CHAPTER IV.
AT THE DANCE.

He looked at her for a moment in silence. His eyes were so fine and dark that he could venture to perform this trick, a dangerous one for persons to attempt who did not possess his qualifications.

"No, I have no dress to wear," he assented, still looking at her.

She let her frounce fall and turned the bracelet on her arm, and so they stood for a moment; then she looked up and met his fixed gaze with her dark, lustrous eyes.

"You have not answered my question," she said, and there was the faintest smile on her delicate lips.

"I was just wondering whether you really wished me to answer," he said, coolly; "I mean truthfully, of course. I know that any commonplace excuse would do—but truthfully."

"Oh, please!" she said, with a little elevation of the eyelids; "the truth, of course."

"Well," he said, slowly, "I do not dance, because I do not care to dance with one lady in the room, and I am quite aware that I stand no chance of securing her for a partner."

She did not pretend to be ignorant of what he meant; she was too clever, too superb a creature for small affectations.

"You mean me?"

"I mean you," he said, just inclining his head.

"And how did you know that you could not dance with me?" she asked, forced a little nearer to him by the onrush of a dragoon and his partner.

"By experience," he replied. "Take care, or you will be crushed to death."

And he drew aside to make room for her in a little recess which, when there was no dancing about, sheltered a marble statuette. So they stood close together, so close that the faint fragrance of some perfume in her hair or on her fan rose and surrounded him, making his heart beat as assuredly nothing else in all the wide world could make it beat.

"By experience," he resumed, just glancing down at her and then speaking with his eyes fixed on the opposite wall, so that any one at a distance would scarcely have noticed that he had been speaking at all. "Last night, at Lady Colewell's, although I lost my dinner to be among the first-comers, and waited for you, I learned that your card was full; you filled it, I presume, coming up the stairs? The night before, at the duke's, you were too tired to dance with me—with me—the only waits left open on your list. I do not choose to woo a refusal and a disappointment to-night, so I stand, like Diogenes, and watch the world dancing, while I amuse myself by eating my heart out with envy, hatred, and all uncharitableness."

"You must be enjoying yourself," she said, in as low a voice as his, and with that subtle intonation which makes so strange and mystic a mumble for him and for many others.

"I am," he replied, with smiling irony and self-torture—"intensely. You dance so exquisitely—as you do everything else—that it is a keen enjoyment to see you waiting with other men, and to know there is no chance for me."

She didn't sigh, but the black lace on her bosom rose and fell, and it seemed almost as good as a sigh.

Then she took up the dainty lithographed ball-card and looked down at it musingly.

"What are you doing?" he asked, without glancing at her.

"Seeing if I can find you—that which you care so bitterly. You do not deserve it, because—you have not asked it."

"The wretch who is found dead on the pavement in mid-winter doesn't deserve to live, because he has not asked Rothschild to take him home to dinner. Well?"

"I have not one left," she said, still in the low voice. "The card is quite full."

"I knew that beforehand. And if it had not been—if there had been one vacant dance, you would not have given it to me; or say that you had, Mrs. Drayton would have seen the card, and warned you of the danger of wasting your time upon that Mr. Revel, who is really nobody, you know, my dear."

His imitation of her mother, really a fine performance, does not bring the flush of indignation to her cheek; on the contrary, she smiles pensively as if in appreciation and enjoyment.

"Better let me take you to your next partner," he went on. "Then I will go home, and—bless the fate that has ordained that I shall be a spectator of other people's happiness and possess none of my own."

"No," she said; "decidedly, you do not deserve that I should give you a dance. You are angry, bitter, and unjust. Could I keep my card empty for you all night? Could I meet every man who asked me to dance with the reply, 'Please, I am waiting to see if Mr. Clifford Revel should ask me; if he should not, then you may have it?'"

He looks down at her, admiration for her beauty, passion for herself, scarcely kept back from shining fiercely in his dark eyes; then he says:

"Well! Are you going to, or are you not?"

"My money or my life!" she retorts, in fine mockery of his tone. "Well, though you do not deserve it, I will throw young Stonedale over—poor boy; how angry he will be!—and give you this."

His eyes, usually so cold and self-constrained, light up, and for the first time a dash of color comes into his olive cheeks, as he offers her his arm.

"You are right!" he says, in her ear. "I do not deserve it, and yet, if I am bitter and envious, there is some excuse for it. Put yourself in my place—"

"If your place is where you have been standing all the evening, I had rather not, thanks!"

"Think what it must be to stand outside—just outside—all the good things of the world, and look on at others enjoying them—all the good things! They might have them all, if I could but have one! You know—"

"I know that all the rest of the people are dancing, and that we are standing still," she says, quietly. "I shall think that you were not half so anxious as you pretended to be."

He takes her hand in his, long and slender and supple, in its sheath of soft kid, and they dance. There are no better dancers in the room among her own sex than herself, no man can hold a candle to Clifford Revel, and they dance in that time and unison and sympathy which alone make proper dancing. The flush on his cheek grows deeper, and the cold, dark eyes glow as he bends them down on her; but her face is ivory white, as usual, her eyes perfectly calm. She knows that she is watched by dozens of eyes, and that any sign she might give would be detected; and, woman-like, she dances, the one best dancer of the evening, as if she enjoyed it no better than when she was plunging and struggling in the bear-like embrace of her last partner. It is over at last; with the black lace rising and falling on her white bosom, she leans her hand lightly on his arm, and he leads her out of the crowd.

"I count upon you to stand between me and Lord Stonedale's wrath," she says, looking up at him, with a smile in her eyes. "I see him at the end of the room there, expostulating and gesticulating to mamma; he will be here directly, and cover me with shame and confusion."

"I will fling him out of the window, if you like," he says, calmly, absent-mindedly.

She smiles.

"Poor boy! Deprive him of his life as well as his dance! And now will you go and make yourself pleasant to some one else? I don't mean to infer that you have made yourself pleasant to me; indeed, I do not think you have said an agreeable word the whole time, but will you go and dance with some of those girls over there? There is a pretty little thing in turquoise blue; I don't know who she is."

"You are right!" he says, in her ear. "I shall not dance again to-night."

"I see, in his clear, low, musical voice, as calmly as if he had declined a glass of wine. "I have had my one dance, and shall go home now. I am very grateful to you. I know how much it has cost you, and will cost you. I caught a glimpse of Mrs. Drayton's reproachful and anxious eyes a few minutes ago, and, as I say, I am grateful. I will say good-night now, before I take you to your next partner. Who is it?" and he takes the card that hangs by a silken thread to her wrist.

"You do not seem very grateful," she says, "and you seem somewhat in a hurry to be rid of me. Why should you go now?"

"Because I can not—after these last few minutes—endure to see you dancing with these others," and his cold eyes sweep the room with bitter disdain.

"No, you are decidedly not pleasant," she murmurs.

His lips curve with a smile of self-seorn.

"That is just it," he says, still looking at her card, and speaking so that his lips scarcely move. "I can never be 'pleasant,' as you call it, with you. I feel that the airy fools' talk that comes so easy when I am in the company of other women, falters and falls dead when I speak to you, as if of shame for its littleness. There is only one thing I can ever say to you, only one speech that my lips can frame with ease and truth, and that you would not let me say, would you?"

She looks at him, with not a trace of emotion in her dark eyes, with a faint smile even on her lips.

"It would be sure to be something absurdly improbable, or—impossible," she murmurs.

He inclines his head, and his lips close tightly—making them look, as his enemies say, rather too thin.

"Exactly; it would be absurdly impossible. This next dance is Sir Evelyn Selby's—and here he comes. Good-night. May you sleep well after your triumphs, and dream happily."

She doesn't say good-night, does not return the faint pressure of his hand as he touches hers, under pretence of giving back her programme, scarcely looks at him, indeed, as the wealthy, sporting baronet takes her away; and yet he feels the dainty perfume that surrounds her floating through his brain, feels the dark, inscrutable eyes reflected on his innermost heart—that heart so cold and hard and impregnable by others—and goes away, if not less satisfied, a shade less unhappy, for it is something to have touched her, to have held her waist in his arms, to have felt her breath on his hair.

The "small and early" proceeds merrily; it is a success, as all Mrs. Drayton's entertainments are; and the guests, as they file away to their carriages, as usual ascribe the success to the daughter.

"Wonderful girl, by Jove!" says Lord Combermere. "Looked simply killing to-night! Never saw such eyes; seem to go through a man, don't you know?"

"Yes," assents the duchess, whom he is escorting to her carriage. "Remarkably beautiful girl, no doubt, and we have spent a very pleasant evening—we always do, indeed—but, and her grace smiles curiously—"but we would like to know who and what they are!"

"Oh, what's it matter?" responds his lordship. "Nobody cares, don't you know. Awfully jolly people! It doesn't matter."

"Certainly not, if your lordship isn't going to marry either the widow or the daughter," rejoins her grace, and, with this parting shot she puts up the window and is driven off.

TO ASSIST THE FLIGHT.

WASHINGTON, April 2.

British destroyers will co-operate in the United States Navy in patrolling the course to be followed in the projected air flight across the Atlantic Ocean next month. It was learned to-day at the Navy Department that from forty to fifty British ships would be on duty from the Azores to the British Isles where the present plans the flight will be made. American destroyers will patrol the course from St. John's, Nfld., to the Azores. From fifty to sixty of the craft will be used and they will operate at intervals of less than ten miles. With reasonably good weather, however, the planes could be on the water while minor repairs are being made to the motors.

Foreign Badges and British Regiments.

In the arms of the present German Empire the eagle is single-headed, and sustains on its breast the arms of Prussia (the original Hohenzollern arms). Austria maintains the double-headed eagle, and Russia, under Ivan III, assumed it in 1472. In 1804 the Roman eagle was adopted by Napoleon as the Imperial symbol of France. It was set aside at his fall, restored in 1852, by Napoleon III, and abolished in 1870, under the republican regime. The King of Poland also had an eagle, and the eagle has been adopted by the United States of America. The Prussian, Austrian, and French eagles have been adopted as badges in the British army. The Prussian eagle, as a badge, is worn by a regiment of Hussars. It was granted in 1798 in honour of the Duchess of York (Princess Royal of Prussia) when the regiment was known as the Duchess of York's Own Light Dragoons. The Austrian eagle is a badge of the King's Dragoon Guards. Permission was granted to that regiment to wear the double-headed eagle of Austria in the form of a collar badge "as a mark of respect" for H. L. M. the Emperor Francis Joseph, who, in March, 1895, was gazetted colonel-in-chief of the regiment. Shortly after the outbreak of the present war this distinction was withdrawn. The French eagle is worn by a regiment of dragoons, the Royal Scots Greys, the Essex Regiment, and the Royal Irish Fusiliers, to commemorate the capture of eagles in campaigns of long ago.

No Refuge for De Valera in U.S.A.

NEW YORK, March 12.—The Washington immigration officials state that Mr. de Valera, the Sinn Fein leader, will be admitted to the United States, only if he presents satisfactory passports. Great Britain would undoubtedly refuse to grant such passports, and if he should be smuggled into the United States it would be the duty of America under international law to apprehend him and hand him over to the British authorities.

Mr. Ralph F. Couch, the correspondent of the United Press of America, who interviewed Mr. de Valera, near Dublin on February 24, received from a Sinn Fein man on the next day a statement in Mr. de Valera's handwriting. It said:—"People are convinced, I suppose, that England of her own accord will not do justice to Ireland, and they doubt whether other nations will be such determined champions of right as to risk a quarrel with England when nothing but principles of justice are at stake.

"But it is surely a source of hope to know that there is in Paris one man at least who apparently realises his duty and who can accomplish what he will if only he remains steadfastly and determinedly true. Why should any of the statesmen in Paris even seek to oppose President Wilson in having the cause of justice upheld? Ireland seeks nothing from England but the removal of England's oppressive and interfering hand. Her only demand is the fundamental right to live her own life in her own way, with no limitations except those imposed by the necessity of respecting the equal rights of other peoples.

"If England accepts the principle of self-determination for this island unit, that will settle the Irish question for ever. We can ourselves settle our minority question because we shall want to. England will never settle it, because she desires to keep it unsettled.

"We ask the world to listen and judge between Ireland and England, but if the principles with which the world has rung for the past four years shall prove a mockery, if Ireland's claim is still clouded, then she must find refuge once more in her indomitable spirit—the spirit which has maintained her in the past. She can suffer as long as she endures, and depend upon it there is a generation now up in Ireland that will see to it that if England wants still to rule here she must do so with an unheated sword."—Exchange Telegraph Company.

Tried to Board a Phantom Ship.

WEIRD EXPERIENCES AT SEA. Deeply interested in the mind of every sailor is the steadfast belief in the phantom ship. From all times and from all parts of the sea tales have filtered through of wondrous things seen, and heard, and vanished.

Recently a sailor related his own marvellous experience just off the Cornish Coast, when he tried to board one of these unearthly visitors. It was in mid-winter, and the sailor and his companions were walking along the shore. They were attracted by some distant lights out at sea which seemed to proclaim some vessel in sore distress. Setting out in a life-boat, they arrived at what appeared to be an empty ship laden with snow and ice—this latter phenomenon all the more astonishing in that the weather had been singularly mild. As the sailor was in the act of clambering on board, the bulwarks crumbled away beneath him, and he found himself in the water. The ship had disappeared.

There is the still more amazing case in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, where the platoon of an old three-decker, wrecked in the reign of Queen Anne, still haunts the scene of its tragedy. It appears frequently, its decks crowded with soldiers, lights flickering through its port-holes, and on the bowsprit an officer points wildly at the "ships" with one hand, and at a white-faced, beautifully-clad woman with the other. Screams fill the air, a gun goes off, the lights and the ship vanish simultaneously. This is a faithful reproduction of the tragedy and never predicts disaster.

Terror of the Saragossa. These stories resemble another which overtook a passenger ship in the Saragossa Sea, a favourite abode of ghosts. The ship was lying, hecalmed, and every night the passengers would hear soft footsteps creeping along the passages, and up and down the hatchways. Watch was kept for a long while, and one night three of the crew saw a huge form rise from a mass of seaweed that lay beside the ship, and come swiftly towards them. As it reached the side of the ship they saw it was not—as they had imagined—some enormous animal—it was something altogether abnormal. They fled in terror to awaken their companions, but the thing had disappeared. It was seen several times again before the ship could resume her way.—People's Journal.

Fero-Concrete.

In 1907 an 8,000 ton steamer crashed into a ferro-concrete jetty on the Thames. The engineer stated at the time that if the jetty had been a timber one, the steamer must have gone right through it; as it was, the only damage was the destruction of a few piles and about 20 square feet of decking. Damage to ferro-concrete work is always of a most localised nature, as was instanced at the time of the great explosion at Silvertown in January, 1917, when a steel girder weighing nearly one ton was blown up and fell headlong upon a ferro-concrete wharf some 50 yards away. It went through a panel of the decking, but the hole made was hardly more than 1 foot by 2 feet, the adjoining beams not suffering in the slightest; the damage was therefore insignificant and most easily repaired. The localisation of damage, which is extremely important in ship construction, is borne out by observation of the effects of shell fire on ferro-concrete. On the Western Front, a ferro-concrete water-tower 53 feet high, formed for a long time a convenient observation post for the Germans, and a prominent target for our guns. When in March, 1917, the Germans proceeded with their so-called "victorious retirement," they took good care to bring down the tower by dynaming its legs, the tank proper falling from its full height to the ground. But, according to written statements, the shells which had struck the tank merely made circular holes through the sides and bottom, and the fall to the ground caused only local cracks. After small repairs, the tank could be used either on the ground or jacked up gradually to its original position.

AMERICANS HELD BACK.

LONDON, April 2. Questioned in the House of Commons to-day as to why the American troops did not cooperate with the Japanese, in the fighting at Biagovesthenck, Siberia, Winston Churchill, the Minister of War, replied that the American commander had said that the force which was attacking the Japanese might prove to be one of insurrectionary Russian peasants, who were mistaken for Bolsheviks. Mr. Churchill added that there was no doubt that the forces which attacked the Japanese was a powerful and armed Bolshevik band.

BULLETS INSTEAD OF BREAD.

VIENNA, April 2. (By the A. P.)—That Poland, with the Ukraine, is the key to Russia, is the conviction of the Associated Press correspondent, who has just travelled through the two countries. During the course of the journey, the correspondent interviewed dozens of persons, who for months have been watching the developments of events leading to outbreaks like that at Budapest, and was impressed with the fact that the mere supplying of food would not nip Bolshevism in the bud anywhere.

BORDEN'S OPINION.

PARIS, April 2. (Via Reuter's Ottawa Agency.)—The French group of the Foreign Press Association gave a dinner to-day to the delegates from the British Dominions. The guests included Premiers Borden and Hughes, and Dr. Engelberg of South Africa. Premier Borden in his speech said the Canadians had participated in the war of their own free will, and during the whole length of the war they had never wavered in their purpose, and never changed. The British Empire was itself a sort of League of Nations, and what they had in Canada might be said to typify the whole Empire in microcosm. Canada was populated by many races and breeds of men, and their task was to unite them all in a common national spirit. Canada, in a smaller degree, should be the very same in the spirit and purpose that animated the League of Nations. All efforts of the war could have been vain, unless a nobler association of nations than that of the past could be built up by united effort.

BOLSHEVISM UNMASKED.

LONDON, April 2nd. (Via Reuter's Ottawa Agency.)—The Serbian Minister of Justice detailing the terrible atrocities by the Bolsheviks, prior to the evacuation of Perm, lays special stress on the tortures of the clergy. One of the worst cases was that of Archbishop Andronique, who was buried alive, while the Archbishop of Thernigoff, who journeyed specially to Perm from Moscow, to obtain information regarding Archbishop Andronique, was killed. Bishop Thophanus, after suffering great tortures, was finally drowned by successive immersions in a hole made in the ice. The official list contains the names of fifty priests who were butchered at Perm.

MELBOURNE, Australia, April 2. (Via Reuter's Ottawa Agency.)—An Empire trade defence association has been formed, consisting of women, who have pledged themselves to purchase no goods of enemy origin.

FLAX GROWING SCHEME.

LONDON, April 2. (Via Reuter's Ottawa Agency.)—Replying to a question in the House to-day, Sir B. B. Horne, Minister of Labor, stated that the Govt. were obtaining expert advice in regard to the possibilities of a scheme for forming a colony of ex-members of the Military and Naval services, to develop flax growing in British East Africa, which would involve a considerable money grant by the state.

Little Things.

I visited the Hangar
And I saw a hanging game,
Three men meeting at the funnel
Of a boggy, yes, the same;
And the way they mauled that stove-pipe
Was an outrage and a shame.
Now ye may be master flyers,
And perhaps wizards in a sense;
And your "nerve" may be the latest brand
In every mood and tense.
But at hanging boggy funnels, sirs,
Ye're hopeless, punk and dense.
No their manners wasn't courtly
To yours truly, that's a fact;
And although they never said it
I could feel that I was sav'd.
High flyers are contemptuous
Of us groundhogs—so they act.
They didn't know our bardship
Was out to make a lay,
To tell them would be bardship
'Tis not our mode we say,
And so I passed unnoticed
Like Homer in his day.
They couldn't guess our bardhood,
Or may be they'd the tip
That for to scale Parnassus,
I'd steal their bloom'n' ship,
Pegasus! well—he's foundered,
And prone to many a slip.

But just as little glory
Enrapt that gray machine:
Worthy a poet's theme,
But, then, this saw is hoary,
"Things are not what they seem."
So all I saw was stove-pipe,
And gigantic spall,
Whose wings were in the outhouse,
Or so appeared the ball,
And all the wall propellers three
A hanging by a nail!

Be gracious, Mr. Airman,
Your wondrous machine
To unsophisticated folks
Is something to be seen;
And honest—we won't take her home,
Or rob your gasoline.

WHO WILL TRY TRANSATLANTIC FLIGHT NOW ON DESTROYER TO INSPECT N.S. COAST.

BOSTON, March 26.—In preparation for an attempt to fly across the Atlantic, Lieutenant Commander Patrick N. L. Bellinger, U.S.N., left here to-day on the new destroyer, "Burnley," for Nova Scotia and Newfoundland, where he will select a landing place for the first stage of the flight. Commander Bellinger represents the transatlantic section of the office of the Director of Naval Aviation, and was formerly commandant of the naval air station at Hampton Roads.

The destroyer will cruise along the Nova Scotia coast looking for a harbor suitable for the descent of a seaplane. It is understood that the vicinity of Shelburne in the south-western end of the peninsula will be first visited. Although Shelburne is 400 miles further from Ireland than is Newfoundland, it is thought that the conditions for landing and starting the second stage of the journey may be better in Nova Scotia than further north in Newfoundland where the ice still fringes the coast. After a run along the Nova Scotia shore the Burnley will proceed to Newfoundland to make an inspection of harbors there.

What do we plant when we want the tree?
We plant the ship which will cross the sea;
We plant the masts to carry the sail;
We plant the plank to withstand the gale.
The keel, the keelson and beam and knee,
We plant the ship when we plant the tree.

What do we plant when we want the tree?
We plant the houses for you and me;
We plant the rafters, and shingles, the floors;
We plant the studding, the lath, the doors;
The beams and sids, all parts that be;
We plant the house when we plant the tree.

What do we plant when we want the tree?
A thousand things that we daily see;
We plant the spire that out-towers the crag;
We plant the staff of our countries flag;
We plant the shade from the hot sun rays;
We plant all these when we plant the tree.

One of the most extraordinary gains made on the coronation day of Edward I, was that of 500 horses which had been used by the Royal Princes and other personages in the procession to Westminster Abbey. These horses, all richly caparisoned and harnessed just as they were, were left in the very midst of the mob after the banquet in Westminster Hall that always succeeded a coronation in those days. The people in the streets were permitted to catch the animals, and to him who caught a horse it and its appointments belonged.

What do we plant when we want the tree?
We plant the ship which will cross the sea;
We plant the masts to carry the sail;
We plant the plank to withstand the gale.
The keel, the keelson and beam and knee,
We plant the ship when we plant the tree.

What do we plant when we want the tree?
We plant the houses for you and me;
We plant the rafters, and shingles, the floors;
We plant the studding, the lath, the doors;
The beams and sids, all parts that be;
We plant the house when we plant the tree.

What do we plant when we want the tree?
A thousand things that we daily see;
We plant the spire that out-towers the crag;
We plant the staff of our countries flag;
We plant the shade from the hot sun rays;
We plant all these when we plant the tree.

Notes of Interest.

Arthur Dahlquist, a Kansas soldier in France, was in the Argonne fight just two hours, was wounded 13 times, then was carried to an emergency hospital, and that was all he saw of the world war.

One of the most extraordinary gains made on the coronation day of Edward I, was that of 500 horses which had been used by the Royal Princes and other personages in the procession to Westminster Abbey. These horses, all richly caparisoned and harnessed just as they were, were left in the very midst of the mob after the banquet in Westminster Hall that always succeeded a coronation in those days. The people in the streets were permitted to catch the animals, and to him who caught a horse it and its appointments belonged.

Mr. Brewster Discovers a Wildcat.

(Fred Copeland in "Red and Gun.")

Calvin Brewster, as we may know him, had bargained for a small farm in the late summer but it was the middle of November before he surveyed the new possession from the top of his first load of household goods. Its former owner had vacated the place many weeks before, leaving it to a silence such as only a secluded valley knows how to impart. Calvin wound the reins around the handle of a snow shovel which protruded from the front of a load and beat his hands together to restore their sense of feeling. A gust of November wind drove across the yard and the barn door squeaked dejectedly causing him to hastily glance in its direction. True to his promise he was on the look-out for the "Battles" cat, a pet of the farm's former owner, and as Calvin had been warned, "wilder than a partridge" now that its removal from the old haunts was threatened. Calvin smiled as he remembered the former owner's anxiety. "Huh," he ventured to himself, "I'll have it tied up in a sack inside of two days." On the following evening Calvin had the satisfaction of seeing all of his worldly goods transferred to the new home; that is to say, his wife had arrived with the last load and promptly began to disperse the last of that loneliness he had felt the morning before when he had entered his team to lift the first load over the sharp rise into the yard. He at once addressed her on the matter of the cat.

"Ann, I wish you would keep an eye out for Battles' old cat. The critter's wild and you can't lay hands on him but you might get a chance to shoe him into a room or the woodshed. I told Battles I'd deliver him in two days but I guess it's going to run into three."

"It'll be round soon enough, I'll warrant," prophesied Ann. Purrr'n round trying to trip a body up, I know 'um," she added, fully confident of her control over cats, not to say larger animals.

"But Battles' cat ain't that kind of a cat," remonstrated Calvin. "If I had a box-trap I'd get him to rights—and this very night." Calvin Brewster knew the hint would be enough; he had not lived with Mrs. Brewster thirty years not to learn that a spirit of contest often brought prompt and sometimes unforeseen results.

Mrs. Brewster glanced at him out of the corner of her eye. Calvin felt the glance but picked doggedly at his shoe string without looking up.

When he passed through the woodshed on his way to the barn the next morning, he paused and viewed a saucer. It was full of milk. He smiled and craftily peered into the uncertain shadows of the shed before tipping out.

A few moments later as he reached out a hand to throw back the barn door, he hesitated and looked up the small valley back of the house with its dense spruce covered sides still untouched by the tardy sun. Its far end was faintly melodious with sound. "That's Bill Hoisington's hound," mused Calvin, "running a fox before the sun gets at the frost." The sound grew fiercer and he turned to his morning chores.

As he passed along the barn floor between the hay mows he ran a calculating eye over the winter's supply of hay. Was that a movement in the hay at the very edge of the north mow? Calvin moved nearer, his eyes searching a tangle of brown clover tops. He stopped suddenly. Two wild eyes glowed coldly at him. "Oh, I see you, you needn't scrooch down so," greeted Calvin. He looked around quickly for some means of ascending the mow. There was none.

"Come Kitty!" he tried at a venture, bending down and patting his knee. The yellow eyes never winked. After several minutes spent in anxiety, he arose in disgust. "Think I don't see you, don't yer, you uncordial varmint. Well, I can make you come nearer than that, I guess," and there was malice in his tones.

In preparation for the capture he returned to the barn door and opened it a crack, thereby partially lighting a narrow passage-way that faded away into mysterious gloom where a flight of steps arose abruptly to the mow. All seemed clear. When he returned, the cat, which had followed his every move with its head, crouched lower and refused to show anything but its wicked-looking eyes.

"Take that, you old varmint," hissed Calvin, as he snatched up a heavy ear of field corn and sent it whizzing at the cat's eyes.

Apparently it would have been a centre shot for a temper laid hold of the clover tops. Calvin, grinning with victory, rushed for the narrow passage-way. As he darted into the entrance, there was a sound of bark being snatched from dried wood at the far end.

"Here you are, my beauty!" he shouted, stooping and shooting his hands into a grey streak of fur that fairly sailed down the passage upon him. He caught his breath as though plunged into ice water. At his breast was a snarling, spitting thing that sent knives into his arms faster than his nerves seemed willing to register each new pain. Under his eyes his vest began to unravel from the efforts of an armed pair of determined hind legs. He struggled to smother their action by crowding against the side of the passage-way but the cat seemed to be made of bounding steel springs and its abnormal size filled him with alarm. Unconsciously he had been backing and as it dawned on him that the treasured animal was determined on making a passage to the safety of outdoors even though the way lay through his own body, he staggered back faster. "Take that," panted Calvin, as he got in a well directed kick with one of his heavy boots when the cat was for a moment on the floor. It threw him off his balance and out onto the barn floor. Instantly he scrambled to his feet. To his relief the cat was gone and in the death-like silence he hastily examined the ghastly aspect of his arms and hands.

"Mercy on us! what has happened?" cried Mrs. Brewster, lifting her voice with each word as with each instant she became more fully impressed with her husband's appearance in the kitchen door-way.

"Battles' cat was all Calvin said. 'You mean to tell me a cat did that?'"

"None other," answered the victim, looking for a chair and hardly knowing whether he wanted to sit or stand.

"Why! you're all stove up, Calvin Brewster," broke out his wife in alarm upon a closer inspection. "No knowin' what'll set in."

A rap sounded at the door. In hesitation, Calvin glanced hurriedly at his hands and then at his wife. "Come in!" he shouted.

"Why! it's Bill Hoisington," cried Mrs. Brewster.

When the old fox hunter's eyes fell on his new neighbor they dilated perceptibly. "What's the matter, Calvin, run 'um into an ensilage cutter?"

"No; been trying to catch Battles' cat bare handed."

"Where'd you tackle him?"

"In the barn."

"Clawed you all up, didn't he? That's too bad." A queer look was beginning to spread over Bill Hoisington's face. "I just called a minute to say 'hello' to my new neighbors, but I'm in a hurry. Did you see my hound go by here?"

Far down the brook valley a series of yelps and howls issued up and drowned the noises of the kitchen.

"There he is now," shouted Bill excitedly. "I'll be back directly," he flung over his shoulder as he hurried out of the door.

"Craziest man to hunt I ever see," declared Calvin's wife.

Some minutes later the sharp crack of a rifle broke the stillness of the room and echoed back from the north ridge.

"I don't hear Bill's dog; he must have got that fox," speculated Calvin, after the kitchen clock had methodically paced off a quarter of an hour.

As if to confirm the surmise they were startled by a muffled thud against the door. The door itself opened and Bill Hoisington's grey eyes looked in on them.

"Come out and see the Battles' cat," called Bill.

They hurried to the door. Sprawling limply on the lower step lay a gaunt tawny animal with tufted ears and bob-tail, its wicked looking heavy legs and paws formidable even in death.

A wildcat!" ejaculated Calvin. "The same little cat you wrestled with in the barn," exploded Bill. My hound has run him in the barn more than once but you were there this time to detain him and the old dog had freed him not more than thirty rods down the brook.

"I can't seem to believe it," declared Calvin, his eye still fascinated by the sight of the savage animal at his feet.

"Well-if you still think that is Battles' cat, you can come along with me up to my place and I'll show you Battles' cat asleep under the stove; he's been up there going on two months."

Did you ever meet the sort of person who thinks that any kind of taste which differs from his or her own is a pose? For instance, I know a woman who does not like very little babies. She is extremely fond of children but she says little babies do not appeal to her. She thinks little supplies or kittens are cunning. I believe she is perfectly sincere about this.

She said She Would Feel Differently When She Was Married.

But nothing ever so aroused some of her married friends as to hear her express this opinion. Some of them called it unnatural. Others called it a pose. They used to prophesy with serene superiority that when she was married she would feel differently about it. She is now married and has babies of her own, and while she always adores her own babies, she enjoys them much more after they pass the first few months. Moreover she does not have that pssion for all little babies which these other women feel. And I do not think her feelings in this matter are any more a pose than theirs.

She Really Would Enjoy An Earthquake. One more example. I heard a woman who was going to make a trip into the tropics to a region where earthquakes have some time occurred. "If there had to be there without being and if I could be there without being hurt, I wish it could happen while I am down there." The friend to whom she said it, who is as timid and home loving as the first woman is adventuresome and excitement loving, rebuked her sharply (she is one of those friends close enough to consider that she has that privilege), "Why will you say such silly things that you don't really mean at all?"

Now how did she know she didn't mean it? As a matter of fact she was perfectly sincere.

How do I know? On the best authority in the world.

For He Was Scotch And So Was She. They were a couple well content. With what they earned and what they spent. Cared not a whit for style's decree. For he was Scotch and so was she.

They loved to read of men who stood and gave for country life and blood. Who held their faith so grand a thing. They scorned to yield it to a king. And proud of such they well might be. For he was Scotch and so was she.

From neighbors' broil they kept away. No liking for such things had they. And ah, each had a canny mind. And could be deaf, or dumb, or blind. Of words nor pence were none too free. For he was Scotch and so was she.

I would not have you think this pair went on in weather always fair. For he was Scotch and so was she. Will come sometimes the far and strife. They couldn't always just agree. For he was Scotch and so was she.

But near of heart they ever kept. Until at close of life they slept. Just this to say, when all was past. They loved each other to the last. They're loving yet, up there, may be. For he was Scotch and so was she.

How to Address a Dame.

Several readers have asked how to address a Dame of the Order of the British Empire. An authority at the College of Heraldry tells us that "A Dame should be addressed by letter as Dame Mary Smith, or whatever her name may be. Supposing the Dame holds no higher rank than that of Dame, and neither she nor her husband has any other title, strangers, in writing, would address her as 'Madam' or 'Dear Madam,' acquaintances as 'Dear Dame Mary Smith,' and friends as 'Dear-Dame Mary.' As far as precedence is concerned, a Dame goes before a Knight or the wife of a Knight of the same Order."

THE YOUTHFUL DAY.

There's nothing old about a day; It's always new and fresh and bright. Each morning takes a different way Into the sable realm of night. Sometimes the sun withholds his face. Sometimes the fields are splashed with rain. Sometimes as children we may race Or join with men and strive for gain.

This day perchance a friend we find. Tomorrow may a friend depart; The next may bring us peace of mind Or else the tears of grief may start.

One day we touch the hem of fame. The next we wince 'neath failure's stings. Nor shall tomorrow be the same— For something new each morning brings.

The day is never old and gray. Nor like the ones which went before; What it will bring no man can say Until its round of life is o'er. And he is young, whoever he be, Despite of care and sorrow's stings.

Who waits with eagerness to see The changes that each morning brings.

Not Confirmed.

A well-known music hall artist was chatting with a London journalist whose paper is not always to be relied upon for accuracy of statements. "My dear fellow," the comedian said, "I think that what you want is a bishop on your staff."

"Why?" asked the journalist in amazement. "Because," answered the other, with a smile, "some of the statements in your paper are in sore need of confirmation."

ULYSSES AT OXFORD.

"The great majority of the men who have returned to Oxford," says the Field, "and in their spirits now the craving of the wanderer. They have seen Egypt, Macedonia, France, Belgium, and perhaps Russia; and they are restless, compelled by a desire of wandering; so the calm and tranquillity which they appreciated so much before are now becoming tedious. They feel they must travel, and travel quickly."

SHAMPOOING OILY HAIR.

An opposite treatment from what I gave you yesterday, is needed, when shampooing oily hair. Here you can use a little alkali, such as borax. Make a strong suds of pure olive oil soap or standard white soap which does not "bite" the tongue when you taste it. To a basin of water add a pinch of borax and finely-shaved soap until you have a thick lather.

Never rub the soap directly on the scalp. Apply this shampoo mixture either with a sponge or by having it poured on to the head while you rub it in with your fingertips. Rinse and dry as described above, but do not finish off with the brilliantine application. Simply brush it until it shines. If between shampoos you wish to cleanse the hair, try this mixture:

Powdered orris root, one-half pound; bergamot tincture, two and three-quarter drams; castile flowers, two and three-quarter drams; cloves, (coarsely ground) one-half dram. Mix these ingredients and pass through a sieve twice. Powder the hair at night with it, and massage for ten minutes. In the morning massage for five minutes, and shake the hair and brush all the powder out.

The towel used should be as free from lint as possible, and a bath towel ought never to be used. If there is no shower bath or spray buy a little spray that can be attached to any faucet.

Captain Fryatt's Last Farewell.

The tragic story of Capt. Fryatt's farewell has just come to hand. Frederick Thurlow, his chief engineer aboard the "Brussels" when she was captured by the Huns in June, 1916, has just returned home from captivity. Telling of his experiences, he says: "Four German destroyers came alongside and ordered us to stop. German sailors boarded the vessel and Captain Fryatt was ordered to proceed to Zebrugge. From there they were taken to Ruhleben Camp, and later Capt. Fryatt was taken back to Zebrugge to stand his trial by German court martial, which ordered his execution. His last words to Mr. Thurlow were, 'Good-bye, old man. I don't expect to see you again.'"

Duckworth Street.

A Picturesque Rascal.

Few know William Page sufficiently well to assign him his place among "knights of the road," and yet he was as gallant and impatient as any who ever wore a mask on the highways of England. As a boy he played many parts, from "Upster's boy" to printer's "devil"; then footman, porter, valet, and "boots." But he had a proud spirit, and could not brook manual labour. He came to the conclusion that nature had designed him for a gentleman, and he could only pursue his destiny in the avenue of the King's highway, and he took to the work as a duck takes to water. But Page took care to have liberal doses of pleasure. He had his sumptuous suite of rooms near Grosvenor Square, and posed in his leisure hours as a man about town. Picture the highwayman as gay and rollicking a "buck" as ever clogged the dice, broke the street lamp, upset a "Charley," roystered in a tavern, or swaggered along the Mall in silk stockings, laced waistcoat, rakishly cocked hat, with a sword ready to clip out of its scabbard at a word. A favourite plan of his was to drive out of London in a phantom behind a pair of high stepping horses, bewigged and dressed as a man of fashion. Reaching a suitable spot he would abandon his equipage, change his clothes, mount one of his carriage horses, and ride away to "hold up" coach or chaise. On one occasion the tables were turned on Page. Three gentlemen overtook him, flung him down, and, searching him, they found such a harvest of pistols, bullets and powder, with a crepe mask, that left little doubt as to the prisoner's profession.

He was charged with highway robbery, but through insufficient evidence narrowly missed conviction. But the day of reckoning came at last. He was arrested in one of his favourite haunts and went gaily to the gallows at Maidstone on April 2, 1788. "A shot life and a merry one! Here's to the next!" are said to have been his last words as he drained his last tankard before setting out for the hangman's rope.

RESTFUL SILENCE.

Most topics that you would discuss are sad and tiresome things to us; for we are tired and prone to balk at all the endless streams of talk. We long for silence, quiet, peace, and wish to b e eloquence would cease. How sweet and restful it would seem if every bore and every theme could be by might of law suppressed! Oh, that would soothe our souls distressed. We're tired of war and politics, of Huns and all their Hunnish tricks, of problems large and problems small, of Russian freaks and Prussian gall of which boreas spiel. Oh, for a glen or bosky dell, where we remote from talk might dwell! Oh, for some hollow in the ground, where Windy Jims are never found! Some hermitage among the trees, where one might live on bark and peas, and never meet a noisy bore who'd thrash the moldy topics o'er! We'd think our thoughts and read our books in sylvan glades, by babbling brooks, where wordless songs by birds are sung, and never hear a human tongue. For we are weary, heartsick; gents; we're tired of stale old arguments; oh, for some cavern in the west, where talkworn delegates might rest!

TOBACCO FACTORIES SOLD.

The Imperial Tobacco Company announces that it has acquired the Bristol factories of the British American Tobacco Company, at which firm 2,000 to 3,000 hands are employed. The Imperial Company intends to continue the working of the factories, but is not certain whether it will be able to take over all the workpeople, owing to the varying manufacturing conditions. It is believed that a very large proportion of the hands, if not all, will be retained.—The Times.

Legislative Council.

As the members filed into their places after the formal opening of the House, yesterday, the Commissions of Hons. W. B. Grieve and J. Whiteway were read, and also that of R. H. Tait, as Clerk, after which Hon. Mr. Grieve moved that a Select Committee be appointed to draft a Reply to the Speech from the Throne, and incidentally the Hon. member referred to the problems at present confronting us. The resolution was seconded by Hon. A. Mews, who referred chiefly to the finances of the country.

Hon. Mr. Gibbs then spoke. He congratulated the new members and then continuing said: The honorable gentleman who moved the address in reply was struck by the fact that the speech differed from that delivered on previous occasions. I know of the sense of humor of the honorable gentleman, and I am not on that account surprised that he did discover a striking difference in the speech. I am sure that he realized how it would be looked upon by the people of this country. In after generations it will, like the mummies of ancient Egypt, be looked upon by our citizens with curiosity and surprise. He then referred to the strenuous days of war that have now terminated, and contrasted the conditions of the last session of the Legislature and the present. He spoke particularly of the part Newfoundland's sons had played, but in honor to their memory he stated we should try and do them justice by ruling justly and destroying the materialistic spirit in as far as it touched us. He touched upon the promises made to soldiers and sailors and the way in which these were not kept. He asserted that there were many parts of the country where the men might settle on the land if helped to do so. He also asserted that the railway was at present a disgrace to the country. Continuing, he stated that the public debt at the present time is $44,000,000. There is an interest charge of $2,300,000, and also an annual outlay of $800,000 in pensions. Our present revenue is about $7,000,000 per annum, and thus it is a serious matter for this country to pay its expenses, the more so as values must decrease in the future. Special mention was made of the markets, and of the fact that we have been forced to receive $1,250,000 in Roumanian bonds for a fish cargo. (Roumanian is practically a bankrupt country.) To-day our position is that a tax of $33 per head on every man, woman and child is necessary to pay our yearly expenditure.

The government now say that they want a mandate from the people. Could they not have gotten it last year? In February 1918 when they thought that no opposition was to be expected, they were prepared to spring an election on the country; but they suddenly changed their plans.

We are now told that on the score of economy the government wishes to go to the country on the old voters' lists. This is indeed comic opera in its richest form; it is a burlesque of the most fantastic type. I do not need to remind honorable gentlemen of the extravagance that is going on in all departments of the government.

It was only a short time ago that the government decided on a spring election; but they could only do so by amending the Election Act which you will remember was before the Legislature some years ago and which at the time engaged the best brains and ability of members in its drafting. The effect of the proposed amendment will be to disfranchise thousands. In the twelve months just past the Government had ample opportunity to prepare a new list. But to effectuate their own purposes they propose to meddle with a most important section of the Act which may rightly be regarded as an important safeguard of our liberties. The Act requires that the election lists must be taken at least 12 months before an election. Are you prepared to acquiesce in this violation of a fundamental principle of law? Are you prepared to permit the government to force an election on the people through motives of political expediency and to permit them to place their own selfish interests before the interests of our country and our people? One of the principles for which this war was fought was to uphold the rights of democracy. Free elections and the free exercise of the franchise are the foundations of these. When we enunciated this principle did we mean it as a delusion and a snare, wherein to entrap the unwary? Are we then going to see it thus flagrantly violated?

Hon. R. A. Squires briefly addressed the House, and congratulated the new members.

Hon. John Anderson spoke of the commercial problem, and stated that the Speech had contained reference to the Premier's trip abroad, which everyone knows, but said nothing of what the Premier had done. He referred to the difficult problems facing the Government, and stated that the question of economy was too thin for anything.

The motion being put and carried, the President nominated the following as a Committee to draft the Address in reply: Hons. Grieve, Mews, Whiteway, Knowling, Ryan.

Hon. Mr. Harvey, in the absence of the Leader of the House, after paying a splendid tribute to the life work of the late Hon. James Angel, moved the following resolution: "That this House record its great sorrow over the death of the late Hon. James Angel, whose decease creates a void in this Council, with which he was so actively acquainted, as well as the country at large.

Resolved—That a copy of this resolution be transmitted to the family of the late Hon. James Angel, expressing the sympathy of the Council with him in their great sorrow."

Hon. Mr. Gibbs spoke of the loss the Council had sustained in the death of Clerk H. H. Carter, and moved the following: "That this House records its deep regret for the death of Mr. Hugh Hoyle Carter, who for a great number of years filled the position of Clerk of this House."

Hon. Mr. Gibbs gave notice of question asking for a statement showing amounts expended during the last financial half year of 1918, and to March 30, 1919, under Order in Council, not passed by the Auditor General, and charged to current revenue for 1917-18.

Hon. Mr. Gibbs gave notice of question asking for statement showing amounts expended during 1917-18, not passed by the Auditor General and charged to current revenue.

Hon. Mr. Squires gave notice of question asking for a copy of each order or minute of Council assenting to or authorizing the increase of freight and passenger rates on the railway system and steamship services of the Reid-Nfld. Co., together with copies of freight and passenger rates scheduled before and after each increase in rates assented to or authorized or made by the Reid-Nfld. Co. since January 1918.

Hon. Mr. Squires gave notice of question asking for a statement showing the number of officials and employees of the Dept. of Militia as at the following dates: July 1st, 1917; July 1st, 1918, April 1st, 1919; together with particulars as to the salaries paid each official and employee at these several dates, and what has been the total cost of the Dept. of Militia since its inception.

On motion of Hon. Mr. Grieve, acting on behalf of the Government, adjournment was taken at 6.35 until tomorrow, Friday, at 4 o'clock.

PUBLIC NOTICE.

The Agricultural Board has had many requests from members of Agricultural Societies and others to import for them approved varieties of seed potatoes for spring planting. The House of Opened Ye

The eighth session of the 23rd General Assembly opened yesterday at 3 o'clock. At the prescribed hour His Excellency the Governor, attended by Hon. R. Watson, Capt. Campbell, M.C., and Commander MacDermott, R.N., arrived in the Assembly grounds, and received the salute from detachments of the Royal Naval Reserve, Royal Newfoundland Regiment, C.L.B., C.C.C., and Highlanders, the Band of the Royal Newfoundland Regiment, the Band of the National Anthem, the Band of the National Anthem, and the Band of the National Anthem. His Excellency took his seat on the Throne, and with his A.D.C.'s were also in attendance. His Excellency the Chief Justice, Sir William Horwood, Hon. Justice Johnson, Hon. Justice Kent, Inspector-General Hutchings, Lieut.-Col. W. Bondell, Majors Montgomerie, Cartwright, Paterson, Capt. Bert Butler, D.S.O., etc., and other members of the Chamber of Commerce, U.S. Consul Benedict, attendants by his staff, French Consul Suzor, Canadian Trade Commissioner Nicholson, Rev. Canon Field, Rev. Dr. Sabs, Rev. Dr. Fenwick, Rev. Dr. Carter and a goodly number of ladies and gentlemen.

The Speaker and members of the House of Assembly having been summoned to the bar of the House by the gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, His Excellency was pleased to deliver the following Speech from the Throne.

Mr. President and Honourable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council, Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the Honourable House of Assembly.

It is with mingled sentiments of pride and thankfulness that I greet you to-day; pride in the wonderful success of the Allied arms in the great world war which ended in November last; and thankfulness of the termination of a conflict which has caused untold miseries to the greater part of the human race. A trust that from the wreck and devastation of the war, better, more enduring and happier conditions may arise, ushering in a new era of peace and content which will in some measure atone for the great sacrifices of blood and treasure which have been poured forth so freely and selflessly upon the altar of Liberty.

At the time of the last session of the Legislature, it will be remembered that the fortunes of the Allies were most critical and the war situation was of the utmost gravity. Under these circumstances a Bill was introduced to postpone for a second time the General Election, and the Legislature then determined that the term of the present Assembly should be limited to April 30th, 1919.

Thanks, however, to the almost unflinching exertions made by the Allies, the continued pressure of the war and the tenacity and sustained bravery of the soldiers, the situation underwent such a change during the latter part of the summer and autumn that armistices have been signed with the enemies. The victory which we had been hoping and praying has been achieved. The Peace Conference, which followed the cessation of hostilities, has been in session some months. Problems of international significance and far-reaching importance, which may call for legislative action and approval, are the course of settlement at the Conference and my Ministers feel that the Government should be in a position to call the Assembly together whenever necessary without any undue delay.

The House of Assembly Opened Yesterday.

The eighth session of the 23rd General Assembly opened yesterday at 3 o'clock. At the prescribed hour His Excellency the Governor, attended by Messrs. Watson, Capt. Campbell, M.C., and Commander MacDermott, R.N., arrived in the Assembly grounds, and received the salute from detachments of the Royal Naval Reserves, Royal Newfoundland Regiment, Royal Newfoundland Constabulary, C.L.B., C.C.C., and Highlanders, the Band of the C.L.B. rendering the National Anthem. Entering the Legislative Chamber, His Excellency took his seat on the Throne, and with his A.D.C.'s, Messrs. Horwood, Hon. Justice Johnson, Hon. Justice Kent, Inspector-General, Messrs. Montgomerie, Carty, Paterson, Capt. Bert Butler, D.S.O., etc., and Mr. Blandford. In the Chamber were U.S. Consul Benedict, attended by his staff, French Consul Suzor, Canadian Trade Commissioner Nicholson, Rev. Canon Field, Rev. Dr. Sabs, Rev. Dr. Penwick, Rev. Dr. Carter and a goodly number of ladies and gentlemen.

The Speaker and members of the House of Assembly having been summoned to the bar of the House by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, His Excellency was pleased to deliver the following Speech from the Throne:

Mr. President and Honourable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council,

Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the Honourable House of Assembly,

It is with mingled sentiments of pride and thankfulness that I greet you to-day. I greet you with pride in the wonderful progress of the Allied arms in the great world war which ended in November last; and thankfulness of the termination of a conflict which has caused untold miseries to the greater portion of the human race. I greet you from the wreck and devastation of the war, better, more enduring and happier conditions may arise, ushering in a new era of peace and content which will in some measure repay and atone for the great sacrifices of blood and treasure which have been poured forth so freely and unhesitatingly upon the altar of Liberty.

At the time of the last session of this Legislature it will be remembered that the fortunes of the Allies were most critical and the war situation was of the utmost gravity. Under these circumstances a Bill was introduced to postpone for a second time the General Election, and the Legislature then determined that the term of the present Assembly should be limited to April 30th, 1919.

Thanks, however, to the almost superhuman exertions made by the Allies, the continued pressure of the war and the tenacity and sustained gallantry of the soldiers, the situation underwent such a change during the latter part of the summer and autumn that armistices have been signed with the enemies. The victory which we had been hoping and striving has been achieved. The Peace Conference, which followed the cessation of hostilities, has been in session some months. Problems of international significance and far-reaching importance, which may call for legislative action and approval, are before us and my Ministers feel that the Government should be in a position to call the Assembly together whenever necessary without any undue delay.

There are many problems of first importance connected with the demobilisation of our soldiers and sailors, their re-establishment in civil life, the making of provision for War debts and obligation, as well as questions of transportation by land and sea, which call for a new mandate from the country, and a newly elected and full House of Assembly to deal with them. These problems are urgent.

The object for which the Legislature is now called together is to make provision for that immediate appeal to the electorate, which the legislation of last session necessitates and to enable the use of the last Voters' List which was taken over twelve months ago.

The work of completing another List would throw unnecessary expense on the country, and cause delay in appealing to the electorate.

Your consideration will be invited, therefore, to proposals for amending the Election Act in order to legalize the use of the forthcoming General Election of the Voters' List, taken in 1917. Care should be taken to ensure that the electoral qualifications of Newfoundlanders who have been serving in His Majesty's Naval and Military forces shall in no way be affected by their absence abroad on active service during the period of the war, and you will be asked to approve an amendment to the Act to this effect. You will be asked also to extend the franchise to Newfoundland sailors and soldiers, under the age of 21 years, who have been Overseas with His Majesty's Forces.

Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the Honourable House of Assembly,

I am happy to be in a position to inform you that there was a substantial excess of Revenue over Expenditure to the amount of One Million Six Hundred and Seventy Thousand Six Hundred and Twenty-seven Dollars and Ninety-four Cents, for the past fiscal year. It is gratifying to know that a surplus of Revenue over Expenditure for the current fiscal year may also be anticipated, as the Customs Revenue for the eight months ending on February 28th shows an increase of One Million, Four Hundred and Fifty-four Thousand, Six Hundred and Twenty-three Dollars over the receipts for the same period last year.

You will be invited to vote the necessary funds to defray the expenses of the forthcoming General Election.

Mr. President and Honourable Gentlemen of the Legislative Council:

Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the Honourable House of Assembly:

The tidings of the death of Prince John stirred the sympathetic feelings of the King's devoted subjects throughout the Dominion. It was my sad duty to convey to Their Majesties an expression of the sorrow and sympathy of our people in their affliction, which has knit even closer together the ties of love and loyalty which bind us to the Throne.

In response to a summons from the Right Honourable the Secretary of State for the Colonies the Prime Minister attended during the summer the sittings of the Imperial War Cabinet, and represented the Dominion in the discussion and determination of vital issues connected with the conduct of the war. He also participated in the deliberation of the Imperial Conference which dealt with varied and complex problems affecting the present and future policy of the Empire.

In November last, following upon the signing of the armistice, the Prime Minister was recalled to London by the British Government to take his place in the Imperial War Cabinet in connection with the discussion and formulation of terms of peace. Later he proceeded to Paris with the British Empire delegation and took part in the Peace Conference there, actively interesting himself in all matters affecting or likely to affect the Dominion. Before returning home he represented Newfoundland's position to the Imperial authorities and received an assurance that our interests would be very carefully safeguarded.

My Ministers decided to endeavor to raise loyally as well as in Canada the moneys required for the continued prosecution of the war and issued a Victory War Loan. Their faith in the patriotism and public spirit of the people was fully justified by the magnificent result achieved, the amount of the issue being considerably oversubscribed within a very short period. This response is most gratifying as an evidence of the confidence of our people in the resources and possibilities of the country.

The continual growth and expansion of our trade and commerce of late years, combined with the increasing importance of our relations with the Mother Country, having emphasized the necessity of adequate representation there, my Ministers arranged for the appointment of a High Commissioner in London to look after the trade and commercial interests of the Dominion.

I avail myself of this opportunity to extend a hearty welcome home to our sailors and soldiers who have represented Newfoundland so valiantly and well during the past four years amid the changing fortunes and bitter hardships of war. Mere words cannot express our feelings of appreciation and admiration of their wonderful work. Their deeds are eloquent and pass to judgment before them. On sea and land and in the air their worth has spread far and wide. Those who have died for the Right have bequeathed us a precious legacy—the undying memory of duty performed even to the death, and the eternal fragrance of that love which exceeds all others—that a man lay down his life for his friends. Their loss to the country can never be fully estimated because it is impossible to compute the value of the chivalry, honor, self-sacrifice and devotion to duty which these men possessed in the highest degree. We can only endeavour to prove worthy of the glorious heritage which they have purchased for us at such a price.

In taking leave of you I trust that your deliberations may conduce to the further welfare and prosperity of Newfoundland and that Divine Providence may guide you in the performance of your duties.

On return to the House, His Honor the Speaker read the Speech from the Throne, a copy of which he had secured for greater accuracy. Mr. J. F. Downey, member for St. George's, moved that a Select Committee be appointed to draft an address in reply. In doing so he referred to the ending of the war, Newfoundland's part in it, and congratulated the Government on the announcement that the revenue was in excess of expenditure. Mr. LeFevre seconded this motion, dealing with the proposed amendment to the Election Act in connection with the Voters' List, and the extending of the franchise to the soldiers who are under 21 and who have been overseas. He concluded his remarks by congratulating the Premier (Rt. Hon. Dr. Lloyd), on the honor that had been conferred upon him.

Mr. A. B. Morine (Bonavista), followed, saying that the courtesy of speaking for the Opposition had been extended him as the senior member, but he spoke as an independent member, having no connection with either Government or Opposition. He congratulated the Premier (Rt. Hon. Dr. W. F. Lloyd), and the Minister of Finance (Hon. Sir M. P. Cashin), upon the receipt of the honors that had been conferred on them. In the case of the Premier, he recognized that the honor had not come to him personally, but rather to the country as a whole, as it has been a custom of late years, to knight the Premiers as they attended conferences on the other side. The Finance Minister's knighthood was more of a personal one, for he had long been a member of the House, rendering good service to the country. In other days knighthoods had not been so plentiful, and for that reason, perhaps, they had been better esteemed. To-day they are plentiful, and some day we may even hear of Sir John and Sir William. The latter, he noted, had been visiting some famous places in London, and assumed that he was trying to make up his mind as to whether he would be beheaded in the Tower, or London or buried in Westminster. Mr. Morine, then touched on the passing of Prince John, saying that the same sorrows came to palace as to level. We should not look upon the parents as King and Queen, but rather as father and mother. He could not agree with the remarks of a previous speaker to the effect that the war had ended. It had not, neither officially nor in fact. It was anything but peace in Europe to-day. The signs were that there would be wars upon wars throughout the old world. Germany has not recanted, and is still the same Germany as of old. Mr. Morine here spoke of the Peace Conference, paying a high tribute to the great leaders, Lloyd George, Clemenceau and to the great American, President Wilson. We should not forget that great American, Theodore Roosevelt, a typical American; a man and a man's man. He was heartily in accord with the reference in the speech to the returned soldiers; but an empty tribute of words to them was not enough. It is not what we say of them, but what we do for them that counts. As we pay our respect and gratitude to the living as well as the dead heroes, so we should not fail to remember that the supreme sacrifice had been paid on enlistment, not when death came. Therefore every volunteer deserves the help and gratitude of the country irrespective of whether he died or came back. He did not see signs of adequate returns to them or that the Government was grappling with this question of the day. Promises had been held out to them, but they were no more than promises.

Dealing with the Government's proposal to hold a general election, he said his attitude was perhaps more consistent than any of the Government or the Opposition. He had previously supported the Bill for an extension of the life of the Legislature, and the ground he took was that there should be no appeal until the men who had gone across had all returned. The men have not yet come back, and probably would not be back before polling day. Again, the issues on which the country would be asked to decide have not been put before the people. It would be physically impossible to visit one half of the hamlets where the people live. He urged the Government to take serious thought on the matter and give the people a fair election. If they wanted a mandate let them see that it was one worth something morally, and not a snap verdict.

The Premier (Rt. Hon. Dr. W. F. Lloyd) followed, speaking to some length of the Imperial and Peace Conferences and of the big men of Europe. The Government, he said, was trying to do the best for the soldiers. He was prepared for the polls whatever the verdict might be. The Government was not hankering after power, and if it had to get out it would do so gladly.

The Committee to draft the Address in Reply was then appointed as follows: Messrs. Downey, LeFevre, Target and Currie.

The Premier gave notice of a Bill to Amend the Election Act of 1918, and the Minister of Finance of Supply, after which the House adjourned until 3 o'clock this afternoon.

Make your Motoring season an enjoyable one by owning the Car that all other motorists look upon with envy—the Buick Six is the most envied car in St. John's.

The Buick is always ready to take you anywhere you desire to go—it never falters.

When you press the starting pedal of the Buick, you are assured immediate response—the Delco starter is always on the job to turn over your engine every time you require it.

Buick Cars are luxuriously equipped, and upholstered in genuine black leather—no imitation. Strength of construction is an inherent quality of all Buicks. With the new Sixty Horsepower Valve in Head engine sixty miles an hour is easily accomplished, besides hills are made short work of.

A new and valuable feature is the entirely enclosed valves and engine, thus keeping out all grit and dust and giving longer life to the car, consequently the Engine is noiseless.

We shall be happy to let you look over our 1919 Buick Six which recently arrived—you will be convinced why it is the most envied car once you have examined it.
