. friend behind me (Mr. Edgar) seems to be very strong, that the trade ought to be sufficiently protected by the duty which we now have upon foreign reprints from the United States, and if that protection is not sufficient, the Government might propose to increase it somewhat. But absolutely to prohibit and to give a monopoly to the licensee of the Canadian work, will be so largely to enhance the price that the public may, under certain circumstances, be fleeced. I really think that if we go back into committee the Minister might deem it a point important enough to justify us in giving it a thorough discussion there; and that if the House gave the matter its attention, it would come to the conclusion that the general interests of the public are not sufficiently protected, and that the trade will have practically a large monopoly, the result of which will be to compel the reading public to pay very much more for their reading matter than they have been accustomed to pay heretofore. That course would be a very unpopular one, and, apart from its unpopularity, it is one that would be very much to be deprecated, because the very wide opportunity which people now have to read the best books of the age, which they can obtain at low figures, would be curtailed. This Bill, important as it is, did not receive, owing largely to the absence of the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar), that attention from the House which its importance deserved, and I trust that if the Government accede to the proposal to again consider the Bill in Committee, they will consider these points again.

Mr. DAVIN. If I were at all certain that the Bill could bear the interpretation of my learned friend who has just spoken, I should certainly oppose the Bill. Nevertheless, I cannot look at the Bill with the favor manifested by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Edgar). There is considerable searching of heart, I may tell the Minister of Justice, about this third clause, and no doubt when we go into Committee he will be able to satisfy us with regard to the meaning of it. Some of the publishers think that the third clause will give a monopoly to a person or to any number of persons being a body which they consider describes a company. On the other hand, it seems to me that the clause is open to the interpretation, that not only one person but any number of persons may obtain from the Department of Agriculture a license to publish those books. If that be so, it will get rid of the fear of monopoly. From the point of view of the author in London, it seems to me it will place him in this position, that he will be forced, in his own interests to come into the hands of a number of persons here in Canada; he will be forced to do so, because, if he does not place himself in their hands and get his books published here within one month, anybody may pirate his books; and from that point of view it will be worth while considering whether one month is sufficient time or not. But the chief thing I am anxious about, is whether this Bill will place the reading public, and those persons who are speaking to me in relation to the latter, the newspaper publishers, at a disadvantage. If this ring of publishers in Canada were to so act that they could get hold of the book, charging probably 10 or 20 cents more than we now get them for, and selling them at a much dearer rate to the newspapers, then the public would decidedly suffer. But I am not at all certain that, under the third clause, newspapers could not come in and get a license from the Department of Agriculture, and, if so, it would be interesting to know how the excise would act in regard to the newspapers. When we get into Committee I shall watch carefully the clauses as they are considered.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). This Bill is in many respects an important one, and there are conflicting interests, and the question is which interest we shall undertake to most favorably consider. We are not exactly in the position of the people of the United Kingdom, because this country lies side by side with a great English-speaking nation having the same literature. The interests of the publishers would depend very much more on our being able to establish free intercourse with the neighboring republic in publishing matters than in undertaking to establish for our publishers an exclusive market in Canada. We never should sacrifice the general public interests to the interest either of the author or of the publisher. The interest of the general public in this question, as in all others, ought to be regarded as paramount, and any steps taken that will have the effect of increasing the cost of publishing works which circulate among the people will diminish the number of readers of those works in this country. There are thousands, I may say tens of thousands of our population who have the opportunity to read cheap republications of English works, that are of very great importance and that tend to improve the taste and extend the area of the reader's information, that in fact make our people a much more literary and cultured people than they otherwise would be, and you will seriously affect their opportunities for culture by any step being taken to promote the interest either of author or publisher at their expense. It seems to me that while it is all very well to secure to the publisher in this country the right of republishing English copyrighted works, it is also a matter of the first importance that we should not exclude the American editions of those works from the Canadian market. This should not be done, but, on the contrary, we should seek to obtain free trade between the two countries in the matter of literary works published in one or the other country, subject to any duties that may be imposed for the purpose of giving to the author a royalty upon the work he has produced.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The remarks which the hon. gentleman has just made are altogether against the principle of copyright, and therefore it is impossible that I can amend the Bill in any way that will suit that hon. gentleman. With respect to the points to which the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) has called attention, I may say that it was distinctly explained in Committee, and I think the Bill carries that meaning on its face, that licenses should not be in any way a monopoly, or be given to any one person or any limited number of persons. The Bill was amended in Committee to its present form in order specifically to declare that the Minister shall grant licenses to any person or number of persons from time to time. With respect to the remarks of the hon. member for Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies), and the points he has urged in regard to the shortness of the period for republication in Canada and the possible advantages that might ensue, I may say that that subject has been very carefully considered indeed, and the dalay in having the Bill printed was due to the fact that it was considered desirable to give more than usual consideration to this, which is really a very complicated subject. I do not apprehend the evils to which the hon. gentleman has referred. I explained, as fully as I could on the motion to go into Committee, the point which he has now raised, but I suppose he was attending more to the constitutional question which he had in view and perhaps lost my explanation. My explanation was briefly this: that if we are to have a copyright system for Canada at all, if we are to have the republication of works copyrighted abroad, we must make some effort to keep the market for the Canadian publisher. That is an essential feature of the copyright system. We have already upon our Statute-book the principle of interim copyright, by which foreign reprints are prevented from being introduced here for one month, and we have now adopted the same principle as regards the time for republication in Canada by the copyrighter, and the time for taking out a license to publish in case the copyrighter does not cause his book to be published here. From the information we could obtain we thought that a month was not too a short time, because, in relation to all the works which are now republished, and which are likely to be published in Canada for years to come, a month is ample time. But, besides that, it now happens, even in relation to that class of works, that an English author makes arrangements with a Canadian publishing house, or an American publishing house if he wants to republish it in the United States, to have his work going through the press of the two countries simultaneously. One of the publishers gave me an illustration of that fact in connection with a work recently copyrighted in the United Kingdom and published simultaneously there and here. He said that he had upon his shelves thousands of copies of that book, awaiting a telegram that the book was issued in London, when he was to issue it in our market here. The same thing takes place in the case of authors who avail themselves of the extremely lax copyright laws of the United Kingdom, and who qualify, by a temporary residence, to take out copyright there. They publish in the United States and England on the same day, secure copyright in the two countries, and, as I mentioned to the House on going into Committee, they secure against our people the Canadian market, while we have no right of getting copyright into theirs. The fact, therefore, is that, as regards the shortness of time, it will not militate against that class of work which is likely, for years to come, to be republished in Canada. As regards more elaborate works, if our population and reading public should become so large as to justify the republication of heavier works, the system of publishing in both countries will be adopted by English authors who think it worth while to secure copyright in Canada. The probability is that an author will prefer to have his rights secured by the excise duty which we will collect for him. As to the suggestion made with regard to the importation of foreign republications, the hon. gentleman will see that it is quite futile to have a Canadian copyright system if we allow the free importation of foreign works. Even if it were but for a month, 10 cent, 15 cent and 20 cent editions from the American press would completely take possession of the Canadian market and would make the labor and enterprise of the Canadian publisher completely fruitless at the end of that time. It is true that to some extent this system will be an experiment. I have the belief that the Act will be allowed to go into operation; and this much is certain: that if we have secured that point we will have accomplished a good deal in the interests of our people. We will have established the right to legislate with regard to this whole subject, and at a future time Parliament can act with perfect freedom as to the method of improving this Act. We will also have the opportunity of considering the regulations as to the excise duties and the licenses, which will be made with great care.

Mr. EDGAR. With reference to the amendment suggested or passed, I do not know which, to the original Act of 1872, excluding the American reprints altogether, I do not think that it added much to the wisdom of the legislation. There seems to be a good deal of force in the objection that a month is too short a time to allow an English author to copyright in this country. The objection the Minister raises to making the time longer is that the country might be overrun with cheap American reprints, which would destroy any object in the author copyrighting. Why could not that be met by making an express provision that we should allow three months to the English copyright author to copyright here, and that American reprints should not be admitted until the expiration of that time? I think that would meet the difficulty that has occurred to the hon. the Minister of Justice, and I believe that it would make this law much more popular among the copyright authors in England, which seems to be the object of the Minister of Justice. Besides, it would be a good deal fairer on the face of it. In England it is "publication" that is required by the Copyright law; and the American author can get his book copyrighted in England, although it is printed in America, by publishing simultaneously in London and in the United States certain copies of the work. That cannot be done here because "printing" is necessary, and therefore, as I read the law, a month is a very short time to have it printed in Canada. The illustration that was given by the hon. Minister to show how hard it was upon the Canadian publishers that American authors should take out English copyrights and obtain possession of our markets is quite true, and it showed that it was right for us to make this Act apply to American authors who have already taken out copyright patents in England, and therefore cut out Canada. This practice is even harsher on Canadians than the Minister of Justice has mentioned. Take, for example, Marion Crawford, the American novelist, who, I understand, copyrights his books in England. He probably comes to Montreal or Niagara and lives there for a short time to establish his domicile in British possessions, for the sole purpose of getting his book copyrighted in England. Therefore, he controls Canada by that English copyright, as the Minister has stated; but, more than that, he has obtained the American copyright, and no one else in the United States can reprint that book and send a cheap edition into Canada. The readers of his works in Canada well know that by reason of his having the American copyright, as well as the English, he controls the Canadian and American markets, and you cannot get a copy of his smallest work for less than $1. Now, the provisions of this Bill still leaves this advantage to Marion Crawford and all those other American authors who have heretofore copyrighted in England and in the United States. I think that this is a great hardship. If the Minister does not see his way to correct it this Session, I hope he will do so in another Session.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I would like to ask the hon. Minister, whether the practical effect of this Bill be, as has been stated, to increase the cost of books to readers in Canada? If so, I think it is a measure that should be carefully considered. Canadians are a reading people, and if we are going to increase the cost of literature to them, I think we are taking a very serious step. If it only protects authors in their rights, that is another question; but if it is going to have the effect of shutting out American reprints, such as are largely imported and generally read in this country, I think it is a step in the wrong direction.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. With regard to that, the opinion given to me by those best qualified to speak on the subject is that it will not have the effect of increasing the prices of general reading matter. It will certainly cheapen many publications which it is impossible to get now, by enabling them to be republished in Canada by our own publishers; and it is provided in the Bill, and will, of course, be provided in the regulations, that in default of the republication taking place in Canada the prohibition against foreign reprints will be revoked. There is one observation which I had intended to make in reference to the last remarks of the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar), and I will take the liberty of making it now if you will allow me to do so. The hon. gentleman, in answer to my observations, stated that a month was too short a time within which to make the publication, and suggested that the objection would be met if we made the time three months, and during that period allowed no importation of foreign reprints. That would be a pretty equal division of protection between the author and the publisher, but the reader during the three months would be unable to get access to the work. I think, on the whole, that would not work well.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The present Bill only applies to books copyrighted in future. With regard to books now under copyright, of course they cannot be published in this country, and I would ask whether it would not be advisable that the license should be extended to include books already copyrighted?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. A few moments ago I submitted to the House that it would be unwise, when we are endeavoring to get control of this question, to burden the Bill with provisions which would seriously interfere with vested rights in England. These authors have obtained rights under the law of England, and in some instances they have sold those rights with respect to Canada to American publishers and others, and to say that those rights should be done away for the mere compensation of the excise duty that would be paid to the author, would, I think, aggravate the objections likely to be raised against the Bill. We are not making matters any worse, but are leaving the law as to existing copyrights in its present position.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

Mr. FOSTER presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows:—

STANLEY OF PRESTON.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, Supplementary Estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion, for the year ending 30th June, 1890; and in accordance with the provisions of "The British North America Act, 1867," he recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,
OTTAWA, 22nd April, 1889.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the Supplementary Estimates be referred to Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to.

COMBINATIONS IN RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved third reading of Bill (No. 11) for the prevention and suppression of combinations in restraint of trade.

Mr. CURRAN. I have an amendment to offer to this Bill which will necessitate our going into Committee. My amendment is as follows:—

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole House for the purpose of considering the following amendment:

"An appeal shall lie from any conviction under this Act to the highest Court of Appeal in criminal matters in the Province where such conviction shall have been made, upon all issues of law and fact, and the evidence taken at the trial shall form part of the record in appeal; and for that purpose the court before which the case is tried shall take note of the evidence and legal objections."

As the House will see, there is no attempt to attack the principle underlying the Bill in the amendment I propose. I merely ask that in this matter, which is of very great importance to the whole community, more especially to the manufacturing and mercantile interests of this country, such provision will be made as will enable the public to feel secure with reference to the judgments that may be rendered under this Act. The interests at stake are of the very greatest magnitude, and a trial may take place, perhaps, before a tribunal which has not had very much experience in matters of this kind. I, therefore, ask that, not merely in questions of law, but also upon questions of fact, there should be an appeal to the highest court of criminal jurisdiction in whatever court the conviction has been obtained, and that, for the purpose of ensuring an appeal upon the facts of the case, the court before which the trial takes place shall have full notes of the evidence given and the objections raised during the course of the trial. I think it will strike most hon. members of this House that the proposition is a very reasonable one. It is of the greatest importance that we should get the opinion of the highest tribunal in the Province in matters of this kind, and although it may seem somewhat strange that we should also ask that an appeal be given upon questions of fact, still, in a matter of this kind, the whole of the facts should be submitted to the highest tribunal. I understand that there is some objection to this, on the ground of its being an innovation upon the practice which has hitherto prevailed and which now prevails in ordinary criminal cases, but it is evident that this legislation is not of the same nature as the ordinary provisions made against the commission of crime. The law of the land, as it stands in England to day, the statutory law, makes it impossible almost to indict any person engaged in a trade combination, and that has been the principle underlying our own legislation up to the present. The attempt is now made to prevent combinations of all kinds in respect of trade, and the whole question is virtually one of fact, because the court will have to determine, upon the nature of the evidence, whether there has been a combination or not, and it is upon the facts that the courts of appeal should be called to pronounce. I think that the proposition is reasonable in its character; it interferes in no way with the working of the Bill, but makes the Bill more effective by giving greater security to the public and to those interested in the carrying on of large business or works. Under those circumstances, I am satisfied the House will receive my proposition with favor.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman has spoken of his amendment as being a reasonable one. I think, with great deference to him, that, although he has made it appear plausible, that it is not a reasonable one. The system as regards appeals, speaking generally of the different Provinces, is this: that a case may be stated by the trial judge for the opinion of the whole bench, and there is an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada on the question reserved, provided the judges differ in opinion. There is also in some of the Provinces, a remedy, by writ of error, to review legal defects. I submit to the House that while this is the case as regards all crimes in the calendar, including crimes which involve the forfeiture of life, and including many crimes which are punished with far more severe punishments than those in this Bill, it is unwise to make provision for special procedure in any class of offences of this kind. If it is reasonable that we should give greater liberty of appeal in criminal cases, the general law of appeal and procedure should be amended in that direction and not one class of offences made appealable and another not.

Mr. EDGAR. I think that if we are going to pass this Bill at all, we ought not to encumber it by provisions such as the one suggested by the hon. member for Montreal. We should make it as simple as possible, and not put too much in the hands of the lawyers.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. EDGAR. With reference to the amendment which was made last evening to the Bill in Committee, and which was not very clear in its meaning, I have since tried to understand it. It seems to me, that the legislation affected by this last amendment, is by far the most material in the whole Bill, and it has undoubtedly the effect of reducing the force of the Trades' Unions Act to a very large extent. The Government, who have taken the responsibility of this Bill, should explain whether or not this is the case. The Trades' Unions Act would be of very little use, if it were not for the protection thrown around the members of Trades' Unions by section 22 of the Act. That section provides:

"That the purposes of any trade union shall not, by reason merely that they are in restraint of trade, be deemed to be unlawful so as to render any member of such trade union liable to prosecution for conspiracy or otherwise, or so as to render void or voidable any agreement or trust."

I think the House will agree in the opinion that that clause in our Trades' Unions Act is the only one that could prevent trades unions from being indicted and punished for conspiracy in respect of restraining trade in many different ways. And the amendment to this Act repeals, in fact, that provision altogether, except as to the exercise of any handicraft or the performance of labor. I do not want to make any motion about it, but I desire to let the House understand, as far as I can make it out, what the effect of that provision is, and to let the Government and the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) take the responsibility.

Mr. CURRAN. It would be far better for the hon. gentleman to make some proposition, so that we might know really what he does mean.

Mr. EDGAR. This is a Government Bill.

Mr. CURRAN. Not as I understand.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

EXTRADITION.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved second reading of Bill (No. 84) to extend the provisions of the Extradition Act.

Mr. LAURIER. When this question was, the other day, before the House, the Prime Minister stated that he would consider the propriety of deferring the consideration of this measure to another Session. I hope that the hon. gentleman has not altogether made up his mind to go on with it this Session. I can only repeat what I said the other day, that the measure is a very important one, it must take a good deal of time for consideration, it does not seem to be urgently demanded as yet by the public, it has not been as fully considered by the public as it might have been, and perhaps, under the circumstances, the hon. gentleman will think, as I myself believe, that the public interest will not suffer if the consideration of this measure were further deferred.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The subject has been considered, and it has been decided to go on with the Bill. I think it is unnecessary that I should now discuss the principle of this Bill, of which the Government approve, and they think it would be desirable to have it adopted. The Bill was introduced some nine or ten weeks ago, and I think it meets with the general approval of the House, so far as I have heard it spoken of, excepting some details to which exception has been taken, but those are not matters, it seems to me, in regard to which there should be any very long discussion.

Mr. LAURIER. I suppose either the mover of the Bill or the hon. gentleman who introduced it will give some explanation of it.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). In asking leave to introduce this Bill I made a brief statement of the reasons why I thought it necessary that the law in respect to extradition should be amended I will not now repeat what I then said, but it may not be amiss to point out once again to the House that because of our peculiar geographical position, in view of the fact that, between our southern boundary and the Isthmus of Panama there are contained some seventy millions of people, with some of whom we have no extradition treaty at all, and with others of whom we have only a very narrow extradition treaty, and in view, furthermore, of the fact that, for a long term of years, we have indulged in the hope that the existing treaty, which is almost fifty years old, between our country and our neighbors to the south, would be replaced by a better and more comprehensive treaty, hoping for a long term of years that the attempts which we learned through the press were being made to replace the Ashburton Treaty by a larger and better treaty would be successful, it has not seemed urgently necessary, up to the present year, to take any step in the direction of this Bill; but I think every good Canadian, I am sure every hon. member of this House who is following with interest the course of the Extradition law, learned with very deep regret that a Bill which was drafted, more than two years ago, by the English Foreign Secretary in Mr. Gladstone's Cabinet and the American Minister in London at that time, Mr. Phelps—the so-called Rosebery Phelps Treaty, which was known to have been lying in a state of suspended animation for more than two years, and which, I think, last February, came before the Senate of the United States, was thrown out. When we learned that that Bill, for whose success we had waited so long, had been rejected, I think it occurred to many Canadians that it would be wise for us to defer no longer, hoping for a relief from the existing evils through the agency of a treaty, but to see whether we could not by legislation get, at all events, a partial measure of relief from those evils under which we are groaning. All along the border counties of Canada at present, as many hon. members who come from these counties know, there is a floating class of criminals largely made up of burglars and thieves, from the neighboring republic, who are now being shadowed by the police of their own country, because they have sought refuge here in the absence of any law of this kind. If this law were to go into force to-morrow, a great many of these criminals would be taken away from our territory back to their own country, to confront the majesty of the law which they have violated. Independently of this, there would also be a relief from a very grave menace to the property and to the lives of Canadians, and the morality of Canadian business would be secured if these people were sent back. There is another class of criminals whom I may term commercial criminals, who have caught more of the public attention, men who have wrecked great monetary institutions in foreign countries, and, knowing that Great Britain had with their country, no extradition treaty which would cover their case, have fled northward and made their homes in our cities. I think they are a very terrible and actual danger. They corrupt the morals of our young Canadian merchants. They come here openly and wantonly, flaunting their ill-gotten gains, and corrupt and taint the morals of our young men. That is what we hope to do under this Bill, and I desire to call attention to this as the essential principle of the Bill, and nothing else in the Bill, in my judgment, is essential, all the rest is matter of detail, all the rest could be easily amended without affectiag the vital principle of the Bill, and therefore this is the sole matter to which, in asking for the second reading, I care to direct the attention of the House. The new principle of the Bill is that we shall undertake to do, under statute, things that up to this time, we have been doing under treaty; that, going beyond the lines of a treaty, we shall declare to the whole world our willingness to give up to all nations—even where we are not bound by any treaty—certain classes of criminals when they are asked for by foreign states whose laws they have violated. There are some advantages of proceeding in this matter by statute rather than by treaty. First of all, when we proceed by statute, the matter is entirely in our own hands. We have not to wait till Her Britannic Majesty and the President of the United States, until Her Britannic Majesty and the President of the French Republic, until Her Britannic Majesty and the President of the Swiss Confederation, for intance, may have agreed upon a treaty. We can deal with the matter promptly ourselves. There is a second element of advantage in dealing with this matter by statute rather than by treaty; that is to say, if in our judgment there be any abuse of the law—as in the experience of the past, England has thought that foreign nations have abused the extradition law—we can terminate this matter of surrender without any friction. It will be in the memory of many members of this House that twelve years ago, in the famous Winslow extradition case, the relations between Great Britain and the United States were strained for a number of months by reason of the fact that the English people, under the old Ashburton Treaty, were unwilling to surrender the forger Winslow without certain guarantees being given. We know how deplorable the state of things was during six months. It is mischievous, it is dangerous to have such a state of things brought about again, and if we proceed in this matter by statute we have the matter entirely in our own hands, and we can put an end to the statutes whenever we like under the section of the Bill which gives power to the Governor in Council, by proclamation, to suspend the operation of the Act. If we think it wise and judicious, for any reason, to terminate the operation of the Act, we can do so without friction, without danger to the entente cordiale between two great nations. There are objections, I know, to the method of proceeding by statute. We have all heard the objection taken that in this matter we are giving away everything, and we are getting back nothing. I think that objection is founded upon a misconception of the facts. We are giving away nothing of value, but we are ridding ourselves of a great nuisance, of a great evil If I felt that we were giving away anything of value to our people, I would be as unwilling to proceed in this direction as any member of this House; but I cannot agree to the view that we in Canada are giving up to any foreign power anything of value, when we say to them that hereafter we do not wish it to be as it is now, that when fugitive criminals come from the south northward to Canada, upon our frontier line they find the doors swinging inward to allow them to run through, and that when the avenging officer of justice follows upon their track, the door is shut and barred against him. We are willing to say that if the officer of justice following these fugitives can come before our courts, and make out a prima facie case, we will give these men back, provided their offences are not political; we are willing to say that these men shall be taken back to their own country for trial. We are not making a criminal law, we are not defining a new crime, we are not adding a new penalty to any existing crime—we do nothing of that kind at all, but we are simply saying to foreign peoples whose criminals have fled here: We will allow your officers to come to the boundary line and take these men back that they may confront the majesty of the law which they have violated. I do not think it necessary to deal at this stage at length with the details of the Bill. It may be that objections will be taken to the details of the Bill. As I said before, I repeat that the principle of the Bill is this simple one, that it is in our interest, that it will cleanse the Augean stable, it will drive out of this country a very mischievous and dangerous class of men, it will clear our good name, it will make us all the more proud of our country, if we put upon our Statute-book a declaration to all the world that we do not desire that our country shall be made hereafter a den of thieves; that while we desire that the same asylum shall continue to be offered to people who are entitled to it, we do not desire that this country shall become a refuge for those who are guilty of flagrant or flagitious crimes. In submitting this Bill I calmly appeal to the intelligence of this House, to the patriotism of the members of this House. I believe every one of us on both sides have but one desire, and that is to preserve the good name of his country. We have all a desire to put on the records a statement of our willingness to give up those who have no right here, and I believe that nothing but good can come from giving up flagrant offenders to be tried by the courts and to be confronted by the law of the country from which they have fled. I may say, in conclusion, that the Bill proposes that the existing Extradition law which has been upon our Statute-book for twelve years, which has been operative in this country for rather more than six years—the statute that, I think, was carried through this Parliament when the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) was Minister of Justice, and with which we have now six years, acquaintance—the proposal is that the provisions of this Extradition Act shall be applied to certain classes of criminals from countries with which we have no treaty, and that countries with which we have a treaty, shall not be independent altogether of the operations of this Act, but that we may only surrender a criminal to such a country if we, in our judgment, think it right so to do.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I understood the hon. gentleman to say that the Bill was mainly intended to reach a class of criminals who have committed crimes against commercial law, that Canada was overrun by fraudulent bankers and people of that class who have committed a breach of trust. Will the hon. gentleman tell me under which schedule of those he has attached to the Act, he hopes to reach any one of this class of people? I have looked over it, and while I am in favor of the general principle of this Bill, without expressing any opinion upon the retroactive clause, I fail to see that his schedule embraces this class of offenders at all. I have compared his schedule with the schedules of existing treaties between Great Britain and most European countries, and I find he has omitted very many of these crimes which are embraced in those treaties. To some of these I shall call attention when we go into Committee, because I think they should be added to the chedule of this Bill. But the most serious defect that I find in the Bill is that I do not think that it reaches the class of people that the promoter desires to reach, that is, those who commit fraud in the capacity of a banker agent, factor, trustee, or director or public officer of a company. I beg to know if the hon. gentleman has had that in view, or if there is any section in his Act which will reach these people?

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I think the Bill will include all those whom we desire to get rid of. These are matters that can be discussed in Committee.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). There is one crime which I do not see mentioned in the schedule, and that is fraud in a bailee. My hon. friend has not put that crime in his schedule. I think the people he desires to reach would not be touched by the Bill as it stands at present. We should take very good care also that the parties who are surrendered should not be tried for any other offence than the one upon which they are demanded. There was the Caldwell case some years ago, concerning which difficulty arose where the party was extradited for one offence and tried for another. He was acquitted, and the question was never raised. With respect to the retroactive clause, I think that will require very grave consideration at the hands of this House.

Mr. SKINNER. The House should hesitate before it goes into Committee on this Bill. In my opinion it should be referred to a Special Committee for examination and report. The Bill is very crude in its provisions, it does not meet the requirements of the law, it will not carry out what the hon. gentleman wishes to accomplish, and it will end in confusion and really make the law worse than it is now with respect to the very particulars in regard to which the hon. gentleman seeks to amend it. I repeat that it should be referred to a special Committee, to be reported upon, before it is further considered.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

Mr. WELDON (St. John). It is important that a condition should be inserted in this Bill, so that a person extradited should not be tried for any other offence than that for which he was extradited. The Extradition Act provides, that a person shall not be extradited for any political offence, and the Minister of Justice must satisfy himself that it is not for a political offence. We should here provide a clause, that this Act shall not be used for the purpose of taking a person back to the United States, for example, to try him for a crime not within this statute. Either some undertaking should be given to the Minister of Justice that this is not being done, or some discretion should be exercised by him, so that he may provide that a man shall not be tried for other offences, because when a man gets into a foreign country, we cannot interfere with the proceedings. We should be careful not to place ourselves in the position which the Imperial Government occupied, under the Ashburton Treaty, in the Winslow case.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman will see that that is one of the evils inherent in the legislation before the Committee. Under a extradition treaty agreed upon between the two great nations a clause is generally introduced making provision that the offender shall not be tried for any other offence than that for which he was extradited. We cannot make provision in this Bill to cover the point. If the House chooses to proceed on these lines and enact that, whether an extradition treaty exists or not, parties having committed the offences named in the Act may be extradited, there is no security that, after they are taken back to the United States, they will not be tried for other offences. The whole Bill is open to that objection, that it may be used for political oppression, that a man may be taken from this country charged with having committed an alleged offence covered by the Act, and yet he may be tried in the United States for an entirely different offence, even for a political offence. If this be so, our boasted freedom of asylum for political offenders will be at an end.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I quite agree with the hon. members who have just addressed the Committee as to their unwillingness to surrender a fugitive, who has an asylum here, to a foreign state, with the result that he may be tried in that foreign state for offences different from the charge on which he was surrendered.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Even for a political offence.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). Yes, even for political offences. But hon. members will observe that in the latter part of the Bill there is a provision which would make such a result impossible. It is evident to everyone who has followed the Winslow case, to which the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) alluded, that it was regarded as being somewhat a breach of good faith to have extradited a man on one charge and tried him on another. I quite agree with what the hon. gentleman has said on that point, and the drift of opinion was against what the Americans claimed the right to do in that case. It is clear that, if the Americans should undertake to adopt that course, it would be a breach of faith, and it would lead to an immediate suspension of the Act, there being power given to the Governor in Council to suspend it by proclamation.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There is no mutual obligation or agreement.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). It is unreasonable to suppose that an American court, with that knowledge before it, would abuse our comity and goodwill. They have no rights in the matter. We have perfect power and control over it, and it is unreasonable to suppose that, knowing our Executive has power in one hour to suspend the operation of the Act, they will strain and abuse our comity.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). This would be like locking the stable door after the steed was stolen. What the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) suggested would be a breach of faith. If a treaty is made between two nations, it is an honorable compact to which both nations are parties. But here we simply pass a statute by which we give authority that certain things can be done. The Americans are not parties to it, because there is no agreement made. They will get the fugitive back and will then say they will try him for what offence they please. When he is taken to the United States all our power over him ceases, and no treaty rights follow him, as in the case of a treaty. When he is there he will be amenable to the jurisdiction of that foreign country for any offence whatever, and the court would be bound to try him. It is not, therefore, a question of international law at all. Now, again, there would be another conflict between the Extradition Act and this Bill. The 14th section of the Extradition Act says:

"No fugitive shall be liable to surrender under this Act if it appears (a) That the offence in respect of which proceedings are taken under this Act is one of a political character; or (b) That such proceedings are being taken with a view to prosecute or punish him for an offence of a political character."

And the 15th section says:

"If the Minister of Justice at any time determines (a) That the offence in respect of which proceedings are being taken under this Act is one of a political character; (b) That the proceedings are, in fact, being taken with a view to try or punish the fugitive for an offence of a political character; or (c) That the foreign State does not intend to make a requisition for surrender;—He may refuse to make an order for surrender and may, by order under his hand and seal, cancel any order made by him or any warrant issued by a Judge under this Act, and order the fugitive to be discharged out of custody on any committal made under this Act; and the fugitive shall be discharged accordingly."

Now it seems to me that the Minister would have, even under this statute, to exercise the discretion vested in him by the Extradition Act, and that the 14th section would still remain in force even though the Bill now before the House passes into law. If the fugitive were tried for an offence for which he was not sent back it would be no breach of international law or no breach of faith as between the two parties, and therefore it seems to me the Bill has got to be changed in this direction. If I understand the hon. gentleman, his object is that a party should not be extradited for one offence and tried for another.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). That is so.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). There should be something in this Bill by which such a thing should be prevented. At present there is no possibility of preventing it if a party is extradited or sent back under the Bill.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It would be quite impossible to make any provision which would be a condition or contract between any executive officer in any State of the American Union and the Government of the country, for the several States are not allowed to enter into such compact, nor would any such compact be recognised as binding upon them. The proposition of the Bill is one that only can be carried out as a matter of comity, and if any State at any time undertakes to try a person for one offence while he had been extradited for another, it is quite clear that all the Government of this country could do would be to refuse to make any further surrenders; but that any compact can be entered into I do not think is at all possible. The old practice between the State of New York and some of the eastern States and the British Provinces bordering upon these States, was to provide for mutual surrender of fugitives from justice. This was done before any treaty or compact was entered into between the Government of the United States and the Government of the United Kingdom, but this practice was put an end to by the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of Holmes against Jennison, 14 Pet., 540 Supreme Court Reports, United States. I will just read a note of Mr. Bigelow on that decision:

"The question of surrendering fugitives from justice from the Provinces bordering upon the different American States is one that for many years, while no treaty powers existed upon the subject, became of the first importance. It was at first attempted to induce the national Government to act in the matter. But this it uniformly declined to do. It therefore became matter of mere discretion between the Executives of the conterminous States, to be settled in each particular instance according to the circumstances. It was never supposed, until the decision in the case of Holmes, that the general Government, while declining to act of itself, and while no legislative provisions upon the subject existed whereby it was required to act, or could afford any adequate redress, would presume to interpose any obstacle in the way of the States disposing of such escaped offenders in any way they might deem proper. But while all this was conceded by the Supreme Court at Washington, and while it was conceded that it was entirely competent for the States, under their general powers, to regulate their own police, to remove from their territory every description of offenders who, in the judgment of the legislature, are dangerous to the peace of the State,—it seems to the Government that the fact of expelling a murderer or a robber in such a direction and in such a manner as to secure his apprehension and punishment in the Province from which he escaped, and where he had been guilty of the offence, amounted to 'entering into an agreement or compact with a foreign power.' It is certain that this practice, which existed for many years by a kind of courtesy between the governors of the conterminous Provinces and States, was never supposed to infringe upon this or any other provision of the United States constitution, or to interfere in any degree with the international relations of the two countries, until after the decision in the case of Holmes. Since that the question has been regarded as one exclusively under the control of the national sovereignty."

It is, therefore, very clear that no compact or arrangement can be entered into by any State of the American Union with the Government of this country under any condition put in an Act of Parliament which would bind them to try a person that was an offender, or accused of an offence, of that crime, and that crime only for which he was extradited. I do not very well see with whom the Government of this country could enter into a compact, after the decision of this case of Holmes vs. Jennison. The only parties that could constitutionally enter into such a compact with us, would be the Executive Government of the United States, and it could not be the Governor of any one of the States. That decision of the Supreme Court puts that out of the power of any such Governor, and while we may make provision for the exclusion of these criminals from our territory by way of abating a nuisance, we can hardly enter into a compact for their protection elsewhere after they have been driven out from here. We may regard them as most undesirable persons; we may refuse to furnish them any asylum, but I do not well see that we can say where they shall go or to whom they ought to be given up. Would it be an offence against the sovereignty of the United States to undertake to say by your legislation that such an offender shall be surrendered, not to any officer of the United States, but to an officer of any State who may choose to apply for him? Could it any longer be treated as a mere police regulation between the Government of this country and the Government of any adjoining State? I do not think so. After the highest court of the neighboring republic has decided that that cannot be done, can we very well make special provision for the surrendering of these parties to any other persons, or can we make any provision to say that they should be tried for these offences, and these only, for which they are extradited? It is true that since the discussion took place between the Government of the United States and the Government of the United Kingdom upon that subject, there have been several decisions of the United States, and the judiciary of that country have generally concurred in the view of the Extradition Treaty taken by Lord Cairns, that the person extradited should be tried for the offence with which he was charged in the foreign country, and no other, without his having been given an opportunity of returning to the country in which he had sought refuge. But this is a wholly different matter. It seems to me that the only course open to us is to provide for the arrest of those parties, and their expulsion from the territory. I do not see how you are going to arrange for the surrender, unless that arrangement is made with the Government of the United States; and then you have practically a treaty, though perhaps not surrounded by the solemnities of a treaty which is formally entered into and signed.

Mr. SKINNER. I would like to draw the attention of the Committee to the recital, which appears to make it sufficient for any person to be merely charged with a crime, in order to be surrendered, without any proof being required to show that the charge has any foundation in fact. Nor does the proviso require a prima facie case to be made out against the alleged offender. My contention is that the recital does not carry the law far enough to make it necessary that the crime should be proved prima facie before the alleged criminal is surrendered. Then, with regard to the provision that the Extradition Act shall apply, as some hon. gentlemen have remarked, if there were a treaty, whereby actual arrangements were made, and whereby the doctrine of comity, as between two sovereign States, were extended to this Act, that matter would be met; but a statute in which you declare that you will proceed as if there were an extradition treaty, when there is not one, would simply be impracticable, in my opinion, and could not be carried out. Therefore I think this recital is crude, is not correct as a matter of principle, and will only fail ineffectual, and paralyse the purpose which the person who drew the Act intended. As has been remarked, in order to send criminals away to another country, hitherto, a treaty has been necessary, and it is not so easy as may appear to make an Act whereby those criminals may be surrendered. It is easy enough in our courts to deal with the offences as if they were committed here; but in the case of offences which have been committed abroad, I hold that the Act is wholly inefficient. The doctrine of comity and the question of international law have been lost sight of in the drawing of the Bill. It needs to be taken hold of, and thought out, and made applicable to the extraordinary circumstances we are in, of dealing with criminals who have not committed their offences within this jurisdiction, but have come from another jurisdiction, and are to be delivered up for the purpose of being tried in the country from which they have come. I am not opposed to this Act; I am in favor of it; but I am satisfied that it would not do to put a crude, inartistic and unscientific Act of this kind on our Statute-book, which could not be carried out, but which would only lead to confusion, and would fall short of what the hon. gentleman desires, and rightly desires, to establish in the relations of this country with other countries in regard to criminals. I, therefore, think that this Bill should be submitted to a Committee, which would devise a proper Act which would carry out the intentions of the mover of the Bill.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). Three or four objections have been taken to the Bill, but I am persuaded that they are imaginary. Under several of the treaties with foreign countries which provide for extradition, we have no guarantees such as hon. gentlemen opposite are asking for. If they look over the text of the treaties now in existence, they will find that some of them have not those guarantees; we have simply the good faith of the foreign countries to reply upon. What have we to rely upon when we make the simple declaration that we will give up a burglar? We rely on the good faith of the courts who try the man on the charge of burglary, that they will not try him for a political offence. They know very well that if they did so, that would be an end of the matter; they would kill the goose that laid the golden eggs. There is no law that could not be made absurd, if you assumed that the persons charged with the administration of it were a set of rascals. I do not charge the Executive of our neighbors to the south, or of Mexico, or of other countries to which this measure would apply, with bad faith. By the first section of the Bill, the provisions of the Extradition Act are made part and parcel of this law. I desire to call the attention of the Committee to some provisions in our Extradition Act which seem to me to offer excellent guarantees against the dangers that have been dwelt upon. First of all, in sub-section 3 of the 9th section, it is provided that where the fugitive has been caught and brought before the Extradition officer, magistrate, or judge, it is the duty of such magistrate to receive any evidence tending to show that the crime of which the fugitive is accused or alleged to have been convicted is an offence of a political character, or is, for any other reason, not an extraditable crime, or that the proceedings are being taken with the view of prosecuting him for an offence of a political character. Then we come to the latter stage of the proceedings. Supposing a man has been taken up and application made for his release on habeas corpus, and the sitting judge has remanded him to prison until the Executive issues orders for his surrender, turn to section 15 and you will find additional guarantees, in case there should be a suspicion that the man has been arrested on one charge and is likely to be tried for a political offence. In such a case the evidence of this suspicion can be brought to the notice of the judge and of the Minister of Justice. Section 15 says:

"No fugitive shall be liable to surrender under this Act if it appears that the offence in respect of which proceedings are taken under this Act is of a political character, or that such proceedings are being taken with a view to prosecute or punish him for an offence of a political character, he shall not surrender the accused."

I desire to call the attention of the Committee to the 15th section, which provides:

"If the Minister of Justice at any time determines—(a) That the offence in respect of which proceedings are being taken under this Act is of a political character; (b) That the proceedings are, in fact, being taken with a view to try or punish the fugitive for an offence of a political character."

These two provisions bear upon this matter and give excellent guarantees. Assuming that we are dealing with honorable men and honorable courts of justice, I think the objections so strongly taken by my hon. friend, who, I am glad to see, is in favor of the Bill—and I hope we shall be able to so word it, that every hon. member in favor of it, will find his objections removed—I say, assuming that we are dealing with honorable judges, it is not likely that, with a vigilant executive officer, this danger which is apprehended can occur. The prisoner is likely to know, whether or not there is some concealed purpose of this kind in his arrest, and if he does know, the Act of 1877 provides abundant guarantees. As to the danger of a man being taken across the boundary line on a charge named in the list of crimes, and tried for another crime, I quite agree with the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) that we cannot in Canada, not being a State, make any compact or international arrangement, or obtain any national guarantee as to good faith. But, although that be true, I can only give the hon. gentleman the same answer that I have already given. I do not see that the danger apprehended is a real and grave one, for the reason that at this very time when our extradition relations are governed by treaty, we have several treaties in which there is no guarantee that the accused will be extradited for one offence and not tried for another. We know, as a fact, that does not happen, and if it did, a strain would be put on the treaty, which would lead England to suspend it In the English statute relating to Extradition, it is most explicitly declared that, as far as England is concerned, she will not bring over to her country a prisoner on one charge and try him on another. She cannot compel France, or Germany, or Italy to observe her rule; but we know that if a foreign state, having an extradition treaty with England, wished to extradite on one charge and try on another, England would do, as she threatened to do in the Winslow case, suspend the treaty. As a matter of fact that danger has not been found to exist. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Skinner) seems to think the Bill is not artistic; he seems to think it is not based on a regard for the principle of international law. If the hon. gentleman had his attention called to the fact that the Bill follows closely in the line drawn by the foremost criminal lawyers under the reign of Queen Victoria—drawn by the Commission of which Lord Cockburn was chairman and Sir James Fitz-Stephen, secretary—he might be disposed to change his opinion. The central principle of this Bill is the principle recommended in that report, drawn by the greatest criminal lawyer who now speaks the English language. The very danger which the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon), and the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), and the hon. member for the city of St. John (Mr. Ellis), and the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), forecasted, is forecasted in that report of the Royal Commission of 1877, and the suggestion given in that report to meet that difficulty is the suggestion that there shall be lodged with the Executive of the day power to suspend the operation of the Act by proclamation, if the nation to which so handsome, generous, and manly an offer was made would be unwise enough to abuse our comity and try a man on one offence when arrested on another. If the Bill is not in accord with the principle of international law, I find myself in most excellent legal company, and rely with some degree of confidence on the strong opinion expressed by those able lawyers that this executive power offers ample guarantees against the dangers apprehended.

Mr. MULOCK. I am afraid we have rather a poor guarantee if we have to depend upon the honor of some nations. I would just call to mind a circumstance that I think is rather against the security it is said we have here. Hon. gentlemen will remember the excitement that prevailed in Canada when efforts were made to extradite the prisoner Anderson, and immediately following the failure of that movement, an application was made to extradite to the United States another refugee who had taken refuge in the Province of Upper Canada; and on that occasion the Court of Queen's Bench rather unwisely gave an order for the extradition of the prisoner before the American war had concluded. The prisoner notified the courts here that this charge on which he was being extradited was a mere sham, made with the object of punishing him for his supposed connection with the war, and he declared that if he were extradited, the feeling was so strong against him that he doubted if he would get even a trial, and that more likely he would be handed over to be lynched. Nevertheless, owing to the strained feeling that existed between Great Britain and the States at the time, our courts did give an order for his extradition. The prisoner was taken across the line, and had no sooner reached the State of Michigan than he was lynched. They did not even go through the form of trying him, but handed him to the mob. That was done, it is true, at a critical period, but it involved just such consequences that might follow here,—the abrogation of the treaty.

Mr. TISDALE. Is that the case of the negro?

Mr. MULOCK. No, it was not Anderson that was extradited. I have forgotten the name. But the hon. gentleman from Albert (Mr. Weldon) says that, if, in this case, the country which got the prisoner were to try him for any other offence, the Act would be suspended. That might also have been said in regard to the Extradition Treaty, that it might have been suspended, but it did not happen to be suspended. Of course, there was excitement at the time, but, I think, the security suggested here, that the Act being open to suspension will compel the exercise of good faith, is a very poor security in some cases.

Mr. TISDALE. I would ask the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) if there is any precedent for this; whether all the other cases are not under treaties, and whether any State has passed such a law as this?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The old Province of Upper Canada did.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). The State of Mexico gave up a forger.

Mr. TISDALE. Yes; but I am asking in regard to a statute law of this kind.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I do not know of any precedent except that to which the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) refers.

Mr. TISDALE. If we pass this law, and a foreign State does commit a breach of faith, what is to prevent it from taking the prisoner from the court and trying him for some other crime? That is one of the points we should carefully consider. I am in favor of this measure if we can work it out properly, but I do not want to do anything which would interfere with the right of asylum. If a criminal, a thief or a robber, is sent to a foreign country because we do not want him, we do not ask for any undertaking, to protect the right of asylum, should the Executive of the foreign State take him out of the hands of the court and try him for another offence. It is on that ground that I asked if there was a precedent for such legislation as this, because all the other matters are matters of common law. Of course, if it were a reciprocal thing, it would be different.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I wish to revert to the question which we were discussing. I think the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) is slightly astray in informing the House that, under the extradition treaties now made between nations, there is no clause put in preventing a person being tried for a different offence from that for which he is extradited.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). Not in all, but in some.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Under the 1842 Treaty between Great Britain and the United States, there was no such clause, but in the Winslow case the question came up, and Lord Derby refused to allow the prisoner to be extradited, unless the pledge was given that he would not be tried for any other offence. However, in the United States, treaties are considered as part of the law of the land, and the Supreme Court there, as late as 1886, determined in the case of Rauscher that, under that treaty, he could not be tried for any other offence than that for which he was extradited, and that on the ground that the treaty was part of the law of the land. A great deal of difficulty arose out of that Winslow case, and the result is that in all the treaties of late years, an express clause has been inserted by the different contracting parties to the effect that a criminal shall not be tried for any other offence, which shows how important this matter has been considered. In the treaty between Her Majesty and the King of Italy, Article VII says:

"The accused or convicted person who has been given up shall not, until he has been liberated, or had an opportunity of returning to the country in which he was living, be imprisoned or subjected to trial in the State to which he has been given up, for any crime, or on any charge other than that on account of which the extradition took place."

That clause, or a similar one, identical in effect, and almost the same in language, has been inserted in all modern extradition treaties.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) In the treaty between Her Majesty and the King of the Netherlands, the same article occurs.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). Can the hon. gentleman find it in the treaty with France?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Yes; I think so. In the treaty between Her Majesty and the Emperor of all the Russias, made in 1886, the same clause occurs, and I have gone through all the modern treaties, and, as far as I have seen them, this clause is contained in them all.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I could not find it in the treaty with France.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think it is there. It occurs in the treaty between Her Majesty and the King of Sweden and Norway, the 7th article. Every treaty I have come to is the same. The hon. gentleman sees that, even under the Treaty of 1842, we have that guarantee, because it has been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States that you must not try the man except for the offence specified in the treaty and for which he has been extradited, and they decided that on the ground that the treaty forms part of the law of the land in that country; but no such ground will apply if we pass this law; and, when we consider that all modern civilised nations insert express clauses to this effect in extradition treaties, it shows the importance which all Christian nations attach to this principle, and the danger we are running in legislating in this way without some protection of a similar kind. The question is so important that perhaps the hon. gentleman might report his Bill and consider it. There might be some means of meeting the objection. The hon. gentleman called my attention to the French treaty. Article IV of that reads as follows:—

"The present treaty shall apply to crimes and offences committed prior to the signature of the Treaty; but a person surrendered shall not be tried for any crime or offence committed in the other country before the extradition, other than the crime for which the surrender has been granted."

That is the Treaty of 1876. I think the hon. gentleman will find that my statement is correct. I have gone through six or seven modern treaties and I find the same provision in each. I was aware that the Treaty of 1842 did not contain that provision, but I have shown that the decision of the United States Supreme Court in the case of William Rauscher gave the same guarantee, because that decision was that a treaty is part of the law of the land, and the Supreme Court construed it in that way. Inasmuch as the treaty with the United States is part of the law of the land, they construe it to mean that you shall not try a man except for the offence for which he has been extradited.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). The matter has been carefully considered. The Bill was not hastily drawn, and this particular point received a great deal of consideration. I think I cannot give a better answer to the danger that the hon. gentleman has pointed out, than to re-read the paragraph I read some weeks ago, from the report of the Royal Commission on the whole subject of extradition. They recommend that the matter should be dealt with in this way, by statute:

"We would therefore suggest, that extradition treaties with other states, which appear to be practically of use only for the purpose of ensuring reciprocity, should no longer be held to be indispensable, and that, while the power of the Crown of entering into extradition treaties with other nations, as now existing by statute, should still be retained, statutory power should be given to the proper authorities to deliver up fugitive criminals whose surrender is asked for, irrespectively of the existence of any treaty between this country and the state against whose law the offence has been committed. It is as much to our advantage that such criminals should be punished, and that we should get rid of them, as it is to that of the foreign state that they should be brought within the reach of its law."

There were distinguished men on this Commission—Lord Cockburn, Sir W. Vernon Harcourt, Sir Fitz-James Stephen and Lord Selborne. It was not acted upon for the reason that shortly afterwards England had the good luck to have complete treaties with every important state except one, and that nation was so far away that she did not feel any need for it. An hon. gentleman on my left asked the question: Why are we pioneers in this legislation? It is because we are in the most peculiar position of any community in the world. England has complete extradition treaties with all her neighbors, containing a large list of crimes. But here we have a very imperfect treaty with the United States. Under the Ashburton Treaty, murderers, forgers, pirates, robbers and persons guilty of arson who come over from the south can be taken back again, but there is no provision for the very large class which this Bill provides for. If England had been able to get a treaty with the United States, like that which the hon. member read between England and France, and England and Belgium, there would be no need whatever for this Bill.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman sees that the plenipotentiaries of England and the United States did agree on a treaty similar in its lines to the one existing between Great Britain and Germany, and Great Britain and France. I want to call attention to the fact that the diplomats of these two countries inserted a special clause, notwithstanding the decision of the United States courts, to the very effect we are speaking of. A clause in the Treaty of 1886, which the Senate declined to ratify last year, provided that extradited criminals should not, until after having had an opportunity of returning to the State to which he had fled, be detained or tried for any offence prior to his surrender other than the extradition crime upon which the surrender was granted. It seems to me that all great countries see the importance of this protection, and have inserted it in their modern treaties; and unless the hon. gentleman can suggest to the House some mode by which we may have a similar protection afforded under legislation of this kind, I think it would be dangerous to proceed.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). There is one real danger, and that is, that a man may be taken out of this country for a crime named in this Bill and tried for a political offence.

Mr. SKINNER. Why don't you provide against that?

Mr. WELDON (Albert). There was a debate in the House of Lords on the Winslow case, and Lord Cairns declared—and there was an enormous weight of legal opinion with him—that it was an unnecessary effort to insist that the man should not be tried for a charge other than the one for which he was extradited, provided there was no invasion of the right of political asylum. If my memory is right, I have seen in the English Hansard a great weight of opinion in that direction, though I think that Lord Selborne was against Lord Cairns on that point. There were many able lawyers whose opinions were expressed in that debate to the effect that we need not concern ourselves too much, that we need not be too anxious in insisting upon that point, which was the point Lord Derby insisted upon in negotiations with Secretary Hamilton Fish. I do not think that it is an alarming thing that a man who is taken across for burglary should be tried for arson.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). The point raised by my hon. friend shows the importance of having this question guarded. We find, notwithstanding the report of that Commission which my hon. friend has read, and which report Parliament did not act upon, that Parliament preferred to have treaties. Lawyers generally desire to act by statutes, whereas statesmen desire to act by treaties, according to the comity of nations. It is an important fact that in nearly all modern treaties there is an express clause which protects parties from being tried for a political offence. For instance, a man is resident in Canada who is wanted badly in New York for an offence created by the statute of that State. If the man is guilty of the offence mentioned in the schedule, we cannot refuse to let him be taken over. While the parties are here they have a certain amount of protection within our borders. We say if they commit a certain crime we will surrender them for that purpose. We stand in a different position under a statute than we do under a treaty.

Mr. LISTER. The hon. gentleman must remember that he is not dealing with the Government of the United States at all. The Government of this country will be dealing with the several States of the Union, and there is not that guarantee, there is not that safeguard, that we would have if we were dealing with the Federal Government. To my mind it is a very objectionable feature of the Bill that there is no provision made for protecting persons against being tried for an offence other than the offence for which they have been extradited.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). The Extradition Act does not deal with the States.

Mr. LISTER. I know that, but the Act you propose here is to extradite criminals that do not come within the provision of the Extradition Treaty. In so far as the United States are concerned, unless you are dealing with the United States under treaty, you are dealing with each State of the Union, and the honor of the United States Government is not pledged to carry out what the hon. gentleman stated, viz.: they would try a man for the offence for which he was surrendered, and for no other offence. The Bill is objectionable also because it is retroactive in its effect. I doubt if any modern treaty can be found which is retroactive.

Committee rose, and, it being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee)

On section 3,

Mr. LAVERGNE. I object to the 2nd paragraph of the 3rd section of this Bill. As a matter of principle I think that the clause which provides that the Bill shall have a retroactive effect is very objectionable for several reasons. I could quite understand if this legislation was proposed for the purpose of affording some relief to some party without injuring some other party, and it might be admitted on that ground; but when it is intended to cover offences which may have been for years forgiven, if not forgotten, it is vey unfair, improper and unwise. On the faith of our laws a man comes to this country believing that he will find an asylum here. He settles down and becomes a good citizen; he often becomes the father of British subjects; his family becomes connected very often with respectable families; and it would be most unfair, and it would be an infringement of acquired rights, for a person from a foreign country to come and accomplish his arrest and his extradition. In many instances, persons who have been tried and discharged would be exposed to be re-arrested and compelled to undergo a second trial, or even a third, or fourth trial in this country. I might illustrate this by a case which happened in Quebec four or five years ago. This case is reported in the Quebec Law Reports at page 165 of the 10th volume. He was brought up a second time, and the case is reported at page 17[illegible]. He was brought up a third time, and the case is reported at page 177, and he was also brought up a fourth time, and the case is reported at page 194. Since that time this man has paid all his creditors, and obtained his discharge from them. No one is interested in prosecuting him now; but if this Bill should come into effect that man will be blackmailed by any one who chooses to do so. He has no means, but he had very rich relations in the United States, and the first thing that would be done, and it would be sure to occur, would be that he would be blackmailed almost every day, and he would live in trouble the rest of his life. That man might be liable under this Bill to be tried again, although he has been tried four times under our actual extradition laws, and discharged every time. For these reasons I hold that it would be very unjust, unfair, and a breach of acquired rights, to permit such a clause to remain part of the Bill. How many cases would the clause cover? It might cover five or six, and for the sake of laying hands on five or six offenders, it is proposed to do an unjust act and to infringe on acquired rights. I move in amendment:

That the second paragraph of section three be amended by omitting the words "whether such crime was" in the second line, and the words "before or" in the third line of the second paragraph of the third section.

Mr. CURRAN. I think the Committee should be unanimous in concurring in the views expressed in the amendment proposed by my hon. friend. The cases of hardship that would arise if it were passed in its present form, would be very numerous indeed. The objects mentioned as inducing this House to pass this Bill would all be attained by the measure without inserting this retroactive clause, to which objection has been raised. I know some cases in which the clause would operate with extreme harshness if it were enforced in the shape in which it is proposed. I am satisfied that if we show our desire to prevent parties coming into this country who may have been guilty of the offences which are aimed at by this Act, it will convince our neighbors that we are not desirous of having an accession to our population of persons who have been guilty of the offences complained of. The public sentiment of Canada is against those persons finding a refuge here; we do not wish that Canada should be an asylum for boodlers or persons who have been guilty of breaches of trust, and frauds which have become notorious and which are a standing shame. But nearly all hon. gentlemen with whom I have had any conversation on this subject, are of opinion that it would be far from just to let the Bill remain as it is with regard to this matter, and they believe that this retroactive clause should be expunged. I hope my hon friend from Albert (Mr. Weldon) will at once relieve the anxiety of the House on this point, and declare his intention to drop this retroactive clause so that we may proceed with the Bill and get through in a very short time.

Mr. TISDALE Will the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) drop that part of his Bill?

Mr. WELDON (Albert). There is no doubt that if we make a good rule for the future we have done the most important half of the work. There seems to be an almost universal opinion, so far as that opinion has been expressed in the House, that the principle as laid down in this Bill for the future is a salutary one. With reference to this section, which I think is somewhat misdescribed as a "retroactive section," I should like to say a word. I feel very strongly that we are not doing all the good that we may safely and reasonably do if we do not go a little further than merely shut the door in the future against those incoming criminals; but that we should drive out from our country, so far as we may, all the vagrant offenders who are here. Hon. members have said that a retroactive law is an unjust law and that retroactive criminal legislation is unjust legislation. I agree to that; but the element of injustice is in making a thing criminal and punishable to-day which was innocent at the time the so called criminal action was done If a man did a thing not knowing there were penal consequences and that subsequently, legislation attaching penal consequences was enacted, then the injustice would come in, and I agree that if this Bill had such provisions it would be in its essence retroactive, and would be bad. We are not now making a criminal law; we are not defining a crime, we are not now saying that an act shall be a guilty act which was not guilty when the offence was committed. They who burned houses, they who committed burglaries, they who robbed banks and they who wrecked railway trains, knew when they committed these crimes that they were crimes and we are not now legislating to make them more criminal. By accident these criminals escaped the officers of justice and crossed the boundary line and all we say is that when a prima facie case is made out against them "let them go back." Hon. members speak of this retroactive principle as if it were a new one, and as if it were not an established law of the country. They speak of this retroactive principle as if it were not already embodied and a part of the law as between Canada and the United States in the Ashburton Treaty. Let me remind the Committee that almost the very first criminal who was arrested under the Ashburton Treaty, was a Scotch women named Christiana Gilmour, whose crime was committed before the date of the treaty. At this very hour as between Canada and almost all highly civilised states with the exception of one state—as between Canada and France, as between Canada and Italy, as between Canada and Germany, as between Canada and Brazil, as between Canada and Austro-Hungary, as between Canada and Belgium, it is true that the very moment the treaties with these countries were confirmed laying down the extradition law between Canada and them; that under the operation of our extradition statute, criminals from Germany, Austria, Brazil, Italy and the other countries, who had been lurking in Canadian cities before the date of the treaties immediately fell under the ban of these treaties in respect to crimes committed before the treaty, and were subject to extradition. Therefore the principle of retroactive legislation in this respect is not a new principle. It is the existing principle of law governing our relations at this very hour as between Canada and almost every civilised state. Why should we depart from that good practice? Why repeal in this matter the law that was wisely passed by this Parliament in 1877? Why depart from the good example that the English Parliament set us in 1870 and made clearer still by the amending Act of the Imperial Parliament in 1873? I desire to remind hon. members of this House that in 1873 the English Parliament in amending the Extradition Act made clear the rule that the operation of the treaties thereafter to be entered into in so far as England was concerned was to be retroactive. With the permission of the House I will read that section of the Imperial Act of 1873 amending the Act of 1870 which contained that provision. Sub-section 2 of this Act says:

"And whereas doubts have arisen as to the application of the said section to crimes committed before the passing of the principal Act, and it is expedient to remove such doubts, it is therefore hereby declared that—a crime committed before the date of the order includes in the said section a crime committed before the passing of the principal Act, and the principal Act and this Act shall be construed accordingly."

We see, therefore, in this Act, which was passed in 1873, that in the British Isles and in Canada, so long as that Act governed Canada, it was true that in the specific treaty we made with Austria a few months later, in the treaty with Belgium made four months later, in the treaty with Denmark made a year later, in the treaty with France made three years later, in the treaty with Luxemburg made seven years later, in the treaty with Russia made thirteen years later, and in the treaties with Scandinavia, Switzerland, Uruguay and the other countries which I need not name; it came about that the very moment these treaties were entered into, French, or German, or Belgian, or Italian criminals, or criminals from other countries, who were lurking in London in the absence of the treaty fell under the bann of the treaty, and the moment the ratification of these treaties came to London that moment those criminals fled like leaves before the wind in autumn. This, then, is not a new principle, and hon. gentlemen are asking us to depart from a principle well established in the existing law. I recognise this case of hardship which the hon. gentleman speaks of. I think it touches the feelings of all of us, but we can only say that one of the most lamentable consequences of crime is that innocent parties are liable to suffer. Take one of those parties who committed crime eight years ago and who fled to Canada and has been doing well ever since. Take his brother in crime who fled to the mountain wilds of Idaho in the American territories and it touches our sympathies that the blackmailers, or officers of justice, or whatever you may call them should follow that poor fellow into the American territory and bring him back. For that hardship there is no remedy, and the elements of hardships are the same here. The facts are that no legislature upon this earth has been so extremely sensitive in guarding the right of asylum as the English Imperial Legislature, but when they had occasion to amend their Extradition Act, I desire to call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that they amended it, not in the direction of making its retroactive clauses weaker, but in the direction of making those retroactive clauses stronger. We have evidence here, from the practical experience of that very delicate and very sensitive Legislature about guarding the rights of asylum, that a case of hardship has not arisen as a consequence of their legislation in this respect. I think hon. members seem to be affected by the appeals to their sympathy. I do not think it is wise to appeal too much to our sympathies. There are other sympathies that might be aroused. I might, if I wished, refer to the victims of the crimes of those who seek a refuge in Canada. I might refer to the helpless women and children thrown on the streets as a consequence of these crimes, but I will not go into the sympathy part of the argument, and I will confine myself to the legal aspect of the question entirely. I rely upon the legal merits of the case, and the legal considerations which I have advanced, and I rely strongly on the fact that the English Legislature has not moved in this direction, but in the opposite direction. I do not think it is necessary for me to make any longer statement at present with reference to this matter. I think the dangers which hon. gentlemen opposite have conjured up are imaginary dangers. I think, as a matter of fact, in the case of these crimes of long standing, that the parties interested in the prosecution of them have forgotten all about them. We know that this is true in our own country, that criminals who have not fled beyond the borders, if they become good citizens, are rarely disturbed. Therefore, I do not think the cases which have been conceived will arise. But the class of men whom we wish to get at are the class of men whose cases do not touch our sympathies; they are men who come to this country with their hands full of plunder, men who have caused unutterable anguish and distress in many cases in the countries from which they have come; and I ask the House not only to do a good work for the future, but also to drive out of the country the flagrant offenders who are here. This country surely does not wish to have these people here. What good can they do? What benefit can we derive from men who have broken banks and wrecked railway trains? During the last five years there seems to have been a carnival of crime on this continent. How much money these men have brought here, I do not know, but we know that they have carried a great deal, and I think it is money that is doing very little good to this country. Therefore, I am extremely unwilling to accept the suggestion of my hon. friend from Montreal Centre (Mr. Curran), who supported the principle of the Bill, for which I thank him most warmly, unless better reasons are given than those which have yet been advanced, to withdraw this sub-section 2 of section 3.

Mr. DENISON. Notwithstanding what the hon. mover of the Bill has said, I am opposed to having this Act made retroactive. Whether these men have behaved themselves well or not since they have been here is not a question we are to consider, They sought an asylum in Canada at a time when they might have sought an asylum elsewhere. While I take this position, I am heartily in accord with the Bill. I think it much to be deprecated that men of this class should come from the other side to settle in our midst. It is a bad example to our young men to see these persons giving in luxury on their ill-gotten gains; but I think the Act should not be made retroactive.

Mr. TISDALE. I think the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) hardly showed a parallel case in regard to the law he spoke of as that relates entirely to treaties. We are passing a statute; we have no control over the individuals at all after they leave our state and go into any foreign country; so that the law he speaks of as being retroactive under the treaties, while to a certain extent applicable, applies to a different state of affairs from that existing between this country and the United States. I can remember cases extending as far back as thirty years ago, when people came to this country for many of the offences which he wishes to make them liable to be tried for now—people who have settled down in the country, have gathered families about them, and who, if they did commit the crimes alleged against them, are now in every way respectable and desirable members of society. I mention that, not simply as a matter of sympathy; I say it is a matter of justice that those people should not be disturbed. Moreover, while the hon. gentleman wishes us to experiment in legislation to a certain extent on matters of such importance, surely he ought not to press us to go so far as that, because he himself admitted this afternoon that there is no precedent for this legislation. I am in accord with the spirit of the Bill; I think we should be protected, if we can get proper protection and we apply it reasonably; but I had no idea but that the hon. gentleman when asked to do so would withdraw this retroactive provision. I did not expect that he would get up and attempt to defend it at any length. I was quite prepared to hear him state the reasons why he inserted that clause in the Bill. If he adopts the suggestion which has been made I think he will shorten the discussion, and satisfy the feelings of the House. This feature of the Bill is a most dangerous one. Anyone who knows anything about the history of many of these people who have come to this country in the last fifty years will agree with me that it is so. It goes through every class of offences which are indictable, such as false pretences, threatening letters, petty embezzlements, thefts of $50, &c. These are the classes of crimes which it would have these people tried for—people who have come to the country, made respectable connections, and settled down into good citizens. Even if they were guilty, surely a life of respectability for that length of time has condoned them. I say no country in the world has adopted this kind of legislation, and no respectable legislature, in my opinion, should be asked, in the case of a new law, to take all these risks, because the hon. gentleman has wedded himself so strongly to it. I regret that he is not willing to be influenced by the protests which have been made by both sides of the House, by gentlemen who have had experience in this country, and who know something of the state of affairs in Ontario at any rate. I want to see the Bill pass, but I do not wish to see it pass in such a form that it may become an engine of wrong and of discredit to people who, whatever they have been in the past, are respectable people to-day. The United States say to us that they are not going to have an Extradition Treaty. We are teaching them, and I think in a proper way; but seeing that no country has ever tried this experiment, it is surely far enough to go to legislate for future crimes, and not to make the measure retroactive.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not think I will attempt to improve on the speech of my hon. friend who has just sat down. He gives utterance to exactly my own sentiments on this subject. The Bill proposes to take a step in a direction which, as he properly says, has not been travelled over before. The expressed object of the mover of the Bill is to teach the Americans, at all events, that if no Extradition Treaty exists between the two countries, the fault is not the fault of Canada; and I think when we have gone so far as to place on our Statute book a law which gives to the executive of the country the power to deal with questions such as are stated in the Bill, and to hand these men—who are charged with certain offences—over, we are taking a step in advance of anything that has been done before by any state that I know of. I entirely agree with my hon. friend that if men have come into the country ten, twenty, or four or five years ago, we are not going in a free country like this to condemn people before their trials. If these people have settled in the country, have had their families, have lived respectably, and, whatever their antecedents may have been, have become good citizens, I think it would be an act of extreme hardship to pass a statute retroactive in its operation, and calculated to place these men under the ban of a law that did not exist when they came and accepted the hospitality of Canada. I am not going to take up the time of the House discussing it, because it has been so ably discussed that I think I would only be taking up time unnecessarily in so doing, but I will say that the hon. the mover of this Bill ought to be satisfied if this House is willing to concede the principle of his Bill and accept its details excluding the third subsection and not press this retroactive clause further.

Mr. WALLACE. I think one of the best features of the Bill is this very clause. The principal object of the Bill is to purify our country, and if you permit those robbers, and boodlers and plunderers, who are now to be found in every city of Canada, demoralising the young men of this country by flaunting their ill-gotten wealth in the faces of the people, to stay here, the principal objects of the Bill will be defeated. I, therefore, think we should retain that clause. Those men are not wanted in this country, and if the Bill passes with this clause in it, there will still be ample time for them to clear out.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman speaks about purifying the country, but when he remembers that, according to a recent estimate, there are 188 rascals in this House to 13 saints, he has got a very formidable task before him. Now I think that the Government in this matter are undertaking to abdicate their functions. The Government have put this Bill on the Orders of the Day, and are now leaving the Bill and the hon. gentleman who has charge of it, to take care of themselves. If there is any question which the Government ought to have a policy, it is a policy relating to the administration of public affairs. Many years ago a discussion took place in the House of Commons, England, between Sir Robert Peel and Lord Macaulay, then Mr. Macaulay, as to how far the Government ought to undertake to control legislation, but there was one point on which they were agreed, and that was that every measure relating to the proper administration of justice and every measure relating to the administration of any one department was a proper measure for the Government to take charge of and to exercise control over. Now, this is a measure essentially of public administration which affects the administration of justice in this country. We are told that there are in Canada a large number of persons who are fugitives from justice, and who belong to this class of criminals. It is true they have not offended against our law, but they have offended against the law elsewhere, and after the hon. gentleman has brought his Bill before the Committee, and the House has entered upon its discussion, the Minister of Justice, who is supposed to take charge of measures of this sort and to exercise a controlling influence over them, has, so far, not taken any interest in the matter at all. So far as I am concerned, I do not intend to assume the responsibility that rests on him, and I think that is the intention of the House generally; and it seems to me that if this Bill is to be amended, if it is to go through the Committee and become law, it should be under the control of the House, guided by the Minister of Justice. Now, this much is clear. From the statement that I have read to the House, the opinion expressed by Mr. Bigelow, based upon the decision of Holmes vs. Jennieson, we will never have a requisition, under this Bill, from the United States. They have decided that the States have no right to enter into any contract or arrangement with any foreign power or state, they have decided that this matter belongs to the Government of the United States, and is to be exercised only under a treaty or compact with the foreign state; and that being the case, we are never likely to have any requisition under this Bill, although we may indicate our good intentions by passing it. I am not objecting to a Bill on this subject put in proper form, but I am objecting to our undertaking to discharge here the duties that ought to devolve upon the Administration.

Mr. SKINNER. I know of two cases of parties who came to Canada, one about twelve years ago and the other about ten years ago, who committed offences under what might be called commercial crimes referred to in this Bill. Since they came to Canada they have lived respectable, honest lives, so far as we know, and have brought up their families in Canada. Their children, to my knowledge, do not know why the parents came here or why they should be in Canada at all, but have simply grown up in the community where they are as others have. Yet if this retrospective clause becomes law, those two families will become at once desolate. The hon. gentleman says the parents may never be arrested, but there would be the knowledge that they might be arrested, and he knows that nothing can have a more injurious effect upon a citizen than to know that he may hear the tramp of the policeman at his door at any time, and that his family may thus become destroyed. The hon. gentleman says that is appealing to sympathy, and he says he has nothing to do with sympathy, but is acting on the abstract principles of justice. I do not call dealing with the question in this way appealing to sympathy. I say it would be a greater crime to destroy those families than to commit some of the crimes mentioned in the schedule. Therefore I ask the House to hesitate before they adopt this retrospective clause, which will affect parties who have grown up in our midst under such circumstances. The hon. gentleman has referred, in support of his Bill, to treaties which, he says, were retrospective in their operations, and to a certain extent he is correct, but not wholly. I think that he will find that the treaties to which he refers cover the more malignant class of crime, such as murder, burglary, and so forth, enumerated in them. But in this Bill the hon. gentleman has included every possible crime that can possibly be committed under the statute law of Canada, or under the common law of the country. Therefore, he is going much further than did those treaties. Had these treaties gone as far as his Bill, they would never have been made retrospective. I do not say that I would object, so far as the grosser and more malignant crimes are concerned, such as murder, to support a retrospective clause; but when we come to consider commercial crimes, crimes committed under perhaps extenuating circumstances and the perpetrators of which may not be so bad as those who committed the crimes such as murder, and so forth, and the perpetrators of which may, by a course of repentance, have in a measure atoned for them, and by leading proper lives have become good citizens, have brought up good families, ornaments to the society in which they live—we ought to pause before putting forth our hand and sweeping away with one fell swoop all the rights, liberties and privileges of innocent people, children and women, and bring desolation on them too terrible to describe?

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I did not think it worth while discussing the list of crimes until we come to them, but the hon. gentleman says that the treaties with Belgium, France, Italy and other countries contain a much smaller list of crimes than these. That is an inaccurate statement. I will read the list of commercial crimes contained in one treaty. They are as follows:—Counterfeiting or altering money, or uttering counterfeit or altered money; forgery, or counterfeiting, or altering, or uttering what is forged or counterfeited or altered; embezzlement or larceny; obtaining money or goods by false pretences; crimes by bankrupts against bankruptcy law, fraud by bailee, banker, agents, factor, trustee or director, or member or public officer of any company made criminal by any law for the time being in force; threats by letter or otherwise with intent to extort. The list of crimes contained in the treaty with Belgium are very much the same as those contained here—counterfeiting, and the cognate crimes; larceny and the cognate crimes, offences against the bankruptcy laws, and so on. When we come to the list of crimes in this Bill, there is an amendment which I will suggest. There is a limitation which has been accidentally omitted from one of the items in the list, and, when that has been made, I think the hon. member will find that, instead of this list of commercial crimes being larger it is narrower than that in the treaties to which I refer.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 4,

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I propose to insert an amendment embodying a suggestion from an hon. member across the floor, which will, I think, remove an objection which was taken at an earlier stage of the Bill, namely, to secure that a man may not be surrendered by Canada to the officers of a foreign state and be tried for some offence other than that for which he has been surrendered. The object of the amendment is to put a section in the Bill that the Minister of Justice shall not be empowered to surrender a criminal unless, in the requisition which comes from the foreign state asking for such surrender, there shall be an undertaking that the person so surrendered shall be tried for the offence for which he is surrendered and no other. I therefore move this:

This Act shall not authorise the issue of a warrant for the extradition of any person to any State or country in which, by the law in force in such State or country, such person may be tried after such extradition for any offence other than that for which he has been extradited, unless an assurance shall first have been given by the executive authority of such State or country that the person whose extradition has been claimed shall not be tried for any other offence than that on account of which such extradition has been claimed.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I would suggest the insertion of the words "in pursuance of this Statute," because the treaty is still in force.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). Yes.

On schedule,

Mr. TISDALE. I move that after the word "larceny" be added the words "to the extent of $200 and upwards." We do not want men to be carried over on trivial charges. I think it is $50 in the treaties, but it seems to me you ought to make it a little more important than that. We do not want them taken over for thefts.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would not make that change.

Mr. LISTER. The state demanding the extradition, pays all the extra expense. It is no cost to this country.

Mr. TISDALE. It might lead to the gratification of spite. But I will not insist.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would suggest that after the word "abduction," "indecent assault" be included.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). There is no objection to that.

Threats by letter or otherwise, with intent to extort.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I know that offence is mentioned in many of the treaties, but it does appear to me that it may be made an engine of oppression. It certainly is not a very heinous offence in many cases. I do not think it is really judicious to put it in.

Mr. TISDALE. I think we should at least strike out the words "or otherwise."

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would almost press the sense of the House upon that. I think it is carrying it a little too far. On the border states where a great deal of business is transacted by different people, an enemy might make use of this clause to punish another person where there is very little offence indeed.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). The offence might be removed. The Government should have power to proclaim that such items as, in their judgment they think best, should be struck out.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Surely we are not going to delegate to the Government legislation of this kind. Surely this is a matter above all others where the House should formulate its own judgment.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I differ from the hon. gentleman for the reason that we are dealing with many countries. When you are dealing with this matter by treaty, you can adjust your treaty to existing conditions in the various countries. For instance, Great Britain might make a different list of crimes with Spain than with Denmark. But now you are making a law that will contain a list of crimes applying to all nations. We should give the Government some power of choosing what offences should be named when the Act applies to the United States on the one hand, and to Mexico on the other, such discretion as plenipotentiaries should exercise.

Mr. BLAKE. The Government has not any discoverable opinions on this Act.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would move to strike out this section.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not know whether it was designedly or not, but the hon. member has omitted from this schedule the very class of offences that he said he introduced the Act to cover. He says we are making an asylum for bank robbers, swindlers, fraudulent trustees and the very class which is inserted in every extradition treaty made between nations, is omitted altogether. I have copied out the words which I find in all other treaties, and I move that they be added:

Fraud committed by a bailee, banker, agent, factor, trustee, or member or public officer of any company or municipal corporation, made criminal by any law for the time being in force.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I gladly accept that amendment.

Mr. TISDALE. Does the hon. gentleman propose to retain the crime of perjury in the list?

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I withdraw it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I suggest that the following be inserted: "Any malicious act done with intent to injure persons in a railway train."

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I suppose that will be covered by section 21.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That covers a vast class of undefined offences, which I do not think it desirable to have in this Bill.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). When we come to section 21, I have an amendment to make which will limit the offences to those declared to be felonies under the Act.

Mr, LISTER. I call the attention to section 13, "arson." The definition of arson according to the common law is very limited.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is construed by statute.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) In regard to the amendment I suggest, I may say that I took it from the schedule of crimes contained in the several treaties.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not raise any objection to the insertion of the words suggested.

Mr. TISDALE. Why are the words "municipal law" added in a subsequent section? Those words are not in any of the treaties.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I can give an illustration. If I mistake not, by the laws both of England and the United States the slave trade is piracy, although the carrying of slaves is not piracy by the law of nations.

Mr. TISDALE. Section 21 raises a question too large to consider to-night. The five Acts there referred to cover I suppose at least 150 pages, and to say that we are going to incorporate them in this Bill and to declare that the offences therein contained shall be misdemeanors is asking too much from this Committee. I will give an illustration. It is made a felony by one of these Acts to destroy a poll book. We do not want to send some one back to the United States on account of an election row. I give that as an example which I noticed on glancing at one of the Acts a moment ago, and it forces me to the conclusion that these Acts should be carefully examined before we pass this clause. We have largely extended the list of extraditable offences, and the hon. gentleman might be satisfied with the progress made. I do not think we should pass it in this general shape. I think we should make a list of the crimes.

Mr. WELDON (Albert). I will withdraw section 21 of the Bill.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I move that the Committee rise and report the Bill. In doing so I wish to advert for an instant to an observation made by the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) with reference to my duty on the subject of a Bill of this kind. I was satisfied that the hon. member for Bothwell was in a jocose mood when he referred to me and desired that I should express an opinion on this Bill, and I would have continued under that impression had it not been for the observation which was subsequently made indicating that it was impossible to ascertain the opinions of the Government on this Bill. When I moved that the Speaker should leave the Chair, at the request of the leader of the Opposition, I made a distinct statement on that subject. I said that the hon. member who had the Bill in charge would explain it to the Committee and I was moved to that by the knowledge that the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) had taken a great interest in this subject, and had given it a great deal of very careful study, but I coupled with that the statement that the Government approved of the Bill, and thought it a Bill of much public importance, and, in consequence of that, had moved it to the Government Orders.

Bill reported and read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—EXPORT DUTY ON LOGS.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. CHARLTON. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the Government and of the House, to a matter that has been repeatedly brought to their notice by influential delegations of the second greatest industry in this country. I refer to the export duty upon logs. The attitude of the lumber trade of Canada, with regard to this question at the present time, is one of very great unanimity and the removal of the duty has been urged upon the Government from all quarters in this Dominion. I rise here to-night at the solicitation of the Lumbermen's Association of Ontario, the largest lumbermen's association of this Dominion, to bring this matter publicly before the attention of the Government as it has been repeatedly brought to their notice by private representations. The Lumbermen's Association of Ontario took this matter into consideration on the 7th day of of February last in Toronto. The question was fully debated before that association and the result was that certain resolutions were passed with but two dissenting voices in the entire association. A deputation was appointed to wait on the Government here and an interview was arranged for on the 23rd February. That deputation included representatives from the Lumbermen's Association of Ontario as well as a large deputation from Quebec and a large deputation from the Ottawa valley. They came here and held a preliminary meeting at the Russell House and at that meeting the question was again fully debated, and the resolutions passed by the Ontario Lumbermen's Association were sanctioned by nearly a unanimously vote; five members I think voted against the resolutions and expressed the desire that the duty should be reduced to $1 per thousand feet. The deputation waited on the Privy Council in the afternoon and it is needless to say they were received with the utmost courtesy. It was estimated that some $25,000,000 capital invested in the lumbering business was represented on that deputation that waited on the Government. Subsequent to that interview with the Government, deputations from Quebec, deputations from Toronto, deputations from the Ottawa valley, and from various parts of Canada waited on the Government, and memorials were presented to the Government by the Quebec Board of Trade, the Toronto Board of Trade, and a large and influential deputation of the latter body waited on the Minister of Finance with reference to this matter. Now, Sir, the feeling evinced by the lumber trade, represented by these delegations show most conclusively that the lumbering interests of Canada are very sensitive on to this matter. I propose to enter into this matter very briefly and to state the reasons why the feeling is such on this question. We have a lumber tariff in this country, and the United States imposes a duty on our own sawn lumber. The American duty is $2 per thousand feet and the Canadian duty 20 per cent. ad valorem, so that as far as reciprocity in lumber is concerned we stand on an equality with the American Government. However, we levy an export duty on logs and the American Government does not, so that we have more than reciprocity in this respect. While at the present moment our export duty is $3 per thousand, the American Congress is debarred by constitutional restriction from imposing any export duty whatever. When the duty was raised to $3 per thousand last winter, it provoked a good deal of ill-feeling in the United States, and it led to an examination as to the relative amount, of the export of logs between the two countries. I believe the American Consul here was the first to examine our Trade and Navigation Returns in regard to that question, and the statement he made seemed to be incredible. It was found, however, on an examination of the returns, that his statement was perfectly correct. The examination revealed the fact that the export of logs from Canada to the United States from 1880 to 1888, nine years, was $2,351,339, while the imports of logs into Canada from the United States during the same period was $4,309,850, or nearly double our exports to the United States; and this takes no account of that vast trade from the State of Maine down the River St. John to St. John, N.B, which does not appear at all in our Trade and Navigation returns. Of the volume of that trade we have only estimates. An estimate made by a gentleman who is familiar with the business puts it at from 50 to 100,000,000 feet of spruce, pine and cedar per annum, and the value of the trade at $700,000 per annum; so that it amounted to $6,300,000 during the period of nine years. That would bring our total imports from the United States during that period up to $10,619,850, or four times the value of the export from Canada to the United States. The trade with St. John, a large trade in the Rainy River Valley, and the trade between the State of Minnesota and Manitoba furnish the greater amount of the logs exported from the United States to Canada.

The movement in the United States in reference to this matter has assumed a form which inspires the lumbermen in this country with some degree of apprehension as to the consequences. Our export duty on logs has before this time attracted attention. When the Mills' Bill was framed, it placed lumber on the free list, except in the case of countries imposing an export duty. In the case of such countries the lumber remained at the old rate of $2 per thousand feet. The Senate Bill introduced last winter reduced the duty on lumber 50 cents a thousand feet, to apply to countries not imposing an export duty. So that under either of these Bills, had they become law, we would have suffered from the imposition of an export duty, so far as our export trade in lumber is concerned. Now, it is said, I do not know with what degree of truth, that when the Senate Bill was considered in Committee last Session at Washington, but for the existence of the export duty in Canada, our chances would have stood well for a reduction of the duty to $1 per thousand; but that the existence of that export duty prevented a reduction of more than 50 cents per thousand. The most dangerous feature of the matter, however, is the action taken by the lumber trade in the United States in connection with this increase in the export duty. It was at once seized upon by the lumber trade as a reason for demanding from Congress an increase in the lumber duties, and the demand was also a general one that a provision should be adopted in the tariff which would provide that, the lumber imported from any foreign country levying an export duty, should be subjected to a duty equal to the amount of the export duty. I have here a blank form of a petition which was extensively circulated, and I believe extensively signed, and forwarded to Congress from the States of Michigan and Wisconsin; and the clause in this petition relating to the export duty is as follows:—

"That in case any foreign country shall impose an export duty upon logs, shingle-bolts or other kinds of wood, that may be designed for, or used as, the raw material of any American saw-mill, mill, or factory, than the sawn lumber, shingles, or other manufactured product of such kinds of logs, bolts or wood, as may have an export duty imposed upon it by such country, shall, when imported from such country, be subject, in addition to the regular duty provided by law, to an additional duty equivalent to the amount of such export duty, and that such additional duty shall be imposed upon any article that might otherwise be upon the free list."

Now, Sir, if the prayer of that petition were granted, under the present condition of things, the duty on lumber would be $5 per thousand on lumber imported into the United States from Canada—the regular duty of $2, and the plenary or added duty of $3 per thousand, so long as our export duty should be enforced; and I think I may safely say to the Finance Minister that I do not think he would long retain an export duty of $3 per thousand on logs if there were a provision in the American law adding that much to the import duty on lumber from Canada. It is this feature of the case which inspires the lumbermen of this country with alarm, and the additional feature that the existence of this export duty is used by that vast and influential lumber interest in the United States as the most potent argument within their reach to influence Congress to resist any reduction in the lumber duties, and to demand, if possible, an increase of those duties. The personnel of the American administration is now much more favorable to their interests than was that of President Cleveland. We have in place of Mr. Bayard as Secretary of State, Mr. Blaine, a gentleman from the lumber State of Maine, who is thoroughly conversant with this question, and thoroughly in sympathy with the lumber interest of that State. We have, also, in place of Mr. Fairchild, as Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Windom, from the State of Minnesota. These facts place their interests on a much more favorable basis than they would have stood upon under Mr. Cleveland's Cabinet; and it is morally certain that the continuance of the present export duty, or the continuance of any export duty, will have a most powerful bearing on this question, When Congress comes to revise its tariff at its next meeting, the existence of that duty will powerfully influence Congress in refusing a reduction of the duty, and possibly will result in increasing it. The interest demanding this is a very powerful one. We have the lumber States of Maine, Pennsylvania, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, California, Oregon and Washington, and we have the vast lumber interest which has recently grown up in various parts of the South. These interests will make common cause, and they ask no better weapon to be placed in their hands than the existence of this export duty, which they will appeal to for the purpose of rousing prejudice and animosity, in order to obtain that which cool and sober argument would fail to secure

The idea that we are in anywise protected in this matter—that the Americans must have our lumber, and that the producer pays the duty—is the one that no lumberman in Canada takes any stock in. This country does not export to the United States one-thirtieth of the quantity of lumber the United States produce; for every thousand feet we export to them they produce thirty thousand of their own, and our small export to them can scarcely affect in any degree the vast production or the price in that country. The extent of timber in the south is practically limitless, and that business has recently sprung into existence. There is a belt of pine from the centre of Virginia, through North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi and Louisiana having an average width of 100 miles; and besides Texas and Florida have very extensive forests of pine, and it is said that there is enough pine in that region to supply the United States for centuries, because the timber renews itself every thirty or forty years, and there being no severe winters, the season or growth extends over the entire year. The woods are not subject to the devastation of fire as they are in Canada and other northern parts, because the fire can go through these woods, through which you can drive a waggon easily in any direction, there being no undergrowth, without injuring the timber. A vast amount of capital is being invested in this region. Michigan men and Wisconsin men are establishing mills and producing lumber there, the railway accommodation has been constantly improving, and the competition against Canadian lumber is, therefore, constantly increasing. That competition is driving Canadian lumber out of the markets of Philadelphia and Boston and other seaboard cities of the States, and is also rapidly gaining favor in the markets of Chicago, Buffalo, Cleveland and Albany. In certain grades of lumber the markets will be entirely supplied from that district. One of the largest Ottawa lumbermen, Mr. Booth, told me the other day that, in certain lines of 10-inch stocks, which he had been in the habit of selling in the United States, largely for the purpose of being stripped into wainscoting, the price last year averaged $2 per thousand feet less than he could get in former years, and the prospect for the sale of this lumber is still worse this year—all due to the competition of the southern lumbermen. This competition is gradually encroaching on the markets in the north, which hitherto we regarded as our own, and our better pine is besides rapidly giving way to the yellow poplar lumber of the south, which is usurping its place. In consequence of this competition, the prices of our best clear stuff pine in New York, Albany and other markets have decreased from $4 to $6 per thousand feet board measure within the last three or four years. So that we are meeting a competition which is fiercer and more troublesome than any we have hitherto met, and hence our lumbermen desire that the export duty, which has produced but very little revenue and which threatens to entail serious consequences upon us, far greater in magnitude than the benefits we derive from it, should be removed. Now, if we could secure a reduction in the American tariff of $1 per thousand feet on our sawn lumber, which the southern pine is driving out of the market, it would be a very great boon indeed to the lumbering interests of this country, but if the duty be advanced $1 per thousand feet, it would be a very great disaster for these interests. It would not only affect the lumbermen, but the bankers, merchants, farmers and laborers of this country, because almost every business in Canada is intimately connected with the great lumber interest of this country. The prayer and desire on the part of our lumbermen acquainted with the situation is that our export duty may be removed.

I will show how small the financial results of this duty have been to this Government. We have collected upon pine logs exported since 1867 a total amount of $118,424, being an average of $5,382 per year. The total amount of duty collected upon spruce logs has been $141,273, or an average of $6,421 per year. The total amount of duty upon logs, shingle bolts, and everything upon the list exported since Confederation has been $259,677, or an annual average of $11,804; and the average duty on pine which we have collected since 1881 has been but $3,135; and from 1881 to 1885, under a duty of $1 per thousand feet, the average annual amount collected was $1,634. Yet in the face of that diminution, indicating an almost extinct trade, the export duty was put up to $2 per thousand feet; and then, as if there were a necessity for a further increase, it was put up to $3 a thousand feet, the only effect being the producing of irritation on the part of the Americans, the attracting of their attention to the relative and greater volume of their log export to Canada as compared with the Canadian log export to the United States and the threatening of disaster to the lumber trade of this country. The total value of the export of pine logs since 1867 has been but $595,000, an average of $27,000 a year, and the total value of spruce logs exported since 1867 has been $6?8,000, or $28,565 per year. The total value of all exports of logs, subject to export duty, shingle bolts, pine and spruce logs, pine, oak and spruce, has been but $1,224 000 since 1867, or an annual average of $55,630. That average since 1880, under the duty of $1, has fallen to $43,000 per year; and from 1867 the total value of our export of everything upon which an export duty has been levied, bolts of all kinds, logs of all kinds, for these twenty-two years, is only one-seventh as much as the sawn lumber export from Canada for one single year. Yet this duty threatens to have the effect of increasing the duty imposed by the United States on our lumber, or at any rate, to prevent the reduction that we might hope to obtain, and this threatens to destroy this export trade.

I am not going to accuse the Government of having imposed that duty through any desire to injure any interest in Canada I know this duty was first imposed at the solicitation of a portion of the Canadian lumber interest, and increased at the same solicitation, and increased the second time at the solicitation of that same interest. I am willing to give the Government the credit of having acted in good faith and with the desire of meeting the wishes of the trade, but certainly last fall the Government increased the duty to $3 without examining sufficiently the desire of the trade throughout the country. I am not here, however, to charge the Government with having acted with any desire except to promote the interests of the country—but the lumber trade has changed position in this matter. We know this last increase of duty to $3 a thousand feet has attracted attention to the matter in the United States, an attention which has revealed a state of the log trade which we ourselves were ignorant of, and has been used by the lumber interest of the United States to resist a movement for the reduction of the American duty and to cause it to be replaced by a movement to retaliate which may lead to disastrous results. It is these reasons that influence the lumber trade to ask the Government to reverse the action which at their solicitation the Government took. It is threatened with disaster, and it is solicited with a great degree of unanimity that the Government will remove this duty and promote a better state of feeling between the two countries. Should this be done we will be placed in a better position to secure concessions with regard to the American lumber tariff which otherwise we would not secure. I do not know that one Government has a much better record in regard to this duty than the other. The Mackenzie Government has a somewhat better record than the other Government, because it refused to abolish the duty which was imposed, I believe, anterior to Confederation, and was continued by the first Government after Confederation. When that Government went out of power, and my hon. friend to my right (Sir Richard Cartwright) became Finance Minister, the Government refused to abolish the duty entirely, but they made two important concessions. They abolished the duty on round oak logs, and they made a ruling as to the classification of timber which was in accordance with common sense and the requirements of the trade. That Government decided by departmental order that logs subject to duty should be sticks of timber up to 18 feet in length, and that round timber upwards of 18 feet in length—masts, spars, piling and that class of timber—should be exempt from duty. That abolition of the duty on logs over 18 feet minimised the evil by removing the duty on a class of timber used for the same purposes as square timber, and not designed for sawn lumber. The Lumbermen's Association, on the 7th February last, adopted a resolution which set forth the reasons which probably actuated the Mackenzie Government in making that change. The first resolution was as follows:—

"That the export trade in long round timber is an advantageous one for Canada. Timber of this class is not exported for the purpose of being converted into ordinary sawn lumber. Its preparation and delivery at the point of shipment involves the expenditure of more money in Canada, as a rule, than the conversion of the same timber into lumber would do. It is used for the same general purposes as square pine timber, and the waste in squaring the timber is avoided. The round timber trade is at least as desirable as the trade in board or waney pine, in the preparation of which the hollow butted, the shaky, and the knotty portions of the tree are left in the woods to rot, while in the preparation of long round timber, small hollows in the butt end, and the rough portions of the tree in the top are not cut out of the stick. There is at least as little reason for the imposition of an export duty upon long round timber as there would be upon square pine or board pine."

For this reason, the association sets forth that, in the classification, at least, a distinction should be drawn between long timber and short logs which are designed for sawn lumber.

I need not remind the Government that this movement, this desire which has been expressed by the trade for the removal of the duty is strictly non-political. I do not stand up here as a member of the Opposition, but as a representative of the lumber trade, and I place before the Government these considerations as bearing upon a great interest in this country in which men of all politics are engaged and in regard to which they have petitioned the Government. The deputation, large and influential in point of ability and wealth, which waited on the Government in regard to this matter, was composed of men of both parties, and I do not think there was any deputation in reference to this matter which has waited on the Government during the present Session which was confined, in its personnel, to members of one party alone. There is one further consideration which I will press upon the Government. I consider it a moral certainty that the action of the American Congress, when it next meets, will be such as to compel this Government to abrogate this duty.

Mr. HESSON. They cannot do it.

Mr. CHARLTON. They cannot do it? It is only a year ago that the Minister of Finance asked for power to abrogate the duty by Order in Council, the reason given being that the Mills' Bill, which had then been introduced in Congress and was likely to become law, might affect a country which had an export duty and had not the power of removing the duty, and he asked for power to remove the duty if it was found to be necessary. It is owing to that request made by Sir Charles Tupper that the Government may, if they choose, abolish this duty to-day. If the threat of a duty of $2 a thousand would lead the Government to ask for that power, would not a duty of $3 a thousand on lumber have the same effect upon the Government? Certainly it would. It is absurd to imagine that, if the Americans enact in their next Tariff Bill that they will retaliate by imposing a duty on lumber from Canada equal to the export duty which we place on logs, this Government would be so blind as to subject the country to such inconveniences and such loss rather than abrogate the export duty on logs. Congress has clearly shown what its action would be. The Mills Bill would have made it to our advantage to abrogate the duty to the extent of $2 a thousand feet on all the lumber we exported to the United States. The Senate Bill would have made it to our advantage to the extent of 50 cents a thousand feet. The universal prayer of the lumber trade to the Government is that, in view of the fact that the import of logs from the United States to Canada is four times greater than the export of logs from Canada to the United States, the duty should be repealed, as the result otherwise will be to imperil our interests in this matter.

This revision of the tariff in the United States is to take place next winter. Revisions of the tariff in the United States are not made very readily or very frequently. The last revision was made in 1883, and, when the next revision is made, we may reasonably suppose that it will stand at least during the life of the present Administration, or for the next four years. It is a matter of very great importance for us to place ourselves in the best possible position to secure concessions in regard to the American lumber duty. The removal of the export duty for the present year will make very little difference. No stock has been got out for export last winter, and none can be got out now The Government can afford to wait developments, but the wish of the lumber interest is that the Government should take off this duty so as not to increase our difficulties by inducing the Americans to increase their duty on timber. We want the best chance we can have for the reduction of the duty to $1 a thousand feet, if not its removal entirely, and the trade prays the Government not to stand in the way of the realisation of the hopes of the lumber trade by keeping this export duty, which operates to a greater or less extent in the direction of depriving us of the advantages which we would derive from its removal. Without moving any resolution in regard to this matter, I say that I have been requested by those engaged in the trade to make this public statement of the matter. I do not know that I have said anything to my hon. friend the Finance Minister which is new in that case. It is a little over two months since one of the most influential and wealthy deputations that ever waited on the Government waited upon them in the Privy Council Chamber, and the members of that deputation feel that they are entitled to an answer, that the importance of the question warrants them in expecting an answer as to the view the Government take of their representations and their petition. In this view I present these remarks to the Government, and especially to the Minister of Finance, with the reminder that if the export duty is not removed, and Congress, at its next session, either retains the present rate of duty or increases the amount, the lumber interest of Canada will not entertain feelings either pleasant or friendly towards the Government that refused their rersonable and urgent request.

Mr. FOSTER. I listened with a good deal of interest to the statement made by my hon. friend, in not all, of which of course, I can agree with him. The policy of having an export duty on logs is not, as my hon. friend said, a new one; it has been the policy of this country for a long series of years, no doubt adopted because of good reasons, and retained for those same good reasons. Within the last few months, as my hon. friend stated, the export duty was increased over and above the former rate, and that was done for various reasons, and at the instance of no class of men more than of the lumbermen themselves, who, in an almost united body, approached the Government and brought the strongest arguments they could to bear upon the necessity and advantage to this country of increasing the export duty upon logs to $3 per thousand. Now, as my hon. friend says, the representatives of the lumber interest have seen things in a different light, and have approached the Government in large and influential deputations, asking them to take off the duty or to lower it. The chief argument of these gentlemen has been the argument which my hon. friend has used to-night, that is, the probable danger or fear that the pursuance of this course of policy will have the effect, in the country south of us, of inducing them to enact legislation which will make it more difficult for the lumber of this country to find access to the markets of the United States. I think my hon. friend, in presenting the case, has probably strengthend the hands of those parties in the United States who have a direct interest in not allowing Canadian lumber ingress into that market. He has taken a great deal of pains to show that year by year of late the area of competition from the south towards the north, with our lumber, has been constantly increasing, that they have come up each year further and further towards the northern limit, and have met certain classes, at least, of Canadian lumber in markets so far north as New York and Buffalo, and other cities along that line of parallel. Well, Sir, this has been pointed out by my hon. friend in strong and vigorous language, and the manner in which he has pointed out the strong interest that the producers of this lumber in the United States have in this competition, and the success they have had in the competition so far, I think, will have the effect of arousing that interest in the United States and producing just exactly what my hon. friend says he deplores—a united effort upon the Congress to enact legislation which shall not only not allow Canadian lumber to go into the United States at a less rate of duty than at the present time, but will, if possible, have that duty raised in order to give them a greater chance in the competition which my hon. friend says they now carry on up to these northern limits with so great a success. At this late period of the Session, and with a deal of work before us yet to be done, and which we hope to get rid of within a few days, I do not intend to go into a long discussion of this matter. The Government have, by the power that Parliament has given them, within themselves the ability to lower or to heighten the duties within certain limits, and the Government taking all interests in its consideration, and taking into consideration as well the very strong representations which have been made to them by the lumber interest, under this fear of future possible legislation which they say haunts them, and which I dare say is present with them, being interested in so great an extent as they are, I say the Government having all these representations of the different interests, have been considering the matter and are still having it under consideration, and having it in their power, I have no doubt they will act as they consider best under the view of all the circumstances, for the general interest, not excluding the lumber interest of the Dominion.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think it is very much to be regretted that the Government cannot give a plain answer to a plain question. They have had two months to consider this matter, and all they have got to tell my hon. friend and to tell the great interest of which he is a member and for which he speaks, is that they are considering the matter still. The Government's duty is to tell the House before it separates what they have decided to do. It is apparent, judging from the language of the Finance Minister, that they cannot make up their minds what to do, and I think that the lumber interest will do well, and its representatives in this House will do well, to see that the Government do answer before they leave.

Mr. SPROULE. Coming from a part of the country interested in lumbering operations, and having some knowledge of the business there, I think it would be decidedly against our interest if the export duty was taken off lumber. I know the hon. member who brought up this matter to-night has carried on operations largely, I think upon the Georgian Bay, and he knows as well as I do that it has been a great business for several years past to cut down the pine in our country and take it away to the United States. A few years ago we had mills on Canadian soil which employed a large number of men, these mills have now been transferred to the American side and the lumber is manufactured over there that used to be manufactured in Canada. The result is that whereas the men engaged in that business used to consume the pork, the flour, the wheat, and the butter raised by our farmers when that lumber was being manufactured here, now those articles are got from the State of Michigan and our farmers have not the benefit of supplying them. Our people are strongly against taking off that export duty on lumber because our forests are being depleted rapidly. First class lumber is growing dear. You cannot get dry lumber in that country for less than $36 per M. ft., and we need all the lumber we have for the wants of our people. If it is important for us to have the American market, nothing is more likely to induce the Americans to keep up their tariff on lumber than for us to take off the export duty upon logs. They are endeavoring in one way or another to take the logs across and manufacture them in their country. I think we should prevent that, as much as possible, because every additional man to whom we give employment in the manufacture of lumber in our country, is an additional consumer of the products of the agriculturists in the country.

Mr. BARRON. To the motion that you do now leave the Chair, I beg, Sir, to move an amendment. The amendment I propose is one which deals with a transaction, the like of which, I think, has seldom ever graced, or I should more properly say disgraced, the executive of any legislative body. The transaction I refer to is that of the Government selling, or I should perhaps more properly say giving away 79 square miles of valuable timber limits to a gentleman, now a member of this House, for the nominal sum of $316. There would have been wrong in this transaction had the property been of the ordinary property belonging to the Crown, but it is infamous in a degree when the fact is recalled that the property so disposed of was part of the public domain of this country and belonged to a small band of Indians, in regard to whom the Premier of this House, who is directly responsible for this transaction, stood in the position of trustee, and over whom he stood as guardian, they standing towards him in the position of wards. Now, in order that this House may thoroughly understand this transaction, and in order to explain the case upon which I arraign the Government opposite, I would ask hon gentlemen to accompany me in their memories back to 1850, and in their imaginations travel with me as far as Sault Ste. Marie. At that place and that year the late Peter Robinson was employed to make treaties with several different bands of Indians inhabiting the shores of Georgian Bay, Lake Huron and Lake Superior. He made successful treaties with all the different bands inhabiting those localities. A part or portion of the treaty was that each band should have a specific portion of the land. There were very many different bands of Indians, each of which got a particular portion of land allotted to them by this particular treaty, but there was a band known as Shawanakeshicks band which, though allotted a reserve, did not until a few years ago have their reserve laid out for them upon the ground. It may not be important that the House should know these particulars, yet, perhaps, I may be permitted to explain that this band of Indians has not, until within the last 3 or 4 years, had their land or reserve laid out for them, while all the different bands had within two or three years after 1850 their lands laid out for them. Some have supposed the reason for not laying out Shawanakeshicks reserve, to be that the particular land reserved for this particular band, the timber belonging to which was nominally given away or nominally sold to the hon the junior member for Ottawa, was because the reserve was so far inland from the shores of Georgian Bay that the surveyor employed at that period did not find time to go and lay out that reserve. On the other hand it is supposed that the reason was the uncertainty in the description of the reserve. Speaking from memory, and therefore subject to correction, the description of the reserve was some such description as this: Shawanakeshicks Band, a tract of land three miles square between the waters of the Whitefish River and Wanabitesebe, seven miles inland. Inasmuch as the distance between Whitefish River and Wanabitesebe is something like seventy or eighty miles, it can easily be understood how difficult it was to exactly locate the piece of land under this treaty three miles square. And then again the particular village inhabited by this particular band was very much further inland from the shores of the Georgian Bay than seven miles, something like twenty miles, and thus an uncertainty arose as to where this particular land or reserve was to be located. But within the last three or four years this particular reserve was laid out for this band, and here I may say that it was fairly and accurately laidlaid out. It was laid out by Mr. Abrey employed by hon. gentlemen opposite. I do not mean to refer to the question of the accuracy of that survey, although the courts have held lately that it was not located accurately; still there is no point in that in my case against the Government. But hon. members will kindly bear in mind that, although the treaty was made as far back as 1850, it was not until the last three or four years that this particular reserve was laid out for this particular band of Indians. At an earlier period the Government of the Province of Ontario surveyed all the lands on the north shore of the Georgian Bay, including the lands covered since by this particular reserve, into what were known as timber berths with a view of selling the timber on those particular berths, and in the year 1872 the Ontario Government sold the timber on the berths on the north shore of the Georgian Bay, including the timber upon the area subsequently known as this reserve. It may be said that, inasmuch as that tract was then known, the Ontario Government did wrong in selling the timber as they did in 1872, in laying out the land as reserves in 1872; but I want to show, and I can show conclusively, that when the Ontario Government did that which they did in 1872, sell the timber on the berths, which have since been covered by the Indian reserve on which the timber was sold to the junior member for Ottawa for the small sum of $316, they had no knowledge whatever of this particular reserve. To prove that fact I shall read two letters. I do this because it might appear that there was some conflict between the two Governments, the Dominion Government and the Government of Ontario. It might be said that the Government of Ontario was doing wrong when it sold the timber in 1872, having laid out the timber berths previous to that year; but if I can show that the Ontario Government at that time knew nothing whatever of this reserve, then I think any accusations against that Government should be withdrawn, and I think I can show that successfully. Not only at that time did the authorities at Toronto know nothing about the Indian reserve, but the authorities in the Department of Indian Affairs here knew nothing whatever of the location of that reserve. To prove that I shall read the two letters to which I, a moment ago, referred. The first is dated the 24th July, 1879, and is addressed to T. H. Johnson, Assistant Commissioner, Crown Lands Department, Toronto. It reads :

"SIR,—I have the honor to request that you will be good enough to furnish this office with a copy on tracing linen, of the plan of the reserve occupied by Chief Shawanakeshick and his band, between Whitefish River and Wanabitesebe, and numbered 6, on the schedule of reservations made under the Robinson Treaty of 1850

"(Signed.) L. VANKOUGHNET,
"Deputy of the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs."

It will be seen by that letter that the Dominion Government at that time, in 1879, had no map, and as a matter of fact, there was no map in existence, showing the locality of this particular reserve. This Government knew nothing about it, and they applied to the Government of Ontario for information in regard to the question. The reply they got was this :

"DEPARTMENT OF CROWN LANDS,
"DEPUTY SURVEYOR GENERAL'S OFFICE, 1st August, 1879.

"SIR,—In reply to a letter of the 24th ult., requesting copy of plan of Indian Reserve No. 6, between Whitefish River and Wanabitesebe, I have to inform you that no plan of such reservation appears of record in this office. I enclose plan of north shore of Lake Huron, showing all Indian reserves covered by the treaty of 1850, plans of which are of record in this office.

"T. H. JOHNSON,
"Assistant Land Commissioner."

This letter is addressed to Mr. L. Vankoughnet, Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs. From these letters it will be seen that the Government of Ontario, when prior to 1872 they laid out the lands on the north shore of Georgian Bay into what were known as timber berths, and then sold the pine timber thereon, did not know anything whatever of the existence at that time of the reserve. But although that was the case, it cannot be said that when the Dominion Government surveyed the Indian reserve, they knew nothing at all of the timber berths laid out by the Government of the Province of Ontario, and to prove that the Dominion Government—and I do this in order to trace up step by step the knowledge possessed by this Government of what took place by the authority of the Province of Ontario—had some such knowledge, I bring in this point, although it is not a very important one, but I do it for the purpose of showing step by step that the Government opposite knew all that went on so far as the Government of the Province of Ontario was concerned regarding these particular berths. Now, the letter signed by Mr. James Phipps who is the Indian Agent at Manitowaning addressed to the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs is dated the 30th March, 1883, and is as follows :

"SIR,—I have the honor to state with reference to previous correspondence on the subject of the reserve claimed by the Whitefish Lake Indians that I have taken every opportunity of meeting with the Chief and the most intelligent Indians of the band to ascertain from them the boundaries of the reserve, claimed as having been in their occupation at the date of the Robinson Treaty, and now enclose a sketch showing the reserve claimed, which will comprise part of the following townships as laid down in a map issued by the Crown Land Department of Ontario, dated August, 1880, Nos. 69, 70, 75, 76, 77, 83, 84 and will contain about 50 square miles."

Those were the berths laid out on the map issued by the Ontario Government in pursuance of the survey they made, so that this Government knew at the time they laid out this Indian reserve within the last three years, that the Government of the Province of Ontario had previously surveyed it out into timber berths. This Government having laid out that reserve we next find that the hon. the junior member for Ottawa appears on the scene.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Name.

Mr. BARRON. I am asked to name the hon. gentleman but perhaps it would be out of order if I should do so. I do not think it is very difficult to understand who is the hon. the junior member for Ottawa. It is not Mr. Perley. The next thing we find is an application from this gentleman for the timber on this particular reserve, covering an area as was stated in this House by the hon. the Minister of the Interior in answer to my question, of 79 square miles of timber limits, and that application is dated on the 13th October, 1885, and is addressed to the Minister of Indian Affairs. Let me say here that I am proving all that I say by correspondence brought down in a return of this House in pursuance of a motion made by me, either last Session or the Session before. This is the application that I refer to:

"OTTAWA, 13th October, 1885.

"The Minister of Indian Affairs, Ottawa.

"SIR,—We the undersigned hereby make application to obtain privilege of cutting timber on an Indian reserve situated on the north shore of Lake Huron and known as the Whitefish Indian Reserve.

"The accompanying sketch colored red will show the territory applied for.

"Yours respectfully,
"JOSEPH RIOPELLE & CO."

Before I go any further I wish to say that although a sketch accompanied this letter to the Department of Indian Affairs, when the return was brought down there was no such sketch included. It may be said that "Joseph Riopelle & Co." does not mean the hon. the junior member for Ottawa, but here we have a letter of his of 11th, November 1885, referring to this application in these words:

"OTTAWA, 11th, November 1885.

"To the Minister of Indian Affairs,
"Ottawa.

"HON. SIR,—I take the liberty to remind you of my application for license to cut timber on an Indian reserve.

"Will you please let me know the result of your conclusion in this matter, and much oblige

"Your obedient servant,
"H. ROBILLARD."

Now, the hon. the junior member for Ottawa, having put in his application, then Mr. Vankoughnet, the Deputy Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, writes to Mr. Phipps, the Indian agent in charge of this band of Indians owning the timber on the reserve, and urges him to see what can be done in getting from the Indians a surrender of their claims to the timber. This is the letter that Mr. Vankoughnet writes:

"OTTAWA, 23rd October, 1885.

"JAS. C. PHIPPS, Esq.,
"Indian Superintendent,
"Manitowaning, Ont.

"SIR,—I enclose, herewith, for early report, copy of an application, dated the 13th instant, from Messrs. Joseph Riopelle & Co., of Ottawa, to obtain the privilege of cutting fallen, dead and green timber on the Indian reserve at Whitefish Lake.

"I have to request that you will report your views to the department on this matter; 1st, as to whether there is more timber fit for lumber than the Indians will require for their own purposes on the reserve, and, if so; 2nd, whether the Indians are likely to agree to the same being sold by the department for their benefit. 3rd. What bonus in such event should, in your opinion, be asked for the timber."

I emphasise the last words "what bonus in your opinion should be asked for the timber," because it may be that the department will set up the defence that they are in the habit of selling all pine timber lands, especially in the North-West, at the nominal sum of $1 a square mile, and therefore that they did not want to depart from that rule in this particular case. Here it will be seen that so uncertain were they as to what price they should ask for this particular timber limit that they asked the Indian agent at Manitowaning to express an opinion as to what price they should ask for this particular limit. In pursuance of that letter Mr. Phipps, the Indian agent at Manitowaning, proceeded to the Indians at their reserve, and I have heard said, with the assistance of friends of the hon. the junior member for Ottawa, he got from the Indians the surrender of the pine timber on this reserve. He writes as follows of the surrender :—

"INDIAN OFFICE, MANITOWANING,
"12th July, 1886.

"SIR,—I have the honor to report my return from Sault Ste. Marie, having gone there with Joseph Faille, an Indian of Whitefish Lake Band, chosen by the Council of the band for the purpose of making the affidavit to the surrender required by section 37, sub-section 2, Indian Act, 1880.

"I enclose herewith the surrender of the timber on the reserve."

The following is the surrender signed by the Indians, of the 79 square miles of timber to this Government:—

"We, the undersigned chiefs and principal men of the band of Indians owning the tract of land known as the Whitefish Lake Indian Reserve, or Reserve Number 6, in the schedule of reserves under the Robinson Treaty, being a majority of the male members of the said band of the full age of twenty-one years, habitually residing on or near the reserve in question, duly assembled at a council of the said band called for the purpose and according to the rules of the said band, and held in presence of an officer duly authorised by the Honorable the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs to attend such council, acting on behalf of the whole people of our said band, do hereby release, surrender, quit claim and yield up unto Our Sovereign Lady the Queen, Her heirs and successors forever, all and singular the whole of the merchantable timber on the said reserve in trust, to be sold for the joint benefit of the said band on such terms and conditions and as to Her Majesty's Government of Canada shall seem proper; ten per cent. of the bonus derivable from the sale of the said timber to be divided among the said band, the remainder of the proceeds to be invested for our sole joint benefit and for the benefit of our descendants in such manner as to the said Government of Canada shall seem to be most conducive to the interest of our said band.

"In witness whereof we, the said chiefs and principal men, have set our hands and seals unto this instrument, at Whitefish Lake Indian Reserve, this first day of July, in the year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-six."

Then follows the signatures of the Indians. The conditions of the sale as regards the proceeds to be divided among the Indians are stated in the surrender. The price, as the Minister of the Interior told us the other day was $316 and 10 per cent. of that is $31.60. There are about 100 Indians in this band, and this would be about 31 cents each for the Indians, whereas the hon. the junior member for Ottawa, if my information is correct, got no less than $50,000 for this very timber limit for which the individual Indians only got 31 cents each. Now, Mr. Speaker, it is almost unnecessary for me in this House to tell the members, many of whom are lumber manufacturers, that to sell 79 square miles of timber limits on the north shore of the Georgian Bay for the sum of $316 is nothing more or less than giving them away. I will appeal to the hon. the senior member for Ottawa if what I say is not correct, that these limits, if worth anything, are worth from $50 to $100 per square mile. I appeal to the hon. member for Russell if it is not a shocking transaction that these limits should be sold to a supporter of the Government who was then soon to be a member of this House for the nominal sum of $316, and that the Indians should be induced to sign a surrender by being told that they would get about 10 per cent. of a bonus when all they would get between them would be $31, while the hon. member for Ottawa pockets from $45,000 to $50,000 out of the transaction. Let me show you what the value of these limits really is. In the year 1872 the Ontario Government, as I have stated, laid out all this tract of land into timber berths with the view of selling the timber thereon. This Indian reservation has been laid out on a portion of berth No. 69; Messrs. Francis Bros. purchased the reservation and operated upon that berth last year—one eleventh part of the whole of this Indian reservation. Now, I have a statement here, given to me by wood rangers who went there with the view of inspecting the quantities of timber cut and the quantity remaining on this eleventh part of the whole reserve, and what do they report? They report that there was taken off that portion last year by Francis Bros., 230,800 feet of square timber, which, at $80 a thousand, would amount to $1,862.40. Then, there was 1,821,300 feet, board measure, cut off, which, at $3 a thousand, would give $5,463.90. Then there was 453,325 feet, board measure, in the rough, which, at $1.50, would make $682.78. So that there was last year $8,009 worth of timber cut off one-eleventh part of the reserve, which was sold to the hon. gentleman for $316. But there was more left upon it. These wood-rangers report that there are 7,000,000 feet left upon this one-eleventh part, which at $2 a thousand, would be $14,000 worth still standing. Altogether, on that one-eleventh part, or 7 square miles, owned by Francis Bros. and partly worked by them, was timber worth at least $22,000, and the hon. junior member for Ottawa gets the whole 79 square miles for $316. But I will give some further information. Now, I know, because of the gentlemen who own that berth 69 are clients of mine, and they refused $30,000 for it; the proportion covered by this Indian reserve would be worth $7,500. Then, berth 70 was examined by a Mr. Macdonald, a wood-ranger, and he made out that there were on it 40,000,000 feet, which at $1 a thousand would be worth $40,000; the proportion covered by this reserve would be worth $13,333. Berth 84 was worth $60,000, and the proportion covered by the reserve would be worth $10,000. Then, berths 75 and 83 were sold to Messrs. Sadler & Dundas, of the town of Lindsay, for $40,000; and the other day Mr. Flavel of that firm told me that he was offered $90,000 for those two berths. The proportion of these two berths covered by the reserve, would be $10,000. Now, leaving out altogether a large portion of the reserve, regarding the value of which I cannot speak with any authority, and leaving out two out of the seven berths, we find that that property was worth $40,833, for which the hon. junior member for Ottawa gave $316. But I have another proof. I have told the House that, in 1872, this property was sold by the Ontario Government, when, as every hon. member in this House knows, timber berths were very much depressed in value; they also know what was realised at that time from those timber berths at a public auction? Did the hon. gentleman opposite put them up at public auction? Nothing of the kind. Did he call for tenders? Nothing of the kind. He merely had the application of the junior member for Ottawa for these timber berths; he proceeded, as I have shown, to get a surrender from the Indians, and he practically gave it to the junior member for Ottawa for $316 without any competition whatever. Now, what was got by the Ontario Government for all these berths in 1872, except one, which was not sold? The sum realised was $19,305. But it is not fair for me to quote these figures alone, because the reserve does not cover all that was sold in 1872; but I will give the amounts that were realised for the proportions of the berths covered by the reserve. In 1872 the very property sold in 1886 to the hon. member for Ottawa for $316, was sold for the large sum of $8,675, leaving out altogether the whole of one berth which was not at that time sold, but which has since been sold, in 1885, for $100 a square mile. Now, I think I have shown enough to satisfy this House that a gross outrage has been perpetrated, not only on the good fame of this country, but on this particular band of Indians. It may be said by hon. gentlemen opposite: Oh, they knew nothing about the value of these timber limits; their dealings are so extensive all over the Dominion from the Atlantic to the Pacific that they have not time to worry themselves about such a small matter as 79 miles of timber limits, notwithstanding that the Premier of this country was sworn to do his duty to these Indians, over whom he presided at that time as Superintendent General of Indian Affairs. I have shown that this property was worth from $50,000 to $75,000. Now, I will bring the fact right home to the Government, to prove beyond any doubt that the Government had information that this very timber limit was very valuable, and that they were told to send a man to inspect it, by no less a person than the Indian agent himself at Manitowaning, Mr. Phipps. In 1885, a short time before the hon. member got the limit, Mr. Phipps wrote this letter.

"SIR,—I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of official letter dated 23rd inst., instructing me to report on the application of Messrs. Joseph Riopelle & Co.——"

And the House must not forget that Riopelle & Co. have been identified as the junior member for Ottawa, —

"—to obtain the privilege of cutting fallen, dead and green timber on the Indian Reserve at Whitefish Lake. I beg respectfully to state that, although I am not well acquainted with the reserve in question, yet I am satisfied from what I have seen that it contains a large quantity of pine timber, much more than the Indians will be likely to require for their own purpose."

That letter was in the possession of the Government and yet, knowing this opinion of the value of the timber lands in that reserve, they sold the limit to the junior member for Ottawa for the paltry sum of $316. The letter goes on:

"I have every reason to believe that the Indians would be willing to agree to the timber being sold by the department for their benefit. The chief stated to me his intention of coming to Manitowaning this fall, and I shall be able then to ascertain his views upon this point. The value of the dead and fallen pine should be, in my opinion, realised as early as possible, as that description of timber deteriorates rapidly. As for the timber, any opinion of mine without a more perfect knowledge of the quantity would be almost guesswork. I would suggest if the Indians are willing to surrender that an examination be made by an experienced lumberman."

Was that done prior to selling this limit to the junior member for Ottawa? If it was the report should have been brought down at once, but it was not.—

"Although a large portion of the reserve has been burned over there still remains a large quantity of pine which if realised to the best advantage would be of great benefit to the Indians. The reserve being now easily reached by Canadian Pacific Railway viâ Sudbury, the expense of sending a competent man to make an examination of the timber would not be very great.

"JAMES C. PHIPPS."

There it is suggested that the expense of sending a man to inspect this property and report upon it would not be very great, by reason of its proximity to Sudbury, or to some other station on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I have mentioned the fact that there was a sale in 1872 by the Ontario Government, and if our Government here had desired to do what was right and proper, they would have said to the Ontario Government: You sold those limits in 1872; give us the money that you realised, with interest; give us the ground rent that you realised, with interest, and we will assume the sales to your licensees. Had that been done, nobody would have been hurt, the Ontario Government would have had to give up the money to which it was never entitled; the Ontario licensees, many of whom were supporters of the right hon. gentleman, would have been protected in what was supposed to be their rights, because they were innocent purchasers without any notice of reserve and the Ontario Government were innocent vendors. If that had been done, the licensees of the Ontario Government would have been protected and the Indians would have had not less than $18,889.50. That course would have been fair and just, because this Government could have said to the Ontario Government: You have sold property which does not belong to you, and the Indians would have had the sum of $18,982.50, made up in this way: The amount of bonus that the Ontario Government got in 1872 was $8,675; the interest on that at 6 per cent. would give $7,280; the ground rents since then, paid for this particular reserve, were $1,952, and the interest on that would be $98½, making altogether the sum of $18,889.50. That would have been a proper and just course for this Government to pursue; but they had to meet the exigencies of one gentleman, the junior member for Ottawa, who would have been left out in the cold had they adopted the course I have mentioned, and who would not have got the nice little sum of $50,000 for this Indian timber land, for which he gave the Government $316. It may be said that the Government of hon. gentlemen opposite did not know of the Ontario sale before selling to the hon. member for Ottawa, but that they did is shown by a letter written by Mr. Vankoughnet to Mr. James Johnson, Commissioner of Crown Lands at Toronto, dated the 10th July, 1886:

"I have recently learned incidentally that your department has sold the merchantable timber upon the whole or the greater portion of the Indian reserve at Whitefish Lake."

So that this Government knew that the Ontario Government had previously sold the timber on this particular reserve in 1872, and if they had acted honestly and applied to the Ontario Government, instead of having only $316 to divide among the Indians, they would have had no less a sum than $18,000. My hon. friend behind me asks if the Ontario Government proposed anything of that kind. I will read, to establish that, the letter written by Mr. Johnson, which is dated the 1st August, 1883, addressed to Mr. Vankoughnet, and is in these words:

"I am directed to call your attention to the following: It appears that Provincial Land Surveyor Abrey is about to make a survey of the Indian reserve at Whitefish Lake, Lake Huron, for your Department. This department not being aware of any Indian reserve there, has this season sub-divided townships 70 and 77 as numbered on the topographical map of north shore of Lake Huron.

"On this plan the Indian reserves are colored red, and the department was under the impression that all Indian reserves were laid down thereon.

"Under these circumstances, I am to suggest if it would not be advisable to instruct Mr. Abrey not to make the survey at present, as when the plan and field notes of these townships are in the office, an arrangement may be made with your department satisfactory alike to the Indians and the Indian Department, whereas if Mr. Abrey makes a survey with the present indefinite information as given in the treaty, complications might arise, owing to the influx of settlers along the Canadian Pacific Railway."

That is signed by Mr. Johnson, Assistant Commissioner of Crown Lands, Toronto.

Mr. DEWDNEY. What date is that?

Mr. BARRON. That is dated the 11th August, 1883. Now I would like to know from the junior member for Ottawa (Mr. Robillard) how much money he did get for this?

Mr. ROBILLARD. I got nothing at all. I had no interest in it more than the hon. gentleman himself.

Mr. BARRON. Who had? The Government got $316 from the junior member for Ottawa, and the property was sold to him, or it was sold to Riopelle & Co., and the hon. gentleman was one of that company, and he certainly realised some of this booty out of the sale to Francis Bros. If I am not altogether misinformed, he realised something between $45,000 and $50,000. The hon. gentleman shakes his head.

Mr. ROBILLARD. I say it is false.

Mr. BARRON. Well, I suppose I am bound to take his statement inside this House, but, if I were outside this House I do not think I would take his statement.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. BARRON. It has been suggested—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Withdraw.

Mr. BARRON. Withdraw what?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. It is a very offensive statement.

Mr. BARRON. I say I am bound to accept the hon. gentleman's statement.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The hon. member said he would not take this statement outside of this House. That is unparliamentary.

Mr. BARRON. I am bound to accept the statement of the hon. member inside this House, but it is very extraordinary that Riopelle & Co., one of whom was himself, should have got this money from Francis Bros., and he, the junior member for Ottawa, should not have got anything at all. However, it is perfectly apparent that somebody made a big pull out of this, and the Indians got $316 for property which I think I have successfully proved to this House is worth $50,000 or $60,000 or $75,000. Now, who was the one who was directly responsible for this transaction? It was no less a person than the Premier of this country, who was the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs. Scarcely was the ink dry upon the letter sent to the junior member for Ottawa saying that this was sold to him at $4 a square mile——

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Read the letter.

Mr. BARRON. Here is the letter, addressed to H. Robillard, Esq., M.P., Ottawa, and dated 7th October, 1886:

"SIR,—I have the honor to inform you that the timber limit comprising the Whitefish Lake Indian Reserve has been awarded to you. The limit contains 79 square miles. The bonus is $4 per square mile, or $316; ground rent, $1 per square mile, $79; license fee, $4; total, $399."

That is signed by W. Plummer, for the Deputy Minister of Indian Affairs. I did not think it was necessary for me to read that letter in view of the statement made by the Minister of the Interior a few days ago when I asked him a question the answer to which was, out of his own lips, that the pine timber on this reserve, 79 square miles in extent, was sold to Mr. Honoré Robillard for $4 a square mile. The person who was directly responsible for that transaction, as I said, was the Premier himself, who was then the head of this particular department which was guilty of what I consider a most outrageous transaction. Scarcely was the ink dry upon the letter which gave that property to the junior member for Ottawa before, in the self same year, the hon. gentleman wrote these sympathetic words regarding the Indians:

"The Indians are in the meantime not encouraged by the delay to extend their improvements, and they are by bitter experience convinced of the fact that game and fur-bearing animals, which in years gone by afforded them an ample means of supplying their needs, are fast failing them, as settlement advances and the sound of the woodman's axe and the shriek of the locomotive terrify the much valued moose, the timid red deer and the coy wild fowl, and hurry them to regions inaccessible to these hunters who are too poor to purchase sufficient supplies to carry them so far as their eager propensities for the chase would tempt them. Thus they return to Lake Temogamingue, their home, and which was the home of their ancestors from time immemorial, disheartened from their failure in the chase, and sitting by the camp fire, as they gaze on the empty kettle, they brood over the long delay in their recognition of their just claims to their patrimony, but gratified amid it all, as their superintendent pathetically remarks, 'at knowing that the Department is doing all that it can for them in the matter.'"

That is signed by "John A. Macdonald," and is the report for the very year in which this timber limit was sold to the junior member for Ottawa.

An hon. MEMBER. Who is John A. Macdonald?

Mr. BARRON. He was the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, and at the foot of this report, he says that the department is doing all that it can for the Indians in the matter. The way in which the department does that is to sell this valuable patrimony to the junior member for Ottawa for this nominal sum. The hon. gentleman says he did not make anything out of it, and I suppose I am bound to accept that statement. What in the name of common sense did Riopelle & Co. buy this property for if it was not to make something out of it? Why did he first send out an application for Riopelle & Co., and then in order to give force to the application, send afterwards the application in his own name—Honoré Robillard? Why does the Deputy Minister of Indian Affairs write to Honoré Robillard giving him this property for the sum of $4 per square mile? If I was to look for a cause I would find it in the journals of the House at Toronto. The junior member for Ottawa is of French descent. We all know that in the year 1885 there was great agitation throughout the country owing to the ill-treatment of the half-breeds of the North-West. Mr. Meredith, in the Ontario Legislature, thought it was his duty to bring in an amendment, to the Address which was brought down, regarding the volunteers who went to the North-West. He knew very well that it would be a great feather in his cap, if he could only get the junior member for Ottawa, whose feelings ought to be and were justly with his fellow-countrymen on the banks of the Saskatchewan—if he could get that hon. gentleman to support him in his amendment to the Address. The junior member for Ottawa did vote with Mr. Meredith. But there was another amendment moved by Mr. Fraser, the end of which was this:

"And this House now hopes and trusts that peace and tranquility having been fully restored, it may be found consistent with the public interest to extend the merciful consideration of the Crown to those who are now undergoing imprisonment for offences connected with, or arising out of, the rebellion."

The men who were undergoing imprisonment for offences arising out of the rebellion, were countrymen of the hon. gentleman opposite, and he voted against that amendment in the Local House. If we were to look for the motive which guided the Government in lining the palm of the hon. gentleman, we would probably find it in the fact of the sacrifice of fealty to his countrymen he made when he voted against that amendment of Mr. Fraser. Now, I think that I have shown that this transaction is a most discreditable one; I have shown that the Ontario Government sold limits, in 1872, off this very reserve, for $8,000 odd; I have shown that the Dominion Government sold the whole reserve in 1886 to the junior member for Ottawa for the sum of $316; I have shown by the agreement signed by the Indians that they were induced to sign it by the knowledge that they were going to get 10 per cent. of a cash bonus, but they were not told that this 10 per cent. would be a paltry $31, or amongst 100 Indians, 31 cents each; I have shown by the statement of the wood-rangers the enormous value of these reserves; I have shown from a statement of a member of this House that it was worth an enormous sum of money. I do not care whether Mr. Robillard or anybody else made any money out of it; my concern is with the fact that the Government of the day have been most negligent in the discharge of their duty towards this band of Indians; and I say nobody who views this subject fairly, and who claims that the same code of honor should prevail in this House that he practices in private life—I say no one can for a moment fail to condemn this transaction. Therefore, I appeal to all the members of this House who discountenance an unworthy act in private life, to condemn the same act in public life, and I have no hesitation in asking them to vote for the amendment which I shall now read:

That all the words after the word "That" be left out, and the following inserted instead thereof:—"Mr. Speaker do not now leave the Chair, but that it be resolved, That it appears from a Return laid upon the Table of this House, that the Government of Canada, in the year 1886, acquired from the Band of Indians known as Shawanakiskic's Band ' a surrender of the Indian title to the merchantable pine timber of the Whitefish Lake Indian Reserve, or Reserve No. 6, in trust, to be sold for the joint benefit of the said band on such terms and on such conditions as to Her Majesty's Government of Canada should seem proper, 10 per cent. of the bonus derivable from the sale of the said timber to be divided among the said band, the remainder of the proceeds to be invested for their sole joint benefit and for the benefit of their descendents in such manner as to said Government of Canada should seem to be most conducive to the interest of said band."

And it appears that at and prior to the time of the sale thereof, hereinafter mentioned, the Government of Canada had been officially advised that the said reserve contained "a large quantity of valuable pine timber fit for lumber much more than the Indians would be likely to require for their own purposes."

And that in consequence of the reserve not having been surveyed or laid out until recently, the Government of the Province of Ontario had no means of knowing of the existence of said reserve, and having no such knowledge, proceeded in the year 1872 to sell, and did sell, the pine timber thereon for several thousand dollars, all of which was well known to the Government of Canada prior to their selling the same, as hereinafter appears.

And that it further appears from said Return that the Government of Canada, without conferring with the Indians of said band (or any them) as to the price to be obtained for said pine timber, or in any way whatever enquiring as to their views or wishes regarding the same, and without communicating to them, or any of them, as to the sum of money for which they proposed to sell said pine timber, sold and disposed of the same, covering an area of 79 square miles, at a private sale, without competition of any kind, to one Honoré Robillard, now a member of the House, and a supporter of the said Government, for a nominal sum of $316.

And it appears that the said pine timber is, and was at the time of the sale thereof, of a value in excess of the sum of $50,000, and, by reason of the aforesaid facts, the Indians have been grievously wronged, and the trust they reposed in the Government of Canada has been violated and misused.

That in view of the facts aforesaid this House expresses its disapproval of the sale of the pine timber for the nominal sum of $316 and of the manner in which it was sold, and this House declares it to be a gross violation of the trust reposed by the Indians in the Government of Canada, and it is the duty of this House to record its condemnation of the transaction.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I am sorry that the hon. gentleman did not give me some information of the particular class of land in respect of which he gave notice, I believe to the Finance Minister, that he proposed to move a vote of censure on the Government for having sold, as he said unjustly. It is well known that I have had not time to enquire into the matter, and am not in a position to answer him as I would like to do. The hon. gentleman has given a very clear history of the transaction from the start, and I have no doubt that it is a pretty correct one; and from it there is no blame, so far as I can see, attaching to the Government for the manner in which they have dealt in this matter. It appears that the Ontario Government in 1872 sold lands which did not belong to them. Whether at that time they knew such was the case, is immaterial. They did sell lands which subsequently proved to belong to the Indians. Some 14 years, I think, after that, the Government found that the timber which had been sold by the Ontario Government was in the same position as the land. No timber up to that time had been touched upon this reserve. Applications were made for this timber and the usual course was followed, the course which is followed to-day when applications are made for timber. The agent was asked to obtain the surrender from the Indians of the property sought to be dealt with. In this case the agent did as the law requires; he met the Indians, and in council they appear to have surrendered the timber on their reserve and authorised the Superintendent General to deal with it. It appears that during the time between the sale of the timber and when the case was dealt with by the Department of Indian Affairs, the timber had very much deteriorated in value on account of the fires which swept throughout that country. It was also found, when this timber was being dealt with by the department, that the cloud placed upon its title by the sale of the Ontario Government naturally depreciated the value of the property. The Ontario Government had not insisted on the working of this timber land and it remained in the same state as formerly except that the fires had run through it, and the party who was sent to report on the timber and who ran the boundaries of the reserve reported that the fires had done much injury to the timber and that a great deal of it was small and of an inferior quality. This was the report laid before the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, and it was upon that report I presume the sale was made. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Barron) has endeavored to show what the Indians would have received if they had taken the course which he has suggested, when it was found that the Ontario Government had sold the property which had belonged to them. The hon. gentleman has stated that if they had taken that course the Indians would have made $18,000 out of the property. I think I shall be able to show that the Indians will make over $30,000 out of the property. The conditions of sale so far as the department was concerned were these: The Government charged at the rate of $1 per thousand feet board measure for the timber cut on the reserve, in addition to the bonus paid down at the time, which was at the rate of $4 per square mile.

Mr. BARRON. I draw attention to the fact that the Ontario Government have corresponding dues for every 1,000 feet cut. There is no saving.

Mr. DEWDNEY. $18,000 has been stated as the amount that the Indians would receive for this property. The ground rent is also $3 per square mile. There was a regulation made increasing this amount from $1 to $3 in 1887. The Ontario Government, as the hon. gentleman has said, has charged 75 cents per 1,000; we charge $1.

Mr. WALDIE. They charge $1.

Mr. DEWDNEY. At that time it was 75 cents. However, they did not receive anything because they did not cut a stick of the timber. I desire to draw the hon. gentleman's attention to this fact, that up to the present moment we have derived from ground rent and dues in timber not less than $5,420, which, in addition to $316 paid for a bonus, brings the total to $5,736. There is still the greater portion of this timber remaining, and we shall realise from this property within a short time, if the dues come in as they have been coming, from $25,000 to $30,000. These funds are placed to the credit of the Indians and under the terms of the Indian Act, they will receive 10 per cent. of them. I may state that not only was the report made to the Superintendent General at the time the sale was made, to the effect that a great deal of the timber had been burned, but it was also advanced that, unless something were done with the timber, further fires would destroy the whole of it, and it was that report which influenced him in dealing with the timber, in order that the Indians might derive some benefit from that property. I do not propose to enter further into this matter. The long résumé which the hon. gentleman gave from the date of the treaty down to the present time has very little to do with this question. The hon. gentleman blames the Government for having, as he thinks, treated unjustly their wards. It is an accusation which is a very serious one, and from my experience of 10 years with the Indians of this country, I think this is not the case. Everywhere, so far as my information goes, the Government have promoted and secured the rights of the Indians. I have occupied these few moments in order to show as far as I am able to do so, and I believe it to be the fact, that the rights of the Indians have been protected and promoted in a much higher degree than the hon. gentleman considers, and they will derive more money from their property than they would have received from it if the course had been taken which the hon. gentleman proposes.

Mr. COLTER. I am very sorry that it has been proved, and proved so conclusively, that the Indian Department has been managed so much to the disadvantage of their wards, and I was surprised to hear the hon. gentleman who has just sat down not make any apology whatever, but endeavor to justify the conduct which has been pursued. When this land was conveyed by the Indians to the Government in trust, to be sold and applied for their benefit, there certainly was an obligation resting on the Government to protect the rights of those whose guardians they were, as it was the duty of an ordinary trustee to manage any estate committed to his charge properly and economically for the benefit of the cestni que trust. It has been proved, proved most conclusively, and it has been done out of the and mouth of the Minister, that there has been a large sum of money, amounting to not less than $18,000, and in fact it might have been very much greater if the property had been sold at this time, absolutely lost to the Indians, and yet it is said there has been no wrong done to the Indians in this transaction. One would suppose, to hear the remarks that were made, that the Government and Superintendent General seemed to be afraid that the Indians would squander their money and property, and the Government, in order to save them from that temptation, squandered it for them in this way. The department, I think, is very censurable, and if our Indian affairs are to be managed in this way in the future it is clear that the Indians should know it, and that the white people should also know it. The Indians occupy a very peculiar position in this country. They have certain rights and certain responsibilities, and it must be remembered that the people were under very great obligations to the Indians in the past. At all times have they proved to be loyal, faithful and true, and when they have been proven to be such towards the Government there is, even if there was no legal obligation, a very strong moral duty resting on the Government, and the department which manages their affairs, that the confidence which has been given so liberally in the past by those Indians should be kept inviolate. If it be proved, as has been proved in the case, that their property is squandered in this improper way, squandered without any just excuse, squandered even when the officers of the Government report that this property is very valuable, and squandered for a mere song, then the Indian should no longer repose confidence in the Government nor should the public repose faith in the administration of the guardianship which has been imposed upon the Government. There was one excuse made by the Government which certainly was a very thin excuse indeed. It was said that in consequence of this property being sold by the Ontario Government that there was a cloud on the title and that it was a little misty, but I thought the explanation itself was a little misty, for the Government did not attempt to realise in any way a larger sum for this property. They knew that they could have realised a larger sum; they knew there were persons under obligation to the Ontario Government to pay this larger sum of money, and yet they wilfully abstained from taking advantage of the opportunities which presented themselves to benefit the Indians in this case. In my opinion that was a shameful proceeding and such a proceeding as must disgust the people of this country and the Indians of this country with the management of the Indian Department by the present Government. We have many more instances of this mismanagement going on from day to day. We have for instance the Government claiming to be a guardian to these Indians, we have the Superintendent General claiming to be a father to these Indians (but in many cases he is only a stepfather, or a stepmother as the case may be); we find all through that our Indians have heavy expenses imposed upon them for which they get no adequate return. We find for instance among the Indians, some of whom I have the honor to represent, that there are heavy permanent burdens unnecessarily imposed upon them. Take the Six Nation Indians, who, on account of their loyalty, left the United States and came to his country. They were settled on valuable lands and these lands were sold—not in this way it is true, for we had better management at that time—these lands were sold at from $4 to $6 an acre 40 or 50 years ago and the proceeds were applied for the benefit of those Indians, and a large sum of money has been put into the public Treasury in trust for their benefit, and we find that to-day these funds of the Indians are being squandered. We have also in that vicinity the Mississaugas, a very small band numbering only 245. They were under the same management as the Six Nation Indians until a year or two ago and then it was found necessary to make a place for a supporter of the present Government and an additional agent was appointed at a salary of $600 a year to superintend these 245 Indians. This band comprises very intelligent Indians, and they need no agent at all to manage their affairs. Nearly all of them can read, and most of them can write as good a hand as almost any member of this House. I doubt that there are any Indians in the Province of Ontario so advanced and so intelligent as they are, yet an agent has been recently appointed to supervise them as stated, but, in reality, he was appointed to find room for a Government supporter. We have also a physician for those Indians who is paid $250 a year, while many of them do not employ that physician at all. These Indians have a choice of physicians just as well as white men, and many of them employ and pay their own physicians, yet we have this man appointed at $250 a year, and there is very little consideration rendered in return for that expenditure. We have also, among the Six Nation Indians a physician recently appointed for political purposes at an expense of $2,600 a year; at least there is that much spent in connection with the appointment. These Indians numbering 3,362 had a physician previously, not an old man but a man who was able to do his work well and the Government superannuated him at an expense of $500 a year paid out of the Indian fund. The Indians are taxed for paying these doctors while they employ their own physicians in Caledonia and Hagersville. Some of them in fact employ no doctor at all, but this burthen is imposed on them and their means are filtered away in this manner. I believe that there is a gross outrage in this and that the time is near at hand when the Government will have to cease squandering this money which they have in trust. I do not want it to be said, and the Indians would not allow it to be said, that it was right to squander their money as was done in the case of the sale of this timber limit. I had hoped years ago that we had heard the last of these transactions, but it seems that they are to be continued by the Government, and that even when they are brought before the attention of the House and the charges have to be admitted as true, no excuse is given by the Government except to turn around and say: "It is right for us to give away property worth $18,000 for $316, the difference for the ground rent will be very little, there is a ground rent charged every year by the Ontario Government of $3 and it is just the same here." We see this money absolutely squandered and no excuse given for the squandering of it except that the Indians have nothing to complain of. If a job of this kind had been perpetrated on one of the Ministers you may depend upon it there would be complaints very soon, and the Indians have just as good reason to have their rights protected and maintained as any gentleman who sits on the Treasury benches.

Mr. LISTER. The charge made against the Government by the hon. member who moved this motion is a serious and grave one, and it calls upon the Government, represented by the Minister of the Interior, and upon the hon. the junior member for Ottawa to make some explanation. I wish to ask the hon. the junior member for Ottawa whether that Joseph Riopelle mentioned in the correspondence is the present member for Bonaventure. The hon. gentleman refuses to answer, and we may take it for granted fairly that Mr. Joseph Riopelle, his partner in this nefarious transaction, is the present member for Bonaventure. Sir, the representation or explanation made by the hon. the Minister of the Interior is a confirmation in full of the charge made by the hon. gentleman who has proposed this motion. He supports it by the statement that no blame is attachable to the Government for the sale of these lands; that they instructed the agent of the Government to obtain from the Indians a surrender of the timber, but does not the hon. gentleman remember that at the time they instructed the agent to obtain that surrender from the Indians the agent informed him that the timber upon this particular reserve was of very considerable value?

Mr. DEWDNEY. He said he knew nothing of it. It was only from hearsay.

Mr. LISTER. It was not hearsay, because a letter was produced by the hon. gentleman who moved this motion, from the Governement's own agent on the reserve, notifying the Government that this was a valuable property and asking them to send up some competent person to make a valuation of it with a view to its sale. The hon. gentleman said that fire had run through it, and it was of comparatively little value; yet a moment afterwards he told us that the ground rents amounted to $5,736; and he also tells us that there are many dollars to come out from the sale of timber on this very reserve. The statement he made was a refutation of his statement in the first place that the timber on the reserve was not valuable. It is known to everybody interested in the timber business in this country, that the limit the Government sold to Robillard, be he a member of this House or not, was one of great value indeed, and that the present holders of the limit would not accept $100,000 to-day for it, a limit which was sold by this Government, in violation of their sacred trust, to a political supporter, for a paltry, contemptible sum of $316, and his vote it may be. What do we find? It is of very little importance to go into the early history of this transaction. Suffice it to know that the Government held this reserve in trust for the Indians, and it was their duty, like any other trustees before selling or disposing of that land, to satisfy themselves of its value, and to take such steps as were necessary to obtain the highest possible price for it. Did they do so? No, Sir, they deliberately violated the trust reposed in them by the Indians, and sold to a political supporter the timber upon a valuable reserve for a merely nominal price; and I ask that hon. member now to say what disposition he made of the timber he bought from the Government on that occasion? They went to the Indians without informing them how this timber was to be disposed of; they obtained from them a surrender of it; the Indians, believing that the Government would do whatever was necessary to obtain the highest possible price for the timber, yielded to the solicitations of the agent, and executed to the Government a surrender of their right. That timber limit is situated in the centre of the most valuable timber limits in this country; timber limits surrounding it to the south, to the north and to the east, have been sold by the Ontario Government for years past; and persons engaged in the trade knew that it was one of great value indeed. And what did this Government do? They did not invite tenders from any person. The public did not know that the timber was for sale at all; but the Government made a secret and private sale to a political supporter for the sum of $316. Contrast the conduct of this Government with that of the Ontario Government. The Ontario Government for years past has been selling timber limits on the north shore of Lake Superior and the Georgian Bay by public auction, after having been advertised for months previous, and what has been the result? We find that in the last sales in 1887, the Ontario Government realised from one limit $2,000 per square mile of a bonus, instead of $4 per square mile; and limits in the immediate vicinity of that sold to Mr. Robillard realised from $1,000 to $2,000 per square mile. In addition to that, the Government receives the annual dues, as this Government does. In 1872, as has been stated by my hon. friend, the Ontario Government sold a portion of this very reserve for $8,675; and this Government knowing that sales have been made by the Ontario Government, made this sale without ever consulting that Government, knowing that if they had done so the Ontario Government would have surrendered up to this Government all the money they had received from this reserve, together with interest, which would have given these Indians $18,000 or $19,000. Yet the Government thought proper to sell it to the hon. junior member for Ottawa for $316. That hon. gentleman received a title to it from the Government. What has he done with it? He is not the owner of it now; how long did he own it before he sold it? Whom did he sell it to? What did he receive for it? If he did not buy it for himself, whom did he buy it for? Who was he the go-between for? What has become of it? We know that to-day the timber is owned by the Francis Bros., and it is held for an enormous sum of money. You find that prior to the last election one of the charges made against the Government was that they sold the whole timber wealth of the North-West Territories to political supporters without competition. But we never dreamed that the Government would pursue a course different from the course pursued by the Government of Ontario with regard to the timber limits in the Province of Ontario, for which they must have known that high prices could have been obtained. They have betrayed a sacred trust which the Indians have placed in them, and which they as trustees were bound honestly and honorably to perform. It is scarcely credible that a gentleman occupying the high position of the First Minister as Superintendent General of Indian Affairs, should have so far forgotten himself as to make such a sale, and it is not creditable to the hon. gentleman who now occupies the position of Minister of the Interior to rise in his seat and make such a statement as he has done. Not only in regard to timber limits has the Government been unfaithful to their trust, but in the selling of islands in the Georgian Bay and Lake Superior. We find that when gold was discovered on the island known as Sultana Island in the Lake of the Woods, the Dominion Government at once laid claim to that island without having a survey made, and included it in the adjoining reservation; and they sold that island to Messrs. McMicken and Kennedy, client of Hugh John Macdonald and Stewart Tupper. We do not know what price the Government received for that island, but we do know that it was sold to political favorites, and that the bargain was negotiated by a son of the High Commissioner and a son of Premier of Canada. We know that Sultana or West Island, in the Georgian Bay, was sold for $2,500, without any tenders being invited or notice given to the public; and we know that immediately after the sale for $2,500 that island was sold for $15,000. Lacoche Island, in the Georgian Bay, was sold by the Government without inviting tenders, without the public knowing that the island was for sale to Mr. Buehner, of Welland. The Government claim they had the right to sell the island because they said it formed a part of the Indian reserve. It is contended on the part of the Ontario Government that it never formed part of the Indian reserve, but that this Government, for the purpose of acquiring possession, caused a survey to be made and included it in the Indian reserve on the mainland, whereas, in point of fact, it never was the property of this Government, but was always the property of the Ontario Government, and not included in the original survey of the reservation. In this way, the property of the Indians, about which the hon. member speaks so affectionately, is being squandered away from day to day. If the statements made by the hon. gentleman who proposed this resolution are true—and the Minister admits they are—in substance and in fact, then the conduct of the Government has been disgraceful in the extreme and should receive the censure of the House.

Mr. ROBILLARD. I merely rise to say a few words so as to place myself right on this question. In the first place, the hon. gentleman who moved this resolution is no doubt interested in the matter because there was a dispute on account of this land having been sold by the Ontario Government, and I see by the public accounts of Ontario that he has claimed some $1,500 expenses from the Ontario Government. He ought, therefore, to be well informed on the subject. The parties claiming want to show that these limits are worth a big price, because they have a claim against the Ontario Government for a large amount. I just mention this in passing. The facts are these: I was then an M.P.P., not an M.P. Messrs. Riopelle & Co. were friends of mine, and they have nothing to do with the Mr. Riopelle in this House. They are a firm in the city of Ottawa, and are not members of this House. They are Liberals, and particular friends of mine. At least I know some of them, but not all. I know Mr. Riopelle, and one or two of the firm. The Francis' I do not know at all. I suppose Mr. Riopelle is still with them, although I do not even know that. I never saw the limits. These parties asked me to render them a service—they had done pretty much the same thing for me before—so that, as an act of gratitude on my part, I asked Sir John Macdonald about that Indian reserve. I asked Riopelle if the proposition was a legitimate one and an ordinary one, and he said it was. I know nothing of these things because they are not in my line. I wrote out the application, which was signed Riopelle & Co. I went to Sir John and I suppose he thought I was one of the company. I did not say whether I was or not, because it was through my influence I hoped to benefit Riopelle & Co. I was at the time in the House at Toronto. These people had written to me to urge Sir John to grant the license, and I wrote to him in my own name. I did not know these letters would come before the House. I am telling you the naked truth. I was either at Toronto or Baie des Chaleurs when the license was given, and to the best of my knowledge I was at the latter place. When the hon. gentlemen talk about my refusing thousands of dollars, I cannot help feeling amused. I never saw the limits, but I saw in Mr. Riopelle's office a report from a man named Colton, who is known as one of the best explorers of limits we have. I remember reading his report. He says there was timber sufficient to make one raft, and two-thirds of the limit were lakes and water and a great deal burnt. But I paid no particular attention to it, as I was not concerned in the matter. So I have been amused all along about the wealth I was making. I am only sorry it was not so. As far as I know the transaction was as legal as any other. I have seen a report from the Indian Department stating there was nothing in that section but poor timber and a large portion was burnt. That timber report can be seen. I paid to get it from some of the employés of the department. There was some little timber fringed on the edges of the lake where the fire had stopped. I was not interested in the company more than what I have said. They were Liberals and thought they could not get the limit without using my influence. I never made anything out of this sale, and I know nothing at all about the property.

Mr. LAURIER. The title was in your name and it was resold and you did not know of it?

Mr. ROBILLARD. The title was transferred. I suppose, naturally, Sir John thought I was one of the company, and I wrote in my own name to urge this, but the application was made by Riopelle & Co. When this license came in my name I had already transferred it. No money passed hands. They may have transferred it, or sold it, for all I know. I have always laughed at this because I am innocent, and I am only sorry that I am not as wealthy as it was supposed I was. Of course, I was then a member of the Local House. The hon. gentleman in speaking of my vote in Toronto speaks of something that is foreign to the question. I could easily justify my vote. True, I am of French origin, and a pure one at that, but, above all, I am a Canadian. I took that stand in the House at Toronto, and my feelings never went so far as to lead me to say one of my countrymen was right when I knew he did wrong. I condemned Riel, but not the half-breeds, because I thought they were tools in his hands. An amendment was moved by Mr. Fraser, and it was easy to see that, having voted on the one, I would stultify myself by voting for the other. I could not see the amendment, and could not say what was coming on. I have seen the hon. gentleman's (Mr. Barron's) name appearing in the Public Accounts of Ontario for $1,500, and therefore he ought to know something of this case. I see his name appearing for $1,500. That is the hon. gentleman who made this motion. It is in the Ontario book. However, I suppose he did work for that. I only mention it to show that it is not simply from pure devotion to his country that he did this, but that he got well paid for it. However, I suppose he earned his money. I have nothing else to say.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I listened attentively to the explanation offered to us by the hon. the Minister of the Interior. That explanation did not meet one single solitary fact brought forward by my hon. friend from North Victoria (Mr. Barron). My hon. friend's allegation is that the Government, acting as trustees for this band of Indians, sold for $316 property which, to his knowledge, was transferred by the purchasers who paid the $316 to other parties known to him, for a sum varying from $45,000 to $50,000. Now, if that be so, no human being can doubt that a most gross fraud was perpetrated on the Indians of that band by and under the direction of the Government whose sworn duty it is to defend them. That is as clear as daylight, and the Minister of the Interior did not venture to deny the statement that property which was sold by the Government for $4 per square mile had changed hands within three months—or within three weeks for aught I know, at all events in a very short time—at an enormous advance, hundreds of times as great as the amount which was paid.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I did not know it, and I do not know it now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman was informed that it was so by my hon. friend from North Victoria, who stated in his place, as a matter known to him, that this property was sold at an enormous advance. It may be that the hon. gentleman was not aware of that, but what right has the Minister of the Interior or his colleagues to plead ignorance in this matter? It was their bounden duty, as trustees for the Indians, to take every possible means to inform themselves in regard to it, and to have, as their own agent advised, that property examined and inspected, and to put it up to public tender, instead of selling it in this hole-and-corner fashion. If any injustice has been done them, it has been due to their own neglect of the commonest precautions which any man of business would take. It was well known that the Ontario Government had obtained large sums of money for timber lands sold in that immediate vicinity. It is known to everyone—in Ontario at least—that the Ontario Government have obtained from $1,000 to $2,000 a square mile for the sale of timber limits situated close to this. All that the hon. gentleman ventured to plead was that certain stumpage dues were reserved, from which the Indians would derive a benefit. Very well, but it is very clear that, supposing the Government had chosen to accept the sum due by the Ontario Government, they could have got $18,000 instead of $316 for these Indians, and every penny of these stumpage dues, which the hon. gentleman says will amount to $30,000, would still have been received. But, if it is possible to get dues amounting to $25,000 or $30,000 for these 79 square miles, it is clear, from the Minister's own showing, that this was a very valuable property, and it is clear that, if it had been put up to public auction, there is the strongest probability, looking to the sales in public and open markets which have taken place, that a very large sum, probably exceeding $50,000, could have been obtained for this property. If the Minister or the Government have any spark of honor in them, they will trace out this transaction, they will find out what this property was sold for, and will give the information to the House. If the statement made by hon. friend is correct, these Indians have been grossly wronged, they have been defrauded by the action of the Government of Canada, by the action of the Superintendent General, and by the action of the Minister of the Interior for the time being. They have been defrauded of precisely the difference between $316 and whatever sum was subsequently realised by the resale of those properties. That is plain and clear, and I venture to say that there is no court of equity in the world which, were these gentlemen dealing in their private capacities as trustees, would not make them refund every penny, principal and interest, out of their own pockets.

Mr. WALDIE. Before this subject is decided, I desire to place a few facts before the House in regard to this sale. This portion of the territory was much larger and more valuable than it was considered to be in 1872, and the sale of a portion of it was made by the Ontario Government. The Ontario Government sold blocks of six square miles for a sum larger than the amount stated by the hon. gentleman who moved the resolution. Subsequently, when Mr. Abrey, a Dominion Land Surveyor, surveyed this territory, it was found to contain 79 square miles, and, although a license to cut timber on it had been sold by the Ontario Government many years previously for $18,000, it was sold by the Canadian Government for $316. I think it was sold without proper care being taken. I do not suppose that the gentleman who presided over that department knew of the value, but the value was there, and the Indian agent there advised the Government to make enquiry in order to find out what the value was. If that advice had been followed, I do not believe the Government of the country would have sold the license to cut timber for any such sum of money as they did, but they would have got thousands where they got tens. As far as I can learn—and I have some knowledge of that territory—there has been no fire there since 1872 which has lessened the value of the timber. I have seen a large portion of the logs cut upon those limits, and they were cut from green timber and were of excellent quality. As to the sale by the Ontario Government, they only sell the license to cut, as the Indian Department did, for $4 per square mile. In 1888, the Ontario Government raised their dues from 75 cents per thousand feet to $1, which is just the amount of dues required by the Indian Department. The Ontario Government also raised their rental from $2 per square mile to $3, so that it it had been sold on as favorable terms as the Ontario Government were selling, the Indians would have the same revenue from dues and from rental as they are now receiving. In addition to that they would have, I think, safely $30,000 of premium for licenses to cut upon this territory. There is no doubt that it was a wrong principle to adopt. I am glad to inform the House that, if the information that I have received is correct, the Indian Department have not pursued that mode of disposing of their timber property since that time. I believe that the French River Indian Reserve was sold at public auction since the date of this sale to Robillard and Riopel. It was sold by advertisement at Manitowaning. I think it was sold at the wrong place; it might have brought more money if it had been sold in Ottawa or Toronto, but it was sold after due advertisement; and if that course had been pursued in the case of the Whitefish Reserve, it would not have been disposed of for $316.

Mr. CHARLTON. I have no reason to doubt the statement made by the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Robillard). No doubt he has done what members often do, he has used his good offices for a friend who had called upon him, and has made application to the Government and secured this limit on favorable terms. The trouble with this business, the trouble with all transactions of this kind, is the vicious system adopted by the Government. The Government ought never to part with a piece of public property of this kind except upon conditions that would secure for it the best terms and the best sale possible. The system that should be adopted in all cases where the Government has property to dispose of, is to secure by public advertisement a sale to the highest bidder on the best terms obtainable. We have had a good deal of discussion on this point. Some two or three years ago I pointed out, after extensive investigation made, that some hundreds of Orders in Council had been granted for timber limits in various parts of the Dominion, covering an area of some 25,000 square miles; that these limits had been given to friends of the Government, to members of this House and the members of the Senate, to relatives of members of this House and to relatives of members of the Senate. The whole system is utterly vicious and indefensible. The Government ought to adopt the system that is pursued by the Province of Ontario, and wherever it has a timber limit to dispose of, or any other property to dispose of, it should advertise that property for sale and accept the highest bid for it. In every case it would thus secure more money for the property.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I think the explanation made by the Minister of the Interior clearly shows that this property was sold far below its value. He reckons that the dues amounted to $20,000, which would indicate that there must be twenty million feet of timber there, which, at a bonus of $2 per thousand, would be worth $40,000. The Minister has conclusively backed up the statement of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Barron) as to the value of those limits. The member for Ottawa now, who was not then the member, is not chargeable for any crime in connection with this matter. This is a charge that is made directly against the Government of having sold a limit worth $50,000 for the sum of $316; a limit which is held in charge for the Indians whose trustees the Government of Canada are, who were to be responsible and faithful and diligent in the interest of Indians, and see that their rights were protected. It is against the Government that will perpetrate such an act and squander money that belongs to the Indians, that the hon. member moved and very properly moved in regard to this matter. I cannot understand how anybody in this House can justify the conduct of the Government in selling these limits for a price below their value. I do not hold the gentleman who is now representing Ottawa responsible for this, unless he votes to condone conduct such as this, then he becomes a party to the transaction, and is deserving of the condemnation that should fall upon the Government who are so unfaithful to all the rights of the Indians and so utterly derelict in their duty in administering their funds. I am a little astonished that the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) is not in his place in the House to raise his voice against the sacrifice of the interests of the Indians of this country. He has on the Indian peninsula a large number of Indians, and I am astonished that while their interests are being bartered away in another section of the Province of Ontario, that hon. gentleman is not in his place, raising his voice in condemnation of an act which, of itself, is sufficient to condemn the Government for their conduct in this matter. I am also astonished that the Minister of Customs does not rise in his place and condemn this act. I do not understand how it is that the Minister can sit silent and see the interests of that class of people bartered away as they have been in this transaction. I am a little astonished that other members in this House do not rise in their places and condemn this transaction. It is something that is, in my opinion, very indefensible, and it is but one instance out of many in which the public domain has been bartered away for the purpose of pleasing or conciliating the friends of the Government. It is about time that these things should stop; it is about time that the public domain should be honestly administered. It is time that the members supporting the Government should look to these things and see that they are not repeated. I certainly think that the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron) deserves the thanks of the House for the manner in which he has presented his case. He has proved this case so well that the Minister of the Interior had to admit that, in the main, he is correct. The utterances of the Minister of the Interior have corroborated his statement as to the value of this domain. When we see that hon. gentleman showing such a painstaking desire to get at the facts, I think he is entitled to the thanks of the House for the trouble he has taken in elaborating the case. Although it is not pleasant for the Government to look at it, still the hon. member has discharged a very important duty, which should entitle him to the thanks of the country. Other people are interested in the administration of this fund as well as the Indians. The white people are very anxious that the funds of the Indians should be properly administered. It is the boast of our people that the Indians are protected in their rights, but if it is shown to the Indians that their rights are bartered away, are given away and squandered to political partisans of the Government, it will create discord among the Indians, and lead to mutiny and all the consequences that may arise and which are so much to be dreaded in every community. Fair play and the protection of the rights of the Indians is what we expect, and when the Government are derelict in this duty it behoves this House to vote their condemnation.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). When the time arrived for this House to consider the question as to whether certain of the bands of Indians had not advanced so far as to be entrusted with a larger measurement of the management of their own affairs than had hitherto been accorded to them, we were told by the Government that it would be a very unsafe thing to allow them such management, and that to give entire management of their affairs into the hands of the Indians would be fatal to them. I ask hon. members if they think any body of Indians, the least progressive band you can imagine in Canada, could have been led or induced to carry out a transaction so utterly ruinous in its nature as this which was performed for them by their trustees. Why, I think this is a case in which the House cannot hesitate to condemn the Government for what they have done. The Government sold property which, according to the price stated by the Minister of the Interior, and taking the amount which would be realised from stumpage, was worth at least $40,000, for the small sum of $316, and this was done by the trustees of the Indian fund, and the Minister making this announcement in the same breath stated that it would be an unfit thing to trust the Indians with the management of their own affairs. I think no more need be said than what has been said to show the gross violation of the interest of the Indians that has taken place, and I trust that a circumstance like this will never be repeated and never again be brought to the attention of this House. The Indian community has a great deal to complain of in regard to the management of its affairs, but I trust that this case and other cases will make the Government more careful in the management of Indian affairs.

House divided on amendment of Mr. Barron:

Unprovided Items..... $465,890.18

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. While it is true that we find the details respecting these items in the Auditor General's Report, a good many of them are unsatisfactory. There is an item of $62,000, unprovided expenses, on the Intercolonial Railway alone. Considering how late we sat last Session, it looks like very great carelessness on the part of the Department of Railways that they should not have obtained an appropriation sufficient to have covered all the expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway. That does not appear to me to be any excuse for the department being so seriously in error. They ought to have known better what sums are required for the Intercolonial Railway. When we sit here to within a few weeks of the end of the year it is very objectionable that the expenses of the road should exceed by such a large sum the total vote unless there were some special reason which the Minister of Finance may explain. If there is not this reason the item cannot be allowed to pass without comment.

Mr. FOSTER. I have no doubt there is a special reason which has been mentioned in the warrant, but I am unable to give it to-night, but I will bring the information down.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When the hon. gentleman comes down with such an item as this he might reasonably be prepared with some information upon it. I find again that, under the head of Civil Government, $7,280 are unprovided for in the Privy Council. That is a very large amount and is utterly disproportionate to the ordinary expenses of the department.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. gentleman will remember that, according to the conversation which took place across the floor of the House, each item has now to run by itself. An item that is not expended lapses, and those overexpended are to be provided for by way of warrant.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not take the exception to the smaller Estimates, but the hon. gentleman will see that a mistake of $7,280 out of a total of $26,000 is a very large percentage. Of course, in larger departments we could understand this, but in this small department a deficiency should not have been found.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I see an item of $2,240 for diagrams for the Budget Speech. This is a piece of utter extravagance.

Mr. FOSTER. There are no diagrams in the speech this year.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). They are utterly useless.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think the country will say so.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Yes; and I believe that five out of six of the hon. gentlemen who support the Government will say so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I really think that this is a very extravagant item, and very small value is got for the expenditure. As I pointed out before a great many of these diagrams are utterly incorrect. One would not object to a reasonable charge for them, but this seems very extravagant.

Mr. FOSTER. These have not been repeated.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is to the credit of the hon. gentleman. It is understood, I suppose, that the hon. gentleman will bring down this information which we ask for with regard to the extra expenditure on the Intercolonial Railway and other matters?

Mr. FOSTER. I shall.

Amount required for the repair of roads on Ordnance Lands at Grand Falls, N.B..... $700

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Are there any settlers on these ordnance lands? I understood that the present town of Grand Falls was on the ordnance lands, and that where this money is supposed to be expended there are very few settlers. Nearly $2,000 has been expended on roads there, and I have not been able to ascertain what all this expenditure is for. I have always understood that the land was wilderness land.

Mr. FOSTER. I will make enquiries.

Mr. ELLIS. How are the lands managed? Is there a caretaker of them?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I know of none.

Mr. ELLIS. My impression is that there is a keeper who gets $200 a year, and who does nothing, and that $700 a year is expended on the roads, and there are no roads.

Trent Canal—Repairs and working expenses..... $1,350

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What do you propose to do with this vote?

Mr. FOSTER. I find a memorandum of sums required for completing the landing pier at Lakefield, and repairing roads at Buckhorn. I presume it is for that.

Mr. BARRON. Might it not be to clear away the obstructions at Cameron Lake, which I have spoken of?

Mr. FOSTER. May be it is.

Mr. BARRON. There is no use of humbugging about this business at Cameron Lake, because the Government is humbugging about it. The locks are there, but they are useless without the removal of this obstruction. There are two boats in the lake which cannot get down, and boats in the lower lake which can go as far up as the lock, but no farther; the railway bridge is in the way, and there is no swing bridge to let barges or vessels through, and the whole navigation is completely stopped. The Government were told of this matter two years and a-half ago, but they have not done a single thing.

Mr. MULOCK. I think it is perfectly monstrous to ask us to pass a vote which the Minister does not know the object of. It ought either to be struck out or stand over. While on this item I would like to enquire what is going to be the policy of the Government in regard to this canal system? The Minister of Public Works was a little shy the other night, but intimated that he would be able at some future time to answer this question. The Government had a distinct policy with regard to the Trent Canal before the election. It was going to build it right off. Has that policy been changed?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think the hon. gentleman is quite mistaken. I never said a word about that. It was the First Minister who spoke about that.

Mr. MULOCK. The item stood over because the hon. Minister of Public Works did not know what the policy was, but he said the First Minister would probably be able to tell at the next meeting.

Mr. FOSTER. I quite remember that this item was fully discussed between the First Minister and my hon. friend opposite (Mr. Barron) a week or two ago, and I do not see the utility of discussing the policy of this canal two or three times over. If hon. gentleman object to this vote we can strike it out.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That is making a little capital at the expense of my hon. friend. He merely asked what improvements were included in that item.

Mr. BOWELL. Perhaps it would be as well when the hon. gentleman is attributing motives that he should have the whole story. The hon. gentleman to my left told the hon. member for North Victoria that he really was not aware what the item was for, but that it would probably be expended for the object the hon. gentleman had in view. The hon. gentleman for North Victoria at once said: Strike it out. He evidently has great interest in the canal, or he would not feel desirous of having so many repetitions of the same thing.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I want to attribute no motives. The hon. member for North Victoria pointed out that his objection was not to this work, but he thought the House ought to know in what way the money was to be expended.

Mr. BOWELL. His suggestion was first to strike it out.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). If the hon. gentleman wants to strike out any item, we will give him as many items to strike out as he desires.

Mr. STEVENSON. The item is for taking boulders out of the lake, and fixing the waters. The engineer asks that the money be given for that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Finance Minister knows quite well that it is the business of every Minister to be prepared with information on any item touching his department in Supply.

Mr. MULOCK. I do not think there is anything very wrong in objecting to pass any item, when there is no explanation given of it. I have an interest in this matter as a representative of a part of the country which will be affected by it, and the Government has many times in years gone by declared its firm allegiance to this scheme. I have been on deputations with large bodies of citizens from the territory which is supposed to be served by this canal, and I have heard members of the Government, and notably the late Minister of Finance, declaring an undying faith in that structure, and I am now surprised to find the Minister of Customs admitting that there has been a change of policy.

Mr. BOWELL. I did not say so.

Mr. MULOCK. At all events, it has become a question of doubt. Prior to 1882, the Government announced publicly that this canal policy was a fixed policy of the Government, and that they were going to connect the two waters. They pretended to have all the surveys, and to know the whole cost of the work. One of the largest deputations that ever visited this city was one which came in 1883 to press this scheme on the Government. I was present on that occasion, and only the Railway Committee room was able to accommodate that deputation. Perhaps the Minister of Customs was present?

Mr. BOWELL. I was.

Mr. MULOCK. Perhaps the hon. gentleman heard the Minister of Railways at that time announce the policy of the Government. The elections were on, the scheme had not been pressed far enough, and it was necessary for the Government to announce whether they would go on or not, and after the little make-believe jobs had been gone on with the Government were brought face to face with the serious aspect of the case. In order to cover their retreat, they issued a Commission a year and a half ago to determine that question, but no report has yet been made. Where are the Commissioners? Is this going to remain over for all time? I presume there will be another election in 1892, or perhaps the Minister can tell us when it will be?

Mr. BOWELL. To-morrow.

Mr. MULOCK. Before the election, we will probably have the report. Is the report ready to be presented to the Committee?

Mr. FOSTER. It is not ready.

Mr. MULOCK. Has it been received by the Government?

Mr. FOSTER. It was stated the other night that the report had not been presented.

Mr. BARRON. Now that the whole of the Estimates have been brought down, I see that there is no item for Cameron Lake. The hon. member for East Peterborough (Mr. Stevenson) can get an item of $1,600 put in, but because I am an opponent of the Government nothing is put in for this very necessary work. At the next election, I suppose the people will be told: If you oppose Barron, this work will be done. I impress upon the Finance Minister the importance of this matter. Let the Government send somebody up to see the truth of what I say, because at present the whole business is being stopped because this work is not carried out.

Mr. STEVENSON. I suppose the hon. gentleman refers to the bridge. No doubt there is an attempt to get a swing put in there, but I understand that the Grand Trunk have submitted a plan to go below the locks altogether. I know there is a great deal of ill-feeling in reference to that matter. This is above where I live, but I have impressed upon the department the necessity of this bridge, and I have been assured that the Grand Trunk were going to do it, and I believe it will be done. As far as it is in my power, I will impress upon the Government the necessity for that work.

Intercolonial Railway—Repairs and working expenses $500,000

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I suppose this is the difference between receipts and expenditure?

Mr. FOSTER. It is the working expenses.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I am sorry the Government anticipate so large a deficiency.

Mr. FOSTER. This is for 1888-89.

Mr. MULOCK. That is considerably more than the $360,000 deficit.

Mr. FOSTER. That is a part of the entire working expenses of the year 1888-89.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It seems to be a very large margin, unless something extraordinary happened to cause an extra expenditure of half a million of dollars, for working expenses on a road where the number of miles and the number of employés are perfectly known, and where consequently the expenditure could be estimated closer than that. I think the House should know the reason for this extraordinarily large additional amount.

Mr. FOSTER. The estimate was $2,900,000, and that was found insufficient to run the road, so that this amount had to be got to carry it on.

Mr. MULOCK. What do you expect the deficit to be after you have destroyed the line with the Harvey and Moncton branch?

Mr. FOSTER. We will wait till the line is destroyed.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The expenses for locomotive power, stations, &c., and general charges foot up $3,268,464 for the year ending June, 1888, whereas the estimate was only $2,900,000.

Mr. FOSTER. It shows there was an insufficient estimate for the year.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is quite clear that when the Short Line is finished the traffic on the Intercolonial Railway will fall off considerably. We know that the line has been a source of an enormous loss to the country for several years. In order to reduce that sum to the lowest possible amount the Government have been charging to capital account items such as heating and lighting cars and snow fences.

Mr. FOSTER. For the plant and nothing else.

Mr. McMULLEN. The Finance Minister that was here two years ago said the Intercolonial Railway was then sufficiently protected by snow fences, and that they always charged to expenses the replacing of any snow fences that were worn out, and they did the same in regard to cars that were worn out. Still we find that a large amount has been charged to capital account for snow fences and for lighting and heating cars.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Am I to understand that the Minister estimated the working expenses for last year at $2,900,000, and the expenses for the last year were $3,268,000 on the Intercolonial Railway, besides the Eastern Extension, that this $500,000 is required to cover the difference?

Mr. FOSTER. Yes.

Inspection of Weights and Measures. $1,835 22

Mr. McMULLEN. R. A. Hughes, salary from 5th October, 1888, $600. Who was Mr. Hughes' predecessor?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Hughes is at Windsor, a new appointment.

Mr. McMULLEN. There must be a new division.

Mr. FOSTER. I fancy the country is parceled out into divisions. This is an assistant inspector for that division.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Edward Kelly, salary from first December, 1888, at $500. In whose place was Kelly appointed.

Mr. FOSTER. In the place of Ryan, who was promoted.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Who is the Inspector of Weights and Measures?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know, but the returns will show the hon. gentleman. The Inland Revenue report is brought down every year, and it is now on the Table of the House.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Will the hon. gentleman state the reason why it was found necessary to appoint an assistant inspector?

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose the district was too large for the officers at that time at work.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Has the gentleman appointed had any previous experience in the public service?

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know.

Royal Labor Commission..... .... $10,000

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Is this a final payment? How much has the Commission cost altogether?

Mr. FOSTER. There has been spent $64,572, accounts for printing and other accounts yet unpaid, $13,000, making $77,572, which is supposed to be the final amount.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. None of us, I fear, have been able to examine the evidence, except so far as it was contained in the newspapers. Last year I called the attention of the Government, and of the First Minister particularly, to some remarkable statements made, more particularly respecting child labor, and I demanded from him then a statement as to what policy the Government intended to adopt with respect to putting a stop to abuses which were alleged to exist, and I was then promised that next Session the Government would have digested the evidence and made up their mind as to what was to be done. I desire now to know whether the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Justice is able to state whether the Government has come to any conclusion. Some of the statements pointed to very great abuses indeed.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. When the hon. gentleman brought up the matter last Session, the evidence had not been fully taken. There was, however, a discussion principally as to the hours of labor and the employment of child labor. The Government have come to no conclusion on the report, for the reason that it was impossible, considering the stage at which this report and evidence was presented, to examine the report and evidence in time to prepare any measure for this Session.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I am sorry to hear that, because, after what fell from the First Minister as to the atrocious abuses which seem to have occurred with respect to the employment of children in many of the factories, I did hope that that particular branch of the subject would have been dealt with. The evidence showed that little children were employed for periods of time that no grown man could work without serious injury. It is a disgrace to our civilisation and to humanity that such a state of things should be permitted to exist in this country. If it should turn out that the Dominion Government had no power in the matter, and if the Minister of Justice had so declared, I could have understood why the question had not been taken up, but if such cases come fairly within our power to regulate the criminal law, it seems to me that the Government ought in all conscience to have taken steps to prevent such occurrences in future.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Some of the abuses, no doubt, would come within our control. The employment of children in factories is already provided for in the criminal law, and all that was required was a systematic inspection of factories in order that such abuses should not occur; in fact all that is required in these cases is to have the existing laws enforced and not new ones enacted. In regard to these matters, the public were very much excited by the evidence which transpired about the time when the hon. gentleman mentioned the subject last Session. The evidence was not then fully taken; to some extent the evidence then taken was qualified, and we have had information that the publicity of those facts at that time has led, to a great extent, to the suppression of the abuse. Still, in order to found any legislation of a satisfactory kind on the report or on the suggestions of the labor organisations and the labor commissioners, it is necessary that the documents should be given careful perusal.

North-West Mounted Police..... .... $80,000

Mr. FOSTER. The explanation in respect to boots and leather goods is simple. It appears that instead of the word "days" the hon. member for North Wellington read the word "dozens," and Mr. McCullough in his statement mentioned inspection of boots and leather materials 13 and a-half days at $10 a day, $135.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who is Mr. McCullough?

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. McCullough is the gentleman who inspected the articles made from leather.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is his occupation?

Mr. FOSTER. He is a leather man of some kind. He resides in Ottawa. He inspected 4,986 pairs of boots, of which he rejected 160 pairs; he also inspected stable halters, blankets, straps, hobbles, &c., in all, 11,371 articles, for which he received $135, and I think he did good work for it. It will be seen that the cost for inspection was one cent for each article, or two cents for a pair of boots. With reference to the clothing, they find it desirable that a year's supply should be kept in store, and the surplus stock of 1885 was so depleted after the rebellion that they are restoring that stock at the present time. They have now a full year's supply of boots and stockings, and a half year's supply of breeches. Each policeman gets three pairs of riding breeches in a year, four pairs of socks and two pairs of stockings. He also gets seven pairs of long boots and two pairs of short boots in five years. The service is particularly hard on the clothing, as the men are a great part of the time in the saddle and the wet grass is very hard on the boots. A policeman is allowed, in lieu of the riding breeches, two-thirds of the price when he supplies shapps for his own wear.

Mr. McMULLEN. With regard to this question of examination I showed the account that was placed in my hands to the hon. Minister, and the clerk upstairs pronounced the word "dozens" as well as I did myself. It certainly looked very much like dozens instead of days. I understand that this inspection was made in Regina and I would like to know if a man was sent there to make the inspection.

Mr. FOSTER. The man lives here and the inspection was made in Ottawa.

Mr. McMULLEN. $10 a day is a large sum for an ordinary shoemaker to receive. My opinion is, as I stated before, that there has been gross recklessness in connection with those supplies for the Mounted Police. We have 2,783 pairs of gauntlets at $1 50 and $1.08 a pair, and I would like to know where all those gauntlets go to.

Mr. FOSTER. They go into stock just the same as the clothing, and I think the reasons are all in favor of keeping a supply in stock.

Mr. McMULLEN. When we consider the fact that we supplied 5,163 riding breeches at $5.60 a pair, I think there must be a nigger in the fence somewhere. They should be bought a good deal cheaper than that.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend knows that for that service you must have cloth of a special kind and that it is expensive.

Mr. McMULLEN. If the cloth is so excellent I do not see why a man could wear out three pairs of riding breeches in a year.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think that is too many for a man who is in the saddle every day in the year. My hon. friend would wear more than three pairs of breeches frisking around those seats on the opposite side.

Mr. DENISON. They would wear out six pairs if the stuff was not good.

Mr. McMULLEN. They must be very good breeches to cost so much money.

Mr. FOSTER. They are good.

Intercolonial Railway—chargeable to capital.....$291,500

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is the increased accommodation at Halifax for increased elevator capacity ?

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has not looked into the figures, or he would find that about 578,880 bushels were put through that elevator.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). How many were put through last year ?

Mr. FOSTER. Last year was not so good a wheat year. I think 71,373 bushels went through last year. This vote is to provide a pile foundation for a sugar shed at Halifax. The contract for the building is let for $5,022 ; the cost of the piles was estimated at $1,050; other materials, $1,550, and labor, $600.

Immigration..... $48,100 71

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Explanations were promised as to this.

Mr. CARLING. That question was discussed very fully the other evening, when I stated that this vote was to close up the expenses for assisted passages in connection with ocean steamers. These accounts have been carried to a certain amount year after year, and when we closed up the accounts they were all sent in by the different steamship companies up to the 27th of April. They were received last July or August, and the total amount due to the steamboat companies was this amount, for which no vote had been taken.

Mr. FOSTER. It must be recollected, too, that the vote for immigration was very greatly cut down last year, and it was impossible to do the regular work with it, and to make these payments as well.

Resolutions reported.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 2:10 a.m. (Wednesday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 24th April, 1889.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

P. E. I.—WEST POINT WHARF.

Mr. PERRY asked, Is it the intention of the Department of Public Works to repair the wharf at West Point, P.E.I., during the present season ? If so, is the work to be let by tender ?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have not had the answer to this question, but I may say to the hon. gentleman that if this is one of the wharves which have been taken over by the Dominion Government, the wharf will be looked after. I cannot say whether tenders will be asked or not.

Mr. PERRY. It is one of these.

SHORT LINE—HARVEY TO MONCTON.

Mr. SUTHERLAND asked, 1. Has there been a survey of the route of the proposed railway from Harvey to Salisbury or Moncton ? 2. Are there any plans or specifications of the proposed railway ? If so, will they be laid on the Table of the House ? 3. Are there any reports, by Government or other engineers, with regard to the route to be adopted ? 4. What is the estimated cost of the proposed railway ?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. To the first question the answer is, yes. To the second: there are plans and profiles which were laid on the Table in 1886, but there is no specification. To the third: yes; they were laid on the Table in 1886. To the fourth: $16,000 a mile.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—JUDGES' SALARIES.

Mr. CURRAN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to draw attention to a statement made in the Montreal Herald. That newspaper publishes a fictitious report of the Government caucus, in which my name is mentioned. It says:

"Mr. Curran, M.P., contended that the salaries were already too high, and that in his constituency there were several lawyers who were ready to take the places of gentlemen should they resign. Mr. Curran made an able and incisive speech in defence of his position, and was supported by a large majority of the French Canadian members present."

I merely wish to say that this report is entirely erroneous and untrue. The gentleman who wrote it may have considered he was doing a very witty thing, but, in my opinion, I think he has simply made an ass of himself.

Mr. MITCHELL. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I want to make an observation. On seeing the paragraph referred to, I saw it must have been a mistake, because any one who knows the aspirations of the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Curran), knows that he never would have taken that attitude, with the future probability of his going on to the bench at no very remote date himself. Knowing it must be wrong, I telegraphed down that it was Mr. Cimon's name which was misunderstood for that of Mr. Curran. As Mr. Curran has denied the correctness of that particular statement concerning himself, I do not suppose he denies the accuracy of the report ?

Mr. CURRAN. Certainly, the whole report.

Mr. MITCHELL. And as to the man having made an ass of himself, the readers of the Herald do not think so.

Mr. CURRAN. The proprietor of the Herald may not.

N. W. T ACT AMENDMENT.

On the order for second reading of Bill (No 136) to consolidate and amend the Act respecting the North-West Territories,

Mr. DEWDNEY. When I introduced this Bill for the special purpose of consolidating the three Acts now in existence, my principal reason was that last Session the Legislative Assembly consolidated the North-West Ordinances, and I thought it would be very convenient to have the North-West Territories Act also consolidated. However, some hon. gentlemen opposite thought it was too late in the Session to put through this Bill; but I thought, subsequently, that if they would agree to raise no question on the clauses not amended, we might possibly be able to put through the amendment. Since that, several hon. gentlemen have informed me, that probably there would be considerable discussion on some of the old clauses of the Bill which I do not propose to amend, and, as the amendments I did propose are not of a serious character, and several hon. gentlemen on both sides have expressed a wish that, if possible, I might allow the measure to remain over for another Session, I beg to move that the order be discharged.

Motion agreed to, order discharged, and Bill withdrawn.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES.

House resolved itself into Committee to consider resolutions (p. 1396) to authorise the granting of subsidies to certain railway companies, and to the construction of the railways therein mentioned.

(In the Committee.)

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We will take these up separately. As the Committee must have seen, these are no new votes, but they are revotes. Principally they are votes which have lapsed either from the work not being commenced or not being finished within the statutory time for which the subsidies were voted, and we are obliged to come to Parliament again for a revote. Some of the companies whose subsides have lapsed have not shown any reason why those subsidies should be revived. But those referred to in this resolution are considered by the Government, under the circumstances, to deserve an extension of time. The whole of the vote is simply for an extension of time.

Mr. LAURIER. There might be some discussion to be raised as to the propriety of several of these votes, but, as the House has already assented to them, I will not raise any discussion upon them at all, but I think the House is entitled to some explanation in regard to the voting of these balances of lapsed subsidies.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Certainly.

To the Ontario and Pacific Railway Company, for a line of railway from Cornwall to Ottawa, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $172,400.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is a railway with a very magnificent title, but I think its pretensions are more modest. The railway, as chartered, was to run from Cornwall to Perth and to Ottawa. The vote was given for the road from Cornwall to Perth. The company, in which my hon. friend from Cornwall (Mr. Bergin) was largely interested on behalf of his constituents, found that the prospect of business between Cornwall and Perth was not such as to enable them to interest capitalists in the road, but he has been informed, and I think, from all I can learn, has been informed truly, that if, instead of making the grant for the road from Cornwall to Perth, it is made for the road from Cornwall to Ottawa, it will be possible that the road should be built, and that will be another important link between the St. Lawrence and Ottawa, and it will diminish the vote by fully $90,000. I ask the Committee to allow the word "Perth" in the resolution to be struck out and "Ottawa" to be inserted, and to diminish the sum by $90,000.

Amendment agreed to.

To the Ottawa and Gatineau Railway Company, for a line of railway from Hull Station towards Le Desert, a distance of 62 miles, a subsidy not exceeding in the whole $320,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Perhaps I had better read the memorandum which has been given me on this subject: The Ottawa and Gatineau Valley Railway was granted a subsidy by the 46th Vic., chapter 25, for the first 50 miles of their railway from Hull station, not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $160,000. By 47 Vic., chapter 8, they were granted a further subsidy for a line of railway from Kazuabazua to Le Desert, not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $160,000, or altogether, $320,000. By 48-49 Vic., chapter 59, this subsidy was doubled up on 62 miles, as follows, viz.: for a line of railway from Hull station towards Le Desert, a distance of 62 miles, in lieu of the subsidies granted by 46 Vic., chapter 25, and 47 Vic., chapter 8, a subsidy of $320,000. The Act 48-49 Victoria required the work to be commenced within two years from the 1st August, 1886. No contract having been entered into, and no work done on the 1st August, 1888, the subsidy lapsed. A careful location of the line has been made, and it is understood financial arrangements are being negotiated for its early construction. A revival of the subsidy is therefore asked. The line runs through a fine timbered country and the land is well suited for agriculture. It is considered that the extension of time is deserved, and that that country will be rapidly settled.

Mr. LAURIER. Have the surveys made by the company been laid before the Government?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I fancy so. I have not got them here, but I have no doubt that the surveys have been laid before the Government, and all the particulars were laid before the House at the time of the original vote.

Mr. LAURIER. As I have said, I do not propose to raise any objection to these votes. Great anticipations are entertained as to the future of the country through which this road is to run, but we are to a certain extent in the dark, and I can only hope that those expectations will be realised.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, I hope so. It is a pity that this country which lies so near to the capital should not be developed.

To the Cap Rouge and St. Lawrence Railway Company, for twelve miles of their railway, from Lorette vid Cap Rouge to Quebec, in the Province of Quebec, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $38,400.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Perhaps my hon. friend (Mr. Laurier) knows something of that country?

Mr. LAURIER. Yes, I think so.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Cap Rouge and St. Lawrence Railway was granted a subsidy by 49 Vic., chapter 10, for 12 miles of their railway from Lorette vid Cap Rouge to Quebec, not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $38,400. The work on this road not having been commenced within two years from the 1st August, 1886, it lapsed on the 1st August, 1888. This projected line runs along the north shore of the St. Lawrence River, east of the city of Quebec, a district which is thickly populated, and much interested in the construction of this road. A revival of the subsidy is therefore asked.

To the Parry Sound Colonisation Railway Company, for 40 miles of their railway, from the village of Parry Sound to the village of Sundridge, on the line of the Northern Pacific Junction Railway, in the Province of Ontario, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $128,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Parry Sound Colonisation Railway was subsidised by 49 Vic., chapter 10, for 40 miles of their railway, from the village of Parry Sound to the village of Sundridge, on the line of the Northern Pacific Junction Railway. This road was required, by the Act above referred to, to be commenced within two years from the 1st August, 1889. On the 1st August, 1888, it not having been commenced, the subsidy lapsed. The road passes through a district much in need of railway facilities, and as the prospects of raising the necessary funds for the early commencement of the work are represented to be favorable, a revival of the subsidy is asked. This road starts from Parry Sound, which is one of the most important harbors on the lake, and runs into the country to connect with the Northern Pacific Junction Railway. It is a splendid country, in futuro. There are few settlements, except along the margin of the lake. The company found that they could not finance, to use a common expression, for the building of that railway on the coast, and they, therefore, did not go through the form which is too often practiced by these railways, of making a sham commencement by breaking the sod, and grading a few miles. But they felt that unless they could get the assistance of the Federal Government, the road would not be built. The Ontario Government and Legislature have only this last Session granted this road $3,000 a mile, and the company is satisfied that with the $6,200 a mile that will be granted, the road will certainly be built. It is a very valuable road, opening up a very valuable country. My hon. friend from Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) has got a suggestion, which I think is a good one.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I move to insert after "Sundridge," the words "or some other point" on the line of the Northern Pacific Junction Railway.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If the limit is at Sundridge, it does not quite meet the vote of the Ontario Legislature. This would make the terminus at Sundridge, it could be at no other place; but the Ontario vote for the same road is not so limited.

Mr. LAURIER. Does this meet the views of the promoters of the railway?

Mr. O'BRIEN. It is at their request.

For a railway from St. Andrew's to the Canadian Pacific Railway, at, or at any point east of the town of Lachute, in the County of Argenteuil, in the Province of Quebec, 7 miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $22,400.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This line was subsidised by 47 Vic., chapter 8, from St. Andrew's to Lachute, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $22,400. This was amended by 49 Vic., chapter 10, as follows, viz.:—For a railway from St. Andrew's to the Canadian Pacific Railway, at, or at any point east of the town of Lachute, 7 miles, in lieu of the subsidy granted by 47 Vic., chapter 8, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $22,400. The work was to be commenced in two years from the 1st August, 1886, but not having been commenced on the 1st August, 1888, the subsidy lapsed. The Great Northern Railway, it is understood, are prepared to take up the construction of this road and operate it; it is therefore asked that the subsidy be revived.

Mr. LAURIER. The Great Northern Railway—that is somewhere in the moon.

For a line of the Central Railway, from the head of Grand Lake to the Intercolonial Railway, in the Province of New Brunswick, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $128,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Central Railway was subsidised by 47 Vic., chapter 8, for a line of railway from the head of Grand Lake to the Intercolonial Railway, between Sussex and St John, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $128,000. By the terms of the Act above referred to, the road was to be finished by the 19th April, 1888; this not having been accomplished, the subsidy lapsed on that day. The company entered into a contract, under the Subsidy Act above referred to, on the 7th July, 1886, for the construction of this road, and the work has been carried on up to this date, the track being laid over the whole 40 miles subsidised, but the road is not fully completed according to contract; but inasmuch as it is far advanced towards completion, a revival of the subsidy is asked.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). In the old Act the terminal point is fixed at some point between Sussex and St. John.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have not looked at the Act myself. The memorandum I have is this: To subsidise a line of railway from the head of Grand Lake to the Intercolonial Railway, between Sussex and St. John.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). It does not say where, on the Intercolonial Railway.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It was not necessary to set out the whole thing here, but the company entered into a contract under the Subsidy Act above referred to. It must be under the present charter. The work has been going on up to this date, a track has been laid for the whole 40 miles subsidised, but has not been fully completed.

Mr. McMULLEN. How far has this road proceeded? What portion has been completed?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Forty miles. The whole road has been built, but was not completed within the statutory time, and therefore it has lapsed; so they must get a formal vote of Parliament. The road was completed and fit for being run, but no money could be paid out without the vote of Parliament.

To the Albert Southern Railway Company, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by the Act 47 Victoria, chapter 8, not exceeding in the whole $31,771.43.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This railway was subsidised by 47 Vic., chapter 8, as follows, viz:—

"For a line of railway from Hopewell to Alma, in the Province of New Brunswick, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $51,200."

This company entered into a contract under the Subsidy Act on 23rd May, 1885, since which the work of construction has been proceeded with under difficulties. The line is 16 miles in length, over 10 miles on which track is laid, and the balance of 6 miles is partially graded. The company have received on account of the above subsidy, the sum of $29,428.57; but inasmuch as the road was not finished as required by the Act 47 Vic., by the 19th April, 1888, the balance of the subsidy $31,771.43 lapsed. It is asked that this balance be revived.

Mr. LAURIER. The amount should be $19,428, instead of $29,428.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; an error appears to have been made in the figures.

To the Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy mentioned in the Act 49 Victoria, chapter 17, not exceeding in the whole $244,500.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Baie des Chaleurs Railway was granted a subsidy by 46 Vic., chapter 25, as follows, viz.:—For 100 miles of their railway, from Metapediac, on the Intercolonial Railway, to Paspebiac, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole the sum of $320,000. By 47 Vic., chapter 8, a subsidy was granted for the construction of the first 20 miles from the Intercolonial Railway, as follows, viz.:—For a branch of the Intercolonial Railway from Metapediac, extending towards Paspebiac, 20 miles, a subsidy not exceeding $300,000. The company entered into a contract under the above Acts, on the 7th November, 1885, and have since been prosecuting the work, about 50 miles being far advanced towards completion, and having earned and been paid subsidy to the amount of $375,500, and as they are prosecuting the work vigorously, it is asked that the balance of subsidy, $244,500, be revived.

Mr. LAURIER. According to the statute the company were to complete the road. On the completion of the first 20 miles the company were to receive $300,000, and for the next 20 miles $6,400 per mile. Now, it becomes an important question as to how far the work has been prosecuted, and how far completed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will furnish the information.

To the Irondale, Bancroft and Ottawa Railway Company, for a line of railway from the Victoria Branch of the Midland Railway to the Village of Bancroft, in the County of Hastings, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by the Act 47 Victoria, chapter 8, not exceeding in the whole $145,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. A subsidy was granted this company by 47 Vic., chapter 8, for a line of railway from the Victoria branch of the Midland Railway, to the village of Bancroft, in the Township of Dungannon, County of Hastings, not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $160,000. This company entered into a contract, under the Subsidy Act, on the 19th August, 1886, and proceeded with the work, and were paid on account of subsidy the sum of $15,000, but as the Subsidy Act above referred to required the road to be completed by the 19th April, 1888, which was not accomplished, the balance of the subsidy, $145,000, lapsed. The road is an important one, serving a number of iron mines, stone quarries, &c. It is now asked that this balance of subsidy be revived.

To the Northern and Pacific Junction Railway Company, for a railway from Gravenhurst to Callander, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidies granted by the Acts 45 Victoria, chapter 14, and 46 Victoria, chapter 25, not exceeding in the whole $35,000.

Sir JOHN A. MADDONALD. This company was granted a subsidy by 45 Vic., chapter 14, fro a railway from Gravenhurst to Callander, a subsidy not exceeding $6,000 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $660,000,and by 46 Vic., chapter 25, for a railway from Gravenhurst to Callander, 110 miles, a subsidy not exceeding $6,000 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $660,000. Total, $1,320,000. On the 12th of April, 1884, the company entered into a contract under the above Acts for the construction of this road, and carried it forward near towards completion, having earned and been paid $1,280,000, leaving work to the value of $35,000 to be done, a similar amount being retained from the subsidy. As this work had not been done on the date on which the subsidy lapsed, 25th May, 1887, no further payment can be made, even if the work be finished as required. It is, therefore, asked that this balance of subsidy be revived. The road has been in successful operation for some time, and is doing good service to the country.

For a railway from Truro to Newport, in the Province of Nova Scotia, forty-nine miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $156,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This road was subsidised by 49 Vic., chapter 10, for a railway from Truro to Newport, N. S., 49 miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole, $156,800, and was to be commenced in two years from 1st August, 1886, but as no work has been done thereon, the subsidy lapsed on 1st August, 1888. This road runs from the flourishing town of Truro to Newport station on the Windsor Branch, it passes through a very well settled and fertile district, the inhabitants attaching great importance to its construction as a means of developing trade. It is, therefore, asked that the subsidy be revived.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is there any prospect of the work being carried out?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The money has been secured and the work is about to go on, in fact some work has been done already. The right of way has been secured, and my information is that the money necessary to complete the road has been obtained. The company received a subsidy of like amount from the Provincial Government.

Mr. McMULLEN. Our experience in building roads down there has been, that when we first grant a bonus of $3,200 a mile, the next year we are asked to double that amount, and eventually we are obliged to undertake to build the road ourselves. That has been our general experience in that section of the country. I hope that that system is going to be dropped, and that we shall not be asked to increase those bonuses year after year. I do not know what promises have been made with regard to the building of this road, but I hope that we shall not be asked for any further bonuses.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not know what roads in that section of the country the hon. gentleman refers to. He possibly has reference to what is called the Short Line in Nova Scotia, and with that single exception, no railway in the Lower Provinces has received a double bonus, or eventually been built by the Government. Therefore, the hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken in saying that this is the general rule.

Mr. LAURIER. My hon. friend was led into error by the fact that the Short Line has given a bad name to that section of the country. When was this railway subsidised by the Local Government?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Last year.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). There can be no doubt that this road passes through one of the finest agricultural districts of Nova Scotia, and connecting as it does the Eastern Railway with the Western Railway, I have no doubt it will be a very great convenience and a very valuable piece of road. It will also be of great value to the Intercolonial Railway as affording additional traffic for that road. I understood there was some difficulty in the way with reference to the amount which would be required for the construction of a bridge, and it was expected that the Government would render some assistance in that way. I think the Government should assist this undertaking, rather than that the enterprise should not be carried out there. I know that the Local Government are doing all they can in this matter, and that they will assist the Dominion Government in securing its construction at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. McMULLEN. My reason for making the statement I did was that it was well known to this House that we first granted a bonus of $3,200 a mile to the Oxford and New Glasgow Railway, and Sir Charles Tupper assured the House that the road would be built for that money. Afterwards we doubled that bonus, and, after it remained on the Statute-book for a time, we eventually had to complete the road at the entire cost of the Dominion. Not only did we do that, but we did it under a wrong statement. We received a statement as to the probable cost of that line, but we found that in place of costing what was anticipated, it has cost nearly double the money.

Resolutions reported.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

Clerk of the Crown in Chancery $100

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to know, with regard to this increase of $100 for the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, if this is the notable individual whose increased salary we have persistently objected to? I would like to know who the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is. Is he the same man?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; he is another man. He is the late sheriff of the North-West, Mr. St. Onge Chapleau. This increase merely gives him $2,400, which is the salary of a chief clerk.

Mr. McMULLEN. I suppose he is not related to the Secretary of State.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think he has the great advantage of being related to the Secretary of State.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And he has the advantage of further experience. He has been in other departments in the service in which he was not equally appreciated.

Mr. McMULLEN. It might be well to find out how many more brothers the Secretary of State has, or this is the only one we have installed in office. Are the rest of them of age; for, perhaps, when they come to the age of maturity we will have to find places for them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think all of them now, like my hon. friend, have arrived at years of discretion, and know how to hold their tongues more than my hon. friend.

Mr. McMULLEN. We are all too apt to hold our tongues in this House. If we were more ready to tell the hon. gentleman in plain language what we felt, we might do him good, as well as serve the country's interests.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, if I am on a jury when my hon. friend is tried for holding his tongue, I will say, not guilty.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This gentleman is the same, I think, who was in the Department of Public Works, and was dismissed by Sir Charles Tupper for irregularities.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He was in one of the departments.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is it true that he was dismissed for publishing outside of the department private information which he had received there as an official?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is no doubt that this gentleman had, but I do not think with any evil intention, or for personal emolument, been indiscreet in stating what he ought not to have stated, and it was thought well that that conduct should be marked.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In this way, by an increase of salary?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No. He was afterwards appointed sheriff in the North-West, and, I believe, he performed his duties to the satisfaction of every one. Then he was deprived of his office by the new system of dividing up the North-West into districts, and having a sheriff for each district. On his office becoming vacant, he was appointed Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, and has, I believe, performed his duties satisfactorily.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I suppose he was so appointed, because he keeps secret the counsels and commissions of the Government with regard to the discharge of his duties. This man, I believe, was in the Department of Public Works, and there were some accusations made against him with reference to making known tenders for contracts in the public service. There was an accusation that he had accepted pay from some of the tenderers, and that was the ground on which he was dismissed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I really cannot say; I do not remember.

Mr. McMULLEN. It might be no harm to know whether there is any understanding with him that he is to carry out the gazetting of members at the next election in accordance with the example set by his predecessor.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He has been strictly charged to carry out the law relating to his department.

Mr. MITCHELL. It is a great pity that his predecessor had not been so strictly charged, and had not complied with the instructions.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, you know, we are getting older and wiser.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not think you are getting any better, though.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is uncharitable and unchristian.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Those public servants who are spending their lives in the faithful discharge of their duties must feel considerably encouraged at seeing that those who have not done so receive increases of salary.

Mr. McMULLEN. That is not the rule always; there are some very notable exceptions. We know that a gentleman who had discharged his duties in the Civil Service for many years, in the Marine Department, and who did an act which the Government thought he should not have done, in allowing a man to ship his fish, was dismissed promptly—Collector Ross. He was not allowed any retiring allowance, and he has not been re-engaged, I believe, nor is he likely to be.

Department of Interior—To pay C. C. Pelletier..... $150

Mr. MITCHELL. Is this the celebrated Mr. Pelletier who made the speeches at the last Hull election, and got into a very notable row there, which involved some newspapers in lawsuits for telling the truth? I believe he was in the Department of the Secretary of State.

Mr. DEWDNEY. This is not the same. He was transferred, I think, from the Militia Department, before I took office. There are no politicians in my department.

Mr. MITCHELL. They work the North-West pretty well.

Department of Marine—To provide for the salary of a third class clerk, $742 50

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). Can the Minister tell us the name of the person appointed?

Mr. FOSTER. The name of the person is Miss Grant, who has been a faithful officer in the temporary service of that department for the last eight or nine years. She has now been made permanent.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Is this the usual allowance made to a third class clerk, or does the Government make a difference in the case of ladies?

Mr. FOSTER. No. She came in under the law in 1882, and she can be appointed under the law at the salary she has.

Department of Indian Affairs—To provide for the salary of a second class clerk, $1,100.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Surely there are enough officials in the department already.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think if the hon. gentleman would read the memorandum I have, which has been prepared by the deputy of the branch—I will not read it, as it is very long—he would come to the conclusion that the appointment was absolutely necessary, as the work has increased very much.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In what way has the work increased? The number of Indians has not increased. Has the work done in connection with them increased?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes, the manner in which the accounts are kept entails increased labor.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The charges of the department keep increasing. We added nearly $2,000 to them in the Estimates of 1889-90, and now there is a further addition of $3,100, including the item for contingencies.

Mr. DEWDNEY. A great deal of labor has been thrown on this department, as on others, by the requirements of the Auditor General, labor involving careful preparation of voluminous statements every month. The appropriations for Prince Edward Island, Manitoba, the North-West Territories and British Columbia, amounting in the aggregate to nearly $1,200,000, entail a great quantity of work and the opening up of new sets of accounts, also the checking of contracts for supplies, and the examination of vouchers presented for payment. There is also the arrangement made with some Indian reserves by which some fencing has been made on one of the reserves and paid out of the Indian moneys, for which a separate account with individual Indians has to be kept, entailing a great deal of work. I went through this carefully before recommending that the appropriation be made.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman has got three extra clerks over and above those required before in the main Estimates. Those surely ought to have been sufficient to do the extra work.

Mr. MITCHELL. At least, when the main Estimates were brought in, the hon. gentleman ought to have known that he required this additional amount. The necessity could not have arisen in the last month.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is the Department of Indian Affairs now under the control of the Minister of the Interior?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Yes.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The expenditure of the Department of Indian Affairs in 1878 was $36,000 or $38,000. Now, one department expends $82,000 and the other $42,000, and with this additional sum, nearly $14,000, so that the expenditure of these two departments, apart from the extra expenditure for extra sessional clerks, is now $125,000, as against $37,000 or $38,000 in 1878. There is no justification whatever for this increase.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. gentleman had better strike that out.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I cannot do without it. The expenditure of the Indian Department in 1878 was $38,000, and of the Indians $11,000.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The Indians were not separate. The two together were $38,000.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I have the figures here, and I take this opportunity of correcting the statement the hon. gentleman made some few nights ago. The expenditure of 1887-88, in the Department of the Interior, was $38,356.13, and of the Indians $11,254.11, making a total of $49,610.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). What is it now?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I have not the Indian expenditure here.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We know what the hon. gentleman has estimated. He estimated for the year, without counting any additions, $32,762. And that does not include the Geological Survey, and he estimated for Indian Affairs, $42,415, making a total of $125,000, plus this addition of $3,531, or, as nearly as possible, $130,000.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The department to-day is in a different position from that in which it was ten years ago.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What more has it to do? The hon. gentleman has not made a single treaty since.

Mr. DEWDNEY. We are handling our Indians now. We have now 22,000 Indians on the reserves; at that time we had only a few hundred. We have to keep all these accounts, which represent a million of money.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The accounts were kept then as well as now, and there is no necessity for a thousand dollars more expenditure now than there was then.

Department of Printing and Stationery—Further amount required for Contingencies, $3,000

Mr. FOSTER. In the main Estimates, the amount which the department required was cut down, and they say it is impossible to get along with the lesser amount.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) In other words, the good resolution to practice economy, which the hon. gentleman made some time ago, is abandoned.

Mr. FOSTER. Not at all; but the necessary service must be carried on, and if the vote is too small, it is poor economy to let the smaller vote pass, and next year ask for the additional amount.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is presumed that the cutting down was not done in a hap-hazard way, but after some consideration. The Minister of Finance appears to have abandoned his promise to retrench.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Is the type now set for the voters' list still stored in the frame shed on Sussex street? I do not think that is a safe place for such valuable plant.

Mr. FOSTER. It is well taken care of, and the other building will soon be ready to receive it.

Remuneration to special messenger for delivery of night mails to Ministers and Deputy Heads, $300

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is this payment for one person, or is it distributed generally?

Mr. FOSTER. It is one person who delivers these mails at night.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Such a man would apparently be only doing two or three hours' work.

Mr. FOSTER. There is a good deal of tramping about in that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It seems to me that it is almost an absurdity to detail a special man for a couple of hours' work.

Mr. FOSTER. I would not like to do all that walking for less than a dollar a trip.

Further amount required for contingencies of High Commissioner for Canada in England $1,200

Mr. FOSTER. This has been put in the Estimates year after year, but it was omitted from the first Estimates this year.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I see that item 22 in the main Estimates includes "contingencies, including taxes and insurance on official residence, income taxes, rent, fuel, light, stationery, &c., $6,500." Apparently that covers the contingencies of the High Commissioner's house.

Mr. FOSTER. That does not cover the High Commissioner's contingencies which have been voted each year. My attention was called to it, and I found that the amount which had previously been voted was omitted.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. This vote amounts to $14,253, and it contains the vote of $1,200 which was voted in 1888 89, with $13,053 transferred from immigration. The Minister will see that it includes this $1,200.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the explanation is correct, but we will let the item stand.

Post Office and Finance Department contingencies—To make payment to those officers of the Savings Bank Branch, Post Office and Finance Departments, engaged in the balancing of and computing interest on depositors' accounts, to 30th June, 1889, $3,100.

Mr. FOSTER. This is an item which we have voted in the main Estimates in former years. A good deal of fault was found with that, because we were asking the clerks to do this work in extra hours and were paying them for it, and it was my determination, in conjunction with the Postmaster General, if possible, to have that item struck out and to make another arrangement. We went into the matter very thoroughly, and we find it impossible to do the work as economically in any other way. If we were not to employ these clerks and give them an extra amount, we would either have to employ other clerks and make them permanent, or to obtain special help for the time; and the employment of special help not used to the work would be both clumsy and quite as expensive, while the employment of stated clerks to do it would entail a larger expense on the departments. Therefore, it has been deemed best to do as we have been doing in the past, and as they do in Britain, to pay these clerks an extra amount for the extra and very hard work which they have to do in a very short time each year.

Mr. McMULLEN. The clerks work, as I understand, from 9.30 to 4. Do they perform this work within that time?

Mr. FOSTER. No, they cannot, because the books have to be in the hands of the clerks for the regular work during those hours, and this work has to be done subsequently.

Mr. McMULLEN. What salaries do these clerks receive?

Mr. FOSTER. The amount they receive under this vote is very small. The best accountants are detailed for this work, and of course their regular salaries vary. Some of them are third class clerks and some are second class clerks.

Mr. ELLIS. On what principle is this amount charged partly to the Post Office Department and partly to the Finance Department?

Mr. FOSTER. Because the Finance Department have control of the Dominion Savings Bank branch, while the Post Office Savings Bank is under the Post Office Department.

Mr. ELLIS. This goes to increase the deficit under the Post Office Department, when it should properly be charged to the Finance Department.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the best policy is to transfer the whole of the savings banks to the Post Office Department, where the business can be much more economically managed than in the Finance Department, and that is the policy which the Government has been pursuing. As vacancies occur by death or resignation, we transfer the offices to the Post Office Department, and this year we have transferred twelve or fourteen of them.

Mr. McMULLEN. I contend that this system is objectionable altogether, and it would be much better to add a small sum to the salaries of those who do this work, if their salaries are not sufficient, in order to secure the extra half hour of their time for this purpose, and to have it understood that they shall do this work. The continuation of this system and its endorsation by the House will lead other civil servants, from time to time, to make demands for an increased allowance for any extra work they may be called upon to do. It would be very much better that the hon. gentleman should have it distinctly understood with these clerks, when they are engaged, that this work will fall to their lot, even supposing we should be asked to vote $50 or $100 additional salary, owing to the fact of their working additional time. There are now 423 clerks who draw pay for extra services, and the number is increasing. The result will be that every civil servant will be looking for a loophole through which he can draw some little allowance for extra work.

Additional salary to C. Schreiber, Chief Engineer of Government Railways..... $2,000

Mr. FOSTER. This additional sum was granted for the extra work which he had to do in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the hon. gentleman mean to tell the House that Mr. Schreiber has to discharge, in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway, those duties for which this sum was originally voted?

Mr. FOSTER. I mean to say that Mr. Schreiber has yet a great deal of onerous duty to perform in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and in connection specially with the arbitration which is being carried on. Besides, by the system of bonusing railways which has grown by accretion from year to year, his services are made greater in that respect.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). If Mr. Schreiber has too much to do, it is about time some change is made in the management of the Intercolonial Railway. His time is so much taken up with the Canadian Pacific Railway and these railway subsidies, that I think he should be relieved of his duties on the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thought there was a general feeling pervading the public mind that we are not going to get many more bonuses for railways; certainly I do not expect any. If that is so, I do not see that this charge should be continued. It is true that Mr. Schreiber may have some of his time taken up with the arbitration on the Onderdonk contract; but I saw an announcement in the papers the other day that the arbitrators had adjourned for a final sitting to Dalhousie, Mr. Schreiber's summer residence. As this vote will not operate till the next fiscal year, I do not see why this sum should be required at all.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is the salary of Mr. Schreiber. He has had it for some years, and I think he has well earned it. I believe he is a very good and faithful officer. Sometimes, of course, in the strict execution of his duty, he has to thwart people, but he is a very good officer indeed, and an economical officer as well.

Mr. MITCHELL. All your officers are.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I believe they are. His duties are very great, and they are not likely to diminish. What with the Intercolonial Railway, the Prince Edward Island Railway, and the supervision of the subsidies which are granted to railways, and which, I fancy, will, to a moderate extent, be continued for some years, his duties are very great. I have occasion to know that Mr. Schreiber's services could be employed elsewhere profitably for himself and his family. In fact, I know that he was offered a much larger salary than the Government could afford to give any officer, however valuable; but he thought it his duty to the department, and at the request of the late Mr. Pope, who had implicit confidence in him, to remain, sacrificing, I think, a large income.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think the country could do without him, and could supply his place very readily, to the satisfaction of the country, and the people who have to do with railways.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I doubt it. I dare say there would be a good many more cows to be paid for than there are now. Of course, that is mere chaff. The hon. member for Northumberland has been very successful in getting justice done to his constituents. I think if Mr. Schreiber was replaced there would be many more claims, and they would not be so steadily resisted, nor so successfully resisted. But the hon. gentleman, in his insinuating way, gets these things done, and the claims are, as a rule, admitted.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not think that the interests of the country are served by persistently refusing reasonable consideration for claims presented, when payment has to be forced, even at the point of the bayonet, as I have had to do it in many cases.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The Minister of Finance justified this mainly on the grounds of the subsidies given to railways throughout the country. As I understand, it is Mr. Schreiber's duty to attend to the different public works and railways under control of the Government. He has already a fair salary of $4,000. If, as the right hon. gentleman says, he believes he could get much more in a position elsewhere, all I can say is that, from what I understand of the way the Intercolonial Railway is managed, the sooner Mr. Schreiber accepts that position elsewhere and leaves the country, the better it will be for the railway interests. I believe that the Intercolonial Railway has been badly managed under Mr. Schreiber. I am sure there must be other engineers in this country who could manage that railway more successfully than he has managed it. I do not see why the House should be called upon to pay Mr. Schreiber a sum nearly equal to the income of a Cabinet Minister. I object most strongly to this item, because the Canadian Pacific Railway is now in that position, when the amount paid to Mr. Schreiber can be reduced. If any evidence were wanting of Mr. Schreiber's uselessness instead of usefulness, it is furnished by the correspondence brought down the Session before last relating to the Onderdonk transactions.

Mr. Schreiber there figured as the friend and advocate of Onderdonk & Co., and not as the Chief Engineer of Canada, charged to guard her interests. Had Mr. Schreiber accepted, as he was bound to accept, the arbitration of $72,000 in the first instance, which was made according to the reference, this country would have been saved $130,000. But Mr. Schreiber seemed, in that case, to guard more jealously the interests of Onderdonk & Co. than he did those of the country of which he was the servant. I, therefore, think that the country would be no loser if Mr. Schreiber were to transfer his services elsewhere, and, according to the statement of the right hon. gentleman, Mr. Schreiber would be a gainer, and so both parties would be satisfied. This item is regarded very unfavorably by the House generally, and, perhaps, the best way of testing this will be to move on concurrence that the item be struck out, and thus ascertain what the opinion of the House really is.

Mr. McMULLEN. I see by the Auditor General's Report, page 51, D: "C. Schreiber, 64 days, between September 4, 1886, and January 10, 1888, at $20, $1,280; 55 days' living allowance at $5, $275; parlor cars and porters, $1.75: $1,556.75. Is that amount in addition to his salary of $6,000 a year?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). We were given to understand that as the Canadian Pacific Railway would be soon completed, this item would not long appear in the Estimates. That being the case, it is unfair, now that the Canadian Pacific Railway is virtually completed, that this item should be placed in the Supplementary Estimates. If the First Minister thinks that Mr. Schreiber is worth more than the salary paid him as superintendent of Government railways, he should come down to the House and ask the House to increase his salary. But to ask this House, Session after Session, to pass an item of this kind, under the pretence that he is actually performing services connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway construction, is absurd, when it is clear that the Premier desires that he shall receive a larger salary than he desires to place in the Estimates. If the gentleman's services are worth more, why should the Government not propose to increase his salary? If Mr. Schreiber has the management of the Government railways, he certainly cannot have time to perform other services. I feel it is unfair to the House to be called upon to vote items of this description Session after Session, and the suggestion of the hon. member for Halifax is the correct one, that the feeling of the House should be tested as to whether this item should be allowed to pass.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is it the understanding that when Mr. Schreiber is called upon to do work as an engineer, he is to be paid $20 a day in addition to his salary?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In this case in question, he was acting as a member of the Railway Commission. I do not think any Government asks one of its servants to serve on a special commission without paying him. Mr. Schreiber was paid infinitely less that the other commissioners who sat with him. Whenever a Government official is placed upon a Royal Commission, he receives an allowance, always less than that paid to other commissioners. That has been the universal practice, and it is of the utmost importance that the best men should be obtained, and that if necessary we should have the services of Government officials.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). As Mr. Schreiber is manager of the Intercolonial Railway and engineer of the Canadian Pacific Railway, how could he find time to sit on the Railway Commission? During the arbitration with the Canadian Pacific Railway, is Mr. Schreiber to be paid for his services?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; he receives his travelling expenses.

Mr. McMULLEN. Did Mr. Schreiber, as Chief Engineer of the Intercolonial Railway, and at the same time filling a position as railway commissioner, receive both salaries at the same time?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. A Royal Commission is a temporary matter, and this was a Royal Commission respecting the Railway system of Canada. Mr. Burpee, Sir Alexander Galt, Mr. Schreiber and Mr. Moberly were the commissioners. We cannot expect that work to be done con amore unless we give the commissioners a sufficient allowance.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Mr. Schreiber appears to be in receipt of $4,000 for salary, and $2,000 is voted annually in addition, and then $1,500 is paid to him for sixty-four days' work, and yet when objection is taken to this extra pay, it is termed cheese paring. The right hon. gentleman has stated that Mr. Schreiber was not paid as much as the other railway commissioners. Such was not the case. Mr. Schreiber received $20 a day, and $5 a day living expenses, the same amount that was paid the other commissioners, and at the same time he was receiving pay from the Government at the rate of $6,000 a year.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). While, no doubt, Mr. Schreiber should have a certain income, the Premier should not take this means of releasing himself from the responsibility of asking an increase in Mr. Schreiber's salary, if he thinks he earns it. On that ground the present vote is more unjustifiable.

Mr. MULOCK. I agree with the remarks which have fallen from the member for East Elgin (Mr. Wilson). If it is intended to make this officer's salary $6,000 a year, let us have it so declared by Act of Parliament, and let that particular sum be attached to the office in question. But, I believe that this system of securing bonuses to public officers by the grace of the Government of the day, is a vicious system. An officer in the employ of the Government ought be entitled to his salary without the mere contingency as to whether or not some item is to be put in the Supplementary Estimates for him. That system destroys his independence, and makes him a more creature of the Government. The civil servants are entitled to a certain amount of independence; they have not altogether a pleasant time of it, I have no doubt, for they are probably obliged, on many occasions, to act a part which they would prefer not having to act. They are obliged to appear always as the defenders of the Government, and I have no doubt, that their mouths are closed frequently when, if they were more independent of the Government of the day, they would be able to speak with greater freedom, and the public interest would be the gainer by it. Therefore, I think this system of bonuses keeps an official entirely dependent on the Government, makes him subservient to them in many ways, and, as we know from past experience, works to the disadvantage of the country. I can remember well when Mr. Schreiber had to be referred to in connection with the Onderdonk arbitration, and in that case had he been free of the Government, had he enjoyed as a matter of right the salary we were voting to him yearly, do you think that he would have remained silent when, what had all the appearances of, and what I verily believe was a gross fraud, was being committed on the Treasury of the country. Had the Chief Engineer of the Government at that time been a free man, do you think he would not have felt bound and justified and free to expose that transaction which has never yet been explained to the satisfaction of the country. In that case arbitrators were appointed to value certain rolling stock, and they made an award of $72,000. What happened then? That award was superseded, not on the motion of Onderdonk, but on the motion of the Railway Department, and the Government interceded and begged the arbitrators to increase their award. When the Public Accounts Committee were investigating that transaction, a motion was made to lay before that Committee all the papers connected with this Onderdonk award. The Government laid before that Committee, not what was ordered, but they cut out of the correspondence and proceedings everything that showed there had been a preliminary award, so that to all appearances, as they first presented the case to the Public Accounts Committee, there was but one award of $202,000. Everybody knew that that was wrong; everybody knew that there had not been an honest production of papers and documents, and when the Government had to lay the complete return before the Committee, it was shown that the arbitrators had first awarded $72,000 and no more, and that the Government intervened and coerced the arbitrators to revoke that award and to make a new award for $202,000. That transaction took place in the face of the advice of the Minister of Justice who is here to-day. It may have been the previous Minister of Justice, but, at all events, the Minister of Justice of the day decided against it and the old award was abandoned, in the face of the opinion of the Minister of Justice that the claimants in that particular case had no right to the compensation that they were contending for. It was pretended that the first award was too small, and why? It happened that when the contract was entered into for the construction of that particular portion of the road, there was no railway by which this rolling stock and plant used in the construction of the Pacific section could be brought into the country. There was a provision in the contract, that when the work was completed the Government might take over this plant if they desired it, and the Government, in the interest of the contractors, thought it was necessary to pay for this rolling stock on the basis of the price paid for it and the cost of bringing it into the country. On that occasion we were simply buying the rolling stock at its commercial value, and there was no reason, in the interest of the country, for making this extra award. The moment this award was made and that the country had taken possession of this rolling stock, it was the duty of the Department of Railways to make the most of it, but they did nothing whatever to guard the interests of the country. They left the rolling stock in the possession of the Canadian Pacific Railway, some of it in use, some of it lying rusting on the switches of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and so it remained until this House took the matter up, and then the Department of Railways manifested an activity, not to protect the interests of the country, but to escape from censure, by having this stock hauled from the Pacific down to the Intercolonial Railway. I am told that the Government was so negligent in the way they brought that stock down (and I suppose the active head of the department is responsible for that) that they had the engines hauled on the Canadian Pacific Railway as "dead engines" and the cars hauled light, as freight; whereas one would think the engines might be permitted under some arrangement to work their way down, at a very much less cost to the country. I am told that when this rolling stock for which we paid $202,000 arrived at Montreal, and when it was handed over to the Grand Trunk Railway by the Canadian Pacific Railway for transportation down to the Intercolonial Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway was unwilling to assume the responsibility of taking it, as they considered it was not worth the freight of hauling. Not a member of the Government has ever yet explained that transaction, and it was done at the instance of the Department of Railways, and largely at their instigation. Now, do you believe that it is right that a high official such as the Engineer of Railways should be kept in that dependent position that he is not free to come forward and expose a transaction of this kind, and protect the interests of the country and his own personal honor. I am not saying that he was to blame, but I say that his position should be made as independent of influences of this kind as it can be, and in that view I entirely agree with the expressions that have fallen from the member for East Elgin (Mr. Wilson), that he should have his salary, whatever it is to be, as a strict matter of right, and not as a gift from the Government. The First Minister says this is cheese paring. I suppose an engineer of the skill of Mr. Schreiber is entitled to his salary. The public service demands certain efficiency in this office, and the salary assigned to the office should be by Act of Parliament, and not in this irregular way. I do not consider a matter of $6,000 cheese-paring.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not say that. It was the objection to his being paid on the Royal Commission.

Mr. MULOCK. I am not referring to that. The salary should be attached to the office, and not the individual.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I quite agree with you.

Mr. MULOCK. It is a very embarrassing thing for members to be obliged to vote yea or nay in regard to individuals. The personal character of the official should be kept entirely out of the discussion. I ask the First Minister if he does not think he had better take this amount out of the Estimates now; and if it is right to increase the salary, let him bring in a Bill next Session providing what the salary for the office of Chief Engineer shall be.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that the salary should be fixed for the office, and I say it was a mistake that this $2,000 was not put in the main Estimates, and that the whole salary of $6,000 was not voted there. Without considering the question the hon. gentleman has opened, I think $6,000 is not a large salary for a first-class engineer, which I consider this gentleman to be, notwithstanding the opinion of the hon. member for Halifax. If he were removed, I do not think we could get an engineer of the rank and position he occupies at a less sum. I think it would be unwise to try to economise in the salary when you want great engineering talent in the running of our railways, and in the multifarious duties which are and will be thrown from time to time on this very important officer. I have no doubt, so far as Mr. Schreiber is concerned, that he stands above all suspicion of being swayed by the question of salary. The fact that he declined to take another office of great emolument, but felt it his duty to remain where he was, shows that.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think the hon. gentleman was here the other night when a question was put as to what had become of this identical rolling stock which had been taken over from Mr. Onderdonk. We were informed that it had gone down to the Intercolonial Railway, but we could not obtain any definite information in regard to it, except that one railway was very loath to haul it, thinking it was not worth anything.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will get the information.

Mr. SPROULE. Although this vote refers to a portion of Mr. Schreiber's salary for the present year, I think it is perhaps not out of place to refer to the additional pay he got as a member of the Royal Commission. It does seem to have been very high, because, if we take the number of working days in a year, not counting holidays, his salary amounts to over $19 a day; and he got $20 a day in addition, for the additional work he did. At the same time, it must be supposed that his work in his office is being done by someone else, for which he is receiving $19 a day. It does seem that the salary, as well as the appointment, is a royal one, and a little less salary I think would have been more in place.

Mr. MULOCK. The First Minister has stated that, in his opinion, it is a very vicious system of remunerating public officials.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not say it was a vicious system, but I said that your proposition was a better one.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. gentleman entirely approves of the position I took, that the salary should be attached to the office instead of the individual. How long is this system to continue? Will the First Minister give us a promise that he will not pursue this practice in another year, but will deal with the matter in a proper way?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, I will undertake that.

Mr. McMULLEN. Then it is definitely understood that the salary shall be fixed in another year?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, I will definitely undertake that.

Mr. McMULLEN. If there is any evidence required of the correctness of the position taken by the hon. member for North York, it is the exhibition made by that official in the Public Accounts Committee the other day.

Mr. MULOCK. I would not wish it to be understood that I said that Mr. Schreiber had given any evidence to the Public Accounts Committee that he did not do what was right. What I desired to say was that if he had been free from such influences as his position might have put him in, I thought he would, perhaps, have been able to save this country from considerable loss. I do not know what part he took in the matter at all, but, under ordinary circumstances, I think a chief engineer would not have been silent on such an occasion.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I think the First Minister would not be carrying out the views of the House if he brought down a proposition next year to pay the Chief Engineer $6,000. The $2,000 is given while the Canadian Pacific Railway engages his attention, and when that is off the hands of the Government, I have no doubt this House will consider that $4,000 is ample for the chief engineer of the Intercolonial Railway.

Dorchester Penitentiary—Additional amount required to pay accountant and schoolmaster., $200

Mr. McMULLEN. What is that for?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. In the main Estimates there is a vote of $600 for a schoolmaster's salary. The office is vacant, the schoolmaster having resigned, and it is proposed to allow the accountant to perform the duties, and to give him $200 out of the $600.

Manitoba Penitentiary..... $1,230

Mr. WATSON. I would like to ask what is the necessity of employing mason instructors?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The intention is to make the quarries available for the purpose of carrying on the work there, mainly for building a boundary wall. It is desirable to do that as much as possible by convict labor. But as we have no trade instructors in stonework and masonry, I have asked for the two salaries for quarryman and masonry instructors.

Mr. WATSON. I think that is a very commendable object, but I would like to call attention to the fact that the warden of that penitentiary is allowed to absent himself from his duties more than he should, and has greater liberties than any warden of any other penitentiary in Canada. It has been stated in this House, and proved to the satisfaction of the Minister of Justice, who said he felt it was an extravagant penitentiary, and that it was necessary to make some enquiry into the extravagance of Mr. Warden Bedson, that the management of this penitentiary is very extravagant. Mr. Bedson has been appointed to the command of a battalion, and it appears to me that he should not be allowed by the Government to occupy a position that will take him away from his duties any length of time. He has also been appointed extra A. D. C. to His Excellency, a position which is also incompatible with the one he holds and for which he receives $2,800. Another officer who occupied the position of major of a battalion, Mr. White, had to resign the command of the 43rd Battalion because the Post Office Department could not spare his services. If it is necessary that Mr. White should resign the command of the 43rd on account of his duties in the Post Office Department, certainly Major Bedson should not be allowed to take command of a battalion and neglect his duties.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think the attention of the House ought to be called to this Manitoba penitentiary. Of all our penitentiaries it is by far the most extravagantly managed, and I have no hesitation in saying that the explanations given with respect to it were very far from satisfactory, when the item was under discussion. If the hon. gentleman will look at the Auditor General's report he will find that in 1887-88 there were 70 prisoners in the Manitoba penitentiary and 74 in the British Columbia penitentiary. Yet the cost per head in the former was $707, and in the latter $475. While it may be true that the cost of maintenance in British Columbia is greater than in old Canada, I do not think that, except with regard to fuel, the cost in Manitoba for maintenance is greater than in British Columbia. Yet we find this additional vote—which in itself may be reasonable enough—of $1,230 asked for over and above the vote of nearly $50,000 for the Manitoba penitentiary. I entirely concur in the statement of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson), that it is most inconsistent with the position of warden of a penitentiary, that Mr. Bedson should be colonel of a militia corps, and extra A. D. C. to His Excellency. I am bound to say that Mr. Bedson, in an emergency during the rebellion, rendered valuable services, and such particular recognition as might be accorded to him for that I would be willing to concur in. But, apart from that, there is a crying inconsistency in the warden of a penitentiary being colonel of a militia regiment, and I doubt if it is proper that he should be extra A. D. C. to his Excellency. One thing is certain, and that is, his administration of the penitentiary cannot be satisfactory to the Minister of Justice, nor to this House. The items, although they were discussed at a very late hour, showed very gross extravagance in the management, the result being an expenditure of the enormous sum of $707 per head to keep the convicts in Manitoba, while $474 is found sufficient in British Columbia, $305 in St. Vincent de Paul, and $274 in Dorchester. This shows there is something wrong, and if the hon. gentleman will look over the Auditor General's Report in detail, he will see that everything in connection with the Manitoba penitentiary is managed in a very extravagant way. Now, this particular item ought to be reduced, and the warden compelled to administer the penitentiary satisfactorily.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman has only given one side of the question. I explained the other day that the Auditor General had not taken into consideration the large amount of stores, including upwards of $1,200 worth of fuel, that was on hand at the close of the fiscal year, and which, if allowed for, would have reduced probaby by one-third the per capita cost.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not think that would reduce it by more than $40 a head out of the $707.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Perhaps I am in error as to the proportion, but the information I gave the hon. gentleman as to the clothing, stores and fuel on hand accounted to a great extent for the additional cost per head. As regards his position in the militia, Colonel Bedson has been for years, long before I came to the department, in the force, and on active service. Within the last six months, I believe, he has received promotion, and I am not aware that his promotion calls for the discharge of any duties more onerous than those he discharged before. As to his appointment as hon. A. D. C., that will not entail on him any additional work which will interfere with his duties as warden. While making the admission the other night that the management of the Manitoba penitentiary was, in some respects, more expensive than was satisfactory to me, I was obliged to state, and I repeat it now, that there is not a more diligent official in the public service than Colonel Bedson, and that no penitentiary is kept in a better condition.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. All the reductions the hon. gentleman speaks of will barely amount to $40 or $50 per head, and that does not affect the material question, because, even including all these, the expenditure asked for is higher than that asked for in 1887-88. The expenditure then was $49,500. The hon. gentleman wanted $50,500 in his main estimate, and he now asks for $1,300 more, making nearly $52,000. Nor can I say I was at all satisfied with the very general and easy statement that this penitentiary is well managed. Looking over the details I think it may be admirably managed in the matter of cleanliness, and so forth; but that it is very extravagantly managed is, from the items given us, very evident. Nor do I think that the hon. gentleman's explanation is at all satisfactory that this gentleman can discharge the duties of colonel of a militia regiment efficiently, and those of warden of a penitentiary at the same time. I know something, though not as much as the Minister of Justice, of the duties of the warden of a penitentiary, and I know that if the duties are properly discharged, they will keep the warden occupied all his time, and it is very inconvenient that he should be absent for any number of days, except it be in some emergency such as the North-West rebellion. But, in ordinary cases, the warden requires to be constantly on the spot, and I do not see how he can efficiently discharge the two duties. It seems to me that the thing is absurd on the face of it.

Mr. McMULLEN. I wish to call the attention of the House to the difference in the charges made per head in the different penitentiaries. Rations cost in Kingston, $36.79 per head per annum, and in Manitoba, $63.21. Chapels cost 25 cents a head in Kingston, and $7.99 in Manitoba. Heating costs $19.16 in Kingston, $7.27 in Dorchester, and $165.49 in Manitoba. Postage, freight and express, cost 23 cents in Kingston, $12 in Manitoba, $1.79 in British Columbia, and 31 cents in St. Vincent de Paul. Printing costs $1.78 in Kingston, $2.20 in St. Vincent de Paul, $1.98 in Dorchester, and $5.07 in Manitoba.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I think the matter which has been brought forward by the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) is one deserving the attention of the Committee. If the warden's duties require him to be in the penitentiary, he should be there all the time, and therefore I hope the Minister will insist upon this man's resigning one position or the other. If he be, as it is represented, such an efficient officer, we require his services in the penitentiary all the time. The Minister of Militia should be very careful in this matter, as the warden appears to be very extravagant, and may possibly get hold of some of the militia money, and I am sure the Minister of Militia is desirous to have the opportunity of spending as much of that money himself as possible. I think it is improper that such an important public officer as that, should be permitted, at his own will and pleasure, to go off playing soldier, when his duties may require his presence in the place for attending to which we pay him a very liberal salary.

Mr. MULOCK. It is clear that not only will the penitentiary service suffer from this joint system, but the militia service also. I suppose the office of warden has the first claim on this gentleman's time, but he has certain duties to discharge as head of a battalion. If he discharges his duties as warden, how can he discharge his business as colonel of a battalion? I think this is a very objectionable principle to sanction. He is trying to serve two masters, the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Militia. I do not know that he will have much difficulty in satisfying the Minister of Militia that he is discharging his duties efficiently, but the Minister of Justice should pay some attention to this. As to the third office which he holds, that of A. D. C. to His Excellency, I presume that will not require much of his attention except when His Excellency visits that part of the country, which I presume it will be his pleasure and his duty to do once a year, and on those occasions the warden will have to put on his uniform and his insignia, and will be an A. D. C. to His Excellency. The Minister of Justice stated that he was not aware that the office of lieutenant colonel of a regiment interfered with the duties of a warden. That is hardly sufficient reason for allowing the two offices to be combined. Is the Minister able to say that the duties of lieutenant colonel do not interfere with the duties of warden? His merely saying that he does not know is not sufficient; and can the Minister of Militia say that a man can properly discharge the duties of colonel of a regiment and also those of the warden of a penitentiary?

Mr. WATSON. The Minister of Militia has referred to the promotion of Major Bedson to the command of a new battalion. There is just as much use for that new battalion being formed in Manitoba as there is for a third wheel to a cart. These men are not drilled. The 95th Battalion, which is a good battalion and has Major McMillan at its head, and he is a worthy man, have not been able to get their men drilled. In the face of that fact, a new battalion has been formed. Major Bedson has only four companies in his battalion, and the probability is that the duties required of him as major of that battalion will not cause him to be much away from his duties as warden. In that case there is not much use for that battalion. If a new battalion is formed, the man in command of it should be free to attend to his duties at all times. As to any services rendered by Major Bedson during the rebellion, I think he has sufficient trophies around him to reward him for those services, and I think the honor of A. D. C. to the Governor General should have been conferred upon other military men there who are more deserving of it than Major Bedson.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The Minister of Militia informed the House, when the question of Major-General Cameron was being discussed, that he never allowed political feelings to interfere with his appointments. That statement was received with a great deal of incredulity even from his own side of the House, but there must surely be something more than appears to induce him to place the warden of a penitentiary in command of one of his battalions. From my own experience—and I had experience in the militia for many years—I should say it would be considered a very irregular and a very undesirable proceeding. If this gentleman had been a military man of considerable experience, and the occasion arose where his services were immediately required, and no other man was available, I might admit that it might be considered advisable to make the appointment; but I do not suppose there are not other men in Manitoba who are equally competent to command a battalion. I presume that, with all the young and active spirits that flock to a new country, the Minister of Militia would have no difficulty in finding a man suitable to take such an important command. The Minister knows very well that he must either do one of two things, he must either make the militia altogether secondary to his permanent appointment, or he must neglect the duties of his permanent position. He must make the times for meeting and drilling to suit his other duties. I think that military men in this House—and there are a good many of them—who have in the past and who now occupy such a position, will agree with me that the two positions are not compatible with the duties which we have a right to expect from a person who properly fills either one or the other. I think it is a matter of regret that the Minister of Militia has placed the warden of the penitentiary in that very important situation.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON: I do not see, as Minister of Militia, that there is any reason why I should regret that Lieut.-Col. Bedson has been placed in command of the battalion. During the trouble in the North-West, he, at that time Major Bedson, rendered services which everybody is prepared to acknowledge. He was placed in a position of trust, in a position of danger, and during the time that he was accompanying the columns to the front, he showed that he could be trusted in every way, and he showed, moreover that he was in every sense of the word a good military man. Now, Mr. Chairman, it must be remembered that Col. Bedson is placed in command of a rural battalion. I do not see that his having taken command of a rural battalion can prevent him from giving all the time necessary to the position which he now occupies. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat knows that rural battalions drill in camp at headquarters, and during the 12 days they are at drill, there is much less to be done by them than by city corps who carry on their drill almost every night during the winter, and much more frequently than rural corps. So far as the position of aide de-camp to His Excellency is concerned, I think I explained on a former occasion that His Excellency selected his aide-de-camps without any recommendation from the Minister of Militia.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The Minister says that Colonel Bedson commands a rural battalion, and as they are not called upon to drill very often, his services are not taken from his other duties. That would exactly meet the contention of my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Watson) who expressed the opinion that there was no necessity of creating that battalion until they had filled the other one. If this rural battalion has not been able to drill, it has been created merely for the purpose of giving Colonel Bedson command of it, and it shows there was no necessity creating that battalion.

Mr. WATSON. So far as this new battalion is concerned, if the Minister of Militia has funds sufficient to enable the different battalions to go into camp from year to year, I have no objection to Col. Bedson's battalion being formed. But the 95th Battalion has not been in camp since 1885, and it is, to my mind, absurd to have a new battalion when the Minister has not enough funds at his disposal to drill the volunteers now enrolled.

Kingston Penitentiary..... .... $15,860

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have no objection in the world to the introduction of electric light in the Kingston Penitentiary, in fact I think it will be a considerable improvement. But the sum total of $15,000 for plant and $800 for salary of electrician, strikes me as very high. I would be glad to have from the hon. gentleman details of this item.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman is familiar, though perhaps other members of the Committee are not, with the difficulties that we have had in lighting the Kingston Penitentiary. Some years ago, the manufacture of gas for the prison was estabilised and the necessary plant put in. About two years ago, it was found that it was inadequate in extent, and that to supply the plant necessary for the manufacture to the full extent of gas that was required in the prison required new plant to the extent of $10,000. In fact, I think tenders were called for, and in that way the cost was ascertained. There was likewise the fact that the manufacture of gas had resulted in considerable inconvenience to the neighbors. That was made a continual subject of complaint, and indeed legal proceedings were threatened with a view to putting a stop to the manufacture of gas Before I asked the Minister of Public Works to put in the additional plant for the manufacture of gas, which, as I have said, was estimated to cost about $10,000, I thought it was only right to ascertain the result of the application of electricity in lighting prisons in the United States. With a view to economy, and with a view likewise to making permanent any change that we desired to make—because if we made a large expenditure for the manufacture of gas and a few years afterwards decided that electricty was the better light, we would have thrown away our first expenditure—I asked the warden, while he was attending the prisons congress in the United States, to take that opportunity of visiting the chief prisons where electricity was used in lighting. He did so, and on a subsequent occasion to get further details, he visited, I think, almost every large prison in the United States where electricity is used and made himsef familiar with the latest improvements and appliances in work of that kind. And then, in order to ascertain what the probable cost would be, with a view of asking the approval of the House of the change, I had tenders called for. But the lowest tender was a sum not much below what I have estimated here; the other tenders range very much above, and the only apprehension we have had is whether the tender is not too low. Indeed it was contended by some of the other companies tendering, that it was impossible for the plant to be satisfactorily put in for the amount of the lowest tender. In order to make sure upon that point, I asked the warden to go again to some of the prisons in the United States and ascertain whether the tender that we had received included all the appliances which they found necessary there. His report was satisfactory in that respect. I think he has made himself thoroughly familiar with the appliances necessary to be put in, and the best mode of operating an electric light. I think it would be conducive to economy, and it would be far more convenient in connection with protective provisions for the prison to have an electric light, and to have much more abundant light, and a light that we can manufacture without inconvenience to the neighbors. Besides that, we have the advantage of making a permanent improvement instead of spending nearly as much for the new plant for the gas.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will the hon. gentleman inform me what he estimates the annual cost of supplying this, apart from the salary of the electrician? There will be an engineer required, or two engineers, will there not?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No; we have an engineer now for the manufacture of gas. The salary of the electrician is the only additional salary that we shall have to provide.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has the hon. gentleman any estimate of the cost?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have no objection to the introduction of electricity, for I think it would be a great improvement both on the ground of health and as a protection to the prison; but I say this to the First Minister and the Minister of Justice—and I do not speak without knowledge, because I have had in various ways to do with electric companies—that it would be quite possible probably to make a contract with the electric company of Kingston. I have no interest whatever in that company, I may state to avoid misconception, and I believe it is run exclusively by friends of the First Minister. I think it would be more economical to make an arrangement to obtain the electricity from the establishment in Kingston instead of having a separate establishment in the prison itself. As a rule, prison establishments are costly, and I hardly think that more would be necessary in order to obtain electric light than to make connection with the lines outside the prison.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will make enquiry and will ascertain whether that can be done.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think it would be in the public interest and more economical. Electric lights at the present moment, are within 100 yards of the prison. It would be much more economical to adopt this plan than to have two electric plants, one for the supply of the city, and another for the supply of the prison, and unless there is strong reason to the contrary, the hon. gentleman will find it to be in the public interest to connect the prison with the electric company of Kingston.

Mr. McMULLEN. I find at page C—68, Auditor General's Report, that Dr. Lavell was appointed to examine Riel about the time of his execution, or when he was under sentence. The Dominion paid $885 for his expenses, &c., and also $126.70 for the expenses of Mrs. Lavell. Why was this country called upon to pay $126 for the travelling expenses of Mrs. Lavell from Kingston to Winnipeg?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That was for a service not in any way connected with the prison. The Government thought proper to employ Dr. Lavell to go on a very important mission, and they thought proper to accede to the request that his wife should accompany him.

Mr. MULOCK. What did it previously cost to light Kingston Penitentiary?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I cannot state exactly. I made enquiries a year ago in connection with an offer made by the city gas company, and I found from the reports of my officers that we manufactured gas for 20 per cent. less than it could be supplied by the city, besides the additional cost that would be entailed in laying pipes to the prison, which would be very considerable.

Mr. MULOCK. Has any communication been had with the electric light company?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No; I promised to do so before incurring any expense. I am under the impression that difficulty would arise with regard to the certainty of the supply of power where you have to depend on a local company. In a prison, a great deal of injury might ensue from the establishment being left in darkness suddenly, or from an insufficient supply of light, or from having the light cut off at an hour which would suit ordinary citizens. All of these matters will have to be considered. There is no haste. I do not intend to go into the matter immediately, and I will enquire with respect to the certainty of supply from the city and the probable cost as compared with the cost if we furnish our own supply.

Mr. MULOCK. Are any of the penitentaries lighted by a municipal gas company?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No; they are all lighted by oil except Kingston Penitentiary.

Mr. MULOCK. In adopting this new system, it must be remembered that you will have to extend it to other penitentaries.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No; not the small ones, because the cost would not justify it.

Mr. MULOCK. That is the present opinion, but opinions are apt to be changed.

Mr. McMULLEN. What does the Minister anticipate as the annual cost of lighting?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. For the present, say a year or two, we would require to pay in addition to the engineer we have now, an electrician, for whom we ask $800. The companies which were consulted stated that we should procure an electrician for that amount, and that after a year or two one of our own employés might be sufficiently trained to perform the duties at a lower salary. I make no promise in regard to that matter, as I have no experience in regard to it, and only the information given by the companies. But as regards the cost of lighting by electricity, I am satisfied that it will be considerably less than the present cost of producing gas.

Mr. McMULLEN. I desire to know whether this system will result in a saving or not.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It certainly will be productive of saving.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman propose to use the arc system or the incandescent, or both?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The report goes into that very minutely, but I cannot state the result arrived at.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I should like to know what the cost is expected to be. I may take this opportunity of reminding the hon. gentleman that, although a most excellent system in all other respects, the incandescent system is a pretty expensive one, as great power is required to produce the light; whereas the arc system produces a large quantity of light at a comparatively low cost, and, therefore, I think he will find he will effect economy by adopting the suggestion I have made. He must, of course, use the incandescent system if he is going to light the cells.

St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary $1,700

Mr. WILSON. I notice that part of this item is for 150 cords of tamarac. What did this wood cost per cord?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That expense was necessary owing to the changes being made in the carrying on of the work. Heretofore, the quarrying has been done by contract, and the intention now is to have it done by prison labor, and to incur as little expense as possible for outside labor. I have given notice that the contract will terminate. We ask this vote to pay the salary of an experienced quarryman, who will have charge of the convicts and instruct them.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). How much of this is for the tamarac, and how much for the tools?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. A very insignificant portion is for the tools, and nearly the whole amount will be required for the wood.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). The Minister will see that he would be paying about $6.66 a cord for tamarac wood, and that is very expensive.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I can assure the hon. gentleman that tenders will be asked for, and we will get the wood at the lowest possible price. It is proposed to bring the warden's salary up to the maximum, which would be $2,800. He was appointed just at the close of the period when perquisites were allowed to the wardens, and I was unwilling to make any liberal allowance, in lieu of the perquisites which he would have been entitled to, under ordinary circumstances. Considering, however, the excellent manner in which he has discharged his duties, I thought since that I should be a little liberal with Mr. Ouimet, and increase his salary. I think he has well deserved this.

Committee rose, and, it being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Elections—Payments to Returning Officers. $300

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Would the Minister explain how it comes that this money has been due to the revising officers in Montreal and has been left unpaid since 1877 ? There must be some good reason for delay, as the Government are usually very prompt in meeting expenses of this kind.

Mr. FOSTER. These items are on the recommendation of the Auditor General, who says in his report: "The amount claimed under this head appears to be reasonable compensation for the services rendered."

To meet expenses in connection with Electoral Franchise Act..... $250,000

Mr. McMULLEN. Does the Minister expect that this amount is going to cover the entire cost ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is expected that this will cover the costs of the revision for this year. I presume that the payment to be made to revising officers themselves will not be more than it was at the former revision, but, by reason of the provision in the Bill recently passed, we expect that there will be a reduction in the expenses of some of their officers. The cost of printing has been taken out of the Estimates.

Mr. McMULLEN. This will give each revising officer for each riding about $1,200. Is that the amount it cost at the last election ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think about $1,000 covered all the expenses of revising officers, clerks, bailiffs, and service of that kind for each riding.

Mr. McMULLEN. Do not we understand that by the recent amendment the Act has been very much simplified ? Does the hon. gentleman think it will be necessary to increase the sum by $200 a constituency ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. It is not intended to increase the salaries of revising officers. I spoke only from memory when I said that it cost $1,000 for each riding, perhaps I am under the mark. There are salaries to clerks, bailiffs, office rents and incidental expenses of that kind to be paid.

Mr. McMULLEN. Upon what basis does the hon. gentleman propose to pay the revising officers ? Some constituencies are very much larger than others and have more voters. Is it the intention to give them a uniform sum in every constituency, or a sum in proportion to the number of votes ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There is no intention of giving an equal amount in all the constituencies. The amount will depend on the number of voters on the list. In the last revision, the amounts were graded in the way that was explained to the House. There was an equal allowance in the first instance of $300 to the revising officer, a further allowance up to a certain number of votes, and a smaller allowance above that number.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It would be satisfactory if the Minister could give us a statement showing how the expense for each riding is made up. The hon. gentleman, I suppose, allows certain sums for the revising officers, certain sums for the clerks, and certain sums for the cost of holding the court of revision, to make up this amount. Of course it ought to be clearly understood that the revising officer is paid in a particular way, so that he will be wholly independent of the Government, because these men, whose duties require them to act impartially between the two parties, should, like the judges in ordinary courts, be wholly independent of the Administration ; and they will certainly be so to a greater extent if they are paid by some fixed rule.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It did not require this vote to convince hon. members on this side of the House of the impropriety and absurdity of the Franchise Act ; but I think it will go far to satisfy hon. members on the Government side that the position we took in opposing the Franchise Bill was a sound one. Here we have the Government asking for a quarter of a million dollars to put this Franchise Act into operation. It is money completely thrown away. There never was any necessity for it, and there is no necessity for it now ; and if the Government had accepted the proposals made from this side of the House, which are also largely concurred in by members on their own side, we should have been saved not only this amount, but an amount averaging $500 in every riding to those who have to look after the voters' lists. When you add those sums together, they will make a very large expenditure, to say nothing of all the inconvenience and trouble caused to those who have to look after that very disagreeable business. We have brought down to us now, in black and white, a statement of the amount which the Government are going to impose on this country, simply that they might take control of this matter, violating every principle of the Franchise Act, giving manhood suffrage in two of the Provinces where it suited them to do so, and taking control in other Provinces. I think this vote is one of the most indefensible, improper, unnecessary, and wasteful votes that this Government have asked this House to adopt this Session.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I presume that this $250,000 in no way defrays the expense of the Government printing office. That is an extra, I presume ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes ; it is separate from this vote.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Can the hon. gentleman state how much that will amount to ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I cannot. It belongs to the administration of the Secretary of State's Department.

Mr. FOSTER. I will get it on Concurrence.

Mr. MULOCK. I would like to ask the Minister of Justice how much is to be allowed for printing and how much for advertising ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We are not able to apportion the amounts in that way. I estimate that, for salaries of revising officers and the clerical assistance they need to get, the expense will be about $220,000 ; and in addition to that, this sum is intended to cover possible expenses of advertising, bailiffs, rental of buildings, and disbursements which the revising officers will have to make for getting copies of the lists, records and things of that kind.

Mr. MULOCK. So that it is expected that this vote will fully cover all the expenses ?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. If it does, it will do what has not been the result heretofore of similar votes. We have been voting hundreds of thousands of dollars to put this Act in force, and we have supplementary votes which are the result of miscalculation. It is well enough to say that it is expected to be sufficient in a hap-hazard way, but I am afraid that the record of the Government in connection with this particular vote will hardly justify the Committee in assuming that in this case they are any more accurate than they have been heretofore. I look upon this money as so much absolutely wasted. It is nothing more than money wickedly and wantonly wasted for no good purpose, and the sooner the Government has sufficient courage to retrace its steps in regard to this measure the better it will be for the country. I was struck with one thing in connection with the debate on the passage of the Bill to amend the Franchise Act. Speaking from memory, and so far as my observation went, not one member from Ontario raised his voice to endorse the principle of the Bill. True, they voted as they were told, but not one of them would commit themselves farther than by his vote.

Mr. RYKERT. I did.

Mr. MULOCK. During the passage of the Bill?

Mr. RYKERT. I always approved of it.

Mr. MULOCK. There are other questions the hon. member for Lincoln may approve of, but which will not meet the approval of the country. At all events I have no recollection of his speaking.

Mr. RYKERT. Your memory is poor at times.

Mr. MULOCK. I may be in error on that point. I am inclined to doubt it, all the same.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. You refer to the Act of this Session.

Mr. MULOCK. I do. I did not hear the hon. member for Lincoln speak in support of the Act this Session, or take part in the debate on the Act of this Session. That is the matter to which I refer. We could not do a wiser thing than to suspend voting the money. We are not obliged to vote it by any immediate necessity; we are not obliged to settle the lists this year. The Government passed the Act in 1885, they put it in force for one year, and it was so unpopular in the country that they have never since had the courage to have the lists revised. There is no greater condemnation of the measure required than that. Now the Government indicate an intention to have the lists settled, and if what they say is correct, that the lists now to be prepared are really to be the voters' lists settled by the Local Legislatures, I would like to know where is the public advantage to be gained by spending $250,000 simply to put a set of names on a different set of paper, for that is all that is involved in putting the Act in force now. We have the admission of the Minister of Justice that this is not to cover all the expenses of putting the Act in force; it is not to cover the expense of printing the lists. We have expended an enormous amount of money in erecting a building and so forth, and we have to consider therefore not only $250,000 to be scattered throughout the ridings, but the expense involved in printing the lists at the Government printing office. I think we ought to know what is likely to be the cost of printing the lists at the Government printing office. I would ask the Minister of Justice if he is prepared to give that information to the House to-night?

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) asked that same question about ten minutes ago of the Minister of Justice, and then of myself. The Minister of Justice said he did not know, and I said I did not know, but that I would get the information, and the hon. member for South Oxford expressed himself as altogether satisfied with that.

Mr. MULOCK. He said he wanted that information for the purposes of Concurrence, and I hold that this information should be made known at this stage, because the $250,000 is but part of the larger sum. It is illusory to put down $250,000 as the amount of expenses of putting the lists in force when we know there is a very considerable sum to be added. Before we vote this portion of the cost, we should know what the other portion is, and then we shall know the total cost of putting this Act into force. The item should stand until that information is supplied. If it is going to cost $500,000 to put this Act in force, we might wisely pause before doing so. There are already plenty of demands upon the Exchequer. The Minister of Finance has promised an era of economy. The supplementaries of 1889 and those we are now considering scarcely bear out those promises. Before we proceed to vote this $250,000, we ought to know what the whole cost will be of putting this Act into force this year.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. How much does it cost to print the lists now set up?

Mr. FOSTER. That question was asked and answered some time ago. I do not recollect what the answer was, but I will get that as well.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. If we knew that, we could arrive at a conclusion as to the probable cost of correcting the lists. I do not think it will be much less than the original cost, because a large proportion of the names will be struck out altogether, and new ones put on.

Colonial and Indian Exhibition—to pay balance of freight charges and other unsettled accounts..... $3,500

Mr. CARLING. Some of the goods shipped to the exhibition went astray, and we are now trying to hunt them up. If they cannot be found, we will have to pay for them. There are a number of items, amounting in all to about $3,000 or $4,000.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Some time ago I made application for a party who had sent a stuffed animal to the exhibition, which came back in a damaged condition. The exhibitor is a poor man, and I made the application for him. I think some recompense should be given him, since this animal came back entirely destroyed. I have never heard anything from the department since, but I think this man Birmingham has a good claim if the Government are going to pay for goods which have gone astray or have been damaged.

Mr. CARLING. I am very glad the hon. gentleman has called my attention to the matter, and I will make enquiry in regard to it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not think it is creditable to the large number of officials we sent there, and paid very highly, that $3,500 worth should have been lost, and that we should be asked to pay for that. There must have been not only bad handling, but, I am afraid, there must have been some misappropriation. It is hardly conceivable that, with the large number of officials whom the Government had in charge of these articles, such a large amount of property should have been lost. Besides, this is only a small amount. We have paid sums for this before, and this is only the balance.

Mr. CARLING. Some of these articles have gone astray. Perhaps some have been shipped to the wrong parties. We found that one article had been shipped to the manufacturer instead of to the owner, because the name of the manufacturer was on it.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Have you a list of the articles sent there?

Mr. CARLING. I have some of them.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not complain of the country paying for articles which they received and failed to deliver to the owner. That is right enough. But, as the hon. gentleman says, there must be gross negligence on the part of those in charge either in misappropriating the articles or in sending them to the wrong parties. There should have been no difficulty, because the owners were known, and in most instances their names were attached to the articles. I think this is absolutely discreditable to the Government officers.

Mr. CARLING. I do not agree with that. There were a large number of articles shipped by different lines of railway and steamboat, and some were likely to go astray. We are endeavoring to trace them, and we think there are very few that we will not be able to get.

Mr. MULOCK. What officer was responsible for the missing goods?

Mr. CARLING. The goods were shipped to an officer in London who was selected by the High Commissioner during the Exhibition, and he had the duty of shipping those goods from London.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The Minister of Agriculture will remember that I brought to his attention the matter of a plough which was shipped from the town of Chatham to this Exhibition. It was a very valuable plough, silver mounted, and it was not returned to the owner. I want to know if the Minister has received any information yet in regard to that plough.

Mr. CARLING. We are now endeavoring to trace that plough, and I think we will succeed.

Mr. MULOCK. Are there shipping bills in the possession of the department for these missing articles?

Mr. CARLING. Yes.

Mr. MULOCK. Then you will be able to trace them up?

Mr. CARLING. I think so.

Mr. MULOCK. Then they have left the Colonial Office and have gone into the hands of the carriers?

Mr. CARLING. We found that some shipments were made to different parties than the owners, because the name of the manufacturers was on the article instead of the name of the owners.

To aid in the further extension and development of the dairying interests of Canada..... $3,000

Mr. FISHER. In what way is it proposed to expend this amount, which I am very glad to see here? I hope this is the result of the recent dairymen's convention.

Mr. CARLING. The convention of dairymen assembled here about 10 days ago from different Provinces—I think all the Provinces were represented—and they made application to the Government to give them some assistance towards helping a convention of dairymen next winter. This item is to assist towards the expenses.

Mr. FISHER. I understand then that it is to be handed over to the Dairymen's Association?

Mr. CARLING. No, I do not say that; but this money has been placed to the credit of the department, and such steps will be taken as they think necessary to carry out the wishes of the convention.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I happened to meet the deputation that waited on us for the purpose of asking for assistance. They mentioned this sum, and the Government have agreed to give this sum. They were informed, however, that if it was merely to pay the travelling expenses of the convention coming to meet here in Ottawa or elsewhere, I do not think the Government would look upon it with favor; but, if the money was to be expended in really aiding the dairy interest, we would be prepared to ask Parliament for this vote. This amount will be expended in a manner to be agreed upon by the Minister of Agriculture and the convention.

Mr. FISHER. I think this is as good a form as this could be put in. I believe the Government will find the Dairymen's Association thoroughly worthy of the confidence placed in them, and that the Government will see that their work is so much in the interests of the country that they will have no difficulty in granting their requests in this respect. There is one question to which I would like to allude in this connection. I hoped to see in this connection some slight recognition of the work and the labors for some years past of the gentleman who was instrumental in bringing about that dairy convention—I allude to Mr. W. H. Lynch. All those who have been connected with the dairying interest of this country for some years, are well aware of the untiring industry and the indefatigable interest which Mr. Lynch has displayed in furthering the dairying interest, in devoting his efforts, without any compensation from the public, towards contributing to the information and the assistance of those who are trying to improve this industry in Canada. I understood not very long ago that a petition was being circulated and largely signed in the House, asking the Government to recognise in some way those efforts, and I had trusted that when the Supplementary Estimates came down we might find some slight recognition. I happen to know personally that for a number of years past Mr. Lynch has devoted his whole time and attention, and a considerable amount of his own private means, towards obtaining information and giving that information to the public at large on this branch of industry. I think I am well within the mark in saying that Mr. Lynch has made no money whatever out of his work. There has been an impression abroad that he was a paid official of the Government, but those who sit on the Treasury benches are well aware that that is not the case. He has done this work out of the enthusiasm he feels for the advancement of this industry. I trust that it is still not too late for the Minister of Agriculture to see his way clear to do something in recognition of Mr. Lynch's services to the country.

Mr. McMULLEN. I notice in the Auditor General's Account that last year 75,000 copies of Mr. Lynch's pamphlet were purchased by the Government. Is it the intention to purchase any more this year?

Mr. CARLING. Those pamphlets on the dairy interests of Canada were purchased from Mr. Lynch and distributed amongst the members of this House. Mr. Lynch has applied to the Government to purchase 17,500 more pamphlets, and a number of letters that he has written, to be printed in pamphlet form and distributed. No action has been taken on the matter, but no doubt it will receive the consideration of the Government.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What amount was paid for these pamphlets?

Mr. CARLING. $4,500. The Government bought the pamphlets for six cents apiece.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Lynch was paid six cents each for these pamphlets, and he had to supply them in the shape in which they were distributed. He certainly did not make anything out of them.

To aid in the extension and the development of the fruit growing interest of Canada..... $2,000

Mr. CARLING. This money is to be expended in the same way as the money for the dairy interest. The fruit growers intend to have a convention next autumn or winter, of representatives from all the associations in the country, and they intend to have an exhibit of the hardy fruits of the Dominion, and generally to discuss the interests of the fruit business.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). A very good object.

Lachine Canal..... $36,600

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have nothing to say to the item contained here, but this constant demand on us in respect to these canals is becoming a very serious matter. Eight or ten yars ago the Canals, at the worst, used to meet expenses, in the time of my hon. friend, Mr. Mackenzie, we derived a little money out of them. But I observe that you put together the annual expenditure which we find under the head of collection of revenue, and the sums chargeable to canals for income, and the sums in the main estimate by which you get a total expenditure on Canals chargeable to income in one shape or other, of about $800,000 a year. If I understand correctly the estimate of receipts for 1888, it is scarcely likely that the average income will exceed $300,000, so that we are expending about $500,000 more than we receive from the canals at present. Now, that may be quite unavoidable, but it is a very serious state of things, particularly in view of the fact that we are now asked for many millions in order to complete the system, and I hardly understand how the very great discrepancy has come to arrive. I may remind the Minister of Finance that in 1878, these paid their own way, and there was a very small profit.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The revenue certainly is not increasing, and one cause may be that the tolls are decreasing. There has been great pressure brought to bear upon Parliament and the Government for the reduction of the tolls on the St. Lawrence Canals, in order to compete with the Buffalo and Erie Canals. The tolls on wheat and flour have been kept at the very lowest, they were reduced two or three years ago, and are far beneath what the service is worth. The argument is justly used that if we increase the tolls beyond what they have been for the last two or three seasons, the river will be abandoned, and that the produce of the west will go via the Buffalo and the Erie Canals, or by American railways. These two routes are fighting against each other. The tolls have been removed altogether from the Erie Canal, and it is very hard to keep any tolls on our canals.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I know all that, but really there is a point at which we shall have to draw the line. At the present moment apparently we shall have a deficit of $500,000 a year on the cost of keeping our canals in order, and the Minister of Finance told us the other evening that it would be necessary to expend $13,500,000 of additional capital, costing in round numbers about $500,000 more forever, in order to complete our 14 feet system. All this seems to point very much in the direction of the soundness of the arguments of the hon. member for Grenville (Mr. Shanly), that this 14 feet navigation for really commercial purposes is of very doubtful expediency indeed. I could understand a reasonable increase in the cost and a reasonable increase in the loss, but such a difference as exists between the expenditure in 1878 and the expenditure to-day is exceedingly serious, and causes me to doubt very considerably the wisdom of the policy we are adopting.

Welland Canal..... $35,000

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I desire to ask the Government whether it is their intention to stop Sunday traffic on the Welland Canal. During the early part of the Session a return was brought down, showing the correspondence that had taken place between the Government and various parties in connection with the opening of the canals for Sunday traffic, and I learn from that return that public feeling in the neighborhood of the canal and throughout the Niagara peninsula is very much excited with regard to this question. Resolutions were passed by a public meeting by the Trades and Labor Council of Toronto, by the citizens of Kingston, by the Knights of Labor of St. Catharines by the Welland Canal Seamen's Assembly, by a public meeting at Thorold, by the Knights of Labor at Thorold, by the Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners, by a public meeting at Port Dalhousie, by the Trade and Labor Council at St. Catharines, by the Knights of Labor at Port Dalhousie and at Thorold, all condemning the opening of the canal for Sunday traffic. There was also a petition adopted by 96 residents of Port Colborne, also one from the Hamilton branch of the Evangelical Alliance and one from the Presbytery of Hamilton to the same effect. I know that much excitement has been caused in the Niagara district in regard to the opening of the canal on Sundays. I observe that the member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert), took quite an active interest in the matter, on both sides of the question, and for the information of the House I will give some of the correspondence that passed between that hon. gentleman and the Government on this question. On 25th May, 1888, the member for Lincoln telegraphed as follows:—

"25th May, 1888.

"A. P. BRADLEY,
"Railways and Canals.
"Can you give permission to steamer Ocean as requested?"

It appears that the parties were anxious for an answer, for the operator at St. Catharines sent the following message:—

"25th May, 1888.

"Please answer J. C. Rykert's inquiry of this a.m.
"OPERATOR AT ST. CATHARINES."

On 4th June the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) wrote as follows:—

"ST. CATHARINES, 4th June, 1888.

"MY DEAR BRADLEY,—Why can you not give the permit asked for in the case of the Ocean going through the canal Sunday. They only ask to be allowed to go through one lock for the convenience of the passengers.

"Very truly,
"J. C. RYKERT."

It appears that in a very short time the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert), changed his views. He wrote or telegraphed to the First Minister as follows:—

"ST. CATHARINES, 9th June, 1888.

"To Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.
"Orders again issued compelling men to work Sundays on the canal. Great feeling about it. Please see Pope and get order cancelled. Answer.
"J. C. RYKERT."

On 21st June, the hon. gentleman appeared to get a little more excited about the matter, and telegraphed as follows:—

"ST. CATHARINES, 21st June, 1888.

"MY DEAR POPE,—I hope you will cancel the order allowing vessels to go through the canal on Sunday. It is causing a very bitter feeling here. I wish you would telegraph me that you have stopped it.
"J. C. RYKERT."

Then, again, on 10th July, the hon. gentleman writes or telegraphs:

"ST. CATHARINES, 10th July, 1888.

"MY DEAR POPE,—I herewith enclose you a copy of resolution passed at a public meeting here. I assure you that public sentiment is being greatly roused against the Government, and I am quite certain it will have a very serious effect upon any candidate who may present himself here. I cannot see why you should pander to a few Yankees.

"Very truly,
"J. C. RYKERT."

I do not think it is necessary that the canal should be opened on the Sabbath, because we have a return showing the number of vessels that have passed through on the various Sabbaths during the past season, and from that return I find that the number of vessels passing through lock 7, Port Dalhousie, eastward, was as follows:—16th September, 6 vessels; 23rd September, 8; 7th October, 3; 14th October, 6; 4th November, 4; 18th November, 1; 25th November, 1. Passing lock 7 and Port Dalhousie, westward, from 17th June, as follows: 1st July, 1 vessel; 8th July, 1; 5th August, 7; 19th August, 1; 26th August, 3; 9th September, 2; 16th September, 1; 28th October, 1; 4th November, 1; 18th November, 11; 2nd December, 2. I think the Government should attentively consider the fact that the people in that section of the country are very desirous that Sunday traffic should be stopped, and the Government should give the House to understand what their policy will be with respect to the opening of the canal on Sunday during the coming season.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Something, I think, has been omitted from the telegrams which my hon. friend read. The passage to which I refer was that unless the fourth commandment were better observed by the Government, it would go hard with a Tory candidate for Lincoln.

Mr. RYKERT. The hon. member for North Brant Mr. (Somerville) has taken considerable pains to show thi House that I have been on both sides of this question. I do not doubt that he took his cue from the Globe, which a very few days ago very unfairly published a portion of one of my letters. The hon. gentleman says I was in favor of the canal being opened on Sunday on one occasion, and that I was afterwards entirely opposed to it. If the hon. gentleman will look at the correspondence, he will find that I asked permission for the Ocean steamer to go through one lock, the Cornwall Canal, in the event of the boat reaching the entrance of the canal at 12 o'clock Saturday night, this being for the convenience of the passengers. Only half of my letters was published by the Globe. That paper published the following :—

4th June, 1888.

"My Dear Bradley,—Why cannot you give the permit asked for in the case of the Ocean going through the canal on Sunday."

And there it stopped.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I read the whole of it.

Mr. RYKERT. But you said I was on both sides of the question. If you had laid proper emphasis on the latter portion it would not have so appeared. I simply asked permission for the Ocean to go through one lock, for the convenience of the passengers, in order that they might have the opportunity to go to church on the Sunday. I wrote as the hon. gentleman has read, but the Globe, which desires to injure me before the public, left out the latter part, which, however, the hon. gentleman has read, namely :

"They only ask to be allowed to go through one lock, for the convenience of the passengers."

I have been on one side of this question only. I am entirely opposed to opening the canal on Sunday. I was not urged to do it by any person, and I did it of my own motion. I have urged that strongly, not only upon the First Minister, but upon the late Mr. Pope, but so far I am sorry to say that I have failed. I entirely agree with what the member for North Brant (Mr. Somerville) has said with regard to opening the canals on Sunday. There is nothing to be gained by it at all, and I do not withdraw one iota from my telegram that it was done to pander to a few Yankees. I am satisfied the whole thing was done to gratify the owners of a certain line of steamers running to Ogdensburg, and for no other purpose, and I still think the Government acted wrong in so doing. Public opinion in our section of the country is strong against it. The lock tenders do not desire it, and very few vessels pass through on Sunday. Sometimes there are only three or four, and to accommodate those few vessels about 150 men are employed on Sunday at an expense to the country of 20 cents an hour for each employé. I think you will find that not over twenty-five vessels all told took advantage of the opening of the Welland Canal on Sunday. I hope the First Minister will see the propriety of having this order cancelled so as not to give offence to a large portion of the people of the country.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is a question of a good deal of difficulty because there are opposing interests. While those who regard the strict observance of the Sabbath are pressing that the canals should be closed positively at 12 on Saturday night until after 12 o'clock on Sunday night; on the other hand we have the commercial interests who think otherwise. The shipping interests are petitioning against the closing of the canals on Sunday; the Board of Trade of Montreal has sent in a strong representation against it and the late Minister of Railway and Canals, in order as much as possible to prevent the desecration of the Sabbath and at the same time without interfering materially with the trade, adopted the system which existed last season and unless altered will exist in the coming season. That system is that the canal should be closed from 8 o'clock on Sunday morning until 9 on Sunday at night. Under this system the employés on the canal would not be prevented from attending to their duties or from going to church, as the churches hold service after 8 in the morning and they close at 9 at night. Therefore in reality during the whole of Sunday as against the night of Sunday the canal is closed. The employés have the whole day to themselves and it is a very serious thing to close the canal as has been represented by those who know most about it. If the canals are closed there is very considerable delay and there is a charge for demurrage on vessels in consequence. On the other hand it has to be considered that the Erie Canal is opened on Sunday and with the keen competition between the two routes it is a serious matter to close our canals. The employés of course are in favor of the closing because they are paid by the year and they would rather be able to get to bed by 12 on Saturday night and not be obliged to get up too early on Sunday morning. Those who are strong sabbatarians are also in favor of the closing, but it is a matter of commercial expediency altogether. The hours for worship on Sunday being reserved and preserved not only to the employés of the canals but to the crews and passengers on the different vessels the argument is used very strongly, that unless to those who conscientiously believe that it is a sin to do anything from 12 o'clock on Saturday night until Monday morning, the employés get full rest and full opportunity to attend worship. Petitions on both sides have been received by the Government; the question is engaging their attention, and a solution must be come to after weighing the arguments pro and con. The petitions of the shipping interests are very strong and very urgent that the rules which were adopted last season should be adhered to.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The First Minister will observe that the Erie Canal does not enter into competition with the Welland Canal.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, does it not?

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The same class of vessels do not carry freight through the Welland Canal as through the Erie Canal.

Mr. BOYLE. This question has caused a good deal of excitement among the people along the line of the Welland Canal, and the different members for that district have been interviewed time and again on this matter. They are all supporters of the Administration, and in some respect have the onus cast upon them of supporting the Government in regard to the opening of the canals on Sunday. I have listened attentively to the explanation of the Premier, but I regret exceedingly that I cannot agree with him as to the necessity of opening the canal on Sunday. He told us that the men could leave work at 8 in the morning and come on again at 9 at night, so as to give them time to attend divine service, but I would ask, what condition men would be in who have worked all night and left off work at 8 in the morning, to attend their religious duties? I say it is a case in which commercial interests should not weigh, and that nothing but danger to life and property would entitle the Government to open the canals on Sunday. I hope this question will be taken under the serious consideration of the Government.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). I occasionally get on the same side of the question as my friend from Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) and my friend from Welland (Mr. Boyle), and I think that the grounds they have taken on this occasion are well worthy the consideration of the Government. I can well understand the pressure that is brought to bear on the Minister to have the canals opened on Sunday. The competition in business is always keen and active and we know very well that there is a business class both in Canada and the United States, who do not pay much regard to Sunday observance, provided that thereby they can add a little to their financial gains. I think that it is to be regretted that the Government should make any more concessions to that class when we take into account the length of time that our canals have been exempt from Sunday service, and that the employés, as my hon. friend from Welland says, who have to be at work at night cannot properly attend to their religious duties on Sunday. I think there is another reason why it is desirable that the Government should not concede what these parties ask for. While it may be pleaded by certain parties that the Erie Canal is open for Sunday traffic, I would remind the House that on the American side there has recently been a very strong and decided movement for reducing Sunday labor as far as possible. While there is a large minority of the community who are quite willing to encroach on the hours of the Sabbath rest if they can make a little more money by doing so, there is a very active movement for reducing Sunday labor on railways, the canals and in other ways; and I think it would weaken the hands of the people who are moving in that direction if it were possible to point to the fact that while they were exerting themselves to reduce Sunday labor, Canada was opening the doors for increasing it. Only yesterday I saw in the public journals that the managers of the Vanderbilt system of railways were making preparations to still further reduce their Sunday traffic; and I notice that the traffic managers of both the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific have recently stated to parties who interested themselves in the Sabbath question, that they were endeavoring to stop Sunday traffic on their respective lines of railway. I think under these circumstances it would be regretted if the Minister of Railways should yield to the pressure being brought to bear upon him for the purpose of securing more Sunday traffic through our canals. After the experience we have had of suspending Sunday traffic on the canals, and in view of the fact that the gentlemen who represent constituencies through which the Welland Canal passes so strongly express themselves in favor of the continued prevention of Sunday traffic, we ought to respect the sentiment of the community in that section and as far as possible avoid wounding their sense of justice and right in this matter, to say nothing about the advantage and comfort of the employés on the canal who are necessarily more or less deprived of their Sunday rest.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Perhaps the best plan would be for me to bring down the papers on both sides, and I will lay them on the Table.

Mr. MULOCK. I would like to ask the First Minister whether any representations have been made to the Government in regard to the rebate system in force in connection with the tolls on the Welland Canal? I understand that vessels passing eastward through the canal and going vid Montreal are entitled to a rebate, whilst vessels that do not continue their journey for a certain distance do not get that rebate.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; that has been in force for some years, and there have been no representations and no communications with the Government on the subject that I am aware of.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That is true, I believe; but the matter has been used to a considerable extent against us on the other side of the line. Complaints have been made both in Congress and in the United States press that this rebate practically operates as an unreasonable discrimination against their vessels. Of course, there is no doubt that legally and theoretically we have a right to do as we please with our own property; but still the hon. gentleman is aware that there is some sort of show for the allegation made that we do in practice charge a toll which discriminates to a large extent against American ports.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. While the Fishery Treaty was up in Congress, that was one of the various complaints made against Canada. I think when the time comes it can be easily shown that there is no discrimination, but that American and Canadian shipping are treated exactly alike. American vessels go to Montreal as well as Canadian vessels. I speak merely from memory, as I did not think the question was coming up to-night, when I say that within a certain period, rebates amounting to something like $8,000 were paid to American vessels in the same way as to Canadian vessels.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I know that in a technical sense there is no discrimination; but if I am not misinformed, if two vessels come through the Welland Canal, one bound for Oswego and the other for Montreal, the practical effect is that the one which goes to Montreal pays no toll for passing through the Welland Canal, while the vessel that goes to Oswego pays the full toll.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is so, but the vessel passing through the Welland Canal and going to Kingston pays the same toll as the vessel going to Oswego.

Mr. MULOCK. But there is not much of that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, yes, there is a considerable shipping trade at Kingston. They stand on precisely the same footing. I do not think it is profitable to discuss this question now; it is one that can better be settled hereafter, if there should be any negotiations between the United States and Canada.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). While it may not be profitable to discuss the question from the hon. gentleman's point of view, I think it is pretty clear to the common sense of everybody that if a toll is charged with the view of compensation for the use of the canal, a vessel going to Montreal ought to pay just as much as a vessel going to Kingston. There should be no difference in that respect; and if the Americans wish to use the canal for the purpose of going to Oswego and we wish to use it for the purpose of going to Montreal, and we allow our vessels to go through at a smaller toll, it is perfectly clear that we are discriminating against them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not at all.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Suppose no vessels stopped at Kingston, but suppose all Canadian vessels went to Montreal and all American vessels went to Oswego, could the hon. gentleman apply the rule that he now lays down?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We will not discuss a hypothetical case. I would simply say that the tolls were taken off the Erie Canal for the avowed purpose of taking the whole trade from our canals. Are we to sit still and not try to retain some of the commerce on our own inland waters?

River St. Lawrence, Improvement of Ship Channel between Quebec and Montreal..... $100,000

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is in accordance with the statement made last Session, when the Government assumed the work of deepening the channel between the harbor of Montreal and the harbor of Quebec. It was then stated that most likely $200,000 would be required to complete that work. The works to be completed are these: At Grondines village, beginning by the lower part of the channel opposite that place, we have to straighten the channel there and remove shaly rock and the estimate of the cost is $22,500; removing boulders $7,500; opposite the village of Batiscan, the boulders will cost $5,900; widening and hard pan and boulders, $17,100; Cape St. Michel, widening, clay and gravel, $19,500; widening, clay boulders, $21,000; Longueuil, widening and hard pan and boulders, $12,000. We have to add for deepening in certain places, to get the 27½ feet depth, $39,000; for cleaning places already dredged to give 27½ feet depth, with 10 feet 9 inches on flats. $9,000. We are asking this year $100,000 to go on with these works, and I suppose another $100,000 will next year complete the works from the lower portion of the channel above the harbor of Quebec to the east end of the harbor of Montreal on the River St. Lawrence.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. When that is done, what will our position be? We have assumed the debt, and I presume we will be responsible for keeping that channel in order. We do not receive any revenue from it whatever. In addition to the loss of interest, what sum will be required to keep the channel at its present depth, or does the hon. gentleman contemplate deepening it still further?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Government do not contemplate going down lower than 27½ feet. That is what was asked by the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal, when they undertook this work with the consent of the Government and Parliament. After this is done, the straightening of the channel, the deepening at certain places where a sort of mound may have been left at the bottom of the channel, and the angles cut in such a way so that a ship may not have to slacken speed in going through the channel, as she has to do now at times, in order to get round an angle, the navigation will be as good as it was intended to be. It will take these two seasons and perhaps a third one, to complete this work. Then the only thing that would be left to keep the channel in good order would be probably to have a dredge, and a tug to bring her down every spring, and probably during the season of navigation, and to see whether there are not boulders that have been carried down by the ice in the spring and deposited in the channel. Perhaps there might be some silt in one or two places. As far as I can recollect, I think that, opposite the St. Maurice and perhaps a little below, there may be some silt deposited, and that may probably have to be dredged in the spring. There cannot be much, but still, if we want to keep the channel open to a depth of 27½ feet, that would have to be done.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Roughly, how much do you put the total cost at?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot tell that now.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Could the Minister state from recollection how many miles of this channel we require to deepen? I think a large part is natural navigation and is perfectly good.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It will be only a few miles which they will have to dredge, perhaps only three or four miles together, but we have, nevertheless, to take care that the channel shall not be interrupted by unforeseen circumstances, by boulders, for instance, as I have mentioned.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is it 300 feet wide, or 300 yards?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. 300 feet.

Mr. RINFRET. (Translation.) I desire to draw the attention of the hon. the Minister of Public Works to the petition of the electors of the parish of St. Jean des Chaillons, asking for the dredging of the river margins at this point. Since the dredging was done at Cap à la Roche, it is remarked that the water falls on the beach and that at certain times of the year boats cannot come alongside it. I would wish to know whether the Government intend to do anything to make good the injury done at this place?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) I must say, in answer to my hon. friend, that I have given my attention to the petition which was presented by the hon. member, I think, or at any rate sent in to the department, respecting the shore at St. Jean des Chaillons. I have referred the matter to my engineer; and I think that without sending dredges expressly to do this work, means will be found, when the dredges employed in dredging the St. Lawrence in the neighborhood are not otherwise employed to utilise them in doing the work which the hon. member has just indicated. I cannot make a positive statement at the present moment, because I do not know now the power of these dredges, but I shall not lose sight of the matter.

Mr. RINFRET. (Translation.) I wish to say to the hon. Minister that if he intends to do anything this year in the way of dredging the river margins at the place I have mentioned, it is absolutely necessary that it should be done in the high waters of the spring time, because, the moment that the water begins to lower, be it ever so little, there is no means of bringing the dredges alongside the shore, and, in consequence, the work will be kept back. I will also remark to the hon. Minister, that if the dredging is not done there are a number of brickyards which will be compelled to stop working completely, because the boats will be unable to come alongshore to take in their cargoes. If there was any means of doing the dredging at once it would be of great advantage.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) I take a note of what the hon. member has just stated, with respect to the time at which it is necessary to do this work. I am not astonished when he speaks of the lowering of the water at this point, because the lowering of the water's level is felt everywhere on the St. Lawrence,—in the small harbors and on the shores; but it is imperative that this place should suffer, as others do, the inconvenience of having less water, in the interest of navigation at large.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). That corroborates what I stated to some gentlemen when the 25 feet channel was tested in 1884. I was on the Peruvian with some gentlemen from Montreal, and they said it was intended to deepen the channel to 27½ feet at Cap à la Roche. I said at that time, if you do you will make the channel shallower than it has previously been up to Montreal, and I see that the result which I foresaw has taken place. The water was very high last summer. In fact it was raining nearly the whole summer, but, notwithstanding that, the people on the shores are suffering from the lowness of the water, not only at St. Jean des Chaillons of which my hon. friend from Lotbinière (Mr. Rinfret) was speaking, but in several other places. Surely the water could not be so low unless the channel had been affected to some extent, and I am afraid that there must be a large expenditure of money if that work at Cap à la Roche is to go on. I stated on the occasion to which I referred, that if the natural dam at Cap à la Roche was removed the water would flow down, and the rest of the river would be lower than it was before. I am afraid that, if the excavations are proceeded with, and the channel is made 27½ feet deep at Cap à la Roche at low tide, the whole channel from there to Montreal will have to be deepened again. Of course, when the water is high, there is no trouble at any place, but at low water there will be a necessity to deepen the channel in many places. Where it is intended to have 27½ feet, it will come down to 25 feet probably, and I think the work that is being proceeded with at Cap à la Roche will have a very different result from what we have in view.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) I think that the hon. member is in error in considering the place to be a dam which holds up the water and prevents it from descending rapidly, for it cannot be considered as being such a dam. This obstacle need not be considered at the present moment, for even now vessels can pass in another channel. But in order to make the channel straighter and to facilitate navigation, the Harbor Commissioners have taken care to keep dredging at this place for many years past, and if the hon. member has remarked the material of which this obstacle is composed he must have seen that it is not rock but what is called shale; it is a kind of tufa, very hard and which appears to be rock, but which yields to the efforts of the dredge.

Mr. LANGELIER. (Translation). That is going to lessen the depth of water in the channel.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) No; I think, on the contrary, that the result will be such as the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Rinfret) stated just now: that the water along the banks will be lower than before the dredging of the channel, but as to the channel itself I do not think that there will be any danger of seeing the depth lessened by the dredging which we are going to carry out at Cap à la Roche and at Cape Charles. I think that when the channel will be thus dredged, it will be possible to have 27½ feet of water, as was calculated upon and desired by the Harbor Commissioners when they undertook this work.

Mr. LAURIER. My hon. friend from Lunenburg (Mr. Eisenhauer) has called the attention of the Government in this and previous Sessions to the fact that the harbor of Lunenburg absolutely requires works of the same character as those which are now under discussion; and, so far as I am aware, my hon. friend has not been able to get a satisfactory answer from the Government. I think no reasons can be assigned why a different treatment should be granted to the harbor of Montreal than to the harbor of Lunenburg. These works in the channel of the St. Lawrence are primarily for the benefit of the harbor of Montreal, they are for the purpose of enabling ocean steamers of the largest capacity to reach Montreal. If the principle is admitted, can there be any reason why the reasonable demand which my. hon. friend has made over and over again, and substantiated, I believe, by the local authorities, should not also meet with some degree of favor from the Government.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think the friendship of the leader of the Opposition for the member for Lunenburg leads him to forget that the two works are not the same at all. The deepening of the channel of the St. Lawrence was effected, not alone for the harbor of Montreal, but for the benefit of the trade of the whole country. Parliament has treated that channel like the Lachine Canal, or the Welland Canal, or the canals of the St. Lawrence. That channel was deepened in order to accommodate the trade of the Dominion west of Montreal, in order that the imports and exports from the west should reach ocean navigation as soon as possible. I have no doubt that if that work had been proposed simply for the benefit of Montreal, the country would not have undertaken it; but it was primarily for the great Province of Ontario, and the large population west of Montreal. Therefore, the hon. leader of the Opposition is not justified in placing the harbor of Lunenburg on a par with the harbor of Montreal in point of importance. The harbor of Lunenburg may be an important local harbor, and I have no doubt that the hon. member for Lunenburg, if he will exercise a little patience, will find that that harbor will be treated as other places are. We cannot make all the improvements at the same time. I have been besieged all day by a number of my own personal friends who complained that I gave them nothing; and then gentlemen from the other side of the House have come and told me the same thing. I must say that they made me sorry all day, but I hope that they will give me a chance of rejoicing with them another year.

Mr. LAURIER. All I can say is, that if the hon. gentleman has been besieged by his friends for more favors, it is because he has justified the French maxim that l'appetit vient en mangeant. He has given them so much that they want more. If he would give just a little to my hon. friend from Lunenburg of what he gives so lavishly to his friends behind him, I am sure my hon. friend will be satisfied. I take issue with the hon. Minister in his remarks concerning the harbor of Montreal. It is a very good harbor in itself, provided the hand of man comes to the rescue, but the trade of the country would be served far better by the harbor of Quebec. The ocean trade has its natural terminus at Quebec, but we have endeavored to bring it up to Montreal. I do not complain of that, but, after all, I submit it simply justifies what I have said, that the same principle might apply to one harbor as to the other. The harbor of Lunenburg is not as important as that of Montreal, but in its way it is very important, because it is the point where the deep sea fisheries are the largest, and that reason alone ought to procure it some consideration. The Minister of Public Works says that the hon. member for Lunenburg ought to have patience. My hon. friend has exhibited patience for years, and if he had the assurance to-night from the Minister that next year his request would be complied with, then he would have nothing more to say.

Halifax Immigrant building..... $5,000

Mr. EISENHAUER. This is the only item for Nova Scotia. Now, a few weeks ago when we were discussing the general Estimates, I asked the Minister on what principle the Government erected public buildings in different parts of the country, whether it was according to population or revenue, or for political reasons. The hon. gentleman said: Oh, no, they always got the best information they could as to where the buildings were most needed. Their action shows that they do not follow that principle. The Government came to the conclusion, in 1886, that it was necessary to erect a public building at Lunenburg, at all events they went so far as to secure a site. I would like to know what information the Government has obtained since, and why they have not gone on with the work? I think it is evident that it must be for political reasons that they have changed their opinion. Now, in the town of Lunenburg there is a post office about twelve feet square, and the public, both men and women, have to remain outside until the mails are assorted. I have seen large numbers of people crowding about it in stormy nights. I think the Government must know the importance of that place. I suppose it is no use to bring the matter up now, as I have brought it up so many times before and could get no satisfaction, as to when the Government intend to erect a public building at Lunenburg.

Mr. ELLIS. Will the hon. Minister tell us what this item is for?

Mr. CARLING. This is for the erection of an immigrant building in the city of Halifax, where we have no building to accommodate them when they arrive in the winter season. Last year 18,000 immigrants arrived at Halifax during the winter, and this amount is to erect a building sufficiently convenient to accommodate immigrants on their arrival, and make them comfortable until they are ready to take the train west.

Mr. KIRK. Does the Minister say that all the immigrants arriving at Halifax came in the winter? I understood that only 18,000 came to that port altogether.

Mr. CARLING. The larger portion came during the winter months, and the Allan steamers were coming to Halifax instead of Quebec.

Mr. KIRK. Might not the Government, instead of erecting a new building for immigration purposes, convert the elevator, which has been constructed there at a very large cost, into an immigration building instead of keeping it there unused. Surely something can be done with this building. Perhaps the object in taking this vote is that part of the elevator should be converted into an immigration shed. I understand that if something is not done shortly it will tumble into the water. It is erected on a wharf, and the worms are eating the wharf away, and in 5 or 6 years this building, which cost a quarter of a million of dollars, will be in the harbor. Would it not be better to expend this money in utilising part of that building for an immigration shed, instead of putting up a new building?

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Would the Minister explain where he proposes to expend this money?

Mr. CARLING. I have not had the pleasure of visiting Halifax, but it is intended to erect a building near the freight sheds of the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I think the expenditure is a proper one, so far as the wants of the immigrants are concerned, at all events to some extent, although I do not think they suffer much; but the additional accommodation will be of very great advantage. The building will require to be near the sheds because the trains run into the sheds on the wharf, and the immigrants land there and have their baggage examined and their tickets checked. It will be necessary to have the sheds as near the wharf as possible. It has been suggested that the elevator should be utilised. I suppose it would cost more to utilise that building than to put up a building for immigration purposes. The elevator is not valuable to the shipping, but it is very valuable to Mr. Alvin Grant, who has charge of it, and who receives $1,600 a year for looking after it, and I am sorry to say no business is done at the elevator. The expenditure seems rather to have been wasted, but still the elevator is there, and it would cost more to utilise it than to put up a new building for immigration purposes.

Mr. KIRK. Is this Mr. Alvin Grant, who receives $1,600 a year from the Government, the same Alvin Grant who is employed by the Government to carry around boodle during election times?

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The same man.

Mr. KIRK. Is this $5,000 intended to complete the building?

Mr. CARLING. Yes.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Mr. Alvin Grant is a very valuable servant to the Tory party—politically. He is always on hand to distribute the money at very critical times, and there is a controversy going on in the public press there now with respect to the amount of money distributed by Mr. Grant during the last election. It was known that he landed at Digby and left enough money there to defeat my friend, Mr. Vail.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think this discussion is going very far from the item.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). He has charge of the elevator.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. The elevator is not under discussion.

Mr. MULOCK. Is there any Dominion building at Halifax which could be utilised instead of erecting a new building for this purpose?

Mr. CARLING. There is no building belonging to the Government suitable for this purpose convenient to the wharf or the station.

Mr. MULOCK. Will $5,000 purchase a site and erect the building?

Mr. CARLING. It is intended to erect the building on a site belonging to the Government near the station and also near the wharf.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Is there room on the Government property?

Mr. CARLING. I sent an officer of the department there to examine the site, and he reported there was sufficient room.

Mr. KIRK. I suppose Mr. Alvin Grant will be in charge of the new building as well as the elevator, and will look after the two buildings.

Mr. MULOCK. I think we should hear from the junior member from Halifax on the subject. I am not aware that Halifax has fully expressed its opinion on this subject.

Public Works, Prince Edward Island $1,400

Mr. WELSH. No doubt this amount is all right. I am also glad to see in these Supplementary Estimates an amount for public works at Selkirk, China Point and China Point Wharf. I hope the work will be offered by public tender on plans drawn out by the Government engineer, and that the work will be done under his inspection, because a large sum is wasted if the work is carried out by day work. I wish the amount was a little larger.

Public Works, Ontario	$123,400
Belleville Drill Shed	10,000

Mr. MULOCK. With reference to those grants for building drill sheds I would ask on what principle are those drill sheds erected, and how it comes that drill sheds are erected in some places and not in others? For example, it is known that it is necessary to have improved drill shed accommodation in Toronto; on what principle are these drill sheds built, are they erected on account of the importunities of the locality?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I find, for example, that $10,000 has been granted by the town of Brantford towards the erection of the drill shed, provided the Federal Government will contribute the same amount. After the Department of Militia has decided that the building is required, the fact that this offer is made by the municipal authorities justifies the Government in asking a similar amount from Parliament.

Mr. MULOCK. Did Belleville contribute anything towards this drill shed?

Mr. BOWELL. The corporation of Belleville gave no money, the drill shed was built by the officers of the battalion and others who subscribed various sums for the purpose. The Government gives them this appropriation to assist in paying off the debt. I may add that these drill sheds are transferred to the Department of Militia when the Government contributes anything towards them; so that they cannot be diverted for any other purpose.

Mr. MULOCK. When was the drill shed at Belleville erected?

Mr. BOWELL. It was built last summer. I observed that one of the newspapers stated that the town had given a lot for that purpose, but I know that it is not the lot upon which the drill shed has been erected.

Mr. MULOCK. What was the total cost of the Belleville drill shed?

Mr. BOWELL. I do not know myself, but from information I have received, it was $15,000 or $20,000. Judging from the size of the building and the locality in which it is situated, I do not think it cost any more.

Mr. MULOCK. Does the Minister of Customs think it cost more than $10,000 to erect this drill shed?

Mr. BOWELL. I should think it would when finished. I have already told the hon. gentleman that I thought it would cost about $15,000, but I do not think it will cost any more.

Mr. MULOCK. It may be that the gentlemen who subscribed for the building of the shed will get back every dollar that they expended, and that brings me back to the original question; on what principle are those buildings connected with the militia service erected in different parts of the Dominion? Brantford subscribed $10,000, whereas this vote may cover all the expenses of the drill shed in Belleville.

Mr. BOWELL. Suppose that were true, I can tell the hon. gentleman that Belleville has maintained a volunteer force since 1857, and for part of that time two battalions, and never had a dollar from this Government or any other Government to assist in paying for or providing drill shed or armories. That has always been paid by the officers themselves and other gentlemen, and this drill shed has been built by private subscriptions. This vote is to assist in paying off the indebtedness on the shed which exists at the present time, so that these gentlemen will not get any money back.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Has the city of Belleville contributed anything towards assisting the officers and other parties in constructing that shed?

Mr. BOWELL. Not that I am aware of, except from the statement made in one of the newspapers. I stated in this House when the matter was discussed before, that Belleville had done nothing, and a newspaper corrected me in that statement and said that the town of Belleville had given them a lot. I do not know where that lot is.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I understand that the usual custom is to transfer these properties to the Militia Department as soon as they are completed.

Mr. BOWELL. In many cases, when volunteers have been disbanded after a drill shed has been built, it is sold, and if the municipalities have contributed any portion towards its construction they get a sum in proportion to the amount they have paid in.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I understood the Minister to state that these gentlemen had kept up this drill shed for a number of years. But now it appears that it had been transferred to the department and kept up by it. I think we ought to know whether there is any principle underlying the building of these drill sheds in these cities. It appears that in Brantford one-half the amount has been contributed, and the Government ought also to expect Belleville to contribute one-half the amount for the drill shed there. Is there any reason for treating Belleville in one way and Brantford in another way? Is it because they get a little more support from one locality than from the other? I am inclined to think that it is.

Mr. BOWELL. What I said to the hon. member for North York, was, that the drill shed was only built last summer—and I am informed now by the hon. member for West Hastings (Mr. Corby), that it is not yet fully completed—that I thought the expenditure would not exceed $15,000, that it had been built by the subscriptions of officers and others in the city, and that this was an appropriation by the Government to assist in paying the indebtedness on that drill shed. If my hon. friend reflects for a moment, he will come to this conclusion: that men who have given their time and money for years towards the maintenance of the volunteer force, should receive as much consideration from the Government as a municipality which contributes a certain amount from the chest of the town to assist in building a drill shed.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). I have no objection that a private individual should be compensated equally with a municipality, but what I say is that Belleville receives $10,000, and the whole shed is only worth $15,000, whereas Brantford is only to receive $10,000 on condition that it contributes another $10,000, and what I argued was that the private individuals in Belleville are benefited to double the proportion that the municipality of Brantford is.

Mr. MULOCK. Perhaps the Minister of Militia can now answer the question I put. I do not wish the Minister of Customs to understand me as objecting to the grant of this money for the drill shed at Belleville, but I am asking whether there is any general principle on which public money is voted for the erection of these buildings throughout the Dominion. Is it a matter of principle or a matter of pressure?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. There is an Order in Council which regulates the manner in which the drill sheds are built all over the Dominion. The invariable rule is that whenever the Government contribute a portion of the expenditure, the title of the property must be made over to the Crown. Whether the money has been contributed by individuals as in the case of Belleville, or as in the case of Brantford has been contributed by the municipality, the amount of money contributed by the Government depends altogether on the outlay for the building of the drill shed. The Brantford drill shed is more expensive than the one at Belleville. In no part of the Dominion have the militia force contributed more from their own pockets for the maintenance of the force than the Belleville volunteers have done, and I can say that there is no force whose efficiency has been kept up to a higher standard. The contribution which the Government has made for the Belleville drill shed is in the same proportion as the contributions we have made to other portions of the Dominion.

Mr. MULOCK. What is that?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I cannot say exactly. The contribution the Government made was for the purpose of reimbursing those who had incurred expenses for the building of the drill shed. The property was made over to the Government, as was the Brantford property, and every other drill shed property in the Dominion.

Mr. MULOCK. Then, perhaps, the Minister can tell us what the local gentlemen have contributed?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. So far as I can recollect, merely speaking from memory, the drill shed in Belleville cost between $15,000 and $17,000. The property was a valuable property in the central portion of the town; it had been bought at a period when its value was not as great as it is at present, and it was considered to have increased in value, and the proportion contributed by the Government was nothing more than we contributed towards other drill sheds in the Dominion.

Mr. MULOCK. Is this expenditure in this particular case being made in harmony with the provisions of the Order in Council that the Minister of Militia has referred to?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. There is a general Order in Council to regulate the expenditure in the building of drill sheds all over the Dominion in ordinary cases. In large centres, such as Montreal and Toronto, where the militia force is larger than in others, that general Order in Council is not followed, nor has it been followed in the cases of Brantford or Belleville, where the contributions made by the municipality or the individual members of a corps are taken into consideration to form a basis on which the Government contribute.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. the Minister of Public Works read a minute last night stating that Brantford had passed a by-law agreeing to pay $10,000 towards the building of a drill shed, provided the Government provided another $10,000. Are the local authorities of Belleville in precisely the same position?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I consider that, in the case of Belleville, we have been paid our proportion, taking into consideration the value of the property handed over to us by the Belleville volunteers, and I consider we are treating them on a footing of equality with every other place where we have put up drill sheds.

Mr. MULOCK. The property then is worth $20,000.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I did not value it at all.

Mr. MULOCK. The hon. the Minister of Customs stated to the Committee that a conveyance of the property had been made to the Government, that the building had been erected by private enterprise, and that this $10,000 was to go towards recouping those gentlemen to the extent of our grant. If Belleville is being treated in the same way as Brantford, and Brantford has been paid $10,000 in cash, then the value of the property in Belleville must be $20,000, since the decision of the Government is based on the equal contribution in each case.

Mr. McMULLEN. It appears that this promise with regard to Belleville was made by some person, and an advantage is given to Belleville over some other places. Is it to implement the promise of the Minister of Customs?

Mr. BOWELL. I never promised the people of Belleville a single dollar, directly or indirectly, neither did they know that a dollar would be given until it appeared in the Estimates. It would be much better if we did not indulge in such insinuations, particularly where there is no necessity for it.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is quite apparent, from the immense vote for the erection of public buildings throughout the country, that there is some purpose not publicly known behind this expenditure. Some influences are being brought on the Government to secure the construction of buildings where they are not wanted. Post offices are erected in places like Joliette, where the whole receipts are something under $2,000 a year; while in other places, where the receipts are over $4,000 a year, no post offices at all are erected.

Mr. BARRON. I can see no objection to a subsidy being given when a contribution is made by a municipality, but I think it is most dangerous for the Government to let it be known that private individuals, officers of different regiments, should they subscribe money to build a drill shed, will be repaid by this Government a portion of the same. We may find people taking advantage of this, and it ought not to be assented to. The voting of money to recoup private individuals ought not to be encouraged.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. the Minister of Militia stated some time ago that he was going to buy a house in Kingston for some military purpose. I do not notice any vote taken for that. Where or for what was that money to be expended?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The property was purchased as a residence for the commandant of the Royal Military College of Kingston, and the amount paid was $12,500.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yes, I know, but what I want to know is what vote in the Estimates covers that expenditure? Has the money been paid?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The amount has not been paid yet.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. From what vote are you going to pay it?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I suppose it will have to be brought down in the Estimates.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then it is not in the Estimates.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It will have to be paid. I will bring down the information to-morrow from the records of the department to give the answer.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Has the money been paid?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I am under the impression that it has not been paid yet.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have not the slightest desire that it should be paid. I only want to know from what vote are you going to pay it?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I will bring down the information to-morrow.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Why was it considered necessary to buy this residence? I understand that all the commandants of the Military College before the present one paid their own rental or bought their houses.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. As the hon. gentleman knows the commandant was allowed $800 a year for the purpose of finding quarters, and it was almost impossible to find lodgings for the commandant at that time. We thought that it would be in the interest of economy to buy this property at the price we paid for it, as we would save the money allowed to the commandant for the purpose of obtaining quarters.

Guelph Post Office—Improvements—to complete... $3,000

Mr. INNES. What is the nature of the improvements the hon. gentleman proposes to make there? About three months ago the heating apparatus was put in there. Is this vote for that purpose, or does the hon. gentleman contemplate any other improvements in the interior of the building?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There are a number of small works to be performed in that building.

Mr. INNES. What was the amount of the contract for the heating apparatus?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is not connected with this vote.

Mr. INNES. A vote was taken last year for that purpose, but I want to know if a portion of this is required to pay that, or if the vote of last year completed it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No portion of this vote will be required for that.

Mr. INNES. Are these miscellaneous improvements which you propose to make?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There are amounts for attics, spoiled pipes, painting, re-painting outside wall, inside painting, cleaning, superintendence, and so on, and deducting a balance left over of $208, it leaves $2,000 to provide for.

London Military Buildings $10,000

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What are these buildings? Is this for the Military College?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This amount is to be applied to complete the Infantry School building, the drill shed, officers' quarters and so on.

Mr. MULOCK. Is the drill shed for general use or for the school alone?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It is for the school alone.

Mr. MULOCK. Does the city of London contribute anything towards this?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No, the city of London has nothing to do with it. It is for the Infantry School.

Mr. MULOCK. Will it be used for general purposes?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No.

Orillia Public Buildings (the town contributing the Wheeler lot free of cost)..... $4,000

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not object to Orillia getting a post office, but I desire to ask the Government on what principle they are proceeding in erecting post offices. I find that in Woodstock, where they derive a revenue of $13,000, there is no post office building. You have already passed votes for post offices in small places, and I want to know upon what principle that is done?

Mr. MITCHELL. How can you expect a post office in Woodstock, when the representative votes against the Government?

Mr. McMULLEN. I want to find out what the principle is upon which these buildings are erected.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is the principle.

Mr. McMULLEN. We have already voted for the erection of a post office at St. Henri, the revenue from which is $1,200. There is already a post office in Joliette, from which the revenue is $1,900, and there are from 35 to 40 places in Ontario where the receipts are over $4,000 a year but where they have no post offices. How is it that you erect a post office in Joliette where the rental was only from $60 to $80 a year, and the revenue was only $1,900, and a post office in St. Henri, where the receipts are $1,200 and the rent only $60 a year, while in Woodstock, from which the receipts are $13,000, there is no post office? I want to know on what principle the erection of these post offices is proceeded upon. It is full time that some rule should be laid down. If post offices are to be erected in county towns, I have no particular objection to that, if it is honestly carried out, but I object to peddling round patronage in insignificant places, where the receipts are practically nothing, and neglecting important places like Woodstock where the receipts are five or six times as much, and I want to know on what principle the Government profess to defend such a course.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is the revenue from this place?

Mr. HAGGART. $7,652.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not think my hon. friend from Wellington (Mr. McMullen) can find fault with this item. In 1887 the post office there yielded a revenue of $6,860, now it is $7,600, and there is a population of about 5,000.

Mr. McMULLEN. What are the reasons that you do not build a post office in Woodstock?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Because the Government has not thought that they should ask a grant of money for that place this year. We cannot build everything in the same year. Orillia has been mentioned for three or four years, and the attention of the Government has been specially called to it. Finally we found that the place deserved a post office, and although it is not in a constituency represented by a supporter of the Government, we did not think that was a reason why the people should be deprived of the building. I suppose that if the hon. gentleman continues to press the claims of Woodstock upon the attention of the Government, we may finally become convinced that it requires a new building.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is a pity that the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Cook) is not here. I think he could throw some light upon the subject. If his version of the case be correct, the "Jamaica" car tarried there once, and there was a strong appeal made the inhabitants of Orillia to turn out my hon. friend, which I am happy to say, was not successful. But one of the arguments used, as the hon. gentleman stated in the House, was that in the fulness of time they should have a post office, and that time has now arrived. That appears to be the explanation, rather than any fixed rule or system in regard to population or revenue, at least that was the explanation given by the hon. member who represents that county.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have to apologise to the Minister of Public Works for making the remark I did to the hon. member who has taken objections to this motion. I presumed the Government only gave post offices and things of that kind to constituencies who returned members who support them, but I find to my surprise that Orillia is in the constituency represented by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Cook) who does not very often vote in favor of the Administration. For the constituency that I represent there is not a single item, although I made a strong personal appeal the other night to the Government, and I thought that the Minister of Public Works, who is generally so fair in everything that he does—I cannot apply that remark to all the other members of the Administration ——

An hon. MEMRER. Name.

Mr. MITCHELL. Why, all the rest of them.

An hon. MEMBER. The Minister of Marine?

Mr. MITCHELL. Oh, I don't care a pin about him. He is only a boy; he don't amount to anything anyway. What I mean to say is this: that inasmuch as they have given this post office to a constituency represented by an opponent, I do not think they should have excluded the County of Northumberland, when I asked for a trivial matter of the addition of a small vote to improve a wharf. In the case of Orillia the Government have violated the rule, or at least the practice, which they have followed, and I think we ought to have some explanation why we have departed from the practice of giving favors only to constituencies represented by supporters and thus practically purchasing them.

Peterborough Custom House..... $10,000

Mr. LANDERKIN. There ought to be some explanation given of this item. If I am rightly informed this vote has a history. I would like to know upon which lot this custom house is to be built.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The other lot.

Mr. LANDERKIN. They bought two lots for a custom house and a post office. They bought one lot originally for the custom house and post office; they do not put the post office on that lot, and they do not put up the custom house at all. Now they are going to put up a custom house, and where is it going to be built?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The post office has been built on a lot on Hunter street, a street that leads to the village of Ashburnham. We thought that the post office would be better there, because it would serve both the town and the village. The other lot, as the hon. gentleman calls it, is near the city hall, or the market place. That lot is destined for a custom house and an inland revenue office. We think it is a proper place, being in the business part of the town, upon which the custom house and inland revenue office, and any other minor offices we may have in Peterborough, may be located.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Which one was purchased first?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think it is this lot.

Mr. BARRON. I wish the hon. gentleman would have the same difficulty in satisfying his friends about this transaction as he had in satisfying the gentlemen who came from the town of Peterborough insisting upon their particular lots being purchased. The hon. member for West Peterborough (Mr. Stevenson) above all others, should condemn this transaction. The House should know that as soon as it was known that the Government were going to build a post office in the town of Peterborough syndicates were formed composed entirely of supporters of the Government. Each syndicate determined that the Government should buy their respective lots and not buy the lots of their opponents. The members of the syndicate or their friends insisted that their respective lots should be purchased. The Government found such difficulty in satisfying their friends that they bought both lots, and now they make the excuse that it was necessary to have both a post office and a custom house. The House well knows that there is not in Ontario a town the size of Peterborough where the post office and custom house are not combined in one building. In Lindsay, a town not quite as large but rapidly growing, and it will exceed Peterborough in a very short time, the post office and custom house are in one building. The same is the case at Port Hope. I now ask the member for West Peterborough (Mr. Stevenson), whether this is not the case?

Mr. STEVENSON. I tell you it is not so.

Mr. BARRON. I challenge the hon. gentleman to deny the fact that there were syndicates formed. Does not the hon. gentleman know that?

Mr. STEVENSON. It is not true.

Mr. BARRON. Also that these syndicates owned two lots, and that each insisted on the Government buying their lot, and that the Government found themselves in such a difficulty that they had to buy both lots, and have now been obliged to go to the expense of putting up an enormous custom house, towards which a vote is asked of $10,000, as well as a post office. The member for West Peterborough (Mr. Stevenson) knows what I say is true.

Mr. STEVENSON. It is all humbug.

Mr. BARRON. Be candid, and you will say, speaking from the heart, that every word is true. The hon. gentleman knows the members of the syndicates as well as I do, and he knows that in order to get over the difficulty with respect to rival claims, the Government bought both lots and are putting up two large and extravagant buildings when one lot and one building would suffice; and all this is done for the purpose of satisfying their own supporters. The Government had not the courage to say to one of the syndicates that they would not buy their lot, but they purchased both lots and have now entered upon an enormous expenditure to put up two buildings. I ask the hon. member for West Peterborough to rise and say if what I state is not correct, that two syndicates were formed and two lots bought owing to the demands of the syndicate.

Mr. STEVENSON. The hon. gentleman expects this House to take everything he has said for granted, as he did the other night in regard to the timber question. There is not the shadow of truth in a great deal of what he has said. There never was a syndicate formed to my knowledge, and I know there never was. Four persons, two years before there ever was talk of a post office, bought the lot from the late Robert Nichols, and with that lot I have nothing to do, and I never was a party to the transaction and never had any interest in it.

Mr. BARRON. I never said you had.

Mr. STEVENSON. You said I was a party to it or had an interest in it. The other lot was sold by individuals; I never owned any part of it. I say more, that the Government bought the property at a very low price. Where they bought there was not room for a custom house, but it was convenient for a post office to supply two places, the town and a village with over 2,000 inhabitants. The sum of $60 per foot was paid for it, and to-day it is worth $120 or $140 a foot, or more than double. It is true we did not get a very good post office but only a cheap one, because we were to have a custom house as well. We are not getting as much spent on it in Peterborough as was spent in Lindsay, although that town is only half the size of Peterborough—it is not half the size, what is more it is not likely to become more. I distinctly contradict the statement that there have been syndicates formed to sell to the Government one inch of the land in Peterborough, nor have there been syndicates formed, and I am well aware of the facts with respect to the whole transaction. But more than four years ago the land was bought by four individuals, whose names I could mention, some of whom were supporters of the Government and some were not. They bought it to make money out of it. I think they sold the whole of it; they sold part to the Government and part to other parties. They sold part to the Government at $100 a foot, and they received from Mr. Cox $125 a foot immediately afterwards. The revenue paid by the post office of the port of Peterborough amounts to $15,000 a year and that at the custom house to $36,000 a year, and the hon. gentleman knows that Lindsay does not compare with it. The less the hon. gentleman says about this matter the better, for we could tell something about him.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Tell it.

Mr. STEVENSON. I do not want to be personal, but I could tell some things. There was not a word of truth in his statement in so far as the syndicates are concerned. This much of it is utterly untrue, and I am sorry the hon. gentleman ever mentioned it. Private parties bought the post office ground and sold it, and they sold it for less than they could obtain for the adjoining property. The other lot was sold for $60 a foot and to-day it is worth at least $120 a foot and it could not be bought at that figure. I am quite satisfied that it was long ago understood that we should have both a custom house and a post office, and the Government chose to erect two buildings instead of one.

Mr. BARRON. Out of the fulness of the heart the mouth speaketh, and I knew that my case would be proved very much by the hon. gentleman himself. He said that one lot was owned by four individuals, one of whom was Mr. Grasett.

Mr. STEVENSON. It was bought three years before.

Mr. BARRON. It was known that the Government contemplated building a post office. Then the hon. gentleman knows that there were four gentlemen who contemplated selling the lot to this Government.

Mr. STEVENSON. They never had the least notion of it.

Mr. BARRON. However, they bought it, and the hon. gentleman says for speculative purposes. I desire not to be understood as asserting that the hon. gentleman had any interest in selling these lots to the Government. I know very well that the hon. gentleman who could afford to give at Christmas, just before the election, 400 cords of wood to the people would have no necessity to go into such a speculation. But the hon. gentleman has said the other lot was owned also by a gentleman who wanted to sell it to the Government. I think he has made out my case. Each of those wanted to sell their lot to the Government, and between them they got wrangling over the matter, and the hon. gentleman himself now has admitted out of the fulness of his heart pretty much what I have said. I ask him if upon that lot for the post office there is not plenty of room for a custom house?

Mr. STEVENSON. No.

Mr. BARRON. I am bound to take the hon. gentleman's word, but I have seen the post office and the business is not sufficient to occupy the whole building.

Mr. STEVENSON. Well, it is all occupied.

Mr. BARRON. The Minister of Public Works may be sincere in making this excuse, but he has been misinformed. The post office is not so near Ashburnham as to make it a reason why it is to be put on that lot. The Minister of Public Works said it was necessary to put the custom house near the market; why, Sir, where the custom house is, is not a stone's throw from the market.

Mr. BOWELL. Oh.

Mr. BARRON. The Minister of Customs says "Oh." Has he been there?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; last winter.

Mr. BARRON. Then the Minister could not know as the custom house was not built. It is perfectly outrageous to think that the Government is wasting the money of the country in this way to please two rival claimants, the one a syndicate composed of one gentleman as the member for West Peterborough (Mr. Stevenson) said, and the other composed of four. The hon. gentleman cannot get up in his seat and say (without drawing a long bow at all events, if I may use that expression) that there was not great excitement in the town of Peterborough as to which of the two parties was to sell their lot to the Government, and the pressure was so strong upon the Government that they had to buy both lots to satisfy their supporters. I know whereof I speak, and the hon. gentleman has proved my case, to a certain extent, when he said that one of the syndicates was composed of four men, one of whom was Mr. Poussette.

Mr. STEVENSON. Your own brother-in-law.

Mr. BARRON. Yes, my own brother-in-law; and I mention him to show whereof I speak. I say it is an outrage that the money of the country should be expended in this way. I am sorry to see the member for West Peterborough (Mr. Stevenson) who is so well off, and so indifferent about the wasting of money—who can give cords of wood to the poor of Peterborough—I am sorry to see him get up in the House and justify this extravagant transaction.

Mr. MULOCK. Was it possible to have combined those two buildings having regard to the public convenience of the town of Peterborough.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No.

Mr. STEVENSON. There is not room for them.

Mr. MULOCK. Why has the rule been departed from in this case, was it to suit the convenience of the town of Peterborough or was it for the reasons advanced by the member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron)?

Mr. SOMERVILLE. We have not only to consider the first cost of the two buildings, but we have to remember that for all time to come they will require different staffs of caretakers and different systems of heating and lighting, which will make a great additional expense. I think the Government have made a great mistake in this, and I think they should have shown a little more manliness and refused to be duped by those Peterborough people. They should have been satisfied with buying only one lot and erecting both buildings upon it, and if they had done this it would have been a great saving to the public, not only in the erection of the buildings but in their cost and maintenance afterwards.

The Government has never experimented in this way in any other town, and it is evident from what the member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron) says that this was done in consequence of a disagreement among the syndicates with regard to the purchase of the lot, and that the Government found its way out of the difficulty by acceding to their request and purchasing both lots. The lot first purchased was that on which the custom house is to be erected now, and the lot I believe was large enough for both the custom house and the post office. The hon. member for West Peterborough (Mr. Stevenson) says that the lot was not large enough, but if that is so they should not have purchased it at all, because in the first place they intended to erect both custom house and post office on that lot. I cannot see how it is possible that, in a town of the size of Peterborough, it was found necessary to have separate buildings for the custom house and post office. The population is not so numerous and the extent of the corporation is not so great that there should be two public buildings there. There is no doubt in my mind, and there can be no doubt in the mind of anybody, that in this transaction the Government have perpetrated a job which cannot be justified.

Mr. STEVENSON. There is no job about it.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I think that this extravagance should not meet with the approbation of the people of Peterborough no more than that of the people of the country, because the people of Peterborough are as much interested as the people of the rest of the country in maintaining a system of economy in the public expenditure. This extravagance does not suit the people generally, although it may suit a few individuals who are the friends of the member for West Peterborough (Mr. Stevenson).

Mr. STEVENSON. There are no friends about it It is not the truth you are talking.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The sensible men of the town of Peterborough who desire to see this Government carried on in an economical manner will be opposed to this extravagant and unnecessary expenditure, which ought be condemned not only by the sensible men of Peterborough but by the sensible men of the whole country. The member for Victoria charged here that the member for West Peterborough had been gracious enough and philanthropic enough to present to the poor people of his town no less than 400 cords of wood, just prior to an election. I think it would be interesting to the members of this House to know whether the men who got those 400 cords of wood were voters, and whether the member for West Peterborough was exercising undue influence over those men by this gift?

Mr. STEVENSON. That statement is just as true as the statement made by the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Barron). All I can say is that it is not true. The hon. member for North Victoria is laughing at you, and if he can make you believe it it is all right.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not know anything about these philanthropic contributions which have been made by the member for West Peterborough. I did not hear the Minister state what has been the total cost of this post office with the land, or what is expected to be the total cost for the Peterborough custom house?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The contract for the post office was $18,000, and the land cost $6,000.

Mr. LANDERKIN. How much does it contain?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Sixty feet by 100, that is, for the post office. For the custom house the lot has cost $3,900, and the building is expected to cost about the same amount as the other.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The result is that $24,000 are required for the post office, and the hon. gentleman expects that he will require $22,000 for the custom house, in all, $46,000. What my hon. friends have stated, as the hon. gentleman knows, is perfectly correct, that in every case without exception, where the town is no larger than Peterborough, these buildings have been put together, and there is no doubt they could be put together there, and maintained at a cost of probably $25,000 or $30,000. It does look to me as if a very scandalous job had been perpetrated here for no reason under Heaven except to conciliate the two wings of the hon. gentleman's Peterborough supporters. Of course, we know that his position is such that he requires a good deal of nursing at the hands of the Government. I think his majority was the same as that of the hon. member for Kingston, so that there may be a fellow-feeling between them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I really forget what my majority was.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The majority of the hon. member for West Peterborough was 13, I am told.

Mr. STEVENSON. Twenty-three.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Ten more than that of the hon. member for Kingston. There is not much doubt that half the sum would have been sufficient but for these political exigencies.

Mr. STEVENSON. The hon. member has had small majorities as well as myself. In Centre Wellington he had not much more than I had. We need not complain very much, neither of us, in that respect; we both did our best.

Mr. LISTER. I have this to say, with regard to the building of post offices, that the system pursued by the Government is a gigantic system of bribery. I am not surprised that they should have treated the hon. member for West Peterborough (Mr. Stevenson) in the way they have done, in view of the fact that his election expenses cost $12,000. He said he "didn't care a d——, because Cox's cost him $13,000."

Mr. STEVENSON. I am sure the hon. gentleman never heard me say so. That is another story got up by the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Barron).

Mr. LISTER. The hon. gentleman does not deny it.

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes, I do deny it.

Mr. LISTER. The town of Peterborough has two public buildings, a post office and a custom house. There were two wings of the hon. gentleman's party who owned lots which they wanted to sell to the Government, and they sold them to the Government for about four times what they were worth. It was considered that those buildings should have been put on one lot; but one wing of the hon. gentleman's party kicked, and so the Government bought the other lot, and now they are putting up two buildings in that town. Two or three Sessions ago I obtained a return of the post offices and other public buildings erected by this Government, and I found that in small towns of 700, 800 or 900 inhabitants, yielding scarcely enough revenue to pay expenses, this Government had erected public buildings at a very great cost to the country, when the requirements of the particular communities did not demand them at all. The Minister of Finance has a little town of 500 or 600 in his constituency, where a post office was erected at a cost of $18,000 or $20,000. If the hon. Minister of Public Works had to pay the cost of these buildings out of his own pocket, he would not be so ready to construct them; but he draws his $8,000 or $9,000 a year, lives like a lord, and snaps his fingers at the hard-working people of the country who have to pay for them. In Walkerton, a small town of 2,500 or 3,000 inhabitants, a post office is to be erected. In the town of Strathroy, with only about 2,500 inhabitants, for the purpose of carrying the county, the Government promised to erect a post office, and the people there are now having a fight as to which corner of the town that post office ought to be in. But in large towns such as Woodstock, yielding a revenue of from $10,000 to $13,000 no public building is erected, because the place is represented by a Liberal. In the town of Sarnia, a place of 6,000 or 7,000 inhabitants, yielding a revenue to this country of $8,000 or $10,000 a year, there is no talk of building a post office—why? Because the intelligent electors of the county in which that town is situated have thought proper to send a Liberal here to oppose the Government. On no principle is this Government guided in the construction of post offices. Not by the revenues of the place, not by the size of the town, but simply to please their political supporters, and to make the constituencies sound, as far as they can do so by the expenditure of public money. The Minister of Agriculture was formerly Postmaster General, and in my town his brother-in-law is the owner of the building in which the post office has lately been removed, and the Government pay a rent of $300 to that very worthy gentleman, and so long as he lives and the Minister of Agriculture remains in the Government, I suppose that amount or more will continue to be paid to him. And thus it goes on, and the people's money is squandered. In the town of Cayuga, with only $700 or $800 of revenue, the Government erect a post office, at a cost of something like $20,000, for the purpose of making that constituency secure for the late member, Mr. Montague. We find the small villages throughout the country are demanding public buildings. There is no end to this system when once started. The towns first, then the villages, demand this expenditure, and political exigencies force the Government to yield to their demand. The sooner the Government lay down a hard and fast rule from which they will not depart, the better it will be for the country at large. This system is a cormorant growing every day; it is a cancer in the body politic, something like the systen of railway subsidies which, when started, cannot be stopped, and Heavens only knows where they are going to lead to. This system is destructive of the independence of the country, it encourages the people to put their hands into the public Treasury, and the sooner it is put a stop to the better it will be for the whole community. The day must come, sooner or later, when the Government will be condemned for this extravagant expenditure. If towns yielding large revenues are not to be entitled to public post offices and buildings, on what principle can you justify the expenditure in the small towns and villages on public buildings? We will find every village demanding a public post office, and then the mere hamlets, and the Government will have to yield to their demands.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I would like to say another word before this item passes. If the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) is in the House, I would like to draw his attention to what I am going to say. He goes in for the purification of the House and the prevention of placemen having seats in the House. If he is not here, perhaps the hon. the Minister of Public Works will send for him. I see the Government have rented, from Cox & Stevenson—I believe that is the firm to which the hon. member for West Peterborough belongs—a building for the Trent Navigation Company, and pay a rent of $80. I would like to draw the attention of the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) to this, for I am sure he would like to know it. I am sure he would like to see if it is true that a gentleman occupying a seat in this House can have a contract with this Government. Another little point in history in connection with this matter I would like to give, and thus spare the Minister of Public Works, who will be pleased to have this piece of history known, as it will probably close the discussion. It appears there was a lot bought in Peterborough, this very lot concerning which we are now legislating, for the purpose of building a custom house and a post office. That lot was bought and paid for, and the deed specified the purposes for which it was bought. There were four gentlemen who owned the other lot, known as the Sawers' lot, and they thought they would sell their lot to the Government also. They bought it, I believe, for speculative purposes, and they succeeded in selling it to the Government. The difficulty that arose was this: The four gentlemen were those who rode under the banner of the Minister of Customs, that is when he used to ride under that banner—when he used to uphold the flag. I wish the hon member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) were here, I would like to call his attention to this matter as it may aid him in his present crusade. These four gentlemen in this syndicate were of one party, the gentleman who owned the other lot was of another party. He was an Irishman, and his lot had been bought, but the building had not been put upon it, for it appears the policy at that time was based on the motto: "No Irish need apply." The followers of King William apparently were in the ascendant at that time, and they triumphed over the follower of King James, and so the post office was taken away from the lot bought for it, and placed on the other lot, no doubt mainly through the influence of the hon. the Minister of Customs. That was during the time when the Minister of Customs used to parade on the Protestant horse. He does not do that now. Since he got into the Cabinet he has put the horse in the stable, and some people think the horse starved to death. At all events he never takes it out now for a canter or a promenade on any occasion. It is necessary now to conciliate the other party, to blend the orange and green, and this beautiful net-work has been devised through the skill and ingenuity of the hon. member for Peterborough (Mr. Stevenson). The former member was not equal to the occasion, and he had to retire between those two factions. I do not know but that the hon. member for West Peterborough was behind the Minister on those occasions, and the consequence was the late member had to retire. The hon. gentleman set his wits to work to blend in harmony the orange and green in Peterborough, and what was the means he took? It was the expenditure of public money. The Government gave him $40,000 or $50,000 to build two buildings, where one would have done, and this was done for political purposes. The hon. Minister of Public Works knows that every word I have said is true, and will be obliged to me for giving him this explanation, because it spares him the disagreeable necessity of making the facts known to himself.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The hon. the Minister of Public Works must have made some mistake in the figures he gave. The Auditor General's Report shows that the first contract was $16,500. Last year we expended $18,139; less $840, which makes a total of $34,898, expended on the post office already, and there is a further grant in the estimates now under consideration for $1,900. This does not include the purchase of the lot at all; $6,000 was the price of the lot the post office was erected on. If the custom house is to cost an equal amount, we will find the expenses for public buildings in Peterborough will foot up to something over $80,000.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have not the figures here, but, when one of the hon. gentlemen opposite put a question to me, I thought I remembered that the amount for the building contract was $18,000. That was stated simply from memory. As to the purchase of the lot, I said I thought it was $6,000, and I think I was not far from the figure in that case. Then for the other lot, I stated the amount was $3,900. I did not expect that the question of the post office lot would be brought up, because this vote is for the custom house only.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The hon. gentleman will see that the amount for public buildings in Peterborough will be over $80,000.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; if the first building cost as much as the hon. gentleman says, the second will not be so expensive.

Mr. MULOCK. I would like to ask if it would not be convenient to have the post office adjoining the custom house. I thought probably the Minister of Public Works hesitated in replying to that question, when I put it before, because he had not the local knowledge, and, therefore, I think the member for West Peterborough (Mr. Stevenson) should furnish the Committee with that local information. You have now the post office a completed structure, and have not started building the custom house. Would it not be better to have them together? What is your opinion in regard to that?

Mr. STEVENSON. It was intended from the beginning that we should have two buildings. I was not in the House at the time, but I know two plans were submitted, one for the custom house and one for the post office, and the estimated cost for one building was $16,000 and for the other $20,000. Our neighboring town of Port Hope has a building, including the post office and custom house, which has cost over $46,000, although it has a much smaller population than we have. In Belleville, which is a town of about the same size as ours, the building cost a much larger sum. The place where the custom house is to be is much more suitable than it would be if it were placed near the post office, as it is in the neighborhood of the two railway stations. I admit that there was a great deal of fighting about the post office, but I had nothing to do with it; I took no part in it; I never signed a petition or asked the Minister to put that building in one place or the other.

Mr. LISTER. You saw the Minister about it.

Mr. STEVENSON. The building lot was purchased in the place where the post office is now, because the people said the original place selected would not do, that it was too far from the business part of the town. That is where it is now proposed to build the custom house. If the Government had built the post office, they would have had to put another office in Ashburnham, but now we will have only one post office for both places.

Mr. MULOCK. Does the hon. gentleman remember in what year the lot which is now to be used for the custom house was purchased, when it was intended to be used for the post office?

Mr. STEVENSON. I think it was in 1885.

Mr. MULOCK. It was bought then with the intention of being used for the post office, and the plan was afterwards changed?

Mr. STEVENSON. The people would not have it there.

Mr. MULOCK. Will the hon. gentleman tell us in what way the question was submitted to the people? Was it decided by a vote of the people?

Mr. STEVENSON. The people petitioned to have the post office in another place.

Mr. MULOCK. Does not the hon. gentleman think it would be in the interests of the people of Peterborough, irrespective of any complications which might arise from the fact of the Government having bought lots in different places, to have these two buildings adjoin one another?

Mr. STEVENSON. No.

Mr. MULOCK. If it had to be done over again, you would select these sites?

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes; I think I would.

Mr. MULOCK. I would ask the member for West Peterborough (Mr. Stevenson) whether the Government is under any special obligation at this time to erect this custom house in Peterborough; whether they have made any pledge or promise to that effect?

Mr. STEVENSON. When Mr. Hilliard was member, I understood that they agreed to build a custom house and post office, and that they bought the land for both buildings.

Mr. MULOCK. Then a promise was given to the people of Peterborough to erect a custom house there. I suppose that promise was given after the lot was bought. Now, we are getting at the true inwardness of this matter. We discover now how the Government are obliged to ask for this vote. A promise was made to the people of Peterborough, on the eve of the last general election, that they would erect a custom house. The hon. gentleman says that Mr. Hilliard was promised a custom house, and now we are called upon to enter into this expenditure in order to fulfil a promise which was made as a means of promoting a Dominion election. We have the admission made by the hon. member for West Peterborough (Mr. Stevenson) that Mr. Hilliard promised this custom house, having regard, of course, to the election which was shortly to take place, and the Minister of Public Works lent himself to this and made this pledge. I would like to know whether he really endorses this pledge of which the hon. gentleman speaks?

Mr. STEVENSON. I did not know anything of the Minister in the matter. It is Mr. Hilliard I am speaking of.

Mr. MULOCK. However, the Minister of Public Works is now asking for this vote of $10,000. Are there plans and specifications in his possession, and such other information as will enable him to tell us what will be the outside cost of this public work?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I suppose this building, when completed, will have cost $24,000.

Mr. MULOCK. Would the hon. gentleman say whether this is mere guesswork, or have there been plans prepared showing the character of the work?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The plans are never prepared before the vote is given by Parliament.

Mr. MULOCK. Here we vote $10,000, and the building may cost $40,000. That does not seem to me to be a businesslike way of proceeding. We should know before we commence to build what the cost is likely to be. We should also have some explanation of this statement made by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule). It appears that you are able to rent buildings in Peterborough for certain Government officers. That great public work that is going on now, the construction of the Trent Valley Canal, has an office there. While you are preparing these plans you might get a small corner in this great office for that purpose.

Mr. LISTER. Nobody can charge the hon. member for West Peterborough (Mr. Stevenson) with a desire to conceal any information he may possess, but there is one thing he did not tell us. He did tell us that he was brought in to decide between the positions. I understand from the discussion to-night that there was internal dissension as to where these public buildings should be, and in order to conciliate one part or the other, it was decided to put up two buildings instead of one. The hon. gentleman has told us that this was done under a promise made just before the election. He tells us that public opinion was consulted, and expressed itself by several petitions numerously signed by the residents of the town from which he comes. He also tells us that he did not sign either of those petitions. He wants the House to understand that the sites were selected purely on account of their suitableness for public buildings. I want to ask the hon. gentleman if he did not come to Ottawa and see the Government?

Mr. RYKERT. Don't answer him.

Mr. LISTER. Did he not use his influence for the purpose of having two buildings put up instead of one? Did he not see the members of the Government for the purpose of arranging this little trouble within the camp?

Mr. STEVENSON. I did not.

Mr. MULOCK. You had no correspondence with them?

Mr. STEVENSON. No, sir.

Public Buildings, Ottawa—addition to Supreme Court building $5,000

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. There is not sufficient accommodation at present for the judges and the members of the Bar and the library. It is proposed to make an extension of the building to the rear for the purpose of making rooms for the judges, and to turn the judges' rooms into a library. This sum will not be applicable for that purpose, which will cost about $10,000.

Toronto Examining Warehouse..... $35,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the probable cost of this building?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This property is composed of 5 different lots. The Dominion owns 3 lots. There are 2 other lots, for one of which we are paying a large rent on a lease which has now to be renewed, but the city of Toronto will not renew it unless we give a large additional rent. We require that lot. The next lot, which is vacant, the Government think they should secure for further extension. The only way to obtain the property is for the Government to have it expropriated, and, therefore, we have placed this sum in the Estimates. Excluding the present amount of $35,000, the total cost has been $357,935.

Mr. MULOCK. Do we receive any rentals? It was represented that if $50,000 were expended on the recommendation of the then Collector of Customs, Mr. Patton, merchants would store their goods there, and we would receive rentals, which would pay well for the investment.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have no doubt it is so, but I cannot give the hon. gentleman the information, as the Minister of Customs is not present.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). With respect to the amount of $4,000 for the custom house and post office at Walkerton, perhaps the hon. gentleman will state the population, postal and customs revenue and estimated cost of the building?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Walkerton is the county town of Bruce, and its population is placed at about 3,000. The judicial offices and registry offices are in the town, and there are also two banks. The post office revenue is $5,043. The cost of the lot will be $3,000 or $4,000, of the building about $12,000, and about $4,000 more for fittings.

Public Buildings, North-West Territories..... $87,100

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is proposed to be done with this large sum, and where are these buildings to be erected?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Buildings are to be erected at Regina, Maple Creek, Medicine Hat, Calgary, Fort McLeod, Lethbridge, Edmonton, Fort Saskatchewan, Battleford, Prince Albert, Batoche, Wood Mountain and certain outposts.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) On what principle does the Government contribute towards a hospital at Medicine Hat?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Territories have no revenue of their own and they have no hospital,

Public Buildings, British Columbia..... $37,250

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the Minister of Militia explain the character of the buildings proposed to be erected?

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). What did you appropriate for these buildings last year and how much of that has been expended? I think there was a balance unexpended.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I answered the hon. gentleman previously, and the Hansard will show what my answer was. I think the whole appropriation, as far as I can recollect, was expended. This is to complete. I think seven or eight, or nine thousand dollars have been expended, and the total cost will be about $30,000.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). You used to have an officer out there to look after things generally; have you got more than one now?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. We did not build the barracks just for one man.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) How many men are there in "C" Battery?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. 100 men and 6 officers.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). What is the Government going to do with the old penitentiary building at St. John, N.B.?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There has been an application made by the municipality for the building and the Government are considering it, but they have not yet come to any conclusion.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I do not think this vote of $400 is any more than sufficient to keep them in repairs, but I think the Government should accede to the application made to them, because the buildings are useless at present and an expense to the country.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We are considering the offer.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I have some little reason to complain of the Minister. He has not yet completed the new fence around the Dominion buildings in Charlottetown.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will have to see it myself.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I spoke to the architect about it and he said he would have the old fence removed. The building has been finished there for some time and the old fence is an eyesore and destroys the whole square there. It ought to be removed.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will attend to it.

Harbors and Rivers, Nova Scotia..... $38,600

Mr. JONES (Halifax). What is the vote of $1,500 for Cow Bay for?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is to repair damage done to the breakwater by a heavy gale on the 12th of February of this year.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I see there is a vote of $3,000 for a wharf and repairs at Somerville, which is in Queen's County. I see there are two items for that county. I suppose the Government thought it necessary, in the interest of the party, to spend this money now, after having refused it for a long time when that county was represented in the Liberal interest.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This Somerville is in Hants County.

Mr. LOVITT. I am pleased to see that the Minister has at last found out that the breakwater at Port Maitland requires repairing, and I am pleased to see a vote placed in the Estimates for that purpose.

Mr. KIRK. There does seem to be some hope for counties represented by Grits in this House at last, after eight or nine years. I recognise the fact that there is to be a small expenditure in the County of Yarmouth. I hope, as the Minister has at last recognised the wants of a county represented by a Liberal, that he will carry his good feelings a little further and see if there are not some needs farther east. I want to call the attention of the Minister to the fact that there are two harbors in Guysborough which have been reported upon by his own engineers, but that is all that has been done. They have reported on the subject of breakwaters for New Harbor and for Indian Harbor; yet the Minister can find no money for these works. We have a large number of vessels and a large number of people engaged in trading and fishing, and they require protection; but although the Government can find millions of money to throw away on railroads in counties represented by Ministers, they cannot spare a dollar to protect the poor fishermen of the country. I remember not many years ago, when instead of receiving $38,000 for breakwaters and river improvements in the Province of Nova Scotia, we received over $180,000 in order to facilitate the fishing industry in that Province. The County of Guysborough does not get one dollar for any purpose. Do not the people of that county pay taxes as well as the people of any other county? And have they not a right to a portion of this money? But they do not get it. I say it is dishonest and unfair for the Government to deny the just rights of that county and other counties represented by Liberals in this House. The Government had, previous to the last election, voted a sum of money and purchased a site in the town of Lunenburg for the purpose of erecting a public building. They discovered, however, very suddenly, I believe from the poll books, that there was no necessity for the building. It is unfair to treat counties represented by Liberals in this way. If the Government think they are going to coerce electors to vote for them to support such corruption as this they will find they are mistaken.

Mr. HICKEY. It is very difficult to satisfy some hon. gentlemen. They find fault with the Government for voting money in counties where they have supporters, and call that corruption, and now they say the Government are very corrupt when they will not stretch their conscience by trying to corrupt counties which return Opposition members.

Mr. KIRK. The Government placed a sum in the Estimates for the purpose of corrupting the counties and then withheld the expenditure for the same purpose. The Estimates are bristling from end to end with sums of money placed there for the purpose of corrupting the electors.

Grosses Coques Breakwater..... $8,000

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It appears to me the Government are taking great care of the county of Digby. I do not object to it, but I am led to understand that this pier at Grosses Coques is at a place where there is no commerce whatever. There was some shipbuilding, but that has ceased and no vessels frequent the place at all. There are five harbors in the counties of Digby provided for. I do not say that the improvements are not necessary, but the Government took a number of years to recognise that fact, and I would remind the hon. Minister that if he builds all those wharves, when the elections come on he will have no occasion for expenditure in those places.

Mr. JONES (Digby). I am glad the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) takes such an interest in the county of Digby, but as regards Grosses Coques he is entirely mistaken. It was owing to the neglect of the old member for the county of Digby that the wharf there was going to pieces, and that the people sent a memorandum to the Government asking for this expenditure.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I will not say that the hon. member is not correct in that, but it is natural that I should take some interest in the County of Digby, as it is my native county, and, when the hon. gentleman makes the statement that the hon. member who represented Digby in this House for a number of years neglected these matters, he makes a statement which he cannot substantiate, and he should be careful before he makes such a statement. If he looks at the records of the department, he will find that recommendations were made every year by his predecessor for these public works, and they were invariably disregarded because that hon. member was not en rapport with the Government of the day.

Mr. JONES (Digby). I can substantiate every statement which I have made, and I say that the hon. member who represented the County of Digby for so many years entirely neglected that county, both when he was a member of the Opposition and when he was a Minister of the Crown.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I am willing to believe that the hon. gentleman has been informed to that effect before he would make such a rash, such an unauthorised, and such an untruthful statement in this House; but, if he would apply to the Minister of Public Works, I have no doubt that he would be furnished with the applications and recommendations made by his predecessor for all these public works during all the time he represented that county in this House.

West Jordan Bay—Dredging..... $1,200

Mr. KIRK. What is the reason for voting special sums for dredging in different harbors when we have already voted a general sum for dredging?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The amount voted for dredging is too small to employ the dredges all the time, and in order to supplement that, if we want the dredges to do the work which is required, we must have these special votes. Therefore, we state which of these works require dredging. If we have to take out of the small vote of $15,000 or $20,000 for dredging, $1,000 or $1,200 for three places, we could not work these dredges for the season.

Mr. KIRK. Then I should like to ask how it is that the Minister overlooks the application which has been made to him for the use of the dredge at Sherbrooke? Will the Minister ever get over the narrow principle of confining the vote to counties which are represented by supporters of the Government? There are items in these Estimate for places in Shelburne, but there is none for the county of Guysborough.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I think there is a good deal in what the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Kirk) says. There is a general item for dredging in the Province of Nova Scotia, and it appears singular that the hon. gentleman takes these places out of the general category. I am not objecting to this item, but I think the general vote should cover all.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We cannot do it out of that.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I think the hon. gentleman should rather enlarge the general amount.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I thought that, when I could state where the dredging could be made, it would be more agreeable to the House to state it. Of course, if the House prefers, we will put $10,000 more for general dredging.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). If the hon. gentleman would give a statement of all the dredging work to be done during the season, it would be all right, but I object to his taking both methods. When the general vote was under discussion, he said that he could not state where the dredging was going to be done this summer, but he has arrived at a decision to do some dredging in a county represented by one of his brother Ministers. That may be all right but, if he can do that in regard to the county of Antigonish, he ought to be able to do so in regard to other counties.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is necessary to have a general amount for the working of the dredges. Take, for instance, the harbor of Kincardine or the harbor of Goderich, two of the large harbors on the lakes, where a large bar may be formed in the spring and where we have to send a large dredge, or perhaps two, to open the entrance, because otherwise the harbor would be closed altogether. It is necessary, therefore, to have the general vote, because, in those cases, we cannot tell what will be required. But, where the amount of expenditure is foreseen, we have considered it better to specify it.

Mr. KIRK. Perhaps the Minister can now decide whether he can send the dredge to St. Mary's River at Sherbrooke which is not far from Big Tracadie.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will see whether this work can be done.

Western Head..... $5,000

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The chief engineer says this is required for extending the breakwater, the outer end of which has been carried away during a storm. This work has been constructed for the purpose of facilitating the landing of the numerous fishing boats owned in the locality.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Is this work being done by contract?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Sometimes we do not give contracts. Sometimes we have to remove portions of the work that are rotten or damaged, and the rest may be sound, or it may not. We cannot tell before beginning the work what it will be, or what is the amount of damage done. In such cases it costs less to do it by days' work, but generally we do it by contract.

Port George—heavy repairs to pier..... $5,000

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is in Annapolis, on the Bay of Fundy. The engineer reports this work to be necessary in order to place this pier in a thorough state of repair. Up to the first of January last the total amount expended was $8,076. We will require probably $3,000 more to complete.

Harbors and Rivers—Prince Edward Island..... $3,000

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) This is a pitiable sum for Prince Edward Island. After the conversation that we had in the earlier part of the Session, and the petitions that were forwarded from Mount Stewart, and the discussion that took place in reference to the necessity of the construction of that wharf, I thought the Minister would put a sum in the Estimates for that purpose. A very small sum would have done. I do think that the Mount Stewart wharf would not cost over $1,500. It is a work of great public necessity, and there has been an immense amount of trouble about that wharf. Within a few miles of that place there are five or six hundred people who are concerned, and are praying that something may be done to get a wharf built. I offered myself to subscribe towards the construction of one. The Local Government will not build it, and we have petitioned to this Government to build it, and really I think they should have put in a small sum. It is too bad. My hon. friend from King's (Mr. Robertson) attended one of the largest public meetings that has been held in that section of the country for many years, and he says the whole country for 20 miles around is clamoring for this wharf to enable them to ship their produce. The hon gentleman had all the facts presented to his department six or eight weeks ago, and we pressed it as hard as we could from this side of the House. The people suffer untold inconvenience.

Mr. HICKEY. Why do they not build a wharf?

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I) Wharves are built by the Government for the people in all other parts of the Dominion. I thought once, as the hon. gentlemen opposite profess to think, that the Government ought not to construct wharves up the rivers, but I found I was wrong. I wrote a letter to that public meeting saying that I did not think that the Dominion ever voted money for the construction of wharves 20 miles from the sea. I found I was wrong, I found the harbor of Three Rivers in Quebec, and I found in New Brunswick and in Nova Scotia a number of places where the Government built wharves. In this case a great many farmers are deeply concerned. How are they going to ship their produce in the fall? They cannot ship it from Mount Stewart bridge, and unless the wharf is built I do not see how they are going to get their produce away. Vessels cannot get near the bridge, and I do not know what the farmers are going to do. It is a matter of $2,000 at the outside.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I happen to know something about this. Our vessels from Nova Scotia, in the autumn, when the fishing trips are over, all go to Prince Edward Island to carry away the produce. There is a general rush late in the season, and the ports being closed early, if the vessels do not get away at the proper time, the produce remains over. I have to do with these vessels, and I know we experience the greatest difficulty in getting them to go to this place on account of the want of wharf accommodation. This very place mentioned by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) has frequently come to my notice. Vessels going there to load have in some cases been obliged to leave without doing so. The farmers along that river want to get rid of their potatoes in the autumn, and if they do not get vessels to take them away, they remain over and can be shipped only after navigation is opened in the spring. If they can get them away in the autumn to the States or to the other Provinces, they are of some value, but if they remain over till spring, they decay and become of much less value. The farmers cannot get them away unless they can get vessels to take them, and the vessels will not go there unless there are wharves where they can load.

Mr. ROBERTSON. When I attended this meeting this last winter I was informed that one of the vessels that came there was damaged from the manner in which she had to load, and some vessels had to leave the port for want of accommodation. The Dominion could obtain a good revenue from a wharf erected there, and in fact it would pay high interest on the investment. From the wharf at my village there is a revenue of $250 to $300, and the total amount expended did not exceed $2,000 or $3,000, and if a wharf were built at Mount Stewart it would also pay a large interest on the investment.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The village contains 1,000 people. and the surrounding country is fully settled by farmers, There is only a shipping season of from four to six weeks during which schooners come there from Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. This work would cost about $1,500, and I hope the Minister will consider the advisability of having it executed.

Harbors and Rivers, New Brunswick..... $17,500

Mr. ELLIS. Has any new contract been given out in connection with the Campbellton wharf?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think a contract was given to a firm in Ottawa, which sent in the lowest tender.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Perhaps the hon. gentleman will furnish the names of the tenderers and the amount?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have taken a note of it.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Where is the wharf at Kingston to be built?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The amount asked is to be applied towards the construction of a wharf at Kingston, above the bridge and over the Richibucto River. It will answer both damming purposes and assist vessels in passing through the draw-opening of the bridge. The whole cost will be $7,000, towards which $4,000 is now asked.

Mr WELDON (St. John). I should like to know how many vessels ever passed that draw. I never heard of a vessel going up there at all. The town of Kingston is below the bridge, and I cannot understand the object of expending $7,000 above the bridge. Who were the parties making the application?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The municipal council applied for the construction of this wharf.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Vessels never go up there. I know that vessels built up there came down passing through the draw, but I never heard of any going up the river except small schooners carrying rigging for the vessels built there. At that time there was quite a good shipbuilding yard some distance above the bridge, and it was the only place in New Brunswick where ships were built under sheds. It has, however, entirely disappeared. So far as I know that country, I must say that it appears to me to be a perfect waste of money, because the business stops at Kingston. Vessels used to go up there in former times carrying rigging and material for the ships that were built there, but no ships are built there now and it is simply a farming country above Kingston.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Is this breakwater at Shippegan, for which $10,000 is asked, near the end of the Caraquette Railway?

Mr. FOSTER. It is north of that.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). When the men of the channel Islands came there to fish there was a good business done, but there is hardly sufficient business done there now to justify this expenditure. Will this be the whole cost?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think when it is completed that it will cost $20,000.

Mr. ELLIS. The total shipping in the port of Shippegan last year was five vessels of 560 tons with crews of 30 men. The total duty collected was $622, and the goods entered were valued at $4,262. This work may be necessary, but it seems to be a most extraordinary expenditure in connection with a port of that kind.

Mr. FOSTER. This expenditure is not so much for the port. My hon. friend, if he understands the geography of the country, knows that just north of this port are the islands, and the object of this breakwater is to improve the passage between the mainland and the first island which cannot be made now by vessels, and at the present time vessels going to Caraquette have to go 35 miles around. It will be of utility not only to commercial vessels, but to the large fleets of shipping vessels which can make this passage when the work is completed.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Does the hon. Minister think that considering the shifting sands on that coast the breakwater will have any effect at all?

Mr. FOSTER. Part of it has been built already, and so far as it has been built it has had a very good effect. The engineer believes that when the breakwater is completed it will have the effect of deepening the passage.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). With reference to this vote of $1,000 for Lincoln wharf, do I understand the Government will apply the principle of repairing the wharves on the River St. John? If so I am very glad to hear it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is one of them at all events.

Harbors and Rivers, Quebec..... ..... $103,600

Mr. JONES (Halifax). A vote of $10,000 has already been asked for Lévis Graving Dock, and the $4,000 voted here makes $14 000 in all. Seeing that we received only $2,000 from that dock last year, I am afraid it is not likely to be a very profitable investment.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Perhaps not, if it remains at that point. But I think the hon. gentleman will not complain if the revenue was only $2,000 this year, because it shows that there were not many accidents to vessels, and very few repairs to be made. I think he must have seen by the return I brought down the other day that during the previous season the revenues of the dock were $21,000. It may be that, this year, the misfortunes of mariners may be the good fortune of the dock. Nevertheless, we must make these repairs and improvements if they are required.

Mr. LANGELIER (Montmorency). (Translation.) I am happy to see that the Minister of Public Works has granted a sum of $6,000 to make urgent repairs to the wharf at St. Laurent, Island of Orleans, but I think that there will be more than that to do on it. It is necessary that the wharf should be lengthened. At certain time of the year, during the season of navigation, especially at l w water, it is almost impossible for the steamboat which keeps up the connection between Berthier and Quebec to come alongside this wharf. At the beginning of the Session I had occasion to make some representations to the Minister on this subject. With the prudence which characterises him, he told me that he would send his engineer to examine the locality, and I see with pleasure that this engineer has made a favorable report to him. There is also the wharf at St. François, on the Island of Orleans, which was begun some years past, and if this is not speedily completed it may happen that the water will carry it away. On the other side of the Island of Orleans there is another wharf at Ste. Famille; at this place also a line of steamboats touches every day and it is of consequence that this wharf should be completed. A terrible accident happened here some years back, and a great number of persons lost their lives at this place. I trust that the hon. Minister will do his best to finish these works. I know that it is too late this year, but I hope that next year he will place in the Estimates a sum sufficient for the purpose.

Mr. LAURIER. (Translation.) What is there to be done at St. Timothy?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) That will enable the farmers to receive and send away their products.

Mr. LAURIER. (Translation.) Are they wharves?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) Yes; little wharves. The item of $7,500 for Grand River is for a work for which I wished to ask money from Parliament last year. The present sum will not be enough to complete the whole of the work. A breakwater must be built to provide a refuge for the fishing vessels. Every year there is a loss of life at this place; I think that three persons were drowned there last year.

Harbors and Rivers, Ontario..... ..... $59,786 58

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The vote of $10,000 for Thessalon Harbor, in Manitoulin, is to provide for repairs required for the wharf, and for the extension of the same for a distance of 150 feet with a depth of 22 feet of water, in order to afford shelter to vessels from south-westerly storms, and landing facilities for the largest class of vessels.

Mr. PLATT. I wish to ask the hon. Minister, with regard to the general vote for dredging in Ontario, whether we are to expect that dredging shall be done only at such places as he mentioned in the early part of the evening, or whether any portion of that $45,000 may be apportioned to smaller harbors?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. During the recess, as soon as I have time, I will examine all the applications and all the reports of the engineers, and then I shall see what amount is required for each, and what we can do with the money that has been placed at our disposal for that purpose. Of course, I always go to the most pressing works, for example, the harbor of Goderich.

Mr. PLATT. The Estimates do not preclude us from hoping that something will be done, and that the engineer will visit that harbor at any early day?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I promise the engineer will visit it at an early day.

Rondeau Harbor works—to pay F. B. McNamee & Co, contractors, in full settlement of their claims $1,286 58

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. McNamee & Co. had the contract. They delayed their work, having their plants elsewhere, and my department was not satisfied with the delay, so we took the work in our own hands and finished it. This balance remained to the credit of McNamee & Co. on their contract.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is there any other work being done now?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; some repairs at the entrance of the harbor.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I want to ask the hon. the Minister about the bar at the mouth of the River Thames. I understand a contract was let for the removal of the bar.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Orders were given to attend to that work.

Mr. CAMPBELL. There is another stream close by, Little Bear Creek, which has frequently been brought to the attention of the hon. gentleman, and which he promised to look after as soon as the dredge has done removing the bar from the mouth of the River Thames which is only a few miles from Little Bear Creek. The dredge might be allowed to go in and clean out that creek, as that work is important on account of the numerous settlements and the square timber and logs piled up along the banks. It never can be done at a more convenient time than this summer.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot make the promise. We have had the experience of another creek where we dredged, and the result was that damages were claimed afterwards by parties along the banks.

Mr. CAMPBELL. This is a different thing.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. "Chat échaudé craint l'eau froide." I am afraid I cannot promise. The hon. gentleman has said that there is a great deal of timber and things of that kind on the shore, and after dredging that little creek, the people on the shore will say that there were land slides and that their timber is gone or their warehouses injured, and they will claim damages. I do not say that I will not do it, but I cannot give any promise.

Mr. CAMPBELL. This Little Bear Creek was dredged about three years ago and made a navigable stream. It runs right through the county, and there are no warehouses or buildings along the line of the creek at all. The stream was made navigable, but on account of the earth not being thrown far enough on the bank, a great deal has slipped back and formed shoals, so that at certain points vessels cannot pass.

Roads and Bridges—Bridge over the Belly River at Lethbridge, N.W.T., re-vote.....$3,000

Mr. WATSON. I had expected that in the Supplementary Estimates we would have a vote for building two bridges over the Upper Assiniboine River. I do not know whether another Supplementary Estimates are to be brought down. Will the hon. the Minister inform me if there will be any more?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, I think.

Mr. WATSON. I hope the hon. gentleman will see fit to consider the petitions for these bridges favorably. The hon. the Minister of the Interior, who represents an East Assiniboian constituency, is probably more interested in the bridges than I am, as they are intended to allow the settlers in the northern portions of his district to reach the place where they do their trading this side of the Assiniboine River. The river is almost on the boundary line between Manitoba and the North-West Territories, and consequently the bridge should be built by the Dominion Government.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman is no doubt right about these bridges, but I must say that though I wished to submit these works to my colleagues for their approval, I could hardly do so as I had not the data I require for works of that kind. There is nothing more difficult than making an estimate for a work at that distance without knowing exactly what the bottom of the river is, whether it is clay or boulders or sand, and then it is necessary to examine what the difference of level is when the freshets take place. In order to have a bridge which will remain, we need that information, and I cannot receive that simply from a letter sent to me by some friends who where kind enough to send me that information; but I cannot go to my colleagues with that, and recommend that a work of this kind should be undertaken without having the information from my engineer.

Mr. WATSON. Surely the hon. gentleman is mistaken, or has not been properly informed by his engineer, because plans have been submitted made by persons on the ground, as to the depth of water, the approaches, the height of the water at high water and at low water, and the soil, and surely the Minister has sufficient information before him to come to a decision. I state for his information—and I suppose the Minister of the Interior has some knowledge in regard to this—that these two bridges can be constructed for $6,000. I speak especially in regard to the north bridge, because there are many settlers there who have now to go three times the distance they would have if the Government would vote $3,000 for the construction of a bridge.

Telegraph Land Line on North Shore of St. Lawrence—extension to Pointe aux Esquimaux, to complete.....$5,000

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Will the Minister explain that?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is a continuation of our telegraph system on the north coast. This will bring us as far as the Pointe aux Esquimaux. Then we will have probably a cable to go to Anticosti and connect with the land lines there. Thus we will reach the east point of Anticosti, and there most likely we will have to put a cable to Belle Isle, where the new cable from England to America will come. If that takes place, then our lines on the north coast will be a paying concern, but, until then, we will have only the local traffic.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I think the Minister is expecting a traffic over that line which he will not receive, because all the communications by these cables will go to their own destination and not over the lines which may be built by the Government of Canada. The Government proposes a scheme which will involve a great expenditure without any return.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is not done yet, and will not be done this year.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The cables from the other side will go to their own destination and will not be sent in such a way as to accommodate the Government of Canada. It appears to me that the Government should hesitate before undertaking a work of this magnitude. The extension to the Pointe aux Esquimaux on the Labrador coast may be justifiable, but I cannot see why. I do not know for what purpose it can be used.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The result of the extension of the line on the north coast, as far as the people living there are concerned, is that by that means we have been able to save lives, when wrecks have taken place, because the people have been able to telegraph and get vessels to go to the relief of the wrecks and to take provisions. In regard to fishing purposes, also, they are able to obtain information which they could not otherwise receive. There are people on the coast who have no other communication with the world except what they can obtain in this way, and they are often short of provisions. In addition to that, this Pointe aux Esquimaux is a station in accordance with the plan originally adopted. There will probably be three or four small cables required, but this will save a great deal of expense in achieving the desire which we have to cross to Anticosti. In any case, we must go to Anticosti, where our land lines are. We need not go further unless the cable comes from Great Britain to Belle Isle, and then we may connect with it from the Island.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I think this is a work of very doubtful utility, and I think the explanation of the Minister would satisfy the country that, if the people to whom he refers require this in order to get food, they are a class of people who would not avail themselves of this telegraph line in a commercial way or contribute to its value.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There are a number of fishing establishments there.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). For a very short time. That is a very poor district indeed, and is growing worse every year. If a shipwrecked crew could not be cared for by the people on the coast, that would show that they must be in such a condition that they could not be very useful to this telegraphic communication.

To provide for steam communication between St. John, Digby and Annapolis.....$2,500

Mr. KIRK. I notice that in the main estimates the vote for steam service between Port Mulgrave and Port Hood, on the north, and Port Mulgrave, Arichat, Cape Canso and Guysborough on the south, was reduced from $5,000 to $4,000. Is that service to be continued with that lesser grant?

Mr. FOSTER. The service is to be continued as usual.

For steam communication between New Westminster and Victoria.....$7,500

Mr. GORDON. I would like to ask the Minister if it is the intention of the Government to contract for a mail service direct from Vancouver to Nanaimo. The Board of Trade of Vancouver, the City Council of Vancouver, and the City Council of Nanaimo, have memorialised the Government for that service. At the present time our mail travels 155 miles vid Victoria, involving 24 hours delay in the delivery of our mails, whereas the distance direct across is only 32 miles. Heretofore one of the difficulties has been that no direct steamers were plying between these two ports, but at the present time there is a direct steamer plying three times a week, and the people are willing to accept a tri-weekly service rather than have their mails go vid Victoria, until a daily service can be established. I cannot too strongly urge the importance of this service upon the Government. I would also ask the Government to increase the service to twice a week, that the people of Comox have petitioned for. Large collieries are being developed in that district, the population is increasing, and there is general prgoress, so that they are entitled to a semi-weekly service. Up to the present time there has been only one steamer plying; at the present, however, there is a steamer running regularly twice a week, and I think the Government ought to forward the mails twice a week to that important district.

Mr. FOSTER. It was proposed that the service between New Westminster and Victoria should follow the rule of the other services and be paid by the Postmaster General for the mails that were carried, as provided in the Bill we passed a short time ago. But in looking into it I found that there was a contract running for a little time yet, that contract has to be carried out. It is quite true, as my hon. friend says, that there is a more direct route from Vancouver to Nanaimo. I will call the attention of the Postmaster General to that matter, in order that he may make provision in his Bill to send the mails as proposed.

Resolutions reported.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 2 a.m. (Thursday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 25th April, 1889.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FISHING LICENSES—RIVER NATASHQUAN.

Mr. FISET (translation), asked, whether the Government have issued or intend to issue licenses for fishing with the net in the River Natashquan? If so, to whom, how many, and to what distance from the mouth of the river?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) I must ask the hon. member to have the kindness to postpone this question as well as the succeeding one, inasmuch as my colleague, the Minister of Marine, will not be here to-day, being indisposed.

DISPOSITION OF SCOTT ACT FINES.

Mr. BARRON asked, What disposition (if any) does the Government intend to make of the moneys collected by way of fines under the Canada Temperance Act, and lying unexpended in the treasury of those counties wherein the said Act has been repealed? Has the attention of the Government been called to the justice of returning to the municipalities in each county the fines so collected from within such municipalities, and now no longer needed for the enforcement of the Act, by reason of the repeal thereof in such counties?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. These fines, in so far as the Government has any disposal of them, have fully been disposed of by the Order in Council of the 15th November, 1886, and the Government is advised that it has no further control. They have been given to the municipalities for the purposes of the Act.

SCUGOG RIVER.

Mr. BARRON asked, Does the Government of Canada exercise jurisdiction over the waters of the Scugog River, within the town of Lindsay, as far up the stream as the Lindsay lock, or are such waters within the jurisdiction of the Government of the Province of Ontario?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. As to any particular Acts indicating the jurisdiction, I am not in a position to give an answer unless the hon. gentleman will give some information as to when the Acts have taken place. As to the legal question, there is a difference of opinion. It has been referred to my department, but an opportunity has not yet been found to examine the question.

OLD SETTLERS' CLAIMS IN MANITOBA.

Mr. LARIVIERE asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to appoint a Commission to investigate the old settlers' claims in Manitoba, as requested by the old settlers' committee?

Mr. DEWDNEY. A deputation waited on me a few days ago in reference to this matter, and I promised to take the matter into consideration. It is still under consideration.

POSTAL SERVICE—RED RIVER.

Mr. LARIVIERE (translation) asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to increase the postal service through the parishes and settlements along the Red River, by forwarding the mail daily by rail in lieu of the present mode of conveyance?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, in the absence of my colleague, the Postmaster General, I may state to the hon. gentleman that there is already a postal service carried out by one of the railways, and that the Postmaster General is, however, considering the matter. He will be glad to confer with the hon. gentleman if he is willing to call at his department at any time.

IMPORTATION OF ILLUMINATING OILS IN MANITOBA.

Mr. LARIVIÈRE asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government, as requested by a petition of the merchants of Winnipeg, dealing in illuminating oils, addressed to the hon. the Minister of Inland Revenue, to allow them to import such oils in iron tanks to be retailed from the same; and also to allow such oils to be measured at time of delivery to importers of the same?

Mr. BOWELL. That subject is now under the consideration of the Department of Inland Revenue.

LEONCE STEIN OF QUEBEC.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth) (for Mr. BARRON) asked, Is Leonce Stein, of the city of Quebec, in the employ of the Government? If so, in what capacity; since when; and what is his salary?

Mr. AMYOT. Is the hon. gentleman authorised to ask that question?

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). Yes.

Mr. AMYOT. Did Mr. Barron ask you to put the question?

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). I was asked by Mr. Barron to ask the question.

Mr. CARLING. Leonce Stein is the chief clerk in the Immigration Agency in Quebec. He was appointed by Order in Council on the 8th June, 1877. His present salary is $1,000 per annum.

LIGHTS AND BUOYS IN LAKE ST. LOUIS.

Mr. MITCHELL. Before going into the Orders of the Day, I have been requested by a leading forwarder of Montreal to read the following telegram:

"Kindly ask why lights and buoys are not placed in Lake St. Louis. Department will not answer me."

Perhaps the department will give some explanation of this.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Unfortunately, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries is laid up with an attack of neuralgia, but if the hon. gentleman will send me the telegram, I will send it to the department.

ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE—COMMANDANT'S RESIDENCE.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The Minister of Militia, in reply to a question of mine, yesterday, promised to inform me under what particular vote a payment was to be made for the purchase of a house for the Commandant of the College in Kingston. I believe he has the information now. Will he be kind enough to state it?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. The amount required for the payment for a house purchased for the residence of the Commandant of the Royal Military College is charged to the vote for the Royal Military College for the year 1888-89.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not want, of course, to precipitate a discussion, but I would remind the First Minister that a sum of that kind can with no propriety be charged to the vote which was taken, without any statement whatever to the House that such a purpose was intended. This is the purchase of a house in Kingston for the commandant. It was purchased, I understand, from a question addressed to the Minister, within a very few months, and instead of an item being brought down in the Estimates for it, my hon. friend informs me that it was to be paid for out of an unexpended balance. It appears to me that that is entirely contrary to all sound practice, and that a distinct vote in the Estimates ought to be brought down for such a purpose above all other purposes. There is no sort of justification, I think, for applying an unexpended balance to a purpose of that sort.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As I understand it, my colleague, the Minister of Militia, discussed that point with the Auditor General, and the Auditor General said that was the proper way of doing it. I quite agree with the statement of the hon. member opposite that, in a matter of that kind, the House should be fully informed. My hon. friend might have stated, in some discussion relating to militia expenditure, that this sum was going to be appropriated out of that vote for the purpose of furnishing the commandant's house.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. It is a matter of public importance, and I think, under all the circumstances, it would be better to have a distinct vote brought down for it. The First Minister will see that it will be a most dangerous and a most mischievous precedent, the Auditor General to the contrary notwithstanding. I have great respect for Mr. McDougall's opinion on matters of detail, but on a point like that I must say that I differ entirely from him. I think a distinct vote ought to be brought down.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I would like to draw the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that I took the House into my confidence, and upon an answer to a question put to me across the House, I stated that the house had been purchased, and I gave the details of the purchase, and the amount of money paid. It may be that the amount should have been placed in the Estimates. My justification is, as I explained to the hon. gentleman, that we considered that it should be charged to an unexpended balance for 1888.

Mr. LAURIER. The question is not viewed, I think, in its proper light. The First Minister stated, in answer to my hon. friend, that the Auditor General found this to come within the statute. It is quite possible that the statute is wide enought to cover the appropriation, but there is the question of propriety apart. Though the sum may be legally appropriated, still the question is this—and this is the point raised—that it is not proper that this appropriation should take place, when no mention of it was made to the House. The voting of the money may be legal, but is it proper? That is the point that is made.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is to say, that the great point is to inform the House of the appropriation. My hon. friend did inform the House, in answer to the question, of the purchase. I quite agree with the statement of the hon. gentleman opposite, that it would be well that such an expenditure were put specifically in the Estimates.

Mr. LAURIER. It is a wide stretch of discretion.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What does the hon. gentleman propose to do? I think that an item like that ought to be specifically brought down.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If the hon. gentleman opposite will not be very punctilious about the notice, my hon. friend will bring it down.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We will make no difficulty about the notice.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved:

That when this House adjourns on Friday, it stand adjourned until Saturday at three o'clock, and that Government orders have precedence.

Motion agreed to.

PRIVILEGE—STEAMSHIP SUBSIDIES.

Mr. AMYOT. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to say a few words on a matter of privilege. In the course of the few remarks I offered to this honorable House, on the 22nd inst., I asserted that one of the grounds of objections of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) to the subsidy of a new line of steamships between Canada and England, was that, by the Government resolution, the steamers would be bound to call to a French port. I had so understood the speech of the hon. gentleman as far as I could hear it from my seat. The hon. leader of the Opposition, in answer, has intimated to me, on the floor of this House, that he had not so construed the speech of the hon. member for Halifax. I have since verified his remarks by reference to the advanced sheet of the Hansard, and I find out that, in fact, I had misconstrued the words of my hon. friend. As reported in the Hansard, what he said was:

"But if the Government seek only to have a mail line, and the steamers have to go to a French port, its usefulness will be so impaired that there will not be sufficient travel from either side to support it."

So he was complaining that the line subsidised was only intended as a mail line, which, according to him, was insufficient. He would have preferred, as he says in another part of his speech, a service "with a larger carrying capacity," so as to enable the ships to carry more freight. I believe it my duty to make this correction to my remarks of the 22nd instant, and to acknowledge that the hon. gentleman has in no way objected to Canadian steamers having connection with French ports. The hon. member for Halifax is the last man in this House whom I would treat harshly or unfairly; his constant and kind courtesy, his high personal character, and his devotedness to all parts of the Dominion entitle him to the very contrary. I am sorry such incidents occur. They are due to the vicious acoustic properties of this House. From the seat which we occupy, we can hardly hear what is said at six paces from us. The construction of the room is bad. An oval chamber should be made, and should do away with those columns behind which the voice goes not to return. I hope the hon. Minister of Public Works, during the recess, will remedy that most annoying state of things. It becomes very tedious when we have to sit for long hours, hearing a noise, but not being able to hear distinctly one-fourth of what is said.

I.C.R.—SUMMER RATES.

Mr. LAURIER. I called the attention of the First Minister the other day to the fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk had adopted summer rates to the Maritime Provinces. I suggested the propriety of similar rates being adopted by the Intercolonial Railway. The right hon. gentleman was kind enough to say that he would have the matter investigated. Can he give me an answer as to the position of the matter now?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Summer rates have been adopted by the Intercolonial Railway. I received, as perhaps the hon gentleman knows, a communication from the Board of Trade of Quebec on the subject. I answered the board at once, and they thanked me for the prompt manner in which the arrangement had been made.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved second reading of resolutions respecting subsidies to certain railways therein mentioned.

Mr. LAURIER. I have just one observation to offer with respect to these resolutions, and it is in regard to the resolution respecting the Baie des Chaleurs Railway. That railway was granted a subsidy of $620,000, to be distributed as follows: $300,000 to be paid upon the completion of the first 20 miles of the road, or an amount equal to $15,000 a mile. Then $6,400 per mile was to be paid for the next 20 miles, and the balance, 60 miles, at the rate of $3,200 per mile. The hon. gentleman stated yesterday, in answer to a question from me, that the company had worked 50 miles of the road. If the company had conformed to the agreement they would have completed the first 20 miles, for which they would have been entitled to $300,000, and having received $375,000, there are $75,000 remaining to be applied on the next 20 miles, and that sum would cover a little less than 12 miles. That is to say, that the company should have completed now a little less than 32 miles and a little more than 31 miles. But the hon. gentleman has not been able to say that they have completed that length of road; he has merely stated that they had worked on the road over a distance of 50 miles. If the terms of the contract have not been complied with, if they have not completed 31 miles of the road, I submit to the right hon. gentleman that the company are not entitled to the balance of the subsidy they claim, because in order to be entitled to the balance of this subsidy, they must bring themselves within the terms of the statute, because if they are not compelled to fulfil the terms of their contract—for they have entered into a contract with the Government by the statute—they can leave the balance of the road unfinished, and they can receive for the portion of the road they have completed a subsidy far exceeding the subsidy intended to be granted them for that work. It will be necessary, under such circumstances, to have an accurate report as to the state of the road that has been completed in order to ascertain whether or not they have fulfilled the terms of the statute.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The statement I submitted to the House was prepared by the department, but if the resolutions are concurred in, I will not move any further stage until the information desired is brought down.

Mr. BERGERON. I may be allowed to say one word upon the question of railway subsidies. I congratulate the Government upon their granting subsidies to railways in the different parts of the country. The policy was inaugurated in 1879, and it has been a very progressive policy. I am sorry, however, that the Government have not seen their way to subsidise a railway, which is a very short one in length but a very important one, for which I asked a subsidy at the commencement of the Session, a railway in my county to run from Valleyfield to the Adirondack Mountains in the State of Vermont. I understand these subsidies are granted, not merely for the sake of constructing railways, but in order to promote the general interests of the country. Of all the railways that I see subsidised in the resolution, I do not believe there is one that would be of so much interest to the country as the one I have mentioned. This road from the St. Lawrence to the Adirondacks would bring into this country the wealth of that district of the State of Vermont which is called the ore district. There are mines there which are of the greatest importance, and the companies are obliged to take the ores to Cleveland in order to have them worked.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would mention to the hon. gentleman that this motion has simply reference to the renewal of lapsed subsidies. The question of new railway subsidies has not yet come before the House, and I only gave notice of those subsidies last night. When those subsidies come to be considered, we can properly have the speech of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BERGERON. I have seen the late subsidies, as well as those now under consideration, and I thought this was a proper time to bring this matter forward; but I yield to the suggestion of the Premier, and I will make my observations later.

Resolutions concurred in.

FRENCH TENDERS.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. (Translation.) I wish to call the attention of the Government and especially of the hon. Secretary of State, whom I now see in his seat, upon a state of things which, I believe, is unbearable. Whenever tenders are asked for in counties below Quebec, or at least in any county, they do not take the trouble of asking for French tenders, nor sending French forms of tenders. I have just received these forms of tenders, which are——

Mr. SPEAKER. (Translation.) I do not think that is a matter upon which the hon. gentleman can now offer remarks to this House.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. (Translation.) If the House will allow me, I have only a few words to add.

Mr. LAURIER. (Translation.) The hon. member will have an opportunity to offer his remarks when the House shall be moved into Committee of Supply.

CULLERS ACT AMENDMENT.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved second reading of Bill (No. 142) to amend the Cullers Act, chapter 103 of the Revised Statutes.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). Is it proposed to do away with the supervisor of cullers in Quebec?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think that was the view of the Minister of Inland Revenue, but nothing was decided on as to it.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). Some information of that must have reached Quebec, as I have received a telegram from Mr. Henry W. Walsh, a former president of the Quebec Board of Trade, which says:

"As a former president of the Board of Trade and a merchant of 50 years' standing in Quebec, I trust you will oppose the intention to do away with supervisor's office, as an act of gross injustice to the present supervisor and to the trade in general."

The other day it was represented that the trade were asking for these changes, but this telegram shows that such is not the case and that the trade of Quebec, which is deeply interested in this matter, is opposed to the changes to be made by the present Bill.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I have no doubt that the officers whose salaries will be affected by the Bill are very much opposed to the measure, and all kinds of representations they could make have been made to the trade of Quebec, and that they have endeavored to speak with the voice of the trade of Quebec.

Mr. LAURIER. The object, as I understand, of the hon. gentleman was to abolish the office of collector of slide dues and not the supervisor of cullers.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The latter office is not abolished by this Bill or this scheme, nor does the Bill or the scheme make necessary the abolition of that office. I only stated what might possibly take place.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). If the Bill does not make it a necessity it will be impossible to abolish the office of supervisor of cullers. I would like to know is it intended to use the Bill for that object, and if not I do not see why the Government should take the power. All the merchants whom I have seen in Quebec recently have told me that the square timber business would be much larger this year than it has been for 18 years past. I am surprised to see that this year when there will be more need for the services of square timber cullers than there was for the last 18 years, that it is now proposed to reduce the number of cullers from thirteen to eight. I was told the other day that all the square timber cullers we have in Quebec will be needed this year for the largely increased trade that is expected.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I did not quite understand the Minister of Justice whether this first section provides for the repeal of that part of the Cullers Act which requires a supervisor of cullers to be appointed.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The effect of this section is merely to repeal that part of the section of the Act which refers to the collector of slide dues. After the Bill passed the other day, the collection of the dues is no longer vested in the Inland Revenue Department.

On section 2,

Mr. LAURIER. There is no necessity for that now.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think there is. I remember an expression that the Minister gave me, that the cashier was a most competent person, who should be retained and might be put in charge.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). The present supervisor is the most competent man who could be appointed. I have no personal interest in him, because he belongs to the party of the Government, but I believe his appointment is recommended by all the trade of Quebec. He is a very civil officer, and he has been in the lumber business, owning a large mill and doing an immense business, for many years. No more competent man could be found in the whole Dominion for the position.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I wish to add my testimony in favor of the present supervisor (Mr. Patton). He is a most courteous and competent official, and I hope, under the provisions of this Act, whatever may be done in the way of reducing the expenditure, that Mr. Patton may be continued in the office he at present occupies. As the hon. member for Quebec has stated, he has the confidence of the merchants in Quebec, and I believe he has also the confidence of manufacturers who have to deal with the office.

On section 3,

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The effect of this section is to strike out of section 32 the provisions regulating the number of cullers.

Mr. LAURIER. I have no opinion to express as to the merits of this disposition; it may be required or it may not be; that is more than I can say at present; but it seems to me that the time is most inopportune at the beginning of the season to make this reduction in the number of cullers, from thirteen to eight, because these men of course depend upon the business season for their livelihood. If this measure had been postponed for another year, I think no injustice would have been done to anybody.

Mr. LANGELIER (Quebec). I may add that there is a great difference between the culling of square timber and the culling of lumber. I know as a matter of fact that almost all the lumber merchants say they do not want the official culling. I know some firms whose lumber sells better because it has been culled by their own private cullers than if it had been done by the official cullers. But such is not the case with square timber. For that cullers will be necessary as much as they have ever been, and there will be as much done this year as in any year during the past ten years.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I can safely promise, on behalf of the Minister, that the staff will be kept up to the requirements of the trade in square timber.

On section 4,

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I drew the attention of the Minister of Inland Revenue the other day to this phase of the trade, that timber going to Quebec in rafts is usually what is technically called measured off, and then under the specification prepared in the supervisor's office, it is sold to the shipper, who has it culled by his own culler and classified for shipment to the old country. I want the Minister to state whether, in his opinion, timber which may have passed through the culler's office and been measured off under the authority of this Act, can be subsequently culled by the parties who purchase it without being required to have it culled by the Government cullers?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I have no doubt that this is the intention of the Act, and unless the hon. gentleman were able to call my attention to something that would make it obscure, I think that would be the result of it.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed, on a division.

DOMINION LANDS ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. DEWDNEY moved second reading of Bill (No. 145) further to amend the Dominion Lands Act.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the second time, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 3,

Mr. DEWDNEY. I wish to amend that, by inserting in the third line, after the word "Act," "or any prior Acts relating to Dominion Lands."

On section 4,

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is the object of that?

Mr. DEWDNEY. In taking the declarations of settlers, the department has authorised the homestead inspector in some cases, to take the declaration, whereas the Act states that it must be taken by the local agent. One of the objects of this clause, is to make valid those declarations which were taken inadvertently by the homestead inspectors. Another reason is, that the old Act only provided for a lien on the construction of the buildings, but not on the material.

Mr. WATSON. I do not particularly object to this clause, but the Minister ought to instruct the inspectors to be more careful in regard to the evidence they receive. In a case with which I have dealt this Session, the inspector apparently took only one side of the evidence, and the result was that the original homesteader, whose land had been cancelled, as I think wrongfully, had no right to put his evidence in at all, and the patent, on the report of the local inspector, was nearly being issued to the other applicant. I had reason to believe, and the department had reason to believe, that that was a one-sided report, because they stayed the entry until the original homesteader put in his evidence.

On section 7,

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Suppose, for instance, you have certified to the Hudson Bay Company that certain sections shall vest in the company, of course that is under a contract, and does not require a patent from the Crown in order to vest the title in the company; but if you state that these sections are set out for settlement, although the survey may have been irregular, what would be the effect of this provision upon the title of that company to these particular sections. If the sections are, according to the irregular survey, more in their interest than they would be under the new survey, I doubt very much if this will allow you to prevent their keeping those sections.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The section and township lines are run much more carefully than sub-division lines, and this refers almost entirely to sub-divisions.

On section 8,

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). My impression is, without carefully considering the provision of the Act, that the hon. gentleman ought to make some further provision in order to prevent a valid title being set up against the surveys. I think it is a matter upon which the Minister of Justice ought to be consulted. I would say to the Minister of Justice that the Hudson Bay Company, under their contract with the Government, are entitled to certain sections in each township, that when the land is set out for settlement the title to these particular sections is vested in the Hudson Bay Company, and is not dependent upon the issue of the patent. The issue of the patent is merely a matter of convenience not necessary to a title. The Minister of the Interior makes provision in certain cases for a new survey after the land has been set out for settlement, after a title under that land survey would vest. This may be a very necessary provision to correct gross irregularities in the survey, but you would require to make some alteration in the Act to prevent the Hudson Bay Company acquiring a deed or title under the first survey, which can be affected or altered by the survey as it will be made under this Act. The Act requires some further provision in order to prevent the mischief to which I refer.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will give my attention to that section before the Bill finally passes.

Mr. WATSON. Does not the Minister think that 8 per cent. is too high for these people to pay who borrow money for building? Seven per cent. is the ordinary rate in Manitoba, and you authorise parties to collect as high as eight. I think these people give good security for the moneys advanced.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think it is too late to make that change now. I fancy that the commissioners made all these arrangements in England with the crofters on these terms.

On section 9,

Mr. DAVIN. Before you proceed further, I would call the attention of the Minister to one or two suggestions which I hope he will adopt. I know that the House is anxious to get away as quickly as possible, and for that reason I did not discuss this Bill on the second reading, for if I had discussed it then, I should again have to make the same proposals that I have to make now, and, with a view of economising the time of the House, I allowed the second reading to take place sub silentio. Now, the Minister of Interior is in possession of petitions on the subject of second homesteading; he has read the memorials, not only of this year, but that have heretofore been sent down by the North-West Council when he himself was Lieutenant Governor. He will be aware of certain petitions that were presented to this House by myself and by the then hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Perley), who was his predecessor. Now, these petitions relate mainly to second homesteading. In 1887, the following petitions were presented by Mr. Perley and myself:—

John O'Connor et al,	of	Belgonia	and	vicinity,	presented by Mr. Davin.
J. G. Gordon	"	Moose Jaw	"	"	"
John Secord	"	Regina	"	"	"

In 1889 the following petitions were presented by myself:—

D. L. McPherson et al, of North-West Territories.
John Drinnan et al, of Medicine Hat, North-West Territories,

Chas. Holden et al, of Regina, North-West Territories.
George Seibold et al, (Germans) of Regina District, North-West Territories.

A considerable number more were presented by Mr. Perley and by myself. The Minister of Interior, before the meeting of Parliament, had a memorial sent down to him from the agricultural societies of the North-West, one from Moose Jaw, and others from several other agricultural societies, insisting on one or two things, but mainly insisting on the right of those who were entitled under the Act of 1883 to a second homestead and were deprived of it by subsequent legislation—praying that they should be re-established in their rights. It is not a very large affair, and I will show the Minister why, in common justice, it should be done. I have here in my hand——

Mr. PRIOR. What is it?

Mr. DAVIN. A guide book, published in 1885 by the Department of Agriculture. Mind, the date here is of some considerable importance.

"In the case of a homesteader being entitled to receive his homestead patent for land occupied by him for the full period of three years, he will, on production of a certificate to that effect from the Commissioner of Dominion Lands, be permitted to made a second entry."

Here is a book circulated by the Department of Agriculture in 1885-86 throughout Europe, throughout England, Scotland and Ireland; and nevertheless you pass an Act in 1886 by which every man that had a moral and legal right to a second homestead, would have been deprived of it; that Act was assented to on the 2nd June, 1886. I told the House already this Session how I got Mr. White to put that on to 1887, and I hope I will get the present Minister to do justice by putting the date on to 1889. If he puts the date in the clause on from 1887 to 25th May, 1889, he will not leave a man in the Territories that can grumble on this point. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that all that is necessary is the insertion of a suitable clause; and I have a clause here I should like to submit, but as a private member I cannot move it, and I should be out of order if I attempted to do so. The clause reads:

"Clause 43 of said Act as amended by clause 59, chapter 31 of the Act passed in the Session held in the fiftieth and fifty-first years of Her Majesty's reign, is hereby repealed, and the following substituted therefor:

"43. No person who has obtained a homestead patent or a certificate countersigned by the Commissioner of Dominion Lands, or a member of the Dominion Lands Board, as in the next preceding clause mentioned, shall be entitled to obtain another homestead entry: Provided, however, that any person who on the second day of June, in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-nine, had obtained a homestead patent, or a certificate of recommendation for a patent, countersigned by the Commissioner of Dominion Lands, or who had complied with the homestead provisions of the Acts then in force relating to Dominion Lands, entitling him to such certificate, or any person who has been permitted under the terms of section thirty-eight of the Dominion Lands Act, 1883, to create a charge upon his homestead, and had completed his homestead duties on the said second of June, one thousand eight hundred and eighty-nine, shall be permitted to make a second homestead entry."

That clause would then be precisely what the clause is in the amended Act, with the difference that instead of 1887 you would have 1889. Of course, the answer that will be made by the hon. gentleman is this: The policy is a bad one. As I said in 1887, if the policy is a bad one, whose fault is it? Is it the fault of those who read your pamphlets and Act of Parliament, who took your pledged faith in pamphlets and in Act of Parliament and came into the North-West, as some of these petitioners say they came, on the faith of your pledged word, nay, on the faith of your solemn Act of Parliament, and afterwards you turn round and cut them down as with a scythe, not leaving one man entitled under your legislation to obtain a second homestead but for the change I got Mr. White to make in 1887. I will give the House an idea of some of the hard cases in regard to this matter. Take the case of my friends the Porters at Medicine Hat. Those men went there in 1883. When they began to plough Mr. Pierce went to them and warned them not to plough. He did not give any reason; he gave them the idea that the land was to be part of a reserve. The railway had not got there then, and this was done because of what might be termed the sinister town site policy we had adopted. When these men were about to plough and cultivate, Mr. Pierce came to them, and told them not to do it. They stopped then, and did nothing. The next year the railway had got there, and as they were four and a half miles north-east of the railway, they had some idea they might go on, and they erected a tent in the spring of 1884, and began ploughing and cultivating. At this hour they are among the best farmers in Canada, and among our foremost farmers in the North-West. They have 160 head of cattle, a large tract of land, well cultivated, and yet these men who came in during 1883, forsooth, because they did not get their recommendation for a patent before legislation that was entirely unjust, entirely unworthy of Canada, and unworthy of the Government, these men, if they wish, cannot get a second homestead There is also, north of Moose Jaw, a friend of mine, W. C. Sanders. You will see his name in the report of Mr. Saunders, of the Experimental Farm; and you will find out from that report that he is one of our most intelligent farmers. He went there in 1883, and was assured by the Commissioner of Dominion Lands in Winnipeg that he would be quite safe if he went east to purchase stock. He went east for that purpose, and remained seven months purchasing stock; and because he was only five months of that year on his homestead, although morally, of course, he was really a resident on his homestead, he could not get his patent in time for a second homestead. These are hardships, and I entreat the attention of members on both sides of the House to the case, and above all, I urge the Minister of the Interior to consider it. I can assure him that he could do nothing, in my opinion, that would be more conducive to the efficiency of his department, and, above all, to the satisfying of the people of the North-West, than the adoption of this clause, which I cannot move. There is another topic. The other day the Minister was asked a question about the half-breeds, and in regard to Gabriel Dumont being among them. I ask the Minister's attention to this matter, because I have had a letter from there, and I am told the half-breeds are discontented, and I should also like very much to have the attention, if I might venture to ask it, of the Minister of Justice. Here are men that you go to deal with who were not in Manitoba when you dealt originally with the half-breeds for the extinguishment of the Indian title. They had nothing to do with the half-breeds in Manitoba, when Parliament set aside 1,400,000 acres for the extinguishment of the Indian title there. Yet you go to them, and expect them to deal with you on the precise footing you dealt with those men with whom they had nothing to do, and with the privity of whose contract they had nothing whatever to do. You ask them to be satisfied with those conditions. If you want the extinguishment of the Indian title, as it is acknowledged to rest in them, you must go and bargain with them, and with their children. Up to the present date this matter is a trifle; but if you fail to do this you give an argument to Gabriel Dumont, and men of that kind, to stir up trouble and strife, and I do hope we shall not have an exhibition of what we had before, that, the moment these men get restless and really troublesome, you send impetuously a Commission up there to deal with the matter. I have a clause here dealing with the subject, but again I cannot move it. I would be out of order as a private member if I were to do so, but it is very much at the service of the hon. Minister if he will accept it. The clause reads as follows:—

"That whereas it is expedient to end all half-breed claims, and whereas under the Half-breed Commission of the 28th of March, 1885, the Indian title quoad half-breeds only extended to those born prior to the 15th of July, 1870, and as in the interval between the 15th of July, 1870, and the 28th of March, 1885, a number of children were born to parents coming under the said Commission, be it enacted that such children shall be dealt with on the same footing as the half-breeds born prior to the 15th July, 1870, and those half-breeds who residing in the North-West Territories on the 20th of April, 1885, who were otherwise entitled to scrip but who failed to comply with the conditions of the Order in Council of the 20th of April, 1885, be granted scrip, notwithstanding such Order in Council. And any judge of the Supreme Court of the North-West Territories is hereby empowered to hear, investigate and adjust half-breed claims arising under this Act or previous Acts of the Parliament of Canada."

I will venture to say, that if the Minister of the Interior will place this question before the Minister of Justice, that hon. gentleman cannot come to any conclusion other than that the suggestion I make is one prompted alike by considerations of morality and also by everything that law and justice would suggest. There is another matter I would like to have seen dealt with in the Act, and I will suggest a clause for the consideration of the hon. gentleman. I think we ought to do something to encourage tree culture in the North-West, and I would suggest this clause:

"Any person who has obtained a homestead or pre-emption entry, may elect to pay for his pre-emption in whole, or in part, by planting trees, tree planting being allowed to count at the rate of 5 cents a tree, planted either on homestead or pre-emption, but no credit shall be given for trees which had not been planted at least three years before the payment is made, and which are not healthy at the time of making the payment."

I think if a clause like that were adopted by the Minister it would lead to a very desirable energy being displayed in the cultivation of trees. There is another provision that is probably needed in the Act, or, the object might be dealt with by regulation, and it is this. It is a mistake, in my opinion, that cancelled pre-emptions are not placed in the same position as cancelled homesteads. I cannot see why, if a man can enter on a cancelled homestead, he should not be able to enter on a cancelled pre-emption. I know very well the idea that will suggest itself to some minds, especially to a bureaucratic mind: Oh, that would interfere with our income; but, Sir, it would interfere very little with our income, and if you got a second homesteader on to a cancelled pre-emption, he and his family will soon be paying into the pockets of the country a great deal more than you can get from a person who should go and purchase that cancelled pre emption. Of course if we can get a new comer to go on to a cancelled pre emption it is as useful as a man having a second homestead. I did not bring this point before the House when we were on the second reading of this Bill, for the reason that I wanted to economise the time of the House. We are now in Committee and I will send over these clauses to the Minister of Interior, with great respect and with my compliments, and if he thinks it worth while to adopt any of them I shall only be too glad. I know that that second homestead question cannot rest as it is, for the reason that that policy of the Government is entirely against justice and against the sentiments of the people of the North-West. From every part of Assiniboia petitions have come to us in reference to this matter, and I hope sincerely that the Minister of Interior will see his way to meet the demands of the people.

Mr. DEWDNEY. In reference to the matter of second homesteads, I think the hon. gentleman knows my opinion with regard to them. I think it was unfortunate that a second homestead was ever given, and I am quite sure that, although he has named a number of petitioners who are personally interested in getting these, I can get a larger number of people to protest against second homesteading as a principle. From what the hon. gentleman has said, I do not think he expects me to introduce these clauses into our present amended Bill, but I can assure him that every settler who is entitled to a second homestead will get it, however I may feel very much disinclined to perpetuate a system which I think has been a very great injury to the country. The hon. gentleman mentions a great number of people in my own district who have sent petitions here. That may be the case, but, although that is the case, it would not affect me one way or the other in making any change in the law which I think would be detrimental to the country. In regard to the question concerning the half-breed claims, which the hon. gentleman has submitted, that is a matter which requires some consideration, and I promised the hon. gentleman, and some others, a short time ago, that I would look into it. I do not think this is a proper time to consider that question, nor is it a proper amendment to insert in this Bill. I feel very much inclined to assist, in every possible way, the tree culture of the country, but I do not think we can do it successfully by the proposition which the hon. gentleman has made. I think he had better leave these matters rest for the present. I propose not to tinker with the Dominion Lands Act this year, and I only brought in such amendments as are absolutely necessary. During the recess I shall go very carefully into the matter of the land regulations, and I hope before the next Session opens to be able to suggest some amendments to the Land Act which, I think, will be acceptable to the people of the North-West.

Mr. DAVIN. The Minister says that the persons who have petitioned are interested. Of course they are interested; but what harm is that? Is it against a man who goes into court with a just claim that he is interested? What would you think of a judge who said to him: "Sir, you are interested in this case, and you should be nonsuited." Of course, the people of the North-West are interested in this matter, and why should they not be? I have here the speech of the late Hon. Mr. White, delivered at Qu'Appelle, on this question, and he describes the people whom the hon. Minister might get to petition against this, and says that they are men who have homesteaded in Manitoba, and gone out there and taken up a second homestead. Mr. White said:

"But there is no doubt whatever about this, that where there are grievances or complaints it is a matter of the greatest possible consequence that they should be promptly dealt with either one way or the other. (Hear, hear.) If a complaint is made, whether it be by a company or an individual settler in the North-West Territories, if a complaint is made, my own conviction is—and I entirely concur in the statement of the address on that point—that it is a matter of the greatest possible consequence that it should be dealt with at once. It does not follow, mark you, that you can remove the grievance, it does not follow that you can do exactly to a man or corporation or community all that you ought to do; but it is important that they should have your answer, whatever that answer may be—Yes or No. For instance, if a man feels that a man should like his homestead without performing his duties on it, it is better that he should be told that he shall not have it than to be kept dilly-dallying, writing—or getting his friends to write—and not knowing what his fate is in regard to it. It is better that the thing should be settled promptly, and if the Yes is given, then he gives twice who gives quickly; and the fact should be recognised by the Government in dealing with the public."

He continued to say:

"Now, gentlemen, these are the subjects referred to in your address; but there are other subjects referred to in other addresses and in relation to which I may say a word or two. One of these which was referred to in the very first address presented to me when I came into the country is that of second homesteading; and last night, at the meeting to which I referred and which was a meeting of very intelligent farmers who knew what they were talking about, and many of whom were second homesteaders, as they stated to the meeting, they dealt with it in a manner which was entirely in sympathy with the prevailing sentiment I had heard, and that is that second homesteading has proved in its practical operation to be a mistake, and that, therefore, it ought not to be continued."

Now, Sir, of course, as I say, some of these persons have denounced the second homesteading as a bad policy, and on the question whether the second homesteading is a bad policy or not, the hon. Minister and I are one; but that is not the question I raise here; it is not a question whether it is a bad or a good policy, but the question is whether it is a bad or good policy to do injustice to people to whom you gave certain rights. That is a wholly different question. The Hon. Mr. White then went on to say:

"Now, the object the Government had in view in adopting the principle of second homesteading was a very laudable one. At that time we were all in a condition of boom, we supposed all the land of the North-West would be worth a great deal of money, and that every man who came here would be enabled to become very rich. At that time the idea was that a pioneer farmer from one of the old Provinces who knew what settlement in a new country was, and who could deal with the conditions by which he was surrounded in a good and proper way; that such a farmer coming into the country could, as soon as he got his patent, possibly sell to a tenant farmer coming from the old world who knew nothing about this pioneer work and would be anxious to get a farm partially improved, with buildings erected, and so on."

It will, therefore, be seen that the late Minister of the Interior, who was present in this House when this policy of a second homestead was adopted, tells you that the object the Government had in view in passing this second homestead clause was actually to make speculators; to cause men to come in there and take a farm and then to sell it and go to fresh fields and pastures new. I know as a fact that most of the second homesteaders want to cultivate not only their present homestead but their second homestead as they want more land; but even if you take the very worst view of the second homesteading, that the man is a speculator, we have the authoritative interpretation of the late Minister of the Interior that that view was the very one which was present to the mind of the Government. Under these circumstances, I do not think that the hon. Minister of the Interior saying that he disapproves of it, and that it does not meet his views or the views of the Government, will settle this question, because if you have the whole Government of Canada against it, or if you have the Government of 500 Canadas against it, the persons who are demanding the right to a second homestead have, by reason of your Act of 1883, and your pamphlets issued by the department in 1885, promising them a second homestead, justice on their side, and with justice on their side they will beat the Government in this matter. I should be very sorry to see the Government persevere in that policy, because I remember the flourish of trumpets with which it was first announced, and if it is persevered in, we shall have the spectacle of the Government of Canada strutting into a difficulty and afterwards sneaking out of it.

Mr. WATSON. My hon. friend from West Assiniboia has told the Government what the results will be unless they yield to the demands of those people who think they are entitled to a second homestead. As one who had a seat in the House at the time the Bill of 1883 was passed, and as an advocate of second homestead entry, I wish to state that the object of providing for a second homestead entry was not to encourage people to come to this country in the hope of obtaining two homesteads, but the object was to retain in our own country people who had sold their lands, and who, if they did not obtain a second homestead, would have gone and settled south of the boundary line. The third clause of this Act is, no doubt, intended to provide that patents shall not be declared to have been obtained fraudulently on account of homesteaders who disposed of their rights before the recommend for patent had issued. Some did dispose of their rights during the boom days, and they were ready to go to the United States if they could not get a second homestead in this country; and the object of placing that provision in the Act of 1883, was to retain those people in Manitoba and the North-West. I have no doubt that the interpretation of the clause given by the hon. member for West Assiniboia is correct, but it was not the intention of the House or of the Government at that time to offer such inducement to immigrants coming to the country. I am glad to hear the Minister of Interior state that the matter of tree planting is likely to receive his favorable consideration. If the Government do not feel disposed to grant a tree claim, I think the suggestion of my hon. friend from West Assiniboia, that they should allow, say 5 cents a tree, for all trees found growing on a homestead, in lieu of payment for the land, is a very fair one. Like the hon. member for West Assiniboia, I believe early settlers should have the right to make a second homestead entry of their pre-emption. A great many people go into that country who are not able, out of their earnings from their homestead, to pay for their pre-emption, and in a great many instances the pre emptions have fallen into the hands of speculators; and if these people were allowed to go on and earn their pre-emptions by large improvements, it would be in the interest of the settlers and the Government. Another matter, which has not been referred to by the hon. member for West Assiniboia, but which should receive the attention of the Government, is, that persons who made entries for 80-acre homesteads and 80-acre pre-emptions, should be placed on the same footing as people who have come to the country later and obtained homesteads of 160 acres. This is one of the results of a changing and vacillating land policy. The land regulations, as I have repeatedly stated, change not only from year to year, but from month to month. A considerable number of homesteaders took up lands when the regulations only allowed them to take up an 80-acre homestead and an 80 acre pre-emption at $2.50 per acre. After, the regulations were changed so that settlers could acquire 160 acres of homestead and 160 acres of pre-emption, and those people petitioned the Government that they should be placed on the same footing as settlers who came in at a later date. The Government has modified the regulations, so as to allow them to take up 160 acres, provided that they will purchase 80 acres or 160 acres of some other Government land at $2.50 an acre. That is not a right policy; it encourages a system of speculation, because speculators will hunt these people up and try to induce them to purchase the land and transfer it to them; and I had hoped that the Minister of the Interior would have seen fit to have made the Act retroactive, in order to give these people the same advantages and the same encouragement as people who came into the country years later. There are some other matters which I would like to mention in connection with the land regulations, but I have referred to them before, and at this stage of the Session I do not wish to take up any more of the time of the House.

Committee rose and reported progress.

SUPPLY—BRITISH COLUMBIA MINING LAWS.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. MARA. I wish simply to call the attention of the Government for a few minutes to the complicated state of the mining laws in the railway belt in British Columbia. During the past four years, the mines there have been practically locked up on account of the suit between the Provincial Government and the Dominion Government, and it is impossible to estimate the injury the Province has sustained during that time by reason of the Government not being able to give titles to mining lands. It is true the miner has been able to prospect and work his mines, but an individual miner or a company of miners can do very little in quartz mining without the aid of capital, and capitalists will not invest when there is any doubt or uncertainty as regards title. I may mention one case which will show how mining development has been retarded during the past four years through the legislation of both Governments. The Selkirk Company, of Ille-cille-waet, spent two years in opening up what are believed to be rich and valuable mines, and had laid out about $100,000 when they found they would require a further outlay of about $200,000 or $300,000 to enable them to erect works, build a tramway and develop the mine in such away as to enable them to ship ore. Not having the means themselves, they endeavored to secure outside capital. They succeeded in interesting a firm of English capitalists, who, after an examination of the mine, agreed to float a company in England, to give them one-third paid-up shares, and to recoup them the $100,000 they had expended, provided they could obtain a title. Yet, although the old company recorded their claims with both Governments, and did everything the law required, they were not able to satisfy the English capitalists, who said that where there was so much uncertainty about the title, and when there was a direct conflict between the mining laws of the Province and the mining regulations of the Dominion Government, they could not invest, and that valuable mine is to-day at a standstill. It is generally supposed that the decision of the Privy Council, given a short time ago, settled these difficulties. I am sorry to say that is not the case. Although settled satisfactorily, so far as the Provincial Government is concerned, it has, in another direction, only tended still further to complicate matters. The Provincial Government are, of course, satisfied with having gained their suit, and having established the claim for which they contended, the miner also is satisfied because he is more favorable to the mining laws of the Province, believing them to be more liberal, and that he will have less difficulty in obtaining a Crown grant from the Provincial Government than from the Dominion Government. But the capitalist is not satisfied, because he has now two Governments to deal with instead of one, two staffs of officials to deal with instead of one, and two sets of mining laws, which, in one essential point, are diametrically opposed to each other. The position is this: The Provincial has control over the precious metals, which only include silver and gold; the Dominion has the control over the baser metals and surface rights. A miner may obtain a license from the Provincial Government, and record his claim with the Provincial Government, but the Dominion Government may say to him: Before you cut a single stick of timber on that ground, you must get our permission; before you put a pick into the ground, or erect a building for your works, you must get our permission. They may go further, and say: It is true, you have acquired the right to mine for precious metals, but we have control over the baser metals; we believe that the ore on which you are now going to work contains base metals, and we will give a license to anyone wishing to mine for base metals in that ground. Hence, you have to apply to the two Governments—to the one to mine for precious metals, and to the other to work for base metals. In a case of that kind, who is to decide? The law courts will have to decide. Of course, it may be said that the Dominion Government will not interpret the law harshly. But if you follow up their own regulations, and if the land is vacant, any miner may ask that a claim be recorded in his favor. Once recorded in his favor it is alienated to him. He then has all the rights of the Dominion Government and can say to the miner who obtained his license from the Provincial Government: If you do not abandon your right in favor of mine, I will apply to the courts for an injunction, or you must buy me off. It is well known that along the line of railway there are large bodies of low grade ore, and it is impossible to determine whether they contain precious or base metals. If the galena carries more silver than lead, it is a precious metal; if it carries more lead than silver, it is a base metal. And the Dominion Government may have jurisdiction one day and the Provincial the next. The character of the ore frequently changes. One day the ore will carry more silver than lead; another day more lead than silver. In support of this view that we have these low grade ores with the precious metals side by side, found in the same claim, I will read a few short extracts from the report of Mr. James Brady, mining engineer:

"Field on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and on the western slope of the Rocky Mountains, is reported to have been shipping argentiferous galena at the rate of about 100 tons a week to Vancouver in anticipation of the smelting works at that place starting up. The 'Monarch' and other claims in this district are in a fair base metal and silver bearing belt which crosses the railway, and extends from above Funnel Mountain to Otter Tail Creek."

Again:

"Jubilee Mountain and Spellumacheen on the west side of the Columbia River above Golden, make a good showing, and have a considerable quantity on the various dumps, and will, undoubtedly, be in a condition to ship considerable quantities of smelting ores as soon as navigation opens."

These sections are partly in the Dominion belt and partly out of it. There is only an imaginary line dividing them. The miner will be unable to tell whether he should record his claim with the Provincial Government or with the Dominion Government, and, if afterwards the mine proves to be valuable, and the survey is made, it is only then that it can be determined which Government will have jurisdiction over the mines. Then again:

"McMurdo's camp is a promising district for base metal and silver ore, and can ship by steamer to Golden."

Here we have the authority of a mining engineer of high standing, that base and precious metals are found side by side, and, as my hon. friend to my left (Mr. Colby), an old miner, reminds me, even in the same shaft. That reminds me of another point which I had almost forgotten to mention. The mining laws of the Province of British Columbia are based upon the laws of California and all the mining States in the Union except one, but the Mining Regulations of the Dominion are different. The laws of British Columbia permit the miner to follow dips, spurs and angles of his lode or vein. The Dominion regulations insist upon the miner adhering to vertical lines. Under the provincial law the miner may go outside of the vertical lines, if the lode is found to be a spur or angle of his lode. A man may have a lode or vein which may be base metal when he takes up his claim under the Dominion Government, but he may suddenly find precious metal, and that he is working the spur or angle of a man who has been previously licensed under the Provincial Government, and though he has spent money upon it, the other man can take his claim away from him. We have two Governments in these lands, and two sets of officers administering two sets of laws. What I think should be done is this. The law should be assimilated, but perhaps that is not going far enough. You may assimilate the laws and yet have two sets of officers administering the same laws, but not thinking alike, and therefore there will constantly be trouble, as one is dealing for the Dominion and the other for the Provincial Government. What we require is that the mining laws shall be administered by the same Government, and that the laws enacted, while liberal to the miner, will afford such protection to the capitalist as will enable him to feel that he has an assured title, free from any doubt, cloud or uncertainty. Now, as to the remedy. Our Province has in the Peace River district a large area of what is believed to be rich agricultural land. I would suggest—and the idea does not originate with me, but has been before the public for some time—that an exchange should be made with the Provincial Government of those lands in the Peace River district for the lands in the railway belt. Those lands are contiguous to your North-West, and are more easy of access from the North-West. If it can be shown that the Dominion Government can administer the lands better in the interest of the Province than the Provincial Government, I would say, let the Dominion Government administer them, but I think it can be proved that the lands can be better administered by the Provincial Government. Their Government is on the spot. The members of that Government are brought more closely in contract with the people. They have made mining laws a study, and will be better able to make such changes and modifications as may from time to time be required. Another important point is that the mining laws can be administered more economically by the Local Government, because they have officials all along the line at every important point, while the Dominion has officials only at two points Westminster and Calgary. I, therefore, think the law can be more economically administered by the Provincial Government. Of course, the exchange of lands requires negotiation, and we hold that no time should be lost. Mining development has been retarded for four years, and I would press upon the Government that, in a matter of such vital importance to the Province, they should ask the Provincial Government to administer the base metal mines. There is no class of the community which pays so much to the Government in the way of duties as the mining community. I have shown that the mining laws within the belt are in the most complicated state. All we ask is that the Government should take some step, and at as early a date as possible. to remove those difficulties and place the laws in such a state that the miners will be encouraged to prospect, and the capitalist to invest his money and assist in mining development.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I have listened with a great deal of attention, and I think with some profit, to the remarks made by the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Mara). I understand quite well the anxiety which he has on this subject, and I also know the anxiety which is felt by a very large number of people in British Columbia in regard to this matter. I am an old British Columbian myself, and I am an old miner, and, consequently, I have a fellow feeling for British Columbians and for the position in which they are placed in regard to this matter. The complication has been going on for the last four years, as the hon. member for Yale (Mr. Mara) has stated, but it was thought that the decision of the Privy Council in the case lately before them would have, to some extent, brought us out of the difficulty. However, when I saw a copy of the judgment in the Times a few days ago, I found that the decision was given only with regard to the precious metals. Probably that was the only claim made by the Province of British Columbia. The unfortunate claim of the Local Government has certainly placed the matter in a more unsatisfactory state than it was previously. The hon. member for Yale (Mr. Mara) has shown that it is very difficult to dissociate the precious metals from the baser metals. I have always found that the difficulty with regard to the administration of the minerals in the railway belt has been increased to some extent by the difference between the laws of British Columbia and the mining regulations of the Dominion. This is a matter which could be very easily rectified if thought necessary. The larger question which the hon. gentleman referred to, namely, the transfer of the railway belt for lands in the Peace River, is a very serious matter. With regard to the smaller matter, an arrangement has been suggested by which the two Governments might come to terms. I agree that no time should be lost by which some such arrangement should be come to for the working of those mines. We all know that capital is ready to be put into the mines, already a considerable sum has been invested. I can assure the hon. gentleman that, so far as I am concerned, I shall invite my colleagues to communicate at an early day with the Government of British Columbia with a view of coming to some arrangements. I find that before I took office a proposition had been made to the Government of British Columbia to exchange our railway belt lands for lands in the Peace River country. This has been considered by my predecessor, and I am informed that he did not look upon it very favorably. Last summer Mr. Robson, one of the members of the Local Government, visited Ottawa, and also placed this proposition before the Government, but on account of this claim being at that time before the Privy Council, it was not thought advisable to deal with the matter. However, I am quite sure that the Government will be ready to consider any proposition that the British Columbia Government might make, and I can assure the hon. member for Yale that I shall do everything that I can in order to bring about a satisfactory settlement, so that these mines may be worked.

Mr. MARA.

MILITIA AND DEFENCE—CLOTHING.

Mr. MULOCK. Before the House proceeds again into Committee of Supply, I desire to invite the attention of the House to an important branch of the public service—I refer to the Department of Militia and Defence. I am sure that the interest which hon. gentlemen, without regard to party, take in that important service, will be allowed a sufficient excuse for my taking up the time of the House at this late period of the Session. It is within the recollection of all of us that it is but a short time since the regular army of England was found represented in various parts of the Dominion of Canada; but, about the time of Confederation, a change of policy in that regard was adopted by the Imperial authorities, and since that time we have been left to our own resources, and allowed to develop in our own way whatever system of militia might commend itself to the people of Canada. Well, Mr. Speaker, the people of Canada are not, as a whole, I think, in favor of a standing army. We desire, if possible, to develop and maintain a volunteer system, believing that it will sufficiently attain the objects of the force, and, at the same time, aid in building up and developing a proper sentiment in the country. For 21 years, or thereabouts, we have been engaged in developing this system. During that time the people have submitted to considerable burdens in order to give the system a fair chance. Year by year, this Parliament has been called upon to expend large sums of money to aid in developing the force. That taxation on the part of the people up to the present time, acquiesced in, unprotested against, is good evidence, I think, that the people desire the system to be maintained according as the resources of the country warrant. My remarks being particularly directed to the present Administration, I will not refer to the system prior to coming into office, under the present Government, of the Minister of Militia, to whose administration I intend especially to direct my remarks, not holding him responsible for the state of affairs prior to the year 1880. I may state, for the information of the House, that in that year the people placed at his disposal, in order to maintain this system, the sum $690,018.93. That was the amount necessary at that time to maintain the volunteer system of Canada. Since that time that expenditure has increased by leaps and bounds, and during the year closing 30th June, 1888, the ordinary expenditure of the department of Militia and Defence amounted to $1,273,178 59; in other words, the expenditure of $690,000, with which the Minister began his administration in 1880, has, within eight years, increased by 85 per cent., or by the sum of $583,160. That increase, spread over the full period of eight years, amounts to the sum of $76,895, as representing the annual growth of the expenditure under his administration. This year we have been called upon to vote, and are about to vote and place at the disposal of the hon. gentleman who presides over that department, the sum of $1,290,200, being the largest sum ever yet placed in the hands of any Minister of Militia in Canada; in other words, we are now asked to place at his disposal in the department a sum almost double that which was found sufficient to carry on the system in 1880 under his own administration. Now, Mr. Speaker, is there any reason why the expenditure has increased to this extent, and at this rapidity? I ask the hon. gentleman whether the service has doubled in efficiency within the last eight years. Is there any record, either within or without Parliament, that would justify any hon. gentleman in saying, on the floor of this House or outside of it, that the increased advantages afforded to the force have been in proportion to the increased expenditure? Has this expenditure produced satisfaction in regard to the administration of the department? I hardly think any person at all familiar with the public opinion of the country will venture to assert that it has,

Unfortunately, in this case, it appears to me that the more money that is placed in the hands of the Minister of Militia and Defence, the more unwisely the expenditure is made, and the greater the sum placed at the disposition of the department, the more the public interests are neglected. I speak advisedly when I say that, with respect to a large portion of the volunteers, and I speak for the volunteers in the district from which I come, Toronto and that district, and representing, as I think they do, to a very large extent, the opinion of the volunteers of a large radius around that district,—I say, speaking as I think, their opinion, that there is but one opinion with regard to the administration of the Department of Militia and Defence, namely, that it is not administered in the interest of the force, and, as a result, the volunteers of that district, at least, have entirely lost confidence in the Minister of Militia. I may be in error on this point; I speak from my own experience. There are other hon. gentlemen who are familiar with the feeling that obtains, and they are supporters of the Administration. I do not know what their sentiments are in regard to this matter, but they are here to contradict me if I am wrong, and in their presence and with the full knowledge of what I say, I assert that the volunteers, the militia force of that part of Canada to which I have referred, are, I believe, unanimously in favor of a change in the head of the Department of Militia and Defence. One might naturally ask, what is there to show for this vast increase of expenditure at the hands of the department? It will be said that we got full value for all the money that we expended. It is known to this House that it is almost impossible for a member in Opposition to ascertain all the details connected with the expenditure of that sum of money, but, notwithstanding those disadvantages, it has been within the power of a Committee of this House, to some extent, to ascertain whether there was any real foundation for the charges that have, from time to time, been made against the department. It has been charged against the head of the department that he has made improvident contracts, that he has wasted public money, that in his administration of the department he has departed from sound business principles, that he has degraded the service, that he has introduced political considerations into the administration and patronage of his office. These acts have been charged against the hon. gentleman, and if one-tenth of them be true, this House should not allow them to be continued for one moment. So far as the opportunity afforded by the Public Accounts Committee was concerned, I say these charges have been sustained and more than sustained. That Committee has only been able to take up one slight branch of the expenditure this Session, but so far as that enquiry has gone, it has established the grossest misapplication of the public funds by the Minister of Militia and Defence.

Mr. HESSON. That is not true.

Mr. MULOCK. Perhaps, when I have read the evidence, the House will find whether it is true or not, and if the House fails to do so the country will find it, and so, at all events, I shall have discharged my duty by giving the House and the country the evidence in support of the statement which I have made.

Mr. HESSON. You utterly failed to sustain the case.

Mr. MULOCK. We shall see from the evidence what I have accomplished. I charge the Minister of Militia and Defence with having issued contracts for supplies of clothing for his department without regard to sound business principles. I charge him with having made contracts at unnecessarily high figures and without having invited tenders. I charge him with having issued contracts to political supporters of the Administration to supply the Militia force of Canada with clothing at prices 50 per cent. and more higher than the price for which he could have obtained better material in other quarters.

Mr. HESSON. It is not correct.

Mr. MULOCK. I shall show whether it is correct or not. I am making the charge, and I am going to give the evidence. I may say that we have only been able to investigate the details of one contract, so difficult is it to conduct an enquiry of this kind before a cumbersome body like the Public Accounts Committee. I charge that the Minister of Militia and Defence sanctioned the issuing of a contract to one W. E. Sanford, now a member of the Senate of Canada, to supply the Militia force of Canada with a large quantity of clothing, and that at the time he issued that contract he had in his possession a tender from the firm of Webb & Co. of England to supply clothing at a very much less price. The facts were these: That shortly after the tender of Webb & Co. was received the Minister signed the contract with Mr. Sanford, giving him a greatly increased price over the price for which those goods could have been procured from Webb & Co. Let me say that in 1886 the Department of Militia issued an advertisement for certain supplies. From that time down to the present they have never called upon the public by advertisement to compete for contracts connected with the Militia Department. There was but one advertisement ever issued, and that was in 1886. After that year, what do we find? In 1887 there was a general election, and Mr. Sanford, now a member of the Senate—and as a member of the Senate I would desire to speak of him with all respect, but as a public contractor I must, in the discharge of my duty, refer to him in the capacity of a contractor—rendered valuable services to the Conservative party during that election. I received information which justified me in stating to the Committee that Mr. Sanford had contributed a very large sum of money to secure the success of the Conservative party during that election, and I proposed, if I were permitted to do so, to enquire as to whether those improvident contracts subsequently let to him were not intended to serve the purpose of recoupment. The Committee declined to allow that enquiry. There is the fact, however, that the Minister did, as I say, give to Mr. Sanford in 1887 a contract to supply the department with a large quantity of militia clothing, and issued that contract to him without having published any advertisement in any paper in Canada calling for tenders. The only thing they did on that occasion was to issue a circular to four merchant tailors in Canada calling upon them to tender; these four being favorites of the Government who had already held contracts. That circular letter was issued in August, 1887, and, at the same time, the Department of Militia sent a letter to Webb & Co., of London, England. This firm, I understand, had for many years supplied the Government with militia clothing, and they also supplied large quantities of these articles to the British army. The following is the letter which was sent to Messrs. Webb & Co.:—

"HEADQUARTERS, OTTAWA,
"29th August, 1837.

"GENTLEMEN,—I have the honor to request you will be so good as to send in a list of the lowest prices at which you will undertake to supply for the Militia of Canada, the undermentioned articles, in the event of its being decided to import such articles from England, viz:—

"(1) Cavalry tunics 6th Dragoon Guards.
" " " 13th Hussars.
"(2) Artillery cloth tunics.
" " serge jackets.
"(3) Rifle cloth tunics.
" " jackets.
"(4) Infantry scarlet cloth tunics, No. 2 cloth.
" " " No. 3 cloth.
" " serge jackets.

"The quality of the tunics to be the same as used by the above arms of the Imperial regular army. Also kindly quote prices for artillery and infantry serge trousers same as those last supplied by you to the Department.

"I have the honor to be, Gentlemen,
"Your obedient servant,
"(Signed) WM. POWELL,

"MESSRS. WEBB & Co, London, E.C."

On the 12th September, 1887, the Department of Militia and Defence received a cable message from Messrs Webb & Co. in reply to this letter, and that cable was followed by the following letter to the Militia Department here:—

"LONDON, 16th September, 1887.

"To the Adjutant General of Militia,

"The quality of the cloths and serges to be the same as used here for the regular army. We trust these prices will ensure your esteemed order.

"We are Sir,
"Your obedient servants,
"(Signed) G. S. WEBB & Co."

That letter was sent on the 16th September, by Webb & Co., who supply the regular army in England, and for many years supplied the Canadian forces to the entire satisfaction of the department here, and to the satisfaction of the people. But what did the Minister of Militia then proceed to do? He proceeded to let out a contract to William E. Sanford, of Hamilton, dated 16th November, 1887, to supply a certain quantity of those articles, the total cost running up to thousands and thousands of dollars. I may state that, in the comparison of prices which I will make, I have turned the sterling money into currency at the rate of $4.90, which, I think every hon. gentleman will admit, is very liberal. I may state that, at the Public Accounts Committee, Colonel Powell, of the Adjutant General's Department, stated that 5 per cent. added to the English price would pay every charge of freight, &c., and lay down the clothing from the manufacturers in London at the stores of the department at Ottawa. Now, we will compare the prices. Webb & Co. offered to supply the cavalry tunics of the 13th Hussar pattern at 19s. 6d., add 5 per cent. for freight to this, and $5 currency is the price at which the Minister could have supplied the English-made cavalry tunic of the kind to which I referred. Instead of doing this he gave the contract to Wm. E. Sanford to supply the same kind of cavalry tunics at $7.64; in other words, he gave him a bonus of 53 per cent. on that class of goods. I make that charge and I prove it. Webb & Co. offered to supply the Government with cavalry tunics of the 6th Dragoon Guards pattern at 14s. 11d.; add 5 per cent, which it would cost to lay the goods down at Ottawa, and the price in currency would be $3.83. What did the Minister do? He issued a contract for a large quantity of these to Wm. E. Sanford at a price of $5.89, or he gave him a bonus of 54 per cent. above what the English goods would cost laid down in Ottawa. Webb & Co. offered to supply the Government of Canada with artillery cloth tunics at 15s. 3d., or $3.92, laid down in Canada, but the Minister of Militia issued a contract to Wm. E. Sanford to supply these tunics at $6.04; or a bonus of 55 per cent. given to W. E. Sanford. Webb & Co. offered to supply the Government with infantry scarlet cloth tunics, No. 2 pattern, at 12s. 6d., or $3.21, laid down in Canada, but the Minister of Militia issued a contract to W. E. Sanford for those tunics at $5, or, in other words, he was given a bonus of 55 per cent. Webb & Co. offered to supply rifle tunics, green cloth, at 14s. 1d., to which, adding 5 per cent. for all expenses of freight, &c., the cost of laying down at Ottawa would be $3.60½. Then the Minister of Militia issued to W. E. Sanford a contract to supply these garments to the Government at $5.58½, or 55 per cent. more than they could be supplied for in the way I mentioned. I might further state that Webb & Co., in their tender, offered to supply a large number of other articles, I presume at the same rates. They were not supplied by Mr. Sanford, but by other tenderers, I presume, but the Committee did not attempt to investigate the dealings of any other firm with the Militia Department than that of W. E. Sanford. Well, I charge the Minister of Militia with more than that. I charge him with having issued a contract to the firm of James O'Brien & Co., of Montreal, in the fall of 1887, for three years, for thousands of greatcoats, costing in all perhaps $30,000 or $40,000, without even having gone through the form of a circular letter or of advertising for tenders. There never was an invitation to the public to tender for these supplies; and he issued that contract, not at a price which was current in 1887, but at the price at which those garments were supplied to the department in 1884. In that year James O'Brien had contracted to supply greatcoats to this Department at a certain price; and as every hon. gentleman knows, there was between 1884 and 1887 a very considerable shrinkage in the cost of such goods. These charges I will verify by a perusal of the evidence later on.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. MULOCK. Before you left the Chair, I mentioned to the House that Mr. Sanford, while a contract was in force between him and the Government to supply the department with clothing, had been called to the Senate. Allow me to give the dates of some matters about that time. The first contract that was entered into with him was in 1886. That contract was current in the spring of 1887, and on the 12th of April of that year Mr. Sanford was called to the Senate. As his contract at that time was only partly executed, within a couple of months after being called to the Senate he made an assignment of this contract to a Mr. Stephen. Yet after that Mr. Sanford continued to carry out the terms of the contract, to conduct a correspondence with the Government, on behalf of Mr. Stephen, to present accounts under the contract, and in every way to act as the substantial contractor, the only possible change being the formal or nominal transfer of the contract to Mr. Stephen. Let me state, too, that in the month of June, 1887, Mr. Sanford converted his business, which had been theretofore conducted in his name exclusively, into a joint stock company, in which he continued to be the principal proprietor, to work out this contract, and to accept a new contract. His company is known in the correspondence as the W. E. Sanford Manufacturing Company. Then, on the 15th of October, 1888, the Minister of Militia, without having advertised for tenders, without having adopted any system to obtain competition, awarded a new contract to Mr. Sanford to supply the department with 9,200 garments of various kinds for the use of the force, including those for which Webb & Co. had tendered in the previous year. That contract was issued on the same basis as the contract of 1887, and it involved a cost to the country of $47,395, the price of the goods being 55 per cent. higher than the same goods could have been supplied for in the way I have referred to. Notwithstanding the colorable assignment to Frank Stephen, and the converting of Mr. Sanford's business into a corporation, throughout the whole of this transaction W. E. Sanford was the principal beneficiary, for a long time the only one, and during this time he was, and he still is, a member of the Senate of Canada. So that we have this transaction as a mere bye-product of this enquiry, showing not only the misconduct of the Administration in their use of the public money, but dealing directly with one of the members of the Senate, a supporter of the Administration. I do not at this stage dwell upon the propriety or otherwise of using the Department of Militia for the purpose of securing friends in another part of the Legislature; but I think that branch of the case is still open to proper comment. It is, in my opinion, highly unbecoming any branch of this Legislature that its members should either, directly or indirectly, profit by contracts made with the Parliament of which they form a part. Nevertheless, that state of affairs has continued up to the present, and what I have stated as to Mr. Sanford's connection with the affair is not a mere matter of hearsay or dispute, but we have Mr. Sanford's own admission that he merely made the transfer of the contract to avoid pains and penalties, while he remained substantially in the same position as when a personal contractor and had the same interest. In his defence he said he considered he had been acting in perfect propriety in adopting that mode of evading the Independence of Parliament Act. I charge the hon. Minister of Militia with this matter, with having so negligently looked after the contractors that they were enabled to foist upon the country large quantities of manufactured goods for the use of the militia, inferior in material, workmanship and appearance and inferior in every other respect to what could have been obtained at 55 per cent. less if the Government had chosen to accept another tender. I understand the hon. Minister of Militia says that in all this matter he was developing the great principle of the National Policy; that he had the alternative of ordering these goods from England at a reduced price, or placing the contracts with Canadian manufacturers, and thus encouraging the home industry, and he chose the latter course. But will the hon. gentleman pretend to say that the National Policy involves the abandonment of every wholesome business principle, and that in order to live up to the National Policy it is necessary, in buying supplies for the country, to abandon the principle of advertising for tenders before entering into contracts? Does the National Policy involve corrupting branches of the Legislature and creating disaffection amongst the militia of Canada? Surely the National Policy is not intended to operate in that way. Would it not have been wholly consistent with the National Policy, after you had decided not to accept any competition from abroad, to adopt a healthy, honest system at home, and issue your contracts on business principles? Whilst I admit that it would be preferable in all cases, other things being equal or nearly equal, to expend our money among ourselves, still no excuse can be advanced for disregarding those ordinary and well recognised principles that ought always to attend the letting of public contracts. If those charges which I have made are true——

Mr. HESSON. They are not true.

Mr. MULOCK. There are witnesses who have proved them. If these charges, which I have made, have borne no fruit——

An hon. MEMBER. No.

Mr. MULOCK. There is not an hon. gentleman before me who can say that these things have not borne fruit. Let me tell you what has happened in the case of the Queen's Own Rifles. We were informed by credible witnesses, men in the force, that that battalion, which has been in the service since 1860, were dissatisfied with the material served out to them.

Mr. TAYLOR. No.

Mr. MULOCK. That the men refused to accept from the Government the uniforms tendered to them, preferring to buy out of their own pockets suitable uniforms from England. I say that is proved.

Mr. TAYLOR. No.

Mr. MULOCK. It is proved by the evidence. The hon. member for Leeds may say "no," and may obstruct, but it is not possible to enlighten that hon. gentleman. His position is to serve his Government through thick and thin and per nefas rather than per fas.

Mr. FOSTER. Explain.

Mr. MULOCK. I will come to the evidence. What I say is that the Queen's Own Rifles refused to accept the uniforms served out to them by the Government for the reason disclosed by the evidence, and taxed themselves to supply themselves with proper uniforms. They who are engaged in this patriotic work of serving in the militia were truer to their country than the hon. the Minister of Militia, for, instead of abandoning the service, they chose to bear the additional burden of paying out of their own pockets that which ought to have been paid by the public. The hon. member for Leeds says none of this is true. Let him look at the evidence.

Mr. TAYLOR. What I said was that none of the clothing served under these contracts were found fault with by the troops in Toronto.

Mr. MULOCK. I will give some extracts from the evidence taken before the Committee.

Mr. TAYLOR. Give the whole of it.

Mr. MULOCK. The evidence is before the House for any hon. member to read who desires to do so.

Mr. TAYLOR. We could not get it printed, because you kept it all the time.

Mr. MULOCK. May I ask, Mr. Speaker, for your protection? It is quite clear the hon. member for Leeds feels he has been driven into a corner.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have not.

Mr. MULOCK. If he were not, he would allow this debate to proceed in the usual way.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You do not need protection if he is driven into a corner.

Mr. MULOCK. I will give some extracts of the evidence before the Committee of Public Accounts, and show how far it bears out the serious charges I have made. The first witness was Lieutenant Colonel Powell, Adjutant General of the Forces, and who has for many years been in the service of the department. Colonel Powell gave the following evidence:

"Q. How does English-made clothing compare in durability, fit and appearance with the Canadian made, such as has been supplied within the last year or two?—A. It is better in fit and appearance.

"Q. How about durability?—A. We have not been able to test that yet. It would take some time.

"Q. What is the average life of a well-made English uniform as compared with what the department has obtained in Canada?—A. It is intended to be the same.

"Q. I know it is intended to be the same, but what is the experience by you?—A. Experience has shown us that the articles are not so good nor so long lived.

"Q. Are you aware that there is quite a feeling of dissatisfaction among the militia of Canada in regard to the quality of clothing now being served out?—A. There have been a good many complaints."

Then, in answer to the Minister of Marine, the examination goes on:

"Q. Practically, you have to give a monopoly to these men to get a better class of goods?—A. Yes, practically that.

"To Mr. Lister:

"Q. Is it not a fact that during the last five years you have had constant complaints from the different battalions throughout the country of the quality of the trousers furnished to them?—A. Yes, that is, in many cases.

"Q. Have not these complaints been made that the trousers have worn out and become useless during fourteen days these battalions are out on annual drill?—A. In some cases they have.

"Q. On the 5th August, 1887, without asking for tenders from any manufacturers in Canada or England, you informed James O'Brien & Co., that they were to have the contract for three years more at the same rate that had been paid to them before?—A. They submitted a tender as to price.

"Q. At the same price paid to them previously?—A. Yes.

"Q. Did you take any steps to ascertain if greatcoats could be furnished by other firms?—A. No."

There the department itself, on the information of the Adjutant General, admits that a contract was made with James O'Brien to supply overcoats for the period of three years, and that no efforts were made to obtain tenders from any other source. Do you want any better evidence than the evidence of the department itself? Probably the hon. gentleman will contradict Lieut. Col. Powell. I charged before the Public Accounts Committee that the Queen's Own Rifles were dissatisfied, as I have already stated, and some witnesses from that battalion were produced, among others, Capt. Bennett. Capt. Bennett has been, as he states, in the service since the year 1877, about 12 years ago. He has been a private in the force, and has gradually risen to the position he now enjoys of captain. His examination is as follows:—

"By Mr. Mulock:

"Q. I stated to this Committee, last week, that there was dissatisfaction in the Queen's Own in regard to the character of the uniforms issued by the department. I have been so informed. Surely that is not the case? A. There has been great dissatisfaction among the officers and me for the last five or six years.

"Sir A. P. CARON. Before this question is gone into, I should like to submit to the Chairman of the Committee"——

And he goes on to object to any enquiry as to the cause of dissatisfaction.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Hear, hear.

Mr. MULOCK. And the Chairman and the Committee being adverse to my proceeding with that branch of the enquiry——

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Oh.

Mr. MULOCK. Does any one contradict that?

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Surely the Chairman was not adverse to anybody.

Mr. MULOCK. I was only going on to give a narrative of what occurred. Then Capt. Bennett was examined as follows. He produced some uniforms:

"Q. Will you select some of these samples of uniforms? A. These are two tunics taken out of the regimental stores that have never been used.

"Q. What do you object to in regard to these? A. These are two different colors.

"Q. What should be the color? A. Rifle green.

"Q. What do you call this color? A. A sort of blue, as far as I can see.

"Q. Does that fairly represent the lack of uniformity in the color of the issue? A. When in the new issue, that is when issued first, but when the tunics are worn a year or two, they become all kinds of shades. We have a dozen different shades. When that tunic is worn a year, it turns one shade first and then another.

"Q. There is a lack of uniformity in the color? Have you got any that have been worn so that we may see how they stand the wear? A. That is a uniform which a man in my company returned last Friday night. It has had two years' wear. That is the state of it

"Q. How long ought it to be good for? A. They were issued for five years.

"Q. Will the issue last five years? A. It will not last that long.

"Q. What is this tunic (taking up another)? A. That is one of the issue of 1877, an English tunic.

"Q. And this other one was issued in 1887? A. Yes.

"Q. What is the condition of the two? How do they compare? A. I think the comparison is against the Canadian tunic.

"Q. Then the tunic of 1877, issued about ten years before this one, is in a better condition than the one you are complaining of? A. Yes, we have uniforms in the regiment that were issued in 1867 that are better than this one. We have a few issued at that date.

"Q. This uniform of the issue of 1877, has it been in use as constantly as this one of 1887? A. More so. They both come out of the company.

"Q. They are both in constant use? A. Yes.

"Q. This one was used as much? A. Yes, and the man refused to turn out for spring drill unless I gave him another tunic.

"Q. I ask you whether the tunic of 1877, which you produce, has been worn as much as the one issued within the last two years? A. Yes.

"Q. And, as a result of the comparison, the one issued two years ago has suffered more from wear in two years than the other in twelve years? A. Yes.

"Q. You say that on your honor as an officer of the Queen's Own? A. Yes.

"Q. Well, does that evidence apply generally to the issue in question? A. It does.

"Q. It applies generally to the issue to the men? A. There is the greatest dissatisfaction among the men of the regiment in regard to the Canadian issue.

"Q. How do you know that? A. I know that from my personal experience in my own company.

"Q. I am told that the whole of the Queen's Own Regiment are ordering new uniforms at their own expense from England. Is that not correct? A. That is perfectly correct. They are not all ordered yet, but they will eventually order, I believe. The majority of the companies have ordered now.

"Q. What companies have ordered now? A. A, B, C, D, G and H. I think these are all that have ordered

"Q. Ordered what? A. New clothing, both tunics and trousers from England.

"Q. Why? A. Because the men are ashamed to turn out in the uniform that they have now.

"Q. Those worn out or new ones? A. What is in the regiment now. We have all kinds and all sorts and conditions of uniforms.

"Q. Would they be satisfied with new uniforms from the department? A. They would not, from the experience they have of those in use now, and beside that we can get them much cheaper than what the department charge.

"Q. For $5.68 you have an English uniform, and for $9 you have a Canadian. Now just give us your opinion as to the relative merits of what the volunteer gets between the English and Canadian militia uniforms? A. Of course this is an English uniform, and we have never had any experience with that particular uniform, but I believe it has been tested here and found to be nearly all wool beaver that is the expression used. It will last from five to six and seven years, while the Canadian uniforms will only last, as your experience proves, about two years.

"Q. So much for durability. What about appearance? A. There are no two questions about the appearance, any person who examines these tunics will see.

"Q. What are your politics? A. Conservative. I have always been so, and my family have always been.

"Q. What is the condition of the uniforms of the Queen's Own band? A. Well, I know that they are just about getting a complete new outfit.

"Q. Why? A. Because the others are worn out.

"Q. When were they issued to them? A. In October, 1886.

"Q. How long should that issue have lasted? A. Five years."

This gentleman was cross-examined in various ways, and these are some of his questions and answers. I stated in regard to the contract made with James O'Brien in 1888, that it was made on the basis of the terms granted in 1884, that is, that the prices given to him in 1884 were exactly the same prices that were given to him to supply great coats to the force in 1888; and I stated that there had been a shrinkage in value, and, under those circumstances, it is fair to assume that had the Government adopted the proper course of advertising for tenders in 1888 for great coats, they would have obtained them at prices far less than those which they awarded in 1888. Oliver Wilby was subpœnaed and he gave evidence in regard to the shrinkage. His cross-examination at some little length shows that the woollen coats—these great coats are woollen—were a great deal cheaper in 1888 than they were in 1884; he was unable to state the percentage, but he stated that fact, which shows how it would have been in the public interest had the department seen fit to invite public tenders. The Hon. Mr. Sanford was examined, and I merely read his evidence now to corroborate what I have stated:

"Q. I believe you had a contract with the Militia Department in 1886? A. Yes

"Q. You had a contract with the Militia Department for the supply of clothing? A. Yes.

"Q. That contract, I believe, is here among the papers? When were you appointed to the Senate? A. On the 12th April, 1887.

"Q. The contract of 1886 was in force at that time?

"Hon Mr. BOWELL. This is not the Committee of Privileges and Elections

"Mr. SANFORD. The contract was assigned to Frank Stephen, and you will see the assignment among the papers.

"Q. Well, then, who carried out the terms of that contract? A. The firm of Frank Stephen. We manufactured the goods simply to complete the contract.

"Q. Who are Frank Stephen & Co.? A. They are simply agents for the cloth.

"Q. You had a remaining interest in it notwithstanding this assignment? A. We had the interest of completing the contract.

"Q. Did you share any of the profits in carrying it out? A. We retained exactly the same position in regard to the contract as before, so far as its results were concerned. The simple object, I may say squarely, in making that assignment, was to avoid, and very necessarily on my part, a question which might arise in regard to public criticism. As I stated before, I was authorised by the highest authority to complete a contract which was necessary in the interest of the country, and would make me liable for damages if I neglected to complete the contract entered into prior to my being called to the Senate.

"Q. So you ceased to be the real contractor, but your interest remained exactly the same? A. Exactly the same."

He ceased to be the real contractor, and he continued to be the real contractor.

"Q. When you speak of W. E Sanford & Co. as the first contractors, was there anyone in the company, but yourself? A. Not during the last year.

"Q. When the contract of 1886 was entered into? A. It was W. E. Sanford & Co., but W. E. Sandford was alone. I was the only contractor"

That is, Mr. Sanford was the only contractor at the time these contracts were in existence and being carried out, and he had been called to the Senate.

"Q. When did it become the manufacturing company? A. It became the manufacturing company in June.

"Q. I ask whether Mr. Sanford is the principal member of that corporation during the continuance of this contract, during the time the W. E Sanford Manufacturing Company had their contract with the Government. Were you or were you not? Are you yourself one of the principal shareholders? A. Yes.

"Q. Now, I come to a branch of the case that I raised before. I want to ascertain Mr. Sanford's contribution to the Conservative party?

"The CHAIRMAN. I ruled that out before. It is of no interest to the Committee and we have no right to interfere."

Then the examination goes on and shows that on the 15th October, 1888, a new contract was entered into with the Sanford Co. for 9,200 garments at the prices of 1887. So we have it from Mr. Sanford himself that the Sanford Manufacturing Company, which in no sense had ever been a contractor with the Government in 1888, became a contractor to supply the militia force of Canada with uniforms at prices which had been given in 1887 to W. E. Sanford, which prices I have shown to be 55 per cent. higher than was necessary. The next witness examined whose evidence I have noted, is Mr. Irving, who was called by Dr. Bergin. In the course of his examination he makes this statement, which may be considered as bearing upon the question of quality:

"Last year I examined some stores in Ottawa. Watson showed us a pair of trousers which were originally supposed to be blue. The front part was a red color, a claret color, and the back part was blue, and that was a reddish color."

After some difficulty we succeeded in obtaining some further evidence from the Queen's Own. I now read the evidence of Lieutenant J. S. Crean. This man had been in the service from 1877 to the present time, and had risen, like many other good men, from a humble position to occupy the proud position of lieutenant in the Queen's Own. He and his father before him were merchant-tailors in the city of Toronto, and military outfitters:

"Q. Have you had an opportunity of seeing the character of the clothing of the Queen's Own? A. Yes, I have seen a great deal of it.

"Q. What is you opinion of it? A. My opinion of the clothing that is now issued is that it is exceedingly bad—very bad.

"Q. In what respect? A The material is bad, the cut is bad. It is impossible to get a tunic to fit a man. The tunics are not cut and made up according to the measurement. The material is bad, and it is not always of the same color."

Then further, in speaking of the bad cut of the tunics he says in answer to another question:

"They are cut out of proportion and would only fit men of mature years. In every single instance the tunics were altered more or less. There was not an exception.

"Q. How about the tunics issued to the privates? A. They are exactly the same.

"Q. Are the tunics often of uniform color? A. No, they are not.

"Q. How does the cloth in the present issue of tunics compare with the cloth of the English clothing? A. It does not compare at all. It is of very much poorer quality.

"Q. How does the color of the present issue compare with the color of the English clothing? A. Well, the color of the English tunics I have seen some blue and some green.

"Q. Are you a supporter of this Government? A. Yes, I have always voted Conservative, but I do not think the militia should suffer for the sake of the party."

Color Sergeant McKell, who has been in Queen's Own Rifles 13 years, says:

"Examined by Mr. Mulock:

"Q. Have you any prejudice against this Government? A. I am a red hot Conservative myself, and always have been. I have worked against yourself before now.

"Q Do you know if any of the Queen's Own have purchased, out of their own pockets, uniforms lately? A. Yes; I have purchased them myself.

"Q. When? A. Last year

"Q. Why did the men buy their own uniforms from England instead of what was issued by the department? A. Owing to the poor quality of the clothing supplied to the regiment by the department.

I call the attention to the fact that Color Sergeant McKell said that they took this particular action on account of the poor quality of the clothing issued to the service by the Department. It is immaterial under what contract this clothing was obtained, as far as this question is concerned. The clothing issued to the Queen's Own was of such an inferior quality that the regiment did what Sergeant Major McKell said they did—they threw it back on the Government and preferred to tax themselves and properly clothe themselves. The examination continued:

"Q. How long have you been in the service? A. Thirteen years.

"Q. You were in, in 1876? A. Yes

"Q How does the issue of recent years (of 1887 and 1888) compare as to the issues of ten years ago? A. The general opinion throughout the regiment is that they are getting worse.

"By Sir Adolphe Caron:

"Q. Getting worse? A. Yes, that is the uniform impression of the men generally. I am speaking now as a non-commissioned officer, and I hold the same opinions as the great majority of the regiment do at the present time.

"By Mr. Hesson:

"Q Is that as to workmanship or material? A. As regards the cloth and fit, we cannot get a fit without taking the clothes to Crean, or someone else. I paid $9 to get this tunic fixed here with stripes, and one thing or another on it.

"Q Why didn't you get a new one? A. I got that one, and the trousers for $9 in England."

They got for $9 in England a complete outfit, whilst here for that sum they could only have got part of the uniform under the wise administration of hon. gentlemen opposite. The Minister of Militia called a number of witnesses, to prove—what? That they had not got any of the bad uniforms. Who were they? A number of members of the House. The hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) and the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Prior), and several other gallant members, and one or two officers of the service who are not members, were called to prove they had never got any bad stock, and so the Minister proposed to dispose of the charge of the Queen's Own and the proof that they got bad material, by showing that down in New Brunswick in the one case and out in British Columbia in the other they did not happen to get stock of which they complained. That is the character of the defence. During the examination, I desired to have examined all the officers of the Queen's Own, intending as far as the opportunity presented itself to exhaust that subject and then proceed with another. I have had during this Session communications sent me by leading members of the force, colonels and field officers and men in different parts of the country, and had the opportunity presented I would have continued this examination and perhaps have been able to have had a larger quantity of evidence, and evidence covering more ground than I have now. But the time of the Committee being exhausted, it was agreed that, in so far as the opinion of the Queen's Own was concerned, instead of obtaining the opinions of the superior officers we should take the opinions of the captains. When Captain Bennett appeared before the Committee, and was asked what the opinion of the regiment on the whole was, he said that in order to satisfy himself thoroughly upon that point he had directed a circular letter to every captain in the regiment and had received replies from a great many, which replies he offered to produce to the Committee. At that moment he did not happen to have with him the circular letter he had addressed to the captains, and accordingly the Committee, having such a fine appreciation of the rules of evidence, declined to allow him to put in those letters which he had received from the captains, claiming that they would be unintelligible in the absence of the letter of inquiry. Accordingly, he went home, and he subsequently forwarded to me the circular letter, and the result was that these documents were accepted by the Committee and finally made part of the evidence. The following letter was sent me by Captain Bennett:

"TORONTO, 29th March, 1889.

"MY DEAR SIR,—Enclosed you will find a copy of the circular letter which I referred to in my evidence yesterday before the Public Accounts Committee, as having sent to the officers commanding companies in the regiment with reference to the clothing supplied by the Militia Department. The replies I produced when before the Committee, and handed them to you as requested.

"Yours sincerely,
"C. E. BENNETT.

"WM. MULOCK, Esq., M.P.,
"Ottawa."

Then follows a list of captains to whom was sent the circular letter, viz, Captains Thompson, Pellatt, Greene, Mason, Mutton, McGee, Sankey, Murray, Brock. The following is the circular letter sent by Captain Bennett to the officers:

"TORONTO, 23rd March, 1889.

"MY DEAR MASON,—I have received a summons to appear before the Public Accounts Committee of the House of Commons, Ottawa, next Thursday, to give evidence with regard to the state of militia clothing. I would like to have an expression of opinion from you as to the feelings amongst your men regarding the wear and state of the present issue of uniforms; also if your company have ordered new uniforms from England, and if so, what was the cause that led them to do so. I shall be glad to have your views by next Tuesday if at all possible.

"Sincerely yours,
"C. E. BENNETT.

"Captain MASON, Q.O.R."

Here are the replies:

"Memorandum.

"From Pellatt & Pellatt, 40, King St. East,
"TORONTO, 25th March, 1889.

"To Capt. BENNETT,

"MY DEAR BENNETT,—Your memo. to hand re clothing Queen's Own Rifles. I have ordered 20 tunics from England for the reason that we get them at $5.75 delivered in Toronto, and made to fit the men according to the measurement which we send over, also the cloth is very much better indeed than what we receive here at $6.50 and have to spend some $2 to get them altered to fit the men.

"Yours, &c.,
"H. M. PELLATT,
"Captain 'B.'"

"SURVEY DEPARTMENT.
"V. SANKEY, P.L.S., City Surveyor.
"TORONTO, 26th March.

"DEAR BENNETT,—In reply to your letter on uniforms, I would say: 1st. My company has decided to order uniforms from England, the order has not yet been posted, but it is to go this week. The reason is that the Canadian made uniforms do not wear well, either as to color or material. The slightest thing will tear it. The foresight of the rifle or drag of straps at the shoulder. The cost also is more. We have paid $6.50 for the Canadian tunic, and then have to get it altered to fit, which costs from $2 to $4 more, and have also to pay for having the "Q. O. R." marked on the shoulder straps. The English uniform costs us $5.75 for tunic made to fit. "Q O. R." worked on, of first-class material and finish. The company think that when they have to pay for uniform, they had better get such as will look best and cost least. At present the company look decidedly motley, some in old and some in new tunics. Excuse haste.

Yours truly,
"VILLIERS SANKEY."

Mr. MULOCK.

"TORONTO, 25th March, 1889.

"MY DEAR BENNETT,—I have yours of 23rd March, and have to say that very generally the reason given by men resigning and not serving their full term is that they 'wont wear that rotten clothing,' and as to the difficulty experienced in recruiting, I will say nothing, as your own experience with that matter will prove sufficient. If fit and proper clothing is not provided at once for the Militia, and a more liberal policy adopted regarding this and other matters, the active militiaman or volunteer will soon be a thing of the past. My company have not ordered uniforms from England, and won't as long as I am in command. If the volunteer is to be worth anything to the country, he should be properly equipped, clothed and trained, and, under existing circumstances he is neither the one nor the other.

"I am, &c, sincerely,
"JAS. C. McGEE.

"Captain C. E. BENNETT, &c., &c."

"TORONTO, 27th March, 1889.

"MY DEAR BENNETT,—In reply to yours of the 23rd instant, I beg to say that the reason for ordering new uniforms by my company, is that those on hand are no longer in a condition that the men can take any pride in wearing them, and most of them are long since unfit for wear.

"Our reasons for ordering new uniforms from England, are that both in quality of material and price, we have been able to do much better than with the department, besides which a perfect fit is guaranteed, each uniform being made to order from measure.

"I may say, the uniform we have in the past received from the militia stores have given great dissatisfaction, the quality being poor, and color irregular, so that under certain conditions of light, hardly two uniforms could be found exactly of the same color. I am of opinion this is due largely to the dyes used, failing to stand exposure, though a difference has been found in color of uniforms received fresh from store.

"English uniforms on the other hand received eight or nine years ago are still in wear and color has not failed at all.

"Yours sincerely,
P. L. MASON."

Here is another letter:

"TORONTO, 27th March, 1889.

"MY DEAR BENNETT,—Replying to your letter, re uniforms, I have ordered tunics for my company from Messrs. Hobson & Son, London. My reasons for doing so are as follows: I find that the tunics issued by Government to my company became unfit for use after about one year's wear. The cloth becomes rough and loses its color, and the general appearance of the tunics is at no time soldierlike or military, even when the garment is correct size around the chest I find that it is not well proportioned in other respects. I have rarely found one to fit without alterations, which alteration in most cases costs from one to three dollars. The Canadian tunics in my company which have been in use not more than two years are past use, and I find it impossible to induce new men to enter the service unless they are given a respectable outfit.

"I have ordered English tunics, which are to be made to the measure of each individual man in my company.

"The cloth is all wool beaver, very much superior to the Canadian goods, and the cost laid down for the Canadian ones, and the cost laid down in Toronto, will be fully 15 per cent. less than I have to pay for the Canadian ones. Any further information I can give you I will be happy to supply.

"Yours truly,
BOYCE THOMPSON,
"Captain 'A' Co. Q. O. R. of Canada."

Here is still another letter on the same subject:

"TORONTO, 27th March, 1889.

"MY DEAR BENNETT,—Your letter dated the 23rd to hand re clothing, which I have received from the Militia Department. I regret to say that they are not what they should be. In some cases I have known them to be moth-eaten and the colors anything but satisfactory. In lieu of rifle green we get navy blue which gives the men a shabby appearance when in a body.

"In speaking for the men I must say the comments they make on the clothing is not very flattering to the maker or to the Militia Department.

"Yours very truly,
"J. A. MURRAY.

"Capt. BENNETT,
"Queen's Own Rifles."

Here is another letter on the same subject:

"TORONTO, 25th March, 1889.

"DEAR BENNETT,—I reply to you letter of the 23rd instant respecting the clothing issued to my company by the Militia Department, all I can say is that were it not for the continual complaints regarding the clothing which an officer commanding a company has poured into his ears night after night of drill, there would be some pleasure in being connected with the militia force.

"Apart from the conglomeration of shades of blue and green by the color in the tunics fading, the chief cause of complaint is the lack of wear in the clothing. We now have tunics made in England and issued to the company years ago which are in better condition than the recent Canadian issues, the latter being in many cases unfit to be worn in day time;

"At the recent meeting of my company it was decided unanimously to order uniforms in England to be uniform with the remaining companies of the regiment and on account of the wretched condition of those in stores.

"In a word, the Canadian-made clothing will not wear nor will the color stand. I am inclined to think too that the contractors do not stick to one shade of coloring, for at least a dozen shades of blue and green can be picked out of any two companies any day on parade.

"Yours truly,
"H. VINCENT GREENE."

"C. C. BENNETT, Esq."

So much for the opinions of the officers and non-commissioned officers of the Queen's Own Rifles. I think I have established to the satisfaction of all reasonable men, what I stated before the Public Accounts Committee, that at least one regiment—the Queen's Own—was generally dissatisfied with the treatment it had received in this respect. Perhaps it might be instractive to some hon gentlemen if I were to give a class of evidence that is beyond controversy—evidence of persons directly in the pay, in the hiring of the Minister of Militia; his own men of the regular forces I hardly think they can be discredited, and let us see what they have got to say about the matter. The hon. the Minister of Militia comes from Quebec, and he has a battery there presided over and managed by his own political friends.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. It is not true. There are no political friends of mine in the battery.

Mr. MULOCK. I don't know whether they are friends of the Minister now.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Then you should not say so.

Mr. MULOCK. I think they can hardly be considered his friends now in view of what he has been doing, but at all events they are sympathisers of the party to which he belongs.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No.

Mr. MULOCK. I hardly think the Minister will be able to establish the contradiction. I will give the names in time and then he can make his reply. At all events the department here issued such wretched stuff to Battery "B" that on the 13th May, 1887, some of his own employés convened a meeting of a board of officers in the citadel at Quebec to report as to the quality and make of the tunics supplied by the Minister. The president of the board of officers was Lieutenant Peters and the other members of the board were Captain Rutherford and Captain Fayes. Let me read to the hon. gentleman the document which was sent to himself by these officers:

"PROCEEDINGS of a Board of Officers assembled at Citadel, Quebec, on the 13th day of May, 1887, by order of Major C. J. Short, Comg. R. S. A., for the purpose of examining and reporting upon quality and make of tunics supplied to "B." Battery Reg. C.

"President, J. Peters, Regt. A.; Members, Captains A. H. Rutherford and F. A. Fayes, Regt. C. A

"The Board having assembled pursuant to order, proceed to carefully examine the tunics one by one and after such examination find that 105 are unserviceable for the following reasons: The cut and the general construction is most faulty in almost every respect as there is no perceptible attempt to follow the ordinary rules pursued in tailoring in regards the proportions of the human figure.

"It becomes therefore impossible to fit men out in keeping with the ideal of a soldier's neatness, and though in cases were the tunics are taken to pieces and made over, owing to the neglect in the original manufacture it is impossible for the regimental tailor to turn out a proper garment.

"The Board also find that there is a multitude of shades and quality of cloths among the lot now in store This destroys uniformity and the stuff is so shoddy and limp that in a few weeks wear it fades, wrinkles up and becomes most unsightly on parades. The Board find that none of the tunics are what they should be, but they have selected the above mentioned number as the worst and totally unfit for issue.

"Signed at Citadel, Quebec, this 13th day of May, 1887.

"14th May, 1887."

Some correspondence took place between the department and the authorities at the Citadel in regard to this charge, and Lieutenant Colonel Montizambert, one of the hon. gentleman's supporters, a strong Tory, not a Liberal-Conservative—a Tory of the Tories——

Mr. BLAKE. Dyed-in-the-wool, not like the tunics.

Mr. MULOCK. A controversy took place between Mr. Watson, the inspector of the stores, and the authorities at Montreal, and Colonel Montizambert writes to Ottawa the following communication:—

"I have the honor to forward herewith photographs showing a 5 ft. 7 in. tunic on the body of a 5 ft. 8 in. man. This tunic is marked as 37 in. in the waist. The actual measurement is 41 inches. The trousers reach nearly to the shoulder blades behind, and cap marked 21 in. is really 22. You will see from the fit in the photograph what an amount of alteration is required, causing endless trouble and expense to the men, unsatisfactory alike to the tailor, who has to make alterations at the lowest cost, and to the man who has to pay for them out of a very small income. I also forward herewith a letter of complaint addressed to the officer commanding "B" Battery by the civilian master tailor on the same subject."

This letter was referred to the highest military authority in Canada, Major General Sir Frederick Middleton, and he expressed his opinion in regard to the matter as follows:—

"I quite concur in the remarks of the Commandant as to the hardship of the soldier in furnishing him with uniform that requires such an outlay for alteration."

You will observe that Colonel Montizambert pointed out that the cut of the trousers was so wholly regardless of the human figure that at the back they reached up to the shoulder blade. This complaint was referred to the inspector of stores, and how do you think he proposes to get over it? He says:

"With reference to the trousers being high in the back, I may say our sizes and lengths are taken from and measure the same exactly as the 'English sealed pattern,' and if put on men whose waist and leg measure corresponds with that marked on trousers, they will fit every time."

If you can get men into the service who are all leg, then they will fit this uniform. In regard to the charge made by Colonel Montizambert and his battery as to the quality of the goods, what do you suppose was the answer of the inspector of stores at Ottawa, who contradicts every officer in the country? He says:

"I have the positive assurance of Mr. Rosamond, the manufacturer, that the goods are made from pure wool."

He is satisfied to ask the manufacturer of the cloth, who tells him that there is no truth in the statement of the officers at Quebec that the cloth is shoddy and has all these defects. Well, Sir, that communication was brought to the knowledge of the Minister of Militia, but it made no impression on his mind, and about the same time complaints were coming in from all quarters. For example, the department issued a lot of stuff to the battery stationed at Toronto; and after enduring till patience ceased to be a virtue, the battery there convened a board of officers on the 20th of September, 1887, to enquire into the issue of regimental trousers to the men of that battery. There were present, as president, Lieutenant Sears, temporarily with us, but of the regular army, Lieutenant Wadmore, and Lieutenant Cartwright. That board reported:

"It considers the serge trousers unfit for issue, being largely composed of shoddy, and having been burnt in the dying process, rendering them rotten and liable to tear with the slightest strain, as per sample enclosed. The cloth trousers appear to be of fair quality, but in the case of both cloth and serge trousers, sufficient care does not seem to have been taken in the make or cutting."

This communication was laid by the board of officers before Lieutenant Colonel Otter, the commandant, and he expressed his opinion of the matter in the following words:—

"Approved and forwarded on the 6th instant, and reported upon the serge trousers issued W. C. Company, and since then several other instances have occurred, all showing how bad is the material of which they are made. A sample is herewith enclosed."

Colonel Otter got no redress, and on the 20th of August, 1887, he sent this communication to the department at Ottawa: —

"I have the honor to report, for the information of the Major General commanding, upon the articles of clothing named in the margin, and issued for the use of C Company, I. S. C. 1st, tunics. Those made of Canadian cloth, by Sanford & Co, Hamilton, seem to be dyed only on the surface, and not in the wool; the result is that whenever wet either from rain or perspiration, they turn black, and thus become unfit to be seen. 2nd, serges. While the cloth in these articles is very good, the price charged ($4.50), when issued upon repayment is more than a soldier can afford to pay. Great fault is also to be found in marking the sizes of these articles. It is very incorrect."

This communication, at last, came before Sir Frederick Middleton, and he makes this note upon it:

"I would take the opportunity of urging the necessity of furnishing the uniform, &c., for the different schools of instruction from England, for the reasons given in the second and third paragraphs."

Namely, because Mr. Sanford's supplies were of the defective character referred to by Colonel Otter. I commend this charge to the hon. Minister of Customs and to the hon. member for North Leeds. Again Colonel Otter has to follow up this subject, and he says, in a letter of the 6th September, 1887, to the Adjutant General at Ottawa:

"The serge trousers, in many cases, turn green after a few weeks service. They tear very easily and are badly made, particularly in the fork and seat, the former not been firmly sewn to the latter. They are so cut as to cause such a strain when a man stoops as to rip. An expert tells me that the material is shoddy and also burnt in the dyeing."

Again, on the 20th September, 1888, Colonel Otter writes to the Adjutant General at Ottawa as follows:—

"TORONTO, 20th September, 1888.

"SIR,—I have the honor to report most adversely upon the quality of the serge trousers issued to 'C' Company, in proof of which I forwarded a pair by mail to-day, which have not been in wear a month and became torn without having any heavy strain put upon them. We have had half a dozen similar cases in the last six months, which has necessitated another issue to the soldiers.

"W. D. OTTER."

In the year 1887, Lieutenant Colonel Montizambert thought he would make a report to the Minister of Militia on this subject, and you will find in the official reports laid before Parliament Lieutenant Colonel Montizambert's report as to the general character of the clothing issued by the department to "B" Battery. It is dated 31st December, 1887, and appears on pages 179 and 180 of the Militia Report of 1888. Speaking of the great coats, he says:

"The material of the great coats issued to the men is so indifferent that it does not wear as it should."

In connection with this matter, let me emphasise what I complained of before. In face of this notice by Colonel Montizambert, I find that Mr. O'Brien, who had issued this unfit material, received a few months after, without competion and tender prices far in excess of the current prices for additional clothing.

"The cut of the tunics and trousers is so bad that expensive alterations are necessary in every case, and in many suits the size does not agree with the marks. Either properly cut clothing should be supplied or the allowance to the men increased from 50 cents to $2 or $3. The quality of the material, especially in the cloth tunics, is very inferior."

What does the hon. the Minister of Militia say to this communication referring to the whole issue of 1887, and condemning it both in regard to quality of material and workmanship. In the same report, the Militia Report of 1888, another high official in the service of the Government, Lieutenant Colonel Cotton, Commandant of the Royal School of Artillery, says:

"The clothing not yet perfectly satisfactory. The greatest fault lies in the cut of the tunics and serge patrol jackets, the latter, supplied by a Hamilton firm, being too large, large sizes have to be taken by men of medium height, and therefore are cut to waste in the fitting. The dye of some is inferior; the clothing which is blue in the shed shortly turns to a green and claret color."

Mr. MULOCK.

Then we come to British Columbia. On the 11th May 1888, the board of officers at Victoria took up this matter by order of Colonel Holmes, who directed that a board of officers should be convened to enquire into the complaint, and report. On the 11th May, the president of the board, Major Peters, the other members being Lieutenant Ogilvie and Lieutenant Gaudet, reported as follows:—

"The serge clothing in many cases is made up of remnants of different descriptions of cloth, portions of which fade, while others remain their color, and so a soldier presents an appearance as if his apparel was made up of two different kinds of clothing."

That report was forwarded by Colonel Holmes to the department in Ottawa, so that in May, 1888, the department had due notice of the grievance in British Columbia. I am sorry I can scarcely refer to a month of the year without coming across the official report of some corps condemning the clothing supplied. Here is a report of the Volunteer Battalion for Militia District No. 1, London, Ont. On the 6th of June, 1888, Lieutenant Colonel Fisher, of the 27th Battalion, sent the following communication to the Brigade Major of Militia District No. 1:—

"LONDON, 6th June, 1888.

"SIR,—I have the honor to call your attention to the matter of clothing, applied for by requisition last April for the use of the several companies of the 27th Battalion.

After speaking about the requisition he goes on to say:

"Companies Nos. 7 and 9 received an issue of clothing in 1886, but the trousers then issued were of such miserable material that a few days in camp used them up. In fact they were totally unserviceable and should never have been issued to the force.

He proceeds further to say:

"The officers commanding the corps find much difficulty in inducing young men to join the force, and the difficulties are greatly increased when the supply of clothing is poor and unserviceable."

When this communication was laid before the Brigade Major, he endorsed his experience on the margin as follows:

"The experience of companies of Military District No. 1, to which trousers were issued in 1886, and that the trousers were made of a very inferior cloth, or whatever it might be designated."

The Brigade Major would not so far compromise his reputation as a judge of cloth as to admit they were made of cloth. On the 11th June, 1888, another court was held in the city of Quebec. On that occasion, the president was Capt. Farley, the members being Captain Fayes and Lieutenant Pelletier. The report says:

"The board having assembled pursuant to order, proceeded to examine the trousers and to call witnesses. No. 2055, Gr. Holderness, 'B' Battery, R. C.A., states: I was issued with a pair of serge trousers in April last; I wore them about 20 minutes, when they split across the seat. I went to the Quartermaster's store and got another pair on repayment. I have worn them not three weeks yet, and they have also split at the same place. The trousers were not subjected to any extra strain. I consider the splitting of the pants due to the inferior quality of the cloth.

"No. 2036, Gr. L. Watters, 'B' Battery, R.C.A., being called, states: I was issued with a pair of serge trousers in May last. The fifth time I wore them they broke across the back part of the leg beyond the seat. They were not put to any extra strain. The inferior quality of the serge is the cause of the trouble."

On the evidence before that board, the board came to this opinion:

"The board, having examined the trousers and heard the above evidence, are of opinion that the trousers are made of an inferior quality of cloth, were unfit for issue, and recommend that they be replaced at the public expense."

This communication was laid before Lieutenant Colonel Powell of the Adjutant General's Office, Ottawa, and he made the following memorandum:—

"The material of which the trousers were made appears to have been defective. There is much complaint about many of the serge trousers issued to other corps."

In connection with the serge trousers, I see that the department offers the excuse that, in 1887, some inferior articles found their way into store, but that will hardly explain the complaint of Military District No. 1, London, which was made in 1886, and which in the most thorough way condemned the whole issue. On the 16th June, 1888, another court of enquiry was held in the Citadel of Quebec, to deal with the same matter. On that occasion Captain Farley was president, and Captain Fayes and Lieutenant Pelletier were members, and they say:

"The board, having heard the above evidence, and having inspected the clothing, find that 54 tunics are of good quality of cloth and make, and fit for issue, and 46 are of an inferior quality of cloth, 36 of which the backs are cut at the waist. The board therefore recommend that the 46 above mentioned tunics be condemned. As to the cloth trousers, the board inspected 100 pairs, all of which are of good quality of cloth, but as pointed out by the master tailor, some of the larger sizes are no larger at the forks than those of smaller sizes."

Mr. Watson, the inspector of stores, tried to offer some excuse for having passed such defective material, and what do you suppose is his excuse? On the 30th July, 1888, he seriously presents to the Minister of Militia this explanation:

"Having so much difficulty in watching defects at other points, viz., widths and lengths of collars and shoulder straps, this matter escaped my attention, which I very much regret."

The matter he referred to was that a serious mistake had been made in cutting tunics at the back. It appears that the same thing occurred before and on the 16th June, 1888, it was pointed out that the manufacturer of these garments was cutting them in an erroneous way. Mr. Watson suggests that the whole of this difficulty can be got over in this fashion:

"However, as the waist belt covers the seam in all other tunics, so it will in the artillery, and consequently when worn will not be noticed, and is no defect."

On the 31st July, 1888, Lieutenant Colonel Cotton, of Kingston, sent the following letter to Lieutenant Colonel Macpherson of the Department of Militia:

"DEAR COLONEL MACPHERSON,— I have numerous complaints made to me of the quality of the trousers and forage caps issued to the men. Two or three pairs of the former, only a short time in use, were brought to me burst through stooping. Our tailor says that the material is shoddy In this matter I cannot express an opinion, but I can vouch for the fact that they certainly go long before they should. The forage caps turn green in a few days' exposure to the sun. The men buy English made caps to wear for walking out. All this, of course, causes discontent and grumbling, and any redress is out of my power."

Further he says:

"I am sorry to trouble you with these matters, and would not do so did I not know that you are anxious to effect improvements.

"Yours sincerely,
"W. H. COTTON."

He admits the anxiety of Colonel Macpherson to effect improvements, but he evidently feels that there is a superior power not so anxious. Another month does not go by before another court sits on this. On the 10th August, 1888, we find the following letter from Lieutenant Colonel Montizambert, directed to Lieutenant Colonel Irwin, of the department at Ottawa:—

"I have the honor to forward to you by parcel post this day a pair of serge trousers issued to No. 2156, Gr. G. C. Goldie, on the 20th July, as a sample of the material of clothing that is being issued to the Battery. This pair is only one of the lot; they are all alike. As you will notice, they have not been in wear three weeks, though issued for a year, and now the man has only his cloth trousers to wear for all duties parades, fatigues, &c."

That is signed by C. E. Montizambert, Lieutenant Colonel, Commandant. This came before Lieutenant Colonel Irwin, and, on the 13th August, 1888, he makes this memorandum:

"With reference to accompanying application, which is only one of several of the same nature, it is requested that authority may be sanctioned for the return to store by Commandants 'A' and 'B' Batteries, R.S.A., of all serge trousers of the same issue, in order that, if possible, an issue of a serviceable nature may be made from store. These serge trousers are intended to last for twelve months, but, from the nature of the material employed, it appears evident that from three weeks to a month's wear is sufficient to render them unserviceable, and in consequence the men have to purchase other pairs at their own expense."

"D. T. IRWIN,
"Lieutenant Colonel, Commanding C. A. Regiment."

This application came before Major General Sir Frederick Middleton, and he makes this memorandum:

"The badness and unsuitability of the clothing issued to the permanent troops has been several times brought to my notice during my late inspection. The men of the permanent force are obliged to keep up their supply of clothing, &c., after issue, from their own pockets, and it is, therefore, hard for them if the article originally issued is not good."

This communication came before Lieutenant Colonel Powell, and he made the following minute upon it:—

"The material of which the trousers are made is not good enough for the purposes of permanent corps."

On the 27th August, 1888, another court was held in the city of Quebec. The president on that occasion being Captain Fayes and the members being Lieutenant McGregor and Lieutenant Mailloux. On this occasion the court examined a great many witnesses, among them being McCormick, Holderness, Richardson, Armstrong, Lennon, Harrison, Mulcahy, Murray, and so on. Without going into detail I may say that the court on that occasion unanimously reported as follows:—

"The board having heard the above evidence, and carefully examined the pants and tunics above referred to, are of opinion that the following articles of clothing are of bad material and condemn them."

And they go on to enumerate a lot of clothing and a lot of tunics of cloth and of serge, and trousers of cloth, which they sent back to the store condemned. Later on another board of survey was assembled at the Citadel of Quebec, the president being Captain Farley, the other members being Captain Rutherford and Captain Fages. They had on that occasion to deal with some of these old grievances never redressed, and in their report they say:

"They are of opinion that the serge tunics are not indigo dye, but are otherwise of good quality, and fit for issue. The board are further of opinion that the cloth tunics are from half an inch to an inch too long in the waist."

The report then goes on to speak of a lot of 30 tunics that they had examined:

"Of the other 10 the board are of opinion that 9 of them are of bad quality, the material being woolly in texture and bad make, being cut right across the back instead of the back being in one piece, and one is made of different material, the sleeve being of one piece of cloth, and the body of the tunic of another, and, therefore, we condemn the last named 10 tunics."

On the 26th September, 1888, Lieutenant Colonel Cotton of the battery at Kingston, was obliged to call a board of survey to investigate similar matters, the president being Major J. Wilson, and the members being Captain Rivers and Captain Hudon. They took evidence and reported:

"They are of opinion that the trousers are damaged in fair wear and tear, we find the trousers of inferior quality, and recommend a new issue."

They also recommended that all serge trousers of this issue be returned to the store as unsuitable to issue to permanent corps. The last expression of opinion is from Lieutenant Colonel D.T. Irwin who, since this last communication, stated that the total issue of serge trousers was unsuitable, in fact should never have been issued. Now, I have given you Mr. Speaker, the testimony of 11 boards of survey composed of officers entirely in the service of the Government. I presume that the members of these boards are entirely credible witnesses, I hardly suppose that any member of the Government would discredit these witnesses. Yet all these men in the pay of the Government, under the thumb of the Government, from a sense of duty, and from loyalty to the force, over their own hands condemn the quality, both as to workmanship and material, of the garments issued to the force. Have I not, therefore, made out to the satisfaction of any reasonable man that the character of the material, the character of the workmanship, in fact, the general product of these contracts, has been of an inferior character? Let me tell you who have given evidence in support of the contention that I have established. I have read to you the evidence of one color sergeant, nine lieutenants, fourteen captains, three majors, seven lieutenant colonels, one brigade major and of Major General Sir Frederick Middleton—35 officers in all, every one corroborating what I have stated, that the militia service has been unfairly treated in the respect of which I complain. Let me call attention to one little instance. When we were examining certain witnesses before the Public Accounts Committee, I refer particularly to Mr. Crean and Color Sergeant McKell, there was an extraordinary revelation. The department laid upon the Table certain goods of an exceptional quality, beyond all question good, and when these were placed in the hands of these witnesses they said candidly, if garments of this character were served out to the men, they would be satisfied with them; but they said, these are not of the quality we have seen, we are not complaining of what you have got in store, we are complaining of what have been served out to us. A short time after that these gentlemen went down to the stores by invitation, I presume, and there they were shown garments which met with their entire satisfaction, and I impress this upon the consideration of the House. You will find in the public press letters from these two gentlemen which I will read. Here is a letter from John Crean to Mr. Sanford:

"DEAR SIR,—Since giving my evidence yesterday, I have been shown the clothing now in store, which has been manufactured by the Sanford Company within the last two years. I think it quite up to the English manufacture, both in material, workmanship and fit, as we tried some of them on. If the Queen's Own had been served with as good clothing as I saw yesterday, I feel certain that there would not have been the dissatisfaction which now exists; and so long as the clothing is kept up to the standard of that in the stores now, there cannot be any just cause for complaint.

"Yours,
"JOHN F. CREAN,
"Sergeant Major of the Queen's Own."

Then Color Sergeant McKell wrote as follows:—

"SIR,—I was shown clothing in store yesterday. I examined the material and also tested the fit, and found it very good in both particulars, and think that if the material used in the rifle tunic was as good as what I saw in the scarlet, there would be no ground for complaint. The material in the rifle tunic that I saw in the stores, however, is of much better quality and fit than those which have been issued by the Queen's Own for the last few years.

"S. C. McKELL, Color Sergeant, 'D' Co., Q.O.R. of Canada."

Now you will observe, Mr. Speaker, there are two qualities of clothing furnished by the contractors, one quality for use and one for show.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No.

Mr. MULOCK. All I can say about that is that here are two witnesses—you will not question the credibility of Mr. Crean and McKell. Will the Minister question their veracity?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I question your statement.

Mr. MULOCK. I am speaking of their veracity.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I question your statement.

Mr. MULOCK. The question now is as to the evidence. I am not a witness; I am giving the evidence these men stated in the Public Accounts Committee, and they have stated over their own hands in the public prints at the request of the Minister's friend and contractor, Mr. Sanford——

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. That is again a statement you cannot prove and cannot substantiate.

Mr. MULOCK. That those letters were not written at the request of your friend?

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. You cannot make that statement because you know it is not a fact what you state.

Mr. MULOCK. I say it is a fact. I say these communications are addressed to Mr. Sanford, and it is fair to assume——

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. You stated that it was at Mr. Sanford's desire that those letters had been written; and now you change it.

Mr. MULOCK. I say so still.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. No, you change it.

Mr. MULOCK. I say they bear on their face evidence of having been written at the request of Mr. Sanford. It is immaterial; I am not discrediting those witnesses, but I accept their evidence in its entirety. When they went down and examined the stock on hand as well as the samples shown before the Public Accounts Committee, they said: Had you used for the force and for us the grade of clothing you have produced as exhibits in Parliament and shown to the public, there would have been no dissatisfaction in the country. I have a letter from Mr. Sanford himself showing that he has one kind of goods for one part of the country and another kind for another. I will read this letter of Mr. Sanford, and hon. members will find it on the files of the Militia Department produced before the Public Accounts Committee. It is as follows:—

"HAMILTON, 28th January, 1888.

"My dear Colonel MACPHERSON."—

Fancy a contractor directing a communication in that tenor to one in the service —

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. That is awful, it is worse than the tunics.

Mr. MULOCK. The letter continues:

"I understand a request has been made by the Batteries in Toronto for the cavalry tunics, and while the cloth indeed is very fair, yet the balance of the same will be if anything much better. I would suggest not delivering their lot (being in such a prominent place as Toronto) until we can give them the best goods.

"Please do not misunderstand me. The cloth of which these are being made has been inspected by Mr. Watson, but they are improving it all the time at the mill, and it is most desirable that these prominent points (such as Toronto) should be well taken care of.

"I remain, yours faithfully,
"W. E. SANFORD."

Any kind of clothing would do for the country battalions, but there is to be special care, according to the contractor, to guard those prominent points like Toronto. If they gave their best quality to Toronto, considering the complaints that have come from that city, what must have been the quality of the goods served outside of it? It strikes me as scandalous that any contractor should propose such a thing to the Department of Militia. It is clear that those proper relations that ought to prevail between a contractor and the department do not exist in this case. Who is the real Minister of Militia in so far as the clothing branch is concerned? He occupies a seat in the Senate. It is not this hon. gentleman who is now declaring that he has been faithful to the public service for all these years. Would any honest contractor, any man who had no relations with the Government except those of a contractor —would any honest contractor, I say, dare to sign his name to such a document as that, proposing that a fraud should be committed upon the service, that one kind of goods should be meted out to one part of the service and another kind to another, that tricks should be resorted to, but that special care should be exercised to guard prominent points and let the inferior goods go to the other points? Had a proper feeling existed, had the Minister of Militia been alive to his business, had he been at all true to the public service he would, if he had properly appreciated his duty, have caused a thorough investigation into the matter; he would have dispensed with his old inspector who had been doing this work for many years. I think I have made good the statements with which I began. I think I have established by evidence beyond all controversy that the Minister has neglected his trust and has violated his trust, and has sown the seeds of dissatisfaction among the force.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. MULOCK. Hon. gentlemen may protest as they like. I am giving my impression, and they will have an opportunity to express theirs. But considering the sacrifices made by the country, considering the sacrifices made by the volunteers, they are entitled to better treatment than this from the department. The country has loyally and willingly poured out millions and placed them at the disposal of the Minister of Militia. The volunteers for years have made many sacrifices for the benefit of their country. They have paid out their money cheerfully, and they have given their time. The rank and file, and even the officers have surrendered days that might have been theirs for amusement in order to perfect the organisation. They have surrendered a good deal of their personal liberty, they have rendered themselves liable to be called upon to perform active service, as they have done in the past. They have willingly put their hands in their pockets in these various ways, and yet when I ask that they shall have justice from them in regard to their uniforms, and that the money shall not be taken out of their own pockets, the Minister protests against this attitude. What have the volunteers done that they should, by this mismanagement, be thus taxed in order to enjoy the privilege of serving the country as soldiers? What is to be the effect of treatment like this? Is not such treatment calculated to chill the ardor of the volunteer, to destroy that spirit upon which the whole system hangs? It is a voluntary system. Men join it from choice, from good will, from patriotic motives, and if the Minister sows the seeds of dissatisfaction, he will produce greater injury to the service than his Government or a dozen Governments can undo. There is in my judgment a remedy. Before it is too late, let us place at the head of the department, in the high position of Minister of Militia, a man who will sympathise with the force, who is of the force, who has been with the force, who is a volunteer, who knows the trials of the force.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Are you a volunteer.

Mr. MULOCK. I have been a volunteer; but I am not Minister of Militia, I am trying the Minister of Militia. I say let us remedy this evil by creating a sympathetic feeling between the force and the head of the department. Why, the hon. gentleman who is Minister of Militia is a man who is, so far as I know, innocent of any military experience.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Hear, hear.

Mr. MULOCK. He acknowledges it, and I doubt if he would be capable of manœuvring a battalion of barnyard fowls if he had the opportunity, and yet he is supposed to sympathise with the volunteers, to know their wants and relieve them. I attach great importance to the militia system of Canada. Apart from the service it has rendered as a protective institution, and apart from the service it may hereafter render as a protective institution, it is a great scheme for educating public opinion, and in that regard I think we cannot too highly feel the importance of developing in it a healthy spirit. We have a country here to which we invite the people of all races, and varied as is the racial origin of our people we can all rejoice, or we should all rejoice, that while true to the memories of the past we can meet on one common ground, that of true Canadian patriotic sentiment, and if the proper administration of the Militia Department will tend to develop that sentiment, I, for one, say: Let us bring about that improvement; let us impart that true national sentiment to the Canadian volunteer—a national Canadian common brotherhood in arms. Then if that is done the militia service will be doing good work, not only as an organisation of a military character, but in assisting to cement together all the various nationalities which constitute this Dominion. I say that our Canadian militia service has fallen short in this regard, or that it is calculated to fall short in this regard, owing to the dissatisfaction with the Minister of Militia's administration as shown in these matters. Before it is too late let us restore confidence, let us tell the militia forces of Canada, that the highest military position that the Government of the people of Canada can confer is within the reach of one of their own force. I see around me in this chamber many hon. members of the militia force; men who have gallantly served in the field and who have not failed at the hour of duty. Are all these gallant gentlemen to be denied position, and is the force to be told that the force exists in order to supply a place for a politician, who has no sympathy with them. If time would permit I would remind the Minister of Militia of another grave act of dereliction of duty on his part, but I will be brief in my reference to that. I say that his action in denying to the volunteers of the York-Simcoe Battalion that same treatment that was accorded under like conditions to other volunteers, was in itself an act which disqualifies him to act as Minister of Militia. He has treated the men of that battalion most unfairly, and they did not deserve unfair treatment from the department or from the country. They responded to the call of duty, and they left their homes when called upon to defend the country. They went forth not knowing they were to return; they served as they were ordered to serve, and the head of that battalion discharged one of the most noble deeds that took place during the troubles of 1885. They came home with honor meted to them deservedly by the country, and the only person in the whole of Canada who was found ready to deny them justice, was the Minister of Militia. Now, after four years; after importuning the Minister, after argument upon the floor of this House, after years of clamor both in this House and in the Militia Department, that justice should be rendered to this battalion, the Government was compelled to render this tardy measure of justice by promising that they would do what the Minister of Militia should have recommended them to do four years ago. Is that the way in which to develop a military spirit? Is that the way to treat men who are prepared to make these sacrifices for the benefit of the country? No, Sir, it is not. I cannot find language in which to express my strong disapprobation of the treatment accorded to the men of the York Simcoe Battalion by the Minister of Militia. He of all the militia forces of the country is profiting by his position. These men are making their sacrifices while he is here jaunting and enjoying himself and fattening upon the wealth of the land. Under these circumstances I say that it is time for Parliament to call upon the Government to reorganise this department and to place at the head of it a man who has sympathy with the forces; a man with whom the force have sympathy and in whom the country has confidence. Until the Government do that I submit that the militia force of Canada are not receiving fair play at the hands of the Government. I therefore beg to move, seconded by Mr. Laurier, in amendment:

That all the words after "That" be struck out and that the following be substituted: "The administration of the Department of Militia and Defence at Ottawa as at present constituted is unsatisfactory to the militia force of Canada and does not command public confidence."

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Mr. Speaker, since the beginning of the Session we have had threatening indications of an attack against the Militia Department by the gentleman who has just resumed his seat. The fight has now been fought, the attack has been made, the smoke has lifted from the battlefield, I see very few wounded, and I must say that the attack if it has been a long one, has not been a brilliant one. The hon. gentleman in his address might possibly have interested a meeting of tailors, but he cannot expect to appeal to the judgment and to the common sense of hon. members of this House and to produce that effect which I have no doubt he possibly fancies he may have produced. As usual, the hon. member has not been courteous in the manner in which he has made his attack, although I have tried to be courteous since I have had—not so much the advantage—but since it has been my experience to meet that gentleman on the floor of Parliament. Under the constitutional principles of old England, Parliament was supposed to be a club of gentlemen, but I fail to see why, if that distinction which has been recognised in England, were to be applied here, the hon. gentleman should find a place among us. He is discourteous, he is rude, and at times insolent. It may be that he feels there are privileges in the House of Commons which protect him against his insolence and his discourtesy, for I know that hon. gentleman does not show that same amount of insolence outside of the House of Parliament which he shows here. Now, Mr. Speaker, in resenting the attack which has been made by the hon. gentleman, I wish merely to defend the department over which I preside. I wish not so much to defend myself as to defend the manner in which the department has been administered; not because I happen to be the political head of the department, but, because, as such, I have been following the advice and inspirations of men who for years have been serving their country, who should not be exposed, as we public men are, to the attacks which can be levelled at any moment against a politician in Parliament, but who as Deputy Ministers or as head of the different branches, have been receiving from their country pay for the valuable services they render to the public. Upon that ground, and that ground alone, I am prepared to take up the cudgels and defend the Department of Militia against the malicious attacks which have been levelled against it by that gentleman, who pretends to speak on behalf of the volunteer force of Canada, and who, in winding up his speech, appealed to that patriotic feeling which exists in the breast of every volunteer, to avoid disunion and to bring together the different elements composing this country. And, Sir, of whom is he the advocate? Not of the volunteer force, nor of the Dominion, nor of Ontario, but of one battalion—of the Queen's Own Battalion. Every word which he has uttered expressed the views of that one battalion, and not those of the volunteer force of Canada. If he wants union, if he wants the volunteer force of Canada to be what history has always shown it to be, when it comes to defend the flag and to protect Canada and Canada's institutions and constitution against attacks from inside or outside, he is not pursuing the course calculated to make it so. Sir, that hon. gentleman stands up as the spokesman of the volunteer force, and regardless of his statements, as he always is, he says that I, in the position I occupy tonight as Minister of Militia, have never been known to the militia force, and have never, at any moment in my life, taken any interest in the militia force of Canada. Sir, when I was almost a boy, at the time of the Trent affair, when many men expected that at any moment their services might be required for the defence of their country, when I was studying my profession in Laval University, I followed the current, as did all my compatriots in that old city of Champlain—the old fortification of Canada, in the old city of Quebec—and with others, friends of mine, got up companies, and I served under Lieutenant-Colonel DeSalaberry, the name of whose ancestors has been written in the golden pages of Canada's most brilliant history. Sir, it was during that time that I enlisted, as most of my compatriots in the city of Quebec did, to fight for that old flag which we Frenchmen in Canada recognise as our own flag—that old flag which has made and is making the people of all parts of Canada one people. The interests of Canada require that there should be no fanaticism on one side or on the other side, but that we should all join hands together to develop that brilliant future which Providence has laid out for Canada.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON.

Now, Sir, how can I answer the hon. gentleman? This attack has been made before, Sir, and the charges brought by the hon. member have been disproved. His attack against the Department of Militia before the Committee on Public Accounts has resulted in a shameful defeat; and, Sir, if I cannot prove that these charges are ridiculous and false from the evidence produced by the hon. gentleman himself, I am prepared to give up my case, and I am prepared to follow the advice which the hon. gentleman gives—that it is time another should be placed at the head of the Department of Militia. Mr. Speaker, it is not the first time that that suggestion has been made. I feel that the hon. gentleman is carrying out a system which was inaugurated before he made his attack to-night. One who signs himself "Canadian" has been writing in the Broad Arrow, of London, England. Fancy, Mr. Speaker, a Canadian not having the pluck to fight his battles in Canada, but has to select the columns of the Broad Arrow in London to attack the institutions of his country. That Canadian, possibly a Canadian of the stamp of the gentleman who has just been making this attack, I am informed is known in the literary circles by the poetical name of "Linchpin." It was "Linchpin" who led the attack in Toronto, and who levelled accusations against me as a French Canadian, which I do not resent. I leave to those who know me, to those who have read the history of my native Province, to those who know the French Canadians, whether we French Canadians can occupy a position of trust which throws enormous responsibilities at certain times upon the shoulders of the occupant of that position. That position, I am proud to say, has been occupied by countrymen of mine; and I call countrymen of mine men of every nationality living in Canada. I call countryman of mine a Canadian, whether his ancestors came from the flowery Provinces of France, or from the Green Isle, or from Scotland, or Germany, or any other portion of the known world. I call Canadians those who live in our country, who wish to develop its resources, and, above all, who wish to make this country one inhabited by a united people, loving its institutions, and trying to make of it one of the happiest and most prosperous countries in the world. But, Sir, "Linchpin," or a friend of "Linchpin," who signs himself "Canadian," writes and says, in the Broad Arrow of the 27th October, 1888:

"Some British Canadian should now hold office, one who is above race and prejudices, and who would only care for the true efficiency of the militia."

Now, that may mean the hon. gentleman—I do not know; no doubt he would only care for the true efficiency of of the militia. Of course he is free from any prejudices, and of course he would consent to hold office only in the interests of his country. Nothing else would induce him to do so. Looking over the records of the Department of Militia, I find that we have had as Ministers of Militia, taken according to date, Sir George Cartier, Mr. Hugh Macdonald, Mr. Ross, Mr. Vail, the Hon. Mr. Jones, who has taken a great deal of interest in the charges brought to-day against the department, Mr. Masson, and the Hon. Sir Alex. Campbell, whom I succeeded. I leave it to any hon. gentleman who will impartially look into the records to say whether the French Canadians who have occupied this portfolio have not filled the position as brilliantly, at least, as the British Canadian that the Broad Arrow, under the inspiration of that brilliant Canadian, would like to have at the head of the department? Now, Sir George Cartier left the Treasury benches for what cause? Because he wanted to organise the militia force of Canada, because he wanted to have in this portion of the British Empire a force that, at a given moment, under certain circumstances, would be prepared to join with the Imperial forces to fight the battles of the Empire and Canada. Well, Sir George Cartier organised the military force which has been the foundation stone of our military organisation. The Hon. Mr. Macdonald, although not a French-Canadian, did not contribute very much to what Sir George Cartier had done in organising the militia. Mr. Ross, I am perfectly safe in saying, did not get up any foreign war, or organise a militia, or contribute to its success. Mr. Vail, be it said to his credit, organised the Royal Military College. The Hon. Mr. Jones, I am sorry to say, no doubt owing to the fact that he did not remain long enough in office, did not mark his passage at the Department by any brilliant feat. Mr. Masson established the cartridge factory, which to my mind not only is indispensable but is destined, under certain circumstances, to render great services to Canada. Sir Alex. Campbell was only a short time in office; and with regard to myself, I am bound to say, since I have been attacked, that in the number of years I have filled the office I have contributed my quota towards the organisation of the Militia. When I came to occupy the position I now occupy, I found two batteries of artillery, "A" and "B," giving us a contingent in the permanent corps of about 300 men. Since I have been at the head of the department, the Cavalry School at Quebec has been organised, the Mounted Infantry School at Winnipeg, the Infantry School at St. John's, the Infantry School at Fredericton, the Infantry School at London, the Battery of Garrison Artillery at Victoria, the Engineer's branch of the department, to which is entrusted the carrying out of the repairs and certain constructions as part of the public works of the Department of Militia are concerned. The hon. gentleman says that the expenditure has increased since 1880, and he asks, if it is possible that we can have value for this increase in the expenditure? Why, if the hon. gentleman, instead of measuring all these trousers and looking into every tunic and turning every coat inside out, had taken the trouble to consult the Blue-book, he would have seen how the increase in expenditure can be accounted for. It has been caused by the addition of the Cavalry and Infantry Schools; by the formation of "C" Battery in British Columbia, which did not exist in 1880; by the Government grants to the Dominion Artillery and the Rifle Associations; by the issuing of pay for the annual drills of the said corps. Now, the hon. gentleman, with the accuracy which distinguishes him, stated that I took no interest whatever in the Militia Force. I can tell the hon. gentleman that it was I who asked that the officers be paid according to rank. Until I took charge of the department, the officers, whether belonging to one rank or the other, received a dollar per day, whether out on special service or going through the annual drill. I thought they should be paid according to rank, just as the British officers are paid in the British army. There is also the assumption by the Department of Militia and Defence of the cost of constructing and repairing barracks and military buildings which formerly were in charge of the Department of Public Works. That is an additional service which goes to increase the militia expenditure as compared with 1880. In other respects, there has been no increase, but rather a reduction. As Minister of Militia I consider I am exposed to every possible attack that any hon. gentleman wishes to bring against me, and, indeed, my usefulness as Minister of Militia would have been gone long ago, if I could not withstand attacks such as the one that has been made against me to-night. The hon. gentleman, following out the policy of his party, has attacked the contracts which we gave out, solely for the purpose of abusing the Government of the day and the policy of the Government, and was ready to publish to the whole world that the manufactures of Canada were absolutely dead and useless, just for the purpose of making a point against the Government. The policy of this Administration is a different one from that of the hon. gentleman and his friends. We felt that we wanted to build up a strong nationality in our own country. Following in the wake of the great republic on the other side of the line, we carved out for Canada a policy that has created in Canada Canadian manufactures, which has developed the industries of the country, and keeps within Canada the amount of money which every year we were sending to foreign countries to purchase what we could produce ourselves. We consider it of the first importance to establish manufactures of the various articles necessary for the clothing and equipment of the militia forces. And I am proud to say, whatever may be the result of the attacks of the hon. gentleman against me, that what I have done, if it were to be done over again, I should do so to-morrow. I have contributed to keep within Canada, since I have been Minister of Militia, about $200,000 which were leaving every year the pockets of our Canadian people and were being expended in foreign, though friendly markets. This amount was sent to the tailoring establishments of England, but now it contributes largely to give an impetus to our manufactures here, to teach our Canadian people to be independent of the resources of others. To-day we are in such a position, through the impetus which has been created among our manufacturers by the policy followed by the Government, that in ten weeks we can equip and dress ten thousand men without any possible trouble. I admit, and I am not ashamed to admit it, that, like everything else, the beginnings of the system were rather difficult. We felt that we were a people strong and intelligent enough to go on and work out, as other people had done, our own destiny. I heard the hon. gentleman discuss our clothing from the standard of the clothing of old England. Old England has been for centuries manufacturing the clothing required not only for the English army, but, through the competency of her manufacturing establishments, also largely to the clothing and equipment of the continental armies of Europe. And what do we see to-day? The hon. gentleman saved me a great deal of trouble before the Public Accounts Committee by bringing forward witnesses whom I should have been obliged to bring forward to prove that, although England had had the experience of centuries in this matter, Canada was manufacturing to-day an article so far superior to anything which we could import from England. I leave it to any impartial member of the Committee of Public Accounts which at times was kept waiting for the convenience of the hon. gentleman who is formulating these charges against the Department of Militia, whether it was not proved beyond any possibility of discussion by the witnesses brought forward by the hon. gentleman himself, and after seeing the samples which were produced before the Committee of Public Accounts, that our manufacturers, who had started for the purpose of equipping and clothing our citizen patriotic soldiery, had, in a comparatively short period of time, succeeded not only in rivalling but in surpassing the clothing which we used to import from England, and to pay money, which we have now kept for Canadians. I am prepared to say that, if the same policy had to be formulated again, I being Minister of Militia and occupying that position and that responsibility, I would believe that I was helping the militia force of Canada by helping the country. The militia force loves that country more than anything else. The members of that force are prepared to sacrifice their blood to defend it, and I say that, if we can make that country prosperous, we are doing what the militia more especially desire. It is possible that a swell regiment, composed of gentlemen occupying prominent positions in banks, friends of the hon. gentleman opposite (Mr. Mulock), gentlemen occupying prominent positions in commercial institutions, may prefer to send their measure to a London tailor and import a tunic which fits like a glove on a well shaped hand. If they add to their patriotism a fondness for style, and desire to be dressed in the height of perfection, and desire to import a tunic from a London tailor for $9 instead of wearing the one which Canada can afford to give to Canada's soldiers, I do not blame them for that. I appreciate their good taste, and I congratulate them on their ambition as a battalion to look better than any other battalion, but I beg these gentlemen not to expect me, extravagant as I may be, extravagant as the hon. gentleman says I am, to serve out to the whole force of Canada such tunics as the hon. gentleman and the witness he brought forward stated were models of what the Militia Department should have adopted for the use of the service. Can we imagine Queen Victoria, and England, with all England's wealth, applying to Poole, the great London tailor, to fit out the whole British Army? It would not only be extravagant, but the people of England, with their common sense—and I wish I could say that the hon. gentleman would share in the same gift with the English people—would frown down as ridiculous and absurd the idea of a battalion or battalions being fitted out by the swell tailors of London. Irrespective of the cut of the tunic or the fit of the trouser, whether the dye on one side is a little lighter than the dye on the other or not, I know that under any uniform the militiamen of Canada have fought the battles of their country, and that is enough for me. The parade to the people of the country is a pleasure, because in seeing their soldiers, under the uniform which they wear, the Queen's uniforms we know that they are training for the day when their services may be required for more important purposes, but I have never heard of a Canadian militia man who has hesitated to perform his duty because his tunic had not been imported from London, or because, forsooth, the fit of the trousers was not exactly what they would have liked it to be. I said that I had admitted that the beginnings of this Canadian manufacture of clothing was not as brilliant a success as we would have wished it to be. The mills in Canada, as in any other country had to acquire the experience which was indispensable in order to produce a fabric equal to what we had been importing from England and which had been issued to the force. But, Sir, our men went to work under the impulse given by the policy we had established, our millowners went to work and imported machinery and plant; they even sent to England to import skilled labor, and they have produced an article which is superior to anything we have ever imported from England. Sir, the hon. gentleman with that delicacy of touch which is characteristic of him, accuses me of having corruptly given contracts to political friends and allies on the eve of a general election. Sir, I fight my political battles as a politician, but when I am given a trust by the people of Canada, I feel the responsibility that rests upon me. I have been severely attacked in this House and in the press, but I stand my ground, relying upon those who will take the trouble to look into the administration of my department. I admit that more capable men than myself could be found to administer the Department of Militia, but I do not admit that one could be found who loves his country more sincerely, who is more devoted to the militia force of Canada than myself. My master is the Parliament of Canada, that Parliament votes a certain amount of money, and I am told that with an amount of money that is intended to keep up a force of 20,000 men, I ought to keep up a force of 40,000, and give them everything they ask. Sir, I am not afraid of attacks. During the last eighteen years I have fought the severest political battles in the Province to which I belong, and I am ready to resist the attacks to-day or tomorrow, to a public man, whenever called upon to do so. But it is discouraging to be treated with injustice for my conduct at a time when, under circumstances which we all regret, I was called upon to assume a responsibility which had never been assumed before by any other Minister of Militia in Canada, and I take this opportunity of returning my thanks to the press on both sides of politics for the justice which they meted out to me for the manner in which, according to my abilities, I did my duty on that occasion, and I did it in such a manner that Canada, I trust, had no reason to be ashamed of the way in which those troubles were put down in the North-West. I want fair play, the fair play of every Britisher, even a French Canadian Britisher expects fair play. Now, the hon. gentleman says that we gave contracts without any advertisement whatever. The hon. gentleman, in case I did not thoroughly understand his classical language, asked me to take down his statement, and I did as he told me. The hon. gentleman says that in 1887 we issued contracts to Mr. Sanford and to other people, and that we had a tender from Webb & Co., at lower prices. Now, if it is possible to appeal to the fair play of the hon. gentleman, if it is possible for hon. gentlemen sitting on the right of the Speaker to appeal to his sense of fair play, I ask him whether it was not proven by Colonel Powell, that no tenders were sent in by Webb & Co., from England. The dates speak for themselves, and the hon. gentleman, I was going to say, is disingenious in referring as he has to these dates; but I see hon. gentlemen sitting around me to-night, I see members of both sides of the House who are members of the Committee on Public Accounts, and they know perfectly well that it was established by Colonel Powell himself that he wrote on the 16th September, a letter to Messrs. Webb & Co., to ask their prices for the different articles which we were desirous of obtaining by contract from Canadian manufacturers. Now, I will give you a reason for that, and any hon. gentleman who knows anything about it would not require to have it explained to him; but for the benefit of the hon. gentleman I will tell him exactly why we wrote to Webb & Co. We are not tailors in the Department of Militia, and before entering into contracts for the clothing of the militia force, it was necessary for us to get information upon which we could apply to tenderers to ask them for the kind of material that we wanted, and the prices at which they could furnish it. This letter was sent on the 16th September, and I would draw the attention of the House to the fact that Col. Powell, the Adjutant General, was particular in stating that Webb & Co. made no tender, that it was not intended to enter into a contract with them, but he had been instructed by the head of the department to write and get their prices, specifying the different articles. The reason was that we wished to know upon what grounds we could apply to Canadian manufacturers to furnish the clothing for our force. That letter was sent on the 16th of September, 1887, and on the 16th of November, 1887, a contract was entered into with Mr. Sanford. Now, if these dates are taken in relation with the evidence of Colonel Powell, it will be seen that the intention of the department in writing to Webb & Co. was only to get information which would enable us to ask for tenders from Canadian manufacturers—if these dates do not show that that was our purpose, I do not know what other evidence could show it. The hon. gentleman, of course, had his fling at Mr. Sanford, a senator and a brilliant ornament of the Senate, a gentleman who has arrived at that prominent position through his own energy, a self made man, who has contributed his large share to the prosperity of Canada, and who was deserving of the recognition of his merit by the Government of the country to which he belongs. It seems to me that the hon. gentleman should be the friend of a gentleman who has contributed, by his own energy, to the prosperity of this country, and who has carved out for himself a career which enables him to lay claim to the highest position in the gift of the country. It is men like Mr. Sanford and Mr. James O'Brien we want in our midst, and not those who find everything wrong, who see everything through the darkest possible glasses and always imagine that unless they are in power the country cannot possibly prosper. The hon. gentleman said that we had given to Mr. O'Brien contracts for 3 years at the prices of 1884, and he declared that since that year there had been considerable shrinkage in woollen goods, and that consequently we had been paying a higher price to Mr. O'Brien than we should have paid for the goods which he is manufacturing for the department. The hon. gentleman, and this is not the first time, is completely wrong. There has been no shrinkage in woollen goods, so far as I can ascertain, since 1884. The fact is that from that year up to the present time wool has been going up, and we fancied we were doing the best we could for the department when we insisted on the contract being continued for 3 years at the prices of 1884. The prices of wool were as follows :—

" Wool prices from Journal of Commerce :

October 9, 1884 :

Medium	17 cts.
Selections	19 "
Supers	21 "
Extra	25 "

October 27, 1887 :

Medium	21 to 23 cts.
Supers	24 to 25 "
Extra	28 to 29 "

These figures show that the average of the prices since I entered into the contract with Mr. O'Brien has been altogether in favor of the department. That is not all. I was Minister of Militia, and this fanatical French Canadian at the head of the department was entering into corrupt bargains with manufacturers. And when upon this point I may state that in addition to the fanatical charge which is being made against me to-night by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock), I am condemned in a newspaper, the Mail, as conducting the Militia Department upon lines laid down by the Jesuits. Strange as it may appear to reasonable men it is a fact. This charge is made in a letter from a " Lieutenant Colonel," who selects the columns of the Mail as the organ of the militia force, although the militia force generally like their organ to stick to their flag. The militia force of Canada has never given up its flag, and I do not see how the Mail can pretend to speak for the militia force. I should not like it to advocate my case at all events. This patriotic " Lieutenant Colonel " says :

" The wants and needs of the men, the wishes or feelings of the officers, the questions of organisation, equipment, arms, ammunition, recruiting, clothing, drill, discipline, &c , &c , are all Persian to one who is only a politician and holds his present position by virtue of his power (aided by Sir Hector) to keep en rapport with the Jesuits, and through them to keep Quebec in line for the Government."

Hon. gentlemen can imagine the difficulty of running the Department of Militia and having to consult the Jesuits to know exactly what to do about tunics, trousers, and everything else, in regard to which the hon. gentleman has attacked me to-night. But the hon. gentleman accuses me of having entered into a three years' contract for political objects. I will give hon. members the reason why I entered into a contract for three years. The permanent head of the department, Colonel Panet, who was selected by hon. gentlemen opposite for promotion to the high position of a senator, and afterwards appointed by them Deputy of the Minister of Militia, during their short life on the Treasury benches, who was not a political friend of mine, although a personal friend, and I can say without reference to politics that he has been true and faithful to every Minister of Militia who has occupied the position I now occupy, wrote as follows :—

" DEPARTMENT OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE.
" OTTAWA, 5th August 1887.

" The undersigned has the honor to report that the military Grey Coats supplied in Canada for the past 4 years by the contractors, Messrs. James O'Brien & Co , of Montreal, have been found most satisfactory to the department, both as regards quality of cloth and workmanship, the cost comparing most favorably with prices paid for similar articles formerly purchased in England. In view of the above facts, and as the present contractors have taken pains to meet the department's requirements in every respect and have become fully acquainted with all the details connected with the manufacture of the Great Coats, it is submitted that it would be advantageous to the service if in future a contract could be extended for 3 years instead of calling for tenders annually, it being understood, of course, that payments to the contractor in each year should be subject to the votes of Parliament for the respective year.

" Respectfully submitted,
" EUGENE PANET,
" Deputy Minister of Militia and Defence."

I was not satisfied with that. I felt almost in the air that I might be attacked, that I might be told by some hon. gentleman that a French Minister got a report from a Frenchman, who was under his control, and it might be brought up that I had used undue influence. So I went to a good Scotchman, John Macpherson, Lieutenant-Colonel Macpherson. I received as Minister the following communication :—

(Memo.) " OTTAWA, 5th August, 1887.

" The undersigned has the honor to report that the military Grey Great Coats supplied in Canada for the past four years by the contractors, James O'Brien & Co., of Montreal, have been found most satisfactory to the department, both as regards quality of cloth and workmanship, the cost comparing most favorably with the prices paid for similar articles formerly purchased in England. In view of the above facts and as the present contractors have taken pains to meet the department's requirements in every respect and have become fully acquainted with all the details connected with the manufacture of greatcoats, it is submitted that it would be advantageous to the service if in future a contract could be extended for three years instead of calling for tenders annually, it being understood of course that payments to the contractor in each year should be subject to the vote of Parliament for the respective year.

" Respectfully submitted,
" JOHN MACPHERSON,
" Director of Militia Stores."

I read this to show that in the administration of the affairs of the department I consulted with my officers, who have been for years at the head of the different branches, and who have had very much more experience than I have in regard to such matters, and they stated it would be in the interest of the force and the department and of Canada to enter into these contracts. That is not all. In 1884 we advertised, as we always had done, through the press, for tenders for the different articles of clothing required. I call the attention of the House to this fact, that the system of advertising for tenders, when only a few firms tender for the goods, in every newspaper in every village, town and city is a piece of wanton extravagance that should be put down. What was the result ? It may have cost $1,000 to the department to pay for the cost of advertising for these tenders all over the Dominion. Even papers not authorised, with that spirit of enterprise which characterises the press of our country published the advertisement, and under gentle pressure I found it almost impossible not to have the accounts which they sent in paid for these advertisements. As a result of all the advertisements which we paid so much money for only five firms in Canada tendered. In 1887 the department sent a circular to the five tenderers—in fact the only tenderers we had—asking them for their prices. We followed the same system that is followed in England, for the army clothing supplies, there are only a few firms who have the capital, the machinery and the experience required to enter into a contract with the British Government for the equipment and clothing of the army. The result of our circulars was that four of the best firms of Canada tendered and the lowest tenderer received the contract. Those men entering into contracts for three years have gone to the expense of importing machinery which in some instances cost as much as $2,000 or $3,000. This machinery will cut by hydraulic power hundreds of pairs of trousers or riding breeches in a short time. The result of the system which has been organised under the protective policy which we have adopted towards the manufacturers is, that under any emergency we have got to-day within the limits of Canada a system by which we can equip any number of men in a very short period of time. When we first commenced this policy, I admit that we did not succeed well. We commenced with the dark dyes for the cloth; we took the blue and took the dark green, and it was declared to be utterly impossible for Canada to ever attempt to manufacture the scarlet cloth. It was explained by those who understood the business that the difficulty about scarlet cloth was that the whole of the factory had to be decked out in white while the dyeing process was going on, that canvas had to be put all around the factory, and it was explained that if a particle of any foreign color dropped upon the material that was going through the process of dyeing it would destroy the whole piece at an enormous loss to the manufacturer. We triumphed over those difficulties and to-day we have Canadian scarlet cloth which is declared by experts to be superior to anything manufactured in England. Why should we not be proud to do as other people do, clothe our own soldiers and find within our midst all that we require for our own wants. Why should we expend the money of Canadians in foreign markets, when we can get what we require as well at home? Now, Sir, the member for North York (Mr. Mulock) has spoken about the evidence which he produced at the Public Accounts Committee. I regret to have taken up so much of the time of the House and I have only a few words to say upon that point. He is a lawyer and I belong to the same profession, and I saw, as most hon. gentlemen must have seen, that he did not feel exactly comfortable when he was examining his witnesses. I have no doubt that before a court of justice he would wish to have better witnesses than those he produced before the Public Accounts Committee. He brought down Captain Bennett from Toronto, a grocer, to judge of the cloth, and the cut, and the fit of the tunics. A very charming gentleman this Mr. Bennett was, but he declared that really everything Canadian in so far as the uniforms were concerned, was nasty, and it did not fit; and he said that the Queen's Own, having at heart the interest of their country, had decided that it would be unbecoming for them to wear the tunics that were served out by the Department of Militia; but they had forwarded measures to England—to London tailors—and that they were going to get out the tunics. Captain Bennett produced one of these tunics. No doubt it was a remarkably well turned out tunic, it looked very nice, and I have no manner of doubt that he would look very nice in the tunic too. But, Sir, it was a very expensive tunic and we could not afford to pay that money for it. This prominent witness was brought down from Toronto and he brought down a number of tunics with him and of course he said that what were supposed to be Canadian tunics were perfectly useless and the men were ashamed to wear them. I leave it to any member of the Committee if it be not a fact that when a tunic was shown to Captain Bennett it was impossible for him to say whether it was an English tunic or a Canadian tunic—and the worst tunic that he inspected, one that he said was perfectly useless, that was of bad cloth and bad make and bad everything else, turned out to be an imported tunic from England. That is the kind of evidence upon which the hon. gentleman wishes to destroy the reputation of the administration of the Department of Militia. My hon. friend the Minister of Customs reminds me that when two tunics were placed in his hands Captain Bennett selected the better of the two, and he made no mistake about that, for the difference he saw was so great that even with his experience, he not being a clothier, nor a military tailor, but being a grocer, made no trouble about it and he immediately selected the best of the two which turned out to be a Canadian tunic. I say the hon. gentleman was a little disappointed in this for he did not expect it. Again the hon. gentleman brought down from Toronto Sergeant Major Crean, the regimental tailor of the same battalion, and he also pronounced in his opinion the inferiority of the issue of 1885. Now, Sir, I have stated candidly, and I wish to repeat it, that the beginnings of our Canadian manufacture of clothing were not a success. We had given our contracts to the lowest tenderers, and they, having no capital, produced articles which were not up to the standard. We, therefore, gave them up and adopted the principle of sending circulars to those whom we knew to be competent, from their financial position, their experience, their machinery, and the other means at their disposal, to carry out the contract. What was the result? We are producing to-day an article which I assert is superior to anything we have ever imported from England. The hon. gentleman spoke of the visit paid by some hon. members to the stores. I was glad indeed to find that some gentlemen took sufficient interest in the matter, before criticising, before giving a verdict against us, to go down the short distance necessary to visit the stores on the banks of the canal, and to inspect the clothing manufactured in Canada for Canadians. What was the result? The hon. gentleman disingenuously stated that we had goods for show and goods to serve out to our men. In the militia stores, which were filled with tunics, trousers, and every part of the equipment of a soldier, in every flat of that huge building, any gentleman was at liberty to go from one shelf to another, to take down the various parts of a soldier's equipment and inspect them, and then to say whether the hon. gentleman's statement was true, that we have clothing for show and clothing for use. Sergeant Major Crean, the regimental tailor, said the articles shown to him were not up to the mark, and he expressed the opinion that the tunics of the Queen's Own, who sent to England for them, were far superior to anything we had. The hon. gentleman might have done as Mr. Crean did. He should have gone down to the stores before making his speech to-night, if impartial enough, and should have examined those different articles of clothing for himself. Sergeant Major Crean is a good tailor, and he gets the benefit of refitting of the tunics served out to the militia force in Toronto. The hon. gentleman tried to establish before the Committee on Public Accounts that the Canadian tunics had to be refitted by a tailor. Sir, every tunic which we imported from England had to be refitted by a tailor. Sizes are given, and in some instances the men may be exactly fitted. In our Government corps we get all the tunics made according to the requisitions sent in by the commandants of the schools, and every man has to be refitted by the regimental tailor before he looks as smart as he wants to look in his tunic, and we allow 40 cents each for refitting the tunics. Sergeant Major Crean charges $2 and some cents, and of course, I can understand that. We have an ordinary tailor whose only ambition is to refit the tunic and make it fit when it does not fit; but he has not a great name to keep before the public, as Mr. Crean has, and consequently he does not charge for the name, but only for refitting the tunic. Now, here is the letter which Sergeant Major Crean sent to Senator Sanford, and it should have been beneath the hon. gentleman to charge Senator Sanford with having obtained those letters, or that they were sent to him through any pressure of mine. Hon. gentlemen who are members of the Committee on Public Accounts know that while I was not unfriendly towards Sergeant Major Crean, I made no attempt to gain his good will; but it was my duty to ask him the questions I did. Before he left for Toronto, he came to my room of his own accord in company with Color Sergeant McKell, and he said: "Sir Adolphe, before I leave for Toronto, I wish to tell you that after going through my examination before the Committee of Public Accounts, Mr. Watson asked me to go and visit the stores." Of course, the hon. gentleman who attacks Mr. Watson does not know that he is a strong political opponent of mine, and that ought to cover a good many sins. He is a good Grit, who votes steadily against us, and I have kept him because he is a good Grit; there are a few of them, and I think we ought to preserve those we have. Sergeant Major Crean went on to state that he had sent a letter to Senator Sanford, and he added, "If you will kindly send for that letter, if you require it, you can make any use of it you like." The hon. gentleman read that letter. It was good policy on his part to do so. It is a great blow to the whole of his plans, and, as a good general, he thought he should take the lead in reading it, That letter is as follows:—

"OTTAWA, 12th April, 1889.

"HON. MR. SANFORD.

"DEAR SIR,—Since giving my evidence yesterday, I have been shown the clothing now in store, which has been manufactured by the Sanford Company within the last two years. I think it is quite up to the English manufacture, both in material, workmanship, and fit, as we tried some of them on. If the Queen's Own had been served with as good clothing as I saw yesterday, I feel certain that there would not have been the dissatisfaction which now exists; and so long as the clothing is kept up to the standard of that in the stores now, there cannot be any just cause for complaint.

"Signed, JOHN F. CREAN."

The hon. gentleman may try to explain away this letter but I contend that it decides the whole matter in controversy between us. Here is the witness called by the hon. gentleman, who goes down to the stores and picks out the identical articles of clothing complained of, and he comes back and says that Canada cannot do better than it is doing for the militia force, and that if clothing such as that had been supplied to the Queen's Own, there would have been no reason for complaint. Of course the Queen's Own is a swell regiment, and its men prefer Mr. Crean to an ordinary tailor. If they prefer a swell tailor like Mr. Poole, the London tailor, they are quite free to have him if they pay the price; but they cannot expect us to pay the price, when we have already an article which is not only equal, but superior to anything that we have ever imported from England. Color-Sergeant McKell is an Englishman, and I was glad to see that we have, in Canada, Englishmen as intelligent as he to come and settle among us. He had very strong prejudices and he declared the Canadian clothing was far inferior to what it should be. He went to England and purchased his tunic, which was really very well turned out, and superior to anything we could produce, but it was lined with a most expensive lining, and the trimming and everything was perfect. Of course he could afford to pay for it, and I congratulate him on the pride he takes in the appearance of his regiment, but he cannot ask me to pay these high prices. S. C. McKell, Color-Sergeant of the Queen's Own, wrote as follows:—

"OTTAWA, 12th April, 1889.

"HON. MR SANFORD,

"SIR,—I was shown the clothing in stores. I examined the material, and also tested the fit and find it very good in both particulars, and I think that if the material used in the rifle tunics was as good as that I saw in the scarlet, there would be no ground for complaint. The material in the Rifle tunic that I saw in stores, however, is of much better quality and fit than the tunics issued to the Queen's Own for the last few years.

"Signed, S. C. McKELL."

Rome was not built in a day. The first tunics turned out were not as good as those we have now, and if the Queen's Own are a little patient they will soon get the best tunics we are, through the success of our policy, now able to turn out in Canada. The hon. gentleman one day insisted in bringing before the Committee two important witnesses, who were going to decide the whole case in his favor. The hon. gentleman did not read their evidence, but I will read it to you. Mr. Willby, manufacturer of woollen goods at Wilton, Ontario, and having 37 years' experience as a cloth manufacturer, on being sent for by the hon. member for North York gave evidence, as follows:—

"The cloth of which the English overcoats are made was of the worst possible character."

The hon. gentleman before coming into court had lawyer-like seen his witness, and the evidence of this witness was to be the culminating point of the attack, and the proof of all the charges.

"Clearly the cloth of which the English overcoats are made is of the worst possible character. I was not aware that anything so poor was manufactured in that country. It was absolute rubbish."

These are the imported goods that the hon. gentleman wanted me to continue to import, and to send a couple of hundred thousand dollars of Canadian money every year to England to import these goods.

"The Canadian coats, however, he pronounced good in style and of the best quality, and worth four times as much as the other."

Now, at this particular point, I wish to say that the system followed in England is very different from the system followed here. The life of a tunic in England is a year, and on active service it is immaterial how long it lasts. The important point in England is the cost, and it is all manufactured of the worst possible shoddy, kept together by glue and wax. But in Canada we use a tunic that is to last five years, and if we issued such rubbish to our men as Mr. Wilby says the English tunics are made of, they would not last any longer than the year. He pronounced the Canadian goods all wool and worth four times more than the other. Another witness was called by the hon. gentleman, and the hon. gentleman's witnesses save me a great deal of trouble as they prove the reverse of what he wanted them to prove:

"Mr. J. C. MacIntosh, cloth manufacturer, of Woodbridge, pronounced the English cloth worth 20 cents per yard, as against the Canadian cloth worth 80 cents, and stated that the English goods were the worst possible shoddy, held together with flour and glue, whereas all the Canadian goods were made of pure wool, and were much more durable."

These were not my witnesses. The hon. gentleman had proved enough in my favor to enable me to dispense with calling any. Senator Sanford was examined. His testimony was to the effect that he, in response to the departmental advertisement in the press from 1884 to 1886 calling for tenders, their company tendered with others, securing a portion of contract through the last two years. In 1887 their company, together with all the manufacturers who had previously tendered or manifested any desire to compete for this work, received a circular calling for tenders. His company was the lowest for a portion only of the goods required. Upon this point Senator Sanford, although a very good friend of mine and of Canada, and a man who has done his share towards developing the interests of Canada, complained of the Minister of Militia. He says:

"The Minister of Militia having called for tenders reduced my contract 12 per cent."

His contract was the lowest for the portion he had tendered to supply:

"The contract was not awarded, the department informing them that as the sum voted for the clothing of the Militia was not sufficient to permit the department giving the contract at that price, that if this company would reduce their price they should have the contract for three years, but as this would reduce their goods to cost they withdrew their tender."

Now, Senator Sanford, who has been so corrupt, finds our prices too low, and says: Keep your favors to yourself, I am going to give up this contract:

"They withdrew their tender some time later, the manufacturers of the cloth, in view of their having gone to a large expense taking skilled workmen to England to perfect them in the art of dyeing the scarlet and green, having put in expensive vats they were unwilling to loose this work, and they would reduce the price of cloth between 6 per cent. and 7 per cent. The makers also of tunics reduced their price for making rather than to loose this work during the dull season."

Here is this extravagant Minister of Militia giving the contract to the lowest tenderer, and sending for the successful competitor, and telling him that unless he reduces his prices 12 per cent. or 13 per cent. he will not get the contract. Upon the advice of my officers, upon the Order in Council—for I did not proceed upon my own responsibility, but took every precaution and laid the report of my officers before my colleagues—I was prepared to give the contract for three years in consideration of his reducing his rates and in consideration of his having imported expensive machinery and skilled labor, I said: If you will reduce your price 12 per cent. I will give you a contract for three years. Canada has benefited by this, and I would, under similar circumstances, do again exactly as I did then. Now, the hon. gentleman who expresses his deep sympathy for that militia force, hesitated somewhat when he said that some of the gentlemen belonging to that force who also commanded sufficiently the confidence of their own people to sit here to represent their interests in Canada, gave their evidence, because he says they are all behind the Treasury benches. The hon. gentleman said he was a volunteer. I never heard of his belonging to any volunteer company, but, if he belongs to the force, he must know that these witnesses came here as officers and gave their evidence on their honor as such. I did not send for grocers from Toronto to say what cloth was worth, but I took the gentlemen who had been wearing these tunics, and I said: Your men have been wearing these tunics in camp and out of camp, and they expressed their opinion in the most independent manner possible. Some said the tunics were very good indeed. Others said they might be better. My friends Colonel O'Brien, Colonel Tyrwhitt, Colonel Prior and others laid before the Committee the experience of the clothing which had been used by their own men. Could we get better evidence than that to appeal to the sense of justice of the Committee before which this investigation was going on? The hon. gentleman indignantly appealed to the House, and said that the contract had been awarded to Senator Sanford, and that he had made large contributions towards the Conservative party. Now, that is unwarranted. The hon. gentleman cannot make that statement, because he knows very well that he cannot prove it, and no man should make a statement of that kind affecting the character a gentleman sitting in the other branch of this Legislature unless he would be prepared to prove it; but, of course, the hon. gentleman knows better than I can tell him that "suspicion haunts the guilty mind," and possibly he thinks we have done what he would have done under the same circumstances. I never heard of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Mulock) being a paragon of virtue as far as electoral matters were concerned. I have heard a great many things of him in North York, but I never heard that the hon. gentleman could boast of his extraordinary virtue in connection with electoral matters. I will not go beyond this: that if the hon. gentleman is prepared to prove what he stated well and good; but if he is not it is beneath the hon. gentleman, as a member of Parliament, or, at all events, it is beneath members of Parliament to make a statement which they are not prepared to prove, attacking the character of a gentleman such as Senator Sanford. I regret to have taken up so much time. I very seldom take up the time of the House, but I felt it to be my duty, as representing the Department of Militia—though, as far as I am concerned, I am prepared to be attacked and to resist such attacks, and I do not believe this one will hurt me, and the hon. gentleman may repeat such attacks every day if he likes—but it was my duty as head of the department to stand up and say that the officers under my charge, who are at the head of the various branches, acted in the interests of Canada. They are the paid servants of the public, to look after the interests of the public, and I have no doubt that they did their duty. But for this assault which was made upon them, I would not have got up here to speak as I have spoken. The hon. gentleman has been very liberal in giving us the different portions of the evidence, and I must thank him for his courtesy in writing to me to tell me that he intended to lay upon the Table a motion attacking my department. But I must say that he left me somewhat helpless. He had asked the Committee on Public Accounts to have the evidence printed, but, pending that time, he took possession of the evidence, and, when I went up to consult the evidence and to see how I could get out of this frightful attack which has been made against me, I found that the hon. gentleman had taken all the powder away with him. However, speaking from recollection, and from the few notes I took before the Committee on Public Accounts, I trust that, although not as perfectly as I should have liked to have done, I have shown that the charges are absolutely idle, that there is nothing in them, and that the great attack of the hon. gentleman has culminated in a huge fizzle. I have proved that by the very witnesses produced by the hon. gentleman himself. I beg to express my regret at having taken up so much time, but, if I had gone over all the notes I have here, I should have taken much longer. I consider that the little I have been able to show to the House, so far as evidence is concerned, and so far as the case has been conducted before the Committee on Public Accounts, proves that we have done in the Department of Militia what it was our duty to do in the interests of Canada and of the public.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I have followed with the closest attention the long and labored argument of the hon. the Minister of Militia in reply to the statements made by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock), fortified by official documents emanating from the Minister's own department. I think, if the hon. gentleman had considered the reports which have been submitted to this House, he could hardly have arrived at the conclusion with which he seems to have satisfied himself on resuming his seat. The hon. gentleman at the commencement assumed one position, which I think was very unworthy of him and of the high position he occupies. He attempted to impute to the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) the suggestion that he was endeavoring to bring this forward because the hon. Minister happened to be a French Canadian. I thought that the Minister of Militia would have hardly condescended to the lowest level of ward political clap-trap on such an important occasion as this, in conducting a discussion in this Parliament of Canada. There was not a word from the hon. member for North York referring to the hon. gentleman as being a French Canadian. He made no such reference either directly or indirectly, but he said he believed that gentleman was not qualified by previous military training or experience to place himself in sympathy with the militia force of this country. Again, the Minister of Militia placed himself in a position which I thought, judging from my own experience—and I think it would come home to the experience of every honorable and high-minded member in this House—was a very improper position for him to assume. He endeavored to shelter himself against the accusations brought against him by my hon. friend, under the plea that he was not only following, as he said, the inspiration of the department, but he submitted a document to prove his contention that he was following the suggestions made by the officers of the department. Would that satisfy this House or this country? Does he endeavor to shelter himself behind the officers of his own department? I think every member must have felt that he was placing the officers of his department in a false position. Any honorable and high-minded man would have said: I take the responsibility of the act; I judged it in the interest of the country to follow this policy, instead of sheltering himself, as he attempted to do, behind the officers of his own department. The older members of this House will recollect that when the leader of the last Liberal Administration (Mr. Mackenzie), made a purchase of steel rails, and when he submitted to this House in justification of his action, a recommendation made by that eminent engineer, Sandford Fleming, that idea was scouted by the Conservative party in this House and throughout the country. Sandford Fleming, your authority for making a purchase of that kind, the Tory orators would say: You are the head of that department, and you must assume the responsibility, and you are placing Mr. Fleming in a false position in endeavoring to show that it was his act and not your own. Mr. Mackenzie did not do that to shield himself from responsibility, but to show that a man like Mr. Fleming, who was familiar with that class of railway articles, had committed an error of judgment, but Mr. Mackenzie took the whole responsibility of that act. So the Minister of Militia should have taken the responsibility of this act from the very commencement. The Minister made one statement to this House which I call upon the members to note. He says they had no tender from Webb & Co., of London, to furnish the militia clothing. He dwelt upon that fact as going to prove that the prices obtained from Webb & Co., in answer to a communication from the department, were only a statement of prices without any reference to their supplying the goods to the Government. Now, let us read the letter, which has already been read, which was addressed to Webb & Co., by the department, dated 29th August:

"GENTLEMEN,—I have the honor to request that you will be so good as to send in a list of the lowest prices at which you will undertake to supply for the Militia of Canada the undermentioned articles, in the event of its being decided to import such from England."

Here was an expressed desire on the part of the Government to obtain from this firm in England an offer of the prices at which they would supply the articles to the Government. Webb & Co. cabled a list to the Minister, and, subsequently, on the 16th September, wrote a letter, a part of which I will read again as going to disprove entirely the position taken by the Minister of Militia:

"In reply to your letter dated 29th August last, we beg to inform you that we have this day wired you as per copy enclosed, which we now confirm."

They then give the lowest prices which they had given by cable, and at the conclusion of the letter they say:

"The quality of the clothing and serges to be the same as used here for the regular army. We trust these prices will ensure your esteemed order."

Now, Sir, how the Minister of Militia could stand on the floor of this House and state as he did so positively, and base his argument on that one fact that they never had a tender from Webb & Co., in face of these documents which have been laid before the House from his own department, I think will surprise any hon. member who has an idea of fair dealing and proper representation that should prevail between public men in the Parliament of the country. That one statement will go to prove how much reliance can be placed on every other statement made by the Minister to-night; and if, at the commencement of these observations, I prove that the Minister has been guilty of a gross misrepresentation of the facts, I think hon. gentlemen will then arrive at a conclusion of how much importance they can attach to any other representation which fell from the hon. gentleman. The charge made by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock), while embracing a great variety of improper transactions, was mainly confined to this central proposition: You were offered, by Webb & Co, of London, English clothing at a certain price, and instead of accepting that tender you, two months afterwards, entered into a contract with Sanford & Co. for a contract for these goods on an average of 55 per cent. over the rates at which Webb & Co. offered to supply them. Has the Minister dealt with that transaction at all? No, Sir, he has not pretended to deny, he has not pretended to disprove the figures given by my hon. friend who laid the case before the House. Why, Sir, my hon. friend proved that in regard to cavalry tunics that we could import for $5, what we were paying Sanford & Co. $7.64. Again my hon. friend showed that the cavalry blue clothing of the dragoons which we could import for $3.83, we were paying Sanford & Co. $5.89. He showed again that artillery tunics which we could import for $3.92, we were paying this Hamilton manufacturer $6.04. He showed again that the infantry scarlet tunics which we could import under this offer from Webb & Co. at $3.21, we were actually paying $5 to Sanford & Co. For the rifle tunics, which we could import from England under the same tender for $3.60, we were paying $5.58½ to Mr. Sanford. Did the hon. gentleman say one word to disprove that fact, did he state it was erroneous, did he attempt to meet that plain, positive, direct issue? No. What did he do? He went off on to the National Policy, he went on all imaginary side issues he could raise, and I was surprised, I must confess, when the hon. gentleman justified his action and the policy of his Government on the ground that he was not going to spend this money in a foreign country. Is England a foreign country? Do hon. gentlemen opposite, who, whenever they feel a little jubilant, sing "God save the Queen," call England a foreign country? I had an idea that we belonged to that country. The hon. gentleman, however, repeated over and over again that the policy of his party was to spend the money in Canada and not in a foreign country. One would have thought they were referring to Russia, Turkey or Germany, but certainly no one could for one moment have supposed that they were referring to the mother country. Another point which the Minister failed to grapple and deal with was the statement made by the hon. member with respect to the military boards which had condemned his clothing. What has the hon. gentleman to say in regard to that matter? Did he make any reference to it whatever, did he attempt to explain why those eleven military boards in various parts of the country, some of them as late as 26th September, 1888, at Kingston, and in the same month in Quebec, and in August in Quebec, and July in Kingston, and June in London, and March in Victoria, and September, 1887, in Toronto, condemned his clothing. Did he endeavor to explain that those military boards were composed of men who wilfully, designedly, maliciously and politically reflected on the administration of the hon. gentleman? And did he attempt to explain that those men were unqualified to express an opinion? It is true the hon. gentleman censured or attempted to censure some of the officers of the Queen's Own who gave information as witnesses before the Public Accounts Committee. But I think the Minister will hardly go quite so far as to insult the high military gentlemen who composed those various eleven boards, sitting in the various cities of the Dominion, on the occasions to which I refer. Surely these men were not doing it simply to annoy the Minister of Militia, or the Government of which he is a member. Surely they had a higher motive than mere political animosity against the hon. gentleman! We know what was the reason. We know that the clothing which had been distributed to the various headquarters and various battalions had been of the most unsatisfactory character, that when it came to be examined by those boards, by officers competent to express an opinion, who had seen it in wear, they all pronounced a strong, a most emphatic opinion in condemnation of it. What had the Minister to say? Not one word; he never referred to the subject. Was it because he was afraid and dare not deal with it, and dare not tell those military men they did not know what they were talking about? It was rather, perhaps, because he knew that he could not deal with, in any other way. If any hon. gentleman will take the trouble to reflect for one moment and consider this great central fact, that these various boards at prominent points in the Dominion have frequently and deliberately held a survey on the clothing which has been furnished by the Government, and have condemned it with a unanimity which would astonish anyone, because it might be supposed that some one might have held a contrary opinion and have endeavored to show that under some circumstances it might have been more satisfactory. But on every occasion which has been referred to by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock), these boards have most emphatically condemned the clothing supplied by the Government. Was it because they have any feeling against the Government? I think not, because those gentlemen who were examined before the Public Accounts Committee all admitted most frankly that they were supporters of the Administration. We cannot even give credit to the manufacturers for having sent this clothing by accident. We cannot even give them the benefit of that doubt, because if there was anything poorer than that which the evidence shows was supplied to those places, the rest must have been very poor indeed. The suggestion of the manufacturer that poor clothing could be supplied to the outlying districts, the rural battalions, was an intimation which has been properly characterised by the hon. gentleman who moved this motion. In the relations which should exist between a contractor and the Government it is highly important that no such familiar terms should be used as those that were addressed by the contractor in the letter to "My dear Macpherson," and to state that it would be better perhaps, in order to avoid all scandal, that some of the clothing which was not quite so good as we would like should be sent to the country districts where we will not hear of it, where there is no public opinion, but send the best clothing to prominent places like Toronto, Montreal, and Quebec. The Minister did not tell the House what action he took upon that letter, but from the readiness with which he fell into the suggestion of the manufacturer, no doubt he fell into that suggestion as well.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Read the letter.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). It has gone to the reporters· Hon. gentlemen will find it in Hansard to-morrow morning· Did the Minister endeavor to show that those prices were not excessive at the time the contract was made? He took no opportunity to ascertain whether they were in excess of what was the legitimate price of the day. He had no right to assume that the prices in 1887 would be the same as they were in 1884. The Minister gives a list of certain wools or woollens as being the same price in 1884 and 1882. I do not pretend to be an authority on that point; but an hon. gentleman assured me to-night that wool, which in 1884 was 30 and 32 cents, was 10 cents lower in 1887. Whether that be so or not, I do not venture to say, as I am no authority; but I have the authority of an hon. gentleman, who is not now present, that such was the condition of affairs. I have no doubt about one fact, that there must have been a material falling off in the value of wool from 1884 to 1887. If the Minister had used that precaution and prudence which any business man would have exercised in his transactions, he would have been able to have secured for this country a very large saving, if he had still been determined to buy here and not import from the old country. What came out in the Committee on Public Accounts? When those various tenders were given, one was given to Mr. Sanford, another to Mr. Shorey, another to Doull & Miller of Halifax and poor Mr. O'Brien was shut out in the cold. They did not say that Mr. O'Brien's tender was not as low as any of the others. They gave Mr. O'Brien no answer with respect to his tender which had been submitted, but they said to him—and that came out in the evidence: "As we did not give you any share of the tunics we will give you the contract for overcoats at your own price, without asking anyone else to tender." That was the way that transaction was concluded. They asked no one else; they even did not ask Mr. Sanford & Co., or Doull & Miller, or Shorey & Co., but to conciliate Mr. O'Brien, after taking from him what he had formerly enjoyed and divided with the other three friends, they turned around and gave him the contract for the overcoats. Those coats were submitted to the Committee and there again the Minister of Militia, with that disingenuousness which characterised his whole argument, endeavored to throw upon the member for North York (Mr. Mulock) the accusation that he had endeavored to prove that these coats were not as good as those of English manufacture. No such statement was ever made. No exception was ever raised by that hon. gentleman or by any of us who were present. The only exception we took to that transaction was that it was given to Mr. O'Brien without competition. That was the whole ground upon which we based our objections. The hon. Minister said also that if the Toronto battalion desired to import their tunics and to look more trim and soldier-like they could do so, and he endeavored to create a laugh at their expense (which I have no doubt they will appreciate) when he pointed to the fact that they were unwilling to be clothed by the ordinary good tailor in this or any other country, but that they must go to the great English tailor, Poole & Co., to have their tunics and uniforms made. That was not the only sneer which the Minister of Militia threw out against the Queen's Own Battalion. I know nothing more about the Queen's Own than that during the time I had the honor to administer the Militia Department I always heard of them—and I have always heard of them since—as one of the smartest corps in this Dominion. If the officers and gentlemen composing the Queen's Own Regiment desire to present themselves on parade at their ordinary gatherings in neat and fitting uniforms I think the hon. gentleman should have given them credit for that desire instead of sneering at them and saying that they had to have their uniforms made by Poole, the great London tailor. I repeat that the Queen's Own will no doubt appreciate at its full value the reflection which the Minister has cast upon them. His whole argument went to ridicule the contentions of the men composing that fine battalion; his whole argument went to prove that the men composing that battalion were not satisfied as men of other battalions were and as they should be with the uniforms they received. We showed before the Committee on Public Accounts that in addition to the difference of cost between the imported and the home made article that there was a very large proportion of home made uniforms which had to be refitted, and that this cost from $2 to $3 each.

Mr. HESSON. Not true.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). The hon. member for Perth says "it is not true," and I suppose he knows a great deal upon most subjects, but I have never heard him quoted yet as a high authority on Military subjects. The only ground upon which the minister could justify this was that some of the uniforms from England have to be changed as well or the Canadian-made uniforms. That is quite true. I do not wish to present an unfair argument to the House. Some of those articles either manufactured here or brought from England have to be fitted to the men, but it was proved before the Committee that a very much smaller percentage only of the English uniforms had to be refitted, as they were cut more artistically, and more to the shape, and better made. I know nothing about the matter further than from the evidence of these military men who were examined on this subject. Now, Sir, there is another point involved in this besides the militia uniforms. We spend about $70,000 a year for the uniforms of the Mounted Police and that comes under these contracts as well. The statement made by an hon. member of this House of the cost of the clothing for the police may lead as to imagine how large the sum would run up to in view of the high prices which are paid. $70,000 a year is paid for the clothing of the Mounted Police and that is divided among the few favored clothiers of the Government. Therefore, we are not now dealing only with the militia of the country, but we are dealing as well with an equally important and costly branch of the public service the Mounted Police, and it becomes us to consider the whole question as to how the interests of this country are sacrificed to conciliate a few favored manufacturers in Canada. We have proved, that we can import a better article from the old country and at 55 per cent. less cost. I remember well when I was in the Department of Militia, and I think the same thing applies to almost the same extent to-day, though possibly not to so great an extent; that we always considered that there was a difference in value arising from the fact that English uniforms would wear for three years as against the Canadian uniforms wearing two years. There may have been improvement in Canadian manufactures since that time. I am willing to believe there has been. I do not wish to undervalue any improvements that have been made by the Canadian manufacturers, or to undervalue Canadian manufactures at all, but the only ground on which the Minister can justify the purchase of Canadian manufactures for our military service in preference to the English manufactures, is, if we can buy them on as favorable terms. The only ground on which they could justify to the people of this country or to this Parliament the giving to Canadian manufacturers any preference over the English manufacturers, would be that they serve us as well and as cheaply; but so far from that being the case, it has been established beyond doubt by the statements submitted by the department, that while we are paying 55 per cent. more, we are not obtaining a better or even as good an article as we could obtain from the English manufacturers. What will the taxpayers of this country, the great majority of the farmers, the fishermen, the agricultural laborers and the mechanics, say of this? Are you going to pay 55 per cent. more to three or four manufacturers of this country, and put hundreds of thousands of dollars into their pockets, when we have to pay the expense? I say it is a policy that should be denounced in this House, and which will be denounced by the country at large when it comes to be understood. But there are other grounds on which to justify this resolution. The administration of this department has been as unpopular with a large number of members on that side of the House as it has been with members on this side and with the country generally. I know hon. members on that side who entertain the feelings we express to-night, and who if they act on their own independent judgment, will be found supporting the resolution in your hands. On the occasion of this investigation before the Public Accounts Committee, one hon. member on that side, the hon. member for West York (Mr. Wallace) made these observations:

"We ought to proceed in the investigation, but I do not think we ought to proceed with an investigation as to whether the militia of this country are satisfied with the Minister of Militia, because I think if that was the question, there would be a unanimous opposition against the Minister of Militia."

That I believe to be the opinion honestly entertained by a very large number of hon. gentlemen opposite. Now, Sir, I will give you other reasons than this bungling in regard to the militia clothing, and they are higher considerations, because they are matters of principle. You may get over a question of dollars and cents; but if you offend a people's sensibilities, and their idea of what is right or wrong, that is a matter which cannot be righted by a vote of this House. The fact that the Minister of Militia has spent more money than he ought to have done may be commented on and deprecated by both sides of this House; but when he undertakes to deal with the great and important matters connected with his department, in a narrow, prejudiced and unprofessional manner, he offends the amour propre of every military man in this country. What did we find here a short time ago in connection with pensioning the relatives of Sergeant Valiquette? That man, who unfortunately lost his life in the North-West, left a father, a mother, two brothers and three sisters, who were granted a pension of $397 per annum, whereas, if the man had lived and had been able to work as he had been doing, he would have earned $273, or $35 less than was paid to his family after his death. I denounced that on the floor of this House, and the leader of the Government was so surprised at the statement that he promised to investigate the matter, and see that the law was properly carried out; but up to the present moment no change has been made in that matter. Then, again, we had occasion lately to mention a political appointment made to the command of the Military College. We saw that the political influence of the High Commissioner had secured the appointment as commandant of his son-in-law, who had retired from the service a year and a half or two years before, and who would have been completely disqualified from holding any such position in the old country. I say that was a political appointment for a political purpose, which is most destructive of the confidence the people of this country should enjoy in all our institutions. During the time I administered the affairs of that department, strong as my political views and sentiments are on all public questions, I never allowed my political feelings to enter into any part of the administration of that department. I had the proud satisfaction of hearing, during the short time that I administered its affairs, that I enjoyed the confidence, not only of the department, but of a large portion of the military throughout the country; and I can point with some satisfaction to a remark made across the House last Session by the right hon. leader of the Government, that he had always understood that I had fairly administered the business of the Militia Department. I remember on one occasion I found that by a system of service of so many years as a captain made a man a major, and a major a colonel, until every battalion throughout the country was getting full of majors and colonels; and with my own knowledge of what was right and wrong and good for the service, I put an end to that, and compelled every man to serve so many years before he could reach the higher grades; and the hardest stroke on that occasion fell upon some of my own friends. I remember the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), who was then Finance Minister, coming to me with a letter, and saying: "A friend of mine has written to me complaining of the order you have issued, under which he is prevented from obtaining his majority, which he would have obtained in three days had your order not been issued." He did not ask me any particular favor, but he wanted to know what I should do. I said: "The answer you will have to convey to your friends is this, that the Minister of Militia regrets very much that he did not enter three days before he did." I refused in so small a matter as that to be influenced by political feeling, and no man from one end of this country to the other can point to any act of political favoritism on my part during the time I had charge of that department. There is a position connected with the department which hon. members of this House who belong to the service, and other military men in the Dominion have always naturally and very properly aspired to, viz, the command of the Wimbledon team. And men have heretofore been taken who have been identified with the militia service of the country. The officers selected hitherto have invariably been men who have served in various regiments, or who were in command of battalions to which they were attached, and men who have rendered yeomen's service in the militia force. What do we see now? The Minister of Militia takes a clerk out of his department who never commanded a regiment or a battalion, and places him over the head of old and faithful militiamen to command the Wimbledon team. I say it is an outrage, which the military instinct of the country will rebel at. I have nothing to say against Colonel Bacon individually, because I know nothing in any respect for or against him. No doubt he fills his position very well, but it was an insult to the military instincts of the country to take a clerk out of the department and place him in command of the Wimbledon team when he had men who had identified themselves with the militia affairs of the country and had served in the field in many ways, and who deserved recompense at the hands of the Minister of Militia. The hon. gentleman said that I was giving particular attention to the Militia Department. I always have and shall always do so, as long as I have a seat in this House. I served in the Militia Department a short time, but during that time found every man connected with the department ready to render me every possible service and information. No public man ever was associated with a better set of officers and men than I was during the time I occupied the position of Minister of Militia. They were strangers to me when I entered the office, but rendered me the most cordial assistance and co-operation, and when I left the department it was with the good will and kindly feeling of every one connected with it. Therefore, I shall always continue to take an interest in the department, and for that reason I do not wish to see its influence destroyed. I do not wish to see an hon. member like the Minister of Militia, by his capriciousness and his political designs and aspirations, introduce into every branch of the department an idea which is going to work a serious wrong to the militia generally. That one department should stand above all political considerations and be administered from public necessity alone. For this reason it is I have endeavored to criticise and to bring before the House anything wrong in the department which required a remedy. I do so, not from any feeling of animosity towards the Minister of Militia, but because I have been enabled to gauge public opinion in this House and the country, and can see that he has not been administering his department according to the well understood wishes of the people and the interests of the militia force. I believe many hon. members opposite share my views and I hope that on an occasion like this, when party feeling should be thrown aside, they will join with us in the endeavor to remedy the evils in the administration of the Militia Department, and endeavor to have that department administered in the interests of the country and not of political hangers-on.

Mr. KENNY. There are few questions in which the public and this Parliament are more concerned, Mr. Speaker, than on the question of militia and national defence. There is hardly one that appeals more strongly to that sense of patriotism which should animate every man. As regards the militia management I do not stand here as its defender. I suppose like many other matters of public concern it may not be perfect, but when it is to be criticised, it should be criticised fairly, impartially and honestly, and when an hon. gentleman stands up here and poses before us as an assailant of the militia force and the administration of the Militia Department we ought to consider who he is. When the senior member for Halifax stands up, as he frequently does, and reminds us that once upon a time he was Minister of Militia of Canada, we have the right to ask how he administered that department. During the short time he served there, what was the principal feature of his administration? I cannot tell now from memory whether that hon. gentleman occupied that position six or eighteen months, but it was long enough for the people of Canada and the people of Nova Scotia, for on the very first occasion on which that gentleman appealed to the constituency of Halifax to endorse his administration of the Militia Department the electors of that constituency told him that his administration was—shall I use the hon. gentleman's own words?—" unworthy of his high position." I have the right to apply to the hon. gentleman the language he applied to the Minister of Militia. It is a language I am not personally in the habit of using, and I took it down as it fell from the hon. gentleman's own lips:

" Unworthy of his position, unworthy of a high-minded gentleman, narrow, prejudiced, unprofessional, and offending the amour propre of every militiaman of Canada."

That hon. gentleman's administration of the militia was such that on the very first occasion when he appealed to his constituents at Halifax he was defeated by an overwhelming majority. Let us look at that hon. gentleman's conduct, from 1878, when he was driven out of office for his maladministration, down to the present year. From 1878 down to 1888, he has never said one kind word of the militia of Canada. Any reference he made was in the shape of a sneer or an insult. When hon. gentlemen stand up here and claim consideration because they have served the Militia Department of Canada faithfully, it is well this House should be reminded of how they conducted themselves when the Militia of Canada were taxed in a way in which they had never been taxed before. When the unfortunate rebellion broke out in the North-West Territories and a regiment was ordered from the city of Halifax, the whole community was excited. Wives were separated from their husbands, mothers and fathers from their sons, but the people of Halifax, farther away from you than any other portion of this great Dominion, responded as cheerfully to the call of duty as did the citizens of Toronto, Montreal and Quebec. There was one man in that community from whom we had a right to expect a good example. We had the ex-Minister of Militia in that community, and during all that time he had nothing but sneers and unkindness for the militia of his own country. He has accused the Minister of Militia of sneering at the Queen's Own, because the Minister explained that that corps, being composed of gentlemen of wealth, desired very laudably that their clothing and equipments should be of better quality than the country can afford for the militia generally. The Minister of Militia explained candidly that he found no fault with the Queen's Own; but, when the Halifax regiment was ordered to the North-West, the ex-Minister of Militia, who poses as such a pattern that every other Minister of Militia must follow his example, had nothing but sneers for the regiment from his own city. I defy any man to search the press of Halifax when that regiment was leaving for the North-West, when appeals were made and subscriptions were made for them, to find on record from the ex-Minister of Militia a kind word or a kind act for that regiment. Are we to hear criticisms of this kind and to sit silently by? When questions of national defence are before the House, are these men to tell our Ministers what they are to do? No man who knows the career of that hon. gentleman (Mr. Jones) can listen to such remarks with ordinary patience. I have not the honor of being a member of the Committee on Public Accounts, but by accident I strayed into the Committee room when an hon. gentleman who occupies a prominent place in the other end of this building was under examination, and I heard enough of the evidence to satisfy me that the hon. gentleman who had assumed the role of cross-examiner was exceedingly dissatisfied with his witness. Any man who is engaged in the business in which I am engaged knows that no firm in Canada stands higher than the firms of Sanford & Co., James O'Brien & Co., Shorey & Co., and Doull & Miller. I was gratified to learn that in Canada to-day we are much more advanced in manufacturing productions than my knowledge of the business led me to believe, and I was exceedingly gratified to hear that these uniforms can be produced in Canada of excellent quality, and that we can manufacture them within our own country, which I think is eminently desirable. There was a most amusing incident connected with the investigation before the Public Accounts Committee. It followed the examination of the hon. Senator. A witness was called by the hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Bergin), whose absence now is very much to be regretted, and it turned out that this witness was an employé of the Mowat Government. It appeared that the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) had been in correspondence with that gentleman, and the witness had to admit, during his cross-examination, that he had been a constant assailer of the Department of Militia and of the hon. gentleman who administers that department, and that his nom de plume was "Linchpin." I must say that the gentlemen who were criticising the Minister of Militia made very little out of the examination of that gentleman. I regret exceedingly that these papers were not printed. I think it is very unfortunate that, on a matter of this character, in which we all take great interest, all the information should have been restricted to the hon. gentlemen who are members of the Committee on Public Accounts. Before the discussion was introduced, before commercial men were assailed, men who occupy as good a position before the country as those who assail them, it would have been better for the House to have had the opportunity of looking over the evidence. But, taking the statement of the Minister of Militia and comparing it with that of hon. gentlemen opposite, I do not think there is much fault to be found with the clothing. I have served in the militia in years gone by, and I profess to take a deep interest in all that concerns it, and I think that, before anyone poses as an authority on this matter, he should satisfy us that he is at heart and in earnest a friend of the militia of Canada.

Mr LISTER. It would be a somewhat amusing thing for this House to watch the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) when the senior member (Mr. Jones) is speaking, because if the junior member did not rise immediately after the senior member had spoken who knows what the result would be? I think there must be an underground string in some way arranged between the two sides of the House, because I have observed that, as soon as the senior member takes his seat, the junior member springs up with surprising elasticity, and it is evident that, no matter on what subject the senior member speaks, the junior member will not fail to do his duty, but will get up and face the difficulty whether he knows anything about the subject or not. It is evident that he feels it to be his peculiar duty to oppose everything which the senior member supports. Has the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny), I would like to ask him, been always as zealous in defending the Minister of Militia as he has been to-night? Has he not this Session spoken very strongly against the Minister of Militia and the administration of his department? How is it that, to-night, we find the hon. gentleman speaking so fervently in defence of that Minister? Is it possible that he has got the claim of Mr. Tobin settled, in regard to which he has been dodging about the department for the last two months? Is it possible that the acerbity which characterised him in the past has been mollified by the action of the Minister of Militia, so that my hon. friend now defends him as kindly and as zealously as a sucking dove? He talks of the senior member for Halifax sneering against the militia. Does he know what he is talking about? Does he know that that hon. gentleman controlled the Department of Militia before he had a seat in this House? His record is before the country, and nothing the hon. member can say can affect his reputation in Halifax and throughout this country. Does the hon. gentleman forget that the senior member for Halifax was elected by a much larger majority than he received? As to the ordering out of the volunteers, did not the senior member (Mr. Jones) desire just what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Kenny) wanted, that the volunteers of Halifax should be asked to volunteer for the service instead of being ordered out without regard to the necessities of the people or their families?

Mr. KENNY. The people of Halifax know all about it.

Mr. LISTER. Does he not know that the martial spirit of the young men of Halifax animating them as it does, would have induced vastly more men to volunteer for that service than the country demanded? Then why does he attempt to refute the senior member for Halifax? Sir, many hon. gentlemen sitting opposite me know that the administration of the Militia Department of this country, has been scandalous in the extreme.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. LISTER. Hon. gentlemen who know nothing about it may say "oh, no," but people who do understand it know that it is so. The expenditure for the Militia Department has been doubled, and the efficiency of the department has been little or any increased. The Minister of Militia has violated the cardinal principles which should prevail in the Government of this country, inasmuch as he has awarded contracts for the military supplies to political friends without tender and at prices greatly in excess of what they ought to have been purchased, the articles being inferior to what they ought to have been. Does not that hon. gentleman know that from one end of this country to the other, for the past three or four years' complaints have been coming in to the department that the clothing furnished to the militia has been inferior in every respect? Why, Sir, the hon. gentleman, in the Committee, said that the men ought to grow to the clothing, instead of the clothing being made to fit the men. To my knowledge a company going out of my town and serving for 14 days, came back ragged and tattered and torn, because the men had been furnished with nothing but shoddy cloth to cover their backs. The Minister, for the purpose of assisting political apostates who are paid for following the Government, has disregarded the principle which ought to prevail in the administration of the department. We find him, without inviting tenders from people who are prepared to furnish these articles, giving contracts for three years to political friends of the Government, to political apostates, at prices 60 per cent. more than these same articles could have been supplied from other sources. What do we find? He sends a circular around to four manufacturers of military clothing, and he awards a contract to three of these men, after he has information from England that the price he was giving them was 60 per cent. higher than the articles were worth, and much inferior than could be furnished from England. James O'Brien, of Montreal, was one of the men who had received a circular from the Government. James O'Brien was never told that his tender was not accepted. But in order to make political capital, for reasons for which the hon. gentleman knows — and which I can tell him if he does not know—James O'Brien was never told that he was not to receive a portion of the contract for clothing; and, without notifying him at all, the Minister asked him to tender for overcoats, and he was awarded the contract for overcoats at prices fixed by the department. James O'Brien furnished the overcoats, and no tenders were ever asked for them from anybody, but at the ipse dixit of the Minister of Militia the contract was awarded. I want to tell the hon. gentleman that we have no Czars in this country. His conduct will be criticised by the people, and if his actions in the administration of the department are such as will not bear the light of criticism, he must expect the consequences. I say I am voicing the feelings of the volunteers from one end of the country to the other when I say that the administration of the department has been scandalous in the extreme, that favoritism has been shown in that department to political friends. Need we go less than 300 miles from this place to find that, as compensation given for the grossest political apostacy, he has put into the hands of one man tens of thousands of dollars yearly, without tender and without contract, at prices 60 per cent. more than the articles could be furnished, and for articles so inferior that they could not be worn for the short time of 14 days. The time has come when the Minister of Militia should vacate his place and a better man should occupy it. There is nothing but discontent pervading the militia force of this country, there is the feeling that the Minister of Militia has lost his usefulness, and that his place should be filled by some other man more abreast with the times, who knows the wants of the volunteers of this country. If we are to spend a million and a quarter a year upon the volunteers of our country, surely we have a right to expect that the money shall be honestly and properly expended, and not be expended for the purpose of rewarding the friends of the Minister. It is time for every man who takes an interest in militia matters to express his opinion on the administration of the affairs of that department. I say to the members of this House who are members of the militia force of this country, if you feel to-night as you have felt in the past, it is your duty to vote against the administration of that office. I repeat again that from what I have seen, from what I know as a member of the force, and as a member of the Public Accounts Committee before whom this matter has been brought, the administration of that office has been little less than dishonest—to put in the mildest terms. The hon. gentleman has neglected the duties pertaining to that office in awarding the contracts as he has done. If hon. members are content with the conduct of this department, then, of course, we will have to submit until the people of the country have an opportunity of passing a verdict upon this case. But I believe that, from all the evidence that has been brought forward, the House will find the Minister of Militia guilty of the charges brought against him.

Mr. HESSON. If anything could show that the hon. gentleman who brought this matter up has got a bad case, it is the tone of the address of the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. If he were actuated by the motive which hon. gentlemen, I presume, on that side of the House would rather have it understood as being proper motives to actuate hon. gentlemen in the discussion on this subject, he would not have lost his temper in the way he did, or have used language that appeared to me to be not only ungentlemanly but exceedingly improper on the floor of this House. The hon. gentleman had a very weak case when he abused an hon. member who thought it his duty to rise in his place and point out that the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), who has to-night posed as a friend of the volunteers, had in other places acted altogether in a different direction. That hon. gentleman's management of the Militia Department has not yet been forgotten in Canada. We all remember perfectly well that he was at no time considered a very brilliant man or a warm friend of the volunteers, nor had he a reputation as a man who would stand up either for the volunteers of Canada or for the motherland and the old British flag. If there is anything to show the failure of the attack upon the Minister of Militia and the administration of that department, it is to be found in the evidence produced before the Committee on Public Accounts—and hon. gentlemen opposite will give me credit for watching proceedings pretty carefully—and the evidence produced by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) to a large extent showed that he was actuated by personal motives, instead of honestly attempting to act in the interests of the country.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. FISHER. I ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw that statement?

The DEPUTY SPEAKER. I did not understand the hon. gentleman to say that the motives, although personal, were improper.

Mr. HESSON. I say that if the hon. gentleman was not actuated by personal motives in his attack, if he had an honest desire to promote the interests of the country, he would not have made the attack he did. I watched the proceedings before the Public Accounts Committee very carefully. The hon. gentleman had the fullest opportunity to produce all the evidence he could produce. He had been in correspondence for a long time with different parties, and the House has had evidence of this from the numerous letters the hon. gentleman has read; in fact, he was fishing everywhere to find some gentleman to lay a charge against the administration of the Department of Militia. If there was anything likely to prove that those charges were bad, it is found in the character of the attack made on the Minister and on the evidence submitted to the Committee, and in my opinion it was the most utter failure I have witnessed since I have been in Parliament. I have never witnessed any case that has so utterly broken down in spite of all the privileges which have been afforded the hon. gentleman to produce his evidence, and that evidence consisted of testimony of men who were no doubt dissatisfied with the supplies furnished them, and I dare say they are not alone in this respect. Before I take my seat, I shall show that there is good reason why they are not all satisfied with the supplies furnished by the department. One after another the witnesses before the Committee testified that they did not know whether the goods were of Canadian make or not; all they knew was that they had been issued to them by the department. The evidence of the hon. gentleman's own witnesses was of this character, that they knew they had received a distribution of tunics and other supplies after the return of the troops from the North-West, and those supplies had not proved satisfactory. They believed those were Canadian goods, but when they were confronted with the fact that there was no contract with Canadian contractors, and that the stock on hand was composed of English supplies, when those gentlemen found the evidence as to the bad value, and that the high charge of from $2 to $3 was made for altering a tunic, when it was shown that these goods were almost all, if not entirely, taken from the supplies in stock which had been brought to this country in 1885 and 1886 from England, and before contracts were made with those gentlemen with whom so much fault is now being found, when this was shown by experts and by officers in charge of the goods and it was shown distinctly that they were English goods, the whole case utterly failed. When the hon. gentleman's own witnesses were taken down to see the stock supplied by Canadian contractors, and when the hon. gentleman by way of taking the wind out of the sails of the Minister read a letter stating that those gentlemen, after seeing the stock supplied by our Canadian manufacturers honestly admitted they were superior to English goods, the hon. gentleman might have allowed the case to drop. But he had made such utterances and such promises with respect to exposing the contractors and the department that he could not permit himself to allow the matter to be dropped without allowing it to be brought before the House. The hon. gentleman's own witnesses turned upon him; and when the hon. gentleman's own supporters saw the case was utterly broken down, even so far as his own evidence was concerned, many of them left the room, until at last only two or three were left when he was conducting his examination. With respect to these goods I have some knowledge, after handling dry goods for forty years. There is not an intelligent man in this House who, if the goods were laid before him, would not say that the very best were Canadian goods.

A hon. MEMBER. Oh, oh.

Mr. HESSON. The hon. gentleman may laugh, but let him go down and look at the samples of English goods in stock. I do not deny that the first issue of Canadian stock was not very good; but these goods are now manufactured as perfectly as any goods manufactured in England. The department deserve credit for procuring contractors who can, with the appliances they possess, turn out a satisfactory and valuable article, besides giving employment to our own people. With respect to contracts being given without advertising for tenders: In that respect hon. gentlemen opposite should not complain, when it is remembered that only 5 firms tendered after advertisements had been issued throughout the country. One I believe undertook to supply stock in Ottawa, and as some portion of the stock had to be farmed out the contractor was not able to turn out a very excellent article; but those who had tendered under the advertisements of 1886-87, who had been tried and given satisfaction, and they being the only firms in Canada who could undertake such large contracts and go to such an enormous expense to prepare themselves to take them—I say the reason given by the Minister for not going to an expense of $1,000 or $2,000 to advertise in every newspaper of the country, when there are only four firms who are thoroughly qualified to do the work, is a reason that should cover the whole case. It was stated by Sergeant Crean, of the Queen's Own, that for such tunics as are now furnished by the department he would have to charge $10.25 to get up, whereas the Government contract with the Canadian manufacturers was but $5. Sergeant Crean was charging from $2 to $3 for altering tunics, but it was shown they were of the issue of English goods, not Canadian. At this time of the evening I do not desire to prolong the debate, but I felt that as a member of the Committee I had a right to say that, so far as my judgment goes, I am perfectly satisfied that as regard the administration of the Department of the Minister of Militia there is no ground for this vile attack upon the Minister, an attack that was utterly uncalled for after the evidence submitted to the Committee.

Mr. HICKEY. I did intend to make some lengthened remarks on this question, but as the hour is late I shall content myself with only a few observations. I believe that the very full and very eloquent speech of the Minister of Militia has completely met the charges which so maliciously and so unnecessarily have been brought before this House by the member for North York (Mr. Mulock). As to the quality of the goods supplied to the militia, it was quite evident to the Public Accounts Committee, of which I am a member, that the Canadian goods were superior to the English goods. It has been urged by the member for Halifax (Mr Jones), and some other hon. members on the other side of the House, that we paid a higher price for the Canadian article than we did for the English; but even admitting that, the fact was clearly proved to the Committee that the Canadian goods were at least 50 per cent. better than the English goods. It was shown also that the make and finish of the Canadian clothing was unexceptionable, and any man who has a streak of patriotism in his veins ought to be proud that such goods were manufactured here and purchased in our own country. We know that advertisements for tenders for these supplies had been published up to 1886. In England—great England—whose practice we were asked to follow, does not advertise for tenders for such supplies, but issues circulars the same as the Department of Militia did in this instance. The fact that only five firms in Canada responded to the advertisement up to 1887 was a sufficient reason for the Militia Department to appeal to those to do the work in future, and no hon. gentleman who reasonably considers the matter will deny this. It has been charged against Mr. Sanford that he got this contract for corrupt purposes, but it has been shown that while Mr. Sanford's tender was lower than any other, the Minister of Militia refused to give him the contract, and said to him: You must lower your price by 15 per cent. or you cannot have the contract. Mr. Sanford and his company could not accept this offer in justice to themselves, but rather than that this work should go out of the country, they conferred with the manufacturers of the cloth, and with the tailors who were to make the clothing, and these two parties both agreed to lower their prices so that the contract might be continued in Canada. There was a patriotism in that action which should be made known to the public and which is worthy of praise. Through the efforts of the Militia Department, and through the desire of Mr. Sanford (whose enterprise and energy as a business man every Canadian must be proud of, as well as they should be proud of his high character) that this industry should be developed in Canada, we have succeeded in producing that fine quality of scarlet cloth which cannot be excelled in any country, and which is worth 50 per cent. more than the scarlet cloth manufactured in England, the greatest manufacturing country in the world. I hold that through the efforts of the Minister of Militia we have been enabled to have this quality of goods manufactured in Canada—a quality far superior to that exhibited by the couple of gentlemen from Toronto who imported the material from England. The success of our Canadian manufactures in this industry is an important matter for the country, and every Canadian ought to be proud of the success achieved. Some gentlemen on the other side have tried to blame Senator Sanford because, as they say, he had written to the department to the effect that some goods which were not so well-fitting as others should be sent to the country districts. As a member of this House I feel bound to protect Senator Sanford in his absence. The fact is that these goods which were objected to were of the same cloth exactly as the best goods manufactured, but they were not as well sheared as the others, and it was natural to suggest that the battalions in the country districts would probably have less objection to them than the city corps would. That suggestion after all was not such a desperate thing as some hon. gentlemen on the Opposition benches would have us believe. It has been repeatedly told us by the member for Lambton (Mr. Lister), the member for Halifax (Mr. Jones), and the member for North York (Mr. Mulock), whose animus in this matter has originated in prejudice and ignorance, that we pay a higher price for Canadian than for English goods, and that the Canadian goods were inferior. Never was a statement more false made to intelligent men. I am quite sure that any gentleman who will go down and visit the stores, and examine the uniforms and materials there, will be satisfied that any person who would grumble at the supplies given out by the Minister of Militia would be very hard to please indeed. The Minister of Militia has very fully answered the charges which have been made against him, and I believe that every hon. member of this House who wishes to take an impartial view of the subject will believe that in the matter of this military clothing the country got good value for its money. The fact is that the issue of 1887 was 15 per cent. lower in price than the issues of 1884 and 1885. Under the system of advertising for tenders adopted in 1885, the contract was jobbed out to everybody, the qualities got mixed up, through no fault of the department, because the contracts were taken by persons who had neither the experience nor the facilities to make the uniforms in such a manner as would be creditable to the country, and the Queen's Own, no doubt, got some of these uniforms which were purchased as a result of the advertising system. The Minister of Militia like a wise man, like a faithful man, and like a patriotic man caring for his people (and especially for the militia over which he was the special guardian), saw that this system of 1885 would not suit the requirements of the service and immediately he took steps to accomplish the great work which he has achieved of having the clothing supplies for the militia manufactured in our own country. That is a result which every Canadian ought to be proud of. The hon. member for Halifax referred to the overcoats supplied by Mr. O'Brien, but we must remember that in the Public Accounts Committee neither the hon. member nor his friends ventured to criticise the quality of the overcoat, because it was much superior to anything that could be purchased in England; neither did they criticise the price, with which they appeared to be satisfied also. I may state that one member of the Opposition, who is a merchant and who is well qualified to speak on the subject, said that the Canadian goods were 50 per cent. better than the imported goods. Before the Public Accounts Committee all the inferior goods produced and which were found fault with, were not of Canadian make. I believe that any gentleman in this House who has witnessed the character of the person who to-night moved this resolution condemning the Minister of Militia, will be satisfied that the resolution did not come from any desire on his part to promote the best interests of the country. It should be remembered that Sergeant Major Crean, who was a witness, whose letter the Minister of Militia read to-night, acknowledged that the Canadian goods, before the Committee, were perfectly satisfactory; and the member for North York (Mr. Mulock) knowing this well, knowing that most of those inferior goods were not of Canadian manufacture and were not made by Mr. Sanford, tried to leave the House under the impression that the objectionable goods were of Mr. Sanford's make and ought to be condemned. In view of all the circumstances, I believe that the House is justified in supporting the Militia Department and the policy it has pursued.

Mr. TYRWHITT. Probably you, Sir, and many other members of this House, are not aware that I am a resident of the county which is represented by the hon. mover of the resolution now before the House. Having watched his course during the number of years that we have had the opportunity of being here together, I am extremely gratified to find that he takes such an active interest in militia matters, and I should be still more gratified did I not believe him to be actuated not so much by a desire to see the militia of the country prosper, as to gain a little favor in the eyes of the militia in the county in which we live. I may say, for the information of hon. members with whom I am not acquainted, that I have been in the active militia for about 26 years, or two-thirds of my life, and during that time I have attended almost every camp in this country east and west. I have never during that time missed any camp or missed taking part in any service in the country in which it was possible for me to be engaged. Though I cannot profess to be a very great judge of clothing, I certainly must have had some little experience with it, though I should have been more satisfied possibly if the debate in the House had reference to matters with which I have been more particularly connected, that is the active service in the field, and the manner in which that part of our duties should be conducted. The hon. member for North York has challenged myself and other members from the Toronto district to deny that discontent exists in the volunteer force there. I most emphatically deny, Sir, that any such animus or discontent, or any such mutinous spirit among the men, as the hon. member has described, exists in that district even in the slightest degree. I may also inform that hon. gentleman and the House that the officers in command in that district see to it that no such mutinous spirit is allowed to exist. I may state that one member of my own regiment undertook to correspond with the Militia Department during the last annual drill without my knowledge, and I think it is a great pity that the hon. member for North York should not have been put into communication with that individual. He was a private in No. 4 Company, named Wolfe. I shall be very happy to give the hon. gentleman his address, and I have no doubt this man will be glad to furnish him with some very valuable information as to his treatment during the time he served in the force, and the cause of his leaving it. I heard accidentally that this member of my regiment had been corresponding with the Militia Department at Ottawa and making complaints. Amongst other things, I believe he complained that the quantity of rations allowed to the force was insufficient, that he was improperly treated, and that he had too much work to do—it was drill morning, noon and night, and very often he was on guard at night. Having heard this casually, I did not consider it my duty to investigate the matter very thoroughly. However, a short time afterwards, I overheard this man making use of this mutinous language, and I may describe to the hon. member for North York the treatment which we accord to those who exhibit that sort of spirit. I had this man brought into my presence, I ordered him on knapsack drill for the remainder of the camp, and to be dismissed from the force at the expiration of the camp. I am not quite sure whether that is good law, but it is the system I have followed during the time I have been in the service. I have known that system to promote—I was going to say good feeling—certainly good discipline in the force, and I have never had any difficulty in obtaining good, intelligent and efficient men. I may also say that under this system, which is not peculiar to the 36th Regiment alone, but which prevails I think throughout the Toronto district, in the camp last year my battalion was 20 over strength, and the difficulty the commandant of the camp had to encounter was not to fill up the ranks, but to know what was to be done with the spare men. So popular was the service, possibly owing to this treatment which we accord to the men who serve under us, that we were troubled with having too many men flocking to our standard. In making out my parade statement in Toronto, I found that I had exactly my strength, but the next day I found that I was twenty over strength. I suppose that these men, knowing that I had been 26 years in the service, and knowing the strict discipline enforced, smuggled themselves into our ranks; and I believe the same was the case with other battalions. Now, I know whereof I speak, for the simple reason that I have been in a camp with the different battalions in the Toronto district. I think I am safe in saying that I know every officer in that district; I am also safe in saying that I know personally a very large percentage of the men serving in the different regiments; and I can say that the service is most popular in the Toronto district, and that we are troubled with a superabundance of men. That does not look as if the service were unpopular or as if the force generally were dissatisfied with the Minister of Militia. Now, the mode of obtaining information which has been pursued by the hon. member for North York is, I must confess, to my mind, looking at the matter from a military point of view, a rather improper one; and I will take this opportunity of warning him that if I find him corresponding with any of my junior officers, and attempting to create discontent in my ranks, I will take proceedings to have him punished. I consider that if the hon. member had wished to procure evidence—and I think the hon. member for Shelburne (Gen. Laurie) will bear me out—it was his duty to have gone to the commanding officers of the different regiments, and asked their permission to obtain the information he desired. In every regiment we can find soreheads. In almost every section we can find men dissatisfied with the existing state of things. But I am happy to say that the Toronto district is an exception at any rate. Another thing I would like to say is that in the Toronto district we recognise no politics in the force whatever. The best captain in my battalion to-day is a member of the Reform party, and a very active one.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell.) That is quite natural.

Mr. TYRWHITT. For the simple reason that we acknowledge no politics. We never allow politics to be discussed, and it is only proper that the Militia Department and everything connected with it should be non-political. This resolution has gone over a very extensive sphere, but I think the object of the hon. member for North York was to prove more particularly that the country had not received value for its money in the way of clothing. I am not a very good judge of cloth myself, but I have seen and worn a great many different uniforms. I have never found any difficulty in fitting my men with the uniforms supplied to us by the different Ministers of Militia. In fact, until I entered this House I paid very little attention as to who occupied the position of Minister of Militia. I contented myself with working in the militia in the sphere to which I belonged. But with regard to the clothing, I have taken some little interest in it since I have entered the House. The clothing of my corps has been altogether of English manufacture, and, except that the sizes are small and we should prefer larger sizes, for the reason, perhaps, that my part of the country grows men a little over the average size, I have no complaint to make. I take enough interest in the militia to visit the stores every year, since I have been coming to this House, and am pleased to say that the clothing manufactured in Canada is, in my opinion, much superior to that which was supplied us formerly. I know nothing of shoddy, but I know I have never in my experience seen a scarlet tunic wear out quickly under fair treatment, and as for this discoloration, and all these fine points brought forward, I can only attribute them to causes other than those described. In speaking of the fine regiments which come to camp with me annually, I will not say anything of the Toronto corps, except that I, as well as other Ontario people, am justly proud of the excellence which the Toronto regiments have attained. On this point I will quote a remark made by Sir Henry Wilmot, President of the National Rifle Association, who, perhaps owing to my being present, alluded to the Toronto regiments and spoke of them as two of the finest regiments in Her Majesty's service. I can only repeat what I have said that no such mutinous spirit as has been ascribed to the militia exists in my district at any rate. There is one little matter which has been before the House and which the hon. member for North York never fails to introduce, and that is the kit allowance of the York-Simcoe Battalion. I know the members of that corps pretty well. I think they number about 350 men, and I flatter myself that 350 of them are personal friends of mine. Possibly the hon. member for North York imagines I am here neglecting the interests of my friends. I must say I agree with him to a certain extent in the conduct he has ascribed to the Minister of Militia; and I must say that it has been my experience almost every time I approached the hon. gentleman with a view of getting any money, that it is not only very hard to get him to pay his just debts, but sometimes he takes very peculiar views on the subject. One was that we were not entitled to a kit allowance, although I am pleased to see we are going to receive what I always contended we should receive; and I feel it my duty to thank, not the Minister of Militia, but the First Minister, who, I believe, through the influence he used with the Minister of Militia, obtained for us this favor which the Minister of Militia, in his wisdom, thought heretofore we were not entitled to. For my part I am prepared to defend in the future, as I have attempted to do in my quiet way in the past, the few thousand men who have passed through my hands in the counties of York and Simcoe.

Mr. PRIOR. I did not intend to make any remarks on this subject to-night, but I will say this in regard to British Columbia that the clothing for the militia there has been more statisfactory within the last couple of years than it was before. I do not think I need say anything more, because I think the Minister of Militia has, in a most brilliant and able speech, convinced this side of the House, at all events, that he has done his best to give good clothing to the militia. I rise, however, to take exception to the extraordinary remarks of the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) when he commended the hon. the senior member for Halifax for not assisting the militia when they were going to the North-West, because they were ordered out instead of being asked to volunteer. This is the first time that I have heard anybody take exception to the militia being ordered out. I, as an officer of militia, am proud to stand here and express the sentiments of my brother officers in saying we are ready to be ordered out by any proper authority, and I cannot see why the hon. gentleman came to the conclusion that the militia should be expected to volunteer on every occasion. We are paid by the Government and are ready to do our duty and risk our lives if necessary. There is not a man in the ranks wearing the uniform of Her Majesty who is not willing to be ordered out on every conceivable occasion when the proper authority calls on him to support law and order. It would not be right that the assertion of the hon. gentleman should go to the country, and that outside of this House people should think that the militia of Canada expected to be allowed to volunteer and was not ready to go out when ordered.

Mr. DENISON. I only wish to say a few words in reply to the question of the hon. member for North York, asking if there is any disaffection in the Toronto district. There was some grievance there before this Session. I refer to the York-Simcoe kit allowance, and if that matter had not been settled, probably I would support this resolution. But the Government have removed that grievance, and the men are satisfied. As to the remarks of the hon. the Minister of Militia, I do not see how the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) could have construed them as being anything against the Queen's Own. I understand the Minister to speak in the highest terms of the regiment and I am sure that those are his opinions, because the Queen's Own is one of the best regiments in the militia.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. Hear, hear.

Mr. DENISON. It has always been ordered out when there was work to be done and the men are always to be depended on. I have only one other word to say, and that is in regard to the uniform. I know that the uniform served out to my own corps has been most excellent, and we have never had any occasion to complain of the uniform which has been served out to us.

Sir ADOLPHE CARON. I desire to say one word in explanation. The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Jones) stated, I think, that I had appointed Lieutenant Colonel Bacon to take command of the Wimbledon Team, and that he was one of the clerks in my department. It is true that Colonel Bacon is a very valuable member of the Civil Service, who renders invaluable service in my department, but, before he became a member of the Civil Service, he was known to the militia force of Canada as being a Brigade Major in one of the districts where the force is very strong, the district of Montreal. He was not appointed to command the Wimbledon Team by me, for the simple reason that I have no authority to appoint him. The Commandant of the Wimbledon Team is appointed by the Dominion Rifle Association, and his name is submitted to me through the courtesy of the gentlemen composing that association. I concur with every recommendation made to me by gentlemen who take such a deep interest in that association as they do, and I am sure that Colonel Bacon will do his duty as the commandant of that team, as he has always done it whenever I have had the opportunity of testing it, and I am certain that he will give satisfaction in the command which is entrusted to him by the Dominion Rifle Association.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. TROW. The hon. member for Quebec East has not voted.

Mr. LAURIER. I am paired with Sir John Macdonald.

Mr. TROW. The hon. member for Victoria, N.S. (Mr. Macdonald) voted. I understand that he is paired with Mr. Perry. The hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McKeen) also voted, and I understood that he was paired with Mr. McIntyre.

Mr. McKEEN. I had an arrangement with Mr. Perry to pair when we left here to-morrow. I could not see the whips, and I do not know whether any arrangement was made or not.

Mr. TROW. This happens to be to-morrow.

Mr. SMALL. The hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Wilson) has not voted.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. member for Shelburne has not voted.

Gen. LAURIE. I have paired with the hon. member for King's, N.S. (Mr. Borden).

Mr. TROW. The hon. member for Victoria was also paired.

Mr. McDONALD (Victoria). I would like to know with whom I am paired?

Mr. TROW. With Mr. Choquette.

Mr. LAURIER. I rise to a question of order. I understand that the hon. member is paired. Sometimes members are paired by the whips, and we ought to understand whether these pairs are to be respected or not.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is not a question of order. The hon. member for Perth (Mr. Trow) had a right to call attention to the fact that the hon. gentleman was paired,

Sir ADOLPHE CARON.

but it is not a question of order or a question upon which the Speaker can rule.

Mr. LAURIER. I think it is a question of order. Time and again pairs have been arranged by the whips without the members knowing with whom they were paired. Of course the arrangement is purely voluntary on the part of the members, but, if it is to be repudiated, we ought to understand it.

Mr. TROW. The hon. member for West Lambton has not voted.

Mr. LISTER. I am paired with the member for East Lambton (Mr. Moncrieff).

Mr. TAYLOR. As one of the whips, I may say that I have no knowledge of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McDonald) being paired.

Mr. MITCHELL. I can only say that Mr. Choquette told me, as he was leaving the House, that he had paired with the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McDonald).

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

To defray the expenses of examining lands in the Canadian Pacific Railway belt..... $2,500

Mr. McMULLEN. How does the hon. gentleman expect to expend this money?

Mr. DEWDNEY. We expect to have every section examined and a report made on it. In the Canadian Pacific Railway reserve the company select lands that are fairly fit for settlement. There is a question with regard to a very large quantity of land which they refuse to take, and the Government wish to inspect it in order to know whether the company shall receive it or not.

Mr. McMULLEN. Don't your survey show what quality of land this is? Has not a very careful survey been made?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Not sufficient by any means.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Are these lands which the company refuse to receive within the 20-mile belt, and if so, are they largely within that region which stretches westward of Regina?

Mr. DEWDNEY. They are within the 20-mile belt, and the bulk of them are west of Regina.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Because a good deal was said, as the hon. gentleman knows, at the time that location was taken up, as to the utter unsuitability of that land for settlement. I desire to know whether the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have made up their minds that a great deal of the land through which the railway passes is not fit for settlement.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I have travelled a good deal over the country, and I hold very strong opinions in regard to this subject.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the hon. gentleman think there is an average rainfall that will enable the country to be used?

Mr. DEWDNEY. I think so; that has been our experience so far. It is a very rolling country, and there are many valleys of great width, 2 or 3 miles wide, and the soil is magnificent; in fact there is no better soil in the whole of the North-West.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then how comes it that no portion has been homesteaded?

Mr. DEWDNEY. There is no fuel.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does the Canadian Pacific Railway contribute to this inspection, or is the inspection wholly ours?

Mr. DEWDNEY. It is wholly ours; they have made their inspection.

Mr. WATSON. Is it the intention to compel the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to take the land which their inspection proves to be fairly fit for settlement.

Mr. DEWDNEY. That is the intention, and also the understanding that the Government shall have the last say with respect to the lands.

Mr. WATSON. There is a large quantity of land in Manitoba which at present is supposed to be Canadian Pacific Railway land, but that company apparently do not feel disposed to take control of it, unless some one wishes to purchase it at a very high figure, and then the company say it is their land. There are large tracts in Manitoba which would be thickly settled if they were thrown open for homesteading, but they are at present locked up as Canadian Pacific Railway lands. The Minister should take the earliest possible opportunity to have the lands inspected, and either compel the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to take them or let the Government take them out of the hands of the company and throw them open for settlement.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Suppose the Canadian Pacific Railway Company cannot agree with the Government, how is the matter to be determined? I do not think that the Government can force the company legally to take certain lands. Is the Government prepared to take the responsibility of compelling the company to take certain lands?

Mr. DEWDNEY. That is the position the Government take.

Government Printing Office..... .... $10,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. We were to have a statement of the total cost.

Mr. FOSTER. The cost of plant up to date is $63,849. A question was asked in regard to printing the voters' lists. The total cost up to 11th February was $21,502.79, since then $100, total $21,602.79.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the total estimate of the cost to be incurred?

Mr. FOSTER. I will furnish those particulars.

Mr. McMULLEN. I observe, according to the Auditor General's Report, that $63,900 had been paid for plant up to 30th June last.

Mr. FOSTER. The plant was bought last year.

Mr. BOWELL. If hon. members will turn up Hansard they will find the details given in full.

Mr. MULOCK. What is the proportion of the cost of printing the voters' list covered by the amount of $21,000.

Mr. FOSTER. That amount covers the setting of the type for the entire list. Of course I cannot state what the further cost will be.

To pay Dr. Jukes for medical services..... ..... $700

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Why has this item been allowed to stand so long unpaid, if it is a proper claim?

Mr. DEWDNEY. This claim has been made by Dr. Jukes for some time, and it was for a larger amount than appears in the Estimates. It was for attendance on prisoners and lunatics during the years named. The work was heavy some years and light others. The Regina jail will soon be completed and then this attendance will cease.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Dr. Jukes is surgeon in the Mounted Police, and is therefore an employé of the Government, and therefore either there should have been an agreement between the Government and Dr. Jukes that he should be allowed a certain amount for his work, or that the work was covered by his other pay. It certainly appears from having remained unpaid for six or seven years as if the Government did not consider themselves responsible.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The hon. gentleman will understand that this duty is quite outside his regular duties, and a very disagreeable duty it is to my own knowledge.

Mr. McMULLEN. This is another of the cases which we have been bringing before the notice of this House of civil servants applying on every little pretence for an increase of salary. Dr. Jukes gets $1,400 a year, and yet he must charge for extra services. Every man who occupies a position in the service must have his little bill for extra work.

Mr. BOWELL. Oh, not every man.

Mr. McMULLEN. Well, there are a great many of them and they are increasing rapidly, I am sorry to say.

Mr. DAVIN. I think the sum is ridiculously small for the duties which Dr. Jukes had to discharge. It it his duty to attend to the Mounted Police, but it is not part of his duty to attend to the lunatics and prisoners who are sent into jail. This is the work for what the extra charge is made, and I think, as I said before, it is a ridiculously small sum.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). If what the hon. member states be true that this amount is ridiculously small, then I think the Government have been acting unfairly towards Dr. Jukes, and that the member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) has reason to complain. If Dr. Jukes had a right to this money this item should not have been allowed to stand since 1883, and he should have been paid before this time. It shows a dereliction of duty on the part of the Government, but I think my hon. friend from Wellington (Mr. McMullen) is right in what he said, that it was a claim that the Government did not acknowledge and neglected to pay it until it became outlawed. I would suggest to the Minister of Customs that this is an item that ought to be struck out, and which he probably would strike out under other circumstances. Either the Government have been using Dr Jukes wrong or he is not entitled to this amount. At this unreasonable hour of the night I think we should not be asked to pass an item of this kind.

Mr. BOWELL. If the hon. gentleman's views are correct I would suggest to my hon. friend the Minister that Dr. Jukes should be paid interest.

Mr. WILSON (Elgin). Why not pay it if he is entitled to the amount?

Mr. BOWELL. Perhaps we will.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the Committee rises let me give some information which I was asked for last night. The Intercolonial Railway earnings and expenditure for the eight months ending February, 1889, are as follows:—Earnings, $1,969,597.38; expenditure, $2,316,756.00. Sold to Caraquette railway, two locomotives at $3,500 each; money paid on delivery.

Resolutions reported.

Mr. FOSTER moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 2:20 a.m. (Friday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 26th April, 1889.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 146) to amend the Revised Statute respecting the North-West Mounted Police Force.—(Sir John A. Macdonald.)

QU'APPELLE AND LONG LAKE RAILWAY CO.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that, to-morrow, the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution:—

Resolved, That it is expedient, in order to enable the Qu'Appelle, Long Lake and Saskatchewan Railroad and Steamboat Company to complete their railway from Regina to some point on the South Saskatchewan River, at or near Saskatoon, and thence northward to Prince Albert, to enter into a contract with such company for the transport of men, supplies, materials and mails, for twenty years, and to pay for such services during the said term, eighty thousand dollars per annum, in manner following, that is to say:—The sum of fifty thousand dollars to be paid annually on the construction of the railway, to a point at or near Saskatoon, such payment to be computed from the date of the completion of the railway to such point; and the remaining thirty thousand dollars annually on the extension of the railway to Prince Albert; such payment to be computed from the date of such last-mentioned completion: Provided that, in case the second portion of the said railway shall not be built and operated to Prince Albert within two years after its completion to the South Saskatchewan, as aforesaid, the payment of fifty thousand dollars shall cease until the whole railway is finished to Prince Albert.

Motion agreed to.

TOWN OF COBOURG—RELIEF.

Mr. FOSTER moved that, to-morrow, the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution:—

Resolved, That it is expedient to provide that the Governor in Council may, on such conditions as he deems expedient, release the Corporation of the Town of Cobourg from the payment of the balance due by the said Corporation under the Act of the Parliament of Canada, forty-ninth Victoria, chapter thirty-three, intituled: "An Act for the relief of the Corporation of the Town of Cobourg," together with all interest now unpaid thereon; provided always, that one of the conditions of such release shall be that the said Corporation shall abandon all claims they have in respect to the Port Hope and Rice Lake Road, whether as to the collection of tolls or in any other respect whatsoever.

Motion agreed to.

NORTH-WEST RAILWAYS—LAND SUBSIDIES.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that, to-morrow, the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to authorise the Governor in Council to grant the subsidies of land hereinafter mentioned to the railway companies, and towards the construction of the railways also hereinafter mentioned, that is to say:

To the North-Western Coal and Navigation Company (Limited), in addition to the grant provided for by section 1 of the Act 48-49 Victoria, chapter 60, Dominion Lands to an extent not exceeding two thousand six hundred acres for each mile of the company's railway from Dunmore Station, on the Canadian Pacific Railway, to Lethbridge, on the Belly River, the present terminus of the said railway, a distance of one hundred and nine and one-half miles, such additional grant to be made only on condition that the gauge of the said railway be made of standard width.

Also to the North-Western Coal and Navigation Company (Limited) Dominion Lands to an extent not exceeding six thousand four hundred acres for each mile of the company's railway from Lethbridge to the International Boundary, a distance of about fifty miles.

To the Red Deer Valley Railway and Coal Company, Dominion Lands to an extent not exceeding six thousand four hundred acres for each mile of the company's railway from Cheadle Station, on the Canadian Pacific Railway, to its terminus at a point in or near township twenty-nine, range twenty-three, west of the 4th meridian, a distance of about fifty-five miles.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

To the North-Western Railway Company of Canada, Dominion Lands to an extent not exceeding ten thousand acres for each mile of the company's railway from Calgary, on the Canadian Pacific Railway, northerly to a point on the North Saskatchewan River, at or near Edmonton, a distance of about two hundred and ten miles.

Also to the North-Western Railway Company of Canada, Dominion Lands to an extent not exceeding ten thousand acres for each mile of the company's railway from Calgary, southerly to Lethbridge, a distance of about one hundred and twenty miles.

To the Lake Manitoba Railway and Canal Company, Dominion Lands to an extent not exceeding six thousand acres for each mile of the company's railway from Portage la Prairie to the southern boundary of Lake Manitoba, a distance of about seventeen miles.

Motion agreed to.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that, to-morrow, the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution:—

1. Resolved, That it is expedient to authorise the Governor in Council to grant the subsidies hereinafter mentioned to the railway companies, and towards the construction of the railways also hereinafter mentioned, that is to say:—

For a railway from some point on the Joggins Railway, near the Heben River, to Young's Mills, in the Province of Nova Scotia, a distance of five miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, and not exceeding in the whole $16,000

To the St. Clair Frontier Tunnel Company, for the construction of a tunnel under the St. Clair River, from a point at or near Sarnia, to a point at or near Port Huron, a subsidy not exceeding in the whole $375 000.

To the Pontiac and Renfrew Railway Company, for six miles of their railway from the north bank of the Ottawa River, opposite Braeside, to the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway, near the Quion River, in the Province of Quebec, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, and not exceeding in the whole $19,200.

To the Quebec, Montmorency and Charlevoix Railway Company, for thirty miles of their railway, from the east bank of the St Charles River, to or near to Cape Tormente, in the Province of Quebec, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, and not exceeding in the whole $96,000.

To the Fredericton and St. Mary's Bridge Company, for a bridge over the St. John River at Fredericton, in the Province of New Brunswick, a subsidy not exceeding in the whole $30,000.

To the Napanee, Tamworth and Quebec Railway Company, for ten miles of their railway, from New Moscow, to a point at or near Harrowsmith, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, and not exceeding in the whole $32,000.

For a railway from a point near Sicamous, on the Canadian Pacific Railway, to a point on Lake Okanagan, for fifty-one miles of their railway, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, and not exceeding in the whole $163,200.

To the Cornwallis Valley Railway Company, for one mile of their railway from the end of the line subsidised by 50-51 Victoria, chapter 24, to Kingsport, in the Province of Nova Scotia, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $3,200.

To the Lake Témiscamingue Colonisation and Railway Company, for fifteen miles of their railway, from Mattawa station on the Canadian Pacific Railway towards the Long Sault, or from the Long Sault towards the Mattawa station on the Canadian Pacific Railway, in the Province of Quebec, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $48,000.

To the Maskinonge and Nipissing Railway Company, for fifteen miles of their railway from a point on the Canadian Pacific Railway at or near Maskinonge or Louisville, towards the Parish of St. Michel-des-Saints, on the River Mattawa, in the Province of Quebec, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $48,000.

To the Kingston, Smith's Falls and Ottawa Railway Company, for twenty miles of their railway, from the city of Kingston towards Smith's Falls, in the Province of Ontario, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $64,000.

To the South Ontario Pacific Railway Company, for forty-nine and one-half miles of their railway, from Woodstock to Hamilton, in the Province of Ontario, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $158,400.

For a railway from St. Césaire to St. Paul d'Abbottsford, in the Province of Quebec, five miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $16,000.

To the Great Eastern Railway Company, for twenty miles of their railway, from the east end of the line subsidised by the Act 50-51 Victoria, chapter 24, at St. Grégoire, towards the Chaudière Junction Station on the Intercolonial Railway, in the Province of Quebec, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $64,000.

To the Drummond County Railway Company, for four and one-half miles of their railway, from the end of the line subsidised by the Act 50-51 Victoria, chapter 24, to Ball's Wharf, on the St. Lawrence River, in the Province of Quebec, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $14,400.

To the St. Catharines and Niagara Central Railway Company, for twenty miles of their railway, from the end of the line subsidised by the Act 50-51 Victoria, chapter 24, at St. Catharines, towards the city of Hamilton, in the Province of Ontario, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $64,000.

To the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company, for twenty miles of their railway, from the end of the section of thirty miles from Lake St. John towards Chicoutimi subsidised by the Act 51 Victoria, chapter 3, towards Chicoutimi, in the Province of Quebec, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $64,000.

To the Grand Trunk, Georgian Bay and Lake Erie Railway Company, for fifteen miles of their railway, from the village of Tara to the town of Owen Sound, in the Province of Ontario, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $48,000.

To the Hereford Railway Company, for fifteen miles of their railway, from Cookshire to a junction with the Quebec Central Railway at Dudswell, in the Province of Quebec, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $48,000.

To the Massawippi Junction Railway Company, for fifteen miles of their railway, from Ayer's Flat to Coaticook, in the Province of Quebec, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $48,000.

To the Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company, for twenty miles of their railway, from Westport to Palmer Rapids, in the Province of Ontario, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $64,000.

To the Thousand Islands Railway Company, for four miles of their railway, from a point near the St. Lawrence River, in Gananoque Village, to Gananoque Junction of the Grand Trunk Railway, and for thirteen miles of their railway from Gananoque Junction of the Grand Trunk Railway to a junction with the Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway, in the Province of Ontario, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $54,400.

For a railway from Cape Tormente towards Murray Bay, twenty miles, in the Province of Quebec, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $64,000.

To the Amherstburgh and Lake Shore Railway Company, for twenty miles of their railway, in the Province of Ontario, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $64,000.

2. Resolved, That so much of the subsidy of $3,200 per mile which, under the provisions of the Act 49th Victoria, chapter 17, and of any subsequent Act, may be paid to the Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company in respect of the last thirty miles of their railway, eastward from Metapediac, shall be applicable to the section of the said railway comprised between the fortieth and the seventieth mile thereof, eastward from Metapediac, instead of to the said first mentioned section of thirty miles, making six thousand four hundred dollars per mile, applicable to the secondly mentioned section of thirty miles; but the foregoing provision shall be subject to the condition that the said company undertake to complete the thirty miles of their railway from the seventieth to the hundreth mile eastward from Metapediac, within a reasonable time, not to exceed four years, to be fixed by Order in Council, and without any further subsidy from the Government of Canada, and that they deposit with the Minister of Railways and Canals, as security to the Crown that they will well and truly carry out their undertaking, their bonds to the amount of two hundred thousand dollars.

3. Every subsidy so granted, shall be granted on the terms, and subject to the conditions, upon and under which subsidies were granted by the Act passed in the Session held in the fiftieth and fifty-first years of her Majesty's reign, chapter twenty-four, in aid of the railways and railway bridges in the said Act mentioned.

Motion agreed to.

MORTGAGE ON PROPERTIES AT KINGSTON.

Mr. FOSTER moved that, to-morrow, the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution:—

Resolved, That it is expedient to make provision by statute to enable the Minister of Finance and Receiver-General to carry into effect, the recommendation contained in the Report of the Committee on the Public Accounts, in relation to a certain mortgage on properties in the city of Kingston, given to the Crown by the Hon. George H. Markland, which report was concurred in by the House of Commons on the 16th day of May, 1888.

Motion agreed to.

INSURANCE RETURNS.

Mr. FOSTER laid on the Table of the House an abstract of the business of Insurance Companies. He said: I would state, in reply to an enquiry made yesterday in relation to the annual report, that Government have until the 1st of March to make the report. The abstract which I lay on the Table is prepared before the companies are inspected, and as soon as that is over, the report will be prepared. The very last day yet has been July 1st. It extends the delay in reference to the main report.

PRIVILEGE—RETURNS IN HANDS OF MEMBERS.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to state that a report of the Public Accounts Committee was sent down for the information of this House, containing the evidence taken in the investigation which took place with regard to an account which was presented by Mr. Smyth, of Chatham. That report cannot be obtained by members of the House. I have made enquiry at the Records Office, and found that it has been taken out by the hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Bergin), and has been in his possession for more than a week. I cannot obtain possession of the document. Now, I fancy that the evidence was reported for the benefit of this House, and that it ought to be accessible to any member of this House who wishes to look over it. I think there ought to be some means of obtaining that evidence from the member for Cornwall, who now has it in his possession. When I enquired at the Records Office to day, Mr. Polkinghorne promised to go down to the hotel and ask the member for Cornwall for the document. He was informed by the medical gentlemen who were attending him that he could not see the member for Cornwall, therefore he was unable to get the document. I think you ought to order that that document be kept in the Records Office, so that it may be seen by any member who wishes to see it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think it would be a very proper rule that the papers should not be allowed to be taken out of the custody of the proper officer. That rule has never been obeyed, unfortunately. For instance, in the case under discussion last night, the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) had the papers for a week, and nobody could see them, and so it is with other hon. members. When any hon. member gets possession of the papers that he is interested in, he keeps them as long as he can, but I think it would be a very good rule to prevent that for the future. I do not mean to make any charge against the hon. member for North York, for he only did what every other member does.

Mr. LAURIER. There should be a tacit understanding that these papers should not go out of the building.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They ought not to go out of the building.

Mr. MULOCK. It is quite correct that I borrowed the evidence which has been alluded to by the First Minister, but I borrowed it through the Clerk of the House, and held it to be returned at a moment's warning whenever required. I held it subject to that understanding, and it is not correct to say that it was not in the custody of this House prior to this debate. I returned it some time prior to the debate. I borrowed it a second time, and I did not have exclusive possession of it during the whole period referred to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is unfortunate with respect to the point that has been raised, but the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Bergin) is really very ill, and his medical men will not allow him to be disturbed.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I should like to get possession of the document, if only for one hour. There should be some arrangement for getting documents for the use of members.

Mr. MULOCK. When I borrowed the papers referred to from the Clerk of the House, I requested him to notify me at once in case any person desired the papers, and I would return them the moment they were applied for.

MONTREAL HARBOR POLICE.

Mr. CURRAN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I take the liberty of asking if the Government have finally decided the question as to whether the harbor police of Montreal are to be disbanded prior to the fall of this year, or not?

Mr. TUPPER. The Government, in response to appeals from members representing the different districts of Montreal, have reconsidered the decision at which they recently arrived with respect to the maintenance of the harbor police at Montreal for the coming season, and on reconsideration it has been deemed advisable to meet the desires of those hon. members in this regard and not to cut off suddenly that service, so that for this season only the police will be continued at Montreal as heretofore.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). In arriving at that decision the Minister will not be carrying out the understanding arrived at with the House when this vote was allowed to pass through. He then intimated the course which he subsequently adopted with respect to the harbor police of Montreal, a course which I think was the proper one. It is to be regretted that, at the solicitation of the members for Montreal, the hon. gentleman has gone back on the statement made to the House when the vote for that purpose was submitted.

Mr. TUPPER. I have not at all gone back on the statement made in Committee of Supply, as the hon. gentleman has suggested. I made no pledge to the Committee that the harbor police of Montreal would be abolished. I did tell the Committee, and I acted upon the statement, that a substantial effort would be made to reduce the very large expenditure in regard to both the police at Montreal and at Quebec. As was pointed out, the expenditure exceeds the receipts. I may add to the statement I made a moment ago, that the dues on shipping arrived at the port of Montreal will, of course, be levied as heretofore, and the police will be retained this season.

MAIL SERVICE WITH ENGLAND.

Mr JONES (Halifax). I should like to enquire of the Finance Minister, in the absence of the Postmaster General, whether, in the arrangement with the Allan Company for the coming year for the carrying of the mails, there was any understanding with them that the Dominion Line were not to participate in the contract? I put this question in consequence of enquiries sent to me on the subject.

Mr. FOSTER. There was no such understanding. The company were permitted to make any arrangement they chose with the Dominion Line.

LAKE ST. LOUIS BUOYS AND LIGHTSHIPS.

Mr. MITCHELL. I called the attention of the First Minister to a request I made regarding a matter of some importance to the commercial people of Montreal. I sent a telegram over to him, and he said he would give an answer to-day.

Mr. TUPPER I regret that I was not able to be present at the session of the House yesterday. The only difficulty that has occurred in regard to the contractor who has the contract for placing the lightship in Lake St. Louis and buoys there, is, that he hesitated, until special orders were sent him, to place the buoys and lightship, on account of the ice not having yet come down. Instructions have been sent him, however, to place them immediately.

Mr. MITCHELL. I have had another letter from the gentleman who is one of the chief forwarders in the trade, and it rather reflects on the hon. gentleman's management.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. DAVIN. I wish to make a statement, at the suggestion of some of my friends. At their suggestion I put a notice on the paper for a motion on going into Committee of Supply. It was discovered that the leader of the Opposition intended to move in the same direction, and my friends asked me if I brought the matter up that I would give notice when I would proceed with it. I do not intend to do so, for this reason: I have received a communication from the leader of the Government which places the matter with respect to that motion in a satisfactory position.

PAIRS.

Mr. TROW. I desire to make an explanation with regard to the votes of two hon. gentlemen opposite, Mr. McDonald of Victoria and Mr. McKeen of Cape Breton. I was under the impression that the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McDonald) had paired with the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Choquette). It appears, however, that a pair between them was in contemplation, but it failed, and the hon. member changed the pair to the hon. member for Saskatchewan (Mr. Macdowall), who did not vote. Consequently, the matter was made all right, and the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. McDonald), was justified in voting as he did. I regret that I called his vote in question, as it was a misunderstanding betwen myself and the hon. member for Montmagny. In regard to the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McKeen), I was strongly under the impression that he and the hon. member for Prince (Mr. Perry) had paired from yesterday evening. I now understand that he was under the impression that it was from this morning. I believe both hon. gentlemen are honorable men and that a misunderstanding occurred, and Mr. McKeen was justified in giving the vote he did.

CAPE BRETON RAILWAY.

Mr. FLYNN. I call the attention of the First Minister to an answer given by him to a question I put on the 17th inst. I asked:

"Has a contract been entered into by the Minister of Railways and Canals for the erection of stations and other buildings on the line of the Cape Breton Railroad from Sydney and North Sydney to the Grand Narrows? If so, to whom was the contract given? What was the amount of the contract? Were tenders invited for the work? How many tenders were received? Was the lowest tender accepted?

The hon. gentleman replied:

"The answer to the first question is, yes; to the second, to Sims & Slater; to the third, it was a schedule price contract; to the fourth, yes; to the fifth, 18; to the sixth, yes. The work from Sydney and North Sydney to the Grand Narrows is being carried on by the Government at the contractors' expense.

I am informed by Mr. Sims that he has not entered into any contract. He had a contract, with Mr. Slater, with the Government in the winter of 1887. They failed to fulfil the contract, and it was taken from them by the Government, and the Government have prosecuted the work ever since, and Messrs. Sims & Slater have not entered into any further contract.

Mr. SPEAKER. I call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that this is not a proper subject to bring up at the present time.

Mr. FLYNN. I desire to explain, as this is the only opportunity I will have.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I rise to order. The hon. gentleman asked a question and was answered, and he now rises to make an argument to show that the answer was incorrect. If he desires to do so, he must give notice of a motion.

Mr. LAURIER. The right hon. gentleman, I think, does not rightly apprehend the motive of my hon. friend, who thinks there was a misunderstanding as to his question.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then he should have communicated with the Government on the matter.

Mr. CASEY. I move the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FLYNN. I was about to say that there was no contract with Sims & Slater since the contract was entered into with them in the winter of 1887. The work was taken from them without any fault being found, and it has been carried on by the Government ever since. I was informed by a letter from a person in Sydney, that all the buildings, and sidings, and round houses, between North Sydney and the Grand Narrows had been given to a friend of the Government to build, and given by private arrangement, and that no tenders were invited. This friend of the Government has now got the contract for these buildings without competition, and the work involves an expenditure, as I was informed, of nearly $100,000. I thought that if that was the case I should put a question on the Notice Paper and get the information I desired from the First Minister. If I allowed this to pass without comment, the public would be under the impression that tenders were invited, that eighteen tenders were received, that the lowest tenderer was awarded the contract, and that everything in connection with this matter was fair and honest. I know, from the information I have received, and from the answer given me in this House, which was not an answer at all to my question, that the facts are simply these: The buildings about these stations, on that part of the road, were given by private arrangement without the Government inviting the public to tender, and while there were competent persons in the Island of Cape Breton to do the work as well as any person they could import from the Province of New Brunswick. The answers to my questions were not true answers and they were misleading.

PROTECTION OF FISHERMEN.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to a Bill which was introduced and carried through the Senate some time ago, and which I consider to be of such importance as to justify me in calling his attention to it before the House closes, in order that, if possible, he may adopt the Bill as a Government measure and have it made law. The Bill is one for the better securing of the safety of fishermen. The House knows that for years past there has been a lamentable loss of life caused by the fishing vessels sending out dorys with men in them, and which are not supplied with either compass or food or water. The Bill in the Senate is for the purpose of preventing that system in future, and providing that no dory or other boat shall be launched or shipped from any shipping vessel unless that dory or boat is supplied with a compass and with a certain quantity of food and water. The Bill is a very short one, containing only two clauses, and I am sure that it will commend itself to the approval of this House. It passed the Senate without any opposition, and received the warm approval of the leader of the Government in that Chamber. It would not take five minutes to pass the Bill here, I am quite sure, for the object is an excellent one, and the evil against which it legislates is known to all maritime members. I think the Minister of Marine and Fisheries should give the Bill precedence over all others, and let it be passed this year. I hope the hon. Minister will be able to say that the Bill receives his approval as it did the approval of his colleague in the Senate.

Mr. TUPPER. The Bill has been mentioned to me by its introducer in the Senate, and, personally, I think, that before the Bill becomes law, certain changes will have to be made. It refers to the control over the bank fishermen, and as such is legislation of an entirely novel character. I certainly think that this is a Bill which it would be wise to consider well before passing it into law. While the principle of the Bill is commendable, I do not feel prepared to recommend to my colleagues to proceed with it this Session. I stated as much to the gentleman who had the Bill in charge in the Senate, and I shall, later on, bring its provisions before the attention of the Government.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I am glad to see the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has expressed his approval of this Bill.

Mr. TUPPER. Yes; of its general principles.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). Looking at the Bill itself, I think there are some alterations which will have to be made, but I have long thought that legislation is desirable in this direction.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. This is not the proper time to discuss the merits of the Bill.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). There has been a motion to adjourn.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes: but I submit, Mr. Speaker, this is not the proper time to discuss the details of the Bill.

Mr. JONES (Halifax). I trust that the Government will take the Bill into consideration, and deal with it next Session.

Motion to adjourn withdrawn.

SUPPLY—BEHRING'S SEA SEIZURES.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. PRIOR. Before the House goes into Supply, I wish to make a few remarks on a subject which I consider to be the most important matter now engaging the attention of the Government—I refer to the seizure of Canadian vessels by American cruisers in Behring's Sea, in the year 1886-87. This matter was fully discussed by hon. gentlemen on both sides of this House during last Session, so that I need not go into the details at any length now; but as there may be some gentlemen present now who did not hear the discussion last Session, I will state in a few words how the seizures came to be made. In the year 1821, Russia issued a proclamation claiming jurisdiction over the whole of Behring's Sea. This was taken objection to by the Government of the United Kingdom and the Government of the United States, and so strenuously did they oppose it that, in 1824 and 1825, treaties were signed between the Government of Russia and the United States, and between Russia and Great Britain, by which Russia gave up all claim to the sole jurisdiction over these seas. In 1867 the United States Government bought Alaska from the Russian Government, and the Russian Government then and there ceded to the United States all the rights, privileges and franchises which belonged to them at the time. I would ask the House to take notice of these words; that Russia only gave the rights and privileges which belonged to her at the time, and of course these were the only rights which she could give. In 1870 the United States Government gave a charter to a company, called the Alaska Commercial Company, for the privilege of taking seals on the islands of St. Paul and St. George, two islands situated in Behring's Sea. In 1886 the United States cruisers seized three Canadian vessels which sailed from Victoria, B.C., while they were pursuing their avocation of sealing in Behring's Sea, at a distance of from 68 to 139 miles from any land. These vessels were seized by these United States cruisers, and their cargoes of sealskins were confiscated, and the captains, mates and crews of the vessels were imprisoned and fined. Many of them were turned out under conditions of great hardship to find their way back to British Columbia. One very important circumstance in connection with this matter is, that some of the sealskins which were seized had been taken from seals captured a long way outside of Behring's

Sea, and a long time before the vessels got into Behring's Sea. They commenced sealing down about San Francisco, and gradually worked their way up to Behring's Sea. In 1887 the United States cruisers seized six more Canadian vessels, at distances averaging about 90 miles out. They also seized eight of their own vessels for the violation, as they said, of the law, that only vessels belonging to the Alaska Company had any right to take seals in those waters. Now, Sir, what I particularly wish to call the attention of this House to is the fact that up to the present time no settlement has been arrived at between the two Governments, and no compensation whatever has been given to those men who have been such great losers by the seizure of their property. It has been utter ruin to some of these men. One of them whom I remember particularly, an energetic and worthy business man, whose schooners had been seized, has been obliged to go into bankruptcy; and a great many of them have been greatly crippled in their commercial enterprises in consequence of these seizures. If I remember rightly, the value of the first three vessels seized, the value of the sealskins, the compensation for injuries sustained, and the value of the probable catch would amount to something like $153,000; and eight more schooners were seized in the following year. The seizure of these schooners has also entailed a great loss on many other citizens of the town I represent, from the fact that they have invested a great deal of money in these sealing schooners; and at the present time they are utterly useless, because they are afraid to send the schooners up to Behring's Sea, on account of the threats made and the proclamations issued by the United States Government; and up to the present time no assurances have been given by the Dominion Government or the Imperial Government that they would be protected if they went there. I have here a telegram from Washington, dated April 15, which appeared in the Victoria Colonist, as follows:—

"It is reported that Lieutenant-Commander Stockton, of the Thetis, has received special instructions regarding the course to be pursued in the event of British sealers being found in Behring's Sea during the coming season. Lieutenant Stockton is said to be instructed to be very vigilant in following out his orders, and capturing any foreign, as well as American, vessels found in the Behring waters."

So we see that at the present time our sealers with their cargoes are just as liable to be seized, and their captains and crews to be ill-treated, as they were in 1886. I also see a notice in the press that on the 26th of March four of these Canadian schoners, the Grace, the Dolphin, the Ada and the Anna Beck were sold by public auction at Port Townsend, in Washington Territory, by the United States marshal. Those vessels were seized in 1886-87, and they were sold for next to nothing; they were simply sacrificed; and at the present time three more are rotting on the beaches in Alaska Territory. Now, I would ask the right hon. leader of the Government to explain to this House what the reason is that no settlement has been come to between the two Governments? We were told last Session that this Government have persistently urged on the Imperial Government the necessity of taking action in the matter, and bringing it to a speedy settlement. But it is now nearly three years since the first seizure was made, and, so far as I can learn, we are no nearer to a settlement than we were then. We were also told that the Government were obtaining data on which to base a claim for compensation from the United States Government; but surely, Sir, nearly three years is sufficient time in which to gather the data required to put in a proper claim. I hope the hon. gentleman will give us a full and explicit explanation. Last year the correspondence brought down, in answer to a motion made by my hon. friend the member for Vancouver (Mr. Gordon), showed conclusively that up to that time this Government had done their utmost to induce the Imperial Government to take speedy action in the matter. But that was a year ago, and I know that the hon. members of this House would like to hear what has been done since. It seems to me that, during the very long period which has elapsed, this matter might have been settled. Consider, for instance, the dispute between the United States, Great Britain and Germany, regarding Samoa. I do not think it is more than six months since the first trouble occurred there; and I see by the press that the members of the conference on that subject have been chosen, and I do not suppose it will take more than from thirty to sixty days to bring the matter to a satisfactory settlement. I only wish I could say as much with regard to the Behring's Sea difficulty. I will not discuss whether the question of jurisdiction over the seas could not be settled first, without waiting for the data upon which to base a claim for compensation. I will leave that question to other gentlemen in this House who have had a legal training, and who can do better justice to it than I can. I only hope they will take the matter up. But I would impress upon the Government the necessity that exists for bringing this matter to a speedy settlement, and for endeavoring to get justice for those men who have been such heavy losers from the seizures. Last year, when speaking on this subject, I stated that a large portion of the American press, as well as a great portion of the American people, were not in accord with the opinions put forward by the President of the United States. So far from that feeling having lessened, it is stronger to-day than it was then. I have here a pamphlet published in San Francisco, where there are a great many people interested in this question, and where the feeling in regard to it runs pretty high. The pamphlet has been very extensively distributed throughout the United States; and, with the permission of the House, I will read what it says in regard to one portion of this claim:

"We will now look at the chart of the Behring's Sea and see on what grounds our Government claims this. You will notice a long chain of islands, called the Aleutian Islands, extending in the form of a circle to the westward, dividing the Pacific Ocean from the Behring's Sea. These islands are undoubtedly of volcanic formation, and while they extend some 1,200 miles to the westward, they do not enclose the Behring's Sea. The Island of Attou is our extreme western possession. The distance from the Island of Attou to Copper Island is 175 miles, and to the nearest point of the Kamchatka coast or Siberian side, 370 miles. Now, if our Government can claim and control a sea with a passage 370 miles across, we want to know how she is going to do it, and on what grounds. Certainly not that it is an enclosed sea. More especially, when you again look at the chart, you see that the Island of Attou is at the extreme end of the chain of islands, and as you follow this chain of islands back to the eastward as far as Unimak Pass, that between these islands are wide passages, allowing vessels of the largest dimensions to pass in and out of the Behring's Sea at will, a distance of some 1,200 miles to the Siberian coast, in a direct westward line. By carefully perusing this chart it must convince the most skeptical that our Government has no claim to the Behring's Sea as an enclosed sea.

"We now come to the question of the jurisdiction of the Behring's Sea as taken by our Government, caused by the seal question. For this reason the chart of the North Pacific Ocean and the Behring's Sea is sent to you, so that it may show just how broad the claim our Government has taken in this matter. You will notice on the chart of the Behring's Sea the line called the United States imaginary boundary line; called this for lack of no better name. This line has been laid out or imagined to exist in an open sea 1,200 miles across in its widest part, something never before claimed by any other power in the history of the world. The impression has gone out that the Behring's Sea is an enclosed water and under the full control of the United States and Russia. Just how or where this claim was first obtained no one seems to know. It sprang into existence like a mushroom and apparently with about the same strength and standing. Our Government could, with the same consistency, all of a sudden, claim the control of the Gulf of Mexico. It is considered by all maritime laws that a nation can only control a certain distance of the sea from her shores. This has been the established custom as a maritime law for an indefinite time, and our Government insists that our American fishermen shall have all right, outside of the three-mile limit from land, in the controversy between the Canadian and American fishermen, and would not consider the ten miles headland point as asked by the Canadians, but when they come on the Pacific in the Behring's Sea they go directly back on what they claim on the eastern side, and say we own all this sea and if you are found in it your vessels are subject to seizure and yourself fined, making no allowance whatever for what portion you may be in, whether one mile or 100 miles from land. Our Government then going directly back on what it claims from the Canadian authorities on the other side, we ask, can this claim be held when it comes to a final issue? So far it has been done by force, but might is not always right, and can anyone claim but what our Government will have yet to pay for the damages to the Canadians and her own citizens for the losses they have sustained by the seizure of their vessels and forfeiture of same by our Government in its raid among the sealers in the year 1887 in the Behring's Sea ?"

That is from an American pamphlet, distributed widely all over the States, and it shows pretty well what is thought about the question on the Pacific coast. I have here also a copy of the Victoria Daily Colonist, which gives an extract from a paper called the Argonaut, published in San Francisco, one of the leading papers in California. In regard to the proclamation of Mr. Blaine lately issued, by which it is evident he is determined that the United States shall still hold jurisdiction over the sea, the Argonaut states :

"Two dangers impend. The first is that, for the sake of still further enriching the Alaska Commercial Company, the Government will continue to violate a principle of international law which has been emphatically asserted from time immomorial by the United States. That principle is, that no nation can claim jurisdiction over uninclosed waters beyond a certain distance from low water mark. The distance has been variously stated at one mile, or one league, or three leagues, or one hundred miles (in the Treaty of Utrecht). That principle, which was first stated by Grotius in 1609, was adopted by the United States at the very beginning of their national career. It was asserted by James Madison, when he refused to acknowledge the sovereignty of Algiers over the Mediterranean, and went to war rather than pay tribute; it was asserted by John Quincy Adams as to this very sea of Behring, when Russia insisted that it was a closed sea; Mr Adams denounced the 'vain and extravagant pretensions' of Russia, and had the satisfaction of hearing from Governor Speranski, of Siberia, that the claim had been abandoned; it was again asserted, in 1848, when Mr. Tyler refused to pay Sound dues to Denmark; a national congress met at Copenhagen, and Great Britain, Russia, France, Prussia and the United States agreed that Denmark had no jurisdiction over the Sound, which was an uninclosed sea, and that the dues must be abolished; it was re-asserted by Mr. Seward as late as 1866, when Russian cruisers attempted to interfere with American whalers in Behring's Sea."

I think, after hearing these extracts read, every hon. gentleman will agree with me that the United States must know perfectly well that they are in the wrong, but are determined to violate international law in order to protect the Alaska Commercial Company. There is no doubt, according to Governor Swinford's report, that this company, which pays something like $239,000 per annum to the United States Government, is the power behind the throne, and no doubt they use their money and influence in the lobbies of the House of Representatives to keep the United States Government to their word and to the action they have taken in the matter. I can only say that I earnestly hope the right hon. the leader of the Government will persist in still urging the Imperial authorities to bring this matter to a final issue and to give these men, who have lost so much, compensation, and that within reasonable delay, or they may be irretrievably ruined. I would also press upon the Government, if they have not already cabled to England, the necessity of doing so without delay, urging the Imperial Government to send one of the war vessels now on the Pacific coast to protect British sealers there. If an English gun-boat would show her nose around the Aleutian Islands, we would hear no more of the British flag being hauled down or of our citizens being ill-treated.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I think the hon. gentleman is right in saying that the subject-matter he has brought to the attention of the House is one of the greatest importance that can engage our attention; and, late as the Session is, the importance of the subject justifies him fully in calling the attention of the House to it. The personal grievances of the owners of the vessels seized and confiscated by the United States Government would in themselves justify him in bringing the matter to the attention of the Government, but the question involves considerations more important even than the personal ones which attach to the owners of the vessels. There are national questions of the highest and very gravest importance involved in the seizure of these vessels and the refusal, up to the present, on the part of the United States, to give any compensation or make any apology. Nothing, to my mind, could be a stronger comment on the difficulties which exist, under our present system, between Canada and the United States than the facts which the hon. gentleman has presented. The Opposition in this House appreciated this some time ago, and they brought to the attention of the House the absolute necessity of our obtaining, in some way or another, more direct communication with the United States Government. I have read very carefully the very lengthy correspondence which has been submitted to the House on this question, and I am not prepared to say that the Canadian Government, for the first one or two years, were open to any reproach in the matter, but they are tied down and hampered by the fact that their communications cannot be made directly to Washington, that no protest can be made officially by them to the powers that be, and that no effective action can be taken by them to remedy the grievances which Canadian subjects are subjected to. They have to send their protest, their minutes of Council, and other papers, to the Home Office, to be forwarded by the Home Office to the Foreign Office, and by the Foreign Office to the British Ambassador at Washington, and by the British Ambassador at Washington to the Secretary of State; and so, after passing through a dozen or two hands, at the end of six or eight months the answer arrives back. It is perfectly evident that it is almost impossible to have our grievances remedied or rights maintained until we have conceded to us a larger measure of government in relation to these matters. If we had the right to have a recognised agent appointed at Washington, to whom we could transmit these complaints and papers, and who would have the power and authority to treat directly with the Secretary of State, no man can doubt but that long ago these grievances would have been remedied. Now, what are the facts? As far back as 1886, we find that three British vessels were seized for the alleged offence of fishing in Behring's Sea at a distance of from 60 to 120 miles from any land. The vessels were seized and confiscated, the cargoes were confiscated, and the captains of the vessels were imprisoned for three or four months. One of the captains escaped and wandered to the woods and lost his life. The vessels have been sold for a nominal sum, and no redress has so far been obtained from the Government under whose authority these vessels were seized. In 1887, there was a repetition of the same action. Three more vessels were seized and the same proceedings followed. They were libelled in the Admiralty Court of Alaska, they were condemned and sold, their cargoes were confiscated, the captains were imprisoned, and the owners are without any remedy. I acknowledge frankly that the matter was taken up in what appeared to be a firm and determined mode by the Canadian Government. They represented to the English Government the enormity of the outrage perpetrated on British subjects, they pressed the matter, in my humble judgment, with sufficient firmness, and did what appears to have been all that lay in their power at first to induce the Imperial Government to take such action as would have these grievances remedied. Here we stand to-day, three years after the outrages were committed, and up to this time nothing has been done, and the people are without any remedy. I wish to call the attention of the Government and the House to the fact that, although this matter appears to have been pressed at first by the Canadian Government, with promptness and firmness, there came a time when their efforts seem to have stopped. In the spring of 1888, two years after the first step had been taken, from all that appears by the papers brought down to the House, the Canadian Government seem to have ceased. Wearied out, perhaps; possibly coming to the conclusion that they could not do anything, they seemed to have stopped, and nothing more has been done. This case, therefore, is of importance, not only from the personal grievances which the individuals have suffered, and for which they are to this day without any remedy, but it is important also, from the international nature of the claim. If it is true, that Canadian interests can be outraged in this way, and no remedy can be achieved, it is well for us to know it. If the British Government are not able to protect our fishermen in Behring's Sea or wherever else they may fish, carrying the British flag, it is well that the Canadian public should know it. We know that the relations between the Imperial Government and the United States Government were somewhat strained during the year 1888. We know that, owing to the dismissal of Lord Sackville from his position as Ambassador at Washington, the relations between the Government of Great Britain and the Government of the United States were not as cordial as they were previously. But there ought to be no reason, because, for Imperial reasons, the relations between those two Governments are somewhat strained, and are not as cordial as they ought to be, and as we all wish they were, why Canadian interests should suffer; and I repeat that, if we had, as we have demanded time and again, the right to negotiate commercial treaties and to have an agent at Washington to represent our claims and interests, I have no shadow of doubt that this matter would have long ago been settled. I can see no substantial reason why the United States should not grant compensation for these outrages. The hon. gentleman has referred to the historical aspect of the question. We know that in 1821, the Emperor of Russia issued an edict forbidding any fishermen from fishing within 100 miles of Alaska. That was resisted strongly by the American Minister, and his representations were such that in 1825 a treaty was agreed upon between the United States and Russia which put an end forever to the pretensions of the Russian Government. In the same year or the year following, a similar treaty was entered into between Great Britain and Russia, conceding the same rights and privileges to British subjects as were conceded in the American treaty; and from and after that time the Russian edict was a dead letter as far as British subjects were concerned. That treaty remained in force and Russia did not claim subsequently any exclusive right over the waters of the Behring's Sea up to the time when she ceded Alaska to the United States. The Marquis of Salisbury, in a despatch which he sent to Sir Lionel Sackville-West in September, 1887, in reviewing these provisions, called special attention to the fact that in the cession of that country of Alaska by Russia to the United States, Russia did not pretend to cede any rights to the waters over which it is now claimed that the United States have exclusive jurisdiction. The noble Marquis says in that despatch:

"The claim thus set up appears to be founded on the exceptional title said to have been conveyed to the United States by Russia at the time of the cession of the Alaska Territory. The pretension which the Russian Government at one time put forward to exclusive jurisdiction over the whole of the Behring's Sea was, however, never admitted either by this country or by the United States of America. On the contrary, it was strenuously resisted, as I shall presently show, and the American Government can hardly claim to have received from Russia rights which they declared to be inadmissable when asserted by the Russian Government. Nor does it appear from the text of the Treaty of 1867 that Russia either intended or purported to make any such grant; for, by article 1 of that instrument, Russia agreed to cede to the United States all the territory and dominion then possessed by Russia 'on the continent of America and in the adjacent islands,' within certain geographical limits described, and no mention was made of any exclusive right over the waters of Behring's Sea."

So it would appear, from the terms of the treaty by which Alaska was ceded to the United States, that the Russian Government did not pretend to cede, and did not, as a matter of law or fact, cede any other rights to the United States than the rights Russia herself possessed "on the continent of America and in the adjacent islands." And, as Russia had, by the treaties of 1825 with the United States and with Great Britain, yielded up the claims she had previously put forward to the exclusive right to Behring's Sea, there does not seem to be the slightest pretension for the argument which the Judge of the Admiralty Court assumed, that the whole of Behring's Sea belongs, as a matter of territorial right, to the owner of the State of Alaska. Now, the American Legislature passed a statute some years ago prohibiting the killing of seals in these seas; but, on looking at the terms of the statute, I find that it does not pretend to claim any jurisdiction over the waters of Behring's Sea beyond the limits recognised by all nations as those limits which the territorial owners have rights over. It only pretended to legislate against the killing of seals on the Islands of St. Paul and St. George, or the waters adjacent to those islands, and the construction which the Judge of the Admiralty Court put on that provision, that the waters adjacent to the islands extended 100, or 200, or even 400 and 500 miles from those islands, seems to me to be utterly untenable, and I believe it would never be recognised by any court, and could never be successfully asserted by the United States Government. In the first place, the words themselves will not bear that construction; in the second place, the words in the treaty of cession from Russia to the United States, do not bear that construction; and in the third place, the United States are estopped by the formal manner in which they vigorously and effectually protested against the assumption of a similar claim put forward by Russia when she owned Alaska. The thing seems to be utterly absurd and will not bear argument for a moment. Now, what do we find? We find that the cruisers of the United States, acting in pursuance of instructions from Washington, which instructions are directly at variance, as is shown in the official papers brought down, with similar instructions issued when Mr. Boutwell was Secretary of the Treasury—acting in pursuance of those instructions, they have seized vessels and continued to seize vessels fishing in pursuance of their lawful avocation upon the high seas, one and two hundred miles from land. It is incredible that such pretensions can be recognised by the Government of Great Britain or by Canada. These seal fisheries are no doubt of the most valuable kind; we have rights in them as citizens of the world; any vessel has a right to go to these seas and to fish there. To allow such a pretension to be successfully maintained by the United States would be to surrender on our part those national rights which we inherently possess. The grievous character of the complaint was very well summed up in the minute of council which our Government forwarded to the Imperial Government in the fall of 1887, in which our Government appear to have been sufficiently impressed with the magnitude of the interests involved, and with the serious character of the grievances under which these people labor. It is stated there:

"It is respectfully submitted that this condition of affairs is in the highest degree detrimental to the interests of Canada, and should not be permitted to continue. For nearly two years Canadian vessels have been exposed to arbitrary seizure and confiscation in the pursuit of their lawful occupation upon the high sea, and Canadian citizens subjected to imprisonment and serious financial loss, while an important and remunerative Canadian industry has been threatened with absolute ruin."

No language could put the fact stronger than the language of this minute of council, and if you substitute three years in place of two years, we have a capital epitome of the facts as they exist at the present time. The question which this Parliament has to ask, the question which this country has to ask, the question which those who suffer from these illegal seizures are asking now, is, what is the Government doing in the matter? I cannot find that since the spring of 1888, anything has been done. I find that in February, 1887, in reply to repeated remonstrances and protests from the Imperial Government, Mr. Bayard, the Secretary of State, wrote a despatch to the British Ambassador in which he stated that orders had been issued discontinuing the proceedings against these vessels, and discharging them from detention, and releasing the prisoners. Well, Sir, marvellous to relate, it is almost incredible that the despatch reciting that orders had been issued by the United States to its officers in Alaska directing them to give up this property, to discontinue proceedings, and release the parties imprisoned—singular to relate, that order was ignored by those officials and treated with contempt, and for a period of another year, although that despatch was issued and sent, no attention whatever was paid to it; the parties were not released from imprisonment, the vessels were not released from detention, and no compensation was offered. The Marquis of Salisbury, in a subsequent despatch, declared that he drew the inference from that despatch that it was the intention of the American Government not to continue the system of depredation—I suppose that would be the correct word—which they had carried on in the summer of 1886, and I think he was fairly justified in drawing that inference. It is true it was stated in the despatch that this release was granted without expressing any positive opinion upon the case. But the facts were before the Secretary of State at that time, and it is inconceivable that he should have granted an unconditional release of the vessels and the prisoners unless he had made up his mind that they had been illegally seized. It is true, no express undertaking was entered into by the United States Government that they would not repeat the seizures made in 1887, though I think that his lordship was fairly justified in drawing the inference that he did, that the seizures would not be continued. But in 1887 we find United States cruisers again seizing these vessels, we find the Secretary of State repudiating the inference which the Marquis of Salisbury had drawn from the despatch of February, 1887, and we find British and Canadian ships driven from the high seas by the same high-handed acts in 1887 by which they had been driven away in 1886. Now, I have no charge to make the against this Government except that I cannot find, in the papers, that they have used all reasonable diligence in pressing the claim since the spring of 1888. They seem to have dropped, so far as the papers show, pressing the matter any further. If that is so, they are properly chargeable with culpable negligence. Of course we will hear what the First Minister has to say when he comes to address the House, as I have no doubt he will, on this important matter. I cannot think, myself, that the action of the American Government is such that the citizens of that country ought to be proud of it. I think their conduct has been reprehensible in the extreme, I think their conduct calls for disapproval, I think the conduct of Mr. Bayard is such as to call for disapproval. I think there is nothing in his action—and I have read his correspondence over carefully from begining to end—showing that he had a sincere desire to do right in the premises. The fact is that he seems to be fencing from month to month and year to year, against the expression of any positive opinion one way or the other, strongly as he was pressed to do so. But I think the matter ought to be pressed, I think the matter is of such importance that it cannot be allowed by this Parliament to lie dormant, I shall be delighted to hear from the leader of the Government, or from any other member of the Government, that they are now taking effective steps to ensure that British interests shall be protected on the high seas of Behring's Sea, the same as they are protected on the high seas of the Atlantic. At a time when the United States were protesting with all their force against what they alleged to be arbitrary and illegal detentions and seizures of their vessels within three miles of the land on the Atlantic coast, they are practicing and claiming sovereignty over the sea one and two hundred miles from the shore on the Pacific coast. Sir, these pretensions seem to be such as cannot be recognised or submitted to, and I hope that the Government will be able to give some assurance to the House that this claim has been pressed, to some extent effectively, during the past year, and that it is being pressed now, I hope also that those who have suffered such serious loss in their fishing interests, will have some early assurance given to them that the damages of the past will be repaired, and that in the future they will be allowed peaceably and quietly to carry on their fishing avocations on the high seas. I shall wait with some degree of anxiety the explanations which the hon. gentleman may have to make.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I hope that at this period of the Session we will not be drawn into a discussion of the question of whether Canada should make commercial treaties directly with the rest of the world. We have had that already before the House, and I have no doubt that when Parliament meets again, we will have a discussion of the subject. The hon. gentleman affirms that he has no manner of doubt—those were his words—that if Canada had a representative at Washington, compensation would have been granted long ago; in five minutes afterwards he said that the American Government had made an unfounded claim to the exclusive right to all these seas. Now, if they had exclusive right to all these waters, and if these waters were trespassed upon by British or any other foreign vessels, no question of compensation could arise.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I said the Secretary of State appeared to fence, and did not appear to give any direct statement as to what his claims were, and that there was circumlocution.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think there is more than the Secretary of State on the fence at this moment. The hon. gentleman did say, that if we had only had an ambassador at Washington, compensation would have been granted. First, there must be the admission that there was a claim for compensation. The United States has resisted that, and, as the hon. gentleman says, there was no positive assertion on the part of the Secretary of State on the subject.

Mr DAVIES (P.E.I.) Hear, hear.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, that is so. But there is no admission, in any way, of a claim. The hon. gentleman says, that if we had only had an ambassador there, it is quite certain we would have been granted compensation. Although we have no ambassador there, American ships have suffered exactly the same wrongs as British Columbia vessels. Their vessels have been seized, and many people have been ruined; they have made complaints loud and long to Washington, and to Congress, as American citizens, pointing out that they have been bankrupted and ruined. The newspapers of San Francisco, to which the hon. gentleman behind me referred—and I may say, that I think my hon. friend handled the matter with more judgment than did the hon. gentleman who spoke last—have declared that American citizens have been used and abused by this Alaska Commercial Company, and that the American Government have been wanting in their duty towards their own citizens, in allowing this aggressive monopoly to act in such an atrocious manner, as they have done in Behring's Sea. The hon. gentleman should remember, that this question is not only a Canadian question. It is not like the question of our own fisheries; it is not like any question arising between the United States and Canada in regard to our own inland waters. It is a question that affects the whole world. It affects specially the interests of the maritime nations, and all the maritime nations are concerned in resisting what I must call the iniquitous attempt of the United States Government to claim Behring's Sea as a mare clausum These nations are all concerned. Canada, from its proximity to those waters, is specially interested, because we have large fishing interests and hope to develop fishing enterprises both in whale and seal fisheries. But we know also that England has whale and seal fishing vessels wandering over every sea, Arctic and Antarctic. So it is with the fishermen of the Netherlands, and Germany now is pushing her way into every sea as a maritime nation. It is an international question; it is not a Canadian, a Dominion or a provincial question; and when we find that England has, on our strong remonstrance, taken action, we have no doubt that she will press it. England has pressed it, and is pressing it. We know perfectly well that in any international question of this kind great delays always occur, where one of the negotiating parties is anxious to postpone the negotiations. Perhaps, for the reason the hon. gentleman gave, the strained relations which for a very short time existed between England and the States formed one reason why the United States has fenced the question and not come to any conclusion, or it may be for other reasons, perhaps not quite as creditable even as that. We have now a new Government in the United States and a new President, and we have a Minister sent specially from England. I believe that Sir Julian Pauncefort is a man who is singularly adapted to deal with these questions, having been the permanent head of the Foreign Office for a good many years. He is thoroughly acquainted with the question of all our relations with the United States, not only with this question of the Behring's Sea, but with our Fisheries question; and as he is a vigorous man, thoroughly experienced in all these subjects in which we are interested, I think we are very fortunate in having him at Washington. Whether he will be more successful than his predecessor was in bringing these negotiations to a conclusion, we cannot say. With respect to the conduct of the Canadian Government, the hon. gentleman was good enough to say that we had in 1886, 1887 and 1888 pressed the claims of Canada with sufficient persistency. I can only assure the hon. gentleman that the British Government have thoroughly and frankly responded to our claim, and have asserted that our contentions are correct, that our claims are just, and that the claims of the Americans are unfounded. The negotiations will go on, and no one can foresee what the result may be. One thing is clear, that if the United States are resolved to insist on their pretension, that Behring's Sea is closed to the whole of the world but the United States, a grave complication will arise. To what extent that complication will extend no one can foresee, and I do not even desire, by a single expression, to point out what I perhaps fear or apprehend might be the ultimate consequence of a permanent determination on the part of the United States to insist upon their claim that Behring's sea is a mare clausum. But I will say this, that Canada has not been forgetful of its interests or its rights, and has resisted the wrongs offered her; and I freely admit, with the hon. gentleman, that these are wrongs—wrongs suffered by American citizens inflicted by their own citizens, as well as wrongs inflicted on foreign subjects, and wrongs which some day or other, in my opinion, must be compensated for. I would say only one thing further, and it is this: That the late Governor General—and, perhaps, the hon. gentleman knows it, and it was intimated in the public press—took great interest in this question. I am not committing any breach of confidence or etiquette in stating that, besides taking such interest as he was bound to take as Governor General, he took a warm personal interest in all the questions connected with the fisheries and with this special question, and when he went to England he took memoranda with him from the Canadian Government—and he went to England only last year—with the understanding that before he left for India he would press, personally, upon Her Majesty's Government the great wrongs that Canada had suffered originally by the position taken by the American States, and the great injury that our subjects had suffered by delay in granting compensation. All I can say is, that we have done everything we possibly could do. I believe Her Majesty's Government have been unceasing in their desire to have a successful result follow the negotiations. I believe, why, I am sure, though I have it not in writing, but I am as sure as if I saw the writing, that Sir Julian Pauncefort is specially charged with this question and with others to bring them to a speedy conclusion, and I hope to a successful one. If naught else can be done—I do not know it as a fact, but I have little doubt on the question—he can call the attention, the serious attention of all the maritime powers to this question, because it is to the interest, as I have already said, of all these nations to prevent an important sea of that kind from being closed against the enterprise and commerce of all the rest of the world.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I do not know that it is any consolation to Canadian citizens whose property has been seized and who have been maltreated to know that American citizens have been equally maltreated. They have got far better opportunities to obtain redress than our Canadian citizens can possibly have from the American Government, and therefore we can dismiss that portion of the hon. gentleman's plea. I do not think it affects the situation one way or the other. The case is this: We do not mean to allege that the British Government are indifferent to what has occurred, nor do I mean to allege that the Canadian Government are indifferent to what has occurred. I do say that this is, as my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies) has justly pointed out, another of the proofs which are accumulating from day to day and from month to month and from year to year, that this roundabout system under which we now live and by which if a Canadian citizen suffers injury, application has to be made to the Foreign or Colonial Office as the case may be, then to the British Minister at Washington, then roundabout to our own Secretary of State, and then back to the Foreign Office—is antiquated and unbusinesslike to a degree, and is tending powerfully to complicate in a mischievous manner the relations between Canada and the United States. I say that this is a case in point. I am as well aware as the hon. gentleman is that Canada is not strong enough by force of arms to compel the United States to do her right, if the United States be determined to do her wrong. But I do say that this is one of these instances in which there is hardly room for reasonable men to doubt that if the Canadian Government had possessed an authorised agent at Washington who could have put himself daily and weekly (and not at intervals of eight months) in communication with the American authorities, that we would have had—not, perhaps, a certainty—but an infinitely better chance of having the wrongs done to our fellow citizens redressed, than by the process which now goes on. The hon. gentleman did not deny, and he could not deny, that three years have elapsed since these seizures commenced, and that we are as far now from having these wrongs redressed as we were at the beginning.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. And it is six years for the United States citizens who have the same wrongs unredressed yet.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That may be, but I entirely deny that there is any parallel between the action of the United States towards their own citizens and the action of the United States officers towards the citizens of another State. The United States may choose for their own purposes to prohibit their citizens, and they have a right to prohibit their citizens on grounds of public policy, from fishing in Behring's Sea or anywhere else, but they have no right to prohibit our citizens. It is all very well for the right hon. gentleman to point out that this affects all maritime nations. That is true technically, but, practically speaking, it is England and her colonies who are almost the only parties concerned in this matter, for I do not believe that a single vessel of another nationality has been seized or interfered with in this matter of fishing in Behring's Seas. As to the contention of the United States, I am not going to discuss that now, but it appears to be absurd on the face of it. We would have infinitely better grounds, and infinitely more justice on our side if we asserted that the Gulf of St. Lawrence, or, still more, the Hudson's Bay, is a mare clausum. We have ten times more justice on our side for claiming that than the United States have to assert that Behring's Sea is a mare clausum. Although we are not of ourselves able to force the United States to do us justice, yet we would have an infinitely better chance of getting our demands attended to if we had an agent who would be in constant communication with the United States authorities. These interminable delays, as we have seen in the fishery negotiations, as we have noticed in the case of that Blue-book in my hon. friend's hands, by which it takes eight months, when it might be accomplished in a few days, for a communication to be made by our authorities and an answer received—those delays, as we have shown time and again, are not conducive to the good conduct of the nation. If we had this direct communication with the United States Government we would have an infinitely better chance although, perhaps, not a certainty, of getting these things satisfactorily settled, than we can under existing circumstances.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). I fully agree with the remarks which have fallen from the hon. gentlemen who have spoken with regard to the importance of this case It seems to me, without discussing the general question, that there has been some fault, to a certain extent, on behalf of the officers interested in this matter for the Canadian Government. When these vessels were seized, and the judgment by Judge Dawson delivered in the district court of Alaska (which judgment I have read, and I must say that it seems to me, in point of law, utterly untenable), we should have taken steps to have appealed from that decision to the highest court of the United States.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The United States informed us that there was no appeal from that court.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). That is not the case, so far as I understand. My recollection of the code of the United States tribunals is this: that there is an appeal from the district court to the circuit court, and from the circuit court to the United States court, but my impression is that after Judge Dawson gave his decision the motion for appeal was dismissed by him on the ground that the time for appeal had lapsed, and that it was then too late for the officers interested, on behalf of our Government, to take an appeal. My hon. friend will find in the correspondence between Lord Sackville and Mr. Bayard, that the United States Government was asked to waive the question of appeal and allow the matter to be brought before the Supreme Court, which, apparently, they declined to do. It seems to me that this is unfortunate, because we have, as the Americans can point out, a judgment against these vessels, which has not been appealed from and under which they have been sold. Therefore, to a certain extent, their courts have maintained the position of the American Government. It appears to me that if an appeal had been brought before the Supreme Court of the United States, they would have adopted the doctrine which has been laid down by their distinguished jurists on national law, and reversed the decision of the district court. If this appeal had been taken it would have facilitated very much the settlement of the question. It is quite true, as the First Minister says, that this is a national question and that other countries have an interest in it. That may be so, but, nevertheless, we find that in 1821, when the difficulties first arose over the claim of Russia to those seas, that although it was then a national question, only two countries interfered, and, finally, the treaties which have been referred to were concluded between the United States and Russia, and Great Britain and Russia.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is 60 years ago.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). Quite true; but they were the only countries who entered into protest against the assumption of Russia. Subsequently the treaties were made, upon which treaty Judge Dawson seems to have found a doctrine of estoppel, which, I must say, would be new to any lawyer who has carefully read the judgment in this case. The United States having purchased Alaska from the Russian Government, they are now claiming what they repudiated on the part of Russia in 1821 and in 1825. The Behring's Straits cannot be considered a mare clausum in the same sense as Hudson's Bay. The position taken by the United States in 1821, sustains the view taken by the Court of St. James in regard to that matter. My hon. friend referred to what has been done by this Government, and there is no doubt, that a very able minute of council was sent home, of which my hon. friend has read an extract, and in which the Government forwarded the claims of those parties who have suffered so severely; and the manner in which those sealers were treated by the American authorities, I think, calls for the most severe condemnation, and was hardly worthy of a civilised nation. That minute of council was sent, and then it appears nothing more was done. The United States Government, however, proposed at that time to have a convention, and communications were opened between Great Britain and the United States with that view, and other nations were invited to concur. The hon. First Minister states that the late Governor General took a great interest in that matter, and took home a communication; but it seems to me that the Canadian Government must have been very dilatory, because we find that while the negotiations were going on with regard to the convention, a despatch, dated 20th June, was sent by Mr. White, Secretary of the American Legation in London, to Mr. Bayard, which I will read:

"SIR,—I have the honor to inform you that I availed myself of an early opportunity to acquaint the Marquis of Salisbury and the Russian Ambassador of the receipt of your instructions, numbered 864, of May 3, and shortly afterwards (May 16) His Excellency and I called together at the Foreign Office, for the purpose of discussing with His Lordship the terms of the proposed convention for the protection of seals in Behring Sea. Unfortunately, Lord Salisbury had just received a communication from the Canadian Government, stating that a memorandum on the subject would shortly be forwarded to London, and expressing a hope that, pending the arrival of that document, no further steps would be taken in the matter by Her Majesty's Government. Under these circumstances Lord Salisbury felt bound to await the Canadian memorandum before proceeding to draught the convention."

It will be seen, that on May 16, when the Russian Ambassador and Mr. White called on the Marquis of Salisbury, they were informed that the English Government were awaiting a communication from the Canadian Government, and that a memorandum on the subject would be forwarded. But, on the 20th of June, nearly a month afterwards, when Mr. White called on the Marquis of Salisbury, no note had been received, and the English Government had been obliged to send out a telegram for that memorandum to be sent forward. Whether it was sent forward, or whether any other steps was taken, does not appear from the papers. Nothing further occurred between the United States and the English Government until the month of October, when the difficulty took place with regard to Sir Sackville West, causing his return to London. The fact that both Governments were willing to enter into a convention for the purpose of settling all these questions with regard to Behring's Sea, which is probably a matter of importance to both American and Canadian fishermen, seems to indicate that the delay was due to the neglect of the Canadian Government. The British Government were apparently desirous of consulting the wishes and interests of our Government in this matter in every way; but Lord Salisbury's hands were apparently tied because of the non-receipt of the memorandum from the Canadian Government. However, I hope that the matter will be pushed now that there is a new Government in the United States, and that diplomatic relations have again been entered into with Great Britain, and that justice will be done to those individuals who have suffered so severely at the hands of the American authorities.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Although our friends on the opposite side of the House have given us the credit of having represented pretty fairly and strongly the rights of our people on the high seas, we could expect them to make that admission without accompanying it with some items of blame against the Government of Canada, whether their contentions were well founded or not. The hon. gentleman who has just sat down, in making that admission, states that there are two particulars in which Canada has failed. One of these is in not having taken an appeal from the magistrate in Sitka to the United States Supreme Court, and he entertains the idea that if such an appeal had been taken, it would have been decided by the United States Supreme Court that the contention of the United States Government in regard to Behring's Sea being a closed sea was an erroneous one. I need hardly say that it is not for the Government of Canada to take an appeal to the Supreme Court of the United States. It is only the owner of one of the vessels who would be in a position to assert the right of appeal; and for the Government of Canada to submit themselves to a foreign jurisdiction in regard to the rights of Her Majesty's subjects on the high seas would be a very questionable step indeed. It may be that if any of those parties had chosen to assert an appeal, the Government of Canada might have given them its support. It is a fact, however, that they never did so, although we have not remonstrated against their pursuing a course of that kind. Now, the cases that arose on the Pacific coast are entirely distinct from those which arose on the Atlantic coast. In the latter cases defences were raised in our own courts by owners of American vessels which were found in our waters It is a well-known principle that vessels coming within the jurisdiction of a foreign country must submit themselves to the municipal laws of that country; and therefore it was right for the owners of vessels seized on the Atlantic coast to set up their claims in the courts of Great Britain. They were within our waters and subject to our laws as much as citizens of the United States coming into Nova Scotia would be subject to the laws prevailing in that Province. On the other hand, Canadian vessels seized by the American authorities on the high seas are in no way within the jurisdiction of the courts of the United States; and Her Majesty's Government, at the instance of the Government of Canada, took the view that the questions at issue were not questions which either of the Governments ought to submit to the adjudication of the courts of the United States, but related to the treatment on the high seas of Her Majesty's subjects in the pursuit of their lawful calling. It has been overlooked that some of the seizures which took place were those of American vessels, and an appeal was asserted on their behalf. The whole question of the right of appeal was not overlooked. The best advice that could be obtained on that subject was clearly that no appeal would lie from the magistrate at Sitka.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). He is a judge of the district court.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. He was a magistrate merely, and there was no means of getting a decision from the Supreme Court except by a suit instituted in one of the courts in the States, and an action was commenced in the State of Massachusetts by one of the American owners, which action is now pending.

Mr. WELDON (St. John). "The United States district court in and for the district of Alaska, of the United States of America."

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. He is simply a magistrate, and nothing else, although he is vested for certain purposes with the powers of a United States' district judge; but in this respect he does not correspond to the United States' district judges in the States. However, that is somewhat beside the question. If an appeal lay, it would have been successfully prosecuted by the American owner. It seemed well established that an appeal did not lie. It was admitted by the authorities in Washington that no appeal would lie, and that therefore it became purely an international question. When we applied to the United States Government for redress there was no attempt on their part to assert that it was a matter for the courts of the country to decide, as they have always contended when there was any remedy by way of litigation, even until the last stage of such litigation was concluded. The other objection to our procedure in this matter is that there was delay on our part in entering into the convention to which the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) has referred. When the House is reminded what kind of a convention was proposed, they will see how preposterous it was that we should ever enter into it, and how utterly immaterial it was whether we ever made any answer or not to the absurd proposal of the United States Government. What was their proposal? The hon. member for St. John states it to have been a proposal to form a convention for the settlement of all questions, relating to Behring's Sea and the killing of seals. It may have had that high-sounding title, but, in point of fact, it was a proposal that all the nations of the world, except the United States, should be forbidden in the Pacific Ocean to hunt seals. The fact is, that the United States own, as part of the territory of Alaska, the only islands on which the seals are known to land. Those islands are under lease to that absolute monopoly, known as the Alaska Seal Company, and the proposal of the United States authorities was that, for the preservation of these seals, all killing at sea should be forbidden, and that the seal should only be allowed to be taken on land, and inasmuch as they own the only shores on which the seals land, and had leased them to the Alaska Seal Company, the proposal with regard to this convention was a proposal that all nations of the earth should be forbidden to pursue the seals on the high seas, and should leave the seal fishing industry as the monopoly of the Alaska company. That proposition fell through, and it should have been treated with nothing but indignation, moderated only by the civility which is necessary to keep up international intercourse. Therefore, when the hon. gentleman accused us of having prevented the settlement of the question, by delaying that convention, he shows that he has misunderstood the object for which the convention was proposed.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It is not my purpose to detain the House at this stage of the Session by an elaborate discussion of the merits or demerits of the American claim to the exclusive jurisdiction of Behring's Sea. It is to be regretted that the hon. gentleman who brought this question to our attention did not bring it up at an earlier period, when greater consideration could have been given it. I am sure that hon. gentlemen on this side refrained from bringing it before the House for discussion out of courtesy to that hon. gentleman, and it is, therefore, all the more to be regretted that he did not bring the question forward at an earlier period. I do not understand that the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) or the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) complained of want of diligence on the part of the Government in pressing this claim when the dispute first arose, but they called the attention of the House to a fact upon which the Ministers have given no information for there does not appear to have been any correspondence or discussion on this question since May, 1888. They ask the Government to account for their seeming want of diligence since that time. It may have been that the Government allowed this question to remain in abeyance immediately after the discussion of the fishery dispute, but however that may be, as this is a wholly separate and distinct question, one which was not in any way confused with the fishery dispute during the negotiations, it was a matter of some importance that the pretensions of the United States should not have seemed, for a single moment, to be recognised. Now, I would say, in the first place, that it is a pretty well-settled rule of international law that the condition of things which exists when a dispute begins between two states ought to continue until the question in dispute is disposed of. There can be no doubt whatever that this sea was treated as an open sea from 1825 down to 1885, and it is important that the freedom which was exercised—wrongly exercised, according to the contention of the United States—down to that period of time should be continued; and it does seem to me that the British Government ought to have been careful to have put a cruiser into those waters for the purpose of resisting, if necessary, the pretensions of the United States beyond the ordinary limit recognised by international law. That has not been done, and the failure on the part of the Imperial Government to do that is a dereliction of duty. The United States would not for a moment have permitted such a claim to have been made by the Canadian Government, if such a claim had not continued to exist for an indefinite period of time, and so we ought not to permit the United States Government to make this claim without its being disputed; and I am perfectly sure that, however strong the United States Government may feel their claim to be, it is a claim that ought not to have been called into action until recognised by the opposite party. Now, we have never recognised their pretension, and they ought never to have undertaken to enforce that pretension, and we ought not to have permitted it. Now, the right hon. the First Minister says that the Alaska Seal Company are enforcing their claim as vigorously against other American fishing vessels or sealers as against Canadians, but I understand the difference to be this, that it is the interest of the United States that the claims or pretensions of the Alaska Sealing Company should be upheld. The upholding of that claim upholds American sovereignty and American exclusive jurisdiction over these waters, so that it is their interest to maintain the pretensions of that company against any other American sealers; and it would be the greatest possible delusion on our part to feel that we were safely resting our case upon any pretensions put forward by any other parties in the United States. Our safe position is to resist the pretensions which the American Government are putting forward. The position of the United States in this question is not the position of Russia in 1825. Russia owned the Asiatic as well as the North American coast. She owned the Aleutian or Fox Islands to the south just as the Americans do at the present time. If that had been a very much smaller body of water than it is, the rule that was laid down in the seizure of the Washington in a portion of the Bay of Fundy shows that, when Russia became possessed of one coast and the United States of another, there was no possibility of treating Behring's Sea as a closed sea, even if there had been an opportunity of claiming it as such before the cession of Alaska. It seems to me that there is no ground whatever for this pretension. There is no analogy between this case and that of the Hudson's Bay which was referred to by my hon. friend from Oxford. That is a mare clausum, lying within the jaws of the land, and in the case in regard to the Bay of Fundy, Trinity Bay and other bays, they are bays lying within the land, they are not used by any vessel navigating the high seas, which may come close to the shore, and may for this reason have an easement on the waters, even under the control of another foreign state. But this is a part of the high sea itself. It is not enclosed. There is Behring's Strait to the north, there are hundreds of miles of water lying between one island and the other, and between the mainlands. Here is a sea from 3,000 to 4,000 miles in width, and it seems preposterous to treat that as a closed sea. I am not finding fault with this Administration, but they have not yet disclosed how far they have exercised due diligence, since April, 1888, and I am sure it would have been satisfactory to the House to have learned how far they have exercised due diligence. It is clear, however, that the condition of things which existed before the American pretensions were set up must be the condition of things which should continue, and must be insisted upon, not so much by this Government, perhaps, as by the English Government, until the Canadian claim is recognised or the question is otherwise settled. It appears, however, as if the English Government had not exercised that diligence which we are entitled to expect at their hands. It is their duty to protect our rights, and to resist—by force if necessary—American encroachment until this question is disposed of and a different condition of things established successfully from that which existed before. That has not been done. Until the American Government do that, they must be content to allow the original condition of things to continue. They may enter their protest. They may say: You have no right to fish here or to do any sealing here; but, until they establish that, and until it is recognised as the proper rule, the former practice must continue. Anyone who will trace up the growth of this feature of international law will see that formerly the sealing and fishing were appurtenant to some shore. That was recognised in 1713, under the Treaty of Utrecht, when the French were excluded from fishing within thirty leagues of the Nova Scotia shore. In 1783, the Americans resisted that arrangement, and it was abandoned; their right was recognised to fish on the banks, and their liberty, though not their right, to fish in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, which was a mare clausum. Now, it is said that the sealing is appurtenant to the shore, and that you have no right to fish out on the high seas. That contention was abandoned in 1783, and I say it is the duty of the Government to press this matter vigorously on the attention of the English Government and to insist on the freedom of those seas until a different rule is established.

DUTY ON MINING MACHINERY.

Mr. BARNARD. I desire to make a statement with the object of showing to the House and to the Government the importance of placing mining machinery on the free list for a few years, with the hope of inducing the Government to accede to the requests which have been made to them by the representatives of the Province of British Columbia and the Legislature of that Province, and in the petitions received by them from the Boards of Trade at Vancouver and at Victoria. It is a matter of very great importance to that Province, which is, to a very great extent, a mineral Province, and I think it is a matter of very great importance to the whole of this Dominion that the mining industry should be encouraged, and that every step should be taken both by the Dominion Government and by the Provincial Governments to encourage the development of our mineral wealth. I am a firm believer in the National Policy, and I believe that the object and aim of that policy is to encourage the development of our national resources as well as to foster our different industries. I believe there in no Province in the Dominion that will benefit more by the National Policy than the Province of British Columbia. I believe that Province is destined to become one of the greatest manufacturing Provinces in the Dominion, and possibly one of the
